CANADA

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

FOURTH SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

21 Elizabeth II

VOLUME I, 1972

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE SEVENTEENTH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1972, TO THE SEVENTEENTH DAY OF MARCH, 1972, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

Published under the authority of the Speaker of the House of Commons by the Queen's Printer for Canada

Available from Information Canada, Ottawa, Canada

25020—1½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 17, 1972

FOURTH SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH

PARLIAMENT—OPENING

The Parliament which had been prorogued on the sixteenth day of February, 1972, met this day at Ottawa for the dispatch of business.

The House met at ten-thirty o'clock, the Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the Secretary to the Governor General, announcing that His Excellency the Governor General would proceed to the Senate chamber at 10.35 a.m. on this day for the purpose of formally opening the fourth session of the twenty-eighth Parliament of Canada.

A message was delivered by Major A. G. Vandelac, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (1140)

And the House being returned to the Commons chamber:

* * *

OATHS OF OFFICE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 1, respecting the administration of oaths of office.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

* * *

• (1150)

[English]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Excellency the Governor General this day in the Senate Chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both Houses of Parliament. To prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy, which is as follows:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

This reunion of your two Houses with the Representative of the Crown marks the beginning of the 4th Session of the 28th Parliament of Canada.

Before proceeding to the business of the new Session I should like to thank you in the name of our Queen and on behalf of all Canadians for your efforts and accomplishments during the long 3rd Session which began the 8th of October 1970 and was concluded only yesterday.

During that period there was a continuing celebration of centennials connected with the foundation of the Canadian Confederation. Manitoba and the Northwest Territories concluded ceremonies which marked the 100th anniversary of their incorporation into the Dominion. The admission of British Columbia, which gave Canada its place on the Pacific Ocean, was commemorated in 1971 with much enthusiasm and a multitude of ceremonies and projects. As in the year before, our gracious Queen and other members of the Royal Family marked the event with an extensive tour, much to the delight of British Columbians and Canadians generally.

It gave my wife and me much satisfaction to take official part on several occasions in the British Columbia celebrations, as well as to travel abroad on behalf of Canada to The Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg and Iran, in response to invitations from the heads of these States so well disposed towards Canada.

Since last I addressed you some 16 months ago, events in Canada and elsewhere have continued to demonstrate the turbulence of this age of changing values and shifting attitudes. We have witnessed with sadness outbursts of violence beyond our shores as despairing men and women have chosen to settle their differences through the use of force, extending in some cases to actual war. We have witnessed as well a period of international economic uncertainty which affected all of the industrialized nations of the world and which has made us increasingly aware of our dependence on a strong economic base in the pursuit of our social goals.

We learned in months gone by that Canada was not immune from internal pressures. In October, 1970 one of the most difficult national challenges in many years was met calmly, with discipline, and with the strong support of the people of Canada. There were sad moments but there were also memorable examples of resoluteness and courage.

More recently, we learned from another type of challenge, this time of an economic nature and coming from without rather than within, that Canada and Canadians possessed the stamina and the resilience to overcome this form of adversity as well.

Throughout, pressures for change around the world emphasized to us that the excitement and the promise of modern technological achievements become hollow and mocking to those who find in society little understanding of their hopes and little provision for their needs. In a period dominated by bigness, in an increasingly impersonal social system, one of the major challenges facing government is to remove the impression of isolation which so often surrounds men and women, depriving them of their sense of worth, of accomplishment, of fulfilment, and removing from them their identity as individuals.

Isolation takes many forms in Canada—physical distance, social stigma, economic deprival. In each of those forms it represents a degree of rejection, of exclusion, of estrangement. This country fails in its essential purpose if it does not ensure that its most precious resource, human talent, is not wasted away. Our challenge is to remove the barriers that create isolation, to permit each Canadian to detect—even if not always able to fulfil—his own potential, to ensure that his image of Canada is one of promise and compassion.

Every one of us is enriched through involvement in this stimulating process we call Canada. Our goals and hopes are bound up in the restlessness and vitality of this rich land. We in this place have a special responsibility to help bring these goals and those hopes within reach, to make real the Canada of which our forefathers dreamed: a land so large that some of it will remain always serene and unspoiled; a society which believes in the dignity of every single individual; a community which husbands its resources and shares them justly among this generation and those to follow; an enterprise which permits and provokes each Canadian to contribute his skills and his talents.

There will be opportunity in this session of this parliament to pursue these ends. The Government will lay before you proposals to continue the development of our national wealth, to deal more compassionately with those in our midst who require help, to involve more Canadians in the ferment and satisfaction of community activities, to protect our natural heritage, and to strengthen our sense of identity and our image of ourselves.

* * *

Economic security is one of the most effective forces with which to counter social isolation. Job opportunities must be found and income uncertainties overcome if all Canadians are to share in the richness of this land. To permit the protection and enhancement of those values and those rights which distinguish Canada as a human place, a sound economy is absolutely essential. The attainment of such an economy retains a high priority in the Government's continuing programme. The social phenomenon of economic instability is present today in every industrialized country. We are fortunate that its ill effects have been less pronounced in Canada than elsewhere. Our success in increasing our real gross national product, in the creation of new jobs, and in the maintenance of price stability has been achieved through a policy which encourages an economic environment within which business and all elements of society are able to benefit. At the same time the Government has worked to strengthen and promote the economies of the less developed regions of Canada. Simultaneously, a range of programmes has been introduced to deal with the specific problems of those localities and individuals affected by unemployment at different times of the year.

Unemployment continues to be a matter of intense concern to the Government and will remain a primary focus of attention and action. Co-operation with the business and industrial communities will be extended even further to ensure a favourable business climate. As the economy continues to gain momentum, the private sector will be able increasingly to provide jobs for those Canadians in need of them. The Government will nevertheless redouble its efforts to make sure that as many jobs as possible are available and that the fullest possible use is made of the skills and initiatives of those who are seeking work. It will at the same time continue to exert its influence to prevent the erosion of incomes through the maintenance of reasonably stable prices of the goods and services required by Canadians.

Our economy is dependent, as are the economies of all industrialized countries, on the imagination of entrepreneurs and their use of research and innovation, as well as upon a rational industrial strategy. You will be informed in months to come of government proposals for improved policies in these areas which will be of immense importance to the long term development of our country: of policies for the use of science and technology designed to contribute not only to industry but to the qualitative improvement of the life of Canadians, of an industrial strategy prepared for the peculiar character of the Canadian economy. The basis of each will be spelled out as the session proceeds.

For more than a decade an issue which has attracted increasing interest and growing debate in this country has been that of the control of our economic environment. The debate has emphasized the dual aspects of Canada's identity and of economic benefit for Canadians. Further steps will be taken towards the resolution of this issue.

These policy proposals have been designed with a blend of realism and imagination, as Canada itself was designed more than a century ago. They are intended to permit this country to attain a degree of leadership and independence in selected fields of endeavour while reducing overall Canadian vulnerability to events both expected and unexpected from beyond our shores.

A further imperative in the structuring of strong, internationally competitive industry is the development of a modern and workable competition policy. The development of such a policy, designed to achieve an efficient and innovative economy, capable of rapid growth and dynamic change, must proceed through consultation with all sectors of Canadian society. During the coming weeks the Government will continue this consultative process and will place before Parliament a revised policy reflecting the informed and constructive comments received and assistance gained.

A major factor in the strength of the Canadian economy is provided by exports. The Government will pursue vigorously the initiatives it has taken throughout the world to develop and maintain Canadian markets. Those advantages already gained by ministerial missions to other countries will be enlarged in a number of ways. One of these will involve the provision of better credit facilities. The private financial sector will be encouraged to involve itself increasingly in export financing. The Government will continue to develop programmes to strengthen secondary industry. Closer scientific and technological co-operation with other countries can be expected. Trade negotiations will seek to enlarge opportunities for Canadian manufacturers and the consultative machinery with the European Economic Community and its member states will be strengthened. Negotiations will continue with the United States so as to extend the benefits gained by each member of the world's most important trading partnership.

Policies designed to promote a related, yet distinct, sector of the economy—tourism, will be revealed in coming weeks.

A basic building block in the growth of Canada's national wealth has been the performance of our resource and energy industries. Over the years they have opened new frontiers and stimulated the development of the sinews and muscles of Canada; they have accumulated capital for reinvestment, enhanced the scientific and technical skills of Canadians, and accounted for a healthy export surplus. A continuation and strengthening of government-industry relations is necessary in order that such areas of challenge as environmental impact and the increasing demand both within Canada and abroad for resources and energy be fully addressed.

The competitive requirements for northern development will continue to be recognized; development will not be permitted at the expense of the northern peoples and the northern environment. To ensure the involvement of the residents of the north, and their participation in the design of their own future, there will be continued support for the development of local government in the northern territories.

Canada's primary food producers—our farmers and our fishermen—form one of the traditional and still basic strengths of our economy. Their continued productivity and livelihood is of immense importance to the Government and to the country. Improvements and achievements of the past several months will be strengthened and continued. Measures already undertaken and which have substantially improved prices to fishermen—upwards of 50 percent in some cases—will be extended, ensuring that the benefits of price support for fish products go to the fishermen themselves. Wheat farmers will be assured of an increased return equivalent to the higher price for wheat consumed as food by Canadians. To avoid distortions in food prices, the cost of this programme will be borne by the Treasury rather than by the consumer; to avoid distortions in production, a formula for distribution will be proposed which relates payments to grain acreage rather than to actual wheat production. The Government will assist further the position of farmers and fishermen through the implementation of several programmes. It proposes the establishment of new national marketing agencies and the implementation of a small farm development programme. The recent extensions of fisheries closing lines will permit the Government to engage more actively in the management of its marine resources so as to increase the supply of fish available to Canadian fishermen in the waters off our coasts.

Both the effectiveness and the quality of any programme for the provision of services to Canadians depends increasingly upon a harmonious fiscal relationship between the Federal government and the governments of the ten provinces. Legislation will be introduced, therefore, proposing the renewal and improvement of equalization arrangements, increasing to 100 percent the level of stabilization of provincial revenues, and a number of other items. These will include the administration on behalf of requesting provinces of succession duties and gift taxes, the extension for two years of the transfers to provinces respecting post-secondary education, the provision of a five-year revenue guarantee to provinces to protect their income tax revenues under the new system, and the sharing with provinces of the special tax on undistributed corporate income.

As a further protection against the isolation of individuals caused by economic deprivation, the fundamental reform of protective measures which commenced last year with the new Unemployment Insurance Act will continue. A new Canada Labour Code, reflecting the many representations received in past months, will be introduced as will important amendments to the Fair Employment Practices Act. The Canada Manpower programmes will be improved and additional steps will be taken to make the training and placement services adequate to the needs of specially disadvantaged people whose particular problems present challenges which cannot be met with the use of regular programme resources or techniques. For those persons seeking to further their education, the loan limits under the Canada Student Loans Act will be raised, permitting students to borrow more within a given year and increasing significantly the total amount available under the programme.

* * *

The isolation which a product of social injustice is less well understood than that which comes from economic denial. Nevertheless, its consequences dare not be ignored by any society. The irony of isolation in an urban surrounding cannot be resolved by any single act. One essential, however, is the provision of adequate housing of high standard to all Canadians. More dwelling units were started in 1971 than in any single year in our history, including a record number for lower income families. It is clear, however, that Canada's housing needs cannot be met only through increases in scale. What is required, and what the Government will be proposing, are fresh concepts, continuing research, and imagination in neighbourhood improvement with emphasis on the need for low cost housing.

In order to achieve our goal of full participation by all members of society, all barriers leading to isolation must be removed. We cannot invite respect for our laws and support for our institutions from persons to whom they are irrelevant or ineffective. Government activities must reflect the needs of all Canadians, not only the favoured. A giant step in this direction was taken with the adoption last session of tax reform legislation which spreads more evenly the burden of social services on those Canadians best able to bear it. Another step, and long overdue, consists of policies to ensure the equality of women in Canadian society. These will be announced this session.

Protective steps will be proposed in a number of areas of wide concern to Canadians—the non-medical use of drugs, compensation for victims of crime, and the protection of privacy. Progress toward more humane treatment of offenders will continue with further reforms in the penal and parole systems. Amendments will be proposed for reforms in the administration of the criminal law. The Government is committed as well to federal participation in legal aid subject to satisfactory cost-sharing and administrative details being worked out.

It is the view of the Government that the most important single factor in the attainment of individual dignity and active social involvement is the assurance of a secure income. Considerable progress towards the goal of a total income security programme for all Canadians is achieved in the new Family Income Security Plan bill which will be presented for your consideration. The emphasis in this plan is on protection and is consistent with the Government's belief in the strong sense of self-reliance of Canadians.

The pride with which Canadians regard this country and which inspires them to identify with it springs from many sources. Some of these are physical in nature, some cultural, still others are economic. Canadians find in the vast spaces of this land, in its rugged coasts, in its throbbing vitality and in its serene tranquility something of themselves. It is the intention of the Government that immense areas of Canada be preserved in their natural state for the enjoyment of this generation and of generations to come. For the first time some of the grandeur and the wilderness which is Canada's north will be guaranteed perpetual preservation through incorporation into the National Parks System. You will be asked to approve legislation which will create three new parks north of the 60th parallel, each as large and as spectacular as any in the world. These three parks, plus the seven new parks created since 1968, mean that for the first time in our history every province and territory will include within it a national park for the benefit of our people.

Companion legislation will be introduced to provide wildlife habitats and to protect certain endangered wildlife species.

While taking care to preserve for the future, we should, wherever possible, preserve and restore those achievements of the past which are an essential element in our self-understanding as a people. You will be asked to consider, therefore, a bill creating and endowing a corporation to be known as Heritage Canada which will go far to ensure the preservation of items and collections from Canada's past and to make these accessible for the enjoyment and understanding of Canadians in all parts of the country. Heritage Canada, complemented by a broadened National Museums policy, will demonstrate the achievements of our fore-fathers and their successes in overcoming physical isolation and in converting dreams into reality.

Still another form of isolation springs from indifferent communications services. It is a matter of concern to the Government that at this moment many communities do not receive the natior al broadcasting service and that some one million Canadians in 260 communities receive no television service in their own language. The Government proposes, therefore, that the C.B.C. be authorized to extend its services in a comprehensive fashion and to utilize the capabilities of Canada's pioneer satellite communications system to assure within a five year period that at least 98 percent of Canadians are served.

* * *

The standards against which a society is judged by others and by history are often those chosen by the society itself. The image it projects, the values to which it adheres, the treatment it accords the disadvantaged in its midst; these are matters for each society to determine, and in determining to be judged. In our relations with one another, in federal-provincial relations, in Canada's relations with other countries, our values are both guides and distinguishing features. Canada is committed to the betterment of life for all, to the resolution of differences by reason not force, to the practice of tolerance, to the acceptance of love and understanding as the most important of human traits. The Government, therefore, will continue to participate fully in international efforts for peace and for the well-being of people everywhere. It will continue to do what it can on behalf of the Canadian people to assist those who are afflicted by calamities, both natural and man-made.

The fluidity in world affairs marked by events in the past months and those expected in the near future present to us an opportunity to deepen and enrich our relationships with our old friends and to seek and strengthen friendships with others both within and without the councils and agencies of the United Nations. Isolation within the international community is as barren and damaging as is isolation within a domestic society. The visits to Canada in 1971 of such distinguished Heads of State and Government as the Presidents of Yugoslavia, Nauru and Niger, and the Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, Ceylon, Ghana, Malaysia, Fiji, Senegal, and Israel illustrate the universality of Canada's attitude to the world.

Canada's lines of communication and understanding continue to stand open in all directions. In particular, our ties with our friends in the new Europe and our attachment to the United States remain of the greatest importance. A United States which is strong, dynamic and outward looking is vital to the success of Canada's international endeavours and to our ability to contribute to the well-being of fellow Commonwealth countries and of those states in receipt of Canadian economic assistance including the fellow members of l'Agence de Coopération culturelle et technique des pays francophones to whose important conference we acted with pride as host last autumn. The Government and all Canadians anticipate with considerable pleasure the visit to Canada this spring of the President of the United States and Mrs. Nixon.

* * *

Our age is marked by inconsistency. Within our societies, the trend all too often is toward increases in size and of impersonality in human relationships while on the planet itself the speed of communication has created a new intimacy among nations. In these circumstances, there is both challenge and opportunity for governments and for individuals. Canada is seized of the challenge. The Government pledges itself to turn the opportunities to the benefit of individual Canadians.

* * *

Members of the House of Commons:

During this Session, you will be asked to grant the necessary funds for the services and expenditures authorized by Parliament.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The Prime Minister will lay before you today a list of bills that will be submitted to you during the Session.

May Divine Providence guide you in your deliberations.

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) moved:

That the speech of His Excellency the Governor General, delivered this day from the Throne to both Houses of Parliament, be taken into consideration later this day.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words on the motion just presented by the Prime Minister. I should also like to move an amendment to it. I realize that the amendment I shall propose may seem to ask for something that is a bit unusual on the first day of a session. However, may I point out that in actual fact this is the second day in a row that we are here and, with the way things are now planned, there will be no question period and no opportunity for members of the House to say anything until we are present on the third day. Since there was no question period yesterday, I believe there should be one today. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch):

That the motion be amended by adding at the end thereof the following words: "immediately after a forty minute oral question period, as provided by Standing Order 15".

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. As hon. members may suspect, obviously there are some procedural difficulties connected with an amendment of this type. It might be construed, I suggest to the House, as a substantive motion. However, I should not like to rule on it immediately. If hon. members want to give their views, I will hear them and then rule on whether the amendment proposed by the hon. member is in order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I first point out that the motion that was proposed by the Prime Minister must have been moved with the consent of the House. The Prime Minister moved it without having given any advance notice. It might be suggested that there was no opportunity for him to do this; however, under the new rules he could have done so. Therefore I take it that he has moved it under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and has had the consent of the House to do so. The motion having been moved, it is a debatable motion and therefore an amendable motion. I point out that it must be the kind of motion that is referred to in Standing Order 32(p), namely, a motion for "the arrangement of its proceedings", the proceedings of the House.

May I also point out, Sir, that Standing Order 15 provides the order of business for each day of the House. This is a Thursday. On Thursday, according to Standing Order 15, immediately after routine proceedings we are supposed to have oral questions for 40 minutes. The motion that the Prime Minister moved, of which he gave no notice and which the House allowed him to present, would set aside that right of the House on Thursday for an oral question period of 40 minutes. I submit, therefore, that since the question of the proceedings of the House for today, brought before us by the motion, has been brought before us in a way that is out of the ordinary, it is proper for the House to ask that the Standing Order be adhered to and that there be a question period.

Your Honour suggested that my amendment might be a substantive motion. I suggest that the substance of a question period is not introduced by my motion. That is already there, in Standing Order 15. I am simply asking for one of the rights and privileges of the House to be respected. That is why I ask that the words of any amendment be added to the motion so that we can proceed to consider the Speech from the Throne later this day, as the Prime Minister suggested, after we have had a regular, 40 minute oral question period.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I will not attempt to enlarge on the procedural arguments advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I will content myself with saying to Your Honour and the House that, as Your Honour will have gathered from what we attempted to do yesterday, I am substantially and thoroughly in agreement with the hon. member. I ask Your Honour, in considering your approach to this matter, to be vigilant in trying to find ways and means in order that the House should not be deprived for a second day in a row of its right to ask questions of the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, aside from the procedural aspect, I consider quite reasonable the suggestion brought forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to the effect that we should have a question period today. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) could well accede to this suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in order to avoid unnecessary discussion and so that we could, by unanimous agreement, have a 40-minute question period immediately upon resumption of the proceedings, if Your Honour so authorizes.

In any case, we consider the suggestion to be quite valid and most reasonable.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the tradition of this country and of this parliament it is that when, on the very first day of a session of parliament, an address is given by His Excellency, the representative of the Crown, it is the first duty of the Commons to consider that address.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Today, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in what can only be considered as a publicity-seeking move—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —has sought to interrupt what has been the tradition of this parliament since the very beginning. We have started a new session. What happened in the previous session is finished and over with. There has never been a request in any new session of parliament to have a question period before the address of His Excellency is considered by the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: The country has never been in such a mess before.

Mr. MacEachen: If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wishes to change the traditional form, if he wishes to alter the traditional courtesy that has been extended to the Crown by this House, then he ought to take the more direct method and move a motion at an appropriate time to send the whole question to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization for consideration. If he wants to dismantle the Speech from the Throne, if he wants to dismantle the address in reply, let him do it directly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: This is the year to support the Crown.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not wish to dismantle the minister's speech, but I would invite hon. members to limit their contributions as much as possible to the procedural aspect of the matter. I am not suggesting that this has been done necessarily by the other members who have participated in this brief debate. However, for the guidance of the Chair I think it might be useful to limit our debate at this time to the procedural question of whether this amendment is in order. I think that the substance of the matter, whether there ought to be or ought not to be a question period, is the substance of the amendment that is under consideration at the present time.

• (1200)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I want to make one more comment. I think it ought to be underlined that never in the history of this country, never in the history of this parliament, has there been a request for a question period before the opportunity for the House to proceed to the consideration of the Speech from the Throne, which is the message of the Crown to this House. That is new. That is an entirely new request. It has never been made in this House.

The motion that has been put by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is a form motion. It is not amendable. There is no way that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre can hope to amend this motion and ask the House at this point to vote on whether we should have a question period. Procedurally, it is absurd. It should not be considered. I am surprised. Maybe some day, probably a long time away, members of the opposition will sit on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Very soon.

Mr. MacEachen: When that happens and when we come from the other place, after they have laboured for many days to produce a message that will be considered by the House, they will say: No, let us not do that; let us have a question period for 40 minutes. This is the idea they have supported today. What has happened to the party of Macdonald, Borden and Diefenbaker?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the official opposition is taking its lead from the new republican, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the minister resumes his seat I should like to ask him a question. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) said that our first duty out of courtesy to the Crown is to deal with the Speech from the Throne. May I ask him if he has forgotten the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has already introduced Bill C-1 to assert our right as a Commons to deal with our own matters first?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to indulge or engage in polemics or a diatribe with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) who seems to be moved by some inspiration today that is rather contrary to that which should apply at this time.

I was going to raise the same point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I would simply add that the President of the Privy Council did make the allegation that it was traditional courtesy for the House to consider the message from His Excellency as the primary matter of business for today. Our rules have always provided, and it has been traditional as long as the minister has sat in this House and long before, that the Prime Minister, on behalf of the House, should move the traditional motion involving the rather empty and symbolic bill regarding the administration of oaths of office merely to show that the House is the master of its business and is not taking direction from the message of His Excellency. I therefore suggest to Your Honour that that argument falls to the ground.

Second, if the matter of a question period looms larger today, the answer lay in the hands of the government yesterday. The government which through what would I call almost parliamentary sharp practice—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —decided to summon parliament back and to have Your Honour prepare and distribute an order paper with items of unfinished business listed thereon. But the treasury benches then directed that the messenger from the other place should arrive almost as soon as Your Honour entered the chamber. The treasury benches decided when that intervention should be made and, in saying this, I am not guilty of lese majesty or otherwise. If a question period had been granted yesterday, as it should have been, there would not have been this pressure today. On that score I say that the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is acceptable in principle for today's deliberations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I have to indicate to hon. members that in my view the contributions which have been made to this brief procedural debate have not been addressed principally to the procedural point. Hon. members have suggested that it might be proper today to have a question period, that there ought to be a question period today because there was not one yesterday, that it is the duty of the government to provide an opportunity for hon. members to ask questions, and that it is our duty to go on with Routine Proceedings. I suggest this does not have anything at all to do with the point that I brought to the attention of hon. members.

My suggestion when the matter was raised was that the amendment was not procedurally correct. I have not received much assistance from hon. members in this respect, and I think my ruling will have to be that the amendment is a substantive motion and is not an amendment which can be attached to the motion before the House.

Dealing with the matter in a substantive way, hon. members have suggested that we should proceed in the usual way with Routine Proceedings and that the motion made by the Prime Minister was made under Standing Order 43. With respect, I cannot agree with this suggestion. The motion was made on the basis of parliamentary tradition. My understanding is that this is the kind of motion which is proposed and the proceedings which we have today are based on 100 years of Canadian practice and, I am sure, many more years of British practice. I think the Chair has a responsibility to recognize this.

One hon. member suggested that perhaps this should be changed. That may be so. Hon. members may feel that on the first day of the session the procedure should be changed, that we should not have the formal motions that are made and should not proceed in the way that we do, without Routine Proceedings, to the consideration of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I believe that one of the responsibilities of the Speaker is not to change these traditions but to protect them. I am prepared to do so in this particular case.

I am not suggesting that the motion cannot be amended. It could be amended. If a procedurally acceptable amendment were submitted for the consideration of the Chair, I would have no hesitation in putting the amendment and calling in the members. But my conclusion, and the ruling I must make is that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre cannot be accepted. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I request leave of the House to table a list of the titles of the several bills which were referred to in His Excellency's speech. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that this list be printed in today's Hansard.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, we would be prepared to give consent. However, to facilitate hon. members in studying this list, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the list showing all these bills will show which are carry-overs from the last session and which from the session before?

Mr. MacEachen: Would you also like to know the ones we will be doing next session?

Mr. Baldwin: In addition, I would like to ask the government, particularly the President of the Privy Council, if these bills will be brought forward shortly so that the House will not be compelled to wait, as it had to in the last session, for these bills to be produced so they can be examined?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1210)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the research assistants of the opposition were properly engaged rather than looking for ways to trample traditions concerning the monarchy and parliament—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Prime Minister seeks permission to table a document and have it included in Hansard as part of today's proceedings. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The list referred to above follows.]

1. A Bill to Amend the Criminal Code.

2. A Bill to Amend the British North America Acts 1867-1965.

3. An Act to Amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act.

4. A Bill to Amend the Income Tax Act.

5. A Bill to Amend the C.N.R. Financing and Guarantee Act.

6. A Bill to Amend the Farm Credit Act.

7. An Act to Amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

8. Protection of Privacy Bill.

9. A Bill to Amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act.

10. A Bill to Amend the Explosives Act.

11. A Bill to Amend the Canada Labour Code.

12. National Parks Legislation.

13. Legislation respecting New Financing Mechanisms and Institutions for Residential Mortgage Market.

14. National Anthem Legislation.

15. A Bill to Amend the Fair Employment Practices Act.

16. A Bill to Amend the Canada Wildlife Act.

17. A Bill to Amend the Agriculture Exhibitions Assistance Act.

18. A Bill to Amend the National Housing Act.

19. A Bill respecting Heritage Canada (Heritage Trust).

20. Family Income Security Legislation.

21. Uranium and Thorium Legislation.

22. Competition Legislation.

23. Judges Act Amendments.

24. Medicare Legislation.

25. Adult Occupational Training Legislation.

26. A Bill to Amend the Industry, Trade and Commerce Act.

27. A Bill respecting the Territorial Courts of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

28. Legislation on Foreign Ownership Policy.

29. A Bill respecting Cigarette Products.

* * *

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) presented the following message from His Excellency the Governor General:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons a certified copy of an Order in Council appointing the Honourable Allan Joseph MacEachen, President of the Queens's Privy Council for Canada, the Honourable Charles Mills Drury, President of the Treasury Board, the Honourable Jean Chrétien, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Honourable Donald Stovel Macdonald, Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons as commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of chapter H-9 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, entituled: An Act respecting the House of Commons.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso) that Mr. Gérald Laniel, member for the electoral district of Beauharnois-Salaberry, be appointed Deputy Chairman of the Committees of the whole.

Motion agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso) that Mr. Prosper Boulanger, member for the electoral district of Mercier, be appointed Assistant Deputy Chairman of Committees of the whole.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

PROVISION FOR EXTENSION OF SITTING, FEBRUARY 18, 1972

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 2(2), the House shall meet at 11 o'clock a.m. on Friday, February 18, 1972, and that such sitting shall not be adjourned until the leaders of all parties have spoken in the Address Debate.

Motion agreed to.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the sitting be suspended until two o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The sitting stands suspended until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 12.17 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended until 2 p.m.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY, MOVED BY MR. ROSS WHICHER AND SECONDED BY MR. CLAUDE G. LAJOIE

The House proceeded to the consideration of the speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor General at the opening of the session.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it is with great sincerity that I open my remarks by saying that it is indeed a genuine pleasure to be called upon by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and the members of his government, to move the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. All of the constituents of the riding of Bruce share this honour with me.

The riding of Bruce consists of the whole of Bruce county and what is known as the northern part of western Ontario. It also includes five townships in the county of Grey along with the town of Hanover. While there are several good sized towns, it can certainly be described as a rural riding. I am sure that every member of the House of Commons is proud of the area that he or she represents. I, too, have that pride, and it is even greater today than usual, not simply because I have been asked to give this speech, but because of the several great things that are taking place in the riding itself.

The huge Douglas Point project is the largest single piece of construction work that is going on in Canada at the present time. When it is completed, the sum of $1.5 billion will have been spent on construction work alone.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are in the wrong House.

Mr. Whicher: This includes the largest heavy water plant of its type in the world, one that we all hope will work and not end up in the tragic circumstances in which the one in Nova Scotia now finds itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: To complement this plant, which is being constructed for Atomic Energy of Canada, Ontario Hydro is building a three million kilowatt nuclear power station. To illustrate the vastness of this power station may I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the total energy requirements of the whole of Ontario 15 years ago were about six million kilowatts. Many hundreds of workers are at this very moment working on both of these projects which, when they are completed, will mean so much to the development of Ontario and indeed to Canada as a whole.

Many of the members here today are fully conversant with the fact that Canada is putting a telecommunications satellite into the atmosphere during the next year or so. Like our American friends, who have tracking stations all over the world in order to send men into space we, too, must have stations all over Canada to receive information and to send information to the satellite many miles in space. The significance of this operation is the fact that the command station for the whole operation is now being constructed at Allan Park, just east of Hanover, in the riding of Bruce, and many millions of dollars are being spent there.

Like many rural communities in Canada, up until only a few months ago, we were serviced by only one television station. Last year, however, we were successful in having CKCO of Kitchener build a satellite station north of Wiarton, and now most of the riding is privileged to have alternate viewing.

• (1410)

Many hon. members will appreciate the fact that, over the past several years, I have been keenly interested in the agricultural problems of Canada.

Mr. Peters: I haven't noticed it.

Mr. Whicher: There has been a good reason for this. We are primarily an agricultural area. Proudly, we lay claim to the fact that we are the beef capital of Canada, and right at this moment there are approximately 255,000 beef cattle being fed in the County of Bruce alone, plus many more thousands that are in the Grey part of the riding. Besides beef cattle, our farmers are extensively engaged in the dairy industry and in the feeding of hogs and poultry. We are a tourist area, too, and Bruce County alone has over 200 miles of shoreline on the Great Lakes. Thousands of cottagers, both Canadian and American, make their summer home with us, and are most welcome. Our rural communities and small towns are most pleasant places to live, and most of the residents prefer these communities to the more populated areas in Ontario.

Lumbering was a great industry in years gone by and because of that fact many furniture factories started in the various towns of the riding. Many of them, whose names are known across the length of Canada, are still producing an excellent quality.

But I did not come here today to speak solely of the great riding of Bruce. I come, Mr. Speaker, to lay the cards on the table, as I see them, relating to the problems and disappointments with which this government is faced, along with the many good things that have been accomplished by the same government.

An hon. Member: Tell us about the unemployment insurance situation.

Mr. Whicher: For example, no one can deny the unhappy circumstances in which many of our unemployed find themselves today.

An hon. Member: You are right.

Mr. Whicher: It makes us all sad; not just members of the opposition, but indeed every single member of the Liberal caucus.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whicher: We will see how much you fellows shout in the next few minutes.

May I say with all the emphasis at my command that I am proud of this government that had the gumption to tackle that horrible parasite known as inflation, because if it had not there would have been a million Canadians unemployed now instead of the still tragic figure of 650 thousand. This must be the main objective of this government. The number one priority is to get these people back to work while at the same time keeping inflation under control as much as possible, in order that we may continue exporting billions of dollars worth of goods, because, on a population basis, this country has the highest rate of exports of any country in the world.

My greatest criticism of this government, however, is the fact that it has not sold to the Canadian people the many good things that it has accomplished since coming into office.

Mr. Bell: Explain.

Mr. Whicher: Last Sunday evening I heard an official spokesman for the Conservative party speak on "The Nation's Business". I will not name him here. As a matter of fact, I strongly suspect that the Tory party will want to forget his name as the speech was filled with abuse, vindictiveness and downright lies. In passing, I might say that he announced that he had taken a leave of absence after more than 20 years as a journalist to enter politics actively as a supporter of the Conservative party. I strongly suggest that he keep his tie with his former occupation as he will most certainly need it. Even the Tories wouldn't accept a man like that around here. In his speech, he castigated the government for giving an increase of only 42 cents per month to the old age pensioners of Canada. This, of course, is a downright falsehood, but it seems to me that this government has allowed this falsehood to spread without attempting to see that the people of Canada are told the truth.

An hon. Member: Tell us the truth.

Mr. Whicher: What are the facts about the senior citizens of this nation of ours, and how has the government treated them? The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that at the present moment approximately 600 thousand of our senior citizens are drawing $135 per month as single persons and $255 per month as a married couple at age 65, and not at age 70 as was the case when the last Tory government was in power in this country. And I repeat that they draw $255 per month as a couple and not $130 as was the case, once again, when the last Tory government had control of the House of Commons. These, Mr. Speaker, are the highest old age pensions in the world. The government should be proud of this and every member of the House of Commons should be just as proud. It is true that approximately one-third of our senior citizens are still drawing $80 per month or $160 as a couple, but every one of these people has another source of income.

Indeed a small minority of them have large incomes. The remaining one-third of our senior citizens are drawing supplementary benefits, somewhere in between the minimum of $80 per month and the maximum of $135 per month. Am I ashamed of these figures? Am I ashamed of the way that we treat our fathers and mothers, who truly made Canada great? Once again I say, these are the highest old age pensions in the whole world. But this is not all that we do for our senior citizens.

• (1420)

Mr. Peters: He acknowledges the pensions.

An hon. Member: Shut up and listen.

Mr. Whicher: In the province of Ontario, for example, as of January 1 of this year every person over the age of 65 gets absolutely free medical and hospital services. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent on providing homes for the aged, both by governments and by private concerns. In many areas of the province, tax rebates are given to senior citizens on their municipal taxes. Transportation expenses are sometimes cut in half and entertainment costs are greatly reduced. But this is not all.

Mr. Alexander: I want to hear more about your riding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: What my hon. friend means of course, Mr. Speaker, is that he does not like to hear the facts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: As of January 1 of this year, no senior citizen in Canada who derives any supplementary benefits from our old age security legislation will pay one single nickel in income tax, and we should be proud of that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Are my friends to the left not going to cheer for the senior citizens? When you Tories were in power, they certainly paid. Without any doubt I can say here this afternoon that the senior citizens of Canada have the benefit of the just society promised by our government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Whicher: There is another group in our society who, like our senior citizens, have given their all to their country. I refer to the almost one million veterans who are still alive in Canada. As a matter of fact, there are only two countries in the whole world who think enough of their veterans to have a minister of veterans affairs. I am not referring to England, the United States or Germany. One is France and the other is Canada, and we should be proud of that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: We should also be proud of the fact that, as a result of the new legislation that came through last year under the then minister of veterans affairs, the pensions paid to our veterans are the highest pensions anywhere in the world today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: I should like to refer to this nice booklet which some of my friends have not read, and no doubt choose to ignore, called "Pensions for Disability and Death Related to Military Service". I ask you, when you have time, to look at some of the pensions that we are paying to the veterans of Canada, who of course deserve them. Other veterans in the rest of the world deserve them also, but we pay the most. May I remind you of the fact that a single pensioner in Canada from either World War I or II, who receives a full pension, now receives $292 a month absolutely tax free, and that a pensioner with a wife and three children receives $460 a month absolutely tax free. This is not too much, but the fact is that this government has given the veterans of Canada more than anyone else in the world, and I am proud of that.

Mr. Baldwin: I gather you like the government.

Mr. Whicher: We in Canada live in a most peculiar situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: You could have substituted the word "Liberal".

Mr. Whicher: It may be a peculiar situation, but not as peculiar as some of my friends to the left.

Mr. Baldwin: How far left?

Mr. Whicher: Thank God that the great country to the south of us is the United States of America, but in thanking Him let us remember that this situation creates many difficulties too. Last year, the United States had a deficit of $38 billion and this year they are budgeting for a deficit of $25 billion. How does one live beside a nation such as this that spends such huge quantities of money, that has ten times our population, and for that matter has a much warmer climate? But in spite of this proximity, we have done a reasonably good job here.

Last autumn, a tax bill was passed in the House of Commons, bitterly opposed by all members of the opposition, which raised the tax exemption from $1,000 to $1,500 for single persons and from $2,000 to $2,850 for married couples. Not enough, says the opposition, but it is approximately a 50 per cent increase and certainly a step in the right direction. I cannot resist putting the question to my hon. friends to the left: how much did they raise it the last time that they were in office? Not one single nickel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: But the government did better than this; they gave an additional exemption of $650 to every taxpayer on reaching the age of 65 as opposed to the exemption of $500 at the age of 70 which existed previously. Not enough, says the opposition, but how much did my Conservative friends increase it the last time they were in office? Once again, not one single nickel.

For years, many Canadians, particularly young working mothers, have said that there should be some tax exemption for them to allow for a baby sitter or a housekeeper. The then minister of finance answered the challenge, and now up to $2,000 can be allowed to the working mother. Not enough, the opposition will say, but may I remind them that it is a mighty fine start. Working men and women are being allowed $150 for clothes and tools used in their particular vocation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Big deal.

Mr. Whicher: Not enough, the opposition says, but again, how much did they allow when they were in government? Once again, not one single nickel.

Many of these good points have not been sold to the people of Canada. There are many more that could be mentioned. Just as an example, I remember the hue and cry that went up from the small businessmen of this nation when it was suggested in the White Paper on Taxation that all corporations would be placed on the same tax basis, whether big or small. This government, rightly so in my opinion, put into tax law percentages that allow the small businessmen to pay only half of what the big corporations pay up to a very reasonable profit figure. It is human nature to dislike any form of taxation, but this government has made our tax laws much fairer than they were in the past. An example of this is the implementation of a capital gains tax for the first time in Canada's history. In my opinion, at least 90 per cent of all Canadians are in favour of this tax, but in spite of this some members of the opposition, in their attempt to gain favour with big business, were opposed to this very fair method of taxation that has been implemented by every single western nation.

My concluding remarks on this particular subject are that Canadians as a whole owe a great debt of gratitude to the Hon. Edgar Benson,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Mr. Whicher: —who took a fantastic amount of criticism without wincing and finally brought forth a fair taxation plan for the citizens of this nation. Mr. Speaker, if the members of the opposition do not think I am right, then let them ask the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who will pay no further taxes, and ask the millions whose taxes are being reduced.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Ever since World War II, the agricultural industry of Canada has not had a square deal. With rising costs, and in many instances reduced prices for the products they produce, farmers have been caught in an economic squeeze that is unreasonable and unbearable. The difficulty was not caused merely by the fact that other segments of the economy had their incomes raised while, on the other hand, farmers in most instances were receiving the same income or, in many instances, less income. I have stated in this chamber previously, and I do so again now, that the agriculture industry in many instances is worse off now than it was when I first entered politics 17 years ago. But, Mr. Speaker, I can truthfully say that I can see a light. It is my honest belief that the agriculture industry, after a long delay, is on the way up.

The beef industry is in great shape, and indeed prices are at a point where a farmer can make a reasonable return on his investment. The dairy industry is in much better shape than it was two years ago. Thanks to a great selling effort by private enterprise, under the direction of the Canadian Dairy Commission, practically all our stocks of powdered milk have been sold. As a result, prices have increased and those engaged in the dairy industry in Canada, while not getting paid as much as they should, are at least making a living.

Let me not minimize the fantastic amount of hard work that our dairy farmers do. Let me emphasize that on each day of every year, including Sundays and holidays, cows have to be milked twice a day. With this as a background, I say to you now that I hope dairy prices will improve, but at the same time I emphasize that the industry as a whole is in much better shape than it was when the government came into power.

Our hog producers, who faced disastrous prices last year because of over-production in the whole of North America, are receiving a subsidy from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) of $5 for every hog of good quality, up to a maximum of 200 hogs, which will result in $25 million being put into the pockets of our hog producers. No one deserves it more; the fact is that their plight has been recognized by the government.

A two price system for wheat has been brought into being by the government. This is something that was requested, even demanded, by the wheat producers for many years. It will put an extra $60 million into the pockets of the wheat producers of this country. However, I emphasize that after many years of frustration it was this government that had the gumption and the foresight to give the wheat farmers of Canada the square deal that they are now getting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Many years ago I used to read about the great salesmanship of the Hon. Alvin Hamilton, minister of agriculture in the Conservative government. I admired him because he sold wheat and grain to the markets of the world. But, Mr. Speaker, if hon. members of the opposition are proud of that gentleman's name, how much prouder should they be of the Hon. Otto Lang who, last year, sold more wheat than in any other year in the history of Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: I ask my western friends only one thing. Tell the farmers of western Canada of the great salesmanship job that the Hon. Otto Lang has done. Just as a matter of interest, Mr. Speaker, I received a letter on my desk this morning from the Sales and Marketing Executive Association of Regina which is having an awards dinner to honour the Hon. Otto Lang as salesman of the year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, it is incomprehensible to me why members of the opposition do not clap. This minister sold western products. They should be proud of him.

I also ask my western friends to tell the farmers that it was chiefly through the efforts of the Hon. Otto Lang, and of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), that they got a two price system for wheat. They should also tell farmers that it was the Minister of Agriculture who spearheaded the efforts to get the government to give the hog producers a $5 subsidy for their hogs.

Just before the New Year, Parliament passed a national marketing bill, known as Bill C-176, which does more to influence my decision that the agricultural industry is on the way up than any other piece of legislation. It was an act that, in principle, was asked for by every major agricultural body in the country. It is an act that, for the first time in history, will allow the farmers to run their own show. At all times there will be a majority of producing farmers on the council that administers the act. It will allow farmers, if they wish, to have agencies set up for any product, and will, for the first time in history, help ensure that the agricultural community will get fair prices for the food commodities that it produces. I repeat that the farmers of Canada wanted this legislation, and after nearly two years it has been given to them by the government, with the proper amendments that the agricultural community sought.

You may remember, Mr. Speaker, that we stayed here until the early hours of the morning to pass that bill through the House. I remember the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) sitting here for hours that night, showing an interest in the farmers of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whicher: But where, Mr. Speaker, were the leaders of the other parties?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Whicher: I haven't any idea where they were, but one thing I do know is that they were not here looking after the interests of the farmers of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I have to interrupt the hon. member to inform him that the time allotted to him under the terms of the Standing Order have expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Speaker: He can continue only with the consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, when I was at home during the past month I must confess that none of my farming friends asked where the leader of the New Democratic Party was on that particular night. They really don't care. However, I was asked by some of my Conservative friends where the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was when his help was needed to get this bill through. I replied that I did not know, but that I would certainly ask him at the first opportunity. No doubt at the opportune moment both of these leaders will tell us where they were.

Last year we had a crisis in Canada. The FLQ were raising havoc in the great city of Montreal. Hindsight is a great thing to have and it may very well be that, as a result of looking into the past, we may conclude the government over-reacted, at least to some degree on that particular occasion. But there is one thing that we do know, namely that one very responsible cabinet minister of the Quebec government was murdered and one senior official of the British government was kidnapped. There is one other thing that we know, if we are honest with ourselves, and that is that 98 per cent of the people of Canada stood behind the Prime Minister in the action that he took in that hazardous hour.

• (1440)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: The Leader of the Créditistes (Mr. Caouette) to his everlasting credit, backed up the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: But what about the leaders of the other two parties? Mr. Speaker, they waffled, like the waffle group of the New Democratic Party. They tried to play politics in Canada's hour of danger.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: They were willing to gamble with Canada's freedom because they did not like the fact some people were put in jail for a few days. Mr. Speaker, during the past two world wars thousands of Canadians died to help keep Canada free and we are not prepared to gamble with this freedom for the sake of political expediency. Mr.

Speaker, I ask you in all seriousness, if Canada faced an hour of crisis in the future who would you rather have at the head of this nation, the leaders of either of the two opposition parties or the leader of the present government?

An hon. Member: Don't answer that; you may incriminate yourself.

Mr. Whicher: I leave it to the people of this nation to decide. Mr. Speaker, ever since the present Prime Minister took office he has been opposed at every turn by the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whicher: These advocates of gloom and doom have told us that Canada is in terrible shape; in fact, in the worst shape in history. They emphasize, without exception, our problems and never once talk of the many good things taking place in our nation. I ask them now, Mr. Speaker, where would they rather live? Would it be in once mighty England, in Ireland or in Pakistan? To be fair, would it be in the United States where over one and one-half million people are on welfare in New York City alone right at this very minute.

An hon. Member: We are catching up fast.

Mr. Whicher: Would it be in the United States whose citizens tried to burn down the great city of Detroit only a couple of years ago and in whose metropolitan centres it is not safe to go out at night? Once again, would it be in the United States which is saddled with a racial problem that is terrible to contemplate, as well as a war that all its citizens wish to get out of. No, Mr. Speaker, when the chips are down, all Canadians would want to remain in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Indeed, if circumstances would allow it, one half of the world would like to move here. While appreciating the difficulties that this country faces with the unemployed, and while admitting that we have many imperfections, although not as many as other countries have, let me point out the following fact. No one who is working in Canada today, whether he be an electrician or a plumber, a teacher or a nurse—

An hon. Member: Or Pierre Vallieres.

Mr. Whicher: —a doctor or a lawyer, a politician or a secretary, ever had it so good.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Our greatest problem is to get coloured television sets instead of black and white and to have two or three cars in every family instead of one.

Last autumn, the Calgary Stampeders came back to Calgary after winning the Grey Cup in Vancouver. Thousands of fans greeted them, shouting, "We are number one." Last spring, the Montreal Canadiennes returned to Montreal to be greeted by thousands of Montrealers shouting the same thing. It is high time, Mr. Speaker, that 22 Canadians stood on their feet and shouted, "We are number one."

An hon. Member: Twenty-two?

Mr. Whicher: Anyone can make the odd mistake. Because you see, Mr. Speaker, we are number one. I defy the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party to say otherwise. If we are, Mr. Speaker, surely, the captain of this great ship, the Prime Minister of Canada, deserves some recognition.

An hon. Member: There are too many leaks in that captain's ship.

Mr. Whicher: I hear all that, Mr. Speaker, and it reminds me of the story of the surgeon who was performing a brain transplant. He said that it cost $100 for an ounce of Liberal brains, $150 for Tories and $1,000 for NDP. The poor fellow asked why it cost $1,000 for NDP brains and the surgeon replied, "It takes a hell of a lot of NDPs before you can find an ounce of brains."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whicher: I guess we are getting into the meat now and if you fellows want to open up, I will too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister has to be criticized for his sins, and no man is without them,—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: —then he should get credit for being the leader of this great country, the greatest place in the world in which to live in this year, 1972.

Mr. Speaker, in a few days, the President of the United States will be visiting the great People's Republic of China. Without fear of contradiction, I tell you that it was the Prime Minister of Canada who really initiated this trip, which means so much to the peace of this world. Without fear of contradiction, I say to you that it was because of Canada's efforts in bringing about the recognition of Red China at the United Nations, it was because of Canada's action in recognizing that country through the exchange of diplomats that got the United States and China talking to each other again. And it will be because of the Prime Minister's efforts in initiating friendly gestures to such great countries as the U.S.S.R. and China that will enable our business community and our agricultural people to initiate trade with the huge numbers of people in those countries, so vast in number, that they are almost beyond comprehension.

Mr. Paproski: Let's see you walk on the water, Pierre.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, if we want peace in this world, we have to talk to everybody and if we want to do business with them, we have to learn to talk too.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Oh, don't stop.

Mr. Whicher: —let me say this. I am sure that the Russians and the Chinese and the French and the English are proud of their countries. I am equally sure that the Americans are proud of theirs. How much prouder should we be of this great country of ours, stretching from Newfoundland to British Columbia, which, while it may have many imperfections, has not as many as other countries in the world. Let us be proud of our forests and our mines. Let us be proud of our great wheat fields and modern cities. And even more than that, Mr. Speaker, let us be proud of our way of life. During the past year, stories have been circulated about an election that must be called according to our constitution in the foreseeable future. To the Prime Minister of Canada, I say this: Call it any time you want.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1450)

Mr. Whicher: The results, as far as I am concerned, are a foregone conclusion. When the chips are down, the people of Canada will appreciate the good life that this government is allowing them to live.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: They will appreciate that Canada is certainly not a heaven; but it is the next thing to it on this whole earth. While I appreciate the fact that you will want to fight an election on the future of Canada, may I suggest that your government has, nothing to be ashamed of in either the past or the present. Like the Stampeders and the Canadiens, our Nancy Greenes and our Bobby Orrs, we are number one.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie):

That an Address the text of which follows, be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To His Excellency the Right Hon. Roland Michener, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency: We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

Mr. Claude G. Lajoie (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, it was Benjamin Disraeli who once said, "I feel a very unusual sensation. If it is not an indigestion, I think it must be gratitude."

[Translation]

For a new member of the House a maiden speech is of special importance. I am deeply grateful for the honour bestowed upon me today of seconding the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne moved by my colleague, and I thank the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for this honour which is reflected on my family and the whole constituency of Trois-Rivières.

I should like to pay a tribute to the people who elected me almost a year ago. I entered politics somewhat in spite of myself and had it not been for my admiration for the right hon. Prime Minister, I might not have come to it. His energy, wisdom and courage have won him the admiration of all, who see him as a distinguished leader. I am a proud member of his party. He has been at all times the champion of Canadian unity, which is the key to our survival.

[English]

I have also promoted Canadian unity, and in this respect I have something in common with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—but I did it 23 years before he did. My wife is also from Vancouver.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lajoie: The eight children in my family have learned both languages. Although my wife comes from God's country, she is perfectly at home in Trois-Rivières.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Lajoie: The constituency I have the honour to represent in this House was named by Jacques Cartier, the navigator who sailed up the St. Lawrence in 1535. However, there are only two rivers in our area, but the islands of la Potherie and Saint-Quentin, at the junction with the St. Lawrence and the St. Maurice Rivers, give the impression of three rivers. It is one of the occurrences in our regional history which one likes to mention.

The city of Trois-Rivières—the second in Canada—was founded in 1634, by the sieur de Laviolette. It was, at the outset, a starting point for the coureurs de bois like Radisson, whose legend still lives on. The first heavy industry in Canada was established there in 1729, under the name of Les Vieilles Forges, which were still in existence 154 years later, in 1883. As a matter of fact, the federal government has offered a million dollars to the Quebec government for their restoration.

Given its geographical situation, the city of Trois-Rivières was destined to become the capital of the pulp and paper industry. My constituency now includes three important cities, Trois-Rivières, Cap-de-la-Madeleine and Trois-Rivières-Ouest, comprising more than 100,000 people. Seventy five per cent of our population is made up of workers. I am myself a worker and I am proud of it. I built my first house myself and although I do not use the hammer anymore, I can still oversee a group of workers.

My constituency, an important industrial centre, includes 19 firms, with more than 200 employees each, and more than 100 other industries employing more than 3,000 people. Personal income in the three cities mentioned earlier amounts to $208.5 million and retail sales total $115.6 million. Our harbour ranks sixth in Canada. It is open the year round. Its mooring front runs almost 10,000 feet and last year it accommodated 1,194 ships, including 370 liners and 824 coasters. During 1970, 5,364,914 pounds of goods were handled there. Piers and sheds are linked by a five-mile railroad.

Last summer I had the honour of being a member of the delegation from Cap-de-la-Madeleine which went to Châteaudun, in France, to celebrate the establishment of those twin cities. The city of Cap-de-la-Madeleine gets its name from Jacques de Laferté, vicar of Sainte-Marie-Madeleine in Châteaudun, who was the first owner of the land on which the city was built. The granting of the status of town in 1918, and that of city in 1922, was the starting point of an era of development which has been going on ever since. The population of Cap-de-la-Madeleine is now 32,000.

Trois-Rivières-Ouest, with a population of 8,000, is a young dynamic town which has only been in existence for eight years. From a suburb, it has turned into an active town where housing construction is developing constantly.

The three cities of Trois-Rivières, Cap-de-la-Madeleine, and Trois-Rivières-Ouest constitute in effect a metropolitan area which in turn contains the riding.

I am pleased to give credit here to the three mayors who govern the fates of those cities in a dynamic way and with a spirit of co-operation, in the best interest of the metropolitan area in general.

[English]

In the few months I have spent in this House, I have learned a great deal about my colleagues, those who face me as well as those who sit on this side. They are a living example and a true picture of Canadians working for the betterment of all Canadians from all parts of the country. Indeed, debates can be heated at times and tempers can flare, but this is Parliament at work.

• (1500)

[Translation]

Through the policy set forth this morning, the government intends first of all to take steps to stimulate our economy. Those measures will promote trade exchanges and facilitate the financing of Canadian exporters. The maintenance of consumer price stability is also provided for, while increased assistance to secondary industries will enable them to develop further. Those measures will stimulate the economy in general and be of benefit to industry and labour alike.

The House will also be asked to deal with a measure to increase the number of jobs through better use of the competence and initiative of those who are looking for work. A new labour code will also be studied, which will take into account the many representations received in the last few months.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with the proposed legislation and without commenting them all, I believe I can say that they augur well.

The member has a varied role. Not only is he a link between his constituents as well as their spokesman in Ottawa, but he also acts as a legislator who considers bills and discusses them in the committees or in the House. On occasion, he will serve as a delegate at international organizations such as the UN and NATO. The image of the member is often warped. He is too often put on a pedestal; he becomes an almost unapproachable character who lives off the fat of the land in the capital. Parliamentary proceedings keep him in Ottawa five days weekly and the problems of his constituents often compel him to work on Saturdays and Sundays. It is just the same an engrossing work and the member derives his greatest satisfaction from the knowledge that he has been of some assistance to an individual and has supported a bill which will benefit all Canadians.

I would feel remiss if I did not at least briefly point out the achievements of the government during the past three years. In all fields, amendments have been made to existing legislation, or new laws have replaced those which had become obsolete. All levels of society have benefited from this government policy.

In the field of social policy, we have had amendments to the Old Age Security Act and an increase of veterans pensions. As regards the protection of the citizen and his rights, we have looked after the consumer's protection through measures such as the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act and the Weights and Measures Act.

In the field of labour, the new Unemployment Insurance Act provides for increased benefits for thousands of beneficiaries. The same holds true as regards economic expansion. More recently, we have had the establishment of the Department of Environment and the arctic waters pollution legislation.

And I did not mention such programs as Opportunities for Youth or Local Initiatives, which have benefited thousands of Canadians in all walks of life.

Before closing, I should like to say how happy I am to learn that the government will be creating three national parks in the Canadian north. Now, each of Canada's provinces and territories will be represented in our national park system. Our fellow citizens of the St. Maurice Valley are very happy to have obtained one of Quebec's first two parks, and the consequences are already being felt. In addition to creating hundreds of direct jobs, this project has led to the implementation of the Trans-Quebec Highway between Trois-Rivières and the national park, through a $4 million-dollar contribution by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

The St. Maurice Valley National Park will mark the beginning of the new touristic calling of our area, owing to the very rich history of Trois-Rivières and of its gallant pioneers.

At the outset, I mentioned the aggressiveness, the wisdom and the courage of the Prime Minister. Indeed these qualities were essential for him to initiate the program which he has carried out and the one which will be introduced to the House in the months to come.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the motion proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher).

[English]

On motion of Mr. Stanfield, the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. MacEachen, the House adjourned at 3.09 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 18, 1972

The House met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S AND SENATE GALLERIES OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Mr. Speaker: It gives me much pleasure to bring to the attention of hon. members the presence in the Speaker's gallery and in the Senate gallery of a delegation of very distinguished and senior parliamentarians from the United States Congress representing both the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The delegation, led by Senator Frank Church and Congressman Neil Gallagher, is in Ottawa to attend the fourteenth annual meeting of the Canada-U.S. Interparliamentary Group. I know it is the sense of this House that over the years this group, this association, has made a valuable and indeed a positive and significant contribution to the maintenance of cordial relations between our two peoples, between our governments and between our countries, based upon good will, mutual understanding and friendship.

On behalf of all hon. members I extend to our distinguished visitors and friends a most hearty welcome and express the hope that their stay in Canada will be interesting, enjoyable and fruitful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

THE MINISTRY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGES—TRIBUTES AND BEST WISHES TO MEMBER FOR NIAGARA FALLS ON RECOVERY FROM ILLNESS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as is customary I should like to inform the House of certain changes made in the ministry since the recess began on January 12, 1972.

It is with great personal regret that I received the resignation on December 31, 1971 of the Hon. J. J. Greene as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I know I speak for all hon. members when I say that we followed our colleague's recent illness with concern and are now delighted with the recovery which will allow him to continue to serve his constituency in Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1110)

Mr. Trudeau: Although his absence has already been felt by cabinet, it is fortunate that the House of Commons, and indeed all of Canada, may still benefit from the unique eloquence, common sense and humour of the hon. member for Niagara Falls.

[Translation]

During the parliamentary recess, some changes were made in the membership of the cabinet. The Hon. P.M. Mahoney was made Minister of State to assist the Minister of Finance.

Ten ministers were given a different portfolio beginning January 28, 1972: the Hon. Arthur Laing, Minister of Veterans Affairs—

[English]

Shall I dispense, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Lewis: Dispense. It makes no difference, anyway.

Mr. Trudeau: In that case, I shall not dispense, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Hon. E. J. Benson, Minister of National Defence; Hon. John N. Turner, Minister of Finance; Hon. Bryce Mackasey, Minister of Manpower and Immigration; Hon. Donald S. Macdonald, Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources; Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé, Minister of Public Works; Hon. Ron Basford, Minister of State for Urban Affairs; Hon. Robert K. Andras, Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs; Hon. Otto E. Lang, Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada who will still be responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board; Hon. Martin P. O'Connell, Minister of Labour, who will still be responsible for Information Canada.

I should like to table the correspondence exchanged between the Hon. J. J. Greene and myself. As a few changes were also made in the appointment of parliamentary secretaries, I should like to table the decree concerning those changes.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I just say a word about the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Greene) to whom the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) referred. I will have one or two other things to say about the rest of the Prime Minister's announcement later in the day. On my own behalf and that of my colleagues I wish to express our regrets because the hon. member for Niagara Falls has found it necessary to retire from the cabinet as a result of ill health. I express these regrets all the more warmly because I know that he has never had anything except my own best interests at heart in pursuing his career. He has been a vigorous partisan, as I am sure he would agree. At times he has swung a broad axe and sometimes I felt a blunt axe; but he was always prepared to have an axe swung at him in return. I wish him well, Sir.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Tribute to Member

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise only to join my colleagues and myself in the wishes expressed to the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Greene). I have already commented about the changes in the cabinet and I see no reason for repeating those comments. I want to tell the hon. member for Niagara Falls that all the things the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said about him were true, that we all enjoyed his part in the House of Commons, his speeches outside and his conscientious work as a minister in a very important portfolio. I regret with all my heart that his illness has made it impossible for him to continue his work. I look forward to listening to him in the House as an honourable and honoured member.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, it is with feeling that my colleagues and I endorse the words spoken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and by other members of the opposition concerning the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Greene). We have always felt a great deal of esteem for him, and we want to testify today that he has always honoured the responsibilities that had been entrusted to him.

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Niagara Falls has made a precious contribution to the prestige of the House of Commons through the quality of his speeches and the perfection with which he has always accomplished his work.

I met him yesterday with a group of colleagues and, in the face of the misfortune that has befallen him, he simply said: "You know, my friends, anywhere in life patience is required." Such is the man who said those words.

On behalf of my colleagues, I would like to congratulate him on his work and to wish him better luck in the future with us in Parliament.

* * *

[English]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

EVALUATION OF PROGRAMS BY COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43 which I consider to be of urgent and pressing importance. I do so in light of the recent unemployment figures released by Statistics Canada, which indicate that in provinces where Department of Regional Economic Expansion programs are most heavily concentrated unemployment is rising and there is a substantial decrease in the number of jobs. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That the Standing Committee on Regional Development be empowered to undertake an evaluation of DREE programs.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

* * *

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—CANADIAN POSITION IN NEGOTIATIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 which provides that in cases of urgent and pressing necessity a motion may be moved if unanimous consent is given.

The matter of urgent and pressing necessity arises out of reliable reports, both American and Canadian in source, that the Canadian government changed its negotiation position on the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement between December, 1971, and January, 1972. Such shift in policy has led to confusion abroad and uncertainty at home as to what the Canadian government's position on the automotive industry is, particularly with regard to the production safeguards which currently exist in the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement. Therefore, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask leave to move, seconded by the member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce be called upon to make a statement on motions at the next sitting of this House outlining the government's present policy proposals on the Canadian automotive industry.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

The immediacy of the motion arises as a result of the wrongful release of Yves Geoffroy from the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary and his sudden disappearance after said release. The shocking facts are known to everyone. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That the Governor in Council cause an inquiry to be made into the wrongful release of Yves Geoffroy from the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary and that a special commission be set up to inquire into the same in accordance with the Inquiries Act, empowered to summon witnesses and give evidence under oath and ask for the production of documents deemed requisite to a full investigation into what appears to be a corrupt practice within the administration of law in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: What a best man—Denis.

Mr. Bell: Poor Rivard.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific matter—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but we are on motions and only those moved under Standing Order 43 may now be heard. If I understand the hon. member correctly, he wants to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 26 and I shall recognize him when we reach that stage in the business of the House.

* * *

• (1120)

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN TREASURY BOARD AND ELECTRICAL WORKERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I request the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion arising from a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It concerns the impasse in the contract negotiations between the Treasury Board and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers which is seriously affecting the public interest by disrupting air transport and which has also been a factor leading to the loss of six lives when the trawler Gulf Gull ran ashore off Cape Breton Island because navigational aid was off the air at the time of the accident.

With the consent of the House I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That this House urges the government to instruct the Treasury Board forthwith to negotiate in good faith with the Brotherhood with a view to the settlement of any matters in dispute, and this House further urges that if the Treasury Board and the Brotherhood fail to conclude a settlement and to enter into a new collective agreement within three days after such instruction is given, the government take measures to establish procedures for effecting a settlement.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent with respect to the motion proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton West?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask leave to move a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity in connection with the payment of unemployment insurance benefits. I present this motion bearing in mind the thousands of problems being encountered across the nation and the severe hardship being imposed on those who are entitled to unemployment insurance benefits and who are unable to receive them, a situation which leads to humiliating experiences for claimants. I would add that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration himself said he would welcome any suggestions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to remind the hon. member and other hon. members that they should not attempt to argue the case or present substantive arguments in support of a motion under Standing Order 43. If the hon. member has a motion to put forward he should put it now.

Mr. Skoberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration be instructed to make an immediate inquiry into the operations of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to determine the causes of the delays experienced all over Canada in the receipt of unemployment insurance benefits and to recommend steps to put the administration of unemployment insurance on a proper and efficient basis.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion put forward by the hon. member for Moose Jaw. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

STEPS TO EXPEDITE PAYMENT OF CLAIMS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I am not sure what I should do, Mr. Speaker. I had intended to move a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 on the same topic. It is of a constructive nature and I am sure all hon. members would want to consider it. Without further preamble I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That this House urges the government to revise its administrative procedures for computer rejects; that a manual pay procedure be established for rejects and overdue claims; that local offices be reopened and temporary offices be established to facilitate the prompt payment of overdue claims and for the general benefit of those insured under the program, and, finally, that the government decentralize its pay processing procedures.

I trust this motion will receive more than the usual response.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has indicated the substance of his motion. The question is formally before the House. I have to inquire, of course, whether there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the matter cannot be proceeded with at this time.

[Translation]

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DEALY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—REMEDIAL MEASURES BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), a motion for the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the necessity for the government to take steps to consider and improve the Unemployment Insurance Commission performance which is several months behind in its payments to thousands of claimants.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has given notice required under Standing Order 26 and I have carefully considered the suggestion he made.

I of course recognize that this is an important matter and one of interest to all hon. members of this House. At the same time, I believe hon. members will recognize that it would not be easy to justify adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 at the very moment when we have before us the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, more particularly today when it has already been determined by a special order of the House that we must, during the course of the day, hear the speeches of the four parties.

I feel, after due consideration, that I must reach the conclusion that it is not possible, at least today, to allow holding a special debate on the subject brought forward by the hon. member for Compton.

[English]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAYS IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the regrettable absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, I should like to pose a question to the Prime Minister. I am sure that in view of the seriousness of the tragic delays in the payment of unemployment insurance claims the Prime Minister will be fully familiar with this subject. May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether he has caused inquiries to be made as to the reasons for these delays, and can he now give the House these reasons in order to explain the very serious delays that are taking place across the country?

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, may I draw to the attention of the Leader of the Opposition that, though it is easy to criticize, it is indeed remarkable that an additional 1.2 million Canadians are covered by the new unemployment insurance plan. I further point out that 98.7 per cent of all claims are being processed on schedule, and that only a few days ago a news release was issued concerning the minister's investigation into the problem of delays. It was determined during the investigation that the principal reasons for the delays stemmed from three causes: First of all, a lack of employer records, a situation which is now, hopefully, being remedied; second, improperly filled in claims by claimants and, third, some problems within the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I would point out to the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Perrault: —that now less than 1 per cent of the claims are being delayed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Let me remind the House at the very beginning that we have only a 40-minute question period. I would hope that each question would not be followed by a debate. The parliamentary secretary should not, in reply to a question, make a lengthy statement.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the extraordinary complacency exhibited by the parliamentary secretary, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he personally is now prepared to investigate the reasons for this tragic inefficiency, resulting in tragic suffering by thousands and thousands of unemployed persons across this country. Is the Prime Minister himself prepared to investigate this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the members sitting behind the hon. gentleman had permitted him to listen to the answer, he would have discovered that the reasons for the delays were given by the parliamentary secretary. Therefore there is no need for further investigation.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister seems to be so complacent about this subject, may I ask him whether he is prepared, in conjunction with the House leader, to arrange for the immediate establishment of the appropriate committee and for the reference of this whole subject to that committee for investigation, particularly in view of the suffering that is taking place across this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would be very much prepared to discuss this with the minister as soon as he returns.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: In two weeks.

Mr. Trudeau: If hon. members do not want an answer—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1130)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Don't be such a baby. Get up.

Mr. Muir: I thought the baby was at home.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Four or five or more members are seeking an opportunity to ask supplementary questions. We should try to proceed in an orderly fashion. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact reports indicate that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is unfortunately ill and will be away for some two weeks or more—I hope not more—and in view of the fact this issue of the payment of unemployment insurance benefits is a very real one for a good many thousands of people, because 1 per cent at the present level of unemployment involves a great many Canadians, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he could not immediately set up the committee and refer the subject to it, particularly since the Minister of Manpower and Immigration said in the press release to which the parliamentary secretary referred that he would be very glad to come to the committee and discuss the matter with its members? I ask the Prime Minister whether this could not be done today instead of being delayed for two weeks.

Mr. Trudeau: The minister did indeed indicate that that was his desire and that it would be his hope that as soon as the estimates are examined by the standing committee he would appear. I realize that this might take a few days, but if the opposition parties are prepared to continue changing our traditions perhaps we could shorten the debate on the Speech from the Throne to one or two days and then go to the estimates right away.

Mr. Baldwin: We should change the government.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

The right hon. Prime Minister has just said that he does not expect a solution before the sittings of the committee concerned. In a letter dated January 26, 1972, the Minister of Labour stated that those problems would be solved within ten days and that a solution would be reached within 72 hours in all other cases. That did not happen.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether in establishing a special committee of the House he intends to examine the administration of those cheques in order to decentralize that system to ensure a more personal and more efficient service?

Mr. Trudeau: On the facts I disagree with the hon. member, Mr. Speaker. If he knows about some specific cases he might submit them to the minister and see whether in fact a solution can be reached within 48 hours.

As to the hon. member's suggestion, I just proposed to all opposition parties, including the Social Credit party, to shorten the debate on the Speech from the Throne and to deal with the estimates now so as to consider that item.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister suggests that I should submit the cases that I have in mind, but the problem extends beyond this fact. I have already submitted over 400 cases, from my constituency alone. So I should like to put the same question to him again on the understanding that I shall forward to him at once a petition from unemployed constituents of Lotbinière who object to this inhuman system.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): My supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration stated to me four weeks ago today that this was a deplorable situation and assured me that it would be corrected within eight days, does the Prime Minister not consider that his assertion that he will discuss this matter in some two weeks when the minister is expected to return to the House is a disgraceful affront to the unemployed people of this country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DELAYS IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—REIMBURSEMENT OF PROVINCES FOR WELFARE EXPENDITURES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether, in view of the fact that considerable sums of money have to be expended by provincial treasuries in welfare payments because of the delays in payment of unemployment insurance benefits, procedures have been worked out with the provinces to reimburse them and whether these procedures are acceptable to the provincial governments?

Am I communicating through this sound system, Mr. Speaker, or is the Prime Minister listening to some kind of radio joke program or some television rebroadcast? The question I am asking does not seem to get a response from the Prime Minister. May I repeat my question. I ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the fact that considerable sums of money have to be expended by the provinces in welfare payments because of the lengthy delays in the payment of unemployment insurance benefits, appropriate and acceptable arrangements have been made with the provinces to reimburse them, and have the provinces accepted these arrangements?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As the hon. member knows, the federal government does pay 50 per cent of all welfare payments under CAP.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DELAYS IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—RESOLUTION OF DIFFICULTIES AT BATHURST, N.B., OFFICE

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Can the parliamentary secretary, who might have a more rational response to an important question, indicate whether he has received an assurance that the situation at Bathurst, New Brunswick, has been resolved and whether there has been a meeting this morning with the students and the clients involved? Finally, can he indicate why the unemployment insurance office was closed yesterday, which precipitated more concern?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I am pleased to attempt to answer that question, and I want to assure hon. members that this side of the House is just as concerned as they are about the unemployed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Muir: Why don't you do something about it then?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary might reply to the question.

Mr. Perrault: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, Mr. Des-Roches, together with the regional director, Mr. Foster, has met with local groups in Bathurst. It has been determined that only a small number of delayed claims have been discovered and action has been taken on them immediately. However, suggestions by leaders of local groups for improving the service will be given every consideration, and the commission is prepared to adopt any suggestion which might lead to better service in the area.

An hon. Member: That is dishonest and you know it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I notice there are at least four or five members who are seeking to ask supplementary questions on this matter. If hon. members feel that the whole question period this morning should be spent on this one item the Chair cannot object to that, but perhaps hon. members might give some thought to allowing the Chair to suggest that hon. members go to another subject and if there is time at the end we might return to this matter. I will give another five minutes or so to the consideration of this very important matter by recognizing first the hon. member for Hamilton West.

DELAYS IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact he said that there are some problems within the Unemployment Insurance Commission's administration and in view of the fact the minister emphatically indicated that he was in favour of the convening of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration in order to deal with this matter, would the parliamentary secretary use his good influence in order to advise the Prime Minister to convene this committee so that this whole sordid mess can be looked into?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a suggestion rather than putting a question. For the moment I will recognize the hon. member for Oxford.

DELAYS IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—SUGGESTED REOPENING OF LOCAL OFFICES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on the same matter which I should like to direct to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who also has responsibility for the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Will the parliamentary secretary recommend to the Unemployment Insurance Commission that they reopen immediately the local offices that were closed about two years ago, at which time many members of the House in all parties warned that this would cause the mess that we now see? Perhaps this might help in resolving the problem sooner.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): A number of additional unemployment insurance offices have been opened coincidentally with the establishment of the universality of the world's finest unemployment insurance program on January 1.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege. A very serious situation has developed arising out of the original answer by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration with regard to the number of claims by claimants who are seeking benefits, that are not being looked after properly. The parliamentary secretary stated that either 1 per cent or less of those who are seeking benefits and who are entitled to them are not receiving the said benefits. This is the first time I have heard this figure mentioned.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Coates: Don't you worry about it, I will get to the question. When this matter was brought up in the House in December the Minister of Labour, who is now Minister of Manpower and Immigration but is still responsible for the Unemployment Insurance Commission, stated there was a 2 per cent backlog of claims not being processed properly. Later the chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission made a statement to the effect that 88 per cent—

• (1140)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member but I must interrupt him for a moment. He took the floor on a question of privilege and the question of privilege should be identified immediately. Until now I would be inclined to think and to rule that this is a matter of debate rather than a question of privilege. Would the hon. member indicate immediately why he considers this is a matter of privilege?

Mr. Coates: This is not difficult to do, Mr. Speaker. The former Minister of Labour gave certain figures about delays in claims and the chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission made a statement, not too long ago, to the effect that only 88 per cent of those people who were applying for benefits were receiving them. The minister recently made another statement, after a very short spot-check, about how many claims were being delayed. None of the statements made previously are the same as the one made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration this morning. I think the House deserves clarification of how the parliamentary secretary has arrived at the figure he has given this morning.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The submission made by the hon. member is an interesting one but I think it is really a question of debate. A discrepancy in information supplied to the House cannot, by long-established practice, be raised by way of a question of privilege. I am sure there will be an opportunity to consider the matter further. I see the parliamentary secretary would like to reply to the question raised by the hon. member but I suggest that the matter should not be pursued by way of privilege and that we should attempt to pursue the question period which is quickly running out of time.

Mr. Coates: I have a further question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. What I am concerned about is that the House and the people of Canada are being misled by this figure and I do not think the matter should be allowed to stand in that way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That clearly is not privilege and I have to make that ruling. I would hope that the matter would not be pursued on that basis. I appeal to hon. members that if we spend all of our time on one important matter or on points of order or questions of privilege, which are also important matters that cannot be set aside easily, we will not, I think, have a very helpful, effective and fruitful question period this morning. I hope hon. members will co-operate with the Chair for their own benefit in this regard.

Mr. Perrault: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Very briefly, the point is that there has been no attempt here to mislead the House. The hon. member is speaking of two different sets of statistics.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously the answer given by the parliamentary secretary indicates the extent to which I suggest, humbly, I was correct in suggesting this is a matter of debate. We could spend many minutes, hours and possibly days in debating what these figures mean. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on a supplementary question.

REASON FOR REMOVAL OF UNPROCESSED CLAIMS FROM QUEBEC TO BELLEVILLE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a supplementary for the parliamentary secretary. Is he aware that the world's finest unemployment insurance commission moved by automobile from Quebec yesterday 5,000 unprocessed claims to the city of Belleville to be processed and, if so, what does this indicate? Does it indicate that there is a complete breakdown in the province of Quebec in terms of UIC processing claims and, further, does it indicate that claims in the province of Ontario will be further delayed?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I hope the member also is aware of the fact that the commission processes 600,000 claims every two weeks and 98 per cent are on schedule.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize final supplementaries on this matter by the hon. member for Lotbinière and then the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants. Order, please. Apparently my voice did not carry through. I indicated I would recognize the hon. member for Lotbinière on a supplementary and I believe the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants also has a supplementary which will be the last one.

[Translation]

ALLEGED INSTRUCTIONS TO COMMISSION EMPLOYEES NOT TO REVEAL REASONS FOR DELAYS IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the parliamentary secretary.

Is it true that officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission have instructed the Bathurst and other offices not to divulge the reasons for the delays in the payment of benefits?

[English]

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I have heard of no such report but certainly the question will be brought under review and consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants will have the last supplementary.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the parliamentary secretary. Since the new computer system created a miracle, namely, a letter to a male unemployed in Nova Scotia saying he was pregnant, could the new system be told nothing like this has happened since Adam gave birth to Eve?

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, incidents of this kind can be brought before the appropriate parliamentary committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Perrault: On behalf of the minister, may I welcome again a review and discussion of Unemployment Insurance Commission procedures by members of the standing committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—ROLE OF SCREENING AGENCY—INQUIRY AS TO POLICY STATEMENT AND LEGISLATION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a question with regard to the control of foreign ownership. Can the Prime MInister inform the House whether the government now intends to limit the activities of its so-called screening agency with regard to foreign takeovers? I have been informed it is considering limiting them to enterprises above a certain size rather than giving the agency over-all general supervision.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I could not answer that without making the announcement of the policy itself, and I am afraid the member will have to wait for that policy announcement.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the Prime Minister's statement and in view of his frequent undertakings to announce the policy, at one time before Christmas, at another time before the session resumed and a third time as soon as the session resumed, can he inform Parliament when we may expect this statement and whether the government is also considering, as I am informed it is, some action between the time the policy statement is announced and the time when the legislation for Parliament may be ready, which may take five weeks or as long as three months, I am told?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the usual answer is forthcoming. It will be as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings on a supplementary.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, as a bill on foreign ownership is listed among the bills to be brought before the House, can the Prime Minister advise the House when this bill will be brought forward as this policy statement has been promised to the country for many months?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we listed the bill there as we did many other bills because it is the intention to bring them forth in an orderly fashion.

POSITION OF TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Can the Prime Minister bring the House up to date as to what has transpired regarding the trade negotiations between Canada and the United States since February 9 when Secretary of the Treasury Connally made the following statement:

The U.S. will seek appropriate means of reducing imbalances of trade with Canada.

• (1150)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a lot of things have transpired; most of them are false. What is happening is that the negotiations are continuing between the two countries.

Mr. Hees: As a further supplementary—

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South on a supplementary.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—SIMULTANEOUS ANNOUNCEMENT OF POLICY AND TABLING OF SUPPORTING MATERIAL—REASONS FOR DELAY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I also wanted to ask the Prime Minister whether the policy on foreign ownership will be announced at the same time as the supporting material will be tabled, or whether the announcement of foreign policy will come ahead of such report or other material, and are the delays due to technical reasons concerning translation of the supporting material, and may we therefore expect this to happen by March 17, or some other date, as again I have been informed?

Right Hon. P.E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure where the hon. member gets all these dates. I wish myself I were able to give a very precise date. I am shying away from that. To answer the substance of the question, the intention would still be to make the policy announcement and to have the background material tabled at the same time.

In reference to another question, Mr. Speaker, I would hope these events would take place as close as possible to the introduction of the legislation because we think it would be important for the community to know what kind of details will be going into the legislation as soon as possible after the policy announcement itself.

Mr. Hees: As a further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition on a supplementary.

* * *

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—DATE OF NEXT MEETING

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether a date has been fixed for the next meeting to take place in the course of the Canada-U.S. discussions which the Prime Minister says are continuing? Has a date been fixed for the next meeting, and can the minister indicate what the date is?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. No date has been fixed yet but soundings are taking place to that effect.

Mr. Hees: As a further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will notice that there are a number of supplementaries still to be asked on this subject. Again we will attempt to move as quickly as we can because soon we will be running short of time.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN MINISTER AND CONGRESSIONAL REPRESENTATIVES VISITING OTTAWA

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Does he propose to take advantage of the presence in Canada of a delegation from the U.S. Congress and meet with them privately in order to put forward Canada's position?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would love to be invited to do so and I would do my best to attend if I were invited. But I point out that there are quite a number of learned Members of Parliament taking part in these discussions and I rely on their wisdom and intelligence to put forward the Canadian point of view.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—REASON FOR DELAY IN MAKING POLICY STATEMENT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister concerning the government's position with regard to foreign investment. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister assured me on more than one occasion last year that these papers and announcement of the government's position were merely awaiting translation and this would be a matter of days, is it a fact that the lengthy delay in announcement of the government's position relates either to new developments with regard to the government's position, or is it due to an inability on the part of the government to make up its mind on this important question?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Neither, Mr. Speaker. The government's mind is made up on its general policy position. I indicated a moment ago that this policy position was to be made public at a time when we could also have the background material, and at a time when we would be sufficiently close to tabling legislation for first reading that there would not be a great deal of uncertainty in the minds of the Canadian public as to how our policy would in fact apply.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): As a further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow one last supplementary from the hon. member for Egmont. Hon. members will realize that we have not yet completed the first round of questioning. As a matter of fact we are only on the second question. After that I will have to recognize the representative of the other party to my left. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Egmont on a last supplementary, and will again attempt later to see the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings who has an additional supplementary.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister clear up one mystery and indicate why it has taken two months longer than he originally indicated to complete this important task?

Mr. Trudeau: I think we need more one-handed economists, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, economists generally argue on the one hand, and then on the other hand.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question—

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Egmont rises on a point of order.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Is there nothing we can do with underhanded Prime Ministers?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

SMALL FARM ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—INCLUSION OF ABANDONED FARMS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

Since a considerable number of owners of abandoned farms follow with much interest the policies put forward by the minister, will he tell us if his family farm development program will take into account abandoned farms and if he will raise this question with each of the provinces?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we will certainly be taking this into account, but the major thrust of the program in the initial stages will be to assist those people who are caught in a situation beyond their control with respect to their income and who are in fact now farming.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

STATE OF SERVICES—MAINTENANCE OF SAFETY—POSITION REGARDING ALLEGED VIOLATION OF LAW BY CERTAIN TECHNICIANS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In light of the strike affecting air services, would the minister advise the House as to the state of air services at this particular time, with particular reference to safety?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the state of air services varies from one airport to another throughout the country. Therefore any general declaration is not possible at this time other than to say to the hon. member that the primary demand we are putting upon our officials and the public is that the safety laws be observed to the maximum. Where we have the personnel there are more flights, for instance, per hour than where there is a shortage of personnel, but I cannot give the figures at specific airports because the situation does vary from one hour to the next.

Mr. Alexander: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that some technicians are supposed by law to remain on the job and as there are allegations to the effect that they have not, would the minister advise what his position is with respect to this matter?

Mr. Jamieson: I am not sure I heard the question correctly and I apologize to the hon. member. Would he be good enough to repeat the question?

Mr. Alexander: I understand, Mr. Speaker, that by law some members of the technicians group are supposed to remain on the job to maintain services and that they are flouting the law. In light of this would the minister advise what his position is and whether any direction has been given to alleviate that situation in order that safety can be maintained?

Mr. Jamieson: Let me deal with the final observation of the hon. member first, Mr. Speaker. So far as maintaining safety is concerned, that is being maintained. Where—and I am using the hon. gentleman's comment, not my own—some technicians are flouting the law, this is a regrettable state of affairs. I am advised that they have been told to return to work by their own union but have not done so in some instances. In view of this action we will now, in conjunction with Treasury Board, have to make a decision on what the next step will be. But I want to emphasize again that there is no relationship whatever between any flouting of the law and our determination to maintain safety. Where the safety factor is concerned it takes precedence over everything else. We will only allow that amount of flying out of any airport that conditions permit within the framework of safety.

* * *

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—INQUIRY AS TO SITE OF SECOND INTERNATIONAL FACILITY

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Now that we are on the subject of airports, can he advise when he will announce the location of the new auxiliary airport in Ontario and, if he cannot announce it today, when may we expect an announcement?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since the House last met there have been very satisfactory further negotiations with the government of Ontario. I do not say this at all unkindly but there has been a change of ministers in the last week or two, which has made it necessary for the new Ontario minister to become more fully briefed on the matter. I have indicated that I am prepared to meet him at any time now with a very definitive proposal with which the government of Canada is prepared to proceed. I have reason to believe that this will not be very far off, and given those parameters I would hope for an announcement within a couple of weeks or as soon as the government of Ontario is ready.

* * *

• (1200)

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ALLEGED REPORT RECOMMENDING DISSOLUTION AND REPLACEMENT OF FORCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct an unprovocative question to the Solicitor General. I do not want to disturb the peace of this wonderful day and question period, so I simply ask whether he would be prepared to table the recommendations and report of a group of officials set up for the purpose of looking into the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in which the suggestion was made that there should be a dissolution of that force and another name given to the national force next year, providing this government is returned?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as for the first part of the hon. member's question, it is based on facts I am unaware of; in other words, it is not at all intended to change the functions and duties of the RCMP.

As for the second part of his question, the hon. member alluded to the elimination of the word "Royal" from the RCMP's name. This is not envisaged at all. I think the hon. member was temporarily away from the House yesterday. He would have noted that the anti-royalists are on his side.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I did not make myself clear enough so that the hon. gentleman could understand. I ask him if he will table the report that is on his desk that recommends the end of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the setting up of another force similar to the security Gestapo that has already been set up?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, such relationship exists only in the hon. member's mind.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, no—it is on your desk.

* * *

ELECTIONS

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION DEALING WITH EXPENSES—POSSIBILITY OF EARLY IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the commitment he has given on several occasions since June 1968, and in view of the fact that the report of the Standing Committee on Election Expenses has been before the House for some eight months, I would ask whether the Prime Minister can tell the House now if it is the intention of the government to bring in legislation to deal with the matter of election expenses in time for it to be implemented before the next election.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am told, Mr. Speaker, that would be an impossibility. Even if the legislation were passed now, unless we were going to have an election very late indeed, or even beyond the constitutionally permitted time, it would be difficult to have legislation effective in time for that election.

Mr. Benjamin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the right hon. Prime Minister, in view of the fact that we have had an indication from election officials that it would only require two or at the most three months to fully implement legislation dealing with parliamentary election expenses, and in view of the fact that a prominent official of the Liberal party has stated that 95 major Canadian corporations are being solicited for funds for the Liberal party, can he have the legislation brought forward into this chamber so that it may be effective by election time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is obviously argument and the question is not in order. The hon. member for Joliette.

* * *

[Translation]

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Would the hon. gentleman indicate to the House whether the negotiations between the government of Quebec and Ottawa regarding family allowances have come to an end and whether the federal government is prepared to give in to the demands of Mr. Castonguay?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the discussions are still proceeding. Meetings have taken place between officials and even between Mr. Bourassa and myself. We have discussed the problem. The federal government's position is unchanged since my last statement to the House on the subject. We are prepared to consider a set of proposals aiming at improving the administration of the various federal and provincial programs.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—EXERCISE OF LEGISLATIVE POWER BY QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Quebec government seems to emphasize one condition—that it be granted legislative power in the matter of family allowances—would the Prime Minister indicate whether he approves that request from Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if, as I understand the question, it concerns legislative power, the Quebec government has of course every power to pay whatever family allowances it wants to pay, in the same manner as does the federal government, since in effect we have been paying such allowances for over 25 years. So if the Quebec government wants to continue its system of payments and increase its payments to the citizens of that province, the federal government cannot oppose this in any way.

The problem is rather to know whether the two systems can be integrated, and I have already told Premier Bourassa that I agreed in principle. It is now a matter of establishing administrative terms which both governments will find satisfactory.

* * *

[English]

ELECTIONS

POSSIBLE REPLACEMENT OF TWENTY LIBERAL MEMBERS FROM QUEBEC AS CANDIDATES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to that posed by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister bring the House up to date regarding the situation surrounding the 20 Liberal members from Quebec whom he is not going to allow to run and is going to replace with more suitable candidates in the next election?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is not in order. The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should state the question quickly because we have just about run out of time.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is that I believe every member of this House has a right to take an interest in the welfare of his fellow members of this House, and I want to make sure that they are generously treated when they are kicked out by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would—

Mr. Speaker: If the Prime Minister rises on a question of privilege I would recognize him, but obviously that was not a legitimate question of privilege which was proposed by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings and that is why I interrupted him.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it does affect all hon. members that we do intend to kick out a lot of hon. members, most of whom are sitting in the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Would you like to take a bet on Prince Edward-Hastings? Put your money on the line—put up or shut up. A thousand dollars on Prince Edward-Hastings—put up or shut up. He won't put his money where his mouth is.

An hon. Member: That is too much for you, George.

An hon. Member: Think first, George.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

YVES GEOFFROY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RELEASE FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Solicitor General in reference to a matter which I know must be of some concern to him. It deals with, I assume, a friend of his, Yves Geoffroy, who was released wrongfully from the penitentiary. Is the minister prepared to make a statement on motions either now or soon in reference to this matter in order to have the facts laid before Parliament?

An hon. Member: Like you just did.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to put an end to the regrettable rumours circulated by the press that Mr. Geoffroy is a friend, an acquaintance or a university colleague.

I do not know, I have never known Mr. Geoffroy. He is not among my acquaintances, and never was a university colleague.

As to the advisability of a statement, if the opposition insists on it, I am ready to make one, probably on Monday. I do not think the subject is important enough to take the time of the House to deal with it, not today in any case, in view of my high regard for the statements the party leaders will make in a few minutes.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that there has been a tremendous increase in the crime of murder, and in light of the fact that this man was convicted of murder and sentenced to life imprisonment in the penitentiary, I think this matter is important in relation to the administration of justice so I would ask the minister if he would give us an undertaking to make a statement at least by Monday?

An hon. Member: That is what he just said.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: With pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCES NOT BE REDUCED FOLLOWING INCREASE IN GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Have the necessary steps been taken so that war veterans allowance recipients who are also receiving the guaranteed income supplement will not have their allowances cut back when they receive the $2.70 increase in the guaranteed income supplement which is to become effective in April?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my predecessor made a commitment to this House that this would be corrected long before April 1 and I intend to keep that date.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

• (1210)

POLLUTION

NEW LEVIES ON OIL TANKER SHIPMENTS TO PROVIDE CONTINGENCY FUND IN CASE OF SPILLS—REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the apparent hardship to new industry in the Maritimes owing to the publication of the regulations on oil levies for control of pollution, would the government look these over, let us know what the full story is behind them, make certain they are fair to everybody and publicize in some way the whole matter?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can say emphatically that they are fair to everybody in the sense that they are being applied across the board. May I also remind the House that the legislation under which these levies are being exacted was passed, I believe unanimously, by this House. There is a necessity for a contingency fund to deal with clean-up. I can assure the House and the hon. member that when we feel there is an adequate amount in this fund to take care of emergencies, the levy will be either reduced or dropped, depending on conditions at that time.

Mr. Bell: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What is the amount of the fund?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, if I understood the hon. member rightly, he asked what is the amount. The amount is 15 cents per ton at the present time.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, excuse me. What will be the amount of the fund? To what amount does the minister expect the fund to build up?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, no upper limit has been put on it because of the limited amount of experience we have had. May I remind the House that the Arrow incident cost the taxpayers of this country in the neighbourhood of $4 million plus and that the one facing us now in Prince Edward Island will probably cost $2 million plus. A reasonable figure might be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $25 million or $30 million.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Thursday, February 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ross Whicher for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by congratulating the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). He spoke forcefully and in an entertaining way. Furthermore, he supplied us with a certain amount of ammunition to be used against his party. One cannot ask much more of the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Stanfield: I should also like to congratulate the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie) who seconded the motion on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. He expressed on the subject of Canada feelings that deserve to be remembered.

[English]

I should also like to greet the new cabinet, Mr. Speaker, and to congratulate the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) on his elevation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: His efforts to bring some measure of comprehensibility to the tax legislation may not have been successful, but that was not perhaps entirely his fault. The fault lay largely within the bill itself. In any event, the hon. gentleman demonstrated a capacity for hard work which will serve him in good stead for whatever time the follies of his colleagues may allow him to stay in his new portfolio. The other cabinet changes are of interest to this House primarily for one reason: they show another side of the Prime Minister's character. His reputation in this House and in the country has generally been the reputation of a fighter. He has given the impression on many occasions of a man who does not easily change direction. However, on this occasion, with an election coming up, he has shown that when political circumstances warrant it, he would rather switch than fight. As for the new Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson), I can simply say that the appointment is substantially appropriate, particularly in view of the substantial number of successful search and destroy missions that the minister carried out in his former portfolio. As for the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner)—

An hon. Member: Poor John!

Mr. Stanfield: —one can only say that greater love hath no man.

An hon. Member: Get on with the debate.

Mr. Stanfield: I will not spend much time in discussing the Throne Speech itself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: There were a few—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: There were a few, specific, positive measures.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) will not mind my interrupting him for a moment. I must bring to the attention of hon. members that what must be considered as rude remarks are disturbing some hon. members and are certainly disturbing the Chair. They have been coming from certain parts of the chamber during the time when the hon. member who has the floor has been speaking. I think they are entirely unbecoming and unacceptable to the Chair. I hope that all hon. members will co-operate.

Mr. Hees: The people across the way are a rude lot.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, there were some positive measures that I was pleased to see in the Speech from the Throne, measures such as the commitment to improve the Canada Manpower programs. Certainly, any additional steps to improve training and placement services and to make them more adequate for meeting the needs of specially disadvantaged peoples of Canada are very welcome indeed. I was interested in seeing that the federal government has announced its intention to become involved in legal aid. I should like to know what there is new about that, because if this government was not rendering legal aid to Yves Geoffroy, what was it doing!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The speech also stressed the need for harmonious relations with the provincial governments. I would not have thought that was necessary at this point. I was under the impression that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had established harmonious relations between the federal government and the provinces once and for all time, in view of the gracious tribute that he paid recently to the Prime Minister of British Columbia. So, on the whole, I cannot take the speech seriously.

In the circumstances of 1972, it is clear that the government is not capable of implementing effective long-term policies for solving our major economic and social problems in Canada. After all, this government has had four non-election years when it could have set out on that task. It did not do it then. Why should we expect better of it now? The speech is obviously the work of a government that is in love with itself to the point of total blindness. It is too bad that there was a near miss with the calendar, because this throne speech ought to have been presented on Valentine's Day. Surely, it is one of the most glowing hymns of self-love in all the annals of romantic literature.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The just society has disappeared. In the previous throne speech it was described as a distant ideal. I guess that the distance has increased now to the point where it is completely out of sight now so far as this government is concerned. The just society has now been replaced, apparently, by an obsessional concern about isolation. I can understand this government's being concerned about isolation. It must be feeling plenty of it right now.

Much of the legislation proposed in the speech appears to be a hangover, holdover or leftover. "Heritage Canada" is something new. It is an interesting plan. The speech indicates that it is intended "to ensure the preservation of items and collections from Canada's past". Well, Mr. Speaker, the government certainly fits that description. Let us stuff the government for preservation, before it is too late.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I do not believe the people of Canada will take this government seriously. It is a bit much for an ostrich to try and pass itself off as a peacock.

The Prime Minister prides himself on being decisive. Strangely enough, he cannot seem to decide on what basis he wants the people of Canada to judge him at this stage in his career. At one moment he invites us to compare 1972 with 1968. In other words, he asks us to judge him on his record. Another time he says it is his future plans that count and that the past is not really important. I am inclined to agree that the record of past achievements is better forgotten if we consider the political welfare of the present government. This government has been in office under the present Prime Minister for almost four years.

• (1220)

I think we should take up the Prime Minister's invitation and look at what his government has done. I should devote a little time today to make a comparison between 1968 and 1972. I think it would be rather instructive for us all. After all, we have to judge the performance of this government in the coming weeks and months by its record in recent years. Four years ago the government suggested that it had a game plan. The first couple of years were to be for housecleaning. Then, we were to be treated with measures leading up to the just society. As I said a moment ago, there is no reference to the just society in the present Throne Speech. I guess that is not part of the new game plan. Indeed, the concepts of the just society seem to have become a political embarrassment to this government. The only game plan this government has is a political one; that is now very obvious to the Canadian people.

It is likewise obvious that from the very start this government has been living in a world of its own. It had slogans to be sure. The just society was one of those slogans, but the role of those slogans was not to describe the directions the government proposed to take. The role of those slogans was to hide the fact that the government was offering few policies of any relevance, and to hide the fact it had no co-ordinated program of economic management to give to the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: All too much of the government's game plan has been centered around a timetable, a timetable geared to re-election, not geared to the needs of the people of Canada.

I think the economy of Canada will be moving a little faster than last year. If that does happen, it certainly cannot be credited to the government's recent discovery of industrial strategy as a catch-phrase in the recent Speech from the Throne. The government's record has earned it the reputation of having a mechanistic view of the economy. The new Speech from the Throne tried to assure us that the government will be attempting to bring in proposals of tremendous importance to the future during the next few weeks. We are holding our breath. We are wondering if those new suggestions will equal in importance the fantastic breakthrough the Prime Minister achieved with the President of the United States last December.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: That is a pretty hard act to follow. When I first read the Speech from the Throne, I thought there was a mistake in spelling in the reference to industrial strategy because, from the behaviour of the government, I thought it was completely committed to industrial tragedy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: When I say I think the government is confused about its direction, I do not mean to suggest that the government has lacked ambition. The record is pretty clear on that.

[Translation]

The Tax reform in itself was a challenge. But when the white paper on tax reform was finally completed the government had reached new heights in the art of spreading confusion, uncertainty and dissatisfaction across the country.

For a short period of time, following pressures exerted by an irritated Canadian public, it was thought that the government would come to its senses. But its stubbornness had not been taken into account. With its new tax bill and its amendments to amendments amending the amendments that were constantly piling up over this monstrosity this government was determined to go all the way with its nonsense and confusion spreading.

[English]

The climax came when the government imposed closure to squelch further meaningful debate on its so called tax package.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: At the same time the government announced closure, it announced it was bringing in still more amendments to its own bill. This is one of the more incredible things this incredible government has perpetrated. In its wake, it left a tax jungle across this country and it left the small businessman, including the farmer, beset by a tax structure that means he will need an expert at his elbow every moment of the day when he is making a decision.

With regard to economic management, the record of the government since 1968 is abundantly clear. Inflation is still with us and unemployment has increased disastrously since 1968. Yes, I say inflation is still with us, despite the announcement of the Prime Minister some 14 months ago that it was licked.

What has the government done? On behalf of the old age pensioners, the government continues to behave as if there were no inflation in this country. The government froze the basic pension and froze the increase in the supplement for the neediest senior citizens at a paltry two per cent a year, regardless of how much the actual cost of living might go up during that year. In its courageous war against the dragon of inflation, the government has put the pensioners in the vanguard of the battle. It was said a few years ago in connection with what was called the war against poverty that there was never a shot fired. I must admit that in the war against inflation at least two shots have been fired, one against the unemployed and another against the older people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The Prime Minister, on a number of occasions, in defending his so-called war on inflation said he was motivated by his government's concern for the little people. Forget for a moment about the hundreds of thousands of little people thrown out of work through the government's deliberate policy of slowdown. This had to be done to protect the interests of other little people we were told, people on fixed incomes, our pensioners. By virtue of the government's legislation, overall a pensioner with no other income is only allowed a maximum annual increase of less than one per cent of what he receives.

We are all well aware of what has happened to retail food prices alone since the government enacted its revised old age security legislation. The tragedy of a pensioner in this country trying to keep pace with that kind of price increase, with no other income but a pension that only increases at a rate of less than 1 per cent per year, is shameful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The thought of it should fill us all, particularly the government, with a deep sense of guilt and a will to correct this inhumane situation as quickly as possible, but I hear no sounds of guilt from the government. Indeed, yesterday the hon. member for Bruce stated that our senior citizens had achieved the just society in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I hear no more mention of even those little people from the Prime Minister. Regrettably, there is no indication in this Speech from the Throne that the government intends to correct this terrible injustice. How can this government be taken seriously in its glib platitudes about isolation when it ignores the isolation of so many Canadians who have made their contribution and deserve at least humane treatment? The plight of the old age pensioners is much like the blight of unemployment. The Trudeau government knows how to cause it, but does not know how to cure it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: About a year ago I travelled across Canada to highlight the plight of the jobless.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I want to assure the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) that I was very closely in touch with what was happening. I was glad to hear the announcement of the legalization of marijuana. When I travelled across the country a year ago I did not profess to know all the answers to the unemployment situation. But at that time the government refused to admit that a problem even existed. Our party had four or five constructive suggestions to offer.

• (1230)

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is again making general allegations that he cannot substantiate. I should like him to retract a statement he made that while he was on holiday in Guadeloupe he heard I had said that marijuana was to be legalized. That is untrue, and I think the hon. gentleman should retract that statement. I never said anything of the kind. If he heard it while he was on holiday it goes to show he was not—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the House should be allowed to hear the Leader of the Opposition pursue his speech. It is a long-established rule that hon. members have to accept the word of another hon. member. I do not think this matter should be the subject of further debate.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not wish to be unfair to the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay); it is the last thing in the world I want to be. I feel very friendly toward him. He is a great help to me in the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: A year ago we were trying to persuade the government to show some real interest and take some constructive action in fighting unemployment. We made some suggestions for getting the economy rolling again. At that time the Prime Minister called me Canada's chief doomster. In effect, though, he admitted I was right when ten months later his government cut taxes, even though it was then too late for this measure to bite into the heavy burden of unemployment Canada is carrying and will continue to carry for the rest of this winter; indeed, too late to achieve even a 4 per cent rate of unemployment prior to the middle of 1974, according to the Economic Council of Canada.

A year ago, the government pretended the problem did not exist. This year we have two new responses from the government. The Prime Minister says there are lots of jobs around. He says there are lots of "help wanted" ads. I do not know when he started to read them. For a while I suspected he had begun a course in statistical optimism sponsored by the former minister of finance. But I have to assume there just might be something in what the Prime Minister is saying when his old friend Pierre Vallières found a good job so easily. Second, we find the new Minister of Manpower (Mr. Mackasey) keeping up a brave front as he is faced by the shocking foul-up in getting unemployment insurance payments out in decent time.

According to that minister—and I am sorry he is not in the House today—this is the fault of the applicants, who lack expertise in filling out complicated forms.

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would not wish to leave the impression that Mr. Vallières had been hired by the federal government. If that is what he said, I should like to point out that it is untrue; it is not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is debate; I suggest to the hon. member that he will have an opportunity to participate in the debate and to indicate what he feels the facts to be.

Mr. Stanfield: I did not say that. If the hon. member, who I respect also, will read what I said he will see I did not say that.

The minister's explanation about the difficulties in relation to unemployment insurance payments seems to suggest that since some of the applicants lack expertise in filling out complicated forms the computer does not like certain of these applications and consequently rejects them. But, of course, if a person is plugged in enough to know how to complain to a member of Parliament or articulate enough to write a scathing letter to the editor he may see some action with regard to his payment. The Speech from Throne assures us that no relief from this process is in sight. It says: "The fundamental reform of protective measures which commenced last year with the new Unemployment Insurance Act will continue." Sir, God help the unemployed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I suppose it is only a small percentage of the population which is directly affected, anyway. The minister reassures us as to that. Not everyone has been touched directly by unemployment, and for those who have not, by the government's yardstick, things have never been better. The hon. member for Bruce told us yesterday that things had never been better for the people of this country. This cynicism ignores the reality. If unemployment is not touching everybody personally it is certainly costing everybody who is in employment, money. Cities and provinces are obliged to shoulder welfare costs, costs which rocket when unemployment goes higher, costs which have to be met through additional local taxes. And the cost to the economy in lost productive capacity is staggering. Then, there is the human cost to be considered.

I said about a year ago that protracted uncertainty about government policy and lack of confidence in the government were contributing to a hesitant economy particularly in the case of businessmen who did not know what kind of year they would be facing, did not know under which tax laws they would be living and did not really know whether the government wanted them to stay in business or not. That is not a very good environment in which to create jobs.

The present government certainly has an unenviable record in the amount of alienation it has created in various sectors of the economy. Since 1968 it has alienated the agricultural community by insulting large sections of it, by downgrading the family farm and by trying to turn the whole rural way of life into a public utility. This was not its only proving ground for alienation experiments. Consider its success in alienating our native peoples. Since 1968 the government has taken a stance of confrontation with labour just as it has with business. Since 1968 the government has alienated region after region in Canada. It has alienated the west by its disregard for the feelings of western Canadians in the fields of agriculture, resource development and economic growth. It has alienated the central provinces by its rigidity in federal-provincial affairs and by its arrogance generally. It has alienated the Atlantic provinces by its callous disregard of the regional impact of its economic policies and by its total failure in the area of regional disparity. In this field I do not believe even the truest Grit could argue that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) has achieved much success, certainly not with half the country presently designated as areas of slow growth. As a climax to his performance, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion resorted to using the economic mismanagement of his own government as an excuse for lack of progress. "How can you expect much", he said, "when the entire economy is as sluggish as it has been?" Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer is obvious: you cannot expect much in those circumstances.

• (1240)

The Atlantic Provinces Economic Council in its fifth annual review assessed DREE and made some specific criticisms, criticisms that members of the Progressive Conservative party had been making for some time. APEC said that targets had to be established, that regional planning should be directed more within the region, and efforts should be made to broaden the economic base since most manufacturing continues to be resource-oriented. The approach of the federal government in this area must be fully co-ordinated. It is incredibly negligent to have departments working at cross purposes, as we have had since 1968. We need a full assessment of DREE and its failure.

There should be more decentralization of decision making in the government, and certainly this applies in particular to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Perhaps if there were more real consultation the department would make fewer costly mistakes and get ahead faster. When faced with this criticism in the House of Commons, the minister made one of the most outlandish arguments that I have ever heard made in the course of defending the government's programs. He said that although the Atlantic provinces were in worse shape in absolute economic terms than they had been before the slow-down, they were really in much better shape relatively because the government's over-all economic slowdown had severely affected the more well to do regions of the country.

The terrible truth, Mr. Speaker, is that that kind of looking glass logic is surely the most emphatic kind of self-condemnation. If the economic slowdown which the government so callously inflicted on this country had a serious impact upon the more well to do parts of Canada, would it not follow that those regions would soon become preoccupied with their own problems? Would this kind of process not lead to a weakening of their will to be the helpmates of disadvantaged regions of Canada, and is this not actually happening? Is this any way to pursue national unity, to pursue a just society? Not in my books it is not, Mr. Speaker. When you are prepared to take pride in the doubtful accomplishment of having made the weak appear to be relatively stronger by virtue of making the strong weaker, you have in fact declared bankruptcy by any accounting of your sense of national responsibility.

In the field of foreign policy the government has, as far as I am concerned, an erratic scorecard: there are some achievements that I approve of and a number of moves that I consider to be quite irrational. In the latter category was the government's unilateral decision to reduce Canadian participation in the operations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. I think that that decision damaged our country in at least two different ways. First, we weakened the impact of our voice in the councils of NATO at a time when the importance of that body as a diplomatic force in the quest for peace and disarmament was growing by leaps and bounds. Considering our own expressed concern in this area, I would suggest that the government's decision and approach was, at the very least, illogical.

Secondly, our partial withdrawal from Europe gave the impression over there that Canada was not really very interested in its relationships with continental Europe, and that impression has not helped us at all in this country's efforts to ensure favourable economic relations with the European Common Market.

Mr. Sharp: Why do you promote that point of view, then? It is not the government's point of view, but maybe it is the Leader of the Opposition's?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not rate the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) as one who always understands things, but I thought I had put it simply enough for him to understand. There is no question but that the reduction of the Canadian commitment to NATO gave the impression in the capitals and countries of Europe that Canada was not much interested in relationships with Europe.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The minister can shake his head all he likes, but like other Canadians who have visited Europe since that decision was made I know it is only too true.

Mr. Hees: Mitch does not get around enough to know about that.

Mr. Stanfield: I want to touch on one other foreign policy criticism which relates to how the government has behaved in the course of the improvement in our relations with the Soviet Union. I want there to be absolutely no doubt that I welcome such improvement. We should by all means talk frankly and in the most cordial possible terms to each other, and I did not, and I do not, express reservations about the exchange of visits between Soviet and Canadian leaders. But I do not consider it appropriate for a Canadian Prime Minister to express concern in public in the Soviet Union about our relations with our neighbour, the United States. Neither do I believe it appropriate for the Premier of the Soviet Union to pronounce publicly on those same relations here in Canada, especially when the Prime Minister of Canada does not dissociate himself from any of those assertions. Incidentally, I was quite pleased to see the Prime Minister dissociate himself from certain remarks about NATO which were made by the President of Yugoslavia.

Canadians object, and rightly object, if there is any indication that Washington is interfering in the conduct of our external affairs. The same ground rules should obviously apply to Moscow, as they should to any other part of the world. The sheer closeness of the United States, the intensity of our mutual economic interaction, combined with the distance between us in terms of wealth and in terms of power—all these things guarantee that there will be problems in Canadian-United States relations without anybody having to do anything deliberately to worsen the situation. To do so is to act irresponsibly toward the people of Canada. Furthermore, it is degrading to an otherwise very worth-while endeavour.

When I get on to the topic of our relations with the United States, particularly in the course of an assessment of the government's record since it took office, I cannot help but think about how the "just society" became the "secret society" when it came to the elusive Gray report. The Gray report, you will remember, Mr. Speaker, was commissioned as an analysis of the problem of foreign investment in Canada. It was to tell us the facts and recommend solutions. For that reason it was, and it is, a vitally important document to every Canadian.

After first promising that the report would be released and open for discussion, the government did an about face and decided that the report was too much for the Canadian people, that the people would be protected by making the report a confidential cabinet document. That, Sir, was not only insulting, it was stupid and self-defeating. The result was a leak that became a flood. First, there was what purported to be a summary of the report published by the Canadian Forum. That was quickly followed by the Southam News Services publication of a secret cabinet document. That cabinet document showed clearly that the government had tried to mislead the Canadian people when it suggested that the Canadian Forum paper was not really very important.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): One of those heavy water leaks, Bob.

Mr. Stanfield: A heavy water leak is nothing compared with the flow coming from this government. I feel sorry when the hon. member for St. Boniface is reduced to the point of coming back to heavy water, because it indicates that he is in a very sad state of bankruptcy.

Mr. Korchinski: He is a pothead on a trip.

• (1250)

An hon. Member: Go back to the grass.

Mr. Hees: Some grass!

Mr. Stanfield: I do not want to irritate these people unnecessarily. I understand that the morale is not very high there anyway.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: They tell me the group of 20 is growing every day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not want to give anybody over there a bad weekend, Mr. Speaker.

Before the recess the Prime Minister told us that the government had settled on its policy with regard to foreign investment and ownership. Various other announced dates were indicated. Two months have passed and the country still awaits the word; confusion and uncertainty still abound. Now, we are promised in the Speech from the Throne some kind of legislation based upon the unrevealed policy developed from that phantom report. Participatory democracy strikes again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: If we are to work out our economic relations with the United States, we need some grounds for mutual trust and confidence. Those grounds do not exist now and a good deal of the responsibility must be borne by this government. If we are to work out our relations, some effort must be made to spell out our goals, and that effort must be made in the open with the participation of all Canadians, not in the back room secrecy of Ottawa or anywhere else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I could go on and on and on.

Mr. Gibson: You are.

Mr. Stanfield: My remarks could range from the government's attempts to muzzle the Auditor General to all sorts of unsettling legislation which has been left hanging in the air, but I think I could sum up at this point simply by saying that I believe this government has effectively dissipated one of the most hopeful moods this country has ever experienced. It has largely wasted one of the greatest opportunities ever available to a government of this country.

The momentum of the spirit of 1967 has become the inertia of the malaise of 1972. The evidence of that is everywhere in this country and does not require an endless catalogue of exhibits to support it. The disaffection and frustration which so many Canadians feel toward this government, contrasted with their high hopes when it came into office, is the real test of its record. The real test of government is whether it can create a climate of confidence, co-operation and trust within which people, groups and whole regions can live, develop and prosper in Canada.

The present government has failed that test. It has failed miserably perhaps because it has never really seen it as a desirable objective. The question arises, where are we going today and what should our direction be. We in the party for which I speak believe that there can be just one new direction. We believe that government in Canada must rededicate itself to liberating the initiative and the imagination of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Stanfield: This goes against the tendency that has been noticeable lately to impose universal and generalized regulations for their own sake, perhaps for the sake of making things tidy for the bureaucrats. Tidiness may be a virtue but when it interferes with a free society, then I think it is better to get your housekeeping accomplished in some other way.

The federal government has many tasks before it, and I say it must get its own house in order as a first step to nurturing our economic independence and national identity. In this regard, coordination within the federal government to ensure consistency in all policies—tax policy, competition policy , regional development policy, transportation policy, all policies—is the only workable approach. This was emphasized by the Science Council of Canada in an interim report. So far as I can see there is nothing in the Speech from the Throne that even recognizes the need for that kind of coordination and consistency in the various policies of this government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, of course, Canada needs a long term economic development strategy. That is clear and undeniable, whether we are speaking of foreign investments, whether we are considering our future as a trading nation or whether we are discussing the economic future of the various parts of Canada.

The first duty of the government in the development of some strategy, in the broader sense of the word, must be to determine some order for national priorities, in conjunction with the provinces and the representatives of the main economic sectors. The second step should be to devise legislation to govern the implementation of such priorities.

[English]

I see, according to the list of bills, that the government intends to bring in legislation concerning foreign investment, and the Prime Minister referred to it this morning. There is no indication in the Speech from the Throne of what that kind of legislation will be, in spite of the fact that the decision was apparently taken two months ago, we are told. I must emphasize at this point that any legislation of this nature must be a unifying force across Canada and not a divisive one.

The Throne Speech before us pays lip service to the need for an industrial strategy. How can we intelligently consider proposals with regard to foreign investment without having before us the government's articulated industrial strategy? How can we know what we are trying to achieve without this strategy? The government has paid lip service to this concept. It assures us that there will be announcements of tremendous importance to the future of this country within a few weeks, but the speech does not tell us what priorities the government thinks should be the basis of such a strategy.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I leave the chair to resume the sitting at 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, when I called it one o'clock I was discussing the concept of an industrial strategy in Canada. I have had people say to me: "What is this industrial strategy thing; is it some kind of new political catchphrase?" I suppose when it is used the way it is in the Speech from the Throne it is not difficult to see or to speculate concerning why that kind of an interpretation could be taken or why that kind of a question could be asked about the significance of an industrial strategy. But, to many people in this country and to me it is much more than a catch-phrase. To me it means a definition of some direction, a definition of some direction based upon specific priorities that are chosen to take us in that direction. It means adopting a sense of direction in both the medium and longer range terms, rather than simply an ad hoc expediency determining the Canadian game plan on a day to day and hour to hour basis.

There are a number of different strategies, industrial strategies and economic development strategies, that are open to Canada which embody the spelling out of various priorities. In other words, the strategies adopted would depend to some extent at least on the priorities one adopted. The government has not given us its priorities. Certainly, it has not done so in the Speech from the Throne. I feel it is important to the people of Canada for me to outline what these foundation priorities are to me and would be to a Progressive Conservative industrial or economic strategy. Our first objective would be the creation of sufficient opportunities for meaningful employment for Canadians, and there is no evidence that the present government of Canada really accepts that priority. Our second goal is the attenuation of regional disparities by a consistent program of economic development. It follows from this that there has to be a complete review of the DREE operation. Our third priority is the pursuit of steady economic growth in terms both of gross national product and in terms of productivity through a program of incentives to encourage the initiative of Canadians in all branches of business, industry, farming and other occupations, whereas today we find a sense of frustration in respect of all our economic activity in Canada rather than a sense of encouragement.

Fourth, we recognize the need as a basic priority to communicate a sense of national purpose to the Canadian people, because if that is lacking then we cannot expect to accomplish very much. I suggest that this government has divided the country rather than give the people a sense of purpose.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I think these are the basic priorities of our national strategy that any government worth its salt should have been working on for several years, not as a loose and unco-ordinated or unconnected series of individual measures but as parts of a whole strategy for the development of Canada. That is what the government ought to have been doing, but under the gentleman opposite the process has not even been started and that is why it will be and why it will deserve to be severely judged by Canadians in years to come.

Aside from these priorities there are a number of specific measures the government should have spelled out in the Speech from the Throne yesterday. There should have been a recognition, for example, of this government's responsibility to help provincial and local governments that are caught up in the greatly increased welfare costs that arise from the unemployment for which this national government is responsible. There should have been an undertaking to curb the steady erosion of the way of life represented by the family farm. Some of my supporters here will have a great deal to say about that, Mr. Speaker.

• (1410)

There ought to have been effective measures to ensure the conservation of our fisheries. Some of my colleagues here will have a great deal more to say about that, Mr. Speaker.

There should have been some proposal to draw Canadians together in the fight against inflation, and in particular some clarification of the role of the Prices and Incomes Commission. I say that we should be fighting hard now to get some guidelines accepted in fighting inflation. The Bank of Canada bears a great responsibility for the way in which our economy is performing. Considering the difficulties we have been going through, there should be a thorough review of the bank's policies as they have related to economic growth, unemployment and inflation over the past several years.

We should adopt immediately the concept of a full employment budget in this country. This is no longer revolutionary. That great radical, President Nixon, has adopted it in the United States, and the province of Ontario is operating on it.

Mr. Gibson: Are you in favour of Opportunities for Youth?

Mr. Stanfield: I am all in favour of youth.

Mr. Gibson: But not of opportunities for them.

Mr. Stanfield: I am even in favour of opportunities for the hon. member who has interrupted me.

Mr. Gibson: Thanks very much.

Mr. Stanfield: I realize very well that such a concept of budgeting does not guarantee full employment. But what it would do is show us clearly whether a particular budget is really expansionary for the economy as a whole, or whether it is not.

There should have been an indication of immediate action to right the wrongs done by the government to the old age pensioners, by bringing increases in the old age pension into line with the real increases in the cost of living.

There should have been some indication of a plan to improve our trading position in the world, besides improved credit arrangements of which I approve—at least, I hope I will be able to approve them when I see them. Besides business and other missions abroad, there should have been a plan based upon the realities of the world as it really is. Such a plan should be based upon a recognition that our enterprises have to compete in the world as it really is. All of this requires a tax structure, a tax policy and a competition policy that will enable our industries, including agriculture, to compete in the trade of the world as it really is, and not as some people around Ottawa would like to imagine that it is. Our industries in Canada must be put in a position to compete.

The Government of Canada owes respect to our native and Metis peoples. It not only owes them respect, it also has the duty of providing them with the opportunity for individual and collective self-development. The first prerequisite of any policy on Canada's native peoples must be that it is prepared and implemented in full consultation with their chosen representatives. Opportunity involves freedom. This means, for example, that native peoples should be free to choose whether they wish to live in their own communities or whether they wish to live elsewhere. In either case there should be no prejudice to their social or economic opportunities.

Opportunity also means education. There should be much greater stress placed on the availability of teaching programs that are relevant to native cultures and the languages right through school. And opportunity means economic progress. With the co-operation of the native peoples themselves, there must be more feasibility studies made of the economic potential of Indian lands across Canada. The government should make development capital available on the most generous possible terms to develop that potential. These are some of the things the federal government should be doing to provide the climate in which our native peoples can develop. But I see no indication of them in the Speech from the Throne.

As to our country as a whole and its economy, all of us are now in the position of discussing matters of economic policy without yet knowing the government's policy on foreign investment, which is said to have been decided before Christmas, and which could conceivably have a very substantial effect on any recommendations that ought to be made as to what is an appropriate policy to fight unemployment. The government has become so accustomed to reacting to problems from the exclusive standpoint of its own political interests that it is now quite incapable of dealing frankly with the Canadian people. It is equally incapable of pointing out new directions to Canadians. Fortunately, Sir, there is an alternative government that is able to take up that challenge and point out those directions.

I have already made clear that our commitment is to full employment as based on individual initiative and excellence, and to social justice for all Canadians, not as a slogan but as a right. But that is not enough. If we are to attain the society that we want we must work for it. We must develop a national strategy for survival, and for more than survival. We must develop a strategy for creating a climate where Canadians can excell and find the good life. It is not up to any government to tell people how to live their lives. That is a recipe for totalitarianism. But it is up to government to ensure an atmosphere exists in our country in which individuals can flourish. All right, that does involve a national economic strategy; not one imposed on Canadians by bureaucratic fiat, but instead one that we shall achieve in co-operation with one another.

This means constant and frank consultation between the federal government and the provinces, not to gain political advantage from some kind of manufactured political confrontation, but in order to work out our common priorities. We have got nowhere in the last four years on this. It means consultation with the various economic sectors of our country, with industry, with labour, with businessmen, farmers and primary producers generally.

We cannot create such a strategy out of a vacuum. The federal government has to take some initiative on this. Unfortunately the government has done nothing of any substance along these lines during its four years in office in order to prepare the way. Such a strategy involves careful analysis of the international market possibilities, to enable us to see the directions that are available to our export industries, and not simply the sort of official hypocrisy that we have had, saying that our policy officially is multilateralism whereas in fact our trade has become more and more concentrated with one country. It involves an equally careful analysis of our own industrial potential to decide where we should put the emphasis. We already have certain areas of excellence. We should be expanding and deepening those areas. That is one economic challenge before us, but it is certainly not the only challenge.

We must have a strategy as well to ensure that beyond the realm of economics the quality of life that is available to Canadians becomes richer and more varied in the years ahead. We have to protect our physical and cultural environment. I do not think there needs to be any conflict between these objectives. There must not be any such conflict if we are to achieve a decent society for Canadians.

The decent society we want depends on a combination of solid economic growth and careful planning for the preservation of our environment. With that as our basis we must also see to it that Canadians who, because of age or some disability, cannot play a full economic role, will have a decent standard of living. These are the objectives that we must set ourselves in the years ahead, and we must go a long way toward them in the next four years. We have many challenges ahead of us, Mr. Speaker, but the basic one is the challenge of defining new directions for our country after the empty years, years without direction, that will soon happily come to an end.

• (1420)

Mr. Pepin: Wishful thinking!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell):

That following the words "Houses of Parliament" there be added:

> But we respectfully regret that your government has not only failed utterly to provide an economic climate in which Canadians can have confidence in the future and to give protection to Canadians against the isolation of individuals caused by economic deprivation but, in fact, has deepened the gap between the affluent and those in need.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with the hon. Leader of the Opposition in congratulating the mover, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), and the seconder, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie), of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. One of the happiest aspects of the debate in which we are now engaged, and there are not too many, is the opportunity which is presented to us to listen to elected representatives who remind us that all that we do here, all that the government decides in terms of policies and programs, must in the final analysis be for the benefit of the people.

While the backgrounds of the hon. member for Bruce and the hon. member for Trois-Rivières are quite dissimilar, as are their constituencies, they are much alike in the high qualifications and deep interest they bring to their work here on behalf of their constituents.

The hon. member for Bruce, a rural constituency in southwestern Ontario, has a long record of public service at the municipal, provincial and now federal levels. He served for 12 years, from 1955 to 1967, as a member of the Ontario legislature before entering federal politics in 1968, and since that date has been very active on House committees on agriculture, veterans affairs and finance, trade and economic affairs.

[Translation]

As for the hon. member for Trois-Rivières, he represents an electoral district that is mainly urban. He is somewhat of a newcomer on the political scene, since he was first elected in a by-election held in 1971. He has come to Parliament with a wealth of experience which is very useful to him here. He has been a member of the Committee on Transport and Communications and, last fall, he attended the United Nations General Assembly as an observer for Canada.

[English]

These two men have spoken in the finest tradition of this institution. They have reminded us of the concerns, the hopes and the proud accomplishments of Canadians in two distinct parts of our country. We were given an opportunity yesterday to listen to a candid appraisal of the preoccupations of our fellow citizens. We learn something of the strength of Canada through such speeches.

This morning, as the saying goes, "was something else". I found it difficult to believe that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was talking about the same country. The hon. gentleman performs much as does a badly adjusted camera filter—removing all the light and colour, leaving a dark pallor and a flatness. The effect is startling but it is scarcely realistic. I feel sorry for someone who moves in such perpetual gloom; like the unfortunate fellow whose vacation is always rained out. In time his outlook becomes quite jaded.

An hon. Member: Maybe he is a bigot.

Mr. Trudeau: Listening to him this morning, I thought of another orator and of his fate as he spoke:

There was silence supreme! Not a shriek, not a scream,
Scarcely even a howl or a groan,
As the man they called "Ho!" told his story of woe
In an antediluvian tone.

I do not suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition is totally without humour. He is certainly not without love. This morning he felt love for his own words. I noticed that he was repeating what he said in Hamilton a few days ago and what he said on television last night. If he repeats that speech a few more times, Mr. Speaker, his infatuation with his own talk will grow more enormous. He is not without love and certainly not without humour but I think without optimism, Mr. Speaker. For a man in his position that is understandable. Even his supporters in Toronto are so bereft of ideas to help him that they have been forced to distribute what they describe as a "non-political" tabloid. Isn't that wonderful? Non-political. Can you imagine what would happen if they ever switched to radio? We would be treated to a solemn announcement: "This has been a paid non-political broadcast sponsored by that non-political party, the non-Progressive Conservatives." It is unquestionably another first for that party. For some time it has been non-national and non-representative. Now, it is non-political as well, and by its own admission.

But we know under what difficulties the hon. gentleman labours. His policy committees struggle and struggle seeking some original programs, yet the results, always, are totally predictable. Faced with the government's proposals for the settlement of the offshore minerals dispute, this venturous group could say nothing more than "We don't think much of it". When the government published its white paper on foreign policy, the comment was the same, "We don't think much of it". Now, even before we have spelled out our proposals for control of the Canadian economic environment, they have begun the same old refrain "We don't think much of it". So long as these unimaginative souls have their needles stuck in that single groove, I hope for his own sake that the Leader of the Opposition never asks them what they think of his own leadership record.

What was totally missing in this morning's speech, Mr. Speaker—when once the opening comedy turn was concluded—was a balanced appreciation of what is happening throughout the world. This period of history is not a tranquil backwater, and those who talk as if it were or should be, reveal that their instincts are more fitted for reminiscence than for leadership. All about us, in Asia, in Africa, in the Middle East, even in Europe, smouldering discontents, unrealized expectations, unresolved animosities, have burst forth in violent and tragic proportions. Concurrently, an international fiscal crisis of a dimension not witnessed in four decades has swept across the world and affected every one of the industrialized countries in varying degrees.

These are facts, Mr. Speaker. This is the reality of life on this planet in the 1970's, a reality that was forecast in the Speech from the Throne 16 months ago when we were reminded of the conflicts which could be expected in the turbulent decade of the seventies; a forecast that was airily dismissed at that time by gentlemen opposite who preferred life in their comfortable cocoons to that in the world beyond.

Canada can no more ignore these events and these pressures than it can by itself control them. We cannot live separate from others on this planet; we cannot divorce ourselves from the plight and the problems of our neighbours. But neither should we permit ourselves to follow the example of the hon. gentleman opposite and tear at our flesh and wail in self-pity.

• (1430)

Unsettled times are seldom comfortable to those whose attitudes are fixed, whose mental anchors are in the past, but they can be rewarding to the imaginative for they provide the necessary environment for improving social conditions, and some chance for avoiding the otherwise inevitable revolution against advantage and privilege. The winds of change need not always strike with hurricane force. A society receptive to innovation, with a government responsive to social needs, will find itself able to harness the energy of those winds and benefit from them.

Resilience and stamina are among the characteristics of Canadians, Mr. Speaker, not pessimism and despair. Spokesmen opposite conveniently overlook the fact that Canada has faced two crises of grave proportions in the past 16 months and has emerged from each of them stronger and with increased self-confidence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: One of those crises, which commenced with the events of last August, has led to the revaluation of every major currency in the world except Canada's. It has led as well to pressures upon us of considerable magnitude seeking trade concessions.

The government's response to these pressures, Mr. Speaker, has been one which is respected by Canadians and by our trading partners alike. We have stated that trade is Canada's principal source of prosperity; that, consequently, we will no more foresake that prosperity than we will demand from others unbalanced benefits, unfair protection, or unreasonable arrangements.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Canada's proud record as one of the world's leading trading nations was gained through a policy of mutual advantage and broad access. Our successes are the result of superior products, aggressive marketing, and reliability as a trading partner. They have not been achieved as a consequence of the unfair techniques employed by some countries. The government has no intention of hindering these talents and successes of Canadian businessmen in order to prove to any country our dedication to conviviality or good fellowship.

The Canadian dollar was at a free and fair value on August 15, 1971. It was there because this government had the courage and the foresight in June, 1970, to anticipate severe monetary disturbances and to take steps to diminish their impact on Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The dollar remains today at the same fair value—the only major currency in the world not revalued—because this government refused to back down when the going got tough. There is not the slightest reason to believe that we will be less firm in defence of our trading interests in weeks and months to come.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Canada's trading posture with the United States will be varied to the mutual advantage of both countries when once negotiations to that end conclude. It will not be varied because some politicians and commentators in this country are so impressed with dramatic language that they fill front pages with stories of catastrophe, imminent doom and unrelieved tension.

The crisis of the past few months has been real enough, Mr. Speaker, and the stakes vital to our prosperity. The situation has called for a more balanced assessment, however, and much cooler nerves, than were evident recently in many members of the opposition who have seemed hypnotized by unsubstantiated threats and cries of anguish from unnamed and often unknown sources.

Good relations, Mr. Speaker, with other countries are not built out of give-aways any more than they are built out of intransigence. The respect with which Canada and the Canadian government is regarded in other countries comes from our record of honesty and fairness in our transactions and relations. Ours is an enviable reputation in these respects, and I am not about to diminish it. Nor, I hasten to add, and notwithstanding all too much comment to the contrary, is any government anywhere demanding or suggesting that Canada agree to substantial concessions under threat of grave retaliation. The United States does not conduct its business with Canada in that fashion, much as such a myth is employed by the NDP and others as a tonic to grow hair on their chests.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Last November, the Conservative party asked this House to entertain a motion of non-confidence in the government, condemning what it claimed were deteriorating relations between Canada and the United States, and criticizing the alleged absence of communications between Ottawa and Washington. The Conservative spokesman, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), devoted some time to one of his favourite, and wholly unsubstantiated, theories that there were no telephone calls between the White House and my office, that there were no exchanges of correspondence between the President and myself, and that the leaders of the two governments no longer "spoke freely and regularly on matters concerning our countries". Such jibberish, Mr. Speaker.

Apart from the preposterous falsity of these allegations, does that gentleman now suggest that had Canada been nicer to the Americans we would have been exempted from the 10 per cent surcharge? Not Norway, not Burma, not Togo, not Mexico, nor any of the other countries of the world affected by that blanket policy, but Canada? By a smile and a prepaid telephone call, I could have avoided for Canada the impact of the surcharge! How simple is the conduct of foreign relations when one is the critic, not the executor!

I challenge the Conservatives, Mr. Speaker, to describe honestly and candidly to the Canadian people what their posture towards the United States would be in this difficult negotiation. Would they have gone to Washington cap in hand, to employ their own phrase, and agreed to a forced upward valuation of the dollar in order to prove their friendship with the United States? We didn't, and we did not endanger Canada's good standing with the United States in any way by not doing so. Would the Conservatives have made unilateral trade concessions in order to free us of the requirement of tough bargaining? We didn't, and we don't intend to do so now. Just what is the stand of the Conservatives? A sell-out to the Americans to prove friendship? Or do they secretly admire the way in which the government has handled these negotiations but are too small to say so publicly?

I can assure this House, Mr. Speaker, that relations between the governments of the United States and Canada are at this juncture as friendly and congenial, and as mutually respectful, as at any time in our history. If opposition parties are unhappy about that, or have no stomach for hard negotiating, let them say so; but please let us hear no more double talk about annoying the Americans. Just as the United States government stands in support of America and Americans, we stand in support of Canada and Canadians.

The task of each government is to seek such reasonable variations and adjustments in our trading relationship as to benefit us both. That is the issue, Mr. Speaker, and that is our objective. If the opposition parties disagree, then I wish they would address themselves to that issue and those objectives and stop chasing their colourful theories. Then the people of Canada will be able to decide for themselves the merits of this situation and decide, too, just which party is most responsible with respect to policies toward the United States. The government record is solid accomplishment, not fantasies of either frightened timidity or false bravado.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the events which took place in October 1970 and August 1971, there have been great achievements in Canada. Improvements whereby Canadians have benefited in the fields of social justice and quality of life, the undeniable economic success of private enterprise, progress on the international level must certainly all be acknowledged. Yet they should be considered within the context of the great trials we have had to overcome successively, also taking into account the unrest and disturbances which have marked national life and international relations of several other countries. Such accomplishments did not come about by chance; they reflect in a startling manner the very great concern which this government very promptly brought to bear on its structures and its organization as well as its governing ability.

The country it is this government's intention to build will be patterned according to well defined intentions and objectives that have been fully spelled out. We shall not abandon it to the blind and unpredictable course of events. With such a purpose, science and technology are two factors of over-riding importance and a sound economy is another.

• (1440)

If our country lacks available resources, most of our social objectives will remain unachievable. But the growth of national wealth is not necessarily equated by disorderly economic growth, just as social progress and welfare are not necessarily conflicting. Our economy can meet human needs through the supply of employment, goods and services, without giving rise in the process to the dire problems some countries have experienced: over-population, deterioration of the environment, over-sophisticated technology. A middle course must be found: man must be in balance with Nature; he must be in harmony with his fellow men. Conditions must be achieved wherein all fields of the economy, including the primary industry of food production, are reasonably profitable, and both efficiency and self-sufficiency are encouraged. But these conditions must be compatible with the necessity of a healthy environment and a social order favouring the development of the individual.

A number of problems facing the Canadian economy today are similar to those which are plaguing other countries; a comparison can be made between the way Canada has remedied those difficulties and the results obtained elsewhere. I think our solutions, in most cases, are very satisfactory. A number of our problems however stem from the very nature of the Canadian economy. Nowhere else do exporters have such free access to the most extensive and diversified market in the world; nowhere else does the investment picture favour to such a degree the movement of foreign securities; nowhere else are the important sectors of two economies tied so closely as those of Canada and the United States.

Our solutions to these problems will not only affect our standard of living, but will help determine the very future of Canada and shape our society. These considerations have greatly affected the policy on science and technology as well as the industrial strategy project with which the responsible ministers will acquaint the House.

The members of the opposition never fail to point out that such measures may very well be of value for the future but they ask, what about the present state of the economy? What about those who are now unemployed? Mr. Speaker, I admit willingly that those questions are relevant. I should like to discuss the matter with members of the opposition, but in order that Canadians better understand the situation and the value of the means suggested as remedies, all the factors involved in the problem of unemployment in Canada should be taken into account. The large number of new jobs being created in Canada should not be overlooked, nor the fact that, between 1965 and 1970—the last period for which statistics are available—over one million new jobs were created in Canada. This figure exceeds the total number of new jobs created in Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United Kingdom. Those seven countries, whose total population is twelve times our own, created jointly fewer new jobs than Canada did over that five-year period. And this thrust is being maintained. More than 200,000 new jobs have been created in Canada in 1971.

But in its discussions, Mr. Speaker, the opposition could not be bothered with those factors. It chooses to ignore what has been achieved and to resort to this simplistic assertion that the government is unmindful of the unemployment problem and indifferent to job creation. It is not very tricky to sort out the facts and cast away those which are unfavourable to political sectarianism. Could the government be accused of indifference towards unemployment when it has created the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which has earmarked $907 million in the past three years to create new jobs in the regions that needed them most? That same government has also drawn up all the training and manpower mobility programs in order to improve workers' abilities and help them adapt to available jobs. It is the same government which has clearly informed the United States that it was not prepared to make unilateral commercial concessions detrimental to Canadian workers.

It is the same government, Mr. Speaker, which had attempted to rationalize various important industrial sectors in order to increase their efficiency and which will introduce during the present session of Parliament an industrial strategy together with amendments to the Fair Employment Practices Act and the Canadian Labour Code. It is the same government which has also proposed radical changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act and designed the local initiatives program which has resulted this winter in the creation of 82,500 new jobs.

Mr. Speaker, this again illustrates the difference of approach between the opposition parties and our party. The leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) has stated, for instance, that we were exceedingly optimistic when we forecast that 70,000 new jobs would be created and that we would be fortunate if we could reach 50,000. Well, Mr. Speaker, our forecast was in fact incorrect; it actually failed through excessive modesty because we have already reached the 82,500 mark.

Mr. Speaker, no one on this side of the House is trying to elude the problem of unemployment. But we meet it with legislation and programs and not, as the opposition does, with sophistries.

The Local Initiatives and Opportunities for Youth programs constitute, in the field of employment, original experiments whose success cannot be questioned. They have shown the way in which public funds can be used in a system of decentralized decision-making. The participation at the local level of private groups and municipalities avoids administrative delays while allowing for the dynamic contribution of those who are most familiar and most concerned with the interests of their social community. The real originality of those programs lies in the fact that they favour local participation and decision-making while creating numerous jobs and bringing the community lasting benefits.

Moreover, those programs reflect our feeling that the greatness of Canada will be measured not by the level of the gross national product but rather by the way in which we use our resources to solve our human problems.

• (1450)

[English]

Canada should not be measured in terms of gross national product, or miles of railway line, or by the number of telephone calls made by each person in a year. Outsiders do not think of us in those terms nor, in the final analysis, do we. Canadians have little desire to be the biggest in the world by any standard of measurement and have no desire to be more powerful, more influential, or more visible than any other country.

There is something much more than mere familiarity which binds us to our country. There is here a quality which is recognized often by outsiders but which we seldom admit to ourselves. It is a belief that in this country, perhaps more than in any other, there is an opportunity for each of us to be ourselves—to be creative, to be free, to be accepted. We have been influenced by our vast spaces and disciplined by our rigorous climate. For centuries we were separated by thousands of miles of open sea from our cultural fountainheads in Britain and France. For 150 years we have learned to live in peace and co-operation with a restless, energetic giant which in its stirrings often seemed unaware or uncaring about our somewhat precarious existence on its northern flank.

We have here every opportunity of escaping the wretched and needless consequences of racial or religious or linguistic turmoils which have reduced men and women in many places to bestial levels of hatred and vengeance even as it exposes their children to misery and brokenhearted distress. The promise and the potential of man is surely not to be wasted in such destructive pursuits.

We have not always escaped these kinds of activities in Canada, but we have been able to contain them and it is my earnest hope that we can avoid them in the future. We can do so by recognizing that discontent is often a product of injustice. This country is ever so much richer and offers ever so much more freedom to individuals because of its human diversity. There is no uniformity, no flatness, to Canadians. They are themselves to a degree not possible in many, many societies. Canada is richer by five million times through the presence here of that many persons whose cultural heritage is other than British or French. We dare not attempt to imagine how bland Canada would be, how devoid of so many exploits and accomplishments, were these people not part of our society.

Nor could I conceive of a Canada without either of its major fractions—those persons who trace their origins back to Britain or to France. If at any time major elements of any of these three fractions, or of that fourth fraction which preceded us all, our Indians and Eskimos, were to disappear, Canada would cease to be what it is today and we should all be the losers. This change could come about, I suppose, by some kind of government coercion but it would be a most unenlightened political party, quite unlike any on the Canadian national scene today, that would attempt such a retrogressive step. More likely, this abandonment of our past and surrender of our identity could come about through indifference and assimilation.

Of these there will always be some, I expect, but I believe that the great majority of Canadians view this land as a place where each of us is able to grow and reach fulfilment, secure in the knowledge that we are free from discrimination; a place where Canadians who live and work and play and think in either the English or the French language may continue to do so and to communicate confidently with their government in their own tongue.

I regard these attributes, Mr. Speaker, not so much in terms of Canadian unity as in terms of the character of Canada. The overwhelming majority of Canadians living in every part of this country conduct their lives and carry on their daily relationships with other Canadians on a basis of tolerance and understanding and common benefit. When I see evidence to the contrary, however, evidence of policies which can have no other effect than to turn Canadian against Canadian and to fracture this country into compartments, I will not stand mute. It matters not to me in what region these policies appear, it is my obligation to oppose them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I was not elected by the people of Canada with a mandate to put any part of this country in its place. My mandate came from my conviction that in Canada there is room for every individual and for every region.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I regard it as my duty to oppose policies from any source which provoke intolerance and threaten the unity of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The federal government represents every Canadian in every province and territory. It is responsible to all Canadians, not simply to those in the wealthy regions or those in regions where additional political popularity would be helpful in elections. That is why we shall continue the system of equalization payments, for it is one of the basic pillars of our federal system. If it is our belief that the unity of Canada is essential, as it is mine, then no party leaders can claim the luxury of opting out when situations demand standing up and speaking up for principle.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: There are many issues which will involve us in the course of this session, Mr. Speaker, but I repeat that none is to me so important as is my belief that this Canada is a favoured place, and that it is so because persons in every part of the country are able to seek fulfilment through the help and understanding of their fellow Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I look forward, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure do the leaders of the opposition parties and, I sincerely hope, all members, to a session which will enhance the image of this institution in the eyes of all Canadians and serve as evidence of its relevance in a democratic society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian of a group whose origin is neither French nor English, I can agree without reservation to that part of the Prime Minister's speech in which he spoke so glowingly about our country and about its people. The right hon. gentleman did not need, and I presume he did not intend, to read members of this House any lecture about the greatness of this country, the greatness of its potentialities and the greatness of its people. When he entered into that kind of Chamber of Commerce poetry, Mr. Speaker, I suspect it was because he needed a diversion of that kind to hide the hollowness of the rest of what he said.

In particular, I cannot but chortle when this sophisticated man, given to so much casuistry, accuses the opposition of being sophists. But the most characteristic approach of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the most characteristic of his attitudes, is the transfiguration which makes him assert that criticism of the government is criticism of Canada. When members on this side of the House draw attention to what they honestly believe to be wrong due to a situation which the government has created they are criticizing this great country. And this immense defender of its greatness is putting us in our place. I do not accept that kind of thing and I intend, as bluntly as I know how, to point out to the Prime Minister and the government the ways in which they have misgoverned and misruled this country for the last four years.

• (1500)

Further on in his speech he talks about the fact that Canada was the only country that did not revalue its currency in August, 1971. It is this kind of word-playing that gets my goat sometimes, to put it in simple language. The Prime Minister knew perfectly well that floating the dollar would and immediately did result in a revaluation of the Canadian dollar by 6 or 7 per cent. If he had said that Canada refused to revalue the dollar further, it would have been a statement of truth. The statement that was actually made was one of doubtful honesty.

The Prime Minister spoke toughly about the way he is negotiating with the United States. I wish he or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) would tell this Parliament and the people of Canada exactly what it is the government has done in these negotiations. I wish they would tell us what concessions they have made in regard to the auto pact and the defence sharing agreement. Because they have made concessions, and until we know what those concessions are, we are entirely justified in being suspicious about the jobs and other things that this government is giving away.

As we start this what is probably the last session of this Parliament I cannot escape the conclusion that the Trudeau years have been wasted years for my country. Failure and incompetence have been the mark of this government despite the trust with which the people of Canada invested the Prime Minister.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to recall the excitement of 1967, our centennial year, the year of Expo, the year when Canadians felt that at last they could begin to realize Sir Wilfrid Laurier's prophecy that the twentieth century belonged to Canada. Promise was in the air, there was pride in Canada's accomplishments and confidence in our country's future. We all felt that Canada was at the threshold of a new adventure. In 1968 a man came on the scene in this country who appeared to appreciate the pace of change in modern society and to be ready to use his talents to attack imaginatively the problems that have troubled the compassionate Canadian people—poverty, inequality, human waste and citizen alienation. The Canadian people gave that man their trust, and the Prime Minister has steadfastly betrayed that trust for four years.

The man of change became a callous traditionalist, mouthing phrases about the future but tied stubbornly to the methods of the past. The vision of a just society was a fine one, not to be disparaged, for it echoed the deepest desires and the highest goals of civilized men. But four years in office have shown that the vision lacked sincerity, that it was a high-sounding phrase to be used in a game to win and to hold power. The dilettante, carefully orchestrating his mood from playfulness to toughness, from soft words to authoritarian acts, diddled with the future of our people. Seldom was there any evidence of depth of feeling about the people's needs, their yearnings and their condition.

We have often heard this man speak of efficiency in the terms of the technocrat, cold and distant. He has used the power of his office to confuse rather than to clarify, to manipulate rather than to evoke participation, even to distort when he thought it necessary. We have heard him dismiss the tragedy of unemployment as a mere annoyance. We have seen him mouth unpleasant words even in this House of Commons and insult workers who could not strike back. He treated all Canada as his stage to act out his moods as if the nation's business was little more than a game.

I speak of the Prime Minister rather than of the government as a whole, because he has made himself the government in a way and to an extent not known before in Canada's history. More than any previous Prime Minister he has concentrated power in his own hands. It is doubtful whether even the members of his cabinet have as much say about policy and the future of this country as have the personal advisers with whom he has surrounded himself. He has concentrated the direction and even the tone of government in his own citadel. He has not been able to prevent the occasional leak, so that we sometimes learn of things not intended for our eyes and ears. His interpretation of participatory democracy is to tell Parliament and Canadians only what he thinks they ought to know and only at a time of his choosing.

[Translation]

He has doubled or tripled his entourage. Thanks to his court and his favourites, he has ears throughout the country, he has eyes in every department, and he has control over all important government functions. He has imposed amendments to the Standing Orders, not to modernize our proceedings—everybody would have agreed to that—but first and foremost to decrease the influence of Parliament and prevent it from interfering in any way with his own methods and plans.

The Liberal party, Mr. Speaker, inside and outside has turned itself to the promotion of the cult of personality; the unquestioning admiration of his herd, in this House, is proof of shameful moral abdication to the will and the whims of one man. They are the ones who have portrayed the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as Machiavelli's Prince; he has simply played his part to perfection.

Mr. Speaker, I remember the right hon. Prime Minister's very words published in Cité Libre in 1963, about the Liberal party, and I quote:

> Since I have been observing politics, I have no recollection of having witnessed a more degrading sight than that of all the Liberals who have turned their coats in tune with their leader when they saw an opportunity to seize power.
>
> With the head of the flock showing the way, the rest followed with the elegance of cattle scurrying to the feeding-trough.

That very realistic description of the Liberal party still stands today, under the leadership of the man who wrote those words.

[English]

The Speech from the Throne is another example of the playacting of this Prime Minister and his government. It is full of banal phrases about love, understanding and isolation. It is totally devoid of meaningful proposals or anything as lowly as a concrete plan. One of the very few specific undertakings in the speech, one of significance, is that "co-operation with the business and industrial communities will be extended even further". No doubt, Mr. Speaker; there is an election in the offing. The Prime Minister must not fail to extend co-operation to the 95 corporations on whose support the Liberal party has operated for a many years, according to a recent statement made by the Ontario chairman of the Liberal red carnation fund.

We are also informed that the Canada Labour Code changes and the competition bill are being revised to reflect the many representations made in past months. Whose representations are these, Mr. Speaker? I have little doubt that they are the representations of the Canadian Manufacturers Association and other allies of the Liberal party, and that the legislation will be watered down to suit their purposes.

• (1510)

I was therefore not surprised to find that the Throne Speech contained not a word about electoral reform, about limiting campaign expenses, about disclosing the sources of party funds. A Liberal government, you will recall, appointed a royal commission to study this matter. The commission reported in 1966. After much prodding a House committee was established and it reported last June, but the Prime Minister is not yet ready for a reform which he himself proclaimed as being essential to democracy. His excuse earlier today was that it was too late to apply it to the next election, as if he could not have done it last year and even the year before. But he will not make these changes, he will not have these democratic improvements, indeed not. Instead, he yields to pressures from his corporate friends to water down legislation and to shuffle cabinet ministers around so that nothing and no one could offend his corporate friends, particularly on the eve of an election.

Heartbreakingly significant is the fact that, despite talk in this Throne Speech about poverty, justice and isolation—and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) should have noticed this, and if he did not he should not hold the position he does—the Throne Speech does not contain a single reference to the native peoples of Canada, a group of Canadians who have suffered unrelieved poverty, injustice and isolation for decades. I cannot even understand the callousness responsible for this incredible omission.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Chrétien: Read the text.

Mr. Lewis: Finally, look at the couple of meaningless sentences accorded in the speech to the overriding concern about the foreign control of our economy. The words about Canada's identity and the greatness of our country have a hollow ring in the absence of a concrete undertaking to regain control of the economy so that Canadians may have the opportunity to shape their own future according to the social priorities of their own choosing.

In short, Sir, the Speech from the Throne is in my view a high school essay in purple prose, and the more banal the idea, the more purple the prose. In many places it is an apology for past failure rather than a plan for future action. The rest is a histrionic pose waiting for the curtain to rise on the election which is apparently again to depend on froth, image and phrase. I am confident that this will not work in 1972 as it worked in 1968.

In the first session of this Parliament, on September 16, 1968, speaking in the Throne Speech debate at that time I uttered the following words:

> The likelihood is, and I hope I shall be proven wrong—and I will apologize to the Prime Minister if I am wrong—that we shall wake up four years from now and find the same 20 per cent poor, almost the same regional disparities, a similar crisis in education, in housing and in urban life generally. No doubt there will be a patch here, a repair there, and an improvement elsewhere because whatever the stripe of the government we always manage to make a little progress. But the major inequalities and most oppressive social neglect will still be largely with us. The just society will still be a political slogan and a seemingly unreachable dream. More, Mr. Speaker, is the pity, because it is so unnecessary.

These were the words I uttered almost four years ago, and I say more is the pity indeed, a pity that unfortunately I do not have to apologize to the Prime Minister because my forecast proved to be not only right but in some respects an understatement of the conditions we find in Canada today. To the poverty which bothered our conscience in 1968 the government has deliberately added massive unemployment. Urban problems have multiplied. Congestion in our cities, pollution of the air and water, land speculation, regional disparities, poverty of our native peoples and the poverty of 20 per cent or more of our population, all this human waste in our society remains at least as serious and as unacceptable as it did four years ago. There have been some patches. There have been some little repairs here and there. The government can list some legislation about which it will boast as it did in the Throne Speech which closed the last session.

As I said in 1968, any government is bound to make some improvements, even this one, but only an insensitive and blind partisan can fail to see and admit, if he has any concern for people and any humility at all, that the years of this government have not moved Canada forward but have aggravated problems whose solution the Prime Minister promised four years ago.

I want to say to the Prime Minister, in view of some parts of his speech, that I condemn this precisely because I am proud of my country and its immense potentialities. I know that in the 100 years or more of its existence Canada has come a long way from its early pioneer beginnings. It has developed into a major nation with modern capacities and a great people. Governed sensibly with concern for people and with modern ideas and instruments, this country can in time eliminate poverty and inequality and build a society in which all Canadians take a proud part. This is what participatory democracy is all about, and it is the total failure of this government to respond to the needs of the modern society that my party condemns and that in my view history will condemn.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal party and the Progressive Conservative party live and function under the yoke of outmoded doctrines. They stand with their friends in the large corporations, the only remaining doctrinarians within our society, with the exception of a handful of scatter-brained romantics of the extreme left.

The government and the official opposition are status quo parties. The Prime Minister does speak of change. What his action and his policy clearly reflect is his rejection of all real change in economic and social structures, in the balance of power within our society and in everything essential to the implementation of a system of human equality. His idea of change is expressed in the well-known proverb: "The more things change, the more they remain the same."

We of the New Democratic Party believe that modern technology demands increasing involvement of the government in the economy. The forces of the market can no longer serve the common good unless they are coupled with significant supervision and in certain cases direct control. Modern production has changed considerably, from the technical point of view as well as in complexity. For instance, the time lapse between deciding to produce a new article and introducing it in the market place has been extended, because of the elaborate stages in its development, the survey of the market and all the other factors now involved in the planning of production and its processes. Some even claim that a four- or five-year period is required in the case of a new car.

The main sectors of modern production require a great deal of time and money. The raw materials, the power, the many basic requirements as well as the infrastructure require the type of investment that only large corporations can finance.

In addition, finding the proper assortment of trained employees in the labour market requires time. These prerequisites of the post-industrial era foster the concentration of wealth and power in an ever decreasing number of units.

[English]

The objectives of these corporations are primarily the maximizing of profits and of power. Their investments and production priorities are governed by a market which they themselves control. Through modern image advertising on an unprecedented scale they create wants and needs to suit their interests. It is only by coincidence that their decisions may occasionally match the needs and priorities of society. Only public investment, public planning of the use of our human and material resources and large scale government involvement in setting priorities can successfully cure poverty, regional disparity and social alienation.

• (1520)

In Canada the corporate control to which I have referred has meant increasingly foreign corporate power. The objectives of the multinational corporations are not only those of profit and power but are global in nature and therefore take little account of the needs of a particular host country. This is why the New Democratic Party has been deeply concerned from its inception with the problem of Canadian independence. This is why we believe in the necessity of regaining control of Canada's economy so that the Canadian people will be in a position to shape their own destiny and their own future in accordance with our country's needs and capacities.

After years of discussion and a growing sense of Canadianism, after numerous studies and reports, this government was finally forced to undertake to develop a policy on what it apparently calls "domestic control of the national economic environment". On numerous occasions the Prime Minister has promised a statement of policy on this subject. In reply to proddings, he first promised it some time before Christmas. More recently he has been promising it some time before the resumption of the sittings of this House. Again, a little earlier this year he promised to make the statement immediately on the opening of the new session.

This morning, in reply to a question I posed to him, the Prime Minister said he would not announce the government's policy on foreign economic control until the supporting material becomes available and indeed until the legislation is ready. We know, Mr. Speaker, that will not likely be until April. The fact of the matter is that the material is not anywhere near ready; the government's hacks have been set to rewrite the document that was leaked last fall, and to water down the policy. What will emerge is a half measure. On the basis of information I have received, I am convinced that the government will limit the activities of the screening agency to only the biggest takeovers, ignoring smaller takeovers which might well in time have greater cumulative impact.

The Department of Trade and Commerce reported earlier this month that major foreign-owned corporations showed stronger growth than Canadian companies in the 1964-69 period. This means that foreign ownership is strong in the growth areas of our economy, so a relatively small takeover may, over the years, turn into a big intrusion in the economy of Canada.

The Prime Minister also said this morning that the announcement of policy on foreign economic control would wait for the introduction of legislation. What sort of delay this will produce is impossible to say. It may take five weeks or three months. I have seen estimates of that sort. I do not know how long it will take. I am far from convinced that this represents any real protection against a rush of takeovers in anticipation of the so-called screening agency. That threat existed from the moment it became known that the government intended to move in this direction. I call on the government now to take steps to prevent this happening, to prevent any other takeovers taking place before the legislation is passed by this House.

One simple expedient which I propose to the Prime Minister would be an announcement by him that the eventual legislation would be made retroactive to the date of his announcement of his foreign investment policy. In sum, the announcement is further delayed, the uncertainty continues and takeovers continue. Indeed, I cannot help wondering whether we are likely to get any policy before this Parliament is dissolved for the next election.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to turn to another phase of the discussion about the government's performance. Recently the government, uncomfortable about its record, has begun to nurture a new myth. I have heard Liberals try to persuade the Canadian people—the Prime Minister himself has indulged in this—that even if the government has not always been right it has at least been competent and strong. The role of the swinger is to be changed into the image of the strong man, the competent administrator. He has just shown us how he can do it. He played his role very well both in the House and outside. I have never doubted his acting ability. The record shows that this is just another myth. Strength there has been, perhaps, although unconcerned obstinacy would be a more appropriate description of the Prime Minister's and the government's attitude in many critical situations. But competence there has not been, unless one permits oneself to be dazzled by flow charts of bureaucratic rearrangements.

The fact is that the record shows that the words written by a mutual friend of the Prime Minister and myself, the poet Frank Scott, about the late William Lyon Mackenzie King, apply to this Prime Minister and his government—"Do nothing by halves which can be done by quarters". To me government competence must be measured by its contribution to human welfare, by its successful control of economic and social forces to this end. By this criterion, and indeed by any other, this government has shown dismal incompetence, leaping from crisis to crisis, full of excuses and threats rather than solutions. I will, as I said, before I sit down move a subamendment to indicate one such solution.

[Translation]

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, how one can consider competent a government which has purposely implemented an economic policy aimed at creating massive unemployment. Only those who scorn human considerations can do so and consider competent a government which has forced thousands of Canadians into unemployment. For instance, let us consider the unbelievable mess that still exists where the application of the new Unemployment Insurance Act is concerned, the situation of the thousands of unemployed who suffer as a result of inexcusable delays and who at times even have to depend on welfare until they receive their due.

The very nature of the present government and the cynicism of its leaders has come out in broad daylight for all to see in the way they treat the unemployed. Instead of being concerned about them, the Prime Minister was very proud of himself when he announced to the country, a year and a half ago, that he was willing to tolerate a 6 per cent rate of unemployment in his so-called fight against inflation. Unfortunately, his wishes have never ceased to be gratified these last 21 months. Then, the Prime Minister and his assistants became embarrassed and started to look for excuses. They talked about the large increase in the labour force; they claimed that the number of people on the labour market was exceptionally high and they expressed satisfaction at the increase in the number of jobs.

• (1530)

[English]

It is not enough that the Prime Minister used these excuses on previous occasions. He did so again in his speech today, boasting about the increase in the labour force and in jobs. Let me place some facts before the House by comparing two periods of Liberal government, the Pearson and the Trudeau periods, with respect to these excuses. The average annual increase in the labour force in the five Pearson years from 1963 to 1967 inclusive was as high as 3.1 per cent, and in the Trudeau years dropped to 2.9 per cent. The average annual increase in employment in the Pearson years was 3.5 per cent; in the Trudeau years it dropped to 2.3 per cent. As far as participation rates are concerned, the average rate of increase in the Pearson years was twice as high as in the Trudeau years; it went from an average increase of .32 to an average of .15.

The average rate of unemployment in the five Pearson years was 4.4 per cent. The average rate of unemployment in the four years under the Trudeau government has been 5.5 per cent. Once and for all, let us not have these dishonest excuses about increases in the labour force, unemployment and participation rates. These excuses are false, as shown by the history. In short, unemployment between 1963 and 1967 inclusive was substantially lower despite higher increases in the labour force and in participation rates.

Indeed, to find a period of unemployment in the last 15 years comparable to the present, one has to go back to the years 1958 to 1962 when a Conservative government was in power and pursued policies similar to those pursued by the present government. If anything has ever proven how these two parties are exactly alike, this history alone proves it. If the Liberals can take consolation out of the fact that a Conservative government did not do any better, they are welcome to such consolation. And if the Conservatives think they can persuade Canadians to believe that despite their record when they were in power they can do better now, I suggest to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and his colleagues that they underestimate the intelligence of the Canadian electorate.

But the Prime Minister was not satisfied with those excuses. He went a shameful step further. He resorted to insulting the unemployed and the intelligence of Canadians generally by declaring that there are many unfilled jobs and the unemployed could have them if they were only ready to take them at lower wages and at considerable distances from their homes. I have often asked myself seriously what was the purpose of this statement.

Everyone knows that even in the crisis of the thirties there were some unfilled job vacancies. Everyone also knows that there are, unfortunately, some few members of our society who reject their duty to provide for themselves. But the Prime Minister's own Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) on more than one occasion has underlined, as a result of surveys, that the number of such people is a small and insignificant proportion of those on welfare and/or unemployed. What, then, was the Prime Minister's purpose in making the assertion about job vacancies and repeating it two or three times, if it was not to mislead the Canadian people about the seriousness of the unemployment crisis and to encourage a mean backlash against dealing humanely with people in need?

One of the spots the Prime Minister pointed to in one of his assertions was Sudbury. Even at the time he was speaking Inco was laying off employees. Since then further lay-offs have been announced, to the point that the entire community is concerned about its future. I have not heard the Prime Minister condemn Inco or other corporations, many of them foreign-owned, for ignoring their duty to their workers and their obligations to the communities from which they have extracted huge profits through the years. Indeed no; the corporations are too powerful. He aims his strictures at the unemployed, the helpless and the weak, and I say "shame." In any case, the Prime Minister knew or should have known that his statements were unfounded. The job survey made by a department of his government showed that throughout 1971 there were from 10 to 26 jobless Canadians for every job vacancy, whether temporary, seasonal or permanent. This kind of attitude, I have said before and I repeat, with sadness, but I believe it needs repeating, was possible only for a man who never had to scramble to pay his rent.

Look at DREE, Mr. Speaker, and tell me where that shows competence. The Prime Minister boasted about the fact that over $900 million has been spent by that department. That is precisely where the incompetence lies. One of the few specific undertakings made by the Prime Minister in 1968 has turned out to be a shambles in application. Every objective body in the Atlantic area, and every objective expert in the field of regional disparity has criticized the planlessness and lack of initiative in the work of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, despite the sincere intentions of the minister in charge.

In the minister's own province, in the Gaspé area, there was an excellent example of this with an expenditure of $250 million, most of which went to researchers and almost none of which went to the people in the area. The purpose was good; the implementation has been a model of incompetence. Hundreds of millions of taxpayers' dollars have been offered and received mainly by large foreign corporations. And the result? Hardly a ripple in the objective of removing poverty and disparities in the disadvantaged areas of Canada.

Think of Bathurst, New Brunswick, where the minister, the Leader of the Opposition and I attended an angry day of concern some weeks ago. Lay-offs and shut downs haunt the present and future of this disadvantaged part of Canada. Think of Corner Brook, Newfoundland, where lay-offs by a large pulp and paper corporation have raised unemployment levels to near disaster. Think of Témiscamingue in Quebec where CIP is closing down a plant employing 875 Canadians. And then remember the millions of dollars given to Parsons and Whitmore to build competing pulp mills in Saskatchewan, and the $13.7 million offered to a subsidiary of IT and T to build a new mill in Quebec.

I see you are about to rise, Mr. Speaker, to tell me my time has expired. I wonder if I may respectfully ask for a few extra minutes to complete my remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to give the hon. member time to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: I say, Sir, that this is not competence; this is planless chaos. I am not saying that nothing has been accomplished. Some new jobs have been created and I welcome that. But the program as a whole has not even made a dent in regional expansion. And it will continue to fail, as all such programs have failed in the past, because of its reliance on profit-oriented corporations to build communities. Direct public participation, either alone or in partnership with private enterprise, and over-all development planning are essential in the fight against regional disparities. These have been absent, and the result is not a program of regional development but a program of welfare to huge, wealthy corporations. This may be competence for the strong; for the weak it is waste and frustration.

• (1540)

I was going to deal with a number of other examples of what I believe to be incompetence. I shall skip two or three of them in order not to take too much advantage of the kindness of the House, but I do want to refer to two of them briefly. I ask the House to study the government's policy with regard to the native people. In 1968 the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development produced a new Indian policy with much beating of breast and loud fanfare. Today that policy is dead, as it deserves to be, because it was conceived in departmental isolation imposed from above and was rejected by the Indian people across the land. Where is the competence in this abortive exercise?

Finally, recall if you will the grain stabilization bill. Again, an important concept mutilated by thoughtlessness and incompetence. For years the farmers, particularly the grain farmers, have demanded a program that would give them adequate income security to protect them from the vagaries of weather, the international market and the international price. When at long last the government tried to give an answer to this age-long need to strengthen Canada's rural life, it produced a miserly and unacceptable plan, a plan which would have stabilized poverty. Our determination to prevent so callous a betrayal of the needs of farming Canadians, and the united opposition of almost all farm organizations as well as the three prairie provinces, caused the withdrawal of that bill.

The instances I have referred to—and I could refer to many others—are sufficient to disclose, in my view, a government which has been incompetent as well as indifferent, which has reacted to crisis rather than planning ahead of time, which has indulged in image and subterfuge rather than tackling with feeling and imagination the problems besetting the Canadian people.

Since I had the honour of being elected leader of my party last April I have travelled across Canada a great deal. Everywhere I saw the evidence of Trudeau's wasted years. I met with representatives of the poor at organizations like the Neighbourhood Centre in Halifax and the Inner City Project in Vancouver. They told me of their frustration and anger because the position of those they represented had hardly improved. They proudly outlined their organizations which had gained in strength and in their capacity and determination to demand redress against bureaucratic red tape, against the deprivation which haunts their families and the grudging subsistence on which they are forced to live. Many of them are developing agencies of self-help which could make an immense contribution to eventual elimination of the poverty culture in society. These agencies deserve our support and the New Democratic Party will fight to see that they get such support.

[Mr. Lewis.]

The sad, heartbreaking fact is that the number of poor has not decreased. One out of every five, and perhaps even one out of every four Canadians continue to live at or below the poverty line. The hopelessness, indeed the despair in the eyes and faces of young and old, white and native, child and mother, bring shame on a society as rich as Canada. Inequality and insecurity remain dominant characteristics of the human condition which our present economic and social values impose on people.

Many members on both sides of the House have visited Indian, Eskimo and Métis communities in all parts of this country. I challenge the Prime Minister, his colleagues and cohorts to defend the neglect seen everywhere; the 80 per cent and 90 per cent unemployment in many of these communities, the desperately shoddy homes we have provided for these people, the cruelty of an economic regime which robs people of their self-reliance, ignores their physical wants and threatens their cultural values.

I think of the elderly woman in British Columbia who had to battle for months before she was able to gain access to water without the difficulties from which she suffered. I think of the communities I visited at Pictou Landing in Nova Scotia, Moberly Lake in British Columbia, Fort McPherson in the Northwest Territories, and many others. Everywhere I heard cries for jobs, for an opportunity to develop their own answers to their needs and to obtain some security and some dignity in their lives.

Particularly am I often haunted by the cry of an intelligent young woman in an Eskimo community in the Northwest Territories. After a lengthy and factual presentation of her people's problems and grievances she suddenly paused and cried desperately, "Why am I talking to you? What is the use? We have talked to politicians and political leaders for years without result." These are conditions in Canada in 1972. They were there before 1968 but they are still there, still neglected and ignored, and this government continues to be responsible for that neglect.

True enough, one could walk through some streets in Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal, Halifax and see nothing but imposing new office buildings and high-rise apartment buildings and watch cars roll by and admire store windows full of attractive goods. These are a measure of the living standard reached by many in this country. They are a measure of a certain kind of progress and of the impact of technological advance. But I often question the meaning of this so-called progress and the direction which technological society is taking.

My party and I do not belittle the achievements of Canadians and the greatness of our country, particularly when compared with conditions in some other lands. It is not doom and gloom I am talking about. I am merely expressing a profound conviction that the Canadian people have the compassion to want ardently to remove this unnecessary human suffering, that they have the capacity to achieve this goal and that they have the collective wealth, skills and will to build a society based on equality without the hopelessness and indignity of poverty and alienation.

This, Sir, was the challenge that Canadians saw in 1967, this was the dream evoked by the innovations of Expo, and this is the vision which this government has lost, which this Prime Minister voiced in 1968 and, having come to power, has systematically trampled. It is because of this, Mr. Speaker, that I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

and in particular has taken no effective steps to relieve the serious unemployment situation that has affected Canadians in all parts of this country throughout its term of office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, some might feel that I have a lot of nerve to speak on this day set aside for party leaders, but the leader of the Social Credit party (Mr. Caouette) is now in Regina to chair a quite important meeting of our party and he has asked me to speak in his place. However, the House will not be the loser, since the hon. member for Témiscamingue, the leader of the Social Credit party, will be among us next Monday and will have the opportunity to take part in the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I also wish to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in reply (Messrs. Whicher and Lajoie), because they have satisfactorily performed the thankless task entrusted to them. I said "the thankless task", because it must be difficult for anyone to praise during half an hour this Liberal government which has been in office for the last four years, considering the bad legislation which was passed, its mistakes and omissions.

On several occasions, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated that he did not want to be judged on his past administration—and I understand him—but that he would like the electorate to look to a rosy future under another Liberal government. The Prime Minister realizes that the colour of the Liberal party is less and less popular and he would undoubtedly like it to turn from red to pink.

If the Prime Minister regrets the past, the mistakes of his government during the last four years, he should say so. If he is simply asking us to forget them, he is making a big mistake, because the Canadian voters will tell him so at the next federal election.

How, indeed, could the Canadian people forget the unemployment which has raged under the Liberal government? Here is the government's unemployment record during the past four years, according to data from Statistics Canada on February 8, 1971 and volume 27, No. 1, of catalogue 1971-001:

Dec. 14, 1968 373,000 unemployed
Dec. 13, 1969 383,000 unemployed
Dec. 12, 1970 538,000 unemployed
Dec. 1971 530,000 unemployed
Jan. 1972 665,000 unemployed

This represents an increase of 292,000 from December 1968 to January 1972.

This means, Mr. Speaker, that in January, 7.7 per cent of the Canadian labour force was unemployed, compared with 3.9 per cent in 1965. There is the setback that we owe to the Liberal government of the three doves launched into the electoral sky in 1965.

Today, during the oral questions period, we have seen that this government is still taking shelter behind the officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and saying that it is the unemployed, the claimants who are at fault.

Well, Mr. Speaker, over the holiday season, I myself have been flooded with calls and visits from claimants who were deprived of unemployment insurance benefits that they were entitled to because of a lack of understanding from officials of the Commission, mainly those who work at the central office in Montreal, behind an "electronic brain". Well, Mr. Speaker, these people were deprived of a right they had under an act of Parliament, through a misinterpretation by civil servants.

• (1550)

We could have expected, Mr. Speaker, that unemployment being so high, so many industries being closed or operating well under their capacity, prices would tend to drop. On the contrary, since the present government came to power in 1968, consumer prices have kept soaring. I have some statistics here dated February 17, 1972, that indicate the rate of price increases for December 1971 to January 1972, in the fields of good, housing, clothing, transportation, personal and health care, leisure and reading, drinking and smoking. For the city of St. John's Newfoundland, the price index between December 1971 and January 1972 jumped from 125.0 to 126.1, on the basis of 1961 equals 100. For the city of Halifax, this figure was approximately on the same level; for Saint John, New Brunswick, it rose from 126.9 to 127.4; for Montreal, 128.9 to 129.6; for Ottawa, 133.0 to 133.6; for Toronto, 131.6 to 132; for Winnipeg, 131.1 to 131.4; for Saskatoon and Regina, 125.6 to 126.3; for Edmonton and Calgary, 130.3 to 130.8; for Vancouver, 129.4 to 130.

Mr. Speaker, this shows that the cost of living for one month only continued increasing from December to January as it had during the preceding months.

According to these statistics, the consumer price index in Canada reached 136.7. In December 1969, it was 127.9; in December 1970, it was 129.8; in December 1971, it was 136.3 and today, it has reached 136.7, or an increase of 6.9 per cent over the last 13 months. This is how the federal government has failed in its fight against inflation. Prices are spiralling; families are ever more unable to provide for themselves and have to run into heavy debts, as does the government, by the way.

Here are a few eloquent figures regarding the indebtedness of Canadians to loan and finance companies. These figures are quoted from Catalog 61-004 of February 1972 and show the trend in the debt of Canadians since 1961. On December 31, 1961, this debt was $4.314 billion in 1962, $4.769 billion and in 1963, $5.351 billion. That was when the Liberals took power.

In 1964 that debt amounted to $6.143 billion; in 1965 to $7.4 billion; in 1966 to $7.648 billion; in 1967 to $8.474 billion; in 1968 to $9.704 billion; in 1969 to $10.969 billion; in 1970 to $11.525 billion.

Since 1961 the amount of money owed by Canadians to loan companies, finance companies and stores had nearly trebled. Since 1963—the year during which the liberals came to power—the indebtedness of Canadian consumers has doubled, whereas it has increased by about 20 per cent since 1968, the year during which this Prime Minister came into office. The indebtedness of Canadian consumers is increasing at the same rate as unemployment and the cost of living. While consumers get into debt, the federal government follows suit and gets into debt in a dangerous way in spite of heavy and ever-increasing taxes and higher tax revenues.

As stated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in his budget speech for 1971-1972, our country's indebtedness has increased by 784,800,000 in 1968 and by 576,100,000 in 1969. It did decrease by 392,600,000 in 1970, but increased again by 417,600,000 in 1971. At present it amounts to $25.201 billion.

As shown in Table 1, Section 6.4 of the Public Accounts for 1970-1971, the not outstanding public debt, which amounted to $10,940,200,000 in 1970, reached $25,201,200,000 in 1971. It is also interesting to see that this government is spending more and more money which it draws from the taxpayers, while at the same time maintaining high level of unemployment, allowing prices to rise constantly, and increasing our national debt.

In 1970, the government has in various ways collected $12.324 from the taxpayers, while in 1971, the budgetary operation, as the then Minister of Finance liked to call this highway robbery of the taxpayer, exceeded $12.769 billion, leaving a deficit which will only be known at the tabling of the new accounts—probably after the next election—so as to avoid scaring taxpayers away.

Yesterday, the opening of the session was not covered by the CBC technicians, while CTV workers refused to cross their fellow NABET workers' picket lines. Whatever causes for the dispute festering at the CBC, there is evidence of dissatisfaction, suspicion and antisocial feelings. One only has to see the federal electronic technicians whose functions are designated, meaning they do not have the right to strike, in the process of paralyzing air traffic in the country, and by the same token, endangering not only our economy but also human lives, and also, turning to other sectors of the public service, for example, guards and teachers in Quebec threatening to strike, the question must be asked if the right to strike granted to employees of the civil service, specially in sectors as vital as police, airports and communications, should not be reviewed for the public good. At least this is what Father Emile Bouvier thinks. This is how he was winding his remarks in a T.V. broadcast from Sherbrooke—as reproduced in La Presse on February 15 last—and I quote:

However, the unexpected choice made by the union in resorting to compulsory arbitration brings us back to the settlement of disputes in the public services brought about by the 1944 legislation. It brings us back to the solution of British Columbia with its bill 33 in 1968 and to that of compulsory arbitration in Australia. Even if the right to strike is granted, labour disputes must be settled either by enforceable arbitrator's ruling or by legislation similar to Bill 1 or 25. The first solution is perhaps the safest and the least expensive. Maybe we should return to more realistic legislation which, in essential public services, would require compulsory arbitration with enforceable ruling.

The Throne Speech hardly refers to international trade problems and makes no mention whatever of the consequences for Canada of Great Britain's entry in the Common Market and of the American policy aimed at restoring a favourable trade balance. The government should have informed the population of its intention, on what it will do to correct the situation so that thousands of Canadian workers will not become unemployed on account of the restrictive policy of the United States.

[Mr. Laprise.]

With regard to newspapers, the Canadian government is cornered, caught in the trap and this during an election year because, as it happens, the American government has to face its electors and it intends to show a rosier picture even at the expense of Canada. If the U.S.-Canada trade crisis is taking a difficult turn, as headlined Dimanche-Matin last February 13, it is no doubt necessary to keep cool but this is not sufficient, with all due deference to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) who is now in the process of losing his eternal smile. But is the government not to blame for this trade crisis?

As early as May 3 last, after resigning from the Trudeau cabinet, the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) stated the following as reported by Le Devoir, and I quote:

Mr. Eric Kierans confirmed the fact that it was really because of his complete disagreement with the economic and fiscal policy of the Trudeau government that he resigned as Minister of Communications.

These policies that he spurns, Mr. Kierans qualifies them as outdated since they consist, he said, in blindly promoting foreign investment to the detriment of the available labour. He added that we must stop believing that it is essential for Canada to sell its natural resources.

Among other things, he said he found it deplorable that Canadian missions should be sent throughout the world to sell our natural resources—

He could have said: to give them away.

—and that Canadians were the worst negotiators with Washington while being at the same time the most naive.

It is false to believe that more exports mean more economic pump priming. It all depends on what we export. It is also false to believe, he said, that efficiency and productivity depend solely on investments.

Where is the solution? There again, the hon. member for Duvernay, since he resigned from the Liberal cabinet, has been expressing ideas that are quite acceptable to the Creditistes.

Commenting on the statement made by the hon. member for Duvernay, Mr. François Gauthier, an economist and professor at Laval University, wrote in the Montreal magazine Les Affaires that the government is indeed wrong in wanting to restart the economy through investments rather than by meeting the demand first.

Here is what this economist, Mr. Gauthier said:

Mr. Kierans stresses the fact that federal policies "are forcing investment rather than demand to lead the economy". He adds and rightly so: "If I were in business, my first task would be to find out what demand there is and to provide for investments, and this not because someone would be enticing me with tax concessions".

If one considers the whole of the Canadian economy, this reasoning is right even though it runs against what most economists are thinking. Indeed, when the level of demand is such that it produces a major underutilization of machinery and plants, it goes without saying that any economic recovery must proceed from an increase in consumer expenditures. When machines are idle, the natural incitation to invest is weak or absent. Any additional investment may moreover show itself to be non-profitable when demand is insufficient.

At the present time it looks as if an increase in investments (the plough) should succeed in inflating demand and decreasing unemployment. And yet one does not need to acquire an honorary PhD to realize that such a strategy is wrong, because it only benefits certain industries which employ little manpower and because it can only in fact maintain stagnation and unemployment.

A resumption of the consumers' actual expenses would be the best thing to ensure a general increase in investments whenever the level of usefulness of existing capacity require it.

Although one may not agree entirely with Mr. Kierans, one could not but admire his attitude when he says in such a delightful way: "No, Ottawa does not see at all what should be the best thing to do."

We should also, Mr. Speaker, promote the economical development, create new industries, so as to meet fully the requirements of the Canadian consumers and provide work for those who are able and anxious to work.

Was it the government's final word in putting forward those projects that come under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion or the State Department to help our young people?

Is it with such an over-simple method consisting in providing grants to friends, outrageously rich industries, firms paying high dividends every year, that the government think they will solve the industrialization problem in Canada?

Mr. W. H. Pope, an economist at the Ryerson Polytechnical Institute in Toronto, does not agree with that suggestion and he recommends low-interest loans to Canadian firms. In the February 10, 1971, copy of Le Droit, we could read the following:

According to Mr. W. H. Pope, professor of economics at Toronto's Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, the federal government should grant Canadian firms low-interest loans to stimulate the country's economic growth.

Such loans, bearing a 2 or 3 p. cent interest, would enable Canadian corporations to operate with a smaller profit margin.

American firms operating in Canada would not be eligible for such loans and with a decrease in their profits, the incentives for foreign investments would disappear.

"Such a large decrease in the profits of American subsidiaries should considerably help in reducing the current drain of $1 billion from Canada in interests and dividends". Mr. Pope writes in his book entitled "The Elephant and the Mouse".

Mr. Speaker, such remarks almost meet Social Credit proposals according to which any new production should be financed with new funds. Here are the Social Credit proposals:

Purchasing means available to the people of this country should always be jointly equal to the joint prices of consumer goods offered for sale in the country, and such purchasing means should be cancelled on the purchase of consumer goods.

The sums necessary for financing production should derive not from the profits which are reinvested, nor from personal savings, but should be new credits having been created in view of some new production. They should be recalled only according to the ratio of general depreciation to general appreciation.

Now I still have to briefly explain the mechanisms which will permit the financing of the new production. They say over and over again that Social Credit wants to destroy the present banking system. Nothing could be further from the truth. On the contrary, under a Social Credit government, the banking system would be called upon to play a part even greater than, its present one, though different.

Let us imagine that an industrialist, considering the actual demand, determines to produce 100,000 shirts to be sold for $5 each. He does not have the necessary funds to hire workers, pay salaries and purchase the raw materials. He simply will go to any bank, explain his needs, his expansion projects, the actual demand for shirts priced at $5, the possibility of making a reasonable profit and of reimbursing the loan received, while allowing the bank itself to make some profit.

• (1610)

The bank will analyze the pros and cons and will grant the required loan of $400,000. Where will that money come from? It will not come from the bank vaults or from the savings it holds in trust. The bank will obtain the credit free from the Bank of Canada, credit which it will have to refund on the due date of the loan made to the shirt manufacturer. This is why the bank should take some precautions before granting a loan. It should check whether demand exists, analyze the competitive position of the borrower and his ability to pay back the loan when it falls due. But will the bank charge interest? As you like.

To administer the bank and to meet his customers' needs, the banker will have to rent office facilities, hire competent staff, and pay for salaries, wages and services. Those will be administration expenses. To remain in business he will also have to make a profit. That these administration expenses and this legitimate profit be called "interest" as they are now, I have no objection to that. But for sure this interest will not be as high as it is now since the bank will get its credit free from the Bank of Canada without having to pay interest as banks now do.

The implementation of this policy will have a number of results.

The first is that capital will no longer be in short supply. Any corporation willing to produce consumer goods for which demand exists or which are required by other corporations for processing into consumer goods, will no longer have to resort to ruinous loans and will no longer be obliged to increase its prices outrageously to meet its expenses and make a legitimate profit. It will not have to rely anymore on foreign capital because if foreign investors find it economical to finance a Canadian concern, it would certainly be the case for any Canadian bank and the Bank of Canada.

A second result would be to eliminate foreign control. The above remarks easely prove that if we eliminate the need for foreign capital to finance our production, then our means of production and our natural resources will remain in Canadian hands. We would then be in the position to repossess in a short period of time our Canadian wealth presently controlled by foreigners.

A third result, though not the least, would be to provide the consumers with an ideal purchasing power.

Nowadays, Mr. Speaker, strikes are called in almost every sector and every industry. All sorts of demonstrations for salary increases are taking place.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that workers need not salary increases but rather an increased purchasing power.

There is evidence, since strikes have been carried out, that the workers are no better off today than they were before. Their purchasing power has simply not increased, it has rather decreased.

At the present time, because of the financing of production through savings and profits, and for other less important reasons, there is inequality between the sum total of prices relating to production and that of the purchasing power generated by that production. In order to catch up with prices and in exchange for their participation in production, the consumers demand wage or salary increases which in turn are reflected in the ever increasing prices. It is the vicious circle of inflation.

To bring back stability between total production prices and the existing purchasing power the Social Credit Party offers a simple solution. It consists in giving the consumer a discount equal to the difference between the total prices and the existing purchasing power.

Let us say that a product is valued at $1,000 and a total of $800 has been paid in direct purchasing power, whether for purchasing raw materials or paying wages and salaries to employees. The consumers would then be eligible for a discount of 20 per cent which would allow them to purchase all available products. At the end of each month the retailer would bring to his bank vouchers for the discount granted, $200, and the bank would credit $200 to the retailer's account. The bank would then call upon the Bank of Canada which would reimburse the amount credited to the retailer.

The Creditists can therefore rightly suggest that the implementation of the policy would give all Canadians a perfect purchasing power, that is to say neither too high nor too low but just right to insure perfect stability with total prices.

Those are the main policies we offer this country and they are the true solutions to our present major problems.

Mr. Speaker, I noticed in the Throne Speech ending the last session as well as in the Throne Speech opening this session the same pattern of language.

The right hon. Prime Minister spoke today of the crisis of October 1970. That crisis, Mr. Speaker, was not spontaneous but it was premeditated and made possible because of bad administration and an inadequate economic system which made individuals and Canadian workers feel that they were being ignored by their leaders and only had laws they did not want. Those they want the government refuses to pass.

So leaders, individuals took the lead of groups of dissatisfied people and lead them to protest and violence.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the present situation is allowed to go on we can probably expect those acts of violence to be repeated. The economic situation which now exists must obviously be changed. We must undertake a complete reform of our economy. This is why our very first political step must be to give each and every individual a tangible interest to defend, a concrete substantial reality for which he will then, and only then, be prepared to fight and to make the sacrifices which he feels are necessary.

That tangible interest is not any obscure collective ownership of the means of production and of property, which in the past 30 years has done nothing for the Soviet masses, who also go on labouring hopelessly, day after day, on the threshold of poverty. This is all balderdash.

It is not a so-called "subsistence" minimum. It is not "collective agreement". It is not any vague "capital-labour association". It is not "pools" of any kind. Those things are all meaningless illusions within our present economic system, and they do nothing to correct the basic flaw of the economy, which is still considered, implicitly, as good and valid.

The interest of each individual, and the only true one, is to be able to benefit right now from a fair share of the present resources of the nation. It is, as was clearly stated in a famous encyclical letter, a certain degree of affluence and culture, not only for a few but for all workers, resulting from a fair distribution, in an amount adequate to meet the needs of decent subsistence, of all the goods which natural and industrial resources as well as a really social organization of economic life can supply for each and every member of the economic and social organization.

When each individual has this tangible thing to defend which will make real his personal interest in the society in which he lives, which will be his own indisputable uncontested share in the advantages of human association, when economic advantages become a fact and a daily reality, then, and only then, will the individual have an interest in supporting his government and abiding by its laws—and he will do so.

Today, more than ever before, any citizen has to question, demonstrate and resort to sit-ins in order to be listed to. And unfortunately the leaders in these disputes and demonstrations are not all Mahatma Gandhis or Martin Luther Kings, who could do so without resorting to violence.

There is nothing to show that violence will not endure so long as will prevail this atmosphere of uncertainty which may hit at any time any industry anywhere. Yesterday, workers in Témiscamingue-Sud thought that they had a secure job. Today, they are in the ditch, and the same is true for some nickel miners at Sudbury. There is less and less hopes for the automobile workers. We know the situation in which farmers find themselves. Whether big or small, nobody can hope to live without a subsidy from the state.

That is where the Liberal party has led us. That can no longer last. The Canadian people will see to it.

• (1620)

[English]

On motion of Mr. Deachman (Vancouver Quadra) the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Trudeau the House adjourned at 4.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 21, 1972

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

NATIONAL CAPITAL

ANNOUNCEMENT OF AGREEMENT FOR ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN LANDS OF E. B. EDDY COMPANY

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an important announcement that will be of interest to all members of this House, to residents of the National Capital Region and to visitors to this capital. For many years there have been recurring appeals to successive governments, from all sides of the House, to do something about the Eddy pulp and paper mill across the Ottawa River. These appeals have been based partly on a common desire to reduce air and water pollution and to develop a more scenic central area. They stem also from the fact that this industrial complex, which lies so close to Parliament Hill, constitutes a critical barrier between the cities of Ottawa and Hull.

I am glad, Mr. Speaker, to announce an agreement with the E. B. Eddy Company that will provide for the transfer of a substantial amount of Eddy land in Quebec to the National Capital Commission, and will involve the removal of some of the more unsightly parts of the Eddy complex, and the elimination of most of the pollution emanating from it. All of this will be accomplished within a framework of a commitment by the company that no one will be laid off as a consequence of the transaction.

The essential elements of the agreement are that the company will transfer roughly 44 acres of land to the National Capital Commission, including most of the waterfront land on the north bank of the river across from Parliament Hill, and close down the Eddy sulphite and groundwood mills and newsprint machine, which will take place over the next few weeks.

Approximately 450 of the company's 2,500 employees will be affected by this closing. As an integral and essential part of the arrangements, the company has undertaken to continue to provide employment in the remaining part of their operations for all displaced employees. For employees who because of age, physical handicap or other reasons decide against accepting other work with the company, generous early retirement and severance pay arrangements are being provided in the agreement. All these arrangements respecting the employees have been worked out in close consultation between the company, its unions, and the National Capital Commission. They have been endorsed by the unions involved, the International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers, the United Papermakers and Paperworkers, and the International Association of Machinists.

In exchange for the transfer of land, and the commitments by the company, National Capital Commission will pay the company $29,500,000.

The Eddy Company estimates that the closing of the pulp and newsprint operations will reduce the water pollution from the plant by close to 90 per cent and the air pollution by 100 per cent. Furthermore, the company's decision to buy its pulp rather than to make it is expected to lead to the ending of the log drive on the Ottawa River between Arnprior and the mouth of the Gatineau River, removing an additional source of pollution in the river.

The transaction being completed today is really the first stage of a ten-year plan to move the whole Eddy complex from its present riverbank location to a new site in the environs of Hull. The company has declared to us its firm intention to undertake such relocation, and it is now actively seeking land on which to construct new facilities. This will make possible the carrying out of future moves in such a manner as to minimize the impact on employment and on business operations. Important elements of the agreement are that the government is given the right of first refusal on all the remaining Eddy property, including the island between Hull and Ottawa, and that no expansion on the present site will be undertaken. The company has committed itself to work with the government to ensure that future phases of the move are carried out in the same manner and with the same co-operative spirit that has made the present agreement possible.

• (1110)

In recent years it has become increasingly clear that the Eddy complex is a serious obstacle to the planning of the national capital, walling off physically and visually the new government buildings now being constructed and proposed for Hull. This property, along with other nearby lands such as LeBreton Flats, are essential elements in the development of a national capital core area which links language groups, cultures, provinces and sister cities. The buildings, homes, parks, recreational facilities and other amenities that will occupy these lands on both sides of the river will greatly improve the appearance, the planning, the functioning and the economic base of the national capital region.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to pay tribute to my two predecessors who have worked on these arrangements, the present Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) and the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andras), and to express a particular word of appreciation to Mr. Fullerton, Chairman of the National Capital Commission, and his staff.

I am also very grateful to the leaders of the Eddy unions who have played such an important part in the achievement of an agreement that meets our objectives. Throughout the discussions and negotiations one point was made clear by the government again and again, that no transaction with Eddys would be countenanced which would result in the lay-off of employees. I am particularly happy to say that in this agreement we have fully met this commitment and I pay tribute and give thanks to the officers of the company and the unions.

These arrangements will allow us to continue to work out together an industrial relocation that is essential to the building of a capital of which all Canadians can be proud.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, we have learned with a great deal of pleasure the news that some changes are to be made at the Eddy plant across the river from Parliament Hill. While great piles of logs and sulphur may have been signs of progress 75 and even 50 years ago, they have more recently become an eyesore to people on Parliament Hill and many others. Furthermore, during recent years the amount of pollutants which has been dumped into the river has been in inverseratio to the damage done. In other words, the increasing development of the Ottawa River Valley has added to the pollution problem. Even though from time to time there have been cutbacks in the effluent from the Eddy plant, a smaller amount of effluent does more damage now than was once the case. It is therefore good news that the more unsightly parts of the plant will be removed and that most of the pollutants will be eliminated. We look forward to completion of the ten-year plan announced in the statement just read under which the area across from Parliament Hill will become well-landscaped parkland.

We must accept the statement made today that proper and acceptable arrangements have been made for employees. We hope that no problems will develop in this regard. There will undoubtedly be relocation problems for a number of persons. The statement mentioned early retirement for those who are shortly to retire. I trust that these arrangements will be carried out in the spirit indicated in the statement.

We should not be complacent and think that this action will clean up the Ottawa River. It will help, but there is still a mighty task to be undertaken not only because of the many years of effluent discharge from the operation of the Eddy plant and other damage to the river bed but also because of the many years of logging and the many other sources of pollution that have arisen.

I conclude by urging the government to press ahead with joint federal-provincial efforts to clean up the whole Ottawa River Valley. This subject has been raised many times in the House, as well as the situation with regard to the Eddy plant. Nevertheless I do not want to take away from the fact that this move is very satisfying and must be for all members on the Hill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues and myself I am pleased to congratulate the minister, the unions, the company and the National Capital Commission on this agreement. One of my colleagues says that he hopes all this means that the White Swan sign will come down. Another suggests it be retained because it is so colourful. I must say that when I read this announcement by the minister and looked at the amount of money E. B. Eddy would get I recalled a saying which was used at the time of the late and great R. B. Bennett in connection with E. B. Eddy: There is a tide in the time of men which, taken at the "Eddy", leads on to fortune.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: My first point is that the minister should have informed us on what basis the $29,500,000 is to be paid to Eddy. It is my understanding that several years ago discussions took place on this subject and Eddy was to get $30 million for the entire property. We are now paying almost $30 million for a little more than half of that property. I think the country is entitled to know whether there are arrangements for other parts of the Eddy property which the government might take over later, what is likely to be the final cost of this important and great improvement, and whether or not the company is getting a little more than it ought to, after the years in which it has exploited the resources and polluted the air and water around Canada's capital. I hope the minister will give us further information on that score.

I also hope the undertaking not to lay off employees will be carefully watched to see that it is observed. It is my understanding that there was a meeting this morning between the union leaders and the National Capital Commission. I am glad to note the minister's determination that the undertaking shall be observed, and I hope it will be. We are now rid of the pollution outside parliament. Perhaps we should go some steps further and rid ourselves of any that there might be inside.

* * *

[Translation]

JUSTICE ADMINISTRATION

STATEMENT BY SOLICITOR GENERAL ON RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM PENITENTIARY

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, although considerable public interest has been shown in the escape from custody of Yves Geoffroy during a leave of absence from December 24 to December 26, 1971, this is the first opportunity to inform the hon. members of the circumstances leading to the granting of the leave of absence to this particular inmate for the purpose of marriage.

The temporary absence program has been in operation in Canadian penitentiaries for the last 4 years even though provision had been in the Penitentiary Act since 1961. It is an earned privilege which is granted by the Commissioner of Penitentiaries for periods exceeding three days and by the director of an institution for periods of three days or less.

There is little data to carry out a full evaluation of the temporary leave program over a long term. It will be some years before it will be possible to make any conclusions about its real effect on recidivism. Recent statistics encourage optimism about the program. Between September and December 1971, a total of 12,401 temporary absences were allowed. Out of this number of temporary absences there are only 90 reports of inmates failing to return. The number of crimes alleged to have been committed during these approximately 12,000 temporary absences is 15.

As a result of these statistics it might be said that the vast majority of inmates do not abuse the privilege and do behave responsibly, and that the procedures and decisions taken by officials of the Canadian Penitentiary Service are correct in over 99 per cent of cases.

The escape of Yves Geoffroy is one of the few failures of temporary absences from the penitentiaries. Its statistical significance has been overlooked in the attention it has received.

Let us however, review all the facts related to this incident.

According to the Commissioner's directives, after receipt of (a) a full report from the Institute Chaplain; (b) a report from the Institute Classification Officer; and (c) a report from a social agency; a special permission from the Commissioner or his delegate, the Chief of Chaplaincy Services of the Canadian Penitentiary Service, may be given for an inmate to marry.

On June 28, 1971 Mr. Geoffroy sought permission to marry Miss Carmen Parent with whom Mr. Geoffroy apparently had had a continuing liaison. The reason he cited to support his request was that marriage would provide a mother who would look after the needs of his three children, 3, 6 and 8 years of age. Regarding his children Mr. Geoffroy wrote:

"At present they are being looked after by my family. However, no one is legally authorized to look out for their education or to request social assistance on their behalf."

Following the receipt of Mr. Geoffroy's letter, Rev. J. A. Nickels, Chief of Chaplaincy Services of the Canadian Penitentiary Service, Ottawa wrote to the director of St. Vincent de Paul, attaching a copy of Mr. Geoffroy's letter and asking that the "institutional and community reports" required by the relevant Commissioner's directive be prepared and forwarded.

The report of the social worker was addressed to the Commissioner of Penitentiaries on August 19, 1971 and received by the director of the St. Vincent de Paul Institution. This report was prepared by Miss Micheline Cornellier of the Société d'Orientation et de Réhabilitation Sociale, and was approved by Miss Cornellier's supervisor. Her report states that she found Miss Parent fully aware of the consequences of marriage with Geoffroy, including the possibility that he could lose his appeal and might not be granted parole on his first eligibility date.

The report notes also another aspect that heavily influenced the wish of Mr. Geoffroy and Miss Parent to marry, despite the fact that Mr. Geoffroy was serving a life sentence in penitentiary. This aspect was the Geoffroy children, being cared for by two of Mr. Geoffroy's brothers.

Miss Cornellier wrote that both brothers, and I quote:

"suffer from fairly serious cardiac pathology and therefore in the event of death, the children would be destitute. In this event, Miss Parent could support and take responsibility for the children, the marriage giving her the right to be their guardian."

Miss Parent also accepted the duty of reuniting the children with their father when he was released from penitentiary, Miss Cornellier stated, and appeared to have the characteristics that would make her a satisfactory mother and supervisor of the children's upbringing.

Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House, I could table the remainder of the statement to be recorded in the proceedings of the House of Commons—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister is suggesting a rather unusual way of proceeding. He suggests that he will not finish his statement but will table the last part of it so that it be recorded in the proceedings of the House. This would indeed require the consent of the House and this agreement does not seem to exist. In these circumstances, the minister would perhaps finish reading his statement.

• (1120)

Mr. Goyer: Miss Cornellier's recommendation of the marriage between Mr. Geoffroy and Miss Parent was supported by Mr. Marc Gosselin, Classification officer at St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, in an August report, the factor of Mr. Geoffroy's children being the strong argument in support of the marriage and citing the influence that a stepmother could have on the emotional development and the stability of the three children.

The third report supporting the proposal of marriage was made on October 7, 1971 by the penitentiary chaplain, Father L. Dupuis. Father Dupuis also stressed the importance of the marriage to the children and suggested, in the event a religious ceremony could not be performed, that the couple be married in a civil ceremony.

Notice, however, that the Chancellery of the Diocese of Montreal did approve of the marriage and the date and place of the ceremony was given by Abbé Dupuis on December 18, 1971.

Director of St. Vincent de Paul Gerald Brennan submitted the three reports with his recommendation for the marriage on October 20, 1971 and received a November 3 reply from Rev. J. A. Nickels, Chief of Chaplaincy Services, noting that:

"in view of the positive nature of the reports, approval is given for the marriage."

A copy of a letter dated November 24, 1971 from lawyer Raymond Denis—

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: A name of blessed memory.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: —to Henri Prévost, Protonotary of the Superior Court, St. Jérôme Courthouse, was sent to Mr. J. P. Lévesque, Visits and Correspondence officer at St. Vincent de Paul. The letter requested the Protonotary to give public notice in Montreal and St. Jérôme of Mr. Geoffroy's marriage on December 24. Public notice was given and the provincial authorities were made aware of the forthcoming marriage.

I would like to point out that, in this case, Mr. Denis acted as Mr. Geoffroy's lawyer, and from all the information that I have available, Mr. Denis never visited Mr. Geoffroy in the penitentiary.

The marriage was performed at St. Vincent de Paul parish church on December 24, 1971 by Father Ninkeri in the presence of Mrs. Laurence Geoffroy Amyot, sister of, and witness for, Mr. Geoffroy, and Mr. Raymond Denis, who was witness for Miss Parent.

I should add here that on January 11, 1972 the Court of Appeals of Quebec rejected Geoffroy's appeal. Hence, the question of Mr. Geoffroy's wife's inability to testify against him is unlikely to arise in the case for which Mr. Geoffroy was in penitentiary and concerning which he had lodged an appeal.

As for the question of temporary leave, according to the Commissioner's directives and to Section 26 of the Penitentiary Act, an act approved by Parliament, a temporary leave of three days or less is granted by the Director of the Institution after the request has been studied by the Inmate Classification Board of the Institution, following a recommendation by the inmate's classification officer.

On November 10, 1971 a recommendation that a temporary leave for marriage absence of three days be granted to Mr. Geoffroy was presented to the Inmate Classification Board of St. Vincent de Paul Institution, a board made up of 16 members. Eleven members studied this particular case and the unanimous decision of the board was that Mr. Geoffroy should be granted 50 hours leave to begin at 8 a.m. December 24 and to end at 10 a.m. December 26. This decision was finally approved by the director of the institution.

Mr. Geoffroy did not return to the penitentiary following the expiry of his leave period and was declared illegally at large on December 27, 1971.

The Quebec Provincial Police, the RCMP and international police forces were alerted and police investigations are underway.

A review of the known facts relating to the permission of marriage and the leave of absence granted to Mr. Geoffroy does not indicate that any employee of the Canadian Penitentiary Service violated the authority delegated to him by the Commissioner. There is no evidence of any wrongdoings by anyone to influence an employee of the Canadian Penitentiary Service in the decision to permit Mr. Geoffroy to marry Miss Parent or to give him leave of absence. I myself, or members of my staff or the Commissioner of Penitentiaries were never personally involved in this matter either directly or indirectly—

[English]

Mr. Hees: They were all just good friends.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: —and, contrary to reports appearing in the press, Mr. Geoffroy was never a friend, a classmate nor an acquaintance of mine.

It is regrettable that undue credence was placed on the statement that the two brothers of Mr. Geoffroy were in ill-health and that their conditions created an insecure future for the Geoffroy children. These reports were accepted in good faith by the authorities; unfortunately however, later inquiry revealed that this part of the social agency's report was based on hearsay.

In the light of the circumstances, it is clear that a more thorough and careful investigation ought to have been carried out.

I reviewed with the Commissioner and officials of the Penitentiary Service all the relevant information and on January 10, 1972 invited the media to my office to make a public statement and to answer questions.

In that statement, I said:

> I have instructed my officials to refine the screening process for certain types of cases such as those serving life sentences and other inmates who may warrant special review. Furthermore, as to permission to marry, the procedures will be amended to include legal consideration along with the social, moral, and religious aspects of the question.

As a result, on January 28, 1972 Mr. Paul Faguy, Commissioner of Penitentiaries, announced changes in the guidelines pertaining to temporary leave of absence and permission to marry. The changes are as follows:

1. Temporary Leave without escort will not be considered until at least six months of sentence have been served.

2. Temporary Leave without escort will not be considered for those serving life sentences, habitual criminals, dangerous sexual offenders, and persons known by police to be connected with organized crime until three years of sentence have been served.

3. No persons convicted as dangerous sexual offenders will be granted leave of absence until psychiatric consultation has taken place and special clearance given.

4. The Regional Director must approve the first two leaves of absence granted to inmates in the four categories.

5. Recommendation for the granting of temporary absence will have to state clearly the reasons for the recommendation and must be supported by fully documented community investigation reports prepared by either a private social agency or the National Parole Service.

6. When any inmate presents a request for permission to marry, advice on legal implications of the marriage must be sought in advance from the provincial Attorney General.

However spectacular this single case may be viewed, it must be judged in perspective against the total leave program. A success rate of 99 percent should encourage the continuation of a program which is contributing to returning criminal offenders to society as better adjusted and more useful citizens.

I wish to conclude by giving hon. members the following assurances:

1. The leave and the permission to marry were approved under the authority provided by the Canadian Penitentiary Act and the procedures and delegation of authority were in accord with established instructions.

We all realize that the decision was an error, but so far as can be ascertained, it was made bona fide.

2. It has been suggested that there may have been some direct or indirect influence exerted on or through the Solicitor General on behalf of Mr. Geoffroy to grant him permission for special leave or an authorisation to marry. This suggestion or innuendo I reject categorically.

3. I am informed by the Commissioner of the R.C.M.P. that all appropriate action has been undertaken by the police authorities to investigate all possible criminal offences arising out of this matter and every effort is being made by police agencies on an international scale to apprehend the fugitive.

4. Penitentiary procedures regarding temporary leave have been modified, as I have described, for certain classes of inmates in the penitentiaries and, as well, no further marriages by inmates will be considered until the legal effects of the marriages are taken into account and there has been consultation with the provincial Attorneys-General.

5. As a result of the amended procedures, the temporary absence program, which plays an important part in the rehabilitation of inmates will continue to develop but additional safeguards will help to better protect society.

6. Since it appears that there were no irregularities or illegalities committed by members of my Department, the Government sees no reason why a special inquiry should be undertaken in the Geoffroy case. However, if specific allegations of irregularities or illegalities can be substantiated, I can give the House the assurance that the Government will take immediate action.

7. The principle of temporary absence approved by Parliament does imply some risks and some errors. In spite of some concern over the Geoffroy case, I have nevertheless received letters from the Elizabeth Fry Society, the John Howard Society, the St. Leonard's Society, the Law Students of the University of British Columbia, the Canadian Criminology and Corrections Association and the Junior League of Toronto giving their full support to the program, and it is my hope that the public in general will continue to cooperate with us.

• (1130)

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, on Friday I sought the approval of the House under Standing Order 43 for the setting up of an inquiry under the Inquiries Act. After listening to the lengthy and verbose nonsense which we heard from the minister today I am convinced that there must be a judicial inquiry into this matter; it is absolutely necessary. If the situation was not so tragic it would be a comedy. I want to read from one part of the minister's very lengthy statement:

> On June 28, 1971 Mr. Geoffroy sought permission to marry Miss Carmen Parent with whom Mr. Geoffroy apparently had had a continuing liaison.

What utter nonsense! What are the real facts? Let us strip the matter down to the bare facts.

An hon. Member: You would have to close your eyes.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, you would have to close your eyes not to see them. Geoffroy was convicted of murder and sentenced to life imprisonment in St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary on the grounds that he had murdered his wife while this liaison was going on. Those are the facts. Then he was released for two or three days. Let me say at the outset that under the law the minister must take the responsibility. Either he had knowledge of this matter or he did not, and if he did not have knowledge his mismanagement is so grave that he should resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Geoffroy was released for two or three days under section 26 of the Penitentiary Act, it is alleged, which reads as follows:

> Where, in the opinion of the Commissioner or the officer in charge of a penitentiary, it is necessary or desirable that an inmate should be absent . . . for an unlimited period for medical reasons . . . for humanitarian reasons—

There were certainly no medical reasons. What were the humanitarian reasons? Here is a man charged with the murder of his wife. After due process of law he is convicted by a judge and jury and sentenced to life imprisonment for the murder of his wife. Then he is permitted by the minister to be released to marry a woman with whom he had a long liaison. If that is the kind of humanitarianism for which the minister stands, I think it would even shock the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: That is the just society.

Mr. Woolliams: I want to refer now to section 684(3) of the Criminal Code which in part says:

> No person sentenced to life imprisonment shall be released during the life of such term—
>
> Particularly on a charge of murder.
>
> —without the approval of the Governor in Council.

• (1140)

Release means release. This man was released on the grounds of humanity, that the children had to be taken care of, to marry the woman with whom he had a liaison while he was living with another woman. Release means release. I want to be fair in dealing with this matter. There is a marginal note that talks about release and it might mean temporary release, but if you go to the Interpretation Act you will see it substantiates that release means release as used in section 684(3) of the Criminal Code.

When the Right Honourable Lester Pearson was Prime Minister he made a statement at the time of the abolition of capital punishment in which he said that when people are found guilty of this kind of crime and are given life imprisonment they would have to have the approval of cabinet before they would be released.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: That statement can be checked. While the fairy story that the minister read today might be sold to True Story magazine, there is no way he can get around the fact that this man was wrongfully released.

Therefore I say that the Governor in Council—the cabinet—is responsible for the release of Geoffroy, responsible for having given prior approval to his temporary release, responsible to the public and to Parliament for the violation of section 684(3) of the Criminal Code. I say that by corruption or incredible incompetence he was allowed to escape.

The minister's advisers may endeavour to argue, as I have already said, that the marginal note to section 684(3) of the Criminal Code does not mean permanent release but any kind of release. Check section 13 of the Interpretation Act, chapter I-23 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

The plain grammatical meaning of the subsection is that no person, whether his sentence has been commuted from death to life imprisonment or to a term of years or whether his sentence was life imprisonment in the first instance, shall be released from prison permanently or temporarily, under any law or by any authority, without the prior approval of the cabinet. The minister must have given that approval.

How silent he is on this point in this document. Nowhere does he say that he did not have prior knowledge. Why is he silent on this question? I should like to see the minister give evidence before a judicial inquiry. I should like to see men at the bar cross-examine this minister on his credibility in this matter. I should like to see him stand before an inquiry and hear its official report because his statement today will not stand up.

The minister said there was a lack of concrete evidence to justify an inquiry. I recall an incident in this House, in which the same man, Raymond Denis, was involved. At that time the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) made a certain statement in the House and the former minister of justice, the late Mr. Guy Favreau, said it was untrue that Denis had offered a bribe. When the inquiry took place and these people were examined under oath the judge found as a fact that a bribe had been offered and that there was wrongdoing. As a result of that inquiry Denis was charged and by due process of law was convicted. That is what I want to see happen here. Something is wrong—something is wrong. One has to think this way about the Geoffroy case.

I think the minister must be writing a new book, "A Lifer's Honeymoon" or "How to Murder Your Wife and Marry Your Mistress". Why wither in jail when you can go the Goyer way and inherit the murdered wife's children and be released from a dull life sentence?

Where is Geoffroy? Why was no reward offered for his capture? No steps have been taken. Naturally the RCMP cannot tell what they know unless they are brought before an inquiry. Does Raymond Denis know where Geoffroy is? I was surprised to see that he is still a member of the bar. He was the best man behind the scene. He said he never met Geoffroy in jail. Was that the reason he was released? Maybe they are meeting outside the jail.

We want to know the facts. This case smacks of absolute corruption and the worst kind of mismanagement. There is only one solution. I could read and read from this statement. The worst feature of it is that the minister is trying to destroy a deserving program, the temporary absence program, and wrap it up in this kind of alibi. As far as I am concerned the man who is destroying this kind of humanitarian program is the minister and he must take full responsibility.

I ask now that a judicial inquiry be set up because this case is so flagrant and if it were not so tragic it would be humorous.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the minister's statement was very lengthy and at times almost comical. However, one thing that it reveals as being absolutely crystal clear is that there has been negligence and gullibility on the part of the penitentiary service. The minister said in his own statement:

> In the light of the circumstances, it is clear that a more thorough and careful investigation ought to have been carried out.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

It is early in the week, Mr. Speaker, but I venture to prophesy that this is the understatement of the week.

An hon. Member: Of the year.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly clear that a concocted, hearsay story was accepted, the word of a convicted murderer who had prominent in his mind the purpose of escaping and fleeing along with his paramour. With all this before the officials this man was allowed out supposedly in order to enable him to marry. Surely if marriage was in mind there would be nothing to stop it within the penitentiary itself without sending him on a trip to Mexico or wherever he is. The minister has given us a great amount of detail but he has not given us any information as to the present whereabouts of this man. Countless misleading statements have been issued from time to time.

One thing I regret more than anything else is that this gross negligence endangers the operation of the temporary absence program under the Penitentiary Act. The minister's figures reveal that it has been a beneficial and useful program but its usefulness is clearly endangered by what has been allowed to happen in this case.

I am never happy when malfeasance is alleged in a department and the only investigation made is an internal one within the department itself. Investigations of that sort usually turn out to be a whitewash. If there is not to be a judicial inquiry, we have in this House of Commons a committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which has shown a sense of responsibility and non-partisanship and I suggest that this committee should hear firsthand, sworn evidence of what took place in this affair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: If nothing else, this might save a valuable program which has been helpful in so many cases.

* * *

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask unanimous consent of the House to move the following motion, a motion which, on the face of it, I feel should be accepted by all hon. members.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

> That in view of fresh reports made public over the weekend of political pressure in the Opportunities for Youth secretariat, problems related to the minimum wage with regard to high school students and others who might gain employment through the program and a serious problem related to morale within the operational secretariat,
>
> That this House do constitute a special committee on youth in order that these problems and any others might be examined and dealt with in such a way so as to achieve both justice and equity for Canadian young people with regard to the programs for summer 1972.

• (1150)

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Egmont under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

* * *

GRAIN

LACK OF WHEAT AT VANCOUVER TO LOAD SHIPS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The immediacy of the motion arises as a result of a finding by the Palliser group of Saskatchewan that 20 ships have been sitting idle in Vancouver harbour, that it would take approximately 20 million bushels of wheat to fill the ships in question and that this wheat is not at the terminals. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey):

That the question of the empty wheat terminals at Vancouver harbour be referred to both standing committees, namely, the Standing Committee on Agriculture and the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and that these said committees be immediately consummated and instructed to look into this mismanagement as alleged by the Palliser group and to travel to Vancouver if the committees so determine it necessary.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent the motion cannot be put.

PROVISION OF MORE STORAGE SPACE AT VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion of extreme importance, urgency and pressing necessity. Reports allegedly appearing in a United States grain publication and reported in Vancouver by the Palliser Wheat Growers Association indicate Canada has lost the sale of 150,000 tons of wheat to Japan because the Canadian Wheat Board could not ensure delivery through a west coast port. Because of the urgency of maintaining and increasing our reliability as a grain exporting nation I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight):

That the Minister of Justice, answerable for the Canadian Wheat Board, be called upon to make a statement on motions outlining what steps are being taken in providing additional grain storage space at the west coast to handle the delivery of grain for overseas shipment.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

* * *

FISHERIES

RONALD REPORT ON SEALING—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent importance for Canada as a whole, and especially for the fishermen of the Atlantic region. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) during the recess received the report on the sealing industry from Dr. Keith Ronald, the acceptance of which could spell the end of this vital part of our economy. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan):

That the sealing report be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry with a view to calling witnesses in order to properly present the real facts of this industry to the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the motion proposed by the hon. member for St. John's West?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not, and the motion cannot be put.

* * *

HEALTH

ADDITION OF ANTIBIOTICS TO CATTLE FEED—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the fact that antibiotics are added to cattle food routinely. This constitutes a danger to the health of men since the practice promotes the development of organisms resistant to antibiotics and also capable of infecting people. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That an investigation into this matter be carried out by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs and a report be made to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the motion proposed by the hon. member for Athabasca?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

* * *

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1972

AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE, CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT, NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT, PAROLE ACT AND VISITING FORCES ACT

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Criminal Code 1967 Amendment Act, the Criminal Records Act, the National Defence Act, the Parole Act and the Visiting Forces Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS, 1867 TO 1965

AMENDMENT RESPECTING READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-3, to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1965, with respect to the readjustment of representation in the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-4, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1971, to the 30th day of June, 1972, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND POWERS AND CAPITAL OF CORPORATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-5, to amend the Farm Credit Act.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY BILL

AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE, CROWN LIABILITY ACT AND OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-6, to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

EXPLOSIVES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, PROHIBITIONS, LICENCES, INSPECTORS' POWERS, ETC.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-7, to amend the Explosives Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS ACT, 1972

AUTHORIZATION OF FISCAL PAYMENTS TO AND TAX COLLECTION AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-8, to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

• (1200)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

DEGREE OF STIMULUS NECESSARY TO COPE WITH UNEMPLOYMENT AS RELATED TO PRICE STABILITY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. With regard to the conference between the federal and provincial finance ministers in Jasper earlier this month, will the minister advise whether it was his position on that occasion that there is enough stimulus in the economy at this time to deal with unemployment this year? In relation to that, with that stimulus, what is the relationship of that balance he claims has to exist between unemployment and stability of prices? Also, does the minister approve of the government program that dealt with the crisis of inflation by means of creating unemployment?

Mr. Speaker: I trust the minister can reply briefly to the question asked by the hon. member. I recognize the importance of the question, of course, but it sounded to the Chair as though it was a rather general question. The minister might try to reply briefly.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): May I say my question was complex in order to avoid a number of supplementaries. I did not want to lose the chain of questions through the supplementaries.

Mr. Speaker: The minister might give his reply and supplementary replies at the same time.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to supplement my reply when I intervene in the throne speech debate later in the week. I think we can deal at that time with the very profound questions raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Can the minister indicate when he is going to speak? Will it be on Thursday or Friday? We would like to have the information now because we would also like to speak on the position of the government.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will try to work that out with the House leader. I suggest to the hon. member that he stick around.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The Minister of Finance is hardly the one to give a lesson on being present in the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DISPUTE WITH NABET—DEMAND THAT WIRE SERVICE GUILD MEMBERS DO STRIKEBREAKING WORK

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Can the minister advise the House whether he is being kept informed about developments at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, particularly with regard to the corporation demand that members of the Wire Services Guild, who are not on strike, sign an undertaking that they will do work which is in effect strikebreaking work before they will be admitted to their jobs every day and, if so, has the minister had discussions with the corporation to persuade them to change their unreasonable demand?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, there are different versions of exactly what the position of the workers is in this regard. Several of these have been reported in the press, but the total result is not very clear.

Some reports claim that the employees refuse to work under supervisors who do not belong to the union, while others claim that they are asked to perform duties other than their own.

I have asked for a report on the situation and I shall be in a position to advise the House in the near future.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Will the minister also ask the CBC whether they will agree to meet with NABET, the striking union, without the condition that NABET meet on the basis of the report? Also, will the minister undertake to make a statement on motions in the House when he finds out exactly what the situation is, because I think the CBC is acting in a medieval manner in this case?

[Later:]

DISPUTE WITH NABET—DIFFERENT POLICIES FOR FRENCH AND ENGLISH NETWORKS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. It is supplementary to the earlier question asked about NABET and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. When the minister makes a statement about the resumption of collective bargaining, will he advise us why there are different policies relative to the strike in the French-speaking and English-speaking parts of the network?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I doubt, Mr. Speaker, that I can answer that question because I believe the difference in policy mentioned by the hon. member is due far more to the unions than to the management of the CBC, at least according to the information I have.

* * *

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN TREASURY BOARD AND ELECTRICAL WORKERS—POSSIBLE APPOINTMENT OF NEW MEDIATOR TO ACHIEVE RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS AND SETTLEMENT

Mr. Davis Lewis (York South): May I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, not with regard to the CBC but on another urgent matter, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board. I know that by the roster he is not supposed to be here today. Will the Prime Minister inform the House whether any steps are being taken to seek a new mediator to start negotiations again between Treasury Board and the electronic technicians so that this rather serious stoppage of work may soon come an end?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the President of the Treasury Board is going to meet a mediator in the middle of this afternoon. I take it, therefore, that a new mediator has been appointed.

[Later:]

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In light of the warning by a spokesman for the striking navigational-aid electronic technicians that there will be increasing disruptions on the west coast and a lack of radio safety on vessels and in light of the major disruptions in air travel, can the Prime Minister assure the House that a statement will be made tomorrow with regard to these matters in order that the country can be allayed of any fears related thereto?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it will depend on the results of the meeting with the mediator this afternoon and whether the union will want to meet the mediator later in the day.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will allow the hon. member for Hamilton West one last supplementary on this subject.

Mr. Alexander: Can the Prime Minister advise whether prosecutions will be instituted against the electronic technicians who are not abiding by the law?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I believe the President of the Treasury Board is considering that matter at this time.

[Later:]

May I take this opportunity to add to the answer I gave to the leader of the New Democratic Party. When I talked about a mediator I said he might be a new one. I am told it is the same mediator as before—Professor Gordon Simmons.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

SUGGESTED CLOSER STUDY OF POSITION OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Would he tell us whether it would not be advisable to study more thoroughly the problem of the Canadian dollar, since some observers have suggested that the present situation is prejudicial to the Canadian people?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I accept the hon. member's recommendation, especially to study from day to day the condition of the Canadian dollar.

* * *

[English]

GRAIN

TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR WHEAT—SUGGESTED EXTENSION TO ALL CEREAL GRAIN PRODUCERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It has to do with the two-price system for wheat. Before I ask my question, I want to congratulate him on his new portfolio, as do all from the province of Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of the fact that a distribution of money is to be made under the two-price system for wheat, is the government prepared to have that payment made not only to the wheat farmers but also to all cereal grain producers? I ask that question in view of the fact that many farmers went out of wheat under the Lift program and therefore will not benefit as a result of the distribution. In addition, I ask the minister whether the three western Ministers of Agriculture gave him the advice that that is the way in which justice would be done and equity accorded to farmers in general?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I did receive comments and representations from many quarters including the Ministers of Agriculture of the three prairie provinces, farm organizations such as Unifarm and so on, suggesting a method of distribution which would avoid distorting production patterns in the short run and would also recognize production practices which have been adopted in the most recent past. I assure the right hon. member that we are giving very serious consideration to these representations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the minister whether the three Ministers of Agriculture did in fact recommend that to him? Also, when he is replying he might say when it is expected the distribution will be made.

• (1210)

Mr. Lang: The discussions I held with the Ministers of Agriculture were private and confidential in their nature and I cannot comment specifically upon them, although all those gentlemen have, I believe, made their personal views known to the press and those views are therefore available to the right hon. gentleman. The timing of the payment will be announced in due course.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Might we know the date of the distribution so that we would have some idea of when the election will take place?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR WHEAT—METHOD OF PROVIDING MONEY AND MAKING PAYMENTS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): May I ask the minister whether legislation will be brought down to provide for the acreage payment to be made or whether this will be done by way of an item in the estimates? May I also ask whether payments will be made to correspond with the crop year or with the closing of the pool accounts?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): All these questions are really linked together and require an announcement of policy in connection with timing and the technique of making payments. Such an announcement will deal with all these matters at the same time.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): May I ask the minister whether he is now in a position to tell us when he will be announcing the acreage formula on which the two-price system will be based, and when the farmers can actually expect to receive some money?

Mr. Lang: I would expect to be able to make an announcement concerning the formula for payment at a very early date.

* * *

AIRPORTS

SUGGESTED USE OF ARMED FORCES RADAR TECHNICIANS TO SERVICE EQUIPMENT SO PEOPLE MAY TRAVEL

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Minister of National Defence. Would the minister agree to have Armed Forces radar technicians put the radars at our major international airports back into operation so that communications can resume and those who have to travel may be able to do so?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): The Minister of National Defence is not here today—he is not on the roster—but I am sure he will be here tomorrow and will be delighted to answer the hon. member's question.

Mr. Hees: I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings. I appreciate his co-operation. The purpose of interrupting the hon. member is to allow the hon. member for Trinity to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Hellyer: May I direct my supplementary to the Prime Minister. Would he intervene and make sure that the radars are put back into operation so that communications can resume in the normal way?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will consider the suggestion of the right hon.—the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—STATEMENT BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER INDICATING POSSIBLE FURTHER CANADIAN CONCESSIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Was the Secretary of State for External Affairs, when he was dealing with the subject of trade relations between Canada and the United States in Winnipeg on Saturday, expressing government policy when he said: "We have made contributions to the correction of some of these imbalances and we are prepared to go further." If so, can the Prime Minister outline to the House just what further contributions the government is prepared to make?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Perhaps I might be permitted to answer the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. minister will appreciate that there is a difficulty here. Perhaps the question might be rephrased by the hon. member who asked it in the first instance. It is well established procedurally that questions cannot be asked about statements made outside the House except in the way that the question was asked by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings. With the consent of the House the minister might be allowed to reply, but in any event it would not be in conformity with the rules.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If I may answer, the minister was expressing government policy.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: Is the government planning, as a possible further contribution, to cancel the two principal safeguards in the Canada-United States auto pact? If not, could we be advised what other industries will be affected by this possible contribution?

Mr. Trudeau: It would be hardly proper to negotiate in public and to say right now, openly, what the government is prepared to do by way of further concessions unless we know what further concessions the Americans are prepared to make.

Mr. Hees: Does the Prime Minister not agree that industry has a right to know which parts of industry are to be sacrificed in the course of this cap-in-hand approach to the United States government?

Mr. Speaker: Order please. That is argument. In those terms the question is not in order.

* * *

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—AGREEMENT BY PANARCTIC TO GIVE RIGHT OF FIRST REFUSAL OF ARCTIC SUPPLIES TO U.S. UTILITIES—REQUEST FOR TABLING

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. May I ask the minister whether Panarctic Oils, in which the Canadian government is the largest single shareholder, has entered into an agreement by which certain United States utilities and transmission companies, in return for advancing $75 million over a five-year period, will be granted right of first refusal of Arctic gas supplies?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, according to the agreement signed last July, those companies may have first right to refuse should the Northern Canada Power Commission authorize gas exports. But, prior to making use of this right, they must have obtained an export permit from the Northern Canada Power Commission.

[English]

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that Canadian taxpayers have a substantial investment in this company may I ask the minister whether he would be prepared to table the agreement which has been entered into between Panarctic Oils and the consortium of United States utilities and transmission companies?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if any objections were made; for my part, I do not have any. I shall ask the president of the company for a copy of the agreement and, if possible, we shall table it.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Douglas: I am rising on a point of order regarding whether or not the President of Panarctic Oils is going to make the decision or whether the minister is going to make the decision. The minister says he has no objection. I am saying that the Canadian taxpayers as the single largest investor in this company have the right to be supplied with this information and that the decision should be made by the minister, not by the president of the company.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—REIMBURSEMENT OF PROVINCES FOR WELFARE EXPENDITURES—DECENTRALIZATION OF PAY OFFICES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour. Can the hon. member say whether acceptable arrangements have been made with all the provinces for the reimbursement of welfare costs incurred as a result of delays in the payment of unemployment insurance claims, and whether the federal government has agreed to reimburse the provinces to the extent of 100 per cent in such cases?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the immediate task is to ensure that unemployment insurance benefits are paid on schedule to all qualified claimants. However, negotiations are under way with all the provinces and have been completed successfully with most of them to make certain that in certain cases interim payments can be expedited through welfare offices and reimbursement made later by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. We are concerned with getting "groceries" on the tables of those who are out of work and we shall make every effort to ensure that this is done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: Having heard that answer, perhaps I might put a simpler question to the parliamentary secretary, one he may be able to grapple with. Has the department accepted the recommendation which is now accepted unanimously in the Atlantic and western regions that procedures be decentralized from Moncton into the other provinces and from Winnipeg into the other provinces?

Mr. Perrault: The hon. member will be interested to know that I went to New Brunswick over the weekend and conferred with our officials there. He will be delighted to know that we have installed toll-free lines to Bathurst from several localities in north and northeastern New Brunswick. A special unit has been established in Moncton to enable us to solve Bathurst claim problems quickly. The toll-free concept has been extended to other centres—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Perrault: As I have said, the object is to get groceries on the tables of these people with the least possible delay—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that he might wish to return to motions for the purpose of making a statement. He should keep this in mind in replying to questions.

• (1220)

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for the lack of clarity in my original question. May I again ask the parliamentary secretary whether the department has accepted the recommendation to decentralize the pay offices from Moncton and Winnipeg and open offices in other provinces? This means establishing pay offices in all of the provinces in question, not just the two I have mentioned.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, there will be a marked improvement in service in northeastern New Brunswick. The hon. member may be interested to know that of the 134 alleged—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to call the parliamentary secretary to order. He should look from time to time in the direction of the Chair and when asked to resume his seat he should do so.

* * *

FISHERIES

MARINE RESOURCE MANAGEMENT—CONSULTATION WITH UNITED STATES TO ACHIEVE COMMON FRONT FOR LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the actual and threatened depletion of our Atlantic coast fisheries resources by distant water factory fleets from overseas, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs undertake to meet at an early date with his United States counterpart in the hope that present differences between Canada and the United States over proper management of our marine resources may be worked out, so that hopefully both countries will present a united front at the proposed 1973 Law of the Sea Conference on this urgent and important matter? While he is replying—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crouse: —will he also indicate when the conference will be held?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his suggestion and I will follow it up.

MARINE RESOURCE MANAGEMENT—CANADIAN POSITION—PUBLICATION BEFORE LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that Iceland and several other countries have prepared a very firm and straightforward position to put before the Law of the Sea Conference to be held in 1973, may I ask the minister whether Canada has also formulated its position, and will it be made public in advance of the conference?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am very sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I missed part of the question. Could it be repeated?

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether the department has formulated a clear position to be presented by the Canadian government at the Law of the Sea Conference in 1973, and will it be made public in advance of the conference?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we are still in the process of formulating the position that we will take at this conference. Whether our position will be made public in advance I am not certain yet since we are not yet in a position to say what this policy will be. However, it will be directed, as the hon. member would expect, toward the preservation of the fishing resources of the sea, particularly those off our coasts, and to the assertion of Canadian rights and responsibilities in relation thereto.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Crouse: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises to ask a further supplementary and I shall return to him in a moment. Let me again remind all hon. members that we will be running short of time. There are quite a few members who are anxious to ask questions, and if we spend too much time on each subject we will run out of time before an appreciable number of members have had an opportunity to ask their questions.

[Later:]

DATE OF LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs is a very brief one. In view of the importance of this matter would the minister indicate whether a date has yet been set for the next Law of the Sea Conference?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, it is still scheduled for 1973, though I am not quite sure of the dates yet. Whether we will realize this expectation—certainly that is our purpose—I am not certain, but as soon as we do have the dates I will let the House know.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS—MEANING OF WORDS "ON SCHEDULE" USED BY PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration based on a statement he made today which is similar to one he made on Friday. When the parliamentary secretary or his department says that an effort is being made to pay claims on schedule, what is meant by the phrase "on schedule"—six weeks, eight weeks or what period of time?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member is well versed in the operations of this plan. Indeed, he attended many of the committee meetings and will realize that benefit payments depend upon the length of time of the qualifying period, be it 20 weeks or 8 weeks. The long-term claimant with 20 weeks of contribution receives payment earlier than others. I hope that this question can be brought before the standing committee so that we can go into it in greater detail.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat? I see the hon. member for Hamilton West and others want to ask supplementaries on this subject, which I thought we had left behind a moment ago with the hope that we would get on to other subjects. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has a supplementary and I will then return, as I undertook a moment ago, to the hon. member for South Shore.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question may I put this to the parliamentary secretary. In view of his reference to knowledge that some members might have of the act, may I ask whether an effort is being made to get these claims paid within the first three weeks?

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to report to the House that there has been a measurable increase in efforts to speed payments. Indeed, the claims—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

[Translation]

POWER

PROPOSED JAMES BAY POWER HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC RESPECTING INTEREST FREE LOANS

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Finance.

Has he had negotiations with the Prime Minister of the province of Quebec in connection with loans which might be interest-free or at a low interest rate for the development of James Bay?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE TO BANGLA DESH—RESUMPTION OF AID TO PAKISTAN

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since the government recognized the state of Bangla Desh during the parliamentary recess, would the Minister state whether the government intends to provide assistance to this new state to help them with their severe economic problems; and would the minister also state whether the government intends to renew economic assistance programs for Pakistan?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to both questions is yes. We have tentatively set aside a sum of money for Bangla Desh that would otherwise have been available to the whole of Pakistan in order to assist in the reconstruction effort being made. We are now in the process of once more discussing with Pakistan the new projects that we would otherwise have been discussing with them had it not been for the war.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—SUGGESTED REOPENING OF LOCAL OFFICES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is it the intention of the government to reopen unemployment insurance offices in small and medium-sized industrial cities in Ontario and elsewhere which were closed about two years ago?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, a number of new offices have been opened depending on the need that exists in various parts of the country. As well, phone service has been very much increased in order to expedite telephone inquiries. If the hon. member has some specific suggestions along this line, I hope he will make them available to the department where they will be given due consideration.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REDUCTION OF DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ESTIMATE AND ACTUAL JOBS CREATED

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. What steps or procedures does he intend to adopt to reduce the difference between the estimated number of jobs created under the Regional Development Incentives Act and the actual number of jobs created which, as he knows, now stands at an unacceptable 25 per cent?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence of a difference such as the hon. member mentions practically everywhere without foundation and when the plants are completed and jobs are created the number projected will probably turn out to be precisely the number achieved.

* * *

[English]

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY

PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC—EARLY INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION—MEETING OF MAY 1 DEADLINE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the government has announced as a priority item the family income security plan legislation, the former Bill C-264, and in view of the fact that in this House on Friday it was said there are still ongoing discussions being had with the province of Quebec, when will the minister announce to the House what progress has been made, why did he not introduce the bill today, and what is his plan to meet the May 1 deadline for the increase in benefits?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the fact that discussions with Quebec and other provinces are going on and will continue to go on should not prejudice the introduction of the bill. Changes can be made in the bill, as the hon. member knows, after it is introduced. Certainly the intention of the government at the first convenient opportunity is to bring this bill forward.

• (1230)

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, would the minister answer the question concerning whether the government expects to meet the May 1 deadline for increases in the benefits as announced in the bill?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated to the hon. member during the last session that the mere fact that the bill had been delayed until this session made it impossible to meet the May 1 deadline in terms of payments to people.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CLOSING OF PULP MILL, TEMISCAMINGUE, QUE.—SUGGESTED MEETING BY MINISTER WITH COMMUNITY, LABOUR AND MANAGEMENT REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Because of the anticipated closing of the pulp mill in the company town of Temiscamingue, where all the people are entirely dependent on this one industry for survival, will the minister agree to a meeting with representatives of the community of Temiscamingue, Quebec, and labour and management representatives to explore the various possibilities that might be considered to prevent the death of the town and its only industry?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received such a request, but if I do, of course I shall be happy to meet them.

* * *

[English]

GRAIN

ALLEGED LOSS OF SALES BECAUSE OF INADEQUATE TERMINAL FACILITIES AT VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PLANS

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. It arises from the fact that Canadian export officials have stated that Canada is making no new sales because of the inability to meet present commitments and the fact that there are 20 ships idle in Vancouver harbour because there is no grain in storage there. Would the minister be prepared as early as tomorrow to make a statement on motions concerning what he is doing in the short term to take care of this critical situation and on the long-term policy to prevent this situation happening again?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's indication of fact that there are no sales being made is simply not a fact. This is untrue. The Canadian Wheat Board is continuing to sell grain. They have, of course, for certain months and periods of months sold to an absolute physical maximum out of the port of Vancouver. It is one of the long-term challenges to develop additional facilities at that port for what now appears to be a clear additional sales possibility through the west. There are a significant number of boats waiting at the moment. The unloads of grain, however, have in the last couple of days reached the target which the Wheat Board has set for the railways to achieve a catch-up, with 817 unloads on Thursday and around 800 on Friday. It will still take some time to catch up. The delay was due in part to the selling of a very large quantity of grain and the late arrival of boats which would have resulted in delays in loading in any case. The very severe winter snowfall conditions also delayed grain in arriving at Vancouver. The Wheat Board has the situation in hand, however, and it will be improving shortly.

Mr. Downey: Mr. Speaker, is the minister going to resort to facts again after he receives the salesman of the year award?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Moose Jaw on a supplementary.

POSSIBLE RENOVATION OF GOVERNMENT TERMINAL ELEVATOR AT VANCOUVER TO EXPEDITE SHIPMENT

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, can the minister say whether or not it is correct that Canada has lost a sale of 150,000 tons of wheat to Japan because the Canadian Wheat Board could not ensure delivery?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he cannot ask a question in those terms.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might rephrase it. In view of the fact that there is a problem in delivery of grain at the west coast for overseas shipment, can the minister say whether the government terminal elevator at Vancouver is now being renovated so that it can be used in the future?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, no one considers that that would be an immediate practical solution. The Wheat Board is examining every possible solution to increase our capacity, including cleaning grain in the interior and putting it through the terminals without cleaning it there. But the use of that terminal is not practical in terms of the expense required to put it into operational shape.

SUGGESTED MEETING OF WHEAT BOARD AND RAILWAY OFFICIALS TO EXPEDITE MOVEMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should also like to ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I notice the minister continually refers to grain and not to wheat. My question arises from the other questions, particularly in respect of the Palliser group which said that the terminals are empty at Vancouver and short 20 million bushels and that wheat sales have been lost. Would the minister consider getting together the export officials, the officials of the Wheat Board and the railways to see if this can be remedied now and not tomorrow?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that has been done. It has been done a long time ago and on a continuing basis. The increase of unloads to 800 to which I referred a moment ago has resulted from the railways co-operating with the new targets set by the Wheat Board above the 600 or 700 achieved earlier. I can also say that the terminals have now agreed to go on a seven-day work week basis, which previously they had not, in order to increase further the total unloads of wheat. There is co-operation on all sides, I am happy to say.

POSSIBLE PREFERENCE TO SHIPMENT OF WHEAT OVER RYE, FLAX AND RAPESEED

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether shipments of rye, flax and rapeseed from elevator points are being slowed down in order to give preference to wheat for delivery to the west coast?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would have to investigate whether any changes in the shipping program were made. The objective of the Wheat Board and the block shipment system is in every case to arrange for the loading of grain which is most required for the ships that are expected to arrive or have arrived at Vancouver.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre on a supplementary.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, it is a related question, not a supplementary, but is directed to the same minister.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might be allowed to ask the question even though it is not a supplementary and then we will go on to the hon. member for Vegreville.

REPRESENTATIONS ON SHARING OF STORAGE COSTS ON ALL GRAINS BY GOVERNMENT—DISCUSSION WITH FARM ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice who is in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the representations by a number of farm organizations for several years calling for the revision of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act so that a share of the storage cost of all six grains can be borne by the federal government, can the minister advise if he and his officials have been holding discussions with these farm organizations with the objective of implementing such a revision? If not, is it his intention to hold such discussions with a view to revising the act in the manner which the farm organizations are seeking?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no. I have no intention of discussing the matter with them at the present time.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PROTESTS AGAINST REMOVAL OF INITIALS FROM BUILDING AND VEHICLES IN EDMONTON

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General arising out of statements made last Friday. Has the minister received any formal protest, internal, external or otherwise, concerning the removal of the initials "RCMP" from the building and vehicles of the Edmonton RCMP detachment? If so would he so indicate, and will he be making a statement on motions to clarify this issue as it has alarmed many people, particularly in western Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, this is an administrative decision that was taken by the Commissioner himself on November 4, 1969, as to the principle, and on October 19, 1970, as to the details. In fact, this decision of the Commissioner is widely known, since the new sign has appeared on RCMP buildings for two years already, and more particularly in Saskatoon since June 1971. So, I cannot see why there is such an alarm all of a sudden.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary of the Solicitor General. What specific directions came from the Solicitor General with respect to this matter?

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: None, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In light of the changes that are being made with regard to new automobiles and the new RCMP building in Edmonton, although similar changes are not being made in Calgary, will the Solicitor General tell me whether there have been any representations by members of the force, and is he aware of petitions with over 11,000 names from the city of Edmonton insisting on the continuation of the original designation and refusing to accept the new system of designation?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, the commissioner informed me his decision was made on the basis of efficiency, that the sign is a more visual one, that the recommendation was made on that account and following consultation within the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Now, I can make the whole series of signs used by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police available to hon. members, and I wish to emphasize that the words Royal Canadian Mounted Police appear twice and the words Gendarmerie royale du Canada once and I believe three times is sufficient.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the right hon. member for Prince Albert and then try to go on to the next subject because we are running short of time.

• (1240)

REMOVAL OF NAME FROM BUILDING IN SASKATOON

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I would like to ask the minister, because his memory was not very good the other day, whether or not on the building in Saskatoon the words "Royal Canadian Mounted Police" no longer appear?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the word "police" is very clearly written and everybody can see the RCMP shield which has shown, since 1873, the motto "Maintiens le droit" as well as the words Royal Canadian Mounted Police. All that is very clear. The answer is yes.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this verbose minister does not answer the question. I asked him simply whether the designation "RCMP" has or has not been removed. I have his letter here, in case he has forgotten it, indicating that the reason RCMP was removed was that it would not blend with contemporary buildings. What an explanation!

Mr. Hees: Answer yes or no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As I indicated a moment ago we have gone beyond the question period. I was hoping we would take two or three minutes to allow other hon. members to ask questions who throughout the whole question period have been waiting for an opportunity to do so. This matter might be pursued tomorrow.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH— REQUESTED EXTENSION OF APPLICATION DEADLINE

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): I have a question for the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that public service employment opportunities for Canadian youth were announced on January 13 and that the closing date for applications under this program was January 31, some 18 days later, would the minister approach the Public Service Commission to see if this date can be extended so as to afford more of our youth an opportunity to apply under this program?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to accept the hon. member's suggestion and to seek the advice of the Public Service Commission on the possibility of such a procedure.

* * *

[English]

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO POLITICAL INFLUENCE AND MINIMUM WAGE REGULATIONS—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to hear the Secretary of State in an agreeable and accepting mood. In view of statements over the weekend with regard to possible political influence in the allocation of programs and the other charge that there may be some real difficulties between the minimum wage regulations of the federal government and the wage allocations under the Opportunities for Youth program, I wonder whether the minister has initiated an inquiry or whether one will be initiated? May I also ask the minister, in order to avoid putting a supplementary question to him, whether he would now be prepared, in view of the evaluation of last year's program and the other youth programs, to have a youth committee established by the House in order that it could look into all these questions with some thoroughness?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, if I understand correctly, there are three separate questions in the hon. member's question, and I will need some time to reply to all three. I therefore beg your patience in spite of the late hour.

My reply to the first part of the question is that in view of the extremely serious nature for a public servant of the statements reported by the press and, in many instances, of their glaring inaccuracy, the hon. member will no doubt understand our making an inquiry in order to ascertain whether the reports have any basis and whether the official concerned really made those statements.

With regard to the second part of the question, the matter is under study. The position we took last year, and which we will maintain unless the study indicates otherwise, is that the project sponsors, not the government or the Department of the Secretary of State, are the employers. Moreover, this work is comparable to voluntary work.

As for the establishment of a special committee on matters relating to youth, or referral to a parliamentary committee which would be responsible for dealing with such questions, I am quite prepared to accept the hon. member's suggestion. However, I do not know whether we should establish a special committee or whether it might be preferable for this matter to be referred to one of the standing committees of the House of Commons already in existence.

* * *

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO CONDUCT INVESTIGATION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order not with respect to the answer of the Secretary of State but with respect to earlier questions put to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the comments he made last week and again today. The importance of the questions being raised with regard to unemployment insurance affects so many people that I know all members of the House have also been affected. In view of the extended debate on the Speech from the Throne I am wondering whether the government House leader, because of the almost unanimous concern of all members concerning unemployment insurance and its operation, would give consideration—perhaps he might consult with the parliamentary secretary and others—to having an immediate reference without debate, which I am sure all members would support, to establish this committee at once in order that it could give immediate consideration to the matter because many thousands of Canadians have been affected.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has no objection to the minister replying briefly to this question. It is a question and hardly a point of order. In fairness to the hon. member and to the House, the minister might be allowed to reply briefly.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): I will examine the proposition to determine whether any substantial time would be gained by having a reference in that way rather than waiting for the sending of the estimates to the standing committees.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Friday, February 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ross Whicher for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 34), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Lewis (p. 45).

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I feel I should extend my congratulations first of all to the people of the constituencies of Bruce and Trois-Rivières for electing two outstanding members to the House of Commons. They can be proud of their members' performance in moving and seconding the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I hope I may be pardoned in that, notwithstanding the fine tribute paid to them by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I should like to extend my own personal congratulations to them.

The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) in a masterful way covered the extent of this government's achievements which the opposition for political reasons of their own have chosen to ignore. Because of their informative nature the hon. member's remarks deserve the widest possible distribution. He pointed out indisputable facts, some of which have not been grasped by many Canadians, concerning the basis of the government's performance led by a Prime Minister who has never hesitated to break new ground when the interests of the Canadian people are at stake. Whenever the election is called the voters of this country, I am confident, will overwhelmingly endorse this program.

With regard to the other issues contained in the Throne Speech we could have guessed what members of the opposition would say even before the speech was read by the Governor General. In the Throne Speech debates to which I have listened throughout the years that I have been a member I have not yet heard a member of the opposition praise the contents of the Throne Speech, and so far as this one is concerned it was no exception.

The gloom and doom tune of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) seems to have set the pace for his followers, with promises of a full employment budget, whatever that might be, while the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) advocated a new social and economic system, which reminds me of Lenin when he took control of Russia and made the famous statement "we will now proceed to establish a new social order". I think we are fortunate to have a government in Canada today dedicated to the equalization of opportunities in every area of Canada, one which has been eminently successful in lifting the low wage earners, the poor, the disabled, the war veterans and the retired to a higher state or dignity.

• (1250)

In this kind of debate it is customary to touch upon a few questions which may affect one's constituency or something of national interest. I wish to bring to the attention of hon. members the Committee for an Independent Canada which held its first meeting in my constituency over the weekend of December 10.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I was astonished to read a report from that meeting during which a prominent member of the body made a statement to the effect that if it had not been for the late Right Honourable C. D. Howe there would have been no occasion for the committee to come into being and that Mr. Howe's policy was to encourage as many Americans as possible to come to Canada and that his whole philosophy was continentalism. If the man who made that incredible statement had reflected a little on the contributions made to the nation, toward the industrial development of Canada and the tremendous job of launching Canada's war effort and the colossal work of it reconstruction after the war by the late Right Honourable C. D. Howe, such a statement would never have been made. Indeed, I consider it an insult to the intelligence of the Canadian people and unworthy of the person who made it.

For the record, Mr. Speaker, and especially for the benefit of the younger generation which is too young to have known Canada's greatest architect of the postwar reconstruction of the nation, I wish to point out that when the Right Honourable C. D. Howe launched Canada's production toward the war effort, the output of Canadian industry in 1938 was $3.3 billion and the number of people employed in the manufacturing industry totalled 642,000. In 1957 industrial promotion under the wise guidance of the late Mr. C. D. Howe had reached ten times that amount and the number of Canadians employed in the manufacturing industry had risen 1,300,000.

Mr. Speaker, the outstanding achievement of Mr. Howe was the whole program of munitions supply which he conceived and directed during the war years. Whereas we went into the war with a fairly simple economy from an industrial standpoint, we emerged from the war with a highly diversified industrial machine.

Steel production is an outstanding case in point. Prior to the war we imported at least one-third of our requirements and at the end of the war we had a strong and fully integrated steel industry. I recall listening to the Fort William City Council of which I was a member. It was gravely concerned about how the new industrial capacity created in wartime could be kept busy, especially since we had a war industry in the city employing 6,000 persons. Where would they find a job in our community once war requirements were at an end? Mr. Howe immediately came to our rescue with a program for peacetime manufacturing including a flourishing trolley bus business. These were sold throughout Canada. A white paper on reconstruction which he submitted to parliament early in the postwar period contained a monetary and fiscal policy which made the transition from war to peace in such a manner as to win the admiration of other western nations that came out of the war.

The steel industry is an example of the wisdom of this postwar period. The industry continued to expand and prosper and I think it is generally regarded as the most efficient steel industry on the North American continent. Mr. C. D. Howe's critics usually concentrate their fire on what they claim to be his sellout of Canadian resources. More specifically they charge that he was responsible for the fact that we have such a large percentage of foreign ownership in the resource industries. Here I should like to point out that the federal government does not own all our resources. In every instance relating to the large postwar expansion of the resource industries like the Alcan development in Kitimat, British Columbia, the oil and gas developments of Alberta and the Iron ore developments of Quebec and Labrador, ownership of the resources was vested in the provinces, and it is the provinces which have the responsibility of determining where ownership rests. I am amazed, Mr. Speaker, that those who charge C. D. Howe with giving away our resources choose to ignore this fact.

As an example the iron ore in Quebec and Labrador and the Steep Rock iron mines in northwestern Ontario are owned by the province of Quebec and Labrador and the province of Ontario, and the federal government had absolutely nothing to do with the arrangements for leasing the ore bodies. Of course it does have control of the export of these minerals. Through its fiscal policy the federal government probably did facilitate these developments once the provinces had granted mining leases and licences, but in almost every case the first initiative rested with the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that the government of Quebec is in great need of economic expansion and is strongly opposed to any measure which will have the effect of discouraging foreign investment. Our Prime Minister, in an interview several weeks ago, made the following statement in reply to a question whether he was against economic nationalism in Canada. He said:

> Yes, I am against economic nationalism, if its effect is to make a country poor. I don't think you can become more independent as I think Harry Johnson has put it "by becoming poorer".

As I see it, our problem is not foreign investment but more investment. Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair. The House will resume consideration of this item of business at 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Speaker, just before one o'clock I was pointing out what the Prime Minister had said about economic nationalism, namely, if it has the effect of making the country poor, he is against economic nationalism. And so am I, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the Quebec Minister of Industry and Commerce who said that any federal government move to restrict the influx of United States or other foreign investment capital into Quebec must provide for the replacement of jobs which might be lost because of it. Foreign investment is necessary not only for Quebec but also for my own constituency, Fort William, for the creation of jobs.

• (1410)

Referring to the committee for an independent Canada, I should say that for the life of me I cannot swallow the idea that Canada is not independent, contrary to the opinion expressed at this Thunder Bay meeting. The late Mr. Howe was more Canadian than those who were trying to impute to him an attitude of pro-Americanism for the purpose of serving their anti-Americanism. Mr. Howe was instrumental in urging great numbers of Canadians to get into production rather than have the country depend on importation of the numerous requirements for the war effort and for the reconstruction after the war.

In his great efforts, Mr. Howe was confronted with the same difficulties that have beset Canada from its very beginning, that is lack of venture capital and a conspicuous reluctance on the part of most Canadians with capital to get involved in projects entailing risks. This is the situation today. A shining example of this is the fact that American money came to save one of the oldest resorts in the province of Quebec, the Manor Richelieu at Murray Bay, noted as a convention centre. About a year ago its owner, owing to substantial losses in the operation of the great hotel, put it on the market. No Canadian bidders turned up. Canadian bankers were sceptical about the hotel's future. Then, a man from Cleveland stepped in. He rounded up some partners, formed a private company and kept the resort in operation. The new owners have ambitious plans for the old manor, including keeping the hotel open for a longer period each year. They deserve to make good, and good luck to them.

It will be a long time before we can achieve a position in which we will not need any foreign capital. Personally, I feel we will never be able to finance all the future industrial expansion we will require to maintain our standard of living without foreign investments. Our aim should be to retain the confidence of our foreign friends. Creation of a climate in this country that is hostile to the United States can only hurt us where we are vulnerable. Such an atmosphere could scare away investments, scare away tourists and create a resistance to Canadian goods.

Canadians are not stupid. I doubt whether they will allow themselves to be duped by the band that met in Thunder Bay, preaching more state intervention and socialism, without giving a clue as to how to replace foreign capital and foster continuous growth, without which there will be no hope of employing in Canada the expanding labour force which is increasing at a greater pace than in any other western nation. I am confident that this Parliament will continue to introduce measures which will have the effect of reducing unemployment in every region of Canada.

With regard to our relations with the United States, I wish to quote from an address Lord Thompson of Fleet delivered to the Empire Club of Toronto in which he referred to the various economies in the world. He said:

> The Americans had been carrying vast international burdens, and in fact financing the world trade by their deficit.

He continued:

> The monetary crisis could have been over sooner in my view, if the rest of us had shown more understanding. I would suggest that far from being hostile, or seeking retaliation, every Canadian should be eternally grateful and thankful for such a generous, friendly and enlightened neighbour as the United States.

Speaking of trade with the United States, about one quarter of the goods and services produced in Canada are exported, and almost 70 per cent of these exports go to the United States. It would, therefore, be disastrous if the Canadian-U.S. trade talks should fail.

I should like to encourage our efficient Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) to be firm in one aspect of the negotiations. I refer to the 1965 auto pact which brought many benefits to Canada. I recall that when it was introduced the official opposition had reservations about its value and the NDP were lukewarm toward it. But now, having seen the beneficial results, they are clamoring for it. I would simply suggest that the United States should consider not only the present net advantage to Canada resulting from the auto pact but should bear in mind the advantages the United States has had over a long period of years. I am confident the government will not agree with the United States' point of view which requires a current Canadian deficit in the trade in motor vehicles.

Another area of national interest is our immigration policy, and the disturbing statement made by a Toronto lawyer at the Canadian Bar Association meeting. This man has twice examined certain aspects of immigration for the Canadian government, once five years ago when he inquired into the problem of deserting seamen and again two years ago when he was asked to report on the increasing number of non-immigrants applying for permanent residence. In his speech, he dismissed the traditional concept of Canada as a vast empty land. He said, and I quote:

> Sure, we still have millions of acres with a negligible population, but many of those acres can never support more than a marginal population. Maybe, instead of blindly encouraging people to come to this land of opportunity, we should make a serious study to find out just how many people each region can reasonably support. It may be that natural increase would cause us to reach that desirable figure without any immigration.

The number of people which this country can support can never be reached by natural increase unless the women of Canada are bent on having no less than 10 children each, a preposterous proposition which no one takes seriously. At the time of Confederation, 105 years ago, Canada had a population of little more than three million. It has taken all that time to add 18 million to our present population of approximately 21 million. The second century is a good time, not to consider reducing the importance of the immigration department or reducing the number of immigrants, but to continue a reasonable policy of selection. By that I do not mean to let in only university graduates. I am referring to the artisan, the tradesman and laborer, of whom there is a definite shortage.

The development of a ribbon of civilization above the 49th parallel received the attention of our Canadian pioneers in the first century of our history. As this ribbon widened towards the north, unlocking vast treasures of timber and minerals, and settlements prospered on the Prairies, we experienced a period of great achievement, which the generous immigration policy at the beginning of the century made possible. Canada's history is enlaced with the story of people from many lands coming here in search of peace, freedom and prosperity. People from every country around the globe and from every walk of life came here to build a new life and to enrich Canada with character and tradition.

[Mr. Badanai.]

• (1420)

As to the criticisms which appear in the newspapers commenting adversely on the work of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, containing scathing remarks about the way in which immigration is being handled, I would point out that any deficiencies which may be apparent in the department do not extend to the immigration offices overseas. I have met some of the immigration officers and, believe me, I have never met people more dedicated, more industrious or more faithful to their trust than those in charge of our immigration services overseas. This is the case whether they serve in London, in Marseille, in Paris or in Glasgow, Scotland.

I hope the Prime Minister will consider, if not in the course of this session of Parliament then certainly in the next, adopting a new concept of the north based on a policy of encouraging and assisting suitable immigrants to settle in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. These regions cover approximately 1,400,000 square miles of land rich in minerals, gas, oil, iron, copper, gold, furs and fish, yet less than 40,000 people, counting all the Indians, the Eskimos and the whites, live north of the 60th parallel. The adoption of such a policy will take courage, but fortunately our Prime Minister is richly endowed with that quality.

Finally, may I say that my constituents in the City of Thunder Bay are very grateful to the government for its grant of $18,720 toward hiring a co-ordinator, a secretary and ten surveyors in connection with an initiative incentive program, the purpose of which is to evaluate the need of the community for an auditorium complex which would include a community cultural and sports centre. It appears to be the considered opinion of people in Thunder Bay, which is part of the constituency of my hon. friend from Port Arthur (Mr. Andras), that this is one of the city's most pressing needs. When a scheme has been approved, financial assistance from all levels of government will be required. I trust the federal government will favourably consider making a generous grant at that time.

The opposition characterized the Throne Speech as being without substance. Unbiased people will see in it a most inspiring legislative program, the like of which has not been often heard in this chamber.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, the outstanding thing about the Speech from the Throne delivered on Thursday is that almost unbelievably it contains no proposals for dealing with the country's most important problem, that of unemployment involving no less than 665,000 people, amounting to 7.7 per cent of the work force, who cannot find jobs.

If Your Honour would search through that pyramid of platitudes piled one on top of another for a full hour last Thursday, and listen to the Prime Minister's hymn of self-praise delivered in the House on Friday you would not find a scrap of evidence of any plan designed to increase production through stimulating the economy thereby making jobs more readily available to Canadians. Members of this House and the public generally have a right to ask why this should be the case. Everyone admits that unemployment is the No. 1 problem facing the country today. Why is there no mention of any plan to overcome it?

The answer is difficult to find because the government would obviously like to do something to cure unemployment if only to halt the deluge of criticism which has been poured upon it for the last couple of years as a result of its complete misunderstanding of the economy and complete inability to handle the unemployment situation. The reason the government has put forward no plan is that its members simply do not know what remedies to prescribe. No minister in charge of a senior economic portfolio, from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) down, has ever had any experience in production or in the sale of products or services. Yet this is what the economy and employment are all about. These fuzzy-minded theorists simply do not understand what is needed to stimulate the economy, increase production and produce more jobs. They do not understand that employers will simply decline to expand their production unless they can be persuaded that by doing so they will stand a reasonable chance to make a reasonable profit. In order to provide encouragement and reassurance, the government must institute measures which will convince employers that they will be working in an atmosphere which will sufficiently assure them of a reasonable profit from their expanded operations. If they are not so convinced they will simply decline to expand their operations, production will not increase and employment opportunities will not expand.

Leaders of industry will not expand production while the competition bill and the amendment to the Labour Code remain hanging over their heads. Business has told the government this in no uncertain terms over the past few months. The government, on the other hand, thinks that the propaganda it has put out concerning these two bills will please a great many people who are expected to vote in the next election and it has therefore decided to proceed with these bills despite the fact that doing so will result in the slowing down of economic growth, and, consequently, the chance of increased employment opportunities for our work force.

Let us consider what the government has been doing in its attempt to increase employment. It has been making grants in cases where new industries are opening up. We would all agree that this is a good plan provided the industries concerned are experiencing a steady or a growing demand for the products they turn out. But if there is no such demand, if, by any chance, there is a declining demand for those products it is obviously foolish to subsidize the creation of new plants in that area of industry. Examining the whole picture we find, for example, that in the pulp and paper industry, which for the past year has been in a situation of over-supply both in Canada and throughout the world, the government has subsidized the creation of two new companies. One of them is in Grand Prairie, Alberta to the tune of $15.7 million and the other is in Rayonnier, Quebec to the tune of $13.7 million. This despite the fact that pulp and paper plants across the country during the past year have been cutting back operations and laying off people. In particular, the plant at Timiskaming is closing down and laying off 850 people simply because there is no demand for the pulp product it produces. This gives one an idea of the kind of fuzzy thinking this government indulges in, and is the reason the business community has no confidence in the government's ability to direct our economic affairs.

• (1430)

Let us take a look, Mr. Speaker, at what the government is proposing to do. There is no indication of this in the Speech from the Throne, but last Saturday we learned from a speech made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) in Winnipeg, something of what the government has in mind. In his speech last Saturday in Winnipeg the minister discussed Canadian-United States trade relations and the problems that exist between our two countries in this field. Then he said, to quote his words: "We have made contributions to the correction of some of these imbalances, and the government is prepared to go further".

I should like to know why Canada is responsible for any temporary imbalance in trade that we have with the United States at the present time. We have had a trade deficit with the United States for 18 of the last 20 years. At the moment we are in a temporary surplus position, but anyone who has read the financial pages recently will know perfectly well that this temporary surplus position is evaporating very, very rapidly and will cease to exist within a few months. Yet the United States government has been able to con this government into believing that we have some responsibility to right this imbalance.

The government's approach to the United States government is one that should not be condoned: it is one of going cap in hand to the United States and apologizing for something for which this country is not responsible. The result of these "further contributions" which the government has promised to make through the speech of the minister of external affairs last Saturday, and which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said this morning was government policy, will be that Canadian industry will have to make sacrifices that will cost jobs in this country.

The most likely industry to suffer is the Canadian automotive industry. It is very likely that this government has already indicated to the United States government that it will do away with the two principal safeguards in the Canada-U.S. automotive pact. This morning I asked the Prime Minister whether that was the case but he ducked the question. We have the right to know, and so does industry, whether the government is going to scrap these two safeguards which are of tremendous importance to the automobile industry in Canada. If not, then what other industry is going to be sacrificed at the whim of the United States government and in order to meet an argument advanced by the United States government which has no validity whatsoever? As I have said, for 18 of the last 20 years we have had a trade deficit with the United States. Simply because we are in a temporary surplus position is no reason to ask us to make further contributions to correcting the imbalance, just to please the United States government.

So we see this government doing foolish things, such as subsidizing new plants in an industry whose products are already over-produced in the world. Although Canadian plants are closing down or cutting back production, we put something between $25 million to $30 million of taxpayers' money into the subsidization of plants. This will simply make the economic life of existing pulp and paper plants in this country that much more difficult. The government is also going to make further contributions to correcting the imbalance in trade, and this is going to cost Canadians very dearly in terms of employment.

If I may get away from this negative, do-nothing situation in which the government finds itself, let me look in a more constructive way at what can be done to create more production and thus more jobs. It is clear to everyone in this House—certainly it is clear to industry—that in order to employ more people we must first produce more. In order to produce more we must have orders for our production. In other words, we must first sell more goods.

How are we going to do this? There are two ways. The first is greatly to increase our sales of products in the export market, a market that absorbs one-third of Canada's production. The second way we can increase sales of Canadian products, both in the export and the domestic market, is to reduce costs, and thereby selling price, thus making our products more competitive both here and in the export market. We must also sell products in greater volume.

May I first deal with making greater selling efforts in export markets. To achieve this we must do three things. First of all, we must start now to send a minimum of 25 trade missions a year, composed of businessmen engaged in the production of specific products, to those areas of the world where our trade commissioners advise us that Canadian products can be sold but are not being sold or, if they are already being sold, can be sold in greater volume. I say missions of businessmen because this is the only kind of trade mission that is effective. These businessmen will make contact with those who either sell their products in their stores or use their products in manufacturing processes carried on in the country in question. These businessman meet with those who sell or use their products, and they should convince them—this is the only way they will get orders—they can make a bigger profit by using Canadian products than by using the products they are presently using.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has been travelling around the world claiming that he is doing a great job of increasing sales to foreign markets. For example, he visits a country and meets the minister of trade, assures him that Canada wants to do more trade with his country, and the minister in turn assures our minister that his country wants to do more business with ours. They both are very happy with the whole thing. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce then goes to a large number of dinners and luncheons at which he meets the leading businessmen of the area and tells them that we want to do more business with their country. Then, their speakers one after the other assure the minister that their country wants to do more business with ours, and similarly everyone feels very happy at the whole thing. Then, they all go home and continue doing business exactly as they always have. This is because the vast majority of countries are not state trading nations. Business is placed by individual producers who sell to individual consumers because they can persuade them they can make more money by using their products than by using other products.

Although everyone in business is fully away of this situation, these fuzzy headed theorists have yet to learn it. They think that a ministerial visit of the kind our Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has been making is very successful and useful, whereas in actual fact it is absolutely worthless. The figures prove that.

• (1440)

In 1971, the first month of this year, Canadian trade with every country except the United States took a very severe drop. The only reason it went up with the United States is they used more and more of our raw materials to feed their factories to turn out products and provide employment for their people. We get very little employment from all this because it takes relatively little labour to take our raw materials out of the ground and ship them across the country in their raw state. The United States market is the one market on which we want desperately to become less dependent, and yet it is the only market in which we have increased our sales. In every market in the world there has been a very severe drop. Why? Because this government is not going after trade promotion in anything like an efficient and effective manner. So, I urge the minister for heaven's sake to adopt a practical approach and adopt it soon.

The second way we can increase sales in the export market is for this government to arrange a meeting between officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce and the businessmen of Canada in our industrial centers all across the country where the officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce could meet with the businessmen concerned and show them how the department can assist them to get into the export market and make sales. This is particularly important to small businessmen who have no idea how they can possibly sell a good proportion of their products in the export market.

The third way we can increase sales in the export market is to bring buyers to Canada, the important buyers of the world who number between 600 and 700 in the big markets of the world. They could be flown to Canada, accommodated, wined and dined and entertained and shown Canada's products at giant trade shows in Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver and Winnipeg. They could be shown all the heavy material we are so good at producing. They could be shown the factories across Canada where these machines are produced. This is the way to show the people around the world what we have and to take orders.

In addition to increasing sales in export markets, as I said we can increase sales both here in Canada and in the export market as well by lowering costs and selling prices and by making our product more competitive. How can we do this? We can do it by doing three things. First of all we must increase productivity. In this connection we should take note of what the Economic Council of Canada said a few months ago in its latest report when it said that if we, in Canada, are to be able to improve conditions in the work force every year Canadian industry must greatly increase its productivity.

This can be done by offering tax incentives for increased productivity in plants where it can be demonstrated that there is increased productivity and this can be demonstrated in any plant which wants to go after it. Such tax incentives would give industrial leaders some incentive to make a much higher expenditure in plant, machinery and the new production systems necessary to keep costs and selling prices down. These tax incentives will pay for themselves many times over in the months and years ahead because more products will be sold through their being more competitive and because more people will be employed instead of drawing unemployment insurance or direct relief. There would be more commodity taxes because more commodities would be sold. There would be more corporation taxes because lower costs reduce the overhead on individual products making available more profits to tax.

The second way we can keep prices down is to take steps to keep prices from rising at the very rapid rate at which they are rising at the present time. Prices should not be allowed to rise at a rate greater than 2.5 per cent a year which is the average yearly inflation for the past 17 years since the Dominion Bureau of Statistics started keeping a record of our yearly increase in inflation. Last year, as we know, inflation increased by 5 per cent or exactly twice the rate it should have increased. Inflation can be checked by introducing price and wage guidelines backed by the flat assertion by the government that if they are not observed the government is prepared to bring in price and wage controls. I have spoken to leaders of industry and labour about this matter. They have said privately to me that if the government should make it clear it would bring in mandatory price and wage controls; if guidelines are not observed they would have no alternative but to obey the guidelines the government sets to keep prices within the 2.5 per cent rise each year.

The third way to keep costs and prices down is to lower taxes. The way the government can lower taxes and certainly keep taxes from rising, which has been the case all along, is to stop wasting the taxpayer's money. A good example of how the government wastes the taxpayer's money was given a few days ago in an interview between the Director-General of Information Canada and a representative of the Globe and Mail. It turns out that although Information Canada was established several years ago at an initial cost of $7 million and has cost $7 million a year to operate since that time it has not achieved anything, but rather is doing what it was supposed to do far worse than it was being done before. Information Canada was supposed to collect reports from all the departments. They were supposed to be funnelled through Information Canada in order to be more easily available to the Canadian people. What has happened is that it takes about three weeks, for some reason or other which nobody knows, for information to come from the departments to Information Canada and be reprinted. So, if one wants to know what is going on in any department it takes exactly three weeks longer than was necessary before because previously all one had to do was call up the department and the public relations man would tell you exactly what you wanted to know. Now it is necessary to wait three weeks longer and this costs the Canadian taxpayer several millions of dollars a year to have far worse service than before.

What the Director-General of the department said is reported in the Globe and Mail of February 12 after an interview with a Globe and Mail reporter on February 11. Mr. Robert Phillips, deputy director-general of Information Canada was asked why there was such a great slowdown in information being made available. Here is what the reporter says:

Robert Phillips, deputy director-general of Information Canada, slaps his forehead, sighs a lot and rocks agitatedly on a genuine Canadian pine arrow-back chair that helps furnish his office on Shuter Street in Ottawa. Look,' he says, the situation is no better or worse than it was before we came on the scene. We deplore it as much as everyone else'.

Everybody knows the situation is a whole lot worse. Everybody knows this is the way the government wastes the taxpayer's money, that this is the reason taxes are going up and that costs of products are uncompetitive. I would simply say that the Prime Minister, in an interview last Friday after his speech in the House, was asked about what had been done or left undone regarding the unemployment situation in Canada. He said he would be glad to fight an election on the unemployment issue. Mr. Speaker, I simply say to him that if he is willing to fight the next election on the unemployment issue then he is a dead duck right now because all the polls which have been taken across the country on this government's handling or mishandling of the unemployment situation have shown that a steadily increasing majority of the Canadian people are thoroughly dissatisfied with what the government has been doing.

• (1450)

So I say in conclusion that when the Prime Minister finally does screw up his courage to go to the people, particularly if he decides to fight this election on the unemployment issue or on any other issue, the indication that I and most members of the House get is that the people of Canada will decide to elect a businesslike government in the future, a Conservative government, the only kind of government that demonstrates every day that it knows how to stimulate the economy, stimulate production and produce the kind of jobs that Canadian people not only need but deserve.

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): I begin today, Mr. Speaker, by congratulating the two respected and talented members of this House who were given the high honour of moving and seconding the motion that is now before us concerning the Speech from the Throne. I refer of course to the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) and the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie). Their speeches brought credit to them and to the people who sent them here.

Today I want to take advantage of the free range of the Throne Speech debate to deal with more than one issue. First, I want to talk about the needs of the far flung constituency of Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton and the people I have the honour to represent here. Second, I want to refer to the Official Languages Act which has assured Canadians that they can communicate with their government in English or in French. Third, I want to say that the ombudsman's role of putting flesh and blood to government is perhaps the primary responsibility of a private member like myself. For example, last week alone my office handled about 200 individual requests from the people I represent regarding a great variety of problems, and this is only possible when you have efficient and hardworking secretaries which I am privileged to have. I want to commend them and the work that they do which enables me to accomplish so much on behalf of the people whom I represent.

The constituency of Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton stretches from the edge of Ottawa to almost the edge of Pembroke and goes south as far as the town of Perth. It has 18 townships in three counties and eight towns plus many villages. It includes such differing communities as the historic French speaking community of Lapasse, with all its pride and its history, and it also has towns like Lanark and Carleton Place where British immigrants put down their roots many decades ago. It has the impressive and spacious new homes of spanking new developments near Carp and the uniquely planned town of Kanata in March Township. I have therefore constituents whose work takes them frequently to all parts of this world and whose incomes are well over the $10,000 a year mark. At the same time I represent some of those Canadians who are very poor. Unfortunately, in the entire Ottawa valley we have many more whose incomes are low than we have whose living standard is high.

I recognize the arguments for ecological care. I, along with other members of the House, was very proud to share in the parliament which created a full Department of the Environment, that brought in and passed the Canada Water Act, the Canada Clean Air Act, the arctic pollution control legislation, and so on. I know of the dangers of industrial growth, but at the same time I know the bitterness of poverty and the deadening, explosive results of human dreams and hopes that are chronically deferred, perpetually postponed. It is for this reason that the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hopkins) and myself were such avid supporters of the idea of a Department of Regional Economic Expansion in Canada when the bill was introduced soon after the 1968 election. It was a cause for real hope that an entire department of the government would be created, the sole purpose of which would be to generate growth in the more depressed or slow growth areas of Canada. As hon. members know, almost exactly two years ago the county of Renfrew was declared a special area under this act, an action for which I want to give the highest praise to the teamwork shared with me by my more senior colleague in the House the hon. member for Renfrew North.

In the eight townships of Renfrew county that I represent, and especially in the large town of Renfrew, this special designation has had a very positive impact. For Arnprior, Waba and Cobden, and throughout the entire area which falls within my constituency, some $2.5 million has been approved resulting in more than 600 possible jobs. I say possible jobs because all of the plans are not yet implemented and all of the jobs have not yet therefore been created. We needed this federal assistance because in the Ottawa valley, especially in the area that I represent, we had become, industrially speaking, too dependent on the over-tooled and over-equipped aircraft industry. For example, in my own constituency there is the one major magnesium mine in Canada formerly known as Dominion Magnesium Limited, now known as Chromasco at Haley Station. This mine, because of the situation in the aircraft industry and related problems, has cut down from 16 furnaces to eight, with the resulting lay-off of significant numbers of workers. Near the same location there is the last foundry of its type in our nation, the Haley Industries Ltd. which does very specialized light alloy castings. This plant is also under significant pressure.

Within the town of Renfrew we had the very large Renfrew Engineering and Aircraft Company which was closed one year ago. This came about as the result of the pressure on the aircraft industry and especially the lack of work that United Aircraft Corporation of Montreal had and therefore the drop of orders in Renfrew. At the moment in Arnprior we have the Vertol-Boeing plant which is under similar pressures.

I recount all of this to point out simply that the designation of Renfrew county as a special area was not something that was done for no reason or through some whim but for very substantial reasons indeed because without this designation we would have been in a very bleak situation. In spite of the rather remarkable results that have come about as a result of Renfrew county being designated, it is my conviction that because of the significant pressures on the aircraft industry we are really not that much further ahead than we were before, and the designation which terminates on June 30, 1972 simply must be reinstated and must be prolonged. It is to achieve this end that the hon. member for Renfrew North and myself are now working very hard.

Growth in the county of Lanark has been steady. There the industrial base is more diversified and therefore the job opportunities far more substantial and far more secure than has been the case in Renfrew. Carleton County, of course, the third county of which I have the privilege to represent a portion, has some of the best farm land in Canada. This area, being closer to Ottawa and therefore to the national capital, has significant development coming its way, such as the recently announced large expansion to the Carp airport. These developments accrue to it automatically, but such is not now nor has it been the case for Renfrew County. I think I am in the rather awkward position, as a Member of Parliament with responsibilities for the three counties in my constituency, of always being vulnerable, as is any elected representative, to the charge of playing favourites. The fact remains however, that Renfrew County needed to be designated to a more significant degree than the other two because it had suffered far more loss of income through its very peculiar situation of being so heavily tied into the aircraft industry. So this special federal aid, more aid than has ever before been given to the County of Renfrew, must be continued and that is something that is of prime importance.

• (1500)

Now, Mr. Speaker, in case some critic, and in public life we get many critics, should rush to condemn me because I have not yet mentioned agriculture, I want to spend a few moments referring to the agriculture industry. The people in my constituency who produce manufacturing or industrial milk have been significantly assisted by the real improvement in milk prices, especially the improvement that occurred when our surpluses were reduced in Canada and we did not have to keep so much of the holdback from going into the pockets of the farmers.

Beef prices have been good and beef farmers have been doing relatively well, although higher prices for replacement cattle are beginning to squeeze the profit margin significantly. The third product that is important in my constituency is hogs. We all recognize that hog prices were very low in recent months, and it is for that reason the federal government has just announced a $5 per hog special subsidy for up to 200 hogs. This will mean that many of my hog producers will receive outright cash assistance from the federal treasury totalling $1,000. It is a once only subsidy because many hog producers were anxious that we should not create a policy which would result in many people rushing into the industry, thereby further deflating hog prices. The government has taken action to improve the situation. To the average hog producer it has been very welcome and needed action.

Egg prices, like hog prices, have been unusually low but the future looks brighter for egg producers. One reason is that this House has passed Bill C-176. These are vitally important actions, especially the passage of Bill C-176, for such producers as egg producers and the federal assistance should be a real boon to hog producers who have been having a difficult time.

As I mentioned at the outset, I wish to turn to yet another topic. The people I represent have strong feelings about strikes and labour unrest. I would be less than responsible in representing them if I did not take advantage of the Throne Speech debate to point that out. At the moment, I am receiving some very intense pressure from all the different and conflicting sides of labour struggles, such as the present electronic technicians' strike. On the one hand, I hear from people who believe very firmly that the government should settle at once, meet the demands and settle. Others believe very firmly that we should outlaw strikes, while a third group insists that we should hold the payline and not set off another spiral of inflation such as that triggered by the seaway settlement of a few years ago. Like other members, I get it from all sides.

It seems to me that in this day and age we have to move away from the old style labour relations, namely confrontation. I am sure every Canadian has very real sympathy with what is happening in the United Kingdom where the Conservative government of Prime Minister Heath has seen the nation literally brought to its knees and faced with national bankruptcy while the people suffer incredible hardships because of the very difficult labour situation in the coal strike. We in Canada must work hard and do all we can to prevent a similar situation from ever occurring here. The truth is that the public suffers no matter in what area the strike is. I regret that I do not have any smart answers or simple solutions, because I do not think there are any. We need to rethink our labour relations so that we do not get into the position of having industry and the public at large chronically handicapped from strikes or slowdowns. We must move to stop this sort of action.

It is interesting to note that the United States, which has just settled a long standing strike on the west coast, estimates that the nation lost $23 million a day during that time. A strike of that proportion is a luxury that we cannot afford nor, I hasten to add, can we afford to diminish the right of workers to bargain collectively. This front and how to improve it is one of the real challenges of this decade which we must meet ere the 1980s are upon us.

Soon after the last election this government introduced the Official Languages Act. The prime purpose of that act was to give official status in the government of Canada and the agencies of the government, to English and to French. The basic assumption of the Official Languages Act was that most Canadians would never speak more than one language, so in order to enable Canadians who spoke only one language to deal with their government the government gave them the legal right to use either language. While that act was before this House, Mr. Speaker, every one of the four political parties supported it and suggested that this was a just and fair move. Every political party and every political party leader voted for the bill and supports it to this day. The Liberals supported it, the Progressive Conservatives supported it, the New Democratic Party supported it and the Ralliement Créditiste supported it. No political party opposed it. The House rarely shows such unanimity and agreement.

On Friday morning last the Leader of the Progressive Conservative party, who is also the Leader of the Official Opposition, (Mr. Stanfield) gave his party's official rebuttal to the government's program when he participated in the debate on the Speech from the Throne. It would seem to me that was the time when any flaw in the government's approach would have been pounced upon and, politics being the art of discrediting those in power, we might have expected any and every difficulty in our society to be attributed directly to the government's desire to destroy and diminish. It is traditional in the parliamentary process that the failure to meet any human need not yet fully met be made to appear a direct result of government callousness, any injustice turned to appear as though the government loved evil and hated good. That is the game; we all understand the rules. In parliamentary democracy we believe that good will does come by such exaggeration; that democracy is best served by the people being suspicious of every and all governments. It also means that if there is a real issue, or what might even appear to be an issue of real injustice being perpetrated, then it would be a very inept and bungling opposition that failed to trumpet it from the rooftops.

So, Mr. Speaker, it was with great care that I listened to the Conservative party leader's speech on Friday I even reread his remarks carefully in Hansard. What I expected to find and what I heard was there only in part. I emphasize, it was there only in part. The government was condemned by the official opposition because it is still negotiating with the United States on items on which there is still some outstanding difference. Secondly, the government was condemned because, as the Prime Minister has reminded us, there is a need for more job creation and because a number of our citizens are unemployed. We were told that even though more than 200,000 new jobs were created in 1971, that was not good enough. There must be more yet. We were, of course, reminded by the Prime Minister that this item has been given a very high priority.

• (1510)

The Leader of the Opposition attacked the government on several issues, some real and some imagined. However, to my utter amazement, one issue was not mentioned at all. There was no reference to the Official Languages Act, or to the government's implementation of that act, which every party supported when it was before the House. That act was not attacked by the Leader of the Progressive Conservative party. He did not even mention it. Nor was the government attacked by him on the language issue at all. Actually, the Leader of the Official Opposition went so far, and I say this with some amazement, as to make a large portion of his speech in very fine French. That seems very strange to me, because I just read in the Arnprior newspapers that the Progressive Conservative party in my constituency considered the issues of the economy and of bilingualism to be the two major issues on which this government was most vulnerable. That party proposed to attack the government on those issues, and to fight the next election on them. What happened? Why was there that change?

In the first place, the Liberal government, under the leadership of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said that because most Canadians will always speak only one language, it is necessary for them to be able to do business with their government in either of those official languages. In the second place, the Leader of the Official Opposition, who is the Leader of the Progressive Conservative party, stood up and made his speech in French and in English. If press reports are accurate, he has formed a 26-member committee to organize on behalf of his party in the province of Quebec. He has done that because the Leader of the Official Opposition believes that he leads a party that should be taken seriously as a national party bringing forward representatives in all parts of Canada, from one coast to the other. The New Democratic Party of course officially supported the Official Languages Act when it was before the House and I presume they still support it. The Creditistes support that legislation. So, since all four of our political parties support it, I am forced to but one conclusion, namely, that there is a new political party in eastern Ontario. Apparently the letters E.O.P.C. might mean, "Eastern Ontario Progressive Conservatives." Yet, apparently, they do not mean that at all. The letters E.O.P.C. apparently stand for a new and fifth political force in Canada, the party that might be called the "English Only Party of Canada".

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member is trying to be very clever. What is his point?

Mr. McBride: I do not know who their leader is. Obviously, it is not the Leader of the Official Opposition, because he is not anti-French. He is not anti-Quebec. I would dare to say that he seeks to lead a national party, with support all across Canada in every province. He seeks the support of all, whether they speak French or English. He would hardly do as the leader of an "English Only Party of Canada".

Mr. Alexander: What is the point of this?

Mr. McBride: Actually, he speaks French very well.

Mr. Alexander: What is the point?

Mr. McBride: I presume that the Leader of the Opposition wants to convey that any government that that hon. gentleman might form would be able to deal with Canadians in both official languages. So, it would appear that in this country we have the Liberal party, the Progressive Conservative party, the New Democratic Party, the Creditistes and the E.O.P.C. Do those letters stand for the Eastern Ontario Progressive Conservative Party? No, not at all. They stand for the "English Only Party of Canada," whose platform consists primarily of two points, the economy and the Official Languages Act, or bilingualism.

This is a very strange situation and it becomes stranger yet, Mr. Speaker, when one realizes that last Wednesday evening a member of this House went to speak to this party in my constituency. He was the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McBride: When he spoke there, he encouraged the faithful to pursue their attack on the government on the issues of the economy and bilingualism. He used the most remarkable argument when speaking on the subject of bilingualism. I am almost embarrassed to repeat what he said. He used the "some of my best friends are French" routine. That was rather startling, because he reminded me of people like the Reverend Ian Paisley, who would say that some of his best friends are Catholics, and of George Wallace, who would say that some of his best friends are negroes. Apparently some of the best friends of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, according to what he said in the Ottawa Valley, are French. Of course, when he speaks in the House he has a foot in both parties. Officially, he is a member of the official opposition, the party that is neither anti-French nor anti-Quebec and that is led by a man who is widely respected in this House as being fair.

To be perfectly fair, may I quote from an editorial that appeared in one of our local daily newspapers on January 18:

> The opposition of Western Conservatives to the Official Languages Act is still recent enough to rankle.

The author was referring to Quebec. I continue:

> Moreover, some Conservative politicians, in attacking the Trudeau government, have tried to make it appear that Quebec is getting too large a share of public investment to fight unemployment. These attacks also rankle, for payments to Quebec have merely been proportionate to the rest of the country's.
>
> Such criticism of federal policy has helped give the Conservative party an anti-Quebec image. Mr. Stanfield will need more than an organizing committee, however competent, to overcome it.

So, we come to this basic question: will this new party in eastern Ontario campaign against us on the grounds that the greatest amount of federal funds and assistance of all time have come into the Ottawa valley? That is hardly likely.

Mr. Alexander: Think about B.C.

Mr. McBride: Will they campaign against us because the government took action six months prior to the closing down of the Renfrew aircraft plant and designated Renfrew County? That is hardly likely. Will they campaign against us on the ground that we have had the largest and best trade growth in Canadian history? That is hardly likely. Will they condemn us for increasing veterans' pensions? Not at all. Will they condemn us for increasing old age security benefits? Not at all, no. Apparently the Achilles heel of this government as they see it will be that we have a Prime Minister who is partly of French Canadian descent, that six out of 26, or about one fifth of our cabinet ministers, are French speaking, and that we have introduced a law that says you can speak to your government either in French or in English. That is what we are to be attacked on, Mr. Speaker.

It was Reinhold Niebuhr, one of the great philosophical and forward looking minds of our continents who wrote:

A free society requires some confidence in the ability of men to reach tentative and tolerable adjustments between their competing interests and to arrive at some common notions of justice which transcend all partial interests. A consistent pessimism in regard to man's rational capacity for justice invariably leads to absolutistic political theories; for they prompt the conviction that only preponderant power can coerce the various vitalities of a community into a working harmony. But a too consistent optimism in regard to man's ability and inclination to grant justice to his fellows obscures the perils of chaos which perennially confront every society, including a free society. In one sense a democratic society is particularly exposed to the dangers of confusion. If these perils are not appreciated they may overtake a free society and invite the alternative evil of tyranny.

But modern democracy requires a more realistic philosophical and religious basis, not only in order to anticipate and understand the perils to which it is exposed; but also to give it a more persuasive justification. Man's capacity for justice makes democracy possible; but man's inclination to injustice makes democracy necessary.

• (1520)

These words need repeating in the Ottawa Valley right now. "Man's capacity for justice makes democracy possible; but man's inclination to injustice makes democracy necessary." There may be times to encourage prejudices, but this is not one of them. I'm convinced that the Canadian people will respond to elementary fairness and are prepared to respond more positively. More people want to work at lighting candles than want to go on cursing the darkness. This is a time for standing together and understanding together. It is time to think Canadian from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It is a time to remember we have more things to be proud of than establishing new parties to fight against the elementary fairness that came into this House when the Official Languages Act was brought forth. I hope all Canadians will remember that this measure was supported by the leader of every political party and by the majority of members of every political party in this House. It leaves me rather distressed to note there are still political groups in Canada who feel there is political hay to be made by condemning this elementary fairness that has come to this nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I am more familiar with the mover than the seconder who is one of the newer members. The mover has always expressed himself very eloquently in this House. I sat on the Standing Committee on Agriculture with him. I have noted that if he desires, he can outline the facts as they exist. However, I was somewhat surprised to note that we were both looking at the same problem with the same idea in mind.

His speech was very reminiscent of speeches of years gone by when Liberal spokesmen always stated that we never had it so good. I was somewhat amazed when he stated that the greatest problem facing our people was to get coloured television sets instead of black and white and to have two or three cars for every family instead of one. I was a member of a committee that toured part of his constituency. I did not gain the impression that his constituency was throbbing with vitality. There is a lot that can be done in that area. Some Liberal members of that committee also visited my area. The committee toured all of Canada. We found that things are not as rosy as the government would have us believe.

We should bear in mind that this is an election year, or so we are led to believe. Of course, during an election year there is a transformation. The just society is beginning to appear in a different form than the one to which we have become accustomed during the past three years. It is as though a person were crawling through a desert in search of a drink of water to quench his thirst. If he makes it to the finish line, he will get his drink of water. If he managed to survive these three years, he will be rewarded. This is the turn the just society has taken.

I wonder why we do not hear very much about the just society any more. That slogan seems doomed to be phased out, as are many other things under this government. There is the strange phenomena of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suddenly coming to the rescue of the monarchy. At the same time he is making such an interesting defence, we have the behind the scenes spectacle of the removal of all the symbols. In fact, today's question period was indicative of that. No longer is the RCMP to be known as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. It is things such as this that are undermining our society and eroding what has been symbolic of Canada. No one can say that the uniform of the RCMP is not symbolic of what is truly Canadian. If one has any doubt about this, one need only stand in front of the Parliament Buildings and see the number of visitors wanting to have their pictures taken with members of that force. They feel that everyone knows the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Every child can see this, but apparently not the ministry. I do not want to dwell on this point.

What has happened to the just society as it applies to the Indian and Métis? Why are the Indians and Métis raising such problems with the minister in charge of that department? Why do they have to protest so viciously or suggest that perhaps violence is the answer to some of their problems? Recently the minister in charge of Indians and Métis in Saskatchewan, Mr. Bowerman, suggested it might be good enough for the Indians in the north to live in log houses. It irritates the Indians and Métis greatly to see the homes of the Indian agents, Hudson's Bay employees, the clergy and school teachers, which are all modern dwellings. For the Indian family, a log house is supposed to be sufficient. One can see how much the government has done for these people and why it is they speak out as they do. The just society has not yet reached them. They have heard about it. It has reached many Canadians.

In 1968 Canadians reached out for the man who was leading the Liberal party. They thought he had a terrific slogan. The just society was a real hope for them. This word travelled throughout the country. Like drowning people, they reached out in the hope he would give them a hand. He blew them a kiss. That is where the just society ended. Now, it is all over. They can no longer reach out for this man. In fact, they no longer want to reach out for him. Some people wonder why his popularity has decreased. It is because his credibility has decreased. He cannot fool all the people all the time.

I was a member of the same committee as the mover of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. We were concerned about some of the quotas that would be lost. He said that if you do not produce and ship enough cream, 420 pounds a year, you cannot get a subsidy. It is understandable that some people believe the Liberal policy is to drive the small farmer off the land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: What has happened now? Just before the election, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has come forward and said "Look what we are going to do." We were previously told that there was no point in trying to pay a subsidy because it was administratively impossible. We were told that there would be so much bookwork the computer would be jammed. Now, as election time approaches, we find that the same computer has had this information all these years. Now, the information is being handed out. There are 30,000 producers affected in the three prairie provinces. Do you think these people will forget? No just society there, Mr. Speaker. But the Liberals think they can fool the people. In no way can you expect these people to accept such treatment. Do you think they want to live one year in four?

• (1530)

What about the hog situation? Lo and behold, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) comes along. He is going to make a big statement. Oh, he says, we are coming to the rescue of the hog producers. He indicated that the government was at least giving consideration to the question because of the depressed prices. Time and time again questions on this subject have been raised in the House. There are a lot of people in the west who sell to the auction market. Who will get the payment? The operator of the auction, because these people do not have the slips which indicate the type and grade of the hogs they ship. A man may have the best hogs, but he is not going to get anything. What happened? Prices went down. There are a lot of people in the weanling business. They sell to the people who finish off the hogs. Because prices were low, what kind of price did they get? They had to take a lower price because the man who finished them off said, look, I cannot pay you any more, you have to take less. It was reasonable that he should pay less. But now, come election time, they up the price to the one who finishes but leave the other guy sitting high and dry. They are not going to do anything for him. There is not much justice there. Yet it is the breeders who produce the weanlings and breed the sows who take the biggest risk. It is in the first six or eight weeks that the biggest losses occur. They would have received maybe two dollars more for their hogs, but, instead, they sold them for $5 or $6 a hog. There is not much justice there.

Then, of course, Mr. Speaker, you know, along comes the stabilization program, the stabilization program with regard to which the minister has said, oh well, it was the opposition who delayed it. Now, Mr. Speaker, you know that if the minister was so sure that it was the right type of program he would not have been in difficulty. Oh yes, the bill might have taken a little longer but, after all, Bill C-176 did go through. The government did have its majority and they did ram it through whether it was acceptable or not to the opposition, whether it will damage total production in the end or not. They did ram it through, but in this case the minister said, oh well, we could not do anything because it meant putting up money. Now, in this case, it was a transitional payment which was involved. You know, Mr. Speaker, there is a definition of transitional payment. It is money that governments pay to voters prior to the change-over of the government. It is a transitional payment which was involved. In this case it was a bit too early, a bit too soon.

Of course, there is no mention of it in the Speech from the Throne, but as we know some things are mentioned in the Speech from the Throne which are never put into effect and others which are not mentioned are carried out. So you do not know where you are with this government. The minister has indicated in all his speeches in the west that he will be back. I hope he will. I hope he can understand that in the wintertime farmers do a lot of mathematics, a lot of book work. Their pencils are sharp and they are pretty sharp, too; they can figure out where they are getting the short end of the stick. They are not going to be fooled this time.

During the recess an announcement was made and, of course, every western paper got a little article submitted by none other that the Minister of Justice in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) similar to the announcement he made through a little slip from the Wheat Board recently that they were going to pay out so much money. But this was the greatest break-through in his entire career. He wanted the people to believe that he was the one who had the two-price system idea and sold it to the cabinet. I wonder what claim to fame the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has. It was while he was in charge of the Wheat Board that the announcement of $1.95 for domestic wheat was made. Apparently he had sold somebody on something. We thought then he was coming up with an acreage payment or a two-price system.

What did we find? It is a re-heated, warmed-up acreage payment. Lo and behold, after all this time, after all this fanfare, we find out in the Speech from the Throne that it is not to be a two-price system, it is to be an acreage payment. This is interesting. An acreage payment is not a break-through because since 1959 we have had an acreage payment. Payments went out, and farmers in those days were satisfied that they were in lieu of the two-price system. But let us watch this drama unfold. It is full of intrigue. The minister goes to Assiniboia in a by-election and says to the electors: If you elect a Liberal candidate you will get the two-price system because he will work for it. This is the first inkling we had that he was actually working on something and wanted to announce it. But come on boys, come on. That is how we used to call horses with a little pan of oats. That is how we lured them into a barn.

Mr. Lang: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I simply want to tell the hon. member that if he is referring to what I said he should be as accurate as possible. What I told the electors in Assiniboia was that if they sent a Liberal member to the House of Commons the two-price system would be a big step closer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Korchinski: I will accept what the minister has said. But obviously we did not need a Liberal in the House, since, obviously, a step has been taken.

Mr. Lang: Some of us doubled our work, that is all.

Mr. Korchinski: Act two! Everybody gets excited. The word goes out. The press publishes it. The minister goes on television to talk about the greatest break-through in a century. Everybody is wondering how are they going to pay it. Would it be in the form of acreage payments? No, too much like the Diefenbaker years. The debate is taken up by various commentators. Then act three comes along. The minister invites the ministers of agriculture from the three prairie provinces. They are meeting to discuss how this will be paid out. The ministers get together with their officials and begin working on the plan. Of course, there is much publicity. They are at work. There are consultations. Then, of course, we go on to act four. The farm organizations are asked how they would like to have this payment. Everybody is at work. Look at all the publicity we are getting. Everybody is busy at the pool committees. It is discussed at the country elevators. They submit representations and the delegates at the pool offices get their heads together. Farm unions are taking credit. So everybody is busy, and that is the end of act four.

• (1540)

We now come to act five. The Throne Speech announces some acreage payments. Do you think for a moment, Mr. Speaker, that that announcement was made at a time when the minister did not know how the payments were going to be made? He must think people are stupid and tries to let everyone run around in circles. The reason we have been losing what sales to Japan, according to some reports, is that we do not have sufficient ships available at Vancouver.

Then, to add to the drama the minister introduces act six, wherein he refuses to give the House information. When this question was raised in the House today the minister refused to give information, and as a result there is more waiting, more guessing. Are the payments going to be related to this or to that? Will they be paid directly to the farmers or be paid into the pool, now that the pool accounts have been closed off? Or will they be paid at the end of the crop year? All of these are possibilities. And so we add to the drama.

Having said that the pool accounts are closed off now reminds me that last year the payment had to wait until there was an election in the province of Saskatchewan. For some reason they could not close off the accounts; there was supposed to be too much work at the Wheat Board. Since the election last year was of no assistance to the government they are now trying a different strategy. Apparently, it is now not too much trouble to close the pool accounts early. Again, the government thinks we are stupid.

There seems to be a lot of election talk around here.

Mr. Lang: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Korchinski: I just have a few minutes and there are some other matters I want to remind the minister about. For example, on January 22, 1969 I moved the adjournment of the House in order to discuss the shipping problem at Vancouver. Apparently in three years the minister has not learned very much. He does not apparently know that we have a winter or that we need to speed grain shipments. Although the minister talks about grain sales, how are we going to increase sales unless we can guarantee delivery? Knowing that we presently have a backlog of sales, no customer is going to consider purchasing more at the present time. The minister cannot tell me we are not losing sales simply because we cannot deliver.

During the past three years no plan has been formulated to deal with just such an emergency as this. We are getting into the same situation time and time again. In light of President Nixon's visit to China, I think we should go after all the sales we can since we do not know what will be the outcome of his visit. It may well be that the United States will cut into our sales to China, and it is possible we will have to go scrounging a lot harder for sales. Certainly, we derive no comfort from the minister's claims of increasing sales.

Under the minister's stabilization plan the farmers would have had to carry a deficit of $10 million on their own shoulders. The government has an obligation to pay that $10 million. After all, since we used to get $2.12 a bushel for our wheat, anyone who thinks that as a result of the recent announcement the public will leap for the Liberals is just dreaming.

Mr. Osler: How much more wheat would you have sold, then?

Mr. Korchinski: Just let me illustrate to the minister what this payment is going to mean to the farmers. In the year 1959-60 there were 225,000 permit book holders in Canada and their acreage payments worked out to about $190 each. Today those 225,000 producers would receive roughly $240 each, in other words, an increase of about $50 over a span of ten years.

Let me look at some comparisons. Our total budgetary expenditures in 1959 were $5.3 billion. In 1960 they were $5.7 billion. For this year they amount to $13.1 billion. In other words, since there has been a 2.3 times increase in ten years, we should be paying 2.3 times as much as we paid our producers in 1960, which means they should be receiving $440, not $240. In other words, they are being short changed. Yet the government is trying to lead them into believing that they are getting a better deal. Although we have had a final payment of $1.99 a bushel, last year we were down to $1.60 and predictions for this year are that it will go even lower.

Let us examine the net income received by farm operators in the three prairie provinces. In 1960 they received $640 million. In 1962 they received $910 million. Then, after almost ten years of Liberal rule, in 1971 they received $502 million, but there were 35,000 fewer farmers. Not much justice there, Mr. Speaker. With regard to total operating costs, from 1959 to 1963 the cost was $683 million average. In 1971 it was $1,147 million. Not much justice there, either.

In the few remaining minutes at my disposal I want to remind the House of a toast I once heard to justice. It went something like this: "Here's to justice in this fair land, I just got a divorce from the old man; I had to laugh at the judge's decision, he gave him the kids and they wasn't his'n"! That toast pretty well illustrates the type of justice we have in our society today.

I obtained certain information from the deputy minister's office regarding personal income taxes since the government has been telling us about the number of people who will pay less income tax. It appears that in 1970, 9,195,000 people paid income tax. The estimated number for 1971 is 9,498,000 and for 1972, 9,436,000. In other words, only 60,000 fewer people, it is estimated, will pay personal income tax in 1972 compared with 1971. So why all this talk about millions of people who will not have to pay income tax? These are the figures that were provided to me this afternoon. What has been done in the meantime? The propaganda machine has been hard at work illustrating justice Liberal style. I do not think the people of this country can be fooled very long.

• (1550)

I have illustrated the income position of our farmers. I have illustrated, by comparison, what this means in terms of dollars and cents. I have illustrated the intrigue which has been built up. All we have is Information Canada and a big bureaucracy hard at work trying to sell an idea which cannot be sold. In no way will the unemployed people in my area be satisfied when their payments are two months in arrears. This is all for the sake of what? A revamped plan. If one is unemployed how can one have sufficient money on which to get along? Figures were quoted in respect of an exemption of $1,500. What is there to be proud about in the fact that somebody has not earned $1,500 in this country. A person cannot live on bread and water and the roots in the ground. One still needs a few clothes and so on. Then, there is the matter of rent.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, but I believe I have said enough to point out that there is no just society and to point out that there is a good deal of propagandizing. Everybody in the west is cynical about the situation. When there was frozen damp grain on the ground, the government should have come to their rescue. Then, the people might have believed the government. But the government left them alone to fight for themselves. Then, the rules in respect of cash advances were changed to make it impossible to get payments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure I have the opportunity to speak in the debate on the Speech from the Throne. I was quite interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) on the recent by-election in Assiniboia. I should like to remind the hon. member for Mackenzie that it was not the Conservative party which won the by-election in Assiniboia. I should like to remind the hon. member that it was not the Conservative party that, over the years has advocated the two-price system for wheat, but rather the New Democratic Party. I should like also to remind the hon. member that it was not the Conservative party which stood to the end against the government's grain stabilization bill but rather the New Democratic Party.

I come from an area of the country which is one of the finest grain and cattle-producing areas in existence. The city of Weyburn and the many towns in the riding are an integral part of the agricultural areas surrounding them, The life style of people in this area is based on hard work, along with co-operation with one's fellow man. That is why the area's economy is very much based on the principles of the co-op and credit union movement.

I should like to deal with the references in the Speech from the Throne to agriculture in general. The last four years of Liberal government could very well be called the wasted years. During the Parliamentary recess, I spent my time travelling the 34,000 square miles of the Assiniboia constituency. In the many towns and rural communities, the farmers reminded me of the very difficult economic situation in which they find themselves under this present Liberal government. They find their way of life being threatened by the increasing difficulties faced by farm people. It is the record of this government in coming to grips with these problems I want to deal with today.

While travelling the riding I heard the announcement of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board of a two-price system for wheat. The establishment press immediately heralded the announcement as a great victory for the minister. We in the west have given up believing the establishment press a long time ago. The farmers I talked to in Assiniboia were not so quick to heap praise on the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, the very same man who initiated the erroneous Lift program.

How well farmers remember their battles with the old parties, be it Liberal or Conservative, to initiate a two-price system for wheat. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the farmers do not forget their friends, for it was the old CCF and NDP that stated the case for the two-price system here in the House of Commons. The Assiniboia by-election indicated the complete rejection of the government's record in the field of agriculture. Now, we see the government attempting to repent its wasted years. Last minute repentance on the part of this government will do it no good in the next federal election. The farmers I talked to in the Assiniboia area told me to point out a few facts to the government.

First of all, the grain producers are quite concerned about the method of paying out the additional moneys. We shall wait in anticipation for a detailed statement by the minister on the method of distribution. I suppose the government is going to use the two-price system as a cure-all for agricultural policies. I am sure in the next election the government will convey to the non-farmers in this country that all possible has been done to aid the farmer. May I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that prices on other grains in the last year have reached some all-time lows. For example, on September 22, 1971 the price of rye was 92 cents per bushel, the price for barley was 99 cents per bushel and the price of oats was 61 cents per bushel. Yet the cost of production continues to rise, catching the farmer in a cost-price squeeze. This government's phony war on inflation did not prevent the cost of farm machinery parts from going up. Why not any action on the Barber Royal Commission's recommendations on the price of farm machinery? The government should be aware of the need to bolster the price of all grain sold in the market. The government should concern itself with developing a guaranteed annual income for farmers as well as all Canadians.

If I may digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, I see the member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) has given recognition to the fact that a certain group in Regina has named the minister in charge of the Wheat Board salesman of the year. Here in the eastern press that undoubtedly looks impressive. Well, we in Saskatchewan have seen Liberal politicians presented with this honour before. As a matter of fact, this award is usually a step along natural progression to political oblivion for Liberal politicians.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Or to the Senate; the same thing.

Mr. Knight: Lately the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has been singing quite a tune about how this government is really committed to the concept of the family farm. It seems the task force report on agriculture will not be easily accepted by the farmers, and it certainly should not be. As usual the government is announcing some rather doubtful programs under some fancy sounding titles. For example, there is the small farms development program. How strange it is that such a well-titled program cannot seem to get the agreement of the provincial governments. The minister claims the program is to benefit the small farmer. I suggest this program, without considerable revision is merely a subtle means of carrying out the recommendations of the task force report. I challenge the minister to show this House how there will be the same number of farmers in Canada as there is now once the small farms development program is in operation. The minister knows that farm depopulation will continue as long as the farmer is caught in the cost-price squeeze and the government encourages small farmers off the land by allowing the Farm Credit Corporation to sell their land to existing farmers. There is no provision to enable a young man who is not farming to get the land.

• (1600)

One question that could be asked is: is there any restriction on agrabusiness or land speculators obtaining the land? This is not small farm development, but small farm consolidation, nothing more. The Minister of Agriculture has recently announced a $5 subsidy on pigs to a maximum of 200, this is on pigs with a carcass quality of 100 or higher. The deficiency payment on hogs does not take into account some very important changes in the hog farming business since the Agricultural Stabilization Act was introduced in 1957-58. There have been a number of complaints from hog producers who have specialized in production of weanlings which they sell to feeders for finishing, but the deficiency payment is not related to them. Many small producers will not benefit because of the carcass quality of 100 ruling. In Saskatchewan the program does not take into account the many joint hog raising operations. How will the subsidy relate to an operation run by more than one farmer? I hope the minister will consider making some changes for the farmers who face these particular difficulties.

In the last year, the government introduced the grain income stabilization bill. The principle of stabilizing the grain income of farmers met with no barriers from anyone involved with agricultural policy. However, the program outlined by the government was totally unsatisfactory. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) totally mishandled the bill in the House of Commons. The government, being committed by law to pay moneys under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, went ahead with a new plan and broke the law by withholding the payments to which they were committed. Now, that same minister is in charge of administering justice for all Canadians. What irony, Mr. Speaker. It seems that imposing injustice on western farmers is a prerequisite to being put in charge of administering justice on behalf of this government.

Let us examine what is wrong with the minister's grain stabilization policy. First of all, it is a disaster plan, not a stabilization plan. Pay-outs only come when the entire industry faces a disaster. The farmers in Assiniboia often suffer from drought while others in the prairie region do not. This plan was of no benefit to their particular circumstances. The plan begins in years when receipts were unusually low, thus making the possibility of a pay-out in the near future very limited. Furthermore, the farmers would no longer receive the dried-out bonus, as inadequate as it was and, secondly, the government was no longer committed to payment on the storage of wheat under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. The cost of storage would fall upon the farmers when prices for farm commodities were already too low. The most important drawback in the plan was the use of the gross income basis instead of net income or net cash receipts basis. Every farmer knows that you can have a high gross income, but it is how much you have left after you pay the bills that counts.

Mr. Yewchuk: Whose warmed over speech is that?

Mr. Knight: It is my own speech, my friend. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board may reintroduce the stabilization bill without revision, but I can assure him that the farmers of the prairie region will find it as unacceptable as before. Any grain income stabilization plan must consider rising costs of production and regional differences within the western provinces. There should also be provision for payment of storage costs of all grains under the Wheat Board jurisdiction.

The farmers in Assiniboia expressed grave concern over the transportation system which moves their products as well as handles their machinery from the east. It has been noted that the Canadian Freight Association has filed tariff No. 1003 to take effect on February 11, 1972. Freight rates are to be increased by 3 per cent to 8 per cent on about one third of the goods carried by the railways. In general, grain and grain product rates are subject to the increase, except statutory rates and traffic moving under agreed charges. Here is an example of what happens to a farmer's product when shipped. This is a letter from a farmer in the Riceton area which I received several months ago explaining what happened to a shipment of his malting barley. I should like to read it into the record.

I am a comparatively small farmer by today's standards on a section and a half, 25 miles from Regina, Saskatchewan on the Regina Plains, which is supposedly the best grain farming land in the world. Like many farmers, I must grow a number of different kinds of grain in order to be in a position to market something for revenue.

This past summer I grew some barley and made preparations in my permit book to market one carload of barley for malting purposes. A sample was sent to Winnipeg for analysis immediately after I threshed this grain. The report from Winnipeg stated it would grade Dry, 3. C. W.—6 row—Malting.

In early November I received permission from the Wheat Board to deliver to the elevator in Riceton one carload of malting barley. This was unloaded in Winnipeg on November 14, 1971 as malting barley. I would now like to relate exactly what happened to my barley before I received any remuneration whatsoever.

I asked that payment for this carload be deferred until January 3, 1972. Payment was based as follows—91 cents per bushel plus 5 cents premium for a total of 96 cents gross weight, 2749.2 bushels, less 4 per cent dockage, 110 bushels, with a net grain shipped, 2639 bushels at 96 cents a bushel, which comes to $2,533.63.

The charges against that shipment are as follows: freight on a carload to Winnipeg, 20 cents per 100 pounds, for a total of $263.92; government weighing and inspection, $4.50; terminal cleaning charges on 2749 bushels, $13.75; country elevator handling charges, $103.10; service charge at 1 cent per bushel, $39.59; storage charge, $43.98; interest on freight, $3.64—amounting to a net loss of $472.48.

The farmer points out in the letter attached to this shipment that he lost one fifth of the shipment to the grain trade, or 20 per cent. Not only that, but he asks why interest was charged on the freight? What became of the screenings from the cleaning process? Do they go into the manufacture of expensive prepared feeds? Did the company not need the barley, and why is the farmer paying the freight charges? He asks what the service charge is for.

These are the kinds of things that catch farmers in a cost price squeeze, but I, and I am sure most of the citizens in Assiniboia, find it totally unreasonable. Not only are such increases in freight rates of concern to the farmer but the future of the delivery points are of concern as well. Whey did the government withhold its new transportation policy from public scrutiny? Could it be the political repercussions of the proposals in the policy statement? Will the government be adhering to a policy of decreasing the number of delivery points? Where will the Liberal party stand on the issue of rail line abandonment when it comes before the Canadian Transport Commission by 1974? How many lines will be up for abandonment in the Assiniboia constituency? Will the lines running west of Radville to Willow Bunch be abandoned? Will the lines running west of Estevan be abandoned? Which of the two old line parties will be the first to jump to the defence of their old friends, the railway companies, when rail line abandonment is again a possibility?

• (1610)

Mr. Speaker, the issue of the retention of the family farm as the basic unit of production in agriculture has not come to an end. The question of price for their commodities is still with us. The question of delivery points abandonment is still with us; the question of an adequate transportation system is still with us; the question of rail line abandonment is still with us; the memory of the Lift program is still with us; the memory of the inadequate grain income stabilization policy is still with us and, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the oldline parties are still with us until the next federal election.

[Mr. Knight.]

Mr. Raymond Rock (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne outlines the interest of the government in stimulating industry, developing the north, extending CBC services, giving equal rights to women, low cost housing and in taking action in many other areas.

Being a member of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I was happy that the Speech from the Throne contained an announcement of the creation of three new parks north of the sixtieth parallel, each as large and as spectacular as any in the world. This is a subject matter which we studied in our committee. Another important announcement was that the Canada Manpower programs would be enforced and additional steps taken to make the training and placement service adequate to the needs of specially disadvantaged people whose particular problems pose challenges which cannot be met with the use of regular program resources or techniques.

As a member of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, I brought to the attention of the then Minister of Manpower and Immigration the fact that many skilled English speaking people who are unemployed cannot obtain jobs in the Montreal area because they do not speak French. At the same time many skilled French speaking people, because they cannot speak English and industry is now demanding bilingualism, have a difficulty in finding positions. I hope that in this session the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) will provide language training in English and in French in order that these people will have the opportunity, through manpower training, to learn these languages.

As a member of the Standing Committee of Transport and Communications, I have been vitally interested in the research and development of the communication satellite. I am delighted that the government is prepared to extend national broadcasting service to one million Canadians in 260 communities who receive no television service in their own language. This will mean that within a five-year period 98 per cent of Canadians will be served. I hope that in the future we can build satellites that will broadcast direct to homes. This would mean that our three TV networks, and the three American networks, would broadcast direct to homes over the whole of North America.

The paragraph in the Speech from the Throne which interests me greatly is the following:

While taking care to preserve for the future, we should wherever possible, preserve and restore those achievements of the past which are an essential element in our self-understanding as a people. You will be asked to consider, therefore, a bill creating and endowing a corporation to be known as Heritage Canada which will go far to ensure the preservation of items and collections from Canada's past and to make these accessible for the enjoyment and understanding of Canadians in all parts of the country. Heritage Canada, complemented by a broadened national museums policy, will demonstrate the achievements of our forefathers and their successes in overcoming physical isolation and in converting dreams into reality.

We seem to readily forget the achievements of past explorers. Are you aware that the historic centennial train did not show Cavalier De LaSalle, the first settler of Lachine, the greatest explorer of North America, the man who discovered the Great Lakes, the Mississippi Valley and founded New Orleans? Because his discoveries are now divided between Canada and the United States, he is being forgotten by Canadians and Americans and was forgotten by the planners of the centennial train.

I hope that those who will direct Heritage Canada will look into the possibility of reprinting a book entitled "Lake St. Louis, New and Old", a book containing early history of the west island of Montreal, a book that is very rare. In fact, I know only of two copies in existence, one in the parliamentary library and one in the city hall of Lachine. The author of this book was Mr. D. Girouard a Member of Parliament for the House of Commons for 13 years from 1878 to 1891. I made a request that this book be reprinted for centennial year, but that was refused by the Honourable Judy LaMarsh. Many libraries, schools and citizens of the west island were hoping to obtain copies at that time. I hope that Heritage Canada will make this possible.

As a member of the Standing Committee of Transport and Communications, I hope that Heritage Canada will include in its program the preservation of the Lachine Canal as an historic site and as a viable waterway for pleasure craft. The first inhabitants of Lachine came in the year 1666, over 300 years ago. Robert Cavalier Sieur De LaSalle was granted a seigniory west of Ville Marie, and the area was called Lachine because of LaSalle's pretentions that he would discover the route to China. As early as 1670, a missionary, Monsieur De Fenelon, made the suggestion to link Lachine with Ville Marie by a canal through Lake St. Pierre, thus avoiding the portage at Sault St. Louis. In 1700, Dollier De Casson, Superior of the Seminary of St. Sulpice, undertook the cutting of a canal. In 1714, Gedeon De Catalogne, a marine lieutenant and engineer, attempted to complete the canal without success. By 1733, the Lachine Canal was constructed for a mile in length to a depth of two feet, six inches of water and provided a practicable waterway for the canoes bound for the Ottawa and the far west. It was not until nearly a century later from 1821 to 1824 that the canal was reconstructed; it was enlarged in 1843 to 1848 and again in the years 1877 to 1880, with complete reconstruction between 1896 and 1904. Transit navigation on the Lachine Canal ended in 1959 with the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway. Without any proper consultation, the seaway authority in 1965 backfilled the east end of the canal and took no initiative to look into the future use of the canal. Their foremost thought was to get rid of the old Lachine Canal.

I made two speeches in the House of Commons demanding that the Lachine Canal be used for pleasure craft back in January, 1967 and October, 1970. Through Heritage Canada, it is hoped that the Lachine Canal, which played a vital role in our early Canadian life, will continue to be part of our lives as a living historical monument, a viable recreational haven and a gateway for pleasure craft from the heart of Montreal to Lake St. Louis, west to the Lake of Two Mountains and the Ottawa River or the St. Lawrence to Lake St. Francis, the Great Lakes, and possibly east to Lake St. Pierre, the Richelieu, Lake Champlain and the Hudson. I believe that the citizens of St. Henri, Ville Emard and Point St. Charles, who have for so many years been deprived of water rights on the St. Lawrence River because of the Montreal harbour, should be given the opportunity to own pleasure craft and the proper facilities such as a Lachine canal waterway with marinas, and the right of access to Lake St. Louis and Lake St. Peter.

• (1620)

Although the government has been silent in regard to the Lachine canal, they hired planning consultants, Jean-Claude Lahaye et Associés, who studied the canal's future role and recommended that it be used for pleasure craft and even that the east end be reopened. Although the government is silent in this regard, it seems the Rideau and Trent system, and even the Richelieu canal system, will be retained and developed for tourists. What is wrong with these tourists having the facilities to enter their pleasure craft into the heart of Montreal? I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is time this government took action through Heritage Canada and created a historic parkway along the Lachine canal amd made this area look as beautiful as the Rideau Canal Parkway.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity of participating in this debate. May I first congratulate both the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne upon their participation in this debate. They must have taken some pleasure from being singled out by their government to lead off this debate. I was also pleased last Thursday, as one who believes in the constitutional monarchy form of government, that the government reverted back to old practice and that the Governor General mentioned the name of the Queen on more occasions than has been usual in the recent past.

May I now turn to some of the questions that I am sure are in the minds of all Canadians, because they have been asked almost continuously since 1968. There were some in Canada who questioned the direction of this government when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) became leader in 1968. Today, there is no doubt in anybody's mind as to this government's direction. It has been Liberal. The extent of that liberalism probably exceeds that of any government's in Canada's history.

Let us look at some examples of this liberalism. Let us look at the government's liberalism in the proliferation of misery and suffering in Canada. There has never been more in the memory of most. The degree of that misery would exceed even that of the 1930's if it were not for the social justice system that has been established in this country by governments, both Liberal and Conservative, since that time.

The government has been liberal with unemployment. It has spread like a cancer among Canadians who, in 1968, could not have anticipated or imagined themselves in such a position in 1972. The government even went so far as to manufacture its own unemployment with ill-fated policies that were supposed to defeat inflation. We managed to get the worst of both worlds by this action.

It has been liberal in sowing the seeds that destroy incentive and promote the welfare method of living in the nation. One now has to make an assessment as to whether money will be lost if one goes to work, if a job can be found. The government has done everything in its power to sap the strength and optimism of the business community. It has frightened off investment with its so-called tax reform legislation. If that were not enough, it has kept a competition act in the wings that would be the delight of any totalitarian dictator. No businessman in his right mind could anticipate additional risks and investments with a bill like the competition act threatening his very existence.

The government has been very, very liberal in its actions in downgrading our parliamentary institutions, our Queen and anything British in our traditions. It has manufactured a new strata of bureaucratic red tape, with "Trudeaucrats" now numbering close to 300 and with a taxpayer tab in excess of $3 million annually. It has tried to muzzle Parliament, the Auditor General and anyone else who might try to stand in its way.

It has been Liberal in its abuse. Here is where the Prime Minister has really provided leadership. He started with the press of the nation; but it was not long before Canadians in every walk of life learned he would not discriminate. He has abused the youth, the worker, the business community, Members of Parliament and, now, as his crowning achievement, the Premier of British Columbia. Of course, Premier Bennett should feel flattered, for the Prime Minister has now allowed him to join an exclusive group with the Premiers of Manitoba and Ontario. Yes, the Trudeau government has been very liberal, but in areas where liberalism was neither required nor desired.

Last week in the House the Prime Minister took great pride in passing out insults to the leader of my party. He was especially critical about the degree of his pessimism. What man, with the knowledge gained from watching this Prime Minister and this government perform for four years, could develop anything but depression when considering their future performance. I noted that the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) was the recipient of the same dose of venom. Maybe it was not quite so large a dose, yet it was in direct proportion to the extent of the threat of that party to the government in the coming election.

Let me tell the Prime Minister that the only pessimism and gloom in the mind and heart of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) relates to the fact that he knows there is still some time to wait before a general election, and that the people of this nation must suffer during those days while this incompetent government is trying to run the country. There will be only sweetness and light after the day the ballots are counted, for once again the people of Canada will have a government with a heart and soul. Canada will have a government with a program, with a direction and with feelings for its fellow men and women.

Mr. Osler: You are right.

Mr. Coates: The hon. gentleman across the way says, I am right. I am sure I am right, because the party in power will be the Progressive Conservative party.

Mr. Osler: Now, you are wrong. Don't bet on being right.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I would not wish to suggest that the hon. gentleman should not bet on it. I hope he does bet on it. I hope he bets a lot, because not only will he not be back and not receiving his indemnity, but he will have to pay off his election bets.

Mr. Osler: Does the hon. gentleman want to bet? If he does, will he put his money where his mouth is?

Mr. Coates: The hon. member is very affluent, and I would bet with him anytime.

Mr. Osler: The people where I come from have common sense.

Mr. Coates: Well, they didn't show it in 1968.

There was no gloom in Nova Scotia when the Leader of the Opposition was premier of that province. Every year of his leadership was a better year than the one before for the residents of that province. There was enlightened leadership in the province and, for most of those years, enlightened leadership in Ottawa. During those years we had the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). That government produced policies, not pious platitudes, that resulted in a better way of life for our people.

An hon. Member: Like more unemployment.

Mr. Coates: Compare that partnership with the Trudeau-Regan axis that has resulted in the illegal collection of taxes, a multi-million dollar deficit and more misery and suffering than has been experienced in Nova Scotia in many a decade.

Let us now examine the attitude of the Leader of the Official Opposition who, after the next election is called, will be prime minister of Canada. Let us look at the words of that hon. gentleman and determine what kind of Canada he can foresee. I am going to read a few words spoken recently by my leader in Hamilton, Ontario. I will let hon. members compare them with the cold, calculating callousness of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). This is how my leader described Canada when speaking in Hamilton:

• (1630)

Let me tell you about the Canada I would like to live in, the Canada I would like my children to inherit and their children after them.

It would be a country in which the accident of birth will not mark a child for life, where the fact of life will be sanctified and celebrated.

It will be a country where every child will bring with him into the world the right to acceptance and love: the right to grow at his own pace: the right and the opportunity to satisfy his curiosity about the things around him, the right to live up to his full capacity for understanding and learning.

It will be a country in which freedom of thought and of movement, of expression and determination will be available to all its citizens.

It will be a country whose people are governed gently and responsively by men and women who truly wish to serve the common good; a country in which to fulfill man's most profound aspirations and to live his finest dreams; a country where men and women can grow old without fear.

Those are not the words of a man who cannot see a bright, new tomorrow. As we approach the start of the general election campaign, we listen to a government that must turn to itself for false praise and undoubtedly the false courage that it needs to face the electorate. The pace was set by the mover of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne and emulated by the Prime Minister. They can find no one to praise them but themselves.

The Prime Minister told us how tough he and his ministers were. Yes, the Prime Minister was tough when he threatened to kick a young lad in the seat. He was tough when he hurled insults from a warm and cozy car at picketing workers who marched in the cold. This government has been tough with the old age pensioners, the veterans and the unemployed, who cannot secure the benefits to which they are entitled. Yes, it has been a tough government; tough to reach, tough to make realize its policies are not working, tough to get money out of whether you be a farmer in western Canada or a government, either provincial or municipal. Yes, it has been a tough government, tough on Canada and Canadians, but it has not been tough where it should be tough. It has not been tough in settling strikes in essential services which have tied up the nation and produced additional misery and suffering. In an area where toughness is required and desired, where the nation cries for action, there has been none.

The day of the strike in essential services has passed. A more humane approach has to be found. In the government service, these strikes just have not worked. They have turned out postal service into a shadow of a once effective and efficient operation. They were neither useful nor helpful to the air traffic controllers, who finally had to revert to binding arbitration. They are showing their ineffectiveness in the present strike of technicians. Today, as we have learned from the coal miners strike in Great Britain, they can destroy the vitality of a nation. There are no longer any by-standers in strikes in the national sector. There are no winners in such strikes.

No doubt this is the reason George Meany, probably the most powerful and knowledgeable person in North America on the effect of strikes, has said there has to be another way. In order to hasten the day when the strike in essential services will be abolished, it is my intention to introduce a bill in this House to abolish the right to strike among members of the Public Service of Canada whose work is considered to be vital to the common good of the nation. It is my hope it will receive the support of all members of this House. One would have thought this government would have gotten the clue from George Meany when he stated the day of the strike in essential services has passed. But no, this government's brain is so deadened to anything different that might be of value to the nation that it probably will not get the message for another six months, and by that time, God willing, they will not be in a position to do anything about it.

I should like now to turn to the new Unemployment Insurance legislation. It is good legislation. It has its imperfections, but those can be remedied through amendment. There is only one reason for the inefficiency that now exists in the payment of claims, and that is the government's incompetence. The government was so anxious to pat itself on the back that it could not find time to prepare either the employees of the Unemployment Insurance Commission or those who would be seeking benefits as to how the new act would work. No one can tell me that members of the Unemployment Insurance Commission could not have done the work both effectively and efficiently if they had been given the proper opportunity to prepare themselves. Instead, the government imposed the new system on the nation while the old system was still in operation and is in operation at this time.

This government also committed the Unemployment Insurance Commission to complete computerization of both the old and new system without establishing a cross reference system that would have given warning of improperly completed data cards. As a result, they have brought an army of unemployed to the doors of welfare offices across this nation because they are without funds and cannot secure them, although they are entitled to them. They have forced members of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to work untold hours trying to sort out the mess, probably to the verge of nervous exhaustion. And what are we told? We have described for us the great compassion of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) for his fellowman. This apparently is what the unemployed breadwinner is to put on his table in place of food. It is almost as tragic as the thousands who have been forced off the labour market by direct government action. Only if you watch the television advertising of the wonders of this new Unemployment Insurance legislation will you realize what a bonanza it is for the workingman of the nation. It is part of the dreamworld of Messrs. Trudeau and Mackasey that has no relationship to reality, except in their minds.

What of regional economical disparity? Like the just society, it should not be discussed. After all, it was only a slogan for the last campaign. There will be new ones for the one this year. In Atlantic Canada we have one consolation. It is a sad consolation, but it is the only one. There is more economic disparity today than was the case in 1968 all across Canada. Therefore, there are more people in exactly the same position in which people in the Atlantic provinces have been for a long time. Indeed, this condition has spread, like a plague, right across the nation. It is hard to imagine unemployment rates of 18 per cent, but that is the sad fact of the case in both Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland today.

If this government really wanted to solve the ills of the Maritimes, they could have done it with Fundy power. I know that President Roosevelt had lots of economists of the type that are now present in Ottawa who would throw their hands up in fright and quote interest rates when he brought in his new deal and established the Tennessee Valley Authority. He ignored them and this government should have also. Instead, we cannot even get this government to appoint those persons to the committee that has been delegated to re-examine the report of the programming board that carried out the initial examination of Fundy. It is very obvious this government has no time for Fundy because the mandarins have said it should not be undertaken.

We hoped we would have a viable transportation policy for our area by now. The former Minister of Transport asked the four premiers of the Atlantic provinces to produce for him their recommendations on what a viable policy would include. They presented a package to him. It was an all-inclusive package. It was inter-related. Let me quote some of the recommendations which it contained:

• (1640)

1. The provinces will accept modifications in the blanket subsidization of intro-regional traffic subject to the strict qualification that a federal-provincial agency be empowered to administer transportation assistance from federal funds to selected industries within the Atlantic provinces.

2. Its initial step will be to extend the subsidy of 30 per cent to traffic moved by all modes and to pay it to the shipper.

3. The appointees to the agency must be residents of the Atlantic provinces.

4. The administrative offices of the agency must be located in the region.

5. The Atlantic Provinces recommend that the federal government maintain the freeze on Atlantic provinces rail rates until such time as the new regional transportation policy is effected.

6. The recommendations are important and essential. They are inter-related and designed to be implemented in their entirety. They must be implemented as soon as possible if transportation is to become a tool rather than an obstacle for regional economic development.

Mr. Speaker, the government did pay attention to part of what was proposed by the Atlantic premiers. It reduced the subsidy which was available within the selected territory from 20 per cent to 17 per cent and intends to reduce it by a further 2 per cent on April 1 of this year unless the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) makes some pronouncement to the contrary. It did not set up a funded agency of the type the premiers had requested. Instead, it set up an advisory agency with no funds of its own. It made no difference where the agency was located; there was no reason for it to have any office since it did not have any money to spend.

The premiers also suggested that the people appointed to this agency should be businessmen involved in the industry of the area. Instead, we got six civil servants. I am sure that in the course of their lifetime they have learned a great deal about the way in which a businessman faces the problem of transportation in the Atlantic region. One thing the government certainly failed to do was maintain the freeze of freight rates as requested in the submission. We know they did not do that, because since the freight rate freeze was lifted in September, 1969, we have been subject to eight freight rate increases in the Atlantic region. These have resulted in increases which have forced shippers in the region to bear increases of between 32 and 62 per cent. If, as presently anticipated, the intra-regional subsidy is reduced on April 1 from 17 per cent to 15 per cent, the shippers in Atlantic Canada will face their ninth freight rate increase, an increase of 3.4 per cent.

Nothing has worked because nothing of value has been tried. Yes, we are given DREE grants for the establishment of new industries, just as they are provided to about every other area in the country. But there has been nothing new, nothing suggesting the type of policy which was the hallmark of the Diefenbaker administration.

An hon. Member: Thank goodness for that.

Mr. Coates: An hon. member over there says "Thank goodness for that." Let me tell him through you, Mr. Speaker, that there has never been a government in Canada's history which was as good a friend to the Atlantic provinces as the Diefenbaker administration.

[Mr. Coates.]

An hon. Member: Only some dumbbell from Ontario would make a statement like that.

Mr. Gibson: Speak for yourself. Use your own whistle.

Mr. Coates: I don't know where he came from but you can have him. People in Atlantic Canada are well able to compare the efforts of the Diefenbaker administration with those of Lester Pearson or of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). They know that in the person of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), with his background of achievement, there will soon be a prime minister in Ottawa who is familiar with the area and its people and who will apply the policies necessary to do the job. They now wait only for the opportunity to give him the job.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): I want to say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that everybody in the country knows that we have a terrible government governing us at the present time.

Mr. Gibson: Except the people.

Mr. Yewchuck: I shall, therefore, not spend too much time telling you how terrible they really are. I am sure you already know that, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: More gloom and doom.

Mr. Osler: Tell us what you would do.

Mr. Yewchuck: I am invited by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) to tell him what we would do. That is exactly what I want to do. I want to speak in a strictly positive way. I want to speak on the subject of Senate reform.

An hon. Member: Have them elected.

Mr. Yewchuk: I think we all agree that Senate reform is necessary. As a matter of fact we have hard statements to this effect from members of all parties in the House from time to time in the four years during which I have been here.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We do not advocate Senate reform. We advocate its abolition.

Mr. Yewchuk: Abolition is really a kind of reform, if you look at it in the true sense of the word. I should like to remind some of the members to my left that they do have representation in the other place.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, no.

An hon. Member: What about Hazen Argue?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is not one of us.

Mr. Yewchuk: Although they do not publicly acknowledge it, a lot of them have a secret desire to go there. I want to suggest a formula which will make it easier for them to get into the Senate without losing face, since they have taken an extreme position from time to time on this subject.

I believe we would all agree that when the tax reform bill went through the Senate in December the image of that body seemed to hit an all-time low in the eyes of many people. I was upset by that, because I think the Senate is, in fact, a useful body; with appropriate reform it could be reconstituted as a much more reputable and acceptable portion of our parliamentary system. I believe token efforts have been made by the government to do something which they would like to call reform inasmuch as they appointed a Social Creditor, on one occasion, and others, who are reputed to be Socialists, on a further occasion. But this does not amount to real reform. An attempt was also made to involve the Senate in make-work projects. I do not think this is reform, either.

Why has the other place fallen into some disrepute, or fallen out of favour with many Canadians? One reason might be the method of appointment of members of that body. As we all know, it is entirely the prerogative of the Prime Minister of the day to choose whoever he wants to fill vacancies, and usually he chooses old friends either of himself or of his party. I do not have any objection to old friends; I have old friends myself and I respect and admire them. However, if the old friends are not the friends of the opposition party, then that party may consider they were not really a good choice for these appointments.

• (1650)

I do not want to imply that party workers and supporters of the Prime Minister's party are a bad choice as such, because I know most of the Senators personally and many of them are very fine people. However, I do think that the method of their appointment does put them in a position where they must often be on the defensive about their appointment with members of the public, and I think that this is something they should not have to face.

Another argument we often hear raised is that Senators are responsible to no one, that they do not have any constituents to worry about, and as a result after being in the other place for many years they might lose touch with the realities of Canadian life. Again that may or may not be a valid criticism, but it is a criticism we hear made from time to time. I am not suggesting that Senators should have constituencies as such. Perhaps members of the other place who are supposed to take a sober second look at legislation put before them should not be placed in a position where they are sensitive to certain pressures, as members of the House of Commons may be vis-à-vis their constituents. Therefore, in order for the Senators to have an unbiased view of any legislation that comes before them it is reasonable to argue that they should not be directly responsible to any constituency.

Within the past few months I have had the opportunity of speaking to members of legislatures from various countries. I had the privilege of attending a conference in Germany on the subject of pollution at which were present representatives from about 28 other countries. I talked to most of them about the structures of their Senates, their house of representatives, or whatever the case was, and with this kind of review I came up with some suggestions that I thought might be worth at least placing on the record so that perhaps some day action may be taken on them.

For example, let me take the case of the two extremes first. The members of the House of Lords in the United Kingdom are appointed in large numbers, most of whom are not active. At the present time I think there are something like 800 to 900 members of the House of Lords, of whom only 100 or less are active in the parliamentary system. They do not receive a salary of any sort but simply play their role on a voluntary basis, strictly out of interest for the system of parliamentary democracy.

The second extreme is the system used in the United States, our neighbours to the south, where Senators are elected for a six year term and carry a fairly large amount of prestige with their election. As a matter of fact, they also possess what appears to be a large amount of power. I think there is a very definite drawback to that situation. I may be wrong, but my impression is that the Senate of the United States or the upper house, if you like, has developed into a body which really overshadows the House of Representatives. Certainly, I should not like to see this happen to the House of Commons of Canada, since we are all members of the House and do not want to be overshadowed.

Therefore, we have to take a look at some system that falls between these two extremes. One of the complaints we have heard made about our parliament is that the House of Commons, as a natural result of the population distribution of this country, is in reality controlled by the two largest provinces, the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Therefore, some of us who come from provinces other than these two feel at times that legislation is put forward in such a way as to give the two largest provinces more advantage than the western or Maritime provinces. As a result of this, there is legislation on the books that is in fact detrimental to the west and to the Maritimes. Let me give an example of what I mean. The freight rates in western Canada are very much discriminatory against the western provinces. The tariff structures that protect the industries of central Canada do no good to the resource-export industries of the western provinces.

So then, the question is: What is it that we want to achieve in Senate reform? I should like to suggest that we should develop some kind of system of electing members to the upper house, but not by direct vote of the kind that elects members to the House of Commons. Further, I suggest that the authority that is now vested in the Prime Minister to appoint Senators should be withdrawn. I also suggest that in order to balance off the criticism, that the House of Commons is controlled by the two largest provinces there be a redistribution of the number of members of the Senate who represent the different provinces. It should also be possible to replace members of the upper house from time to time prior to their becoming 75 years of age or so, though I realize there are some sitting members who are beyond that age yet are still extremely active and valued members of the upper house.

How do we achieve the aims that I have outlined? Firstly, I think it is possible to elect Senators indirectly; in other words, let elected people elect the Senators. In my view, the best elected body to elect members of the upper house is the legislature of each of the provinces. I think that an equal number of Senators should be elected from each province, and they should be elected by the legislature of the province. They should be elected for a term similar to that of a member of the House of Commons, say for a five-year term, and they could all stand for re-election if they so desired.

The reason I suggest an equal number of Senators from the various provinces has already been outlined, and this is that since the House of Commons is dominated by the two largest provinces, the upper house, with an equal number of voices from each of the provinces, would counter the imbalance that now exists. I further suggest that in order to round the figure off to an even 100, nine Senators from each province and five from each of the Yukon and Northwest Territories be elected. When the Yukon and Northwest Territories become provinces, the figures could be readjusted to bring about equal representation in the upper House for them too. I think, briefly, that lays out the formula I have developed in my assessment of Senates around the world. I think the idea of fresh blood in the Senate, on a regular basis, would reinforce that body, would give it the opportunity to take more pride in itself and be less on the defensive about its existence. It would certainly lead to a far better parliamentary system than we have today.

• (1700)

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the mover of the address, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), and the seconder, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie), mon voisin à la chambre. The hon. member for Bruce, in his strong and competent manner gave balance to the debate, for he accurately put before the House some of the accomplishments of the government and heaped well deserved criticism on the stagnant opposition for spreading doom and gloom in every direction in this great nation at a time when our country has survived two major crises, one the security crisis when our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), through his bold, imaginative and courageous leadership, restored order out of chaos in this nation, and the other an economic crisis in which all the opposition hawks were shouting for a cap-in-hand visit to Washington on the one hand and restraint on the other, and which ended in a great economic victory for Canada in the financial crisis which existed. Not a word of praise was given by any opposition spokesmen for these great achievements.

Hamilton-Wentworth is a large, partly urban and partly rural area. It is the heart of the county of Wentworth. We have many hardworking industrial workers who have played a great part in the development of a strong and dynamic industrial Canada. To name two great companies, there is the Steel Company of Canada, a pioneer in steel development on this continent, and Dominion Foundries and Steel, a company with the best industrial relations system of profit-sharing in the world.

When I look around this great country and see the air strike and the radio-television strike, I wonder whether the government of Canada should not be trying to work along the lines of the great Dominion Foundries and Steel company's profit-sharing scheme in which the employees fund a certain percentage of their earnings and the company out of its profits funds several times that amount. This money is placed into a fund so that the workers when they retire may share in the profits of this great company. It seems to me this should be the trend in industrial relations today. The blight of strike must end, in all sgements—the federal scene, the provincial scene and the municipal scene.

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

Even that experienced labour leader, George Meany, last week revealed to a large audience in the United States that he is opposed to strikes. When we have a strong and outstanding labour leader such as George Meany coming to that conclusion, it would appear to me that the reason he has reached this conclusion is that it is not in the best interests of the labour force of the United States. I believe it is not in the best interests of the labour force in Canada in essential employment such as the airlines, national defence, the police services and communications services where the interests of the citizens must be paramount.

We cannot afford to continue these strikes and we must search to find a mechanism for compulsory arbitration in labour disputes. We must find a mechanism whereby labour will be more satisfied with the system by which disputes are settled. We must give labour a strong voice in the settlement of wage disputes. We must find a forum whereby this can be developed. I believe it will be done very shortly in this country, and I believe Canada should be encouraged to lead the way to a more dynamic, progressive and fair settlement of industrial disputes.

In the field of external affairs and defence, I wish to to say I had the honour of visiting the Canadian force in Cyprus in January this year as a member of our House committee. I am proud of the fine service being rendered by the Canadian force in Cyprus. It is composed of the finest troops in the world. The force is a model of diplomacy and leadership. The members of the force are loved by the people of Cyprus be they Greek or Turkish. They are serving in Nicosia which is partially divided into some areas human as enclaves in which the Turks predominate. They are performing a difficult and arduous task without much publicity. I wish to give publicity to their fine work and the imaginative and forceful service they are giving.

I believe this country has a role to play in peacekeeping, which will be established as time goes on, through the United Nations. Through the United Nations we and other countries can help prevent war by having observer corps go out early, supplemented by the parties to the dispute who will be glad to have the atmosphere cooled under imaginative, forceful and dynamic United Nations' leadership. I hope and pray that the new Secretary-General of the United Nations will receive throughout the world the support that is necessary to achieve those ends.

I urge that this government make a more forceful effort to reduce armaments throughout the world. I hope and pray that we will stop arming of any kind other than that which is absolutely necessary for continental and NATO self-defence. I say, with the greatest sincerity, that I believe we should try as backbenchers, with great persistence, to work toward this goal. The traffic in arms in Cyprus, where Archbishop Makarios has received arms, is an example. I hope the Canadian government will do everything it can to cool that down and put a stop to it. The trafficking of arms is a disgrace to the world. It is a threat to civilization, to mankind and to the very existence of this world.

I hope when I am at the United Nations again—and I trust I shall return there some day—we will see greater leadership by that World Council and greater determination by the two big powers to come to grips with the permanent setting up of the council's peacekeeping machinery to end the bickering and chaos which goes on in respect of whether one man or another man will be the leader. There should be more dynamic trust placed in the Security Council's deliberations to help those who are trying to form a United Nations peacekeeping code second to none in history. This must be done, and we must take more active interest in this type of activity.

In the field of taxation, it was obvious to me that although the trite comments of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) fell on plauditory ears on his side, they brought forth no new ideas on tax reform. This must be capitulation. Surely the opposition can see that the removal of six million Canadians from the tax rolls has helped those six million people who have suffered from low income.

• (1710)

We have reformed our unemployment insurance program. I admit we are having difficulties with the administration of the new plan due to the installation of computers, and new forms, and difficulties with the new mechanism of implementing this act, but we are granting more money to those who really need it. We are faced with the economic problems of unemployment. This has been the most progressive and finest step which has been taken to deal with these problems.

The opposition heaps scorn and derision on our alleged failure to cure unemployment, despite the fact that in Canada we have created more jobs than have all the western European countries put together. Despite the fact that we have struggled with an increasingly growing work force, we have imaginatively created local incentives programs which certainly in my riding are working well in the Saltfleet area and in the city of Hamilton area. These are progressive reforms. They deal with a situation which must be dealt with rapidly. They are imaginative and successful.

The Opportunities for Youth program had great success last year despite a few bad grants, and we all know about them. But what about the thousands of good grants that were made, where young people were given a tangible method of contributing and working for Canada? These were very successful. They will be expanded this year and we will go on to a more imaginative and constructively practical plan than ever before in our history. The opposition did not criticize any of these plans. They cannot, because they know they are good. I suppose they cannot be expected to praise us where we have done well.

The opposition have not suggested any alternatives. Do they have ideas for the retraining of old people? Do they have ideas for constructively employing people who are aging, who cannot manage a full eight-hour day but who can do part time work? I notice that the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) came up with a constructive suggestion along these lines, but it was not taken up by the other members in his party. I suggest that his was a constructive idea and he should be praised for thinking along these lines.

However, the Leader of the Opposition is bereft of such ideas. He has nothing but gloom and doom, nothing but words about the election coming, and all he relies on is figures which he says will help him. That is what he is resting his campaign on, and I submit that it is falling flatter than a pancake.

With regard to the reform of our rules, I am pleased that we have brought about many changes which have made Parliament more realistic. However, I submit that during the debate on most bills a time limit of ten minutes per speaker should be imposed, for two reasons; first, that most speeches longer than ten minutes are repetitive and irrelevant and, second, that limiting speeches to ten minutes will create more dynamic interest in this chamber. More people will be on their feet and there will be a chance to hear expressed more views than those of a few who have to labour a long time speaking in debate after debate. This will get more people into the act, into the game. I think it would add to the interest and the imaginative function of this Parliament and would make it more realistic.

With regard to the Indians, the Eskimos and the Metis, I wish to reply to something that was said by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) who said sarcastically that the Prime Minister and the government were negative in the Throne Speech about Indians and Eskimos. Nothing could be further from the truth. Much was said forcibly, succinctly and rationally, not only in the Throne Speech but also by the Prime Minister who has set as one of our national goals the conquering of the isolation of the individual.

As a member of the Joint Committee on the Constitution I was deeply moved and impressed by the recognition of the urgent and compelling necessity for our government to create better communications with the Indians, Eskimos and Metis in our far north, particularly the Metis who have been left in a no man's land in the sense that they are not treated as either Indians or white people. We must somehow try to bring the Eskimo people into our great society in Canada and encourage social workers to assist them, to understand the plight of these people, as well as to give them equal treatment with the Indians. I submit that we should work hard toward the day when we have an Eskimo senator, because it is time we did. Also, I believe that the Metis should be given equal rights with the Indians.

I believe in a multicultural Canada, in a Canada that accords recognition, respect and love to every Canadian no matter where he comes from, be he a Croatian or a Serbian. Let us pray and hope that they will become Canadians in the full sense that is evidenced by many Croatians and Serbians in the great city of Hamilton. They are hardworking, industrious people who have a love of their own culture and who practice at picnics and social gatherings their folklore, dances, customs, traditions and language. This is part of being Canadian and it enriches Canada by according to the past respect and love. We must look forward, as we do as Canadians, to making this country the greatest in the world.

I am pleased that, as is mentioned in the Throne Speech, we will make "O Canada" our national anthem. I cannot refrain, at the same time, from urging the government to make July 1 Canada Day—le jour Canada—crowning our efforts to create greater symbols for Canada. If they will not go for Canada Day, perhaps they will go for Maple Leaf Day; but let us have something more imaginative, constructive and Canadian than Dominion Day which, in one of our official languages, in many areas is considered to be subservient.

I believe in a multicultural Canada with two official languages, in a nation which consists of our native peoples, the Indians, Eskimos and Metis, and has many cultural roots in the Italians, Germans, Ukrainians and Poles. I also hope that we will find it possible to bring to Canada more Chinese. Has any man in this chamber ever met a Chinese he did not like? I submit that they enrich our humour, culture and dignity, and I hope we have more of them here.

I am proud of the multicultural policy of Canada. I am proud that the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), despite many sly innuendos aimed in his direction, has advanced this Canadian society by advocating and initiating an imaginative and worth-while outlook for Canada. It means that we welcome the development and maintenance of all the cultural ties and languages in our great Canadian nation; we encourage the growth of greater understanding among Canadians from coast to coast.

I hope you will bear with me, Mr. Speaker, when I prod a little deeper into a problem of individuality which is an important theme in the Throne Speech. When we look at the individual we realize that many of us are lucky, successful and wealthy in comparison with many other Canadians. I wonder if we could not find a means of pairing a Canadian of wealth with one in poverty, if we could not have a dynamic policy whereby every person with an income of, say, $10,000 or $15,000 tries to pair himself with someone who has suffered. One cannot get a perfect solution by doing that, but let us not scorn it. I feel that we should do this also in the school system so that every lad from a good, happy home is encouraged to find in the city block or area an unfortunate child and become a friend, a big brother of that child. I do not see any government plan as such to encourage this kind of operation.

• (1720)

Throughout Canada we have Big Brother groups, the YMCA, the Roman Catholic Church Aid, the Protestant Church Aid and all kinds of aid groups, but there does not yet seem to be a comprehensive plan, which will be part of everyone's life, to help individuals in poor circumstances. I really believe this could be done and I believe that this government could do it. I see no reason why it would not work. I would go even a step further and say that I hope and pray that every schoolchild in Canada will eventually have a pen pal in some other part of the world. We should try to build bridges between individuals of the world, because until we are strong enough to bind ourselves together with trust and confidence as individuals we shall not solve the problems of armaments and the arms race.

Mr. Speaker, I praise the Prime Minister for the bold initiative he took in recognizing the People's Republic of China. It is apparent that this recognition was a very important consideration in the changed attitude of the United States toward China and in the fact that the heads of those two countries are meeting today. I think it is another example of the initiative, daring and brilliance of the Prime Minister that he should bring this about. I have no hesitation in praising the Prime Minister for taking these courageous, interesting and innovative steps which have not only recognized China but brought about wheat sales to China and put us on the map in Asia in a way we have not seen before.

I mentioned that I have been to Cyprus. When I was in a restaurant there, a friendly man turned to me and asked where I was from. When I said Canada, he shrugged his shoulders and said "Trudeau" with a big smile, and we shook hands. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it was a moment of great pride for me. Our Prime Minister has the imagination, the daring, the physical strength and moral courage to put Canada on the map in Asia and throughout the world, and he will go down in history as one of Canada's greatest prime ministers.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the opportunity to participate in the Speech from the Throne debate is welcome because it is one of the few debates in this House where members are given almost complete and free rein. While I have not studied the precedents in this regard, I imagine there are very few instances when Your Honour or your predecessors were able to demand that a member speak in relation to the issue currently before the House. The Speech from the Throne tradition is very old and is important in the sense that it gives the 264 members of this House, or those who participate in the debate, an opportunity to reflect on matters of national and immediate concern from their own particular vantage point.

I think it is particularly important for this country that we have this debate, and it is unfortunate that in the changes made in the rules during the last couple of years the debate on estimates was removed from this chamber and replaced by opposition days. This has to a degree removed the opportunity for the individual to express an opinion on matters of a specific nature relating to his representation in this chamber. To a degree we have perhaps diluted the importance of this kind of activity in the House of Commons.

We must realize that in attempting to provide a national framework of government for this country we are dealing with one of the most difficult and perhaps one of the most distinctly different countries to govern anywhere in the world. This is partly a matter of our geography but it is also a matter of our history which has exerted various pressures upon us both from outside this continent and from within it.

I think the Speech from the Throne debate may be of particular importance this year. Canadians who take the time and trouble to read Hansard or newspaper reports of it may wish to make for themselves some appraisal of the state of the nation. I think, too, it is appropriate that members be given an opportunity to respond after the recent Speech from the Throne and remarks by the party leaders. It is important because these remarks have helped to set the scene for a federal election which all members are aware will take place shortly.

I think that, in a way, the Speech from the Throne was an accurate rendering of the state of mind of this government. It rose to a new high. The kind of high-blown language, the kind of atmospheric phrases to which this government has been inclined, give some impression and impact of its style, but when examined in some detail, as it has been by the press and members of this House, they are found to be hollow.

Marshall McLuhan, the communications guru of our time, has coined a phrase in regard to television, but I think it could appropriately be used with regard to the Speech from the Throne. He said, "The medium is the message". In other words, Mr. Speaker, it does not really matter what is in the Speech from the Throne—I think that has become pretty clear—but it is how you say it that is all important. There may be some who derive satisfaction from this; those who have been cloistered for years in an arid, academic community or those who like to play with words so much that the meaning behind them or the issues or the people or the circumstances related to them are almost completely unimportant.

Some time ago a documentary film on the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), entitled "The Style is the Man", was shown, I think that sums up what we have seen in the Speech from the Throne, and perhaps in some measure the Prime Minister's remarks in this chamber last week. This was all very attractive and enticing in the years of his accession to leadership and in the election of 1968, but it strikes me, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians who have been buffeted by the winds of economic uncertainty, by the unpredictable and rapid increase in prices and the difficulty of relating their own incomes to them, and those who have become unemployed, have found small comfort in the substance of the style that was being presented to them month by month and year by year. I think we have come to the point, and certaintly many Canadians have long passed it, of realizing that style alone, that efficacy in itself, is not sufficient to meet chronic, long-term economic and social problems.

We have seen very clearly in this kind of ad hoc, patchwork-quilt suggestion contained in the Speech from the Throne or list of bills tabled, that this government which has been in office for four years, and the party for nine, has yet to present to this country a consistent, over-all national economic and social policy. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it has even been reluctant to grapple with these problems in any kind of honest, straightforward way. If there is anything that Members of Parliament should be concerned about in this debate, it is lack of national economic policy. I think that underlies the fears and anxieties felt by all Canadians. The discussion should centre upon possible trade negotiations between Canada and the United States, the actions that might be taken by federal or provincial government with respect to economic policies in regard to foreign investment and foreign control and the Canadian economic enterprise.

• (1730)

Underlying that kind of concern is the open awareness that there is in this country at this time no over-all guiding policy, and that in the discussions initiated by this government with the provinces there has been a less than candid discussion of the basic strategy underlying a national economic policy. It is because there is an absolute and complete lack of national economic policy on the part of the federal government that the party I support and many Canadians ultimately condemn this government.

The Speech from the Throne made last week indicates no new effort or initiative in developing a national policy. In the last few years this government has engaged in ad hoc planning. It has given ad hoc promises and governed by crisis. It has always struck me as strange that this government, which speaks so eloquently on how it has survived crisis after crisis as if it has done something wonderful, should fail to point out something that any clear-minded or reasonably objective examination would reveal, namely, that the government was often the reason and cause for a crisis and that it had created a crisis over issues that in most cases deserved cool and rational consideration. The government simply was not capable of giving such issues cool, open, honest and rational consideration.

I cannot, for the life of me, understand why the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance or other members of this administration would point out how successfully they have coped with crises that were self-induced. They are engaging in the height of self-illusion. I hope that this delusion extends only to the members of the cabinet and not to the country at large. Whether the crisis was one of inflation, unemployment, or unrest in Quebec, to a greater extent than most of us realized at the time the crisis was government-induced and blame could not be attributed to any other source.

In the economic sphere, and particularly in our relations with the United States, the crisis mentality has been central and must be taken into account in understanding why this government has been so ineffective. Last week the Prime Minister said how effective the cabinet was in dealing with the recent trade and economic crisis involving this country and the United States. Yet it was that very same Prime Minister who felt no sense of responsibility when making the kind of stupid remark that he made in a foreign country. It was the same Prime Minister who, at a university campus several months prior to that, talked about violence and retaliation in the United States and, in general, gave the impression that he was somehow or other not terribly keen to understand the problems of that country or to work in a constructive way with those who had responsibility within the administration of that country.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, cannot have it both ways. He cannot expect, on the one hand, to fan the flames of misunderstanding and antipathy and, on the other, at the same time take credit for being cool and for dealing with difficulties which have arisen between our country and our southern neighbour. His remarks constitute an elaborate—perhaps they are not so elaborate—cover-up of the basic incompetence and irresponsibility of the government. There is no national plan, national strategy or elaboration of goals. There is no overview of what this country should be doing, where this country should be going and in which areas the government of this country should be providing leadership.

It is incredible to consider that with the large staff of the Prime Minister and the formal and informal think-tanks which have been attached to the Prime Minister's office, there has been so little articulation of what is the long-term direction of the leadership that ought to be and is being provided by this government. One can only assume at this late time that this government is not capable of providing and is not prepared to provide leadership.

The government wonders why it has not had a good relationship with the business community of this country. It wonders why it has had so many conflicts with the trade union movement—more, perhaps, than any government preceding it. It wonders why it is experiencing difficulty in getting along with the provinces. It need not look far for the answers, for we are being led by a man who believes, not in consultation and negotiation but in confrontation, who believes that the only effective way to deal with other sources of powers, whether they are in unions, in business or in the provinces, is to confront them, perhaps even ultimately in some kind of insulting fashion. Is that the way to exercise constructive national leadership in a country with so many different regional and provincial variations and distinctions?

In the 100 years or so that this land has been a nation, prime ministers and others have discovered that Canada is not an easy land to govern. They have discovered that only by conciliation, compromise, only by listening as well as by talking, only by building rather than tearing down, can the fabric of this nation be continued. The example of the last four years is not one that will hearten historians and show them how this country can be most effectively led.

Putting faith in a government that shows clearly it does know where it is going, that it is hardly aware where it has been, that it is not aware at present of what it is doing and really has no plan for the future, is putting faith in a government that governs by drifting. I believe Canadians are too intelligent, too well informed and too sophisticated to have faith any longer in that kind of government. The time has long gone when Canadians, for the sake of style, for the sake of novelty and because of titillations in the afternoon press, will support this kind of government as being one that is best in the national interest.

Perhaps nothing is more important to this country than our relations with the United States. Obviously, the clichés already uttered in this debate about our proximity to the United States and the intimacy of the relations between our two countries will continue to be uttered. It would take, not a volume but a whole library to catalogue effectively the indirect and complex relationships existing between us. It is altogether obvious that we cannot continue fostering this ongoing relationship in a crude and offhanded manner, or with simplistic statements, without doing great harm to the fabric of our relationship.

It was regrettable that the Prime Minister of this country, having decided that he should talk face to face with President Nixon, should have spoken on returning from that visit in glowing terms of the fantastic new breakthrough in understanding. How naïve must a Canadian be who can believe that because of a comment or a spontaneous reaction, a multitude of questions, issues and problems have been resolved effectively. Now, a few weeks later, we seem to be at the other end of the spectrum completely. The suggestion is that in fact the relationship between our two countries has reached a new low and trade talks have come to an almost total impasse.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

• (1740)

In its kind of stop-and-go policy, the government suggests in one instance that it is preparing, as it says it has been for months if not for years, policies with regard to domestic control of the Canadian economic environment, or some such term as that, while at the same time the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) says that we will not do anything to prejudice or offend our relationship with the United States and, indeed, in terms of trade concessions we are prepared to make many more than we have already made.

What kind of games are being played with our economic situation, both in the present and future sense? What kind of childsplay is this, where we can have this kind of suggestion in one quarter that nothing or less than nothing is going to be done, while in another quarter all kinds of things may be done with respect to national economic control? What is even more disturbing is that we do not know who is making the decision. Is it the same people who decided that in order to deal with inflation we could have a little slack and have a few hundred thousand people thrown out of work? Are these the people who are preparing some new kind of national economic policy, or are they the people who agreed with the Prime Minister's assessment in December that there had been a fantastic, new breakthrough?

Questions about the establishment of a framework for domestic control of the economy are just too important to be left in the hands of a small group of advisers, either in the Prime Minister's office or anywhere else. There are too many issues at stake, some of them much too important for the people of this country to believe that they can be developed in isolation.

It is rather interesting, and perhaps it is more than a little revealing of the true nature of this government that they referred in the Speech from the Throne to the isolation that Canadians feel. I cannot help but think it is some kind of Freudian slip, that in a sense it was not so much Canadians out there that this government was thinking of, but perhaps those who have laboured long hours in the east block, locked away from the reality of this country, manufacturing to suit their own purposes. They have indeed become increasingly frustrated about the isolation they have felt from this country.

Surely, those who for months and years have attempted to convey to this government their concern about rising unemployment, rising effective costs, those living on fixed incomes and those who have tried to communicate on the great social issues of our age have learned something about the isolation of this government. It is perhaps a paradox that never has there been such a large number of advisers and reflectors, and presumably some who have been listeners to the Prime Minister, and never has there been so little heard of what is actually happening in this country. At times the sense of isolation has appeared almost overwhelming. Frankly, it becomes terrifying when one thinks of this isolation in relation to basic decisions that will be made vis-à-vis our relationship with the United States and our decisions with regard to the domestic control of the economic environment.

If, indeed, that spirit of isolation exists, as it very much seems to exist at the present time, what follies are about to be perpetrated upon us in the name of some kind of national economic policy? What kind of misguided direction are we going to receive? When, if the government finally tells us it has made up its mind, will we hear about the whole question of foreign ownership? I shudder to think about that. I can visualize ten provincial premiers, assorted business and labour leaders and many others shuddering in this same regard.

We know only too well that this country is just too complex and too varied in its needs and possibilities to believe that one or even a few people in their isolated place in the east block are capable of producing the sort of policies to give vital and viable direction to the economic life of this country. We just do not believe it is possible. In fact, we know that kind of leadership can do very grave damage to the delicate economic fabric of this country. We know how delicate the economic life of this country is because of very high unemployment at the present time and the recurrence of inflation.

It is our belief that important and basic economic policies of this kind require open and frank consultation in many areas. Obviously, there has to be consultation with the provinces. We have the almost ludicrous situation where the province of Ontario, the largest and the wealthiest of the provinces, published its own document with regard to its concern about the heavy inroads of foreign investment. When questions are raised in the House— and I raised such questions with the Prime Minister before Christmas—as to which way this material is to be utilized or whether there is any action being taken with those in the province of Ontario, there is really no response.

What about the provinces in western Canada which have a tremendous interest at stake in the development, in various aspects, of the basic resources of this country? It is important for them to participate directly in the elaboration of any policy. In my own area, the Atlantic provinces, which for almost three-quarters of a century have languished in a situation of chronic underutilization of the economy, it is important for them to believe that any national policy must be sufficiently varied and tailored so as to deal realistically with the problem of regional disparity in that area. However, there seems to be almost no awareness or concern about these kinds of basic questions.

Beyond the provinces, there are those who have responsibility in management, labour and major municipalities in respect of decisive action that could be taken which would very much prejudice their own health and viability. Again, there is no openness or consultation, only a process of confrontation leading finally to isolation. That kind of style or method of dealing with these basic problems can only lead this country into a deeper morass of economic and social difficulty. It will do little good for the government to tell us a year or six months from now that they have been able effectively to deal with the latest crisis that has in effect been directly manufactured by them.

The time has come for Canadians to say to this government that we must put an end to government that seeks to rule, not by participation as was so grandly talked about three or four years ago, but by the lights of its own desires and failure to recognize the importance that Canadians, those represented in other groups and at other political levels, have a right to be represented in decision-making that makes all Canadians accountable and responsible or effective government in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, join my colleagues in all parts of the House in congratulating the hon. members who proposed and seconded the motion for acceptance of the Speech from the Throne which is under debate at the present time. I realize that this debate gives us an opportunity to discuss some of our parochial problems as well as to make suggestions with regard to what some members of the House of Commons, especially those on the opposite side, have said and with which we do not entirely agree.

I was rather shocked this afternoon to hear the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) discuss the bills relating to agriculture. I have been associated with this industry for many years. I honestly feel we have made more headway in developing governmental legislative assistance to Canadian agriculture than any other Parliament. We have finally succeeded in passing one of the most essential bills to assist farmers, Bill C-176, the National Marketing Act.

Unquestionably, the farming community has developed a great deal of efficiency. Through technological advancement, hard work and training we have been able to take advantage of the well educated young people who have worked in the farming industry, both in production and in secondary industry. They have been able to produce in great volume—as a matter of fact, in excess volume—but the problem that has been hounding the agricultural industry for years, more so now than ever before, is that of marketing the product.

• (1750)

The marketing of food has been based on the quantity available, rather than on a reasonable price related to the cost of production. As a result of the passage of Bill C-176, enabling legislation is now available to the farming community. They can now establish marketing agencies to act in conjunction with advisory committees and with the co-operation of secondary industry, known as "the trade", consumer associations and distributors, they will be able to provide food for Canadians as cheaply as ever before, I am convinced—food at lower cost as a result of stability in the farming industry.

I was personally delighted to hear the announcement by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) that there is to be a two-price system for wheat in Canada. This has been recommended from time to time; it has been discussed fully and I am convinced that when the program has been established and the regulations respecting the method of payment have been worked out, it will prove of great assistance to the prairie grain farmer. I might add that the Prairie grain farmer was fortunate enough to sell more grain last year than in any other year in our history.

Here, I should like to refer to the price, and to the criticism which is often directed to the level of the price received for Canadian grain. Canada exports 75 per cent of its grain and sells about 25 per cent domestically.

Surely no one would suggest that we are in a position to set a world grain price. Surely we know more about merchandising than that. After all, we are competing with countries which have greater access to markets by virtue of the tremendous volume and diversity of their total production—I have in mind our good friends to the south—as well as with countries such as France and developing areas whose technology we have assisted. In fact we have turned some of our customers into competitors.

I agree, though, that the price is low and I am hopeful we shall find means of persuading our grain trading partners to return to a world grain price arrangement. This subject was touched upon during our meetings with United States legislators this past weekend. I am convinced our views were received with a good deal of sympathy. It was stated on more than one occasion that such a move would be of assistance to the grain industry throughout the world. So there is hope that we shall be able to bring this about.

We shall not, I hope, get back into a heavy surplus position. On the other hand, I trust that, especially upon the advent of the two-price wheat system, we shall not neglect to establish inventories which will enable us to carry our share of the load when it comes to the distribution of grain on a world wide basis.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Pringle: Mr. Speaker, when the House recessed at six o'clock I was discussing problems relating to the sale of grain and was suggesting that we control our inventory in Canada to the point that, while we would be able to export grain in similar fashion to sales in the current crop year, we would not expect wheat suddenly to become a product in excessive demand by virtue of our two-price system.

If I may, I should like to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) for the attention he has paid many aspects of the agricultural industry. For example, the Farm Credit Corporation has expanded its loan ceiling and we can expect further amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act this year.

I believe, as most members on this side of the House believe, that planned production along with market research is of utmost importance. In order to plan our production and establish realistic inventories we must make sure that we know what the demand for our products is likely to be. A lot is said about production in this country. People say we should not export our resource materials but export only secondary products, products that have been processed in Canada. But very little do I hear about market availability. Industry or business must not only be able to produce but must be able to market that which it produces.

It is true that we have been dependent to a degree on industrialists from south of the border with their 220 million domestic customers. Although Canada adds another 20 million customers, when you take into consideration the unit cost of production, 20 million people do not really amount to much when it comes to establishing plants in Canada simply to serve the domestic market. We know these people are experienced in business and that they invested their high-risk capital in Canada. This high-risk capital is within the jurisdiction of Canadian law, but at the corporate level business can be influenced to a degree by other legislation, such as the Trading with the Enemy Act, the provisions of which I understand are practically non-operable at the present time.

I suggest that in light of the travelling being undertaken of late by the President of the United States, the missions that are being sent to Communist countries which up to now have been considered enemies, and when we realize the large sale of agricultural products to Russia amounting to $130 million or so in return for a rather large plant, Canadians must scrutinize capital investment rather carefully and discerningly. There is nothing in the world to stop my hon. friends in the New Democratic Party setting up secondary manufacturing plants in Canada tomorrow. Certainly there is no law against it. If they can find the markets and can exploit them to the point where they can compete with those who already have those markets and have established subsidiaries in Canada, then that is fine.

A few years ago we tried to establish in the beautiful Fraser Valley of British Columbia a plant for convenience foods. We could not find enough money locally because of the fact that it was really a risk proposition, although there were offers made from large food corporations in the United States. Here, again, we have been discussing these problems with our United States friends over the weekend. We have been discussing with them their inflow of capital. We have suggested that their balance of trade must be balanced out with a consideration relating to capital, and that if we are to be required to send our dividends and interest across the border then we must have consideration in trade. But we have to take into consideration what one of the senators said, that it is very difficult to have it both ways. As another senator said in the deliberations, if we do not want their plants, do not want jobs for our workers or do not want to take advantage of the markets they have for our products, then we should simply say so and they would be glad to expand their own.

In relation to these enterprises I would say we seem to consider profit in some areas as a kind of dirty word. It was suggested by the previous leader of the NDP that profits are not the answer and that all they do is pay for automation. But profits represent risk capital, and I submit that any profits as surplus funds represent risk capital and that jobs come from people willing to risk this capital. Unless we are prepared to risk it and to be certain that our industry has sufficient profit to risk, then we will not have the jobs that are required. I believe the employment picture is one of the most important aspects we must consider at the present time.

I should also like to thank the many cabinet ministers who have gone into the riding of Fraser Valley East as requested by the Chambers of Commerce, the various service clubs, the agricultural organizations, the brokers and other people interested in finance. I have been very fortunate in receiving great assistance from at least seven cabinet ministers. Not long ago we were fortunate to have the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs spend two hours of radio time to discuss the Competition Act with the people of Fraser Valley East. The response was excellent.

I have considered, rightly or wrongly, that my purpose in this House of Commons is not only to rise on a night when the Speech from the Throne is under debate to speak politics to my constituents; I believe I represent them in this arena, that I represent them in Ottawa in the House of Commons and in the government. I should also like to pay tribute to people in the public service who have assisted us with problems, who have explained situations and who have helped very much in respect of some of the problems relating to the constituents of Fraser Valley East.

But this is a two-way street. While I firmly believe I represent my constituents here in the House of Commons, I also believe I have a duty to represent the government of Canada in my constituency. I believe this is what we should do, and it certainly is what I would like to do. We are now facing the possibility of another election. I firmly believe the people of Fraser Valley East are able to search through the information given to them. The information they receive from the media, I am sorry to say, has not always been that which I would consider to be enough. I would consider the priority, perhaps, has been on views rather than news. As a matter of fact—I know it is a risky statement to make, but I am prepared to make it—I believe we should endeavour, if we can, to supply more information to the members of the press gallery so they might understand the entire workings of the House of Commons and would not state that the number of times a member rises from his seat in the House of Commons is the important thing. Perhaps they should attend some of the committee meetings day after day.

I would be happy to invite someone to come to my office at nine o'clock in the morning, stay with me until eleven o'clock at night and come back on Saturday. I would like them to hear the telephone conversations I have with people in my constituency. I would like them to know the number of telephone calls I have had today about railroad tracks in Hope, B.C., about the harbour bill and all the other problems. I do not want to be known in my constituency and in the House of Commons simply because I made the "spoonerism" of the year. I would like them to know, through the media, those things I do in an effort to help the constituency because we do spend about 60 or 70 hours a week in these buildings; we spend the time here doing our job.

We speak on subjects on which we want to speak and on which we feel we might supply some input. It should be taken into consideration that we have already spoken many times in caucus and committees and have done our best to influence various pieces of legislation according to what we deem to be the desires of the majority of our constituents. So I have never been able to quite understand the view held by some people, although I admit this is my first term of office here.

In closing, I should like again to thank the members of the House of Commons for the association I have had with them over the years. I feel our committees, regardless of what has been said, are highly successful. In committee, members have an opportunity to go into a matter in much greater depth than in the House of Commons. I believe when we look at all the bills which we have passed, and look at what has been done for the good of Canadians, the Canadian people will realize that our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is probably one of the greatest prime ministers we have ever had. He has been courageous in his statements and there is no doubt that we mean business, for the benefit of the Canadian people, and I am sure we will receive their support.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, commentators on the Speech from the Throne have described it in various ways. Some have declared it to be half froth and the rest pink lemonade and purple platitudes. Certainly, it is a speech which can give satisfaction only to the affluent, to those comfortable enough not to have to worry about government help; and their number is diminishing daily. For any real indication of government policy in this election year we had to await the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). It proved to be a really clever production.

Ever since the dawn of history, kings and presidents, unwilling to face up to difficult situations at home, have sought to divert people's attention elsewhere. Our local emperor is no exception. Realizing that his government has failed to deal with the serious problems of people in sector after sector in this country, the Prime Minister soared above all domestic matters and assumed the heroic posture of Horatius on the International Bridge, prepared to defend Canada against the whole might of the United States, not crudely, mind you, but without—to use his own words—"fantasies of either frightened timidity or false bravado". We shall see. The posture is heroic but it is no substitude for legislation to prevent further foreign takeovers of our resources and our industries.

While we admire the dramatic ability of our modern Horatius, we shall have to await solid legislation from this government. The Prime Minister in his speech indulged in another diversionary exercise, one which we may expect to see employed over and over again during the coming months. Against the uncertain and perplexing background of our time he indicated, with a few masterly strokes, the unrest, disturbances and dire emergencies faced by other countries. Turning quickly to Canada, he found our solutions in most cases "very satisfactory". He mentioned the free access of exporters to world markets, the favourable investment picture in foreign securities, the close ties of our two North American economies. In short, God is in his North American heaven and all is right with Canada.

All this was a build-up for his approach to unemployment. Indeed, he prefers to deal with employment rather than to have to deal with the distasteful issue of joblessness. He informs us that between 1965 and 1970 over one million new jobs were created in Canada; this figure was greater than the combined number of new jobs created in Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United Kingdom. What this has to do with his government's record in Canada, I fail to see, but I can see that it is an attempt to draw attention away to far off fields rather than to leave it on the bleak record at home.

He says that more than 200,000 new jobs were created in Canada in 1971. What he fails to say is that 665,000 Canadians were out of work in January, 1972, and that the seasonally adjusted rate for January, 1972, was the same as that for January, 1971, and that almost 30 per cent—28.8 per cent, to be exact—of the total population of Canada belongs to a family in which at least one member could not find a job in 1971 or lost it in that year. And he fails to say that the Economic Council has warned that nearly 1 million new jobs must be found by 1975 if unemployment is to be brought below 4 per cent. In face of this situation, 200,000 jobs in 1971 looks like a very small number, very small potatoes, and certainly nothing to get complacent about.

What unemployment means in human terms cannot be fully understood, of course, except by those who have undergone the shock, fear and indignity of unemployment. Of the many tragic cases brought to my attention during the recent parliamentary recess, one stands out most clearly in my mind. It is that of a young man of 28 whom I have known for some years and who has tried persistently and unavailingly to get work. He has had to accept social assistance, with the stigma that it entails, particularly for the single, able bodied young person. He telephoned me one February morning to say that he had now been classified as an employable unemployed person. This meant that his clothing allowance was cut off, he no longer had access to medical help or prescription drugs, his teeth would not be given the attention they badly needed, and he was now receiving a straight $90 a month in social assistance, the great bulk of which must go for rent. What was he to do? He just could not get work. With food and clothing prices going up all the time, how could he live? In quiet despair he added, "It's pretty tough to have this happen when you are doing all you can to lead a decent life."

• (2020)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we run into the despair of this young man in the large cities, the small villages as well as the rural homes across Canada.

When young people do not have the opportunity to work, their whole future suffers. When they have to sit around, day after day, month after month, year after year, not doing anything to use their talents, to earn their bread and participate in the life of their country, can anyone wonder that they end up despairing, taking drugs or revolting.

[English]

Instead of boasting of all the new jobs his government has created, the Prime Minister would do well to consider the deep desperation of the 30 per cent of Canadians belonging to families afflicted by the cancer of unemployment during this past year. If this government knew or cared about this suffering, they would realize the absolute necessity of creating an income floor, a guaranteed income below which no Canadian would be allowed to fall, and it would not be a measure of doubletalk where a means test is dignified by the title of "guaranteed income." What we need is a genuine guaranteed income coupled with a genuine guaranteed opportunity for useful work.

Guaranteed income, guaranteed work, these are the Siamese twins that should be separated only when people are too old, too ill or too handicapped for useful activity. The overwhelming majority of people want to pull their own weight, to stand on their own feet as long as they are able to do so. You have only to refer to the recent statements of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), or of the Senate Committee on Poverty in order to confirm this statement. Let the government give them this opportunity, and let the government not say that it is impossible to provide a guaranteed income.

Realizing, at least in some measure, the danger of allowing a whole generation of young folk to rust and rot in enforced idleness, the government last summer—and now I will give the government a bouquet—created something useful, the Opportunities for Youth program. Of course there were mistakes, of course there were foolish projects funded, but for the first time of which I am aware the government deliberately decided to fund people who needed funding as a group to enable them to carry out imaginative projects which would help the community and develop them at the same time. Instead of giving all the funding to conventional business enterprises, this government took a chance and gave a relatively modest share to help young people develop themselves.

I am glad to say that I think this experiment has paid off, and I believe that the local initiatives program will be even more successful. So far so good. However, these programs are far too hit-and-miss in their character. They need to be accompanied by long-range planning to ensure that they mesh into the needs and the other activities of the community. For example, there is not too much use in funding people to carry out renovations when the percentage of money for materials with which to do it is so low. To my knowledge, only the government of Saskatchewan has sought to overcome this deficiency on Ottawa's part. It has provided and is providing grants for materials for the local initiatives programs as a means of making sure that they can be carried through to fruition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis: This is not the first time that Saskatchewan has pioneered something which the federal government later has taken up as being something which at least should be adopted, although in nearly all cases it is too little and too late when it does adopt them. Long-range planning cannot be carried out exclusively by the mandarins of Ottawa but most involve all levels of government and all levels of voluntary groups concerned.

• (2030)

The planning from Ottawa results in a procrustean situation, with the computer in the role of Procrustes. When the traveller is too long for the bed of Procrustes, a suitable length of his legs is chopped off, and if he is too short, his limbs are stretched to fit the bed, without any warning about folding, stapling or mutilating! In other words, people are made to conform to the demands of the computer rather than the other way around. If anything were necessary to prove that to the hilt, it is the delays, the mistakes and the fouling-up of the unemployment insurance payments that have been made with Ottawa in control of so much of the machinery. Good planning must take the particular needs of the people concerned into consideration, and the only way to learn of those needs is to consult the people concerned.

It seems to me to be far more useful to get down to cases in this manner than trying to make the most of a bad job by diverting attention away from it as the Prime Minister did or by trumpeting as the mover of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne did when he declared:

> Without any doubt I can say here this afternoon that the senior citizens of Canada have the benefit of the just society promised by our government—

The senior citizens do not believe it and I fail to see how the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) could take himself seriously at that point, anxious as he was to protect the government even to the extent of leaning over backward and losing his balance.

Long-range planning is needed in many directions after these years of allowing and encouraging private business to produce anything that will sell for a profit and leaving all the other needs of the community so badly neglected. For example, owing to the fact that in my own city of Vancouver real estate interests have always been so heavily over-represented on the city council—indeed, I am tempted to believe we have a real estate lobby where the city council should be—we have got into a bad mess with our transportation needs. I was glad to note that the new Minister for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) had stated that the federal government had decided to kill present plans for the Four Seasons complex which menaces the entrance to Stanley Park and which would cause 40 per cent more traffic congestion at a spot already badly overcrowded and overpolluted. I certainly hope this complex stays dead. I have seen too many resurrections, where property owners are concerned, to be sure of it until the minister can show us that a proper burial has taken place, with a proper ceremony over the remains.

At the moment, another menace to the well-being of the community is apparently receiving the blessing of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis). I hope it is only apparent. I refer to the proposed third crossing to the North Shore. Concerned citizens are just becoming aroused to the fact that, whether bridge or tunnel, this crossing would be just the first link in a new chain of freeways which would segment many neighbourhoods in our city, result in multiplying pollution, noise, traffic congestion and all the other disamenities and dangers we have noticed in big cities.

Mr. Benjamin: Is he a hamburger?

Mrs. MacInnis: It doesn't necessarily take a hamburger to recognize that danger. Larger numbers of people are becoming convinced that our problem today is one of moving people rather than cars. We would like to see that sum of $123 million, which we understand has been promised by the federal government, go to helping establish a system of rapid transit which would get people around more quickly and efficiently than the proposed tunnel and bridge which would provide transit for too many cars with a single occupant. As a car owner, I would be happy to see parking facilities provided around the rim of the city and rapid transit operating in the core. Only in this way could rapid transit pay its way. If private vehicles insisted on circulating downtown, there are many ways in which they could be made to pay extra for this special privilege. In any case, I would hope that Ottawa would be willing to make the promised money available for whatever mode of transport the city council decided was the best. And I would hope that, after its long spell of dithering, the city council would soon take a long-range look at the real transportation needs of the Vancouver of the future.

I was glad to see that the Speech from the Throne included two sentences, the first as to the desirability of policies to ensure the long overdue equality of women in Canadian society, and the second stating that these policies would be announced this session. As I say, I was glad to note these two sentences. However, I feel sure that along with myself, other Canadian women would have been happier with the definite announcement of proposed legislation such as an amendment to the Adult Occupational Training Act to include women who had for three years been engaged in the work of their own homes, an amendment to the Canada Pension Act to include the spouse of a contributor, legislation to further child-care centres, or any one of the many other definite measures essential to secure the equality of women and hence the greater liberation of both sexes.

A definite measure announced in the Speech from the Throne was the raising of loan limits under the Canada Student Loans Act, permitting students to borrow more within a given year. This is a good provision. But an even more necessary one would have been an amendment permitting students who have finished their courses to defer repayment of their loans until they can find employment. The present exercise of trying to squeeze blood from a stone is exceedingly painful to the unemployed person, as I trust it will be to the sensibilities of the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). I might say that some of the most pathetic cases brought to my attention were those of people who had borrowed in order to get this university training, and at the end of the period had looked in vain for work and were now faced with the repayment of loans and no means whatsoever with which to make the repayment.

We now have also a new Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andras). Because the Prices and Incomes Commission, set up in 1969, has cost about $4 million to date and is the second most expensive commission we have had, I would suggest that an early priority for the minister would be to determine its role for the four months of its life that remain. It was set up to fight inflation. Instead, it used its resources to fight the labour unions. Meanwhile, the November-December price index went higher than in any November-December period for the last ten years. The consumer price index for December, 1971, stood 5 per cent higher than for December, 1970. It is still going up.

I would also suggest to the new Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that he pick up an early piece of the unfinished business of his predecessor and try to get his Prices and Incomes Commission to study and report on methods of helping low-income consumers cope with the rising cost of living. And he might embark on a study of how to devise price controls that would include all sectors of the community and not merely endeavour to make a scapegoat of one—the labour unions in this case.

There are many useful things to which the new Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs could turn his attention. One is to find ways of helping people on low fixed incomes and pensions to get enough food in order to keep themselves at a decent standard of nutrition. This is a real problem. I am by no means opposed to sending food to people in depressed and underdeveloped countries or to famine-ravaged countries, but I would put in a plea that the minister find some way of dealing with the undernourished, elderly people who fill the garrets and basements of our cities and have to exist on tea, toast and catfood in far too many cases.

• (2040)

An hon. Member: Come on!

Mrs. MacInnis: I am coming on, and I will not be turned off by that sort of remark. Our elderly people are existing on far, far less than is necessary for keeping body and soul together in a modern way, with a modern standard. Because they are elderly and defenceless, they are suffering.

• (2040)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have pointed out some of the most serious problems our citizens are now facing. There are many others, I assure you, such as housing, manpower, day-care centres for the children of mothers working outside the home, the problems of pollution, of protection of the environment, of birth control. The complete list would be endless.

Those who have an adequate income can perhaps solve such problems or evade them. But individuals and families with low incomes or even medium incomes are trapped in poverty they cannot escape without this government's assistance.

I therefore suggest that neither the Prime Minister nor his government are entitled to look the other way or turn a deaf ear to the plight of those who are soliciting their support. It is all very well to speak of the deplorable conditions that exist in all the other countries of the world, but it is no excuse for not taking steps to improve the lot of the Canadian people. This government requested the right to formulate a policy for the well-being of all Canadian citizens. It was given that right. It must not now shirk its responsibility.

[English]

Today, Mr. Speaker, I have been outspoken in my criticism of the government's sins of omission. I can assure you that every bit of this criticism is based on the many personal interviews, telephone calls and letters that I have had with my constituents and many others across Canada during recent weeks and months. To me, there is something completely irrational and shameful about complacently boasting of our natural resources, our technology and our increasing gross national product, as well as our great exploits of the past few months, while at the same time we allow one Canadian in five to remain below the poverty level where he, and she, must watch his children caught in the same trap of poverty and be condemned, in turn, to rust and rot in idleness while the affluent condemn them as bums and loafers. It is all wrong and completely unnecessary.

But the price of changing it is one which this government is not prepared to pay. The price of change is to refuse resolutely to yield to pressures from the big business community, and legislate in the interests of the whole population. The government must give top priority to that part of the population which needs help most. This government refused to do that and still refuses to. Indeed, it goes out of its way to mention that it wants more co-operative and fruitful relations with the industrial community, as though that were the place where the need is greatest. For that reason, this government has forfeited its right to govern a democracy, no matter what fine phrases it uses to disguise the fact of its failure. I feel sure, and I hope I am correct, that the Canadian people have just about got to the end of their patience and their gullibility when it comes to being taken in by any combination of fine phrases, beautiful slogans, charisma, or any of those means used for diverting attention away from the fact that the government has not been meeting the people's needs through legislation and has no intention of doing so.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I say that the Canadian people have come slowly but surely to the opinion, held with certainty, that this government has forfeited its right to govern this democracy which we still have, thank goodness, in Canada.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join the many members who have expressed congratulations to the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Olson: If I were to explain why, Mr. Speaker, it would probably take me most of my 40 minutes. They were both excellent speeches.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thought the minister had only 30 minutes.

Mr. Olson: I suppose that the debate on the Speech from the Throne should be the time for us to review and outline the major thrusts for the future in the particular subject area we want to deal with. Of course, I want to talk about agriculture. Only a few days ago we finally put into effect the marketing legislation that the majority of the farmers of this country, through their representatives, have been asking for ever since I have been a member of this House, and even before that. That legislation is exactly what I said it would be and what the members on this side said it would be when we introduced Bill C-176. It is enabling legislation. It is on the statute books now, and the majority of producers of any farm commodity may use it if they wish. Neither this government nor, indeed, anyone associated with this party, intends to try to move this matter at a more rapid pace than the producers wish.

I know that farm organizations, and particularly commodity groups, have been anxious for some time to avail themselves of the provisions of this bill, and they are now in the position where they can set up modern marketing structures by using the legal structure that legislation provides. I wish to advise those members of the House who do not already know, that that bill was proclaimed a few days ago.

I also want to say a few words about the small farms development program. As I said at the outset, this is the time for us to deal briefly with what has happened during the past 12 months with respect to a number of agricultural commodities, to outline what the future holds, as one can see it today, and to outline our major thrust in developing and progressing with the programs that are now under way.

Let me say a few words briefly about grain, in the first place, because grain is certainly one of the largest, if not the largest, commodities in Canadian agriculture today. I will not review statistics because members of this House and, of course, farmers in western Canada generally know that in the last crop year we established an all-time record, with sales of 700 million bushels of grain. To date this year our sales have been even greater than that.

Mr. Benjamin: But the farmers are still poor.

Mr. Olson: I find it rather strange that those who criticize the government and those who participated in today's question period do not understand that when you have an extraordinarily large snowfall day after day and week after week in the mountains, grain deliveries going through that part of the transport system will obviously be slowed down.

Mr. Benjamin: Where was the minister last fall?

Mr. Olson: That is what happened. Some members of the opposition tried to find some way of showing that this was the government's fault. They tried to suggest that the government was to blame because five feet of snow per week fell for some weeks in the highest reaches of the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. Benjamin: Nobody is blaming the government for that.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) must know, because of his background, that with that kind of snowfall as much as 50 per cent of rail traffic is curtailed. There were several days when no trains were running at all. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but after the snowfalls and the tracks have been cleared it is weeks before you get back to full efficiency. Even after a small storm, snowfall or wind, there are tremendous snowdrifts. That slows everything down tremendously. In the past few days I have been very pleased with the full co-operation of the people involved in that sector of the transportation industry. They have been able to move as much as 800, and sometimes over 800 carloads in a day. We should commend those people in that part of the transportation industry for a great effort.

• (2050)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Olson: They are certainly working under a great handicap at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order or for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Downey: I was wondering if the minister would allow a question at this point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member knows he can ask a question only if the minister is willing to answer.

Mr. Olson: I would be very happy to answer a question.

Mr. Downey: Can the minister state whether the government's policy has changed in any respect as to the matter of keeping permanent storage facilities full of grain? What is happening to those? Has there been any change in the government's attitude with regard to this situation?

Mr. Olson: There are some other matters involved, Mr. Speaker. Cost factors get into this situation. There is also the question of the maximum beneficial use of the transportation equipment that is available. Surely the hon. member would not suggest that we change the policy and keep any grain in terminals on the west coast when we have an opportunity to load it on ships. As far as the inland terminals are concerned, when there is a maximum requirement we must have as much equipment as possible to move that grain into export position. What is the purpose of holding it in the inland terminals if there is a limitation of facilities, including equipment?

If the time comes, and I am pretty sure it is not going to come until the end of this crop year, when we have additional equipment and transportation facilities with which we can take grain into the inland terminals, clean it to export standards so it will be available, that is one consideration. Even that is not the most beneficial use of all that equipment at this time. As has been pointed out, we need all the grain that we can get to the west coast immediately, because the stocks there are very, very seriously depleted. When we take this into account, we have to remember there is an additional cost of bringing grain into the inland terminals, unloading it and then loading it again. When you have room, both in so far as storage is concerned and capacity for cleaning at the elevators that are in export position, you first use that to the maximum. If there is any capacity left, that is when you bring it into the inland terminals.

There is one point that could be made with respect to farm deliveries at terminals. There is also an opportunity for farmers to deliver to a grain company account at some of the inland terminals if they choose to do so.

An hon. Member: Peanuts.

Mr. Olson: It might be peanuts, but the grain that comes from that distance also involves some additional cost to the farmer if it gets past 25, 30 miles or up to 50 miles. I certainly would not advocate diverting carloads of grain to inland terminals that can be used immediately on the west coast. That is not the most beneficial use of that equipment and grain at this time.

I certainly hope that the kind of climatic conditions we need to maximize the movement of grain over the mountains and into and through those terminals will be with us. If so, from the performance we have seen in the past few days, it will not be very long, probably in the next three to four weeks, before we catch up with all the commitments we have made. If the weather improves from now on, this can be done in spite of the bad weather we have had. I do not think there is anything the government or anyone involved in the grain trade can do about that situation. We are satisfied that a maximum effort is being made by everyone involved. If the weather conditions do turn reasonably favourable, based on the projected sales that have been made we are again going to break the record for the six major grains that are sold out of the Prairies. the farmers of western Canada can look forward to with some satisfaction and optimism.

One point that ought to be made at this time is that while we have been moving very much larger volumes for somewhat over a year now, there has not been a satisfactory upward movement in the price of these grains in the international market. Everyone acknowledges that is so. People also realize that when you are trying to sell against a very large inventory, it is very difficult to get the price up. That has been with us for as long as men have been trading. That is not something over which we have complete control in Canada. We have to compete with other nations in the international market.

I hope we have now relieved the pressure of these huge inventories or surpluses, whichever you choose to call them, to the point where we can now start to discuss with our customers and, more particularly, our competitors from exporting countries, that prices ought to start moving up a little. It is not fair to say they have not moved up at all, because they have moved up some. I am the first to agree they have not kept pace with increased costs. Indeed, prices have not moved up as high as they were during the last period when we had sales opportunities far in excess of our ability to supply them, because of the situation in the international market. I am sure hon. members will agree there is a degree of optimism with these inventories having been run down somewhat.

• (2100)

I think it is also fair to say that they can look forward, at least to the end of this crop year and perhaps quite a long way beyond that, to very strong markets as far as volume is concerned. It is also reasonable to recall that in spite of all the criticism directed at the government with respect to the Lift program, this program has proved to be a major factor responsible for the more satisfactory situation evident today. Had we continued to produce without providing farmers with some relief against surpluses, this substantially improved situation could not have been expected.

An hon. Member: Have you read the Globe and Mail?

Mr. Olson: Those hon. members who are interrupting will have to speak loud enough for me to hear them, or they might as well not interrupt at all.

I wish to deal now with another major commodity in the agricultural sector, dairy products. I believe it is fair to say that almost every dairy farmer in Canada will agree that in no time in the last 20 years has there been such an improvement in the industry as took place in 1971. In retrospect, we have to ask ourselves why. The reason is that the government had the courage to take certain steps, notwithstanding their unpopularity at the moment, which it was necessary to take in order to produce a situation of the kind we are experiencing today.

[Mr. Olson.]

Canada did not do all this by herself. Other countries were concerned, including such large producers of dairy products as the countries within the European Economic Community, New Zealand and Australia. They, too, were faced with enormous surpluses of dairy products on hand. We took action to place that part of the dairy industry which sells through the industrial milk marketing sector in a position where it could call upon the kind of legal structures and administration, at least in Ontario and Quebec, to get this situation under control. There were some cutbacks. They were not large. The fact of the matter is that there was not a very large overproduction month by month; the difficulty was the presence of these enormous supplies of skimmed milk powder and cheese on hand. As long as we were going along adding even 3 per cent or 4 per cent to these inventories year by year, there was no way in which prices could advance from their disastrously low levels.

As I mentioned, there were other nations involved beside ourselves. We entered into an international agreement. It was not a formal agreement under whose terms every nation undertook to adhere strictly to a certain volume and price range, but there was an understanding among the western nations who were interested in this market that we were really not doing any service to the farmers of any of our countries by continuing the practices which had been followed in the past. Basically, the support price was completely out of line with the international price and no attempt was being made to equate supply with demand.

The second major improvement involved the initiation of programs for moving these high quality food products into the diets of people who had not been accustomed to using them. It is worth while to recall that had it not been for programs of this kind there would have been a far smaller market for dairy products today than existed before these high quality foods were introduced to certain nations. I am thinking of some of the central American nations, countries in the Caribbean and in certain parts of Africa.

In the first instance, we made some of these products available—I am speaking now of skimmed milk powder—on the international market at very low prices, sometimes for as little as six or seven cents a pound, though our support price in Canada was 20 cents. The interesting thing is that today we are moving a volume which is just as high, yet we are selling it for 27 cents or 28 cents, as high as 3 cents a pound above the new and increased support price. Some of the countries which were buying it at 6 cents a couple of years ago are now buying it at these more satisfactory price levels.

So there is a new kind of optimism. They can see a breath of fresh air in the dairy industry for the first time in 20 years. No longer do surpluses overwhelm the market, and volume is moving out at reasonable prices. Skimmed milk powder is now selling on the international market at prices above our support level, one which, by the way, has been raised twice, from 20 cents to 24 cents and from 24 cents to 26 cents. The floor price for cheese was also moved up twice in 1971 and today cheese, too, is selling well above this higher support level.

There are no stocks or inventories of these products building up in Canada today. This is a more satisfactory position, because producers who have been struggling under the burden of these surpluses are able to produce, confident that no new inventories are building up. Products are moving out at about the same rate as they are produced and this is a much more satisfactory way in which to be running the dairy industry in this country.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Members over there do not like to hear these things.

Mr. Olson: Oh, I know. It is terribly hard on those hon. members opposite. They think there is an election coming on. When they get on the hustings, I know one thing: none of them will mention the dairy industry if they can help it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Olson: And none of them will mention the grain industry if they can help it. When I get through talking about hogs and beef and vegetables, and so on, I do not know what hon. members opposite will find to say in relation to agriculture.

Mr. Benjamin: I should like to ask the minister a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member may do so if the minister agrees.

Mr. Benjamin: I appreciate the minister's courtesy. He made some comments earlier in his speech and I chose not to interfere until he was through. I agree with him that it is not his fault or the fault of the Liberal government if there are five-foot snowdrifts in British Columbia. But if we can move 800 boxcars today, after the snow has drifted, why could we not move 800 boxcars a day before there were any snowdrifts around Vancouver?

Mr. Olson: I am surprised the hon. gentleman should ask such an elementary question. He ought to know enough about the transportation industry, having been in it for a while, to understand that there is not much purpose hauling more boxcars to Vancouver per day than can be unloaded in that port. Today this number can be unloaded because of the tremendous improvement the government has made possible through the use of the block system which allows much more efficient use of our transportation facilities.

It was not very long ago that most people thought it would be absolutely impossible to get more than 550 or 575 carloads per day unloaded at the west coast terminals. This was the absolute upper limit, and even this was sustainable only for a day or two. But with the block system the operators know what is contained in every car before it gets there. They know the kind of grain the Wheat Board has ordered and they know which cars it will be in. Difficulties were overcome by having the grain companies exchange paper rather than cars.

These are some of the reasons we can now put 800 carloads a day in there and get them unloaded. In the past, under the system which was then in effect it was, of course, impossible to get 800 cars unloaded in Vancouver. But because of the progressive steps taken by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and those concerned in the industry itself we have been able to increase the capacity to unload cars in Vancouver by as much as 50 per cent in the past two years.

• (2110)

Mr. Benjamin: Would the minister permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member can ask a question only if the minister agrees to answer.

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to answer any more questions. Hon. members also know that two and a half or three years ago the maximum number of carloads that could be unloaded at the head of the lakes was slightly over 1,000 a day, though on some days it was as much as 1,100. During certain weeks from December through January at Thunder Bay day after day 1,700 carloads a day were unloaded. I repeat that we should commend those people at the elevators, who work on the railways and in the grain industry, for this very significant improvement. What is more, this improvement was made without adding hardly any additional capital facilities but simply by making better use of what was available already.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. Is the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) rising on a point of order, or does he wish to put a question to the minister?

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, I have a question, if the minister will permit it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member may ask a question only if the minister wishes to answer it.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer questions, but I must say a few words about other commodities and I am afraid I shall run out of time.

Mr. Skoberg: Then let us get back to cheese.

Mr. Olson: I shall have something more to say about cheese. There was some significant improvement as well in 1971 in the beef industry.

An hon. Member: Another marketing bill.

Mr. Olson: There has been no need for a marketing bill for the beef industry because beef is one of those commodities that takes time to reach the stage of overproduction. I sincerely hope that the beef industry will never have the serious problems encountered by the dairy and hog industries during the past year and a half or so. I say that very sincerely, even though there were some improvements in the beef industry in 1971.

The question of price is important, of course, but so is the fact that we have made some progress in changing the grading system so that beef production in Canada will now be geared more to what the housewife wants to buy. While the immediate impact of this kind of change will probably not be felt for some time, there is nevertheless a good market for beef. Indeed, as we move into the future we should be more concerned—if that is the right word—about the profit margin of the beef producers, both producers of feeders as well as feed lot operators.

Not only I but the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the Canadian Cattlemen's Association have long felt that there is a finish being put on a lot of these animals, that is, first of all, very expensive and, secondly, almost completely wasted once they get to the packing houses. It is clear to those people who understand packing of beef that the last extra pound of fat that is put on at the end of the feeding season, in terms of conversion rates and cost per pound, is probably the most expensive pound of fat so far as the feeder is concerned. If this is cut off when the cattle goes to the packing house—and there are far too many fat heifers and steers that have to have a lot of fat cut off—surely we should use our intelligence and ingenuity to find a way of bringing these cattle to market so that the whole product is more acceptable to the consumer, with a resultant lower cost to the feeder. As far as one can see down the road through 1972 and beyond, the beef industry can look with some confidence and optimism to a market that will remain in a healthy economic condition.

I turn now to the subject of hogs and to say something about 1971 which was a very difficult year for the hog producers. Hogs were in overproduction in relation to market demand both in Canada and the United States, to the point where through most of 1971 many hog producers were selling their hogs at below their cost, not a desirable situation. A few days ago we announced that we would be paying a deficiency payment in 1971 of $5 per hog up to 200 hogs with grade index 100 or higher.

Mr. Harkness: Would the minister permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. Is the hon. member rising to ask the minister a question?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister why the legal requirements of the Agricultural Stabilization Act in regard to obligatory payments are not being met on hogs that are below index 100.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member will know—because he was, I think, in the government at the time the original Agricultural Stabilization Act was written—the level of payment we are making is not 80 per cent but 88.5 per cent. He will also know that under the act and regulations it is not specifically stated that this payment shall be made on every hog regardless of quality. The reason for this is very simple. We know, and the hon. member certainly will agree—

Mr. Harkness: That is not what the act said when it was put through.

Mr. Olson: I am sure the hon. member will agree that what we are really talking about here is hog quality, when once you go below 100 you can go down quite a way, but 60.9 per cent of the hogs are grade 100 or better. When you go down below that you are really talking about a product that is not attractive to the market.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to inform the minister that his time has expired. Since I have already taken account of a few extra minutes taken to answer questions, I shall need the unanimous consent of the House to permit the minister to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to transgress the good will of the House to go on longer. Obviously, I shall have to make another speech later in the Throne Speech debate. I have a number of very important matters to deal with that will probably take a further 20 or 25 minutes. These relate to the U.S. surtax, sheep and lambs, potatoes, eggs, and two bills, the Farm Credit Corporation bill and the exhibition loans bill. So while I thank the House for its courtesy, I find I shall need more time than an additional four or five minutes.

Mr. Benjamin: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence, and with extra time granted the minister by the House, I wonder whether he would answer one more question.

Mr. Olson: I am perfectly willing, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: Would the minister mind completing the answer to the question I asked him earlier? In view of the fact that he and I both agree that 800 carloads a day are now being unloaded in Vancouver with use of the same facilities that were available last November before the five-foot snowdrifts, would the minister explain how it is we could not unload 800 carloads a day last November and thus avoid the mess we got into in January?

Mr. Olson: The answer is very simple, Mr. Speaker. Eight hundred carloads a day on a sustainable basis is almost unheard of in Vancouver. We are improving day by day as a result of the changes made in the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board, the grain commissioners, and so on, and I could spend 30 minutes going into great detail about these improvements and the effect they have had. However, I think it is fair to point out to the hon. member that the figure continues to rise. I do not know why on certain days in November they were unable to unload 800 carloads, but I do know that in view of what happened 6, 8 or 12 months ago they could get nowhere near that figure previously.

• (2120)

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, at the onset I should like to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, although I myself was disappointed with the Speech from the Throne. I believe it was just window-dressing. I imagine most members of the House of Commons spent their Christmas recess as I did, trying to iron out the problems of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Therefore, at this time I propose to speak at some length on the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

When we returned here after the recess, members of the opposition repeatedly tried to have the House adjourned in order to deal with the deplorable situation in respect of the unemployed. However, this was to no avail. It is my opinion that the government did not want to face up to the situation regarding the issuance of cheques by the commission. As you would recall, Mr. Speaker, last June I asked the minister in charge of the Unemployment Insurance Commission if he would discontinue the use of the computer system for issuing cheques and return to the manual operation. I even went so far as to suggest he could use the computer, if he had no other use for it, as a ship's anchor in the Bay of Quinte.

It turned out the other day that there were 300 cheques which had no names or addresses on them. The computer was supposed to handle 90 per cent of the unemployment insurance claims for the province of Ontario. What has it handled? It has handled 34 per cent. Last week in this House of Commons we were informed that the computer at Belleville was to handle 5,000 claims which could not be processed in the province of Quebec. When it cannot process the claims for the province of Ontario, I cannot understand why we should import business for it from another province.

I have a case involving a lady who applied for unemployment insurance on September 26 and who did not receive it until last week. When I inquired about her complaint I was informed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission at the computer centre in Belleville that they had lost the records and could not find them. The computer at Belleville broke down and it was necessary to employ 250 extra people. There was no other place in which to house them so they were housed in an old bowling alley with two washrooms and two exit doors.

One can understand some of the problems in respect of unemployment insurance claims when people work in such conditions and in some cases are inexperienced. I think the staff in the district offices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission try their best. They work long hours in their efforts to sort out claims. This is the situation especially at Christmas time. I am not throwing the blame on the local area offices; it lies right here at the head office.

I believe the time is long overdue when something should be done about the situation. We might ask ourselves what we should expect when a computer is reprogrammed two or three times a month. This is what is going on. This is what happens in respect of the computer for Ontario which is located in Belleville. They are having difficulty in respect of the computer again. What are we to do now? I have correspondence from people, but time does not permit it to be placed on the record of the House. However, I would mention one or two cases.

One letter states that after 24 phone calls and a delay of two months the people concerned finally received their unemployment insurance. I have another case involving a very honest individual who tried unsuccessfully for weeks and weeks to receive his unemployment insurance benefit. He was unable to obtain any answers. Last Tuesday he received a cheque for eight weeks' benefits, in the amount of $450. Fortunately, he had returned to work. The unemployment insurance office had confirmed by telephone that he was working. On February 18 he also received four more cheques, which I have in my hand, for $574 for which he had made no claim and was not entitled to do so. In the first instance he had applied for unemployment insurance as a single man. However, according to the computer he was a married man and therefore he received $574 for the same period for which he had received $450. I assure the House that I intend to make sure that these four cheques are returned to the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

We have asked the government to deal with this very deplorable situation which is plaguing the people of this fair country of ours from coast to coast. We have heard of demonstrations in every province, and yet the government has not seen fit to let us deal with the situation which has caused misery and suffering to many people, especially at Christmas time. In many cases these people probably do not have sufficient money to carry them over a period of three or four weeks. These are honest and sincere people. I venture to say that every member of this House in days to come will be plagued by constituents who say they are being asked to pay back unemployment insurance money which they received in the form of overpayments.

So much for the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Now I shall move to the comments of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) in his speech in respect of the old age pensioners. He stated—and I do not have any argument with this—that 600,000 of our senior citizens receive $135 a month as a single person, or $255 per month as married couples at age 65. Then he threw in his dig about the Tory party when it was in power not seeing fit to lower the age. I want to remind him that it was the Tory party which gave them more than the six-buck boys did in days gone by. I do not think he stopped to think about a single individual attempting to live on $135 a month and keep up a home. He may say no individual should be living alone in this day and age. However, I cannot go along with that. I realize it is much more expensive to keep up a house if a person is receiving only $135 a month, but I still respect that individual's right to live in a home which he has enjoyed for many years.

The hon. member also dealt with the medical coverage which our senior citizens over age 65 are receiving. I believe thanks should go to the province of Ontario for exempting from contribution people over age 65. I venture to say the time is coming when we must consider bringing down the age to 60 instead of 65. He went on to describe at some length the situation of the war veteran. He stated that a single pensioner on a full pension now receives $292 per month, whereas a veteran with a wife and three children receives $460 per month. This may be very true, but I point out how difficult it is for a veteran to receive the full pension. I could mention a little later veterans who are disabled, who have been laid up with injuries and who are receiving amounts a long way below $460. I should like to quote from a magazine called Fragment. This magazine is published by War Amputations of Canada and it states in part:

> Veterans across Canada must unite in their efforts to gain maximum benefits from the federal government, which too long has been making veterans dance to the tune of politicians.

• (2130)

I quote from an address given by Mr. Chadderton of War Amputations of Canada. He quoted the case of a paraplegic veteran whose spine was damaged by a German machine-gun bullet on D-Day and who receives only $1,600 out of a maximum of $2,400 under the exceptional incapacity allowance. The executive secretary of the War Amputees Association said that benefits in 1919 amounted to the same as wages received by basic civil servants. The basic pension is $3,500 a year, while the average civil service salary for the lower grades is $4,550.

We are getting gypped out of $1,000. What we want is to be treated fairly. We want to ensure that the Pension Commission will get with it. We are tired of political games.

Now we hear from the hon. member who replied to the Speech from the Throne how well the veterans are treated. The system, in my opinion, is designed to discourage veterans from applying for benefits. The veteran is filled with the frustrations of meeting boards and is shuttled around while he settles for less than he is entitled to. I should like to deal with a war veteran whose disability allowance I tried my best to have increased. This veteran has his leg off below the knee. He has suffered from a spinal injury as a result of having part of his leg amputated. He is not able to work. He has a wife and one dependent child, and he is receiving $214 a month. He has been before the board for reboards and, as the executive of the War Amputees Association stated, he is shunted back and forth. Now he is suffering from a nervous disorder, and yet I can get no satisfaction from the doctors at the reboard. They say they cannot upgrade his allowance or anything else.

He is one of many such veterans. I know of another veteran who is trying to get into Sunnybrook Hospital where only 550 beds are left for veterans. At one time this was supposed to be a veterans' hospital. This gentleman is confined to a nursing home. What he gets there is not what he deserves, yet he is being forced to spend his remaining years in what I would call very uncomfortable surroundings. Yet we hear how well this government has treated our war veterans. I cannot go along with this, and my efforts will be directed toward helping those who have served our country so well.

Now I would like to deal with another subject which I thought would have been dealt with in the Speech from the Throne. I am referring to what is known as the grand canal scheme. We hear so much about pollution and about the shortages of fresh water, and yet we have flowing into the Arctic and into the Atlantic Ocean 3,000 cubic feet of fresh water per second. In 1964, a consulting engineer named Thomas W. Kierans compiled the results of his extensive research into the possibility of diverting the waters of several northern rivers in Ontario and Quebec down to the Canadian heartland, the Great Lakes.

As I stated before, this project is known as the grand canal scheme. It is roughly 550 miles long. There are 18 pumping stations and electricity can be generated from the water going down the other side to pump the water up. The project envisioned by Kierans would provide endless quantities of water to flush out the Great Lakes and give them new vitality. In short, the scheme would give new life to those lakes and several rivers serving more than half the population of North America.

Mr. Kierans' proposal was to benefit the people of Canada, to the detriment of no one. In keeping with its policy of manipulating the people of Canada instead of trying to govern them, the present federal government has stood idly by and allowed the Quebec government to pre-empt the Kierans proposal and to watch while thousands of people are chased from their homes in callous disregard and hundreds of thousands of square miles of watershed in Ontario and Quebec are disoriented.

On the front cover of the report of his studies which Mr. Kierans published one can find the following legend after the title "Provincial—National—International—Multipurpose Benefits". Such a legend is in keeping with the spirit that made us a great nation. The narrow, self-seeking nature of one province to jump on this bandwagon and attempt to justify a premier's election promises to create jobs is the type of spirit that will put Canada at the bottom of the list of world nations. One would expect a province that receives $1.5 billion more than it pays in taxes, money that comes from other provinces' taxes, to at least go through the motions of consulting other provinces on a matter that will affect them. One would expect that province to take every opportunity to enter into co-operative ventures to advance the economic and social climate of the respective provinces. This "go it alone" attitude on the part of a province which demonstrates every day that it cannot go it alone is wearing thin, and I think it is incumbent on the federal government in such a case to step in and exercise leadership. This is why I expected some mention of this, from the progressive government it is supposed to be, in the Speech from the Throne.

This is not a plan which a provincial leader should be allowed to put into practice as an election gimmick. This is a serious matter which can have incalculable results in both benefits and damages. The James Bay water project envisioned by Kierans can benefit millions of Canadians. If entered into improperly, it could lead to untold and irreversible damage to our northern ecology. As it is being approached by Quebec, it will result in the almost immediate dispossession of thousands of native Indians in northern Quebec and Ontario and the removal of some species of wildlife from a vast area of the Canadian north.

The Quebec government says that it can do what it chooses to do with the waters because the affected rivers flow out of their province. I dispute that claim. The rivers do indeed flow out of Quebec, but so does the Peace River flow out of British Columbia and all of us know today the effect of the Bennett Dam on the ecology of northern Alberta and the effect on the lives of the native peoples of that area. We say now that we would not have allowed the Bennett Dam to be built if proper information had been available to us before it was built.

We still have time to get complete and proper information on the short-range and long-range results of allowing the Quebec government to proceed in the manner it plans to do and that in fact it has begun to do. It is not too late for the federal government to force a halt to this project until all possible information is made available to the government and to the provinces on the short-term and long-range impact that it can have on the ecology of a vast area of our country.

I am concerned, also, about the great possibility that the federal government will be drawn into this project in a way that will further strain the fiscal resources of the government. It is common knowledge that the Quebec government does not have the money that will be required to complete the project. In fact, the estimates of the cost of the project range from $5 billion to $10 billion, and that in itself proves that the planning has been less than adequate. I may state here that in 1964 the Kierans report estimated the cost at between $2½ billion and $3 billion.

• (2140)

I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government will be required to bail out the project with tax money from other provinces to avert a possible or probable disaster. I do not want to wait until that happens. I should like to speak of some of the benefits of the grand canal suggested by the Kierans report—new waters to the Great Lakes, the St. Lawrence and Ottawa rivers; water for the power industry, navigation, ports, shore property protection, fisheries and recreation; water for consumption, such as municipal water supplies, industrial uses and agriculture. New water from the grand canal system would offset withdrawals from the Great Lakes; new electric power could be fed into a national power grid to handle peak load periods; inland navigation, using ships for cargo and passenger service could extend from Montreal through the Great Lakes and into the Atlantic Ocean from Hudson Bay. In addition, the grand canal project, as a joint federal-provincial venture, would promote orderly development of a large and wealthy area of the Canadian north.

Mr. Speaker, the Throne Speech contains a statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that reads as follows:

> Our goals and hopes are bound up in the restlessness and vitality of this rich land.

I am in agreement with the Prime Minister that we have a rich land, Mr. Speaker, but I add to that statement that our wealth is so badly managed by the present government that the restlessness he speaks of is not a good sign, as he implies, but a bad sign. It is a sign that people in this country are fed up with deprivation and lack of opportunity in a country that has the potential to be a great nation. People are restless because they have been deceived and misled. People are restless because they not only cannot find jobs but they cannot even get assurances from their government that it is even the least bit interested in their plight. People are required to leave the work force before they feel that they are through contributing, and are forced to exist on inadequate pensions for the remainder of their lives.

Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the Throne Speech would contain some indication that this government would consider abandoning a few of its costly and wasteful give-away programs and divert that money to the more humane and more practical purpose of increasing pensions and supplements to the elderly. I had hoped, Mr. Speaker, that the Throne Speech would provide some ray of hope to those of our citizens who aspire to something more than a mere existence. I had hoped that the government would at long last abandon or at least modify its disastrous experiments with our economy and chart a course toward fiscal reality.

We need programs that will stimulate the economy and restore the confidence of Canadians in their own system. We need a revitalized economy, because that is the only way new jobs can be created and present jobs preserved. The Prime Minister stated in the Throne Speech that the government would double its past efforts in the fight against unemployment. Last year those efforts created 57,000 new unemployed. It would appear that the goal for 1972 is to be 114,000 new unemployed, if we are to go by the government's past record.

The future of Canada is in serious doubt, Mr. Speaker, and I say this knowing that the Prime Minister will call me a prophet of doom, as he has called my leader.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38(3), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith any amendment now before the House.

• (2150)

[English]

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (M. Lewis) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 1)

YEAS

Messrs.

Aiken	Laprise
Alexander	La Salle
Asselin	Latulippe
Baldwin	Lewis
Barnett	MacDonald (Egmont)
Beaudoin	MacInnis (Mrs.)
Bell	MacKay
Benjamin	McCleave
Burton	McCutcheon
Carter	McGrath
Coates	Moore
Crouse	Muir
Danforth	Nesbitt
Dinsdale	Noble
Douglas	Nowlan
Downey	Nystrom
Fairweather	Orlikow
Flemming	Peters
Gauthier	Ritchie
Gilbert	Rodrigue
Godin	Rowland
Harding	Scott
Hellyer	Simpson
Howard (Skeena)	Skoberg
Howe	Southam
Knight	Stanfield
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)	Stewart (Marquette)
Korchinski	Thompson (Red Deer)
Lambert (Edmonton West)	Woolliams
	Yewchuk—59.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand	Basford
Andras	Béchard
Badanai	Beer

Division

Messrs:

Benson
Blair
Blouin
Boulanger
Breau
Buchanan
Caccia
Cafik
Chappell
Chrétien
Clermont
Comtois
Corbin
Crossman
Cullen
Cyr
Davis
Deachman
Deakon
De Bané
Dubé
Dupras
Émard
Éthier
Faulkner
Forest Forget
Foster
Francis
Gendron
Gervais
Gibson
Gillespie
Goode
Goyer
Gray
Groos
Guilbault
Haidasz
Hopkins
Howard
(Okanagan Boundary)
Hymmen
Isabelle
Jamieson
Jerome
Lachance
Laflamme
Laing
(Vancouver South)
Lajoie
Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt)
Langlois
Laniel
Leblanc (Laurier)
Lefebvre
Legault
Lessard (LaSalle)
L'Heureux
Loiselle
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
McIlraith
McNulty
Mahoney
Marceau
Marchand
(Kamloops-Cariboo)
Munro
Murphy
Noël
O'Connell
Olson
Osler
Ouellet
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Perrault
Portelance
Pringle
Prud'homme
Reid
Roberts
Robinson
Rochon
Rock
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Serré

Messrs:

Sharp
Smith
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stafford
Stanbury
Stewart (Cochrane)
St. Pierre
Sullivan
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Tolmie
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)
Wahn
Walker
Watson
Weatherhead
Whelan
Whicher
Yanakis—115.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the subamendment defeated.

At 10.10 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 22, 1972

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF MOTION TO AMEND INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 60 I wish to table notice of a ways and means motion to amend the Income Tax Act providing for the 1972 corporate and personal income tax cuts announced during the last session.

* * *

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—SITE OF SECOND INTERNATIONAL FACILITY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity. I refer to the situation created by the many speculative rumours in regard to the location of the second international airport in Ontario. In view of the importance of a final decision in this respect I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Noble):

That a special order of the House be made setting up the Committee on Transport and Communications immediately and that this matter be referred to that committee for study and report in order that the final decision may be in the best interests of all concerned.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION BY COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgency. In view of the fact that the terms of reference of the Woods Committee precluded consideration of the basic rate of pension and consideration of the National Prisoners of War Association I move, seconded by the member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae):

That the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs be convened to consider these and other matters relating to progress of the Department of Veterans arising out of the Canadian Pension Act, War Veterans Allowance Act and other legislation pertaining thereto.

Mr. Speaker: This motion has been proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REMOVAL OF STATION AGENTS, SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF TRANSPORT COMMISSION ORDER BY CABINET

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask a question of the Prime Minister. It deals with two matters and originated as a result of action taken by the government of the province of Saskatchewan with the assistance of various municipal representatives. It has to do with an order that has been handed down by the Canadian Transport Commission whereby, on the application of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, 56 agents, nine caretakers and four caretaker agents at stations in the province of Saskatchewan and four agents and three caretakers at stations in the province of Alberta are being removed. The decision was made, reconsideration was given by the commission and the commission has now upheld the original order. In view of the fact this decision will actually bring about in Saskatchewan a death blow to many large towns and villages, I ask the Prime Minister whether the cabinet, in the exercise of its authority, will review this order to the end that justice will be done? Unless it is reviewed and altered in whole or in part, many of our towns and villages will become ghost towns.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the right hon. member will realize that I have not had any previous notice of this question and I cannot possibly answer without looking into the matter. I will look into the matter and see if an answer can be provided.

• (1110)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that representations were made at the commission hearings in Saskatchewan by a score or more communities through their representatives, by the government of Saskatchewan, by four members of Parliament and by one hon. gentleman from the other place, all in opposition to the closure of these agencies, and since these representations were ignored by the Canadian Transport Commission, will the minister consider asking his colleagues in the cabinet to rescind the order handed down by the commission?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Without looking at the actual details I am not sure whether the cabinet has in fact the authority to overrule the Canadian Transport Commission, but I will be glad to look into the whole issue to see exactly what authority we may have and discuss the matter with the appropriate persons.

REMOVAL OF STATION AGENTS, SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA—CONSIDERATION OF NATURE OF UNDERTAKINGS BY COMPANY IN REVIEW

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether as part of his review of this matter he would take special note of the justification given for the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission which is based in part on certain undertakings by the Canadian Pacific that are of greater or lesser significance to many people depending on how they are regarded. For example, there is the undertaking that stations will be kept open where passenger service is provided, but there is not a single bit of passenger service available at any of the locations involved. Will the minister review the whole matter in light of the innocuous undertakings given by Canadian Pacific and the meaningless gestures made by the company?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): To the extent that the question contains a request that I review, yes, I will be glad to do so.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—INQUIRY AS TO POLICY STATEMENT—DISCUSSION WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the innumerable undertakings given by the right hon. gentleman, beginning some months ago, and the inexplicable delays which have taken place, can the Prime Minister inform us now when the promised statement on government policy with regard to foreign investment or, to use the government's fancy title, domestic control of the national economic environment, will be made to the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. Precisely because there have been innumerable delays and because the government has not been able to come forward with this statement as quickly as it had hoped, I would prefer not to go on record now as setting any date. Past experience has taught me that this is an unwise thing to do in this particular connection.

Mr. Lewis: It may be unwise to name a particular date, but in view of the fact the policy of the government was supposed to have been arrived at last November and to have been contained in a cabinet minute dated November 15, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether the government is still standing by that policy or whether the policy is being reconsidered or has been changed in any respect, and what events, pressures or considerations have been responsible for the delay?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this question is based on hypotheses as to things that might or might not have happened to a policy statement of which the hon. member knows nothing. I do not think I could answer in a way that would enlighten him except to remind him that both he and his party know the difficulty of arriving at a coherent, broad policy on foreign ownership.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that Justin could do better than that. The Prime Minister knows that we have given—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has been recognized for the purpose of asking a supplementary, so perhaps he would ask it.

Mr. Lewis: I should like to ask the Prime Minister this question. In view of the fact that the Canadian Forum version of the government's policy has been available publicly for a long time, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the subject matter of Canada's policy on foreign investment has been raised in an informal or a formal way during any discussions with ministers or officers of the United States administration, or in the current trade discussions or in any other discussions that have taken place; and has the government's policy, or the broad outlines of that policy, been communicated to ministers or officers of the United States government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I know of no way in which that policy could have been communicated to the United States government. The subject may have been mentioned as a subject in various exchanges, but there is no way in which the policy could have been communicated in any substantive form to anyone for the simple reason that when it is ready in substantive and final form it will be communicated to the House of Commons first.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, do I take it from the Prime Minister's replies that the decision which the Prime Minister said had been taken before Christmas on this subject has been subject to review since that time and is still subject to review?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition should not take that to be the case. I explained a couple of days ago that the broad decision had been taken in December and that we are now working out the conditions under which that decision would apply and the various aspects of implementing that decision, which I reminded the House was a further matter for consideration and which we hope will lead us close to the period when we can introduce legislation dealing with the whole question.

[Later:]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON POLICY

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): My supplementary is to the Prime Minister. As the elaboration of policy or the decision on such a policy will have such wide ramifications for the country and in view of the obvious interest and concern of members of provincial governments, has the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance had an opportunity to confer directly with the premiers or their provincial counterparts to consider the implications of any national policy in this regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I informed the House before Christmas that the matter had been discussed in general terms at the federal-provincial conference of first ministers. We did not, of course, supply to them the details of our policy or even, for that matter, the broad details because, I repeat, we wanted to inform the House of Commons of it first. However, we did discuss the matter with them in general terms and got whatever information we could from them. As the hon. member knows, some provinces are pursuing their work on foreign ownership and they are doing that parallel to the federal government. We hope the end result will dovetail in a way which is satisfactory to all Canadians.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—ALLEGED REJECTION OF DATE SUGGESTED BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE FOR POLICY STATEMENT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister if he could explain to the House the reasons why he and his government rejected the very valid recommendations that the policy statement on foreign ownership be made toward the end of the throne speech debate, which recommendations were contained in a memorandum from the Minister of National Revenue dated February 14?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that a question asked in those terms is not in order. In this way the hon. member is inviting the Prime Minister to make a statement which normally ought to be made on motions.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Could I rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether he would be prepared to table that memorandum from the Minister of National Revenue on this subject so that everybody may see what those valid suggestions were and in order that the Minister of National Revenue, who knows more about this obviously than the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

HOGS—REQUEST THAT FEED GRAIN FREIGHT SUBSIDY BE RE-ESTABLISHED

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the fact that for the past two years the prices of hogs in eastern Canada have been too low to permit survival of producers and that since October 1969 the government has cut down the transport grant for grains by $1.40 per ton for practically all constituencies in the Montreal area, including the county of Richmond, could the minister state whether his department intends to reinstate grain transport subsidies in these ridings in order to assist hog producers?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has already announced that there will be some adjustments in the rates of feed freight assistance paid. The zones in eastern Canada where the rate will be raised are those where there has been an actual increase in cost of transportation. What we are attempting to do is to adjust these rates into the various zones so that the amount paid by producers or users of feed grains will be balanced a little more equitably than has been the case to date, as a result of changes in transportation costs.

[Translation]

DATE OF FEED GRAIN FREIGHT SUBSIDY ADJUSTMENT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Can the minister give us some indication as to approximately when his department intends to implement these adjustments?

• (1120)

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In fact I can make it very precise—on April 1, 1972. That has already been announced.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN TREASURY BOARD AND ELECTRICAL WORKERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION—PROSPECTS FOR SETTLEMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In light of the uncertainty about the progress, if any, toward settlement of the air technicians dispute and the uncertainty surrounding the situation, can the President of the Treasury Board tell the House briefly what the government's position is, what progress is being made and what the prospects are for early settlement?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman obviously does not want to know the whole story and, indeed, this is not the occasion. I do not think it is appropriate to discuss in the House what the course of negotiations, which according to past practice have always been private, should be. I can say, however, that the parties are meeting again with the mediator in an endeavour to make progress.

DISPUTE BETWEEN TREASURY BOARD AND ELECTRICAL WORKERS—EXTENT OF AIR SERVICE DISRUPTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Transport could indicate to the House specifically the extent to which regular air services are being disrupted by the dispute between the air technicians and Treasury Board?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): That varies, Mr. Speaker, across the country. Some of the designated employees have returned to their positions in various locations. We have yesterday's report, as of about an hour ago, indicating that at some airports the number of employees was 100 per cent of normal and this declined to about 50 per cent at the lowest point, the two most difficult areas being within the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. I would be very glad to indicate the separate airports to the Leader of the Opposition if he wished.

DISPUTE BETWEEN TREASURY BOARD AND ELECTRICAL WORKERS—CONTINGENCY PLAN TO RESTORE AIR SERVICE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a further supplementary question directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the obvious serious effect the dispute is having upon air traffic and also the concern about air safety, has the Prime Minister given any consideration to changing the method by which it is being handled? Has he given any consideration to taking it out of the hands of the Treasury Board and, specifically, has the Prime Minister any contingency plans for getting the technicians back to work and the airplanes flying again satisfactorily?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we always have contingency plans but we are not about to put them into operation at this time.

[Mr. Olson.]

DISPUTE BETWEEN TREASURY BOARD AND ELECTRICAL WORKERS—NATURE OF GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Without asking for the details of the discussions, can he say whether the discussions are now being conducted on the basis of the recommendations of the conciliation board or whether the Treasury Board has made any new proposals to the air technicians?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of proposals and counter-proposals made and there will continue to be further proposals and counter-proposals made. One thing that is abundantly clear is that the demands of the electronic technicians are considerably in excess of what appears to be reasonable to grant.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, in order to clear the air I should like to ask a supplementary. I understand the Treasury Board has offered some 15.5 per cent and that the union is asking for some 23.7 per cent. Can the President of the Treasury Board advise, without revealing any particular figures, whether this is the situation as it now stands and whether in fact there is an impasse? As I understand it, the government is not prepared to offer any more money. Is this the situation?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman will recognize that for either party to publicly declare its final position is not the most effective way to proceed to negotiate an agreement.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize a supplementary by the right hon. member for Prince Albert and then one last supplementary on this subject by the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): In respect of the minister's answer in which he said that when we are negotiating we cannot let anyone know what stand we are taking. Did the minister, on behalf of the Treasury Board, not say that the stand of the government of Canada was inexorable and that there would be no increase over and above the amount originally recommended by the Conciliation Board for these people?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I did not say that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A representative of the Treasury Board?

Mr. Drury: No, nor did a representative of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes, you did.

Mr. Drury: What the government has said is that it continues to be prepared to accept the unanimous report of the conciliation board, the judgment of the government being carried by its representative in that unanimous report.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there was no denial at any time or explanation of the statement by the Treasury Board that this is what they would get and beyond that the Board is not going. Did not the minister take that stand?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is exactly what he has done.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair, as I indicated a minute ago, will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North on a last question on this subject and I suggest that from then on we try to move a little faster because we will soon be running short of time.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board says he thinks it would be improper to indicate publicly what the position of the government is in relation to these discussions. Has the government indicated to the striking employees, since the government feels their requests are exorbitant, what the government feels would be a fair offer on the part of the government?

• (1130)

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I could answer that. There has been a public declaration of what the government feels would be a fair offer, subscribed to by the union representative some time ago. This resulted in the unanimous report of the conciliation board. Since then it is quite clear the representatives of the electronic technicians have asked for more and are continuing to press the government for more. As the hon. gentleman knows, this procedure of negotiation through a mediator is a step by step process. Frequently it is rather slower than we would like, but still progress is made. Bargaining is being engaged in and one cannot bargain if it is being done in public.

* * *

[Translation]

SPORTS

1976 OLYMPIC GAMES—REQUEST BY MONTREAL FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell us whether his government or the cabinet has taken a decision concerning the request for financial assistance from Montreal in connection with the 1976 Olympic Games?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no request for financial assistance from Montreal for the 1976 Olympic Games. On the contrary, the City of Montreal has always assured us that the games would not cost a cent to the federal government and we have always thought that the city would keep its word.

* * *

[English]

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—POSSIBLE FURTHER CANADIAN CONCESSIONS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Would he take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House why the government feels it has any obligation to make further contributions toward assisting the United States to correct its temporary imbalance of trade with Canada in view of the fact that in 18 out of the last 20 years Canada has been in a deficit position in its balance of payments with the United States and at the present rate of deterioration of our balance of payments with that country we will be again in a deficit position in 3 or 4 months.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is obviously making a speech. I suggest to him that the first part of his question is in order. He is inviting the Prime Minister to indicate whether a statement might be made on motions, but the hon. member should try to limit his question to that.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I were to make a statement on motions I would merely be repeating the very valid arguments that the hon. member has just enunciated and which are borrowed from the arguments the government is making to the Americans.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: As any contributions which the government will make will cause serious lay-offs to take place in Canada and result in unemployment rising seriously, will the government give consideration to cancelling the assurance it has given the United States that it will make these further contributions which will ensure more lay-offs and more unemployment?

Mr. Trudeau: If the premises were valid I might agree with the conclusions, but they are not.

Mr. Hees: The premises are valid.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Chair might be allowed a few moments to give an opportunity to members in the back rows to take part in the question period.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Thank you for your charitable consideration, Mr. Speaker. My question is directed to my good friend, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the widespread and accurate belief that the government of Canada shifted its negotiating position between the months of December and January on the Canada-United States automotive agreement, which led to a breakdown in the talks, and in view of the minister's own commitment to the House last December that he would take the House into his confidence before a final agreement with the United States is reached in this matter, would the minister assure the House now that some time later this week he will make a statement on motions outlining the government's position on the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as no final agreement has been reached I cannot honour the promise I made, but the promise still holds. On the subject itself, we are very careful in attempting to maintain the right balance. As my hon. friend does not know what the first offer was, he cannot say that we shifted from the first offer. I am surprised to hear the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings being so tough, as his House leader said the other day that we have to be very careful—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are getting into debate at this point.

Mr. Broadbent: Since the minister is not prepared to say what was in the proposal, and this repeats the point made by the Prime Minister yesterday, would he at least tell us what is not in the government's bargaining position? Specifically, I ask the minister to assure the House now, once and for all, that the government has no intention of giving up temporarily or permanently in any form the production safeguards in the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement?

Mr. Pepin: No, Mr. Speaker, this is still being negotiated. My son, Nicholas, who is six years of age, and even the Prime Minister's son Justin, who is just a few weeks old, know that in negotiations like these you do not give your hand away.

An hon. Member: You are prepared to sell us out.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS ALLEGATION OF COMMISSION BIAS AGAINST CLAIMANTS—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): May I direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Does the government plan to make a public statement in reply to the very serious charges by the Canadian Labour Congress to the effect that the Unemployment Insurance Commission is over-zealous and not neutral but, indeed, anti-claimant in enforcing the regulations, thus further delaying claims?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I want to assure the hon. member that useful conversations have been held with officials of the Canadian Labour Congress over the past few days just as we welcome conversations and meetings with other groups in this country in regard to the fine work—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McCutcheon: I was afraid of something like that. I wonder if I might direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In light of the unprecedented delays in administration and now this accusation of bias, will the government consider an independent inquiry into the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not having heard the accusation of bias, I would refer the hon. member to the answer of the parliamentary secretary. If the conversations were useful I am sure they established that there was no bias or that if there was we would look into it.

* * *

FISHERIES

POSSIBLE VARIATION IN LOBSTER SEASON, DISTRICT NO. 5, NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the continuing dissatisfaction and the many representations made by fishermen in the area, will the minister make a public declaration as to his intentions in regard to varying the lobster season in district No. 5 in Nova Scotia. I thank the minister for his correspondence but I think it might be useful if he would say something publicly about the situation.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I am glad to report that the inshore lobster fishery has recorded an all-time record catch both in volume and value and that the offshore fishery which we have recently instituted is an overwhelming success.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LICENSING REGULATIONS FOR SALMON FISHING

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Can the Minister of Fisheries give some indication when we can expect the new 1972 salmon licensing regulations in view of the alarming response from the Newfoundland fishermen last year? If he cannot give an answer now, would he mind answering the letters which have been pouring into his office on this important question?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): The new regulations were announced last year and will again be enforced this year in the same form.

[Later:]

Mr. Lundrigan: My question is for the Minister of Fisheries. We are aware of the regulations announced last year. The question I am asking the minister is whether he will give consideration to amending last year's regulations in view of the unanimous response of the fishermen of the province of Newfoundland? If he is not prepared to do so, would he be prepared to pick up the legal tab for fishermen who plan to violate these regulations on the advice given by certain elected officials?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, substantially those who have full-time, year-round jobs no longer can catch salmon commercially. This is the only exception that was announced last year. I do not think that the fishermen generally are against our new regulations.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

RESPONSE TO REPRESENTATIONS ON BEHALF OF FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has he had an opportunity yet since he has taken over the portfolio to examine the briefs or propositions put forward on behalf of the prisoners of war who have made various representations to his predecessors? Would he and his officials look at their position with a more enlightened approach so that we can get some action in regard to these claims?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The answer is yes, and in addition I have had certain additional representations from a number of groups. I hope to be able to deal with them with the same degree of enlightenment as my predecessor.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I was hoping that the minister would not give us that answer because in the past these claims have had a very dim reception.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that the minister is willing to co-operate, would he allow the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs to meet with the National Prisoners of War Association?

Mr. Laing: I think that I would be agreeable to that.

* * *

• (1140)

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CONSIDERATION BY COMMITTEE OF SEVERANCE PAY IN RELATION TO CLAIMS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact the Unemployment Insurance Act is not a plan designed to serve the interests of the public treasury to the detriment of claimants, and in view of the fact that in some cases severance pay has been granted in lieu of pension benefits when a plant shuts down, can the parliamentary secretary give the House some indication that the entire matter of severance pay will be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of severance pay is under active study by the minister at the present time. When we speak about the public interest, let us remember that in January alone $130 million in purchasing power was poured into the spending stream by the U.I.C.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will have noticed that there are only a few minutes left before the end of the question period. We must move on to other questions. Questions should not be argumentative and replies should not be argumentative if we want to make any headway.

* * *

SHIPPING

INVESTIGATION INTO SINKING OF "GULF GULL"—OPERATION OF NAVIGATIONAL AIDS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister confirm that an investigation has been initiated into the disaster that befell the fishing craft Gulf Gull which sank with the tragic loss of six lives? In view of the fact there is some question whether navigational aids were in effect at that time, could he also assure the House that navigational aids are in operation at the present time in order to prevent a recurrence of such a disaster?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, an investigation has been under way since immediately following this unfortunate and tragic incident. On the second point, I would not normally say anything of this sort except that it has been said already by the captain of the vessel, that in fact the existence or non-existence of navigational aids did not have a bearing on the unfortunate wrecking of the vessel. As to the current state of these navigational aids, I cannot give a specific answer at the moment but that would normally be published to the shipping trade. I will be glad to try to find out the information for the hon. member.

SUGGESTED WIDER DISPERSAL OF SEARCH AND RESCUE AIRCRAFT ON ATLANTIC COAST

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Transport is now prepared to recommend to his colleague, the Minister of National Defence, in accordance with the recommendations of the commission of investigation into the sinking of the Patrick Morris, the wider dispersal on the Atlantic coast of search and rescue aircraft? I am thinking particularly of the east coast of Newfoundland which, in most instances, is 500 miles away from the nearest search and rescue aircraft.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have provided the Minister of National Defence with a copy of the report of Judge Soper and we will be having discussions on that particular recommendation.

Mr. McGrath: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

POSSIBLE POSTHUMOUS CITATION FOR CAPTAIN OF "PATRICK MORRIS"

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is in connection with the report of the commission into the sinking of the Patrick Morris. Is the minister now prepared to consider recommending a posthumous citation for the captain of the Patrick Morris who, in the commission's opinion, was responsible for the saving of 47 survivors?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his letter in this regard. The suggestion is one which certainly appeals to me. I have already initiated inquiries on whether there is some route through which I can make such a recommendation.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

INVESTIGATION OF CRASH AT GORE BAY AIRPORT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport. In view of the recent airplane crash at Gore Bay airport in which four people were killed and two people injured, can the minister say whether an investigation is under way by his department and what progress has been made in determining the causes of this disaster?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know specifically about this accident. I can only say it is normal and universal for an investigation to begin immediately after a crash. Therefore I assume that such is the case in this particular instance. As to the progress that has been made, I would have to investigate.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General and arises out of the statement he made yesterday. In his statement he referred to several letters, one written by Geoffroy, one written by Miss Cornellier, and one written by the Reverend Nickels. In light of his undertaking that if there was any irregularity or illegality he would be prepared to call a judicial inquiry to investigate this matter, would he now be prepared to table these public documents in accordance with the rules?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): First of all, Mr. Speaker, those letters are not of public interest. Among other things, there is the report of a social worker which deals with the private life of an individual, and I know the hon. member attaches great importance to personal privacy. Be that as it may, seeing he is curious to know whether or not those letters contain some scandal or other, I should be pleased to show them to him.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a further supplementary.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Most things in that department are scandalous.

Mr. Peters: They are too secretive most of the time.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister now be prepared, after his investigation into the matter, to advise us whether Geoffroy obtained a passport after his release from penitentiary and who was the guarantor of his application?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Surely the minister knows that.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I feel the question should be directed to the minister in charge, that is the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to take up the balance of the question period, but may I serve notice that at the end of the question period I will raise a point of order. According to the rules, documents of the type I have mentioned this morning are public documents. They were referred to by the minister and should be filed, and I should like to have the privilege of speaking to the matter.

* * *

[Translation]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—SUGGESTION RESPECTING EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question.

Recently, the Premier of British Columbia suggested replacing equalization payments to the provinces with direct payments to individuals. I should like to know why this suggestion was dismissed as bigotry by the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was probably not in Ottawa at that time, or else he would have realized that the sequence of events was not such as he described it. I simply wonder how the hon. member would describe a person who claims that there are too many French Canadians in Ottawa. I do not know which word the hon. member would use to describe this attitude.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary.

I did not hear that statement, but I would ask the Prime Minister whether he is aware that some of our fellow Quebecers say that there are too many English Canadians in the Province of Quebec.

[English]

BRIDGES

VANCOUVER HARBOUR—GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTION TO CONSTRUCTION OF PROPOSED THIRD STRUCTURE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Is the government prepared to make its promised contribution of some $123 million to assist the city of Vancouver with its transportation difficulties and for whatever form of transport the city council decides is most desirable?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall any such commitment. I would need more details.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, would the minister refresh his memory on the details of the matter? Also, since the Minister of the Environment and the minister responsible for urban affairs have recently made contradictory statements on the matter, would the Minister of Transport set the public mind at rest with a policy statement on government policy on the proposed third crossing?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I think everything that we can say on the subject has already been said.

Mr. Lewis: On both sides.

Mr. Jamieson: After all, a bridge that does not have both sides is not much of a bridge, is it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

IMMIGRATION ACT

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT—SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration in the hope that the answer may be more informative and less voluble. In view of the fact that amendments to the Immigration Act, which was supposed to be amended last session, do not appear on the new list of legislation for this session, has the government abandoned any intention of amending the Immigration Act to clean up the existing mess and, if so, will the government do what it can to have the matter referred to a committee for attention?

• (1150)

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the course of reviewing his new ministerial responsibilities, my minister is studying the Immigration Act and any suggestions that it be amended.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before we call orders of the day, I believe the hon. member for Calgary North wishes to raise a point of order.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I want to refer briefly to page 51 of Hansard for February 21, yesterday, where the minister said:

> On June 28, 1971, Mr. Geoffroy sought permission to marry Miss Carmen Parent with whom Mr. Geoffroy apparently had had a continuing liaison. The reason he cited to support his request was that marriage would provide a mother who would look after the needs of his three children—

The minister quoted from a letter written by Mr. Geoffroy. He may have taken the quotation out of context. We do not know what the rest of it contains. The minister quoted this part:

> At present they are being looked after by my family. However, no one is legally authorized to look out for their education or to request social assistance on their behalf.

At the bottom of page 51 of Hansard the minister quoted from a letter written by Miss Cornellier:

> Miss Cornellier wrote that both brothers, and I quote:
>
> "suffer from fairly serious cardiac pathology and therefore in the event of death, the children would be destitute. In this event, Miss Parent could support and take responsibility for the children, the marriage giving her the right to be their guardian."

We then come to the question of a public document. The minister referred to a letter from the Reverend J. A. Nickels, Chief of Chaplaincy Services, in which he said:

> In view of the positive nature of the reports, approval is given for the marriage.

I do not want to prolong this point, but in light of these and other statements surely the minister, having given his undertaking yesterday that if there was any irregularity or illegality he would agree to an inquiry, should now be prepared to file these documents. I refer to page 134 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fourth Edition, 1958, citation 159:

> A Minister of the Crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a despatch or other state paper not before the House, unless he be prepared to lay it upon the table.

That is what I am asking the minister to do, to lay these documents upon the table. The situation is similar to the rules of evidence in a court of law which prevent counsel from citing documents which have not been produced in evidence. For example, if a lawyer refers to a letter and reads one paragraph, then in the normal course of events the judge says that the whole letter must go in as evidence. The whole document has to be produced.

There is a reason behind this idea of jurisprudence. By taking a couple of lines out of context you may leave the wrong impression. If the whole document is tabled it will be before the House of Commons. If the minister refuses to disclose these letters, I ask that an order go forth that the documents connected with this affair shall be produced and be tabled now in accordance with the rules. I ask for such an order. I believe Your Honour has this right under the rules. At the top of page 135 of Beauchesne it is set forth that Your Honour has the right to make such an order, if necessary.

I might also refer to Standing Order 41(2):

A Minister of the Crown, or a Parliamentary Secretary acting on behalf of a Minister, may, in his place in the House, state that he proposes to lay upon the Table of the House, any report or other paper—

That, of course, simply states that he can do it. In this case the minister has set out a case, has said that everything is fine and nothing is wrong, has used these public documents to back up something that in my opinion smells to high heaven, and I say that members of the House, the people's representatives, are entitled to see what is behind the statement the minister made yesterday. That is what I am asking. With great respect, Mr. Speaker, if the minister was sincere in saying that if there was any irregularity or illegality he would agree to an inquiry, he should rise in his place and agree to the application I am now making. If he will not agree, let him forever hold his peace because we will have to draw our own inferences. The minister says he does not like innuendos. It is he who is guilty of innuendos.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I realize that Your Honour was rising to make a ruling, but I wish to say a few words in support of the point raised by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

I recognize the fact that many times members have risen and asked that certain documents be tabled and have cited the rule quoted by the hon. member. Nine times out of 10, or 99 times out of 100, the request is refused. We are always told that the test of this rule is whether it is analogous to what would happen in a court of law. My familiarity with courts of law is pretty thin, but my familiarity with things in the House is fairly wide. It seems that this is a case that meets the requirements or certainly comes very close to meeting them.

Yesterday the minister referred to a certain report and quoted part of that report in support of his argument. Indeed, he referred to a number of documents. It seems to me that this puts the minister's action within the four corners of the rule. The minister, having cited a document and having used it as part of his argument, should be called upon to table the entire document in the House. At least there is the benefit of the doubt in favour of the hon. member for Calgary North. If Your Honour does not agree with him right away, I urge that you take the matter under consideration.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has referred to papers from which the minister read excerpts yesterday.

Mr. Woolliams: Three.

Mr. MacEachen: One is a letter written by Mr. Geoffroy. Another is part of a report by Miss Cornellier in which she refers to the physical condition of two brothers in whose care the children might be placed. The hon. member says there is a third reference, but I missed that. At any rate, with respect to these two there is no dispute.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Woolliams: The third is Reverend Nickels' letter which appears about two-thirds of the way down page 51.

• (1200)

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, and a reply from the Rev. J. A. Nickels, Chief of the Chaplaincy Services, noting that in view of the positive nature of the reports approval was given for the marriage.

No one is disputing, no one would wish to dispute, the fact that the minister has quoted from these papers. What is of interest, and what probably needs clarification from the Chair, is whether the papers quoted by the minister fall into the category of dispatches or state papers.

Mr. Lewis: Read paragraph four as well. It speaks of official papers.

Mr. MacEachen: Official papers quoted during a debate should be laid on the table of the House. It says that. That is quite all right. It might be a state paper, a dispatch or an official paper, and it seems to me that if Your Honour discovers upon consideration, now or later, that these are indeed state papers or dispatches or official papers there will be no objection on the part of the government to laying them on the table. But it is not our purpose to seek to expand the application of this particular practice beyond what has been traditional in the House.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in order to understand why the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) seemed so anxious to keep the House from getting all the facts one should keep in mind what he said yesterday when he stated, as reported in Hansard on page 51:

With the consent of the House I could table the remainder of the statement to be recorded in the proceedings of the House of Commons.

That was an unusual suggestion, but understandable. The minister read a portion of the letters. He expurgates the documents from which he is reading in order to support the argument he is advancing. In other words, he provides a selection of what he intends to present to support his case. This cannot be justified, Mr. Speaker, regardless of any consideration. Otherwise, what one could do in this House would be to select favourable matters and expurgate those which are unfavourable.

I can understand why the minister does not want the letters produced. After all, the excuses offered by Geoffroy were false, transparently so, and should have been investigated. Indeed, I am told that as part of this letter or statement Geoffroy gave as the reason he wished to go through a marriage with this lady of estimable record, was that there would be a good mother for his children. Furthermore, that his father and mother were getting too old to look after them. In fact, the father died 25 years ago and the mother died two years ago. If the minister had revealed the whole communication he would then have convinced anyone reasonably desirous of being convinced that somebody was negligent. That is the point which is to be emphasized, Mr. Speaker. Surely parliament will not consent to be paralysed by the action of a minister who, trying to conceal and cover up, refuses to table the entire document in question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This debate on the procedural point could go on for a long time. It seems to me the question is a very simple one, and I was prepared to rule on it a while ago.

I think the argument put forward by the hon. member for Calgary North is valid. The rule is clear enough. If a document is quoted in debate it has to be tabled. It was suggested by the President of the Privy Council that perhaps we are not dealing here with what is termed a state document. This has always been the difficulty in the past—to determine what is a public document and what is a private document. My thought is that if a letter, even though it might have been written originally as a private letter, becomes part of the records of a department it becomes at that point a public document and a state paper. It seems to me that the documents to which the minister has referred are part of the official penitentiary papers or are documents within the possession of the penitentiary officials of the department, and I would be inclined to think that any document of this kind which is cited in the way it was by the minister ought to be tabled in the House.

Again, in support of this ruling is the fact that if a member of the House proposed a motion for the production of these documents the documents would, in my view, have to be considered by the Chair as a type of document which ought to be tabled. I suggest that from a procedural standpoint the government cannot say that the document is a private document which ought not to be tabled. Of course, the government would not be obliged to table it at that point; there might be a debate on the subject. But when documents or letters are actually quoted in debate the rule applies clearly. I refer hon. members not only to citation 159 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition but also to Erskine May, page 438 of the 17th edition, on which the citation is based.

In view of the long-established precedents referred to by both May and Beauchesne I have to rule that any document which is cited in this way and which can be considered to be a public document ought to be tabled.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the originals are not in my possession, but I shall certainly, with leave of the House, table them sometime today. Anyhow, I was prepared to make them available to the hon. member, but I quite understand that he does not wish to rely merely on his own judgment.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General must have become a little upset. I am sure he does not mean it when he says I do not want to look at the documents. That was the very purpose of my asking for them.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I might act as interpreter at this point and say that was not my understanding of what the minister said in French. Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Monday, February 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ross Whicher for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 34).

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, as the other hon. members I listened carefully to the Speech from the Throne but before going directly to the heart of the matter I want to discuss this morning I would like to recall that when earlier I asked the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a question about the premier of British Columbia who advocates payments to individuals of this country instead of equalization payments to the provinces, the premier of British Columbia was accused of being a bigot. Furthermore, the Prime Minister told me that the premier of British Columbia had stated that there were too many French Canadians in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, everyone knows perfectly that in 1961, for example, when the Social Credit convention was held in Ottawa the premier of British Columbia supported your humble servant who was then a French Canadian. To state that the premier of British Columbia is against French Canadians in Ottawa is to distort the facts somewhat.

• (1210)

There is another point I would like to bring to the attention of the House. In 1962, provincial elections were held in Quebec and during the election campaign, the Liberals of the Hon. Jean Lesage told whoever cared to listen, that British Columbia, under a Social Credit administration, was bankrupt. However, a few months after these elections, the same Jean Lesage went to British Columbia to borrow $100 million at 5.05 per cent interest to finance hydroelectric projects in the province of Quebec. Had the premier of British Columbia felt badly towards French Canadians, as the right hon. Prime Minister seemed to imply earlier today, he would not have approved that $100 million loan to Quebec.

This is an instance without parallel either in Ottawa or in other provinces. Nobody has ever done that except the Social Credit administration of British Columbia.

And when the right hon. Prime Minister tries to stir up linguistic or ethnic quarrels, as he did this morning, I feel that he is going to far to say the least.

At all events, Mr. Speaker, I think that the premier of British Columbia has every right as a Canadian to express his opinion in the economic field and when he states that the problem in Canada is not one of language but of economics, he is right.

Besides, the Speech from the Throne is almost a verbatim repetition of the opinions Social Credit members have been voicing for the last 35 years. The Liberals have just discovered that. This is what the Speech from the Throne had to say and I quote:

We have witnessed as well a period of economic uncertainty,

—as if that period was already behind us—

—of international economic uncertainty which affected all of the industrialized nations of the world and which has made us increasingly aware of our dependence on a strong economic base in the pursuit of our social goals.

Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what Social Credit says in British Columbia, in Alberta, and everywhere else in Canada.

I returned yesterday from Saskatchewan, where I met people from Regina and Saskatoon—both Liberal and Progressive Conservative supporters. I even met a provincial member of the NDP, which is in power in Saskatchewan, who said to me: Economy foundations and the structure of the economy have to be improved and altered if we are to reach our social goals.

Our social goals are simple: We are merely asking for a peaceful life in a country as rich as ours. Allow me to quote here Pius XI who in 1931, in the encyclical letter entitled "Quadragesimo Anno", clearly defined the goals of a properly organized economy.

This was exactly 41 years ago. I am sure the Prime Minister remembers that time, like everyone else now over fifty. Pius XI said:

The economy will be healthily constituted and will fully reach its goal only when it gives each and every individual a share of the goods which nature and industry can provide. And this share will have to be sufficient to give each and everyone at least honest affluence.

This does not mean taking from the "haves" to give to the "have-nots", but all will at least be entitled to honest affluence. This is the aim which Créditistes have set for themselves in their task of education of the masses.

Mr. Speaker, it also says in the Speech from the Throne:

Every one of us is enriched through involvement in this stimulating process we call Canada.

We are all a bit poorer than we were but the Speech from the Throne tells us that we are enriched by it.

Our goals and hopes are bound up in the restlessness and vitality of this rich land.

Restlessness! Go anywhere in Canada and you will find restlessness! Perhaps on the treasury benches, but surely everywhere else in Canada. Businessmen are faced with huge problems. The unemployed do not know where to turn to. Our families are weighed down by a feeling of hopelessness. Our young people are rebelling against a society in which they feel they cannot be integrated. So they are ready to do anything to "break" a society which will not allow them to become part of it. In short, restlessness prevails.

The Speech from the Throne then goes on to mention the vitality of this rich land. Mr. Speaker, the land is rich, but insofar as vitality is concerned, it is quite paralyzed. During the weekend, I met people from Saskatchewan who were asking me what the federal government intends to do to prevent our industries from closing. I told them that I would inquire. The government is being asked the same thing about the plants which are closing in Quebec, in the Maritimes, in Alberta and even in northern Ontario.

While the Prime Minister praises the prosperity in Canada over radio and television, the Canadian International Paper announces that it will close its Témiscamingue plant next May 30 and lay off 875 workers directly involved in its operation. At the same time, at Sudbury, we hear about an increase in the rate of employment while the International Nickel announces the layoff of 2,000 workers. SOMA, which does the assembly of Renault cars, announces the layoff of its workers and the temporary closure of its plants.

Some ten days ago, I was in Kapuskasing, where the Spruce Falls Power and Paper Co. Ltd. will, within a few weeks, substantially curtail its production to perhaps only two or three days a week. Yet the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) recently stated in Bathurst while addressing 5,000 people: Paper does not sell. Forget about a mill, you will not get one. What alternative solution is there? I do not know. We have been told to seek one. Let us go on searching and in the meantime the number of recorded unemployed has reached over 700,000. Those are the ones with a tag on their ear. The figures do not include the unrecorded ones as we now actually have over a million unemployed in Canada. Yet the Prime Minister mentions "the vitality of this rich land". We could indeed have that vitality if we had an economic system wherein it would be possible to create it so that each Canadian citizen might participate in the development of the vast resources of our country, of our rich land.

The Speech from the Throne goes on to say, and I quote:

We in this place have a special responsibility to help bring these goals and those hopes within reach, to make real the Canada of which our forefathers dreamed:

An hon. Member: We have here the required writing ability—

Mr. Caouette: That is right. We have a writer skilled in rhetoric, in phraseology such as we have been reading and hearing over a number of years.

• (1220)

The common inheritance has almost been completely dilapidated. That is so true that if we go back to the early days of the colony, we find people who have just settled on the shores of the majestic St. Lawrence River. But has anyone realized that today, after eight or ten generations, the land handed down from father to son is now in the hands of farmers who depend on provincial or federal farm credit programs? The land was inherited from our forefathers, yes, but the governments, through a barbaric financial system, have dilapidated the heritage bequeathed to us by our ancestors.

Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne, once again the theme of economic security is mentioned, and I quote:

Economic security is one of the most effective forces with which to counter social isolation.

Here again is an expression that was launched years ago when we were told that the economic system should be improved. There is talk of reform, of possible achievements in Canada. Yet, nothing is suggested, no means whereby to give the Canadian people the administration, the economic system that would allow them to feel completely at home.

Mr. Speaker, here is something else we can read in the Speech from the Throne:

Job opportunities must be found and income uncertainties overcome if all Canadians are to share in the richness of this land.

Mr. Speaker, every Canadian, and especially the members of Parliament, know that something must be done to solve income uncertainties. It is not enough to multiply jobs, because everyone knows that today technology is increasingly replacing human resources in work. When, for instance, building a new paper plant in the Sept-Îles area, new machinery, new technology are included, to replace people. And the era of technology is the very reason why a plant like the Canadian International Paper Company in Témiscamingue, in my constituency, is closing down. They did not update their facilities in time.

But had they modernized them, there would of course have been lay-offs. It is therefore a moot point whether one should reject progress and new technology, reject automation which is the substitution of machines for men. If men are to be replaced, should that be determined now? I reply in the affirmative. Should technology work to the detriment of people or in favour of human beings, of Canadian citizens?

Mr. Speaker, if the purpose of advanced technology is to penalize people, we are in the right system as that is just what is happening now. But if we recognize that machines should give men more freedom, that they should serve human beings, it is imperative that we organize a financial system wherein Canadians have access to the products of automation. That will be showing respect for human beings, and without disdaining progress and science.

Such is the solution: restore some balance between money and our material possibilities.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne states that we must "make sure that as many jobs as possible are available." The government expresses pious wishes for which we have no need. We have seen that the federal government has given a $45,000 grant to develop a snowmobile track, one of $50,000 to cut branches in order to create employment. We are told that some workers, at 50° below zero, will be cutting branches along highways during a month and a half to create jobs. When spring comes, the branches will evidently be as high as they are now, but it will be pointed out that jobs were created.

This reminds me of the two unemployed who were discussing near a gravel pit where a steam-shovel with a capacity of 2 or 3 yards was quickly loading trucks. Both men had a small shovel. One said to the other: "Do you know old boy that this shovel can replace 50 men like you and me? This is automation. If we took it away, we could hire 50 men. Let's put it away in the garage as certain municipalities did with their ploughs and tractors so they could hire some unemployed and make them shovel snow. And the other asked: "Why?" The first guy answered: "To give jobs to more people" Then, the other replied: "In that case, it would be better to use 250 men working with teaspoons. We would do the same job as the steam-shovel or 50 workers with ordinary shovels if we used teaspoons."

You will say it is ridiculous. Well, the present system is that stupid, Mr. Speaker. Technology and machinery are discarded, we are afraid of them because we know that they are prejudicial to workers. And instead of putting machines at the service of human beings, the reverse is being done. When machines are operating, men are suffering. So that men may survive, science, progress and machines are being put aside.

Mr. Speaker, job creation and price stability are the result of a policy which brings about an economic climate that can be beneficial to business and other sectors of the community.

Creation of jobs. This government has stated: We have created many jobs. According to statistics, this also had the effect of putting untold numbers of people on the unemployment roll.

The number of unemployed has increased by 135,000 over one month. As I said a while ago, there are close to 700,000 unemployed and we are told that it could be worse. That can improve a little, thanks to winter works, from now until the next election. In fact, I said that the election would be on June 26, 1972 and that I had no direct line with the Holy Ghost nor with the Prime Minister. This is a forecast.

Mr. Speaker, from now until election time, these jobs will continue to exist, but once the election is over, we will suffer again from such an economic slowdown that, by next fall, we will have one million or perhaps more unemployed.

When we are in this House and consider all these facts, these figures and these statistics, we find out that all along the Progressive Conservative members have been decrying the Speech from the Throne without suggesting anything concrete.

• (1230)

As usual, the New Democratic Party blames the Americans. They claim that the Americans are responsible. For my part, I say that the fault does not lie with others, but with ourselves, if things are not going right.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, before I run out of time, I now move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), the following amendment:

That the amendment be amended by striking out all the words after "economic deprivation" and replacing them with the following:

"resulting from the absence of any monetary reform tailored to the needs of the Canadian society."

Mr. Speaker, for many years now, we have been advocating monetary reform. Many find this amusing, but I think that today more serious consideration is given to what the Créditistes recommend. It is unfortunate that so much time is needed to make people understand and to make them stop and think. Those who used to laugh when Social Credit was mentioned did not know why they were laughing. I say to them: It is all very well to laugh, but one must know why. So, study Social Credit and if it is funny, well then go ahead and laugh. If it is not amusing, try at least to act in a responsible manner and to consider the solution that we propose.

We speak today of the use of the Bank of Canada. I was happy recently to hear the Quebec Premier speak about the famous James Bay project and to state on television that he would probably ask the Bank of Canada to help finance this project.

Shades of Social Credit, Mr. Speaker, somewhat akin to what we have long been advocating and suggesting. In fact, the Bank of Canada is empowered by law to make loans to the provinces. It has this power, but no province is taking advantage of this. I have before me the Canada Yearbook for 1970-71. Some sentences have been changed to please those who draft this report.

Mr. Speaker, mention is made of the Bank of Canada, and on page 1224 we read the following:

The Bank of Canada may make loans or advances for periods not exceeding six months to chartered banks, or to banks to which the Quebec Savings Bank Act applies, on the pledge of certain classes of securities. Loans or advances may be made under certain conditions and for limited periods to the Government of Canada or of any province.

To any province! Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Canada has the right to do it. It is said "for limited periods". It is not stated for how long. For instance, "six months" was mentioned previously; it was written in full. The words "six months" were deleted. I am eager to see mentioned the same time limit as is granted to India, to South American countries, to Africa, to all the countries of the world, namely 50 years plus 10 years' grace, a total of 60 years. If the Bank of Canada were authorized to make loans to provinces, municipalities, school boards and to the federal government no nationalization whatever would have to take place. Chartered banks would not be nationalized. The public sector of our economy would be financed without interest by the Bank of Canada.

Forty-eight million dollars were recently lent without interest and for 60 years by Mr. Paul Gérin-Lajoie, the federal representative. Sixty years from now, the Prime Minister will be 113, he will no longer be here but India will start repaying us.

Mr. Speaker, while Mr. Paul Gérin-Lajoie was granting India a loan of $48 million for 60 years on behalf of Canada—and it should be noted that we have already lent India nearly $1 billion, free of interest—the Premier of the Province of Quebec, Mr. Bourassa, was in the United States to borrow $75 million, at 9.2 per cent interest over 25 years: Twenty-five years from now, we shall have paid more than $200 million in interest only and we shall still owe all the principal, or $75 million.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Bourassa does not come back from the United States with a wheelbarrow full of US dollars, but with a small slip of paper that is known as a promissory note and which has the figure $75 million written on it. The note is signed by Robert Bourassa and endorsed by the Province of Quebec. If Mr. Bourassa had decided to come and meet our good friend Mr. Louis Rasminsky in Ottawa, the Governor of the bank of Canada, and ask him to write $75 million in his ledgers, would this not have had as much value as 75 million US dollars?

Mr. Speaker, the United states do not base their $75 million on their own assets, on their own wealth, but on the development of Hydro-Quebec. those $75 million are guaranteed by our natural resources. They just put the figures down there. Not one quarter, not one nickel comes across the border. Those are figures. But why do we not put down ourselves our own figures, in Canada? That would be a way to get control over the Canadian economy. We would then have control over our credit to develop Canada, to develop our natural resources.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Often I hear the NDP members speak about "American control" and it seems to me that they are right. However we must find something to replace it. We will not become "masters in our own house" by emptying Canada in order to pay back loans but by using our financial resources. If the Americans can make our Canadian credit, why are we not able to make our own credit? And it happens often enough that the Americans—they are not stupid, you know; they are rather clever—are financing our own development with our own credit and afterwards they get the interest from our credit. One develops something with Canadian credit that belongs to the Americans! That is the fantastic blunder of the present time and of the present economic system.

Mr. Speaker, the Créditistes still maintain that private industry is an important part of our economy. Our economy is made up of three sectors: private enterprise, personal initiative and the public sector. Private enterprise will keep on developing under Social Credit as it is now doing thanks to bank credits and to credit unions, finance companies, etc. But the public sector needs to be financed by the Bank of Canada, and this without interest.

• (1240)

The Speech from the Throne, which is almost a word for word repetition of all the Speeches from the Throne I have heard since I came to this House 15 years ago, deals also with economic security.

Mr. Speaker, in order to attain economic security, all factors, namely those of production and of distribution, must be considered. We have everything; production is not a problem any more in Canada. To tell the truth, legislative measures are being put forward or passed at the present time to prevent producers from producing such or such a commodity, in an effort to control production, because there are too many products of all kinds in the fields of clothing, automobile and farm machinery. To give you an example, when I was in Brantford, last fall, the Massey Ferguson yards were overflowing with pieces of farm machinery piled one on top of the other five or six high. We have too much of everything not because people do not need those goods but because they have no money to buy them.

As for economic security, we will have it only when the monetary system is made to serve the people, considering the existing products. The government tries to reform anything and everything. In fact, it tries to reform agriculture, industry and commerce, all departments, all economic activities in Canada, except financial activities.

As to the Bank of Canada's monetary activities, they are not to be discussed. That matter is not to be brought up. I was reading yesterday the speech delivered by my good friend, the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) who was quoting the ex-Postmaster General, the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), who stated and I quote:

—we must stop believing that it is essential for Canada to sell its natural resources.

He was not saying the same thing ten years ago, but he realizes today that the philosophy that is being explained and presented to us by the government, namely that if we want to live decently in Canada, we must export as much as possible, goes against common sense.

For our part, we say: Let us use our credit to develop Canada to the utmost and, in so doing, we shall find it must easier, after taking care of our people, to provide assistance to needy or underdeveloped countries in the world. Then, we could logically help them as much as possible.

But let us start by providing the Canadian people with an economic system that will guarantee them economic security. This is the reason why, over the weekend, in Regina, we put forward a well-considered, realistic program, not made up of promises. We suggested to replace the present social welfare system, which fosters laziness and fraud, with a social and economic security system that will stimulate personal initiative and prevent no one from working or producing more.

If someone earning $5,000 received a yearly supplement of $2,000 or $3,000 this would mean an incentive instead of a penalty. At the present time, many things are taking place. Saturday night, on television, I dealt with the problem of a family on welfare. A mother of seven children is the recipient of social welfare allowances of some $235 per month. The federal government pays half the amount, that is $117.50. That mother calls at the social welfare office and asks for additional aid. She is told that according to government standards and criteria, she cannot be given more than $235 per month. True, she has no rent to pay, but, for instance, she has to meet the needs of her seven children for clothing and food and also to care for herself.

Now, she can no longer make it. Someone tells her: Madam, find a home for your children with strangers, and then, you could work and earn a living. In fact, that is what she does. She finds homes for her children here and there in Abitibi. As soon as this is done she starts getting $60 per child each month from the social welfare office. She gets $420 for her seven children and $20 each month as pocket money for each of them—$140 more. Therefore she receives $540 in addition to the clothes supplied by the social welfare people. This mother would have lived like a queen with $420 per month, not $540. She would have kept her children and would have lived like everybody but social welfare officials cannot do anything for her unless her family is divided, separated, disseminated. Then and only then can they enter the picture.

With the economic and social security system we are advocating this mother could have stayed home with her children to see to their education, their well-being, etc. This is the ever recurring question. We are always wondering: Where will the money come from?

Mr. Speaker, we seldom wonder: Is Canada in a position to guarantee economic security along with individual freedom to all Canadians? Do we have enough natural resources to meet the needs of the whole population? No one doubts that, we are sure of it.

If Canada enjoys great resources, if it is true that we have a "rich land" where only vitality is lacking, we Créditistes are offering this vitality so that we may live in peace and harmony on this "rich land".

[English]

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, philosophical perspective is the exception rather than the rule in politics, and members of the House will therefore feel a sense of gratitude that the Throne Speech this year not only engenders reflection on some of the basic philosophical problems of our age but also clearly indicates that the government has a profound understanding of these problems and a coherent plan for meeting them. The key passage in this philosophically perceptive and beautifully integrated speech is to be found at pages 1 and 2 of Hansard of last Thursday. It reads as follows:

> In a period dominated by bigness, in an increasingly impersonal social system, one of the major challenges facing government is to remove the impression of isolation which so often surrounds men and women, depriving them of their sense of worth, of accomplishment, of fulfilment, and removing from them their identity as individuals.
>
> Isolation takes many forms in Canada—physical distance, social stigma, economic deprival. In each of those forms it represents a degree of rejection, of exclusion, of estrangement. This country fails in its essential purpose if it does not ensure that its most precious resource, human talent, is not wasted away. Our challenge is to remove the barriers that create isolation, to permit each Canadian to detect—even if not always able to fulfil—his own potential, to ensure that his image of Canada is one of promise and compassion.
>
> Every one of us is enriched through involvement in this stimulating process we call Canada. Our goals and hopes are bound up in the restlessness and vitality of this rich land. We in this place have a special responsibility to help bring these goals and those hopes within reach, to make real the Canada of which our forefathers dreamed: a land so large that some of it will remain always serene and unspoiled; a society which believes in the dignity of every single individual; a community which husbands its resources and shares them justly among this generation and those to follow; an enterprise which permits and provokes each Canadian to contribute his skills and his talents.

As the Parliamentary Committee on the Constitution travelled across Canada we found the isolation of which this passage speaks as well as a powerful desire to participate in the mainstream of Canadian life.

Sometimes the feeling of isolation springs from a general concern about the magnitude of today's problems. I have just received a letter from a constituent, Mrs. R. M. Langs, writing on behalf of the United Church Women of Chalmers Church in which she says:

> We are concerned with the fact of the apparent helplessness of individual persons against the problems the world faces.

She lists several of these problems, the problem of industrialization, the problem of energy resources and the problem of Colonial Africa. Then she asks "what can the individual do?"

Sometimes the feeling of isolation comes from a sense of frustration in dealing with problems of a more local nature. Always it involves an apparent condition of powerlessness. The solution, as the throne speech suggests, has to be found, negatively, through removing the barriers which create isolation and, positively, through encouraging and even creating involvement in the public processes in Canada and in decision-making processes of all kinds.

What I want to do this afternoon is to relate two problems which concern my part of Canada, the Windsor area, to the general theme of the throne speech. The first of these problems is economic, the second cultural.

First is the economic problem. Windsor is situated at the tip of a thumb of land surrounded on two sides by water and on a third side by the United States, with the nearest large Canadian city more than 100 miles away. There we live and work, some 250,000 of us in the greater Windsor area, facing some four and a half million people in the greater Detroit area. Our feeling of isolation from the geographical and population points of view is thus readily understandable.

Our situation makes us highly sensitive to changes in our economic relationships with the United States. Since Windsor contains substantially the whole manufacturing operation of Chrysler Canada as well as large parts of the manufacturing operations of Ford and General Motors, plus many automotive plants and automotive-related businesses, Windsor residents are understandably worried about the future of the auto pact.

• (1250)

There is no reason for their fears—certainly not from the words or actions of the government—other than the necessary secrecy in the continuing negotiations. I myself have publicly stated that there is no danger that Canadian jobs or interests will be bartered away by the government for the advantage of other sectors of our economy. This is my firm belief and it is the firm commitment of the government. I believe it is worth underlining here the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), made in the Speech from the Throne debate last Friday, that Canada will be as firm in the defence of our trading interests vis-à-vis the United States as it was in the currency revaluation controversy several months ago, and that Canada's trading posture with the United States will be varied only to the mutual advantage of both countries and not to the unilateral advantage of the United States. Those were welcome words to my constituents, Mr. Speaker.

The second problem has to do with culture, and particularly with television. Windsor has a single VHF television station, CKLW-TV Channel 9, and no UHF station.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. MacGuigan: Certainly.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member aware that the government of Canada actually changed its negotiating position on the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement between last December and January of this year? Is he not also aware that the original intent of the Canadian government was to give up the production safeguards in the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement? Further, is he not aware that the government has not yet commited itself to maintaining the production safeguards in the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement? If all the implied answers to my questions are in the affirmative, on what does the hon. member base his assurance that Canadian jobs, not necessarily immediately but six months from now or even two or three years from now, will not be lost as a result of current negotiations?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) had made it his hobby in the last few months to predict what the government will or will not do in the secret negotiations proceeding with the United States. So far, all his predictions, including the timetables which he has advanced several times, have proven wrong.

[Mr. MacGuigan.]

Mr. Broadbent: That is absolute and utter hogwash. Why not answer the question?

Mr. MacGuigan: Therefore it seems to me that the most important thing for us to know with respect to these secret negotiations is the position that the government of Canada has enunciated in this House and publicly across Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: It has not done that.

Mr. MacGuigan: The second problem I wish to deal with has to do with culture and, as I mentioned, particularly with television.

Mr. Broadbent: I hope the Windsor Star picks up the hon. member's answer. It was shameful.

Mr. MacGuigan: Windsor is within receiving distance of some ten United States VHF and UHF television stations. As I said, there is only one VHF television station in Windsor and there is no UHF station. In such a situation it is obviously important for a strong Canadian presence to make itself felt on the one Canadian channel available in Windsor.

In June, 1970, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission approved a change of ownership in CKLW-TV. The station was purchased from its previous American owners by Baton Broadcasting Limited, which became 75 per cent owner of the station; the CBC, through its subsidiary, St. Clair River Broadcasting Limited, became the owner of 25 per cent of the stock of the television station. An undertaking was given by the CBC that it would take over the entire ownership of the station within five years. In all these negotiations the CBC appeared in the position of a reluctant bridegroom. It was a shotgun marriage, with the CRTC holding the gun to the head of the CBC. Of course, we in Windsor are very pleased that the CBC has acquired a one-quarter interest in the station and has undertaken to take over ownership of the station completely three and a half years from now.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair. The House will resume at two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, in the 10 minutes or so I had before the break at one o'clock, I talked about the philosophical orientation of this year's Speech from the Throne. I also dealt with the first of the two issues which I had raised from the local Windsor point of view as fitting in with this orientation. That was the economic problem. I had just begun talking about the cultural problem. I had set out the basic situation, with 10 or 12 television stations in the Windsor area, of which only one is a Canadian station. That station is 75 per cent owned by a private broadcaster and 25 per cent owned by the CBC, with the CBC under obligation to take full ownership of the station approximately three and one half years from now.

The matter about which I most particularly want to speak is the decision by the CBC in mid January not to allow the "Whiteoaks of Jalna" series to be shown over the Windsor television station until some nine months after it is seen in the rest of Canada.

An hon. Member: They are not missing anything.

Mr. MacGuigan: The hon. member suggests that the people of Windsor are not missing anything. He may be right. I have not had the opportunity of seeing the programs. However, I would like the people of Windsor to make the decision. It is the people of Windsor who are being denied this opportunity.

I had occasion to raise a similar subject in the House last April 5. My remarks can be found at pages 4937 and 4938 of Hansard. At that time the problem was that channel 9 in Windsor had been forced to withdraw the program "Rainbow Country" after 22 of 26 episodes had been shown, because the CBC, which was the Canadian distributor and co-producer, had entered into an agreement with American producers which banned the series from being shown in Windsor. This was to enable the CBC to sell it at a higher price for showing in Detroit. There had been an earlier incident in which the program "Audubon Theatre" had to be withdrawn for the same reason after four episodes had been shown.

As I mentioned at that time, there were certain ironic aspects of this decision. For example, after entering into a formal agreement not to allow that series to be shown in Windsor, the CBC was not sufficiently alert to prevent most of the episodes from being shown before they realized what was happening. Similarly in the Jalna case, I understand the CBC nationally advertised that Jalna would be shown the following Sunday. The advertisement actually appeared in large part on channel 9 before it was realized this was a mistake, and it was cut out.

These are minor aspects of the problem. The real issue is that the decision by the CBC management not to allow the "Whiteoaks of Jalna" series to be shown over CKLW-TV Windsor until nine months after it has been shown elsewhere in Canada is a most reprehensible one. It does, admittedly, represent a small advance over previous CBC decisions in accordance with which series produced by the corporation were permanently denied to Windsor viewers. In this case the delay was for a nine-month period.

• (1410)

However, there are many reasons for insisting that any difference at all in treatment is unacceptable to the people of Windsor. First, as Canadian taxpayers they are entitled to the same service from Crown corporations as are people elsewhere in the country. In the present context, this means they are entitled to have the same programs made available to CBC-affiliated television stations which serve them as are other taxpayers across the country. The series to which I have drawn attention is a totally Canadian series based on books by a Canadian author about a Canadian family, and was produced at a cost of $2 million to the taxpayers of Canada. Yet the taxpayers of Windsor are being discriminated against inasmuch as they do not have the right to see this program at the same time as other Canadians.

There is a second reason for saying that the CBC has a special duty toward channel nine and the residents of Windsor. It is based on the fact that the CBC is itself the owner of the T.V. station to the extent of 25 per cent, and is to become the full owner in three and one half years time. Thus, channel nine is not in the position of being simply a regional affiliate as stations elsewhere in the country may be; it is an affiliate which is already partly owned by the corporation, one which the corporation has undertaken to purchase completely.

A further reason is this—and it is a somewhat ironical one: the policy being followed is not even good business for the CBC. The fact is that Detroit itself accounts for only 2.4 per cent of the total United States market in terms of T.V. households, and of this fraction the Windsor station is able to attract only a small percentage of viewers. During prime time only 3 per cent of all the T.V. households in the Detroit area are attracted to watch the Windsor station. This means that less than one-tenth of one per cent of the total United States market is affected by the showing of any series on CKLW-TV.

This was strikingly shown by the fact that when the BBC program on Henry VIII was shown by channel nine in Windsor it was able to attract only some 4 per cent of the television households in the area, whereas when the same program was shown over the United States network some months later in July, at a time which is not normally considered to be the best viewing time of the year, it attracted 13 per cent of the T.V. households. So even when the same program is shown by a United States station in the area it is able to attract something like three times the number of viewers; the U.S. station has three times the drawing power.

Again, the fact that the BBC was able to sell its series on Henry VIII to a major United States network despite the fact that it had previously been shown by the Windsor station is evidence that the argument used by the CBC, that they cannot make a profitable sale to the United States if programs have already been shown in Windsor, is not a sound one.

Apart from this, the CBC has a cultural duty to discharge. I wish to approach this point by referring to an answer which the CBC gave on April 5 last through the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State as reported at page 4938 at the time I raised the question concerning the other series which was denied. The CBC reported through the parliamentary secretary:

> In general, full network programs produced by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation using its own facilities are released to all stations of the English television network, including affiliated stations such as CKLW-TV Windsor. However, the CBC has accepted the practice for over ten years of not including its Windsor affiliate in the initial scheduling of some of its programs for the following reasons—

The first situation mentioned relates to television series produced in the United States and acquired by the CBC from a Canadian distributor for full English television network release. This is not applicable to the case we are considering. The excuse of the CBC in that case is that the rights are controlled in the United States.

The second situation mentioned relates to television series produced in Canada and acquired by the CBC from a Canadian distributor for full English television network release. Again, the CBC puts the blame on someone else. The Corporation says that the Canadian producer normally tries to insist on arrangements being made to eliminate Windsor and thus to maximize profits from a United States sale. The third situation the CBC mentions concerns television series produced in Canada and co-financed or co-produced by the CBC. The Corporation says that in this case the CBC acquires Canadian television rights but usually defers its Windsor rights. The report added:

In order to attract production capital it is essential that United States market possibilities be enhanced. In the view of the CBC the encouragement of private production companies is an important consideration in the development of Canadian content.

The implication of this recital seems to be that these are the only situations in which the Windsor station would be denied CBC programs. But this is not so, because in the instance I am raising, the series represents a wholly CBC production costing $2 million of the taxpayers' money. This is not one of the cases which the Corporation mentioned. It is much more extreme than any they have attempted to defend in the past. Yet the same policy has been followed as was followed before. The explanation given is completely untenable—the encouragement of private production companies. No private production company is involved in this case.

In any event, the priorities and responsibilities of the CBC cannot be justified in commercial terms alone. The Corporation's charter, established by this parliament, assigned to that body certain broad objectives; one thinks in general terms of the promotion of Canadian culture. The Corporation is certainly not living up to its obligation to support Canadian culture in the Windsor area.

I have sponsored a private member's notice of motion requesting that this policy of denying or delaying the showing in Windsor of television programs in order that they may be sold more profitably to networks in the United States be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. I hope I shall have an early opportunity to discuss this matter in the House and that the subject will be referred to the standing committee in order that an investigation of the situation can be made.

In particular, the people of Windsor ought to know whether the CBC intends to change its policy when it becomes the full owner of the station. President Davidson made a statement to the effect that at such a time the CBC would treat the Windsor station in the same way as all other stations. This is something I should like to have on the public record.

I think the citizens of Windsor would also be interested to know whether the border protection clause normally attached to hockey programs in Canada is to be discontinued. As a result of such a clause Windsor is presently being denied the opportunity to watch most games because of the refusal of the NHL to allow these programs to be shown within a certain radius of Detroit. The people of Windsor will be interested to learn whether or not at this point the CBC will take a firm line with the NHL and say that if this organization will not allow such programs to be shown in Windsor they will not be shown anywhere else in Canada.

I believe the people of Windsor and the Canadian public generally would also wish to know why the CBC has decided to wait another three and one half years before fulfilling its obligations to the Windsor area. Why does the Corporation not want to change its policy right now?

Another thing we want to know is this: For how many pieces of silver are the rights of the citizens of Windsor being sold to the United States? In the past the Corporation has tried to conceal this information, but I think the people have a right to know just what profit has been forthcoming in consequence of this decision to deprive Windsor of its share of Canadian cultural opportunity.

• (1420)

I think this whole question is one not only for the CBC but also for the CRTC and the government. There is a passage in the Speech from the Throne, reported on page 3 of Hansard, which reads as follows:

Still another form of isolation springs from indifferent communications services. It is a matter of concern to the Government that at this moment many communities do not receive the national broadcasting service—

I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that the Windsor area was not in mind at the time that this passage was written, but it seems to me to apply very much to the citizens of Windsor. The service the CBC is giving the citizens of Windsor is indifferent in every sense. It is indifferent because the CBC appears to be indifferent to the interests of the people of Windsor.

In conclusion, I merely wish to say that the Speech from the Throne has effectively analysed the problem of isolation and the right remedies to correct that problem. May I express the hope that the television isolation in Windsor will soon be seen as part of the total Canadian problem.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, may I say initially what a pleasure it is to be able to participate in the Throne Speech debate. I have always found such debates very interesting because they give one the chance to listen to the problems that arise in the different ridings across the country, an opportunity that many of the other debates held in the House do not afford.

I should like to congratulate the mover and seconder. I know the mover rather well. There have been many times when I have admired what he said and certainly we all appreciate his remarks, just as we appreciate the remarks of a lot of other government members. However, it is unfortunate that when the occasion presents itself these hon. members do not vote in accordance with their stated principles, and I am afraid this is to the detriment of democracy.

The prime areas of concern in my part of the country I do not think are that much different from those of any other area of Canada. Inflation is one of the major causes of serious concern. The agriculture industry across the country has not kept pace with the rising prices that have been so common both in industry and in labour in general. Agriculture has been in the unfortunate position of being unable to price its products. In many cases, the general cost of services has been a prime difficulty in the past few years. Although the price of agricultural produce has not risen, the cost of services on the farming scene has risen very greatly.

During the debates we have had on agriculture and on bills presented to the House during the last session—I have in mind in particular the stabilization bill which died on the order paper—no indication was given that the price of the farmers' products would rise. There was talk about stabilizing incomes, but the stabilization of income during an inflationary cycle can be of very little use. To adopt the expression so often used by the member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), all you are doing is stabilizing poverty.

We have gone nearly four years as a parliament so that we know an election is not far away. In view of this, I think it is useful to see just what may lie ahead of us and to note the attitude of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on legislation he may bring forward for the agriculture industry.

I should just like to quote a statement from the Western Producer concerning a speech the Prime Minister made not too long ago. It reads as follows:

> Agriculture would not be able to meet the challenge of the future if it did not become economically independent, he added.
>
> "Like any other industrial sector, it has to operate and will have to operate without subsidies, without outside aid, as a mature organism that has developed its full potential."
>
> It was becoming less and less acceptable that consumers bear the cost of farmers' deficiencies, he said.

When the Prime Minister speaks in those terms it seems he regards the agriculture industry as a vast, subsidized segment of our society, as though agriculture were the only recipient of the largesse of government. May I draw to the attention of hon. members the passage of the textiles bill which afforded certain protection to that industry. Then, there was the write-off of $70 million back taxes owed by the Ford Motor Company, as well as the $6 million given to Proctor and Gamble to establish an industry which was already in over-production across the country. The government subsidizes one plant here and closes down a similar plant in another part of Canada.

This kind of action costs taxpayers' dollars. The agriculture industry receives only a very small percentage of the money the government spends on subsidies and to say otherwise is to create a false impression. It misleads the taxpayers and voters, and the use of this tactic is a continual disappointment to us. It is this sort of thing that has led to the west sometimes feeling it has only a colonial status vis-à-vis the east. Certainly, the western provinces have definite cause for some concern in this respect.

For the future, I think we need to examine programs that parallel to a certain extent United States programs to assist marketing of grain. Under these programs a floor price is put on grain, particularly feed grains, and the producer is given the option whether to sell to the government at the floor price or to put his product on the open market. Certainly, I think some drastic changes need to be made in the present marketing system, particularly in regard to the domestic feed grain marketing arrangements in Canada today.

Grain handling is a problem that is ever with us and is of particular concern to the western provinces. In answer to a question I asked during the question period yesterday, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board indicated, when I questioned him about difficulties that were arising in the port of Vancouver, that things were going well. However, this is not the impression received by neutral observers. I am not talking about political observers but neutral observers at this port facility. Now, nobody blames the minister for the fact that it snowed and the railway lines were blocked. The fact that strikes intervened on many occasions was not his fault and nobody blames him for that. The major cause of concern is the fact that he is not willing to admit having tried a no-storage policy at our terminal port positions and that it is not working. We must have the assurance that when strikes occur at these port facilities or when the weather is bad, as it always is during some part of the Canadian winter, this grain will move.

• (1430)

I should like to read a few excerpts from a report issued by the Palliser Wheat Growers Association. Last week a group of members went to investigate the tie-up at the Vancouver port facility and here is an excerpt from their report:

> With nearly 20 ships sitting idle in Vancouver Harbor, the Palliser members were told by an export company official that the estimated present backlog of 20 million bushels of wheat will not be caught up with until July.
>
> The National Harbors Board gave the farmers a tour of the waterfront where the Palliser members saw idle ships and nearly idle grain terminals.
>
> The lone ship at the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool terminal was fittingly named the Heroic. It has been in the port a full month, trying to scrape together a full load of grain from the half dozen grain terminals.
>
> About 1.8 million bushels of exportable wheat is now in terminals (as of Friday) compared to the almost 20 million needed to fill waiting ships.
>
> Meanwhile, the farmers were told by the export official that Canada is not making new sales, because it is going to be too busy trying to catch up on the old sales.

Yesterday in the House the minister in charge of the Wheat Board told us at great length how well sales were going, that everything was moving normally and how many boxcars reached port in the last two days. But the Palliser Wheat Growers Association is a neutral observer with no political axe to grind. Perhaps I could be accused of that or even the members to my left, but certainly the Palliser Wheat Growers Association could not be accused of having a biased opinion of what is going on at the port facility. Referring to comments of Palliser president Walter Nelson, the report continues:

> He said discussions with a representative of the exporting firm, Cargill of Canada Ltd., supporting Palliser's contention that the Canadian Wheat Board grain transportation policies are wrong.

And later:

> The Cargill official confirmed Palliser's claim that idle ships are having a harmful, two-fold effect on Canada's grain industry—first, shipping companies protect themselves from long delays by charging higher freight rates, and second the port, with a poor reputation in the matter already, is getting a blacker international name and may force Canada to sell wheat even cheaper than the present low prices to attract buyers and shippers.

That is the situation as it is now. The report continues:

Mr. Nelson said another point coming to light on the Vancouver visit is that wheat board grain transportation mismanagement is leading to rail shipments of rye, flax and rapeseed being cut while the backlog of wheat is being made up.

That is the situation with regard to transportation as it was last week at the Vancouver port terminal. Yesterday, the minister told us how well things were going and last night the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) spoke in the same vein in this debate—everything is fine but we have had a little snow trouble. However, that does not excuse the fact that the grain was not in storage to take care of this situation. I suggest to the minister that having found the discrepancies in the present policy, we now need to ensure that the terminal facilities are full. If anything we should increase the storage facility at the terminal positions.

There are indications across the country that we have actually over-sold our transportation capability in regard to grain. It would not matter if Canadian farmers produced and sold a billion and a half bushels, the transportation facilities could not move it to salt water. The railroads need more locomotives and a better servicing plan for them in order to keep them moving. An improved braking system is also needed. The best brains in the country should be looking into this and perhaps some of this so-called subsidy money should be used.

We are told that one hopper car costs in the neighbourhood of $20,000. If the railroads cannot provide enough of this type of transportation, then maybe we should build them ourselves and rent them to the railroads. If we are to keep pace in the area of transportation we must look at our bulk port facilities and bulk carriers. Today, we are using the same type of boxcars and grain handling facilities that were used 50 years ago. The equipment must be able to cope with the situation today if it is to bring prosperity to Canada by enabling us to get the grain to market in greater quantities. We need such a system if we are to improve our economic position and our balance of payments position.

This government has indicated that it is emphasizing marketing, but some of us doubt whether this is actually being pursued and a priority placed upon it. There is a feeling that some of our embassies and trade commissions are not staffed by people well qualified as salesmen. I think that the day of the pleasant discussion at the cocktail hour has gone, and that every individual in our embassies and trade commissions should be assessed in regard to their understanding of the total Canadian trade picture and their capabilities as salesmen. This is our bread and butter in Canada but we seldom see any proof of their salesmanship or of what they are doing in regard to the marketing of grain. I should like to read into the record a letter which I have here. The name on the letterhead is Spanish, Central de Contractiones Commerciales, S.A. This is an agency which trades in grain on an international basis. The letter reads:

• (1440)

We have been in contact with the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, XCAN, and various other organizations in your country, and have never been able to get so much as a firm offer from anyone. We have written over a dozen letters to XCAN since January and they never have answered any of them. We have spent much on phone calls to them but to no avail.

In order to do business in Mexico, as well as in Canada, you must have a local agent. We were more or less promised the agency for XCAN but nothing ever came of it.

The main buyer for the Mexican Government is CONASUPO, who has bought over 220,000 MT of wheat since September. The prices have been in the range of $63 to $72 per MT. All has been sold by U.S. private companies principally Continental Grain and Cargill.

We have met personally with at least two of your country's trade missions, one from the Canadian Grain Council and another from the Rapeseed Association. From our point of view their visit was not useful because they have not taken advantage of the knowledge and contacts gained.

If you decide to come to Mexico, please plan to stay long enough to really study our market and learn the intricacies of doing business with a strongly centralized government.

Then, the letter continues. This is an indication, as we have long suspected, that our trade organizations in Canada are not going all out in an effort to see that Canadian grain is marketed. Surely, it is nothing short of disgusting that some of these organizations do not answer their mail, especially when it deals with a prime commodity in this country such as grain. While many of the organizations are private groups, I firmly believe it is up to the government to give some direction. Certainly, I am sure there must be people in this army of civil servants in this country who are very well aware of the situation which exists. I do not believe this is the first time they have heard of this situation.

There is another area into which I believe the government should be looking. I realize it involves a difficult problem and I know there are no easy answers. Also I do not wish to be critical. However, I believe, as Mr. Meany said a short time ago, that strikes have outlived their usefulness. Certainly this country has become strike-bound. One can hardly pick up a newspaper without reading about another strike. The prime objective of the government should be in this area. I believe there are indications that we would be better off if the unions in this country were exclusively Canadian. I believe the minister must be very well aware of the net outflow of funds in the form of union dues, over benefits accruing to union members, from this country every year. Certainly, directives come from the head offices of these unions which cannot be in the Canadian or national interest. I think this whole area should be reviewed.

Mr. Gilbert: What about exclusive Canadian corporations?

Mr. Downey: I think we should discuss both. International unions and international companies are part of the same problem. There is some indication certainly that permanent compulsory negotiating machinery should be set up. If this is not the case, I suggest laws should be enacted in this country to place a financial responsibility on unions when they strike against the general public interest. Financial responsibility should be placed on unions so that they would think twice before they struck against the public.

Yesterday I had occasion to bring forward a private bill on Canadian citizenship. There has been a good deal of divisive legislation passed and there have been many divisive comments made in this country in the past four years.

I believe it is time we took full cognizance of the fact it is necessary that we are all recognized as Canadians and nothing else. My private member's bill would eliminate all reference to nationality on the records of Canada and henceforth any man who could obtain Canadian citizenship—and this would refer also to our native peoples—would be referred to as Canadian and nothing else. If we are to become a great nation, we must recognize the fact that it is important that we be known as Canadians. We simply cannot continue being hyphenated Canadians. Certainly, there is far more of this today than there was four years ago. Every racial origin group in this country is starting to come forward with its form of hyphenated Canadianism. This is impractical. No nation on this earth which has ever been great has pursued such a concept for very long.

I suggest we should take a real look at this area in the days ahead. It seems ridiculous that such a designation should be on any government document. Those who take over in the next four years should give this matter a thorough review. Also, it is not good in relation to the Canadian identity to take away certain things which are a part of our heritage as is being done in respect of the letters RCMP. They are part of the Canadian heritage and Canadian history. These letters represent a body that is honourable and good, and which is one of the most respected police forces in the world. One could consider how many boys have been made men because they had the RCMP crest placed on their chests. They were not all little Christs when they joined the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, but the fact that that heritage and tradition was behind them made many men great and gave us a police force of which we could be proud. If we are to assume and carry on any further Canadian identity we must not do anything to destroy this heritage. We must all be Canadians. It is difficult for us to imagine how a sense of purpose can be developed among Canadians if we are not to be known as Canadians and we do not maintain these historic traditions.

• (1450)

I think there are other areas which we should be exploring in the Throne Speech debate in the days ahead. It is difficult for me to imagine that the whole business of welfare and unemployment insurance should not be reviewed, as well as what the priorities that are apparently being placed in these areas are doing to people. I think we have developed an attitude in Canada of wanting something for nothing. All of us who have come this far in life know that you get nothing for nothing. Even in a just society you get nothing for nothing. I think there are many jobs in this country which could be performed for the public good, various public works which could improve the life, appearance and the whole fact of being Canadian. I suggest that many of our unemployed are purposely unemployed and that there are many people on welfare who need not be. I think that some directives should be given in regard to training and the allocation of jobs in the public interest to people who are willing to receive money from the public purse. This is an area which should be reviewed in the session ahead.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): First let me congratulate the movers of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne (Mr. Whicher and Mr. Lajoie).

The hon. member for Bruce has made, in my opinion, an outstanding speech in the best tradition of this House. He has put a lot of life—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: —in his speech and this is obvious judging from the hon. members' reaction when I congratulate him.

In my opinion, it is necessary in this House to have animated speeches from time to time. This House should keep this spirit of debate which has been prevailing for many years and even though certain hon. members did not appreciate the true facts mentioned by the member for Bruce I think it was quite appropriate for him to state them. Hon. members should extend him their most sincere congratulations.

Of course, I was most pleased to find that the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne was the hon. member for Trois-Rivières. He committed himself to politics only a few months ago out of his sense of duty and I think he has demonstrated that all hon. members and particularly those from the province of Quebec want to participate in the business of the House and show that we are all Canadians, that we all hope to contribute to our country's life and protect our culture.

As the hon. member for Trois-Rivières said, he has proved himself by bringing his wife from British Columbia—as did the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—and I hope that the Prime Minister will be able to follow suit and also have eight young Canadians during his married life.

In any event, as a citizen of la Mauricie, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Trois-Rivières and I can assure other hon. members that he will have a long and fruitful career as representative of this beautiful and ancient city, full of traditions, located in the heart of la Mauricie.

[English]

In the course of this debate, my colleagues will tell the House of the gains Canadians have made in the last four years in their standard of living and in the increased number of jobs and real income. My topic today is not so easily measured, not assessed in statistics, but, perhaps what is even more important, it is a field to which this government has given great attention. We have accomplished a great deal. I speak of the quality of Canadian life. I speak of those intangibles which make life more enjoyable, more rewarding and more gratifying—the world of nature, the world of our environment and the world of our heritage. The government and parliament have been giving more and more of their attention to conditions and policies affecting the quality of living—in our cities, our towns, our rural areas, in the north—in all of Canada. The quality of life varies throughout our land. In part, this reflects the differences and the diversities from which we draw our strength and our distinctiveness as a nation. We want to safeguard those diversities, to give them full play in the shaping of a proud Canadianism which reflects all the elements of our society. I believe that this government has shown deternination and imagination in this.

• (1500)

While protecting these diversities, the government is helping Canadians to overcome economic obstacles and cultural barriers—barriers that tend to isolate Canadians from one another, from their land, from their history and from individual fulfilment.

In seeking to overcome these forces of isolation, we must protect our human environment and conserve our natural resources. We must remove the constraints, some of which are long standing, that weaken and hamper elements in Canadian society. We must pierce language barriers and nourish cultural aspirations deeply rooted in the past. We must provide a full range of opportunities for all Canadians. We must give meaning to their freedom of choice in their economic, social or cultural aspirations and efforts. There is a fundamental need, of which we are all becoming increasingly aware, to enrich the quality of life for all Canadians, to give it meaning and fulfilment. In a very real sense the need is to inject concern for humanity into a social environment largely dominated by materialism. This need has been clearly recognized by this government.

Look at what we have been doing in the last four years! The Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act was unanimously passed by this House. The Northern Inland Waters Act protects the freshwater resources of the north. Land use regulations are now in effect throughout the north. Guidelines have been announced for the construction of northern pipelines. The Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act was amended to provide for more comprehensive control over oil and gas operations. Parliament has passed the Canadian Water Act setting national standards and controls. The Canadian Clean Air Act provides national standards for air.

[Translation]

However, Mr. Speaker, this only represents part of the accomplishments of the government. By creating the Department of the Environment we have opened the way to decisive action and co-ordination in that important area. This new group of governmental agencies puts us in a better position to solve current problems. They co-ordinate the undertakings of all departments in the field and work in close co-operation with the provinces, universities, industry, in short all those who are interested by this field.

Over one million chemical products are being used today. So we need to determine their hazardous or other characteristics. Pollution, whether it be created by industry or the masses of people living in urban areas, has raised new problems for the government. Canada now has a central agency to deal with those difficulties. No country can overcome pollution on its own. It is an undertaking with international dimensions. A first step has been made toward an international agreement on the control over the quality of water which will be part of a program to rejuvenate the Great Lakes between the United States and Canada.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

The next international conference on the Law of the Sea will help us further to make known to the world our concern to protect Canada at any cost against pollution whatever may be the source. Canada deserves to be protected. It is a country of great scenic beauty. Most enchanting sites have been preserved through our national parks.

In the last four years, Mr. Speaker, seven new parks have been added to those already in existence. For the first time we have national parks in Quebec—La Mauricie amd Forillon. We also have a large national park in Ontario, Pukaskwa. We have Gros Morne park in Newfoundland, Kouchibouguac park in New Brunswick and Pacific Rim park in British Columbia. In Nova Scotia Kejimkujik park has now been opened.

[English]

Today, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to announce the location of the three new parks that are being established north of the sixtieth parallel. The first of these parks is an immense 8,500 square miles in the Kluane area, in the southwest corner of Yukon Territory. Its outstanding features include Mount Logan, the highest peak in Canada; one of the world's largest non-polar icefields systems; outstanding glaciers and the St. Elias Mountains. The second is 1,840 square miles along the South Nahanni River, Canada's most spectacular wild river. In April, 1971, 870 square miles were withdrawn from exploitation. The new park more than doubles that area and includes Virginia Falls, twice as high as Niagara, three major canyons reaching 4,000 feet in height and a vast number of caves and sulphur hot springs. The third will be the first national park above the Arctic Circle. It is an 8,200 square mile area on the Cumberland Peninsula of Baffin Island. The area is noted for its spectacular fjords and deeply carved mountains dominated by the massive Penny Icecap. Mountains reach 7,000 feet. The Pangnirtung Pass is 60 miles long and often a mile deep.

These three northern parks, Canada's first national parks north of the sixtieth parallel, will increase total national parks lands by more than 50 per cent—from some 31,300 square miles to 49,800 square miles. I know all of these areas very well. They are unique and fantastic. They will rank among the world's most spectacular national parks. Members of this House are invited to view models, photographs and maps of these three areas which are on exhibit today in the Railway Committee Room. I thought it was important to give hon. members an opportunity to appreciate visually what we are doing. Although we try to be eloquent, there is nothing to beat a visual appreciation of the highest mountains in Canada, the biggest fjords, and so on. I think hon. members will probably appreciate the opportunity of seeing that documentation.

The addition of these northern parks means that ten new parks have been created since 1968. Only two parks were opened in the preceding 30 years. There has never been an expansion comparable to that of the last four years. The ten most recent additions up to 1968 took 50 years to establish. We now have 28 national parks in a comprehensive network extending from sea to sea; for the first time outstanding natural areas in every province and both northern territories are represented in Canada's national parks system.

Creation of these northern parks will not be permitted to affect in any way the traditional use of wildlife and fish resources by the native people of the north. We will discuss with northern residents who live near the parks ways to make sure that they get their share of the jobs created and every other possible economic advantage the parks can provide. Canadians now have the framework of an outstanding national parks system, but we must not stop here. There is much more to be done if we are to protect our natural heritage. The government is presently looking for opportunities to develop new kinds of parks and recreation areas extending along river valleys, geographical features, scenic routes, underwater parks, historic canals and walking trails.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am also pleased to announce today that the responsibility for eight canals has been transferred from the Department of Transport to the conservation program of my department. All those canals are linked with significant historic events: the Rideau, Trent-Severn and Murray canals in Ontario; the Carillon and Sainte-Anne canals on the Ottawa River, the Saint-Ours and Chambly canals in Quebec and St. Peter's canal in Nova Scotia.

All those canals are readily accessible from large urban centres in eastern Canada. We intend, in close co-operation with the provinces, to develop their historic value, the recreational aspect of those waterways and to protect their parks and wildlife habitats. The conservation of natural wonders is consistent with the preservation and protection of historic and architectural monuments in Canada. The Louisbourg fortress, the small Fort Garry, Dawson and the trail of the Klondike gold rush are some factors which add colour and variety to the national system of historic parks and sites. All were carefully chosen to commemorate the important events in our history and to inspire Canadians of today and tomorrow with feelings of satisfaction and national pride.

• (1510)

[English]

During this session, I will be introducing legislation to establish a national trust which will be known as Heritage Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I would like at this point to mention the interest in that project of many members of this House, especially the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Roberts) who sponsored a bill that, to some extent, was the inspiration for this new legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Its main objective will be the preservation of our historical, architectural and natural heritage. Heritage Canada will acquire property by purchase, donations and bequests. It will be a broadly based corporation with the same degree of independence as the Canada Council. Heritage Canada will be launched with the aid of a generous federal endowment grant to give it a start. The private sector will have a major role to play. The aim is to enable anyone anywhere in Canada interested in preserving our historic and natural heritage to play a part in discharging a national responsibility.

[Translation]

Our cultural heritage, Mr. Speaker, makes up an essential part of the quality of our life. Not only must we preserve it, but we must make it available to all Canadians.

The government, through the Secretary of State Department, intends to increase the responsibility of the National Museums of Canada. A system of associated museums will be set up in order to allow the Canadian people across the country to enjoy the National Museums collections.

At the same time, the Canada Council will be given more funds and its responsibilities will be extended in order to insure the protection and use of museum collections that do not belong to the national system. This will lead to the establishment of the first elements in a network of national exhibition centres and to the management of a collection of art objects which will be loaned in order to attract the public to the museums.

[English]

Ignorance about the culture and history of the various groups that make up our population has had much more to do with dividing us than any other single factor. National parks, historic sites and museums enrich the quality of Canadian life and strengthen visibly the fibre of national unity. They tell us much about the world around us, ourselves and each other.

Communication and understanding are essential in a diverse society. We must seek to deepen our understanding, to enlarge our appreciation of all others. This is the foundation of the government policy on bilingualism and the raison d'être of its multicultural programs, the basis for a better Canadianism. There is no threat in this. There is a promise, a promise of a land in which the dignity of everyone, the heritage of every one of us will be respected and understood by all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I wish to mention a subject that is very close to the members of this House, especially myself as Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I am happy to refer to the fact that in the past four years we decided to work very hard on one of the cultural problems about which we all feel very strongly. I refer to the cultural heritage of the first citizens of our land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: We have started on programs to try to help the Eskimos and Indians of this land to preserve their culture. During the past session, it was announced that the government in the next year will spend $10 million to help establish cultural centres and other activities that will permit our native population to go back through their history. We have a diverse cultural society. One of our responsibilities is to permit our first citizens to find in their background, history and tradition a new strength in order that they may find the place in society they want. In the past 100 years we may have tried too hard to impose our values on these people.

The greatest contribution that this House can make is to support the efforts of the government and the people of Canada to help the first citizens of this land keep their cultural identity. It is very important for every citizen to understand what he is, accept his differences, and from there build a place in society that suits him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: It is this that has permitted Canada to become what it is now. We believe it is possible for all Canadians to share in the economic and social advantages and at the same time maintain their cultural diversity. I think these and other programs that have been announced today are designed to permit Canadians to find in their history, different backgrounds and cultures existing in this country the strength that will permit the building in Canada of a diversified society that will pull us all together and ensure that this country will continue to be an example to the world of understanding, broad views and, at the same time, social and economic progress.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for their attention. I am sure that Canadians will welcome the general program we have announced which is intended to promote the conservation of green spaces for generations to come. It is our responsibility, as members, not only to develop short term programs but to take steps to conserve for future generations areas such as the national parks which may not be visited by a large number of Canadians in the near future, in order that the children of our children may say that during this Parliament we tried to save those areas for them, and to set up, in the fields of culture and history, the required mechanisms to allow our descendents to keep their diversity while building a country of which we can all be proud.

• (1520)

[English]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I wonder whether the minister would permit a question before he formally concludes his remarks.

Mr. Chrétien: With pleasure; I always like the questions the hon. member puts to me.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I am really interested in the answers. May I say that we listened to the minister's speech with a great deal of interest. We were pleased to hear his comments about canals, parks, architectural buildings and so on as well as his later, unrehearsed remarks about the Indian people. But if he really wishes to do something worthwhile, can he tell us when he intends to make some formal announcement about recognizing the aboriginal rights of the Indian people, and tell us, also, when he intends to remove those iniquitous sections from the Indian Act, sections which have, unfortunately, been with us for donkeys years.

Mr. Chrétien: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is not a debate on Indian affairs but I am always glad to express the views of the government on that subject. As to the first part of the question, this matter was dealt with by the House a few years ago when two commissions of inquiry into Indian rights and treaties were established. The Indians have their own committee. They are studying their treaties and rights. Facilities for this inquiry have been provided by the federal government and responsibility has been assigned by the Indians to a chief whom they themselves have apppointed. At this time, I do not wish to interfere. The government has appointed Commissioner Barber to look into the question for us—

Mr. Howard (Skeena): You have not.

Mr. Chrétien: He is talking with the Indians now. I believe he has begun to make some recommendations, for example, on the question of the ammunition moneys of the Indians of Alberta. I think this is the start of a co-operative approach between the Indians and the government to find a solution.

As far as the Indian Act is concerned, I recognize that it is not perfect legislation. I said from the first day I was here that I wanted a new Indian Act. But before I propose this unilaterally, I naturally wish to hold consultations all over Canada.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Your predecessor started it, not you.

Mr. Chrétien: We have been engaged in consultation with the Indians since 1968. I recognize, of course, that my predecessor had moved in that direction, because, after all, we are all Liberals and we are acting like Liberals all the time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gilbert: That's the trouble.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. In all fairness, I must point out to hon. members that the minister's time has now expired. The question itself was long and the answer has been very long. Therefore, so as to continue in order, I shall need unanimous consent if the minister is to finish his reply.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chrétien: I said I wanted to amend the Indian Act, and I have asked the Indians to come to me with suggestions. So far, three different Indian associations have presented their views and I am sure the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) would really be shocked if I proceeded in the absence of advice from the Indians of British Columbia.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the hon. member rise for the purpose of asking a question? If he is, I shall need unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Yewchuk: Thank you. I shall be brief. I was interested to hear the minister's remarks and his enthusiastic conclusion, during which he spoke about preserving the culture of our first people and of making available a $10 million fund for establishing cultural centres. In the circumstances, could the minister explain why it should have been necessary for the Alberta Indian Association to dismantle the staff which had been assembled and the plans which had been drawn up for such a cultural centre?

Mr. Chrétien: This is a new program, Mr. Speaker, and we are now developing this program. The question of the Indian associations in Alberta was discussed at length in this chamber a few months ago. I have expressed my view. I have nothing to withdraw. I felt the associations were not at that time serving the best interests of the Indians. Some of them were merely interested in raising political hell. We have established good relations with the new administration, and I think we shall certainly help them to establish cultural centres. But one must recognize that there are three different groups in Alberta, each of which wanted grants. It is not because there is pressure on me that I would give preference to one group rather than to another. However, I need a national program in order to be just to everyone. I have been Minister of Indian Affairs for more than three years, now, and I know what pressure is. I am used to it. I keep my cool in order to make good decisions even if it takes a few more weeks.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In his response to the question I posed to him the minister let his imagination over-ride the facts of the situation and made three deliberate and distinct misstatements.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): With respect, I do not think he should be permitted to do that. The first mistake was in saying that Dr. Barber had been appointed.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may rise on a point of order, but he is required to take into serious consideration one of the long-established rules of the House. Even if he feels aggrieved, he has no right to suggest that another hon. member has made a deliberate misrepresentation of facts. He has no right to say that.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): He made it accidentally, then, out of ignorance of the true facts. The minister said the government had appointed Dr. Barber to look into the question of aboriginal rights. That is not true. Aboriginal rights were specifically excepted from the relevant order in council. When we inquired about this before Christmas the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) substantiated this assertion.

The second misstatement of fact related to the recognition of aboriginal rights themselves. In September, 1969, the Prime Minister admitted that he and his government had no time for the aboriginal rights of the Indian people, did not intend to recognize them and disregarded them completely. That statement by the Prime Minister has never been put to one side by the right hon. gentleman or by the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is obviously debate between the minister and the hon. member. I suppose a debate as to who is right and who is wrong could go on for a long time, but if the Chair were to allow these statements to go on for a long time it would be doing so at the expense of other members who have indicated that they are anxious to take part in this debate. My understanding is that this is not a debate on the affairs of the minister's department. I would hope we could give the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) an opportunity to make the speech he has been waiting to make for some time.

Mr. Chrétien: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member has shown to the House that he has been a member of the opposition for a long time, and he will have to stay there for a long time because he is quite thin-skinned.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): But accurate.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, it seems the House has been misled by the remarks of the last speaker.

An hon. Member: You mean the minister?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gibson: I mean the last speaker on the opposition side. He completely overlooked the inquiries within the constitutional committee. The committee heard representatives of Indians from coast to coast.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question of privilege amounts, again, to a dispute concerning facts and at this time a debate cannot go on under the guise of a question of privilege. I suggest to the hon. member that we might go to the next speaker. I am prepared to recognize at this time the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

• (1530)

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish the state of the Canadian economy was such that I would be able to take more time to comment on the minister's generally pleasing announcement this afternoon, but unfortunately that is not the case.

The only distinguished aspect of the speech the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made in this House last Friday was that it made very clear that a lousy Conservative economic policy was not an adequate substitute for a lousy Liberal one. In this respect, the right hon. gentleman was very cogent. However, in the process his own record as an incompetent, callous, bumbling, glib, smug Prime Minister was not alluded to at all. Acting on the old maxim—and the Prime Minister always acts on old maxims—that when your position is defenceless it is best to attack, he did precisely that.

On listening to and reading his speech, one would have thought that the next best experience to an "after life" in heaven was to be a Canadian living anywhere north of the 49th parallel in the winter of 1972. Our land, he said, is one in which men and women can "live and work and play and think in either the English or the French language". Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately it is also one in which almost 700,000 men and women are walking the streets in sub-zero weather looking for a job. It matters not whether whether they do it in English or French, or indeed whether they do it in German, Hungarian or Italian.

Rarely has a distinguished mind, such as that of the Prime Minister, so laboured not to elucidate or make clear reality but to obscure it. Rarely has so much cool rhetoric been employed to disguise the harshness of the complete truth. A mind once given to an analysis of the Cité Libre has succumbed to the Pollyanna mush of Walt Disney. Such, perhaps, are the fruits of power.

What is the untold reality? Beyond the avowals of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), who assert that Canada has an economic policy, a strategy for development, which will lead to full employment, is the unpleasant fact that the only economic approach that could in any sense be described as a policy or plan of this government has been the Trudeau government's commitment to price stability. This policy was begun in 1968 right after the Prime Minister was elected, and has continued unabated right to the present day. Indeed, last Friday the Prime Minister himself once again took great pride in reminding us that the stability of our prices compared with other countries was a wonder to behold. Our price performance, he said—and the former Minister of Finance used to tell us this ad nauseum—is the wonder of the world.

The question, however, that is never openly asked, and certainly never openly answered by this incompetent and unconcerned government, is: Who benefits from price stability? That, Mr. Speaker, is the question. Who really benefits from such a policy? The fact is that apart from those on pensions, who could be protected by mandatory escalator clauses in all pension plans, some at the provincial level and some at the federal, and apart from unorganized workers, who again could be protected by more unions not fewer, the only category of person who wants absolute price stability in this country, or indeed in any other country, is the investor. That is the economic class that benefits from price stability. These people want to be able to clip their coupons at the same dollar value at which they invested. That, Mr. Speaker, is really what lies behind the preoccupation of this government and preceding Conservative governments with price stability.

Mr. Osler: What about the farmers? Your own members are always talking about prices going up.

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to complete my remarks, and then I should be only too pleased to deal with the withering nonsense coming from the other side of the House.

However, as all western European governments know and take into account, an economy geared to price stability is also one inevitably geared to significant levels of unemployment. This in turn leads to a reduction in the growth rate, an increase in welfare costs, and, most important of all, severe human misery for those men and women and their families who are the flesh and blood behind the unemployment statistics.

In his tough minded, Chamber of Commerce, ill-informed speeches of recent weeks, the Prime Minister has always been quick to point to what he regards as the dangerous rates of inflation in countries like Sweden, West Germany, Norway and Japan. The first three, I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, are governed by social democratic parties like the New Democratic Party. The Prime Minister neglects to mention, however, the relevant human statistics and facts in these countries. He does not tell us, for example, that all these countries have virtually full employment at the present time; that while Canada has almost 7 per cent unemployed, West Germany has 0.5 per cent and has, indeed, two million foreign workers employed within her borders.

Mr. Osler: What is the growth rate of their labour force?

Mr. Broadbent: I shall be coming to that in a moment, thank you. Sweden has an unemployment rate of 2.7 per cent and the Swedes are now talking about a recession! Norway, I point out to the Prime Minister, has an unemployment rate of 1.4 per cent. The figures for Japan are not readily available.

Let me at this point correct the highly misleading impression that the Prime Minister attempted to convey last Friday. The hon. member who raised the question is now beating a retreat, just as I wanted to deal with the issue he had raised.

Mr. Gilbert: He has gone out to clip his coupons.

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister correctly said that the number of new jobs in the Canadian economy exceeded that of Germany, The Netherlands, Sweden, Belgium, France and Italy. May I point out, in parenthesis, that the period of comparison is for the last quarter of 1971. However, the Prime Minister left a completely erroneous impression by this playful and misleading use of statistics. He failed to mention that the same countries, excluding Italy because of the lack of available statistics on this point, had 1,502,000 unemployed yet had, please note, 1,163,000 job vacancies. What this means is that for each job available in those countries alluded to by the Prime Minister there were 1.3 persons in need of it. In other words, there was almost one job for every man available. The comparative ratio for Canada in the same period is that for every job there were 11 men and women in need of it! Let us forget all about the great growth in employment that the Prime Minister refers to and the creation of new jobs; the real test is how many jobs are available for those looking for work, and for the period alluded to by the Prime Minister the fact is that for each job available there were 11 men and women in Canada in need of it.

If the Prime Minister had noted this fact, he would have given an honest picture of what is happening in this country. If the Prime Minister and his government are unable to deal with unemployment, then at least let them admit their incompetence instead of hiding their failure behind deceptive statistics.

The Prime Minister also failed to point out that behind our own 1971 average rate of unemployment of over 6 per cent lies a larger and more depressing picture. It has been estimated that in 1971 over two million different Canadians were unemployed at different times in the year and that when you take into account the families of the unemployed, approximately 30 per cent of our population, or over six million Canadians, were directly affected by unemployment.

• (1540)

It seems that such reality does not bother the Prime Minister. Why else would he have pursued an anti-inflationary policy which he himself admitted would lead to unemployment in the past three years? A policy which could only benefit certain coupon clippers in the world of business. I have here a list of 13 companies that have experienced lay-offs in the past 12 months, Mr. Speaker. The total of jobs lost is in the thousands. Here is the list: Sheet Harbour, Nova Scotia, 200 jobs lost; Cornwall Domtar Fine Paper Ltd, 170 jobs lost; Bathurst Consolidated, 80 jobs lost; Frazer Companies, Campbellton, New Brunswick, shutdown six times in 1971; Bowaters, Corner Brook, massive lay-offs started in 1971—to be extended, hundreds of workers affected; Inco, Sudbury, lay-off some 600 workers with about 1400 more to come; Northern Machine Works at Bathurst; In Temiscaming, the announcement of the shutdown of the pulp and paper plant, some 800 jobs lost; British Newfoundland Exploration Ltd.; Spruce Falls Power and Paper and Coulter Manufacturing.

In the midst of this disastrous situation for unemployed men and women, however, the Trudeau government has not forgotten to reward its corporate supporters. Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important to note who is committed to certain myths in this country and who is not. It is our view in the New Democratic Party that it is both the old parties, the Progressive Conservatives and the Liberals, who are hung-up on old myths, particularly the myth of private enterprise.

In this country we have private enterprise, free enterprise, call it what you will, a system only for those who are seeking work. For example the Prime Minister recently told a black-tie Liberal dinner group in Toronto that the want ad columns in the Toronto newspapers were filled with jobs. If Canadians were not so lazy, he suggested, they would get out there and get them. He failed to note that for every job available there were 11 Canadians and that many of those jobs existed in the Arctic while a number of others required a Ph.D. degree. These facts occasionally elude the Prime Minister.

Yes, it is a free enterprise system for the workers of Canada. But, Mr. Speaker, I say this in all seriousness, in this country it is really a welfare state for our corporations. Right now the Liberal government is providing for our corporations funds at the rate of $400 million annually, most of it in the form of outright non-repayable grants. We also know, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal party, perhaps coincidentally and perhaps not, relies on the same sector for its campaign funds every four years.

The chairman of the Liberal election campaign for the election that we are all expecting, revealed a week or so ago that there are 95 corporations who are the principal backers of the Liberal party. This is the first time they have told us the number. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada have a right to know the names of the corporations. We have a right to know how many of them have received non-repayable grants, and how many have received government contracts from any department. I challenge this government, which talks so glibly about democracy and participation, to present a list of those 95 corporations so that we can check the record. I think we will have to wait a long time.

Let me comment on three programs that the government has embarked upon to extricate itself from the economic mess it has created. First, there is the Department of Regional and Economic Expansion. The Department of Regional and Economic Expansion is supposed to be helping the poorer regions of the country. However, its work in terms of the economy as a whole can be best described as next to useless. In fact, it has been so lacking in effective planning that it has been an instrument, on the one hand, of increasing the amount of foreign ownership in Canada and, on the other hand, has resulted in unemployment being created elsewhere in the country.

The list of corporations receiving DREE grants reads like a Who's Who of the multinational corporation world—Procter & Gamble, IBM, Parson and Whitmore, Michelin Tire, etc. And with what foolish, inconsiderate haste have they been given funds! Consider the following examples: First, ITT one of the largest U.S. corporations, received about $15 million for a new pulp mill at Port Cartier. Was this grant based on the real need of the Canadian economy for a new pulp mill? Of course not. I say this because we have just learned that Canadian International Paper is closing down in Temiscamingue with a loss of 700 jobs. This firm was doing exactly the same work as ITT.

Second, Duplate of Canada Ltd. was given almost $1 million to build a new plant at Hawkesbury so that it could close down part of its operations in Oshawa, simultaneously creating new jobs in Hawkesbury and unemployment in Oshawa. Brilliant planning! Third, the Michelin Tire Corp., a French-owned firm, is being granted millions of dollars to produce tires in Nova Scotia for a Canadian market already characterized by too many tire firms. Meanwhile, Dunlop Tire close down in Toronto, and Dunlop, B. F. Goodrich, Firestone, etc., located elsewhere in Ontario, operate at reduced capacity and some of them may be forced to cease operations completely. Fourth, last November, Aerovox Canada Ltd., moved part of its operations from Hamilton, Ontario, to Amherst, N.S. after receiving a $235,000 DREE grant. Fifth, a week following the Aerovox decision, just to show that the government is consistent in its stupidity, it was announced that Union Carbide was moving part of its operations from Welland, Ontario to Beauharnois, Quebec because DREE had given them a 1.3 million grant.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that DREE in too many cases simply constitutes a great waste of public funds which serve to line corporate pockets, create no new jobs, but merely transfer unemployment from one part of Canada to another. This is what Liberal economic planning is all about, it seems.

In his speech on Friday, the Prime Minister referred to the government's Manpower programs with his characteristic modest pride. Once again, we must look at the reality behind his statistics. In the third quarter of 1971 Manpower had between 60,000 and 80,000 trainees on courses. However, during the same quarter about 470,000 were unemployed and there were only 44,000 jobs listed as being available. A number of questions, surely, must occur to us and surely must occur to the Prime Minister. For what specific jobs were these people being trained? Would there be any work for them when they finished their courses? Has there been any serious attempt to correlate the courses with the anticipated job vacancies in the market?

The answers to all these questions, Mr. Speaker, are all negative in their implications, as every Member of Parliament on both sides of the House knows. Manpower courses at present are simply an expensive means of keeping men and women temporarily out of the unemployment statistics. Instead of pouring millions of dollars thoughtlessly into this kind of manpower program the government would be much wiser to invest it in new enterprises that would create real and durable jobs in the Canadian economy.

• (1550)

Mr. Speaker, quite apart from other reasons for failure, the DREE and manpower programs simply cannot succeed in the present economic environment. Both programs were recommended to the federal government a few years ago by the Economic Council of Canada and both were seen to be viable—and this is important—only in conditions of an economy performing close to its full potential. I will return to that point in a moment. I want to say something about the winter works program.

In 1968, the Prime Minister dismissed and then cancelled the winter works program. It was, he said, wasteful of public funds and non-productive in terms of creating a significant number of jobs. That was Trudeau wisdom in 1968. However, he came back this winter with his own hastily drawn up, essentially stop-gap winter works program. Once again, men and women are only very temporarily taken off the unemployment statistics list for a few months. I ask the Prime Minister what will happen to these people when the first of June arrives?

I want to conclude my criticisms with some final, and I hope some positive, observations. We have come full circle. This government after it was elected in 1968 decided to fight inflation. It has done so ever since. After the first two years it began gradually to sense that something was going wrong and that thousands of people were being thrown out of work. The government then resorted to hasty, unplanned cash expenditures in its DREE, manpower and winter works programs, which work and can only work in an economy operating near its full potential. In other words, the very programs the government seeks to invoke and wants to apply to the Canadian economy require for their efficacy a fully employed efficient economy in the first place, but this government systematically set out to destroy such an economy with its anti-inflation policy.

It would be childish and intellectually dishonest to suggest that there is a simple solution to the problem of creating full employment in Canada. There are, however, certain approaches which, if begun now, would have positive effects before long. I might add that if they are not begun soon, Canada will continue to experience the ruinous high levels of unemployment we are now living through.

I wish to make five suggestions. First, the government must abandon its preoccupation with price stability and commit itself completely to full employment rather than being unnecessarily preoccupied with inflation. It must make clear to the people of Canada, first, that most of our inflation is inherited from the United States and of course there is very little we can do about it as every economist in this country knows. The government must say to the Canadian people that some inflation is not a bad thing. Second, it must set up an economic planning department which will assess the potential of the Canadian economy in relation to emerging world markets for certain products. Then, it must concentrate our energies in these directions. This is exactly what the Japanese did following World War II in the electronics and automotive industries, and we all know how successful they have been. Third, the government must make clear to our trading partners that we are not merely to be regarded as a source of raw materials. To the Japanese and Americans, we must make it conditional upon receiving a certain percentage of raw materials that they must also buy a certain growing percentage of our manufactured articles.

Fourth, a major change in corporate taxation policy is required to shift the incentives away from the export of raw materials to the development of the much more labour-intensive manufacturing sector. I would like to take a minute on that point. A Liberal government in 1955 began the ruinous policy of giving special tax concessions to the exploitation of non-renewable natural resources. They did this at a time when other countries were planning to develop their manufacturing sector. For short-run economic gains, the Liberals began the sell-out of our natural resources and simultaneously and inevitably discouraged the development of the manufacturing sector of the economy. They began in 1955 the tax policy which was continued by the Conservative government and still remains in the recent legislation of the present government. Tax write-offs and concessions in the resource sector have led, for example, to the oil and gas industry paying taxes on only 6 per cent of its profits. The mining industry, in its metal mining operations, pays taxes on only 13 per cent of its profits.

What are the consequences? The foreign manufacturing countries, in particular in the western world, like Canada's policy because it helps them in two important ways. First, it provides their investors and manufacturers with a very cheap source of raw materials. Second, the very fact of this foreign investment in our resource sector, now in the billions of dollars, drives up the value of the Canadian dollar. This, in turn, makes it very difficult for our still just emerging manufacturing industry to compete both at home and abroad with the manufacturing countries which do the investing in our resource sector in the first place. The truth is that the Liberal government's tax policy in this respect will continually undermine the efforts of even a hundred trade missions which it might send throughout the world trying to sell our manufactured goods. What is needed now is a change in tax policy, a change which removes the ruinous concessions to the resource sector and puts it in a tax position which at most must be no better than the labour-intensive manufacturing sector.

Fifth and finally, this government must begin to act to regain control of certain key sectors of the Canadian economy. As recently as today in the House of Commons the Prime Minister and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) revealed their ad hoc, vacillating, non-policy on foreign ownership, and particularly on the question of the economic relationship between ourselves and our American neighbours. The Prime Minister could not tell us when his policy on foreign control would be forthcoming. On numerous occasions in recent days the leader of the New Democratic Party has asked without success for this policy. Similarly, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce today refused to explain our policy on the multi-million dollar auto industry.

Mr. Speaker, what is required is a clear commitment to implement measures now which would result in regaining control of certain sectors that have a clear potential for growth in the world economy. Two years ago I proposed floating our dollar and using our dollar reserves currently sitting in the United States to obtain controlling interest in our petroleum industry. Recently, the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) made a similar argument. He pointed out that our current reserve levels of $5 billion would be sufficient to obtain control of both Chrysler and Dupont. It matters not which important industries we get control of now. Surely, a number of possible labour intensive alternatives are available after a serious assessment is made. However, it does matter that we start now. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians walking our bitter, cold streets in search of work have already waited too long.

• (1600)

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Like so many other members who have contributed to this debate, I would like to start by congratulating the mover and seconder of the motion that we are now debating. Unlike some of the other speeches we have heard today they were both, in my opinion, optimistic speeches. The speakers did not duck some of the problems that confront the country but, on the other hand they did not paint a uniformly black picture of this country as some others are inclined to do.

If I had an hour or an hour and a half, I would be strongly tempted to take a long look at some of the statements that were made by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and elaborate on them. Some of the things he spoke about made quite a lot of sense but others did not make much sense. A Liberal is not a doctrinaire person, so he is able to accept things that sound sensible and discard the nonsense. He does not have to judge a person's performance by a beatific vision he has seen.

I wonder whether the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby would ask Mr. Schreyer, loudly and clearly so that the people of Manitoba could understand, whether the premier does or does not want any DREE money to help private enterprise or any other enterprise to develop in Manitoba. If he does not want DREE money, my question to him would be whether he would rather have plain, ordinary Manitoba money because he would certainly wish to use any money he can find in Manitoba to encourage industry to develop so that the people in Manitoba can have jobs. I wonder whether he would really, seriously go to Saskatchewan and tell the farmers there that a little inflation or a great deal of inflation does not matter a hell of a lot, and whether he would go to his constituents and say to them: dear constituents, you can always sell cars; they are so damn good and so intrinsically great that you have the right to a job making cars. It does not matter how expensive they are, they will be bought all over the world. That is one of the things about price stability.

Before the hon. member finished, he said that it would be a dreadful thing to do certain things that would drive up our dollar. I cannot see why it would be more dreadful to drive up the value of our dollar than it would be to drive up the price of the goods that that dollar represents by inflation. On the one hand, you have inflation which is perfectly good and hurts no one other than the men who clip coupons and, on the other hand, you have this high dollar which is a terrible thing. So there are inconsistencies in the hon. member's speech. I could go on for a long time on that subject and I intend to do so, but it is time to talk about something else today.

I would like to say that since 1867 there have been periods of provincial ascendancy in this land and other periods during which the central government has dominated the scene. But I submit that it has consistently been the federal power alone that has been able to take effective steps to remove the barriers that create isolation, to permit each Canadian to detect his own potential, to ensure that his image of Canada is one of promise and compassion.

Let us recall a few of the big decisions made by the federal power that have made a nation out of this country. Macdonald's insistence that there be a railway from sea to sea, which policy he carried through this House after a bitter and long debate lasting a full two months, was one of them. The then leader of the opposition—there were no third and fourth parties then, but if there had been they would have put in their two bits worth—said that a trans-Canada railroad could not be completed in ten years, which is what the contract called for, "with all the power of men and all the money in the Empire". Yet, at Craigellachi in 1885 the job was completed and the Canada we know began to become a possibility. Doubtless, the leader of the opposition and many of the leading columnists of the day considered Macdonald to be arrogant, technocratic and even dictatorial for persisting in getting this program through parliament, for defying the opposition. But the insults have been forgotten and the railway line survives.

Then, there was Laurier's settlement of the west, which added muscle and sinew to the long cross-continental backbone that this railway had produced.

There was also, parliament's decision to create a Canadian navy rather than to contribute money and men to the British fleet. Again, there was a lot of flak over that one.

An hon. Member: Where is the merchant navy now?

Mr. Osler: There is a lot of flak still, but by and large it is to be ignored because if attention had been paid to the flak then there would have been no Canadian nation. We would have been true imperialists, donating our money to the Royal Navy and we would have remained colonialists whom everyone decries today. So, the opposition establishes the traditional routine of being against everything and says that it is arrogant to get things done. There would have been no Canadian navy and Canada would have been tied to the apron strings of its imperial mother for ever and ever. Now, there is no imperial mother and there is no empire to be tied to, so I suppose Canada would be holding the knot up in the air.

Then there have been other things, such as the establishment of the CBC, the conception of which was very fine, along with the enforcement of federal control over broadcasting. There has been a wide range of social assistance programs, too. Everybody will agree perhaps with this. They might say that perhaps there has not been as much as people would like, but a lot more than some other people would have given to us, bankrupting the nation in the process. The Canadian Bill of Rights was a praiseworthy attempt by the federal power to provide a standard by which the rights of all Canadians might be measured and enforced. But you will find many of the provinces were too small minded to accept it. Then, there was the Canadian flag. There is nobody today who does not take our flag for granted. They would feel like idiots if we did not have the Canadian flag, but the move to adopt it had to be started by federal initiative.

Our peacekeeping role with the United Nations has been a useful one. Our insistence at the federal level on the principle of regional equality of opportunity is another example of federal initiative. I agree that it has not been reached, but the principle is there and we stand by the principle. We are attempting more and more to carry through that principle. So, without a strong federal power, who can imagine the existence of a meaningful Canada still rising to the challenge of removing the barriers that inhibit people from coming close to their full potential?

The federal government, by encouraging the flowering of cultures other than English and French, has turned our country's back once and for all on the insidious and deadly concept of the melting pot. It has held firmly to the position that no province or region of Canada can have, or is entitled to, special powers. In the early spring of 1972 our nation has at last caught up with a number of issues that seemed to be key issues for debate in the 1960's. I suggest that now is the time to turn our sights in some other directions. The post war era is passed. All over the world it is dead and gone. Quite suddenly we find ourselves in a new worldwide ball game in which not all of the rules have been defined. The current move of the United States to reach a detente with the Republic of China and its frantic activities on the trading and monetary fronts, combined with Britain's imminent entry into the European Common Market, can leave no doubt of this. Canada, if it wishes to remain independent and as sovereign as any nation can be today, must understand and acknowledge the cardinal fact that she is on her own.

I suppose we could side with the forces of protectionism in the United States and strive to become an insignificant appendage within a sort of fortress western hemisphere. If we did so, the instrument for achieving that would be the party which is wagged by the tail of the dog of protectionism of the big unions in the United States which are the prime force behind the protectionist movement there, as I understand it. But I do not think that will come to pass, even though it would ensure that we would not have to agonize over every decision for long. The decisions would be made for us in Washington. Surely, it would both deny our own heritage as a trading nation and renege on our own raison d'être, while guaranteeing our own decline and fall. Such a move would not only guarantee our own decline and fall, but also the decline and fall of the incipient Caribbean nations as well as the decline and fall of the South American nations.

• (1610)

A hundred and forty years ago Charles Darwin began to think out his theory of evolution when, as a young naturalist, he went ashore from H.M.S. Beagle to make a trip into the interior of Brazil. During that trip he observed that, in nature, nothing was safe; to prey and to be preyed upon was the condition of existence. Each species had to adapt itself or face extinction. I submit that this lesson is urgently relevant for mankind today. Just as Canada cannot survive without the deliberate encouragement of prosperity and cultural diversity in its various regions, so the world cannot survive without deliberate and continuous attempts to achieve prosperity and well-being wherever men may live. The United Nations may some day evolve into a federation of co-operating world powers. I think we can safely say that we have passed the dangerous stage when it could have become the ultimate nightmare, the world-wide universal state. Indeed, tolerance and trade are the key elements required for the continued survival of both federal Canada and the world. Anybody who suggests that Canada does not need to trade should just look at the figures relating to per capita trade and the percentage of our gross national product that is generated by trade. We are vitally interested in freeing trade wherever it can be freed. We cannot solve the problems of trade in the world alone.

On the domestic scene, no single province or provincial government can solve the problem even of its own region without doing so in a federal context with the federal power providing the necessary initiative. That is why it is so important that this House, composed of men and women elected from all the regions of Canada, should persist in its efforts and not allow itself to be overshadowed at any time by any provincial legislature.

It is important for us today to answer one question: upon what industries should we concentrate? What development goals should we have, either to raise incomes or create jobs? Where will our trade markets be and what should our trade policy be? Should we move toward a common continental market or search for new, overseas markets? Where do we want growth to occur? Do we want it only within our three largest cities, which is what is now happening, or do we want growth to be spread across the entire land? At first glance, some may think that discussing such matters as industrial development means that we are ignoring our social problems. I submit that you cannot separate the two. We have a pie, and if you talk solely about special programs you are only talking about how that pie is to be divided. Today, the time has come for us to examine the machine that actually makes the pie, because we have more and more people and we need a larger pie to distribute. We sense, today, a need to co-ordinate all our policies in order to be certain that we are charting a clear and consistent course for our future.

The growth of western Canada is probably one of the most significant changes that has occurred within Canada since the Fathers of Confederation brought unity to our eastern provinces. The time has now come, and I am talking as a westerner, to go beyond talking only about western identity and western rights. We must talk about our new west, and examine how our new west is actually providing real opportunities for the new national policies demanded in our era. You see, this country was built and modelled on the fur trade. The building of the CPR followed that model, and our trade and transport system shifted from west to the east, to France, England and Europe. In recent times we have seen our trade shift from Europe to the United States. We have seen the very continentalism emerge that Sir John A. Macdonald and the early Fathers of Confederation tried to prevent.

In the late 1950's, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) tried to reverse this trend, to shift trade away from the United States and take it to the United Kingdom. His basic aim was identical to that of the Fathers of Confederation; but times had changed, and trade could not be switched back in that manner. I submit that the settlement and development of western Canada should point out to us that we are actually looking at new options; the options, for instance, of developing the Fraser River Valley at least as thoroughly as we developed the St. Lawrence River Valley. That development would give Canada access to the Pacific rim.

Current projections suggest that Japan will become our second most important trading partner during the next decade. However, Japan is not the only country in the Pacific; China, Malaysia, South America, Australia and New Zealand will present immense trade opportunities. These countries are all potentially very great customers.

This opportunity alone provides ample modern ground for resisting the idea of a North American common market, which has been suggested by one dignitary in this country. I will not say any more about that dignitary. Perhaps too much has been said about him recently in another context by members of this House. However, I think that the concept of a common North American market, as it was suggested to some people in B.C., really means a common fence. And, because we are such a small country relative to the United States, it would be the Americans who would decide who would come in or out of the gate in that fence. They would decide what would come in and go out through that fence. Without being any way anti-American, may I say that there is no way the Canadian mouse can lie down with the American elephant in a North American common market and still keep its options relatively open. We do not want to be prevented from trading with the Pacific area or any area by any power. We must be free to make arrangements with other countries, wherever they may be.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert, when he was prime minister, stressed our right to develop and maintain an independent trading policy with China, Russia and Cuba. Our present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has travelled personally to Russia, Japan, Australia and Malaysia, and has established formal diplomatic relations with China, although he has not travelled there, and has done all this with a view to expanding Canada's trade options beyond North America. Canada's recent large wheat sale to China is only one indication of the fruits of this approach. I submit it is a fact that the development of western Canada is allowing us to look west across the Pacific and at the Pacific rim. In that context we ought to note the warning contained in the recent report of the Science Council of Canada. Paraphrasing Darwin, the Council said that a country which loses the power to innovate in a changing environment gives control of its future to those who retain that power. Future trade pacts should therefore not only examine our balance of payments, but also strive to develop more balanced employment opportunities for Canadians, opportunities particularly in the fields of industrial research and development, design, marketing and engineering.

One hundred years ago the west provided Canada with the opportunity for development. That was a challenge indeed. Today, the west provides Canada with renewed opportunity for development. I refer to the challenge of meeting and trading with the peoples of the Pacific rim, as I have said. If we are to meet this challenge, all of us must break out of our present mould of Orthodox thinking patterns which have been established for 100 years, just as earlier builders of Canada also broke loose from their traditional views and ways of living in that settled part of the country that first became Canada.

A consensus is emerging in Canada that we should learn to specialize in industry. The problem is to decide where to specialize. If I may get back to the Science Council of Canada, Mr. Speaker, it has been pointed out that Canada's two fundamental strengths are her increasingly skilled population and her wealth of natural resources. The Science Council recommends that any strategy to develop our manufacturing should be built on these two strengths and should specifically stress technologically advanced manufacturing in fields related to our production of resources. I think that this is a strategy which is available to Canada largely as a result of our resource rich west. We must build our strengths, and our strengths are our resources plus our skilled citizens. It is not enough to just create jobs. We must build industries which can survive in the modern world, which can compete in export markets and which can provide the type of productivity and high wages that modern Canadians demand. Our high wage-high productivity industries are largely related to our resources.

• (1620)

It is sometimes hinted that western Canadians are short sighted, that we want only to export our raw resources without developing any manufacturing; that we worship foreign ownership and foreign capital. I submit this view is wrong. Western Canadians are concerned vitally with resource conservation because resources are the basis of our existence. We are equally mindful of the problems of pollution. We are constantly in search of ways to develop manufacturing for our people. However, we are aware that outside ownership and capital, whether from the United States or eastern Canada, does little to help develop our manufacturing when outsiders seek only to export our raw resources. The argument of foreign ownership is completely and utterly beyond any interest to us. We want the terms of ownership defined and to ascertain how much we can get out of that ownership. It really does not matter whether it is American, German, Canadian or anything else. There has to be a means by which we have an opportunity to share in the decision making process.

The Economic Council also said that free trade rather than tariffs is in the interest of all Canadians. Western Canadians, who always had to live with free trade markets, would not have been able to do so if we went ahead and glad-handedly built up inflation the way some people say we should. We would not be able to live at all. We want free trade markets. We say amen to this recommendation of the Economic Council.

The constitution of Canada gives ownership and control of resources to the provinces. In the last resort, this simple legal fact gives immense power to western Canadian provinces in this time of rising demand for resources. I am confident that the people of western Canada are willing to join with other Canadians in a united, federally-led industrial policy on foreign ownership, resource and manufacturing development as long as this policy meets the legitimate needs of the modern west. Without such guarantees, why should we westerners permit the insensitivity of United States capital to the nature of Canada to be replaced by equally, if not more, insensitive eastern Canadian capital?

Modern Canadian industrial policy must, in short, provide a means of investing Canadian money and technology in western Canada to help us develop employment opportunities for people who live on the Prairies and want to stay on the Prairies, people who live in British Columbia and want to stay there, as well as people who live in the north. Canada must develop transport facilities and assist with freight rates so that western industries can develop our north and sell into foreign markets.

This policy, of course, must not stop at mineral and energy resources. The western farm economy also offers manufacturing opportunities for machinery, meat processing, feed products and fertilizer. We must adjust to the reality of the great distances in this country. Skilled federal civil servants should not all be confined to Ottawa. They should be spread around a bit so that the goods and services can help the prosperity of people all across Canada, the people who are paying for them. National Crown corporations should be headquartered outside of Ottawa. We should start with that. We have had a good indication of the attitude of this government. I say that the pressure should be maintained, not to rob Ottawa of any of its glory, but to see that it does not get any more glory than that to which it is entitled. The rest of us should get a little piece of the action to which we are entitled because we pay for it.

Today the opportunities for a new industrial strategy offer a chance to refute the old point of view that the rest of Canada is a futile backwater for Toronto and Montreal. Needless to say, in this field as in others, the relevance of the Canadian experiment is clear far beyond our borders. In our era, it is indeed timely to demonstrate that different regions as well as different cultures can live united and free, without stifling uniformity and centralized industrial control from head offices located only in the world's largest metropolitan centres.

A national policy for rural Canada appears to be developing that clearly acknowledges the rights of rural citizens to certain guarantees during this period of change that is sweeping the world; the right to participate in determining their future; the right to security in an era of change; the right in the case of older families to continue living with dignity and honour in their traditional communities if they so desire.

The present government, led by the Prime Minister has begun to move in almost all the areas I have examined today. Starting with his first-hand experience of the legitimate aspirations of Quebec, the Prime Minister has learned very quickly that parallels to these same aspirations are to be found in other regions of Canada. I believe he has seen, too, that industrial and service employment must be provided outside our large metropolitan centres if our quality of life is to be improved.

We must all grasp the implications of the new ballgame the world is playing now. The United Kingdom is engrossed with Europe. The United States is trying desperately to adjust to the facts of life that have crowded in on her during the past few years. Canada is on her own in a sense that she has never experienced before. These are challenging and exciting times. If we hold on to our nerve and use wisely all the assets we possess, surely we can enter successfully the contest offered to us by His Excellency in his Speech from the Throne. Let us move forward. He said our challenge is to remove the barriers that create isolation in Canada and the world, to help each Canadian to fulfil his own potential and to ensure that the image of Canada becomes more and more one of compassion and promise.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the Speech from the Throne would indicate that the government at last is prepared to come to grips with the Canadian economy. Unfortunately, that was not the case. It merely included some pious platitudes given to His Excellency to advise us that we have had to deal with some unusually difficult economic problems in the past year. That we already knew, Mr. Speaker. What the Speech from the Throne did not say was that most of the economic problems were directly or indirectly a result of government policy. Also, we were not told that by any objective standard we failed miserably in coping with the situation. If the government's performance were graded with the same objectivity that is expected in the academic world, its grade would be F minus.

Unemployment is now at 7.7 per cent. As hon. members know, in some parts of the country it is much worse than that. In the province of Quebec and in some parts of the Atlantic provinces, the rate is exceptionally and unusually high. It is too high for the economic and human wellbeing of those parts of our great country. It is too high to build the kind of bridge of unity that we want to see in Canada.

At the same time, the rate of inflation is back on a year to year basis at 4.9 per cent. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the inflation level is now higher than when this whole inhumane exercise was begun in 1969. It is not unfair to blame the present mess on the government and its policies. I say policies rather than policy because it is a series of legislative and other policy changes which has brought us to the present sad and chaotic situation.

One of the first and at the same time disastrous errors in judgment was the tight money policy of 1969-70. What did it accomplish? It put a few hundred thousand people out of work unnecessarily. These people have been denied the right which should be theirs in an industrialized and supposedly civilized society to contribute to that society in a meaningful way. They are deprived of one of the most important human needs, the necessity to be useful, to be part of the show. This is an intolerable situation for everyone who is denied the right to participate, but particularly for the young people. They are highly educated, very idealistic and determined to build a better, more just society. They are denied the chance to become involved.

Many of them drop out, no longer convinced of the value of education.

• (1630)

To increase unemployment to its present totally unacceptable level at a time when it was known that the number of young people who would be looking for work would reach record proportions was either gross stupidity or subversion. While the human consequences of a tight money policy are of the highest importance there are economic consequences which are of real significance as well. Canada is losing production at a rate of $3 billion or $4 billion a year. If we multiply that figure by three or four, the sum is staggering. In the life of a normal parliament our loss would be somewhere between $12 billion and $16 billion in real terms. This represents almost $2,000 for every working Canadian.

Another consequence of the tight money policy has been additional take-overs of Canadian companies by Americans. The small independent Canadian operator is no credit match for his wealthy American cousin. When the squeeze comes it is the small independent Canadian businessman who is forced to sell, often on terms which are less than just.

But the tight money policy is not the only contributor to the present uncertainty. We are witnessing the effects of a federal-government-supported welfare policy which in its application provides a higher cash income than minimum wages in many parts of Canada. In addition, our unemployment insurance policy contains within it some grotesque anomalies. It was designed to help unemployed persons who could not get work, not to subsidize a few months off for people who have worked for a while and then wish to take a few months off. When welfare and unemployment insurance pay more than jobs there is no incentive to work. This, unfortunately, is the situation in Canada today. Many of the jobs which are available are offered at wages which are well below the cash income available from either unemployment insurance or welfare. Consequently, many jobs go unfilled. This is ludicrous, of course.

The uncertainty with respect to tax legislation also took its toll. Many businesses were sold to foreigners. Canadian entrepreneurs are losing heart. They are discouraged, and consequently no longer willing to take the risks associated with expansion. They are distrustful of changes in labour laws, in the Unemployment Insurance Act, in the proposed competition legislation and in the tendency they see toward the concentration of arbitrary decision-making in Ottawa. Consequently, investment which would otherwise have involved hundreds of millions of dollars will not take place and thousands of job opportunities will be lost.

In summation, the Canadian economy is in big trouble. We are cursed with high unemployment and high inflation at the same time. A marginal improvement in one has greatly exacerbated the other. In fact, by objective standards the Canadian economy is the worst managed of any major nation in the western world. Our increase in productivity per person is the lowest. Our unemployment is the highest and even the price performance, which was quite good in the long term, is now pretty well out of control.

To those who think the system is at fault, let me say it is not; it is the management of the system. What is required is a commonsense approach. The situation today is far from satisfactory. At a time when there are hundreds of thousands of Canadians drawing unemployment insurance and tens of thousands living on welfare, when it snows one cannot get the snow shovelled, when one needs to travel one cannot be sure that planes will be operating, when one sends a letter one cannot be sure it will be delivered within a reasonable length of time, when one goes shopping one often has to wait interminably in line for a check-out. If a person moves to a small town or a new subdivision he may have to go without mail altogether. If a man writes a letter to the government it may not be answered, and in the summertime, if he lasts that long and if he wants to go swimming, he may find the water polluted. All this frustration, inconvenience and lack of service at a time when hundreds of thousands of people are living on unemployment insurance and welfare! Something is desperately wrong.

It is time we took off the band-aids and began treating the disease. To do this a whole series of fundamental changes in direction is required. In the limited time available this afternoon I shall mention just a few. First, we have to get minimum wages increased until they are higher than unemployment insurance or welfare. I realize there are some technical problems involved in doing this but in the end there is no alternative. It must be done. We must provide an incentive to work for the average Canadian. He must not be placed in a position where his cash income after taxes is greater when he does not work than it is when he is following useful employment. Second, we must change the Unemployment Insurance Act so as to eliminate many of the existing practices. Some years ago a commission called the Gill Commission drew attention to a number of abuses. Its recommendations were largely ignored. Unfortunately, the new act passed by parliament last session is worse than the old one. Unemployment insurance was brought in to provide insurance for people who could not get work and who lacked sufficient income to live on. It was not intended to supplement the incomes of people who had enjoyed an income above the average during months of seasonal employment.

I understand that one of the officers of the fishermen's union in British Columbia is upset because of an example I gave recently. The example was that of a young fisherman who owns a boat and who fished last year for 70 days. His gross take was valued at $54,000, of which he gave 15 per cent to his mate in accordance with a contract. The cost of his expendable stores, gasoline, food, and other items including depreciation on his boat was $5,000. The rest of the money was put in the bank. During the winter he took a course under the Department of Manpower and drew unemployment insurance for the balance of the winter when he and his wife were not vacationing in the south. This may not be a typical case, but it is true. It is not illegal, but a law which permits a practice of this kind is a stupid law and one which should be changed.

Then again, there must be rates of taxation which encourage people to work. This is just as true in the case of an old age pensioner living on an income supplement as it is in the case of professionals and managerial people.

There has to be an incentive to work, to perform. We must provide incentives for business to expand. Businessmen must be able to plan ahead in the certainty that the rules will not be changed too abruptly or unnecessarily. Finally, and most important, monopoly power must be effectively controlled. I suggest this because there is no way in which full employment can be financed otherwise without inflation. I pause at this point to define full employment. In the context in which I am using it, the expression means about 97 per cent employment; in other words, about 3 per cent unemployment, as experienced in the period of the early post-war years. The government's present approach is unworkable. Big, powerful unions must limit their demands and big, powerful companies must pass the consequent savings on to the consuming public.

• (1640)

I was interested to hear the speech of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). Although he applauded some of my earlier statements, I am afraid that the economics he described for us this afternoon came from the London School of Economics at a time when it was less than up to date in its outlook. It is the kind of economics that is really not relevant in the world in which we live. I think it is possible to finance full employment without inflation today, but first of all we have to look at the real world in which we live, not at the world of a few decades ago.

In doing research for my book "Agenda: A Plan for Action", I found in only three of the 15 countries surveyed an unemployment figure that was higher than 3 per cent on average. Those three countries were Canada, the United States and Italy. The average rate for the 15 was about 2 per cent, and of course many of them had a much better performance than that. Canada had the worst rate of the 15. So I think it is fair to say that we do know how to finance full employment.

When I say we know how to finance full employment, I am speaking of orthodox economics. The average orthodox economist knows how to work demand management in such a way that the full utilization of resources can be maintained. This has been proven in many parts of the world. It has been proven in Japan, Switzerland, Germany the Nordic countries, in Australia, in New Zealand and many other countries. What we do not know how to do is to finance full employment without at the same time breeding inflation. However, contrary to the widely held view that this is impossible, I believe it can be done.

First of all, we have to recognize the nature of our economy. We have to recognize that it is a split economy. It is not a total market economy: it is an economy in which part is market and part is rigid. We have to recognize that some wages are set by individual arrangement and some wages are set by union contract. We have to recognize that some businesses operate on the basis of price competition and that some of the giant industries are big enough to control market prices and conditions.

In our economy the big, powerful unions use their monopolistic power to push up costs. Then, the big powerful industries push prices up to compensate. Some people insist that it works the other way round, but it does not matter really for the sake of our argument here: it is a vicious spiral that has to be stopped. As costs and pricses rise in the monopolistic, or, if you prefer, the oligopolistic sectors, the Bank of Canada is faced with a dilemma, and that dilemma is this. It can either finance full employment with high inflation, or it can finance less than full employment with slightly less inflation. The compromise is the famous and classic trade-off of the economist.

This is not the time nor the place to comment on the usefulness of Senate studies, but I was very disappointed in the recent report issued by the Senate committee on economics in which it perpetuated what I believe to be a myth. In referring so strongly to the Phillips curve and the trade-off theory, I think it has helped to give credence to the idea that there is no better way of doing things, that in fact for all time we are plagued with this anomaly of either having too much inflation or too much unemployment, or some combination of the two. Of course, socially as well as economically neither alternative is satisfactory. If we were to have 6 per cent unemployment for an extended period of time, it would be socially disastrous. It would create a situation in this country where a whole generation would lose hope, would give up, and almost anything might happen.

If, on the other hand, we were to permit inflation at the annual rate of, say, 6 per cent—which on the basis of the present wage settlements in Canada is likely to be the case—then at the end of the century, after about 30 years, a person who today is earning $10,000 would need $57,000 just to stay even. Today's $20 bag of groceries would cost nearly $115. A home now selling for $25,600 would jump to more than $147,000. So I think the consequences of such a rate are really tremendously important, and therefore we have to project any thinking into the future now in order to adopt policies that will prevent this from happening. As I said earlier, I do not think it needs to happen, but we must act now.

If where union power exists increases in wages, including fringe benefits, are limited to the average increase in productivity for the whole society, and if the profits of the big oligopolies are limited to the long term experience in that industry to ensure that the benefits of lower wage costs are passed on to the consumer, then it is possible to pursue the twin goals of full employment and zero inflation at the same time. Unless monopoly power is limited by the public interest, there is no way this can be done. But if it is done, then what happens, of course, is that prices in the big industries will decline slowly but consistently. The price of cars, farm machinery, refrigerators, washing machines, vacuum sweepers, glass and cement will all decline over the long period at a steady rate, whereas prices in the service industries, such as cost of hair cuts, medical and dental services, police and fire protection will continue to rise. But when you take an average of all these things, the prices that are declining through use of technology and capital and the prices that are rising in the service industries will average out at zero. This means that to all intents and purposes you will have zero change in the composite price index.

If we are to follow policies along these lines it means we will open up a whole new horizon for this country. It will present a situation where we can have the full utilization of resources with maximum freedom of choice. We can then have a decentralized system where power is decentralized from this level of government to lower levels of government, and then from lower levels of government to the people themselves. The ordinary people will be given more control over their own lives and will be given a greater say in their own destinies. And that, Mr. Speaker, I think is what most of them are looking for today.

It is a recognized fact that as government gets bigger it becomes not only more inefficient but also more remote, more impersonal and more insensitive. This trend must be reversed. It is not good enough just to change direction in two or three areas; the trend has to be reversed completely. We must go in the opposite direction to the direction we have been taking for the last 10 to 15 years.

If we do reverse this trend and use just a few simple macrocontrols to maintain an economic climate of expansion and opportunity, we will be in a position to do many of the other things we want to do and to solve many of the problems that concern us most. On the negative side, we will be able to abolish the bureaucracy that is now involved in the welfare system for employables. Since that will not be required it will be eliminated. Of course, some income will be required for the unemployables, but as far as the employables are concerned it will not be necessary to perpetuate the present welfare system because jobs will be available for them. Similarly, the Unemployment Insurance Act can be revised in such a way as to eliminate the present anomalies which I think are unacceptable to so many Canadians.

Then, on the positive side we would have the resources to do those things we want to do. With the extra $3 billion to $4 billion a year available to us in real terms we would be able to get on with the job. We would have the necessary resources really to attack poverty, to do something in a determined way about poverty. It is a matter of regret that we have more relative poverty in Canada today than we had a few years ago when the anti-poverty campaign was begun.

In addition we could do something tangible about the slums that exist today. Over a period of a few years we could eliminate every slum in Canada and make this a realizable goal in this country. There is no reason why we should have people living in shacks.

• (1650)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: It was one of the most profound experiences of my life when travelling with the task force on urban development to see Canadians living in buildings which most of my farmer friends would think unfit for animals. This is the kind of degradation which should not be allowed in a country like ours where we have the resources to provide decent housing. If we were to go to the zero inflation solution, then interest rates for the National Housing Act would drop by about one-third and it would once again be possible for ordinary people in Canada to aspire to ownership of their own home. It would not be a dream beyond them. Once again we could give the ordinary people a range of choice. We would also have the resources to attack pollution control in a determined way, to organize it and get on with the job of cleaning up our lakes and rivers and our environment, protecting it and saving it. It is the only one we have and we should treat it with great care.

Finally, we should move in the direction of a strikeless society. We should substitute the rule of law for the rule of the jungle. We should end the organized blackmail and put people first. I think this is what most Canadians want to do. I think this is the way to significant, positive Canadianism. I do not think we will ever achieve greatness in this country by anti-Americanism or anti anything else. I think we can be proud to be Canadian by doing great things here and by pursuing excellence in areas within our capability. There is no better place to start than within the economy by bringing it from the position of the worst managed economy in the world to the best. Then, people would come from other countries to see how we do it.

Having laid the foundation, having put down the cornerstone, we would be in a position to get on with the job of building a better society. We could enlist the resources of our young people and give them an opportunity to use their idealism and creativity to build the kind of society where human values are put first. To do that, the foundation must be well and truly laid. That is the reason I make the suggestion that we should change completely the totally inadequate policies of the last few years, reverse them and get on with building a more dynamic society in Canada, the kind of which all of us, especially our young people, can be proud.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 40 to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Bridges—Vancouver Harbour—Government financial contribution to construction of proposed third structure; the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. McKay)—Fisheries—Possible variation in lobster season, District No. 5, Nova Scotia; the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton)—Canadian Pacific Railway—Removal of station agents, Saskatchewan and Alberta—Consideration of nature of undertakings by company in review.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ross Whicher for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 34), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Caouette.

Mr. H. E. Stafford (Elgin): People who say they stand for an independent Canada are repeating a threadbare platitude mouthed by politicians from the first day of confederation. The quickening tempo of the debate on economic nationalism in the last two years is a matter of great concern to me. Many of the economic nationalists present the same myopic outlook as did Great Britain in the 1770's when she was willing to trade all British North America for the Island of Guadaloupe. This is hardly the time to support economic nationalism in the face of the grim realities of an interdependent world.

Some hon. Members: Slower.

An hon. Member: Translation.

Mr. Stafford: Everything has its price, and we must measure the price. We could not have obtained the second highest standard of living in the world without American investment, technological know-how and markets. We have obtained these with a full measure of independence. Travel all over the world and compare the benefits we enjoy as Canadians; you will not see them matched outside the United States. Irving Beecher found it difficult to escape the conclusion that economic investment was enormously on Canada's side and A. E. Safarin found the net result overwhelmingly in Canada's favour. John Kenneth Galbraith concluded that a corporation will make the same kind of decisions and create the same kind of political climate whether the corporation is American or Canadian controlled. It is obvious that the multinational corporation is in no better position to dictate political policy in this country than large Canadian companies.

Some hon. Members: Slow down.

Mr. Stafford: Canadians will invariably purchase the most modern appliance at the most reasonable price. Foreign buyers are equally demanding. To compete in world markets we must manufacture products that are in demand and to do this we need the benefit of American research and development. Much of the world's technology is generated solely from American ingenuity. The answer is simple; for every dollar we spend on research and development the Americans spend approximately forty. At this time in our history, no amount of Canadian initiative, no intensive concentration on our own research and development will match that which the American is making available to us. Surely the wildest Canadian dreamer could not imagine we can do it on our own, at least for many years to come.

The economic nationalists never tell us what Canadians would have done in the absence of United States investment. Their conclusions on the economic effect of foreign investment are based on generalization, conjecture and assumption and do not come to grips with the complex situation in this country. They rest their case on purely hypothetical arguments. They blindly conclude that our country is being governed in the boardrooms of the head offices of the giant American multinational corporations and not by our three levels of government.

An hon. Member: Faster.

Mr. Stafford: Many members opposite are obsessed with the question of our survival as a nation. In question period and debate they cry out that American control of our industry has now reached the stage of economic domination, that we are tied up in the American straitjacket and, above all, we must seek new trading partners, that the American multinational corporations are buying with our own money and are not doing their share of research and development in our country, that we have lost our political, economic and cultural independence or at the very least, it is in a serious and precarious state, that we have already lost the power to make decisions, that the Americans have even stolen our national game.

It seems to be the "in" thing to criticize American investment today. The media has given so much attention to the advocates of restrictions on foreign investment that many politicians and groups from the Watkins task force to the Senate have concluded that there is a sudden wave of concern about American domination in this country. The average Canadian does not feel he has lost his independence. Millions of Canadians are only too willing to turn on American television stations. In 1968, the report of the Watkins task force calculated that foreigners owned $33 billion worth of Canadian assets in 1964. The report recommended the creation of a special agency to co-ordinate policies with respect to multi-national corporations.

Since then the Watkins manifesto has asserted that the major threat to Canadian survival today is American control of the Canadian economy. It is amazing that Mr. Watkins has not informed us how he would finance his massive program of nationalization.

In 1970 the report of the Commons Committee on External Affairs and National Defence calculated that foreigners owned $50 billion worth of Canadian assets. The committee apparently sensed a rising tide of nationalism and produced a report on foreign ownership recommending that all foreign owned subsidiaries operating in Canada should be required to make at least 51 per cent of their shares available to Canadians. The committee also recommended the establishment of a Canadian ownership and control bureau to supervise foreign investment in Canadian industry with powers so massive, far-fetched and bureaucratic that it startles the imagination.

But of all of them, the Committee for an Independent Canada has to be the most farcical conglomerate of publicity seekers in Canada. These enthusiastic evangelists are trying to win independence by stirring up a national fervor that Canadians today share a surging mood of awareness and a deep sense of national purpose. The committee's seven point statement was designed to catch the imagination of Canadians but unfortunately for the dreamers there is such a thing as reality.

It is one thing to set down broad policies, it is another to generalize as did Professor Rotstein at the conference at Thunder Bay last December, that it is a myth that economic independence will lower the standard of living. The learned professor should unveil his formula so that the underdeveloped nations of the world could attain our standard of living. If natural resources will do it, many of the underdeveloped countries are the richest in natural resources and have the lowest standard of living in the world. Jack McClelland set the tone at Thunder Bay in his oft-quoted generalization that time is short and if we do not achieve a real measure of economic independence our nation is going to die and Canadians, in an intellectural sense, will die with it. Perhaps such a morbid and gloomy forecast of Canada's future could only be matched by the Pied Piper's second trip. If I might be allowed to remind

Mr. McClelland, for a nation that is falling so fast, we still enjoy the second highest standard of living in the world.

It takes little intellectual sense to realize that Canadians prefer jobs to nationalization. I am convinced that those who would restrict foreign investment and the jobs it brings do not represent the feeling of Canadians across the country. The committee would turn the clock back and withdraw from international enterprise. Arguments like theirs may win the emotional battle of the moment, but they will not win the war of logic.

Last year the Ontario government set up a Conference on Economic and Cultural Nationalism. The select committee of the Ontario Legislature was named to inquire into this matter. Most of the witnesses who have appeared have been about as objective as Peter Newman's grandstand approach before the committee of calling on Canadians to assert their independence even if they have to infuriate Americans. This is certainly a novel approach to the technique of selling.

• (1700)

It is interesting to note that all five major candidates in the Ontario Progressive Conservative leadership campaign asserted the question of economic autonomy as being one of the key problems in Canada. At the start of the leadership campaign hon. William Davis said that Canadian control of the economy was high on his list of priorities and called for a conference on foreign investment. In the Speech from the Throne on March 30, 1971, the Ontario government expressed the following belief:

The people of Ontario should have at hand the means whereby our own economic, cultural and social objectives and priorities are determined in Canada by Canadians.

In January, 1972, Premier Davis said at Windsor that he would establish a solid position in favour of greater control of the Canadian economy by Canadians and that we must have made ourselves highly vulnerable to American economic policies. On January 25, 1972, the premier said in New York that Ontario is firmly committed to the principle of Canadians gaining control of their economy and that foreign ownership has sparked a national sense of urgency in Canada.

On the same day, in Vancouver, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) called on the federal government to set guidelines on foreign policy, particularly in its relations with the United States, to ensure our survival beside a giant. Last December the Science Council stressed that the government should have an over-all industrial strategy. The Senate report on science policy, issued in January, urged that by 1980, 2.5 per cent of the gross national product be spent on research and development. Such added expenditures will raise the cost of the product, jeopardize Canadian enterprise and add little to the total North American technological development. This total expenditure will amount to less than 5 per cent of the American expenditure on research and development. At the most, we will be following the beaten paths and discovering things that already have been discovered.

It makes little sense to plow fields that have already been tilled. The rate of change is so great that even the total resources of the Canadian government could not meet the American contribution and keep abreast of the times. It is time we realized that the American multinational corporation has succeeded in making technology international in conception and international in distribution. Von Braun was the father of the V rockets and the landing on the moon, and Einstein was the father of atomic energy, but this does not make these achievements less useful to the Americans.

Before we build a wall around ourselves we must first catch up with the Americans and then spend over $30 billion per year on research and development, just to keep pace. We will also have to do something to attract the best brains in the world, as our friends to the south did. We accuse American subsidiaries of failing to carry out their fair share of research and development. Of the total business research and development spending filed under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act in 1967, 44 per cent was performed by American companies and 35 per cent by Canadian-owned companies.

The economic nationalists have developed a statistical hysteria in pointing to American ownership in industries such as petroleum, motor vehicles and aircraft which necessitate huge amounts of investment capital, but they seldom refer to the fact that under the 1967 returns the Americans owned 19 per cent of Canadian corporate assets. Canadians did not choose to spend risk capital in the development of the oil industry in this country. Before Leduc was discovered on February 13, 1947, an American subsidiary, Imperial Oil, drilled 133 dry holes at a cost of $23 million. Since Leduc, the Alberta treasury has collected $3 billion in oil and gas revenue and oil, gas and related industries have expanded to the benefit of Canadians.

We have not been without our chaotic experiences in research, development and innovation. The heavy water plant in Nova Scotia is an example of a monumental economic and engineering blunder resulting in heavy financial loss. The Avro Arrow program was a complete disaster. By the time it was scrapped in 1958 it had cost the government $400 million and would have cost as much or even more to put it into production. There were no buyers except for the RCAF who agreed to buy 100. Not a single NATO country was interested in Canada's pride and joy. The CF-105 was scrapped and 14,000 workers were laid off.

The problem, of course, is money. Research and development cost money and there are risks to be taken which few Canadian companies can afford. When the Edsel failed as a commercial venture, the Ford Motor Company carried on. When RCA Victor spent $140 million on an experiment that failed it, too, carried on. Canadian companies are not yet in a position to meet such challenges. The gloomy hypothesis of many economic nationalists is that so much of our independence has been bartered away that it is almost too late to save Canada.

Time does not permit me to review the rantings of all those who feel they are on a bandwagon. These nationalists are moving to a new style of patriotism, a new mood of economic and cultural nationalism. They are trying to make their concept the new fashion in a bid to influence public opinion. In their minds foreign investment has become almost synonymous with American investment. This is difficult to understand in view of the fact that we emulate the Americans in so many ways. The public has accepted their styles in everything from music to motor cars. We have followed their lead in everything from a ban on phosphates to a proposed ban on advertising of tobacco.

When Canadian nationalism has reached the point where a member of the staff of Queen's University can seriously conclude that Mrs. Levitt's book "Silent Surrender" presents the most scholarly and convincing analysis of American ownership and control of our economy, emotion has indeed succumbed to logic. I am not against dissent. In most cases dissent is healthy. In any society there are wrongs to be righted, and out of the whole mass of dissent there emerges a stream of new ideas. But there is a great tendency for nationalist feelings to obscure the issue. The emotion it arouses causes the economic nationalist to close his mind to the real needs of a changing world.

The answer is simple: we need American technology. The United States has such a head start in technology that they are forging ahead in astronomical proportions while other countries are vainly trying to catch up. They will not mark time in technological development in order to give us the time to match their technology, and if we do not match their technology there will be little demand for our manufactured goods. This would present a critical situation, as Canada must export to survive and the Canadian consumer would hardly be content with inferior products.

At the beginning of the century, when United States' technology was in its infancy, we might have gone our separate ways. It is hardly feasible now. To do so would be like trying to run a mill with water that has already passed downstream. Technology has not been spread evenly over the ages of history. When the industrial revolution started in England, the steam engine made the first powered means of production possible. This resulted in new factories producing goods at a fraction of the cost of the old, traditional methods. A group of people called Luddites considered the machines a threat to their livelihood and their answer was to smash them. This was a wholly negative approach and one that brought disaster on the Luddites.

But it did not stop the march of progress and there has been a low, steady and progressive climb to the affluence of today. The United States has carried on and has created a technology which is staggering to the human imagination. In the next ten years scientific knowledge is expected to double, and if it is to double in Canada the majority of it will have to be imported from the United States. At the present annual growth rate of 4 per cent per annum, the standard of living in the United States will reach staggering proportions by the second half of the twenty-first century. Canada, more than any other nation, will share in this enormous economic and technological advance.

This affluence will gradually spread to the underdeveloped nations of the world, provided left-wing activists and economic nationalists do not influence nearsighted governments to build walls around their countries. There will be no shortage of resources because increasing technology will develop the capacity to produce substitutes and even basic materials. We are being drugged by the economic nationalists. These self-styled economic saviours of Canada would have us believe we should save our resources.

[Mr. Stafford.]

Our natural resources are of no use to the people of Canada, or anyone else, as long as they are sitting idly in the confines of mother nature. They must be extracted and incorporated into goods. In essence, our real wealth is our ability to produce. Our competitive position depends on our technological and scientific achievements, which in turn depends on brains and money. Napoleon once said that God is on the side of the big battalions. In the war of world markets, the advantage is going to be with the country with first-class brains and investment capital.

Obviously, the United States occupies the paramount position and we are fortunate to share a common border with that country. We can be associated with it and maintain our dignity and independence. There are no two countries in the world who share so much in common on the basis of culture, economics, politics and ethnic origins. To those who keep raising the bogey of American ownership, we have our fiscal and budgetary policies that can deal with any inequities or adverse effects of American investment. The economic nationalists speak of American investment in terms of dollars, instead of the importation of American research and development which is really the major part of the American investment and the source of employment for hundreds of thousands of Canadians.

We are living in a world of ever-increasing competition and this competition is coming from countries which have the benefit of American capital and scientific knowledge. The most costly thing in the world is scientific research and development, and the fact is that there is no other place where we can get it. The economic nationalists never tell us of the cost of buying and licensing of American patents which are now coming into this country through U.S. subsidiaries.

• (1710)

Some hon. members opposite say that we have the money and technology. To some extent it is true, but it is mainly because of the American presence. If we develop policies whereby Canada and the United States diverge in two separate courses, the technology gap will become greater every year. Anyone who suggests that there are hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are willing to see this happen and give up their standard of living to buy Canada back is living in a dream world.

It has been said that politically and economically the motive of self-interest is the mainspring of human conduct. This is the motivating factor behind our technological development. The stout hearts and sharp swords of today are those who make the sacrifice to forge ahead in a continuous surge to open the door to new knowledge. Neither management nor labour is prepared to accept a decline in its standard of living for purely sentimental reasons. Where are these thousands of Canadians? I can tell you: they are sitting down earning fat, academic salaries out of the public purse, arrogating to themselves a unique understanding of the Canadian heart.

The average Canadian does not live in fear of the culture of or domination by the United States. The economic nationalists are misreading the temper of the Canadian people. It is absurd to say that this House is under American domination. I saw no American domination in our decision to pass the Arctic Seas Pollution Prevention Act. There were was no American interference in our decision to cut our NATO forces in half; no American domination in our decision to devalue and later unpeg the Canadian dollar. I did see a very tangible assistance in 1967 to sustain the Canadian dollar.

I saw no domination but I did see American consideration for our economy in July, 1963, when we were the only country in the world to be granted an exemption from President Kennedy's interest equalization tax. I saw no domination when the United States enacted a defence-sharing agreement with us in 1959 which helped us in our balance of payments. I saw no domination when the United States approved the auto pact agreement with us in 1965 although it affected the American blance of payments. The reverse has usually been the rule. In cases where the United States has imposed any restriction which threatened to hurt our economy, we have pleaded our special relationship as a reason for exemption.

For over 18 months we have been awaiting a study known as the Gray report. Press information indicates that the report will recommend that the government set up a screening agency to pass on foreign investment proposals with power to block foreign investments, take-overs and licensing agreements. There are obvious popular advantages to the formation of such a screening agency, but there are many practical disadvantages. The decisions of such an agency or board will consume time which is usually of vital importance in making effective corporate decisions. The natural bureaucratic meddling will create uncertainty and confusion. The number of purchasers will be reduced and the sale price of the industries involved will suffer. It will present a built-in sounding board for the economic nationalists and other pressure groups to keep competition out of Canada. But most dangerous of all, such a board could be used as a tool to promote regional expansion. All of this is in marked contrast to the conclusion of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, the report of which was published in 1964 and said that we must be alert to development which would lessen competition and threaten its vigour.

All that economic nationalism does is feed the people's spirit, not their stomachs. The wealth of a country is really in its productivity. If American capital coming here is diverted elsewhere, it simply means it is being put to work to produce goods in competition with our own.

We are misplacing our priorities. If we would spend more time providing incentives for industry which will attract both foreign and Canadian investment than we do on planning new laws for the creation of such a regulatory bureaucracy as a screening agency, we would be pursuing a more favourable economic policy.

It seems to be a fact of life that the most rampant economic nationalism comes when we can least afford it. The Economic Council has forecast that 300,000 jobs will have to be created for each of the next five years if we are to reduce our unemployment to 4 per cent. This will require new investment equal to our gross national product of 1968 of over $70 billion. This amount far exceeds the total assets of our whole Canadian banking system.

There are many improvements we can make. We can study the American presence in Canada and copy their managerial, financial and entrepreneurial skills, or we can heed the economic nationalists and witness the erosion of our entrepreneurial drive and the decline of our self-confidence. We must study the best methods to ensure our access to American and other markets on the best possible terms. We must continue to ensure that we have a climate for investment capital.

One year ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in a television interview in Regina that foreign ownership is a means of giving this country access to sophisticated technology that would not otherwise be available. For years we had a deficit in our balance of trade with the United States. Now our industrial capacity has increased to the point that in 1970 we had a surplus in our balance of trade with the United States of over $2 billion. In that year, it is equally important that over 65 per cent of our exports to the United States were manufactured goods.

In the last 25 years our working force has doubled. In the last 40 years our gross national product has increased 20 times. Our productivity and our living standards have been raised substantially by the development of technology and trade with the United States. The economic implications have been great: they are larger markets, greater output and higher wages for Canadians.

In face of all this, it is with a sense of frustration that we hear the economic nationalists cry out the passionate plea that we must protect our national identity. One of the great symbols of our national identity is, surely, our growing and increasing standard of living in this country. We may have our grievances with the United States, and I suppose we always will, but I have never known of a President of the United States who wanted a poor and destitute neighbour to the north. It is to their advantage to have us rich and prosperous. They could not trade with a poor neighbour. We share in common the two highest wage areas in the world, and trade will flow more naturally between us than with other nations of the world.

For years we have welcomed American subsidiaries to Canada. Many came here to avoid tariff barriers and some were given incentives to locate in Canada. They brought investment capital and technology which in turn provided jobs for Canadians. We have been able to keep them in check with our tax, labour and pollution laws. The head offices of these giants create no votes for us and we would be the first to shout if they were not obeying our laws. I welcome the multinational corporations to Canada as long as they invest to build and not to exploit. If they build, we are the beneficiaries.

The Japanese have been successful in creating joint venture ownership by attracting foreign venture capital and matching it with their own. They get half the American capital and all the American technology and match the American capital with their own to retain control. We can create the same situation in Canada if we want to pay for it. There is, however, the added incentive for American corporations to move to Japan. Why? To keep down production costs. The Japanese worker does not enjoy the standard of living of the Canadian worker. He works in a low wage area and lags behind the Canadian worker in everything from plumbing facilities to cars per capita.

As for the American government, all this combined with defence spending which has amounted to $1,200 billion since the war, and foreign aid which has amounted to $134 billion since the war, has economically put the ox in the ditch. It has created the highest rate of unemployment in 10 years, devalued the dollar, created a deficit in the balance of trade in the amount of $3.6 billion, and created an astronomical deficit in the balance of payments in the amount of $29.6 billion for 1971. It has put their national defence in jeopardy, wrecked their domestic program and increased their national debt. In the four years of the present administration there will be $100 billion added to the United States national debt.

The multinational corporations are injurious to American policies as they are responsible for a great flow of both American dollars and technology out of the country. If the United States kept their technology in their own country there would be more jobs in the United States and perhaps a balanced budget. The multinational corporation creates jobs in Canada.

The only meaningful theory is the one that works in practice. The multinational corporation is successful because it combines skilled management with technology and gives Canada access to world markets and capital. Any corporation, be it Canadian or foreign, which outperforms its competition by sound competitive practices and business principles is operating in the national interest.

• (1720)

After January 1, 1973, there will be ten members of the European Common Market wherein 257 million people will be united in the world's most powerful trading bloc. Just as the French were fearful of integration 15 years ago and that their industry would be overwhelmed by the Germans, there was British opposition that their industry would be smothered by continental competition. France has prospered in the community, and British entry speaks for itself.

The application of the common agricultural policy in the community has restricted Canadian exports of grain and other products covered by the variable levy system. British entry will undoubtedly hurt Canadian exports because Britain will obtain a much greater share of her food requirements from other community countries. The enlarged common market will make trade easier among its members, but it will raise barriers against outside suppliers.

Whether we like it or not, the multinational corporation is becoming a way of life. In the European community there were 820 mergers of continental firms with outsiders between 1961 and 1969. By the end of the century, it has been suggested that between 300 and 500 giant corporations will control one half to two-thirds of the free world's industrial production. We are not only competing with industrial giants whose technology and productivity is steadily increasing, but also with the trading blocs.

American corporations are setting up subsidiaries in Europe and are proving highly successful, chiefly because of their experience in high technology production. We are not self-sufficient, as is the United States. We are extremely dependent on foreign trade, especially with the United States. The Canadian manufacturing economy is, in general, less efficient than the United States manufacturing economy, partly because of the economies of scale. Our domestic market is small and we must export in order to take advantage of the economies which large-scale production will give us.

[Mr. Stafford.]

We export $750 worth of goods and services for every person in Canada, over three times the per capita figure for the United States or Japan. About 9 per cent of our exports go to Britain, and we stand to lose part of this when Britain joins the Common Market. The new European Economic Community will develop into an even higher degree of economic self-sufficiency and we will be facing a tough and sophisticated trading bloc with which to compete.

President Nixon's visit to China may well be the forerunner of even more new trading agreements which could siphon off a substantial part of the investment capital presently coming to Canada. The future prosperity of Canada may well depend on the willingness of the United States to share her wealth and knowledge with us.

Ten years from now, if someone should ask us what is the best thing we have done since 1972, let us hope we can answer that we kept pace with the Americans and did not fall behind. President Roosevelt once talked of the border that united us. Let us keep it that way. Instead of moving in the direction of economic isolation, we should be studying the possibility of developing a North American economic community, later leading to a community encompassing the western hemisphere, which could help set us on the road to a full world economic community. This must be our ultimate goal—peace and prosperity for the whole world. Peace and prosperity are indivisible.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take part in the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne and to bring to the attention of the House and the Canadian people some of the problems of my riding and of my province. I congratulate the two hon. members who moved and seconded the Address in Reply, not for what they said but for having had the gall to stand up and say it.

Canadians are all grateful to the striking CBC technicians because the strike spared them the drudgery of hearing the Speech from the Throne. I think the Governor General must have been relieved because he did not have to read that document of literary mush into the living rooms of people across this country. The strike certainly spared him that embarrassment. To me, standing just outside the Senate chamber, it sounded as if he were singing the government's swan-song.

The Throne Speech certainly did not stand this country on its ear. Just like the last three Throne Speeches from this government, this speech was a mélange of things proposed previously but not carried out. Of course, this being an election year, there were a few new tidbits: election teasers were thrown in. However, there was nothing in the Throne Speech to inspire Canadians. Actually, this Throne Speech contained more innocuous nonsense than usual.

I was interested to note the new "in" word of the inner circle— "isolation". It was mentioned so often in the Throne Speech that I felt like someone who had gone down with a bad case of measles. If hon. members recall, in the last Throne Speech Information Canada was mentioned and it was to break all this isolation. What happened to Isolation Canada—I mean, Information Canada?

Mr. Crouse: The hon. member was right the first time.

Mr. Carter: About the only thing specific in the Throne Speech was the promise of three new national parks in the north, but apparently they will be so far away that it is unlikely they will cause any traffic congestion or be trampled down by the public.

I do not expect to see the Competition Act before us in the present session. The Speech from the Throne indicates that the government is going to water it down, if that bill is to be introduced at all. Obviously, the government is looking for ways to stall it. I think they have finally realized that they have bitten off more than they can chew.

I am not sure, either, whether the government this year will bring in its policy on foreign ownership. From the glossy reference to it in the Throne Speech it would appear that whatever policy is eventually evolved, it will be rather modest and probably not very effective. May I point out to you, Sir, and to hon. members that we of the Atlantic region are just as concerned about this so-called foreign investment policy as are the people in the industrial heartland of this country. We in Atlantic Canada require great amounts of investment if we are to shake off our have-not status. We want to make sure that this policy will reflect the regional need for investment and that investment, from whatever source it may come, will find Atlantic Canada attractive.

The people of Atlantic Canada, and especially of Newfoundland, do not enjoy their have-not status, this second-class Canadianism. To me it suggests that the entire concept of confederation is not working and has fallen far short of its original objective, because seven of the ten provinces are declared have-not provinces. Certainly, there are reasons for this. Yet in our particular case, Mr. Speaker, there is no legitimate reason for the snail's pace at which Newfoundland has been moving in reversing this have-not status. On second thought, when one realizes that there has been a Liberal government in Newfoundland for the past 22 years, perhaps there is good reason for it.

Mr. Whicher: What did you have before you had a Liberal government?

Mr. Alexander: I still remember the hon. member's speech.

Mr. Carter: Newfoundland does not intend forever being an economically have-not province. We have resources and we have the people; also, we have determination. Yet what we require, the present government has not given us. The people of Atlantic Canada, and especially of Newfoundland, foresee the day when they will be providing equalization payments to their sister provinces. But that day can come only when the central government in Ottawa has recognized the need for a new deal for Newfoundland in confederation. We do not want handouts, Mr. Speaker. We do not want inflation when we do not contribute to it. We do not want unemployment imposed on us for the inflationary sins of the more wealthy regions of Canada. All we want, Sir, is proper recognition in Ottawa of the unique situation of our province, a situation which can in a few years, transform our province into one of the most productive areas in the Dominion. Sir, the people of Atlantic Canada, those of the have-not provinces and especially of Newfoundland, must be given a chance.

How can the residents of the riding of St. John's West read the Speech from the Throne and conjure up any great aspirations? How do you think the people of the Placentia area feel when they read a 3,500-word speech and find that the only thought that this government has given to unemployment reads:

• (1730)

Unemployment continues to be a matter of immense concern to the government.

What a profound statement for a government that has been in office for almost four years! That sentence follows a description in the most flowery of terms of an economy in Canada about which this government can find no wrong. It is a charade, Mr. Speaker, a shameless one put forward by a dishonourable government. I am sure the people in the Placentia, Jersey, Freshwater and Dunville areas of my riding, where more than 60 per cent of the work force is unemployed, will recognize it as just being just that.

What does the government say it is going to do about this tragic unemployment? It does not say anything. It has not done anything since it was elected in 1968. It will not do anything except create more unemployment. The people in parts of St. John's West, where unemployment is higher than even the province's 18 per cent, will remember the promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his New Year's interview on CTV when he said that if he had it to do again, he would do it the same way. I contend, and I am sure the majority of Canadians agree with me, that Canada cannot afford to have in the highest office of this land a man who will not hesitate to take such vicious and cruel steps to deliberately create unemployment. We certainly cannot afford that luxury in my province.

This government's only answer to unemployment seems to be makeshift, band-aid policies and the provision of more welfare. The average Canadian living in eastern Canada, certainly the average Newfoundlander, does not want welfare. He wants a chance to work, to earn a living for himself and his family with pride and dignity, not welfare and humiliation. There is a brief sentence in the Speech from the Throne where the government says it wants to deal more compassionately with the Canadian people. I understand that is the accusation about which the Prime Minister is most sensitive. He should be. If there is one thing in which this government has excelled, it is in not having compassion. There is another reference, an almost underlying theme, of love and understanding among Canadians. As far as the people in my area are concerned, that applies only to the Prime Minister: he loves himself and only he understands himself.

There is an old saying that when "poverty comes in the door, love goes out the window." How can a child living in St. Mary's Bay understand or get any real appreciation of this government's commitment to a better way of life, the resolution of differences by reason, the practice of tolerance and the acceptance of love and understanding? How can he appreciate that when he can only look forward to the status of a second-class citizen and realizes that his only hope for survival will be to leave the land of his birth, the environment that has been his and that of his forefathers for generations, and lose himself in the concrete assembly-line jungle to which he is completely unsuited?

Would you want to take on the task, Mr. Speaker, of convincing the fishermen of St. Mary's Bay, Placentia Bay and the Ferryland area that this government is really serious when it talks about the resolution of differences by reason, the practice of tolerance, the acceptance of love and understanding? To our fishermen, who today cannot even put their nets into the water without running the risk of having them destroyed by marauding foreign fishing ships who show neither respect or concern for their lives and property, these are just empty words. How tolerant must our fishermen be? How much longer must they be expected to be reasonable? How much love and understanding must they show? Do you blame our fishermen, Mr. Speaker, if they translate the government's commitment of love and understanding to mean only that Mr. Trudeau loves their taxes and they must try to understand how he uses them?

The fishery, Mr. Speaker, is one of this government's greatest failings as far as we from Newfoundland are concerned. For years we have been promised a 12-mile limit. Our fishermen do not even have this minimum protection, because this government has refused to stand up for our rights. For 3 years, since my Newfoundland colleagues and I were elected by the people of Newfoundland to represent them here in Parliament, we have been almost daily stressing the need for management and conservation of our fish resources and of the desperate need for protection of our inshore fishermen.

The government has pretended to listen. They have taken some steps, but these have been mere window-dressing compared to what is really needed. We can come to only one conclusion. Those of us from Atlantic Canada, where the fishing industry is important and where we see foreign fishing ships move in and destroy our basic resources, can only conclude that the present government is gutless when it comes to standing up to foreign nations who rape our resources and recklessly destroy the gear of our fishermen. It is no secret: for the past three years we have been saying that our fishermen expect more than a 12-mile limit, although the hardy fishermen in Branch, St. Bride's, Admiral's Beach or Southern Harbour would be happy if they could get even that. What we need, Mr. Speaker, is at least a 100-mile fisheries protection zone around our coast, just as Iceland has.

I am at a loss to understand the attitude of this government, the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) in particular. They recognize our rights with respect to the airspace above the waters off our coast. They lay claim to the oil deposits on the shelf below the water. But why in the name of God can they not recognize the fact that we own the resources in those waters, the fish? Why are they allowing every other marine nation in the world to come in and take away this resource which, if properly managed and encouraged by the government, could be a valuable input to the gross national product of this nation?

As one of my constituents in Bay Bulls said, "Feed some fish to those Liberals; it might give them some brains." I am inclined to agree.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Carter: In the Speech from the Throne, the government has taken credit for what they describe as "substantially improved prices to fishermen, upwards of 50 per cent in some cases." I would like the Prime Minister to go to places in my riding such as Ferryland, Cape Broyle, Petty Harbour, Little Harbour East, Portugal Cove South or St. Shotts and show the fishermen how they received 50 per cent more for their fish last year. I dare him to, Mr. Speaker. I have no doubt they would remind him of the promise in the Throne Speech 18 months ago of catch failure insurance, of his promise in 1968 of a just society and an end to regional disparity. What has happened to that? There is no mention of it in this Throne Speech. I hope it is not so, Mr. Speaker, but the absence of such things as catch failure insurance in the Throne Speech leads me to be suspicious that the fisheries branch in the new department is being downgraded, just as we expressed fears that it would.

Of course, catch failure insurance in itself is not enough. Fishermen in my riding require some form of inexpensive insurance to insure their fishing property and gear against storms and other acts over which they have no control. Not only has this government been reluctant to help fishermen who in a great many cases have been wiped out by losses resulting from storms, and so on; they have even refused to repair and replace, where necessary, public property such as wharves and breakwaters which have been destroyed by storms, despite the fact they are vital to the fishermen. I can think of several communities in my riding—Tors Cove, Kingman's, Calvert, St. Vincent's and St. Mary's, to name just a few—where public works have been allowed to deteriorate to the point at which they have become a public nuisance.

• (1740)

The riding of St. John's West is about evenly divided as between urban and rural areas. Before I move on to discuss some of the difficulties being experienced in the city, allow me to mention a couple of other items. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion has not been as successful as many of us hoped when it was originally conceived. One of the reasons the department has not been beneficial to my riding is the failure of the government to accept primary industries, such as fishing and forestry, for eligibility under development incentives plans.

Another reason DREE programs have not benefited areas like Placentia, Dunville, Jerseyside and Freshwater is that the government is too readily influenced by political considerations. These areas required designation as special areas perhaps as much, if not more, than any others in Canada. They were not designated because certain politicians, including the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), decided there was more political benefit in designating other areas.

In connection with another topic, Mr. Speaker, we are all very optimistic that in the not too distant future the extensive explorations for oil off our east coast will result in major finds. While we are waiting for this to happen the Department of Manpower should, I think, in co-operation with the province, assess the skills and trades required and take the manpower pool available in the province into training programs to prepare them. We must ensure that the manpower in the province of Newfoundland gets top priority for the jobs which will be created on these oil drilling projects. Instead of allowing over 18 per cent of the Newfoundland work force to lay idle, would it not be better to train them and provide them with skills for the manpower market which will open up when these oil finds are being worked?

Since some of my colleagues have developed their own theses on the problems of unemployment insurance, I will offer just one thought. It is time the government came clean with regard to the incredible mess that has developed within the UIC offices during the last few months. I challenge the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) or his parliamentary secretary to go to Southern Harbour, or to Arnold's Cove or to places on the Cape Shore and try to tell the people there this poppycock that only a few benefits were held up because of bureaucratic error. This is obviously not the case. An interdepartmental bulletin signed by the chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission has made this quite clear. If I may, I will quote rule No. 5 as dictated by the chairman of the UIC and circulated to all UIC employees. This is a directive issued to employees of the commission by their chairman:

> No one shall declare to claimants and/or their representatives that files have been lost, that documents cannot be traced, that the system is complex, that the computer is at fault, that there has been clerical error, or any other similar excuses, which, no matter how valid they may be, do not in any way help the claimant and perpetuate an atmosphere of doubt in the minds of claimants and employees.

The Prime Minister and some of his ministers have been boasting of the record number of housing starts in 1971. Well, we laud that accomplishment, Mr. Speaker; but let the government not rest on its laurels. There is still a crying need in this country for housing. We are barely scratching the surface. It is about time the government started recognizing the problems of our average and low-income families, those people who have been caught in the economic squeeze. In the city of St. John's a large number of our people are in this category. They are too well off to qualify for direct government assistance, but not sufficiently well off to avail themselves of mortgage financing under the National Housing Act. Many of these people live in houses which could be rehabilitated, with government assistance, thereby ensuring that the character of our downtown area would be preserved, while at the same time providing decent places in which to live and raise families.

More than three years ago the minister then responsible for housing, the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) imposed a freeze on urban renewal, recognizing that the bulldozer approach was not the right one. Since then the downtown cores of our cities have been allowed to continue their downward spiral of rot and decay, until many of them have gone beyond the point of no return.

The time has come for an end to the multiplicity of studies. The time has come to make decisions and take action. I hope this action will reflect the studies and correct previous mistakes. Urban renewal has in too many cases resulted in chaos. The Blackhead Road urban renewal scheme is a very good example of this. Frustration, confusion and chaos were the results of that scheme. Families were uprooted, lives were endangered, the people's rights were ignored by strong-arm bureaucrats who showed little willingness to recognize the human factors involved.

The federal government in co-operation with the other two levels of government, provincial and municipal, should undertake a long-range study of land needs in St. John's and establish a land bank to ensure that an adequate supply of serviced building lots is available to accommodate the natural growth of our city and the future needs of prospective new home builders. Such a land bank would also have the effect of stabilizing land prices, would discourage speculation and resultant exorbitant prices for serviced land.

The Speech from the Throne was not the only forlorn document to come out last week, Mr. Speaker; on the same day Statistics Canada issued the cost of living figures for the major metropolitan areas in Canada. My city, St. John's, had the dubious distinction of having shown the largest increase in the cost of living in January, a hike of just under 1 per cent. That was not simply a monthly fluctuation, as the former Minister of Finance used to say: unfortunately, this has been a trend for consumers in St. John's. The cost of living went up 4.6 per cent in the last 12 months in St. John's.

• (1750)

How do we expect our senior citizens, who in their declining years have to pinch pennies and live on a budget that is barely able to keep body and soul together today, to live with a 4.6 per cent increase in the cost of living on a pension that allows them only a 2 per cent increase to compensate? That is a harsh indictment of a government that almost gloats that it has no compassion.

I spoke earlier of the need for a new deal for Newfoundland in confederation. Nowhere is this more evident than in our dealings with Canadian National Railways. Canadian National pulled its railway passenger service out of the province in 1969 despite the objections of almost all the people of the province. The Canadian transport Commission agreed to allow CNR to abandon the service because it was losing almost $1 million a year.

Yet two weeks ago this same Transport Commission refused to allow Canadian National and Canadian Pacific to abandon their rail passenger service between Montreal and the Maritimes, thus creating a situation where the Canadian taxpayer will be called upon to subsidize it to the tune of $1 million a month. I am not arguing that this decision is a wrong one; as a matter of fact I think it is correct. But every argument that is used to retain rail passenger service in the Maritimes is also valid in Newfoundland.

My time, Mr. Speaker, is almost up, so I say this in conclusion. I make no apology for perhaps being a little too partisan in my address today. There is no member of this House of Commons who wants confederation to succeed more than I, who wants this great nation of ours to prosper and to grow and to provide for its people a standard of living that is unrivalled by any other.

As a Newfoundlander born and bred in the hardship and strife of a country that refused to lay down and die, even though the logics of economics were against our survival, I stand here representing 80,000 Canadians who still have the same grit, the same determination and the same strong will. We in Newfoundland desire from our very depths to make our full contribution to the development of this great nation. Our province is endowed with boundless resources, not the least of which are our human resources. We have the will, we have the drive. We ask only for your help to help us help ourselves. Wisdom and integrity, understanding and desire on your part can help us erase the hollowness of the Throne Speech's dictate to us as parliamentarians to make this country serene and unspoiled, believing in the dignity of every individual, sharing resources and permitting every Canadian to contribute his skills and talent.

Mr. Gaétan-J. Serré (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to join my colleagues in congratulating the mover of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. and most able member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher).

[Translation]

I should also like to congratulate the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie) who had the signal honour of seconding the motion. Both have acquitted themselves brilliantly of their task and their fellow citizens must certainly be happy to have elected them to this House.

[English]

Unlike members of the opposition, I was quite pleased with the contents of the Speech from the Throne. Since I have been in this House I have never heard a favourable comment by the opposition on any Speech from the Throne, or for that matter on any piece of legislation brought forward by the government. Canadians are getting more and more concerned about the negative, cynical and destructive approach being taken by the opposition, especially by the representatives of the NDP who have yet to produce some constructive criticism or alternatives during this Parliament on any of the major issues before us. It seems all they think about is to downgrade and give a completely distorted image of our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the cabinet and this government.

This type of concerted effort to mislead the Canadian public no longer works in our present society. This is old-time politics. The leaders of the opposition parties have tried unsuccessfully to picture our Prime Minister as a petty tyrant, an arrogant and callous man who tramples on the rights of Parliament, who has no feeling for the unemployed and imprisons his opponents in Quebec. This is not only a serious distortion of the record but also poor politics, because the voters usually favour, rather than fear, a high-handed leader.

Mr. Alexander: Where have you been?

Mr. Serré: I have been here all along, the same as you. And far from concentrating power in his own hands and in those of his so-called supergroup of advisers, he has diffused it so widely that the whole process of decision-making has changed tremendously. Policy decisions filter up through the system of cabinet committees and have to be checked out with the caucus and with the Liberal party. It all takes time, and the Prime Minister is unwilling to hurry business through the process he has established to ensure detailed discussion and co-ordination. In both the Commons and the Senate there are more committees doing more work than ever before, and the government is more willing to accept their advice than were its predecessors. The whole technique of publishing white papers and submitting draft legislation before it becomes government policy invites parliamentary participation in decision-making.

The criticism of the Prime Minister as being coolly aloof from public opinion is equally at odds with the facts. The truth is that through town hall meetings, appearances on radio and T.V., open-line programs and question and answer sessions with students and others, the Prime Minister has more public contact than any previous Prime Minister has had. A good example of this is that he is coming to northern Ontario and my riding this coming Friday.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne inaugurating this fourth session is well within the framework of this government's efforts to develop and strengthen our country and make it a better place to live in.

Sovereignty and independence, peace and security, social justice, a healthy natural environment, a prosperous economy, those are the objectives to which the government has always given priority.

And these objectives have not remained vain words. The leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) do travel around the country proclaiming everywhere that the government is doing nothing, but they seem to forget three years of concrete achievements.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair. The House will resume proceedings at eight p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Serré: Mr. Speaker, when the House recessed at six o'clock I was saying that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) travel around the country proclaiming everywhere that the government does nothing. I should like to point out to them that they seem to forget three years of really concrete achievements. For instance, since 1968, the government has taken many steps to protect a healthy environment by way of legislation such as the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Canada Water Act, by the cleaning up of the Great Lakes, the banning of phosphates, the development of six new national parks, the creation of the Department of the Environment, and I could go on enumerating. However, the government is concerned not only with a healthy natural environment, but also with a social environment to ensure opportunities for all Canadian and discriminate against none. Progress in the direction of social justice has been assured for three years by such legislation as the new Unemployment Insurance Act, tax reform, the Bail Reform Act, increased pensions for veterans, the Opportunities for Youth Program, housing programs geared to low-income families, the Local Initiatives Program, and I could enumerate many more.

And the government has been most lavish with these benefits. Indeed, for the fiscal year 1970-71 alone, the government paid out $557,877,821 under the Family Allowance Plan, $1,627,219,132 under the Old Age Pension Plan, and to these amounts are added contributions to the Guaranteed Income Supplement. The government has contributed $99,039,772 to the Unemployment Insurance Fund. What else can I add to show the government's concern and efficiency in the field of social policy?

With regard to the economy, in the midst of international financial crises, the government keeps struggling toward a prosperous economy and the elimination of regional disparities.

Over 200,000 jobs were created last year. Of course, this is not enough to keep up with the tremendous increase in the labour force, but it does represent an achievement proportionately superior to that of any other country in the western world. In addition, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Ministry of State for Science and Technology were created. The Prince Edward Island development program, the act on farm products marketing agencies, the act on grain, the program to promote small farms, the two-price system for wheat are many achievements to be credited to the record of the present government. And the Speech from the Throne is no exception in the long list of concrete achievements, ingenious programs, which introduced innovations in the strategy aimed at the complex problems of a swiftly changing society.

On reading the Speech from the Throne, one notes that the fight against unemployment is at the very heart of the government's concern, and that it will multiply its efforts with a view to remedying it. A rational policy of national control over foreign investments will also be applied, which policy is really very timely in view of the fact that a large sector of our economy is in the hands of foreign companies and investors who, in applying their expansionist policy, care more about their own interests than the well-being of Canadians.

In my riding alone, Mr. Speaker, the International Nickel Company controls the life of most of my electors. For instance, they can do nothing about the recent layoffs decreed by the company.

I feel that the governments, federal as well as provincial, should exercise greater control over these foreign companies.

• (2010)

During this fourth session we will witness the enforcement of new social measures, such as the promotion of a new program for low-cost housing and the increase in funds for student loans. Criminal code reforms to ensure the protection of private life belong in this context aimed at improving the life of Canadians.

I am particularly thankful for a measure ensuring the extension of CBC services and I take this opportunity to request once again a French television station for Sudbury, a local programming station to meet the needs of French Canadians in this area who represent more than 40 per cent of the total population.

Finally, I welcome the measures recommending the creation of three new national parks north of the 60th parallel and those relating to wildlife and their habitats. They reflect the constant interest of the government in the conservation of a healthy natural environment, in short our country's wealth.

The new Labour Code, Family Income Security legislation, a bill to amend the Farm Credit Act, National Anthem legislation—a listing of all important measures would take too long—but such is the legislative program of a government that is not afraid to be daring and imaginative in coming face to face with the 70's.

Thanks to the representations made by my electors and to my numerous interventions in the House and in committee, this government has lately given greater consideration to my region in the Nickel Belt.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has just given approval to the building of a new airport in Sudbury at a cost of $1.5 million. Our region has been included in the designated area in order to be eligible for grants to secondary industries. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion is striving hard to find some means of ensuring the survival of the industries and factories of our region and many subsidies have already been granted.

Under the Local Initiative program, the Department of Manpower and Immigration has already granted some $200,000 to municipalities and organizations in the Nickel Belt constituency thus creating over 100 jobs during winter.

Under the Opportunities for Youth program, I have already been assured that special attention will be granted to the requests from my area as a result of the decision of the Inco company not to hire some 2,000 students, as previously.

For several months now, the citizens of Northern Ontario have been enjoying better television service following the establishment of a second station in Sudbury.

Several modern post-offices have been constructed in various locations of my constituency.

The services of the various governmental agencies and offices in my area have been greatly improved. I especially refer to a more competent staff hired at the Unemployment Insurance Commission at the Manpower Centre and several other departments.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) has given several grants to cultural organizations and I hope that this assistance will be increased to enable the various ethnic groups to flourish even more in their own culture.

I could enumerate a great number of concrete achievements which give clear indication of the increased attention that the federal government has given to my region over these past years, but time is running short.

Thanks to a sound economic policy and a great climate of confidence, my region has had these past years an unprecedented restart. I am pleased, for instance, to see that several citizens from la belle province, the Maritimes—Newfoundland in particular—and the west have joined us to seek their fortune and are now quite happy there.

The riding of Nickel Belt has progressed at a fantastic rate recently and I am sure that it will continue along that line.

However, we must tackle many problems that we still have to face. I refer more particularly to air and water pollution, the high cost of living, which is higher in my area than in most other parts of the country, to the lack of community and cultural centres, the lack of secondary industries or small manufactures that could hire women and older workers who cannot work in mines.

I refer also to the lack of adequate transportation between the main centres in Northern Ontario. Speaking of transportation, Mr. Speaker, the Trans-Canada Highway, in the Sudbury area, is in a lamentable condition. As traffic increases in the area, the building of a four-lane highway is badly needed on the approaches of the town of Sudbury. When one considers that the contribution of the federal government to the province of Ontario for the construction of the Trans-Canada Highway was $142,029,786 for the past few years, I cannot understand why the government of Ontario could not find the means of improving this highway in my area. I hope that the federal government will exert pressures to that end.

• (2020)

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I am really looking forward to a very progressive fourth session of this Parliament and I hope that the opposition parties will change their pessimistic and negative approach and will finally come forward with new, more progressive and constructive criticism so that together we can move forward and build a better Canada for all Canadians.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, one of the interesting things that has come up recently has been a small package of goodies from Information Canada to the various private radio stations across the country. Information Canada has been requesting private radio stations to accept canned bits of information on how well things are going in Canada. These are 30 or 60 seconds long and private radio stations are asked to promote them in their spare time.

I suppose it is always very good to have these bits of information going around, such as information on how to get unemployment insurance paid in less than 2 months and other such useful information. But a great many of the private radio stations have been rather concerned about these small pieces of information that were being given to them, and they are beginning to wonder whether perhaps pressure is being applied indirectly to them inasmuch as they have to obtain their licence from the federal government. They are worried that if they do not use this useful, canned, non-political information, as it is described, they might have problems with obtaining their licence. This is a concern that worries a number of private stations.

Then, some of the private station's representatives are somewhat concerned that perhaps these canned bits of information on how to get your unemployment insurance in less than two months, or whatever it is, or on how to get your old age pension early, might possibly wander into the realm of propaganda. These are just the thoughts and concerns that arise. Also, private station operators seem to be more and more concerned that the government is placing more and more restrictions on private broadcasters but on the other hand does not seem to give anything back to them.

One of the questions that arises in the minds of many private broadcasters is whether the other branches of the media, such as the press, are having the same opportunity to publish these goodies on how the government is operating, and whether the government is paying the press for publishing these things, because they are certainly not offering the private broadcasters anything: the broadcasters find that the government tells them, "We will not pay you, but you can publish it in your spare time. It increases your Canadian content".

Private radio stations have been having a tough time as it is. A lot of pressure has been put on them by the government restricting what they can and what they cannot do, and now the implication is that they must publish these pieces of information. It is not said that they have to do so, but it is suggested that it might be advisable. It seems to me that if the government wants to try to advertise what it is doing in other branches of the media such as the press, and is paying them a fee for this, certainly the private broadcasters, who have been having a pretty rough time, might at least be offered a nominal payment for publishing the history of all the great things which the government is doing in all the branches of the public service.

Having said that, there is a matter that I would like to deal with for a moment in some depth, that is, the problems of the Unemployment Insurance Commission which have developed into nothing less than a national scandal. The trouble started a couple of years ago when legislation was introduced in the House closing the local offices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in the smaller and middle-sized industrial cities throughout Ontario and, I presume, elsewhere. A number of members of the House who are still here, myself included—and I can think of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) and, as I recall, some government members—objected at the time and said that if the local offices were closed, people could not go in and inquire about their unemployment insurance claims and there would be trouble.

All hon. members who have had some practical experience in this regard were treated with superior and pitying smiles by members of the commission who were sitting in the gallery at the time and the minister did not say anything, as if he did not know anything. Then the trouble started, because when people cannot go to the local offices and inquire about their claims trouble starts. The next thing that happened was the commission got a computer. It is a marvellous thing. It absorbs the information, but when the information does not prove to be accurate because of bad programming or lack of programming, I understand that the computer swallows the information, does not regurgitate it and it is just lost. Someone who ought to know said privately that the commission had been sold a bad computer which did not really supply the proper information.

This computer was located in, of all places, Belleville, Ontario, which is quite removed from the industrial heart of Canada. I have been trying to find out for some time why Belleville was chosen. Obviously, it was not for political reasons because that area is not represented by a member of the government party. The explanation which I have been able to obtain is that it is the only place where houses were available for the people who run the computer. That is a great business!

Then a new act was brought in last year. It looked pretty good and most of us supported it. The only thing was that before the act was brought into effect it seems that not much thought was given to the regulations or as to how the act would be administered. I could spend the next half hour reciting some of the blunders that have been made in putting the regulations into effect. Just to cite one, people who own a small business such as a furniture store, and who happen to be three brothers or three cousins, have to pay unemployment insurance for themselves. At present this matter is still under review because not much thought had been given to it.

There are many other things that one could mention. There is the matter of shifting from the old act to the new act, and there is the new waiting period. Then there are the tax problems. If you were entitled to unemployment insurance from September or October, 1971, and because of the present delays and incompetence you did not get it until January or February, 1972, you would have to pay income tax on it because, as I understand it, the computer is set up that way. If you receive it in 1972, you pay tax on it even though in the period for which you received it, it was not taxable. Then there is the longer waiting period.

There are many other problems that one could mention. The net result of this monkey business is virtually a national calamity, particularly so far as people who have families, who are unemployed and who have to put the groceries on the table are concerned. That is an expression which we have heard so often from the parliamentary secretary in the last couple of days.

Having been a Member of Parliament for a number of years, nearly 19, I know that we used to have two or three complaints a year concerning unemployment insurance payments. Certainly, in days gone by the act and the administration of the act worked very well; there were no problems. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am receiving between 35 and 40 complaints a day.

• (2030)

An hon. Member: From farmers?

Mr. Nesbitt: For the information of the hon. member who has just spoken, my riding happens to be a heavy industry riding. He should better inform himself on these matters. As I said, I am getting between 35 and 40 complaints per day and have had to employ a special person to help in dealing with these complaints. I am not complaining; I am glad to do this. Perhaps people on the government side of the House are not aware of these things, do not pay attention to what is going on and do not know that that is taking place. I am quite prepared to substantiate anything I have said.

The minister and the parliamentary secretary, during the last few weeks when questioned about this have stood like a pair of ostriches—you can imagine a pair of portly ostriches standing on one leg and sticking their heads in the sand—and said, "Ninety-eight per cent of all claims are paid on time." As I say, when questioned they have gone burbling away about 98 per cent of the claims being paid on time. Of course, the phrase "on time" may mean different things to different people. Anybody in my area who wants to collect unemployment insurance knows that it takes a long time. Even if every detail were put through in the proper way, it takes a minimum of eight weeks before anybody can get a cent.

What the people are supposed to do in the meantime I do not know, but this is happening: you have to rely on welfare, and it is pretty degrading for people to rely on welfare when they have a perfectly good claim. Yet this is the kind of thing that is going on. Meanwhile, the minister and the parliamentary secretary say we have the best Unemployment Insurance Act in the world. It does not work, of course. Nevertheless, they stand there and bury their heads in the sand while the deluge of claims comes up behind them and engulfs them.

I am reminded, when the government tells us how well the Unemployment Insurance Act works, of a famous case in law that all law students and lawyers are familiar with, known as Grant v. Australian Knitting Mills. In that case a man had bought a set of underwear which burned the hide off him. It was proved that there were too many sulphites in the underwear. In court, Australian Knitting Mills produced scientist after scientist and engineer after engineer to say how perfect was the process of the company, and proving that this could not have happened. The only trouble was that it did happen. As the judge said, "Gentlemen, you have proved yourself out of court. You have proved that your process was so perfect that it must work. But the fact is it did not work." That is exactly the case with the Unemployment Insurance Act.

The question is, who is at fault? I do not think that matters particularly. The point is that something has gone wrong. The minister has promised that a committee will be appointed to listen to problems and try to find out where the fault lies. Nobody intended to do this, I am sure. Nobody suggests that people maliciously went out of their way to cause trouble by paying claims slowly—of course not. Yet the fact is that this has happened. What we want to see in this House, promptly and immediately, is action to get this mess cleaned up and to get these payments made on time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nesbitt: Where the mistake may have been made, I do not know. It certainly was not made by the junior members of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Some of these people are in my area, and they have been working very hard. Some of them work every night and some have become ill and exhausted trying to clean up this mess. They are certainly trying to give the members of this House, regardless of party, a great deal of service and are doing their best.

If you want to allocate blame, it must lie at the higher levels. I am afraid the minister and his staff must accept some responsibility for this because certainly it is not the junior people who are at fault. It is the senior people in the Unemployment Insurance Commission and those at the ministerial level. As far as I am concerned, they are the ones to blame. We must also blame it on the purchase of this computer as well as some other things. It will be fine if the minister wants to establish a committee; I am all for it. I will not object to sitting on the committee, hearing evidence and trying to find out how this mess developed. I do not suppose there is any simple answer; I suppose there is a multiplicity of reasons. The point is that we want to get payments out on time.

The first thing the government should do is reopen the local unemployment insurance offices which were closed, and I do not mean they should be reopened in the way the parliamentary secretary suggested the other day when he hastened to say, "We have opened a lot of them." In my city they are opening these offices for four or five days a week part-time, for half an hour or two or three hours a day, something like that, and someone is in them listening to complaints. That will not settle the matter and will not do much to improve things. The offices should be reopened.

Another thing the government should consider is shortening the waiting period from two weeks to one week. I do not see how it is possible to shorten the waiting period for payment of claims to anything less than five weeks unless the waiting period is shortened as I suggest. If something cannot be done in this regard, I think the minister—I am sorry to have to say this—should consider looking into the competence of the senior people who are administering this program, because if it cannot be cleaned up in two or three weeks, somebody higher up is to blame. It is the old story; if the ship does not operate too well, the captain or senior officers usually are responsible. And if something cannot be done to get these claims paid to people more quickly, somebody should go: it is as simple as that.

The final matter I want to make observations about is the question of foreign investment in Canada and the utilization of our raw materials. This is probably the number one issue in Canada today. We were all surprised at something the government has not done. The members of my party and the members of the NDP have been very curious as to why the government's policy with respect to foreign investment in Canada has not been announced. We were told that we would hear about this when Parliament reassembled. Today the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tells us that he does not know when he is going to tell us about this. Presumably it will be after the next election, whenever that is.

There are many viewpoints on the matter of foreign investment. Some people are for it and some are agin it, and all for different reasons. Opinions may be influenced by geography. The people in Ontario, and in Toronto particularly, where a great deal of capital is available, are opposed to foreign investment. The other parts of the country, western Canada, Quebec and the Maritimes, take a different view because capital is not so readily available there. As some people pointed out in western Canada recently, "We would just as soon get our capital from the United States or West Germany as be slaves of Toronto." Of course, we see that viewpoint expressed here. I do not necessarily agree with it; I am merely expressing views that one hears.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

You get different views expressed on foreign investment by people of different ages and various occupations. You get young students who are very chauvinistic and enthusiastic about the question of foreign investment, and sometimes for the wrong reasons. Then you get certain groups in Toronto, and wealthy people like Walter Gordon and others who are not much concerned about capital and they take a different view. Of course, there are some very good reasons why we should worry about heavy foreign investment in our country. There are long-term balance of payment problems and questions of economic policies involving an owner country like the United States which has a DISC program that may close our factories in Canada and export unemployment from that country to ours.

Questions involving foreign investment are serious matters. Unfortunately, you do not always hear them aired. However, the principal problem which seems to be facing Canada at present is that of the degree of control that is to be exercised over foreign companies in Canada. It is not ownership alone, Mr. Speaker, that worries us. I have a friend from Poland who owns real estate in Warsaw. He might as well own it on the planet Mars for all the good it does him. The important thing is the question of control. That is the area in which there is much disagreement in this country, even among friends, even among members of the same political party. They disagree about the degree of control that should be exercised by the federal government or by provincial governments, because this question of foreign investment is a joint matter.

• (2040)

I suppose there are as many opinions on the matter as there are persons who look into it. I think it is sufficient to say most Canadians agree that greater Canadian ownership in our corporations and companies is advisable for many reasons. I do not think there is any argument about that.

What has the present government done to help in this regard? Almost nothing. At the present time, under the new Income Tax Act it is better for a Canadian to invest in Canadian bonds or senior securities, non-equity securities or United States equity securities rather than in Canadian equity securities. This is a fine situation! I wish to quote the following passage from a memorandum given to me by a number of people who are pretty familiar with investments and investment matters:

Should funds be invested in senior securities or foreign equities, an additional one-sixth will have to be paid in income tax but, with the much higher return available on senior securities—

Those are bonds, of course.

—and, if capital gains are being sought and, with the greater expectation of profit in American stocks, there is little incentive . . . to concentrate on Canadian equities.

If we are going to try to get Canadians to invest more in our stocks and securities and give greater ownership to Canadians, we need to do something better than actively discouraging Canadians from investing in our own country. What the government should do is fairly simple: it should make proper tax adjustments to encourage Canadian ownership in Canadian equity stocks. It could lower the capital gains tax for those who invest in Canadian equity securities if held for a period of three years or longer. This is one more problem for the Department of Finance, the inhabitants of which department are thoroughly imbued with the philosophy of tax neutrality and a number of other dinosaur philosophies inherited from the 1930s, and the Keynesian and London schools of economics. It is time there was a little fresh thought in that department. If we are to get Canadian ownership of Canadian industries and companies, there has to be some encouragement. There certainly cannot be the discouragement as there is now because of our present tax policies.

Another great concern at the moment is the outright, wholesale selling of our raw materials to be processed in the United States, West Germany, Japan and other countries. This problem has arisen time and again in Canadian history. It arose after World War II in Ontario when our pulp and paper was being processed in the United States and being sold back to us. The thing that elected a Conservative government at that time under Hon. George Drew was his policy of assisting companies in Ontario to process pulp and paper in Canada so that we would not need to have it processed elsewhere and sold back to us. In my view, the government should immediately assess what raw materials can be economically processed in Canada at this time. It should determine whether they can be semi-processed or completely processed, with the finished product being competitive in foreign and home markets.

Appropriate tax incentives must be provided to get these new industries under way and provide working capital. The Industrial Development Bank has been a mess as far as helping people in Canada is concerned. The Industrial Development Bank should provide adequate working capital. Perhaps the government might go so far as guaranteeing loans to commercial banks to provide working capital for these new industries. These things are essential.

We must take immediate steps to have our raw materials processed in Canada. I am not advocating that we process products that are not economically feasible. We must look into this question. Something must be done to process raw materials which can be processed economically and be able to compete in world markets, rather than have them processed in some other country and sold back to us. That is the first point. In order to encourage investment in Canadian industries and businesses, the government should provide some kind of tax incentive and tax concession in this regard. I merely suggest that one of the ways this can be done is by a reduction of the capital gains tax if the money is invested in Canadian industries for a period of more than three years.

These are positive suggestions. I think most people in Canada are sick to death of hearing the carping of members of political parties without hearing any suggestions. These things can be done. They are feasible. I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) or his assistants will have an opportunity to examine these suggestions and do something about them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I want to devote the time available to me this evening to the discussion of the phenomenon of western alienation. Over the past two or three years western alienation has become a favourite topic of eastern newspaper columnists. It has been credited with being one of the major factors in the outcome of by-elections for this House held in the west of Canada in which opposition members have been returned. There have been manifestations of western discontent in this House during the course of the consideration of legislation relating to agriculture especially. However, the phenomenon as such has not received any great attention from the House, a fact which does little to diminish feelings of alienation in the west, and I think the time is long past when some such attempt should be made.

I hope that hon. members from other parts of the country will not think of me as being parochial because I intend to dwell on this subject. I consider the phenomenon of western alienation to be of sufficient magnitude to have the potential of profoundly affecting the course of this nation and, therefore, to be fully deserving of the close attention of each and every member of this House, no matter what his point of origin. At this point I should interject that, while my remarks are focused generally on the three prairie provinces, I make no claim to their being a homogeneous western region. If anything, with the development of more mature and diversified economies it is more difficult to decide where the west now commences and where it ends. Some of my remarks, for example, may well apply to British Columbia or other provinces.

I embark upon this project with some trepidation because while in some areas, such as tariff policies, transportation policies and agricultural policies, westerners have succeeded in defining in a reasonably clear and concise manner their aims and objectives, in many other areas westerners' searches for solutions to their problems are characterized by uncertainty and ambivalence. Indeed, in many ways the major unifying factor in the statements of the many westerners who have attempted to define the reason for western alienation is the sense of frustration and anger at what is perceived to be lack of concern and understanding for the west and its problems by central Canada.

In some respects westerners find themselves in a position similar to that occupied by Quebeckers in the first two or three years of the sixties. May I say here that I use this analogy deliberately and that I will be drawing further parallels to the Quebec situation as I progress. I say "similar to the position of Quebeckers in the sixties" because western society has undergone an immense change just as Quebeckers did in the sixties. We may have been slower in coming to the realization that that change had taken place, but it is a change of similar magnitude.

• (2050)

While old problems affecting tariffs and transportation and agriculture remain, there is a new west, an industrial west, and westerners are still in the process of adapting themselves to the changes inherent in industrialization and are still seeking to define the new relationship with the rest of the country that these changes necessitate. Thus, I suspect that westerners for the next year or so will find themselves in the same exasperating and frustrating position as that in which Quebeckers found themselves in the early sixties when everyone was asking, "What does Quebec want?" Undoubtedly, many confused easterners are now asking themselves, "What does the west want?" It is only a question of time before that cry, sometimes peevish, sometimes a product of genuine concern, will be heard in public.

We can expect increasing amounts of the energy of western Canadians to be devoted to the task of answering that question for themselves and for the rest of the country in terms of public policy and in terms of constitutional arrangements over the next several months. It is my concern, as a Canadian and as a westerner, to attempt to ensure that this process takes place within the context of attempting to strengthen this nation rather than attempting to tear it apart.

I want to remind the House that the same process in Quebec began within the context of attempting to rebuild our nation on firmer foundations and eventually, in part, but obviously not entirely, because of the insensitivity on the part of successive governments in Ottawa, a major portion of that effort became channelled off into the attempt to destroy confederation rather than rebuild it.

I begin my analysis by attempting to define the political reality in Canada for the west. The rhetoric has always been that the west is an equal partner in confederation. It now appears to westerners that this statement has little foundation in fact.

A year after Manitoba had been dubbed the first daughter of confederation it had become apparent that she was only to be an ignored stepchild. Similarly, when the Northwest Territories were dragged into confederation and later divided into provinces, their duties, rights and responsibilities were dictated to them by the imperial power of Canada, represented by eastern politicians. Western Canada took no part in the negotiations leading to its assimilation into confederation. Western Canada was developed to provide markets for eastern industrialists who were being shut out of world markets by Britain's decrease in imperial preferences and by the United States' unwillingness to maintain low tariff areas. From its birth, western Canada has been forced to accept a second-class colonial status within a political system which was never designed to give real regional security or effective power to areas of lower population.

There are 45 prairie Members of Parliament, compared with 88 Ontario members and 74 Quebec members. It is this lack of political clout in Ottawa and a total lack of understanding or even of attention on the part of the federal government which has led to present western alienation. The west has reached a stage both economically and culturally at which it can now devote itself to matters other than simple survival. It can no longer accept an inferior colonial status, particularly one which is camouflaged by the rhetoric of equality. Having seen through the rhetoric, the west is demanding to be partners on an equal footing.

Western discontent is not a new phenomenon. Many of the demands being expressed today bear a close resemblance to those expressed over half a century ago: lowering of tariffs, establishment of an equitable freight rate policy, the development of a national agricultural policy, and so on. The list of problems has simply become longer: oil, the cost-price squeeze, the need to share equally in the industrialization of the nation, bilingualism, rural depopulation, vertical integration.

[Mr. Rowland.]

Until recently the frustration which resulted from the failure of successive Liberal and Conservative governments to deal adequately with the problems of the west was channelled into various new western political parties and movements whose aims were to find a political voice for the west within Canadian confederation. But for several years now, western discontent has taken a new tack and has begun to adopt, if not the aims then at least some of the slogans and terminology of the separatist movement in Quebec. There is an increasing tendency for many westerners to view Ottawa as an enemy, as an alien force, rather than as their government. Increasing numbers of western Canadians would prefer going it alone to continuing a subservient or backwoods type of "cousin Clem" relationship with the rest of Canada.

The west has always provided fertile ground for new political concepts. Interestingly enough, in the past the political movements which have resulted from western ferment have placed great emphasis upon the role of the federal government. The west was the home of the Progressives, the United Farmers of Alberta, the CCF and Social Credit. Today, new movements attempting to provide solutions to the problems of the west, and existing institutions examining the same set of problems, are becoming more inward looking and are becoming characterized by regional particularism.

It would be edifying for members of this House to look at the expressed objectives of such organizations as the new west task force, the western parliament advocates, the western Canada movement, the Dominion of Canada party, the Mid-Can Businessmen's Association, and at the strongly worded motions by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Alberta Federation of Agriculture and the Western Union of Municipalities, to study the feasibility of secession.

Perhaps I can best illustrate the current temper of the west by giving a personal example. A few years ago, like, I suspect, most westerners, I considered myself to be a Canadian first and a westerner second. I happened to live in Winnipeg or Regina but I could just as easily have lived in Halifax or Toronto. More recently, however, to my great regret I find myself increasingly forced into a position of considering myself to be a westerner first and a Canadian second. Certainly, all members of this House will be able to see the dangers to the continued unity of this country inherent in such changes of attitude.

Let me make it very clear that I reject the concept of separatism, whether for the west or for any other region of Canada. To me, continued western Canadian participation in Canadian federalism is unquestionable. Certainly, separation or even political union of the west within confederation would not lead to the elimination of the frustrations westerners are experiencing in the present political system. It is crucial, both from the point of view of the well-being of westerners and from the point of view of the welfare of the country as a whole, that we do not allow westerners' frustration to allow them to become trapped into the attempt to find a nationalist or regionalist solution to their problems. My stand in this regard is firm, but this does not mean that in the next months and years the nationalist option will not be closely examined by westerners unless very rapidly there is evidence forthcoming from Ottawa of a genuine change of heart and attitude.

Why does this discontent exist? When this country was developing, the tariff policy, the national policy, decreed: We must protect our new industrial heartland and make it grow. To the west, the Maritimes and the north was given the task of agricultural and mineral and resource development. Maybe that made sense 100 or even 70 years ago. However, for too long now the sacrifices of the people beyond the major centres of central Canada have been disproportionate. The national policy of 100 years ago is out of date. Yet tariff policies, transportation policies and agricultural policies, or the lack of them, remain basically the same.

To those of us from the Prairies and, I suspect, equally to those from the Maritimes, the continuation of these policies appears as an outdated attempt to preserve special advantage, an attempt to hinder the development of the areas which need it most. All too often when there is a major economic adjustment it seems to benefit those parts of the country which already enjoy abundant growth, and injure the parts where significant growth is still to come.

The western farmer is confused, frustrated, and angry. Until recently the federal government was telling him to grow all the wheat he could, promising a high price for it. Then he was told to turn his wheat land into summer fallow. On paper, his farm equipment may be worth up to $100,000 or more, but he is forced to barter, borrow or bootleg grain for lack of ready cash. This frustration and anger is not limited to wheat producers. Our dairy farmers, too, are paying the price of an unfair quota system which militates against the western Canadian dairy industry.

Moreover, the western consumer pays higher prices for many manufactured goods than does his eastern counterpart, and higher prices than his American counterpart below the border. He looks at the auto trade pact, for instance, and wonders why no new plants came to western Canada, why new car prices were not reduced for the western car buyer, why no new jobs sprang up in the west as this rationalization of our auto markets and factories took place. He becomes even more aggrieved when he notes that just south of the border there was such an improvement in Minneapolis, that new plants were built in St. Louis and Kansas City to assemble Canadian-made auto units, and that new plants were also built in central Canada.

• (2100)

The small western Canadian businessman finds it virtually impossible to raise capital through private or public sources to expand his businesses and industries when at the same time well established eastern corporations and multinational corporations wishing to locate in the west and central Canada have little or no difficulty in obtaining the requisite amount of capital. The westerner becomes frustrated at the sure knowledge that despite his efforts there is going to be no change in the current situation where 19 out of 20 major Canadian corporations locate their head offices along the Montreal-Toronto axis in the golden horseshoe of eastern Canada.

Western Canadians are most anxious to maintain the standard of services available to their people at a level comparable to that attained in the rich province of Ontario, but once again there is frustration because the ability of the west to finance socially required government services is severely curtailed by its narrow tax base.

When, for example, we raise our personal income tax by one percentage point in Manitoba, this produces about $1.89 per person. In Ontario, the same income tax rise would produce $3.14. When we Manitobans raise our corporation tax one point, it produces $1.82 per capita; the same tax increase would produce $3.40 in Ontario. We have to almost double our tax increases to obtain the same per capita revenues that are achieved in Ontario with half the increase. Equalization grants compensate to some extent, but they have the inherent disadvantage of being based upon fiscal capacity rather than fiscal need. To oversimplify, equalization formulas are based upon equalizing the amount of revenue per capita raised rather than upon equalizing the kind of services provided.

Thus, the western Canadian farmer, small businessman and factory worker see taxes go higher to pay the costs of services which need new economic growth to support them, and this new economic growth is not there. Western Canadians see their children move out to the new industry which is growing up in Central Canada right beside the old industry that was there before, and towns and villages become ghost towns.

The westerner sees the lack of a national transportation policy, combined with the existing highly discriminatory freight rates, preventing western goods from competing in eastern markets. He sees the tariff system which shelters eastern manufacturers while forcing western Canada's wheat, forest products, potash, nickel, oil and gas, to be sold at competitive prices in a world market. And he sees the blatant discrimination inherent in the prevention of western oil and gas from being distributed east of the Ontario-Quebec border because of a commitment to purchase these products from American-dominated Venezuelan wells.

Would 1 cent per gallon more be too high a price to pay for the development of a valuable Canadian industry? If westerners are forced into paying higher prices for goods manufactured in the east, and effectively prevented from buying similar goods across the border by protective tariffs, surely the east can reciprocate in some form such as aiding the development of western economic potential by paying a bit more for their fuel.

I could go on indefinitely outlining areas where the federal government has mismanaged, less from incompetence than from a simple lack of interest, the western region. I have not yet mentioned the cost-price squeeze for westerners created by the anti-inflationary controls imposed by the federal government to cool the economy in the prosperous, free-spending parts of Canada. I have not spoken of the problems of rural depopulation and resettlement resulting from the encouragement of agribusiness by governments insensitive to the different cultural and social values of the west.

Even in the field of entertainment the western Canadian is confronted with evidence of an insensitive eastern Canadian attitude. The CBC, our public network, supposedly dedicated to the fostering of national unity, has so concentrated its production facilities in the east that western Canadian entertainers must leave their homes to earn a living.

Each of these specific western complaints would be serious enough taken by itself. Each would, and does, cry out for action. But, taken together, the grievances which I have cited and the numerous others to which I have not made reference are in danger of turning into a mighty avalanche of discontent sweeping aside logic and reason in a tide of frustration and anger.

Western alienation is a fact. Western regional particularism is becoming one because the federal government, this government no less than its predecessors, have created no over-all plan for development for this nation, no national plan which would allow for natural and gradual reform rather than crisis management, long-range planning rather than patchwork policies. This government has not attempted to define the goals for Canadian society. This government and its predecessors have followed a policy of reacting rather than acting, of allowing the pot to simmer and boil until it overflows, at which point they have attempted to clamp on a jury-rigged lid. Instead of progressing in a well directed fashion down a well defined path, our governments have staggered erratically from near disaster to near disaster, patching here, repairing there, narrowly avoiding calamity.

In short, we have had, as I have said, government by crisis management, and in a crisis management situation it is the squeaky wheel that gets the grease. In a crisis management situation, policy decisions are ultimately a product of counting noses in the House of Commons rather than a product of a rational decision based upon the good of the nation as a whole. This means 88 votes for Ontario, 74 for Quebec and only 45 votes for the Prairies. Even if British Columbia's votes are included in the latter count, the west is in a minority position and subject to control by central Canada.

It is for this reason that westerners are not participating in the direction of Canadian events even to the extent that would normally be dictated by their economic and social importance to the nation. It is for this reason that successive federal governments have shown themselves to be unsympathetic to, and generally ignorant of, western needs and aspirations. It is for this reason that policies of successive federal governments have demonstrated a total lack of understanding of the social and cultural idiosyncracies of the west where a strong social conservatism is coupled with increasing economic and political radicalism.

I have attempted to define the problem. What are the solutions? I deeply regret, although I am not at all sure that the House does, that time does not permit me to go into an examination of the solutions in the same detail as I have examined the problems. Let me just touch on some of the approaches which might be taken very briefly.

Some of the problems could be met through a new flexibility in constitutional arrangements which would permit each region of the country, not only the west, to establish a relationship with the federal government which accurately reflected the needs of the region and which was not based upon the puerile assumption adopted by the present government that all provinces and regions in this country are the same, that what is good for one must be good for the others. In some cases this would mean centralization of powers, in others decentralization of powers, but in every case a constitutional arrangement tailored to fit the needs of the region instead of attempting to find some sort of non-existent over-all average.

Some of the problems can be met by an administrative arrangement; for example, the establishment of taxation arrangements designed to limit competition among provinces in key economic areas; the establishment of corporate income tax rates, a competition which only the strongest provinces can win. Administrative arrangements could also provide for the decentralization of government departments and agencies so as to give the west and the Maritimes a proportionate share of the benefits derived from governmental institutions.

Some of the answers to the problems I have mentioned can be found in government policy; for example, the creation of a national transportation policy worthy of the name, one that would have the effect of making transportation costs a neutral factor in finding the optimum location of an industry. This would mean that transportation costs would not dictate that an industry necessarily be located in an area of concentrated population.

• (2110)

Some of the answers must come from westerners themselves. Since we lack political clout in Ottawa, we must come here, as provinces and Members of Parliament, better informed and prepared than our counterparts from the rest of the country. That means a great deal more attention to that kind of preparation for federal-provincial conferences on the part of provincial governments in the west than has been the case heretofore. Some of our problems are outside the realm of government and require action on the part of westerners. For example, western agricultural organizations must get together and form a common front. They can no longer afford the luxury of internal squabbles.

In the final analysis, the only real solution to the problems of the west which have given rise to its current sense of frustration and alienation is the establishment of a national government with the commitment and the courage to govern in the interest of the nation as a whole, even if that national interest makes it take stands on behalf of minorities in terms of electoral strength at the expense of majorities in terms of electoral strength. We need a government with the courage to say to the golden horseshoe region of Central Canada; "Re-examine your goals. It is obvious that further unrestricted growth in your area, in terms of population or industrial capacity for the production of wealth, is against your interest and the interest of the nation. Not only is unrestricted growth in your area defiling your environment and making it more difficult to live with decent standards, but it is contributing to disunity in this country and to the continuation of unacceptable levels of regional economic disparity."

This country can no longer afford the kind of government which the Liberal government has given us for the last four years—government by crisis management. Government without planning, government without goals always results in a policy of "Them what has gits" and of setting one region against another, one province against another and neighbour against neighbour. It is no accident that perhaps the period of greatest harmony and greatest advance in this country was the period immediately following World War II when Canadians knew who they were and what they wanted, went after it and got it. We may today question the wisdom of the aims of that period, but the fact remains that they were aims and they were achieved.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate. I would first like to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I found the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) most entertaining, especially when he described the beauties of his riding. However, the same cannot be said for the latter part of his speech. If he loses his seat in the next election, I believe he would be well advised to look for a spot on Rowan and Martin's "Laugh-in." The hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie) who seconded the motion is to be congratulated for the sincerity with which he put forth his views on Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard two speeches in rapid succession, one closing the third session and one opening the fourth session of the twenty-eighth Parliament. When reading these speeches I could not help but be reminded of a Billy Sunday revival hour which opened with a hymn entitled "How Great Thou Art" and closed with the hymn entitled "Count Your Blessings". These speeches are obviously the work of a smug, self-satisfied government that is out of touch with the needs and desires of the people whom it is elected to serve, a government which keeps saying over and over, like the former world heavyweight champion, Mohammed Ali, "I am the greatest".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: That is not a view that is shared by many Canadians who view with concern the policies of this government. It is all very well to promise in the Throne Speech, and I use these words from the speech—

—the fundamental reform of protective measures which commenced last year with the new Unemployment Insurance Act will continue—

I ask you, Sir, what about the thousands of unemployed who are now entitled to benefits and who have been denied those benefits by the bungling of this government? During the recent parliamentary recess all of us had an opportunity to meet with our constituents. I found that the people I represent are in agreement with the concept that financial aid should be provided to those who are unable to find work. Moreover, they were also in agreement that benefits paid should be enough to live on. However, they were not in agreement with the philosophy that benefits should be so high that it makes it more attractive to be unemployed than to work.

In their view, and it is a view that I share, the bills for all those unemployed must be paid by all working Canadians. Why, they ask, is there no longer any incentive for people to work? What happened to the old-fashioned philosophy that you work for what you get? This country was not developed to its present state without initiative, and its further growth will be slowed down in an atmosphere where initiative is stifled by the "happy hand-out" philosophy of this administration.

A working man not only earns money, he also retains his self-respect. There is a dignity in working, a dignity in a job which cannot be secured by any other means. Any man worth his salt must feel that he is making a contribution, a contribution to himself, to his family, to his home and to his country, by being gainfully employed. Under this government, too many Canadians are being robbed of this basic right, too many Canadians are walking the streets. That is why they are saying, individually and collectively, and certainly in my riding, in three words their solution to the problem: the three words are, "Trudeau must go".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: They have an addendum to that and they say, "Surely there must be a better way to run this country". With that I agree. Our farmers, our fishermen, our businessmen large and small are calling out today for leadership, leadership at the federal level. They are asking for the right to participate in the development of this country, a right which has obviously been denied them by the socialistic policies of the present government. Our young people come to me and say, "Surely we have a right to be more than viewers on the scene. Surely we have a right to be doers on the scene." I say that is what must be done if we are to get this country back on the rails and go forward and progress in unity together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: At page 6, the Speech from the Throne states that a continuation and strengthening of government-industry relations is necessary in order that increasing demands for resources are met. That statement prompts the question: Who caused the deterioration between government and industry? Why has this government lost the confidence of Canadian businessmen? Why do Canadian businessmen no longer trust the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)? Why do they no longer trust his cabinet?

The answers to those questions are many and varied, but in my opinion the incomprehensible new tax reform legislation has gone a long way toward widening the chasm of frustration, discontent, unrest and uncertainty which exists today between the business community and the government. As long as this situation exists we will have unemployment running at the 7 per cent level or greater in Canada. As long as we operate under the capitalistic system—and there are many who question how long that will be—it is our business community and not the government which will provide the greatest employment opportunities for Canadians.

Our present high unemployment rate is causing unrest and distress across this nation. However, regionally depressed areas such as Atlantic Canada must still bear the greatest share of the burden. Last month the Atlantic provinces unemployment rate, seasonally adjusted—here I am quoting government figures—rose to 10.5 per cent from 9.7 per cent the previous month. This is just not good enough. These figures give a clear indication of the ineffectiveness of the Trudeau government's policies to end regional disparities.

• (2120)

Is it any wonder businessmen in Atlantic Canada have called into question the federal government's stated dedication to the long-term development of the Atlantic economy on a planned and orderly basis? Is it any wonder we look with suspicion at the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the minister who runs this department, since DREE is obviously nothing more than a well financed give-away program to be extended or retracted according to the economic and political exigencies of this minister?

The sad truth is that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) has refused to subscribe to any specific long-term goals and targets for the Atlantic region. The minister was asked only last month by the chairman of the Atlantic Development Council if he would focus his department's policies on a long-range plan to reduce the unemployment rate in Atlantic Canada to 4 or 4.5 per cent by 1980. If he would not do this, he was asked to have his 140 or more planning department experts prepare statistics and arguments showing why such a goal was unattainable.

What was the minister's response? I regret he is unable to be present tonight, because I do not like to refer to him and his department in his absence, but such are the difficulties of being a Member of Parliament. He said the government could not commit itself to targets unless it was certain that both the international and national economies would operate at optimum levels during the next ten years. Obviously, the department of Regional Economic Expansion does not know where it is going or what it wants to do beyond the next election. This raises a number of serious questions. Has the minister seriously examined the Atlantic Development Council's goals and, if so, has he determined that they cannot be met? If this is true, does it follow that no significant improvement in the economy of the Atlantic region is to be expected?

Are we destined to forever suffer an unemployment rate of 10 per cent or more in Atlantic Canada, since Ottawa with all its bureaucrats is incapable of predicting with any accuracy the trend of our national and international economy over a ten-year period? Or does it simply mean that the Trudeau administration, in light of recent political events, has shrugged its shoulders about forming Atlantic provinces' regional goals and could not care less about formulating national goals?

Normally, we in Atlantic Canada would be inclined to applaud the proposed increase in DREE's budget to $500 million in 1972-73 compared with estimates of $450 million this year, but in view of the department's aimlessness, its lack of goals, targets and direction the question may well be asked whether further DREE spending is not just hastening the day of national disenchantment over the entire federal regional development effort. A ten-year goal of reducing Atlantic regional unemployment to 4.5 per cent should not be considered unattainable or utopian. In fact, the Economic Council of Canada, in its 1959 sixth annual review, said that its target of a 3 per cent unemployment rate nationally was still valid as a goal for the mid-1970s. Obviously, when writing this report the Economic Council had not taken into consideration the numbing effects of this administration's socialistic policies upon the Canadian business community.

In my opinion, the federal government should commit itself to strengthening the Canadian economy over a reasonable and specified time period so that unemployment could be reduced to 4 or 4.5 per cent of the labour force. However, to do this the government must first put its own house in order. It must practice economies in its operation. It must realize that every dollar spent in the public sector must first be taken away from the private or producing sector of our economy. I say this because the 4 to 4.5 per cent unemployment rate is not an acceptable long-term figure. We must strive to do better than that. But the most annoying, most frustrating and galling fact of all is that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the Trudeau government have refused to accept a long-term goal of 4.5 per cent unemployed as a possibility for Atlantic Canada.

I warn the cabinet and the Prime Minister that we in Atlantic Canada will be judging this government in the months ahead, not by its promises but by its performances in the past four years. Our present unemployment rate is a sad and tragic commentary on the inadequacy of the government's policies. To us in Atlantic Canada it seems strange that this government can plan a $30 million redevelopment across the Ottawa river by removing the E. B. Eddy plant over the next ten years, but cannot initiate a ten-year plan for the reduction of unemployment in Atlantic Canada. By their actions he shall know them, and we know now where their priorities lie.

The Speech from the Throne states that Canada's primary food producers, our farmers and our fishermen, form one of the traditional and still basic strenghts of our economy and that measures will be taken to improve prices to our fishermen and our farmers. In view of the economic plight of our primary producers, I sincerely hope the words in the Throne Speech are not an idle promise. Our farmers, for example, in Atlantic Canada are faced with increased costs for feed, seed, labour, machinery, gas, oil, fertilizer and insecticide while the prices they receive for some of their products are as low or lower than they were five years ago.

Then on February 14, 1972, for the ninth time in 24 months our farmers, our fishermen and our businessmen in the Maritimes faced another rise in freight rates. Because of these adverse freight rates our producers, especially our agricultural producers, are losing markets, even in our own province of Nova Scotia. I say this because volume, containerization and streamlining of shipping procedures have made it cheaper to ship goods from 1,000 miles away compared to 100 miles if the volume is small. For example, producers in Nova Scotia have learned that agricultural products can now be shipped from Ontario to London, England, at a lower cost than they could be shipped from points in Nova Scotia under the new, combined rail-ocean container service.

The entire inland freight shipment is absorbed by the consortium, a rail-ocean container partnership, while the Nova Scotian shipper has to pay the same ocean rate as the combined rate and in addition must pay to get his shipment to Halifax. Obviously, we must resign ourselves to the fact that our maritime situation of being beside the ocean no longer assures us of any advantage in transportation costs, either in exporting or importing goods by water. These facts are not helpful, especially to our farmers, and more must be done to aid them in their fight for survival.

Earlier this month the Prime Minister, speaking in Montreal, announced feed grains subsidies for eastern Canadian livestock farmers as well as payments for hog producers across the country. At that time he acknowledged that eastern livestock and poultry producers have had to pay more for the same Canadian Wheat Board grains than their western counterparts. Generally speaking, the assistance for our hog producers has been well received even though it lasts only for a short period. However, there is a segment of our agricultural economy, especially in Nova Scotia, which requires special consideration at the present time. Here I refer to our poultry farmers who are presently producing eggs at below cost.

This question was aired when the National Farmers Association held their meetings early in February in western Canada. There are obviously too many fowls in production, and if egg prices are to be brought in line with costs a subsidized fowl slaughter program will have to be initiated. The farmers in my constituency who have suggested this measure have indicated that almost every egg producer in Nova Scotia has suffered a loss of approximately $1 per bird per year for the last two years. They have therefore suggested that the fowl slaughter program should be subsidized to the amount of $1 per bird, which is in effect much less than the difference consumers should have been paying for eggs, in view of present day costs. The present situation is critical and unless action is taken to help our poultry producers, many of them who have borrowed money from the Farm Credit Corporation will be unable to meet their interest payments and nothing will be paid on the principal.

• (2130)

To face bankruptcy and the loss of your farm after working long hours for many years is not a welcome thought, yet this is the spectre that is facing the Nova Scotia poultry producers. Since the Throne Speech states that the cost of any program in aid of our primary food producers will be borne by the treasury rather than the consumer, I hope that immediate action will be taken to assist our poultry farmers.

I spoke a moment ago about freight rates in the Maritimes. These constant freight rate increases are literally a threat to our entire economy. Our fledgling manufacturing industry is being severely crippled in its efforts to remain competitive and the cost of bringing in much needed goods from other parts of Canada is constantly rising. In my opinion, the whole national transportation policy of 1967, which was supposed to put the railroads on a sound economic footing and improve the transportation industry for all Canadians, needs to be re-examined.

The railways, which are now free of the responsibility of securing approval from the regulatory board before imposing rate increases, have not become more efficient in handling either freight or passengers. Obviously, this situation cannot be permitted to continue, for transportation costs represent the key factor which spells out the success or failure of our Maritime industries. For example, each time a wage or salary increase is granted, our freight rates are advanced on a percentage basis. The fact that this is killing the goose that has been laying the golden egg is ignored. But each time industry closes its door due to increased costs which it cannot absorb, there is less freight for our railroads and more men go on the unemployment rolls.

Obviously, our present national transportation policy is not working to the advantage of maritime industry for it fails to take into consideration our limited manufacturing base, our lower than average income levels and the great distances which separate us from the central and far western markets in Canada and from those markets which we should enjoy in Canada. The aims of 1967 have not been realized and this is a problem that requires immediate consideration by the government since it affects every man, woman and child who resides in Atlantic Canada.

The Throne Speech speaks of our fishermen and states that their continued productivity and livelihood is of immense importance to the government and to the country. This is certainly true in Atlantic Canada where there is an ever increasing concern over the declining stocks of groundfish in the area under the control of the International Commission for the North Atlantic Fisheries which extends from west Greenland to the coast of Rhode Island. In 1969, of the 3.5 million metric tons of fish taken in the ICNAF areas, 2.4 million tons were taken from waters bordering on the Atlantic provinces.

Canadian fishermen caught 1.2 million metric tons or 34 per cent of the total, while European fishermen caught 2 million metric tons or 57 per cent of the total. The U.S.A. and non-member nations of ICNAF caught the balance. Although Canadian fishermen harvested 34 per cent of the total catch, they caught only 20 per cent of the total amount of codfish taken in the ICNAF areas. This is very significant when we consider that codfish is the species taken in greatest quantity by European fishermen; and of the 20 per cent taken by Canadians, about half is taken by inshore fishermen chiefly from the province of Newfoundland. It therefore follows that Canadian offshore fishermen are not catching more than 10 per cent of the codfish.

With this fact before us it is quite apparent that overfishing of cod in eastern waters is due entirely to foreign efforts. In 1969, in the ICNAF convention areas a reported 1,428 metric tons of codfish were caught of which 1,188 metric tons were taken by European countries. I mention these figures to show the extent and magnitude of the problem we are facing, and the extent of our conservation problems. Two of the most prolific areas for codfishing are the Hamilton Inlet Bank and the Grand Banks off Newfoundland. Here overfishing has had a very serious effect on the Labrador fishery, causing it to decline by alarming proportions. In fact, the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, which 15 years ago gave large quantities of haddock to Atlantic Canada and the east coast fishery, are today practically devoid of this species.

This is understandable when we examine the fishing methods followed by the United Kingdom, the U.S.S.R., Poland, Portugal, Spain, Norway and East and West Germany. The Soviets and other Communist bloc countries at present favour the mother ship principle in which a number of catcher vessels operate in conjunction with a large factory ship. One of the latest additions to the Soviet fleet is the giant 43,000 ton Vostok which carries on board 14 catcher vessels each of 66 tons. The ship also carries a helicopter for spotting schools of fish, and apart from the working and living accommodation has a club, a cinema, a concert hall, a library, shops, a medical centre and a swimming pool. It has a power generating station sufficient to provide power for a town of 10,000 people.

Obviously, the Soviets are not concerned about the cost of catching fish. They have a different motivation. They catch fish for food, while we in Canada, the people in our industry, must try to catch fish for profit, which is very difficult to do at present; in fact, it is becoming impossible. In addition to the Vostok, the Soviets have 600 factory and freezer stern trawlers, and Japan has built up a similar sized fleet which searches the world for fish.

You may well ask, what chance have the fish of escaping this onslaught; what are their chances of survival? The answer is that they are not surviving. Press releases by the Department of Fisheries show that the dollar values are high, reflecting, I would point out, higher prices due to the scarcity of the product. I regret the fact that the government, in the Throne Speech, takes credit for these higher prices. The higher prices are due to the decline and scarcity of the product, not to any action that has been taken by the Trudeau administration.

However, according to fisheries statistics the total pounds landed dropped from 1,233 million in 1969 to 1,121 million in 1971. In view of the decline in haddock catches, controls have been applied in some areas under ICNAF supervision, but it is too early to assess the results. However, I believe this type of fisheries management will have to be applied to other species if the stocks of fish are to recover in sufficient quantities to provide us with a viable fishing industry.

It cannot be said too often or too strongly that fishing is a major factor in the economy of Atlantic Canada, and every effort must be made to see that it is preserved. Where fishing quotas have been established by ICNAF there has been international acceptance of these restrictions. However, quotas, to be effective, must be set at a point somewhere below recent catches. This must be done if they are to achieve the desired effect of rehabilitating stocks of various species. I believe in setting up any management system for our fisheries and that the rights of the coastal state to manage our fish stocks must be recognized. Haddock, flounder and codfish are already being overfished and there is evidence that herring are now being fished close to their maximum sustainable yield. Quotas on haddock and flounder have already been set in some areas, but other species must be protected.

I mention these facts so that the government will be aware of the serious problems facing our fishing industry and will take a stand on them before it is too late. Certainly, we from Atlantic Canada are trying to do everything we can as members representing these areas to make the government aware of the serious problems facing our fishing industry. As the government is aware, Iceland has a conservation problem and it announced in July of 1971 that it will extend its fisheries jurisdiction by September, 1972, to the outer limits of its continental shelf.

[Mr. Crouse.]

When taking this stand, the Icelandic government stated that it is unrealistic that foreign nationals can be prevented from pumping oil or other resources from the seabed or the subsoil of the continental shelf but that they cannot in the same manner be prevented from destroying other resources which are based on the same seabed. I contend that is a good philosophy for Canada to adopt.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: This is the type of positive stand that Canada should now be taking. If the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) had any backbone, our fisheries would not now be facing disaster. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis), in his speech to this House on October 14, 1971 as recorded at page 8678 of Hansard, said the following:

> Our basic approach is to establish a managed fishery not only in our own exclusive limits but out over all our continental shelf—which in cases extends 400 miles into the Atlantic and all of the slope beyond it and to insist that in future it is by agreement a managed fishery.

• (2140)

Obviously, the Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries got the message from our fishing industry. Obviously, he is willing to take a stand on the matter, and I assure him, through you, Sir, of the support of the official opposition for his stand as put forward on October 14, 1971. However, I realize that he must also have the support of Canada's Secretary of State for External Affairs, who has procrastinated ever since being appointed to that portfolio in introducing fisheries legislation designed to conserve our fisheries resources. This was the fault of his Liberal predecessor who faithfully promised our fishermen a 12-mile limit away back in 1964. I think it is regrettable that the present minister is following the same path.

Our fishermen, Mr. Speaker, want performance, not promises. I say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to the Prime Minister and to the government, that they may be able to wait until the Law of the Sea Conference is called some time in 1973, or in 1974—we learned, in answer to a question this week, that the date, has not yet been set—but the foreign fishing fleets are not waiting; they are vacuum-cleaning our fishing grounds, and by the time a conference is called many of our important species will be depleted beyond the point of no return. The situation is crying out for action now. I hope this government acts before it is too late to save this important primary industry which is vital to the over-all economy of Atlantic Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having the honour to express my entire approval to the mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker, tonight I should like to focus on the main points of the Speech from the Throne and bring the government to face what it has done.

How far have we got since this government has been in power? I shall review the highlights of the speech. I am not criticising the speech as a whole because it contains some points I approve of. I shall limit myself to asking the government to implement the principles expressed in the speech, which would certainly bring about a change in our economy, since the speech advocates payment of a guaranteed annual income.

For years we have been fighting to get it. We want it and if the government does bring such legislation forward we can certainly help in having it adopted.

Mr. Speaker, so far the government has not done much toward the creation of the just society. It has been content with such half measures as setting up new departments, creating jobs for several hon. members and conducting inquiries into several sectors of the economy. I have in mind the Economic Council, the Inquiry on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, and all sorts of other inquiries.

This setting up of commissions, and those changes in the cabinet are mere shifts meant to stifle criticism and camouflage apparent inequities which might have come to light.

Changes effected within departments will prevent certain events taking place.

We are still facing the same paradox, Mr. Speaker. Particularly since 1966, we have seen many a Royal inquiry conducted, many commissions of learned specialists, or of the Senate and the House set up, many white papers published and many official reports of the Economic Council of Canada, all prepared by eminent economic authorities of Canada, some even with the assistance of foreign specialists. They painted a detailed picture of all aspects of economic life in Canada, and particularly of the alleged causes of inflation, unemployment and poverty, all of which are being discussed these days by hon. members, but no solutions to all these problems seem to be forthcoming.

Inflation, unemployment and poverty are the three separate results of the same economic sickness which can be described as the national economic imbalance. The more we use the present system, that is the tax system, and the present economic principles, the more we will witness the imbalances that will unfortunately lead our people to impractical solutions.

Mr. Speaker, why do all the great learned men thus brought together fail to better identify the causes of our economic lack of balance and suggest solutions that would lead once more to economic equilibrium? Why can they not manage to agree at least on specific points?

Mr. Speaker, all sorts of solutions are sought. The economists fail to agree in suggesting the principles of valid solutions; they disagree on practically every aspect of the economy. Attempts are made to promote production and capitalization while consumption is sadly lacking, in the case of over 60 per cent of the population. Efforts are made to train ordinary workers, professionals and technicians, once again to encourage production, while very often consumption lags behind.

No one seems to agree, here again, neither in the large universities of Europe, in the States and elsewhere, nor amongst the academics, on basic principles that might justify a practical solution to cure our economy.

Mr. Speaker, foreign investments keep us dependent upon foreigners. Everyone talks about it. I say we must make our own investments, based on the same resources, through Canadian institutions.

Mr. Speaker, our Canadian institutions are surely capable of stepping in and supplying the capital required to allow the developments warranted by the economic possibilities we are all aware of in our country.

Mr. Speaker, Canada cannot continue to create employment while showing deficits. The increased deficit will be a cruel problem after the election, since the budget will have to be balanced and this will only be achieved through a general tax increase blamed on inflation or levied for the sake of economic rehabilitation through so-called social development taxes.

The Canadian people can live more or less satisfactorily if they get into debt. Our government has merely continued to carry out the disastrous policy of previous governments; it has continued to carry out the same policy of running into debt and making compromises. Uncertainty and the shifting of a policy of surrender going from inflation to deflation leads to a centralizing policy. Never in the history of our country have we experienced such centralization and such loss of freedom. Bill C-259, on tax reform will deprive the Canadian taxpayers of the few assets which they still own.

• (2150)

We have never seen so many bankruptcies and so many citizens assigning their property as at the present time. Farming is now being centralized. Private enterprise has never been so threatened. Industry is increasingly running into debt and is ill-affected due to the direct meddling of the State in its affairs. The economic health of Canadians is in danger. The solutions considered by the government are antieconomic, antisocial and immoral. While production is increasing, the purchasing power should also be increasing, but on the contrary it is falling. Canadians are thus subjected to constant inbalance. We now find only indifference among builders, dissatisfaction among labourers, uncertainty among professionals and anarchy in the industry.

Because of this policy, the cost of living has increased to such an extent that most Canadians are no longer able to meet their obligations. The increase in the cost of living has incited all salaried workers, all pensioners, all recipients of welfare payments, who live at the expense of others, to continually ask for salary increases; consequently, there will be new taxes and the same comedy will be played again.

Yet, we are told that all is well. Why adopt legislation the only effect of which is to annoy Canadians, to deprive them of their possessions and to prevent them from taking any action by punishing them? The day will come when the system will have to pay for its follies, beginning with unemployment of which it is the cause.

One must open one's eyes. Canadians no longer have any future in the present economic system. So, we must look for other solutions. Everything has been tried to make the economic system bearable, but imbalance is all we know. According to some experts, we needed education in order to become richer or in order to live, but unemployment continues and we remain as poor as before. Credit societies, of which much was expected, were created, but farms and industries continue to go bankrupt and to disappear. Savings and investment funds have been created, but most of our savings remain in the hands of financial and foreign trusts. Everything has been tried, but no government control has succeeded in civilizing the present economic system. So, Mr. Speaker, as a solution, the government has increased the Unemployment Insurance Fund. That is the only solution, the only method that the government has tried so far. Social welfare through retraining courses has been invented and the already large number of welfare recipients is increasing. Social welfare is more and more popular and represents from 25 to 30 per cent of the federal and provincial budgets. Disguised social welfare and regional development companies have been created, but unemployment persists.

Such are the results of trying to adjust to the system instead of adjusting the system to the needs of the people. We need to open our eyes, Mr. Speaker, and look in another direction. The radical changes proposed by the Créditistes have not yet entered the hearts of the leaders of this country. Nobody can come up with any other answers. All sorts of solutions have been proposed and tried. All sorts of measures have been implemented but they always end up going round in circles, and those who sit on the opposition benches, like the Progressive Conservative members, for instance, claim that they are experts, but once they are in power they do exactly the same thing as their predecessors.

What we need is reforms in depth. The Speech from the Throne proposes a few, and I will be most eager to state tomorrow the things which I feel are valuable in this speech and to ask the government to implement the proposed reforms, and the opposition to support them.

May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that it is now ten o'clock?

* * *

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—TABLING OF LETTERS

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I recognize the Solicitor General.

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I would like, following your ruling, to table three letters: the first one is the letter dated June 28 1971, addressed by Mr. Yves Geoffroy to the Commissioner of Penitentiaries; the second is a report dated August 19, 1971, from Miss Micheline Cornellier, a social worker, to the Commissioner of Penitentiaries; and the third one is a letter dated November 3, 1971, addressed by the Reverend J. A. Nickels, the Chief of the Chaplaincy Service of the Canadian Penitentiary Service, to the director of the Saint-Vincent-de-Paul penitentiary. There are two copies of each letter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to the tabling of the three documents just mentioned by the Solicitor General?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

[English]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

BRIDGES—VANCOUVER HARBOUR—GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTION TO CONSTRUCTION OF PROPOSED THIRD STRUCTURE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) if the government is prepared to make its promised loan contribution of $123 million to assist the city of Vancouver with its transportation difficulties for whatever form of transport the city council decides is most desirable. Regrettably, the minister dodged my question by indicating in a jocular manner that he could not rightly recall any such promise. Evidently he was unable to recall that two of his cabinet colleagues from British Columbia had made differing pronouncements on the matter earlier this month. On one thing, however, they agreed, that the federal government was committed to lend money for a third crossing of Burrard Inlet.

During the first week of February, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis), at a press conference in Mayor Tom Campbell's office, stated unequivocally that Ottawa was committed to making a loan, estimated in 1970 at $123 million. A week later, in the same office, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) acknowledged existence of the commitment, but declared as follows:

Any government decision is subject to change—

He added:

—but no government spends money unless there is a feeling—

That is, in a community.

—the money should be spent.

A third British Columbia cabinet minister had taken yet another contradictory position a little earlier. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing) gave it as his opinion that there is——no heavy consensus in favour of the project. I have heard an engineering expert from the United States say here that the last thing we need is another crossing. We are considering here a tremendous amount of money. There is a rising view that premier attention should be given to rapid transit . . . The opposition, as I read it, is restricted to a fast bus service rather than accommodating everyone who wants to bring his own car downtown.

• (2200)

Yet another element was added by the chairman of the Vancouver Port Authority, Mr. Bill Rathie, a former mayor, who seems to be devoting most of his energies to pushing hard for a third crossing. He holds that the federal government would require a plebiscite before advancing the loan. Meanwhile, as a background, we have the on again-off again dithering of the City Fathers concerning the desirability of a public hearing and a plebiscite.

To top it all off, Mr. Speaker, we have the findings of Mayor Tom Campbell that those who oppose the third crossing are nothing but a rabble of Communists, Maoists and Hamburgers. He defines "Hamburgers" in his own inimitable fashion as persons who do not possess a university degree.

Given this welter of confusion and comic opera, I think it will be agreed that it was not unreasonable of me to ask the Minister of Transport for an early statement of the government's policy on this matter. Perhaps one can understand his temptation to treat the situation with levity, but I feel that in doing so he is hardly living up to his responsibility as Minister of Transport. Vancouver is faced by serious problems of traffic congestion which must be dealt with at once if the city is not to become choked with cars and pollution. A great many concerned citizens are worried by all this flim-flam, delay and secrecy. They have in the past suffered bitter experiences which lead them to fear that under all the apparent indecision and confusion, far reaching moves are being made in response to the demands of a relatively small number of citizens at the expense of the well-being of the entire community.

I would urge the Minister of Transport to announce clearly that if and when the city council of Vancouver reaches a firm decision on how it intends to deal with its transportation problems, the loan of $123 million will be made available. Such an announcement would represent a great step in clarifying the situation. The people of Vancouver need to know the facts and I hope the minister will take the lead in making those facts available.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the government has no wish to contribute to the construction of a third crossing against the will of the people. The "commitment" to which reference has been made is an offer rather than an irreversible decision. It is hoped that full discussion will lead to the establishment of a consensus. If the local and provincial governments will make commitments reflecting such a consensus, the offer can be taken as being validated and construction may begin.

It might be added that the proposal contemplates the provision of a rapid transit corridor which can be adapted to suit any form of transit that the local municipalities may decide to establish.

FISHERIES—POSSIBLE VARIATION IN LOBSTER SEASON, DISTRICT NO. 5, NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I addressed a question to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) about his intentions with regard to making a public statement concerning a possible variation in the length of the lobster fishing season in district No. 5, Nova scotia. With all respect, I found his answer to be evasive, glib and self-serving. It seems to me that if that is the basis upon which the minister wishes to deal with a problem which people in the area consider to be very serious, he should be asked certain questions.

The fishermen in this area are not at all happy, despite the minister's glib assurance that things were never better for the lobster fishermen. They want to know the answers to some general questions; for instance, what has happened to sick mariner's benefits, and what is the situation with respect to the fishing bounty? The bounty has gone, they know that. They know, also, that sick mariner's benefits have gone and that the replacement scheme is not satisfactory. They know that subsidies to assist in the building of small vessels have been reduced, and they resent very much the encroachment of foreign fishing vessels. It seems obvious to them that the fisheries branch of the Department of the Environment, and the external affairs department are not doing what they should be doing generally.

In particular, Mr. Speaker, what vexes them is the situation regarding the so-called poll taken in district No. 5 with which I have dealt and about which I have corresponded with the minister. I think it can be summed up best by reading into the record a letter received from the Goldboro-Bayview District Board of Trade, which is a prominent and concerned organization in this area. I think this letter will prove informative and, as I say, sums up the situation very well. It reads:

Dear Mr. MacKay:

Thank you very much for your assistance in our effort to determine the status of the lobster fishing season in district No. 5, Nova Scotia. The frustrating and conflicting replies you have received from the Minister of Fisheries again confirms his lack of understanding and regard for our inshore fishery.

The 20 day reduction imposed now leaves us with a ridiculously short season of only two months from April 10 to June 10. We are now cut back to a point that when Sunday's, average bad weather and drift ice are considered actual fishing time will amount to about 42 days a year which hardly makes the other 323 days of comparitive meagre existence worth the effort of maintaining expensive equipment.

We feel that our opinions are based on a sound and practical working knowledge of the situation with a backing of generations of experience. We are worthy of more consideration than that given by the minister when dealing with people who are neglected and ignored.

When asked for justification for his cruel decision the minister advised that a survey of class A fishermen showed that 85 per cent were in favour of a shorter season. When this was proven to be false he then advised that 230 fishermen were polled with 90 per cent being in favour of a shorter season. The fact that there are actually 689 class A lobster fishermen in this district and none of those contacted to date are aware of a survey makes the minister's figures and percentages even more confusing.

The minister suggests a variation order may be issued to change the dates after the season opens. This does not afford the security needed to ensure a viable industry. Action should immediately be taken to ensure the survival of our lobster fishery by the department obtaining the facts here not as dreamed at desks in Ottawa.

These are harsh words indeed, and I do not like to talk about this subject in such an acrimonous way. Had the minister answered my question in a courteous and informative manner, perhaps I would not have deemed it necessary to read this kind of letter into the public record. But I have had many such letters, Mr. Speaker. Petitions have been sent both to the minister and to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). By coincidence I received a letter today after I had asked the minister my question this morning. This particular writer suggests that the minister does not know a cohoe from a groundhog. I suggest, with deference and with as little offence as I can under the circumstances, that if some of the civil servants in the minister's department would go down to the district concerned, check with the fishermen and conduct straightforward polls, spend a little time with them and find out what is going on—in other words, exert a little guidance and direction instead of dictating to these fishermen—then we would all be better off. Not only would there be better public relations between the minister and his department and the fishermen concerned, but I suggest some more constructive steps could be taken.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I cannot think of any fishery in Canada that is conducted on a more democratic basis. The fishermen in question are polled as to their preference and the Department of Fisheries does its best to accommodate their preference as far as length of season is concerned. The hon. member may not be aware of this, but in the United States there is no season whatsoever. In Canada, we have different seasons in different areas, based primarily on the wishes of the lobster fishermen.

The present lobster season in district No. 5 in Nova Scotia was established on May 25, 1971, following a survey which indicated that the vast majority, 85 to 90 per cent, of the licensed lobster fishermen in that district favoured a 60-day season opening on April 10 and closing on June 10 of that year. The hon. member has suggested to me in previous correspondence that the lobster fishermen of district No. 5 would now prefer a return to the former 80-day fishing season opening on April 10 and closing on June 30.

• (2210)

I have been advised that this question could properly be resolved based on fishermen's preference. In a letter dated December 14 I told the hon. member that all fishermen would be requested to indicate their preference for the June 10 or June 30 closing date at the time they purchase their licences in the spring. I can now report to the hon. member that this instruction has been issued and that the question is being asked of all fishermen who are now purchasing licences in district No. 5. In this way we hope to obtain a valid survey of the opinion of licensed lobstermen in district No. 5 on this question.

In addition, I will now undertake to make public the results of this survey. I also undertake to change the closing date if the survey results in a clear indication that this measure is what most lobstermen want. Finally, if a change in the closing date is to take place, the order to this effect will be issued in time to implement the new closing date this year, 1972.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—REMOVAL OF STATION AGENTS, SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA—CONSIDERATION OF NATURE OF UNDERTAKINGS BY COMPANY IN REVIEW

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, today questions were asked in the House about the decision rendered by the Canadian Transport Commission with respect to the application of Canadian Pacific Railway to remove some 56 station agents, nine caretakers and four caretaker agents from stations in Saskatchewan, four agents and three caretakers from stations in Alberta. As a substitute, Canadian Pacific Railway proposed a customer service centre at Saskatoon to serve all of the northern settled area of Saskatchewan and some parts of Alberta.

[Mr. MacKay.]

I was very happy that the minister undertook to look at the situation. My question drew special attention to the fact that the decision rendered by the Canadian Transport Commission was conditional upon certain undertakings and commitments given by the CPR and to which the commission seemed to attach considerable importance. In my view, these commitments and undertakings were fatuous and meaningless and I feel they impose a special obligation upon the government to review this matter. I was happy to note that the minister stated he would take note of this particular factor.

The background of the situation is that the CPR made application early in 1969 to abandon the stations as noted, and to substitute the customer service centre located in Saskatoon. The Canadian Transport Commission decision was rendered on January 5, 1971. On February 4, 1971, the government of Saskatchewan applied to the commission to review its decision. A review was ordered. I might say that the action of the Saskatchewan government was continued later in the year in spite of the fact that there had been a change of government in the interim. Mr. Speaker, hearings were ordered as a result of this review and these were held early in December, 1971, taking nine days and hearing 96 witnesses. This demonstrates the interest in this matter. Now the decision has been rendered by the Canadian Transport Commission to let its original decision stand.

My question arose in part as a result of reading the decision of the commission, which seemed to leave the impression that it rejected all those who in any way opposed or stood in the way of the CPR or its aims and objectives. It seemed to accept the CPR argument as being the final word.

I want to take note of the position of the province of Saskatchewan in this regard, which was noted in the report of the committee, where it is pointed out that Mr. Blair, speaking on behalf of the government of Saskatchewan, stated that it is not opposed to the aspects of the customer service centre concept which will provide equal or better service to its citizens and it recognizes the need for change where change is justified.

Mr. Speaker, I also note that there are other matters which should be reviewed by the cabinet. I note in particular that they draw on the experience in the Regina and Moose Jaw areas in the customer service centre operations that have been established there. They note that there no information was given to the committee which could be regarded as evidence of lack of satisfaction with the operation of this plan. Mr. Speaker, I submit that there has been no proper study of the operation of the customer service centre plan in this particular area of the province, and the committee should not reach the type of conclusion it did unless a proper study is carried out.

But the CTC overruled all objections that were made and gave the CPR authority to proceed with its new plan and made this conditional upon the conditions of the CPR. I want to take note of the conditions which were given by the CPR. First of all, CP rail will, with the Railway Transport Committee's permission, introduce the CSC system on the Saskatoon division. That is rather elementary. Second, CP rail will provide a Zenith telephone system with customer toll-free, 24-hour, 7-day operation. This totally ignores the many complaints which have been made about lack of satisfactory telephone service. Third, CP rail will appoint 14 mobile supervisors to supervise the areas designated in exhibit No. CP 12.

The question arises whether these 14 supervisors will remain. Evidence was submitted that supervisors were taken out after being in certain areas for a short period of time. Fourth, CP Rail will appoint a competent and responsible contract representative at necessary locations. The CTC did not prescribe the locations. Then here is No. 11; I do not have time to refer to all of these. CP rail undertakes, at stations where agents are to be removed and where there is passenger service, to provide a suitable shelter, heated and lighted with access thereto, including snow removal. There is not one of these points or stations where there is any passenger service. What a fatuous commitment the CPR made!

In view of the many judgments which entered into the decision rendered by the Canadian Transport Commission, I would urge that the cabinet review the decision handed down. I want to make it clear that the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission may be proper within the terms of the law set out in the National Transport Act, but I suggest it is the National Transport Act itself which is defective and only the cabinet can review the matter from the viewpoint of the public interest.

I suggest the future of many Saskatchewan communities is at stake in this particular decision. I suggest it is vital that all Saskatchewan communities be assured of adequate service. In my own brief to the CTC in these hearings I made the point that I feel it is necessary that in each community served by CPR there is a clear and adequate identification of the railway company to the people of the community. This must involve adequate facilities, adequate services and a capability granted to personnel enabling them satisfactorily to conduct business with the public. For these and many other reasons I urge the federal government to review the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) that I have today consulted with the president of the Canadian Transport Commission, who has assured me that any and every specific complaint that the CPR is not carrying out any of the undertakings given the commission and set out in the decision will be investigated promptly and remedial action will be taken wherever warranted.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.21 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 23, 1972

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—LEAK OF GOVERNMENT POLICY ON FOREIGN OWNERSHIP

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, notice of which I have sent to Your Honour. It relates to the publication in today's Toronto Star of a story concerning another cabinet leak in connection with a so-called release of government policy on foreign ownership. Today's story in the Star is not the first instance of leaks of secret government documents in relation to the government's consideration of foreign investment policy. Your Honour may recall the publication in the Canadian Forum of what purported to be the Gray report, and the question of privilege which I introduced on November 15, 1971, in that connection. Immediately on the heels of that report, Southam News Services published excerpts from confidential cabinet minutes relating to a decision in principle, arrived at in July of last year, to establish a screening agency in connection with foreign takeovers. Questions of privilege were again raised as a result of that leak.

I review this history briefly before making two points as I rise on this further question of privilege today. The first is that the government to this date has given no satisfactory explanation—in fact, it has given no account at all—of any investigation which may have been undertaken into these previous leaks. There are a great many unanswered questions about whether these leaks may, in fact, have been encouraged by the government, or by one or other of the members of the government, as an exercise in kite-flying. I feel I am entitled to say this; inasmuch as in the course of the earlier events it was suggested that members of the opposition might have been encouraging such leaks through members of the public service, I feel I am entitled to make this retort. In any event, the onus of uncovering the source of the leaks through a thorough investigation rests on the government, and the government has not given the House any satisfaction in this regard. As a result of this failure a cloud of suspicion has been left hanging over both parliament itself and the public service, a situation which, I suggest, will be further aggravated by this latest leak.

Turning now to my second point, I should like to contrast the arguments which I have previously put to Your Honour with the argument I am presenting today. I submit that this latest leak falls within a new context and contains an added dimension which I feel should make my argument acceptable to the Chair. Again, a brief bit of history is required to illuminate my point—the history of statements made by the Prime Minister with reference to the possible date of the unveiling of government policy on foreign ownership. I do not think I need say more than this: in the Globe and Mail of today and yesterday statements are cited in the column of Mr. George Bain constituting what I would call a chronology of confusion and deception as to this question of the date. It does show, however, that as far back as September 15 the Prime Minister said in the House, referring to the question of government policy on this issue: "This is at an advanced stage and we expect to have a report fairly soon." The statement made in the House yesterday said the same thing in different words.

The document which was published in the Toronto Star today quotes the Minister of National Revenue as making the following recommendations to cabinet. He was requested, according to the story, to make four recommendations.

> The minister outlined four options: to make the announcement now without any supporting study; to make the announcement with a 50-page summary of the main study; to delay until late March or early April when the main study would be ready, or to wait until both the legislation and the study are ready.

According to the story, the minister recommended that it be announced during the Throne Speech debate which ends next Tuesday, with a promise to release the supporting study as soon as possible. Then appear in quotation marks the following words:

> This option—

The option of presenting the policy immediately.

> —would involve some embarrassment to the government in that the presentation of the policy statement has been held off on the grounds that he did not want to issue it without the supporting material.

I pause here to say I find it very difficult to embarrass this government any further than it has already been embarrassed with regard to this issue. According to the newspaper report the minister added in his memorandum:

> The policy statement might also look a little thin without this additional material.
>
> On the other hand, it would in my view be even more difficult to postpone the policy statement to a date much later than the end of the Throne Speech debate. Undertakings have been given publicly on a number of occasions and from the viewpoint of the government's credibility—

I pause again to say that there is some doubt whether the government has any credibility left, Mr. Speaker.

> —vis-à-vis the public there is probably less to be lost by issuing a full statement, with supporting material to follow a few weeks later, than by postponing the policy statement for a further period.

Obviously the minister lost that battle.

The Prime Minister has been telling us in the House and outside the House, and so have other members of the government, that this supporting material must be available. That is the basis upon which up to this time the government has declined to publish the policy. We now find that the supporting material is, in fact, no more than the Gray report which has been in the hands of the government for at least four months. The fact is that when it was leaked in the Canadian Forum it has obviously been in the hands of the government for some time. The report in today's Star goes on to say:

• (1410)

—delays in editing the Gray report, called the "Memorandum on Domestic Control of the National Economic Environment", have held up the announcement.

I think Your Honour should take judicial notice that what is happening is this. Rather than it being a case of having new supporting material in order to back up the decision it has made, the government is attempting to revise and edit the Gray report so as to make it more acceptable and to work it into the basis of the policy that it is going to announce.

In conclusion, considering the total effect of both arguments, I submit to Your Honour that there has in fact been a breach of privilege affecting all members of this House. The leaks continue and a cloud of suspicion hangs over all members. The government has taken no action effectively to stop this process. The Prime Minister and the Acting Prime Minister have made evasive, misleading and conflicting statements in relation to the release date of government policy which is still undergoing the leak process, and the government will only clear the air by making a full and complete disclosure of that general policy.

I submit that Your Honour has a duty to safeguard the rights of the members of this House, and that the government is under compulsion either to disclose the policy immediately or to stand guilty of its conduct of confusion and deception with which I have charged the government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River has given the Chair the notice required under the terms of the Standing Order. This has given me the opportunity in the meantime to consider some of the points which have been advanced by the hon. member at this time and to consider as well the arguments which were proposed for the consideration of the House and the Chair when a similar question of privilege was raised previously.

I have to tell the hon. member and the House that I cannot reach the same conclusion as that reached by the hon. member for Peace River, namely, that there is a prima facie case of privilege. There may be a grievance. The circumstances that the hon. member has described may well form the foundation for a non-confidence motion. But I cannot see how this type of situation can or should be considered by the House by way of a breach of parliamentary privilege.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

I add that in my view the arguments advanced by the hon. member are essentially debate, and I would think that there should be in the foreseeable future, even in the course of the present debate, an opportunity for the hon. member and other hon. members to consider the matter to which he has alluded.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1972-73

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1973, was presented by Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in tabling the main estimates for 1972-73 I should like to advise the House that they amount in total to $15,749 million in budgetary expenditures. About one half of this amount, $7,640 million, is statutory in nature in that it follows from legislation previously passed by parliament and still in force. The remaining $8,109 million will require authorization under new appropriation acts.

The blue book which has just been tabled carries a forecast of the budgetary expenditures for the fiscal year which is now coming to an end. These amount in total to $15,058 million, almost exactly $700 million less than the estimates for the new year. Almost one half the difference arises from statutory items and in particular from the statutory items covering transfers to the provinces, or arrangements under which the federal government shares with the provinces costs of health, welfare and educational programs.

Increases in non-statutory items, other than those required to maintain levels of service with rising costs and greater demands, emphasize the government's concerns. Prominent examples are: Regional Economic Expansion, Department of the Environment, Indian and Eskimo Affairs, Northern Development and Canadian International Development.

A specific provision of $62 million is made for student summer employment over and above about $23 million set aside for this purpose in departmental budgets.

The estimates also cover $790 million in non-budgetary expenditures, that is, in loans, investments and advances, for which it is necessary to seek appropriation authority from parliament. This does not cover all non-budgetary expenditures. There are other expenditures of this nature, not shown anywhere in estimates, which may be made pursuant to legislation now in force such as the National Housing Act.

There is a small but important addition this year to the amount of information contained in the estimates. There are several instances in which programs generate revenues. In the past the only information supplied in estimates has consisted of an entry stating the total estimated revenue to be credited directly to the program itself and the total to be credited to general revenues. In these estimates we show for the first time detail by type as to the actual source of the revenue, such as revenues from sales of permits, the proceeds of sales, and fees for services.

Hon. members will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the government made available last year a publication entitled "How Your Tax Dollar is Spent" designed to inform the public on the allocation of resources being recommended in 1971-72 estimates in terms of national priorities and needs and also to describe the process by which the government reaches its decisions on these allocations.

The 1972 edition of this publication is being distributed to all members today. It will describe in summary terms the recommended allocation of resources for 1972-73, again in terms of national priorities and needs. The description of the process itself is carried a step further with a brief account of the various steps which go to make up the parliamentary business of supply. Again this year the publication will be made available to the public free of charge through the distribution outlets of Information Canada.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the task of making any detailed reference to this rather thick book that has been laid on our desks since we came into the House is very difficult. The minister has had the advantage of a plethora of officials who have been able to comb the book and seek out all the advantageous portions so he could put them forward in his statement.

• (1420)

There is one thing, of course, that the people of Canada will have to note very carefully and which is borne out by forecasts made both inside and outside the House. The fact is that the tax changes that were made in 1971 were for the purpose of raising greater and greater revenues. It is admitted that, without any supplementaries indicated for 1972-73 the expenditures are close to $550 million more than in the budget for 1971-72. If we look at the supplementaries for 1971-72 we see that, not including final supplementaries for that year, the 1971-72 additional estimates came to some $600 million to $700 million. I suppose, on the basis of last year's performance, with this government not behaving in any different way, we will see approximately three-quarters of a billion dollars in supplementary estimates for 1972-73 which will take us well over the $16 billion mark.

I would quite confidently forecast that for 1972-73 having regard to the economic conditions of the country, we will reach $16½ billion. When we compare the amount ten years ago of $6,500 million, we see that the federal government's expenditures have tripled in ten years. Some people may say "hurrah for that". The only point, however, is that this money comes out of the pockets of the Canadian taxpayers. It comes straight out of the economy. This is the point. Is the Canadian economy sufficiently active and geared or is it taxed to death in order to support this type of expenditure?

We will look at the details and I am sure there will be some particular points of interest for hon. members. I do not know whether this is prophetic, but the expenditures of the Chief Electoral Officer for this coming year have been halved. There is no provision there at all for what everyone expects to happen. As a matter of fact they have been halved. We do not know whether somebody is trying to play a little game here.

An hon. Member: No election.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No election this year? You said it; I didn't. Considering the type of service we are getting today from that august body, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—now it is on and now it is off—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take the liberty to remind the hon. member that, according to the Standing Order, as much as circumstances will permit comments made should be brief. I appreciate the importance of the matter but I would hope the hon. member would not attempt to consider all the different items and departments covered by the blue book. I have to remind him that we should try to keep the comments made by spokesmen on behalf of the parties as brief as possible consistent with the requirements of the Standing Order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, but I think that if you measure me line for line you will find that up to the present time I am still well below the minister's statement in length.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he should not argue. I remind him that the Standing Order is drafted in such a way, perhaps unfortunately, that it does not place a limit on statements of ministers but only on the comments made by spokesmen of the parties who respond. Having said that, I would hope the hon. member would find it possible to co-operate as I have suggested.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have only one comment to make. I am very much aware of what you have said and I hope we do not get any performances like yesterday at this point.

With regard to the CBC, that august body is asking us to vote an additional $26 million additional in estimates plus a further $32 million for loans. Of course, that is a euphemistic word for something that will have to be absorbed by the taxpayers of Canada. I hope that those people who are responsible for the administration of that body and those who participate in it are aware that this year they are asking for an additional $57 million to $58 million.

With that I will draw my remarks to a close, but I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the rule regarding the length of statements will apply equally to minister's statements as it does to comments by members of the opposition.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, it is not expected that extensive comments could be made after a brief look at the estimates tabled today, but there are a couple of items that impressed me immediately upon opening the book as requiring some study. I would like to point out the fact that the forecast estimates for 1972-73 do not seem to have been increased much beyond 4 per cent, yet if we look at the internal overhead expenses there seems to be a substantial increase of almost 15 per cent over last year. From a first glance it would look as though government departments are becoming increasingly more expensive to operate or that the bureaucracy on the other side is proliferating like mad in comparison with the expenditures that are being made naturally. The amount of money that is being raised from the Canadian taxpayers seems to be channelled into overhead expenses rather than into services for the people.

Another item will bear close examination. I refer to the fiscal transfer payments where it appears that the transfer payments to provinces will be less in the coming year than they have been in the past. In view of the vast regional disparities that exist in this country it is hard to find any justification for such a diminution in support of the poorer provinces of Canada.

I appreciate the opportunity of making these brief comments and I assure you, Sir, that these matters will receive close examination.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, two items particularly attracted my attention in the 1972-73 Estimates which have just been tabled.

First of all, under Secretary of State, the cost of operating the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will reach $207 million, exclusive of operating costs of the National Film Board, etc. I therefore hope the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) will in due course be able to explain the reason for the increase from $181 million last year to $207 this year for services inferior in number and quality to those we enjoyed previously.

The other section I have perused is, under the expenses of the Department of Finance, public debt service which was $2,034,685,000 last year and has increased this year by $125,700,000 bringing the total amount for debt service up to $2,100,385,000. That represents exactly $105 per capita in Canada, or $1,050 for a family of ten, $525 for a family of five. And this fabulous amount allotted to debt service does not seem to worry the government. When we recommend distributing $100 to each citizen it is funny but distributing the same amount to the controller of finance is not so funny.

Those are two points about which we are certainly going to take up cudgels. We shall certainly bring forward facts and clarifications in the House when debating the credits of various departments.

I say and repeat in closing that paying out $2,100,385,000 just for interest on debt service for those who control Canada's economy is simply a national disgrace which should no longer be tolerated.

• (1430)

[English]

FISHERIES

DEPLETION OF HERRING RESOURCES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity. I refer to the possible serious depletion of herring resources in the Placentia Bay area caused by the operation of large fleets of herring seiners. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That this House instruct the Minister of Fisheries to inquire immediately into the possible danger of depletion of herring resources in the Placentia Bay region and take steps to impose the necessary conservation measures and to protect the resources and the rights of the inshore fishermen engaged in that industry.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO STIMULATE CAPITAL SPENDING IN PRIVATE SECTOR—POLICY REGARDING U.S. DISC PROGRAM AND FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of the pessimistic forecast of capital spending plans for 1973 by the Economic Council of Canada and their conclusion that capital spending projections are wholly inadequate if we are to reduce unemployment to 3.8 per cent by 1975, is the government considering measures now to substantially stimulate capital spending in the private sector, and will action be undertaken before the normal budget presentation of late spring?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had time myself to look at this report which has just come out. I am informed, however, that it states quite clearly that one should be cautious in interpreting these figures for the reason that they were based on a survey which took place at a time when there was a great deal of uncertainty in the economy, before the former Minister of Finance's announcement on October 14 of our expenditure programs and especially before the agreement on the international monetary situation, and therefore the excellent work of the government since the survey took place has no doubt returned confidence to the economy, which invalidates these figures.

Mr. McGrath: In light of the uncertainties in this matter and the report by the Economic Council of Canada, can the Prime Minister make a statement to the House or can he assure the House that a statement will be made regarding government policies with respect to the DISC program and foreign investment? I ask this question now especially in light of the latest Gray leak.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not see the relationship between this and the leak to which the hon. member refers. I just repeat that when the hon. member reads the document, as he must have done to ask this question unless it was prepared by his research staff, he should read the whole document. The document cautions that the figures must not be extrapolated to today because of the uncertainty which existed then, and he should be able to draw the conclusion which I indicated rather than asking spurious questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: May I ask a more specific question, Mr. Speaker. What is the government doing about the substantial decline in investment in the Atlantic provinces which is already hurting a crippled economy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that what we have done to dispel the uncertainty which existed at the time of this survey was (a) to make the announcement we did on expenditures on October 14 and (b) successfully conclude the agreement on international monetary matters.

Mr. Baldwin: Why don't you try quitting? That would help.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON CRITERIA AND PROCEDURES FOR SCREENING AGENCY—ALLEGED EDITING OF BACKGROUND DOCUMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I should like to address a question or questions, to the Prime Minister arising out of a report in the Toronto Star. I want to ask him whether there has been consultation with the provinces with regard to the criteria and procedures which are to govern the screening agency? I appreciate that the Prime Minister suggested there has been consultation on the general subject, although he has not told us exactly what kind of consultation. Has there been consultation in particular on the particulars of the criteria and procedures of the proposed screening agency and, if not, is such consultation being arranged?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I did tell the House yesterday what type of consultation we had. It was at the federal-provincial conference of first ministers which took place last fall. We told the provinces that we were in the process of formulating policy on this subject and we wanted to know what remarks they had to make. As to the second part of the question, whether we submitted to them any precise criteria either at that time or since then, the answer is no.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Prime Minister whether these criteria and procedures have already been arrived at by the government, particularly in light of the fact that he made a number of undertakings to make a statement on the policy in this area? When he made those undertakings had not the criteria and the procedures already been decided, or are they still under discussion?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, those criteria were under discussion at the time I made my first announcements. We had at that time planned to bring the discussion and decision on those criteria to a head much earlier than we have in fact done. I might add that in some degree we perhaps put more time into the preparation of the background document than we would have had to, had there not been this leak in the Canadian Forum. In that sense, those who think they are going to urge the government to more speedy action by this or that type of leak are really achieving the contrary result.

An hon. Member: Little spoiled boy!

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Prime Minister another question and suggest that threats of the kind he has made do not increase his standing in the country nor his value as Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

Mr. Lewis: I want to ask the Prime Minister whether the editing of the document which is now supposed to be taking place is merely a matter of editing in the sense of correcting grammar, syntax and the rest, and can he assure the House that the document is not being expurgated or changed in any substance before the people of Canada see it?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not see why the hon. member talks about threats unless he feels threatened from some point. I assure him that there was no threat contained in my previous statement.

Mr. Lewis: May I rephrase the question to the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may rephrase the question and then I will recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue after the supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: May I rephrase my question since the Prime Minister chose to ignore it. Will he assure the House that the supporting document is not being changed or expurgated in any substance before it is tabled for Members of Parliament and the people of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring, as the supporting document, to the document published in the Canadian Forum, I can only answer that that is of no concern to the government. The documents we are working on we are improving as long as they are in front of us, and we will continue to do so until we feel they are ready to be made public.

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

SHOES—MEASURES TO ASSIST MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question.

In view of the report by the Shoe Manufacturing Association that 50 per cent of the shoes sold in Canada in 1971, or 39 million pairs, were imports, and in view of the fact that countries exporting these shoes pay salaries 10 per cent lower than in Canada, would the Prime Minister tell whether the government intends to take measures in order to save the shoe manufacturing industry in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that this subject was referred to on a few occasions by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I shall ask him to take note of the question and see if he can provide an answer.

* * *

• (1440)

[English]

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION INTO LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister bring the House up to date on the results of the investigation started more than three months ago into cabinet leaks following some six or seven cabinet leaks that happened in rapid succession at that time, particularly in view of the fact another leak has occurred in the past couple of days making it very obvious that this is an unsatisfactory way of making public policy known to the people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I agree that this is a very unsatisfactory way of making policy known, especially before it has become policy. On the substance of the question, yes, I can bring the House up to date. We are not yet in a position to lay any charges for these criminal acts.

Mr. Hees: Does the Prime Minister expect to be able to lay charges in the near future?

Mr. Trudeau: That, Mr. Speaker, depends on whether or not we find the culprits.

* * *

GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

VANCOUVER—BRITISH COLUMBIA LEGISLATURE RESOLUTION CONCERNING CERTAIN NATIONAL DEFENCE LAND—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. I am glad to see him smiling after his experience in the past few minutes. My question has to do with a resolution passed unanimously by the legislature of the province of British Columbia on a motion by the Hon. Grace McCarthy, Vancouver-Little Mountain constituency, Minister without Portfolio in the Bennett cabinet, and seconded by Pat McGeer, the leader of the opposition.

An hon. Member: The leader of the Liberal party.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The resolution asks the British Columbia government to arrange the purchase from the federal government of 38 acres of Jericho DND land north of Fourth Avenue earmarked for development, to buy it at the 1947 purchase price of around $2,500 per acre and to make said land available to the public at a nominal rate for park purposes. As this motion had the support of all three parties in the British Columbia legislature and is of tremendous interest to the city of Vancouver, will the Prime Minister say what he has in mind with reference thereto?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would want to defer on the details of this matter to the Minister of National Defence under whose jurisdiction it falls. If the right hon. member is referring to the piece of property which is in my mind, my recollection is that there was an agreement with the proper authorities in British Columbia to turn over, which we did, part of the DND land to the city and the province so they could develop it into a park and the remainder would be used for other purposes. I do not know if the right hon. member is now suggesting they have changed their minds and are trying to get something for nothing, but I will ask the minister to look into it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the government of British Columbia, or the leader of the opposition who belongs to the Liberal party and is a strong adherent, would not be asking for any change. I know some of the British Columbia members are anxious that something be done in this connection. Will the Prime Minister look into this matter with a view to deciding whether or not the request of the British Columbia legislature will receive attention?

Mr. Trudeau: Of course, Mr. Speaker, it will be considered. I believe there is even correspondence on this subject. I might tell the right hon. member that the attitude of the government in this regard is no different from that taken in other instances. I know of governments in other provinces, indeed, Liberal governments, which at times have sought to get pieces of federal government property free. We always said it was in the interests of the federal taxpayers, about whom the hon. member for Edmonton West is so concerned—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: —that we should get money for them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether we are not getting into debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not engaged in debate. I am asking a question. The Prime Minister has given a rather garrulous answer. I simply ask him, is there any bigotry in a motion of the legislature of British Columbia?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: You are the expert on that.

Mr. Hees: No fuddle-duddles, now. Oh, oh! We heard you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

CANADA LABOUR CODE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. I preface it by saying I wish he had been given control over the Unemployment Insurance Commission. He undoubtedly could have straightened out that mess. Can the minister indicate to the House if and when the Canada Labour Code amendments relating to collective bargaining procedures, which died on the order paper at the end of the last session, will be introduced in the House? If they are to be introduced, will they be in the same form or are there to be amendments to the bill of last session?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member that the Canada Labour Code bill will be back in the House, I hope, before too many weeks have passed. The hon. member will have to wait to see to what extent it is changed.

* * *

[Translation]

FISHERIES

POSSIBILITY OF HIGHER MERCURY CONTENT BEING ALLOWED IN CERTAIN SPECIES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of the Environment a question?

Has the minister ordered appropriate studies to be carried out with a view to increasing over 0.5 the allowed mercury concentration for some species of fish?

[English]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Studies have been conducted along these lines and, working closely with the health and welfare people, we hope some revisions will be possible in the future.

* * *

TRANSPORT

OMISSION OF LACHINE CANAL IN TAKEOVER BY DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Raymond Rock (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development arising out of the announcement he made yesterday. Why was the Lachine canal not included in the takeover of historic canals and given national park status?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lisgar.

* * *

GRAIN

PLANS TO ALLEVIATE TRANSPORTATION AND HANDLING PROBLEMS ON WEST COAST

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): I wish to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. What plans does the federal government have to alleviate the crisis that has been building up in the grain handling and transportation systems on the west coast other than taking what appears to be the backward-looking approach of reducing present sales efforts in export markets?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to assure the hon. member that our objective in sales continues to be the objective of setting new records each year and to build our system to the maximum. We have been calling for the co-operation of all parties,—the railways, the elevator companies and the men who operate them—to achieve new ways to make the existing system work better. In fact, some of my recent meetings have been directed toward securing that co-operation and it has been forthcoming. I see reason to be optimistic about being able to go after higher and higher sales levels.

Mr. Murta: I come back to my original question because of the seriousness of the problem that has developed in Vancouver. What is the government going to do about alleviating the problem in the immediate future with regard to the backlog of boats that has developed in the port of Vancouver?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, as a result of the discussions and the co-operation to which I referred there is a new and higher target for unloading of cars at Vancouver. There now appears to be some willingness on the part of the terminals to operate on a seven-day week basis, all of which will help the situation with regard to the ships which are waiting and which are coming. The Wheat Board has sold to the absolute limit of the capacity of that port. At the same time, we are looking into the question of additional facilities or different techniques that may be required to increase the throughput out of Vancouver in the future.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A number of members are seeking the opportunity to ask supplementaries on this subject. With the co-operation of hon. members, we should try to limit the number of supplementaries. For the moment the hon. member for Fraser Valley West will be recognized.

Inquiries of the Ministry

● (1450)

TRANSPORTATION—REPORT ON RAILWAY SAFETY

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the transportation of grain and I should like to direct it to the Minister of Transport. In view of the generally hazardous conditions in the Fraser Canyon and the many hearings conducted on the subject of railway safety by the Railway Transport Committee, can the minister give us any indication when the report of that committee will be made public?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I cannot do so at the moment, but I will make inquiries and let the hon. member know.

SUGGESTED DRYING AT INLAND TERMINALS TO EXPEDITE LOADING OF SHIPS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I should like to ask the minister how long it will be before we will catch up on the transportation of grain to meet the commitments we have already made and, further, whether consideration is being given to permitting farmers to make deliveries to existing inland terminals so the grain can be dried and made ready to be loaded on ships immediately?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): The exact date on which there will be no ships waiting in Vancouver is a matter of complete conjecture. It should be noted that the waiting of ships in harbours in other ports of the world is an ordinary and accepted thing. It seems to me it is only in the particular case of Vancouver, and of grain loading, that special attention is directed to it although, naturally, we regret that there should be any delays. The Wheat Board is examining the question of making more use of inland terminals and the related question of whether grain should be sent to those terminals by truck rather than by rail. At the present time the board is looking at all aspects of this question to see whether the throughput out of Vancouver can be increased.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice why he concentrates all his concern on private elevator companies and on the port of Vancouver when he has available a perfectly good federally-owned grain elevator in Prince Rupert which is not being used to capacity?

* * *

FISHERIES

MEASURES TO CONSERVE HERRING RESOURCES IN PLACENTIA BAY

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. It concerns the problem in Placentia Bay caused by herring seining fleets operating there. Does the minister have any plans to enforce necessary conservation measures to protect the herring resources of the bay and the rights of the people in the industry?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker, plans similar to those announced last year in respect of Fortune Bay. We have recently set up a herring management committee with representatives from the fishing industry in the Atlantic provinces. We think we can refer this question to that committee for immediate action.

* * *

POWER

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—FEDERAL INVESTIGATION TO DETERMINE WHETHER PROJECT SHOULD PROCEED IN LIGHT OF ENVIRONMENTAL HAZARDS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. In light of the federal-provincial study on the environmental impact of the James Bay project and the fact that this study made no attempt to answer the question whether or not the project should proceed but concerned itself only with the methods which might be used to make it proceed, would the minister tell us whether the government intends to make a study of its own to decide whether or not this project should proceed in the face of all the environmental hazards involved?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): The study to which the hon. member refers is one carried out jointly by the province of Quebec and by the federal government. We lent a number of experts in various fields—wildlife, fisheries, oceanography and so on. The joint task force produced some 50 reports, all of which are published and available to the public. A summary has also been prepared. However, further investigations will continue as the planning for the whole James Bay project proceeds.

Mr. Nesbitt: Perhaps the minister did not hear my question. Does the government intend to make any investigation designed to determine whether or not this project should proceed?

Mr. Davis: To put it simply, the project, as we have assessed it environmentally is in provincial jurisdiction. We are making federal expertise available in order to help the province assess the environmental aspects of the plan as they evolve. Were there some facets of the development which involved other governments, the question posed by the hon. member might perhaps be answered in another manner, but as far as my department is concerned, the effects of this project are provincial, not federal.

Mr. Nesbitt: A final supplementary, addressed to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might ask a short supplementary and the minister might reply briefly because we shall soon be running short of time.

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—APPLICATION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Is the Minister of Transport making a careful study of the James Bay project in light of the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, since this aspect of the matter clearly comes under federal jurisdiction?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): In a general way I think I can answer yes. But, basically, the act comes into play only when there is an application. I would have to inquire whether there has been such an application, but to my knowledge there has not.

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF INDIANS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): A supplementary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Bearing in mind the statement the Minister of the Environment made to the effect that various government departments were looking into the ramifications of the James Bay project and in view of the fact that the minister did not mention the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, can the hon. gentleman tell us whether his department is bearing in mind the need to preserve the rights of the Indians living in this area and assure their welfare?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are following closely the negotiations that have been taking place between the Indians of Quebec and the provincial government. We are in constant consultation with the Quebec Indians Association and we shall intervene in due course.

* * *

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Considering the great interest shown by the Canadian people for the activities of the Joint Committee on the Constitution and considering that, for several reasons, this committee was unable to submit its final report to the House during the last session, would the Prime Minister be willing to reconstitute this committee so that it may present its recommendations during the current session?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the leader of the House has indicated his intention to try to get the opposition parties to agree to the reconstitution of this committee so that it may present its report.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

TAXATION

REASONS FOR REMISSION OF SALES TAX TO GREAT CANADIAN OIL SANDS LIMITED

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the President of the Treasury Board arising out of an Order in Council passed under the terms of section 17 of the Financial Administration Act in accordance with which $6 million was remitted to Great Canadian Oil Sands Limited as a remission of part of the sales tax paid by that company between 1963 and 1967 when the law required that it should be paid. I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board, who was one of the two ministers who requested this Order in Council, whether he can tell us the reason today for this generosity toward this corporation or whether he will undertake to make a statement explaining these reasons on an early occasion?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I cannot recall the details but I will undertake to ascertain what they are and respond in the House.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Would the President of the Treasury Board be willing to table the report upon the basis of which this decision to remit sales tax to Great Canadian Oil Sands Limited was made? Would he be willing to table that report in the House?

Mr. Drury: I do not think there was a report in a form which would enable it to be tabled. I will find out.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—ISSUANCE OF PASSPORTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question which was referred to him yesterday by the Solicitor General. It refers to the subject of passports. Can the minister tell us, first, whether Geoffroy possessed a passport and, second, whether it was issued prior to his release from the penitentiary or later?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I did take notice of the question asked by the hon. gentleman yesterday. Our records show that no passport has been issued to Geoffroy in his own name. A search of the files in the passport office conducted by the RCMP subsequent to Geoffroy's escape from custody—

An hon. Member: Release.

Mr. Sharp: —indicated that a passport was acquired for him earlier under an assumed name by the submission of forged documents. The hon. gentleman asked about the guarantor. The signature of the guarantor appears to have been part of the forgery. The matter is now in the hands of the police.

Inquiries of the Ministry

• (1500)

Mr. Woolliams: Do I understand from the minister's answer that this forged application, which means that the passport was therefore illegal when it was issued, was made during the short period the accused was in the penitentiary serving a life sentence?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The passport that I referred to, which was not issued, of course, in Geoffroy's name and was not applied for by him, was issued on September 28, 1971.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the investigation of these strange doings would the Secretary of State for External Affairs also cause to be inquired into whether any passport application was made by the lady who eventually because Mrs. Geoffroy, either before or after that event?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, a passport was issued to the lady some time earlier. There was, of course, no reason why she should not have one; we had no reason to suspect any of the events that occurred subsequently.

Mr. McCleave: A further supplementary question. Was the passport issued in her maiden name or, as sometimes happens, issued in the married name, to be delivered after the ceremony itself?

Mr. Sharp: Since the application was made some time earlier, Mr. Speaker, it was made in her maiden name.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I would like to ask the Minister of External Affairs a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Considering the past record and the legal aspects in the Geoffroy case as the trial took place, I would like to know whether the Department of External Affairs got in touch with the Solicitor General's Department before issuing the passport or whether it did it on its own without consideration for the consultations and the work performed by the Solicitor General's office?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: I thought I had made it clear, Mr. Speaker, that no passport has been issued in Geoffroy's name. A passport which we believe Geoffroy is now using was issued in an assumed name, under forged documents.

Mr. Lincoln Alexander (Hamilton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in a position to advise the House if in fact the same guarantors were used with respect to the application for a passport, and whether when the lady's passport was issued a passport for Geoffroy was issued at or around the same time? Also, in view of the fact that we are all awaiting some information as to Geoffroy's whereabouts, is the government intending to post a reward in order to obtain information as to his whereabouts?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Sharp: The passport for Carmen Andrée Parent was issued to her on June 29, 1971, many months in advance of the application made for the passport that we have reason to believe Geoffroy is now using.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

Mr. Alexander: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I put too many questions for the minister to digest, but I did want to know whether in fact the minister has any indication as to who the guarantor was for her passport application. Further, is the government intending to post a reward in order to bring about Mr. Geoffroy's apprehension?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons I hesitate to give more particulars about names, and so on, is one that I am sure the hon. member will understand, namely, that a worldwide search is now going on and to reveal these kinds of details we feel would hamper the operations of the police and of Interpol.

* * *

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF EXTENSION AND ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the initiative shown by many communities across Canada under the Local Initiatives Program and their disappointment that many hundreds of projects will now have to be turned down because of lack of funds, would the acting minister indicate to the House whether consideration is being given to extending the program and increasing the funds available so as to maintain the morale of these people and permit them to submit projects?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no consideration is being given to an extension of the dates.

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the minister announced a number of local initiative projects for Newfoundland several days ago, before other Newfoundland members were aware or were informed of them, would the minister now continue this procedure and use his ministerial position to obtain advance information on Newfoundland local initiative projects that are to be rejected and make public announcements accordingly?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I did rise to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not the only one to rise on a supplementary, but there are about five minutes left till the end of the question period and there are many members from parties on both sides of the House waiting for a chance to ask questions. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton.

* * *

POLLUTION

GREAT LAKES—UNITED STATES VETO OF SEWAGE DISPOSAL PROJECTS—CONTINUATION OF FEDERAL AND ONTARIO CLEAN-UP PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the White House veto of the sewage disposal program, which is going to be a severe setback to the clean-up of the Great Lakes, can we be assured that the federal government and the province of Ontario will continue with their program on the Canadian side?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is yes.

Mr. Cullen: Is it the intention of the federal government to make further representations to the United States to see whether we can change their decision?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the decision referred to in the press today dealt with the funding of local projects. It did not deal with the much larger program that is in an advanced stage of discussion with the United States for the clean-up of the Great Lakes.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DECISION ON REQUEST FOR GRANT BY CANADIAN CO-OPERATIVE IMPLEMENTS LIMITED

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Has he received a telegram from the board of directors of Canadian Co-operative Implements Limited requesting a review of their application for a DREE grant for the construction of a new farm implements factory in St. Boniface, and has a favourable reply been given that the application will be approved in view of the fact—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that we could spend quite a bit of time during this period on questions about individual applications under the program to which the hon. member refers. If he thinks that the matter is urgent perhaps it should be considered at the time of adjournment. In any event he has now brought the matter to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Benjamin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: I am sorry to try Your Honour's patience, but this matter is urgent. The annual meeting of this organization is being held today and the matter involves upward of $3 million. The entire organization is waiting for a reply from the minister.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we are waiting for a piece of information. The corporation knows about this, and as soon as we receive the information we will make a decision.

* * *

TRADE

POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF DOMESTIC INTERNATIONAL SALES CORPORATIONS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PLANS TO OFFSET EFFECTS OF UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Does the government now propose to introduce domestic international sales corporations, or the rough equivalent of such corporations, in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no plan along those lines at the present time.

Mr. Ryan: Will the government make a statement in respect of what it intends to do to offset the very harmful effects on Canadian industry of the DISC program in the United States? If so, when may we expect such a statement?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I cannot add anything to what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said on a previous occasion, namely, that we were considering the effect of the program and deciding whether there would have to be any counter-action by the Canadian government.

* * *

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO HEAR BRIEFS ON PROBLEMS IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. The minister is aware that the proposed journey of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to southwestern Ontario to study certain problems there was postponed as a result of difficulties encountered by Air Canada. Since many bodies spent a great deal of time and effort preparing briefs for the benefit of the committee, will that committee be reconstituted at an early date so there will be an opportunity for the presentation of these briefs?

● (1510)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I assume, this being a new session, that the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications will be reconstituted. Of course, it is the master of its own affairs in terms of bringing forward such a recommendation. If one were to be brought forward, I would consider it sympathetically.

* * *

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION ACT

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration will be away from the House for several days, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. With regard to the list of bills he tabled on the first day of the session, can the Prime Minister tell us whether or not the government has given up any intention of amending the Immigration Act and the Immigration Appeal Board Act, in view of the situation that now exists and the fact that the former minister promised that such amending bills would be passed early in the new session?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when changes were made, I asked the new minister to study the matter and report either to me or to the cabinet. Unfortunately, he has not yet had a chance to make that report.

* * *

[English]

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—OPPORTUNITY FOR REPRESENTATIONS BY THOSE AFFECTED FOLLOWING ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW SITE

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the speculation that the new international airport for the Toronto region may be located in the Pickering area of Ontario riding, would the minister give his assurance that after any announcement individuals and groups affected will have a reasonable and ample opportunity to express their views and, hopefully, have them taken into account with regard to the advisability of any proposed location?

Mr. Alexander: The minister gave that assurance one year ago.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I gave that assurance quite some time ago. I am quite prepared to reaffirm it and say that, wherever the location happens to be, ample opportunity will be provided for public participation.

* * *

NATIONAL REVENUE

FREEZING OF ESTATES OF PERSONS WHO HAVE DIED SINCE FIRST OF YEAR

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Can he advise whether his department is freezing estates of those Canadians who have died since the start of this year in a number of provinces and, if so, on what statutory authority?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE TO BANGLA DESH

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question following the one to which he replied on Monday. Can he indicate what Canadian aid is now going to Bangla Desh and, particularly, can he advise if the lost or diverted shiploads of wheat have been directed to a port in that country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, $22 million has been allocated for the relief of those who were refugees in India. Seven million dollars in wheat has also been allocated to Bangla Desh and $500,000 has been made available in cash to the United Nations' relief operation there. Of that total, $11.5 million has been channelled through international organizations and Canadian voluntary agencies. Over one half of the $7 million in wheat has been delivered. The remainder has been shipped and will be delivered shortly. The entire $500,000 given to the United Nations organization has been disbursed. Also, part of that $7 million of wheat is the subject of legal action by the government of Canada for recovery.

* * *

INDIANS AFFAIRS

ATTENDANCE OF DEPARTMENTAL OBSERVER AT INQUEST INTO DEATH OF INDIAN WOMAN

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is an observer from his department to attend the inquest into the death of an Indian woman at Sandy Lake, northern Ontario? I understand the inquest is to take place tomorrow. I ask this question in view of the wide implications involved in this case as to the adequacy or inadequacy of health services throughout northern Ontario.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am taking note of the suggestion of the hon. member. I shall inquire and ask an official of my department to attend the coroner's inquest as an observer.

* * *

TRANSPORT

PROMOTION OF DEVELOPMENT AND PRODUCTION OF DHC-7 STOL AIRCRAFT

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. What progress is the government making toward promoting the development and production of the DHC-7 STOL aircraft?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister should attempt to reply briefly because we have almost run out of time.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that it would be quite impossible to give a detailed answer. However, I can say that we are in constant touch with the de Havilland Company on this subject.

* * *

NATURAL RESOURCES

OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS—POSSIBLE AMENDMENT OF GOVERNMENT PROPOSAL TO PROVINCES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Can he indicate to the House and to the people of the Atlantic provinces whether the government has now moved away from the 50-50 sharing formula respecting offshore mineral rights? Also, has he any comment on Premier Regan's announcement that the federal government appears to be moving toward a much more relaxed position—

Mr. Baldwin: "Realistic."

Mr. Forrestall: —a much more realistic position which would assure a good share of that revenue for our Atlantic provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have all been quite relaxed about it ever since the Supreme Court decided in that case which was not dissimilar to the one to which the hon. member has referred that this was under federal authority and jurisdiction. As the federal government, we felt that we had to speak for the rights of the people of all Canada. In these negotiations with the provinces we have always indicated that we would be flexible and if any reasonable solution could be found we would be happy to agree to it. The provinces themselves, the hon. member might not know, had several attempts at agreeing among themselves as to what might be done, but they never came up with any proposal to the federal government. I understand that the new Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources plans to visit some of the premiers and discuss these matters with them in the near future.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member might ask his supplementary briefly, after which the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Waterloo for one last question.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, would the right hon. gentleman indicate whether he has instructed, or given authority to the new Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to indicate, in his discussions, flexibility with respect to the 50-50 sharing arrangement? Is he allowed to negotiate a better sharing arrangement for the provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: A what?

Mr. Forrestall: Has the Prime Minister given the minister authority to offer the provinces a better deal?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I just answered generally that we had been flexible all along on some kind of arrangement. We put our proposal forward in the hope that we would get agreement on it. One of my intentions in appointing this particular minister is that he is well known for his flexibility—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —and therefore he would be accommodating.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: God help us.

* * *

ENERGY

POSSIBLE MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINES—CONSIDERATION OF PUBLIC OWNERSHIP IN STUDY

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and refers to the study that his department is conducting which deals with the problem of constructing pipelines along the Mackenzie River valley and a second study involving a major policy review of resources and energy. I ask the minister whether this study will include methods of financing and forms of ownership and, if so, will the study give consideration to public ownership of pipelines in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the study in question will be a very extensive one regarding the development both of energy and mineral resources. I think it very likely that incident to that study, the two points the hon. member has mentioned will come up. Very obviously, with the very extensive jurisdiction that the federal government has established and our planned pattern of pipeline and resource development, and our current participation through companies like Panarctic Oils, the government's presence in that area is going to be a very pervasive one.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DEFERMENT OF VOTES ON AMENDMENTS TO ADDRESS IN REPLY TO SPEECH FROM THE THRONE—ITEMS FOLLOWING END OF DEBATE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order dealing with the business of the House. There will be two votes tonight on the issue before the House and, provided the government survives them, other amendments may be moved tomorrow that would normally be voted on on Friday. The leader of the House may feel that hon. members might like the weekend in which to reflect and contemplate on their positions with regard to those votes. There has been some suggestion that any vote which normally would be taken under the Standing Orders on Friday might well be taken at a quarter to ten Monday evening.

Also, would the government House leader indicate what business the government intends to call after the Speech from the Throne debate has been concluded on Tuesday of next week?

• (1520)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am glad my hon. friend has realized there is no doubt about survival and is asking me to indicate government business following the vote. I would hope that on the first day we would call the bill in respect of fiscal payments, followed by the bill to amend the British North America Act with regard to readjustment of representation, followed by the CNR bill and the bill to amend the Explosives Act, which will be carried by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Baldwin: He is explosive enough.

Mr. MacEachen: With regard to the holding of any votes on amendments which might be moved tomorrow or later, it would be agreeable to the government, if the House agrees, that all questions be put at 9.30 p.m. on Monday next, that the votes be held after the regular time for the ringing of the bells and that votes normally to be held on Friday would be deferred until that time. If that is agreeable, it could be made a House order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is agreeable to us, and perhaps it could be made a House order right now so it will be clear.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Tuesday, February 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ross Whicher for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 34), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Caouette (p. 117).

[Mr. Baldwin.]

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, yesterday when the House adjourned I was asking the government to implement the policies embodied in the Speech from the Throne or, if you like, to implement the policy statements contained in the speech.

It is not our statements that count, but our actions present and future. They can alter the economy or correct what is wrong. That is what we shall do. We will eliminate the abuses we are aware of in our capitalist system.

If our two ethnic groups were antagonists, the future of Canada would be dreary, but if we can find grounds for agreement, the chances for peace and progress will be improved since, whatever our ethnic origins, we are faced with the same needs and pursue the same objectives.

Every citizen wants his share of the benefits of progress and of the economy as a whole.

To this end, let us set out together on the march of the coming sixteen months. We may take different roads, but they all lead to the same goal. Canadians have been waiting a long time and they witness what we are doing.

Mr. Speaker, what type of economy will we be passing on to our descendants? Will we have sufficient will-power to build up a well balanced economy? Will we have the courage to place all our institutions at the service of members of society? That is what the Speech from the Throne advocates. Will we have the necessary drive to organize the economy so as to eliminate disparities once and for all, to do away with a part of the federal and provincial debts which are strangling our citizens? Mr. Speaker, will we have the courage to call for adoption of regulations required to achieve the opposite of taxes and levies, which is a guaranteed income for all?

• (1530)

Will we have the courage to enforce the rules that are required if all that is physically possible is to become, once and for all, financially so?

Today, we are far from those realities.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the excitement and the promise of modern technological achievements become hollow and mocking to the citizens who find in society little understanding of their hopes and little provision for their needs.

We must remove the impression of isolation which so often surrounds men and women, depriving them of their sense of responsibility, of accomplishment, of fulfilment, and removing from them their identity as individuals. We must, Mr. Speaker, remove the barriers that create isolation, permit each Canadian to detect his own responsibilities.

We in this place have a special responsibility to help bring these goals and those hopes within reach, to husband our resources and share them justly among this generation and those to follow so that our society will believe in the dignity of every single individual.

Those are the objectives we will be asked to study during this new session. Economic security is one of the most effective forces with which to counter social isolation. Job opportunities must be found and income uncertainties overcome if all Canadians are to share in the richness of this land.

Mr. Speaker, I have just repeated the most beautiful remarks contained in the speech made at the opening of the current session by the Governor General who asked the Divine Providence to guide us in our deliberations.

To recognize the dignity of every human being, to ensure that all his vital needs are met, conquer the social isolation of the individual, to overcome economic uncertainties, to multiply jobs, that is what the Speech from the Throne advocates and that is what I ask the government to achieve.

Mr. Speaker, for the members of the House, the program is already laid out. There remains only to devise a realistic formula allowing us to reach those objectives. Will that formula be applied in such a way that each Canadian citizen will have his rights and prerogatives spared?

It is already a step forward, if not a total achievement, to wish that our huge resources and our plentiful reserves be managed wisely and equitably shared and allocated. Now, we must put through the economic and financial technique necessary to achieve these quite definite objectives in the best interests of every Canadian citizen.

In order to achieve the goal of full participation by all members of society, all factors leading to isolation must be removed.

We cannot invite respect for our laws and support for our institutions from persons to whom they are irrelevant or ineffective. Government activities must reflect the needs of all Canadians, not only the favoured few.

It is the view of the government that the most important single factor in the attainment of individual dignity and active social involvement is the assurance of a secure income. The new bill to be introduced before the House in that respect means a considerable step towards progress. The "total income security program" is the most important issue mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. These words "total income security" for each Canadian are a summary of all the objectives of a civilized and developed country.

But it is not enough to have a high level of production thanks to our natural resources and our up-to-date techniques because this production must be used up. And how can we have consumption of this increasing production with decreasing or inadequate incomes? This is what is happening now. Income must be tailored to the country's ever increasing production and its people's needs.

As for the Speech from the Throne, many people and mainly journalists are trying to find the government's intentions about the date of the election which must take place this year or next year. While respecting this useless initiative from our public scribblers who do not know how to waste their time and their readers' time, I would like to state my opinion on the necessity of a general election in this difficult period.

First, this government with a strong majority has been elected for five years and can stay in power until July 1973 without being accused of power abuse. Second, with its overwhelming majority the government would have nothing to gain by risking a general election before the legal date.

In my opinion, it should take all the time required to implement its 1968 program and establish a united Canada and a just society. All Canadians are expecting it and this is alluded to a number of times in the Speech from the Throne.

Third, the government with its overwhelming majority should take advantage of the next 16 months to use the experience gained over the first years of its mandate for completing its program of a just society in a united Canada.

That is my point of view. If reporters feverishly hope for an early election, we members can feverishly hope for a well-fulfilled mandate. Who could blame us? There is no serious reason for a majority government elected for a five-year term to resign before the end of their mandate. Let us do away with the excitement of an early election and make use of our energy, our talents, our goodwill to benefit as much as we can from the experience we have had since 1968, with a trained group as regards parliamentary techniques.

Mr. Speaker, the objectives set in the Speech from the Throne, although vague and imprecise, enable us to express all possible hopes as to better distribution of wealth or of the national production, better distribution of income, having regard to the needs and dignity of every citizen, every family, taking into account the tremendous national production of the current year. The idea is there. The wish is clearly expressed. The time has come now for legislative and administrative action that will enable us to provide for better distribution of personal family income, due to the social commitment of all Canadian producers, according to their talents and their capital.

Fourth, Mr. Speaker, not worrying anymore about an early general election, the government with its great majority will be able to make the most of the 16 coming months of their mandate so as to bring together economically, socially, financially and even politically, the two extremes of this disunited and unbalanced Canada—the very poor and the very rich.

• (1540)

All this is also superbly expressed in the Speech from the Throne, if we take the trouble of analyzing it with an open and practical mind. We find two excerpts which let us foresee a promising future. If we eagerly set ourselves to task, our social, family and national spirit will be improved. Here are those two excerpts:

It is the view of the Government that the most important single factor in the attainment of individual dignity and active social involvement is the assurance of a secure income. Considerable progress towards the goal of a total income security programme for all Canadians is achieved in the new Family Income Security Plan bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has now expired.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne—when one takes the pleasure of analyzing it, as the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) has just put it—contains several subjects which fall more or less directly, more or less exclusively, under my ministerial jurisdiction. I say "more or less" because, in a modern government, very seldom does a subject fall completely within the jurisdiction of one minister or one department. Usually, several departments are concerned with the same subject.

These subjects are many; here are a few: the required co-operation between the public and private sectors, between government and industry in particular; the application of science and technology to industrial development; the importance of progress for the touristic sector, the promotion and diversification of exports, on which I am pleased to speak today in answer to the speech of my hon. friend the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees); the need to entertain good relations with foreign countries, the United States and the European Community in particular; and the need for an industrial strategy "prepared for the peculiar character of the Canadian economy." Mr. Speaker, these are but a few of the subjects which are contained in the Speech from the Throne and which interest me particularly, professionally, if I may say so.

Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a program for a whole session, considering the scope of the subjects. Within the next nine or ten months, I shall therefore be pleased to announce certain measures under each of these headings and even under others which are not there, such as the training of business managers. We intend to contribute somehow to the training of "managers" to put it in the style of Burnham.

In most cases, and I am pointing it out right now, such measures will be taken within the framework of existing legislation; there will not be new laws. I do believe that this does not reduce the significance of the bills we are going to announce. I even think that, in general, all the governments in the world have a tendency to exaggerate the significance of legislation with regard to decisions taken in accordance with existing laws.

Today, I want to refer to measures dealing in particular with the promotion and diversification of exports, in my reply to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

In a few months from now—I do not want to be too accurate about it because it is too risky—I shall have the nerve to bring in a comprehensive industrial policy, an industrial strategy which has been shaping up in my department during the last few months. I say the nerve, because it will be needed, so enormous is the undertaking. Mouthfuls of platitudes are being uttered on the subject of industrial strategy, and have been for so long!

The speech made by the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is a fairly obvious sample. First, he told us he would explain for our benefit what an industrial strategy, an economic strategy as presented by the Progressive Conservatives would be like. I must congratulate him on having dared to do this, but it is not enough to say that one will speak on a subject; what is actually being said on it is also important.

Then, if we consider—and I have done so with care—the account given by the leader of the opposition of this economical or industrial strategy, what is there to be found? He stated, and justly so, that it is important to establish priorities, to co-ordinate the action of the different departments—I agree with him on this—to strengthen the regions where expansion is slow, without making the rich ones poorer. Then he goes on to list what he calls the essential objectives: job creation, levelling of regional disparities, constant economic development, export promotion, fish conservation, fight against inflation, protection for pensioners, protection of family farms, etc.

Mr. Speaker, that is all very interesting, even very useful, but those are mere pious platitudes. And, I know whereof I speak, because I also have spoken such platitudes. You can see how honest I can be, but I never had the idea of calling that an industrial strategy.

But it is not enough to say: Here are the objectives. It is not enough to say: Here is what we should do. The problem becomes interesting when such objectives are compared, when some effort is made to relate them to one another. Then exchanges are required, compromises, and bargaining. It is not possible to have all of that at the same time.

If I say, for instance, that we should work harder for fish conservation, it is quite possible that operators will be more interested in the sale and export of fish. So, you have a conflict between conservationists and fishmongers. It is the same thing in many cases and one must make choices.

The hon. leader of the Progressive Conservative party told us that we should also have good relations with the private sector and the provinces. Again, all this is pious statements and commonplaces. Everybody agrees. But there are times when there is systematic opposition between the interests of provinces and those of the federal government, their interests being different because they serve very different groups of people. So, even if you want to be nice and friendly to everyone, it will not be possible because you will have to make choices.

And while I was listening to him, I wondered: Is the leader of the official opposition going to indicate some choice that he has made himself? To my great bewilderment, he said, suggesting incentives for productivity, and I quote:

...au moyen d'un programme de mesures visant à encourager les initiatives des Canadiens dans tous les secteurs du commerce, de l'industrie, de l'agriculture et des autres occupations.

I could not believe it. I checked the English version and found the same idea, unfortunately:

—in all branches of business, industry, farming and other occupations.

This is not a choice, saying: We are going to encourage industrial development, or development "in all branches of business, industry, farming and other occupations".

• (1550)

It is often said that to govern is to choose. Similarly, to establish an industrial policy is to choose. It is quite possible that through one's choice—and this is normal—one might promote the development of one particular sector of trade or industry over another, and one can very easily be led to say, that sector is not efficient, it has no future, not only will we not encourage it to develop but even encourage it not to develop.

This is the kind of thing a valid industrial policy should hold. Mr. Speaker, it is not surprising to see that in the circumstances there are but few people who are prepared to make those choices, and then it is normal for the opposition to say to the government, make those choices and we will be able to criticize them once you have made them.

In the months to come I intend to expose myself, to be audacious and I will start by making a few speeches on that subject, so as to set the debate on the right track.

The first will be on the complexity of the task, on the complexity of developing an industrial policy, an industrial strategy, that is the difficulties of setting up specific goals which can meet the consensus of a majority of the population. It is not an easy thing to do. One can come up with all kinds of philosophical thoughts in favour of maternity without of course making enemies but when it comes down to setting up more specific goals, of course, this becomes more complicated.

I will be discussing in that speech the need to recognize all the factors involved, whether they be historical, geographical, constitutional, cultural, etc., and the difficulty to co-ordinate tax, monetary, trade, tariff, scientific, educational policies, etc., as well as the lack of a central unit of political and economic power in Canada. People say, let the federal government develop an industrial strategy, just as if the federal government had supreme authority over the provinces and private industry, as if we were in Prussia, in the 19th century, and we asked a general of the Prussian army to indicate his strategy. He would do it because they had only one decision centre. But it is not the same in Canada, in 1972. In other words—

Mr. Barnett: Demagogue or demagogues!

Mr. Pepin: —if my hon. friend of the NDP thinks that we will have a "gosplan", Russian style, he is making a mistake.

It is not what the people expect from their government.

Mr. Barnett: Fewer speeches and more action.

Mr. Pepin: In my second speech, I would like to define the experiments that have already taken place in this area of industrial strategy.

An hon. Member: May I ask a question?

Mr. Pepin: I am sorry, I will answer any number of questions when I am through.

I would like to talk about the experiments that have been tried already in some sectors of Canadian industry. It is common knowledge that my department and others as well have experimented with various industrial strategies in different fields such as electronics, textiles and ship-building. These experiments covered streamlining and specialization.

A study will have to be made of the experiments in order to recognize what problems are likely to occur and what solutions can be worked out.

Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression that many of those who speak of industrial strategy are not aware that such strategy does exist. Imperfect or inadequate it may well be, and this I recognize, but it still cannot be said that there is no strategy now which, to my view, would be suggesting that the history of Canada begins with us, with the speaker's appearance on the stage.

I am conservative enough to hold the same view as Burke did when he said he was suspicious of any allegedly new policy. If a policy is new, he said, that means it has no roots, no foundation in reality. It can be seen I have read my conservative authors well.

A new policy emerged the day before from Jupiter's thigh would seem suspicious to me precisely because it has not been subjected to the test of time and experience.

Finally, in the third speech I hope to make within a few months, I should like to outline, so that others may criticise, what an industrial strategy could be, spelling out objectives, criteria, priorities, identification mechanisms, etc.

That is the first step I should like to carry out. The second, consultation, has already been initiated. It is my intention to consult all those concerned in the world of business, labour, and particularly all those who have expressed or will express in the coming months their views on this industrial strategy.

All those who have made speeches or who intend to do so will be summoned and asked to reconcile their arguments with those of others, all of them intelligent and yet who think in a completely different way from them. That is not a threat on my part. On the contrary, I think that people who made representations, who have carried out analyses on the industrial policy, are courageous and deserve to be applauded. We will put their contribution to test, as it were.

So much for industrial strategy.

A few words now on our relations, on current negotiations with the United States. The time is not ripe to deal extensively with this matter. I only hope that it will come soon, after agreement has been reached with the United States on the elimination of certain irritants.

I only have two comments, Mr. Speaker. The first relates to the manner in which current negotiations are carried out; the second concerns its content. As to the way the negotiations are carried out, I can only mention that there are in our midst doves and hawks, people who show a policy of no compromise, like the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis), who was saying on television the other day:

Show them that we are self-reliant—

Mr. Speaker, I think this approach is childish. Few countries in the world can be described as "self-reliant" and the Americans themselves are just coming out of an ordeal where they had to call on the co-operation of many countries in order to solve a problem of their own, which was an international problem as well.

I fail to see how Canada can go out and preach on the international scene saying: "The hon. member for York South has asked us to tell you that we are self-reliant." This is mere bragging and I do not think it is the proper attitude to take.

In this respect, one can notice, for example, a difference in tone between the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) and his House leader (Mr. Baldwin). I appreciated the way in which he made his remarks the other night on television and I think it should be put on record. When asked to state his opinion on the ongoing negotiations with the United States the House leader said:

[English]

Now we're going to be awfully lonely in the trading world if we get too tough with the United States. That doesn't mean that on the good points we should fight, but if we get into a trade war with the United States, you know that it's not going to be their blood, or at least threre is going to be more of our blood on the floor than that of the United States. And I think that there are, many of the people in Congress... itching for a protectionist war, and I think we have to be very careful, possibly make some concessions which under other circumstances we might not. That doesn't mean that we have to give away things.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I consider that good philosophy and I do not laugh at the House leader of the Conservative party. As would any intelligent person, he has evaluated the vigorous approach and the diplomatic approach, so to speak, and this is what we are endeavouring to achieve in adopting a reasonable way.

Recently, I was asked several times to make public Canada's offer, to make public the compromise, the conditional agreement that has been reached. I had a little joke about that yesterday when I said that my son Nicholas, and even Justin, the Prime Minister's son, were better negotiators than those who suggested that. When my son wants something from me or from his mother, he does not tell us right away what he will settle for. He manœuvres, he tries to sell and to buy at the same time!

Well, it seems to me that the fact that, in spite of what has leaked on this matter in the United States, the Americans did not make that agreement public, but suggested that the door remains open, is a good omen. I think we should follow their lead. It shows that there is still room for give and take.

Therefore I believe that it would be rather unwise to make public now the terms of that conditional agreement. But it will be made public in due time and, as for me, I will be very pleased about that.

[Mr. Pepin.]

As far as the actual content of the negotiations is concerned, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings did really see, the other day, what the problem is all about namely that our talks with the United States deal with two sets of facts. Firstly, there are the irritants, that is all the minor difficulties and problems in the relations between Canada and the United States. But there is a second aspect which is much more important, much more fundamental, and that is the trade balance between our two countries. In the United States there are some people who would like to seize the opportunity to amend, to reduce, and even to eliminate Canada's surplus in that trade balance.

And this, indeed, is a matter other than the solution of irritants. And if we are not in agreement yet, one reason is in fact that negotiations went on at those two levels concurrently. We should decide what we are talking about. For our part, we are talking about the balanced package of irritants, and this is not the same thing as the trade balance between the two countries.

And if I may criticize the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, it would be for the conclusion he drew the other day while commenting on a remark from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I quote:

Yet the United States government has been able to con this government into believing that we have some responsibility to right this imbalance...Canadian industry will have to make sacrifices that will cost jobs in this country.

The least that can be said is that this is not yet true. The hon. member has no right to judge that we have.

Mr. Hees: Nobody has said you are going to give in.

Mr. Pepin: On the contrary.

Mr. Hees: Sharp said it out in Winnipeg.

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member misinterpreted what the minister said. The fact that agreement has not been reached would imply, to anyone willing to look objectively at the situation, that this "conning" job has not taken place.

• (1600)

Mr. Hees: Do you want to bet you will not make a lot of concessions

Mr. Pepin: You are writing history before it takes place. Let us be friendly and say that one ought to suspend judgment on that particular item, because there is no proof yet to conclude.

Mr. Hees: It is obvious what is going to happen.

Mr. Pepin: All right; let us agree to disagree. My last point has to do with export promotion. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees)—I am giving him special attention today—is always funny; he is always entertaining even when he is trying to be nasty. The description he gave of my behaviour while on trade missions, of going from luncheons to dinners, is really the height of caricature. I suggest it should be included in a book of humour on Canadian politics. I do not intend to defend myself today. I rest my defence on the opinions of businessmen and newspapermen who went with me to China, the U.S.S.R., Algeria or Japan. I rest my case on what they said on the subject.

For fear, however, that some future readers of Hansard might think the former minister was only reminiscing on his own when he prepared that description of my behaviour, I should like to say here in public that what he said about me was a caricature which does not describe the conduct that he himself followed when he was Minister of Trade and Commerce. He was really working for Canadian exporters, and I would appreciate it very much if he could accord me the courtesy of presuming that I am doing the same.

Mr. Hees: I think your heart is in the right place. I am wondering about your methods.

Mr. Pepin: Very well, let us consider methods then. The hon. member made three main suggestions. The first was that we should send out 25 missions a year composed of businessmen. The second was that we should bring to Canada from abroad between 600 and 700 businessmen a year. I think I am quoting him accurately. He added that we should wine and dine and entertain them. I do not think he could have meant that, since he had already condemned me for going from one dinner to another. His third recommendation was that we should arrange meetings between businessmen and officials of my department. These are very good ideas. I agree with them.

The only difficulty is that we are already doing all those things; we have been doing them for two or three years. I am disappointed; I thought the hon. member was a devoted reader of the Financial Post, the Financial Times, Le Devoir, the Globe and Mail, the Vancouver Sun, all those respectable newspapers which have been reporting my activities extensively in the last months and years.

I shall demonstrate this. First, as to missions. This year we have received about 25 incoming missions. The situation with regard to outgoing missions is different. I simply say that because a technique was good three or five or ten years ago does not mean the same technique will remain good for centuries to come. We have found by analysis that this type of businessmen's mission may not be the best. As a matter of fact, we have decided to adopt one of the other suggestions the hon. member was making the other day; we have decided to make better use of our money by sending specialist missions abroad.

Suppose, let us say, that there is a question involving the entry of apples to Japan. We recruit a group of specialists and interested businessmen in Canada and send them out as a technical mission. I am citing an actual case. Or suppose there is a problem involving the entry of tobacco into Japan. Well, we send a technical mission made up of tobacco growers. We believe this to be a more precise and effective instrument. It is the difference between using an axe and working with a scalpel.

The hon. member says we should bring businessmen here from abroad—he suggests between 600 and 700 a year. Well, we have been doing this for the last three years. Last year 700 came and this year we are expecting between 900 and 1,000. We are doing more than this. We are developing an entirely new set of programs for participation in capital projects abroad, for participation in market development, for participation by individual manufacturers in trade fairs. We say to an exporter, "You have been putting in three or four bids in the last few months and you are short of money. We shall pay 50 per cent of the cost of the next bid, or 50 per cent of the cost of bringing a prospective purchaser into Canada." If it works, the businessman pays the money back. If it doesn't, he forgets it and so do we.

We have also set up a market development group which is at work now putting things together—people producing equipment, people offering services, financial sources. The group spends its time putting these three components together. In other words, we are already much ahead of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

The hon. member does not like the type of mission I led recently to many countries, Algeria, China, Japan, and so on. These missions are not made up of politicians only. They are tripartite in nature and I should like to underline this fact. There is usually a politician or two included: my parliamentary secretary was in the last one. Usually missions also include five, eight or a dozen officials from my department and a few more from the embassy of the country we are visiting. The Canadian ambassador is generally of great help to us. For example, Mr. Moran in Japan did a splendid job for the mission there. Then there is also a group of businessmen with the mission. What is wrong with that?

Mr. Hees: It's good, but you do not do enough.

Mr. Pepin: Last year missions went to Japan, Germany, the U.S.S.R., China, Algeria, Morocco and Israel—and the hon. member protests when I am not in the House!

Mr. Hees: I have never done that.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired. Unless he gets unanimous consent from the House, he cannot continue his speech. Is the House prepared to allow the minister to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Pepin: On those last five missions I have taken with me 102 businessmen and they have done extremely well for the missions.

If I had more time I would go into great detail as to the way in which we conduct these missions and determine their modus operandi. For example, when we went to the Soviet Union the problem was one involving two countries whose products and resources are not complementary, so we developed mixed groups. We established seven of these groups in order to assess Canada's good points in the fields of technology, equipment, and so on, and decide how exchanges of technology and goods could take place. In China, the problem was a lack of information about the goods which that country was prepared to import. We solved this problem by getting the Chinese government to accept that each year there would be consultation between the two governments at which time China would indicate its import intentions for the year ahead. This constitutes quite an advantage. This meeting took place last December.

● (1610)

The difficulty in Japan was of penetrating the import system with manufactured products. This problem may have been solved by a sort of moral commitment given to us by the Japanese government that they would welcome such a move on our part, and then an approach was made to the big trading companies of Japan to try to convince them they should become involved in the process of bringing Canadian manufactured goods into Japan not only in their own interests but in the interests of Japan and Canada.

This is now being done. During the last few days we have had responses from four big Japanese trading companies, Mitsubishi, Sumitomo, Mitsui and Marubeni, and two of these companies have announced that they are going to send a trade mission to Canada to identify and buy. That is all to the good and is exactly the sort of thing my hon. friend would do, I am sure, were he still minister of trade and commerce. So when the hon. member says that we have gone back to doing business as usual, the facts are quite different; that at least I can say.

The hon. member also said we should arrange some meetings between officers of ITC and the business community. This is an obsession with the department. We estimated today that during the last year officers of the department have taken part in from 200 to 300 seminars, panels and what not, and members of the House from all parties have seen my officers in their own ridings on many occasions doing promotion for our programs.

As a matter of fact, if I may say so smilingly, we have taken a leaf from the hon. member's book in that we have arranged a big trade commissioners' conference. I do not have time to give any details, but there was a communiqué issued a few days ago on this subject. We are bringing them back as the hon. member did in 1960 and 1963, but with some more refinement, of course. The refinement is that we are not bringing them all back at the same time. We have divided the world into three parts and we are bringing in each of these groups of senior commissioners at different times.

We have also arranged for co-operation with the CMA and CEA in a somewhat more systematic fashion than my hon. friend did in 1960 and 1963. I was speaking to my good friend a moment ago and he asked me why it is that Canadians do not seem to be well aware of these events. I regret that, because I had taken it for granted that the hon. member read all of the communiqués, the Financial Post, the Globe and Mail and Le Devoir. Good Canadian businessmen have shown interest. Perhaps I am being a bit blunt or severe, but I think most hon. members of the House are aware of these things. Another point of detail is that we have published a paper entitled "Commerce Exterieur", and "Canada Commerce", which used to be sent to about 5,000 Canadian businessmen but now goes out to about 20,000. There is hardly a businessman worthy of the name who does not get a copy.

There are many other matters I could touch on. For example, I should like to have time to explain how the EDC—the Export Development Corporation—is growing. For example, average loans granted by EDC between 1960 and 1969 amounted annually to about $50 million. Last year the figure was $340 million and this year it is expected to be from $400 million to $500 million. It is not only a question of quantity but quality too. EDC is now working much better with the private banking systems than was the case previously. All kinds of ways and means are being found to increase this joint approach. I can give more information on this subject later.

Abroad EDC has developed a technique, which I think is a good one, whereby it establishes re-lending facilities. For example, EDC makes a loan to a local industrial development corporation, as was the case in Algeria, and that agency becomes a re-lending outlet for EDC. Rather cleverly, we are using their personnel to do the job for us.

Those hon. members who read the newspapers will be aware that in recent months we made available about $100 million worth of loans through EDC financing in countries like Algeria, Iran and Israel. In Yugoslavia, for example, Canada sold through EDC and a private bank 110 locomotives manufactured in London, Ontario, which was the biggest sale of locomotives in the history of mankind. You cannot do much better than that.

The same thing is happening in Korea, in Venezuela and elsewhere. There are so many instances I could cite, but I see my time is up. I just wanted to cheer up the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings and to reassure him that I think the department is in good hands. Some of my officials served him well during his years. They are still as intelligent as they were then and we have some new ones, all doing a wonderful job for Canada.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the speech of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) with a great deal of interest and rapt attention. I must say at the outset that he demonstrated an absolute genius for philosophical dissertation, perhaps second to none in the House. But let me hasten to add that, like every other professor I have known, he seems to have an absolute phobia for thoroughly confusing the issue.

In the time allocated to me I should like to deal with some aspects of the Speech from the Throne and then, if I may, with some of the remarks made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. If I may first deal with the Speech from the Throne in a most serious vein, never have we as Canadians experienced a time of greater unease and worry than today. We are worrying about the future of our homes, the future of our jobs and the future of our country.

I think that the Speech from the Throne was looked forward to by Canadians with perhaps more than the usual expectation. Most citizens were aware that we were approaching the time when we would be facing a federal election, so most of them expected a Speech from the Throne in which the government would try by every conceivable means to encourage voters to support it. I think they also expected that demonstrated in the Speech from the Throne would be an easily understandable program for Canada which would serve to assuage some of the uneasiness that Canadians are experiencing today.

Those of us who heard the Speech from the Throne and have listened to interpretations of it via the media, the press, radio and television, must certainly have realized almost immediately that the Speech from the Throne itself was nebulous, ethereal, that it did not come to grips with the basic problems facing us today. Like most speeches from the throne that we have heard lately, it dealt with considerations, contemplations, promises of action for the future. But in no way did it give concrete evidence that the government would come to grips with the problems that are bothering Canadians today.

• (1620)

As Canadians, we have two things to go on in considering our government. This government is approaching an election. We want to know what the government's program will be. As opposition members, we want to know what we will be up against when we go out to face the people. The people of Canada want to know what the government is proposing for them.

At a recent meeting in Ottawa, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is reported to have assured his party followers that one of the biggest problems facing their party today is that Canadians in general are not familiar with that party's accomplishments and record. Well, in the short time allocated to me this afternoon I will try to put on record some of those accomplishments. I begin by saying that some of the government's achievements are achievements that no government could have been expected to accomplish in a single term of office. I speak of the highest unemployment rate in the history of Canada, of the highest cost of living to which Canadians have ever been subjected, of the highest rents, the highest interest rates, the greatest number of business failures, the greatest budgetary deficit and the greatest amount of confusion that this country has ever witnessed.

Why any Prime Minister would urge his government to go out and face the country on the basis of that record is beyond me. That indicates to me that here is another record. Here we have a Prime Minister who acually has less conception than anybody else as to how the people of the country feel about his record.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, no one in this country in any way doubts the intellectual capacities of our Prime Minister. What bothers me is that in approaching our major problems the Prime Minister seems to be obsessed with the idea that in arriving at solutions he must apply some kind of scientific policy of balance and counterbalance. In other words, when he is faced with a force, he tries to summon a counterforce to meet it. It appears that he likes to sit back and, in an intellectual way, observe what actually happens and then react on the basis of his observations. That might be all right as an intellectual exercise in a university or college, but such an approach has been almost fatal for Canada and is one of the basic reasons for our present dilemma.

To illustrate my point may I give examples of this force and counterforce of which I have spoken and show how tragic is the result. One of the things we face today in Canada that is most divisive is the pitting of French versus English. The Prime Minister, by policies which were subject to interpretation and misinterpretation, has caused these two factions to become polarized in Canada to a degree we have never before experienced. I am terribly afraid that extremists on both sides will be using this polarization as a lever to divide our country further.

Then a program was initiated deliberately which turned consumers against retailers to such a degree that the government was encouraged to set up the Department of Consumer Affairs. There again, one Canadian faction was pitted against another Canadian faction. Also, labour was pitted against management. Not only did this government not attempt to anticipate labour problems; it seemed almost gleefully to anticipate them, to see what would happen in a confrontation. The way this government has dealt with unions involved in the public service gives further credence to the point I am trying to establish.

No one will deny that in Canada today there is antagonism between the provinces and the federal government and that we are not making progress in co-operation between the provinces and the federal governments to the degree experienced in the past. The situation has not been helped by some of the pronouncements of the right hon. gentleman regarding the character of some of the premiers of the provinces. That is another instance of force and counterforce. I could go on. Tremendous emphasis has been put on the matter of youth versus the establishment. We know about the tremendous emotional impact of legislation dealing with human problems. I am speaking of abortion and all the other aspects of that particular bill.

The latest action that is causing consternation across this country is the apparently deliberate attempt to cause a division of feeling in this country toward the United States. To illustrate further what I mean by balance and counterbalance, let me say this: it is reported that our Prime Minister, during his visit to Moscow, made a statement which indicated that we need the help of Russia to counterbalance the effect of the United States on our economy and way of life. There, again, you see an example of force and counterforce, balance and counterbalance, with the Prime Minister sitting back and observing the results. This is a dangerous game in which Canadians cannot possibly win. It may entertain the government, but it is Canadians who will have to pay the tragic bill.

May I now deal with some of the statements made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). I think the minister's opening remarks demonstrated clearly why his policies are not as successful as were the policies of the Minister of Trade and Commerce of the Diefenbaker government. The position is there in the minister's opening remarks for all to see, Mr. Speaker. He spoke—I am paraphrasing, and doing it correctly, I hope—of a total, global industrial policy. He said he was audacious; he said he was brave; he said he was bold. But never in his entire speech did he intimate in any way that he was businesslike—and that is what we need, a businesslike minister.

Mr. Pepin: I thought the terms were synonymous. Businesslike means bold and audacious, surely.

Mr. Hees: Does the minister know what business is all about?

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, in Canada we are in trouble with our industrial program and programs of exports. It was all very well for the minister to quote figures showing that arrangements have been made from which we will in future gain exports involving countless millions of dollars in trade. But that is in the future, and this government has been dealing with the future ever since it took office in 1968.

• (1630)

I do not think the industry of this country will be able to wait much longer for this utopia of the future to which the government constantly points. It is a serious thing when major industries in this country reach the point where either they are not making a profit at all or are making so small a profit as to prevent expansion. It is all very well for the minister and the government to state to the House how well Canada is doing in respect of its export markets, and industrially; but they lose their credibility when we look at the tremendous number of unemployed in this country.

The only way to employ people is to have something for them to do. You cannot have something for them to do when you have an export policy and fiscal and monetary policies which seem to be deliberately designed to curtail industrial capacity rather than expand it. We are in a position in Canada today that is absolutely tragic. We are using industrial funds to pay factories for not producing. We are using taxpayers' money to pay workers not to work. We are paying farmers not to grow crops and we are fining farmers for producing. In no way can we develop an energetic industrial complex by such methods. Then the government uses tremendous sums of money in an attempt to get itself out of the dilemma.

The unfortunate thing is we seem to have such a complexity of departments of government today that it is almost impossible for one department to understand the programs of another department. Therefore, very often one department is working toward an end different from another department. I point out—and this is no secret—that under the regional development program we spend tremendous sums of money on the creation of industries when we have already industries which cannot possibly operate to capacity because the markets do not exist.

In this country, under regional expansion we grant large sums of money to create industries. What is happening, however, is that the industries are moving from one part of Canada to another to take advantage of these loans and grants in order to retool, rebuild and become more efficient at the expense of the taxpayers. We are not creating any jobs. What we are doing is moving the job potential. I do not think this is what the people of Canada expect from this government.

I should like to deal with some of the workings of the minister's department. The government speaks of economic sovereignty. There seems to be a tremendous bent or thrust by this government towards economic sovereignty. We hear about buying Canada back. We heard this in respect of the Canada Development Corporation. At the very time when they are going to buy back Canada and set up a Canadian Development Corporation to buy Canadian industries, the Department of Trade and Commerce is moving in the opposite direction, because since 1968, if my memory serves me correctly, about $314 million in grants for expansion and innovation have been made. Over half this amount was given to four large firms which are controlled by the United States. In this way they are able to expand their holdings in Canada. The money of the taxpayers of Canada is being used in a manner directly opposed to the present policy of the government. This would seem to be a rather strange program.

We have paid out millions of dollars for research. I am speaking in the order of $48 million or $50 million paid out for research. In the 1960's a tremendous amount of research was being carried on. About 25 per cent of the basic research in industry was being carried on in Canada. Under this government, however, the figure is down to 4 per cent in respect of research done in this country under the incentives program of the minister's department.

Mr. Pepin: Where did you get these figures?

Mr. Danforth: They are your department's figures. About 19 per cent of this money goes to the United States' companies and subsidiaries, and only about 7 per cent to Canadian companies. I am not objecting to this; all I am saying is that this is not the policy being enunciated by the Prime Minister and carried out by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Pepin: What is your policy?

Mr. Danforth: The Minister asks what our policy is. The people of Canada will find out in future months when we occupy the seats opposite. Then we will show them what our policy is.

What this country is looking for is a government which knows not only where it is today but where it wants the country to go to tomorrow. It is common knowledge that when this government came into office, the members of the government felt they not only knew all the questions facing the government but also all the answers. In their arrogance they did not accept the advice of the industrialists of this country. They did not accept the advice of the economists of this country. They did not accept the advice of the academics of this country or the people engaged in agriculture. They knew the answers.

For four years now they have made mistake after mistake after mistake, at the cost of the Canadian people. We have never had as many small businesses go bankrupt in any four-year period as we have in the last four years. Canada has never had as many farmers move off the farms in desperation in any four-year period as we have in the last four years. We have never had so many Canadians line up for welfare payments as we have in the last four years.

This government is in trouble because it has not come up with an over-all policy to solve these basic economic problems. It will not do this government any good to point to the United States and say that it is all their fault. Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada know who is responsible for our problems today. It is the men sitting on the treasury benches. It is these men who said they had the answers. They said the answer to the problems today is reform of the tax legislation.

I was very interested to hear one of my colleagues place on the record figures obtained from the Department of National Revenue because these figures did not indicate, as the government has stated, that the tax bill would take hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions of taxpayers off the tax rolls. My colleague put on record the department's own figures which show that it is perhaps in the neighbourhood of 60,000. It is this grandiose exaggeration by the government, trying to obtain plaudits from Canadians, that has got it into the trouble in which it is today. Because this government has been devious and has failed to understand what the ordinary Canadian is troubled with, it will follow its predecessor and go down to defeat.

• (1640)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danforth: To back up my claim that this government does not understand what is happening in Canada today, I refer to the speeches that have been put on record by representatives of the government party. I am ashamed to say that even those government members who spoke for the province of Ontario, men who should know better, said that Canadians have never had it so good. That is the tragedy in Canada today.

Speech from the Throne

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne reads like a document that has been prepared by an aggregate of technocratic bureaucrats living in an ivory tower and completely out of touch with the workaday world occupied by the vast majority of the Canadian people. I do not think I have ever seen a government so completely complacent and self-satisfied as this one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: Nero, fiddling while Rome burned, was a piker compared to this aggregation who fiddle while the people of Canada burn with resentment. I think the statements in the Throne Speech and the statements of various ministers all underscore this complacency and self-satisfaction. I think the most outstanding was the one made by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis), in the city of Vancouver, to a well-heeled and well-dressed audience. The minister was reported by the press as saying:

> There is no doubt about it, Canada's economy is in good shape... it's about time that Canadians themselves woke up to this fact.

The implication is that the people of Canada are sound asleep. The fact is it is the government that needs to wake up to the fact that the Canadian people know the economy is not in good shape. I would like the Minister of the Environment to tell the unemployed in my constituency that the economy is in good shape, or to tell that to the unemployed across Canada where 665,000 were unemployed at the end of January, almost eight out of every 100 workers. If you add to that the number who are taking manpower training, who are also unemployed but not included in the figures, the Indians who are looking for work, the married women who have retired from the labour force because they cannot get jobs, we are talking about something in the neighbourhood of over three quarters of a million people in Canada who want jobs and cannot get them.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says that there are plenty of jobs. That is interesting, in view of the fact that the Department of Manpower and Immigration spent $4 million doing a job survey which showed that there were 44,300 jobs available, only 38,500 of which were full-time jobs. Either the department's survey is in error and they wasted $4 million of the taxpayers' money, or the Prime Minister does not know what he is talking about.

An hon. Member: Or both.

Mr. Douglas: The Prime Minister says that he knows there are lots of jobs because all you have to do is to read the advertisements in the newspapers. I suggest he should read the Department of Manpower's report rather than the funny papers and the classified ads section. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) himself says that unemployment will probably continue to rise in coming months, but he seeks to excuse himself by saying that the Local Initiatives Program has not reached its full capacity, that on January 15 it had provided only 15,000 jobs but it is hoped that eventually it will provide some 70,000 jobs.

That is the worst indictment of the Local Initiatives Program that has been made by any member of the House. To tell the members of the House that on January 15 all those millions of dollars spent by the Canadian government had produced only 15,000 part-time jobs proves what members on this side of the House told the government last October, namely, that the Local Initiatives Program was both too little and too late, that this program, like the Opportunities for Youth program last year, was a good concept but there had been no preparatory work, there had been faulty administration, and millions of dollars had been wasted.

One is amazed when looking at some of the projects in the Local Initiatives Program. It is becoming a gigantic rip-off and is developing into the most stupendous pork-barrel this country has ever known. Some of the projects are excellent; some of them are simply seeking ways to spend money without any hope of giving the people of Canada any beneficial return. Surely the government should have learned by this time that if they want to initiate programs to provide employment, those programs must be planned months in advance, they must be worked out with the provincial and municipal governments and they must be worked out with industry and with local community organizations.

Merely to spend $150 million and to pour out the money wherever possible to mark ski-runs and to build birdhouses at a time when we cannot get decent housing for a lot of our people, including our native Indians, is an indication of the lack of imagination and lack of planning which has characterized this government, not just in the last few years but ever since it came into office in 1963.

I wish the Minister of the Environment would tell the unemployed in my constituency, most of whom waited from 7 to 11 weeks for unemployment insurance cheques, and some much longer, that our economy is in good shape. The handling of unemployment insurance payments has been the greatest administrative foul-up I have seen in all my years of association with governments.

There were three reasons for the foul-up. The first was that this was a new act and the staff out in the local offices were not properly briefed on the changes made to the act. Second, the Unemployment Insurance Commission chose this particular time to instal computers without adequate programming and adequate training, with the result that some 300 blank cheques were sent out, which is a good "do it yourself" program if you are allowed to fill them in.

• (1650)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A foretaste of the future.

An hon. Member: Liberal genius.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, those first two problems can be overcome. I will say, to the credit of the staff of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, that in recent weeks they have been making valiant efforts to break the logjam and get the cheques out. The third reason cannot be solved by administrative procedures. The third reason unemployment insurance cheques have been delayed this year is that the government has insisted on defining earnings to include holiday pay, statutory holiday pay, severance pay and overtime.

Unemployment insurance, as we have always understood it in this country, insures a man or woman against unemployment after a waiting period of one week. This government has said, "We are going to insure you against an interruption of earnings due to unemployment; but you must not only be unemployed, you must be unemployed and broke." The government has applied a means test and it has had two effects. First, it has delayed payments because an employee is required to secure information and corroboration from an employer as to whether or not he has any further money coming to him. Second, it has produced tremendous inequity.

In my constituency there is a man who had been stationed in the far north for a long time. He took no holidays, no statutory holidays and worked Sundays. When the big snows came, the plant closed and he came back to live in my constituency. When he applied for unemployment insurance he found that he had in the neighbourhood of $800 coming from his employer for holiday pay, statutory holiday pay, overtime, etc. That meant that at the rate of $100 a week for eight weeks he was deprived of any unemployment insurance benefit for eight weeks, plus a two-week waiting period.

If he had received his holiday pay each month as some workers do, or if he had taken his holidays last summer and the previous Christmas and New Year; had he gone to the outside and spent his money he would have been eligible for benefits after two weeks. Instead, he is deprived of benefits for eight weeks and by that time the snow would be gone and the plant would be in operation again, so he would be back at work without receiving any unemployment insurance benefits at all. This is cheating, when a man is asked to pay unemployment insurance—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: —over the years and then is deprived of unemployment insurance benefits merely because the holiday pay and other income which he has coming to him has been held up and allowed to accumulate.

Mr. Speaker, when some unemployment insurance recipients got their cheques—and we have had quite a struggle getting them—I looked at them. I saw one unemployment insurance voucher for a week, $77; income tax deducted, $14; cheque, $63. That is a $14 deduction from a miserable $77 to keep a man, his wife and his children. Why? Because this government in its tax legislation decided to allow workers to deduct unemployment insurance premiums from income while at the same time it taxed unemployment insurance benefits.

Allowing the worker to deduct unemployment insurance contributions from income tax cost the government $100 million, but the estimate of the government is that it will take in $130 million by taxing unemployment insurance benefits. That is $30 million to the good. If you have to chisel $30 million out of somebody, for God's sake, don't do it out of the unemployed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I say to the government on behalf of my colleagues and myself that we will not cease fighting in this House to get the government to remove this iniquitous provision of including holiday pay, statutory holiday pay and other items of this kind in the definition of earnings. We contend that the government has no right to apply a means test.

Mr. Hees: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: When a man or woman has contributed to the unemployment insurance fund over a period of time, the fact that they are unemployed after the specified waiting period should entitle them to unemployment insurance, without anything else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: Crooked government.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I should like to see the government go to the people of this country who live on fixed incomes and tell them, in the words of the Minister of the Environment, that the economy of Canada is in good shape. People on fixed incomes are the most defenceless and vulnerable group in our society. Every increase in the cost of living reduces their standard of living and the purchasing power of their small income. All over this country one meets people—not just poor people but people who retired 10 or 15 years ago on what was then considered an adequate income—who now find it increasingly difficult to make ends meet.

In the speech which was given at the prorogation of the last session of Parliament on February 16, the government boasted of, and I quote, "the unmatched achievement in the area of price stability". The government has made a great deal of noise about the fact that last year the cost of living went up only between 3 per cent and 4 per cent. Mr. Speaker, if there was any price stability it had nothing to do with the government's prices and incomes policy; it was due to the fact that in 1970 the Canadian dollar was unpegged. That automatically had the effect of reducing the price of goods imported from the United States by 7 per cent or 8 per cent. Over a period of a year or a year and a half we have used up the benefit derived from unpegging the Canadian dollar.

What is happening now? Last December the cost of living index was up 5 per cent over the same month the previous year. In January of this year the cost of living index was up 4.9 per cent compared with January of last year. Already we are beginning to see the signs of an upsurge in the cost of living. Interest rates are going up. Our interest rates are now higher than those in the United States, whereas a short time ago they were lower.

We would like to know whether the government is going to move to begin monetary restraints, because if they are, then we are back to the old game that this government has been playing in recent years: they have been going up and down like a yo-yo. When we are faced with rising living costs, they immediately apply the brakes and get unemployment; then they give the economy a short shot in the arm, increasing the money supply by some 20 per cent, and when the cost of living goes up again, they put on the brakes.

• (1700)

I think we have good reason to wonder whether this government, which pumped a lot of money into the economy last year and is now watching the cost of living rising and interest rates increasing, is in a hurry to get the election over so it can start to put the restraints on again and further increase unemployment. This government has never learned the basic and essential fact that Canada has not faced inflation; Canada has faced an inequitable distribution of income. The people who have money do not need more goods. The people who need more goods do not have the money to buy them.

As John Kenneth Galbraith has been pointing out in the United States, as well as Professor Samuelson, the answer lies in a twofold program: first, public programs to improve the public sector, the building of houses, schools, hospitals and recreation centres, clearing up pollution and reforesting the devastated areas of this country; second, a program to put money into the pockets of the people in the middle and lower income groups, the old age pensioners, veterans, pensioners, native Indians and the unemployed in order to create the effective demand which is required.

The report of the Economic Council of Canada which has just been released points out that industry is reducing its forecast capital spending this year. This ought to prove to the government that merely making concessions to industry and giving tax rebates to encourage them to expand their plants is not the answer. What entrepreneur is going to expand his plant if it is operating at 80 per cent or 85 per cent capacity. The quickest way to get expansion of industry is to increase demand. If the orders were coming in at a rate the factory could not handle, the industry would soon expand its plant.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: This government continues to follow the "trickle down" theory. It believes that if it pumps enough money into the big corporations, giving them special concessions, grants and loans, it will somehow trickle down to the people at the bottom. The fact is that it is not trickling down at all.

I would like to see the Minister of the Environment tell the fishermen in my constituency that the economy is in good shape. The fishermen are being forced out of their industry by the minister's licensing program and boat retirement program. Fishermen are well aware that the government's whole program is designed to drive small fishermen out of the industry and to hasten the day when fishing will be entirely in the hands of large fishing companies. The young men who go into the fishing industry will do so as hired hands on ships owned and operated by the fishing companies in British Columbia.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Douglas: I would like the government to tell the native Indian people that the economy is in good shape. I have 13 bands in my constituency. When I visit them, I am ashamed of the way these people are being treated. There are crowded housing conditions. If they are lucky, they are building two or three houses on some reserves. Do you know how much we give them to build a house? Eight thousand five hundred dollars. Is there anyone in this House who can build a house fit for a human being to live in for $8,500?

There is a lack of water supply and sanitary facilities. In my constituency, almost every fall we have large numbers of children in the Duncan Hospital suffering from hepatitis and salmonella, because of contaminated water. We ought to be spending money creating jobs for the Indian people, helping to improve conditions on their reserves, helping to build houses, decent schools and providing a proper water supply. Don't tell them that the economy is in good shape. They know that the conditions on those reserves beggar description and are a disgrace to a so-called humanitarian and civilized society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: I would like to hear the government tell the business community that the economy is in good shape. I am not speaking of the 95 corporations that Mr. R. J. Rankin, president of the Liberal Party Red Carnation Fund, said supplied all their campaign funds; I am talking about the general business community, the entrepreneurs who keep the economy operating in this country.

I have never received so many letters from small businessmen as in the past six months. They complain about the fact that they cannot get working capital. The Small Businesses Loans Act is useless; the banks are not lending money under it. The Industrial Development Bank is hopeless as a source of funds for small businessmen. Large corporations, particularly those which have their parent company in the United States, have no trouble; they are able to get funds for expansion and development. But small businessmen today are finding it more difficult than ever before to get working capital and to start new enterprises. This is a large corporation-oriented government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: It could not care less about small business. That is why we in this group will support the amendment moved by the Social Credit Rally, which reads in part:

due to its failure to proceed with monetary reform in accordance with the needs of the Canadian society.

We do not agree with social credit but we certainly think there is a tremendous need for reform of the monetary system in this country. It must meet the needs of Canadians, needs which are not being met at the present time. The business community today is bewildered and uncertain because the government has given no clear lead as to what its policy on foreign ownership will be. Last July the cabinet agreed on a screening mechanism to deal with foreign ownership. A few months ago it dealt with the report of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray). As the leader of our party pointed out yesterday and today, we have had repeated statements from the Prime Minister that the government's policy will be announced in due course and the report of the Minister of National Revenue on foreign ownership and control will be released. We do not have them. In his statement yesterday the Prime Minister indicated we will not get them soon, if at all. What is the effect? The effect is that the business community does not know where the government is going, for the very obvious reason that the government itself does not know where it is going.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: The uncertainty of the business community is heightened by the fact that we have had conflicting statements with regard to the trade discussions that are going on with the United States. One minister told us that the government is standing on guard to protect the auto agreement. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), in the speech which he prepared for delivery in Winnipeg last Saturday, said:

• (1710)

It would indeed be ludicrous if there were to be a serious rift between Canada and the United States over the auto pact—

Does this mean that the auto pact is to be the sacrificial lamb? The minister went on to say:

Canada does understand and sympathize with the United States administration in its desire to correct certain fundamental imbalances in currency and trade relations. We have made our contribution to the correction of some of these imbalances and we are prepared to go further.

Surely this House and the country have a right to know how much further we are prepared to go. What concessions are we prepared to make? What deals are going on behind closed doors?

Secretary of the Treasury Connally and the United States government are not asking just for amendments to the auto pact. Are deals going on with respect to energy resources? Are we getting ready for another sell-out of natural gas? Are we getting ready to make a deal about water, as the Minister of the Environment was advocating a few years ago? There was an example recently of what I have in mind. I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) last Monday about an agreement entered into by Panarctic Oils Limited, in which the Canadian government is the largest single shareholder. Here is an agreement entered into between the company and a consortium of United States transmission and utility corporations which, in return for a loan of $75 million over 15 years, gives them first refusal of gas available for export to the United States. Mr. Speaker, does anyone believe Canada could not raise that $75 million over the next 15 years?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must do so to advise him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? If there is, the hon. member may continue, but I would respectfully draw to the attention of the House the fact that we are working under a time limit.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Two minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas: I shall take only two minutes, Mr. Speaker. I believe an examination of the economy and of Canadian society would indicate that our economy is not in good shape. There may be some sections of it which are. A recent survey showed that the largest corporations in Canada increased their profits after taxation by 25 per cent in the last quarter of 1971 as compared with the same period of the previous year. For them, the economy may be in good shape. But for the vast majority of the Canadian people the economy is not in good shape and is not serving their needs. I say to the government that the sooner they go to the people and give them a chance to express their views on the government's management of the economy, the better it will be for all concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Georges-C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. The hon. members for Bruce and Trois-Rivières (Messrs. Whicher and Lajoie) performed their task very intelligently and imaginatively. The former drew a clear and detailed picture of the achievements of the present government, while the latter focussed his attention mostly on the future.

I take this opportunity to make a few brief remarks, knowing that inexorably, at half past five Mr. Speaker, will have to ask hon. members to make important decisions. Yet, I hope to have enough time to set forth a few ideas as briefly as possible.

During the last session, I had the pleasure, as vice-chairman of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, to take part in numerous sittings of the committee, both public and in camera.

I noticed the great interest shown by the general public in the white paper on the foreign policy of Canada entitled Foreign Policy for Canadians. The same applied to that part of the white paper dealing with external aid, which was also studied. I had the pleasure and honour of being in the Chair at that time. We prepared two reports; they were tabled in the House in June 1971. On this subject, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say how much we appreciated the wise advice and opinions of the director of the Parliamentary Centre for Foreign Affairs and Foreign Trade, Mr. Dobell, and his staff. They never failed to give the two committees concerned invaluable assistance.

Since those two reports were not studied at the time they were tabled in the House, I feel that, for the benefit of hon. members as well as those who read Hansard, I might say a few words about them.

• (1720)

As to the first report on foreign policy, I quote first those words from U Thant, which appear on the first page of the report:

> Nations cannot go alone on their isolated and often divergent paths, preoccupied only with national priorities and problems.

This testimony has served as the basis, the beacon for the preparation of our report.

The introduction contains the following words, and I quote:

> The Committee considers that the policy review has been of benefit most particularly to the Ministers and officials involved in the formulation of foreign policy.

Among the main subjects contained in the report, we can find one concerning interdependence or the extension abroad of domestic policy, and the following can be found on page 3 of that report:

> The Committee is convinced that there are, in fact, differences in the goals Canada wishes to attain in the internal context and those to be worked for in an international context.
>
> The Committee sees no reason why Canada cannot promote its domestic policies and defend its national interests, while at the same time recognizing more emphatically the different environment, the different problems and therefore the different responses needed in the "global village".

On page 4 of the report, we read, and I quote:

> The committee is disturbed by the lower priority accorded to "peace and security", and by the more cautious attitude toward peacekeeping—

A large number of witnesses have expressed the view that it would be impossible to realize the national objectives desired without international peace.

The committee had noted some perhaps important, omissions, since there was no mention of the names of many countries and of many subjects pointed out by the witnesses themselves and also by the members of the committee. It was also stated that the complex relations between the United States and Canada should obviously have constituted an important part of that white paper.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the committee accepts the restatement of the national objectives, for the time being. It considers that the white paper has given too much importance to the integration of the objectives and priorities of our foreign and domestic policies. When one considers foreign policy, one should not only wonder in what kind of Canada we are going to live, but also, as one witness put it, in what type of world we want to live.

As for the report on the assistance to international development, which was also tabled in the House in June 1971, the committee has held 25 meetings, beside the in camera sittings for the drafting of the report, and it has heard several witnesses. Furthermore, this report is based on a statement by Mr. Maurice Strong, former chairman of the Canadian International Development Agency, referring to the emergence of what he describes as "a much more human attitude toward development".

This report on the aid to international development especially deals with five main objects: the equity for social development and a fairer distribution of the advantages of economic growth; in underdeveloped countries; sharing to awake, maintain and channel the interest of Canadians; the creation of jobs entailing some assistance to obtain the best conditions of employment in less fortunate countries; a receptive and more coherent policy towards co-operation as a true association of equals; the adoption of a new policy in a field such as trade and commerce, so as to enable developing countries to help themselves, also retained the attention of committee members, and so did a new definition of technology as the adjustment of progress to the needs of various societies.

Also, we considered a quotation from Pope Paul VI, to the effect that "development is the new name for peace".

I wish to commend those who participated actively in the study of this report, and say that this experience was very enriching to me, because I had an opportunity of participating actively in the preparation of these reports. I think the government is doing well by introducing white papers and giving committee members an opportunity of discussing them in consultation with the public.

During the last session, I had the opportunity of membership on the Joint Senate and House Committee on the Constitution of Canada. I attended some 200 public and in camera meetings and I hope the committee will produce a report in the near future.

That experience was also a highly interesting one as for the first time a committee travelled all over Canada, inviting the general public's participation in the study of the problems of Canada's constitution.

During the summer of 1971 I also had the pleasure of going on a mission of inquiry in India and Pakistan together with the hon. members for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie.) Upon our return we submitted a report to the federal government wherein we stated that the major reason for the journey was to have a direct view of the plight of the refugees from East Pakistan, as it was then called, and which is now called Bengla Desh and was recognized by Canada just a few days ago.

We believed then that the heavy burden of having to face such an influx was not to be assumed by India alone; we are more than ever convinced now that that humanitarian problem concerned all countries and that the world community owed it to itself to provide immediately an efficient and generous aid to help these millions of unfortunate people.

The Bangla Desh state is now born and those problems still exist. I hope the Canadian government will take the necessary steps to promote the rehabilitation of those 10 million refugees and that it will help Bangla Desh to gain a strong economic foothold so as to cope with the numerous problems of the present.

Last November, Mr. Speaker, I also had the opportunity of accompanying another parliamentary group in South Africa where I went along with the hon. member for Malpèque (Mr. MacLean) and the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) on a study mission which enabled us to gain first-hand knowledge of the problem that exists in South Africa.

That country is multiracial and multinational. About a month ago, I had a chance, in a speech I was making in Montreal, to say a few words about it. I shall take a few minutes from the House to make a few comments.

For instance, today's policy in South Africa is not the result of a mere abstraction. Five centuries are there to provide an explanation and, one might even say, command it. Even if this solution is imperfect, as compared to others, at least it has the merit of being realistic for today and imaginative for tomorrow.

Still, it remains a makeshift solution. In other words it may be acceptable, but only temporarily and for the time being. For the Republic of South Africa is racing against the clock. If it is to win the hardy game it has entered into, it should be aware of the need for quick transformation. However, such an evolution will require some sacrifices.

We will have to make financial sacrifices: the development of the future African states will necessitate huge expenses. We will also have to make moral sacrifices: in order to preserve the most essential things, the whites will have to forgo some of their privileges.

There should be no more question of petty apartheid or of what could be called pin-pricking. It is of course a considerable challenge, but it is well worth it. If historians are not allowed to prophesy, they can at least express wishes.

My wish is for the western world to finally understand the solidarity which unites it to South Africa, and without withholding criticism, to be able to temper it with objectivity. Above all, it will have to show understanding and to make allowances for a country which is faced with a problem such as exists nowhere else in the world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Honey): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 38(4), it is my duty to interrupt this debate, as it is now 5.30 p.m., and to put the question on any amendment now before the House.

[English]

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Caouette) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 2)

YEAS

Messrs:

Aiken
Alexander
Alkenbrack
Asselin
Baldwin
Barnett
Beaudoin
Bell
Benjamin
Blackburn
Brewin
Broadbent
Burton
Cadieu
Carter
Coates
Code
Crouse
Danforth
Dionne
Douglas
Fairweather
Flemming
Fortin
Gauthier
Gilbert
Godin
Grills
Hales
Harding
Hees
Hellyer
Howard (Skeena)
Howe
Knight
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Korchinski
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Laprise
Latulippe
Lewis
MacDonald (Egmont)
MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond)
MacInnis (Mrs.)
MacKay
MacLean
Macquarrie
MacRae
McCleave
McCutcheon
McGrath
McIntosh
McKinley
McQuaid
Marshall
Mather
Matte
Moore
Muir
Murta
Nesbitt
Noble
Nowlan
Nystrom
Orlikow
Peddle
Peters
Ritchie
Rodrigue
Rondeau
Rose
Rowland
Rynard
Saltsman
Schumacher
Simpson
Skoberg
Southam
Stewart (Marquette)
Tétrault
Thomas (Moncton)
Winch
Woolliams
Yewchuk—84.

NAYS

Messrs:

Allmand
Andras
Badanai
Barrett
Basford
Béchard
Beer
Benson
Blair
Blouin
Boulanger
Caccia
Cafik
Cantin
Chappell
Chrétien
Clermont
Cobbe
Comtois
Corbin
Crossman
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Davis
Deachman
Deakon
De Bané
Drury
Dubé
Dupras
Émard
Éthier
Faulkner
Forest Forget
Foster
Francis
Gendron
Gervais
Gibson
Goode
Goyer
Gray
Groos
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Hopkins
Howard (Okanagan Boundary)
Hymmen
Isabelle
Jamieson
Jerome
Kaplan
Lachance
Laflamme
Laing (Vancouver South)
Lajoie
Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt)
Langlois
Laniel
La Salle
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Lefebvre
Legault
Lessard (LaSalle)
Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
L'Heureux
Loiselle
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
McBride
McIlraith
McNulty
Mahoney
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Noël
O'Connell
Olson
Osler
Otto
Ouellet
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Perrault
Portelance
Pringle
Prud'homme
Richardson
Robinson
Rochon
Rock
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Serré
Sharp
Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stafford
Stanbury
Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay)
St. Pierre
Sulatycky
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Tolmie
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)
Wahn
Watson
Whelan
Whicher
Whiting
Yanakis—122.

Division

• (1750)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the subamendment lost.

The next question is on the amendment—

During the reading of the amendment:

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacInnis: McBride, out.

Some hon. Members: Out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I gather there is some concern about an hon. member entering the chamber after the Chair started to put the question. The Chair did not see this, but if it is the case I know the hon. member will retire until the vote is taken.

Division

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Stanfield) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 3)

YEAS

Messrs:

Aiken
Alexander
Alkenbrack
Asselin
Baldwin
Barnett
Beaudoin
Bell
Benjamin
Bigg
Blackburn
Brewin
Broadbent
Burton
Cadieu
Carter
Coates
Code
Crouse
Danforth
Dionne
Douglas
Fairweather
Flemming
Fortin
Gauthier
Gilbert
Godin
Grills
Hales
Harding
Hees
Hellyer
Howard (Skeena)
Howe
Knight
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Korchinski
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Laprise
La Salle
Latulippe
Lewis
MacDonald (Egmont)
MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond)
MacInnis (Mrs.)
MacKay
MacLean
Macquarrie
MacRae
McCleave
McCutcheon
McGrath
McIntosh
McKinley
McQuaid
Marshall
Mather
Matte
Moore
Muir
Murta
Nesbitt
Noble
Nowlan
Nystrom
Orlikow
Peddle
Peters
Ritchie
Rodrigue
Rondeau
Rose
Rowland
Rynard
Saltsman
Schumacher
Simpson
Skoberg
Southam
Stewart (Marquette
Tétrault
Thomas (Moncton)
Winch
Woolliams
Yewchuk—86.

NAYS

Messrs:

Allmand
Andras
Badanai
Barrett
Basford
Béchard
Beer
Benson
Blair
Blouin
Boulanger
Caccia
Cafik
Cantin
Chappell
Chrétien
Clermont
Cobbe
Comtois
Corbin
Crossman
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Davis
Deachman
Deakon
De Bané
Drury
Dubé
Dupras
Émard
Éthier
Faulkner
Forest Forget
Foster
Francis
Gendron
Gervais
Gibson
Goode
Goyer
Gray
Groos
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Hopkins
Howard (Okanagan Boundary)
Hymmen
Isabelle
Jamieson
Jerome
Kaplan
Lachance
Laflamme
Laing (Vancouver South)
Lajoie
Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt)
Langlois
Laniel
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Lefebvre
Legault
Lessard (LaSalle)
Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
L'Heureux
Loiselle
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
McIlraith
McNulty
Mahoney
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Noël
O'Connell
Olson
Osler
Otto
Ouellet
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Perrault
Portelance
Pringle
Prud'homme
Richardson
Robinson
Rochon
Rock
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Serré
Sharp
Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stafford
Stanbury
Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay)
St. Pierre
Sulatycky
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Tolmie
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)
Wahn
Watson
Whelan
Whicher
Whiting
Yanakis—120.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

At 6.09 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 24, 1972

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

DRUGS

METHADONE AND AMPHETAMINES—STATEMENT ON ACTION TO CONTROL ABUSE

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the government, as many members are aware, is deeply concerned about the non-medical use of drugs and the effects of such use on the individual and on our society. As part of our program to combat this hazard through a balanced comprehensive strategy, I wish to announce important action in relation to two different types of drugs, the abuse of which has been a public health problem of major proportions in this country. I refer to action against the abuse of methadone and the amphetamines.

Methadone is an opiate-type synthetic drug which has become widely used in the treatment of heroin addiction. During the last year, staff of my department have received many reports of misuse and abuse of methadone. As a result of concern over misuse of this drug, the former Food and Drug Directorate of my department and the Canadian Medical Association established a joint committee in 1970 to investigate the proper place of methadone in the care of narcotic addicts. Concern about the abuse of methadone also was raised by the Le Dain Commission in its final report on treatment, which was submitted to the government a few weeks ago.

As a result of the recommendations of the joint FDD-CMA committee and of the Le Dain Commission, I have decided to restrict the availability of methadone in the following way: Physicians will be permitted to prescribe methadone only after they are authorized to do so by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Those so authorized will be considered to be qualified by reason of expertise and the availability of necessary facilities and ancillary services to utilize methadone effectively in the treatment of heroin abuse.

In line with the recommendations of the Le Dain Commission, authorized physicians will be required to be associated with a specialized clinic. Requests for authorization will be considered by an expert advisory committee to be appointed by me in co-operation with the medical profession. I expect that necessary regulatory changes can be made and the methadone control program instituted within a few weeks time. The program should be fully operational by June 1 of this year. In the meantime I call upon the physicians of Canada to utilize restraint in the use of methadone.

• (1110)

Although smaller amounts of amphetamine are now being prescribed in Canada than a few years ago, considerable evidence has come to the attention of my department indicating the over-prescribing of these drugs by some medical practitioners. Considerable evidence also exists that the related drugs, phenmetrazine and phendimetrazine, are misused in a manner similar to that of amphetamines.

Medical authorities are agreed that the legitimate medical uses of amphetamines are extremely limited. They have at best only a minor role in rational drug therapy, primarily for the treatment of two relatively rare and obscure disorders, narcolepsy and hyperkinesis in children.

As a result of my grave concern about the serious public health implications of amphetamine abuse, I have decided that the use of amphetamines and the related drugs, phenmetrazine and phendimetrazine, will be limited to treatment of only those disorders for which they are indicated on medical grounds. Use of these drugs for treatment of obesity as so-called "diet pills" will no longer be permitted. Any physician wishing to prescribe amphetamines, phenmetrazine and phendimetrazine will be authorized by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to do so provided he wishes to use the drugs for treatment of bona fide narcoleptics and hyperkinetic children. In co-operation with the Canadian Medical Association and L'Association des Médecins de Langue Française du Canada, a list of consulting physicians will be drawn up to aid in verification of the diagnosis of these relatively rare disorders.

I am extremely pleased with the co-operation being offered to us by the medical associations of Canada in helping solve this important problem.

I am fully aware, as are other hon. members, that this action to control misuse of legally prescribed amphetamines does not directly affect use of these drugs by so-called "speed freaks" who obtain their drugs from illicit sources. Nevertheless, this action does indicate the serious light in which the government views amphetamine abuse and should have marked effects on an important aspect of abuse of these drugs, that by adults who obtain their drugs on prescription.

It will take a few months to work out the details of the amphetamine control program in co-operation with the medical profession. I expect, however, that the program will be fully operational by September 1 of this year.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I make a brief mention of another aspect of our total program to control the misuse and abuse of drugs. In January of this year, we invited parents and others receiving federal social assistance cheques to send for a free information booklet entitled "A Parent's Guide to Drug Abuse". Public response to this offer has been most gratifying and, in fact, almost overwhelming. To date, nearly 500,000 requests for the booklet have been received by my department and more especially by the directorate on the non-medical use of drugs. Because of the large volume of requests, it is taking my staff longer than they had first anticipated to provide copies of the booklet to all who have requested it. I ask the public to be patient. Everyone who requests a copy of this useful publication will be sent one. This booklet is but the first in a continuing series of factual presentations on various aspects of drug abuse, aimed at providing the facts on this serious problem to Canadians as part of our over-all drug education program.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, we cannot help but welcome the statement by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) that his department is deeply concerned about the non-medical use of drugs and the effects on the individual and society.

One of the disturbing things to be noted is that the drug methadone at one time was the cure-all for heroin addicts; addicts were put on this drug so they could be weaned from heroin which was habit-forming. Today we find that methadone is also habit-forming. We wonder in so many cases whether drugs that are being used today which we feel are safe and not habit-forming will turn up tomorrow on the list of those that are habit-forming. The minister will realize that talwin is a drug which could be bought a short time ago without prescription and now is on the prescription list. It was supposed to be a non-habit forming drug. So the story goes.

I wonder whether on the whole we are providing laboratory and research facilities adequate to test the effect of these drugs on human beings. People I have spoken to in this field say that laboratory and research facilities are totally inadequate to test these drugs to determine whether they are or are not habit-forming. I believe the minister realizes this is the situation. He has stated on a number of occasions that more facilities should be provided. However, they are being provided very slowly. I believe this is a very important point.

In bringing these drugs under control I wonder how the minister intends to look after the situation in the Northwest Territories, the Yukon Territory or in other huge and sparsely settled areas which are served by one doctor or even paramedical personnel. I wonder how the people in these areas will be treated and what provisions have been made for treating them. Are they to be brought out to clinics and treated at the expense of the government? The minister did not make this clear.

I also want to dwell for a moment on the fact that the minister has not said very much about the situation of younger people in respect of the use of drugs. I think this is the key to the whole problem. They are growing up in an age in which drugs are thought to be the answer to almost everything and to all problems. I believe it is paramount today that we educate our younger generation in regard to the fact that any drug can be harmful to the human individual. I think this should be part and parcel of the work the minister should carry on in the field of food and drugs. People should be educated that drugs are not the answer to many social problems.

I congratulate the minister on this step and suggest to him that we should go further and provide facilities for people living in outlying territories. We should provide laboratory facilities for the treatment of people when they are referred to a lab by a doctor for testing in order to see what the results are, so that more research may be carried on in this field and so that we will have the answers more quickly and not after we find that people are addicts.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I suppose one could start very easily by classifying this statement as a pretty insignificant response to a rather massive problem which has existed in this country for some years and is increasing in intensity as each month goes by. I rather regret the fact that the minister, after examination of the first report of the Le Dain Commission and the treatment report which came out a short while ago, was not able to do better than this in terms of attempting to cope with the non-medical or abusive use of drugs.

• (1120)

Part of the approach the minister has taken relates to methadone and the dispensing by prescription of methadone as a substitute drug particularly for heroin addicts. Under the proposal the minister will be limiting the opportunity of physicians to dispense and prescribe methadone to specialized clinics. The first thing wrong with that approach is that we will still be using a chemical that will create or help to create a euphoric or semi-euphoric condition in the addict himself. We will not be coping whatever in any way with the internal emotional difficulties of addicts that make them addicts in the first place. This is just a stopgap measure. All that will happen, as the minister knows because there has been abuse in the use of methadone itself, is that we will create, in addition to a group of heroin addicts, a group of methadone addicts either in substitution or in addition thereto.

It has been a conscious policy of the Parole Board in issuing parole to addicts who are in penitentiaries to try to place them on parole away from the big, urban metropolitan centres, away from the street, away from the area where drugs are easily available, and parole them to out of the way or smaller communities. If we are going to follow that practice, and I think the Parole Board is, then the minister by this program is denying those heroin addicts who are paroled to out of the way or smaller communities what benefits may arise from a methadone treatment program. He is confining the prescribing of methadone to physicians who are associated with specialized clinics, and the prospects are that the specialized clinics will be in cities like Toronto, Vancouver and Montreal.

Mr. Munro: No, hospitals.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The minister shakes his head negatively, but he made no effort to indicate in his statement where these specialized clinics will be and whether they will be extended. If the minister had thought that point through and included it in his statement, perhaps we would not have to make these comments. I still submit, however, that many heroin addicts are on parole to smaller communities and rural areas in the nation, and this is one of the conditions in granting them parole. Many of them are now undergoing a methadone treatment program through private physicians. If those physicians are to be denied the opportunity to continue to prescribe methadone except in specialized clinics, many of those on parole who are using methadone as a substitute drug for heroin will get into difficulties.

The minister talks in terms of wanting to confine the prescription of amphetamines and other drugs that fall within that class to certain medical uses. I think that is a good move. We have known for a long time that probably the people who have contributed most in a total sense to the thinking of society that you can cure anything with a pill have been those in the medical profession who have dispensed pills, potions and lotions without full knowledge of their effects. The attempt now to confine this is a good measure. I hope doctors will pay heed to it. I hope also that drug manufacturers will be required to provide more information on the side effects of drugs that are developed and used for such purposes.

It seems to me that the minister's statement does not really cope with the underlying reason why people want to drop out of society, why they want to use drugs, why they want to create a false feeling within themselves, why they want to escape from the realities of the world. This action is simply a small patchwork program in light of the over-all problem. It is necessary to engage in an educational program, to try to explain and to get people to understand what the realities of life are all about, and not just approach the problem by using one drug as a substitute for the other.

I wish that the minister had taken the course in this statement—it is long overdue—of rejecting the proposal in the LeDain Commission report which suggests that we give a semi-legal status to heroin so that as a last resort, whether it be in specialized clinics or elsewhere, a heroin addict who fails to agree with the methadone treatment program can get heroin itself. That recommendation should have been rejected by the minister as soon as it was made. The absence of any comment in this document on this matter means two things. The moment the LeDain Commission recommendation was made with respect to classifying or giving heroin some sort of semi-legal status, it was applauded by every heroin addict in the country because they foresaw the prospect of being able, in time of short supply of heroin, to proceed to treatment centres and get free fixes to carry them over a period of time until the supply increases.

I know that you are getting apprehensive about the time I am taking, Mr. Speaker, but to me this is an extremely important matter which was left out of the statement and should have been in it. I will only be a moment more, if I may.

The other point is that a number of young people in our society are on the borderline; they are unsure whether they should try heroin, having used other drugs. When the LeDain commission report on treatment came out and gave some sanction in its recommendations to the use of heroin, a number of young people in this nation in the drug scene said: This is fine, heroin is O.K., it has the endorsement of the LeDain commission.

Some addicts in the city of Vancouver whom I know, people in the addict world and people trying to do something about it, know that a number of youngsters applauded that recommendation. They were unable to draw the distinction between the commission report and government policy and began trying heroin themselves because it had some sort of semi-legal sanction. Every day the minister delays in rejecting that concept he is contributing to the growing population of youngsters who are trying heroin. I wish the minister would abandon this insignificant patchwork program and out of his conscience do something worth while for a change instead of announcing such piddling measures.

• (1130)

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like first of all to thank the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) for the measures announced today to control the abuse of methadone and amphetamines.

We are particularly happy about the valuable and essential co-operation of medical associations. Without their powerful participation, the announcement made today by the minister would only be empty words.

That measure announced today will have the effect of restraining the "official" availability of those particular drugs, but as the minister himself recognized it, that does not affect at all use of those drugs by addicts who get them from illicit sources. There lies the main weakness of governmental action with regard to the control of the distribution and illegal consumption of various drugs in Canada, specially among the young.

Today's statement, Mr. Speaker, should not make us forget what the federal government did in that field.

Indeed, an official OPTAT inquiry revealed the following:

A comparison of results obtained in 1969 and 1971 shows that:

Consumption of barbiturates has tripled and that of hallucinogens other than LSD almost tripled:

Consumption of marijuana and LSD had more than doubled;

It has increased by a third in the case of stimulants and tranquilizers;

It has increased by almost one tenth in the case of alcohol and tobacco; the proportion of a glue consumers was the same in 1971 as in 1969.

Consequently, government action in that sphere is still pending, and statements in fact merely constitute a control of official prescriptions but in no way—which is more serious—do they affect illegal consumption.

In closing, I quote an excerpt taken from an article published in La Boussole, of Nicolet, on December 11, 1968:

Here is what Dr. Homes had to say during a panel discussion at which the medical profession was recognized as a leader in the fight against toxicomania:

"Although we usually speak of toxicomania as a disease, it is more specifically the symptom of a disease rooted in social and economic conditions that tend to create dissatisfaction, sadness, conflicts and tensions in the very soul and spirit of human beings.

This means that one of the greatest experts in this field states that the source of that insecurity is ascribable to the social insecurity from which young Canadians are suffering at the present time. Neither the family nor other voluntary organizations dealing with drugs can do anything about it, since the federal and provincial governments are primarily responsible for that economic and social security.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, so long as the federal government merely takes steps in co-operation with medical organizations and associations to control consumption and distribution of drugs legally prescribed, so long as it does not take any drastic steps to control unlawful consumption and distribution, so long as it fails to take economic and social measures enabling young Canadians to live in economic and social security, so long as it continues marking time on this issue, the government will be channeling Canadians towards the use of drugs.

That is why we are concerned with the government's attitude, its apathy, its complacency in regard to the findings of the LeDain report. We are anxious to know, at the earliest, the position of the government which is hedging behind the report for the purpose of obtaining the votes of young people, whereas I consider saving these young people and giving them security to be more important than securing their votes.

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR— TABLING OF STUDY ON MARKETING

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, to comply with the request of several hon. members and in accordance with Standing Order 41(2), I should like to table in the two official languages copies of a study on marketing in the Canadian footwear industry.

* * *

[English]

TRANSPORTATION

RAIL FREIGHT RATES, ATLANTIC PROVINCES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to the Atlantic provinces. It arises out of the latest increase in rail freight rates, the eighth in the past 29 months, and the imminence of a further 2.5 per cent decrease in subsidies and a corresponding increase in freight rates. Since these increases have worked hardship on industries in the area and are prejudicial to the public interest I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates):

That this House urge the government to immediately impose a freeze on rail freight rates until a new Atlantic transportation policy, embodying the proposals of the twelfth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, is formulated.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Fortin.]

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT FORECAST FOR YEAR—FURTHER STIMULATION OF PRIVATE SECTOR—MEASURES TO OFFSET U.S. DISC PROGRAM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance, now that he has been in his new post for some time, a question of great public interest. Would he give us his forecast with regard to the rate of unemployment in Canada for the balance of the year? Can he give us his forecast as to the amount by which unemployment will be reduced by the end of 1972?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I expect to deal with that subject later today in the Throne Speech debate.

Mr. Stanfield: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. gentleman to wait. I expect to deal with that subject later today in the Throne Speech debate.

Mr. Lewis: There is no guarantee that the minister will.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to wait hopefully. May I ask the minister during the course of his participation in the Throne Speech debate, and now that he has had a full opportunity, as I am sure he has, to study the recent report of the Economic Council of Canada, he will indicate whether he is satisfied that investment in the private sector in Canada requires further stimulation in order to achieve satisfactory employment results?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Again, Mr. Speaker, I will be dealing with that. However, I think the report to which the hon. gentleman referred was itself cautious in that it recognized that the results of the survey were affected by the widespread uncertainty at the time that the mid-October survey was conducted. The report or survey of the Economic Council said that the trends indicated were susceptible to substantial change in response to the alteration in business conditions and the economic outlook. I remind the hon. gentleman that two key developments occurred after that survey was taken. They are the October 14 announcement of new economic measures by the government and, second, the international agreement on exchange rates.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the new minister would not exhibit the deplorable complacency that the Prime Minister exhibited yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have not yet reached the debate. We should ask questions and give answers at this time.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, we have not reached the debate but we have been given the runaround for quite a while on this question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the minister specifically whether he is now prepared to assure the House, either now or when he speaks later, that Canadian industries will be put in a position to compete with American industries which are to receive advantages under the DISC program? In other words, is the minister prepared to assure the House that he will bring in measures to countervail the effect of the DISC proposals in the United States and enable our industries to compete, invest money and create employment in this country?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will be dealing with this subject later today. The hon. gentleman will have to make up his mind whether he is satisfied or not with what I say.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CONTRIBUTIONS TO ASSIST UNITED STATES TO CORRECT IMBALANCE OF TRADE WITH CANADA

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Quiet, please!

Mr. Speaker, has the government had an estimate made of the number of Canadian jobs that will be involved in the further contributions which this government has said it is willing to make in order to help the United States government correct the temporary imbalance of trade it is experiencing with Canada at the present time?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we are watching that situation closely. I want to say to the hon. gentleman that I look forward to a good deal of non-partisan support and advice from him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: May I ask a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker, following that non-answer. As the present rate of deterioration in Canada's balance of payments position with the United States makes it very clear that within the next three or four months we will be put again in a deficit position with the United States, does the government feel that the Canadian people should be called on to make the great sacrifice of the loss of a large number of jobs simply in order to placate the tough United States Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster wishes to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has already recognized the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I thought the minister was struggling to get to his feet to try to answer that very sensible and straightforward question. Might we have an answer?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Might we have an answer?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: This minister will be just the same as answerless Ben.

An hon. Member: Sit down, George.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of which I gave the minister notice. Will the minister be announcing in his speech today the new look in respect of the officials of his department that has been intimated? Will there be a change in the deputy minister who is responsible for policies that have not worked?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is not in order.

Mr. Hees: This guy will be worse than Ben.

* * *

• (1140)

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—REASONS FOR MARRIAGE OUTSIDE PRISON

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Solicitor General a question based on the documents he tabled in the House Tuesday night.

Since Mr. Geoffroy's application did not specify whether the marriage was to be celebrated outside the institution, and since the two reports that the minister tabled refer to a marriage within the institution, could the Solicitor General say when and how the request was made for the marriage to take place outside the institution?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the exact date when this occurred, but the agreement was made between Mr. Geoffroy and the classification officer. The latter submitted the application to the internal committee of the institution which is made up of 16 members, 11 of whom took part in the proceedings that morning. The members of the committee approved of the leave unanimously. There was only one vote, and it was on the question of granting leave for 72 hours or 50 hours and eventually it was decided to grant 50 hours.

Some hon. Members: Oh, come on, come on.

Mr. Goyer: Are you interested in learning the truth? The whole question was referred—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The minister should be given the opportunity to reply to the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: The whole question was referred to the director of that institution, Mr. Brennan, and he gave his final approval.

That has been done in accordance with the rules of the Canadian Penitentiary Service. Consequently, at least 14 persons did take part in that decision. And they were unanimous.

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF OTHER DOCUMENTS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister a supplementary question.

Are there other documents, such as another request by Mr. Geoffroy, that include the decisions made by the authorities and, if so, would the Solicitor General be prepared to table them in the House?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, quite obviously the decisions that have been made have been put on record. As to whether those documents should be tabled, that would be, in my opinion, an infortunate precedent and I certainly hesitate to do it. I wonder why the hon. member challenges my word.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps I shall be better able to express myself in English on this point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is only a guilty conscience which could suggest I was questioning the minister's honesty.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member says he has a point of order. I hope he will express it.

Mr. Lewis: With great respect, I do not often abuse the rules and I do not intend to do so now. I think I am entitled to the opportunity to say to the Solicitor General, through you, that only a guilty conscience could have suggested that my question in any way impugned his honesty. In view of the disclosures in the documents to which I have referred, when everyone concerned, the director, the head of the education department, the chaplain, the social service worker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member might indicate the basis of his point of order. It seems to me he is entering upon a debate with the minister. He should indicate why he feels there is a point of order and I will make a ruling on it.

Mr. Lewis: There are really two points involved. Perhaps it would have taken less time had I been permitted to finish my remarks. The first is that my question did not impugn the veracity of the minister in any way. The second concerns the tabling of further documents. I say that in view of the fact the documents the minister has tabled show that everyone concerned assumed that the marriage would take place inside the penitentiary, and in view of the fact that the marriage was, in the event, allowed to take place outside, with the consequences of which everyone is aware, it is only right and proper that a Member of Parliament should request the minister to table and that the minister should table all other documents connected with the matter so that we may know what happened.

Mr. Speaker: That is still not a point of order.

[Translation]

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Mr. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Considering that the whole Geoffroy affair is becoming more and more obscure and that, obviously, the minister finds it difficult to give any information, I would like to know why he persists in refusing to have an impartial judicial inquiry made into the matter.

Mr. Speaker: That question is surely out of order. The hon. member wants to know why the minister stubbornly refuses to make such a decision. In those terms, the question is surely out of order.

Mr. Asselin: I would like to redraft my question, Mr. Speaker.

Does the minister feel that, in order to settle this matter, an impartial judicial inquiry should be ordered?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing obscure in this whole affair. The truth has been stated. If the hon. member does not believe me, Standing Orders may be invoked, and I am willing to abide by them.

In any event, I believe it has been admitted that a mistake has been made and, unfortunately, following this incident, the success of a progressive program within our prison system will be compromised, because a mistake has been made, and I ask what facts—

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—INQUIRY RESPECTING CONTENTS OF DOCUMENTS TABLED

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General.

Since Mr. Geoffroy was actually convicted of strangling his first wife and was granted parole for the explicit purpose of remarrying, could the Solicitor General explain the content of some of the documents he tabled? First of all, were psychiatrists consulted, and how many times? If so, what did they recommend? Were their services requested by the Parole Board or by officials of the penitentiary?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): There have not necessarily been consultations with psychiatrists. There were consultations with religious authorities who approved the marriage.

[English]

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—METHOD OF TAKING DELIVERY OF PASSPORT

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the hon. gentleman say whether the fake passport apparently used by Geoffroy was called for or whether it was mailed and, if it was called for, whether any identification was asked of the person picking up the document?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The application was mailed and the passport itself was mailed to the address on the application form. It was obviously not picked up by Mr. Geoffroy.

An hon. Member: Are you sure?

Mr. Sharp: I would have to make inquiries to find out who did pick it up. I shall endeavour to obtain the information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McCleave: A further supplementary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he tell us whether his department was asked to deal with visa applications by anyone using the fake passport in Geoffroy's case?

Mr. Sharp: Visas are not issued by the Canadian government except, of course, for entry into Canada, and obviously they did not want to move in this direction.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PURPOSE OF RECEPTION IN MOLSON'S BREWERY FOR CERTAIN OFFICERS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. Can he explain to the House the purpose of the reception given in mid-January in Molson's Brewery in Montreal for a number of RCMP officers? This reception was sponsored by the government. Can the minister explain what that was all about?

• (1150)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Could I rephrase the question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member might rephrase the question, but certainly in the way it has been asked it might very well be the kind of question that should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The urgency of the matter requires an answer now, Mr. Speaker, and putting it on the order paper would not achieve that result. Would the Solicitor General mind checking to see whether such a reception was held and relate the circumstances of it to the House? At the same time, would he indicate why he was not there, or was it held without his knowledge?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PETITION FROM EDMONTON CITIZENS PROTESTING CHANGE IN NAME

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister advise the House whether he has been informed by his office that a telegram has been received from some 11,500 citizens of Edmonton and area concerning the change in the designation of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police? If so, what has been his answer to that telegram?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would indicate when the telegram was sent, perhaps I would be able to trace it. I have had no notice that such a telegram is in my office.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The telegram was dated February 22, and if the Prime Minister or anybody else wishes I am quite prepared to table it since I have referred to it. Here it is.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he cannot table the telegram.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This is a document that has been referred to. It is not an extraneous object that is brought into the House contrary to the rules. This document is the same as a government document that is used for the purpose of reference.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is expounding a novel theory with reference to the tabling of documents. The hon. member for Greenwood.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO REDUCE BACKLOG OF APPEALS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that the government introduced a white paper on the subject of immigration proposing reforms in 1966, and in light of a very recent report by the immigration department signed by the present Minister of Justice which stated that measures were needed to correct the situation regarding the back-up of immigration appeals, is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation dealing with this vitally important subject at an early date?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the ministers who have been involved with this question in recent years have realized that we would either have to change the act or plug its loopholes, and the new Minister of Manpower and Immigration is giving attention to this problem.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH

MOBILIZATION OF RESOURCES TO COMBAT CARDIOVASCULAR DISEASES

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of recent epidemiological studies which indicate that mortality and morbidity caused by heart disease and strokes have reached epidemic proportions, having taken the lives of 77,000 Canadians last year, I would like to ask the minister to inform the House whether he has any plans to mobilize all necessary resources and launch a national attack on cardiovascular diseases, Canada's number one killer?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recognize that his question is somewhat wide in scope. If the minister can reply very briefly he will be allowed to do so, but normally the information sought should be given by way of a statement on motions.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I can reply briefly, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we are doing something to try to combat this disease, a very serious disease indeed. We are contributing over $1.5 million to combat this disease through the Medical Research Council to various medical educators and scientists all across Canada. We also contribute in this area through the health resources fund. We are also sharing projects with the Heart Foundation to combat this disease.

* * *

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—POSITION OF UNIONS AND COMPANIES ON RETENTION OF CANADIAN SAFEGUARDS—RECONCILING OF STATISTICS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As it now appears, or the impression is abroad, that the minister considers the two major Canadian safeguards in the United States-Canada auto agreement no longer of the major importance that they were when the pact was initiated, can the minister indicate whether this view is shared by the Canadian trade unions and the Canadian automobile corporations?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I know it is shared by the automobile makers, the manufacturers themselves. It is shared by all of them. I also know it is shared by many other people but they might not all say so in public.

Mr. Danforth: Since one of the main or apparent contentions is that the negotiations are based on a discrepancy between Canadian and United States figures regarding trade imbalance, has any progress been made between the two groups in reaching a common denominator in this respect?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is talking in terms of the trade balance in respect of merchandise in general, including automobiles, I assume. Efforts have been made in this regard. Mr. Stans, who was then secretary of commerce of the United States, came here a few months ago and we agreed on a procedure to be followed. Meetings have been held since and I am told that some degree of progress is being made in reconciling the statistics used on both sides of the border. I understand that if you look at exports and imports you have different sets of figures, and that efforts are being made to reconcile the differences and that certain progress is being made.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the previous question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was recognized for the purpose of asking a supplementary to the question now before the House. If he has no supplementary at this time perhaps he could be recognized later. The hon. member for Selkirk has a supplementary question to the question now before the House.

Mr. Broadbent: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, simply to clarify the point that I meant that I had a supplementary to the first question asked by the previous speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Broadbent: In terms of clarifying what the minister said in reply to the question, is he saying he has had explicit support from the heads of the automotive companies for the government's original intention to give up the safeguards in the Canada-United States automotive agreement?

Mr. Pepin: No, Mr. Speaker. I was very careful to answer the precise question that the hon. member for Kent-Essex put to me. His question was: Is it recognized that the two formal safeguards have no direct effect any more on the economic decision-making process in the automobile industry, or words to that effect. That is as I understood it, and my answer was that this is generally recognized by the manufacturers and has been said to me on a number of occasions. Then I implied strongly that other people also believe that but they will not say so in public for other reasons.

Mr. Broadbent: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby for a last supplementary on this subject. Immediately afterwards we will go on to the next matter and I will recognize the hon. member for Compton.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that the president of at least one of these corporations and the president of one other major producer of automobiles, I understand, have gone on public record as opposing any change in these safeguards?

Mr. Pepin: Perhaps one of them who has a particular problem might have said so. Sometimes he needs one of the safeguards and does not need the other, and we have had to make adjustments to accommodate him. I am sorry that this is so complicated. In his particular case he may think that the safeguards have legal importance, but I was talking specifically about the economic decision-making process and whether a plant should be here in Canada or in the United States. My answer was that the two formal safeguards do not exercise any direct effect on the decision-making process in existence.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pepin: They may have a side effect—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister, but I feel that we should proceed to another subject.

* * *

• (1200)

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBILITY OF GRANTING LOANS THROUGH INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Would he say whether he intends to use the Industrial Development Bank in answer to the request of several businessmen who claim that the interest rates of the chartered banks are too high, and that it would be time to reduce them, because this is harmful to industrial and commercial development?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I regret, Mr. Speaker, but industrial development does not fall within my jurisdiction.

[English]

POWER

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—ESTABLISHMENT OF CABINET COMMITTEE OR OTHER CO-ORDINATING BODY

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It relates to the proposed James Bay project of the government of Quebec. In view of the fact there is federal responsibility in several departments—Environment, Indian Affairs and Transport— has a cabinet committee or some other federal co-ordinating body been set up to consider this problem from the federal aspect?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question is being considered in the proper areas of government.

Mr. Aiken: Am I to take it from the answer of the Prime Minister that for the time being we should address our questions to the ministers involved in the particular aspects of this project?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—CONSULTATION WITH INDIANS AFFECTED

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister consulted with the Indians now living in the province of Quebec who have been making violent objections to the whole James Bay project? If so, has the minister communicated this information to his colleague, the Minister of the Environment?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the House that I am in constant contact with the Quebec Indian Association, that I met Chief Max Gros-Louis about this as recently as last week and Chief Delisle as well as Mr. Gros-Louis a few weeks before.

[English]

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC BY INDIAN AFFAIRS MINISTER

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, a number of my questions have already been asked. Is the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development also having discussions with the government of the province of Quebec about this very serious matter and expressing the view of his department as strongly as possible in these discussions? Also, is he prepared to give the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development a complete rundown on his discussions when his estimates come before that committee for examination?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have already had the opportunity of speaking a couple of times to the Quebec Prime Minister as well as to the Minister of Industry and Commerce in that connection, the latter being to some extent responsible for the James Bay Development Corporation. During the consideration of my department's estimates in committee, I will be pleased to give to its members my opinion in this regard.

* * *

[English]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REVIEW OF STRATEGIES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON OBJECTIVES—NUMBER OF JOBS CREATED STILL IN EXISTENCE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In light of the widespread scepticism in the financial community about the minister's DREE programs, the latest evidence of which can be found in the econonic report of the Provincial Bank of Canada, is the minister reviewing the strategies within his department and will a statement be made regarding the goals and objectives of the minister's programs?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should read the very good article about my department in the Financial Times and he might then change his mind.

Mr. McGrath: I wish to ask a supplementary question arising out of the annual report of the minister's department wherein it is stated that grants under the Area Development Incentives Act are 22 per cent lower than last year's claim, representing a loss of 12,264 jobs. Is an investigation being made to determine how many of the remaining estimated jobs are still in existence?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I will have to make an analysis to answer this. Do you not have people in the opposition who are interested in research?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We pay for that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister should address his reply to the Chair.

Mr. McGrath: A further supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East on a last supplementary and then the hon. member for Broadview and the hon. member for Annapolis Valley.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the annual report of the minister's department wherein this wide discrepancy under the Area Development Incentives Act appears, I think it is incumbent upon the minister to give an undertaking that an investigation will be made to determine how many of the jobs created under this program are actually still in existence.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is arguing in favour of his previous question.

* * *

HOUSING

TALVIN PROJECT, HULL—SUGGESTED MEETING TO DEAL WITH PROBLEMS CONCERNING STRUCTURAL DEFECTS AND REPAIRS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the serious building problems concerning structural defects and repairs experienced by home owners of the Talvin housing project in Hull, Quebec, and the refusal or lack of communication by CMHC officials and the builder, and possibly the minister, will the minister agree to arrange a meeting with representatives of the home owners in this housing project and call to the meeting CMHC officials and the builder?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I will inquire into it, Mr. Speaker. If a meeting will serve some useful purpose, I have no objection.

[Mr. McGrath.]

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON LOW-COST HOUSING

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister table in the House the report of the special task force which I believe has reported to him on the whole question of low-cost housing, in particular the financing of the rehabilitation of existing housing, co-operatives and non-profit housing? Will he table that report in the House?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there have been a great many studies within the ministry and the corporation, the results of which will be reflected from time to time in legislation laid before the House.

[Later:]

Mr. Brewin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will first recognize the hon. member for Greenwood on his supplementary or if he prefers, on his point of order.

Mr. Brewin: The point of order I was going to raise was that I directed a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs relating to a specific report of a task force. The minister made a general reply. Would he deal with my question about the task force report on low-cost housing which he has, which is available and which this House and the public should have?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I am examining the very large number of studies and reports that have been made to determine which ones should be laid before the House and when. That is still being examined.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NOVA SCOTIA LAND IMPROVEMENT PROJECT—PASSING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My question arises out of one asked earlier by the hon. member for St. John's East and concerns a specific project within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The minister has had some notice of this question. He gave me the courtesy of an answer, but in his reply this week he did not indicate whether the order in council authorizing federal approval for a land improvement project involving—

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Nowlan: I will come to the question in a minute, loudmouth. I appreciate some of the problems. I understand that the minister's department and Treasury Board authorized the land improvement project affecting all Nova Scotia which was submitted by the government of Nova Scotia. Has Treasury Board now passed the order in council? When can we have final approval by order in council for this project?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not think Treasury Board passed this order in council. I do not think it has been approved yet by Treasury Board. I hope it will soon be approved.

* * *

[Translation]

POWER

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CO-OPERATION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the numerous observations made by certain hon. members, and particularly of their interest in the James Bay project, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the federal government leaves to the province of Quebec the entire responsibility for the James Bay project and whether he is prepared to co-operate in so far as possible and to grant subsidies and loans?

Right Hon. P.E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The question is complex, Mr. Speaker. Of course the establishment of hydroelectric services on a river within a province falls under the jurisdiction of that province. Still, such undertakings may have consequences in areas under the responsibility of the federal government, for instance on the Indian population, the financing method, the export of energy—if that is the intention—the establishment of means of transportation, if the provincial government waits for the federal government to build them. Now for all those reasons, we are interested in certain aspects of the project and it is those aspects that the government of the province of Quebec will have to discuss with the federal government if it wants to have our co-operation.

At present, the federal government has made no commitments.

* * *

[English]

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

METHOD OF INVESTIGATION INTO LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday he told the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings that it had not yet been determined who is responsible for any of the leaks of confidential government documents. I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman what methods of investigation are now being used by the government in view of the fact that some of these leaks or disclosures took place a number of months ago?

• (1210)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the same methods as always have been used. I requested the minister of each department in which a leak might have originated to make an investigation in his department and, in cases where he felt it was within his responsibility, to discuss with the Solicitor General the importance in some cases of having the police pursue and investigation or otherwise—whether it should be pursued by the department itself with its own facilities.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether there is any instance in which the matter has gone beyond the minister of the particular department and the Solicitor General has been consulted by a minister of the government with regard to any particular leak, if I may use that word.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would have to check to see if any minister in fact has brought in the police in any case.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized for a brief supplementary. There are only two minutes left before the end of the question period.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is addressed to the Prime Minister. Since the four unnamed, undefined and impersonal monitors in the Solicitor General's department are to monitor security and problems of security within the country, does their jurisdiction extend to monitoring security within the government as a directive from the Prime Minister?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I answered this question. When there is any suspicion of a leak within a department it is the minister of that department who makes the investigation. There is no over-all authority of the RCMP to go into a department and make an investigation of matters coming within the jurisdiction of the department.

Mr. Nowlan: On a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether we might pursue the matter tomorrow. We are running short of time. The hon. member for Malpeque.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED DIVERSION OF POTATOES PURCHASED UNDER STABILIZATION PROGRAM TO STOCK FEEDING

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. What reply has he made to the Prince Edward Island Potato Co-ordinating Committee with regard to their request that potatoes purchased under the potato stabilization program be diverted at least in part to stock feeding?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply very briefly. We are trying to work out a program which will be useful in this respect but, as the hon. member knows, these potatoes would be sold back at a very low price and we want to make sure that they do not wind up as table potatoes or as processing potatoes at that time. We want to be very careful also that we do not short the market and have to replace these potatoes.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacLean: Will the minister be in a position soon to make a further statement on this matter and also on the request which has reached him from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and other organizations regarding a subsidy on breeding hogs?

Mr. Olson: In respect of the first part of the question I hope so. I will look into the second question.

HOG DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS—SUGGESTED PRESS RELEASE TO RESOLVE CONFUSION

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Is it the minister's intention to issue a press release to help relieve the confusion that seems to exist among the hog producers of Canada when they apply for their deficiency payments? The confusion arises out of the word "other" in the program.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, these forms obviously were printed before the announcement was made. As a matter of fact, as long ago as September I indicated there was a high likelihood of a deficiency payment being made and we did make up the forms and distribute them across the country. At that time we did not know on what level it would be paid and therefore all categories, including a category for "other", were included.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, when the minister is giving this information perhaps he might explain why the word "process" is spelled "precess".

* * *

PENSIONS

OLD AGE SECURITY—INQUIRY AS TO MEASURE TO INCREASE BASIC AMOUNT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Even though there is no mention in the Throne Speech of the subject of old age pensions may I ask the minister a question based on the statement he made several times during the last session that parliament could at any time increase the basic amount of the pension under the Old Age Security Act. Does the government intend to bring in such a measure during the course of this session?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there is no intention in this regard, but I would remind the hon. member that the last time we dealt with this matter, about a year ago, we brought in the second largest increase in Canadian history.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Forty-two cents.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

[Mr. Olson.]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Wednesday, February 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ross Whicher for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity and privilege to take part in the debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. First, of course, I should like to express my deepest appreciation for the contributions made by the mover and the seconder of the address in reply. I am particularly interested in the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took the time to give some information regarding the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). I note he indicated to the House that this member had sat in the provincial house from 1955, I believe, until 1967 and was then elected to the House of Commons in 1968.

When I listened to the hon. member's speech and then reread it I could readily understand why he was in the opposition in the Ontario Legislature for such a lengthy period of time. There are two particular statements I should like to bring back to haunt the hon. member. First of all, as recorded at page 9 of Hansard, he said:

Without any doubt I can say here this afternoon that the senior citizens of Canada have the benefit of the just society promised by our government.

Mr. Speaker, that is one of the more irresponsible statements I have heard since I have been here. I do not know where the hon. member lives or why he has not received the same type of mail I have received from these poor, frustrated Canadians, frustrated because of the attitude of this government in terms of lack of senior citizen housing, in terms of the high cost of living and in terms of removing the escalation clause in respect of the minimum old age security payment. These people constantly write to me and I am sure to all other hon. members. So far as I am concerned they do not believe they are living in a just society and they are not likely to do so in the very near future unless there is a change of government.

I should like to bring up another matter.

Mr. McBride: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: There is the man of the cloth. I read the editorial about him. I will let my remarks stand. I support the editorial fully. It appears that the hon. member will not be back with us for the glory and edification of the people of Canada after the next election.

Let me quote another statement made by the hon. member for Bruce. As recorded at page 13 of Hansard, he said:

When the chips are down, the people of Canada will appreciate the good life that this government is allowing them to live.

I underline the word "allowing". Is that a responsible statement? I wonder whether in fact this is the fact. Is "Trudeaucracy" allowing the people of Canada to live? Let me set the hon. member straight because if they are living they are living in extremely adverse conditions. It is no wonder the Prime Minister has indicated he will not go to the people on his past record but rather intends to concentrate on future plans. If we look at this matter of allowing people to live and the record of the government in terms of human frustration and alienation, we can readily understand why all of us wait with baited breath his announcement of the next election.

• (1220)

Just let me point out the dismal failure of the government in certain areas, and this must be repeated and repeated again because these are the issues about which people are concerned. This government is possessed of certain highs, such as high taxes, the high number of bankruptcies and lay-offs, the high payment they gave to old age pensioners amounting to 42 cents, and high unemployment. At present 665,000 are unemployed. The Prime Minister has said this is a regrettable side effect of the government's fiscal and monetary policies. What concerns me is the fact that those who are deserving and should be rewarded are not considered. There is the case of Mr. Vallières. For the life of me I do not know what was the philosophy behind hiring him, particularly when I hear the then Minister of Labour condone such action and tell us that this type of person is more worthy than Lord knows how many unemployed of whom there are about 10 per cent to 12 per cent in the province of Quebec. The minister has condoned this action and I for one do not accept it. This is the kind of climate in which we are living as a result of this government's involvement with the destiny of the people of Canada.

We have also had lows. There is the low in the confidence of Canadians in the government. There is the alienation that exists in the west. We all know about that because we have all travelled out west. There is also the alienation that exists in central Canada as a result of the rigidity of this government, and the alienation that exists in the Atlantic provinces as a result of this government being bankrupt of ideas to solve or reduce regional economic disparities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Of course there is also a new low in Canada-United States relations. But then I wonder what we can expect when we find that the Prime Minister on an overseas tour registered some concern vis-à-vis our American friends when he stated that he fears a cultural, economic and military take-over by that country. This is the gist of the message. We cannot wonder then at this new low in U.S.-Canadian relations and at the fact that Canadians have to suffer a little pain. We should reiterate and re-emphasize to our American friends that we are their best trading customers. We must tell them that if we have to suffer any pain they in turn will suffer pain also as a result of their economic policies that hamstring us.

I should like to make a few comments with regard to the employment record of this government. The Prime Minister, in his reply to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) the other day, had much to say about gloom and doom. Surely it is the role of the opposition to point out the inadequacies and failures of this government. If in our words there is gloom, perhaps there is need for gloom when there are some 665,000 people out of work. It is not only the individual who is out of work that we have to consider but, as I have stated continually, we have to go down the ladder and consider the bus driver, the taxicab driver, the corner grocery store owner and the small businessmen whose livelihood depends on the income or lack of it of the 665,000. We get confused and we say that there are only 665,000 people out of work, but this is the nitty-gritty of our economic stability because without these people being able to purchase goods and services the economy founders.

On page 2 of Hansard for February 17, 1972 there is a reference in the Throne Speech to "our success . . . in the creation of new jobs". The next day the Prime Minister expanded on this theme and said:

> The large number of new jobs being created in Canada should not be overlooked.

If anyone is overlooking anything, it is the Prime Minister; he is the one who is ignoring facts. The Economic Council of Canada has estimated that during the period from 1970 to 1975 the rate of employment growth needed to absorb the labour force growth and to reduce unemployment to about 4 per cent would be about 3.3 per cent per year. In 1970 employment increased by 1.3 per cent, and in 1971 employment increased by 2.5 per cent. Only 299,000 jobs were created in 1970 and 1971 together—a mere 21 per cent of the 1.4 million we need by 1975. Accordingly, there is a gap of 1.1 million jobs to be bridged in the next three years if we are to reduce unemployment to a more acceptable level.

What does this shortfall in job creation mean in human terms? It means that only 64 per cent of all labour force entrants in the past two years have found jobs. It means that only half of all men entering the labour force between the beginning of 1970 and the end of 1971 found jobs. It means that only 46 per cent of all young people entering the labour force in these two years found jobs, which is tragic, to say the very least.

Since the Prime Minister took office at the beginning of May, 1968, employment has risen by 5.5 per cent, the labour force has shot up by 9 per cent and consequently unemployment has almost doubled, rising from 366,000 in May, 1968, to the present figure of 665,000 in January, 1972. This is the record on which the Prime Minister wants to stand. This is the record about which he boasts.

The Prime Minister admonishes Canadians not to overlook:

> . . . the fact that, between 1965 and 1970—the last period for which statistics are available—over one million new jobs were created in Canada.

Perhaps this is the problem with the government's policies on unemployment. The Prime Minister is now aware that Canada's employment and unemployment figures are available right up to January, 1972, and consequently he is acting on the basis of long outdated figures. Canada's job creation, the Prime Minister continues, was much faster than in other countries between 1965 and 1970. Maybe this is true, but few other countries in the world have a labour force growth as rapid as Canada's and few have an unemployment rate as high as Canada's.

The Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development published in May, 1970, their projections for needed employment growth in their member countries between 1970 and 1975. These projections show that Canada was far ahead of all other industrial countries in the need for employment growth during the decade. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that these projections show that Canada was far ahead of all other industrial countries in the need for employment growth during the decade. Between 1970 and 1975 Canada's needed employment growth was estimated at 15 per cent compared with only 9 per cent for the United States and no more than 5 per cent for any other country. Obviously, then, other countries in the 1970s do not need to aim as high in employment growth as does Canada because their labour forces are not growing as fast. This is the point that I believe the Prime Minister deliberately missed. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's pleasure at Canada's employment growth rate is rather hollow and meaningless.

• (1230)

Of more relevance is another figure, the ratio of unemployed people to vacancies in various countries. The most recent figures in this regard are for the third quarter of 1971. They show that in the European countries the Prime Minister referred to in his reply to the Leader of the Opposition, being Belgium, France, Sweden, Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom but excluding Italy for which there were no job vacancy figures, there is a vast difference in the competition for available jobs. In these European countries there were only 1.3 unemployed persons competing for each vacant job whereas in Canada at the same time there were 10.6 unemployed persons competing for each vacant job. Quite a difference in this regard.

There is another way to view the Trudeau employment record, and that is by comparing the rate of growth of employment, the rate of growth of the labour force, and employment rates during the Trudeau years with the records of previous Canadian governments. There were several years in the pre-Trudeau era which managed a higher rate of employment growth and a lower unemployment rate even when the labour force was growing faster than today.

I refer you to the year 1966, Mr. Speaker, when we had an annual increase in the labour force of 3.9 per cent and an annual increase in employment of 4.2 per cent and an unemployment rate of 3.6 per cent. So we see that in 1966 Canada's employment growth was faster than anything in the Trudeau years. In spite of the fact that her labour force grew faster than in any year since, the unemployment rate was lower than any annual rate the Trudeau government has been able to show.

Rather than look at all these facts and at Canada's 665,000 unemployed, the Prime Minister prefers to tell the nation that every cloud has its silver lining. Why do the unemployment figures matter, he implies, when Canada's international record in employment growth from 1965 to 1970 is unsurpassed?

More than this, the Prime Minister has recently been repeatedly telling the unemployed that jobs are available but they are too lazy to get them. The great mining centres of Canada such as Sudbury, he says, are crying for workers. The fact that INCO has been planning and carrying out lay-offs for several months has done little to dampen his enthusiasm for this approach to the unemployment problem. The Prime Minister and his advisers, before he visits and insults the unemployed in this manner, at least in Ontario, should read the recently released report of the Ontario task force on employment opportunities for welfare recipients, especially page 67 where it is stated:

> There is comparatively large-scale unemployment now affecting all areas of the province, if not to the same extent elsewhere, to the extent that no area has a shortage of labour.

Sincerely, Mr. Speaker, Canadians have heard enough of the Trudeau government's misleading figures and its excuses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Canadians need and want a comprehensive set of policies to deal with the problem, not a re-run of the old rhetoric that tries to sweep the problem under the rug and away from the government's hands. "Out of sight, out of mind" seems to be the Trudeau government philosophy toward unemployment.

I understand that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) wants to speak immediately after me. Perhaps he will give some indication of the industrial policy that the government intends to implement in order that we can have economic growth and full employment. I should like to hear what the Minister of Finance has to say about full employment. As I said, "out of sight, out of mind" seems to be the Trudeau government philosophy toward unemployment and every statement in the throne speech is dedicated to that end.

The present Canadian ills of high unemployment and rising prices are the products of the anaemic and petty economic policies of the Trudeau government. The issue now is whether those policies are changing. I do not believe they are.

I know that the Minister of Finance is waiting most anxiously to state the direction in which this great country should be pointed under the present regime and we are waiting with bated breath for his speech. I know that the former Minister of Justice in his new position as Minister of Finance will display the same compassion and the same humanitarian feeling toward the Canadian people as he has in the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: This is what we are talking about—people. I know the Minister of Finance is concerned and what he has to say to us this afternoon will be on the record for the edification of all of us. I hope the recent change in the finance portfolio is of some significance.

I should like to tell the minister of a meeting I attended in the city of Hamilton not too long ago. I hope other members will have the same sort of meeting because I found it most gratifying, informative and interesting. The labour community was invited but unfortunately did not see fit to attend. If we want to move toward some co-operation, negotiation and understanding between labour, business, government and management, I am at a loss to understand why labour did not attend.

The businessmen were concerned because they were being bombarded by an excessive amount of legislation that, as they said, left them no time to run their businesses. They placed great emphasis on the tax bill which was recently implemented by closure; they also placed great emphasis on the competition bill and its dire effects, with particular reference to the tribunal. They referred to the labour bill with its features regarding technological change and referred to high management being unionized. They were concerned about the poor draftmanship in these bills. In at least one instance, the tax bill recently forced upon us, I know this is to be true. We know that the bill is not in a perfect state and that amendments have been made to amendments to amendments and that there will be further amendments. But the government has the gall to say that they have removed any uncertainty from the business sector and from the private sector, meaning the individual. How can there be any confidence, how can they say that there is no uncertainty when there are still amendments pending?

Another point they brought up, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that this government does not listen to the points brought out in the briefs submitted. They hear the phrase "participatory democracy" and are invited to send their briefs, but they indicated to me that they believe this means nothing because the briefs are thrown in the wastepaper basket. I have already said that all the brains in this country are not in the House of Commons.

Mr. Bell: Not on the other side, anyway.

Mr. Alexander: There are brains outside this place; as a matter of fact, there are more outside than inside. The government would be well advised to pay more attention, and particularly the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride). I told the House what is going to happen to him. Another matter they were concerned about was the philosophy of this government. They do not know what that philosophy is.

An hon. Member: They don't have one.

Mr. Alexander: I cannot tell you. I want you to tell the Canadian people. What is your philosophy? Where are you going?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Where are you going? You have the whole country upset and frustrated about what Canada is going to be like in the next six years.

Mr. Crouse: They are going out in the cold; that is where they are going.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I want to let you know that Hamilton is concerned about the economic climate. As an industrial city it is extremely concerned, obviously, about the type of legislation that is introduced, the philosophy behind it and whether it provides any incentives. We do not think that the government has thought about this. I hope the new Minister of Finance will take everything under review and that past mistakes will not be used as a basis for any new philosophy he may develop. That is what concerns me.

• (1240)

At the significant finance ministers conference in Jasper the Minister of Finance made it clear that he really does not have the intellectual baggage to explain new mistakes with new rationales. He decided, instead, to settle down and carry the flag of chronic errors and shortcomings. The minister said he was going to undertake a study in order to find new ways to control inflation. Such a study is certainly called for. We have not yet seen any of the research studies of the Prices and Incomes Commission. Undertaking them was one of its primary responsibilities. Also, Mr. Speaker, we have experienced two and a half years of mass unemployment because the government decided to fight inflation the old way.

Inflation has appeared again and unemployment is massive. Are we to repeat past erroneous policies or introduce a new policy? In Jasper this matter was clarified. More retainers may be paid and more research studies undertaken, but the underlying policy is not about to change. I hope the Minister of Finance will correct me if I am wrong in this regard. I hope he will indicate I am wrong. The minister of Finance made it clear that he believes inflation at present is primarily caused by excessive demand pull. He said that there should be a moderation in the government sector. While the provinces and most advisers disagree, the Minister of Finance made it clear that, even though 665,000 are unemployed, accelerated economic expansion should be rejected. Furthermore, he repeated the ill-advised and malicious proposition that governments must continue trading off jobs to control prices. He said:

> We have to watch very carefully now the balance between the problem of unemployment and the problem of rising prices.

I hope he will explain that.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would be good enough to distinguish between what I said and reportorial remarks attributed to me in the article.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister of Finance will shortly be delivering his speech. He can correct me and point to any errors I have made. He said that his goal is to provide a job for every Canadian willing to work but that the speed with which this goal is reached must be consistent with stable prices. The minister hardly expressed himself in the hottest of prose; yet the message was clear: "Play it again, Sam, the old way." Why must this be so? Why can we not have a Liberal government with a new policy? Surely it is not sticking to the old policy because the old policy has proven to be right. Everyone, from Richard Nixon to Paul Hellyer, from Mel Watkins to René Levesque, knows it has not worked and that it will not work. We will not get price stability by operating away below potential and tolerating high unemployment. The only consequence of that policy has been human misery, national disunity and the exaggeration of those very structural faults that produce chronic inflation.

Why is the government adopting that position? Surely the reason cannot be that this government is cold and indifferent. After all, we must assume the Minister of Finance wants to be liked and that the Prime Minister would rather be loved than hated. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we can achieve stable prices within a strategy of full employment. We can reduce the differences in incomes and employment between all the regions. We can have a more just society. There is a will in this country, and there are resources and policies available to accomplish this goal. All that is required is a co-ordinated federal effort and the confidence of the private sector. I suggest that remarks such as that the premier of a province is a bigot will not help.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I am about to finish, Mr. Speaker, in case your patience is becoming exhausted.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, go on until one o'clock.

Mr. Alexander: The difficulty is that this government is worn out. It does not have the energy or confidence to choose a new course. It is a government that can no longer take initiatives beyond the pork barrel. Mr. Speaker, this country is sick and tired of style. It wants content.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: When I think about style, I think about what that style has meant, Mr. Speaker. It has meant that the Prime Minister has called several members bums and idiots and said to western farmers: "Why should I sell your wheat?". Style has meant the use of words like, "Mange de la merde". When some young chaps dared to question the Prime Minister he is reported to have said, "I will kick your posteriors." That is what style has meant. It has also meant that he has called Members of Parliament nobodies. All this is the result of style. When the Prime Minister shows disdain for parliament, is that style? Of course, the fuddle-duddle matter need not be gone into at great length. Style has also meant that the Prime Minister has called the prime minister of a province a bigot. You certainly will not make provinces co-operate in that way.

In view of all this and in view of the lack of strategic policies I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas), that after the words "Houses of Parliament" in the main motion there be added the following:

but we find intolerable the utter failure of this government to bring forward a decisive policy to achieve full employment and the continuing uncertainty and hesitancy in the economy because of the chronic indecisiveness of this government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must advise the hon. member that I have some doubts about the procedural acceptability of his amendment. It is well known that there cannot be two amendments in the same debate which cover the same specific area. I do not want to be difficult about the matter, and if there are really no objections I am prepared to accept the amendment. I think I must warn hon. members that when one amendment has been voted on hon. members cannot come forward with a similar amendment in the same debate. One amendment having been voted down, hon. members cannot, in the same debate, come forward with a second, similar amendment. I think hon. members should be careful not to bring forward a second amendment that is substantially the same as the first one.

Having said this, but not wanting to be difficult, I will put the amendment to the House if no procedural objection is raised. Is there any objection? There being no opposition to the motion, I propose to put it to the House.

Mr. Fairweather: No one is suffering from a fire in the belly.

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has not submitted the amendment in proper form. His proposed amendment begins with the words, "but we find intolerable", etc. The amendment should be proposed in its full terms. It is difficult for me or for the Table to determine exactly what words the hon. member would like to remove.

Mr. McBride: And those people want to run the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, may we have a little quiet from the other side. I am sorry for the inconvenience which has been caused.

An hon. Member: And you people want to run the country.

Mr. Alexander: I am sorry for the inconvenience that has been caused, Mr. Speaker. I believe I indicated that I was moving, seconded by the hon. member for Moncton, a motion to the following effect: that immediately following the words "Houses of Parliament" there be added those words in the motion as printed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is quite in order.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the hon. member's motion is to be added immediately after the words "Houses of Parliament" and reads:

but we find intolerable the utter failure of this government to bring forward a decisive policy to achieve full employment and the continuing uncertainty and hesitancy in the economy because of the chronic indecisiveness of this government.

• (1250)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity which this debate affords me of speaking to the House for the first time under my new responsibilities as Minister of Finance. Moreover, I wanted to face this chamber first, before speaking elsewhere.

With regard to the point of order which may have arisen as a result of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), may I say we do not want him or the House to feel that the reason we did not challenge its acceptability was that we accept the proposition inherent in that amendment. It was merely that, not having had an opportunity to help him draft it, we did not with to deprive the House of an opportunity to deal with the subject matter that he wished to introduce.

I should like to say at the outset how much I enjoyed the speech of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) who moved the address in reply. I think we all found it to be up to his style of wit. It was a telling, very pungent speech and I am sure members from all sides would wish to congratulate him on it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1250)

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): With regard to the speech made by the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie), in support of the motion relating to the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, I must say that his debut in politics is full of promise and that everyone wishes him a successful career in the House not only now, but especially after the next election.

[English]

May I also, at the outset, thank Members of Parliament on both sides of the House who have been kind enough to write me, talk to me and offer me words of encouragement and friendship. I value my association with this chamber more than anything else and I shall try to live up to what confidence they may have in me and conduct myself in a way which will not descend into partisanship.

In assuming my new duties I am taking over from a colleague who has borne the burdens of this office for the last three and a half years. He has borne them with good humour, even temper, fortitude and a sense of resilience, and I am sure all hon. members would wish to join with me in extending him best wishes in his new role as Minister of National Defence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Before I get into the substance of what I have to say, it might be for the convenience of the House if I were to call it one o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as a member of this government since it took office in 1968, and indeed of the previous government under Mr. Pearson, I have had close contact for some years with the economic and financial issues that confront us. While I am familiar with the problems, I recognize that I have a lot of homework to do on the matters that are the particular responsibility of the Minister of Finance.

I also recognize that I have a lot of hard thinking to do on the best means of dealing with the central economic and financial problems facing the country. I want to assure the House that about such questions my mind is receptive to the best counsel I can get from any quarter. I start from the premise that no one, nowhere, has a monopoly on wisdom. I begin with a good many convictions but with an open mind.

In my judgment, the first responsibility of this portfolio concerns the management of the Canadian economy as a whole. As I see it, the prime objective of economic management is to obtain the greatest increase in jobs, in production and in the real income of Canadians that it is possible to achieve on a continuing basis. Setting the objective of economic policy is easy; attaining that objective is immensely complex and difficult, judging not only from our own experience in this country but from the experience of all nations.

It is not a problem that will yield to simplistic solutions, solutions that ignore the realities of the world in which we live. In pursuit of this objective it is important to recognize that the Canadian economy does not operate in isolation nor in accordance with the dictates of Ottawa. On the contrary, the national economy is exposed to many forces both at home and abroad which restrict the federal government's ability to control the direction of that economy with infinite precision.

Ours is essentially a free enterprise economy, not one whose every movement is determined by the state. Certainly, the federal government will play the central role in guiding its course, but every day millions of Canadian consumers—workers, farmers, fishermen, businessmen, investors—make individual decisions in the marketplace which over time have a massive impact on the state of our whole economy.

[Translation]

Provinces and municipalities also have great influence. How much tax they levy, how much they spend, how much and where they borrow—all those decisions have a bearing on the workings of the economic system. Twenty years ago, those two levels of government spent only about 36 per cent of every Canadian tax dollar. Today the ratio is about 60 per cent. Now that provinces and municipalities spend half as much again as the federal government they are in a position where their impact on Canadian economic activity is substantial to say the least.

On the other hand, our economy is far from isolated from the rest of the world. We are probably more than any other nation influenced by the international economic environment. We are a trading nation by necessity, and 25 cents out of every dollar we make comes from abroad. In 1969, export of Canadian products yielded the equivalent of $653 for every man, woman, and child in Canada. Although Japan is considered as one of the world's great trading nations, its export revenues for the same year were only $187 per capita. Moreover, we are deeply affected not only by trade variations but also by the decisions of other capital cities and financial centres of the world. The actions of governments in Washington, Tokyo, London, Paris and Bonn, the decisions made by businessmen and financiers in New York, Chicago, Hambourg, Rotterdam and Zurich can all have a bearing on our prosperity here in Canada.

• (1410)

[English]

It must be recognized that there is a fourth and universal constraint on the ability of all governments to ensure that the economy achieves the desired course at all times. That constraint is the limit of knowledge. Medical men have not yet learned all there is to know about medicine, nor economists about economics, even though great strides have been made in both fields over the past several decades.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I watched the eyebrows of some members opposite being raised. In my last portfolio of justice I was dealing with the imprecisions of the legal process. I now find I am dealing with imprecisions based on the varied biases of the economists. If I thought there were imprecise concepts in my former portfolio, I find that imprecision is not unknown to the present.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Despite substantial progress in developing policies and mechanisms for guiding the economy, it still remains difficult to determine with precision the state of the economy and its direction at any given time. It follows that there are always difficulties in determining what levers should be pulled, with what force, and at what exact time, in order to bring about a correction in the course of the economy. Then, too, there is the problem of the long and varying intervals between the application of a measure and its effects on the economic process. A further complication stems from the fact that during this intervening period, new and previously unforeseen forces may develop, requiring still further adjustments to be made.

These, then are the factors not within our control: Individual market decisions; the influence of the provinces; the vulnerability of our economy to world forces; the imprecision of the art of economics.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As a result of all these elements, there are significant limits on the manoeuverability of a Minister of Finance and his ability to exercise precise control over the course of the economy. Anybody in my position who yields to the pretense of sounding omniscient is either a charlatan or a fool. I hope I never play this charade in the House or in the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): A good many of the decisions for which I now have a special responsibility will of necessity be based on predictions about how our own citizens and those in other countries will conduct their own affairs in the marketplace and about what action may be taken by the governments of other nations. Predictions take some skill, but they also take some luck. I hope that I will enjoy the necessary measure of both.

Despite the very real limitations on our ability to control the course of the economy, it has on the whole fared remarkably well over the course of the last decade and more. Throughout most of the 1960's, the Canadian economy experienced the greatest period of sustained expansion in its history. Like that of virtually every other industrial nation, our economy within the past few years has gone through a difficult adjustment period as a result of the heavy price and cost pressures that built up during the latter half of the sixties.

For me, the most painful aspect of this adjustment process has been the emergence of unacceptably high levels of unemployment. My first and most urgent priority is to provide continuing and well-paying jobs for those Canadians seeking work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Since the fall of 1970, the growth of our economy has been accelerating in response to the progressively stronger stimulus injected by the federal government, reinforced by the complementary policies of provincial governments. The real growth of the nation's output of goods and services during 1971 amounted to 6 per cent or more. An increase of this magnitude is almost double that of the previous year, significantly above the long-term growth trend, and more than that achieved by any other industrial nation in the world, including Japan. I expect that Canada's economic growth will be even faster in 1972.

I noted with interest, Mr. Speaker, that in the January issues of its "Business Review," the Bank of Montreal pointed out that one of the most marked phenomena accompanying changes in the rate of economic growth is the slowness with which expectations adjust to changes already under way in the economy.

Mr. Saltsman: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister will accept a question at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the minister wishes to receive a question, he may do so. I have to be guided by his wish.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would like to wait until after I have completed my remarks, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member will have enough patience and I have enough voice, I will be glad to see what I can do.

Over most of the past year, the Review said, there was evidence of what is called a "recession syndrome", particularly among businessmen. The report continued:

> Adding strength to business pessimism during the past year, were the uncertainties arising from the very unsettled international financial situation, the establishment of the surcharge and other trade protection measures in the United States, and the avalanche of proposed legislation affecting business.

As a result, it was perhaps understandable, the Review added, and I quote:

> —that less attention would be given to the actual performance of the Canadian economy, which in spite of many prophecies of doom and gloom, displayed considerable resiliency as the year wore on.

I believe that the truth of the bank's observation about the growing strength of our economy is now becoming apparent to the great majority of Canadians. Certainly, there is a new-found sense of confidence in the economic outlook for the future among members of the business community now that there has been a realignment of currencies and the removal of the United States' surcharge. There is every reason to believe that this renewed confidence will lead to increased capital investment, a building up of inventories, and other spending by business, which, in turn, will provide a further stimulus to economic growth. In saying this, Mr. Speaker, I do not for one moment mean to suggest that we face no pressing economic problems today or in the days ahead.

We can have a strong expansionary economy, a rising GNP, strong retail sales, strong consumer spending, together with intolerable rates of unemployment. It has become quite clear that optimistic statistics are no answer to human problems. A priority of any economy must be the personal fulfillment of people. Statistics are no substitute for jobs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No economy works as well as it should if there are men and women who seek work and want it but who cannot find it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Our most urgent and pressing task is to bring about a substantial reduction in the level of unemployment. Our goal, our objective, must be the provision of a job to every Canadian who is seeking work.

I would not wish to mislead you or the Canadian people into thinking this goal can be easily or quickly reached. I would remind you that promises of miraculous resolution of economic problems are rarely fulfilled. I do wish to express my confidence that we will make good progress toward this objective in the year ahead.

For several years now, no other industrialized nation in the world has even come close to matching Canada's truly remarkable performance in creating new jobs for its people. In its way, the growth of employment in Canada is comparable to the fantastic growth of productivity in Japan, although it is far less often appreciated, particularly by Canadians. During the decade of the sixties, the rate of growth of new jobs created in Canada was nine times faster than that in Western Germany, nearly six times faster than that in Britain and four times faster than that in France. Canadian employment during that period also grew at a rate that was about 50 per cent higher than that in either the United States or Japan. While most recent comparisons are not available for all countries, it is a fact that employment grew three times more rapidly than the United States during the first two years of the seventies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thought you said statistics were not the answer.

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I fully recognize that statistics are no substitute for jobs. But if we are to deal in a realistic way with the manpower problems confronting us, I think it is essential to recognize how extraordinary they are in nature. They stem primarily from the fact that for a number of years Canada's labour force has been growing far more quickly than that of any other industrialized nation in the world. The Economic Council of Canada has estimated that between 1965 and 1980 the total increase in Canada's labour force in absolute terms will exceed that of Britain, West Germany and Italy combined by some 20 per cent, even though the present population of those countries is around eight times that of Canada. The problem in Canada is compounded by the severe impact of winter on employment in many fields, by the vastness of our nation and by the limited economic opportunities in some regions of the country. The quickening pace of economic growth is now absorbing more and more of our unused human and material resources. As the expansion continues, however, we will begin to face a new threat to our prosperity, that of renewed rises in costs and prices.

During 1970 and 1971 Canada's price performance surpassed that of every other industrialized nation. But in recent months there has been some acceleration in the rate of Canadian price increases. Although this is partly attributable to special factors relating to food, there has also been a sufficient increase in other sectors to provide a warning signal. This leads me to what in my judgment is the fundamental problem of economic management. This is the problem of maintaining maximum growth of employment and production in the economy, while at the same time preventing the development of inflationary pressures which eventually could undermine the very foundations of the economy if allowed to go unchecked. To keep the problem in perspective, it should be remembered that substantial progress has already been made during the postwar period in reducing the violent swings from boom to bust that used to be experienced in western economies.

But we still have some way to go in achieving strong, but stable economic growth on a sustained basis. In some respects, the job of maintaining strong but stable economic growth has become tougher to deal with than ever before. Certainly, this has been the experience of many nations in recent years and the conclusion of two major international bodies, the International Monetary Fund and the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. The problem is that once inflation has been set in motion by excessive demands on a country's real capacity to produce goods and services, it tends to continue to accelerate long after these demands have been brought back into closer balance with productive capacity. Costs continue to chase prices and prices to chase costs around and around in an everrising spiral. This strong, pervasive and stubbornly persistent kind of cost-push inflation represents a new element, a new kind of force working on our economy. Cost-push inflation has frequently occurred to some extent in the past, but more recently it has taken on a far more virulent form. Just as no one fully understands the reasons for this development, neither is there any clear consensus about how best to bring it under control without causing long-term damage to the economy as a whole.

Resolving the problem of restoring and maintaining full employment while avoiding the risks of inflation is a matter of fundamental concern. I have requested officials of my department to take a new look at the anatomy of unemployment and inflation as a matter of priority to see whether we can suggest what needs to be done to create productive jobs for those who want to work without causing an excessive erosion in the value of the income and savings of ordinary Canadians.

[Translation]

There are other long-term problems which we must face. Some are urgent for the only reason that in the world we live in, time and space are increasingly compressed. Changes are quickly occurring everywhere. Tomorrow can at any time become today. Those considerations are as applicable to our economy as to other aspects of our community. They are evident in the scientific and technological fields. They are evident in the outstanding role which the multinational corporations are called to play and the division of various countries throughout the world into trade blocs.

If we refuse to fall back in that race, we must meet the challenge raised by changes around us. It has sometimes been suggested that some of the steps which we proposed in this regard have created a climate of uncertaincy prejudicial to business matters and the economy. As I have said before, I understand that need for stability. It is in the nature of man and institutions to try to resist change, to cling to the familiar, the tested, the conventional wisdom applicable to yesterday's problems. But I also know that if we stick to the status quo, if we refuse to face the challenges of relentless changes in our midst, there is but one certainty—eventual economic stagnation. I feel there should be more understanding in our country with regard to the need for adopting to progress and evolution. That does not mean, however, that no room should be left for discussion between reasonable men on how to meet the imperatives of those changes. I therefore expect in this regard, constructive suggestions from every quarter.

Among other things, we should consider how our industrial policy should evolve in this world of progress, to achieve a better distribution and a more efficient exploitation of our resources, human as well as material. We should find the means to encourage the development of technology, production and employment in those sectors that offer the best possibilities for increasing our competition with other countries. We must continue to press toward the reorganization of several industries, for greater specialization and production, so that Canadian products might be more competitive on both domestic and international markets.

[English]

The formation of commercial policy, which is an integral part of our over-all economic policies is, in conjunction with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) a special responsibility of the Minister of Finance. I intend to devote careful attention to our commercial policy. The division of the world into large trading blocs, to which I referred a few moments ago, presents particular dangers to Canada as a major trading nation and one of the few industrialized countries without free access to a market of 100 million people or more. The unwinding of the international crisis that posed such a serious threat to the maintenance of the post-war trade and payments system for several months during the latter half of 1971 has been a matter of considerable relief and satisfaction. We in this country must now use what influence we can bring to bear to press for a resumption of the postwar movement toward greater liberalization of international trade. The dangerous alternative would be a move backward toward greater protectionism. This alternative would present a serious threat to our economy and certainly thwart our efforts to bring about greater diversification of our trade.

The House is well aware that there still remain outstanding issues involving bilateral trade relationships between Canada and the United States. As my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has made clear, we remain hopeful that a number of these issues between us can be resolved to the mutual benefit of both countries. May I add that I much appreciate the efforts made to explain Canada's position and its point of view by those members of this House and of the other place who met recently with their counterparts from Washington on the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

We are also giving very careful consideration to the implications for Canada of the United States so-called DISC legislation. This seems to me to be a rather thinly disguised export subsidy. As an exporting country we must be concerned about the world's greatest industrial nation resorting to such a practice. We have already received a number of helpful representations from Canadian businessmen. My senior officials are now making a detailed examination, with the assistance of knowledgeable people in the business community, of the likely impact of DISC on our exports to third markets, on production in Canada for the Canadian market, and on the prospects for potential plant expansion.

I do not wish to forecast at this stage what the results of this detailed investigation are likely to be, nor what policy we will be proposing.

One of my important responsibilities relates to the custody of our newly reformed tax system. Without going into all the wide variety of social measures which we will have brought forward during this Parliament, I might point out that this new system by itself rebuts the allegation in the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) that this government has deepened the gap between the affluent and those in need. Tax reform has resulted in taxes being reduced or eliminated for 5,700,000 Canadians.

• (1430)

One million Canadians have been removed from the income tax rolls completely. A special tax relief of a substantial nature was provided for hundreds of thousands of elderly Canadians. At the same time, the tax reform provided that those who were affluent would bear a fairer share of the load. The allegations made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) simply collapse under the weight of the facts.

Any piece of legislation that is so mammoth and so complex is bound to raise problems. This was fully recognized by my predecessor who gave a commitment to examine a variety of areas in which problems might arise. I am quite prepared to live up to that commitment and to consider adjustments to the law, provided that those adjustments do not sacrifice the underlying principles of reform, where it can be shown that its application had unforeseen and unreasonable consequences. I have asked the new minister of state, whom the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) kindly assigned to help me and who performed so ably in helping to pilot the tax reform legislation through the House, to take on the initial task of examining the problems that may exist and the steps that might be considered to correct them.

[Translation]

In our approach to the various problems we face, it will be essential to establish improved communication and better understanding between the government and other sectors of the economy in order to develop the basis of better co-operation. We are all in the same boat and I believe we are rowing on the whole in the same direction. What we should focus on is a greater agreement on the means of reaching our goal.

First and foremost there should be co-ordination and closer links between federal and provincial governments on the policies and programs likely to affect the economy. My first task on taking up my present assignment was to chair the annual economic and fiscal conference of provincial ministers of finance and treasurers.

In the discharge of the responsibilities involved in my previous portfolio, I attended, with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) several lengthy conferences concerning the revision of the Canadian constitution.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister but I must do so to advise him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there consent to allow the minister to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to thank the House for its courtesy.

[Translation]

But the discussions held in Jasper served to convince me, once again, that arrangements, with regard to taxes, expenditures and other financial questions between the two levels of government are the keystone of our Confederation. Such relations are vital for a proper division of powers and responsibilities between Ottawa and the provinces. I shall give more information on this subject in the next few days, when I introduce a bill providing for the extension and improvement of such financial agreements between the two levels of government.

Apart from working in closer co-operation with the provinces, I would also like to take part in the development of closer relations between the federal government and other sectors, such as business and labour. The government's primary objective is to promote the national interest by the best and most effective means available.

So, I very strongly hope to benefit from representations and advice from the business community, labour unions, farmers' and consumers' groups and others on the policies and programs that are needed in order to best serve national interest. I realize, of course, that one problem remains: that of reconciling opposite interests of different groups and their often conflicting views on the best way of contributing to national interest. However, as better communications link us, it should be possible to develop a wider base of agreement on what we should do to serve public interest together.

[English]

Almost every decision faced by the government involves finding a reasonable balance between competing rights and claims that will best serve the interests of the nation as a whole. As Minister of Justice, I found that most of the decisions I had to take involved a judgment weighing individual liberty on the one hand and the welfare and safety of the community on the other. These judgments were not easy and, although they were made with the best of intentions, I am sure they were not always right.

In my new portfolio, I expect that I will also have to seek a balance between other claims that may at times conflict, for example, between incentive and economic growth on the one hand and equity and redistribution of national wealth on the other. I hope that the policies for which I am responsible will help to ensure the maintenance of a fair and improving standard of living for every Canadian without impeding the economic growth that is a prerequisite for raising the quality of life in the nation as a whole.

I accepted this portfolio because I believe that the major issues facing Canadians for a number of years to come will be economic, that in the final analysis it will be the bread and butter issues that count. That is not to say I believe that the life style issues with which I have had to deal in the House and in the country in the last three and a half years have now become irrelevant—by no means. The quality of our lives is pertinent and relevant to any civilized people. But quality cannot be enjoyed unless there is an underpinning of economic sufficiency.

In that context I want to conclude by pointing out that the Canadian economy is not, as the opposition would have it, weak and growing weaker. Quite the contrary, it is strong and growing stronger. I have said that in taking hold of my new responsibilities, I see our first priority to be to provide good jobs for Canadians who are seeking work. This we will do and we shall try our best to do it without inducing an erosion in the purchasing power of the incomes and savings of the average working man and his family. I count on the support of this House in moving toward that goal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) is rising for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Saltsman: I wonder whether the minister would accept a question. First of all, let me congratulate him on his address to the House and ask him whether, in discussing employment and unemployment levels, he will give some kind of target figure. We are interested in the comments he had to make about his desire to provide jobs for all Canadians seeking work, but it would seem to be more significant to give us some indication of what levels of employment he is looking for and what levels of unemployment the government will tackle.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will not get into the game of targets, because I will not be satisfied unless there is a job for every Canadian who wants to work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Change the tax system—it's a killer.

Mr. Orlikow: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said that his first objective was to provide jobs. We have had for 21 months—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I recognized the hon. member for the purpose of asking a question. I hope that he will come to the question quickly.

Mr. Orlikow: The question is very short, Mr. Speaker. We have had more than 6 per cent unemployment in 21 months. Can the Minister of Justice tell us what he expects the unemployment figures will be by the end of this year?

• (1440)

Some hon. Members: Finance, finance.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am interested less in forecasts than in results, and I am going to do my best to achieve those results.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I should like to pose one question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) if I may. He was obviously using a prepared text. May I ask if he provided a copy of it to the Leader of the Opposition and does that account for the absence of the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Nowlan: Where is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)?

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I wish I could congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on the statement he made today to the effect that our economy is growing stronger and that his first priority is to create jobs for Canadians. Unfortunately, I cannot do that because his predecessor made this same statement in the House at least a dozen times, that our economy was growing stronger and would create jobs. The time now is for action, Mr. Speaker. What we need is action and not empty rhetoric. If the minister does come forth with specific legislation for the creation of jobs, I am sure all of us on this side of the House will join in applauding him.

This is the fourth Speech from the Throne during the term of this Prime Minister and most of us expect it to be the last before a general election is called some time in 1972. This gives us an opportunity to assess the government's activities over the last three years, as well as the opportunity to offer some alternatives. These have been disappointing years to say the least, wasted years—perhaps even dangerous years to the future of our country when you look at the long term values. In 1968, because of his style and acting ability, the Prime Minister personified the change that Canadians wanted. They wanted a new direction after centennial year, a break with the past, an innovator. The Prime Minister realized this and capitalized on the hunger for change, but he has completely failed to satisfy this appetite in the people.

I remember very well my maiden speech in this House when I spoke about the young people of this country and what I thought they wanted, what they expected of this place, of parliamentarians and of the government. I should like to read one short paragraph from that speech which I thought was a challenge to the government and to Members of Parliament. At that time I said:

> For young people democracy is on trial right here and now. We have heard a lot about alienation, about frustration, student unrest, riots, hippies and similar groups within the youth community. All of these phenomena are important to this House for one reason. That reason is that the verdict on the democratic system by many of these young people has already been made and that verdict is guilty—guilty of irrelevance, guilty of lack of purpose, guilty of lack of meaning for their lives but, most important of all, the political system has been found guilty for its failure to produce results here and now.

That was one of the challenges that faced the government when it took office in 1968. The political process had to prove itself, not just to the young people of the country but to many others. As Members of Parliament we had to prove ourselves to the people. Politicians could no longer get away with some of the half-truths and the old rhetoric of days gone by. I feel quite sincerely that the government has failed to meet this challenge; they have failed rather miserably.

We find that the young people in the country are still cynical and that this cynicism has spread to other groups, the western farmer, the worker, the unemployed, the poor, the Indian and Metis. This feeling of despair that Ottawa does not really care about them is real, and it is by no means an accident. I think that the Prime Minister must bear responsibility for it because it was he who tantalized the imagination of many Canadians with new approaches and style. He brought many people to a high level of expectation in 1968 and then let them drop.

The campaign of 1968 caught the mood and the tune of centennial year, the mood of optimism, of innovation, of the future. Sensing this, the Prime Minister picked up the mood and promised action in three broad areas; first, national unity; second, the just society and, third, participatory democracy. I suggest that these have all been monumental failures, disasters, and each of these themes is returning to haunt Liberal Members of Parliament. I should like to look at each of these themes later in my speech, Mr. Speaker.

The Speech from the Throne leaves me cold, and I am sure it leaves most of the Canadian people out in the cold. It is similar to every Throne Speech delivered since this Prime Minister came to power. It is full of flowery rhetoric and self-praise, as well as references to our great and rosy future. I do not think I am being unkind when I say that I get the image of the Prime Minister as the self-appointed philosopher king who feels he has a divine right to govern. I think I even see some of that in the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) when he said today, "We will look after you; don't worry about it, we are going to create jobs" and so on.

Every so often this philosopher king descends from his throne, and condescends to lecture the members of this House in a professorial manner, telling us not to worry, that things will be better, that life in Canada is second to none—perhaps second only to Heaven itself. The Throne Speech was full of this and it is the kind of rhetoric that has been given the Canadian people for the past three years. That attitude of divine right is being transmitted to some cabinet ministers. A short while ago in Vancouver when speaking about the economy the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) sais that there was nothing wrong with the economy, that it was in good shape and it was time Canadians woke up to this fact. I suggest that exactly the reverse it true. It is time the government woke up to the fact that the economy is not in good shape. I think the people know that and will not tolerate this kind of approach much longer.

In these days of mass communications, new technology and modern education, people are aware of the conditions that exist. They are aware of what can and should be done. The voter in Canada is well informed and knows that we can do better. For example, he knows that in this country there is a great deal of wealth, technology and education, and that if we wanted to change the country socially and economically we could do so in a massive way and could do it immediately.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that some changes have been made. Any government will make a few changes. We have had recognition of China, a few winter works programs and the establishment of DREE, which was a failure but at least it was established. We have had a few patches here and there on the economy in an effort to fix up the system. That is not good enough.

What I want, what our party wants and what I am sure in increasingly large numbers the Canadian people want, is an overhaul of the entire system; a new system of government, a new approach. Patches are not good enough for most people in Canada. The unemployed want jobs, not just fancy rhetoric or the Minister of Finance talking about jobs that will be created some time in the future. They want jobs now. The farmer wants a farm that is economic and viable; the poor want opportunities and they are not getting them; the Indian and Metis people are tired of rhetoric and want action; Quebec, the Prairies and the Maritimes want to be equal partners within Confederation. Perhaps most important of all, more and more Canadians want our country to be independent, economically and socially, from the multinational corporations. Patching the system will not solve any of these problems, Mr. Speaker. It may hide some for a while and may quieten some of the unrest for a short period of time, but if we do not do something drastic soon unemployment will worsen, the welfare rolls will swell and Canada will become nothing short of a banana republic, supplying raw materials to multinational corporations. I do not think the Canadian people want that type of country and will not tolerate this type of approach. If we do not change direction democratically, then perhaps some of our people will seek change in a different way. I am referring to what is going on in parts of the United States, in Ireland, in the Middle East, in Pakistan, where many people have chosen a different option. I do not want that to happen, and it is not necessary for it to happen. We must bring change in our country in a meaningful way that will satisfy the people.

• (1450)

I want to go back to the promises which the Prime Minister made in 1968. At that time, he talked a lot about participatory democracy. I think that phrase has come to haunt hon. members opposite. I do not think any one of them can say that in this country we have had participatory democracy. There has not been national participation in the process of government. Instead, we have had task force after task force and white paper after white paper. We have had study groups. Now, there are to be white papers on white papers and task forces to study what other task forces have not studied.

The Prime Minister thinks that participatory democracy is the process whereby the Prime Minister's office and not the people, not Members of Parliament and not even the cabinet, decides what must be done. I think you will find evidence of this contention in the speeches made in the last few months by the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) and the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) after they had left the Trudeau cabinet. To me, participatory democracy means allowing people to make decisions that affect their lives. To me, it means more than just listening to people; it means involving them in a meaningful way. It means more than elections every four years; it means listening to farmers, workers, small businessmen and young people, and asking what they want to do in evolving policies that affect them. That is not happening at all, under this Prime Minister. Instead, the Prime Minister's attitude towards certain groups, such as the Lapalme workers, has been made well known. To the Lapalme workers he said, "Manger de la merde". That is the type of insult the Prime Minister has aimed at the workers.

And what did he say to the western farmers? He said, "Why should I sell your wheat?" On one occasion he is alleged to have said, "You are quite wealthy, because I see $20,000 tractors out here." This is the type of attitude he has displayed towards farmers. And what has he done to help unemployment? At an elaborate, upper-middle class dinner in Toronto, he said that there are lots of jobs in Canada for those who want them. That has been his attitude towards the unemployed. When welfare recipients in Hamilton became too militant, the grant given to them by the Department of National Health and Welfare was cut off. That is not participation. Yet many people thought there would be participation when the Prime Minister took office in 1968.

The Opportunities for Youth program is an example of how this government operates. Even under that program, participation is limited. First of all, the program excludes non-students. It excludes the young people of this country. We know that in January of this year over 13 per cent of our young people between the ages of 14 and 34 were unemployed. They should be participating in a program like this, but they are not. According to the government's own sources, participation in the program has been confined to middle class students, and mostly upper-middle class students. They are the ones who are involved in Opportunities for Youth. If your father's bank account is big enough to support you at university, you can get a job under Opportunities for Youth. That is the type of participation this government has had in mind for the last several years. We know that some can participate, but the participation is primarily confined to the wealthy people of this country and to the multinational corporations. I suggest, with respect, that the government listens to those corporations.

I cannot help but remember a statement recently made, by Mr. Rankin, I believe, the president of the fund raising group of the Liberal party in Ottawa. He talked about 95 corporations which are giving funds to the Liberal party. I think the Liberal party probably listens to these corporations, and listens carefully. Why has there been a delay in the announcement regarding foreign ownership policy? Why has proposed legislation dealing with campaign funds been shelved? I wonder, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps these 95 corporations are exerting pressure. Perhaps they do not want the government to announce its policy regarding foreign ownership. Perhaps the government does not want the public to know about the people who contribute campaign funds to various political parties. Perhaps the Liberal Party wants to fill its campaign coffers first before making such announcements. After all, the party would not want to bite the hand that feeds it. That is the way the system in this country works.

I also want to know how much some of these corporations that obtain tax concessions and tax write-offs "participate". One way of finding out who "participates" in this way is by looking at the tax laws of our country. You can find out about the type of country you have if you analyze its taxation system. I have some statistics before me which tell a good deal of the story. Over the last ten years, one finds that different companies have been paying different rates of tax on their profits. Gas and oil companies in Canada, most of which incidentally are foreign owned, in the last ten years paid taxes on only 5.7 per cent of their profits in Canada. Mining companies in the last ten years paid taxes, on average, on 13 per cent of their profits and retail merchants, who are at the other end of the scale, paid taxes on 90 per cent of their profits. The man with a small business paid a great deal of tax, yet gas and oil companies, most of which are multinational corporations, paid taxes on only 5.7 per cent of their profits. There you see "participation". It is "participation" by companies like Shell Oil, Gulf, IBM, Parsons and Whitmore, and others like them. That is not the type of participation that my party wants or that the people of Canada want.

One can see the same sort of "participation" behind the recent cabinet shuffles. We know that Bay Street and big business were not too happy about the competition bill and certain amendments to labour statutes being considered. The former minister of consumer and corporate affairs and the former minister of labour were removed from their positions. In their places were appointed ministers more acceptable to the business community. If that is participation, it is not the type of participation or double standard that my constituents or members of my political party want.

The second great promise that the Prime Minister made in the 1968 election campaign was the promise of the just society. That, too, has come to haunt hon. members opposite. As I suggested when talking about taxation, the just society benefits the wealthy of this nation. It benefits the multinational corporations. This is serious, and affects many people in Canada. Many in my constituency, including farmers, the unemployed and elderly people, are very angry now when they hear talk about the just society. I was amazed to hear the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) say, in beginning the Throne Speech debate, that the just society had arrived for the old people of Canada. The just society has arrived for the pensioners, according to him.

An hon. Member: Perhaps if you lift the rock, you will find it.

Mr. Nystrom: I can only say to the hon. member for Bruce that there are pensioners I know in Yorkton and Melville who would like to confront him eyeball to eyeball and tell him what they think. This is the type of statement which is making more and more people lose confidence in Canada, in the Canadian economy and in the Canadian political system. The best evidence that the just society is not here is the high level of unemployment in Canada. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Prime Minister can say anything they want about how many jobs have been created and about the participation rate of the labour force. The fact remains that our unemployment rate is higher than that of any industrialized country. As we sit here this afternoon, nearly 7 per cent of the Canadian work force is unemployed. That is almost 700,000 Canadians. And this is not the whole story. We know that when the rate of unemployment is so high, there is hidden unemployment, people who have dropped out of the labour force, women who have not registered for employment but who would work if they had an opportunity to do so, people on welfare, people taking manpower courses, people on other courses the federal government is sponsoring. If all these were included there would probably be more than 800,000 people in Canada who would like to work today but who do not have jobs. It does not matter what we say in the House of Commons or what the Minister of Finance says about statistics. The stark reality is that many thousands of citizens in Canada are today walking the streets in sub-zero weather looking for jobs.

• (1500)

In 1971, an average of about 6 per cent of the working population were without employment during the year. It was not the same 6 per cent all the year round. Different people are out of work at different times of the year. If one counted all the people who were unemployed at various times during 1971 I believe one would find that upwards of two million people were unemployed in Canada at one time or another during the year. This affects us in many ways. It affects those who are unemployed. It affects their families directly. If all these people are included, one would find that five or six million people are directly affected by unemployment.

Any study will show that prolonged unemployment brings about many long-term disastrous results for the country. Unemployment of this magnitude creates a further core of permanently poor people, a further core of people who will be permanently unemployed even if the economy should return to operating at full capacity. Second, unemployment of this magnitude means that the economy is suffering, because it is not operating at full capacity as it would be if everyone was working. We are not producing the goods and services we could be producing if everyone had jobs. There is not as much demand within the economy as there would be if more people were getting incomes from jobs. Moreover, we cannot in these circumstances put an end to regional disparity.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion was established on the basis of an economy operated at or near full capacity. This has not been the case and, as a result, the DREE program has been nothing but a total disaster.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Oh!

Mr. Nystrom: The same can be said about the manpower program. It is not possible to operate a successful manpower program when more people are being trained than there are jobs available for them, as is presently the case. The government conducted a job vacancy survey and from this we find that there are many fewer jobs available in Canada than there are people being trained to fill them. These are reasons for aiming toward a fully operating economy, an economy which provides full employment.

When we are talking about a just society we are not simply talking about the unemployed, we are not simply talking about the Indian people and the western farmers. We are talking about an attitude toward people of this country. Again, I wish to refer to the tax system in an effort to find out what the government means when it talks about a just society. We spent several months formulating a new tax policy. We spent several years on its preparation, going back to the Carter Commission and, finally, we came up with a new tax policy. This shows we do not have a just society in Canada, and that the term just society is very much of a farce.

Consider the cases of three men, each earning $10,000 a year. They have no dependants, yet they are all taxed differently because they earn their money in different ways or draw it from different sources. The first earns his money by working in a factory, or as a teacher. He will pay $2,285 in income tax. The second man makes his money from capital gains. He will pay only $844 in tax under the terms of the new bill. The third man makes all his money from dividends. He will pay only $193 in tax. This is the just society of the Liberal government. This is the just society which is being perpetrated upon the Canadian people. It is no such thing. It is just a laugh, and that is why it is coming back to haunt Liberal members who sit opposite.

The Minister of Finance told us that thousands of people who used to be liable for income tax will pay no income tax at all under the new tax bill. It is true the government did throw a few crumbs to the low income earner and that they now expect him to be happy. They increased the tax payable by those in the middle income range and lowered it as far as wealthy people are concerned. Again, I wish to use the cases of three single people to show hon. members what has happened. First, let us consider the case of a single man without dependants, earning $5,000 a year from wages or from working, say, as a farmer or as a teacher. His taxes will be decreased by $14 under the new bill. The taxes payable by a man without dependants who is making $10,000 a year will go up by $56 a year. Now, consider the case of a third man without dependants, a man who is a real pauper. He is living in poverty, making $100,000 a year. His taxes go down by $1,011.

Mr. Otto: How much is he already paying in taxes?

Mr. Nystrom: The man who earns $10,000 a year will pay $56 more, and in the case of the man who earns $5,000 his tax goes down by $14. Is this the just society? It is not my type of just society. It is not the just society our party talks about or that the people of my constituency talk about, or are concerned with. It is the just society of the Prime Minister because he has a different concept than I do. He comes from a very wealthy background. He has the approach of an aristocratic millionaire—

Some hon. Members: Cheap.

Mr. Nystrom: —and, of course, he would give a different interpretation than the one I would give, coming from a different background.

Then, there is the third great promise of the Liberal party. It is one hon. members opposite are very touchy about, national unity. This was one of the big issues upon which the Prime Minister campaigned. The Prime Minister undertook to unite this country, but in my opinion he has probably done less to unite Canada in three and one half years than any Prime Minister before him. One has only to consider what has happened since 1968. Since that year we have seen in Quebec the emergence of the Party Quebecois which won 24 per cent of the votes in the last election in the province. Spokesmen for the government can say what they like about this, but to me it is a clear indication that there is something drastically wrong about the way in which the Prime Minister has sought to solve the question of national unity. We have witnessed the emergence of the FLQ in Quebec, and everyone recalls the events of October, 1970. We have seen in western Canada the emergence of a number of organizations, respectable organizations, which are today questioning the value of our relationship with Ottawa and wondering whether we should seriously reconsider our role vis-a-vis Ottawa. They see Ottawa as a distant enemy, as an institution which is doing more harm than good in their lives. Without knowing very much about the maritimes, I understand that a similar situation is developing there, too.

I would hope that Canada could be a strong country, that Canada could be united. But this cannot be brought about by speeches alone or by constitutional conferences which fail to produce results. It must be recognized that we are dealing with regions which have special problems, special concerns, and individual aspirations. This, in itself, is a source of strength. The cultural mosaic of Canada is something which all of us can cherish. But before we can think in terms of a united country, all these regions must become equal partners. Today, because of the variations in the economy and between sections of society, this is just not the case. As the economy is presently oriented, industry naturally tends to locate in what is known as the golden horseshoe and in these circumstances, other regions of the country feel they are unwanted, that they are discriminated against. This is one of the reasons the Prime Minister has failed to achieve national unity; he has failed to tackle some of these basic problems which have arisen from coast to coast.

• (1510)

May I mention a few concerns of the prairie people? The role of the Prairies throughout the history of its development has been that of a supplier of raw materials, agriculture goods, and natural resources. As a result, we do not have much of an industrial base. In addition to this, tariffs and transportation costs have continued to discriminate against our future development. It has been pointed out many times that with an economy of this sort, which basically relies on raw materials, one has to export much of one's wealth, and this means that jobs that could be had in western Canada or in rural Quebec or the Maritimes are lost to us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret that the time of the hon. member has expired.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, could I ask for two or three additional minutes, with the consent of the House?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nystrom: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, each of the regions of this country has special problems that we must solve if Canada is to remain united in the future. In my part of the country we are exporters of raw materials and importers of manufactured goods. We export jobs as well as wealth.

In addition, in my part of Canada there is a good deal of concern felt about the future of the agricultural industry and the rural way of life that is being systematically destroyed. Today one sees farmsteads abandoned, the population of villages dwindling and communities that are turning into ghost towns. This must be stopped if the regions like the prairies are to have any confidence in the government at Ottawa. This country has a great future ahead of it, but to realize this future we must change direction and introduce some radical socio-economic measures. Our economy must be operated at full capacity and we must have a policy of full employment. We know how this can be done. It is the case in many other countries of the world today.

We must also tackle immediately the question of foreign ownership so that Canadians can control their own economy and destiny. We must redistribute power and wealth so that the ordinary people of Canada can have more say over what happens to their country, as well as their own destinies. Unless this is done, I do not know what the options are. But one thing I do know is that more and more Canadians might start looking for an alternate method of expressing themselves; and I do not want that to happen because we in Canada are capable of making the changes I have suggested in a democratic manner. We have the resources, we have the knowledge, and we have the technology to do so. All we need is a change in government policy that will redress our problems and change our priorities, so the average person will reap the benefits instead of the foreign corporations or the very wealthy.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate I should like first of all to extend my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. The mover, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), in his robust way, set forth his views on a wide breadth of subjects as they were dealt with in the Speech from the Throne and as they were dealt with by the hon. member. The hon. member does have an enviable faculty. Whether or not one agrees with him—and it would be an exaggeration to say that he is totally agreed with at all times in this House—he certainly has the faculty for commanding attention when he speaks.

[Translation]

Also, Mr. Speaker, to my friend, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie) who also took part in the debate and supported the motion for an Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I should like to offer my congratulations to the hon. member who hails from the historic region of Trois-Rivières and who is part of a very distinguished line of representatives for this riding.

If on the one hand, my friend, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) is a veteran, a more experienced fighter who shows great wisdom, on the other hand the hon. member for Trois-Rivières brings to this House all the originality and freshness of a new member and, in my opinion, he will certainly follow the very worthy tradition of this riding whose representatives have always been most clever.

[English]

It seems to me appropriate in entering this debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne to take the occasion to share with the House a few of my initial thoughts in approaching my new assignment as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The management of our earth resources is central to our economic and social well-being, to our national purposes, to federal-provincial relations, and is essential to our role in the international community.

Before proceeding with this question, however, I should like to join with the other hon. members who last week paid tribute to our colleague, the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Greene), for his conduct of this important portfolio which it is now my privilege to hold. I should like to join in that tribute and to say that it will be no small task to match his vigour and grasp of the perplexing issues, and the effort that he has made to bring all Canadians into the dialogue that will steer Canada's course into the 1970's and beyond. We are all looking forward to having our colleague with us again, his being able to share with us, both in the proceedings in public in this House and in private, the benefit of his wisdom and his incomparable good sense and humour.

To the serious and complex questions that are posed in my portfolio, there are really no simple answers. Canadians everywhere are concerned about the husbanding and developing of our resources, both for generations present and yet to come. It is clear that alternative courses can have consequences that would range across the broad spectrum in the future character of Canada as a whole, and many of its provinces and regions in particular.

To cite some of the complex, indeed critical, issues in the mineral and energy economy I would name the following: first, the orderly development of the resource base and the expansion of domestic and foreign markets; second, capital availability and issues relating to ownership and control; third, taxation policies. Fourth, there are major problems requiring new policies in the Arctic frontier and in the ocean frontiers off our two shores. Fifth, there is the question of economic growth and the establishment of environmental quality standards; sixth, the serious question of the need to integrate energy supply and demand patterns and to achieve reasonable energy costs; seven, the establishment of viable coal and uranium industry development; eight, the creation of transportation systems at realistic costs; and finally, but not least, the stability of communities that are dependent on the resource industries for the well-being of their people and the future of their children.

These and other problems have brought into sharp focus the need for the federal and provincial governments as well as industry to play a closer and more effective role in our resource development as an urgent matter of national interest. There is increasing acceptance of the interdependence of our respective roles and the clear fact that national policies, to be effective, must be the result of our combined experiences, our shared purposes and our common needs.

We at the federal level need to hold talks with the provinces to ensure that we have a thorough understanding of their views on resource management. It has been for the purpose of establishing such effective liaison that I have already met with Premier Lougheed of Alberta and will be seeing Premier Regan of Nova Scotia and Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick in the near future.

Mr. Barnett: How about Premier Bennett?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would be delighted to see the hon. gentleman at any convenient time. As the son of a New Brunswicker, I look forward to seeing another distinguished immigrant from my father's province. There is no doubt that the provinces, as the owners of much of our mineral and energy wealth, are now playing and will continue to play a central role in the framing of national policies for resources. I believe we can find ways for them to contribute to the development of international negotiating positions, though the responsibility for these positions must always remain ultimately the responsibility of the Government of Canada.

• (1520)

We must make ourselves aware of their concerns, and they of ours. We need to take their concerns into consideration and, to the extent possible, choose approaches and policies that reflect these interests.

As outlined in the Speech from the Throne and I quote:

—a continuation and strengthening of government-industry relations is necessary in order that such areas of challenge as environmental impact and the increasing demand both within Canada and abroad for resources and energy be fully addressed.

I have had an initial meeting with the representatives of the oil industry at Calgary and intend to spend much more time with the representatives of that industry, with the expectation that the National Advisory Committee on Petroleum and the National Advisory Committee on the Mining Industry formed by this government will provide a growing avenue of co-operation between industry and government.

The Speech from the Throne deals in some detail with the importance of international markets for our products and Canada's resources will continue to occupy an important place in our relationships abroad. The government has recognized this relationship over the past year or two when missions abroad have sought to extend our influence and promote a better understanding of resources and policies affecting them in Australia, Japan and Europe. Later this year, I hope to lead a mission to China in returning a visit paid earlier this year by that country to Canada which had a coast to coast look at our mineral and metallurgical industries in operation. Of particular importance in this field, of course, are the relations between Canada and the U.S., a subject that I will discuss in just a moment.

Speaking in general terms, there is a very real need to accelerate reviews of policies affecting minerals and energy and to achieve a consensus on the thrust of resource policy for the 1970's. These are needed to help ensure that our long-term approach as well as shorter term decisions are formulated in the best interests of all Canadians and to realize optimum national benefits from our resources. I hope to bring statements of these policies to the House this year.

I would add that resource policy must complement broader policy concerns for industrial strategy. It must provide improved social-economic security. It must provide improved performance of the domestic economy. It must represent an effort for expanded and diversified exports. It must emphasize the need for social sensitivity in northern development and, above all, it must emphasize the greater participation of Canadians in the decision-making process on problems and opportunities facing the nation in the 1970's. If the hon. member will allow me the privilege, I will be glad to entertain a question from him after I have put my argument.

A delicate balance must be maintained between the economic growth required to sustain a viable resource sector and the environmental impact of all aspects of resource discovery, development, transportation and marketing. The quality of the demand for energy must be assessed as well as the supply, and the tremendous capital requirement needed for all energy activity. What will be sought over the months ahead will be a blending of individual resource policies with national strategies to achieve as effective a balance as possible. Certainly, a set of blanket solutions will never adequately cope with our problems.

I would like to say a few words about the earth sciences. It is of crucial importance to have the facts of a situation before acting on it, and one of the prime responsibilities of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is to provide the Canadian public with the essential information on the earth beneath our feet, which will allow Canadians to make wise decisions on how we live on it, play on it, exploit it, or preserve it for the future. Scientists in my department view the earth in its four dimensions: first, vertically, determining its properties from the surface to the central nickel-iron core; second, horizontally, from the Atlantic to the Pacific continental margins; third, from the U.S. border to the high Arctic, and, fourth, from the earth processes of the present time to those which folded our landmass and formed our ore deposits several billion years ago. From this perspective of information and understanding, they seek to provide us, policy makers and public alike, with unique insights for the future habitation and enjoyment of our Canadian landmass.

They tell us the size and shape of our landmass; they describe its natural textures and man's impact on them. From the days of the lone surveyor and his pioneering explorations in our frontier areas we are moving into the satellite age, with earth resource satellites such as ERTS monitoring our changing land surface every 17 days. Our scientists not only describe the land surface, but its subsurface as well. Through the national seismological service they monitor earthquakes and nuclear explosions alike, satisfying man's curiosity by defining the properties of the earth's inaccessible interior and, at the same time, providing the public with insights into the detection of nuclear explosions and their possible effect on Canada, or on the earthquake risks which must be considered in building and engineering construction.

The national geomagnetic service defines the changing magnetic field over Canada and the movement of the north pole, thus providing the essential information for navigation by compass across Canada. The geologists provide the key insights on where our resources are, how much we have, and whether they can be exploited. Simultaneously, they seek to generate new employment in declining mining communities, to assess the terrain impact of pipelines and engineering construction, and to advise on the potential resource loss when land is used for such alternate purposes as parks and hydro-electric power generation.

As many of my colleagues are aware, the 24th International Geological Congress and similar congresses in the fields of photogrammetry, cartography and geography will convene this summer in Montreal and Ottawa. They will involve more than 10,000 scientists from approximately 100 countries. 1972 is being hailed as Earth Sciences Year in Canada. The government of Canada has recognized the significance of these events through a series of commemorative postage stamps, to be issued during the year; and schools and universities across the country are undertaking special classroom and outdoor projects emphasizing the earth sciences.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will quote from a recent statement by His Excellency the Governor General:

> Our nation's vastness, and the great variety of its physical structures and resources have made the earth sciences particularly important in the development of our country. Those knowledgeable in this field have been and remain, our explorers, helping to uncover the riches of the earth and teaching efficient management and conservation of those resources.

This government recognizes that the performance of our resource and energy industries has been a basic building block in the growth of Canada's national wealth, opening new frontiers, accumulating capital for re-investment, enhancing the scientific and technical skills of Canadians, and accounting for a useful export surplus. The maturing of these industries and their importance to the economy suggests the critical part they will play in furthering the development of other economic sectors as well as the quality of life for all Canadians.

I want to spend the few remaining minutes at my disposal in this debate to cover some of the problem areas of concern to us in the management of our resources. Canada has been and remains one of the most favoured nations in the world in so far as the availability of energy is concerned. We are the second largest per capita consumer nation and the sixth in total energy consumption. In recent years the component cost of fuel in most industrial activity has remained in the area of 4 to 5 per cent. We cannot automatically assume that we will always be in such a favourable supply position.

Much of our early industry was based on low cost hydro-electric energy. We are fast running out of economic sources of supply and the large potential projects that remain are subject to considerable environmental and capital requirement concerns. Accordingly, we are as a nation increasingly turning the thermal electric generation, either convential or nuclear, and in these fields we must maintain lower fuel costs and achieve more efficient generation techniques if we are to continue to have a lower electric energy cost than most competing industrial nations.

• (1530)

Our nuclear research program and our assistance to electrical general and transmission research at such facilities as Hydro Quebec's Electric Research Institute will help realize these efficiencies. The uranium industry currently faces an over-supply position accompanied by depressed world prices and a consequent lag in exploration activity. On the other hand, current known uranium resources are fully committed near the end of this decade and it is obvious that increased exploration will be needed, given the eight years of lead time required to bring new deposits into production. Over the past year officials of my department have met with representatives of both consuming and producing countries to assess this situation and determine measures to stimulate this activity. We have been in consultation also with representatives of this very important industry in Canada and we hope to be tabling during this session a revised uranium and thorium bill.

I have already referred to the importance of our relations with the United States in the resources field. Our starting point in this relationship is that Canada and this government will continue to bargain hard to get access to markets for resources which have been further processed in Canada to the highest degree possible and to sell them at the best opportunity prices. At the same time, we should all bear in mind that Canada does not have a monopoly in most of these export-oriented resource industries and cannot expect, therefore, to lever massive advantages in terms of price or access to markets merely by sitting back and waiting for foreign buyers to come pounding on our door. Our policies must reflect a studied appreciation of the resources which may from time to time be available for export as clearly in excess of our own requirements and we must know our own needs. One of Canada's energy policy objectives is to ensure adequate and dependable sources of supply at reasonable costs. To this end the government is moving in a systematic way in the development of an inventory of our resources of oil, gas, coal and uranium.

Our trade relations in these matters with the United States will be among the most sensitive and important in coming months. The question of access to markets raises immediately the United States embargo on uranium, for example, a position that must surely be altered if the United States is to supply the needs of its industry toward the end of the decade.

In another area we are moving closer to the goal of full and unimpeded access to United States markets for oil and gas produced in Canada which is clearly surplus to domestic security and commercial requirements. In this connection, of course, one of the most important issues that has been before the House in the recent past has been the question of the west coast tanker route proposed by the United States. My colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) has made clear in the House, and the government in an aide-mémoire sent to Washington last August stated in the strongest possible terms Canada's reservations with respect to the ecological and other hazards of movement of oil by tanker from Alaska, down the west coast and through Puget Sound to northwestern United States refineries.

The recent report of the United States coastguard dealing with the potential dangers of such an adventure has only served to reinforce the view that all possible alternatives ought to be given serious study before any unilateral action is taken. In this regard we have made clear, with the government's Guidelines to Northern Pipelines of August, 1970, that we welcome applications to build oil or gas pipelines from Alaska through Canada in a land bridge to the continental United States.

I should here comment that a very effective program of co-operation between government and industry is one reason studies have proceeded to a point where we feel that we will be in a position within a year to receive and consider applications for northern pipeline construction. This co-operation should serve as a model for other government-industry relationships.

On the difficult question of foreign ownership in the resource field members will recall the measures taken by this government to sustain Canadian control over our uranium industry and the successful manner in which my predecessor interpreted the will of this House that Home Oil should remain a Canadian company. Anyone concerned deeply about the future of Canada must acknowledge a very real concern about the foreign ownership or control of key resource industries. At the same time, however, it is important to appreciate fully the huge amounts of investment capital which will be required to maintain a viable resource sector that can, in turn, contribute so much to the development of an industrial strategy for a stronger Canada. I favour a pragmatic look at the advantages and disadvantages of any particular investment action proposed for our economy with foreign investment having the onus of demonstrating its contribution to our Canadian wellbeing and to the aspirations of Canadians.

In the months ahead, members of the House will have opportunities to take part in the debate on policies for husbanding and developing Canada's energy and mineral resources, particularly under the consideration of departmental estimates. In my view these questions which fall under my responsibility are among the most important questions to be decided by Canadians in this decade. I will look forward to the contributions of hon. members and of provincial governments, industry and Canadians generally as the government moves to form its policies in this vital area. Perhaps a good starting point would be to ask my hon. friend if he would like now to pose his question.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister both for his courtesy in allowing me to ask a question and for making a statement, so soon after taking over his department, which I know will be of use and value to everybody in the country. The question I should like to ask him for clarification purposes relates to the re-examination of the report on Fundy power. His predecessor made a statement in April last year to the effect that the federal government would be willing to re-examine this report in co-operation with the province of Nova Scotia and the province of New Brunswick, the original partners in the examination. Over the period since that time, there have been some problems but I understand that they have been ironed out now and that the provincial governments have named their representatives to such a re-examining committee. I am wondering whether the minister's department is in a position to carry out such a re-examination, and if the House will be informed of the type of re-examination which will be conducted.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I thank the hon. member for his question. I did indeed find, as he suggested, a record of consultation with regard to a review of the Fundy tidal power studies. This is one of the questions which will be on the agenda for my meeting on Tuesday next both with Mr. Hatfield of New Brunswick and Mr. Regan of Nova Scotia. I should like to take that record and discuss it with them, and then hope to be in a position to arrive at a quick decision of which I would be glad to keep the House informed when I return.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, might I be allowed to ask another question of the minister?

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister prepared to accept a question from the hon. member?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes.

Mr. Barnett: When the minister made reference to the aide-memoire sent by his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to the government of the United States with reference to the west coast tanker route proposal, was he quoting from the text of that document as sent to Washington.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No. I would have to refer the hon. member to the previous remarks made by my colleague. The remarks I made were intended to be a paraphrasing both of the remarks of my colleague in the House and the aide-memoire. I think I am correct in saying it is not a quotation. Certainly, I did not have it written in quotation marks.

• (1540)

Mr. Mather: May I ask the minister a question in connection with his remarks with regard to the possible avoidance of the shipment of crude oil down the Pacific coast by tanker, particularly the coast of British Columbia, and the hazards involved in that. Have I understood him correctly to say that his department welcomed the application from companies for the construction of a pipeline through the Mackenzie Valley, and that the department would be in a position, perhaps within a year or this year, to receive such applications? Does he know whether such applications are pending or are likely to come this year?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member states approximately correctly what I have indicated, that there has been a program of research conducted both by private firms and also further research conducted under the aegis of the government. We expect to make great progress in the research in the coming field year this summer for the various studies that will be conducted. We hope then to be in a position, particularly from the standpoint of the National Energy Board, to entertain applications and to assess their sufficiency, particularly from the standpoint of economic and ecological considerations. I do know that a number of consortia have been formed among interested pipeline carriers and producers with respect to the possibilities of a northern pipeline. Whether in due course these will mature into applications can only be speculation on my part, but I think one can assume that with the very well defined source of energy resources in the north, applications will be coming forward. Whose they will be and the exact timing, only time will tell.

[Translation]

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have the privilege of participating in the debate on the Speech from the Throne and I should like to seize the opportunity to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. The hon. members for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) and for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie) performed this task with much dignity.

I have read His Excellency's speech over and over again, and I have even taken the liberty of making a few comparisons with past speeches. My conclusion is that the 1972 Speech from the Throne was merely a repetition of previous efforts and that no doubt the results of the whole thing will be the same as we have already experienced, and no more.

In this document, the present situation is described as in a dream, but when the dream comes to an end and we fall back to earth we realize that the same malaise, the same problems are still with us.

I am now particularly thinking of the unemployed. It is well known that the unemployment picture in Canada remains critical. It is a real tragedy for those involved. Mechanisms and programs brought forward by the government with much fanfare of publicity to eliminate unemployment and regional disparities have proved inadequate.

There are more Canadians now having to do without essentials because they are or have been unemployed for a certain period during the past three years. We are therefore further from the promised just society than at the opening of this legislature's first session.

In the Speech from the Throne for the third session, which began in October 1970, the just society was mentioned as a remote objective. This year, it has been left out, no doubt because the objective was so remote it was lost sight of.

I personally believe that the long quotations and the bombast inserted into the Speech from the Throne are just vain words and window-dressing. And that is all the more true when we consider the treatment the unemployed are now subjected to.

I suppose that most other members, as I did, spent the parliamentary recess trying to palliate problems created by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. That is why I should like to deal with the matter right away.

At the opening of this session, opposition members called for a review of the present situation, but in vain. It seems that the government is unwilling to face a situation which it knows to be bad, or is unaware of it.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Perrault) endeavoured, during the oral question period on February 18, to minimize the situation by saying that a mere 1 per cent of benefit payments were delayed. I do not know what criteria he used to establish such percentage or where he got his statistics, but I will not ask him to prove his assertions, lest I would again upset the computer and delay the issuance of benefits.

I myself had the opportunity of asking for the revision of numerous files. Some of those cases have been solved. But a great many cases remain outstanding and they are not recent either. Some of these applications were filed in September, October and November 1971, and I notice that applications resulting from illness are usually those which lead to the longest delays in the issuance of benefits.

• (1550)

I am under the impression that the personnel entrusted with this service is inadequate and that in some cases the files are lost so that it becomes necessary to ask the applicants for new medical certificates, thus further disrupting the orderly operation of the administration.

In a particular case, a young man had filed an application in early December. After waiting a month and a half, he called me to explain his problem. I submitted the case to the UIC and eight days after asking for a revision of that file, an official informed me that the pay center had asked for photocopies of the decisions of the computer. Now even the computer goes wrong.

Another person, who stopped working for the same reason on August 23, 1971 and who resumed work more than two and a half months ago is still waiting for his benefits, and this after having produced four medical certificates. In other cases, income tax was unfairly deducted before the law came into force.

In some cases, they do not manage to trace back the contributions of the claimants who have to make further calls on their former employer. I even had to call employers to ask them to be kind and please produce a new certificate.

I could give scores of similar instances, but what is the use, when facts are being distorted and all the errors attributed to the claimants.

Last January 26, I received a letter from the Department of Labour informing me that in all pending cases, where it would be found that the settlement of a claim would be delayed through administrative inefficiency, benefits would be paid within the next 72 hours. It was also suggested that all claims submitted before December 1, 1971 would be reviewed within the next ten days, and that a decision would be taken.

Following this, I did not find any improvement and on February 15 the office of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration issued a communiqué stating that all claims for benefits in arrears had now been settled.

Since then, his parliamentary secretary has confirmed that the situation would become normal again during the month of March. Was he expecting the unsettled claims to disappear with the melting snow?

Mr. Speaker, what I find odd in all this is that I received no complaint from officials of other departments to the effect that their pay cheque was in arrears. I never had to complain that my own cheque, which I receive on the last day of each month, was late. I find it strange that it has been possible to organize a very efficient accounting system in all other departments, so that everybody be paid on time whereas complaints have been piling up for the past six months at the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

It seems to me it should have been possible to foresee the surplus of work that would result from the application of the new act and to get ready for it.

Please note that my criticisms are not aimed at the civil servants who do the best they can and who are even willing to do their utmost that their fellow citizens' claims might be met equitably.

To my mind, the problems stem from the administrative procedures adopted by high level bureaucrats in the Unemployment Insurance Commission who failed to foresee the problems that might crop up after centralizing the offices in the major centres.

Today we reap what was sowed five years ago by people who suffered from delusions of grandeur.

I see only one quick solution and I would ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) and his parliamentary secretary to make note of it. The claims that are pending should be transferred to information offices where the reasons for the delay would be considered in the presence of the claimants. Some will say that this procedure could be expensive but, in my opinion, it would be less expensive and more efficient than the present one, because it would reduce the number of phone calls on the part of officials and claimants with regard to the same case.

I know that it is boring to hear the same things over and over, and others have said these things before me, but one must understand that it is worse for the claimant who has been waiting for two months and even longer for the cheque to which he is entitled and which he needs. If only this money came from taxes! But no! This money comes from a common fund to which both workers and employers contribute.

As to the problem of unemployment itself, I have referred to it at the beginning of my speech and, as far as I can see, there is nothing new in the Speech from the Throne indicating that it will be solved shortly. In this regard, we shall have to be content with dreams, as is the case with the Speech from the Throne.

In that famous document, one reads:

—events in Canada and elsewhere have continued to demonstrate the turbulence of this age of changing values and shifting attitudes.

I wonder to whom those words are addressed, if not to the successive governments we have had in the past 50 years.

Considering that Canadians have to pay $5 billion, for interest only on federal, provincial, municipal and school debts, with the blessing of this federal government and its predecessors, I say that it is not among the people that one must look for those changing values but right here.

Those $5 billion distributed to the people would mean $275 per year for every man, woman and child. For an individual worker who works 40 hours a week, 50 weeks a year, that would mean 14 cents per hour, while for the married worker with three children, it would mean 70 cents an hour.

I think it would be needless to seek elsewhere the reasons for the increases in prices we have known these last few years. No matter what the income and the direct taxes of a person, most taxes are hidden indirect taxes, that is to say they are added to the price paid by the consumer in its everyday purchases.

That is confirmed by the report of the Senate Committee on poverty, which states that 56 per cent of an annual income under $2,000 goes in taxes.

Further on in the Speech from the Throne, we read the following:

Economic security is one of the most effective forces which to conquer social isolation.

But who contributed to the creation of economic insecurity and social isolation in Canada? Is it not the system that gets us deeper and deeper into debt every day and keeps the Canadian people in poverty by depriving them of half their income—even more, sometimes—so as to pay interest to those who hold the power to create money? Do we not see here again that values are being upset and minds giving way to instability?

Imagine! We must ask private interests permission to use the production created by our people. If that is not unsteadiness of mind, I wonder what it could be.

Again in the Speech from the Throne, we read this:

We in this place have a special responsibility to help bring these goals and those hopes within reach, to make real the Canada of which our forefathers dreamed: a land so large that some of it will remain always serene and unspoiled; a society which believes in the dignity of every single individual; a community which husbands its resources and shares them justly among this generation and those to follow;

• (1600)

How magnanimous, Mr. Speaker! One would think that we are in a monastery. There are a number of questions that we should ask ourselves. If total public and individual debts in Canada top one hundred billion, can it be said that our heritage has been wisely managed, and that the sharing is still equitable? Is human dignity being respected when, as this is actually done in Quebec, widows are forced to travel 50 miles and more to go and get a poor little welfare cheque of $5, when it cost her perhaps $6 and $7 for taxi fare to go to that office? When the young fellow who has been told: Go to school and learn something, and your future will be bright, is offered starvation wages when he does graduate from school, is this sharing and respect for human dignity?

Let us take the case of widows and people under 65 who do not draw old age security benefits and who are unemployed. Are these people getting their fair share, they who have been working for many years and who now find themselves unemployed because of sickness or age? What are we waiting for to lower to 60 the age of eligibility for old age security?

And yet over the past years, these very people have entrusted their confidence in the country's management.

They have worked hard to make Canada the best country in the world. They have sacrificed themselves to give their country sons and daughters. They had them educated at the price of many sacrifices to get what? A country in debt and to be tenants in a country inherited from their parents and which they have improved themselves, to be proletarians within an economic system which gives the highest priority to machinery and money. And yet other countries with an average income less than ours are already granting old age security to their senior citizens aged 60 or more. Why not Canada?

This is where this country's administration has been leading us. There will still be junior civil servants, planning technicians and economists paid by the system to devise more programs which will give rise to more problems and drive us even faster in to bankruptcy. Well-meaning people are being mislead by those programs and this bureaucracy, so much so that everybody is at a loss. As it happened when they were building the Tower of Babel, short and long term programs are being set up which are leading nowhere. And yet our citizens are caught in it and work hard at the tower. The workman does his best to patch up the cracks which have shown up over the years while the graduate works at adding additional steps to the tower to have it rise even higher.

In a different field, the Speech from the Throne stated and I quote:

> A major factor in the strength of the Canadian economy is provided by exports. The Government will pursue vigorously the initiatives it has taken throughout the world to develop and maintain Canadian markets. Those advantages already gained by ministerial missions to other countries will be enlarged in a number of ways. One of these will involve the provision of better credit facilities.

This is another masterpiece. I wish that our missions sent abroad for granting interest-free loans would get lost and visit Canada to obtain information on regional needs and give Canadians the same kind of loans they make to foreign countries.

If such missions have been so successful in the past in foreign countries, why not try the experience here in Canada? Our people are no dumber than people in other countries, and the missions might prove just as successful. If so, they might intend to continue in the same manner.

I have a suggestion for the minister in charge of housing (Mr. Basford) in this regard. Why not start activities in the field of construction? We have already financed an interest-free loan in Great Britain in order to persuade the British to purchase Canadian materials for building their homes. I should be quite interested to see what the results would be in Canada.

However, one thing we are not short of now is needs. Moreover, this field is labour-intensive and material-consuming. It is one of our economy's most important sectors and could provide even more jobs.

We now have a shortage of housing, and the height of foolishness, Mr. Speaker, in my province, the province of Quebec, is that they are preventing construction workers from practricing their trade, subject to a fine, by making a working permit mandatory. That is another instance of upside down values and true mental instability.

To start this experiment, the minister responsible for housing could call on his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray), to remove the 12 per cent sales tax on building materials. This would be a true step forward to help those who need housing and to create jobs.

Another way to assist the building industry would be to grant a subsidy on the interest paid upon the purchase of houses for low-income people. Instead, we accept through social welfare to pay for the cost of housing that is often above $100 or $125 per month. We do not want Canadians to become home-owners; we would rather let them be tenants, even if it is more expensive, Mr. Speaker. This is where our management of the country is leading us.

A few years ago, we granted other interest-free loans to Jamaica for the construction of sewage and water systems in the city of Kingston, the capital. Why could we not grant the same privilege to Canadian municipalities whose numerous programs gather dust on shelves for lack of funds or because the interest rates are too high?

The construction of sewage treatment plants would create jobs and simultaneously contribute to the fight against pollution. There is another field in which Canadian needs are tremendous. If extending credit facilities to other countries is a good thing, it might be time to check whether or not it might not also be so, here in Canada, before dashing right and left.

With regard to our exports, Mr. Speaker, obviously we must find new markets and keep those we already have. We have to import products that are manufactured here in Canada; I am thinking of agricultural products that have to be imported from tropical countries. Now, our exports help our balance of payments, but in spite of that, ti will be hard to convince us that we must export in order to survive. Nor do I agree with the economists who in every country in the world, preach that exports must be greater than imports, How, then, could all the countries in the world at one and the same time export more than they import? It is absurd to think that all countries could have a favourable balance of payments at the same time. Before exporting, it is necessary, in my opinion, to meet domestic demand, to fulfil the needs of the people for food, clothing, housing and public utilities.

Until such time as those objectives are met for the benefit of the people, we must ask ourselves questions and try and find out what is truly wrong in our country. Until we find means to cope with internal consumption and succeed in making use of the available manpower and factory potential, we will have to ask ourselves questions. The duty of management is to implement mecanisms to ensure the welfare of the Canadian people.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out an excerpt from the Senate Committee on Poverty Report where it is said that one Canadian out of four, which means five million Canadians, receives an income which is less than what is considered as the threshold of poverty.

This is a great challenge that management will have to take up as soon as possible, because the gap between poverty and affluence increases from day to day, as well as the number of destitute people. The number may double in five years. The challenge is a serious one, and we must face it.

[English]

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, along with other Members of Parliament who have already spoken in this debate I, too, wish to commend the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) for moving the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. If life in Canada is not quite as good and glowing as he would have us believe, it is certainly not as dark and dismal as some opposition spokesmen have contended. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie) delivered what I thought was an exemplary speech in seconding the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. His constituents have good reason to be proud of his performance. I think he did particularly well in drawing attention to the government's plans to take further steps to stimulate our economy. Effective measures in this area will contribute much to national unity and national pride. It is difficult to feel at one with other Canadians or to take delight in our national identity if economic circumstances separate some in an unhappy state of poverty and misery.

• (1610)

The hon. member for Bruce stated in his speech that Canada pays the highest old age pensions in the world. I am not able to refute that statement, and it may very well be true, but it seems to me to be quite beside the point. The point is, surely, that pensions almost always turn out to be inadequate if they are based upon a fixed number of dollars. The constant complaint of most people whose income depends upon a pension is that it seemed like a very comfortable sum when it was first set up, but shrunk to poverty level in purchasing power because of inflation.

A recurring term in the Speech from the Throne is that of "isolation". In the constituency which I represent, the electoral district of Thunder Bay, isolation is more than just a word—it is a daily reality for many people.—North of the CNR mainline, a great many of my constituents, native Indians of Canada, live in isolated reserves and settlements. Many of these native persons are now migrating into cities and towns and the result for them is a feeling of terrible alienation. The city is seen by them as a foreign land, owned and operated by white men. Social and sometimes even psychological disorientation sets in, and all too frequently this leads to serious personal problems for these people. Many Canadians see only these Indian people who have been stripped of all human dignity caused by severe cultural shock and it is sad but true that there is a tendency to judge all Indian people by these unfortunate souls with whom they come into contact.

Some communities have now set up what are called Friendship Centres for native people. For those who may not know, these centres are social service agencies which exist to administer programs to meet the evolving needs of all migrating native people. The Department of the Secretary of State presently provides small grants to assist these centres. I notice that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State is here. He knows my feelings about this, namely that the grants are much too small and that the centres which are in greatest need are not getting grants sufficiently large in proportion to those received by centres which are not doing the same job. For example, the Friendship Centre in Thunder Bay deals with people from all over the region and is called upon to bear correspondingly large costs for administration and programming. As for programming, the provincial government provides a somewhat larger sum of money but nevertheless, these friendship centres are today facing a financial crisis and find themselves unable to provide the quality of staff or the level of services that they would wish. Accordingly, I take this opportunity to call upon the government to adopt a reasonable policy of assistance to migrating native people, one which will include a much more generous measure of support for Friendship Centres.

On the same subject, that is, the isolation of native people, it is further necessary that steps be taken to improve the systems of communication and transportation among the scattered reserves and settlements in Northern Ontario. It is now possible to achieve this goal by relatively inexpensive means.

The Speech from the Throne proposes that the CBC be authorized to extend its services in a comprehensive fashion. Many of my constituents have no television or radio service at all. Others must tolerate very poor reception and most must content themselves with only partial service at best. For example, in nearly one half of my constituency, television viewers face a blank screen following the national news at 11:00 p.m.—there is no late evening television. I suppose that some here would argue this is not a drastic deprivation to be suffered, but if a person is a shift-worker and lives in a community which offers little else in the way of entertainment, a blank screen can be an annoyance of some consequence. There is a real demand for this service. Recently, a petition was posted in two stores in one small community and within a week 375 signatures were collected. The CBC is well aware of this gap in their service and I am pleased to say that steps are soon to be taken to correct this situation. We have now received such an assurance from the President of the CBC.

The hon. member for Bruce noted in his speech that his constituency has a second channel, an alternate TV service. There is not even a slight hope, Mr. Speaker, that my constituents will see the CTV network for many years to come. Therefore, although we may criticize the CBC for its less-than-perfect service and question its efficiency, although we may grumble about its programming, we do realize that if we did not have a publicly-owned broadcasting system in Canada, many Canadians outside the larger urban centres would enjoy neither television nor radio reception of any kind.

The Speech from the Throne also contained reference to seven new national parks created in Canada since 1968. One of these parks, Pukaskwa National Park, is located almost entirely within my constituency. It gave me great pleasure to participate in the official signing ceremonies, together with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and the Ontario Minister of Lands and Forests. Approximately 725 square miles in area, Pukaskwa National Park takes in some 50 miles of rugged Lake Superior shoreline. At its widest part, the park will span some 30 miles inland. The land is part of the Precambrian Shield, rugged in nature with numerous bays, beaches, rocky points and islands along the shoreline. In the interior of the park are numerous wild rivers, creeks with waterfalls, rapids and many small and large lakes.

In developing the park, the Indian people will be fully involved to ensure that important economic and employment opportunities are realized by them.

So far, I have been referring to the east end of my constituency around Lake Superior, near the towns of Marathon and White River. I should now like to move to the other end of my constituency, nearly 500 miles to the west. Here we find the energetic, progressive pulp and paper town of Dryden which now boasts a modern, paved airport capable of handling medium-range jetliners—this in a community of 7,000 people which serves a district that has about 15,000 people. In this area, the semi-isolation of being located along the Trans-Canada highway and on the CPR mainline, miles from anywhere, has now been shattered. To date, the federal government has spent nearly half a million dollars on the development of this modern municipal airport.

• (1620)

May I add that during the forthcoming election campaign, whenever it may be, on behalf of my constituents I extend an invitation to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) and to the leaders of the opposition parties as well, to drop into Dryden as they jet back and forth across the nation trying to win votes. I can promise them all that a warm and friendly response awaits them.

Mr. McCleave: What about the rest of us?

Mr. Penner: As long as you do not all come at once, if you spread out your visits over a period of time, we will make the best possible arrangements for you.

The Speech from the Throne states that the government will continue to develop programs to strengthen secondary industry. I say to this government that the economic growth and development of Northwestern Ontario depends in large measure on lower freight rates. Freight rate incentives would assist this region to attract resource processing and manufacturing industries, as well as stimulating the existing primary and resource oriented sectors. Remote geographical location and low population density contribute to an inequality of opportunity, which we have always had to live with, but it seriously affects our ability to compete with other parts of Canada and abroad. Long haul distances significantly increase the selling price of goods and materials in the marketplace.

As most hon. members know, the pulp industry has suffered badly in recent years and prospects for 1972 do not appear much better. Pulp markets are in considerable oversupply and no realignment is in sight. Many one-industry pulp and paper communities are now living under the cloud of threatened lay-offs and even permanent shutdowns. The industry is, relatively speaking, labour-intensive; wages are reasonably good and working conditions are generally fair to good. My constituents have taken note of the generous treatment extended to prairie wheat growers with the recently announced two-price system. We approve of this and the assistance offered to the Canadian book publishing industry, but we want to know, in this government's design of a so-called "industrial strategy", what consideration is being given to the pulp and paper industry. Hopefully, it is not a policy of assisting in the establishment of new mills while allowing older mills to close their doors, thereby causing the death of communities, with all the social waste involved as well as the dislocation of thousands of people.

The electoral district of Thunder Bay is a resource-rich region of Canada. I was pleased to hear this afternoon the speech of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), and I should like to take this opportunity of congratulating the member for Rosedale on his recent appointment to this most important portfolio.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Penner: We are looking forward to his forthcoming visit, his non-political visit, to Northwestern Ontario to see some of the mines there in operation.

Mining is one of the big industries in Northwestern Ontario. It is a risky enterprise which helps to open up the north. It is true that this industry gets a special tax deal, and that under the new tax legislation it will continue to receive favourable treatment provided an investment is made in the first place. I note that periodically members of parliament from both sides of the House, and also would-be experts in the academic world, call for a fostering of job-intensive industries in preference to the resource industries. Usually, the people who advocate this policy as part of an industrial strategy come from large cities like Toronto or Montreal. I appreciate their sincerity in wanting to see many more jobs created quickly, and with that I have no quarrel. One problem is, of course, that fostering job-intensive industries means the continuing rapid growth of large urban centres, while the hinterland of Canada remains dormant. I suppose that ecological pantheists who equate God with nature may cheer at this prospect, but urbanologists must shriek with despair at the thought of cities expanding endlessly and relentlessly.

The fact is that we in the more remote areas of this country also want a part of the action. We resent very strongly undue exploitation of any kind, whether that exploitation is directed from Wall Street or Bay Street. What we want is an orderly, rational development of our resources, taking into account the wisdom of conservation and the necessity for environmental protection and preservation. Thus, we regard it as being callous indeed to say that there should be no development at all, little or no investment in resource industries.

The development of the Mattabi mine on Lake Sturgeon has given the little railroad and tourist town of Ignace a big lift. A town plan has been drawn up, and the building of many new homes offers the promise of the good life to these people in Northwestern Ontario without it being necessary for them or their children to migrate to the choking atmosphere of Toronto or some other large centre. There are other communities, such as Geraldton, Nakina, Armstrong and Beardmore, that look forward to the day when some of the mining exploration that has been going on for years around those towns leads to development, production and job opportunities, with the growth of these communities and their economies.

One of the characteristics of being a Canadian is having the ability to meet the challenges of living in a northern environment, not in any simple, primitive condition, but in an advanced civilization in which we make use of the many tools and techniques of modern industry to provide for ourselves a high standard of living. We in the north want to share in these benefits.

On another subject, Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne promises that parliament will have the opportunity to consider a new Canada Labour Code. One of the most controversial aspects of this proposed legislation has been the technological change provisions, which would provide the trade unions with notice of all significant technological changes and, in carefully defined circumstances, permit them to negotiate during the lifetime of an agreement provisions designed to assist employees in adjusting to the effects of technological change. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce has officially opposed these provisions, saying that they would jeopardize the economic well being of industry and Canadians generally.

There is another important and strong argument on the other side, however, and this counterview has been well expressed by the small Chamber of Commerce located in the little railroad town of Nakina, in my constituency. Recently, they took it upon themselves to write a letter to the national president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in which they took the opposite view to what their parent body has said about the proposed Canada Labour Code and the technological change provisions. I think the House should hear what they had to say, because what they said comes from first-hand experience. The letter reads:

• (1630)

Our small community has had two close brushes with "technological change" when the CNR attempted to run-through in 1964 and again in 1969. We know too well the results of such changes when not brought on with care and consideration of all things concerned.

If the CNR run-through had taken place—and we don't know that it still won't—it would have left Nakina with one-third fewer residents and the reduction of earning power by almost one-half. The result would have been fewer tax dollars coming into the town office, businesses would have had to cut staff drastically, with some merchants fearing they would have to fold, thus causing an even greater loss of employment.

Technological change is inevitable, but to do it in a haphazard way, not taking into account the employees and communities involved, is to seriously jeopardize our "economic well being". We believe that unions should have the right to stall change, if only until the signing of the next collective agreement, so that technological change may be bargained about sensibly and brought on smoothly by minimizing the adverse effects.

It is with these people that I will take my stand because I experienced this run-through threat in 1969. A former Member of Parliament from another party had this same experience in 1964. The point made in that letter is a good one. We hope the government will proceed with this part of the Canada Labour Code and see it through.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: As a final point, Mr. Speaker, I note that the Speech from the Throne speaks of policies designed to promote tourism in Canada. Tourism is another important industry in Northwestern Ontario, and we welcome all efforts by the federal government which will further assist in its growth and development. It is most important, however, that the economic benefits from this industry accrue mainly to Canadians.

In this regard, hon. members may recall the stir and fuss raised by elected representatives from Northwestern Ontario concerning U.S. licensed aircraft operators flying sportsmen into our region and reaping rich rewards from our resources. They were profiteers of the worst kind from south of the border, taking all they could get and contributing nothing to either the regional economy or the national economy. As a consequence of the concern and activity of many persons in Northwestern Ontario over a protracted period of time, the air transport committee of the Canadian Transportation Commission in December 1970 placed restrictions on these U.S. licensed aircraft operators. They were permitted to make two traffic stops only, one at the customs port of entry and the other at a licensed base of a Canadian chartered commercial air carrier. We considered this to be a significant victory for Canada and Canadians but, alas, our hurrahs were shouted a little too soon.

In May of last year, an American operator, Frank E. Bohman of Minnesota, applied for a review of the order of the air transport committee. On August 27, the review board, despite strong arguments from elected representatives and various departments of the government of Ontario, amended its order governing U.S. carriers of fishermen and hunters into our region. Although some restrictions are still in effect, they are so watered-down that the only possible interpretation is that what we now have is another Canadian sellout. The efforts of those of us who spoke against Bohman and in defence of Canadian enterprise and our own resources were labelled by the Canadian lawyer representing this American profiteer as jingoists. When the economic history of Canada during the 70's is written, the infamous Bohman case may well be indexed under the heading of "Our National Shame". This, of course, was not a government decision. I recognize that. I had the impression, however, that the Canadian Transport Commission and the air transport committee existed for the wellbeing of Canada and Canadians. The Bohman case causes me to have second thoughts about that.

The Throne Speech debate is a good opportunity for all hon. members to comment favourably or otherwise about the times in which we live. Like artists, we take brush to canvas and paint our pictures, bright or dark. In reality, the scene is one of contrast, for as the Prime Minister said in his New Year's address to the nation, quoting the opening lines from Dicken's novel "A Tale of Two Cities"—"It was the best of times, it was the worst of times".

Horace Greely, in his "American Conflict", remarked that the illusion that times that were are better than those that are, has probably pervaded all ages. However, we see the picture of our times, this Parliament has a great deal of work to do for the betterment of our nation and for the well-being of its citizens.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, a year ago, during a visit to the Port of Saint John, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) gave certain undertakings with regard to an automobile and forest products facility known in our area as Pier 14A. Although many of us hoped it would be within the ability of the provincial government of New Brunswick to provide this pier, it has proved to be beyond the capacity of that province. I urge the Minister of Transport, in this preliminary way, to take a new look at the need for this facility and to live up, if I can put it that way, to the undertaking he gave to our province and people a year ago.

The second aspect, and then I will get to the main thrust of my speech, concerns both the province of New Brunswick and many who live along the Bay of Fundy. I refer to the 15 cent oil levy which is to be exacted as a result of an order in council passed because last year we amended the Canada Shipping Act. The major problem here is that inward and outbound fuel oil will, in a sense, be double taxed. Also, there should be a cutoff time once the Maritime pollution fund is built up. Industry and the public should have an assurance about this. Once again, we see that the people who live in a particular part of Canada are paying a particular price because of the fact they live along the seaboard.

Lastly, a motion in my name about the need to ensure improvements in the domestic feed grain and marketing system will be debated later. I do not want to be out of order by discussing it now. It remains a continuing source of frustration and irritation for our eastern Canadian farmers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: I propose to outline and comment upon the significance for Canadian publishers and the general public of Canada's non-adherence to the UNESCO agreement on the importation of educational, scientific and cultural materials, the Florence agreement, which has been operating since 1952. I accept the fact that there is a certain risk in speaking about this issue because perhaps publishing and the distribution or free flow of knowledge is not usually expected to be a popular subject in the parliamentary sense. I want to acknowledge the help and interest of Mr. Paul Thomas, a parliamentary intern, in gathering a good deal of the data to support the remarks I make today. I am sure any of us who have had the privilege of having the assistance of parliamentary interns want to compliment the donor foundation for its generosity and want to say a special word for these young people who have added immeasurably to the zest and interest in the parliamentary process.

• (1640)

The main purpose of the agreement is to help fulfil a basic aim of UNESCO, as set forth in its constitution, "to promote the free flow of ideas by word and image". The agreement aims to reduce tariff and trade obstacles to the international circulation of educational, scientific and cultural materials, principally by means of contracting states forgoing custom duties on such materials. Many categories of printed materials are covered by the agreement, but the most important category is books. The United Nations lists 63 countries as applying the Florence Agreement. Unfortunately, our country is not among these.

Canada has not signed the Florence Agreement according to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). In answer to a question of mine on June 30, 1971, as recorded at page 7510 of Hansard, it has not been considered to be in Canada's interest to abandon the limited protection offered domestic producers against imports of certain educational, scientific and cultural materials, as long as important trading partners maintained barriers against Canadian exports of these materials. The minister went on to say that Canada's accession to the agreement was under continuous review. The principal non-tariff barrier to Canadian book exports is the United States manufacturing clause. In the U.S. Copyright Act the phrase "Manufactured in the United States" means that the type must be set, plates made, sheets printed and books or periodicals bound in that country. The manufacturing clause provides that any work in the English language that is first published in the United States must be manufactured there if United States copyright protection is to be obtained. This holds true regardless of the nationality or residence of the author.

Any English language work first published abroad, and written by a foreign author residing abroad, need not be manufactured in the United States if copyright protection is to be obtained. Thus, the clause has no effect on a Canadian writing in Canada and selling into the United States. For an American writing and publishing abroad, there is a limit of 2,000 imported copies on which copyright protection can be obtained. A new United States copyright law has been under consideration in Congress for several sessions. In the 90th Congress, bill HR 2512 would have eased the provisions of the manufacturing clause somewhat. For example, the requirement of U.S. manufacture would no longer apply where at least a substantial part of the work has been written by a foreign author or, under certain conditions, by an American residing abroad. Moreover, a violation of the manufacturing clause would not jeopardize, as it now does, the protection of non-publication subsidiary rights such as dramatic television and motion picture rights. This bill, however, has apparently not been acted upon in the present 91st Congress because the responsible Senate subcommittee is trying to untangle the copyright problems raised by cable television. Pending revision of the United States law, Canadian book sellers and printers have pressed successive governments to seek a special exemption in exchange, perhaps, for Canada's removal of duty on United States books.

Canada now levies a 10 per cent duty on imported books. The percentage is of the cost of the book. There is provision in the Custom and Excise Act for exemption of certain categories of books. Technical books, for example, are exempt from duty, but the act does not define this term; its application is left to customs officials. Curious anomalies arise because of the imprecision of the act. The book by Manchester, The Death of a President, was first classified as a biographical work, subject to the 10 per cent surcharge. Later, it was reclassified as history and became exempt. Books adopted on university courses are also exempt. If a book is sold to an educational institution, the bookseller may apply for a rebate, though many do not because of the time and red tape involved in dealing with the customs department.

Mr. Barry Britnell, Chairman of the Copyright Committee of the Canadian Booksellers Association, stated that practically all of Britnell's books come in duty-free, but partly because he takes the time to seek exemptions. As an explanation of the price differential between Canadian and United States copies of books, the duty does not appear to be all that significant. While pricing policies vary, Mr. Britnell stated that some publishers spread their duty across all their books, non-exempt and exempt, so that the increase in price would be less than 10 per cent on any one book. Mr. Britnell felt that some publishers did use the duty as an excuse to maintain prices at levels slightly higher than warranted.

There are more important factors at work than the surcharge causing higher book prices in Canada. At various times the following factors have been of greater or lesser significance: higher distribution costs in a relatively sparsely populated country, costs of providing additional services, catalogues, promotion for imported books, the current exchange rates in some cases, provincial sales tax, financing difficulties of Canadian publishers, brokerage fees, and the schedule of discounts that a principal offers a Canadian agent.

I admitted at the outset that it is risky to discuss a subject like this, but I feel the issue perhaps is important enough to have it on the record. Perhaps following the comments I make, those in this field will be able to make some comments and criticisms of the proposals I make and the issue of the free flow of books in the world, so the adherence to the Florence Agreement will thus become an acceptable policy to the government of Canada.

The various sectors of the book business appear to be divided over the appropriate course for Canada to follow with regard to free trade in books. The Canadian Book Publishers Council on January 27, 1972 passed a resolution requesting the government of Canada to seek an exemption from the manufacturing clause in a revised U.S. Copyright Act as a stimulus to the unrestricted flow of books into the United States from Canada, as is presently the situation in the reverse direction. The members of the Canadian Independent Publishers Association headed by Peter Martin regard the CBP as effectively controlled by foreign subsidiaries of United States publishing houses and, therefore, insensitive to the issue of publishing Canadian materials. This group apparently regards the copyright issue as of minor importance compared to the more urgent issue of the survival of a Canadian book publishing industry.

The Canadian Booksellers Association takes the position that adherence to the Florence Agreement should follow the securing of an exemption from the United States manufacturing clause. There is a feeling in this group that the Canadian surcharge attempts to protect Canadian publishers in an ineffective manner by raising the price of United States books. This point is made in the brief by W. H. Smith & Sons to the Ontario Royal Commission on Book Publishing where it is stated:

> This tax is levied on the supposition that it in some way supports the Canadian book industry. This is not so and we suggest that it should be removed. The funds raised by this tax are not reinvested in the industry, but go into the general revenue of the government. It does not positively assist the Canadian publisher. It simply makes American books more expensive and so the only loser is the Canadian purchaser and reader.

All three groups point out that Canadian international copyright law gives copyright protection to a foreign publisher wishing to sell his books in Canada, regardless of where they are manufactured. Thus, there is no economic incentive for a foreign published book to be made in Canada, even if it is a best seller with a volume that would be attractive to a Canadian manufacturer.

• (1650)

I should like to discuss for a minute some of the major problems of the publishing industry in our country, and then make some suggestions about that. Public concern about the survival of a Canadian publishing industry has been aroused by such recent events as the sale of two Canadian publishing firms to Americans; the announcement by McClelland & Stewart Limited of its financial difficulties and the decision of the Ontario government to provide $1 million in no interest debentures to avert the possible bankruptcy or sale of the company to American interests; the hearings of the Ontario Royal Commission on Book Publishing; the publication of the study of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce on "The Canadian Book Industry"; the warnings of the Davey Committee on the Mass Media about the declining health of the industry; and the criticisms from the industry that the federal government has made no plans to use the occasion of International Book Year, 1972 to stimulate interest in books and to launch a co-ordinated policy of support for Canadian publishing.

I should like also to refer to the recent revelation that the Secretary of State's (Mr. Pelletier) proposals to cabinet for assistance to Canadian publishing had apparently been considerably narrowed down within the cabinet, and, most recently, the announcement by the Secretary of State pending the development of the government's long term policies. The major problems of the book industry in Canada include: the high percentage of imported books consumed; the distribution problems encountered by Canadian publishers; the absence of a real Canadian presence in certain fields of publishing such as the mass paperback market and children's books; the difficulties faced by publishers in obtaining operating capital; the practice of Canadian libraries and educational institutions of dealing with foreign book distributors who have larger stocks but fewer Canadian titles; the limited export markets due to such factors as U.S. copyright law; and the peculiarities of a market served by French and English language publishing industries operating under different conditions, through different techniques, and, to some extent, with differing philosophies. Each of these problems will be discussed briefly, and then I will try to make some assessment of the government's recent proposals.

The ITC study of 1969 states that the Canadian book industry is made up of about 300 organizations publishing books and approximately 25 manufacturers whose principal activity is manufacturing books. Of these, about 100 publishers account for virtually all books authored or adapted and manufactured in Canada.

Of the estimated $222 million worth of books at publisher's sales value consumed by Canadians in 1969, 65 per cent were imported books, 25 per cent were Canadian published and manufactured books, and 10 per cent were adapted books manufactured in Canada. On a language basis, 52 per cent of books sold in English Canada are direct imports, 14 per cent are adaptations, and only 34 per cent are produced and published in Canada. Of these, 80 per cent are published by foreign controlled firms, so that only 5 per cent of all English language books sold are authored, published and manufactured by Canadian controlled publishers. Only 30 per cent of the French language books are locally produced. I apologize for these statistics, but I think that in the context of these remarks it might be interesting to have them in some form on the record.

Of the $144.8 million worth of imported books consumed in Canada in 1969, 80 per cent came from the U.S.A. Since 1966 the volume of U.S. books imported has risen by 57.6 per cent, a scant 8 per cent and 7 per cent respectively come from Great Britain and France; about 58 per cent of the imported books were distributed by Canadian publishers, and the remaining 42 per cent were sold directly to Canadian wholesalers and institutions.

The ITC study also notes that the value added by book manufacturing and publishing accounted for .09 per cent of the 1969 Canadian gross national product. The contribution is approximately one third of the contribution made by the book industries in leading book publishing countries, and that fact might well be underlined. During the year 1969, the Canadian book industry exported only $5.5 million worth of books. Destination of exports is not given, but presumably a high percentage goes to the United States.

The English language industry has several large firms, but is principally dominated by a number of small firms having less than $2 million sales volume and relatively low capital investment. Larger firms earned more money and the small firms were in the vulnerable position of earning very marginal returns. Canadian publishers make most of their profits by acting as agents for foreign publishers. Canadian books tend to lose money. According to Paul Audley, Macmillan of Canada has been instructed by the British parent to cut back on its publication of Canadian works for precisely this reason. The respondents to the ITC survey cited capital availability as the greatest advantage of an agency relationship. In an argument familiar to the broadcasting situation, it is argued that imports in effect subsidize less popular Canadian books.

Canadian publishers also made profits by printing long runs of standard school text books. For the ITC sample, textbooks represented 65 per cent of total sales in English, somewhat lower than in the French language sector. This source of revenue is being undermined by increased competition from foreign sources through the "buying around the agent" practice. This involves placing institutional orders directly with foreign distributors, who carry large inventories, have sophisticated processing procedures, and buy in bulk at reduced prices. Often this means that institutions are buying American or French books. Moreover, there is a general reluctance among foreign publishers to modify their textbooks to suit Canadian conditions. This is a very urgent point.

Canadian owned publishers produced only 46 per cent and 45 per cent of Canadian elementary and secondary textbook sales respectively. I do not suppose many people in Canada are aware of this fact. Only 9 per cent of post secondary textbooks were produced by Canadian owned publishers. Ryerson Press and W. J. Gage Limited, both recently sold to American firms, accounted for a great part of this textbook production, and now there are only two Canadian owned houses that do any significant amount of textbook publishing.

This is a somewhat long and boring speech about an interest that has come to me because I reviewed a book once published in the U.S.A. on the life of an American ambassador, Chester Bowles. The sale price in the United States was $12.95 and in Canada $18.75. I commented on this differential and I have had a flood of information from interested people since. So, I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, you have to put up with this; I am sorry.

Two areas where the Canadian presence in publishing is virtually non-existent are children's books and popular paperbacks. If any of my colleagues have tried to pick up at an airport a popular Canadian paperback when they are going to and from their constituencies, they know the difficulty of which I speak. According to Paul Audley, less than five children's books were published by Canadian firms last year. In the popular paperback field, distribution arrangements that permit monopoly control on outlets to arise means that almost all paperbacks sold in drug stores, department stores, newsstands, airports, etc. are foreign titles, mostly American. The problem of access to the shelves is a recurring theme in the testimony of Canadian publishers to the Ontario Royal Commission on book publishing.

There are several reasons for the paucity of Canadian children's books. Most children's books are sold in department stores and supermarkets, so Canadian publishers again have difficulty finding outlets and owners buy from foreign jobbers. Successful children's books have become colourful, often with expensive illustrations, so that long runs are necessary to offset costs. The CBPC estimated that over 50,000 copies sold are needed to recover costs, and even then recovery is slow.

I want to discuss some obstacles to export, then make a suggestion or two, and then sit down. Presumably, an industry with a small, sparse density market would seek export sales. There are several obstacles to exports by Canadian publishers beyond the copyright problems with the United States already mentioned. There is little demand for non-fiction trade books published by Canadians because the subjects are of little interest outside of Canada. The most popular Canadian authors often have separate United States and United Kingdom publishers and when a joint run with another publisher is possible, the printing is usually done outside Canada.

• (1700)

Manufacturing costs of books are generally higher in Canada, which in turn is reflected in higher prices. The risks involved in entering other markets and the costs of promotional and distribution facilities are too great for Canadian publishers with low profit levels. It is unappealing to those publishers' agents who are content to profit from being importers.

Traditional financial institutions have shied away from providing loans to publishers because of the uncertain nature of the business. This point was repeatedly made by publishers to the Ontario Royal Commission on Book Publishing when it was stated that long-term development loans at reasonable rates of interest were needed to allow for the development of Canadian books. This financing difficulty is most acute for the smaller, new houses which are often publishing the most interesting Canadian material. Foreign-owned houses are often a part of a conglomerate with powerful financial backing. Credit is easier for them to obtain.

Ironically, McGraw-Hill partly financed its takeover of Ryerson Press through funds borrowed from Canadian banks. When foreign-owned publishers handle Canadian books, they are often able to offer the authors sizable advances, the assurance of a larger market and better promotion and distribution. The Canadian houses often lose their authors and revenue.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) announced on February 11, 1972, a five-point assistance program for the book industry: allocation of $500,000 in the fiscal year starting April 1 for bulk purchases of books by Canadian authors, which will be donated by federal agencies to public libraries in Canada and abroad; Canada Council grants totalling $1 million in the coming fiscal year for the publication of books by Canadian authors, double the amount spent last year; grants of $215,000 to finance English and French translations of Canadian books, an increase of $100,000 over last year; a $500,000 program by the trade department to open Canadian book distribution offices in the United States, Britain and Europe and to extend Canadian participation in international book fairs; contracts to commercial publishers for the printing of certain government publications.

The minister stressed that these were interim measures and that a permanent committee on publishing would be set up to prepare long-term policies. Still to be determined is the definition of a Canadian book and a Canadian publisher, but the minister is quoted in the Toronto Star, of February 12, 1972, as saying: "We definitely will help only Canadian houses". I just want to enter one caveat here. When the department is getting the list of Canadian books together, I hope we will not have a repetition, and I am sure we will not, of the selectivity that was forced upon the United States State Department in the infamous days of Senator Joseph McCarthy when people poked around to make sure that the titles were fit for the people to read. I think it might be extreme to expect the government to have Walter Stewart's book "Shrug" on all the book shelves, but if it does not have this type of book then there could be the danger that people would think there was censorship in the way titles were picked.

My first comment must be that these steps are very modest compared to the proposals submitted to cabinet last February, when the Secretary of State called for "immediate government action" before "the last resistance to the foreign flood collapses." In that memorandum the following recommendations were made: creation of a Canadian publishing development corporation; approval of the sum of $250,000 and two man-years for the activities of International Book Year; approval of the additional sum of $300,000 for the Canada Council for doubling its program of assistance in the area of creative writing and periodicals and study of additional measures.

The Secretary of State has made no special announcement regarding federal plans for International Book Year. His second cabinet proposal of September, 1971—these things keep pouring out—was for spending $450,000, not $250,000 on such programs as reading tours for Canadian poets and writers, book caravans to rural communities, French literature bookmobiles to Francophone communities outside Quebec, library programs, two special literary prizes, a special children's book prize, translation of important books and donations of paper and bookmobiles to underdeveloped countries. These are imaginative and valuable projects and it would be unfortunate if the government has decided not to pursue them.

Now I am going to skip a paragraph of my speech because my time is running out. While welcoming the program, most Canadian publishers agreed that it will only be of marginal importance. There is a clear need for additional measures. If we designate broadcasting as being vital to the development of national identity, invest large sums of public money in it and regulate both content and financial control, how can we neglect book publishing which is also important for the development of national ideas, values and identity?

I suggest some measures beyond the Secretary of State's proposals to be considered, as follows: first, federal-provincial discussions to develop a policy of institutional purchasing—libraries and schools—from Canadian wholesalers or publishers whenever possible. An estimate is that institutional purchasing outside the country for 1969 amounted to $40 million. Second, investigation of the distribution arrangements under the Combines Investigation Act; consideration should be given to a Canadian content quota system for paperback and magazine distribution racks. Third, the modernization and standardization of the tariff regulations to eliminate the bewildering array of separate items. Fourth, government encouragement for co-operation within the publishing industry for the compiling of basic data and also for standardization within the industry. Fifth, because children's books are so important as socializing forces, steps should be taken to encourage development of Canadian titles. In the centennial year there were prizes for children's books. Sixth and last, use of the CBC networks to draw more attention to the enjoyment and enrichment found in books.

Mr. Speaker, I have tried to give the House some ideas which, if they could be acted upon by this government, would aid our common purpose which is the purpose enunciated at the beginning of my speech, the promotion of the free flow of ideas by word and by image.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Good speech.

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne commits us to attack and overcome social inequality and isolation of the individual whether it be caused by lack of economic opportunity or remoteness from a mainstream of life. I agree with these proposals and express confidence that we shall go a long way toward our goal. There is another protection of individuals, however, the protection of all individuals in Canada, which I believe to be of overpowering urgency. It is protection of the public against unreasonable price demands and unreasonable wage and salary demands which bring about disruption and loss from strikes or the "rejection syndrome" under which a settlement which has been worked out by union representatives is later disavowed, with further negotiations, disruption and loss. Parliament and the legislative assemblies of Canada either alone or, preferably, with the co-operation of labour, simply must create the machinery whereby the public can try to protect itself from this immense and disturbing force.

For centuries, big business was the robber baron which had to be attacked, weakened and controlled. Today it is the large, organized unions which can wreak havoc on the whole public which is defenceless to defend itself. Big business has been controlled to a large extent by tough corporate laws and by anti-price fixing and anti- combines legislation. But organized labour has a special and privileged position in law. It has special status. Unions are not responsible for their illegal strikes or slowdowns, either to their employer or to others when they bring injury through loss of business or loss of employment. If the technicians who maintain flying equipment had to face the fact that they were responsible in law for any breach of the act, I am confident they would be there, they would be maintaining the machines and the aircraft would be flying.

• (1710)

I am not speaking for big business although some parts of it, particularly the pulp and paper and chemical industries, are in trouble. It faces tough international competition. I speak for the public, a large part of which is hurt every time there is a demand for an unreasonable wage or price increase. Just as the managers of big business used to think only of themselves and obtain the highest prices they could get while disregarding the public interest, so today many labour bosses are concerned only with what they can get for their own group; they disregard what is happening to the public. I ask, why are governments so reluctant to pass legislation which would allow the public to protect itself? I sense a change coming, and I hope it will come shortly.

I suggest that labour itself wants controls and that only relatively few of its political leaders wish to hold on to the power and notoriety of the strike. The vast majority of us, perhaps 75 per cent, are labourers in the sense that we are workers: this includes housewives, typists, farmers, technicians and all others who are not in management. All these people I have mentioned look to us, the Liberal party which makes up this government, to protect them. I believe the majority now feels that all strikes must be outlawed and a new system of settling disputes introduced, a system which would include protection for them, the public.

If the bakers can strike and force the retail price of bread to double, does the public not have an interest? Is it right that an organized union can bring about a price increase which can be passed on to the public without there being an opportunity for the public to object and be heard? If a crane operator, through his union, can force the construction industry to pay him $20,000 a year for a 40-hour week, is it not reasonable for the farmer to demand the same, or perhaps more, considering his investment? If the farmer were to do that, I submit the price of milk would go to $5 a quart. Of course the public is interested.

In Great Britain, one group caused personal inconvenience, physical discomfort and economic loss to everybody on the island. A few radar technicians in Canada who rejected the settlement worked out by their union representatives have caused annoyance and interefered with our right to go about our affairs. They have endangered the lives, to some extent, of many and caused financial loss, directly or indirectly, to almost every person in Canada. This strike, following as it does a strike by the controllers, is hurting Canada far out of proportion to the number of people involved in the conflict. This just does not make sense.

[Mr. Chappell.]

In the United States a new group under the name Common Cause has organized to blunt the force of organized power groups which seek to and would take more than their share of the national income at the expense of others. There is mounting public concern for the elimination of costly strikes which can disrupt the welfare of a whole city, be they in private industry or in the public service.

Our strike record in Canada is notorious. I believe it is the worst, or highest of the world's leading industrialized nations. As a result, our prices have been increasing at about 4 per cent, and wage settlements at something over 7 per cent annually. This is far in excess of any increase in productivity and, of course, causes inflation. Inflation not only results from wage-price increase; it also comes about from disruption in the industry struck and in other complementary or service industries serving the struck industry. When union workers not on strike refuse to cross the picket line at a striking plant no matter what the cause, their refusal permits the striking union to spread its quarrel, and thus its injuries in the form of unemployment, inefficiency and inflation, far beyond its own reasonable jurisdiction.

If prices increase too much, the public can switch its taste and buy something else, or we can lower customs barriers. The public can do quite a bit to resist unreasonable prices. However, when it comes to wage and price demands, the employer is forced to settle at an ever increasing rate of increase and pass the increase on to the public which is defenceless. The public includes not only other organized labour but people who are not organized and are without any power to obtain a similar increase or any increase to offset the increased prices they must pay.

If, as I said earlier, a crane operator can force the construction industry to pay him $20,000 a year, why should not the radar technician demand a similar return? Why should not the industrialized farmer demand it? Considering the hours he works and the capital he has invested, he might demand such a return. I suggest that if the farmer were given the same rate of return as the crane operator or others in the construction industry, food would cost five to ten times as much as it now costs. Therefore I say the public interest has to be protected.

If inflation continues at between 5 per cent and 7 per cent, what will happen to capital and the ability to create jobs? The plant manager who budgets to save $100,000 in ten years, and utilizes his borrowing capacity to borrow $1 million in order to build a new wing for his plant and create 200 additional jobs, will find in ten years that the buying power of his savings will have shrunk to the buying power of today's $40,000 and he will not be able to do as he planned. If he waits another ten years, the buying power of his savings will be even more depleted.

The man with a fixed income has savings perhaps of between $25,000 and $50,000. He is a small capitalist. In ten years, with today's rate of inflation prevailing, the buying power of his capital will be cut in half. If a large capitalist has, say, $10 million, the amount required to create a large plant and create 500 jobs, he will find he cannot. In todays international market one must rationalize or specialize. To build a plant of half the size won't do. It would not be able to compete. Eventually, only the state will have the necessary funds and the capacity to own and operate big business. We will then have arrived at a state of complete socialism.

• (1720)

Just think where we are heading. We are heading for the situation which exists in the communist-socialist nations. In Yugoslavia and even Bulgaria a man can own his own home, a plot of land, the tools with which to work it, and a small business. The government, of course, owns and operates all big business. The government will allow an outsider to bring in $5 million and invest it and split the profit. He can take away 50 per cent of it.

Are we not, through inflation and our own greed, rapidly reaching the same place? This is the biggest threat in Canada today. With the drop in money value, millions are unable to live on their incomes, many more are unable to save for an emergency. More still will year by year see their savings depleted; they will be forced into a near-poverty position in circumstances which require government aid. This, in turn, will increase taxation generally and require yet more money from the private sector, making development even more difficult. No matter how well-meaning the government might be, it can never keep up.

If we set out to ensure that every person in Canada received the same proportionate increase in income as the big, powerful unions can enforce, inflation would be far above 10 per cent a year. Inflation is a real threat to our society and, since it causes greater individual economic isolation and greater imbalance as between one area and another, it is a threat to the nation itself. I suggest:

1. That all strikes be made illegal and an offence unless approved by the public as represented by a group of about 40 citizens impartially chosen from the province in question. They would act as a jury now acts to determine rights in both civil and criminal disputes, and as the United Nations seeks to act when two nations are in dispute.

2. That all wages increases above a set amount, perhaps 2 per cent, be illegal and an offence unless approved by a similar jury.

3. That Parliament give a clear direction that unions must assume full responsibility for their actions, as all other persons and organizations in society must do, many of them with less power and less capacity to affect adversely the public interest, by according them the capacity of suing and being sued and making them financially responsible for all damage caused by illegal acts, not only to the employer but to the public.

4. That all unreasonable price increases—and this would have to be established after labour had become a fixed expense—be subject to turnback and penalty or a special tax. I am aware that if wages and salaries are controlled, we cannot leave a slack which somebody else might take up. Prices would have to be legally controlled as well.

Canada is now somewhat alone in the world with respect to trade patterns. All our governments are totally committed to promoting international trade by searching out new markets and urging greater productivity in order to lower production costs. We are in competition with nations such as Japan, whose people are united by group spirit which makes them a tightly-knit family devoted to production at a price acceptable in the international market.

We simply cannot afford the industrial conflict and the inflation which it produces to disadvantage us in world markets. To organized labour I say: I am not speaking against you. I am speaking, I believe, for the vast majority of you, for your wives, for unorganized labour and for all who must live on fixed incomes and who wish to see our economy on a sound, fair and healthy basis and moving forward for the good of us all.

Some will say that the restrictions I propose should be applied to those in essential public service only, at least at first. I find this point of view difficult to accept. Although the two air strikes have harmed the businesses of many people and denied employment to others, with resulting hardship, particularly in Mississauga in my constituency, I am sure that a strike by International Nickel at Sudbury or General Motors in Oshawa would harm just about as many just about as much.

George Meany, who heads the AFL-CIO, said recently that strikes no longer made sense and should be done away with because they are causing increasing chaos and hardship to more and more people, and that strikes by people earning $7,000 a year or more no longer made sense. To them the strike is a double-edged sword. It is good to hear responsible labour speaking out in this way. I expect Mr. Meany's research department turned up the fact that though a member of a union might gain $1,000 a year, much, if not all of this advantage, was cancelled out if one took into account the other side of the ledger—the wages lost while on strike and the increased costs incurred for various products because of other strikes.

Mr. Donald MacDonald, president of the Canadian Labour Congress, when speaking to the Empire Club in Toronto in November, 1968, about stoppages, strikes and lockouts, said:

> This is a price which we have to pay for preservation of the democratic process of collective bargaining and it is a price we are going to have to continue to pay unless and until somebody evolves a better method of settling disputes.

To Mr. MacDonald and members of the NDP I say: Would you be so committed to the use of force if unions were legally responsible for the results of their actions? Mr. Meany suggested binding arbitration. Is my suggestion so different? Workers demanding increases would go before a group of citizens not knowing whether they would be allowed as much as had been offered, or less. In most cases they would settle, knowing they would be dealt with by authority other than straight force.

Some will say it cannot be done, but if our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) can meet with Mr. Kosygin, and if Mr. Nixon can meet with the leaders of China and thaw the ice at least, surely our labour leaders can meet with government and representatives of industry and work out a formula that would be worth a trial. If we were to succeed, we would make our nation the healthiest industrial nation in the world and the change would be for the benefit of all Canadians. If Canadian organized labour does not agree with my suggestion, I hope it will at least look seriously at the advice of Mr. George Meany and resolve to try to find a way of settling disputes which is more civilized, more just than the continued use of the strike and one which will not harm so many innocent people.

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, we are told in the Speech from the Throne that it is the intention of the government that many areas of Canada be preserved in their natural state for the enjoyment of this generation and generations to come. Some of the grandeur as well as the wilderness of Canada's north will be guaranteed perpetual preservation through the creation of three large national parks north of the sixtieth parallel. The speech states further that these three parks, plus the seven new parks created since 1968, mean that for the first time in our history every province and territory will include within it a national park for the benefit of our people.

These are worthy ambitions and accomplishments. However, I wish to take issue with the government; they have shown lack of foresight and indifference to park development in my constituency, where an ideal opportunity exists for them to demonstrate to our people the sincerity of their policy to provide recreation areas where people can enjoy them.

• (1730)

The federal government is the sole owner of 17,500 acres in Grey county known as the Meaford tank range which has been declared surplus, and no area could be more ideal than this for park development. The Department of National Defence took over the tank range property on July 24, 1942. The farmers living there were required to vacate over 100 farms. Four schools and two churches were closed. There were 258 acres of apple orchards embracing over 8,000 trees, along with a sizeable peach orchard on Mountain Lake, which were sacrificed.

These people were reluctant to leave their homes. Many of the families and their ancestors had lived there for over 100 years. Furthermore, the price they were forced to take for their property was insufficient to establish a similar operation in another area. There was no consideration given to sentimental values. These people showed considerable loyalty, viewing their sacrifice as essential to the war effort. The area at large suffered a severe loss in the closing off of such a productive farm area.

To this day there is evidence of much sentiment in respect of this property. I have received many letters from people inquiring how they might go about getting their property or that of their ancestors back into family hands. Through this correspondence it was brought to my attention that there was a family graveyard in the range. Burials took place there from 1851 to 1937. The fishing operations from Vail's Point were the means of livelihood for several families. Mountain Lake was a popular place for sport fishing and family picnics. This lake and surroundings is one of the most beautiful areas in Ontario.

The Meaford tank range consists of 17,500 acres. Of this, some 15,000 acres are within impact or danger areas of former artillery tank and anti-tank ranges. Apart from impact areas, there are parts of the range which are known to contain unexploded munitions which strayed from normal trajectory because the shell hit the ground and the ricochet altered the intended impact area. It is difficult to determine how many acres could have spent ricochet rounds on them; it might well be some 1,000 acres. This leaves approximately 1,000 acres which were used for field exercises during which blank ammunition and certain types of training grenades were used. It also includes the roads and building sites. The area used for field exercises is relatively clear. The areas which are being used and are comparatively safe are the beach at Vail's Point, the boat launching area at Mountain Lake and the immediate vicinity of the administrative camp area.

The Georgian Bay shoreline within the confines of the range is approximately 12 miles in length. There are approximately 28 miles of roads suitable for travel by automobile. Ten thousand acres of the range are wooded. Mountain Lake is approximately 1½ miles long and 350 yards wide. The perimeter of the range is 25 miles. In seeking information I put this question on the order paper:

> Does the Department of National Defence have trained personnel qualified to decontaminate the tank range target areas?

The answer was yes. But, as usual, an effort was made to sidetrack the issue by the following statement:

> However, the number is small and there would not be enough qualified personnel to deal with a range decontamination project of such magnitude as Meaford.

In my opinion these are the men who should be doing the visual clean-up while sufficient numbers are being trained to do a complete job. In answer to a question in respect to the water system and the buildings, it was stated these were maintained until September, 1970, but that since that time they have not been maintained. I was informed it would require approximately 10 miles of fence at a cost of $42,000 per mile, to enclose the area contaminated so that the part of the range remaining could be certified safe. Fencing the range, in my view, would be a waste of money unless there were a few acres of known concentrated contamination in need of precautionary measures until an over-all clean-up was completed.

I will not take the time here to list all the questions I asked and their answers because some of them have been made public. However, I do want to say that from March 17, 1970, about the time it was rumoured the range would be closed, until October 15, 1971, I asked 20 questions in the House of Commons in respect of the range and converting it to a national park, and since November 4, 1971, I have had 19 questions answered on the order paper.

The government did work up some concern and agreed to meet a deputation from the Grey county council here in Ottawa at an office of the defence department. The deputation received a briefing in respect of the contamination of the range and it was evident the department was trying to dodge the issue. However, they did agree to give consideration to suggestions the Grey county representatives might care to make at a future date. It really amounted to a polite brush-off.

The promotion of a park in Grey or Bruce county has been one of my ambitions ever since I entered politics. In fact, on one occasion, after making an appeal to the Pearson government for park development in the Bruce peninsula, a cabinet minister told me: "If the provincial government would make a suitable area available, the government would develop a national park".

We now find ourselves with an area made to order and owned by the federal government. It is apparent from the many representations that have been made in the press, on the radio and by mail to me and to the government that the development of the range into a national park would bring the most benefit to the greatest number of people since the southern Georgian Bay area has been designated as ideal for recreation and tourism.

We are continually made aware of the thousands who visit our established parks, not only Canadians but many from abroad. A park in Grey county would be of easy access to millions of people in southwestern Ontario and the neighbouring states in the United States. It would bring in enough revenue to normalize the economy of the area, which is suffering under present conditions.

As early as July, 1970, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development stated that "its national and historics parks branch considers that the tank range property is related closely to the Georgian Bay Islands national park complex and has a number of desirable features in terms of park use". There is very little shoreline on any lake or waterfront in southern Ontario that is not lined with cottages, and a national park on the range would preserve a few miles of shoreline in its natural beauty. Vail's Point could be developed into an ideal boating and yacht basin, a much needed accommodation in Georgian Bay in these days when more and more yachts ply our waters.

Mountain Lake has a good stock of fish. The 10,000 acres of woods provide good cover and refuge for the deer population and, under present conditions, is a game sanctuary. Excess deer population migrates to other areas where hunting is permitted. It is also a bird sanctuary where birds are not exposed to the many chemicals used so freely these days and which may be responsible for the scarcity of some species, notably the bluebird. It could be a bird watcher's paradise.

There are good ski slopes which the army used for training their ski troops. The existing buildings and the water system would all fit into the scheme of a national park. Visitors could arrive at the park by plane because the flying field and runway are in fairly good shape and could be improved. The range has the potential for a first-class national park and it is conveniently available to the area of southwestern Ontario where we have the highest concentrated population in Canada. These are the taxpayers who are making much of the new development possible.

• (1740)

We have been told the range is highly contaminated and dangerous, yet deer hunting has been carried on annually for many years, not only by the militia but by civilians as well, and they have travelled over much of the area. Many people have trespassed on the range, several as recently as the hunting season last fall. The militia and their friends have fished on Mountain Lake for many years. Snowmobilers have travelled over miles of the range.

Children have trespassed on the range. In answer to a question on the order paper I was told that two boys trespassing on the range in 1951, found a thunderflash and took it home. They removed the powder from the thunderflash and put a match to it. Both boys were severely burned when the powder exploded. This is the only recorded accident after 25 years of excessive trespassing. Happily, both boys recovered. The time will surely come when the people of the country will demand a clean-up at the range and some government is going to see that the job is done.

Does this government think that the people of the day are going to reconcile themselves to living with the fact that the largest part of the range will be left with its contamination for five generations or more? According to the opinion of the defence department, this period of time will necessarily have to expire before any degree of safety can be assured. Or, Mr. Speaker, are we going to insist the whole area be cleaned up in the same way we are eradicating pollution from the rest of our environment? The range was contaminated by the militia during the training of troops who were required to preserve freedom for Canada. This was a worth-while and necessary function. Now, after declaring it of no further use militarily, the government should have no hesitation in cleaning it up and returning it to the civilian population.

The information on file in the defence department indicates that the locations of 684 unexploded shells are known and the locations of 90 unexploded shells are not known. Furthermore, many of the shells are confined to the Sucker creek gully and the Hogshead at the west end of Mountain Lake. I was privileged to travel to all parts of the range which were accessible by automobile, in the company of an army officer. During the tour he pointed out many shells in the target area lying on the ground and some partly buried. It was my understanding that when a shell or other explosive was fired but failed to explode, its location was marked on a map.

I maintain the task of cleaning up the range can be accomplished, and for much less than the $150 million the government has estimated. This is a convenient figure used to discourage or delay any action on a clean-up program. This observation was confirmed by officers who spent many years in the militia. The Department of National Defence has personnel who are experts at locating and disposing of unexploded munitions, and the flimsy excuse they use in answering my question on the matter cannot be justified. If more men are needed, it is only a matter of selecting men to take the necessary training.

It is certainly a fact that it will be a dangerous job, but personnel of our militia are trained to protect our people in any emergency or existing national danger. The tank range contamination is no exception. The problem was created by the militia, and it is their responsibility to clean it up. At this point, I would like to quote from the Armed Forces Review, Ottawa Report on the White Paper on Defence:

On the problem of getting the public to support a bigger defence budget the cabinet apparently senses that the public, in general, is apathetic about its armed forces and in order to justify an increased budget, the paper is trying to find something for the armed forces to do that is obviously peaceful and constructive.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the decontamination of the tank range surely qualifies as a peaceful and constructive project. In fact, it would be a challenge to the armed forces if they were given an opportunity to make it a reality. The government needs to display a little intestinal fortitude and get on with the job. In Grey county and surrounding counties there is practically unanimous agreement that the danger to humans on the tank range should be removed at the earliest possible date and action taken toward park development before the facilities there deteriorate any further. A Conservative government will not hesitate to enact the necessary measures to restore this beautiful area to the civilian population to whom it belongs.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Forest (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Bruce and Trois-Rivières (Mr. Whicher and Mr. Lajoie).

The first, with his customary dynamism and eloquence, recalled the major achievements of the federal government, particularly in the field of social security, and mainly through fiscal relief, of the increase of old-age security pensions by the guaranteed income supplement, of the increase in pensions and allowances paid to veterans, etc. and our colleague, the new hon. member for Trois-Rivières, also made a very outstanding maiden speech, which is to his credit.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne dealt with the main issues of concern and interest to all Canadians at this time, such as the economy, industrial development, unemployment, exports, housing, agriculture, penal reforms, family income security, labour, the status of women within Canadian society, etc.

In order to cope with economic problems and support the expansion which has been making itself felt for some time already, to keep our competitive position on world markets, closer co-operation between government and the business and industrial sectors is envisaged.

In my opinion, such co-operation is essential and is auspicious as the private sector will always supply most of the jobs and investments required for continued growth likely to give adequate impetus to all activities essential to the welfare and security of Canadians.

In a world where increasingly broader coalitions are being formed, often excluding us or at least placing us in an unfavourable position, and with a necessarily limited domestic market, we must absolutely aim for efficiency by putting science and technology to full use in order to assist such firms as are not afraid of innovating.

That task is one of the greatest challenges now facing Canada. That is what is called industrial strategy to be designed in keeping with characteristics peculiar to the Canadian economy and which will soon be announced, as the Hon. Minister of Commerce, Trade and Industry (Mr. Pepin) stated here yesterday.

[Mr. Noble.]

Fortunately, Canada has numerous resources, the development of which surely spells progress; still, only orderly development, coupled with co-operation by private enterprise can ensure the evolution of our economy toward standards that better suit the needs of the future.

In the last few years, we have expected too much from our economy and we must avoid burdening it with expenditures that are unreasonable or rules that are too rigid in a country that is so vulnerable to foreign competition. Still, the co-operation must come not solely from the government but also from the representatives of industry and unions who must agree to avoid the turmoil of strikes which finally help no one and harm the Canadian people as a whole.

Forming industrial committees or councils in the various industries, groups composed of reputed experts from the three sectors who would study the various problems ahead of time, who would make recommendations on production, prices, wages, etc, strikes me as an excellent idea for we should all realize that an efficient formula must be found, before long; otherwise, we will eventually have to resign ourselves to controls—not voluntary at that—over prices, incomes, wages, with all the consequences that would entail, especially with regard to growth, investments and initiatives.

Thanks to intelligent planning, to our work and sacrifices, to discipline and common sense, through wiser use of our resources and co-operation, by remaining united instead of divided, we will surely give Canada the future it deserves, though there are now only twenty-odd million of us who live side by side with the greatest economic power in the world endowed with a domestic market of over 200 million people.

Mr. Speaker, to replace the now outdated and somewhat discredited Combines Investigation Act, the Speech from the Throne did announce the introduction of a newly revised and improved Competition Act along the lines of a bill which passed first reading during the session which ended a few days ago. This is to get to know the views of all those concerned in accordance with the participatory policy of this government—and indeed many representations have been and still are being received.

• (1750)

The purpose of this new legislation will be to protect consumers against truly harmful commercial practices without, however, inhibiting business operations, considering that agreements between individual companies are often useful and may even become a necessity.

Serious reservations have been made with respect to the proposed legislation, especially in connection with the duties and powers of the court which is contemplated and with the suggested procedure. The forthcoming consultations, as well as the consideration and discussion in this House and before the committee, should enable us to pass this legislation so vital in a field which is so important to the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker, a few months ago all the free countries of the world were faced with an economic crisis which for several of them was followed by radical changes but due to the foresight and shrewdness of this government our country has gone through this difficult period with far fewer problems than most other industrialized nations. And according to the latest forecasts by international economic experts from the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, the prospects in Canada for 1972 are excellent. An increase in the actual Gross National Product is expected, and it is believed that our country—and that without any mandatory control—has maintained the lowest rate of inflation among all member countries of that international organization.

Since we now have the highest ratio of labour as compared to the population, and in view of the ever rising participation rate mainly as a result of greater and greater numbers of women entering the labour market, the rate of unemployment has reached an alarming level despite increased economic activity. That will remain the constant concern of the government, as is mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. It must be noted however that more Canadians than ever before are working and that over 200,000 jobs were created during the year.

Besides, the most recent figures released a few days ago show that 25,000 jobs have been created in January 1972, and that over the past four months only the number of jobs has increased at an annual rate of 5 per cent, which represents an unprecedented rate of increase for this time of the year.

The various machineries introduced by this government ought to further decrease the rate of unemployment, when the effects of the subsidies of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, in aid to industry, make themselves increasingly felt and also when thousands of jobs are provided this winter through the excellent Local Initiatives program.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that this new program is greatly successful everywhere. In my riding, especially, the people have welcomed enthusiastically the possibility to submit projects of their own corresponding to local needs, which meets requirements that had been felt for a long time in the various communities.

Over half a million dollars have been allotted to date for the different jobs and I congratulate the officials of the Manpower and Immigration Department who have approved valuable and constructive projects. I also congratulate the various Manpower Centres that have greatly helped in preparing and putting into effect various projects.

The "Opportunities for Youth" program was also greatly appreciated last year. Thanks to the experience which was gained, this program will surely be improved and, considering the additional credits available for student employment next summer, thousands of them will be able to find jobs and the help they need to continue their studies.

Mr. Speaker, before going on to another subject, I would like to call it six o'clock.

[English]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

NATIONAL DEFENCE

WHITE PAPER, "DEFENCE IN 70S"—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), that the white paper entitled—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should ask the chamber if there is unanimous consent for the minister to move a motion. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that the white paper entitled "Defence in 70s", tabled on December 7, 1971, be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Honey): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair. The House will resume proceedings at eight p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ross Whicher for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session and the amendment thereto of Mr. Alexander (p. 212).

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, just before recess, I had time to speak briefly of various matters mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, such as our economy, future legislation on competition, the unemployment rate and the excellent results of the Local Initiative Programme in my constituency.

During the recent recess of Parliament, I met several small businessmen who informed me that assistance to existing industries was inadequate, that it is quite difficult to get a loan from the Industrial Development Bank or chartered banks under the Small Businesses Loans Act and that an agency should be set up to assist them in obtaining loans in special circumstances at more than reasonable rates, in order that they may overcome certain problems, finance profitable projects etc. I believe that suggestion deserves consideration by this government as additional assistance to industry.

However, the textile industry remains the main employer in my constituency, as in many other communities in Quebec and Ontario, and I have always taken an interest in this matter, like most of the hon. members concerned.

• (2010)

The textile industry is an extensive Canadian endeavour which provides 95,000 jobs in the primary sector, and more than 100,000 in the secondary sector. Fortunately, the government has realized that that industry, which had made constant efforts and large investments to improve its equipment and its techniques, and which can favourably compare with similar industries in other countries, except low-cost countries, needed a new orientation, and it implemented in May, 1970 a national textile policy which has so far had beneficial effects; some imports have decreased or are under greater control.

That industry needs a large labour force, and it is essential that it be protected, for I cannot fathom how it could be replaced, and its production and employment potential remains great.

Thanks to the efforts of the government and the industry the situation improved in 1971 as compared with 1970 and in the primary textile industry, for instance, employment increased by 3,725 between May 1970 and September 1971.

Forecasts for 1972 are optimistic provided consumption stays at its present level and the economic climate keeps improving. This is the opinion stated last month by the Canadian Textile Institute which admitted that the government's policy had encouraged industry, restored its confidence and stimulated investment. But improvements are still required since industry accounts for slightly more than half the total market of textile products and, per capita, we are importing much more than the United States, Great Britain and the European Community and this is an abnormal situation.

Lately, I was surprised to find that our trade balance with Japan was more or less on a par and even unfavourable this year, a situation which I think uncceptable while we are exporting almost exclusively raw materials required by that country and importing manufactured products such as textiles, electronic components, etc. which we could mostly produce here.

But there are other countries. I found yesterday while studying the latest statistics published by the Montreal Gazette that with Hong Kong and Taiwan our situation is even worse and, in one case, it was mentioned that last year we had been importing for over $80 million while exporting a bare $12 million. As other countries, it is high time that we take positive and efficient steps to protect our interests by setting in advance an acceptable level of importation and that we have an overall control policy regulating our imports from low-cost countries instead of relying on individual countries' action, a system which never worked.

Finally, our textile products policy should be announced in advance and for a rather long period of time so that this industry may plan its projects and investments.

[Mr. Forest.]

Mr. Speaker, agriculture also involves a good many people in my riding, especially the dairy industry, and the dairy products price support plan has had beneficial effects and has brought about increased stability in our dairy farms. The producers I had the pleasure to meet recently seemed satisfied with recent improvements. The higher grants and larger quotas, the ordely marketing, the co-operation between producers, are all factors which helped increase the returns from industrial milk production. The average income which was $4.64 per hundredweight in 1967 is now up to $5.40; all the surplus milk that glutted the dairy market has now disappeared and the average production has greatly increased.

There still remains the problem concerning feed grain and its prices. This is a complex problem as I have seen it after meeting with representatives from the Catholic Farmers Union, etc.

The right hon. Prime Minister (M. Trudeau) in a speech he delivered to the Federated Co-operative in Montreal last February 2nd discussed the subject at length. He suggested possible solutions and I hope the equalization formula that was put forward will finally prevail.

The small farm development program announced in December will give the small farmers who want to remain as such the opportunity of building up profitable operations. The federal policy favours the family unit which is the best form of farming.

The national marketing Act will allow producers in several branches of agriculture, if they so desire, to work together and plan and organize the marketing of their products.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne announced that the government pledges participation in legal aid. I trust steps will be taken to ensure that the provinces can extend the legal assistance that is already available, although almost exclusively in the larger centres and to a limited number of citizens, precisely because of limited means.

Mr. Speaker, although no mention is made of it in the Speech from the Throne, I expect the government will soon introduce a new bill concerning bankruptcies and insolvency, so that a more coherent and complete system can be set up that is better suited to the needs of our times. The Bankruptcy Act was last amended in 1966; since then, improvements were made in the managing of bankruptcies, but too many of them are still questionable or insufficiently controlled.

A study committee under the chairmanship of Mr. Roger Tassé tabled a report several months ago and made quite relevant suggestions. To my mind, the matter of introducing a new bill is pressing so that it can be studied and discussed as soon as possible by all interested parties.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne announced several other interesting proposals which I shall not have time to discuss this evening. I am referring to the continued development of our national resources and the Canadian north, the promotion of more imports although these have already reached a record level, especially thanks to the participation, work and comptence of the Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce and his officials, which have earned him the admiration and respect of all Canadian industrialists.

The Speech from the Throne announces an elaborate, ambitous, exacting program which at times calls for long term solutions; still, they are appropriate under the circumstances, they meet the present needs of the country and its citizens and this program, Mr. Speaker, will get the support of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding my comments I would like to deal with a major problem affecting the constituencies of Brome-Missisquoi and Saint-Jean, that is the spring floods along the Richelieu River which especially those last years have caused considerable damage to the riverside residents and to all farmers whose lands are bordering the river and its tributaries in an area particularly suitable to farming. They have caused millions of dollars of damage and I realize that it is a complex problem as it concerns mostly the provincial government and the federal government to some extent and on account of the effect of these floods on the level of Lake Champlain the American authorities. I hope that the steps taken by my hon. colleague from Saint-Jean (Mr. Smith) and myself in co-operation with all the private agencies of the area will prompt the authorities to settle that problem as soon as possible.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like at the outset to congratulate the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), the mover of the Address in reply, and the seconder, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie).

As usual, the hon. member for Bruce has made a rather remarkable speech. As for the hon. member for Trois-Rivières, he has shown in a brillant fashion that he is deeply interested in his constituents.

With many others I recognize that the Speech from the Throne has set some great objectives.

• (2020)

There is talk of increasing the national wealth through the development of a global industrial strategy and a more judicious use of science and technology, of asserting Canadian identity and protecting the environment, of developing and improving the quality of life for Canadians through better social laws and an improved legal system.

Such are the great objectives which this government has proposed to the Canadian peolein the Speech from the Throne.

I should like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to make a few remarks. I shall perhaps be severe occasionally but I should like to be most fair and pragmatic.

Considering the results for the past four years, surely I will not merely say that this government has not done anything. Surely, there have been efforts. We have and also certain difficulties, disappointments and achievements. Obviously, we cannot absolve this government so easily, considering that in 1968, this country had 300,000 unemployed and that today, this figure has swelled to 650,000.

On the other hand, I must admit that efforts have been made, at times in the field of textile products, at times in that of tax reform, which had long been needed. In agriculture some greatly appreciated changes took place and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has adopted a very sensible policy with regard to exports.

I have always been fascinated by the policy of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which, taking into account the subsidies paid to Quebec, my own province, has given special consideration to regional problems. There again, the Local Initiatives program is a good policy. Unfortunately, it is too much of a short-term one which nevertheless has resulted in the creation of some jobs.

One must not forget either Bill C-262 with regard to the $80 million provided to fight the American surtax, with success, I believe.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, we must admit that those measures were appropriate and that an effort has been made. Did the results prove adequate? Did those efforts restore in Canada that economic stability which all of us are longing for?

Of course, there are two types of major problems: economic and constitutional and I should like to deal with them briefly. Indeed, I am convinced no hon. member would condemn a policy of full employment. But it seems to me that none of us has found the magic solution that would all at once bring about a policy of full employment.

We all agree to such a policy just as much as we agreed to the setting up of a just society. Nevertheless, it seems to me that with a little objectivity and co-operation we could get closer to this just society.

As far as stabilizing the economy of Canada is concerned, I had the privilege from time to time to recommend to the government many meetings with businessmen. Tonight I read in a newspaper that more than 1,000 Canadian businessmen will convene in Ottawa in March and April to meet Canada's High Commissioners for Trade. These conferences will be preparatory to meetings with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, at which a solution to the slump in business will be considered.

It would certainly be important also to meet with the leaders of labour and employer organizations. I suggest that the government would have everything to gain by meeting these industrialists and businessmen more often than he has done to date. I have had the opportunity to ask that a summit conference be held on the subject and I do realize with great pleasure that efforts are made in that area.

It is obvious that no solution is forthcoming from this government. It is also obvious that opposition members or opposition parties have not found any solution either.

I believe the only way to create an appropriate economic climate would be to have the Canadian people participate in the decisions that must be made, by telling them about the difficulties the government is going through at the present time.

There is no shame in recognizing one's own inability to find a solution which has not yet been found. Should I ask the government to recognize their inability to bring forward such a solution, it might cause laughter among some hon. members, but I am sure that admitting one's own inability in finding the necessary solution in front of the Canadian people would be a proof of courage and honesty.

It seems to me we have reached the point where the government really needs the advice of experienced businessmen and I believe that the solution probably lies there. A better informed public would show much more understanding and I believe that members of any party in the House could be invited to cooperate with the government more than we have up to now, all for the common good.

We have been looking for all kinds of solutions; short term solutions were devised. I had the opportunity and the privilege to offer and suggest some measures to the government. Tonight, I should like to ask the government to pay more serious attention to old age security and to availability of benefits at the age of 60. I know that the Speech from the Throne mentions social security measures. However, no details were provided as to whether the government intends to introduce a bill allowing people 60 years old to go into well-deserved retirement and receive, of course, an income exceeding by far that which is granted today. Considering that 300,000 or 400,000 people are aged 60 to 65, such a measure would greatly decrease the rate of unemployment and, at the same time, bring closer at hand a favourable social climate, because it is the government's responsibility to grant holidays to those who deserve them and to provide jobs for those in the working age group.

I should also like to call the attention of the government to the withdrawal of the 11 per cent tax which has repeatedly been mentioned in the House. I believe that it is the responsibility of each member of this House to remind the government that this measure apparently concerns each sector of the building industry; therefore, the government should approach those sectors directly or indirectly associated with construction and, with their co-operation, try to provide a credit large enough to bring about an increase in the number of housing units in Canada, subject, of course, to certain conditions. I still believe that the removal of this 11 per cent tax would result in new housing starts.

Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to read carefully some of the proposals pertaining to recreation which the responsible minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), had in mind in connection with his future policy.

I noted today that the Minister of National Health and Welfare announced a $222,000 grant for four hockey programs in Canada which will be carried out during the winter. I think this is a timely grant and a very desirable policy. However, I would like to draw the attention of the Minister on the possibility of allocating certain monies to the construction of covered skating rinks or arenas in various municipalities in each province.

• (2030)

Having been active in sports circles for many years, I am sure several municipalities would be much interested in the building of skating rinks that would not necessarily be equipped with artificial ice as it is very costly. Nevertheless, I believe projects from $75,000 to $100,000 would be possible in thousands of Canadian municipalities.

The minister responsible for that should consider the possibility of establishing credit, 50 per cent of which would be provided by the federal government. It could be discussed with the provinces. They could assume 25 per cent of the expenditures and I am sure the municipalities would be willing to pay 25 per cent. I think such a policy would create employment. Materials would have to be used to a certain extent and the project would enable hundreds of thousands of young hockey players to practice their favourite sport and it would enable Canada to train young people and keep them busy playing hockey.

I again emphasize the need for filtering plants in municipalities anxious to fight pollution. Indeed, it will always be in order to consider the possibility of issuing credits for such purposes and I always believe it would be good policy.

I said a while ago that agricultural measures had been passed these last years. I am referring in particular to Bill C-176 which is an indispensable tool to ensure the marketing of farm products and which was, I believe, one of the most useful legislative measures passed in this House during the last four years.

I should like just the same, Mr. Speaker, to say that Bill C-176 is but a tool, that its value will depend upon what the people responsible for its implementation will do. If we consider our experience with the feed grain policy in force for many years, I believe that Bill C-176 will be just as important.

No doubt, the government will soon change this policy so that eastern producers can enjoy the same benefits as their western counterparts, if we really want to have fair competition.

Bill C-176 will not be very effective unless the feed grain policy is changed. I appeal here to all eastern members, who I think know the problems of farmers, and especially of producers without an income who have been faced with this problem for a number of years and who consider this policy as discriminating against the producers of one area of Canada.

I do not think that eastern members have ever hesitated to approve grants to assist western producers, and I think our duty as eastern members is to ask our colleagues from the West to support our demands for changes which will be equitable for all producers.

I would also like to bring to the attention of this House the necessity for the government to seriously consider creating the new department which I had requested. I have already asked a question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on this matter. He told me, without leaving me much hope, that a new minister of state attached to the Department of Agriculture would be appointed to represent eastern Canada.

In view of the complex problems of agriculture, I think it would be most advisable for eastern Canada to have a representative in the cabinet who would be in a position to discuss subventions. Moreover, if a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada was appointed, I think western Canada would also be entitled to have a minister of state who would be their official representative in the cabinet for agricultural problems.

In view of the existing complex problems, I think that all Canadian producers would welcome such an appointment.

I noticed in the Speech from the Throne that the government intended to introduce legislation regulating cigarette advertising. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the government will tackle to a greater extent the problem of educating the young or the public at large on the dangers of cigarettes, but I would expect above all that it will not limit itself to harassing the sectors directly related to tobacco. Having received many recommendations from my constituency and realizing that nearly all producers of cigarette tobacco in Quebec are in my riding, I often had the opportunity of talking with them. I know that the bill introduced last fall has caused them great concern, and I always wondered why the minister had not first taken the initiative of meeting the Canadian cigarette manufacturers. In my opinion, that question could have been resolved without alarming the whole sector involved in the production of cigarettes in this country. I dare say that an education program along those lines, similar to that on alcohol, should be desirable. An education program on cigarette tobacco could be launched.

Knowing full well that the special or designated areas will be reviewed on June 30, I shall take advantage of this opportunity, of course, to talk about my riding which has had the advantage and privilege of being recognized as a designated area. I should therefore ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) to pay special attention to conserving that designation; I would even dare ask a more special designation that might entail even more interesting advantages. The minister, who gave a favourable reply two years ago by recognizing a designated area in my riding, will surely not hesitate, considering the present economic situation which is as difficult as elsewhere in Canada, to consider the importance of the request I make on behalf of my electors.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make those few remarks. In the time I have left, I shall say a few words about a problem which may perhaps affect Quebec more particularly, that is, the constitutional reform. As a member from Quebec, it is my duty to fight for the interest of that province like all the other Quebec members who work here. I recognize that all the members of other provinces first have that responsibility; to my mind, we can perform our duties only by looking after the interests of our area, before and above all else, because in any event Canada benefits from it.

After four years, I must deplore the fact that not much progress has been made with regard to the constitutional reform. Must I point out, for the guidance of the members from the other provinces, that it would be enough to study once again the briefs presented at the federal-provincial conferences in the last ten years by the two political parties in power in Quebec, to know exactly what Quebec wants, and on what conditions Quebec can keep on hoping to live within the present system. I am thinking about the changes that have taken place in the last several years. Today, not only Quebec, but other provinces also, talk about decentralization of power and, in my view, Quebec has submitted some briefs that are weighty enough to show that it is imperative that such a policy of decentralization be introduced.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that, in fact, it is up to the Quebecers here in the House to establish such a policy. I must deplore the fact, however, that after four years it has not yet come about. I felt optimistic at one time, because of the large number of Quebec members on the government side and in the cabinet, and I believed that, because of this, an agreement could be reached between Quebec and the federal government.

• (2040)

I must now deplore that as far as telecommunications, social policies and family allowances are concerned, there has been and there are still some misgivings. I must also deplore the fact that the positions of the Quebec Minister of Health concerning family allowances have not been immediately endorsed.

Apparently other problems have arisen in connection with the policy recently announced by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) on the repurchase of small farms.

I have every reason to believe that the role of a Quebec member is to support Quebec's demands. I am aware of the co-operation that existed during the 1970 elections in Quebec between the federal and provincial Liberals. I must say that I am quite disappointed to note the lack of support given to those demands by the Bourassa government. I do not say that Quebec has not received grants. During the past four years, I think that Quebec has never received so many grants under various well conceived and justified policies for Quebec. But I think that is not enough because it will take more than short-term grants to please Quebec.

It is also important for a Quebec member in the House to inform hon. members from other provinces. I recall that in April 1970 I took the liberty of saying 15 days before the provincial elections that on account of the federal government's procrastination 20 per cent of Quebecers would probably vote for Quebec's secession. Many hon. members and newsmen were amused, but on the day following the April 29 elections they admitted that my forecast had not been that far off. Try as hard as we can to hide the two-nations problem and the principle of the particular status or the legislation that is of particular interest to Quebec, I feel it is a step backward to refuse to face this problem and discuss it in this House.

I am hopeful that the report on the constitution will be presented soon, according to the answer the Prime Minister gave me this week in reply to a question I asked him. Once this report is tabled, I hope we will succeed in bringing about a debate on constitutional reform. I know an election is near at hand. Perhaps it is not quite fair to speak of constitutional reform at this time, but I feel it is my duty to inform hon. members that it is imperative for the future of Canada to seriously consider Quebec's demands and for every Quebec member to inform his colleagues from other provinces instead of trying to make them feel that those who believe in the independence of Quebec are few in number.

The figures are there and I believe constitutional changes might really prove to Quebecers that their future is still in Canada. We would thus have done something positive. These remarks are being made in that spirit, in order first of all to invite hon. members from other provinces to realize the situation prevailing in Quebec.

I recognize that certain provinces require special legislation as we realize that differences exist between provinces. I feel that Quebec also must succeeed in having its differences accepted and if we seriously accept such recognition we will be contributing to building a better Canada.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to call upon the federal government's special co-operation for the James Bay development project which has been discussed for several days in the House. I trust that those who made comments did so in a positive manner.

The James Bay development project is specific to Quebec. It will benefit the country as a whole. The federal government should also offer its co-operation by way of services, grants and loans in order that the government of Quebec may actually find the amounts required to carry out this project in Canada.

Before closing, I should like to mention that the Speech from the Throne makes no mention of a reform which is essential in this Parliament. It has to do with limitation of debates. I know the government attempted to introduce such an improvements. Once more I appeal to objective hon. members, asking them to give serious consideration to "limitation", "scheduling" of debates. There is a tendency to plan everything today, and I believe we have omitted to program ourselves. It would be well that hon. members seriously consider limiting debates in order to give Parliament greater efficiency. I do not feel we can continue to speak of efficiency in view of the time we have wasted since I have been in the House.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, since my time seems to have expired, that my remarks will get particular attention from those who are responsible for the policy to be worked out to correct some shortcomings that we have in this country. I am confident that my appeal, both to hon. members from Quebec and from other provinces, with respect to economic and constitutional problems will receive special attention from everyone and lastly that the Parliament of Canada, through serious and effective programming, will succeed in getting back the confidence of Canadians, through serious work that will give them satisfaction for the benefit of our country, Canada.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I enter this debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne for the distinct purpose of once again making an earnest plea to the government and to this Parliament for a massive effort to improve the lot of our pensioners, indeed, of all our older and retired people.

Mr. Thompson: They have never had it so good, to quote the Liberal mover of the Throne Speech.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hear an interjection immediately that they have never had it so good—

Mr. Faulkner: From the Tories.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —and I am prepared to say, indeed I am prepared to assert, that it is a lot better to be an old person today than it was 25 years ago. But as a Liberal member said earlier today, that is not the point. The point is that we should be making of the later years of our existence what the poet Robert Browning had in mind when he said:

Grow old along with me!
[Mr. La Salle.]
The best is yet to be,
The last of life, for which the first was made.

I welcome as strongly and as warmly as I can all the things that are being done to meet the problems of our youth. I welcome the Opportunities for Youth program of last year and I am glad there is to be one this year. I think there are a great many things we must do to make life more hopeful, more promising, more exciting for the young people of this country. I should like to suggest that one of the ways that we can contribute to a better life for our younger people is to make it possible for many more of our older people to leave the labour market so there will be more jobs for those who are younger.

Let me make it clear that I am not asking just for an increase here or an increase there of a few dollars in one pension or another. I am not asking just for supplements on a means test or an income test basis. I am not asking just for pensions to be raised so people can maintain the level of existence they have had. I am asking for a massive effort to make old age one of the best and most exciting periods of life.

I suggest that one of the ways to do this, one which fits in with an acceptable, decent and civilized philosophy of life, is to accept the fact that there comes a time when people ought no longer to have to work to stay alive but, having made their contribution, they should have a sufficiently high guaranteed income to engage in pursuits that will make life interesting for them and that will contribute to the excitment and the interest of life as a whole. I am asking the members of this Parliament to get over the notion that when we talk about old age pensions all that is meant is welfare or supplements or sufficient dollars to keep body and soul together. I want us to talk about old age as a portion of life that should be made the best of all the years we are on this earth.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think the time has come for this Parliament to look at all the pension plans that come under our jurisdiction; indeed, to look at the whole question of pensions in our society and not be satisfied with just a piddling increase here or there. The time has come to review and upgrade all our pension plans, making them programs that will produce the kind of life that I have suggested for all those of older years.

I intend from this point on to be specific and to make suggestions that I think should be accepted regarding the various pension plans that come under the jurisdiction of this Parliament. I refer, first of all, to the Old Age Security Act. I still think that when that act was first passed and came into effect on January 1, 1952, it was one of the most advanced pieces of social legislation ever passed in this country. That act still is, in its basic elements, an advanced piece of social legislation, but some of its virtue has been lost by the introduction of an income test into part of the pension paid under it.

• (2050)

I think the time has come for the pension payable under that act to be raised to $150 a month across the board, without any means test or income test in it at all. I also urge that the escalation of the pension be re-established for everyone. At the present time the escalation applies only to those people who get a guaranteed income supplement on top of the $80. This means that those who get only the old age security pension have it fixed at the $80 level until Parliament decides otherwise.

I suggest that an escalation element should be restored to the entire pension and that it should not be an escalation limited to 2 per cent per year. When the cost of living is increasing by 4 per cent or 5 per cent per year, to raise the pension by only 2 per cent per year is to condemn the recipients of it to a losing battle. The least that should be done is that the pension should be increased each year by the full amount of the increase in the cost of living.

I go further than that. In these better years that I am talking about, our older people are entitled, not to only enough to keep up with the standard of living that they had when they went on pension, but to share in the increased standard of living. They are entitled to share in our increased gross national product. We should find an even better formula than the cost of living index for our pensions, bearing in mind that what we should be talking about is not pensions as a form of welfare, just so many dollars to keep a person's body and soul together until he dies, but we should be making that period of life one of the best in human existence.

Not only do I call for the old age security pension to be raised to $150 a month and for a proper and adequate escalation feature to be reinstated, but the time has come to write into the act a provision enabling anyone who meets the other qualification, namely, a certain length of residence in Canada, to draw the pension at age 60 provided he is prepared to leave the labour market or is out of the market, as is the case with many people, particularly spouses of pensioners.

This is a theme I shall repeat as I talk about some of the other pension programs that come under our jurisdiction. I have also heard it suggested tonight and during the course of this debate by others, in passing. I am making it the whole burden of my speech. The time has come, not just to retire a few people here and there so there can be a few jobs for 25-year olds, but to make a massive effort to make it possible for people age 60 or over to leave the labour market in order to pursue other things which would make life interesting for them and to create more jobs at the other end. It will not only create jobs for those of younger ages by virtue of the fact that if a person who is older leaves a job, somebody else can move into it. If one accepts the kind of program I am advocating, namely pensions that will enable all our people to live in decency and dignity in their retirement, it is going to cost something. In fact, I am surprised there has not been an interjection already asking from where the money is going to come.

If the kind of program I am advocating is put into effect, a lot more work will have to be done to produce the goods and services to enable the older people to live without working. It might even require the employment of about 650,000 people. I suggest that is something we need in Canada today, with that number now unemployed.

One of the ways to meet the objective stated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) this afternoon, namely, that he does not want to see even one person unemployed in Canada, would be to accept the kind of program that makes it possible for people aged 60 and older to leave the labour market. Work will have to be done to provide for their needs. In this way jobs will be created for those of working age.

I move on to the Canada Pension Plan. Here, too, there should be some major amendments. One of them is a change such as I have been suggesting for the Old Age Security Act, namely, making it possible for persons who leave the labour market to draw their full Canada Pension Plan benefit at age 60. We already have that principle in the Canada Pension Plan. One already receives it automatically at age 70, but anyone can get it at age 65 if he leaves the labour market.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suggest that principle be extended by permitting all those who leave the labour market at age 60 to draw their full Canada Pension Plan benefit at that time. I am trying to emphasize that with pensions of this kind, $150 a month old age security and full Canada Pension Plan benefit at age 60, there would be an inducement to many people in that age bracket to leave the labour market, let alone the fact it would solve the problem of those who are forced out of the labour market by today's economic conditions.

I also urge that the Canada Pension Plan be amended, as suggested by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, to make it possible for married women who are at home to draw benefits in their own right under the Canada Pension Plan. There are various ways this can be done. Payments can be made by them or for them. The principle is one that I think is right. I commend the Royal Commission on the Status of Women for having proposed it. This is something we should do at the earliest possible moment.

If we were to make just these two sets of amendments I have talked about, amendments to the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan, there would be enough pension money available at age 60 for thousands of our people, for thousands of married couples, to encourage them to retire. It would have a real effect on the employment situation as well as on the goods and services that would have to be produced. I suggest that on all counts it is an economic move that we would be foolish not to pursue without further delay.

In passing I should like to say a few words about one other pension plan that comes under our jurisdiction, one that we do not refer to very often. That is the pension for the blind. In the old days, the Old Age Security Act, the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act were dealt with concurrently. If the pension under one was increased, it was done under the others. We have altered all that. The Old Age Security Act is on a different basis and the Canada Assistance Plan has taken over from some of the others. In the process, the pension under the Blind Persons Act has stayed where it was, at a basic $75 a month. The least we can do for our blind people is provide them with the kind of pension I have talked about. Like the old age security pension, the blind pension ought to be $150 a month. I urge that there be such an amendment to the Blind Persons Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I come now to the Public Service Superannuation Act and the pensions we pay to retired federal civil servants. This general phrase can be taken to include retired Royal Canadian Mounted Police personnel, retired personnel of the Canadian armed forces and many other groups of people who come under various federal pension plans.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): And change the CNR pension.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am coming to that, and all the rest of them. If I miss any before I am through, the hon. member can let me know.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I am with you all the way.

An hon. Member: Except when it comes to a vote.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Then, too.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With regard to retired public servants, I am still proud and a bit excited over the tremendous move we made a couple of years ago when we provided for the pensions of retired civil servants to be escalated every year if the cost of living went up during the previous year. The result was that many of our retired public servants got a pretty good boost a year or so ago and they receive an increase every January. But that increase is tied to a 2 per cent ceiling. When the cost of living increases 4, 5 or 6 per cent in a year, and these people only get a 2 per cent increase in their pensions, they are fighting a losing battle.

• (2100)

I plead that the same thing be done for them that I have argued for in respect of old age security, namely, that the least we do is increase those pensions by an amount which reflects the full increase in the cost of living. But in my view that is not enough. I want these people not only to get enough to buy the same basket of goods and services, but also to be able to share in the rising standard of living that a new generation is able to produce because the older generation brought it to that point.

So I urge this kind of improvement in respect of the Public Service Superannuation Act and in the acts which govern the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Canadian armed forces and others. In passing I put in a word, as I do every couple of weeks, for the retired RCMP and armed forces personnel who are not yet 60 years of age but who are denied the increase they will get after age 60 because that was written into this special legislation a couple of years ago.

I have said several times that any argument the government had for this is gone. In the new arrangements made last year for public servants to retire at age 55 and some between 50 and 55, it was provided that they get the escalation in their pension then without having to wait until they are 60 years of age. Since this is now possible for public servants under 60 years of age, I think it is grossly unfair and is gross discrimination to deny this increase to RCMP and Canadian armed forces personnel who have not yet reached age 60.

There are quite a few other changes which need to be made in all these acts under our jurisdiction affecting employees of the federal government, but in the main the sort of thing that needs to be done is to provide for adequate escalation consonant with the increase in the cost of living and the increase in the standard of living.

May I also point out that there are changes having to do with the retirement age that could be made. The changes made last year were in part good in that at age 55 a public servant with 30 years' service can retire on the full pension he has to that point. I believe we should encourage the possibility of these people retiring, say, any time after age 50 on the full amount of whatever pension they have earned. Old age is not just a period of life when we come with a bit of charity or supplement to keep people alive; it is a period of life when we should be making the best of all our years on earth.

Now I come to something mentioned just a moment ago by my good friend across the way. He did not need to suggest it, for I have been speaking on this for 25 or 30 years. I refer to the pensions of CNR employees. Here, again, I want to express pleasure that at long last, about a year ago, one change was made and CNR pensioners who were then retired received an increase covering the years they had been retired. But there is one serious shortcoming in that. It was a one-shot proposition. Retired public servants get their 2 per cent increase every year as long as they live, but the CNR pensioners got it last year only. They do not get any further increase this year and there are no other increases in sight for them. I contend that this escalation of pensions of retired CNR employees should be put on an annual basis at least the same as is done in connection with retired public servants.

But, again, although I ask for these things and use the words at least, I am not satisfied with a 2 per cent ceiling, or an increase related only to the cost of living; but it would be a start to get that much. A year ago the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) said that anything further would have to be negotiated, but it seems to me the chances of that happening are not very bright and what is needed is for this government to make to Canadian National Railways the same kind of representation it made over the years for an initial escalation, only now the representation should be for an annual escalation in CNR pensions.

There should also be a complete review of the formula under which CNR pensions are calculated. I put it in the simplest terms. The employees are asking that their pensions be based on a 2 per cent factor, that is, that their pensions be calculated on the basis of 2 per cent for each year of service. That is the story with the public service; that is the story with many good pension plans. Our own is even better but I shall not talk about it tonight, for my views about our own plan are on the record. I believe that Canadian National Railways being a government-owned company, it is one which ought to pay some attention to views like this when they are expressed in Parliament. It is also an organization which ought to be told by the government what it should be doing in this field.

Let us not stop with making representations to Canadian National Railways. The Canadian Pacific Railway needs to have some pretty strong things said to it. At long last, after something had been done for retired public servants, for retired RCMP personnel, for retired armed services personnel, for Canadian National employees and a lot of other people, the CPR came through with something. But I wonder how many members of this House have examined that "something" to find out how little it is. In particular, I cannot speak too strongly of how iniquitous I think it was for the CPR to say that any of its employees who retired prior to January 1, 1956, were to get no increase whatsoever. That is still the case today. Many, of course, have died since the change was made and many more will die before anything can be done.

However, I believe a pension increase of that sort, made somewhat comparable with what was done for retired public servants, somewhat comparable with what was done for CNR employees but which left out all the old-timers who retired before January 1, 1956, was something of which even the CPR with its thick hide ought to be terribly ashamed.

Mr. Speaker, I see my time is going on. However, there is another piece of legislation which comes under our jurisdiction which I think we should also look at very thoroughly. That is the Pension Benefits Standards Act. This is a fairly new piece of legislation and I am glad it is on our books. We have it federally and at least four provinces, perhaps more by now, have similar legislation. These various acts are statutes which determine the conditions pensions under federal or provincial jurisdiction must meet. We have laid down in the Pension Benefits Standards Act some pretty important requirements that pension plans which come under federal jurisdiction have to meet in order to get registration and in order to qualify for income tax deductibility. So we do have a fair control over the pension plans of the railways, the airlines, the banks, the steamship companies and the elevator companies. All these employers come under federal labour jurisdiction.

To the extent that the provinces in their legislation tend to match what we put into the Pension Benefits Standards Act, we are in a strong position to determine what private pension plans ought to provide. I think one of the things we should write into the Pension Benefits Standards Act is the requirement that every pension must have in it a provision for escalation.

I assert, Sir, that the day of a fixed pension is for the birds. The day is gone when any human being no matter whom he worked for should be asked to go out on a pension and stay at that level for the rest of his life. I think we should say to the companies whose pensions are registered under own legislation—and I think the provinces should say it to those employers who come under theirs—that a pension is not a pension and a plan is not approved unless there is a provision in it for pensions, once started, to be escalated at least according to the increase in the cost of living. But again I say that I think it should be according to the increase in the standard of living. That is something which we should be writing into our Pension Benefits Standards Act.

• (2110)

Maybe I am looking somewhat ahead, but another point which should be written into that legislation is early retirement, which I have tried to stress through all my remarks tonight. I think that just as I want written into the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan the provision that people can retire at 60 if they leave the labour market, so I think private pensions plans should have the same kind of provision in them. To me this is the point we have reached.

I came here in a day when we fought to improve pensions which were only $20 a month and we thought we had a victory when we got them increased to $25 or $30. In those days it was a case of keeping body and soul together. But times have changed. We are fast moving into an era where the work ethic is disappearing, an era in which people have rights because they are people, not because they have done a certain type of work. To carry out all that, I think we have the obligation, indeed the right, to fight for pensions across the board that include escalation after they are put in pay, and also for pension plans that include provisions for early retirement.

Before my time is finished I should like to say something about one other group of pensioners. I deliberately left them to the last because I think their case is particularly important. We control entirely, in the Parliament of Canada, the question of the pensions that we pay our veterans. I have had the privilege of being a member of the Veterans Affairs Committee, and last year we made certain improvements. I am pleased that they were made and I am glad to be able to say that many veterans are better off because of the changes that were made in the Pension Act and in certain other pieces of veterans legislation. But the fact that they are slightly better off is beside the point.

It is still urgent that the basic rates paid under the Pension Act—basic rates for disability pensions—should be increased, and it is also extremely urgent that the allowances that we pay under the War Veterans Allowance Act should be increased and that the means test provisions in that act should be greatly modified if not done away with altogether. I speak as one who believes strongly in the concept of the guaranteed annual income—not a means test supplement such as we get from the other side but a truly guaranteed income—that some day will be available to everybody. I believe it should start now for all our older people, and a particularly good place to start it would be with our veterans.

Just as I have suggested that old age security should be available at the age of 60 to those who are prepared to leave the labour market, I would do for veterans as we used to do in another context; I would lower that age for them. I would say that any veteran who has had war service—and he does not have to prove anything else—should, not later than at the age of 55, be able to get a sufficient pension to enable him to leave the labour market and to enjoy a little more of that exciting period in life that we call old age, because of the service that he gave to his country.

I make this plea both for veterans and for all our older people as strongly as I can. I am not standing up here asking for another 42 cents or for another $5 or $10. I am asking for a whole new approach, a new rationale, a new philosophy about old age. It must not be a time when we just keep people around until they are carried out to the cemetery; it is a time of life which should be made the very best.

It can be done, and I repeat that in doing it we will not only be making things better for our older people but we will be requiring a tremendous amount of work to be done to produce the necessary goods and services. Thus we shall be putting our younger people to work as well and helping to solve the pressing problem of mass unemployment.

Therefore, I commend to the government and to this House the suggestion I made at the beginning of my remarks, namely, that we launch a massive effort to make things really better for the older people of this country.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, with this Throne Speech we are nearing the end of the four-year period of the present administration. First, I should like to add my congratulations to the mover and seconder: they did quite a good job on such a poor document.

Now I would like to examine the four-year record of this government. After the long years of minority government, the people of Canada were perhaps expecting and hoping for a majority government even though they might not have necessarily agreed with the party in power. The electorate were led to expect a good deal from the just society, but the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was quite right when he said that the just society is only for the Grits. Now it does not seem to be for anyone, even for the Grits.

Let us look at what this administration has done for the country. I would like to agree with one thing that the hon. member who preceded me said in his speech with regard to the great consternation about freezing old age pensions at $80 a month. The old people, in the years when they were paying sales tax and income tax, were led to believe that a pension would be given them regardless of their station in life or their income. Now they find their pensions frozen and they are most unhappy about it.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was elected he was expected to unite the country, or so people thought. There was to be an official languages bill to unite the two main language groups in Canada. The languages bill was to avenge the French for the Plains of Abraham and do justice to the English. What has happened? Canada is more disunited than ever. Quebec is under strong pressure to declare that province unilingual in order to safeguard what the Quebec people believe is a continuation of their language and culture. A severe backlash is developing in the rest of the country against this bilingual policy and we may well experience a severe confrontation in which surely no one will win.

We are at loggerheads with the United States, our neighbour to the south. The Prime Minister declared in Russia that the United States was a cultural, economic and even military threat to Canada. On his return to Canada, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) went scurrying south to carry the message that Canadians loved their great neighbour and invited Americans to invest their dollars in Canada.

We know that for western Canadians the period this government has been in office has been one of alienation and many western Canadians in their multicultural society are having second throughts regarding the value of confederation. The new tax structure will have a particularly severe impact on western Canada, with its strong bias against the resource industry and against the individual entrepreneur. In many ways the attitude this government has adopted has meant a reversal of the days of the Northwest Fur Company, when the whole of the western lands were subservient to Montreal fur interests.

The period this government has been in office has been a trying time for the agricultural community in western Canada. Since 1968 we have witnessed a precipitous drop in the grains income of the whole of western Canada. The grains income in the years 1966-67 and 1967-68 amounted to $1,400 million and $1,300 million respectively. The year 1968-69 saw a drop in the income of the grain industry to around $850 million. Had any other community or any other segment of the Canadian economy experienced a one-third reduction in their gross income at a time of continually rising prices and rising costs of production, there would have been widespread outcry and disastrous results.

• (2120)

What did the government do? In the years 1968-69 the government sat supine while export markets all over the world were lost to Canadian grain. The survey of that year will show that we sold barely 150 million bushels of wheat, although the export figures would be slightly better due to shipping changes. It was a disastrous year for Canadian exports of wheat and barley. It can be said that there was an almost complete sales failure in the 1968-69 crop year. During the whole of the year the govenment did almost nothing to increase Canadian grain sales.

Through the Wheat Board, as the handling agent of western farmers, there was nothing that farmers as a group could do but exhort the government to use their influence to alleviate the situation. If anything, the 1968-69 crop year was a reminder that whatever the Wheat Board might be, it has to be an agency to sell grain. If, in the government's wisdom, farmers are to have an income supplement policy to increase their income, it is not to be done through the Wheat Board. The board's duty is to sell grain on the world market at a competitive price. The disastrous loss of sales in 1968 and 1969 are still being felt both in volume and in loss of income.

The following years have shown an increase in the movement of grain. But for the large failure of the American corn crop last year our marketing situation would have been much more serious. This year the grain industry seems to be running into further trouble. The warning of Mr. Vogel, head of the Wheat Board, that the world price of wheat has softened considerably brings no comfort to the western grain industry.

And what about the ill-fated stabilization bill, a bill that would have relieved the government, at least in the 1970s, of contributing any significant amount from the federal treasury to augment grain income? With the phasing-out of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, $50 million to $60 million that the western farmers had received each year in the previous 15 years had to be replaced with a formula whereby there would be little or no chance of payout in the decade of the seventies. As well, the farmer would have had to subsidize the fund to the extent of 2 per cent of his gross earnings, so that his levy alone would have been almost certain to carry any payout under the plan in this decade. Small wonder, then, that the stabilization plan found little favour with the opposition and the farmers.

Now we have a two-price system for grain. But it is not really a two-price system at all. It is merely a formula for calculating an amount of money to be taken out of the federal treasury and paid to the grain producers of Canada. Suffice it to say that a suitable stabilization plan for income supplement has not been produced by this government.

Then there is the passage of Bill C-176. This is a bill designed to implement supply management. The market sharing arrangements can result only in the decrease of quotas, with the productivity in the prairie provinces to be transferred to the central provinces on a purely political basis. It is a far reaching bill. It obviously will take the livestock industry, eggs, chickens, turkeys, pigs and cattle and abrogate the market and implement drastic changes in the producing and selling aspects of the industry. Like the dairy industry, Bill C-176 is designed to transfer the meat industry from western Canada into the more central areas. This can only cause a more marked reduction in the production of meat in western Canada and have the effect of further reducing the ability of the agricultural community to sustain its population in western Canada.

With this exercise in supply management we are heading into a period of rigid controls within the whole agricultural industry—a type of control that can only make for inefficiencies, that can only make for increased cost to the consumers without any real increase eventually in the price to the producers. The establishment of quotas means the reduction of the agricultural population at a faster rate and further alienation of the western agricultural industry. It means that we have virtually removed ourselves from the possibility of export markets for our meat products. Bill C-176 will eventually result in demands that manufactured products be prevented from free movement within Canada.

I should like to quote from the Manitoba Co-operator of February 17, which says this about Bill C-176:

> Surely this is a lesson that has been learned from the experience of the nations of the European Economic Community. Trying to dismantle the overbearing economic costs of agricultural production distortion is now the main preoccupation in Europe. And, at the same time the European farmer has not improved his individual lot one iota. He is economically depressed and unhappy. With the production potential of the United States adjacent to us on this North American continent there is even less hope of even limited temporary success in legislating parity to a deficient resource area.
>
> And certainly western Canada with her whole economic future tied up in the welfare of the primary industry of agriculture cannot concede on this issue.

To those who do not come from agricultural ridings I would suggest that Bill C-176 will have considerable effect in the years to come.

This government is now involved in the problem of how to deal with our enormous neighbour to the south. With the strong nationalist feeling demonstrated in the anti-Americanism of the Prime Minister and his succinct statement that he found the United States a cultural economic and political threat to Canada, he arraigned himself on the side of those who found great comfort in baiting the American eagle.

We witnessed the Prime Minister's Washington journey. He returned saying he had won a great victory over the Americans. What is happening now? On one day we have the Prime Minister telling the House of Commons about the tough line the government is taking with the Americans and that it will continue to be tough; then we have the external affairs minister (Mr. Sharp) in Winnipeg saying Canada is prepared to make unspecified concessions to the United States to prevent a serious rift between the two countries because of disagreement over the automobile agreement.

So our relations with the Americans are now in limbo, but it is costly for us. We really cannot afford a policy of "wait and see". Until last August financial relationships between Canada and the United States were more or less clearly defined. As long as there is definition, each party knows where the other is and businessmen can act accordingly—but uncertainty is now the order of the day.

There is the American DISC legislation, an act of the American government that will have serious effect on our industry, an act that really the so-called Canada-firsters, the Committee for an Independent Canada, should wish to be passed because it will mean the repatriation of production now undertaken in Canada to be carried out in the United States. These people are peculiarly quiet at this stage. DISC will be a financial inducement for an American to export to Canada what is now being produced in Canada.

What are we doing? At a time when we are increasing our tax on industry by means of the recent tax changes, the Americans are making a better climate for their industry. There are many areas that need to be defined in our relationships with the United States. Take the decision of the National Energy Board to change in midstream the rules and the guidelines under which the export of natural gas would be allowed. It smacks very much of influence by the government, on a purely political basis, to prevent the export of natural gas on terms that were previously agreed upon. There is a feeling that the Americans need our natural resources in ever increasing quantities and that either we should not sell to them or we should sell them at a price that is much greater than we are presently receiving.

In dealing with the matter of foreign control we have shown great inconsistency. We have been since 1969 awaiting the Gray report on foreign ownership. The delays have been endless and we are still waiting. The policy of the government is purely ad hoc. They improvised in the sale of Home Oil and they improvised in the deal with Denison Mines. All the actions of the government indicate complete confusion.

What about the Canada-United States auto pact? Its value may well have been overestimated. Our exports and imports would both be lower, but in a truer perspective if we disregarded the auto pact figures. The auto pact is primarily an arrangement among the parents and subsidiaries of United States automobile manufacturing companies, sanctioned by government. It seems likely that with the attitude of American unions that more manufacturing be done at home, with the decision on where autos are to be produced being made in Detroit, the auto pact could be reduced in value and may eventually become meaningless.

So this administration is powerless to negotiate with the American administration, the Nixon administration, an administration that views the Canadian government with a deep-seated suspicion of having a love affair with its enemies. It seems likely that we will again have to deal with the Nixon administration after the November election, a prospect which this administration must view with considerable horror. The Manitoba Co-operator carries an article, reprinted from the Globe and Mail, which in part reads:

• (2130)

We have been kept in the dark for the good of two governments, not for our own good. In Canada, at least, we are probably in real jeopardy until those two elections are over.

The author of that article is referring to our election and that of the United States. I should like to say a few words about the Official Languages Act, Mr. Speaker. This act has caused severe dislocation in our civil service and has not in any way helped to correct the situation for which it was designed. It has failed because of a peculiarity of human nature. The fact is that no one is bilingual; a person has a mother tongue and a working knowledge of a second language. The present official languages legislation has worked to bring about the almost complete exclusion of the merit principle in the civil service. I think it has caused disruption in the civil service and will cause increasing tension in the future.

The administration of the act is open to all manner of bias, favouritism and discrimination, real or imagined. Of course, so far as the individual affected is concerned, real or imagined grievances are equally bad. Our having decided to adopt an official languages policy really means that everyone in Canada must by definition be a Francophone or an Anglophone in order for people to fit into the official languages category.

Mr. Dupras: Come on, now.

Mr. Ritchie: This has not satisfied the province of Quebec and the French communities in that province are jealously protecting their language rights, rights which we all agree they ought to have. There is at present severe pressure on the provincial government of that province to declare French as the official language of the province. This necessarily means that English will become a secondary language, which indicates that the official languages policy in Ottawa has not, in the opinion of that province, met its needs.

Similarly, from the Anglophone point of view, the enunciation of the official languages policy has meant that effectively the unilingual Anglophone has been shut out of the decision-making process in the civil service as well as all the other bilingual areas. So the official languages legislation has not helped the unilingual Canadian, no matter whether he is Francophone or Anglophone, and has made our civil service a type of Janissary civil service based on some sort of ability to speak two languages, or the ability to convince someone that one can do so.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Ritchie: The official languages legislation can only harden the division of the country into two groups, Francophone and Anglophone. If we are to have two official languages in this country we will have to make provision in the civil service in order that a unilingual person, be Francophone or Anglophone, can enter the civil service and in his own language proceed through the civil service and go as far as his talents will carry him in his language, without ever having to learn a second language, at least in theory. This will necessitate both French and English language units in the civil service. The number of units in each group will be proportionate to the number of people in each language group in each province.

In no other area has this government created a stronger backlash, particularly in western Canada, than in the area of its official languages policy. It is an intellectual's solution to a very complex problem. There seems to be no way around it except on a numerical basis, setting up within the civil service Anglophone and Francophone language units which are to care for English and French speaking peoples in the two working languages of Canada. The official languages bill has done much to cause disunity in Canada and if the legislation is carried to the fullest extreme it will be a grave factor in bringing about the fragmentation of our Canadian nation.

Mr. Speaker, this government in its four years in office has shown complete indifference toward and lack of understanding of western Canada. Its record in agriculture is dismal. The new tax bill indicates that the government intends to tax the resources of western Canada and its development will be slow until some time in the future. The movement of Air Canada from Winnipeg to Montreal and the concentration of Canadian National Railways in Montreal are designed to further this subservience. The downgrading of the Port of Churchill, a port which would allow the western farmer access to a lever with which to combat the monopoly position of the port of Montreal, has been actively carried on by this government. This is a shortsighted policy because Churchill would not provide much competition to the great port of Montreal. This government's activities in handling our affairs are building for us a sort of nationalistic ghetto. In future we will pay a heavy price, both of an economic and a social nature, for the activities of the government.

Mr. Dupras: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member who has just sat down if he thinks his contribution will promote unity in general.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. (Mr. Cullen).

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, quite candidly, I did not intend participating in this Throne Speech debate because it was my good fortune two years ago to be selected by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to move the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I know how big an honour that is for a Member of Parliament, particularly for one newly elected as I was in 1968. For that reason, my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne are heartfelt.

I know the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). He comes from Ontario and I know that he spent 12 years in the Ontario Legislature. He established a distinguished record there before seeing fit to move into the federal field. The hon. member had a splendid record in the Ontario legislature. He has brought to this House his dedication and his ideas about the kind of Canada he wants to see.

Where did the hon. member for Bruce, who is English-speaking, who does not speak one word of French, who is a veteran, having spent five years overseas, spend part of his holidays? I understand he spent it in Rimouski, Quebec. He went there and tried his best to speak French, because he is convinced that the only way the English-speaking Canadian will understand the French-speaking Canadian, and vice versa, is by going into his living room and trying to communicate with him. If he cannot do it in English, he will do it in halting French or in sign language. He will even do it over a bottle of beer. Nevertheless, he will find a way to communicate with his Quebec colleagues. That is where the hon. member for Bruce spent part of his holiday, and I commend him for it.

He did not do it for political advantage; I doubt whether there is one French-speaking Canadian living in the constituency of Bruce. Nevertheless, the hon. member for Bruce went to Quebec and tried to communicate with French Canadians because he is trying to understand what they are saying to those of us who are English Canadians.

They have a lot to teach us, Mr. Speaker. They know how to live, they know about joie de vivre, a term we do not have in the English language. He wanted to learn about them, and when he spoke he must certainly have spoken as a Liberal because that is his political philosophy. Yet he also spoke as a Member of the Parliament of Canada. As I say, he went to Rimouski, I believe, to find out what the people there think about English Canadians and what French Canadians think about English Canada. He did his best to communicate with the people in that province.

My colleague who seconded the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie), is a brave man. I think of him, a married man, trying to establish himself in Ontario, largely an English-speaking province. He has eight children, yet he is prepared to offer himself as a Member of Parliament so that he may serve his country. I invite all hon. members to read his speech. His comments are humorous, yet one can see the dedication of this hon. member who has come here seeking to serve his country. That is why I have hope for Canada. In this country there are English-speaking Canadians and French-speaking Canadians, and here there is a French-speaking member who came to Ontario. And what did he say about his eight children? They are not French-speaking, they are bilingual. That is the kind of members we have in the House of Commons.

• (2140)

The calibre of the members of the House of Commons is, I think, second to none. It was my good fortune to speak to the former leader of the New Democratic party. I came here as a brand new member. After I had been here for two years I was sitting beside him in the economy section of the aircraft, which is where Members of Parliament travel, and he said our system brought the best, over-all, kind of Members of Parliament to the House of Commons, men who did not come to the House after building up a reputation, but who came here having everything to look forward to, having established their businesses, be it insurance, farming or the practice of law. He said these were men who could have rested on their laurels, but instead they chose to come here to represent the people.

He said that, member for member, this was the best House of Commons of which he had ever been a member, and he was speaking from the experience of 35 years in provincial and federal governments. So I am proud to be a member of this House and I hope it will be my good fortune to serve in the next Parliament.

I came down with two obligations, as I saw it. No man can be an expert in every field. So, like many members here, I saw fit to serve the veterans and the senior citizens. I think the people who deserve the highest praise are the Hong Kong veterans, because they have broken through one barrier. If a man was a Hong Kong veteran his widow will now get $200 a month pension. Hopefully, we shall raise this in the future. We have heard members on the other side and on this side say that prisoners of war generally speaking should be given something similar, and I am sure they will come before the Veterans Affairs Committee. We had a Veterans Affairs Committee of which I was proud to be a member, and I served briefly as chairman. It did not seek to be a partisan committee, but to serve the Canadian people as a whole.

These are all motherhood things. Let us move on to topics upon which we are not all agreed. Let us get into labour legislation. There has been a concerted and, I think, unfavourable attack on the Labour Code legislation. The situation is that we have decided—and I hope the new legislation will bear this out—that where a technological change of significance is introduced by companies which will have the effect of laying off a significant number of employees, then the collective bargaining agreement will be reopened.

I think this is good legislation. I say so for this reason. Put yourselves in the bargaining room. You have the company representatives on one side of the room and representatives of the workers on the other. The company lads are sitting there, and they know when they are bargaining that they will be introducing a technological change which will have the effect of laying off a significant number of employees, be it 200, 300, 500 or 50, depending on the size of the company. They know, when they are negotiating a pay raise, be it 10, 15 or 20 per cent, that they will not have to pay not only the increase; they will not even have to pay the salaries or the wages of the individuals, of 20 per cent of the people employed by their company. They are not in a position to say, "we are going to give you, in effect, the sleeves of our vests; we are going to give you a 15 per cent pay raise," because they know that in the course of the three years of the agreement 20 per cent of the labour force are not only going to receive the increase but are not going to receive any salary at all.

The fellows representing labour or the union do not know this. So if the company says "Gentlemen, this is something we should tell you; we are going to introduce a technological change which will have the effect of reducing our staff by a significant number," the boys on the other side will say, "We know what the score is and now we can bargain within the terms of reference explained to us."

But if the company fails to do that and says, say a year later, to its employees, "We have brought in a technological change. We do not need 200 of our employees and we shall have to lay them off," then I say it is right in law and it is certainly right in equity that the contract should be reopened so that the employees can go back and say, "Just a minute. We don't think it is right. This is a technological change we did not know anything about, and maybe we should renegotiate the contract we have."

I think this is good legislation. If the company tells the employees or the people bargaining for the employees that it intends to introduce a technological change, the contract will not be reopened. But if it is bargaining knowing that it intends to lay off a certain number of workers, and if it does not tell the people on the other side of the table beforehand, I think we are not playing the game according to the rules and the government has an obligation to step in and make a change. I support this legislation wholeheartedly and I am confident the government will not back away from its present position.

It was my good fortune to serve as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence. I went into that department wondering how a man who was in the Canadian forces during peacetime maintains his level of competence, and how he has pride, a certain professionalism which he should bring into the job. I was in that job only for about three months but I was convinced that the Canadian forces bring to their job a sense of pride, a sense of professionalism which was the precedent set during wartime by the Royal Canadian Navy, the Royal Canadian Air Force and the Canadian Army.

There is a sense of dedication and professionalism that these men during peacetime still bring to their particular jobs. I think more could be said about this, but unhappily it is not done in peacetime because people seem to think that if you cannot do anything else you can get a job in the Canadian forces. That is not so any more; you have to possess a certain degree of intelligence and education to be a good member of the Canadian armed forces. We happen to be blessed with 80,000 or 90,000 members of the forces who bring with them this degree of dedication. I say, thank God for these men who serve during peacetime, when they do not get the kind of recognition they might during wartime.

I want to speak about another subject, that of the environment. The suggestion has been made that the government is not concerned about pollution and has not taken any action in this field. I supported the idea of appointing a Minister of the Environment. At long last we have a minister whose main obligation is to co-ordinate the areas so that we can do that which is best to control pollution be it of the air, of the land or of our water.

We have good legislation under the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis). We have a situation now where we are trying to clean up the Ottawa River, which means we have to bring the province of Quebec, the province of Ontario and the federal government into reaching some kind of agreement. We are facing a similar situation in the Great Lakes, where we have to deal with two or three provinces, important cities, the government of the United States and various states in the United States. We are endeavouring to do that which is necessary to see that our Great Lakes are cleaned up. Certainly it was a severe blow to learn that the amount of money to be provided in the United States for pollution control was to be reduced. Reports indicate, however, that this may not have the detrimental effect we thought it might have in so far as pollution control of the Great Lakes is concerned.

There is another area which should receive more publicity, that is, the degree of co-operation between the United States and Canada with respect to the surveillance of the Great Lakes and the fact that some of the ships using the Great Lakes see fit to ignore the fact that if they dump their bilgewater, which has oil in it, or if they dump the other material which has the effect of despoiling the water, it has a tendency to come up on the beaches of the Great Lakes. This is another area in which we need surveillance. If I am driving along and I know a member of the Ontario police force is a mile down the road, I am not going to be speeding. That is what we need in the Great Lakes, a form of sophisticated surveillance.

• (2150)

I am happy that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) has indicated that he is coming to the Sarnia area, to that great area where we have Lake Huron and its beautiful beaches, to see whether we should not think about having some form of aircraft or sophisticated surveillance so that ships either coming down the lakes or going up, or even ships parked in the lakes by reason of some hold-up in the lakes, do not dump their bilgewater or garbage into the Great Lakes and pollute them, with rubbish washing up on the beaches of Lake Huron, be they on the Canadian or on the United States side. But this government is aware of the problems in this area and I am hoping that the kind of surveillance I am looking for will be provided.

I want to make just one more comment before I conclude. When I ran during the last election campaign I adopted a rather presumptuous campaign slogan which was "Cullen for Canada". It had a nice ring to it and had the alliteration that politicians look for. But for this particular member it had a meaning, too. I ran on the understanding that we were going to have an Official Languages Act, that we would recognize that any Canadian in Canada, be he French or English speaking, could go to any government department and speak his own language. Someone whose mother tongue was French should be able to go to any post office in British Columbia or Ontario and speak French and be understood. By the same token I, as an English-speaking Canadian, should be able to go to the remotest part of Quebec and speak English in a post office or any federal office.

Such a situation does not mean we are ramming French down the throats of English-speaking Canadians. Neither is it ramming English down the throats of French-speaking Canadians. All it means is that a French-speaking, unilingual Canadian is able to go to British Columbia and use his native tongue in any federal office. This is the way it should be if we sincerely believe that this is truly a bilingual country. I support that kind of philosophy completely.

There has been some misrepresentation of the Official Languages Act. Many people have said that it has the effect of spreading French to western Ontario or western Canada, or that it spreads English through Quebec. Nothing could be further from the truth. It is, as I have said, merely ensuring that unilingual Canadians, be they English-speaking or French-speaking, can conduct business in any federal office or government department in their own language.

I for one cannot understand why people are opposed to learning a second language. It was a treat to me. I take French lessons two days a week, which means I have to get up earlier than I normally do. I had a splendid opportunity to learn French when I went to Le Collège Militaire de Saint Jean. I remember when you, Mr. Speaker, and I celebrated our passing of "leçon quatorze". We were both thrilled that at last we could communicate with our French-speaking colleagues. They would come across to our table and ask us for the English word for such-and-such. We were able to communicate with them and have a great time. Last summer I visited Quebec and used my French to get food and lodging. I did not run into any separatism, merely friendship. When they say "hospitalité is spoken here", let me tell you that that is true.

I think Canadians have an obligation to learn the second language, but I would prefer to think that Canadians have the opportunity to speak the second language. You will find no nicer people than the French-speaking Canadians of Quebec, northern Ontario or St. Boniface. Neither will you find any nicer English-speaking Canadians than those in southern Ontario, in the area I represent.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this debate has reflected, particularly in the nature of the amendment that has been moved by my colleague from Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), a disillusionment today that is very worrisome to many of us who have been in Parliament for many years. We have seen the growth of a confrontation of ideology, a confrontation of region, a confrontation of ethnic origin. I use that term very advisedly and with apologies to this House, because I do not believe in a confrontation of ethnic origin.

I as an individual am a product, on my father's side, of generation upon generation of French speakers and Irish speakers. Much more recently, on my mother's side, my ancestors have come from continental Europe, from Belgium. Like the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen), who has just resumed his seat and was also a veteran in the last World War, I married an English girl, as did thousands upon thousands of Canadians. We look upon this sort of linguistic, ethnic confrontation as though it were a plan from the devil to destroy the Canadian nation. There is nothing quite so diabolical as this, to my way of thinking.

I am sure that from Vancouver Island to Newfoundland and from the forty-ninth parallel to the north pole there are hundreds of thousands, indeed millions, of Canadians who think alike. Yet here we are in this day and age exposed to a philosophy, espoused by government, of confrontation; a philosophy of the government that says you are either on this side or on the other side.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Not on language.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) should be the first to recognize that. There is no place in Canada for this sort of thing, certainly not within his city or my city. I will take no place behind anyone in this House when it comes to the question of who is a Canadian, whether one is of French origin, of English origin, or Irish or Scots. So let the hon. member make his own speech.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Yes, I will.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But only when I have finished my speech. He is the hon. member who is known as "the loudmouth interrupter".

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 10 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 25, 1972

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43 and, with your permission, to make a very brief explanation of it.

The unfortunate incident in Bathurst, New Brunswick, yesterday underlines the fact that some of the problems and delays connected with the payment of unemployment insurance benefits are still affecting a good many people. I would remind the House that the minister concerned has on several occasions emphasized his willingness that the matter be studied fully by the appropriate standing committee. Since we are all agreed, I would suggest that the House might consent to my motion being put without debate.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the subject of delays in payment of unemployment insurance benefits, the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act generally and the regulations which include holiday pay, vacation pay, severance pay and similar income in the definition of earnings be immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

I suggest that the motion might be put without debate.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member for York South requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not, and the motion cannot be put.

* * *

NATURAL RESOURCES

OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I request the unanimous leave of the House to propose a motion arising from a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It concerns the deadlock which has been created following the failure of the federal government to reach agreement with the provinces with respect to offshore mineral rights. The result of this impasse has been uncertainty in mineral exploration development and discontent among the provinces affected. Furthermore, the people of the poorer regions of this country, who saw some promise of economic prosperity in the potential of offshore development, now find the rigid attitude of the federal government most discouraging.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That immediately upon his return from Nova Scotia the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources make a statement on motions outlining the government's position concerning the sharing of responsibilities with the provinces in the realm of offshore mineral rights and the sharing of the royalties derived therefrom.

• (1110)

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member under the terms of Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. The Chair will inquire whether there is unanimity.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion therefore cannot be put.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF PUBLIC BILLS

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Speaker: May I revert to and invoke a practice which has arisen in recent years with regard to the introduction and first reading of public bills. On today's order paper there are listed some 149 bills for introduction by private members. It was not possible for the Chair to review the provisions of each of these bills. May I therefore suggest to the House that we adopt the procedure agreed upon in several recent sessions, namely, that we proceed to the introduction and first reading of these bills so that each may be scrutinized between now and its being called for second reading in order to allow the Chair to consider whether there is any defect in any such bill with respect to the practices and usages of the House.

I suggest that by unanimous consent all the public bills listed for introduction on today's order paper be deemed to have been introduced, given first reading, ordered to be printed and to stand for second reading at the next sitting of the House, subject of course to a subsequent examination as to the regularity of each bill.

[Translation]

I therefore suggest that with unanimous consent of the House all public bills listed on today's order paper to be introduced, be deemed introduced read for the first time and ordered to be printed for second reading at the next sitting of the House, subject, of course, to subsequent study establishing whether each one is in order.

[English]

Is this agreed?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I raise one question for clarification. Does the reservation that Your Honour has quite rightly put upon the viability of the introduction of any of these bills imply a declaration or adjudication only when the bills come forward for debate or is it Your Honour's intention to review the whole list and express your views at some date in the relatively near future? Otherwise it would seem to me a bill which had really been improperly introduced could acquire some degree of respectability by remaining on the order paper and, as a matter of fact, could draw comment, correspondence and what have you from the public.

Mr. Speaker: I agree with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West. In due course at some later date perhaps there might be consideration by the House of the suggestion of the Chair in respect of the bills about which reservations might be expressed. For the moment this is somewhat hypothetical. Having made a preliminary study of the bills it seems that at least the first 25 or 30 are acceptable from a procedural standpoint, so there would be no immediate difficulty in this regard. However, in due course and after due notice an opportunity will be given to hon. members to indicate their views about the regularity of specific bills on which I might express reservations.

Is the procedure to which I have referred agreed to by the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill C-9, to amend the Criminal Code (abolition of corporal punishment)—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).

Bill C-10, to restrain the use of tobacco—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-11, to amend the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act—Mr. Anderson.

Bill C-12, to provide for the establishment of an Environmental Council of Canada—Mr. Goode.

Bill C-13, to amend the Combines Investigation Act (floor penalties, criminal joint tortfeasors, and moieties)—Mr. Orlikow.

Bill C-14, respecting boating safety—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-15, to amend the Canada Elections Act (publication of the result of opinion polls)—Mr. Coates.

Bill C-16, to amend the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act (public and financial accountability)—Mr. McCutcheon.

Bill C-17, to amend the Motor Vehicle Safety Act (seat belts)—Mr. Mather.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Bill C-18, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act—Mr. Allmand.

Bill C-19, respecting employment with the Government of Canada not covered by the Public Service Employment Act—Mr. Orlikow.

Bill C-20, to amend the Criminal Code (attempt to commit suicide)—Mr. Watson.

Bill C-21, to amend the Canada Labour Code (provision for ten general holidays with pay)—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).

Bill C-22, to amend the Criminal Records Act—Mr. Robinson.

Bill C-23, to amend the Immigration Appeal Board Act—Mr. Haidasz.

Bill C-24, to establish a Commuter Passenger Train Authority (Ontario)—Mr. Roberts.

Bill C-25, to amend the Canada Elections Act (proxy voting)—Mr. Horner.

Bill C-26, to amend the Broadcasting Act (cigarette advertising)—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-27, to amend the Indian Act—Mr. Foster.

Bill C-28, to amend the Bank of Canada Act (braille denomination)—Mr. Ricard.

Bill C-29, to amend the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act—Mr. Thomas (Moncton).

Bill C-30, to amend the Department of Justice Act (annual report)—Mr. Fortin.

Bill C-31, to designate Major's Hill Park—Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).

Bill C-32, to amend the Criminal Code (pollution)—Mr. Anderson.

Bill C-33, to amend the Canada Elections Act (proxy voting)—Mr. Kaplan.

Bill C-34, respecting packaged perishable food—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-35, to amend the Criminal Code (preventive detention)—Mr. Orlikow.

Bill C-36, to amend the Criminal Code (control of weapons and firearms)—Mr. Allmand.

Bill C-37, to amend the Criminal Code (air piracy)—Mr. Robinson.

Bill C-38, respecting the disclosure of financial interests by Senators, Members of the House of Commons and certain other persons—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).

Bill C-39, respecting noise in factories—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-40, to amend the Department of the Environment Act (fisheries)—Mr. McGrath.

Bill C-41, to amend the Fisheries Act (licensing)—Mr. Barnett.

Bill C-42, to provide for the Protection of News Sources (press privilege)—Mr. Peters.

Bill C-43, to amend the Criminal Code (vagrancy)—Mr. Robinson.

Bill C-44, to amend the Income Tax Act (Section 239)—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).

Bill C-45, to establish a Newfoundland Crossing Authority—Mr. Marshall.

Bill C-46, respecting the presence of the National Flag of Canada in both Houses of Parliament—Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).

Bill C-47, to amend the Canada Elections Act (publication of straw poll results)—Mr. Peters.

Bill C-48, to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act (charity versus closed-shop union dues)—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).

Bill C-49, to amend the Department of Regional Economic Expansion Act—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).

Bill C-50, to amend the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).

Bill C-51, to amend the Criminal Code (air piracy)—Mr. Woolliams.

Bill C-52, to establish the Office of Parliamentary Commissioner—Mr. Thompson (Red Deer).

Bill C-53, respecting the designation of Rideau Hall and Government House as Rideau Palace—Mr. McBride.

Bill C-54, respecting Members of the House of Commons as directors of crown corporations—Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).

Bill C-55, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act—Mr. Whelan.

Bill C-56, to amend the Department of Transport Act.—Mr. Orlikow.

Bill C-57, to amend the Juvenile Delinquents Act—Mr. Robinson.

Bill C-58, to amend the Food and Drugs Act—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-59, to amend the Regional Development Incentives Act (economic/social factors)—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).

Bill C-60, to amend the Criminal Code (alteration of odometer)—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-61, to amend the Statistics Act (area statistics)—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).

Bill C-62, to amend the Criminal Code (company-censored housing)—Mr. Orlikow.

Bill C-63, to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1965, with respect to the quorum of the House of Commons— Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).

Bill C-64, respecting Canada Day—Mr. Gibson.

Bill C-65, to amend the Broadcasting Act (advertising on children's programs)—Mr. McGrath.

Bill C-66, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act—Mr. Broadbent.

Bill C-67, to amend the Criminal Code (disturbance in Parliament)—Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).

Bill C-68, respecting the protection of endangered species—Mr. Watson.

Bill C-69, to amend the Divorce Act—Mr. McCleave.

Bill C-70, to provide for the establishment of the Alaska-Yukon Highway Authority (Alaska Highway)—Mr. Thompson (Red Deer).

Bill C-71, to amend the British North America Act, 1867 (abolition of the Senate)—Mr. Knowles.

Bill C-72, respecting disclosure of names of drug addicts—Mr. Haidasz.

Public Bills

Bill C-73, to amend the Broadcasting Act—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-74, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act—Mr. Deakon.

Bill C-75, to prevent the invasion of privacy resulting from the misuse of information stored in data banks— Mr. Goode.

Bill C-76, to amend the Criminal Code (abortion)—Mrs. MacInnis.

Bill C-77, to amend the Food and Drugs Act (labelling)—Mr. Anderson.

Bill C-78, respecting the use of the expression "Parliament Hill"—Mr. McIlraith.

Bill C-79, concerning the Exportation of the growth and produce of Canada—Mr. Peters.

Bill C-80, to amend the Canada Evidence Act (incriminating statements)—Mr. Orlikow.

Bill C-81, to amend the Canada Labour Code (three weeks annual vacation after three years)—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).

Bill C-82, to amend the Motor Vehicle Safety Act (bumpers)—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-83, to amend the Criminal Code (wire tapping, etc.)—Mr. Orlikow.

Bill C-84, to amend the Holidays Act (Victoria Day)—Mr. Scott.

Bill C-85, to provide for the constitution of a Federal Transport Commission of Inquiry (impartial investigation of transport accidents)—Mr. Forrestall.

Bill C-86, to amend the Financial Administration Act (Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration)—Mr. Thompson (Red Deer).

Bill C-87, to amend the Canada Elections Act (election expenses)—Mr. Roberts.

Bill C-88, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (St. Luke 11;46)—Mr. Anderson.

Bill C-89, to amend the Canada Labour Code (increased minimum hourly wage)—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).

Bill C-90, to encourage the recycling of post-consumer waste (paper)—Mr. Goode.

Bill C-91, respecting the disclosure of financial interests by Senators and Members of the House of Commons—Mr. Roberts.

Bill C-92, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act—Mr. Hopkins.

Bill C-93, to amend the International River Improvements Act—Mr. Goode.

Bill C-94, respecting the International airport at Vancouver—Mr. Goode.

Bill C-95, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act (freedom of conscience)—Mr. Peters.

Bill C-96, to amend the Adult Occupational Training Act—Mrs. MacInnis.

Bill C-97, to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act—Mr. Allmand.

Bill C-98, to better assure the public's rights to freedom of access to public documents and information about government administration (administrative disclosure)—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-99, to amend the Canada Labour Code (fair employment practices)—Mr. Allmand.

Bill C-100, to amend the Canada Labour Code (age or sex discrimination)—Mr. Forrestall.

Bill C-101, respecting the designation of the Speaker of the House of Commons as the Member for the Electoral District of Parliament Hill—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).

Bill C-102, respecting Sir John A. Macdonald Day—Mr. Macquarrie.

Bill C-103, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act (time off without loss of pay for appearance in Citizenship Court)—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).

Bill C-104, respecting disclosure of credit rating records—Mr. McGrath.

Bill C-105, respecting Human Rights—Mrs. MacInnis.

Bill C-106, respecting supersonic aircraft—Mr. St. Pierre.

Bill C-107, to amend the National Defence Act (aid of the civil power)—Mr. Orlikow.

Bill C-108, respecting the hunting and fishing rights of Indian Canadians—Mr. Simpson.

Bill C-109, respecting air transportation employees in the Northwest Territories—Mr. Orange.

Bill C-110, respecting the protection of children from poisonous household substances—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-111, respecting the continental shelf—Mr. McGrath.

Bill C-112, to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1965 (duration of House of Commons)—Mr. Peters.

Bill C-113, to amend the Criminal Code (cruelty to animals)—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-114, to amend the Canada Labour Code (severance pay)—Mr. Peters.

Bill C-115, to amend the Public Service Employment Act (age discrimination)—Mr. Forrestall.

Bill C-116, to amend the Food and Drugs Act (labelling of dates on perishable commodities)—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).

Bill C-117, to amend the British North America Act, 1867 (National Capital of Canada)—Mr. Isabelle.

Bill C-118, respecting the right of the public to information concerning the public business—Mr. Baldwin.

Bill C-119, respecting the establishment and administration of a fund for the mutual aid of children and older persons (Foster Grand-parents)—Mr. Ryan.

Bill C-120, to amend the Criminal Code (battered child)—Mr. Southam.

Bill C-121, respecting the control of lobbying—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-122, to amend the National Housing Act (municipal water and soil pollution projects)—Mr. Alexander.

Bill C-123, to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1965 (duration of House of Commons)—Mr. Rowland.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Bill C-124, to amend the Indian Act (rights of Indian woman upon marriage)—Mr. Rock.

Bill C-125, respecting tar and nicotine content in cigarettes—Mr. Robinson.

Bill C-126, to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1965 (Yukon and N.W.T. Senate Representation)—Mr. Nielsen.

Bill C-127, to amend the Public Service Employment Act (political partisanship)—Mr. Burton.

Bill C-128, to better assure the public's right to freedom of access to public documents and information about government administration—Mr. Roberts.

Bill C-129, to amend the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan (reduction in qualifying age)—Mr. Allmand.

Bill C-130, to provide for the protection of news sources (press privilege)—Mr. Fairweather.

Bill C-131, respecting the protection of records of Canadian Business Concerns—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-132, Proclaiming the Canadian Flag Day a National Holiday—Mr. Haidasz.

Bill C-133, to amend the Railway Act (reduction in passenger service)—Mr. Allmand.

Bill C-134, respecting the race and national origin of Canadians—Mr. Downey.

Bill C-135, to amend the Criminal Code (young offenders)—Mr. Woolliams.

Bill C-136, to amend the Immigration Act (mental retardation)—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-137, to amend the Criminal Code (air and water pollution)—Mr. Allmand.

Bill C-138, respecting rate fares for disabled persons on federal modes of transport (free or reduced rates)—Mr. Nesbitt.

Bill C-139, to amend the Criminal Code (kidnapping)—Mr. Caouette.

Bill C-140, to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act—Mr. Orlikow.

Bill C-141, to amend the Financial Administration Act (Public Accounts)—Mr. Hales.

Bill C-142, to amend the Criminal Code (obliteration of motor vehicle serial numbers)—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-143, to amend the Criminal Code (adjournment for accused to obtain legal representation)—Mr. Allmand.

Bill C-144, to amend the Criminal Code (attempted suicide)—Mr. Forrestall.

Bill C-145, to amend the Broadcasting Act (equal time to opposition parties)—Mr. Orlikow.

Bill C-146, respecting the labelling of hazardous household products—Mr. Mather.

Bill C-147, respecting the labelling of detergents and cleaning agents containing phosphate compounds—Mrs. MacInnis.

Bill C-148, respecting Canada Day—Mr. Broadbent.

Bill C-149, to amend the Inquiries Act (publication of reports)—Mr. Alexander.

Bill C-150, to amend the Supreme Court Act (judicial office)—Mr. McCleave.

Bill C-151, respecting Conservation Day—Mr. Sulatycky.

Bill C-152, respecting tobacco as a health hazard—Mr. Robinson.

Bill C-153, to amend the War Measures Act—Mr. Orlikow.

Bill C-154, to amend the Canada Corporations Act (not agents of Her Majesty)—Mr. Fortin.

Bill C-155, to amend the Criminal Code (attempted suicide)—Mr. Robinson.

Bill C-156, to amend the Indian Act—Mr. St. Pierre.

Bill C-157, to amend the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act—Mr. Howard (Skeena).

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—BATHURST, N.B.—REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE INVESTIGATION OF REASONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In light of the tragic circumstances brought about by the lateness of payments of unemployment insurance claims, resulting in suffering and undue hardship and culminating in continuing demonstrations in the Bathurst area, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he would give the Bathurst matter a high and urgent priority and commence an immediate investigation in order to ascertain the reasons for the late payments in the hope that there may be immediate payment of outstanding claims?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): As the hon. gentleman knows, this matter is a first priority with the government. We are doing everything possible to speed up the payment of claims. The parliamentary secretary to the minister is here, and I am sure he would be happy to supplement this information.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact that the minister responsible has, in no uncertain terms, given consent to the convening of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration in order that this whole matter can be delved into in the hope that proper conclusions can be reached, will the Acting Prime Minister, in conjunction with the acting House leader, convene the Standing Committee forthwith so this matter can be looked into and, hopefully, in order that the necessary solutions can be arrived at so as to make this act more feasible?

Mr. Sharp: I can assure the hon. gentleman that the government has nothing to withhold. It is making efforts to make this new and improved unemployment insurance plan workable and to ensure that payments are made on time. It is my understanding that the estimates can be referred at any time, if they have not already been referred to the committee, and the comments of the hon.

gentleman can be made in the committee and the parliamentary secretary and others can answer.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That does not achieve payment.

Mr. Alexander: I find the Acting Prime Minister's answer wholly unacceptable. In any event, can he assure the House, pursuant to the policy that was set down by the minister responsible, that so far as the Bathurst area is concerned unpaid claims will be paid within the next 72 hours?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister suggested that perhaps I could assist in clarifying the situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Answer yes or no.

An hon. Member: You caused a riot down there.

Mr. Perrault: First, on behalf of the minister I wish to advise the House that I intend to speak about the Bathurst situation later this morning in the Throne Speech debate. Second, all claims which have been brought to the attention of the commission have indeed been paid.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Perrault: Third, the New Brunswick Federation of Labour has issued a statement saying that the situation has been very much overblown, and I will read that into the record of the House this morning. Fourth, further demonstrations serve only to impose further hardships on those entitled to unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): The parliamentary secretary said that all claims have been paid. I would like to ask him, if that is so, why in Bathurst we had the disgraceful situation which occurred yesterday?

Mr. Perrault: Let me say to the hon. member that he should be more diligent in his research. He should contact the Canadian Labour Congress, Ottawa headquarters, and he will be a wiser member if he does so about the situation in New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the place to get information was in Bathurst, not in Ottawa. However, I wonder whether we can get from the parliamentary secretary, not the kind of partisan speech which we usually get but on an early occasion, if not today, a statement outlining what the government intends to do to ensure that the kind of occurrence which happened in Bathurst yesterday will not take place in other places in the next couple of weeks?

Mr. Perrault: I will be pleased to give the House a full report this afternoon.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

DELAYS IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—MEASURES TO RESOLVE DIFFICULTIES IN MONTREAL

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister.

As he told us a few minutes ago that the Unemployment Insurance Commission was attempting to find means of speeding up processing of claims for unemployment insurance benefits, could he assure us that something will also be done about releasing files in Montreal which, for some reason or another, come from the computer, are filed away and left undisturbed so long as the claimant does not mention them, and also about informing claimants of any contradiction which might arise?

• (1120)

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the representations of the hon. member and I am sure the Unemployment Insurance Commission will investigate them.

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—ACTION TO PREVENT LOAN-SHARK OPERATIONS

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the department aware of loan-sharking operations, the lending of money against unemployment insurance cheques, resulting from the delays in payment and, if so, what action is the commission taking to prevent this occurrence?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the situation will be investigated. If indeed, such a situation exists it is clearly despicable.

BATHURST, N.B., DEMONSTRATION—NUMBER OF ACTUAL UNEMPLOYED INVOLVED

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the parliamentary secretary. Can he tell the House whether he has any estimate of the number of actually unemployed people who were involved in the problem in Bathurst and how many were trucked in from outside to demonstrate?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the total number of claims lodged is 10,132, and after the matter was drawn to the attention of the commission only 22 were found to be legitimately or illegitimately delayed, if you want to put it that way. Those cases have been taken care of. Twenty-two out of 10,000 is not a bad batting record.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Perrault.]

REQUEST FOR DECENTRALIZED ISSUANCE OF CHEQUES TO EXPEDITE PAYMENT OF BENEFITS IN CALGARY AND EDMONTON

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether in the course of his investigations he would look at the situation that exists in the cities of Calgary and Edmonton, which is similar to that raised by other hon. members? Payment of unemployment insurance cheques is now centralized in Winnipeg, causing hardship and delay in Calgary and Edmonton, cities of approximately 400,000 people each. This seems to be the hold-up. Will the parliamentary secretary investigate this matter so that the cheques can get out to the people and they can get something to eat?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the plan is continually under review. If the hon. member has a specific suggestion to make it will be given detailed consideration by the commission. I would suggest that he surely does not want to return to the long dreary line-ups of ten years ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A number of hon. members are seeking supplementaries, but I think we might complete the first round of questioning and return to this subject. I see the hon. member for Trinity, the hon. member for Wellington and others. I think we should complete the first round of questioning and then return to hon. members' supplementaries on this subject.

* * *

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUING OF NEGOTIATIONS—REASONS FOR DELAY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Are trade negotiations continuing with the United States administration and are any meetings taking place now between officials or other representatives of the two governments?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I reported previously, Mr. Speaker, that the contacts are maintained. I have also indicated that attempts are being made now to ascertain how and when the actual negotiations will be resumed.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the first part of the minister's answer, would he inform those of us who find it difficult to understand why there are delays in the resumption of negotiations? Why are there difficulties in getting the two sides to sit down again to negotiate? Are some conditions being put to the Canadian government which are preventing that from happening?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the usual quote applies here—it takes two to tango. The American negotiators have other things to do. They are busy in Congress for example, and they are presumably also reviewing their positions in these negotiations, and so on. I do not think the delay is abnormal. It is understood by both sides that the doors are open and that negotiations will resume at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance the government itself has given to these negotiations and to the possible results of them, can the minister indicate when they are likely to begin again, or are they deliberately being delayed until after an election in Canada in order that the negotiations and the results might not interfere with certain intentions of the Canadian government?

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member can do his own thinking, his own prognosticating, his own forecasting or whatever he feels like doing on this matter.

Mr. Lewis: That is pretty revealing, Mr. Speaker.

MINI-TYPE SUBMARINE—ROLE OF DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS IN POSSIBLE SALE OR RENTAL TO RUSSIA

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, could I ask a further supplementary question of the minister within a narrower area and having to do with the irritants that the minister talked about on previous occasions. Specifically, can he indicate to the House the basis on which some of his departmental officials continue to act on behalf of International Hydrodynamics, I believe it is, on the west coast with respect to the sale or rental of the Pisces deepwater submersible to the Soviet Union?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my department issues export permits and that is the basis of our departmental involvement in this matter. I am not sure what the hon. member wants me to answer. Would he help me out?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, briefly, can the minister indicate whether or not any officials of his department are either en route to the United States or are going there shortly to reopen negotiations with our American neighbours with respect to the sale or rental of the Pisces, either on an open or constrained basis, to Russia?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I could find the reference to a previous answer in which I said that consultation has been going on, and presumably it is still going on, between Canada and the United States on this particular matter. Is there anything wrong with consulting?

Mr. Forrestall: Has the minister advised the Department of National Defence of his action?

CANADA-UNITED STATES—POSITION REGARDING RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister clarify his earlier answer? On the one hand he seemed to suggest that the talks had ceased on the basis of mutuality, if you like, between Canada and the United States but that the door was open on either side. On the other hand he seemed to suggest that it was the Americans who had broken off the talks because they were trying to consider the Canadian offer. Would he be a little more precise? Has the government of Canada said to the government of the United States that it would like an early resumption of the talks, or have both governments simply said, one to the other: We will stop talking now but if it is in the interests of one or the other we will resume them again soon?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Americans are quite aware that we are open to a resumption of negotiations at the earliest possible moment. We are ready to go whenever they are.

* * *

[Translation]

TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE PURCHASE OF AIR CUSHION VEHICLES FOR COASTGUARD

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister.

Does the government intend to acquire one or several hovercraft for use by the coastguard service?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO STIMULATE CAPITAL INVESTMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the reported and unprecedented 35 per cent unemployment rate in the construction industry in Toronto, which probably is reflected in other parts of the country as well, and in view of the statement by the president of the Canadian Construction Association attributing this fact to a drop-off in plant and industrial expansion, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government intends to take measures to stimulate capital investment? I ask this question especially in view of the latest Economic Council of Canada report which underlines the substantial decline in capital investment in Canada.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance answered this question yesterday in the question period and in his speech. There has been a notable recovery in confidence following the introduction of the measures that the government announced on fiscal policy last fall and the solution of the international monetary problem. As far as we can foresee, there will continue to be in this country as rapid an expansion as in any country in the world during 1972.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister a supplementary question. In light of the statement made by the president of the Canadian Construction Association wherein he refers to uncertainties within the federal government with respect to the competition bill and other federal trade and employment policies, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether we can expect a statement from the government with respect to these legislative measures?

• (1130)

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. These measures have been mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and government policy, of course, will be announced at the time the measures are introduced.

* * *

INDUSTRY

POSSIBLE CLOSING OF McBEAN COLLIERY—REQUEST FOR AID UNTIL COAL MINING POLICY FORMULATED

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, in light of the grave concern of my constituency resulting in a meeting involving many hundreds of people a few days ago because of the imminent closing of a coal mine in Thorburn, Nova Scotia, and in view of the comments made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in his speech yesterday about the viability of the coal mining industry, can the parliamentary secretary or the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether the government will advance aid to the McBean colliery until such time as these policies to make coal mining viable are formulated?

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the hon. member's question and bring it to the attention of the minister.

* * *

TRADE

DISCUSSION WITH COMMONWEALTH CARIBBEAN COUNTRIES ON SUGAR TARIFF REBATE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister concerning the tariff rebate on Commonwealth-Caribbean sugar which caused a great deal of trouble a while ago and which under protest the government reinstated to the end of 1971. Can the minister advise what the situation is for the current year and whether discussions have or are being carried on with the governments of the Commonwealth Caribbean countries?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, so far there has been no change in policy. There are no discussions going on now with the Caribbean countries. We will have to have discussions, of course, arising out of the need to make a decision whether we will continue the rebate, and, they will also be interested in the report of the tariff commission which deals with the same subject.

Mr. Macquarrie: Do I understand from the Acting Prime Minister that the rebate has been paid and is being paid now?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that it has not been stopped.

[Mr. McGrath.]

POWER

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—POSSIBILITY OF STOPPING PROJECT IF ECOLOGICAL DAMAGE EXCESSIVE

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a question for the Minister of the Environment or his parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact the minister indicated to the House the other day that ecological research on the James Bay project does not deal with the question whether or not the project should proceed on the basis of environmental damage because it is a provincial problem, can the federal government stop this or any other project if the ecological damage were excessive and interfered with certain areas under federal jurisdiction?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the question as asked is defective in a number of ways. It is clearly hypothetical. The hon. member might like to rephrase the question. I know the matter is important and I do not want to be unfair to him.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, will the federal government stop this project if the ecological damage is excessive?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the department in consultation with the government of Quebec, is preparing a comprehensive list of further studies to be carried out during the next few years. The hon. member should remember that our preliminary environmental study was carried out. It served the basic purpose of pointing out areas which require further study. We are now establishing this list in co-operation with the province of Quebec.

* * *

ENERGY

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—CONSIDERATION IN STUDIES OF ECOLOGICAL DAMAGE IN RELATION TO BENEFITS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Can the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment tell the House whether the question of ecological damage versus benefits is being considered in the studies now going on relating to the proposed Mackenzie River pipeline?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): All aspects of the problem are being looked at, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

POWER

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—EARLY ANNOUNCEMENT OF FEDERAL CONDITIONS FOR APPROVAL

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the statement yesterday by the Prime Minister of Quebec that his decision on the James Bay project is irreversible, does the federal government expect shortly to outline its conditions for approval of this project?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a considered answer to that question which the hon. member understands is of very considerable importance. I hope he will allow me to take the question as notice.

* * *

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—AMOUNT OF FUNDS NOT YET ALLOCATED

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will he indicate whether the $150 million LIP budget has yet been allocated and, if not, how much of this fund remains to be used for unapproved projects?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as of yesterday afternoon approximately $4 million remained to be expended under the terms of this program. Almost 88,000 jobs were involved, exceeding all estimates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: Of the approximately $4 million yet to be expended, how much of that is for programs originating from local groups and how much from municipalities under the LIP program?

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, the actual allocation of the $4 million, of course, remains to be known. To this time, of the funds which have been allocated, $146 million, $92.2 million has gone to the private sector and $53.4 million to municipal projects.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): A supplementary question. Can the parliamentary secretary explain why as far back as two weeks ago people were receiving letters stating that their applications had been refused because the government had run out of money?

Mr. Perrault: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that the number of applications under this program in process of consideration—as hon. members know, the application deadline was January 31—exceeds the remaining money available. Further applications, therefore, cannot be considered.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will allow one last supplementary on this subject.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—FUNDS ALLOCATED, AMOUNTS SPENT, APPLICATIONS RECEIVED, BY PROVINCES

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I have a supplementary question for the parliamentary secretary. Is the government now prepared to make public the allocation of funds under this program to each province? Also, is the government prepared at the earliest possible date to make public information on the amounts of money spent in each province and the total amount and numbers of applications received from each province under this program?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will make this request known to my minister. I know it will be given careful consideration.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

HIJACKING OF PLANES—INTRODUCTION OF REGULATIONS TO ENFORCE SCREENING OF PASSENGERS AND BAGGAGE

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister with regard to hijacking or skyjacking. Is the government going to bring in regulations, similar to those introduced by the United States federal aviation authority, ordering all airlines to screen all passengers and baggage as an anti-hijacking measure?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this question ought to be directed to the Minister of Transport under whose jurisdiction it falls. I am sure he will be happy to answer it when he returns to the House.

* * *

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STUDY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): My question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will a statement be made by the minister on the study prepared by his department which indicates that the Canadian footwear industry will be destroyed by 1975 unless federal government action is taken?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is probably in the marketing study that I tabled in the House yesterday. In recent months my department has conducted two major studies on the footwear industry, one on the degree of efficiency reached by the industry and another on their marketing practice and techniques. This is one of many contributions we are making to this industry. We are now developing a footwear plan, particularly with the government of Quebec and following up with the government of Ontario. As a matter of fact, in a few minutes I will be meeting the provincial minister from Quebec on this particular issue. We hope to develop the fullest co-operation between the two levels of government, each using its own instrumentation and maybe not finding the solution but substantially improving the present situation.

Mr. Crouse: A short time ago a footwear plant closed in the town of Milton, Nova Scotia, which accounts for my interest in this matter. Will steps be taken to help revitalize the footwear industry, for example, in the province of Nova Scotia?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest the minister's answer covered the question.

* * *

INFORMATION CANADA

REASON FOR INCREASE IN ESTIMATES

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour in his capacity of reporting for Information Canada. Bearing in mind the fact that one reason for setting up Information Canada was to co-ordinate the services of the various departments and, hopefully, to reduce their costs, and also noting in the estimates tabled this week that the cost has now increased to $1 million a week, is this increased spending on government information to be a continuous policy or is it geared specifically to this fiscal and election year?

• (1140)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

* * *

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—NEWS RELEASES TO MEMBERS CONCERNING APPROVALS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question about the Lift program which I will address to the parliamentary secretary, though I do not approve of asking parliamentary secretaries questions because they cannot speak for the government. Does the fact that there are no more funds available mean that the urgent messages that cross our desks notifying us that certain projects have been approved will now cease? For example, I had one come to my desk this morning, despite the fact that the promoters of the project were notified a week ago.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am unable to answer that question without receiving further information from the hon. member, but we will give the matter very careful consideration, if such information is made available.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might ask a supplementary and then we will pass on to the next question.

Mr. MacInnis: Are members going to be notified that these approvals have been made a week after they have announced by another minister? Are these wasteful messages going to continue?

[Mr. Crouse.]

NATIONAL PARKS

STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN FEDERAL AND MANITOBA GOVERNMENTS CONCERNING ESTABLISHMENT OF SECOND PARK

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the minister's recent statement about the necessity for more national parks, can he say what progress, if any, is being made in negotiations between the federal government and the province of Manitoba in regard to a second national park in that province?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we are not making very much progress in this regard. I am a bit disappointed because when the premier of the province was a member of this House he asked me when we were going to have a second national park in Manitoba but he has now been premier for three years and has not moved on it yet.

Mr. Simpson: Can I take it from the minister's reply that the next move is up to the province of Manitoba?

Mr. Chrétien: Of course, Mr. Speaker. Crown lands within the boundaries of Manitoba are under provincial jurisdiction.

STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN FEDERAL AND SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENTS CONCERNING ESTABLISHMENT OF SECOND PARK

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. In view of the fact that his department promised the province of Saskatchewan a second national park as long ago as 1965, can he say whether an agreement has been reached or is about to be reached with the province of Saskatchewan?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. member the same answer in regard to Saskatchewan.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have from time to time suggested to hon. members that it was not in order to ask questions during the question period about applications for national parks. Normally these questions ought to be placed on the order paper. The hon. member for Trinity.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NUMBER OF PEOPLE DRAWING BENEFITS ON JANUARY 31, 1972—REASON FOR DELAY IN PRODUCING STATISTICS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Could the parliamentary secretary advise the House how many people were drawing unemployment insurance benefits as of January 31 of this year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure that that question is in order. I always have reservations, according to long-established practice, about allowing questions requiring statistical information. However, if the parliamentary secretary can supply the information the question will be allowed.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for providing prior notice of his intention to ask this question. Statistics Canada compiles the number of claims registered for unemployment insurance benefits at the end of each month. The latest published figure shows the number at the end of October, 1971, and this was published in January, 1972, in the document "Statistical Report on the Operations of the Unemployment Insurance Act". It is expected that the January figures will be available toward the middle of April.

Mr. Hellyer: Can the parliamentary secretary explain to the House why there is a three or four month time lag in getting these statistics? Certainly this is a reflection of the present situation that exists in the commission and I do not think it is good enough. Would the parliamentary secretary undertake to ask Statistics Canada to get the statistics out within a month following the end of a month so that Members of Parliament would have meaningful information available to them?

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, the gathering of statistics on the subject is a complicated matter. For example, the figures are overstated by 20 per cent in terms of active files. If a claimant does not report because of becoming re-employed, a period of five weeks is allowed to elapse before his claim is transferred to the inactive file. The object is to acquire as accurate statistical data as possible, but this does take time.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—METHOD OF TAKING DELIVERY OF PASSPORT

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it arises out of the answer given yesterday that he would obtain information on how the fake passport in the Geoffroy case was delivered.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, the passport was delivered in the mail. The application was received in the mail and the passport was delivered in the mail. Having talked to the RCMP I am advised that in view of the possibility of damage being done to the police investigation it would be desirable that no further disclosure of information concerning the passport be made.

Inquiries of the Ministry

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—RCMP INVESTIGATION INTO PASSPORT—POSSIBLE CHARGES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question and I hope that the minister will not use the excuse that the matter is under investigation to refrain from answering it. Would the minister advise the House when the investigation was commenced by the RCMP and when the minister received information about the forged passport? I think that is very important and I see nothing in it that would hurt the investigation. In addition, are there any charges contemplated at this moment?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to the final question the answer is no. As I said in my original answer, all the documents that have been produced are, in the opinion of the police, forgeries. The RCMP obtained access to our files as soon as they began to be concerned, which was immediately, about how Geoffroy and his wife had left the country. We had issued no passport in his name. The police went through the files and discovered in the files a passport application with Geoffroy's picture in it, and that is how it was identified. That discovery was made on January 28.

Mr. Woolliams: Could I ask one further question, Mr. Speaker. When was this information brought to the minister's attention in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs? When did you get that information, and when did you advise the Solicitor General?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will assume that that question was addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sorry, Sir.

Mr. Sharp: The information was conveyed to me by the police immediately. It was conveyed to the Solicitor General, who is responsible for the police, at the same time.

[Translation]

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO DISPOSAL OF PERSONAL ASSETS

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Acting Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether he has called on the RCMP to conduct an inquiry as to how Mr. Yves Geoffroy disposed of his property, on the very day of his evasion from Canada or the day before, and whether there is anything suspicious about this case?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not personally aware of these circumstances. It would not ordinarily be my responsibility as Secretary of State for External Affairs to inquire into those circumstances. This is a question that should more properly be directed to the police, to the Solicitor General.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Annapolis Valley on a last supplementary on this subject since we will be running short of time. The hon. member for Broadview will be recognized immediately afterward since he has been very patient.

Mr. Nowlan: We have all been patient, Your Honour, and Your Honour has been patient too from time to time. Without trespassing further on your patience, I will put my question to the Acting Prime Minister. As Acting Prime Minister would he consult directly with the Solicitor General so that the Solicitor General can report to this House on Monday whether any inquiry or investigation has been made into business transactions that may have been carried out by Mr. Geoffroy after his release from penitentiary and before his disappearing act?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that Hansard will be scrutinized very carefully by the Solicitor General and that he will endeavour to satisfy the hon. member.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask a further supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair did undertake a moment ago to recognize the hon. member for Broadview.

[Later:]

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—DELIVERY OF PASSPORT

Mr. Eldon Woolliams (Calgary North): The Secretary of State for External Affairs told us that the passport had been sent out by mail. Was it sent by registered mail, and to what address was it sent? I cannot see that giving this information would affect the police investigation.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It was, of course, sent by registered mail, as passports always are. I have discussed with the police the specific point which the hon. member has raised. They said that from their point of view it would be desirable if no further information about the passport were revealed and it seems to me I should take this into account in answering these questions. As far as the administration of passports is concerned, I have nothing to hide. I am withholding the information only to facilitate the investigation by the police, which I hope will result in the apprehension of Mr. Geoffroy.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BATHURST, N.B.—NUMBER OF UNPROCESSED CLAIMS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DELAYS AND INCLUSION OF CERTAIN MONEYS AS INCOME

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact the New Brunswick Federation of Labour has stated that there are 290 unprocessed claims, as contrasted with the statement the parliamentary secretary made this morning that there are only 22, would he check further into the matter? At the same time would he agree to make a statement on motions on Monday regarding the reasons for the delays in payments all across Canada, and more particularly regarding the fact that the Unemployment Insurance Commission has included in income such items as severance pay, vacation pay and holiday pay?

• (1150)

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The statistics to which I referred earlier referred to claims alleged to be sources of delay by the demonstrators who met with officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission last week. The hon. member may have later information about another group of claims. I will look into the situation. I hope, as I said, to report to the House later today.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are running short of time. There are just three minutes left before the end of the question period. We should try to move on as quickly as we can.

BATHURST, N.B.—USE OF BELLEVILLE COMPUTER TO PAY CLAIMS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): My supplementary question concerns unemployment insurance and is addressed to the parliamentary secretary. Recently a report appeared in the Globe and Mail to the effect that 300 signed cheques had been sent out from the Belleville computer centre in Ontario to pay immediate claims. Was consideration given to this by the Moncton office so that they might pay immediate claims in Bathurst?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I can say without equivocation that the report in the Globe and Mail was totally inaccurate and based on misleading and false information.

SUGGESTED PAYMENT OF ALL OUTSTANDING CLAIMS WITHIN TEN DAYS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): In view of the continuing difficulty in paying outstanding claims, can the parliamentary secretary give the House any assurance that all outstanding claims for benefit throughout the country will be paid within the next seven or ten days?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): That is a difficult commitment to make. However, it is the firm intention of the commission to reduce to an irreducable minimum any delays occasioned by inefficiency.

Mr. Nystrom: What does the hon. member mean by "irreducable minimum"? I am concerned about the unemployed.

TRADE

REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES CONCERNING PROHIBITION AGAINST IMPORT OF CANADIAN URANIUM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister tell us whether the representations which were made to the United States government early in December seeking a relaxation of the restriction on the import of enriched Canadian uranium for the United States domestic market have resulted in any change in this restrictive policy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I am very sorry, but my answer will be somewhat coy. I have refused on previous occasions to say what is contained in the agreement ad referendum which was reached at one point during the negotiations to the governments of the United States and of Canada. To answer this question on uranium I would have to use the knowledge I have with respect to what was contained in that agreement ad referendum.

* * *

TAXATION

REASONS FOR REMISSION OF SALES TAX TO GREAT CANADIAN OIL SANDS LIMITED

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether he has the information for which I asked him last Wednesday with regard to the remission of $6 million to Great Canadian Oil Sands Limited and the reason this sizeable sum of money was paid out by way of remission of sales tax paid by the company between 1963 and 1967. The minister said he could not recall the details but he undertook to obtain them and respond in the House. Since the details are not difficult to get, perhaps the minister is prepared to tell us now what they were.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): There was, in fact, such an order made—I have confirmed this—

Mr. Lewis: I know. I saw it.

Mr. Drury: —on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance. I have spoken to him and he has undertaken to give the details required on his next appearance in the House.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question to the minister with respect to the reimbursement made to this United States controlled company. Would the government undertake to give the same consideration to the miners of Cape Breton who have been denied unemployment insurance as a result of the use of coercion by the Devco people?

Mr. Drury: I am certain that the miners of Cape Breton are getting much more consideration by Devco, a Canadian government supported corporation, than the company referred to is getting.

Mr. MacInnis: A further supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: We are running short of time. The hon. member may ask a last supplementary and I shall then recognize the hon. member for Laprairie.

Mr. MacInnis: The minister has indicated that the miners are getting fair treatment. Would he read the report of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and realize that Devco, a Crown corporation, used coercion to take this money from them?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

* * *

OIL

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON ELLESMERE ISLAND DISCOVERY

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can the minister give us any additional information regarding the Panarctic Oils strike on Ellesmere Island?

• (1200)

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have no additional information to give to the House, except to say that this is the first oil discovery in the Arctic Islands. It is a very important discovery, as it was made at the eastern tip of the Arctic, which means that it is much closer to the markets of eastern Canada.

* * *

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Thursday, February 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ross Whicher for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Alexander (p. 212).

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret not having taken the opportunity, during the few minutes which were allocated to me last night, to congratulate the movers of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

After all, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie) is fairly new in this House. As for the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), whom we know as an old militant, he showed in his remarks rather too much partisanship. I think he attempted to secure for the benefit of the Liberal party all possible praise, albeit imaginary, while we must admit that, like all members with little experience in this House, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières is getting a great deal of praise today. But let him have no illusions: he has received his last spontaneous applause. From now on, if he wants praise he will have to deserve it. This is something which all members of this House have had to experience at one time.

[English]

I was hoping that the new Minister of National Defence would remain so that we could examine his stewardship as Minister of Finance over a number of years.

The Speech from the Throne does not, of course, disclose anything unusual. It has been commented upon by my colleagues at considerable length. The commentators outside have been even more stringent in their criticisms of the paucity of the Speech from the Throne in respect of financing or dealing with the very difficult situations facing the country, not only economically but socially and politically. Also these are not necessarily all domestic problems but include those from abroad. I must say I found that the task of writing the Speech from the Throne had been assigned to that person on the government side, who perhaps qualified as the possessor of the most purple prose that could be used. We have never seen the like of it, and I trust will never see it again. The list of legislation, of course, which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tabled on the conclusion of the speech is a rather mixed bag of not too many things. I am sure the more controversial of those items will see the light of day last. The new Competition Act and the changes in the labour standards, as well as a few other proposals which appear there, certainly will not come forward early in the session.

At this time we are in an election year. There is no denying it.

An hon. Member: It may be next year.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Certainly, this colours the attitude of the government and the attitude of the House in this debate. I am not critical of that because the essence of politics and partisanship is exposed. This is the arena, this is the forum, and it is sometimes, Mr. Speaker, your unenviable task to act as referee in the exchange of ideas. It is a good thing your duties do not extend to being a referee of a physical exchange between hon. members. We get comments from the exterior, sometimes by editorial writers, who cluck, cluck when there has been a verbal dispute and sometimes a certain amount of verbal disarray in the House of Commons. We get this cluck, cluck and I wonder what they do in their editorial boards and editorial conferences. This is the forum for the expression of ideas. This is where the government must put its programs to the test before the representatives of the people. There is no other place for that expression.

I have absolutely no regrets or reservations about how we conduct our affairs. Do some people think this is a board room of some giant corporation called Canada or that it is an executive body? It is not. Here, we are discussing ideas and programs. We are not making the decisions which actually put these into practice. There is approval or disapproval registered on behalf of the people of Canada. The same thing takes place in the legislatures of the provinces. I sometimes feel the harshest critics of this institution are those people who know least about it, and who know least about the actual workings of this institution as well as the men and women who compose this institution, the Members of Parliament. According to some individuals, at election time the people of Canada go through the gutters of the nation, if there are such, to gather up people. If these people are so possessed of all this knowledge and science, why are they not on the scene offering their help here rather than back at some nameless desk or behind some microphone where they cannot be seen. They are not held responsible for their ideas or expressions.

Having said that, I now turn to the minister's speech. I am sorry he is not here. He actually misled the House the other day. I asked him a question with regard to statements he had made on behalf of the government of Canada at the ministerial conference in Banff between finance ministers. He indicated at that time that I should bide my patience because in his speech he would give us the answers. I have combed that speech. I listened to it, and I combed it in Hansard, but I found nary a word of what was said at that conference. There was nary a word of the problems that were discussed. Naturally, there were the views that were leaked out of the conference. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) asked him some questions and he indicated that later in the day he would answer them. Again, there has been a dead silence on the subject. To that extent, I charge the minister not with misleading the House but with "conning" the House into deferring or turning aside some questions which could have been very embarrassing. But that is not the way to answer. If questions are serious, and these were serious questions, they are deserving of answers.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is not a new boy in Canada. This is his third or possibly fourth cabinet appointment. True enough, it is a new portfolio for the minister but he has participated in cabinet meetings at which the economic implications for this country have been discussed. If I know my friend, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton, he is not a silent member of the Cabinet and should know the problems. I will say that his speech yesterday was disarmingly fresh in difference of approach. I think one of the first things he has done has been to take that stable of speech writers which previously furnished speeches to his predecessor and given them a holiday. I hope he gives them a permanent holiday because from them we had pronouncements from on high expressed with dogmatic, shall we say, certainty. My colleague from Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) tells me, there was that dogmatic certainty of pronouncements from a Delphic oracle. They were statements which came down from the Mount of Olympus. In strange contrast, the minister yesterday admitted there were difficulties and a lot of factors which made it very difficult for a Minister of Finance to accomplish his task. The best they could do was to give intelligent forecasts. But I trust this minister will not have the feeling of his predecessor, and in some ways the Minister of State who was assigned to the Minister of Finance, in that as I say their pronouncements were made with certainty.

I remember the former Minister of Finance saying many times what would happen to the economy. Now, the Minister of Finance is saying that, unless a man is a charlatan or a fool, he will not make these hard and fast predictions. I will take the minister at his word, but in that case what does he think of his predecessors who did go make these hard and fast forecasts? What does he think of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who just a few months ago said "we have turned the corner; we have mastered inflation and we can now turn to the problem of unemployment"? This administration has no more mastered inflation than they have managed to crawl to the moon on their hands and knees. The minister says we are faced with the twin problems of unemployment and inflation.

• (1210)

It would be interesting to know the position which the Minister of Finance took at the conference in Jasper. Did he or did he not say that there is enough stimulus in the economy to deal with unemployment this year? Is the Bank of Canada now reversing its policy about the amount of stimulus that is to go into the economy because they are afraid of inflation? Do they feel that by the time we get to the end of the year the unemployment situation will have been taken care of and that in the third and fourth quarters of this year we will start moving on an upward trend? It is certainly not indicated that we are moving on an upward trend now, it has to be sometime later. Are those factors at that time going to determine the date of the elections?

We look at the forecasts, and they say that the economy is going to go forward so much in 1972. However, this disagrees with the observations of the Bank of Tokyo which says that there is going to be a slowdown in 1972 and that recovery will be slow. From what the government has said about the performance of Japan, there must be some credence in the observations of the Japanese. They cannot approbate and reprobate.

So what do we have for the forthcoming year? I expect that the Minister of Finance will give us a budget. When will this be? Perhaps the Minister of State, who still has to enter this debate, may be able to tell us when we may expect it. I do not say he will tell us that on a certain night at 8 p.m. the budget will be delivered, but he should be able to tell us in his speech how many of the glaring errors in Bill C-259 will be corrected, those that are more obvious. They knew they were wrong when the bill was before the House but because it would have been difficult to add more amendments, and they were gunshy of amendments because of the criticisms that they had faced over the hundreds that they had put in since the introduction of Bill C-259, we will now get them this year. Is the Canadian public going to have these further inequities inflicted on our economic system Those are the things we want to hear from the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) if and when he takes part in this debate. We will see whether we are going to get the answers to the questions that I put to the Minister of Finance the other day.

I have another question: did the Minister of Finance and his officials in Jasper advise the provinces that the federal and provincial governments should end the expansionary efforts which culminated in the October mini-budget? I ask the Minister of State: is this the position of the government of Canada today, that the proposals contained in the mini-budget of October are to be the peak of the expansionary efforts of the government of Canada, and are we now going to see provincial entrenchment as a result, or just what will this be? I ask the minister to be frank with the House. The government should come clean with the people of this country. We have already seen credibility gaps right, left and centre. We have several credibility gaps in the Solicitor General's Department, as well as in the Department of the Minister of National Revenue as a result of being told by the Prime Minister when we were going to get the government's policy on foreign ownership. It was going to be last June and then it was going to be in September. There was a leak in September which created some difficulties at that time. Then, it was going to come before the end of the session, and in the interval we heard that it would be soon or that it would not be long delayed. The last we heard was that it was going to be introduced around February 16. Now, there is no such indication and the whole question has been put into cold storage. This is part of the credibility gap.

There is another credibility gap that I think we should put on the record. Some weeks ago the Prime Minister took one of these quasi non-political forays into Toronto that the Prime Minister loves to take these days. There, he lectured to people about what should be the work ethic of a lot of people. He said that there were jobs available in the country if only people would get off their sternums and go and get them. It was quite a lecture. Now, I will give a reply to that. It is contained in a delightful letter, and I will ask the House for some forbearance while I read it. The letter appeared in the Victoria Daily Columnist of February 16. Perhaps the Prime Minister will not like this. This may be part of bigot land and there might be some prejudice against the Prime Minister in some of the statements made.

The letter is signed "unemployed". It reads:

PM'S JOBS

Several days after Mr. Trudeau announced via a TV interview that there was an abundance of jobs in Canada, if anyone was willing to leave the cities and not expect an enormous wage, I phoned the local Manpower Office to apply for one. I am unemployed and registered with Manpower. I informed them that I was willing to go anywhere in Canada and work at any job at all.

What more could you ask of an individual?

The first person I spoke to knew nothing about these jobs, or the Prime Minister's statement, and passed me on to another staff member. This man said that he had heard that such a statement had been made, but knew nothing about these jobs, and connected me with another who was equally at loss and could not supply me with any information. By the time I had been referred to several other clerks, all presumably of higher rank, I could see that one and all treated the PM's statement as a big joke. When I finally reached the end of the "buck-passing" line, the clerk in charge admitted to me that at the present time there were no jobs to be had anywhere in Canada through Manpower.

One week later, I again phoned, and received the same runaround, being told "if there are any of these jobs Mr. Trudeau hasn't told us where they are".

• (1220)

Is this a true picture of the employment situation in Canada or is the PM using the old whitewash brush? Or is Manpower just not doing its job? If so, why won't they refer willing and able people to available jobs?

Does the general public know that the policy of local Manpower is when supplying a demand for hourly paid workmen to the largest federal government employer here in this area, namely DND, is to refer ex-service men who are on pension. What chance has any young man under 40 years of age to get into an hourly pay position in say HMC Dockyard, when the openings are being filled with men already on government pension? I understand a few exceptions are being made occasionally; under what conditions I do not know.

Perhaps Mr. Trudeau should look into this situation.

UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Béchard: Signed . . . ?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): "Unemployed".

Mr. Béchard: An unemployed Conservative?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I don't know. After all he does not express his political views. This is an attitude that one sees reflected in other letters to the press and letters to Members of Parliament. This is not a letter written to me, it is a letter written to the public and the point is clear. That is part of the credibility gap, part of the substantiation of the motion moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander).

I want to speak briefly about two matters before I return to the economic section of my remarks, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the other day I addressed a question to the Prime Minister asking if the government had abandoned its clear undertaking to the former minister of manpower and immigration, since there was an absence of any mention in the list of legislation of amendments to the Immigration Act or the Immigration Appeals Board Act. In reply to previous questions from myself and some of my colleagues the answer of the former minister was that these amendments plus a white paper were imminent, just over the horizon. It almost became a game between myself and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) to determine what he meant by "soon". Now, we have the disquieting rumour, and it may be much more than a rumour, that up to half a dozen senior officials of the Department of Manpower and Immigration—and I know this as a personal fact—who have been working very hard on amendments to the Immigration Act in order to bring some order to a chaotic system and whose work has been put aside for an indefinite period aux calendes grecques, are about to resign or ask for reassignment. I certainly want to know why.

Is it fair that there should be over 7,500 appeals pending before the Immigration Appeals Board? The board works hard but the maximum work load that it can carry in a year is 950 cases which is a fair number. But there is a backlog of 7,500 cases. Some of the people who presently have appeals based on a bona fide difference of opinion with the Immigration Department as to their qualifications under the points system will be old men and women, have children and grandchildren before their case is reached. In the meantime, they will be suspended in limbo if the silly program which now exists and this inaction is allowed to continue.

This problem has to be resolved. I am not advocating or implementing any philosophy, "a la Joe Sedgwick", that we are going to answer this question. The system is arbitrary, and has substituted a so-called administerial discretion by a bureaucratic discretion. Any person who dares to object to an assessment of points under such a system must face a special inquiry and be subject to a deportation order before he can get to the Immigration Appeals Board.

Mr. Haidasz: Shame!

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There is nothing more degrading, more intimidating or more of an administrative blackjack than this requirement that an immigrant, particularly one allowed in as a visitor who has made application for immigrant status to be given, say, 45 points, and then presumes—I would guess that the immigration officials even say "dares"—to question the assessment. He must go the deportation route before he can get an adjudication on his qualification on points since the Supreme Court of Canada has decided that the Immigration Appeals Board is competent to do that. One would almost think that this pile-up of appeals is part of a calculated program by immigration officials to get at the Immigration Appeals Board, to so jam up the system that something has to be done. There is something rotten in the whole set-up.

As my last point, Mr. Speaker, if I may, I should like to speak about the RCMP.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired but he may continue with the leave of the House.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I wish to thank hon. members, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not abuse the privilege. The last point I wish to make deals with a subject I have raised in this House this week, and in public last week, with regard to change in the administration policy about the designation of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —on buildings, on automobiles and on boats. I grant that this was not instituted yesterday nor by the present minister. But, Mr. Speaker, it has now become focussed in the minds of the public because of some glaring examples of what the minister says is merely administrative policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Since when is administrative policy not to be reviewed in public? What sacrosanct bureaucrat is entitled to say it is purely administrative and therefore there is nothing to it? Mr. Speaker, the minister is not honest with the people in regard to this.

Mr. Kaplan: Shame!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) can go out to Saskatchewan or Alberta or Manitoba where the RCMP have a fuller profile than in central Canada. This year the province of Alberta was preparing to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the original force behind the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. We are now told that they are going to be just "police" for greater identification. What arrant nonsense! All I can say is that the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) should meet with the bureaucrat responsible for this decision and if it is a commissioner's decision then the commissioner should appear before the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to explain. Why is it that ordinary citizens, without any organization behind them, signed a telegram—11,500 of them—and sent copies to the Prime Minister and myself. Why is it that I have petitions from kids, and telegrams. My colleague from Vegreville (Mr.

Mazankowski) has a telegram. I am told that there are in excess of 1,500 names on it, and it comes from a town that does not count 4,000 inhabitants. Protest has arisen in New Brunswick about this matter. This is not a question involving bilingualism; it is one involving the identification of the force. When I am outside "K" Division Headquarters in Edmonton, I want to see the coat-of-arms of the RCMP without having to get out of my car and walk up to the plaque to be able to read, "Royal Canadian Mounted Police". I do not want to see just the word "Police". I want to see that it is "K" Division of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

• (1230)

In the town of St. Albert, where there is a detachment of either 18 or 20 Royal Canadian Mounted Police force personnel who act as municipal police and provincial police, I want, when I come to their headquarters, to see clearly the words, "Royal Canadian Mounted Police". Anybody who says that tourists or the public want to be able to identify that force with the word "Police" instead of with the initials "RCMP", is crazy, because the letters RCMP stand for one thing and one thing only, one of the best police forces in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am not trying to butter up anybody when I say that. Why identify the force just as ordinary police, and I am not in any way degrading any local police forces. Surely, we must consider the identification of the RCMP.

Mr. Ryan: And the history of the force.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I hope the minister will reply, and not say something like "Oh, but this does not bother anybody very much." He was on radio last night and so was I. Of course, in the province of Quebec the RCMP show a low profile. Their duties do not bring them in regular contact with the people of the province. The same is true of Ontario. In these provinces there are efficient, competent and sizeable municipal and provincial police forces. This is not always so in the rest of Canada. In many communities of western Canada the RCMP carry out very efficiently the duties of municipal police. The crime rates in those areas show the results of their presence. So, on almost the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the RCMP, we come down to this: they are to be shown as Police and, in small letters, presumably underneath, they will be identified as RCMP or Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Soon they will be so identified at the bottom of the decals on the side of police cars. They will be shown as RCMP where the slush and mud can cover those letters. What we want to see today on the door of a police car is "RCMP" above the crest. That is what we want.

Some hon Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to support the amendment moved by my colleague from Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander).

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, may I say that congratulations are in order for the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie). They both acquitted themselves eloquently in the best tradition of parliamentary democracy. I think we listened with enjoyment to their remarks.

In the Speech from the Throne His Excellency stated:

> Throughout, pressures for change around the world emphasized to us that the excitement and the promise of modern technological achievements become hollow and mocking to those who find in society little understanding of their hopes and little provision for their needs.

He continued:

> Economic security is one of the most effective forces with which to counter social isolation. Job opportunities must be found and income uncertainties overcome if all Canadians are to share in the richness of this land.

Together with my colleagues on this side of the House and, I am sure, the majority of members in this chamber, I am in profound agreement with those words and I want to relate my remarks to them. I do so, not only because of my personal convictions, but because I am associated with a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), a government, a department and, indeed, a minister with a deep concern for those in need and those threatened by economic insecurity.

For almost two years I have worked with a minister who has demonstrated beyond question that he cares about people and has compassion for them. If he were in the chamber he would be embarrassed to hear me utter these remarks.

An hon. Member: He certainly would be.

Mr. Perrault: A great many measures which have been advanced by the minister and by this government are overwhelming evidence of the government's concern for people. The newly appointed Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey), with the full support of his colleagues, has advanced social legislation of real worth. Many members of this House have supported that legislation. Within the ambit of the Department of Labour there have been such advances as equal pay for similar work, maternity leave, severance pay, provision for individual and group notice and an end to loss of employment because of the inequities of garnishee. While he was Minister of Labour, with the support of our Prime Minister and his colleagues, he introduced proposals to revise the old Industrial Relations and Disputes investigation Act. Among its several provisions is one designed to enhance the security of Canadian workers confronted by the impact of disruptive technological change.

If the minister were not incapacitated he would be speaking here today in my stead and discussing with hon. members the subject of unemployment insurance. I am pleased to tell you that he will be back soon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Perrault: He wants me to express to members in all parts of the House his thanks for the letters, cards and expressions of sympathy which have come from all sides of this House.

A few months ago, with the overwhelming support of the House, support which extended at times to assistance in evolving details of the legislation, the minister brought into being the new Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Alexander: Oh, oh!

Mr. Perrault: At times, certain hon. members suggested changes and variations in the act. Hon. members associated with the committee, throughout the long hearings and the meetings that were held, attempted to construct what we hoped would be the finest program of unemployment insurance in the whole world.

An hon. Member: And you all failed.

Mr. Perrault: All hon. members agreed about the need for change and reform in those measures designed to provide income protection for the unemployed and those temporarily without work. Indeed, Canada and Parliament made history last year because, undoubtedly, even if one considers the difficult period of transition, the new unemployment insurance plan is the most advanced measure of its type in the whole world.

A few months ago I attended an international congress of those responsible for the administration of unemployment insurance schemes in many nations, and it was conceded that our program was the best and most comprehensive.

Mr. Ryan: Then, why is it not working?

Mr. Perrault: Here is a measure which recognizes the new social fact that job disruption can affect anyone. For this reason, unemployment insurance is now almost universal, or has been as of January 1, with 1.2 million Canadians having been added to the scheme and I think they are pleased to participate in the new unemployment insurance plan.

Eligibility requirements for benefits have been substantially modified, with the result that it is now much easier to qualify for benefits. The benefit level itself, up to $100 a week, is related to current earnings and there is provision for automatic adjustment to this benefit level in relation to a change in average earnings. Benefit duration is related not only to recent work history but also to prevailing economic conditions. A claimant assistance program has been established whose objective is to help claimants get work by providing job search information and guidance. The object, surely, Mr. Speaker, of this plan and other allied plans must be to assist the workers of Canada to return to useful employment as quickly as possible. That is why, when appropriate, claimants are directed to agencies for job placement, counselling or financial assistance.

• (1240)

Here is a measure which recognizes the fact that there are three million women in Canada's work force, with vast numbers of them providing their families with the economic margin between grinding poverty and a decent level of living, women who now have the right to pregnancy benefits when their earnings are interrupted by such natural events. Here is a measure which regards sickness on the job or off the job as an interruption of earnings, a measure which recognizes that family costs continue, regardless of the reason a breadwinner becomes ill. These and other important features of the legislation became available on June 27 last with full operation becoming effective last January 1.

I am well aware of the fact, as is the minister, that there have been criticisms of the plan and its implementation. Indeed, members from all parts of the House have demonstrated remarkable and commendable diligence on behalf of their constituent claimants. That is the job of all of us, wherever we sit in this House, to work for our constituents and make sure they are well served by the programs available to them.

Whenever a fundamental change as vast as this is introduced, inevitably a transition period, an adjustment period, occurs. Apart from the administrative challenges and the countless procedural considerations, there is the task of education. Even today, eight weeks after universality, about 80 per cent of the calls to Unemployment Insurance offices across Canada relate to matters other than claims. The majority are from people seeking information.

Having said all this, it is interesting to note, however, that while members have made known the problems of their constituents, none have asked abandonment of the plan because the unemployment insurance reforms in Canada were long overdue. We know that unemployment is critical to the individual regardless of a man's political belief or any other consideration. Parliament can be proud of its work. The task is to make the new plan work as effectively as possible.

I assure you that the criticism of Unemployment Insurance which has been voiced over recent months has not been dismissed lightly by the minister. You know him too well. You know him as one who gets things done, especially where people with problems are concerned. As a matter of fact, he is so busy at the hospital that he may have to come back to the House early in order to get a rest. No matter how few people are deprived of their legitimate benefits, and the number involved has been very small in comparison with the total, to those people, those families, it is a considerable tragedy and this government, in fact no government, can remain complacent while such need exists.

The minister has taken action. During the recent recess the minister held discussions with interested groups and Unemployment Insurance Commission officials to determine the validity of the criticism and to determine whether changes ought to be made in the processing of claims that would more effectively deal with the needs of the unemployed. The minister announced early this year that all claims filed would be reviewed to determine if in fact there was cause for special measures. While individual delays cannot be excused or avoided, it is a fact that the vast majority of all claims filed with the commission are processed within the prescribed time. Some hon. members have asked what is the "prescribed time". The suggestion is that our concept may be different from theirs.

The new act provides a two-week waiting period before payments are made. In effect, this means that when a claim is filed a person must have had a two week gap in his earnings. Since payments under the act are made in arrears and since a claimant must declare that he was in fact unemployed and available for work for the period of his unemployment, it stands to reason that payments are not normally made until the fourth week of unemployment.

The investigation conducted by the commission identified three main areas of claim delay. First, some claimants fail to complete their application forms accurately. I believe the claim reform is now in its sixth review. We have invited the Canadian Labour Congress and other interested bodies to suggest form modifications which will make it as simple as possible for the claimant to file his application. Second, some employers fail to provide employees with their contributions records or their separation certificates. Third, a number of errors occur in the processing of the claims. That is not denied.

The commission has undertaken an extensive effort to provide claimants with detailed information in order to assist them in understanding the procedures involved and to help them complete their forms accurately. The commission has established, in addition to its regular offices, an extensive network of service centres for the purpose of giving effective service to claimants. The commission is continuing its efforts to identify problem areas and to evolve more effective means of dealing with claims.

It can be said that in recent weeks there has been a substantial improvement in claims processing. Members will recall that last week the minister announced the results of a survey he had requested of all claims filed since December 1971. The survey revealed that a majority of claims had been delayed through a lack of vital information from either the employer or the claimant. Some 5,000 claims, less than 1 per cent of the total claim load, were discovered to have been late.

I remind hon. members that 600,000 cheques are processed every two weeks. In the month of January, there was a payout of $130 million. This is a massive program. Every effort is being made to reduce delays to that irreducible minimum. In saying all this, I do not deny that the problems of the 5,000 were very real. Understandably, they were not interested in statistical analysis. They were not interested in a debate between the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and opposition critics on the subject of statistics. I think all of us are concerned about the individual and his well being.

No one denies the right of working Canadians to receive unemployment insurance benefits when their earnings are interrupted, but I want to say a brief word about another group of workers who deserve consideration. They are the workers of the Unemployment Insurance Commission who have been confronted with the heavy burdens imposed by the transition period. They have put in many hours of overtime in recent weeks or months. They are workers in their own right—workers without a right to reply in many cases to the criticism which has been directed against them. Like all of us, they make mistakes, but they are a remarkably efficient group. I think members will agree that reported cases of delay are dealt with promptly by the commission personnel.

At times they have been criticized most unfairly by the media and some members of the House.

I suppose it may be tempting for some to traffic in human misery.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Perrault: But, fortunately, most of the media and the members have resisted this temptation. Most of the members have been very cooperative. On behalf of the minister, I thank them. However, there are exceptions. Was the public interest served a while back when wide publicity—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Gleave: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I object to the remark of people trafficking in human misery. All of us have had to do a lot of work with regard to the problem of Unemployment Insurance claims. I do not mind the parliamentary secretary defending his employees. That is probably his responsibility, but it is not right—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that this is hardly a point of order. It is a matter of debate between the hon. member and the parliamentary secretary. Perhaps the hon. member might want to take part in the debate later.

• (1250)

Mr. Ryan: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, may I say that the hon. member is in that great majority of members who have attempted to make this plan work, and I am pleased to take this opportunity of so stating; but there have been other examples where the responsibility of certain statements made both inside the House and outside can be questioned.

Mr. Alexander: Why don't you withdraw your remark?

Mr. Perrault: It may be tempting for some to criticize the plan, but I ask was the public interest served awhile back when wide publicity was accorded to a claimant who filed a claim for benefit and who complained of inexplicable delays in getting paid? It was determined that this lady had been advised within days of filing her claim that she did not have the required labour force attachment to qualify. However, the news story dealing with this case completely ignored this fact. What was even more unfair was that the article went on to describe the personal difficulties of the person, stating that she and her family were faced with unnecessary hardship as a result of commission inefficiency. I do not think that was fair.

Last Saturday a story appeared in the Globe and Mail to the effect that the computer had produced 300 blank cheques. First of all, this is not technically possible on the computer. It could occur on an ordinary piece of equipment that is still used for some payments, and this piece of equipment is called the "interpreter". After an exhaustive and costly search throughout last weekend, the commission identified the possibility that one such cheque could have been produced several weeks ago.

Then, the hon. member talks about unfair statements on my part. Let me give a specific example which should be brought to the attention of this House. A question was asked in this House on February 18 by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), who made the breathless allegation that 5,000 claims could not be processed in the commission's Montreal pay centre and had to be moved to Belleville for processing.

What are the real facts? It is a standard emergency procedure, in any pay centre and in any operation of the magnitude of the commission's, to have standby facilities in case of snow storms or other situations which could backlog the work. In fact, however, no work from the Montreal region was done at the Belleville computer centre last week or in the recent past. Yet, the member chose to make an issue of a perfectly prudent provision of administration which anyone should be happy to know is available to meet problems.

The hon. member went on national television to, in effect, tell people from coast to coast that they could not have confidence in the Unemployment Insurance Commission because of these alleged procedures. What does the hon. member want to prove? I will let him answer that question, but my advice to him is simply that if he wants to seek out so-called "informants" from within any government organization, he should at least retain reliable informants. Better still, he should check his allegations with responsible people.

Much has been said about the unemployment insurance service in Bathurst. Indeed, in recent hours there have been reports of public demonstrations there. The Bathurst office is served by a staff of 17 in recognition of the varied problems which can arise in a community of 15,000 people. The claim load in the Bathurst office is in the area of 10,000. Last week, 172 cases of alleged delay in payment were presented at the Bathurst office. To begin with, 32 of these cases were duplicates. Of the net total of 138, 22 cases involved some form of delay. Among the 22, those entitled to payment have been paid. Twenty-two out of 10,000! Not good enough, but pretty good.

Perhaps the best answer to those critics of the service in Bathurst is to be found in a report from the Moncton Times dated February 23. In part it reads as follows. The headline is "Claims Reports Blown Up—Labour Federation".

> The New Brunswick Federation of Labour says the claims crisis at the Bathurst Unemployment Insurance Commission has been blown out of all proportion.
>
> Greg Murphy, the federation's secretary-treasurer, said Tuesday that the Canadian Labour Congress in Ottawa had learned that there were not nearly as many claims outstanding as had been reported by protesters.
>
> Mr. Murphy was commenting on a statement released by federation president Paul LePage which said that information received from meetings in Ottawa "conflicts" with reports they had received from the regional development organization known as CRAN.
>
> The Secretary-treasurer said officers of CRAN had contacted the NBFL complaining about the claims situation and looking for financial aid to support continuing demonstrations at the Bathurst UIC office.
>
> He said the federation refused the financial aid, but decided to have the Canadian Labour Congress in Ottawa investigate.

Mr. Speaker, some members opposite say that they are allies of the Canadian Labour Congress. There may have been a communications problem in parts of the UIC, but there is certainly one between the CLC and certain hon. members opposite. The article continued:

> They found, he said, "that there weren't nearly as many claims as CRAN said there were."
>
> "This thing has been built into a bigger thing than it actually is."
>
> Nevertheless, he said, the CLC in co-operation with the NBFL has appointed Bill Craig, a steelworker representative in Saint John to act as a special CLC representative in the Bathurst region.
>
> "All legitimate claims will be channeled through Mr. Craig," he said. The CLC representative would then meet with UIC officials to do what he can to straighten out the matter.
>
> Mr. Murphy said the CLC representative would act on behalf on any person, whether labour oriented or not.

That is a constructive approach on the part of the CLC. In marked contrast to the half-truths and rumours and other kinds of tawdry and tattered reports which have been hauled into this House by certain members, the CLC, Mr. Speaker, acted with a sense of responsibility.

Today another report was brought breathlessly into this House by one of the hon. members opposite. He declared that in excess of 200 claims in New Brunswick were being delayed beyond the number of days mentioned by me earlier this day during the question period. Let me tell the hon. member that if he would get on the telephone he would determine that all these claims have now been fixed up. So, let us check our facts first, whether we are on the government or on the opposition side, before levelling criticisms against this great plan.

I repeat that when a man is unemployed it is dangerous and immoral to traffic in his human misery. And one does traffic in human misery by failing to check ones facts.

Mr. Orlikow: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Perrault: If the object of the Bathurst demonstrators was to draw to the attention of the UIC and the government certain problems that were confronting one segment of the population, then they have made their point. The service at Bathurst has been measurably improved, and I would be pleased to enumerate these improvements for hon. members.

One can well understand the sense of frustration at high unemployment levels. Indeed, efforts are underway at both federal and other levels of government to increase employment and to stimulate industrial development. If I were unemployed and were living in New Brunswick, I, too, might participate in jobless parades. Indeed, I suggest any hon. member might. But I say that in choosing the Unemployment Insurance Commission as their target, I believe that as of today these Bathurst demonstrators are misguided. Their point has been made. Further demonstrations—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Perrault: May I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member, but it being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier in the debate, one can understand the sense of frustration in Bathurst arising from high unemployment. Efforts are proceeding at the federal level and at other levels of government to increase employment and to stimulate industrial development. But the point has been made. Further demonstrations are self-defeating. Indeed, such demonstrations do a positive disservice to those who have a right to unemployment insurance benefits. The disruption of procedural routine in the UI office in Bathurst can only mean hardship for those who are out of work.

In recent days a number of demands have been made that the question of unemployment insurance be brought before the appropriate standing committee of the House of Commons. I would remind hon. members of the words of the minister on February 15, when he said:

> I am well aware that delays which did occur in December and January and which we have now corrected have been of considerable concern to Members of Parliament. As soon as parliament reconvenes I would welcome an invitation from the chairman of the House committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration to take the initiative to have the situation reviewed by his committee. It may be that a great deal of the concern which has surrounded the situation stems from an incomplete understanding of what the claiming of unemployment insurance entails. Purely as a suggestion, therefore, I believe it would be most important that the committee should take the time to visit and study the operations of the Commission within its offices. We shall spare no effort to make sure that Members of Parliament have every opportunity to examine the operation of the claims process and to make any recommendations they see fit.

The minister has asked me to reiterate his desire to have this matter brought before the appropriate standing committee, not in order that there may be a partisan political debate but in order to determine how we can make the world's best unemployment insurance program work at its most satisfactory level of efficiency.

As hon. members know, before this matter can be considered by a standing committee the House must debate the question and must refer the matter to Committee. However, I am encouraged to learn that the standing committee will be meeting next week. Hopefully, early committee meetings will be held to discuss the question of unemployment insurance. The matter under discussion next week is, I believe, the committee's organization and procedure. Hopefully, meetings to discuss unemployment insurance will take place after the House has taken appropriate procedural action.

• (1410)

In recent days the suggestion has gone forth that there should be more offices established, more telephone lines, more staff and more computers. Let me give you some figures. Prior to implementation of the new act there were 65 full time offices and 67 localities where services were provided on a part-time basis of one to three days per week. There are now 119 full-time offices and 85 localities where service is provided on an itinerant basis of one to three days per week. Furthermore, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) has made quite clear that the close to 400 offices of his department will assist in every way possible in dispensing co-ordinated services with the Unemployment Insurance Commission. This process of integration is well advanced. Today, in at least 43 localities across Canada UIC offices are located in the same buildings as Canada Manpower Centres. While the UIC works with Members of Parliament, unions, companies, welfare groups and other organizations, the doors, the telephones and the mails of the UIC are open to all and the capacity to meet the public by all these means has been multiplied many times in the past few years.

Unlike other organizations, including most welfare agencies, which operate only on a scheduled interview basis, the UIC meets people and answers their inquiries as they come. There are approximately 1500 employees alone whose task is to answer inquiries. Last year 8 million inquiries were handled. This year, the annual rate will be about 12 million. Special attention is not accorded to Members of Parliament or the unions or the social agencies—

An hon. Member: What about the special phones.

Mr. Perrault: —but to the claimants because these officers are appointed to serve people regardless of political stripe. In fact many MPs and many elected members at other levels have gone out of their way to seek out problems and it is their right to do so as representatives of the people. In this regard, the minister wants to thank the many Members of Parliament of all parties who have written to him and to the UIC thanking them for their help. The commission, as an agency dealing directly with a large public, deals with more than 6 million employees, more than 400,000 employers and more than 1.5 million individual claimants in a year. The commission has always tried to co-operate with the people's representatives as a matter of policy and service.

In summary, lest we all become confused by the great welter of statistics which has been showered down on us in recent months, I should like to outline to hon. members just what would happen to, say 100 claims filed with the Unemployment Insurance Commission today. First of all, all 100 would receive a notification of the status of their claim within two weeks. Eighty-eight would be told that their claim is in order and they would receive a cheque within a week or 10 days. Ten would be notified that payment of their claim would be postponed or disallowed for any number of reasons including participation in a labour dispute, vacation pay, severance pay, non-availability, voluntary quits, and so on. Two of these 100 would be told their claim cannot be processed for payment unless missing information is supplied or explanations are provided as to discrepancies in information supplied by claimants and their employers.

In any event, the Unemployment Insurance Commission paid out $102 million last December as compared with $60 million in December 1970, and $130 million this January as compared to $85 million last January. In both months the rate of unemployment was more this year than last. This would indicate to me that not only is someone getting paid but that the welfare savings in respect of unemployed unemployables must be substantial, totally apart from the job-creating impact of these dollars.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary but the time allotted to him has expired, unless he has the unanimous consent of the House to continue. Does the House give its consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Five minutes.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the members of the House for their courtesy. As I was saying, this "payout" indicates to me that not only is someone getting paid but that the welfare savings in respect of the unemployed must be substantial, totally apart from the job-creating impact this kind of money means for the economy. It is estimated, for example, that in the year 1972 welfare services across Canada will be saved $80 million as a result of this new Unemployment Insurance plan with its lower eligibility. It is no wonder that the Toronto welfare administration stated the other day that substantial savings are being realized in the greater Toronto area as a result of the new Unemployment Insurance plan.

Whenever particular cases are brought to our attention or to the attention of the commission they are investigated immediately and corrective action is taken if necessary. But again let me emphasize that in most cases many delays have been found to be outside the control of the commission staff itself.

There has been a great deal of misguided criticism of the computer system which the commission has been using for the past three years. It is hoped that further sophisticated computer technology will assist the commission to provide even more efficient computer service across this country. It is always easy to try to find a single cause of blame such as the computer. The fact is that the introduction of the computer has enabled the commission to introduce procedures which speed up the processing of claims and avoid inconveniences and difficulties for the vast majority of people. I am sure no one would want to return to the humiliating days when people had to line up every week at the unemployment insurance office in order to collect their benefits.

It must be made abundantly clear that unemployment insurance is not welfare. It is an entitlement and the claimant must prove his entitlement by meeting all the conditions of the law and by providing all the information required to make a proper decision. There will always be conditions which postpone the payment of benefits because these conditions have not been met. People must be available, capable and searching for work and they must not be the cause of their own unemployment. The law is very clear on these points and postponement of benefits due to these reasons should not be viewed as delays.

Again, it should be said that the minister has indicated that he wants these and other matters to be discussed before the committee when the committee chooses to invite him to one of its meetings. I am convinced that a great deal of concern which has surrounded this situation results from an incomplete understanding of what the payment of unemployment insurance benefits is all about. I would suggest it would be useful for the committee to take the time to visit and study the operation of the Unemployment Insurance Commission within its offices.

We are aware of the fact as well that there is some difficulty in respect of vacation pay, holiday pay and associated matters. These questions are now under detailed review by the minister and by the department.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

Meetings have been held with representatives of the trade unions and submissions have been received from these and other groups in respect of these aspects. Hopefully the questions of holiday pay and severence pay may be clarified in the near future.

There is clear evidence that the publicity given by the media in recent weeks is having some beneficial impact because we are finding that claimants and employers are being more careful in submitting the proper information whenever a claim is filed. I suggest that once the public at large has become more familiar with the requirements of the program fewer delays will occur. I invite any member of the House to bring to our attention any case in which they feel there has been undue delay and I undertake to ensure that every situation will be looked into promptly. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, the Canadian Unemployment Insurance program, in our view, is one of the best in the world and I am confident that most of the major questions in the program will have been resolved in the very near future.

Let us all endeavour, without partisan disputation to make certain that this program works as effectively as possible. This is in the interest of all Canadians because unemployment does not exempt anyone because of his politics, religion or ethnic background. It is a personal disaster for that person. He must be provided with income support during that time when he is without funds and we must make sure that this plan works. The hon. members on both sides who have been very helpful in an effort to make unemployment insurance work better have the thanks of the department, the government the minister and, undoubtedly, the Canadian people.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, it is with a certain amount of nostalgia that I rise to speak in this Throne Speech debate on February 25, 1972 since, as a great many of you know, I have more or less burned my bridges behind me. A new, young, bright candidate who is to run under the banner of the Conservative party in my riding has been nominated. So I say with a feeling of nostalgia that this may be the last Throne Speech debate in which I will have a chance to participate.

• (1420)

While I am on that matter, I would like to say that I appreciate the camaraderie which has existed in this chamber throughout the years. The friendships, the associations and the goodwill have always been part of the feeling that I have had for this chamber and this has been accentuated by my associations with my colleagues on both sides of the House.

When I say "Thank you" I would like to say that I bear the same feeling toward all those who have occupied the Chair in which you are sitting today, Mr. Speaker, all the members of the staff who sit at the table and all the people who have made this organization work from day to day. It has been a tremendous experience for me. My days are numbered by what we call destiny or by the Lord, but my days in the House of Commons are numbered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of Canada. It is as simple as that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howe: On the occasion of the nomination meeting in my riding I was much impressed by the fact that seven outstanding Canadians presented their names for the opportunity to represent our party in that part of the world. It was also gratifying to note the tremendous interest that was created at that meeting. We had the biggest meeting that I have ever seen, probably because I was leaving and getting out of the picture. At any rate, over 900 people attended that meeting in my own village that night. It gave me a tremendous feeling of satisfaction that through the interest that was created at that meeting I was assured that the young individual who had been chosen that night was going to come to the House and sit on the same side of the House as the Conservative party. I feel that the reason the interest was created was probably that the people are beginning to realize that our leader, the Hon. Robert Stanfield, is an honest, sincere man and a great organizer who will be given the opportunity to lead this country after the next election campaign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howe: Having said that, I would like to join all those who, as is customary in the Speech from the Throne debate, have congratulated the mover and seconder who brought honour to themselves and to their particular areas by being chosen for this duty. Probably the one whom I know best is the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), and I would like to say a word about the things he said in the House that day. As I remember the comments that were made about him when he was a member of the Ontario legislature, he was at that time considered to be one of the most quiet and sedate people. He spent a great deal of time criticizing the government of Ontario. I have watched him in the House and I have noticed that it is a little hard for him to sit quietly on the government benches when he feels that things are being done with which he does not entirely agree. However, the peons of praise that he heaped on the Trudeau government would appear to have all the earmarks of the preacher preaching for a call. Someone started the rumour that he may be slated for the Senate one of these days. No doubt he is one of those members who make cabinet ministers wince at caucus meetings, so probably they will be glad to get him out of the chamber and into the Senate where he might be a little quieter.

Having spent a great deal of time in my riding, which adjoins that of the hon. member for Bruce, I have the suspicion that the great flood of oratory he released upon this chamber was engendered by the criticism of the government which was heaped upon his head during the Christmas recess. If he took the course which I did of speaking to individuals and groups, he must have found it appalling that a government which had just three and a half years ago risen to such peaks of national popularity by the use of such catch phrases and charisma as the just society and participatory democracy should have engendered the oft repeated phrase which I heard during the recess, namely that Trudeau must go. I was flooded with this during the recess. One wonders how this could have happened in such a short time. Probably the Chamber of Commerce summed it up best in their brief to the government on January 31 of this year when they said the following:

> As a matter of fact, Mr. Prime Minister, during the year 1971 the chamber had over 125 substantive contacts with you, members of your cabinet and their officials, and Senate and House of Commons committees, including representations on most of the major legislative issues facing parliament last year. Despite this, I think it would be fair to say that, at the present time, there is a certain feeling of confusion and frustration on the business side with respect to business-government relations. There is a feeling among businessmen that even if they are being listened to, their views are not being understood by some government policy makers. There is a feeling that they are not getting through to those in government responsible for decision-making. There is a feeling of impatience among businessmen that their attempts to develop strong, growing enterprises are not appreciated, or sympathized with, by some responsible government representatives.

This brief was presented on January 31 of this year. Just the other day someone asked the Prime Minister in the House what the government had done to allay the confusion among the business world which started last fall. We all remember the group of businessmen who came to Ottawa in late November or early December, about the time we were discussing the tax bill. We all remember, too, how they went away shaking their heads because they were not any more knowledgeable about the tax bill when they went away than when they had come. They were disturbed and confused by the number of regulations and controls that had been presented to them. As I said, the other day the Prime Minister said that all these problems were solved by the budget in October and by the fact that the government had stabilized the dollar. He said that there is no more confusion in the business world, that it had all been straightened out. This is not true because this brief was presented on January 31 and the budget was brought down in October.

I should like to make one final quotation from this brief which substantiates what I have been saying. It refers to the tax reform and reads:

> We would like to stress that, in the final result, the actual process involved in the development of the tax reform legislation created a very high degree of uncertainty and confusion among persons who must make decisions having a direct bearing on the forward thrust of the Canadian economy.

The words "confusion" and "uncertainty" are reiterated time and time again. This feeling does not only occur among businessmen. It also occurs throughout every segment of our economy. The fact is that this confusion and frustration were not only felt by the members of the business community but by the thousands of unemployed, thousands of old age citizens who find their life savings melting away under the onslaughts of our uncontrolled inflation, and by the small businessmen and farmers who could not comprehend the complexity of the capital gains tax and its effect on their personal holdings.

Is there any wonder, when one looks at this mess, that the chorus was unanimous from all quarters in my own riding that Trudeau must go? It is easily seen that the government appreciates that its stock has dropped to a very low ebb. Today one hon. member put a question to the minister in charge of Information Canada. He asked why the department was spending an extra $52 million, or some such figure, on government information services. We know that the government is disturbed about what people are thinking because everyone is being flooded with these pamphlets, such as this one entitled "Highlights for Individuals—Tax Reform and You", and "Rental Income and Undeveloped Land—Tax Reform and You", and "Goodwill and Similar Assets—Tax Reform and You", and "Valuation Day—Tax Reform and You". And so it goes, Mr. Speaker. Floods of information and material come out of government offices trying to explain to the people of Canada what all this legislation means to them. But they cannot understand it; they do not know what to do and so are confused and disturbed. They feel that we must have a change.

• (1430)

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration spoke about the situation at Bathurst, and other members have talked about the confusion at unemployment insurance offices. I have here a letter that just came yesterday from a man who has not worked since November 23. When I wrote to the minister about this on January 26 the man had not received a cent of unemployment insurance. It is interesting to note that, according to the letter from the minister's office, all of a sudden on January 24 a computer payment of $486 was made and the next day a manual payment of $437 was made.

Where is this great organization, this great unemployment insurance program that the parliamentary secretary claims is the greatest in the world? When I hear the hon. member for Bruce and the parliamentary secretary talk about programs like the unemployment insurance, the veterans' affairs and the old age pension being the greatest in the world, I wonder what the man in the moon is thinking. We will be up there one of these days. Will they be the greatest program up there, too, or on Mars? I have sat in this House for a number of years, Mr. Speaker, and I know the problems that exist from province to province and region to region. You cannot take the programs that work in other countries and expect them to work here. They talk about our programs being the best in the world but a lot of people, particularly the unemployed under 24 years of age trying to find work with no hope for the future, are not so sure that they are the best.

The Globe and Mail which carried the headline about Bathurst has another headline "35 per cent out of work in building unions—highest rate ever". I was a member of the government that inherited the tremendous unemployment problem in 1957-58. It was not created by the Conservative government but was inherited from an overbearing government that had sat for over 22 years. What did the Conservatives do about it? They brought in the winter works program. Last year in this House it was suggested that in view of the unemployment situation the Prime Minister should initiate a winter works program, but we were told that this was an outmoded approach and would not be used. Then, all of a sudden the Prime Minister saw the light. When he realized that the problem would not just go away, there was a crash program for employment and help to municipalities which was the same as the old winter works program. But the Conservative program had put a lot of carpenters, electricians and service people to work during the winter who had previously been drawing unemployment benefits. They were given jobs to help householders fix their premises. The slogan was "Why wait for Spring—Do it now" and it was successful.

[Mr. Howe.]

Last fall an organization of people engaged in construction presented a brief to the government pointing out that the cost of a house had increased by approximately $1,000 in the last year and suggesting that removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials would help reduce that increase. Nothing was done about that.

There has been a lot of talk about providing housing for people on middle and low incomes. Even if some of these people could manage to buy a home, they could never manage to get it paid off. Surely, the insurance companies and banks, even the Bank of Canada, could sit down together and find a way of reducing interest rates so that the average individual could afford to buy a house. With interest rates of 9 per cent or, 10 per cent and 15 per cent or 20 per cent on second mortgages, it is pretty difficult for the average individual to manage, even if he can get the down payment together. It means that he will carry a load for the rest of his life. There was nothing in the Speech from the Throne about help in these two areas.

Mr. Speaker, when I first participated, in a Speech from the Throne debate on December 1, 1953, I spoke about the importance of decentralizing industry. In the area I represent there are small communities which have been crying out for industry and assistance from governments for many years. They would like to get a little factory or something to provide employment for young people graduating from high school so that they would not have to leave the area. I have been calling for this for years and on December 1, 1953, I used the following quotation, which appeared at page 530 of the Hansard of that date:

> We have heard it said, and we presume that it was meant seriously, that it was the desire of our great leaders to decentralize industry and to build up the smaller communities where the labour situation is easier and the living costs are less.

After the end of World War II, we lived under the threat of atomic warfare but today I think we have a greater challenge, that of pollution and destruction of our natural environment due to the urban sprawl which is causing so many problems. When the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) was in charge of housing he talked about satellite cities as did his successor. One of the reasons I have been so interested in the location of the international airport to be built some place north of Toronto is that I know it to be a slow growth area. Many communities there have lost population over the last 25 years. In a township in my riding there are 67,000 acres and only about 50 active farmers, so it could accommodate the airport. It would create incentive for all the little towns and communities and enable them to grow. I think this is a matter worthy of serious consideration and that is why I presented a motion in the House recently.

• (1440)

I sometimes feel that big decisions involving 50,000 or 100,000 people should not be left to the bureaucrats in the deputy minister's office to make but should be made by all members of the House. I think a committee of this House should look at the sites in question, then sit down with the people of the area to discuss the matter. That way the best interests of the people concerned and the best interests of the country will be maintained. It is the best way to consider the site of an international airport such as the one to which I am referring.

I know some will say that if the committee looks at any particular site or parcel of land, some people may assume that the government intends to establish the airport at that site, buy up land in the area and drive up land prices. Nevertheless, there are federal and provincial organizations that can take care of this sort of thing. Of course, if four different sites are looked at, for example, the committee could make its report or recommendation in camera, and that report can be forwarded to the officials of the department. I think that is the way a decision as vital as this ought to be taken. That is why, when I saw an item in the Toronto Star last Monday indicating that Pickering had been chosen as the site for the new international airport, I was disturbed. I knew interest had been displayed in the site. However, on calling the minister's office, I learned that no decision had been made.

Another reason for establishing a committee to look into this matter is that such a committee would stop speculation. As I suggested, the longer this process goes on the greater the number of areas of the province will be considered. People will start buying little bits of land here and there in the hope of making tremendous profits in case any particular piece of land is chosen for the airport.

I have always been interested in seeing that railroads that serve my particular area are maintained. However, four years ago the Canadian Transport Commission autocratically decided to remove all passenger service in my region north and west of Guelph and west of Stratford. This has been a slow growth area, and rail service is important to it. By removing the service, the possibility of growth and increase in the area is removed. When people want to establish a factory in any area, they first ask, "What kind of transportation is there in the area?" I raised this matter in the committee last year. I was sorry that the Air Canada strike made it impossible for the Committee on Transport and Communications to go to western Ontario and look at the situation first hand, because I do not think the decision to remove that train service was a valid one.

The regulations under the National Transportation Act provide that before any passenger train service can be removed there must be evidence of good alternative service. At the meeting in Owen Sound it was thought that the assurance there would be alternative service had been given. However, the bus service is inadequate. The service that is provided for most of the area is inadequate and inefficient, and has not improved transportation facilities in that part of western Ontario. I am concerned especially about elderly people who cannot drive their cars and who must use existing services. There may be a good bus service on the eastern side of the area; I concede that. However, an equal service has not been developed on the western side of this particular area. I feel that the committee in question should be set up as soon as possible to look into this whole matter. If possible, arrangements should be made for it to go to the area to hear the tremendous number of briefs which many people have prepared. So far, these briefs have not been used.

The committee could not make its trip to western Ontario because of the air strike. So, Mr. Speaker, I hope that this committee will meet soon and will consider the motion that was passed in the previous session of parliament. I think that a similar motion will be accepted by the House in the present session, and the committee will be able to go to western Ontario and look at the transport problems of the area. I am referring to the problem relating to passenger transportation. I hope the committee can assure the people of the area that adequate transportation facilities will be set up.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, it has been a pleasure to represent my constituents in the House of Commons. I feel, as I have tried to indicate, that given the situation that has developed in Canada and the trends which are being shown not only in my riding but right across the nation, after the next election the member who will come down in my place, as well as those who are sitting with me on this side of House, will be sitting on the government side, and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) will be prime minister of Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But not "and Howe"!

[Translation]

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, in the first place I must congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. The hon. members from Bruce and Trois-Rivières (Mr. Wicher and Mr. Lajoie) performed their task well, in view of the difficulty of commending the government while remaining realistic.

In his speech of February 18 last, the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) who most evidently sought to defend his government under general attack, attempted to convince us that all is as well as can be in Canada. For instance, he resorted to statistics to show that Canada had created more jobs than seven countries of Europe together, namely France, Germany, Belgium, Italy, the Netherlands, Sweden and Great Britain.

Mr. Speaker, it is quite easy to create jobs when hundreds of thousands of workers are unemployed, but when countries enjoy a low unemployment rate and have a shortage of labour, how can industry, or even governments, create jobs?

Mr. Speaker, we did hear the government state that they had found a solution to unemployment through development of new projects such as Opportunities for Youth, the Local Initiatives Program, and Regional Economic Expansion, which can be called the second election fund of the Liberal party, but all these dishonest plans will have cost Canadian taxpayers millions of dollars in order to convince them that an attempt is being made to find solutions to their problems.

• (1450)

Mr. Pepin: You rejected them.

Mr. Tétrault: I would ask the minister to repeat what he said as I did not understand.

Mr. Pepin: I was asking the hon. member whether those projects were rejected in his constituency, whether he recommended that his constituents refuse to participate in the Opportunities for Youth, Local Initiatives and Regional Development programs for the reason he has just given, that these programs were dishonest.

Mr. Tétrault: Mr. Speaker, to reply to the minister, when you can't have what you want, you take what is available.

Mr. Pepin: Even if it is dishonest?

Mr. Tétrault: That is just what the Liberal party is doing now. That is not what people want. They want something else, not the loans now being granted. Canadians will have to pay interest on the debts resulting from all those projects. We will never live long enough in Canada to pay off all those debts, or even the interest on them. That is the reason for my objections to those programs.

According to the National Institute Economic Review, published in March 1971, Canada is the greatest champion of unemployment, as compared with the above-mentioned countries. Western Germany, which was devastated by the World War II, has the lowest unemployment rate—0.7 per cent—whereas Canada's is 5.9 per cent, counting only registered claimants, and perhaps 7 to 8 per cent counting all unemployed persons.

What were the results of the promises made by the Liberal Party in 1968 for a just society?

We can therefore infer that unemployment exists not only among young people, although it is higher for them. Unemployment is increasing among workers of all ages and of both sexes.

A publication by Statistics Canada, dated September 1971 and titled "Unemployment Data" shows interesting figures on unemployment, besides indicating that since the Liberal Party came into power in 1968, unemployment has kept rising steadily in all sectors of the population. I quote:

BOTH SEXES	1965	1970
Age 14-19	65,000	117,000
Age 20-24	44,000	107,000
Age 25-44	93,000	157,000
Age 45-64	70,000	106,000
MEN
Age 14-19	43,000	74,000
Age 20-24	33,000	80,000
Age 25-44	78,000	125,000
Age 45-64	61,000	87,000
WOMEN
Age 14-19	22,000	42,000
Age 20-24	11,000	27,000
Age 25-44	15,000	32,000
Age 45-64	8,000	19,000

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister tries very hard, the ministers distribute gifts right and left to create thousands of useless and non-productive jobs; still, unemployment keeps going up in Canada. Amongst the young of 14 to 24, as well as amongst the workers of 25 or more, the rate of unemployment has grown increasingly in Canada since 1968, when the Liberal government came to power.

Mr. Speaker, recently I received a card—which my colleagues doubtless received as well—sent by Le Cheminot canadien and asking that pressures be made upon the government to obtain full employment. Here is what the card said:

An act on full employment guaranteeing all Canadians who are able and willing to work a job suited to their competence and skills and paying a decent wage.

Mr. Speaker, as my leader said recently, instead of calling for guaranteed full employment for all Canadians, that card should have called for a guaranteed salary for each and every Canadian, which is what Social Credit advocates.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberals seem to find that funny; however, we shall certainly have to change our system. There is talk of providing full employment, but if there is no work now, it is because we have too many products in Canada. Even if Canada has 600,000 jobless, production is abundant. Stores are full of goods. In Ottawa or Hull, in my own region, Lac Saint-Jean, everywhere, stores are filled to capacity, and they say: We must provide jobs. How can this be achieved when there is a surplus of products? There is the problem. That is why the Créditistes are calling for a guaranteed income for everybody. We must increase the purchasing power, so that people may purchase already existing products. Then, manufacturers will increase their production and everybody will be happy. This is what this government must consider.

Mr. Pepin: The situation is quite the opposite. Inventories are lower than ever and this is why imports have increased.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member has the floor and should not be interrupted.

Mr. Tétrault: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister will probably have a chance to explain himself later on.

I went to my constituency of Chibougamau where 450 miners have been on strike since December 18, 1971. I met a sizeable group of strikers and they asked me if the provincial and federal governments could not help them. I have done my utmost to get something for those strikers, but to no avail. They are getting $20 a week plus $2 per child to live in Chibougamau. Thus a family of five is getting $30 a week. Of course neither the provincial nor the federal government is to blame for those people being on strike. However, if a dog is not allowed to starve neither should we allow our citizens to starve. Yesterday I received a petition asking me to do something. Those people are in a bad spot. My leader, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), stated in one of his speeches that Canada should ban all strikes and that they should be settled by a council comprising union representatives, government officials and company executives.

This morning, I was listening to one of my colleagues who quoted the following statement by Mr. George Meany:

• (1500)

Strikes today just don't make sense.

That is a man who controls 16 million workers in the AFL-CIO.

Mr. Speaker, it is something quite new for a labour leader to make such a statement. However, I find it very logical, because in the province of Quebec itself, that is in Montreal, a traffic problem exists. People's lives are in danger, just because a strike has not been settled.

Mr. Speaker, the Throne Speech dealt with our international relations. I wonder what purpose such relations have served, if not to give rise to a large number of interest-free loans, not to say gifts to some countries. Yet, our country should, through the Bank of Canada, grant some credit based on national values and the initiatives of Canadians. My colleagues and I have often said this but, apparently, the hon. members opposite do not want to hear!

On October 21, 1971, an opposition day allotted to my party, my colleague the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) moved a motion, that I myself seconded, for the payment of the old age security pension at age 60, as well as to the wife of a retired person, whatever her age.

I stated on that occasion that in my riding I had come across many cases where married older citizens received only $135 a month because their wives did not have the age required to get a pension. This situation continues to be a daily occurrence. As recently as yesterday I received a letter about a similar case. What can you tell those poor people except that their situation is due to a government without understanding or concern. It is not an act of charity for the government to give our older people a reasonnable pension.

Mr. Speaker, what I am saying might sound rather pessimistic but, realistic as I am, I can only see this situation as being very gloomy.

This is where the Trudeaumania that prevailed in the 1968 election has brought us but this swollen prestige will surely be deflated in the next election. I am very cheerful when I think that for the first time in 100 years we will no longer have puppets to head Canada's government.

Mr. Speaker, I spoke a while ago about our national debt. I have here a newspaper clipping giving rather interesting figures on the subject of our debt. This article goes back to 1970.

Canada after 100 years of confederation had a public debt of over $38 billion in October 1970—

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, there are not many people who know how long it would take to count a billion in one dollar bills. A person could start at the age of 18 and would still be counting at the age of 75. Here is the rest of it.

Mr. Pepin: Why do that?

Mr. Tétrault:

—while the debt of the province of Quebec alone, including municipal, school and hospital debts, was then over $10 billion. In view of public debts so considerable one can wonder how long the citizens will be able to take it.

Mr. Speaker, it gave me great pleasure to say a few words and I hope hon. members will take those remarks in consideration.

• (1510)

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address in reply. They are a credit to the House, to their ridings and to their party.

I intend today to give an account of the measures taken by the government, since 1965, to do away with regional disparity in Canada.

When the expenditures of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion were under consideration on March 29, 1971, the minister (Mr. Jean Marchand) stated, and I quote:

When the department was established, I admitted that it would face considerable difficulties. A complete re-organization of what had been the basis of the Canadian economy for a century was required. I figured at the time that fifteen years would be required to effect such changes and to give them a solid foundation. We have, for a long time, been aware of the considerable unequality which exists between the people of the various regions of the country.

However to do away with that and to establish sound conditions which would ensure the progress of the whole of the Canadian people is not a task that can be done quickly. To say that one or two years are enough would not serve the interest of the Canadian people. To attain our objectives, we must consider our long-term economic potential and envisage social changes in a long-range perspective. Considering, however, the extent of the task, it is of the utmost importance that we act as rapidly as possible and in the most realistic manner possible. As a matter of fact, it is only in this way that we can ensure the development of our country and, in truth, its survival.

Mr. Speaker, I have quoted this statement in order to inform the House of the objectives of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

I am not trying to overstate the economic progress made in the Gaspé riding, and I urge the government to pursue its efforts.

I want to assure Canadians from prosperous areas that funds allocated by the government to regional development of the Gaspé peninsula and eastern Quebec have had good results, and I can show that there has been a real start upward in the area which I represent in this House.

In spite of a certain slowdown in the North American economy, the economic development of the Gaspé peninsula has progressed considerably, If the economic situation had continued in Canada after centennial year things would have been very different in eastern Quebec, particularly in connection with implementation of regional development programs. Even so, the unemployment rate is no higher in 1972 than it was back in 1963 when the Progressive Conservatives were in power.

The Gaspé area is recovering from a long illness, and the remedies provided by legislation concerning economic incentives, and especially by the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion, have contributed a great deal to its development.

The reforms proposed in order to reduce administrative costs at all levels of government have been accepted, and the population now recognizes the value of grouping services in centres and subcentres defined on the basis of economic or geographical considerations.

In the Gaspé Peninsula, and more specifically in my riding, six hamlets were closed down and most of the 225 families involved as well as the 220 households which were relocated as a result of the expropriations for Forillon park were moved to the designated service centres. The contribution of the government of Canada toward the purchase of the lands, the relocation grants and the housing subsidies to the families that lived in the hamlets and Forillon park now amount to over $10 million.

In conjunction with the development of the service centres, two hospitals were built thanks to a federal contribution of $1.5 million, and three composite high schools, thanks to another federal contribution of $2,138,000. Grants totalling $1.5 million were made for the construction of low rental housing units in the designated centres to enable the relocalization of those same people. Millions of dollars in grants also went toward the construction of water and sewage systems in the designated centres.

The Department of Public Works and FRED also granted over $8 million for the construction of fishing wharves and harbours.

With regard to the construction of the Gaspé airport, which cost $878,000, the government has just granted the town of Gaspé a subsidy of $210,000 for the construction of an air terminal, this through the winter works program of the Department of Transport. With regard to the highway system, since 1964 Ottawa has granted a subsidy of $13 million for repairs to Highway 6 located partly in the riding of Gaspé and partly in that of Matane. In addition, a $2 million subsidy was earmarked for building access roads to natural resources, which resulted in 1969 in the setting up of a new mining industry near Sainte-Anne-des Monts, by the McIntyre mining interests which invested $14 million in that new plant. That new plant now provides employment for 200 workers with a total annual salary of $1.6 million.

The production of Mines Madeleine Limitée during the first year of operation was about 20 million pounds of copper and 200,000 ounces of silver. Refined metal at this new plant accounts for a yearly gross value of $11.7 million. The Mines Madeleine Limitée contributed greatly to the economic and social recovery of the northern part of the Gaspé peninsula and I advise the directors of the McIntyre Mines Group to keep on with their prospection, in order to find other resources in the Gaspé subsoil.

With the help of subsidies from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the collaboration from the province of Quebec, Noranda Mines Limited undertook last year improvements of $110 million in its Gaspé Copper Mines Plants. It is estimated that the number of new permanent jobs that will be created in Murdochville, once the program is implemented, will increase by 280. The work should be completed by the end of 1973. The Gaspé inhabitants are grateful to the Noranda Mines Limited group who chose Murdochville as the site of those new plants and I hope that the eventual establishment of a copper refining plant in the Gaspé area is still being considered.

The Gaspesia Pulp and Paper Ltd Company, in Chandler, put in in 1968 a second newsprint machine, following a contribution from the federal government and economic incentives of about $2.7 million.

Mr. Speaker, the pulp and paper industry has already contributed very much to the economic activity in the povince of Quebec, but in the last few years—and everyone agrees—the pulp and paper producers have had a hard time because of stronger competition. Our costs are no longer competitive and some of our plants are no longer profitable.

In Gaspé, the Gaspesia Pulp and Paper Company Limited, from 1960 to 1971, invested $3.27 million for lumber operations, in order to improve its system, and $40.6 million in its Chandler plant, for the purchase of two newsprint machines, as well as for other capital outlays and also major repairs to its equipment, all this in order to produce newsprint instead of commercial pulp. The joint owners of the company, the New York Times, purchase 60 per cent of its annual production.

If some economists or politicians criticize the pulp and paper companies, holding them partly responsible for the present situation as a result of their lack of planning, such charges indeed do not apply to the directors of the Gaspesia Pulp and Paper Company Limited, in Chandler, since that company has streamlined its operation and its production in order to make its plant one of the best organized in the province. And I believe that those who achieved it should be commended.

Still under the same topic, that of regional development, I must say that two sawmills are presently under construction, one in Grande-Vallée and the other in Marsoui. The establishment of those two sawmills in my constituency would have been impossible without grants of about $956,000 from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

As concerns fisheries, the federal government contributed $2 million in 1967 for the organization of the fishing complex in Rivière-au-Renard, one of the most modern in eastern Canada.

For a fish-hatchery which is being built at Anse-Pleureuse, a $578,750 grant covering 75 per cent of its capital cost was allowed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion under FRED.

Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne reference is made to a policy designed to promote the tourist industry in this country, as well as the expansion of our network of national parks, and the assurance that vast areas of Canada will be preserved in their natural state for the enjoyment of this and future generations.

In Gaspé, we started off several years ago. We already have our Forillon National Park, tourist areas at Percé, Carleton and Mont-Saint-Pierre, thanks to the co-operation of the federal government. And I am deeply grateful to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) as well for those developments.

Under FRED, $2 million have been granted to the province to share in the development of the tourist areas in my constituency, that is Mont-Saint-Pierre and Percé, in addition to a sum of $350,000 affected by the federal Department of Environment for the construction of a wildlife interpretation centre in Percé, the second one in Canada, and work will be undertaken on March 1.

The Gaspé peninsula will undergo considerable economic development, thanks to the creation of the Forillon national park. It is expected indeed that the number of tourists in the Gaspé peninsula, which has levelled at 225,000 persons these past few years, will have tripled in 1976 to reach 700,000 visitors. As a result, there will be an annual cash input of some $42 million. The work in that park began in 1969 and in five or seven years, over $10 million will have been invested.

Mr. Speaker, that co-operation of the federal government since 1965 must not come to an end. Indeed, it must continue, and my statement confirms what His Excellency the Governor General said on February 17, 1972 in the Speech from the Throne and I quote:

—the government has worked to strengthen and promote the economies of the less developed regions of Canada.

I must congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cabinet.

Without the financial assistance of the federal government to regional development and the excellent co-operation of Quebec, all these achievements and several others still would have been nothing but a dream.

He who cannot recognize that there is in Gaspé a new start, thanks to the efforts of both governments, is blind. We shall always have some frustrated people, some malcontents, even if we pay them a trip to the moon, because they cannot adjust to change.

To end this retrospective, I wish to pay a tribute to the people of Gaspé and, in particular, to the municipal administrations, Chambers of Commerce and citizens' committees for their co-operation in these social and economic changes which have occurred in my riding. They all worked together in harmony and always suggested concrete and realistic solutions. Everything went on in a peaceful instead of a fighting mood.

Gaspesians are grateful to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and to all federal and provincial public servants for the interest they show for this tremendous development in our area.

Mr. Speaker, on another occasion I will have the opportunity to draw to your attention the concern showed by the Minister of Environment (Mr. Davis) for the development of our fisheries and the conservation of our marine resources.

I would now like to inform the House and Canadians of the recent Canada-Quebec agreement for the economic and social development of Eastern Quebec.

In October 1971, after the Canada-Quebec agreement had been signed, two British Columbia ministers, that is the Hon. Dan Campbell, Minister of Municipal Affairs, and the Hon. Ray. Williston, Minister of Lands and Forests, sent a letter to the mayors of Vancouver Island, suggesting that Ottawa was spending an additional $400 million in the Gaspé, and criticizing the federal regional development policy in doing so.

In that circular letter to the mayors of that area, Mr. Campbell says, and I quote:

• (1520)

[English]

As you will remember, in part the case was made on the basis of activities carried on by this particular federal department in other areas of Canada and the case was made that British Columbia certainly deserved equal treatment. I now have on hand another example which makes the present federal policy equally discriminatory. Indeed, when one considers that this most recent program is over and above any equalization payments or special deals the fact that discrimination exists becomes overwhelmingly clear.

In addition, in terms of the area involved with this particular program, a strong case can be made that this recent agreement is another example of the mismanagement of capital on a colossal scale. If one examines a $400,000,000 expenditure over 5 years assigned to an area which has a population of 220,000 one cannot help but express amazement that such an expenditure could be contemplated.

[Translation]

In his letter of October 5, 1971 to Mr. H. A. Moffat, mayor of Prince George, Mr. Williston said, and I quote:

[English]

Within the last couple of weeks a new program of assistance has been announced for the Gaspé region of Quebec. This marks a second attempt when a first program became bogged down after the spending of something more than one hundred million dollars on the paperwork without a development involving any physical accomplishment. The new five-year program commits the expenditure of four hundred eleven million dollars. The population to receive such assistance numbers about 240,000 people.

It is not my purpose to show that assistance should not be extended to the people in this section of Quebec. However, I do think that if there is this type of money available for help that the presentations made by both the province and the municipalities from British Columbia are worthy of some type of positive response. I am sure that if we do not protest the lack of fair treatment for our own people that we can be accused of poor representation on their behalf.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, referring to this Canada-Quebec agreement, I should note that it is not exclusively for the benefit of the Gaspé Peninsula, but also for the benefit of eastern Quebec and Magdalene Islands. The financial contribution of the government of Canada to this agreement is of assistance to our region but not to the prejudice of other provinces.

As I pointed out, this agreement does not affect only the Gaspé Peninsula but covers a territory of 17,000 square miles with a population of 335,000 and comprises ten provincial constituencies and six federal ridings.

It should be noted that the combined area of Vancouver Island and Prince Edward Island—12,000 and 2,000 square miles, respectively—is smaller than that of the eastern Quebec territory covered by the agreement. Let us now see what the overall objective of this agreement is.

The main industries in the region are forestry, mines, fisheries, tourism and agriculture. The major objective in these fields of activity is to raise the income of the people and to increase productivity in primary industries, which are the regional economic mainstay, through a training programme for adult manpower.

Let us examine these programs at length: That agreement provides for the integration and co-ordination of routine activities within various federal and provincial departments. This explains the inclusion, in whole or in part, of the regular budgets of several departments in this $411 million vote to which the province of Quebec is contributing $113,588,000.

The agreement provides for planned assistance to industrial development, urban infrastructures and transportation, but all in terms of each department's regular programs, in addition to a supplement of $153 million from the department of Regional Economic Expansion for a period of five years, thus representing a yearly contribution of $36 millions in new votes or $108 a year per capita.

The first agreement was signed in May 1968 for a five-year period and for an amount of $258,790,000, including federal and provincial contributions.

On March 31, 1971, only $71 million had been spent. This is why a new "agreement" was negotiated and signed on September 10, 1971.

As we can see most of the programs under this agreement are the same as those which profit the people of British Columbia in the regular estimates, and I would like to quote a few:

1. Department of Agriculture:
(a) farm consolidation
(b) research
(c) production development, etc.	$1.6 million
2. Department of Fisheries:
Premium for building fishing boats	$4.2 million
3. Department of Indians Affairs and Northern Development:
(a) Forillon National Park
(b) Historical sites and monuments	$8.6 million
4. Central mortgage and housing corporations:
(a) assistance to housing
(b) urban development	$2.51 million
5. Department of public works:
(a) warves
(b) harbours
(c) airports
(d) ferryboats	$25,875,000
6. Department of Manpower and Immigration:
(a) to facilitate adaptation to changes inherent to modernisation of factories
(b) adult occupational training
(c) mobility of Manpower	$91,750,000

The agreement calls for the spending of $7 million in 5 year for the development of the first national park in the province of Quebec in 105 years and I suggest that this amount is not excessive. How much have British Columbia and the western provinces received from the federal government for parks and historical sites in 105 years?

According to a report supplied to me by the Department of Indian Affairs, British Columbia has three national parks. In capital investment to operate those parks, the National Parks Branch has spent $14,620,763 from 1961 to 1971, and the maintenance expenses amounted to $11,659,-000 from 1966 to 1971.

In the province of Quebec, we are proceeding with the first national park at Forillon, and in British Columbia, they are proceeding at this time with the fourth national park, which will be named the Pacific Rim Park. If there is discrimination as far as parks are concerned, it is surely not in British Columbia.

As to fisheries, the agreement provides, as I said earlier, for $4,200,000 to be earmarked for the building of fishing boats, out of the program which calls for a grant of 35 per cent from this government.

Considering that British Columbia has the biggest fishing fleet in Canada, the fishermen of that province will certainly receive greater subsidies than those of Quebec under that program.

This shows, Mr. Speaker, that all the regular programs of federal departments are included in that "Canada-Quebec Agreement".

It is obvious from the table which I have quoted that the people of the Lower St. Lawrence, the Gaspé peninsula and Îles-de-la-Madeleine—and I see the hon. member from Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) is here—are no more favoured than those of other depressed areas in the country, such as Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

The statements made by the ministers of the British Columbia government on the "Canada-Quebec Agreement", as well as the recent attacks of the Attorney General of that province, the Hon. Leslie Patterson, who tries to question the constitutionality of equalization payments made to certain provinces, demonstrate the mentality of some politicians who seem to favor the creation of two classes of Canadians, by approving of poverty for some and accumulating wealth for others.

It is difficult to understand how ministers in a province like British Columbia can possibly send such mistaken letters to city councils. Had they only gone to the trouble of first asking for information from their devoted representatives, ministers or even backbenchers of the government party who come from that province, they would have obtained it and would thus have avoided another quarrel between eastern and western Canada. If this is the policy of the British Columbia Social Credit party, it is lamentable.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne states that the government is concerned about the fact that several communities are presently deprived of national broadcasting services and that about a million Canadians in some 260 localities have no television broadcasting service in their own language. The Government proposes, therefore, that the C.B.C. be authorized to extend its services in a comprehensive fashion and to utilize the capabilities of Canada's pioneer satellite communications system to assure within a five year period that at least 98 percent of Canadians are served.

I wish to congratulate the government for this initiative as a large percentage of the people in my riding do not have access to television programs.

Television has been in Canada for the past 20 years and it is a sad thing to realize that in certain areas, some families in order to get service in the first place have to buy from a group a $100 share in the cable television and afterwards they have to pay a monthly charge of up to $8.

On several occasions, I have met the Canadian Radio-Television Commission directors. Last year the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) came to Gaspé to assess the situation. I am happy to see that the CRTC maintains its priority requirements for distant places such as the Gaspé peninsula.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time is expired. With the unanimous consent of the House, he could continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Agreed.

Mr. Cyr: The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is the only one capable of remedying the situation. Therefore, this House should approve the necessary estimates in order that the CBC may extend its services to the Gaspé Peninsula and other areas which do not have television in their own tongue.

Today, Mr. Speaker, television is no longer a luxury but a necessity for the social, educational and cultural development of the individual.

• (1530)

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech made yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), his first speech in the House since he was dragooned into accepting that post. As I listened, I could not help but feel sorry for the minister. Here he is, young, handsome and wealthy, a completely bilingual Member of Parliament who wants—and I cannot blame him—to be prime minister of Canada when that post becomes open. When he was minister of justice he was able to change the bail procedures and propose legislation to outlaw wiretapping, issues which are certainly important to people like myself who believe in civil liberties but which are not the tremendous concern of the bulk of the Canadian people. These issues permitted him to project the image of being progressive and small "1" liberal.

Now, unfortunately for the Minister of Finance, he has been asked to take on a position which requires him to give the lead, to give the direction in which our economy will move in the next couple of years. The voice we heard yesterday was the voice of the Minister of Finance, just as the voice we heard in the past three or four years was the voice of the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Benson); but the words and thoughts expressed both in the speech yesterday and in the speeches of the former minister were the words and thoughts of the deputy minister of finance.

Over the years in which the former minister of finance held that position he made innumerable predictions, to which I will come back in a few moments, about how we were on the threshold of improving conditions so that unemployment would be reduced and the needs of the people met. Those predictions proved to be as false as the explanations of the minister were lengthy.

As I listened to the Minister of Finance speaking yesterday I found in his speech not a single new idea. There were some new words, and some new concerns were expressed which were good to hear, but there was not a single indication that the policies of the government have changed. So while the speech yesterday did not sound bad, and the speech in March will not sound bad, when we get to September, October, November and December of 1972 and the unemployment rates will not be much better than they are at present, the credibility of the Minister of Finance will disappear in the same way as the credibility of the former minister disappeared. When that happens, I am afraid that the opportunity of this Minister of Finance to become prime minister of Canada at some time in the future will disappear just as the snow in Ottawa and Winnipeg will disappear in the next couple of weeks or months.

Let me quote a couple of paragraphs from the speech made yesterday by the Minister of Finance. He said:

> Despite substantial progress in developing policies and mechanisms for guiding the economy, it still remains difficult to determine with precision the state of the economy and its direction at any given time. It follows that there are always difficulties in determining what levers should be pulled, with what force, and at what exact time, in order to bring about a correction in the course of the economy.

I submit that the economic advisers of this government, the deputy minister of finance, the governor of the Bank of Canada, the chairman of the unlamented Prices and Incomes Commission, and the secretary of the Treasury Board knew what was going to happen in the last couple of years. They knew what was going to happen in the last couple of years, Mr. Speaker, because they had the same information as other economists across the country. If one looks at the record it can be seen that economists like Professor Weldon of McGill University, Professor Blauer of Brock University and Dian Cohen who writes a column in the Toronto Star, as well as some of the best economists in the province of Quebec, were predicting precisely what would happen and saying that the policies adopted by the government would lead to the situation which we are in at the present.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker, the government advisers, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the then minister of finance knew what would happen. The events that took place were not an accident, not the result of ignorance but the result of deliberate choices made by the government and its advisers. The priorities set by the government showed that they believed that the problem which had to be faced in this country was inflation and they set out to deal with it, even if only temporarily. As a result, the economists I have mentioned predicted greater unemployment. Yesterday in the House the minister said:

> Throughout most of the 1960s the Canadian economy experienced the greatest period of sustained expansion in its history.

He left the impression that most Canadians benefited from that expansion. I have here a document entitled "Our Tomorrows", prepared by the Indian tribes of Manitoba and published in October, 1971. I should like to give a couple of illustrations of the situation in Manitoba regarding Indians who do not live in my constituency. I am not putting their plight on the record because I am not making a plea for people whom I personally represent, but I should like to quote from this document a couple of illustrations of their situation. At page 47 it reads:

> The infant mortality rate for Indian people is twice as high as that for the general population (including Indians) of Manitoba. Mortality among young adults is four times that of this general population. The Manitoba Indian population's morbidity rate from tuberculosis is appalling in itself, and ten times that of the general population (again including Indians).

Later, talking about the income of Indians, it reads at page 51:

> To indicate the extent of this poverty of the 32 per cent of employables living on reserves, male and female, ages 15-64 who have an earned income, only 4 per cent earned in excess of $4,000 in 1969. The balance of the population must depend completely or in part on social allowances or other state support.

Mr. Speaker, those facts ought to make every Member of Parliament and every Canadian citizen ashamed of the system which we have allowed to grow and exist in Canada. Later in his speech the Minister of Finance said:

> Since the fall of 1970, the growth of our economy has been accelerating in response to the progressively stronger stimulus injected by the federal government—

Well, Mr. Speaker, those of us who oppose the government's economic policy of trying to deal with inflation as its number one priority were calling on the government to implement expansionary policies for at least 18 months before it adopted them. Later in his speech the Minister of Finance said something which sounded a little different from the views of his predecessor. He said:

> Our most urgent and pressing task is to bring about a substantial reduction in the level of unemployment. Our goal, our objective, must be the provision of a job to every Canadian who is seeking work.

That sounds great, Mr. Speaker, but the record of this government should not give the people of Canada the right to feel that this government intends to take steps to achieve that end. I have said that the minister, I am sure on the advice of the deputy minister who certainly is not living in a state of poverty, goes back to the old argument put forward by the Prime Minister and the former minister of finance, and so we are back where we have been for the last three years. The minister then said:

> This leads me to what in my judgment is the fundamental problem of economic management. This is the problem of maintaining maximum growth of employment and production in the economy, while at the same time preventing the development of inflationary pressures which eventually could undermine the very foundations of the economy if allowed to go unchecked.

It was that kind of thinking which led the government to adopt its policies of restraint which have resulted in unemployment in Canada in the four Trudeau years being twice as high as it was in the four Pearson years.

Mr. Mather: As high as under the Conservatives.

Mr. Orlikow: My colleague from Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) says "As high as under the Conservatives," but he is wrong, Mr. Speaker. It is much higher than it was under the Conservatives. I want to put on record again the fact that we have heard these promises and pledges from the representatives of government for the last couple of hears, to the effect that things would get better. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that I have heard them ad nauseam. Let me put on the record a couple of examples of the promises and pledges. On November 12, 1970, the then minister of finance said:

> Recently I suggested publicly that on a seasonal basis .. unemployment had about reached its peak and expressed confidence that we could look forward to continued improvement.

When he made that statement we had an unemployment rate, seasonally adjusted, of 6.5 per cent. Some 14 months later, in January, 1972, it was 6.2 per cent. But he was not alone, Mr. Speaker. On March 18, 1971, the Prime Minister said:

> The government has taken a series of steps intended to alter the course of the economic policy ... Some time must elapse before these steps can be fully efficient.

Then he said:

> I think that all the economic indicators show that the economy is moving.

When the Prime Minister said that in March, 1971, the rate of unemployment was 6.2 per cent, precisely what it was eight months later in January, 1972. Then in April, 1971, the then parliamentary secretary to the then minister of finance said:

• (1550)

> The government is not prepared to accept an unemployment rate of 5 per cent to 6 per cent seasonally adjusted or otherwise, for the future.

That was in April of last year, Mr. Speaker, and here we are, not with an unemployment rate of 5.5 or 6 per cent but with one of 6.2 per cent. I say that there was not a single indication in the speech the Minister of Finance made yesterday to indicate that the government has realized that the policies it has followed for so long are wrong and doomed to failure. The government's policies will continue to fail so long as the government refuses to face the reasons leading to unemployment and to adopt policies which must be adopted if we are to get rid of unemployment and the suffering which results from unemployment.

A couple of weeks ago we saw the figures which are issued each month by Statistics Canada showing unemployment for the previous month. Like most newspapers across Canada, the Globe and Mail carried a sypnosis of the statistics issued by Statistics Canada; it appeared in an article on February 9. Let me put on record what the situation was at that time. I am referring to the figures for January, 1972. There were 665,000 Canadians out of work in January this year, 135,000 more than in December of 1971 but 3,000 less than in January, 1971.

The number of unemployed this past January represented 7.7 per cent of the labour force. In January, 1971, the actual rate of unemployment was 8 per cent. So there was a reduction of .3 per cent, in other words one-third of 1 per cent. The rate of unemployment, after adjustment for the usual seasonal causes, declined to 6.2 per cent in January, 1972, from 6.3 per cent in December, 1971, and 6.4 per cent in January, 1971. In other words, between January, 1972, and January one year earlier, unemployment declined by one-fifth of 1 per cent. The number of unemployed increased substantially in the Atlantic provinces which traditionally suffer the heaviest rate of unemployment. Unemployment remained almost constant in Quebec, a province which has too much unemployment, and remained quite heavy in the prairie provinces.

How did we get in this mess? The government and the Prime Minister of course deny that they are responsible for unemployment, that it was their deliberate policies which created the present substantial rate of unemployment. It sometimes seems to me that the government has adopted a basic principle which was adopted successfully in some totalitarian countries before and during World War II, the principle that if you tell a lie often enough it will become a truth and you can rewrite history.

Just before Christmas—in December, 1970—when interviewed and asked how serious he was about the government's policy of restraint designed to curb the rising cost of living, the Prime Minister said something like, "Just watch me. I will not be deterred from this policy even if the result of this policy leads to an unemployment rate of 6 per cent." Well, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was successful and even more than successful. He succeeded, as he said he would and as his ministers have repeatedly reminded us, in bringing the increase in the cost of living in 1970 to a virtual standstill. In 1970 the cost of living increased by less than 2 per cent. Of course, what the Prime Minister did not tell us then and what he now tries to deny is that the policies the government adopted would inevitably lead to a sharp increase in the number of unemployed.

When the government announced these policies, not only opposition members but economists across the country predicted precisely what would happen and it has happened. Those economists who predicted that the measures taken by the government to control increases in living costs would mean much higher unemployment also said that no country, and certainly not a country like Canada which is so dependent on its sales to and purchases from the United States, could insulate itself from the effects of inflation in the United States. So although the government was successful in holding the line, in holding down living cost increases in 1970—a policy which, as I say, inevitably brought about sharply increased unemployment—the success of the government was temporary because what happened afterwards was precisely what economists had predicted.

In 1971 the cost of living rose by 5 per cent, the largest annual increase in our cost of living in a decade. That was the direct result of the Trudeau government's economic policies. In 1971 they brought about the sharpest increase in the cost of living and the highest unemployment to be seen in this country for more than a decade. And what of the future, Mr. Speaker? Yesterday the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) made the usual promises about prosperity being just around the corner. I almost expected to hear the famous prediction which Herbert Hoover made when he was President of the United States during the depression. He said it would not be long before everyone had two chickens in the pot.

Mr. Pepin: He did not say disaster was just around the corner.

Mr. Orlikow: I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker; I did not hear that gem.

Mr. Pepin: He did not say disaster was just around the corner.

Mr. Orlikow: I do not say disaster is around the corner. I am not suggesting for a moment that we are going back to the thirties. Surely nobody, not even the most moss-backed Tory, can fail to recognize that we have built into the economy many stabilizing factors which will prevent our going back to the condition of the 1930s when one-third of the Canadian people were unemployed and perhaps even more were on welfare, or relief as it was then called.

Only a Prime Minister with a computer where his heart should be could think we are not doing badly when 6.2 per cent of the work force of this country is unemployed. Only a Prime Minister who has never had to work for a living could ignore the results that unemployment brings to the paper worker or the textile worker of Quebec, who has not been unemployed in the way that Indians on the reserves of Manitoba, who have never had a chance to work, have been unemployed. The workers I am talking about have had jobs for the last 10, 15 or 20 years. They expected their jobs to continue and based their expectations on continued employment. I am talking about workers in Sudbury who are being laid off.

Just a couple of months ago the Prime Minister was telling the people of Canada that there were all kinds of jobs. He said, if you do not have a job in Montreal or Toronto, go to Thompson, Manitoba, or Sudbury, Ontario, where there are all kinds of jobs in the mines and smelters for people who want to work. A couple of weeks after the Prime Minister made that ridiculous statement, International Nickel announced it was laying off between 2,000 and 2,500 workers. I want the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) to tell the people who have been laid off in Thompson, in Sudbury and in his constituency how they are going to meet the payments on the house, automobile and television set which they bought because they thought they had secure jobs. Only a cabinet of millionaires and technocrats can have this kind of contempt for people who are poor and unemployed.

• (1600)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: Millionaire? Me?

Mr. Orlikow: I exempt the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce from the list of millionaires. However, he knows who they are. There are many such people in this government.

It is all very well for ministers such as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to make glowing predictions about what is going to happen and to say that things will become better and better. However, the Economic Council of Canada, as reported in the February 23 edition of the Globe and Mail, predicted a slowdown in capital spending. I suggest to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that if one wants to know what is likely to happen in the year ahead, he should not look at the propaganda speeches made by ministers or the gloom and doom speeches made by members of the opposition.

Mr. Pepin: Nor by the Economic Council.

Mr. Orlikow: The minister interjected, "Nor by the Economic Council". I say to the minister that the record speaks for itself. This country and this government would be a hell of a lot better off if the government had listened more to the Economic Council of Canada and less to the deputy minister of finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister may ask a question if the hon. member who has the floor agrees to accept it.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pepin: If the hon. member wants to see me after he completes his remarks, I will show him all kinds of qualifications made by the Economic Council. They say the forecasting is not as good as the time framework expands. Their prognostication does not take into account housing, changes in the international economic conjuncture. The hon. member made the flat statement that the Economic Council of Canada said business investment will not be as good in 1976 as at the present time. The Economic Council of Canada qualified that and the hon. member has left out the qualifications. That is not fair.

Mr. Orlikow: Of course, the Economic Council—which is a body of responsible, independent and, I presume, objective economists—has added caveats to its projection. I suggest that if the deputy minister of finance would stop being a politician and stop writing all kinds of nonsense which this government wants—

Mr. Pepin: You are conveniently changing the subject.

Mr. Orlikow: —and began to be the economist he once was, the government would receive some of the advice it needs rather than the advice it wants. The government's projections as to future employment have been consistently wrong. I challenge the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to sit down with me—

Mr. Pepin: We are always wrong on the low side.

Mr. Orlikow: I challenge the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to sit down with me, at his convenience, to look at the projections which the government has made which are based on information they received from the deputy minister of finance and his assistants.

Mr. Pepin: No, from business.

Mr. Orlikow: I would like him to compare the predictions with those made by members of this party, predictions which we did not pull out of the air. We obtained these predictions from economists, the names of whom I would be more than willing to give to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret that I must interrupt the hon. member to advise him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Pepin: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps before I recognize the minister on a question I could determine whether there is consent to extend the time of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I take it the hon. member for Winnipeg North will accept a question from the minister.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pepin: Is the hon. member aware that my department carries out a forecasting of investment intentions every year which is based on information provided by industry? Is he aware that they have been wrong nine times in the past 12 years, on the pessimistic side?

Mr. Orlikow: I presume when the minister says "they have been wrong", he means that his department has been wrong.

Mr. Pepin: This is done on the basis of information provided to my department. Forecasting is a difficult art and when forecasting, businessmen, unfortunately, tend to be more "PC" than "Lib."

Mr. Orlikow: I am prepared to accept the minister's statement that his departmental officials have been wrong on the conservative side nine times out of 12. I ask the minister what this proves.

One statement made by the Minister of Finance gives me a small hope that maybe this Minister of Finance is adopting a new look at things. I want to point this out to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Yesterday the Minister of Finance said:

> We can have a strong expansionary economy, a rising GNP, strong retail sales, strong consumer spending, together with intolerable rates of unemployment. It has become quite clear that optimistic statistics are no answer to human problems.

That is the kind of statement we on this side of the House have been making to the government for the past four years and which they have ignored. I want to put on record what the Economic Council said about capital spending, as reported in the Globe and Mail:

> The survey—released yesterday—shows the real volume of capital spending on new buildings, machinery and equipment by 155 major business firms last year was 8.4 per cent below their year-earlier plans.
>
> And—depending on which of two yardsticks, provided by the council, are used—it shows the firms are planning for 1972 at best a 3.6 per cent increase in real (constant dollar) volume of spending and at worst almost no change whatever from their depressed 1971 level of outlays.
>
> "These capital investment intentions for 1972, followed by quite sharp declines, especially among business firms, in 1973 and for the balance of the survey period, represent a substantially weaker investment outlook than obtained in any previous capital investment survey conducted by the Economic Council of Canada"—

I hope, because I am concerned about the well being of the ordinary citizens of Canada, that the Economic Council is wrong. I hope there will be a great deal more capital spending.

Mr. Pepin: They qualified everything you are saying.

Mr. Orlikow: Of course they qualified their statements. I hope they are wrong.

Mr. Lewis: They are not prophets; they are forecasters.

Mr. Orlikow: I say that the indications for the future are not good. Because the government has not really changed its approach, the prospects for meeting the problems of poverty and unemployment in the next couple of years remain very dark.

• (1610)

What is the basic question? It is on this note that I am going to close. I said earlier that the government chose its priorities. The government decided that the number one problem facing Canada with which it had to deal was that of inflation. It was the fear it had of inflation which led the government to adopt its policies of restraint which created the high level of unemployment that we have. Inflation in Canada cannot be eliminated until inflation is licked in the United States. The economy gives us what we want. If we want to deal with inflation, we are going to have unemployment. You cannot stop rising costs and not have increased unemployment.

What determines the well being of this country, Mr. Speaker? I suggest there are two basic factors: firstly, the amount of expansion that we have in Canada—about this the government has a great deal of say through the policies it adopts—secondly, the amount of inflation there is in the United States.

While it is obvious we cannot do much about inflation in the United States, we can do a great deal about expanding the Canadian economy. Unfortunately, there was nothing in the speech yesterday of the Minister of Finance, and not a single word in his answers to several questions at the conclusion of his speech, to indicate that in fact—not just in words, but in action—the minister has decided we must change the direction in which the government is leading the country.

I say that until the Minister of Finance changes his approach and adopts the attitude that the first requirement of the government, any government in this country, is to provide a job for every single person who wants to work, and adopts specific economic policies to bring about that objective, we shall continue to have unemployment at a level unmatched in any country in the western world except the United States. We shall continue to have poverty. We shall continue to move, not toward that just society about which the Prime Minister spoke so eloquently in 1968 but away from the just society that should be the objective of every Member of Parliament and every Canadian.

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I, like others who have taken part in this debate, begin by congratulating the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) and the hon. member for Trois Rivières (Mr. Lajoie). I was interested to note both these members, and several others who have spoken in this debate, expressed very favourable opinions of their home constituencies. I think this is welcome news because we all know that it is not everybody who can live in British Columbia, let alone that favoured portion, the riding of Coast-Chilcotin. While we welcome our fellows as visitors at all times, we know that our province is really not big enough to accommodate everybody.

In more serious vein, I think one of the better aspects of the life of a Member of Parliament is that most of us do from time to time get to see different areas in Canada and we realize, or we are reminded once again, that every one has its charm, its own traditions and its own pride. We see this exhibited in our travels and we see it exhibited in other ways in this House. And surely this is a good thing, because I believe that we as Members of Parliament are particularly aware that it is these little differences—like the little bit of difference that remains between the sexes—that makes life interesting.

The fundamental things that Canadians hold in common with one another are stronger than any regional differences, even those differences that occasionally lead to family spats. I think the sense of identity as citizens of Canada becomes more apparent to Canadians when outside the borders of this country; the perspective is better from abroad. But I think there are very few, probably none, in this House who do not believe that the cement of the Canadian confederation's foundation is actually very strong.

These considerations lead me indirectly to the subject of my few remarks today. I am going to deal with one topic only. I do not intend to deal with the Throne Speech as a whole but to speak about one particular aspect of Canadian affairs with which I regret to say the Throne Speech did not deal. It is, I suggest, a thing that is badly needed. I refer to the reform of our immigration laws.

Canada must be one of the most hospitable nations of any, in terms of its immigration laws. There is nothing wrong with that sentiment, but I suggest that some people are abusing our hospitality. I refer in particular to some of those who enter this country as visitors, who then apply for citizenship while resident in Canada, who then appeal a negative decision and in many cases continue to live and work in this country with practically full rights while the overburdened Immigration Appeal Board attempts to deal with their case.

There are appeals that are legitimate, of course, and there are appeals that are not. But there can be no doubt that some of our visitors are treating us as patsies. Somewhere along the line our immigration law has perhaps lost sight of a fundamental principle, a very simple principle, namely, that no citizen of a foreign country can demand Canadian citizenship as an inherent right. Canadian citizenship is a privilege. Some of us are born with it; some of us acquired it. All of us who have it are equal. But however acquired, whether by birth or by naturalization, it is something valuable. It is something which, unless Canadians themselves treat it as something valuable, will diminish us in the eyes of others.

Before proceeding, Mr. Speaker, I should say that I regret that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) cannot be present today. As hon. members know, he is in hospital and I know that we all wish him a speedy return. My remarks, of course, are not directed toward him or his immediate predecessor: in my opinion it was some years ago that our immigration policy was altered in a way that proved to be at least a serious error of judgment if not a mistake in principle.

Some of the immigration law changes of some years ago were undoubtedly enlightened. In fact, most of them were. Certainly, I should not like it to be thought that I am suggesting we ever return to immigration laws that bar immigrants on the basis of skin colour or any other considerations of race. In this modern age, considerations of racial prejudice have no place in the laws of an enlightened state.

• (1620)

Nor do I think we should object to immigration laws permit the reuniting of close relatives. The points system, from my observation, is relatively fair. There might be debate as to whether too much weight is given to one or another aspect of an application in determining the number of points in accordance with the scale, but this is a matter of detail, not of principle. Humanitarian considerations must be a part of our immigration policy. Canadians would not want an immigration policy which was devoid of this principle. Again, I am in favour of the aspect of policy which requires that the number of immigrants who are job seekers should be scaled to the job situation in Canada at the time, category by category.

There are a few interesting figures which tell to some extent the story of immigration over recent years. Between 1967 and 1970, immigration into Canada dropped by 34 per cent, from 223,000 to 148,000. It is interesting, also, to take note of the general pattern of immigration in Canada as compared with that of similar developed countries. As a percentage per thousand of population, Canada admitted immigrants during the period of which I am speaking at a rate of 10.7. That was in 1967. The figure in 1969 was 6.9. The rate is higher than it is in the United States. In that country they had a fairly constant rate of 2 throughout the sixties. It was a little higher than the United Kingdom, where immigration rose from 4.1 in 1958 to 4.4 in 1968. However, it reverses the trend in Australia where in 1966 the rate amounted to 7.8 in 1966 and was up to 10.3 in 1969.

But why, I ask, Mr. Speaker, is Canada just about the only nation which allows visitors to apply for landed immigrant status without first returning to their country of origin and then coming back through the front door together with other immigrants? This practice of permitting appeals within Canada by people who have not gone through the standard procedure of applying outside our borders is unfair to other applicants abroad who accept the basic principles governing entry. Such appeals have swamped our Immigration Appeal Board. Their number has made the situation more difficult for legitimate applicants and it has begun to cause concern among citizens at home, some of whom are beginning to wonder whether Canadians are sufficiently masters in their own house.

I should like to quote a few further figures at this point. I regret they are not as up to date as one would wish; however, they cover the period to the end of July of last year and I have no reason to believe the situation has greatly altered since then. At that time the Immigration Appeal Board had a backlog of 6,771 cases. The board can hear approximately 90 or 100 cases a month. During the period in question they were receiving appeals at the rate of between 400 and 425 cases a month. The backlog, then, in July, 1971, amounted to seven year's worth of cases, each of which costs the taxpayer approximately $1,000.

About two-thirds of these appeals concern persons who entered as visitors and who then applied unsuccessfully for landed immigrant status. In the first three months of 1971, more than one-third of those who applied for landed immigrant status did so after having entered Canada as visitors. The figures are 11,514 out of 27,899. About a third of this 11,514—4,432—were Americans. I read an article by Mr. Nick Hills of Southam News Services in which he quoted one federal official as saying:

> We thought at the time—1967—that it was pretty bureaucratic to make a qualified person go back home to pick up his visa, as the United States does. But we misjudged the number of people who would want to take advantage of the new rule. We thought it would only be a few hundred.

[Mr. St. Pierre.]

The actual figures were far more than that: 26,000 in 1968, 42,000 in 1969 and 50,000 in 1970. The Sedgewick Report found that under the present system of appeal—if the present rate of appeals continues—the size of the staff of the Immigration Department and of the Immigration Appeal Board would need to be tripled, at least. This would, of course, represent an enormous cost increase. But apart from the question of cost, which I suppose we should bear if it were necessary in the name of justice, I suggest we are wrong here in principle and that we should alter our immigration laws except in exceptional cases, because surely the law ought always to be able to take care of the exception which can be justified on humanitarian principles.

But let the law follow the practice in other countries. Our immigration laws should not stray from the principle that Canada is our home. It is a home which, we hope, will always be friendly to visitors; we should not like to be thought of as an inhospitable nation any more than the average householder wishes to have the reputation of being inhospitable. But let us not be imposed upon. With all due consideration being given to humanitarianism, let us have laws which recognize that the rights of Canadian citizens extend far beyond any rights of citizens of nations abroad who find themselves in this country. I thank hon. members for their attention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I am almost overcome as I address you in this crowded, expectant, hushed House on this Friday afternoon. First, I wish to congratulate both the mover and the seconder of the Address. I think they acquitted themselves well; their performance was fine. I congratulate, too, those of my colleagues who preceded me in this very important debate.

Those who seek to analyse our parliamentary institution, and especially those who delight in criticizing it, do not in my view pay sufficient regard to the opportunity afforded by such debates as the debate on the Address. Here the Members of Parliament are in their representational character and, as I have said before in this House, representative government precedes even responsible government. It is tremendously important that members from the various parts of this country address themselves to the various needs, interests and challenges which face the nation. This is a most important part of our proceedings and I congratulate those who have gone before me on Mr. Speaker's list.

I note that many members have been referring to their constituencies. I shall not do this but I shall refer, rather, to the province from which I come, a province which embraces four constituencies. Next year Prince Edward Island celebrates the one-hundredth anniversary of its entry into confederation. Although our province was host to the meeting at which confederation was really decided upon in 1864 in Charlottetown, we remained aloof for a further six years. I hope many Members of Parliament will avail themselves of the opportunity to go to Prince Edward Island in 1973 because it will be a gala celebration. Indeed I have suggested to the leader of my party that he hold there a meeting of the Dominion cabinet on the 1st day of July, 1973, which is the exact anniversary.

• (1630)

Mr. Francis: It would be April Fool's day.

Mr. Macquarrie: On this occasion as we come to our centenary, we are naturally, in Prince Edward Island, taking stock of the events which have followed the decision of our forefathers in 1873. We are appraising and judging the treatment we have received as a member of the Canadian family. While we rejoice in our Canadianism, proud of the fact that the cradle of confederation is in our province, we do see at the present time some serious problems and we do look to Ottawa and feel there are many areas in which we have not been given the treatment we deserve.

In the first place, the unemployment statistics for Prince Edward Island, released in the latest batch of statistics, indicate a rate of something like 19 per cent. Just because we have had a high unemployment rate for so long is no reason that we should begin to like it—and we do not like it. I have sat here for four years and have listened to the former minister of finance indulge in prophecies that everything would be all right in short order, that we would go around a corner and lick inflation and lick unemployment. Whatever else that man will be, he will not be respected as much of a prophet. When I think of his performance in the field of prophecy, I hope he will never indulge in it in his new portfolio because any time I hear that man stand up and say there will be peace in our time, I will head for the bunkers or the high hills!

Another aspect is the failure of the government to do its part in its own administration in our province. As the months go by I have been watching the closing of federal offices or portions thereof in Charlottetown. We find that the citizens of Prince Edward Island, to carry on their dealings with the government of Canada—which serves them as it does other provinces—must negotiate with officials located outside Prince Edward Island. I maintain that every citizen of Prince Edward Island should be able to deal with the government of Canada and its departments in the province of Prince Edward Island.

I do not welcome the closing down of the unemployment insurance office and the moving of it to Moncton. I would not have welcomed it even had it worked, which it did not. I do not like the dismantling of the Post Office Department and the ever-degrading of the structure which remains on Prince Edward Island. This is a negative and an unhelpful step and is not what was intended when we entered Confederation in 1873. This gradual erosion threatens to make one of the provinces of Canada a branch plant of some regional group.

Nor do I like to see the federal government eluding and evading its specific constitutional responsibility in our particular province and for our people. I have watched as the development planners have moved to a stage whereby the federal government has sloughed off its responsibility for many of the fishing ports of Prince Edward Island which, according to section 91 of the British North America Act, do belong to Ottawa. We have the plan that only certain designated ports are to be maintained and the rest are to be forgotten. That lack of responsibility on the part of the federal government is not at all creditable. I watch the manoeuvring which goes on to designate the ports. I see that the port which is probably seen by most Canadians, the port of Covehead in the heart of the national park—a great fishing centre; even I catch all sorts of mackerel there in the summer—is on the undesignated list. That port is being denied the kind of service, maintenance and improvement which all fishing ports should get from the federal Department of Public Works.

I say, too, that there has been lack of concern about public works projects which would help our people. For years and years the federal government has been failing to bridge Rustico Bay, a little bay on the northern shore of Prince Edward Island. In a day and age when the Soviet Union and the United States can both get to the moon, surely to heavens the government of Canada can get across Rustico harbour as it planned to do. We built a highway through the national park to link it together, but they cannot get across that bay.

I also say that in many of its responsibilities the government is failing to move with sufficient dispatch. I think the world of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson). He is a great orator, a great Burns scholar, and for that alone I would have high regard for him; but the snail's pace which marks the building of a good airport in Charlottetown distresses and pains me and troubles the people of Prince Edward Island. Eastern Provincial Airways is giving us the finest service we have ever had. Planes are flying to Montreal with good capacity. The people appreciate the service and they use it, but you can only find 65 seats in the Charlottetown airport. You get 125 parking spaces, but only 65 seats. So unless everybody comes out with 2 cars, it seems to me the thing does not jibe.

We are also concerned that not sufficient progress is being planned for ferry needs at Cape Tormentine and Borden. We need these ships under way now, because with the way the tourists are flocking to Prince Edward Island—showing their good judgment and their good taste in doing so—we will need new ships, especially now that the government has repudiated its commitment to build the causeway. I say in an even more serious way that the development plan, which is the umbrella apparently under which the government at Ottawa has embraced all its dealings with Prince Edward Island, is not measuring up to the expectations of the people who voted for the provincial party which endorsed it a couple of years ago. The development plan is in fact accelerating those negative forces which are presently marring and hurting our economy.

Long before there was a development plan we had the drift away from the farm and the heavy pressures upon the small farmer and the small fisherman. It seems to me that after many years of planning, discussion and study the Prince Edward Island development plan is in itself accelerating those forces and movements which have been injuring and marring our economy for many years. We do not need that kind of accentuation of negative forces.

Also, we find to this day that with the manner in which the federal government sits on top of all the planning there are delays creeping in and needs which are not being met. From the latest issue of the Eastern Graphic, one of Prince Edward Island's finest newspapers, I read:

> It has often been suggested in the past that Ottawa now dictates almost everything that happens in this province. A recent example of just how far Ottawa is prepared to go to see that its own people get the jobs in this province ... with the appointment of a management consultant for the Charlottetown development program.

The article goes on to say that seven or more firms submitted bids to the provincial minister but Ottawa wanted someone else to get it. So for many months there was delay and argument and the project is not yet under way. I say—I have said this more than once, as have my colleagues—that we need far more action, far more consideration and far more assistance in the very important industry of agriculture, especially in reference to the potato industry.

• (1640)

There are many things that we Prince Edward Islanders reflect upon. We are too much wedded to our Canadian association ever to think of fulfilling our destiny in any other way. We are Canadians to the core, but we ask that although we are the smallest among the provinces we still be regarded as a province and that the rights which appertain thereto never be neglected or forgotten by the powerful governmental machinery here in Ottawa.

There is much in the Speech from the Throne if one were looking for literary satisfaction. The purple passages are appealing. Whatever else it lacks, it has plenty of mellifluous prose. I do not mind that; that does not upset me; smooth writing is all right.

But I was surprised at the amount of gall which entered the purple prose. I refer to the reference in the Throne Speech to isolationism. There is a tendency to attack isolationism here, there and everywhere. Considering what has been attempted by this government in the realm of foreign policy, I would have thought that they would not be the group which would immediately come out attacking isolationism.

The effort to dilute our role in NATO was one of the first gestures which this government made before the world. It was not one of the noblest ones. There have been many indications that it might be shuffling off some responsibilities which once we used to bear. I thought of the isolationism syndrome when I noted that we are going to have a permanent observer in Washington accredited to the Organization of American States. We will join the ranks of Spain, Israel and Guyana in that regard. This is not, in my opinion, a tremendously courageous move.

In the days of Sir Wilfrid Laurier discussions were held in Ottawa over Canada joining the Pan-American Union as it then was. In Mr. King's generation of leadership here, it was reflected upon, considered and studied, and in the governments which followed it was also thought about, reflected and considered. Now, if after 70 years we are actually going to appoint an observer I hardly believe that this is a courageous step.

Canada must play its part in the world. Of course, we could not adopt an isolationist role. It would not be our tradition. Our people, I believe, would not tolerate it. We had an inglorious period in the 1930s when that was the foolish role we did play. I hope that never again will we sink into that low mire of insensitivity, selfishness and inward-looking approach.

We must play our part, not as a super power but, I hope, as a great and decent country. Perhaps we have to realize from time to time that we do have limitations. I have often believed that we should sharpen up our external aid program. I never could believe that a country of our resources could have a meaningful program of aid to 67 countries in the world. I think we have to be more specific and selective. I have told this House that we may have some job in moving our priorities and I believe that our first priority should be the Commonwealth Caribbean, a place where because of our ties we could do something meaningful and useful for these neighbours of ours who should mean so much to us, whose political and economic institutions are so greatly challenged and whose viability is under threat every day of their existence.

I am ashamed today, as I was ashamed at the last Throne Speech, that the little country of Barbados can send to Ottawa three people to man a very efficient diplomatic mission while this country seemingly cannot—whether through austerity, obstinacy or lack of concern—open a mission in reciprocation in Bridgetown, Barbados. It is a disgrace.

Then, of course, there will be special problems to which we must apply ourselves as events move in the outer world, events which concern us and which will affect us greatly. We have been troubled in recent months over events on the other side of the world. My colleague, the vice-chairman of the External Affairs and National Defence Committee, mentioned yesterday the trip which he, I and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) made to India and Pakistan at a time of terrible travail for literally millions of people from East Pakistan.

We watched events and we came back with sorrowful hearts, and yet there was some satisfaction in that the people of Canada did take an interest in this. Of course, we did not do as much as we could or perhaps should have done, but Canadians from one end of the country to the other did assist and contribute in that terrible story of human suffering which went on in the refugee camps of Bengal.

Now, with a decisiveness which is unusual in events of this kind, we have a new situation and a new state, a new nation: the populous nation of Bangla Desh was created. But the problems that existed in what was East Pakistan and is now Bangla Desh are not at all over, and we have a great responsibility there. I think that the government was right in recognizing Bangla Desh; indeed, I called for recognition some time earlier. I did not want Canada to be entering a turtle race, to be the last one to do it. I do not like the idea that you merely detach someone who is accredited to a nearby country. I think that Bangla Desh deserves a separate mission and the thing to do is to send in a charge d'affaires immediately and then build your establishment on that.

I hope that we will welcome Bangla Desh into the Commonwealth, and I am troubled in this regard that the Commonwealth may not have been sufficiently used as an association and the machinery of that association in the problem which faced Bangla Desh in its creation. I do not believe that the Commonwealth machinery is useless.

It is a matter of profound regret that Pakistan thought it necessary to withdraw from the Commonwealth. There is no disposition on my part to see Pakistan cast into outer darkness and it would be to me a great satisfaction if that country should elect to return to the Commonwealth. I remember the many occasions in the five or six years in which I was honoured to serve at the General Assembly of the United Nations, when I recall the fine co-operation which existed on many matters between Pakistani delegates and Canadian delegates as we tried our best to cope with the multifarious and difficult problems which faced that universal body. But I believe we must turn our attention to Bangla Desh and I hope the government will move.

I think the minister was on the right track when he answered a question of mine yesterday. I hope we will move and try to inspire our people to believe that there is a great human problem there as that new country tries to pick itself up after terrible agony, and that the Commonwealth tie will really mean something and it will be not only government to government and state to state but people to people.

• (1650)

I notice a section in the Throne Speech referring to the seeking and strengthening of friendships with other nations both within and outside the councils and agencies of the United Nations. This, of course, refers to contacts with and visits to the leaders of the Soviet Union, Yugoslavia, and so on. I do not think there is anyone who would not agree with that sentiment. We would be foolish and myopic if we did not want to see everything possible done to diminish tensions, strengthen detente and broaden understanding among nations.

We do not however, and did not believe that it was the course of statesmanship or diplomacy for the Prime Minister of this country to use the soil of the Soviet Union for his gratuitous insults and improper utterances in regard to the United States, and in this I do not demur or defer from the earlier statements made by myself and my colleagues. We do not want to castigate our long-standing allies as we go about the work of improving relations with other countries.

As far I know, nobody in this House has taken notice of the visit of the President of the United States to the People's Republic of China. This strikes me as being one of the great events of this decade. While I am never bemused by the notion that summitry by itself, a face-to-face conference of leaders can unravel all the problems, I believe that tremendous good in the international field may flow from this visit.

I know it is glib and clever of the wiseacres of the press to describe it as a political gesture by the President of the United States, but I think they do him less than justice. He is not one of my favourite American presidents, but he is the man who has made this contact and, as he said himself, has broken down the walls which have existed for far too long. Perhaps, in that strange irony that is sometimes worked out in history, he with his point of view would be the logical man to break ground in this field.

In our own history, I have often thought of Sir Robert Borden, the great loyalist from Halifax, as the man who could most successfully put the British imperialists in their place when it was necessary. Perhaps it is a man like President Nixon who can, without great misunderstanding at home, clear away some of the unfortunate and unnecessary hindrances to dialogue between these two important countries.

I am very proud that my own leader visited China some months ago and conducted himself there as a statesman and made a great impression on his hosts and others.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: We welcome this sort of development and I think we all should hope that the Nixon visit will bring about dividends for those who are trying to build up an equity of peace, understanding and good will.

There is just one more matter that I wish to deal with, Mr. Speaker. I began with a reference to the Prince Edward Island centennial and I shall close with a reference to the establishment of Heritage Canada. Naturally I approve of this, especially when it comes from a government which was deaf and uncaring to my pleas over several months to save the magnificent residence of Sir Robert Borden, "Glensmere". Nothing was done and it fell before the wrecker's crew and so a great piece of history disappeared. This government could not move, apparently, to set aside a holiday to commemorate Sir John A. Macdonald, the father of our country. Even at this late date we may see some preservation of our historic past and, if so, the government will find no more enthusiastic supporter than I to commend them—and I will even forget their past apostasy and former lack of concern.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there disposition and agreement among hon. members that we call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday, February 28, at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(2).

At 4.57 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 28, 1972

The House met at 11 a.m.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. KORCHINSKI—DENIAL OF INFORMATION TO HOUSE ON PROPOSED TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR WHEAT

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question of privilege affecting the rights of all hon. members. It concerns the contempt for parliament of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) as indicated by his refusal to provide information on the so-called two-price system for wheat while continuing to provide the media with information which, if it so suited the minister, could be denied as not factual.

On February 21 in reply to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) the Minister of Justice who is in charge of the Wheat Board, stated that various methods of payment and timing were being considered by the government. I followed through with a question on that day and the minister replied as follows:

All these questions are really linked together and require an announcement of policy in connection with timing and the technique of making payments. Such an announcement will deal with all these matters at the same time.

I find that the minister has since made an announcement on the method of payment. It is found in Canadian Press and Southam Press reports in various Saturday papers. I suggest that this is contempt of Parliament. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That the matter of the growing disregard by the government for the right of this House to information on public business through the channels provided by the procedures of this House be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mackenzie has supplied the Chair with the required notice of his intention to raise this matter by way of a question of privilege.

The hon. member suggests that the matter to which he has alluded in his statement ought to be considered by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I have to rule that this cannot be done under the terms of our Standing Orders.

As the hon. member knows, and as I am sure all members appreciate, from time to time there have been grievances brought to the attention of the House along the same lines, suggestions that statements not made in the House were made outside the House, or that information not given to members in reply to questions was supplied to the media or in some other way given outside the House. There is a long line of learned rulings, going back many years, indicating that this is more a grievance than a breach of privilege, that it could be the subject of debate, that it might be the subject of a censure motion, that it could be the subject of a grievance, but that it could not be considered as suggested in the motion proposed by the hon. member for Mackenzie.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1972-73

REFERENCE OF VOTES TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 59 I move, seconded by Mr. Sharp:

That the estimates of the sums required for the service of Canada for the year ending March 31, 1973, be referred to the several Standing Committees of the House, as follows:

What follows, Mr. Speaker, is a list of the committees and the votes to be referred to them. Perhaps the House would agree to dispense with my reading this.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The balance of the motion follows:]

To the Standing Committee on Agriculture:

Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20 and 25 relating to the Department of Agriculture

Vote 30 relating to the Canadian Dairy Commission

Votes 35 and 40 relating to the Canadian Livestock Feed Board

Vote 45 relating to the Farm Credit Corporation

To the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts:

Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35 and 40 relating to the Department of the Secretary of State

Vote 45 relating to the Canada Council

Votes 50 and L55 relating to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Vote 60 relating to the Canadian Radio-Television Commission

Vote 65 relating to the Company of Young Canadians

Vote 70 relating to the National Arts Centre Corporation

Votes 75 and L80 relating to the National Film Board

Vote 85 relating to the National Library

Vote 90 relating to the National Museums of Canada

Votes 95 and L100 relating to the Public Archives

Vote 25 relating to Information Canada

To the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence:

Votes 1, 5, 10, L15 and 20 relating to the Department of External Affairs

Votes 25, 30, L35, and L45 relating to the Canadian International Development Agency

Vote 50 relating to the International Joint Commission

Estimates 1972-73

Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25 and 30 relating to the Department of National Defence

Vote 35 relating to Defence Construction (1951) Limited

To the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs:

Vote 1 relating to the Department of Justice

Vote 5 relating to the Law Reform Commission of Canada

Vote 10 relating to the Tax Review Board

Vote 1 relating to the Department of the Solicitor General

Votes 5, 10 and 15 relating to Correctional Services

Votes 20 and 25 relating to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police

To the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration:

Vote 1 relating to the Department of Labour

Vote 5 relating to the Unemployment Insurance Commission

Votes 1, 5, 10, 15 and 20 relating to the Department of Manpower and Immigration

Vote 25 relating to the Immigration Appeal Board

To the Standing Committee on Regional Development:

Votes 1, 5, 10, L15, L20, L25 and L30 relating to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion

Votes 35, 40 and 45 relating to the Cape Breton Development Corporation

To the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications:

Votes 1 and 5 relating to the Department of Communications

Vote L10 relating to the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation

Votes 1 and 5 relating to the Post Office

Votes 1, 5, 10, L15, 20, 25, 30, L35, 40, 45, 50, 55 and 60 relating to the Department of Transport

Vote 65 relating to the Atlantic Pilotage Authority

Vote 70 relating to the Canadian National Railways

Votes 75 and 80 relating to the Canadian Transport Commission

Vote 85 relating to the Great Lakes Pilotage Authority

Vote 90 relating to the Laurentian Pilotage Authority

Votes 95, 100 and L105 relating to the National Harbours Board

Vote L110 relating to Northern Transportation Company Limited

Vote 115 relating to the Pacific Pilotage Authority

Votes 120, L125 and 130 relating to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority

To the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs:

Votes 1, 5, and 10 relating to the Department of Finance

Vote 20 relating to the Department of Insurance

Vote 25 relating to the Tariff Board

Votes 1, 5, 10, L15, 20, 25, 30 and L35 relating to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce

Vote 40 relating to the Standards Council of Canada

Vote 45 relating to Statistics Canada

Vote 20 relating to the Economic Council of Canada

Votes 1 and 5 relating to the Department of National Revenue

To the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry:

Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20 and 25 relating to the Department of the Environment

To the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs:

Votes 1, 5, 10, 15 and 20 relating to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs

Vote 25 relating to the Prices and Incomes Commission

Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40 and 45 relating to the Department of National Health and Welfare

Votes 50 and 55 relating to the Medical Research Council

Votes 1 and 5 relating to the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs

[Mr. Speaker.]

Votes 10 and L15 relating to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation

Votes 20, 25 and L30 relating to the National Capital Commission

To the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development:

Votes 1, 5, 10, L15, L16, 20, 25, 30, L35, L40, L45, L50, L55, L60, 65, 70 and 75 relating to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development

Vote L80 relating to the Northern Canada Power Commission

To the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works:

Votes 1, 5, L10 and 15 relating to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources

Votes 20 and 25 relating to the Atomic Energy Control Board

Votes 30, 35, L40, L45, and L50 relating to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited

Vote L55 relating to Eldorado Nuclear Limited

Vote 60 relating to the National Energy Board

Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, L30, 35 and 40 relating to the Department of Public Works

To the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Vote 10 relating to the Chief Electoral Officer

To the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs:

Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40, 45, 50, and 55 relating to the Department of Veterans Affairs

To the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates:

Vote 15 relating to the Auditor General

Vote 1 relating to the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors

Votes 1 and 5 relating to the Privy Council Office

Vote 15 relating to the Commissioner of Official Languages

Vote 25 relating to the Public Service Staff Relations Board

Vote 1 relating to the Ministry of State for Science and Technology

Vote 5 relating to the Science Council of Canada

Vote 105 relating to the Public Service Commission

Votes 1, 5 and 10 relating to the Department of Supply and Services

Vote 15 relating to Canadian Arsenals Limited

Vote 20 relating to the Canadian Commercial Corporation

Votes 1, 5, 10, 15 and 20 relating to the Treasury Board

Votes 25, 30 and 35 relating to the National Research Council of Canada

To the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization:

Vote 1 relating to the Senate

Vote 5 relating to the House of Commons

Vote 10 relating to the Library of Parliament

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

GRAIN

TABLING OF REPORT ON SALE OF WHEAT TO U.S.S.R.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table copies in both official languages of a report to the House of Commons on the sale of Canadian wheat to the U.S.S.R.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

CHANGING OF NAME—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O.43

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I refer to the concern of Canadians from coast to coast over changing one of the few Canadian content institutions in Canada, namely, the continentalization of the Mounties by changing "RCMP" to "Police". Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That (1) in view of the expressed concern of thousands of Canadians from coast to coast,

(2) and the confused and incredible explanations from the Solicitor General, and

(3) in the light of the provocative remarks of the Prime Minister over the weekend, that this House refer this matter immediately to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs so that the facts may be defined with clarity, and responsibility for this surreptitious act assessed accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: I think that the Chair might have procedural reservations as to the form of the motion proposed by the hon. member. I have indicated to hon. members on a number of occasions that the explanations given in support of motions under Standing Order 43 should be limited to the question of urgency and should not include argument. But I will ask hon. members whether there is unanimous consent under Standing Order 43?

• (1110)

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

* * *

NATIONAL ANTHEM BILL

DESIGNATION OF "O CANADA"

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-158, respecting the national anthem of Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: I might mention, before asking the House when the bill is to be read the second time, that this bill includes a schedule which carries not only the words but the music of the proposed national anthem.

Some hon. Members: Sing it.

Mr. Speaker: It is suggested that the Chair should sing it, but this might appear to be an unusual precedent. Basically, I see nothing wrong, not about the Chair singing the schedule but that the schedule should include not only words but also music. In any event, I will inquire from the House when the said bill should be read the second time, at the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POSITION REGARDING UNEMPLOYMENT RATE AND JOB AVAILABILITY—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PAYMENT DELAYS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister which arises out of the satisfaction he expressed over the weekend about the performance of the Canadian economy. Is the persistence of seasonally adjusted unemployment at 6 per cent or more for the last two years regarded by his government as an example of good and progressive government, and can we now take it that this rate of unemployment is considered to be a satisfactory performance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer to both questions is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Perhaps I might then ask the Prime Minister whether, in the course of his visit to Sudbury, he was able to discover the existence of many more jobs, in particular whether he was able to place in new employment any of the 3,695 persons registered as unemployed in the Sudbury manpower office?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition will appreciate that this kind of question may be good debate but it is certainly not procedurally in order. I would think that that comment might have applied to the first question also.

Mr. Stanfield: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I say, with every respect for you—and of course I will comply with your ruling—that the Prime Minister has been telling us about how many jobs are vacant in this country, and I thought it might be a matter of intense interest to the House to know whether he discovered any more vacant jobs when he was in Sudbury over the weekend.

Mr. Trudeau: On the same point of order, I should remind the hon. member that I was saying that last fall, at which time INCO was hiring 700 new workers. So at the time I was saying it they were obviously looking for 700 new workers. I do not see any contradiction with the reality at the time I said it.

An hon. Member: Where were you, Bob?

Mr. Stanfield: The right hon. gentleman has been saying it much more recently than that, Mr. Speaker. I should like—

Mr. Trudeau: When?

Mr. Stanfield: Much more recently than last fall.

An hon. Member: Be specific.

Mr. Stanfield: I shall be happy to do the research myself, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that what I pointed out a moment ago is verified by the subsequent exchange between the right hon. gentleman and the hon. Leader of the Opposition. This is obviously debate and has very little to do with what should be the question period.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but sometimes it is necessary to keep everybody honest. In view of the questions that have been raised in the House since the opening of the new session of Parliament about the performance of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, will the Prime Minister tell us whether he has taken any steps himself to intervene to clear up the delays and the suffering that has resulted to the unemployed as a result of those delays? As the minister is in hospital, has the Prime Minister himself taken any action?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I discussed this with the minister before he went into hospital and I considered the action he was taking at that time which has been pursued since in the department under the direction of the very able parliamentary secretary.

* * *

TAXATION

REASONS FOR REMISSION OF SALES TAX TO GREAT CANADIAN OIL SANDS LIMITED

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance who appears to think he is still Minister of Justice. Some days ago I inquired of the President of the Treasury Board about the remission of $6 million to Great Canadian Oil Sands Limited by Order in Council pursuant, it was said in the order, to section 17 of the Financial Administration Act. The last time I asked the question the President of the Treasury Board said that the Minister of Finance would inform the House of the basis on which that generous remission of money to a company was made.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand that my predecessor has already made a statement on this matter outside the House. However, to answer formally in the House the question put to the President of the Treasury Board by the hon. member for York South, may I say I have looked into the matter and have to report that feasibility studies, planning and preparation for this major project of building and equipment by Great Canadian Oil Sands to extract oil from the Alberta tar sands, were completed before the sales tax was first imposed on June 14, 1963. Construction of the plant was not completed and production did not commence until after June 2, 1967, when production equipment was again exempted from the sales tax. The company has incurred serious financial losses since the outset of production and therefore sought remission of sales tax which had not applied when their plans were being drawn up and was later withdrawn across the country after the plant was finished. Although the company sought remission of all federal sales tax on buildings, plant and equipment, remission was granted only in respect of production equipment.

Mr. Lewis: As I understand it, the Financial Administration Act provides that the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, whenever he considers it in the public interest may remit any tax, fee or penalty. Would the Minister of Finance indicate briefly to the House what public interest, aside from the interest of a corporation that had some argument, was served to justify the government taking steps under the Financial Administration Act to remit $6 million to a single company, and would that be available to an individual taxpayer who suffered the same kind of hardship?

• (1120)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that remission is given under the Financial Administration Act from time to time and that it is not unusual. He has asked what special circumstances existed here. I said that the sales tax had not originally applied when the plans and feasibility studies for the plant were drawn up and construction commenced, and by the time the plant had been completed and production had begun the sales tax was off. I think that probably in the mind of the government at the time the public interest involved a major pioneer project for extracting oil from the Alberta tar sands, something which may be invaluable to this country in the years ahead.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I did not ask the minister what special circumstances there were, because the act does not talk about special circumstances. It says that the government has the right to do this only when the public interest is involved. Is that kind of remission of tax given to any corporation that happens to be dealing with something which may be valuable to the country, for example, in the field of mining, steel, oil or any other activity that is of value to the country? Is that the way the government interprets the public interest, the remission of public money to a single corporation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the rules are wide enough for us to debate at present the interpretation of the Financial Administration Act. I am suggesting to the hon. member that the minister at the time and the government felt that in this particular case it was in the public interest to allow the remission.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are there other, similar applications for remissions now pending?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would have to look into that.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While the minister is explaining the $6 million remission, would he also take it upon himself to explain to the House the write-off given to the Montreal Expos baseball team?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. MacInnis: That involves $9 million.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the public interest, would the Minister of Finance mind taking steps to ensure that rebates of sales tax are made to all municipalities, school districts and regional districts? That is something the minister could really do in the public interest. Would he also mind telling us whether the group to which he belongs in a political sense anticipates any income from this rebate of $6 million?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

[Translation]

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REFUSAL TO ACCEPT PROJECTS APPROVED BY QUEBEC GOVERNMENT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration, I shall address my question to his parliamentary secretary. Here it is.

May I ask why officials of the Department of Manpower and Immigration in charge of the Local Initiatives Program give no reason for their rejection when a municipality presents a reasonable project which has previously been approved by the province of Quebec?

[English]

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it may be possible at some later date to obtain and make available evaluation of the various projects. I think the hon. member should be aware however, that there has been an overwhelming number of application and the first order must be to get people to work and to get projects approved.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I understand that the main objective is getting people to work. That is why I am concerned. Several municipalities submitted really reasonable projects, for work which will not melt away with the snow—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member want to put his supplementary question?

[English]

I have the impression that a number of the questions asked earlier today, as well as the one just asked by the hon. member for Bellechasse, are more in the form of debate. I sometimes wonder whether the kind of question in which an hon. member asks why such a decision was taken, or for an explanation of a certain action on the part of the government, is in order because it usually gives rise to debate. In any event—

[Translation]

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Speaker: In any event, the hon. member could perhaps put his supplementary.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, does the Department of Manpower and Immigration still have funds available to justify the approval of certain municipal projects?

[English]

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when we talk in terms of credits being available, we should remind ourselves that there is not enough money left in the winter works program to satisfy all of the applicants. As I said on Friday, to this date almost 90,000 new jobs have been provided in Canada, exceeding all estimates.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—SUGGESTED ALLOCATION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS—FUTURE PRIORITY TO PROJECTS DISALLOWED

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the answer given by the parliamentary secretary and the question asked by the hon. member, can the parliamentary secretary indicate whether any consideration has been given to replenishing the funds available under that program and, in the event there has not, will the projects that have be disallowed been given any priority in future government programs?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is that no further funds are contemplated in terms of extending the LIP program. Second, there are a number of magnificent projects which unfortunately could not be approved because of a lack of funds, but I cannot say whether they would be accorded priority in any following program.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—REPRESENTATIONS FOR NEW TRIAL—REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Since the release and escape of Yves Geoffroy from St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, has anyone, any person in any capacity, approached you as Minister of Justice—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should address his question to the Chair.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. Through you, Mr. Speaker, has any person approached you as Minister of Justice—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: —or any other minister of the Crown to your knowledge to apply either Section 617 of the Criminal Code of Canada or any other section of the code which entitles the Minister of Justice under certain conditions and according to a certain legal formula set out therein to direct a new trial or a new hearing before any court of the Geoffroy murder conviction?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as far as the question refers to anyone approaching the minister directly, I can answer that in the negative. As far as the question goes beyond that, I would have to take the question as notice.

Mr. Woolliams: May I direct a question to the Solicitor General. Since the release and escape of Yves Geoffroy from St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, has anyone, any person in any capacity, approached you as Solicitor General that you should ask and request—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I know it may be just a detail, but it is embarrassing for the Chair to remind hon. members that questions have to be addressed to the Chair and not directly to ministers.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you very much. Has anyone approached you as minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: Excuse me. Has anyone approached the minister to apply either Section 617 of the Criminal Code of Canada or any other section of the code which authorizes the Minister of Justice under certain conditions and according to a certain legal formula set out therein to direct a new trial or order a new hearing in relation to this murder conviction?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, someone who claimed to know where Mr. Geoffroy is suggested it to me. My reply was very simple: the laws of the country apply to every citizen. If Mr. Geoffroy wants to ask for a new trial, all he has to do is go directly to the Minister of Justice, and not through intermediaries, and give him the reasons why he should be granted a new trial.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question. Maybe I will be better off without notes. Did the Solicitor General approach the Minister of Justice in relation to this matter and did they have a telephone conversation with a person along the lines of asking for a new trial in accordance with the terms and conditions of the code?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister can reply to whatever part of the question he chooses, but the hon. member knows it is somewhat difficult and irregular to ask whether conversations have taken place between ministers. The minister may reply to whatever part of the question he thinks he can or should reply.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I think that my answer has been very clearly to the effect that if Mr. Geoffroy felt that a new trial was required, it was up to him rather than his intermediaries to communicate directly with the Department of Justice. But I have had no discussion in this regard with anyone, and as for senseless suggestions, even the opposition is providing me with some.

• (1130)

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the fact that people have apparently approached the Solicitor General and in light of the fact that the hon. gentleman said at one stage, not only here but on television, I believe, that if there were any irregularities or illegalities he would be very pleased, as far as he was concerned, to initiate a judicial inquiry into this matter, is the minister prepared to do this now, particularly in light of the fact that a passport was obtained through forgery?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is floundering about with his information but, anyway, there is nothing illegal or irregular. Someone asked whether there might be a new trial, and I have simply answered that the laws of this country applied to all individuals. I do not think that there is anything illegal in this. Perhaps the hon. member has something illegal in mind, however.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Did the minister set out any terms and conditions to the person who made that inquiry and suggestion as to what should happen with reference to the power of the Minister of Justice to grant a new trial in accordance with the terms and conditions of the Criminal Code?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Never, Mr. Speaker, in any way.

[English]

RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY FROM ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION ON PASSPORT IN RELATION TO PUBLIC INTEREST

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister arising out of the charge that the opposition has been interfering with the search for Yves Geoffroy and the suggestion that somehow the Opposition learned that Mr. Geoffroy was travelling on a false passport. In view of the fact that this information was disclosed in the House by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he considers this to be contrary to the public interest and whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs conferred with the right hon. gentleman as Prime Minister before disclosing that information in the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did discuss the question with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and with the Solicitor General, and when it became obvious that the opposition knew something about a false passport we asked ourselves—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I do not see what all the groans are about. The Secretary of State for External Affairs did not stand up in the House and volunteer the statement that there was a false passport. He was asked whether there was one, and he was then in the position of having either to deny it and thereby tell an untruth or to admit it and harm the investigation by the police. He had this hard choice to make, and he decided to tell the truth.

An hon. Member: It is not hard to tell the truth.

Mr. Trudeau: An hon. member says it is not hard to tell the truth. Of course it is not. But it would have been better from the point of view of the police had it not been broadcast throughout Canada and the world that Mr. Geoffroy was travelling on a false passport.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the right hon. gentleman when it became obvious that the opposition knew a false passport had been issued in connection with Mr. Geoffroy prior to the Secretary of State disclosing this information in the House?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I do not have the date at hand but I will check it. When the hon. member for Calgary North asked the question about the issuance of a false passport the matter had already been discussed between the minister and myself. I shall check the date and in what way it became apparent that the opposition knew there was such a false passport.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the question asked by my hon. friend from Calgary North was directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs on February 23. The relevant part of the question reads:

Can the minister tell us, first, whether Geoffroy possessed a passport and, second, whether it was issued prior to his release from the penitentiary or later.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs then replied:

Our records show that no passport has been issued to Geoffroy in his own name. A search of the files in the passport office conducted by the RCMP subsequent to Geoffroy's escape from custody indicated that a passport was acquired for him earlier under an assumed name—

My point is that the information was disclosed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I think it was proper that it should have been disclosed. I think it is absurd for the Prime Minister to impute wrongful motives to the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBLE INDICATORS OF FORTHCOMING POLICIES ON FOREIGN INVESTMENT AND INDUSTRY—RETROACTIVE LEGISLATION CONCERNING TAKEOVERS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of statements recently made by the Prime Minister in North Bay that no effort should be made to "buy back Canada" because, in his words, we would have no money left for the future of Canada, and that "we must have an industrial policy to buy into the future," may I ask the right hon. gentleman to tell the House whether or not these statements are indicative of the content of the, hopefully, forthcoming government policy on foreign ownership and the government's decision to elaborate a Canadian industrial policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rose: I thank the Prime Minister for being revealing, as usual. Is he aware of the fact that yet another Canadian company, the Jelinek skate manufacturing firm in Oakville, has been obliged to sell to United States interests because of its failure to secure needed capital from government sources or from Canadian chartered banks? Would the Prime Minister indicate whether the intended legislation concerning domestic control of the national economic environment will be retroactive to redress takeovers of Canadian companies by foreign interests in the interim?

Mr. Trudeau: As to the first part of the question, the answer is no. As to the second part, the hon. member will have to await a statement.

* * *

[Translation]

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REFUSAL OF CERTAIN PROJECTS—AVAILABILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

As regards those municipalities which have not received to this date any reply in respect of projects already submitted some time ago, would the parliamentary secretary tell us if there are enough funds still to be allocated by the department for these municipalities to expect a favourable reply in the near future?

[English]

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it can only be said that as of Friday afternoon $4 million remained to be allocated. This does not mean to say there are not many more applications for that money than there is money available.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

CHANGING OF NAME

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister explain to the House why it is that the government, on the one hand, is taking steps to preserve the bricks and mortar of our history by introducing a bill entitled Heritage Canada while at the same time it is eroding the symbols of our history by removing such things as the historical symbol "RCMP" from the buildings and cars of that force?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is the kind of question to which I was taking objection a few moments ago. It is an argument. When an hon. member asks a member of the government to explain why this or that has taken place, it amounts to debate. It is not a question which is acceptable as to form during the question period.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hees: May I phrase it in another way? Has the Prime Minister taken into consideration the fact that English-speaking Canadians are just as proud of the symbols connected with their history as French-speaking Canadians are of theirs? We respect their symbols. Stop eroding ours.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Prime Minister might be allowed to answer that question, but again I have to take objection as Speaker to that type of question. It is really a speech. It is not a question at all. If hon. members take advantage of the question period to put forward arguments, that is certainly not in conformity with the spirit of the question period or what it ought to be.

* * *

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE—FURTHER EFFORTS TO AMEND

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Does the government intend to reconstitute the special committee on the constitution so that the committee's report may be presented and discussed during the session?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The committee will, we hope, be reconstituted so that it will be able to table its report in the House.

Mr. Dinsdale: In light of the gradual disbanding of the secretariat that has handled the federal-provincial constitutional conferences, has the government decided not to undertake another effort to develop a new constitution?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member knows the circumstances in which the secretariat was reduced in size. Something happened at Victoria, British Columbia, last June which brought this particular phase of the constitutional debate to a dead end until the province of Quebec indicates that it can advance the discussion in some way. There has been no indication from Quebec that it is prepared to do so.

• (1140)

SUGGESTED PROVISION FOR SENATORS FROM YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the favour with which the suggestion was viewed by the joint committee, would the government consider taking under its own sponsorship the private member's bill I have on the order paper which would create a senatorship for the Yukon and one for the Northwest Territories, and bringing this bill before the House as soon as possible?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will look at the bill; I was unaware of its existence.

[Mr. Speaker.]

GRAIN

CONTINUATION OF ACREAGE PAYMENT SUBSIDY ON WHEAT—PERMANENT TWO-PRICE SYSTEM

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the minister's statement last Friday that a subsidy payment is to be made to western farmers on an acreage basis, can he inform the House whether this is to be a continuing subsidy in future years, and is action planned during this session to bring in legislation to make it a permanent feature of government policy?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the announcement I made indicated that the payment for this year would be on a basis related to acreage in order to avoid distortions in production. At the same time I announced that discussions would be held with the producers about ways of making payments in future, payments which are intended to be made. This matter will come before the House, of course, but for this session likely in the form of an estimate.

Mr. Gleave: Can the minister tell the House whether the government has under consideration a two-price system for wheat in western Canada that can be set up on a permanent basis?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that is one of the objectives of the further discussions with producer organizations, several of whom have made suggestions to the effect that the money involved should be used for such things as a stabilization plan. Certainly government policy is clear. The policy has been announced for time to come, not just for one year, but the exact formula for handling the system remains to be developed with the producers.

TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR WHEAT—METHOD OF CALCULATING PAYMENTS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, in light of the minister's refusal the other day to provide the information, may I ask him whether the calculation is going to be made on the basis of the closing of the pool accounts of the Wheat Board or will it be calculated as at the end of the crop year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the calculation for the first payment is planned to be made on the basis of an estimate of the amount of wheat consumed by Canadians in the course of the year. The figures for the 1971 year are likely to be used as the basis for that estimate, with adjustments on the basis of later figures to be calculated when a subsequent payment is made a year later.

USE OF INLAND TERMINALS TO ACCUMULATE AND CLEAN GRAIN TO FACILITATE LOADING ON SHIPS AT VANCOUVER

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, in view of the question posed to him last week on the tie-up of grain on the west coast, what steps are being taken to utilize more fully the inland grain terminals on the Prairies for accumulating and cleaning grain to be shipped ultimately to the west coast?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to report that there are fewer ships waiting at the moment, quite significantly fewer than when the question was first asked. The Wheat Board, as I indicated, is examining a whole variety of techniques for improving the throughput at Vancouver with the existing system. As the hon. member may know, the other day I was looking at some new cleaning equipment which appears as though it may be pretty exciting in terms of making the inland terminals more effective.

Mr. Murta: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Lisgar for a last supplementary before going to the next question, since we will be running out of time in less than ten minutes.

Mr. Murta: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister what plans are being made, if any, to allow the producers to deliver grain directly to these terminals; and would the minister also give the House the total amount of unloadings per day at Vancouver, which I believe are down considerably from 800 carloads?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the question of direct unloadings by farmers into the terminals is one that is being examined by the Wheat Board in order to try to use the terminals more effectively. The Canada Grain Commissioners have in hand information regarding the unloading capacity of the various terminals on the Prairies, from a technical point of view and if other problems can be solved this unloading could be resorted to fairly quickly.

The number of unloadings has varied significantly during the last four or five days; but it is difficult to judge, taking this alone, because unless the size of the car involved is known this may be a little misleading. However, I will get a further, more comprehensive report for the hon. member.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CLOSING OF CARLETON PLACE FACTORY BY BELANGER-TAPPAN LIMITED—INQUIRY AS TO GRANT FOR MONTMAGNY PLANT

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the announcement on Friday last by Belanger-Tappan Limited that they propose to close their Carleton Place plant known as Findlay's Limited in the very near future and to concentrate their production at the Montmagny plant in the province of Quebec, has this company received any federal assistance from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to create, improve or enlarge this company's facilities at Montmagny?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, and there is no relationship between what is going on at Montmagny and the closing of the Findlay plant at Carleton Place.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Are we to take it that no application for a grant is at present before the department, as well as no grant having already been provided?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): At present there is no application from the company, Mr. Speaker.

NUMBER OF JOBS CREATED STILL IN EXISTENCE—PLANT RELOCATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. In light of that question, would he now undertake to make an analysis of the applications and grants that have been made under the Regional Development Incentives Act in order to determine how many of the estimated jobs to be created are still in existence, and what plants have been relocated, thus causing closedowns in other areas?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, this information appears in the document that is tabled in this House every month. If the hon. member knows how to read he will be able to stop citing figures that are wrong.

Mr. McGrath: That is not right and you know it. That document contains nothing except a couple of pious hopes.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If you cannot understand it, ask someone to explain it to you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

RELATIONSHIP OF LINGUISTIC POLICY TO PROVISION OF AID TO POORER REGIONS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Does the government subscribe to the statement made by the Secretary of State at Laurier over the weekend that acceptance of the linguistic policy of the government and aid to the poorer regions are a package deal, and that if Moncton did not get in line with its linguistic policies the federal government might sulk at them?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Annapolis Valley.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he can ask about a statement made outside the House only in relation to statements made by ministers. He may inquire of the Prime Minister whether a statement made by one of his ministers outside the House represents government policy, but I did not understand that that was the way the question was asked in this case.

Mr. Bell: I thought the word "subscribe" meant the same thing, Mr. Speaker, but may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. When the minister made this speech did he know whether the federal government would be treating Moncton less favourably than others because of its linguistic policy?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think I was just stating the obvious. I was saying that no one could, in a federal system such as ours, take the advantages and refuse the obligations.

* * *

BROADCASTING

CABLEVISION AND EDUCATIONAL TELEVISION—INQUIRY AS TO CONFERENCE WITH PROVINCES ON JURISDICTIONAL PROBLEM—FEDERAL POLICY

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State and concerns the federal system. In view of continuing discussions on the subject of jurisdiction over cablevision and educational television, does the minister intend to call in the very near future a federal-provincial conference of responsible ministers across the land to discuss this problem, or is the minister going to continue to have unilateral correspondence with just a few of the ministers?

• (1150)

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I find that the accusation implied in the hon. member's question is unjustified. I have travelled all across Canada from Newfoundland to Vancouver, in order to ascertain that discussions are not restricted to one or two ministers concerned, and to meet all the provincial ministers with regard to these problems. All I can say in reply to the hon. member is to repeat my statement that the premise on which his question is based is inaccurate.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: If there was any imputation, I do apologize, but in view of what the Prime Minister said over the weekend about malicious intent and phony baloney I suppose I got carried away with my question. I will direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. In view of the discussions he says he has had with all responsible ministers across the country, is he now prepared and ready to define federal policy vis-à-vis cablevision and also with regard to educational television?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member should be more conversant with the facts. The federal government has unequivocally and repeatedly clarified its position.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may ask a last supplementary question. There are two minutes left before the end of the question period.

Mr. Nowlan: This is an important question and I know you appreciate that, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the Secretary of State does. Can we assume from his last answer that there has been agreement with the provinces of Quebec, Alberta and Ontario on the federal authority over cablevision and that that is a definitive policy about which we have not yet heard but which has been defined?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: This question is further proof that the hon. member is ill-informed.

* * *

[English]

HEALTH

PROPOSED PAYMENT BY GOVERNMENT OF HOSPITAL AND MEDICAL CARE PREMIUMS FOR ALL INDIANS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the government considering the problems created as a result of differences in the way hospital and medical care premiums are paid on behalf of the Indian people in various provinces, and is the government considering taking steps to pay the health taxes on behalf of all Indians as is the case in Alberta?

Apparently the Prime Minister did not hear my question which was addressed to him in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I will repeat it since apparently he did not hear it the first time. Is the government considering the problems created as a result of differences in the way that hospital and medicare premiums are paid on behalf of Indian people in various provinces, and is the government considering taking steps to pay the health taxes on behalf of all Indians as is the case in Alberta?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will be glad to take notice of the question on behalf of the minister.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POSITION REGARDING UNEMPLOYMENT RATE AND JOB AVAILABILITY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the statement he made at the Costi Italian Educational Centre in Toronto on January 21, 1972, not last autumn, still represents the view of the government, namely:

> In most parts of Canada there are many, many jobs offered which are not being taken.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Is there any mention of Sudbury in that question?

Mr. Stanfield: Sudbury?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: That was your God-damned question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: You said you had not said it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lundrigan: I rise on a point of order. In view of the controversy several months ago regarding a similar incident in the House of Commons as the one which has just occurred and the fact that it was not officially recorded in Hansard, is there any procedure by which we may inquire whether the remark of the Prime Minister in an official response by him to the Leader of the Opposition has in fact been recorded in the official record of the proceedings of the House of Commons?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have to wait until tomorrow and read Hansard.

* * *

ELECTIONS

OBSTACLES TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION DEALING WITH EXPENSES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to address a question to the Prime Minister arising out of a report that he stated in Sturgeon Falls he was in favour of reform of election expenses but that there were practical obstacles to getting that reform through parliament. Would the Prime Minister inform the House what were the practical obstacles which prevented him from introducing legislation since June, 1968, on this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that the government has introduced many items which have died on the order paper and have not been passed because of lack of time and obstruction from the opposition, and this is one of them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The chair will allow the hon. member a last supplementary question and then call orders of the day because we have run out of time.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the fact he stated back in 1968 that to him the matter of election expenses was, and I use his words, "a top priority", in view of the fact that reference to it was made in three successive throne speeches, and in view of the fact that his statement about opposition obstruction is typical misrepresentation of the facts, he will tell the House what prevented him from introducing such legislation except the fact that he was not prepared to carry through his promise?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is obviously argument and not a supplementary question. The Chair has to call orders of the day.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I rise on a point of order at this time because of an urgent and important question which I must ask of the minister with respect to Devco. I feel that time to ask that question has been denied me because of the profanity used by the Prime Minister which caused a loss of time to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Friday, February 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ross Whicher for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session and the amendment thereto of Mr. Alexander (p. 212).

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-L. Rochon (Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have listened very attentively to the remarks made since the opening of this session by all those who contributed to the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

According to their political affiliation, some have approved it without any reservation whatsoever; others found it incomplete and many, without disapproving it completely, would have liked to see in it a clearer expression of the feelings they have toward those they represent in the House. If you look more closely, however, you realize—for this is very obvious—that all members, whether of the opposition or the government party, are animated with the same feeling: the same clear and unfailing desire, the same unequivocal determination to contribute to the well-being of Canadians.

Last December, addressing the whole world at Christmas, Pope Paul VI spoke in a way which must have made many people think in the days we live in, when our world is shaken by all kinds of crises, by civil and religious strife—a world which struggles with hardly any hope for the future because of hunger and the diseases which it causes and which turn people into human wrecks who can be freed by death only.

• (1200)

Those words of the Holy Father have given this world a glimmer of hope. We used to say—in my generation at least—when we were studying classics: "If you want peace, prepare war". But in our day of social unrest, of bloody strife, a voice rose to say to the world: "If you want peace, prepare justice".

Mr. Speaker, I will not be accused of exaggerating if I maintain that the action of this government, which I am proud to support, is to a large extent aimed in that direction. To be convinced of this—and in spite of what our opponents may say—one only has to look at both this government's past efforts and accomplishments and the plans for the future which it announces in the Speech from the Throne.

As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, we do not have a complete record of all the speeches made since 1867. Such a compilation would be interesting for various reasons, if only to provide a summary, so to speak, of the preoccupations of the various governments which have been in office over slightly more than a century.

Surely one thing would be obvious. One hundred years ago, those in power did not seem excessively social-minded. The way of thinking that prevailed in those days made them more trade-oriented than anything else. Their concern was more directed toward ensuring the wealth of the country in general or of the propertied class than that of the other sectors of society.

Our fathers did not take exception to differences in fortune which were much more shocking than presently. The government did not think of establishing a just society as this would have been considered if not strange at least unattainable.

However, it must be recognized that a century ago the poor adjusted themselves to their condition more readily than currently. Times have changed and the political history of the last 50 years is that of a slow emergence of what we might call the social concept.

More and more all our governments have given priority to these questions and legislation passed within the last few years bears witness to that. But this is a complex area and the search for justice, by its very nature, is an ever-recurring and never-completed operation.

Of course we can see actual progress but this will never correspond, whatever we do, to total and final success. But in this field, as in many others, you need not hope to undertake and need not succeed to persevere. Allow me to refer to the Speech from the Throne which we are currently debating, and I quote:

> In a period dominated by bigness, in an increasingly impersonal social system, one of the major challenges facing government is to remove the impression of isolation which so often surrounds men and women, depriving them of their sense of worth, of accomplishment, of fulfilment, and removing from them their identity as individuals.

This feeling of isolation, or to quote a fashionable expression widely used nowadays, of alienation is probably a new phenomenon. If we go back to the post-war years, when another liberal government laid the foundations of the social security program—one of the most comprehensive in the world—we enjoy today, we have the impression that our predecessors were sincerely convinced that a better distribution of wealth, while insuring that the underprivileged would be, as far as practicable, shielded from misery, would have simultaneously eradicated the deep root causes of social unrest.

But what is happening? We have noted that more than 25 years of relative peace and a quarter century of almost uninterrupted economic progress have not solved a great deal. We did not find it enough for us to guarantee to the economically weak the social benefits that would, at the same time, solve the problem of poverty. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the word "poor" is almost new in our political jargon. When I was first elected to this House in 1962, it was hardly uttered. Now almost everyone mentions it, which is an indication, I think, that we are now conscious of the fact that it is not enough for a country to tackle the problems of its poors, but that it should strive to redeem their human dignity.

This is the political trend of the present government. Urgent economic necessities related, for instance, to defending, in the public interest, the integrity of our currency and the comprehensive review of our fiscal policy, should not be construed as a sign, even temporary, of negligence toward our social calling but, on the contrary, as the implementation of measures to reach that goal. In this regard, long excerpts from the Speech from the Throne could be quoted.

New national parks, the fight against unemployment, a better economic climate, the maintenance of stable prices, there are measures in which we must see as many aspects of a social policy, in its widest but also in its truest sense.

Mr. Speaker, the government was accused of encouraging unemployment in its fight against inflation. That accusation dishonours those who cast it. We may perhaps have achieved more success in the first instance than in the second. Price increases, in Canada, rank among the lowest recorded in the industrial countries of the world. This remarkable feat, for which the government should be congratulated, was of benefit to all citizens.

Inflation, Mr. Speaker, is a deeply rooted and demoralizing evil whose spreading effects spare no one. Unemployment is a more apparent scourge, more easily definable but surely terrible for its victims. However, experience has shown us that it is of a more temporary nature and that its effects are less protracted. We have already noted some improvement in that respect this winter in comparison with last winter and no doubt that through the economic incentive program which we have undertaken, it will be possible to lessen those effects, thanks especially to the new provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I have spoken about the tax reform, the fight against inflation and unemployment but I could deal at length with many other aspects of the government's administration. It is not exaggerated to say that Canada has led the way by taking various steps to protect the environment. Ours is one of the few countries with a Department of the Environment specially vested with this responsibility. However, even before the department was set up, we had already taken a great many measures to protect the purity of air, water and soil, such as the Clean Air Act, the ban on DDT and phosphates, the Canada Water Act, all measures introduced by this government and reflecting this vitally social concern.

We implemented the Opportunities for Youth program. We instituted studies on drugs, the results of which are now taking concrete legislative form. We created Manpower Centres specially geared to students, etc. Although this aspect of the government's activities may have given rise to criticisms, on the whole we can claim real achievements. We have also taken many steps to protect farmers, to defend the interests of the consumer and to broaden Canadian international action.

In almost every case, I will point out, we have had to do without the support of the opposition, for adoption of legislation on the marketing of farm products, for fiscal reform and many other measures which were required in Canada.

I shall now stop my enumeration of the various beneficial measures passed and implemented by a government which has demonstrated more concern with serving the best interests of the nation than with ensuring its popularity. It is true that, the more courage we have shown, the more hostility we have incurred from both labour and business circles. The fact that so many private interests have felt aggrieved confirms our feeling that we have protected the public interest.

Apart from all such matters, the Speech from the Throne announces truly new legislation. One measure, for instance, concerning up-to-date and flexible competition will not please everybody, but will be of benefit to our country. New provisions with regard to income security may appear too generous to some, insufficient to others, but no matter, it is the general good that is sought.

Even though Canada may have more quality housing starts than almost all other countries in the world, it will always be said that it is not enough. This government has chosen to do its duty, all of its duty. Accordingly, it deserves to be encouraged and congratulated. Things cannot always be perfect. The government accepts criticism, but this criticism must be constructive. It will have been noted, doubtless, that since the beginning of this session, for lack of more serious subjects, the opposition refers only to issues such as the Geoffroy case or the alleged intention of removing the term "Royal" from the designation of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), toward the end of last week, ansered these accusations as he was touring northern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I would rather not linger too long on this subject, but I can asy that the government's achievements arouse little enthusiasm on our opponents' part. This is understandable. It is even understandable that a certain part of the press, confusing the right to criticize with the duty to criticize, did not aspare it its reproaches. Fortunately, Canada has more objective and detached observers.

Reviewing, much as I have just done, the action of the government for the past few years, the Journal de Montréal on February 14 last published an article which stated in part:

> In these particularly difficult times, the government remains vigilant and active. It was able to solve problems overcome crises and it works more than ever to improve the living conditions of all Canadians.

It could not be stated better. But if the value of this evidence is suspected, perhaps one will be more impressed by that of Le Devoir, a paper which is not very sympathetic to the government, as is well known. In an article by its Ottawa correspondent who also reviewed the legislative action of the government, it was stated in conclusion:

> The government ensured the passing of many reformist acts of great importance, including the monumental tax reform bill and it succeeded as never before in keeping the attention of Canadians focussed on the central parliamentary institution.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that some measure of parliamentary reform, vehemently opposed by the opposition, will ensure that Parliament will now be able to act faster and better in the numerous fields in which it has to take action.

Nevertheless there is some contradiction in the fact that the very people who never stop asking that the government interfere in everything are not very competent themselves. Indeed, they spend their time reproaching the government with its slowness, its mismanagement and its idleness. But those are the very people who resist the most vehemently all attempts made by Parliament to facilitate sensible discussion of measures that often are vital for the public interest. The Canadian people are not taken in by that ambiguity and they will not believe that the government has trampled down the rights of Parliament, if I may use an expression often used by hon. members of the opposition. On the contrary, they are grateful to it for having taken measures to allow the representatives of the people to express themselves in an absolutely democratic way, that is in giving them the opportunity to take a vote on the proposals submitted to them.

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not, like previous speakers, pay tribute to the hon. member who moved the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, as well as to the seconder. Both deserve much from their country. They have shown themselves worthy of the confidence which their electors had put in them, and I am convinced that both realize that a brilliant future lies afead of them.

To end these few remarks, may I, Mr. Speaker, call on all members of the opposition or the government to work together hand in hand. Let us work for the increased well-being of this country, and instead of condemning everything, sowing hatred, as some are trying to do, let us co-operate. As for those who would criticize us and try to get ahead by destroying reputations, may I remind them that "He who sows the wind shall reap the whirlwind".

• (1210)

[English]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, as I participate in a Throne Speech debate for the first time, even though I have sat here as a member for six years and would like to think that I may sit here longer although that will be left to the electorate in the not too distant future, I suppose, I enter the debate with two basic thoughts that I want to present to the House. I believe they underline part of the problem in Canada, and in a philosophical way I have entitled them "The Paradoxes of the Prime Minister".

After listening to the last speaker refer to criticism and then immediately talk about hate, and accepting the sincerity of the views he expressed, I hope that no one after listening to what I have to say will suggest that one can equate criticism, either constructive or negative, if one can divide criticism in that semantic form, with any hint of hate, prejudice or bigotry.

As I sit as a Member of Parliament and hear questions concerning Canada discussed, our constitution, the monarchy and our parliamentary form of government, and then on television see the problems which exist to the south of us, I believe that those to the south of us at times have more to be thankful for than we in this country. Although they have problems and divisions I personally believe there is more frank discussion of those problems. Sides are taken passionately in an effort to solve their dilemma. We in Canada have a character blended from the two founding races with an infusion of the blood of many other peoples. We always seem to opt for compromise, for the easy way out, and avoid the basic issues confronting the land.

• (1220)

When the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) ascended the throne, so to speak, assumed the mantle of leadership of his party and fought an election, he appeared to speak frankly and realistically about the problems that face Canada. His frankness was stimulating. I believe there was hope in all parties and certainly among many of the younger people of Canada. People felt that at last, although the fundamental problems of this land would not be solved overnight—after all, no one party has a monopoly on solving our basic dilemmas—we were beginning to talk frankly and freely about our problems and we might attempt to resolve those problems in that spirit while recognizing at the same time the fundamental differences that have permeated the Canadian fabric for the past 100 years. Change is possible. Consider what has happened recently. President Nixon, a former communist baiter, has been honoured in Peking. He has been eating pheasant, duck and all those other delicacies available there.

Our forefathers, among whom I include Sir John A. Macdonald, were men of fundamentally diverse views but they got together and settled their differences. Those differences were based on philosophy, religion and origin and aroused greater discord than they might today when we have been emancipated by so-called education and technology. I wonder if there has ever been a political leader in this land who has evoked such an image as a young man who was adventurous and ready to experiment with new ways. If the President of the United States can change his anti-red posture and take the sort of trip he has taken to China, why should the people of this country not be able to sink their differences. However, we in Canada, I am afraid, are not prepared to sit down together frankly and discuss points of difference in the hope of bridging those differences and arriving at a consensus on what is best for Canada.

If there is anything that disenchants me about the four years that the present Prime Minister has been in office it is, if we forget for the moment unemployment and inflation, that during those four years that frankness and realism in approaching our difficulties which we had expected was never apparent. To me, Mr. Speaker, this involves a paradox. I doubt whether any man in recent times has come up so suddenly and so soon, stimulated such warmth, such excitement and radiated such charisma and yet, after attaining office, has become so cool, aloof and distant. In place of the former charisma we now see coolness and distance. In attempting to deal with today's problems the Prime Minister did not seem to be merely in an intellectual ivory tower; he seemed to be almost in an intellectual igloo. He has not cared about the plight of thousands of Canadians confronted with the reality of unemployment and caught in the squeeze of ever-spiralling inflation.

I will be the first to admit that no government will solve these difficulties overnight. Nevertheless, we must face the paradox of a Prime Minister who, having shown warmth and compassion before election, seemed at times to lose the capacity to feel compassion after his election. I believe that a Prime Minister of this country cannot solve the country's problems involving confederation unless he brings to the study of those problems a great degree of care and compassion. In approaching solutions he must not deal with the problem as though it is like a tangent of a circle in a geometric plane; neither should he imagine that you can feed figures into a computer and obtain a programmed result. Problems involving people cannot be solved by computers or braintrusts alone, although these can help in providing the options available. You need the human element. Human beings must make the ultimate decisions if we are to produce results which, although they may not satisfy everyone, will at least meet the approval of most.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Apart from the contrast displayed by the Prime Minister's attitude of warmth and concern on the one hand and coolness, detachment and an "I don't care" attitude on the other, we must also consider some of the things the Prime Minister has said, and especially the names he has called the premiers of certain provinces. Your Honour is well aware that, if we are to judge from the heat engendered in this chamber when some hon. members have called others names, name-calling on a national scale can bring about the breakdown of our system of government. The whole thing could break down. Think of what happens in this chamber when there is name-calling and imputation of motives. I say, why does the man who sits in the most responsible chair of the land, the Prime Minister's chair, not exercise greater responsibility in describing his feelings with regard to some of the leaders of this land? This is another example of the "I care and I don't care" attitude, of this warm-cool paradox I have spoken about.

Four years ago the Prime Minister was elected under a one-Canada banner, and a very attractive banner it was, too, pulling at the heart-strings of the nation. It is ironic that four years later there should be more discontent, disillusionment and disenchantment between the peoples of the various regions of this country than there has been for some time.

One reason for this breakdown in the common will, for this deterioration in our national fibre and fabric, and for the polarization between the various regions of this country, a polarization which is just beginning, is that for the first time there is in cabinet a group which, ironically, is not involved in national participation. I will not go into name-calling and say that there is in cabinet a Montreal Mafia and that there are three of four men who wield power while others, even cabinet ministers, must knock on the door. That has been said many times, and there is a good deal of truth to it. You need only look at the estimates for this year—I will go into those in greater detail soon—to realize who are the Midas twins and where the money is going. Much money is going to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Much is going to the department headed by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) and those agencies for which he is responsible. As for the Secretary of State, and I am glad to see him in the House because I intend to say more about his department, there has been an attraction of agencies and a compounding of dollars under his administration that make other ministries seem rather small indeed. These ministers are the Midas twins. It must be a compliment to their competence and aggressive nature, let alone any other factors, that they administer the two most active, sometimes imaginative and certainly the largest departments in the sense of new programs, not statutory matters which are built into the budget such as health and welfare. However, they are not voices for Canada as a whole in helping to develop a consensus in the cabinet. In fact, the development of a consensus springs too much from the basic center of this land—some might suggest only from Montreal or Quebec.

• (1230)

If we review the ministries we see that, starting with Sir John A. Macdonald, we had a Cartier and a Tupper from Atlantic Canada. Omitting some ministries and coming down to the days of real Liberalism, the man who indelibly stamped his imprint on the Canadian context more than any other one man, certainly in the twentieth century, through some of the programs he initiated and his avoidance of some of the fundamental problems with which we are still grappling—I mention bilingualism as one—was Mackenzie King. Mackenzie King, the Presbyterian and Protestant, had Lapointe, Jimmy Gardiner, Stuart Garson, C. D. Howe and Jimmy Ilsley in his cabinet. These were fine Canadians from various regions of Canada. They brought to the cabinet points of view which were not just confined to the television centres of Toronto and Montreal and did not just come from the geographical context of Ottawa. Whether they liked it or not, they represented a group. They did not come here initially as voices from Saskatchewan or Port Arthur or the voice of business. They brought to cabinet a balance of varying points of view from important ministers, something which is not found in the present cabinet.

The present cabinet, regardless of fuzzy-wuzzy tinkers as a colleague of mine suggested not too long ago, has in terms of actual power a very narrow base that has not been exposed to some of the realities of Canada from coast to coast. There are fine men from British Columbia and Toronto and a very interesting gentleman from Nova Scotia, but under Mackenzie King the President of the Privy Council was closer to the seat of power than under the present Prime Minister. These things come and go. Ministries have men who are close to the Prime Minister and men who are somewhat removed by distance and philosophy and thus the door does not open quite so readily.

Mr. Bell: You mean like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner)?

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) mentions the Minister of Finance. This is the reality of cabinet-making. It will continue under any administration, but the flaw in the present administration is that there is not the dilution of different points of view coming into the common stream.

Mr. Pearson had Jimmy Sinclair who has now attained fame in another way. He brought a responsible point of view from British Columbia. At one time George McIlraith used to bring a very definite point of view to cabinet council. He was not only heard but listened to, and there is a big difference between the two. Mr. Pickersgill brought to cabinet a very historical past and a very political present. He certainly added his point of view to cabinet council. There was Mr. Chevrier, an honoured representative of a riding about which Your Honour knows quite a bit. Regardless of political background, these men were of sterling character and brought their points of view to cabinet council. The results of cabinet deliberations were not dictated just because a man happened to be infused with the culture of Toronto or Montreal. There was a balance.

I need only go back to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). He brought a balanced point of view from coast to coast. The lesson of history is remote but, ironically, there was more of a Canadian spark, be it a Canadian vision, Arctic plans or northern development. There was a one-Canadian approach. In his cabinet were Howard Green, Davie Fulton, Gordon Churchill, Hugh John Flemming and many others.

Mr. Osler: What about—

Mr. Nowlan: If the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) wants to ask me an illegitimate question, I will give him an illegitimate answer.

Mr. Osler: I would like to ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the floor and cannot be interrupted unless he is prepared to reply to a question at this time. I remind the hon. member that he has limited time.

Mr. Nowlan: I would like to continue, Mr. Speaker. My whip has informed me that I have only ten more minutes. I would like to conclude in that time. I have the problem of speaking too long rather than otherwise because I have so much of substance to say, not because I am prolix. I would like to complete my remarks.

We have the one paradox of the man with the warm charisma while campaigning who, following election, becomes the cool inhabitant of an intellectural igloo, a man without compassion who does not care. I suggest in all seriousness that the administration is going to have to combat in the next election the fact that the Prime Minister does not really care about a single problem. The other paradox is that under this ministry—I am not saying there is not regional representation, but that is not what I am talking about—the ministers who have the ear of the Prime Minister and his administration have a very narrow background. I do not mean narrow personally but because of geographic and other interests.

Before I try to dissect some of the estimates of the Secretary of State, I must say there is one thing that appalled me and caught me by surprise, although I should have been aware of it. When we look at this handy book put out by the President of the Treasury Board, which confuses rather than clarifies and hides more than it shows, we see it is shown in clear form that in the six short years since I came here the estimates have more than doubled from $7.2 billion in 1965 to $15.7 billion for 1972-73. We all know this is not the end. In six short years the estimates have more than doubled. Four years ago the present Prime Minister came on the scene with frugality and thrift. Later I will deal with how much his administration has cost. In a cumulative way the four Trudeau years will cost the Canadian taxpayer more than the first 85 years of Canadian federal government in total expenditure. This is the man who is so frugal and thrifty. The figures are clear. I have them here.

Let us talk about the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and see what it has done. The time has come for Canadians to take a hard look at the CBC. Personally, I am in favour of a national broadcasting service. However, the proposed expenditures on current account are $207 million, not counting the $31 million in loans. Compare this with total federal expenditures of $184.9 million in 1914. Indeed, federal government revenues did not reach the present level of the CBC for this year until the war-time year of 1917.

Look at the Department of Secretary of State. Proposed expenditures amount to more than $1 billion when one counts post-secondary transfer payments of $28 million. Mr. Speaker, total federal government expenditure did not exceed that amount in any year until Canada had been at war with Hitler for two years. To put it in another way, it took the first ten years of confederation for the Canadian Federal government to spend more than the CBC proposes to spend in the next financial year. It took the first 30 years since Confederation for the federal government to spend as much as the Secretary of State proposes to be responsible for spending in the next financial year. It took 49 years of confederation to spend as much as the Secretary of State has spent in four years, that is, $3.2 billion. It took the federal government the first 74 years of confederation to spend as much as the present administration proposes to spend next year. The four Trudeau years will cost Canadian taxpayers more than the first 85 years of federal government.

• (1240)

I ask, without trying to stimulate culture at all, is it any wonder that we should not be surprised, with estimates growing at this rate, with such large amounts set aside for culture at the expense, it would seem, of allocations, to certain practical programs, that the Canadian taxpayer is beginning to wonder where we are heading? If time were available I would go into more detail, though I could not hope to discuss fully the mythology of the hasty handbook for confused Canadians prepared by the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Nowlan: That is the title. I was not referring personally to any minister. In this publication, purporting to show taxpayers how their dollar is spent, the President of the Treasury Board suggest we are each of us contributing in taxes 2 cents for culture and recreation. This is almost worthy of a question of privilege. One has only to look at the other pages, at the sections in which expenditures on which other programs are buried, to find that instead of two cents being spent on culture the amount is easily between four and five cents. It would be ridiculous if it were not so serious.

We find the estimates relating to The Company of Young Canadians under Health and Welfare. I do not know whose health these people have helped or to whose welfare they have contributed. More interesting to me is the fact that the allocation in respect of translation and bilingual programs, to the tune of $50 million, is to be found under the heading "Internal Overhead Expenditures". I would have thought that if anything were basic to culture it would be expenditure on bilingual programs. Similarly, $90 million proposed for education assistance in the year 1972-73 is found separately listed. Of course, when the work of 29 departments is broken down to 11 functions, expenditures have to be shifted around—there has to be a little shell game—but let us not put all these items which are related to culture under different headings. The additional expenditures to which I have referred could easily add a further $318 million to the figure of $365 million given us in the little handbook, and I believe I can say this without provoking any debate with the Secretary of State who is responsible for all these programs.

Before closing I should like to deal with one further item here. It concerns translation costs. I believe there is a lot of hocus-pocus in connection with the translation of French into English and English into French. Translation services are, of course, important having regard to the bilingual character of this nation, but I think we have gone overboard. Look at the figures. Between 1961 and 1965, translation cost us $7.7 million. Between 1965 and 1969 the cost was $14.9 million. Four years of this administration, based on the 1969-1973 figures will give rise to translation costs amounting to no less than $41 million, more than is to be expended on northern economic development this year, or even next year, for which the estimate is $38.7 million. The proposed expenditure on translation next year is $15 million compared with $2.7 million for the Economic Council of Canada. I suggest this represents a sad degree of imbalance in the determination of priorities. We are spending $15 million in one year and $15.7 next year on translation while providing $2.7 million in the same period for the functions of the Economic Council, five times as much for translation as a specific subject than for economic planning, and this is at a time when the country badly needs economic planning.

My time has almost expired but there are many more things I could say. I hope to have the opportunity to say them at another time. I believe that as we head down the back stretch—I am referring to the days when I used to run races—on the last lap of this parliament, the government will have to show that it cares. It will have to demonstrate that there is a measure of balance in its decisions. I am not talking now of the Liberal party. The Liberal party is a great and famous institution of the land—too strong as far as I am concerned. On this note I suggest that a government which was capable of approaching decisions in a balanced way would never have involved itself in the little problem which has arisen with respect to the RCMP. It may seem only a small matter but it is large in the eyes of many people. Members opposite can sniff and sneer, but I would point out to them that this difficulty has never risen before. It did not arise during the administration of the previous Solicitor General who was a wise old fox around the corridors of this Hill. This is another thorn which I hope will prick some sensibility, some sensitivity, into the cabinet in order that we may avoid in this land the backlash which could be witnessed unless better judgment is shown.

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make one or two comments at this time. Some of them will relate to my constituency. But before getting into those subjects I wish to commend the two hon. members who moved and seconded the address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne and join with others who have paid sincere tributes to them. I should like to say how refreshing it was to hear the unabashed, unashamed and enthusiastic views of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) in a Chamber which is all too often characterized by predictions of disaster, gloom and doom, particularly from the Casandras opposite. It was quite refreshing that at least one member of the House could state that government had done something over the past years to justify his saying something positive and enthusiastic about our performance. I only wish that some of this enthusiasm would rub off on members opposite. It is not a question of being smug but simply of recognizing a few facts. During 100 years, this country has achieved certain accomplishments. Perhaps these can be put into some kind of perspective, rather than members dwelling upon some of our shortcomings.

• (1250)

I was intrigued by the contribution made by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan). I too have read "How Your Tax Dollar Is Spent". I did not find it confusing, but I must admit that, after listening to him telling the House that he had read it, I am prepared to believe that it must have been a confusing document to him. I say that because no member of this House, having read that document, could have come forward with such a jumble of ideas so confusedly presented without giving some credence to the claim that the document itself is confusing. I shall re-read it myself and perhaps I shall become as confused as he; but certainly on first reading it did not seem to me confusing but, rather, quite helpful.

The hon. member for Annapolis Valley started to talk about what he called the "two Midases from Quebec". He was, of course, referring to two ministers, one being the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) and the other the minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand). He went on to say that somehow their budgets had been increased. But why did the hon. member devote such a great portion of his speech to talking about increases in budgets? Was he as concerned about the increase in the budget of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion? No, he simply avoided that. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley could not justify, nor could any other member from the Maritimes justify, coming to this House to complain about the increase in the budget of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. So in that selective way that is the trademark of hon. members opposite, the hon. member dealt with but one budget that he felt he could legitimately make some point about, coming from Annapolis Valley.

Mr. Nowlan: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind taking innuendo from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) but I am not going to take it from my hon. friend across the way. My time ran out and I had only started to talk about the estimates. We on this side have been complaining about the policies adopted by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) ever since this Parliament opened, and my hon. friend knows it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: If the hon. member would only sit in this House more frequently and listen to members of the opposition, he would know that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peterborough has the floor and he should be allowed to make his speech.

Mr. Faulkner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly did not intend to make any innuendo; I was stating facts. I do not have to resort to innuendo; I need only tell the hon. member what are the facts.

Then the hon. member went on to complain about the expenditures. He may have some legitimate criticisms of the program—I do not dispute that for a moment—but he seemed to think that the bulk of the money was being spent in central Canada and in Quebec in particular. He went on to say that this money was spent not by DREE but rather by the Secretary of State's Department. I do not think the rather lame excuse that the hon. member had only 30 minutes should account for the selective criticism that we have listened to today.

I am not going to get into a defence of the estimates of the Department of the Secretary of State. This will be our pleasure when the estimates of the department come before the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. I only hope that between now and then the hon. member, who was so critical of the increased budgets and so concerned about them, will have more to say than simply that he objects to the increased expenditure on translation facilities.

I must say I find it particularly ironic that the hon. member can stand in his place and profess his complete confidence and faith in the concept of a bilingual country and then come to this House and express his objection to expenditure on translation services. If he has anything more to say about this department I should love to hear him, and I am sure that the minister will also be interested to hear him. However, I suggest that blanket criticism of increased expenditures which, when one gets to the pith and substance of the criticism, is simply a complaint about the increased amount of money spent on translation services, is a rather hollow and, I suggest, inadequate critique. As I say, I hope that between now and the time the estimates go to committee the hon. member will have something more substantive to contribute to the debate.

I was also intrigued about his inside information on the subject of cabinet discussions. He feels that he has some sort of access to those who are making a contribution to cabinet discussions.

Mr. Nowlan: You know who, Hugh.

Mr. Faulkner: I have no idea who. What I do know is that, having looked at the DREE program, I cannot see where central Canada benefits at all. Where does Peterborough or Toronto benefit under DREE? I am not complaining about that because I think DREE reflects the true priorities. It does not reflect any priority in regions in central Canada but rather other priorities that are long overdue. So I suggest that to say that the priorities he referred to emerge from a cabinet that is dominated by ministers from central Canada is palpable nonsense. I suspect it is merely serving as campaign ammunition for the election that lies ahead. However, let us not confuse what is election fodder and what is fact.

Coming as I do from central Canada, I would be the first to state that the government has demonstrated an approach to the priorities of this country that is at least as intelligent and as sensitive as any previous government within my time. However, as I say, since we are in an election year we will have to put up with the sort of nonsense we have been hearing.

I am going to get into some other topics, Mr. Speaker, so may I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of hon. members that the Chair call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair. The House will resume consideration of this item of business at two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Faulkner: I want to continue from the point at which I left off at one o'clock and get into the substance of what I want to say. First of all I want to deal with the contribution of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). I will make some comments about what I feel our strategy should be. First of all, I would like to wish him well in what is obviously a difficult portfolio. He has demonstrated an extraordinarily high level of talent in his previous undertakings for this government, and I am sure he will bring these considerable talents to bear successfully in the portfolio he presently holds. In his first speech to the House he wisely warned us, and the public at large, against any false hopes for uninterrupted smooth sailing. Although the economy is strong, despite the gloomy predictions of the Cassandras opposite, there are serious and unresolved problem areas. In his remarks the minister pointed out some of these.

• (1410)

First, there is the highly imperfect and incomplete state of the so called science of economics, where theorists are more noted for their disagreements than for what they agree upon. Second, there is the lack of solid understanding about the phenomenon of cost-push inflation, and the understandable but frustrating lack of consensus on how to deal with this matter. The minister, in his remarks, stated:

> Cost-push inflation has frequently occurred to some extent in the past, but more recently it has taken a far more virulent form.

The remedy for the problem most often proposed by Canadians generally is, of course, wage and price controls. The Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, Dr. John Young, has indicated that the Commission has studied this matter and has a formula which could be used if there is not successful voluntary restraint. I, for one, would like to see some of the findings of the Commission made public so that we could examine this matter dispassionately. I note in passing, though, that the Senate Committee on Prices and Incomes reviewed the matter of wage and price controls, invited a series of the most distinguished economists in this country and abroad to advise the committee on the matter and, after their exhaustive study, came out against wage and price controls.

Third, there are the dangers inherent to a trading country like Canada in the formation of trading blocs all around us, particularly trading blocs which have a tendency to be protectionist. Fourth, there is the threat posed to Canadian secondary manufacturers by the brazen plan of export subsidy that the U.S. Congress is allowing through the formation of the Domestic International Sales Corporation, creating a substantial threat to employment in Canada. Fifth, the minister pointed out something which we all too often forget, namely, the pure vagaries of a relatively free market economy operating on the basis of decisions by millions of individuals.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is a further threat to employment levels and to the economy of Canada which was not mentioned by the minister. It is the new, potentially troubling threat to Canadian jobs looming on the U.S. horizon in the form of the Hartke-Burke bill. This bill is supported by the AFL-CIO, and is designed to cut back on imports from abroad. Canada would be the country most affected if this bill, which has been referred to the U.S. Senate Finance Committee, ever became law. This bill would establish a new agency with strong powers to regulate imports. The bill would force Canada to put quotas on its exports to the United States, rolling them back to the average level of exports for the period 1965-69. This bill is being supported by the heads of international unions in the United States. It is a short-sighted, selfish, protectionist measure.

But the irony is that Canadian workers who are members of the same international unions in question will be thrown out of work by the lobbying of the leaders of the unions of which they are members. I think it is important to know what the Canadian heads of the international affiliates of these unions are doing, what pressures they are applying to their counterparts in the United States to stop the progress of this bill. I would also like to know what that political party the NDP, which is nothing more or less than the handmaiden of organized labour in Canada is doing to bring pressure to bear in order to stop this bill.

These are some of the realities with which the Minister of Finance has to contend. His task will not be easy. Recognizing this, perhaps he will forgive me if I chide him gently for what appears to have been somewhat rosy statements about the employment prospects for Canadian workers. I share his view that our first priority must be to provide good jobs for Canadians who are seeking work. That is fair and commendable. I completely endorse that priority. But really, Mr. Speaker, what are the prospects of that priority ever being anything more than a priority? I don't believe that this government, or in fact any other government can accomplish that goal, and I do not believe that we should leave the impression in the minds of Canadians that it is something that can be done, or done easily.

I was disturbed to receive today the first mailing of a document which apparently is the result of an organized campaign in support of "a full employment program."

Mr. Gilbert: Are you against full employment?

Mr. Faulkner: If the hon. member will wait for a second or two he will hear my misgivings about this. What is the program proposed? I quote from the document:

I urge your support demanding this government pass full employment legislation now guaranteeing all Canadians, able and willing to work, jobs at fair wages—

Whatever that means.

—commensurate with their ability or training.

If any political party in this House has such a program, Mr. Speaker, it should produce it. But certainly neither the NDP nor the Conservatives, nor indeed this party, has such a program. I think we should stop trying to leave the impression in the minds of Canadians that somehow there is a simple, miraculous solution, that if this or that group were in power everybody in the country would be fully employed and working at fair wages. I may say that a decision on the last statement would be a rather subjective judgment. Is it to be left to the individual to decide what he is worth? In fact, some people doing our work, Mr. Speaker, think that our wages are too low. We cannot possibly reach that goal.

Mr. Gilbert: Why not?

Mr. Faulkner: If the hon. member is so naïve that he does not understand this, then I will talk to him privately later. If anyone can point out to me a year when there was full employment in this country, or if the hon. member's colleagues opposite, whose political party was in power for 17 years in Saskatchewan, can point out one year there, or even a full 24 hours when there was full employment at fair wages, then I will retract my statement. But they know perfectly well that they cannot do that. It is pure hypocrisy on their part to suggest that it can be done.

I certainly think that our goal should be to maximize employment, and we can confess to this frankly, but we should also be examining ways in which unemployed and unemployable people can still be active and occupied, alternating between jobs. Our traditional ways of looking at this question have been superseded by events. The high technology industrial state raises new problems and new possibilities. Obviously, there will be less work and more leisure.

Obviously, things like overtime will have to be eliminated. Obviously the 40 hour work-week is becoming redundant in terms of present technology. All these are things that will have to be reviewed, and until they are reviewed we should stop promising full employment. We should begin to think of how we can make periods of unemployment as creative and active as possible. We must start thinking of alternatives to "the job" as it is narrowly defined and traditionally understood. We should start thinking in terms of a society of alternatives, of hope, not relief and handouts.

I want to turn now to the question of strategy in dealing with the economic prospects that face our country. I want to emphasize certain points which I see as central to our strategy. Dealing first with the phrase "an industrial strategy," this is a rather glib and popular expression which no one is ready to define with any precision. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has promised something more definite in his further statements. He contends, and I think rightly, that there has been over the years a developed form of industrial strategy. Programs like PAIT and IRDIA, and policies like the textile policy all constitute a form of industrial strategy. The principal component of the future strategy, and probably the most difficult, will be the steps taken by the department to aid the process of rationalization.

Branch plant fragmentation has demonstrably weakened our domestic economic base. Admittedly the needs of the Canadian consumer have been met, and so have the interests of the U.S. shareholders. But beyond that, the shortcomings of this pattern are clear and have been fully documented by a number of studies. Both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce have referred to this problem and I will await their more precise outline of their plans. I simply want to affirm that in my judgment this has to be a component of our industrial strategy.

Dealing secondly with tax reform, I wish to say that despite the significant and major overhaul of our tax system, it is still apparent that more reforms are necessary. I, for one, am convinced that instead of the extraordinary tax privileges enjoyed by the resource industries to cover their alleged risks, any concessions or privileges available to those industries should be granted on the basis of processing done in Canada. Most resources are in short supply and this situation is likely to continue for some time. It makes no sense to encourage companies to sell our raw materials in basically a sellers' market and give them special subsidies in the process. Tax support, if any in fact is justified, should be geared to support efforts the resource industry makes to process in Canada.

• (1420)

Secondly, consideration will have to be given to tax changes to support venture capital operations in Canada. Even a most cursory examination of the industrial scene will show that a number of small companies with young entrepreneurs and usually some technologically innovative idea, are trying to get off the ground. Their principal problem is trying to find the risk capital necessary. If there are venture capital operations prepared to get into this field, I think the government should share some of the burden. We might examine the methods used in the United States. That could be a formula that would work in Canada; the principle, though, is important and that is that we get into a support position for the venture capital operation. These small businesses funded by venture capital operations often are the kernel out of which much larger, viable and important businesses grow.

Finally, there is national strategy, something I have talked about in this House before. The Minister of Finance, in his speech, expresses the hope that the business community and labour unions, farmers and consumer groups, will make representations and offer advice. This has been, I remind you, Mr. Speaker, to some degree, the pattern of the past. In my view, this process of seeking or offering advice on an ad hoc basis when a situation becomes critical or even the present practice of an annual meeting between the Cabinet and representatives of business and labour—meeting separately, of course—is not adequate to meet the challenges of the present situation. Consultations between labour, management and government have got to be carried on in a far more systematic and continuing basis than heretofore. We have had the good sense to recognize the advantages of continuous consultation in the industrial relations field. The principle applies with equal force on a broader economic front.

Consultations and strategy sessions at the national level will only work if government is prepared to be completely open with the information it has at its disposal. It should also be prepared to consult, in some systematic way, on policy options that are being discussed in Cabinet. I feel very strongly that if labour and business have a clear and continually updated idea of what the government's intentions are, of some of the problems we anticipate, and the leaders of both labour and management are consulted on these matters, we can expect a higher level of co-operation and understanding than has been evinced in our direction heretofore.

Mr. Speaker, I simply say that we face competition in the world from highly developed, sophisticated industrial countries. We face tougher and somewhat protectionist policies from our greatest trading partner and largest market to the south of us. Even all these, and the other problems which I have outlined above, make the closest possible and continuing consultation between government management and labour indispensable. Annual meetings of the kind we have seen in the past will not serve this purpose. They will not produce either the understanding or the co-operation we will need. I appeal to the Minister of Finance, at the start of his new responsibilities, to explore this area of co-operation in a way that, in my view, has not been explored in the past.

I am afraid I am running out of time, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to touch upon an industry which is important in my area, and in relation to which the following statement appeared in the Speech from the Throne:

Policies designed to promote a related, yet distinct, sector of the economy—tourism, will be revealed in coming weeks.

I strongly and enthusiastically endorse this promise, and I will be watching with interest to see what is forthcoming. As you know, Mr. Speaker, representing as I do an area where the tourist industry is very important, I have to say that it faces serious problems in the less developed or advantaged areas. One of the principal problems is that the industry is fragmented and decentralized and does not have the financial base upon which to grow and to rationalize. I think it is important to note the efforts of the IDB in this regard. I point out to the House that last year there was a 56 per cent increase in lending to hotels and motels, from $17 million to $27 million, So, there is movement. It is in the area of financing that the tourist industry, particularly in the less developed areas, requires support.

I would also point out that in less developed areas it is often the tourist industry that holds out the greatest possibility of jobs. Plants are not going to locate in these areas because of the difficulties of transportation and the expense of setting up business, but the tourist industry and the natural resources of the area, lakes, water, hunting and fishing, could provide year round employment.

[Mr. Faulkner.]

Any strategy, and this is what I am appealing for, to help less advantaged areas should embrace the following four elements: first, financing on special terms for viable tourist operations whose intention is to grow to meet the sort of criteria we are talking about; second, support for training facilities in our community colleges for people who wish to engage in hotel management or the food service business. Much more sophistication has to be introduced into this area; third, access to tourist areas. Even the most cursory examination of the Kawartha Lakes will demonstrate that access to this area is plagued by inadequate road systems, and most of us are becoming increasingly impatient with the provincial government's performance in support of proper access to the Kawartha area; finally, promotion, particularly within Canada, of possible holidays in other parts. This type of promotion encourages Canadians to move within their country, something that is long overdue.

A coherent, properly financed strategy in this area could do more to meet the inequities faced by the people in the slow growth areas of Ontario and other parts of the country than probably any other strategy. In so far as the government has committed itself to doing something in this field, I support it and any measures it brings forth to achieve that goal I will endorse.

In conclusion, may I just make a point that I made elsewhere in support of the decision to transfer canals from the Department of Transport to the conservation program of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. This is something that you, Mr. Speaker, myself and others have been working on for at least two years. I think it is important to take this key phrase from the minister's statement in the House, which reads:

It is our intention, working closely with the provinces, to develop the recreation potential of these waterways and to protect their park, wildlife habitat and historical values.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure we all agree that although this move is only a beginning, it marks a radically important victory for those of us who have been saying that these waterways should not be arteries for transportation but should provide the backbone of recreational facilities available to all citizens. What is happening is that the lakes in Ontario and other parts of the country are becoming the closed preserve of a lot of cottage owners. With this program of new priorities there is the possibility that recreation will be available to all citizens, whatever their income and a wide variety of recreational possibilities will be available such as hiking trails, canoe routes, conservation areas, etc. which are a much more exciting prospect than anything held out before.

I strongly commend the minister and the government for making this move. Of all the things that have to be done, the first priority must be to secure land for parks. This is particularly true of the Trent-Severn canal system where land is at a premium and under constant encroachment from private development. If that system is to have land area available to all citizens it is imperative that the federal or the provincial government or the two combined get into a land purchasing program in order to protect it from private development. Of course, private development will continue but in the interests of all a balance must be maintained. The move by this government introduces the hope that such a balance will be established and I think that all the citizens of Peterborough and the areas of Northumberland and Durham will endorse this.

I am sorry that I have spoken so quickly, Mr. Speaker, but there were several things that I wanted to get on the record and I appreciate your indulgence.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack).

Mr. Thomson: A question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. parliamentary secretary would receive the question the Chair would have to ask the unanimous consent of the House to extend his time which had just expired as he finished. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Bell: No. We are on schedule, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack).

• (1430)

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by congratulating the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. It must have been a source of great comfort to those backbenchers when they were given permission to speak in this House. We all know, of course, that the role of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) is that of official heckler or court jester; so, it must have surprised the hon. member as much as it surprised us when he was given permission to make a bona fide speech.

An hon. Member: Come off it.

Mr. Alkenbrack: My colleagues have been eminently successful in rebutting the hon. member's attempts to shore up this government's sagging image, and I will now dwell on that. However, I feel compelled to make a couple of observations about the hon. member's verbosity. In the first instance, the Throne Speech itself must have been written by the same team that has been drafting the government's legislation over the past four years. The document was calculated to confuse rather than to enlighten the people of this country and members of this House. It lent itself to as many interpretations as there were listeners and, Mr. Speaker, it failed utterly to provide any solutions to the serious problems which plagued Canada since the present government assumed such extensive powers.

The hon. member for Bruce was like Mark Antony; however, he has something in common with that other Mark Antony. We are not sure whether he came to praise or bury his Caesar. If I may borrow a phrase from the Bard, I think the hon. member protested too much. In the process, he failed to add to the lustre of his Caesar's tarnished image. Apparently he was instructed to deliver his speech in the manner that the government administers its affairs of state, because he rambled and rambled, and in the end was compelled to ask for more time to attempt to make his point. We gladly gave him more time.

I will leave the hon. member for Bruce and turn to the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride). I say to that hon. gentleman that he is much justified in his concern about the probable outcome of the next federal election. When his constituents realize the inconsistencies in the speech he delivered in the House last Monday, his concern will be greatly amplified. In common with my colleagues, I was greatly amazed at the hon. member's statement that he fancies himself as something of an ombudsman. I am anxiously awaiting the day when he will qualify that statement, both by word and deed, and especially by deed.

I should like to make one thing clear before I continue my speech, Mr. Speaker. I am not attacking the two hon. members I have mentioned so far. I am not attacking them personally, anymore than I would launch a personal attack on any member. They are both personal friends of mine. It should be clear to everyone that the subservient backbenchers on the other side of the House relinquished all claims to individuality long ago. They are now reduced to serving the power elite that governs them just as it governs Canada. I am attacking their failure to stand up to the power elite and serve their constituents. I am attacking their subservience and their obvious willingness to put the welfare of their constituents below the welfare of that power elite. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton subordinates himself to the will of the elite group which is manipulating this country and then fancies himself an ombudsman. Mr. Speaker, this is a contradiction that, surely, is without equal in the annals of this or any other parliament.

To make my point, may I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that I am not in favour of legislation which would establish an ombudsman in our administrative organization. We are all private members in the House, even the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who represents the riding that elected him; and each of us is the ombudsman for the people he represents.

I am going to answer some of the charges that the hon. member levelled in his speech, some of which deal with the position that some of my colleagues and I have taken against abuses under the Official Languages Act and the Public Service Employment Act. May I say in passing that in my hand I hold a file of complaints of abuses arising under the Public Service Employment Act. The file weighs almost as much as Bill C-259, the taxation bill, and contains well over 200 documented complaints.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Alkenbrack: When I have finished, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: After the next federal election.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I will answer questions after I have finished my speech, Mr. Speaker. I think it is common knowledge by now that I am considered by some on the other side of the House to be a bigot because I have spoken out against these abuses, of which documentation has been sent to me. I was well aware of that possibility, the possibility of being called a bigot, before I began to speak out and, no doubt, I will be called a bigot again and again in future. However, I should like to make one thing clear to the people on the other side of the chamber and to all others who might be inclined to call me a bigot. I am committed to my stand and I will not waver. I will continue to attack this government and its minions on the issue of imposed bilingualism and the attempts on the part of this government to subvert the traditional and honoured rights of the Canadian individual, especially the individual in the public service. I will not stand idly by while Canadians of any race, creed, colour or language preference are given an advantage that is not available to all Canadians; nor will I stand idly by while Canadians are disadvantaged for the same reasons.

It is interesting to note that some members on the other side of the House are quite ready and willing to use the government's bilingualism policies for political purposes, but that they are also ready to jump back into the fold as soon as their leader orders them to. On May 20, 1971, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) told a meeting of his constituency association that he challenged the government's policy on bilingualism in the public service. Well done, I say. He said he was reinforced in his views by the views of his constituents and would continue to oppose the policy. I have here a copy of his statement, as carried in the Ottawa Journal. It will be remembered in this House that the hon. member, armed with evidence of abuses under the Official Languages Act, moved a motion in the Commons committee investigating civil service bilingualism. The hon. member's motion was defeated, largely by his own colleagues. He has been warned, in the interim, to desist from such tactics.

Mr. Osler: And who is supporting him on your side?

Mr. Francis: Nobody.

Mr. Paproski: Don't you worry about it, Osler.

Mr. Osler: I just want to know who supported him.

Mr. Alkenbrack: After the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Code) and I moved a motion in this House for the removal of the chairman of the Public Service Commission from office, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton abandoned those principles and came out publicly against me and my colleagues. I have a far more extensive file of documented abuses than the hon. member has, or he would not have dared to abandon his constituents in favour of his government. I wonder if the hon. member will make another flip-flop after his leader calls the next election. I suggest to the hon. member that it may be too late by then; his credibility has suffered too much for him to be able to regain it simply by opening his complaint file and attempting at this late date to get justice for those constituents of his who have suffered needlessly.

Mr. Paproski: Shame.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, may I get back to what the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton said. He began his speech in a way that fooled me into thinking he was going to be credible. Early in his speech he dealt with economics, agriculture and ecology, areas in which he appears to have an amazing amount of expertise. We are all surprised that he is not a cabinet minister. Then, as recorded in Hansard, page 74, he said:

[Mr. Alkenbrack.]

• (1440)

In the first place, the Liberal government, under the leadership of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said that because most Canadians will always speak only one language, it is necessary for them to be able to do business with their government in either of those official languages.

That is very credible as far as it goes. The hon. member should have stopped right there. He was on a winning kick. It is too bad he could not see it. We are all in favour of ensuring that all Canadians are able to get service from their government in either English or French. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) initiated that policy many years ago by establishing simultaneous translation in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alkenbrack: The hon. member then proceeded to refer to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). He even referred to the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan). He expressed surprise that the Leader of the Opposition did not make his speech in this chamber the other day on the same topic I have chosen. I fail to see the logic in the member's arguments. I fail to see what that has to do with the stand I have taken on this particular issue. The hon. member will no doubt be surprised to learn that Progressive Conservatives are not required to hang their individuality and responsibility to their constituents in the cloakroom before they enter this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alkenbrack: We are a strong party for many reasons. That is one of the main reasons. We are individuals, not puppets on a string. My leader speaks French and I speak French. However, I fail to see how this should influence my decision to speak out in this House against the abuses perpetrated under the sole excuse that French Canadians should be able to get service from their federal government in the French language.

The hon. member would do well to examine my remarks more closely. He would be well advised to read and reread the complaints he is getting from public servants whose careers have been stopped short because they are not bilingual. He had better heed the warnings being sounded today about the dangers inherent in pitting race against race in this country, as is being done by the federal government. That is being done through the abuses of the powerful who are running the various departments. He and his colleagues in the backbenches will do well to examine the extent to which the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), the chairmen of the Public Service Commission and the Official Languages Act are destroying the morale and efficiency of the public service, the armed forces and other areas of federal government activity in their zeal to undo a supposed wrong suffered in our past. I have many complaints here, more than a dozen, from personnel in the armed service which are all along the same line. Even if we accept the view that French Canadians have been kept out of the mainstream of Canadian life, and I do not accept it, then two wrongs do not make a right. I am surprised and shocked that that truism has escaped the attention of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.

Then, there is the matter of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) who was received so well in the Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton riding when he spoke there a few weeks ago. I can understand the concern of the member opposite. I assure him that the Conservative party organization in his riding is very much a part of the national party. That should give the hon. member more cause for concern. He compared the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate with Ian Paisley and George Wallace. While I feel that comparisons are odious, I cannot help but suggest to the member that he should be concerned about who he will be compared with by his constituents.

It will probably come as a surprise to some members opposite that through 1972 the official languages program will have cost Canadians the sum of—I think the minister—

Mr. Paproski: He wants to know what you think of Paisley.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I think the minister should listen to this figure I am quoting. It will probably come as a surprise to some members opposite that through 1972 the official languages program will have cost Canadians the sum of $223 million. This figure only represents the amount appropriated for the program by the office of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Paproski: What about the poor Ukrainians and Polish people?

Mr. McGrath: And the "Newfies."

Mr. Alkenbrack: It is only the tip of the iceberg. It does not take into account the sums appropriated by other departments that are camouflaged by misleading titles. There are millions of lost man-hours in all government services as a result of the bilingualism program. There is the incalculable loss of efficiency as evidenced by the total breakdown in some agencies, such as the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Added to all those is the tragic effect the program has had on public servants. Thousands of careers have been affected, many of them cut short by layoffs, demotions and loss of promotions.

Mr. Pelletier: Name them.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I have them here, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pelletier: Name them.

Mr. Alkenbrack: The minister is asking me to name them so he can fire them.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Working conditions have suffered to the extent that some employees would rather seek new careers outside the government service. I know of one prominent medical doctor who did so on February 11.

Mr. Pelletier: Name him.

Mr. Alkenbrack: They would rather do that than endure the atmosphere of resentment and hostility introduced into the public service by the heavy handed tactics of the government's hatchet men. There are a good many of those in every department.

The official languages program has already been corrupted and has become outright French Canadianism. To assist the government in furthering this new concept, many departments have already packed their personnel departments with French Canadians. I know there is no such thing as a French Canadian. For want of a better adjective, that is the way we refer to them. We also refer to English Canadians. In actual fact, there is no such person. We are all Canadians.

There is a bilingualism consulting section in each department which is also staffed largely by French Canadians. I have reports of promotion boards that are staffed entirely by French Canadians. In some departments, such as Statistics Canada, this results in the promotion of French Canadians—

Mr. Pelletier: They are just Canadians.

Mr. Alkenbrack: —over many equally deserving Canadians of other ethnic origins. I have a well documented case which verifies that such conditions exist in the statistical branch of Statistics Canada. There is a supervisor in a certain branch who has carried on a campaign to discourage English Canadians from remaining in his section. He promotes French Canadians over more deserving English Canadians, with one exception. He is in the process of promoting one English speaking girl as fast as he can arrange it, although that girl has the worst work record in the section in both production and accuracy. He is known in both the import and export sections because of this attitude.

There is another device being employed in Statistics Canada that bears looking into. At least two people have been promoted to the level of CR-6, despite the fact that there is no authorization for such a level. Department heads shift these people from one section to another in order to camouflage this illegal procedure. Here again, the effect has been to destroy morale in the branch still further—I refer particularly to those who are English unilinguals and who now see no opportunity for promotion ahead of them. The practice of delegating authority to promote people in the departments has gotten so far out of hand that I cannot believe the Chairman of the Public Service Commission is aware of all the abuses which are taking place. In fact, I cannot believe he cares about what is going on as long as he is protected by his minister.

• (1450)

Mr. Faulkner: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Alkenbrack: After I am finished, if there is time.

Needless, to say, morale in that section could not be worse. In the last couple of weeks resentment has reached a point at which there is real danger of fistfights in that section.

Mr. Faulkner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I am prepared to listen to so much of this stuff but when the hon. member alludes to people in a number of government departments, people whose names he is not prepared to disclose, I feel I should protest. Unless he is prepared to give his evidence before a standing committee of the House, then in my opinion he should not pursue that line of innuendo which is in consistent with the practice of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. parliamentary secretary may not agree with what the hon. member who has the floor is saying. Very obviously, he does not. But it appears to the Chair that unless he can cite some authority of which I am not aware, no point of order arises on that particular score.

Mr. Alkenbrack: We thank the hon. member for Peterborough for his interjection. He called my remarks innuendo. This is not innuendo. This is only a complaint laid at your feet, Mr. Speaker. I am dealing with a series of legitimate complaints for which there is documentation.

The people who have talked with me about this situation would not dare to file a legitimate grievance with either the Public Service Commission or the Public Service Alliance. I have been told repeatedly that the Public Service Alliance is a dead letter as far as grievances are concerned. This has been the case, I understand, ever since the arrangement was instituted whereby the fees for PSAC are deducted from the wages of employees whether or not they are members. This arrangement does away with the necessity of the PSAC to pursue grievances as it might have done in the past, since there is no need to serve members in order to induce them to remain in the alliance.

I should like to mention another area of serious contention. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has two networks, one French and the other English. The French network is French. That is fine. That is what we want it to be, so as to reach French-speaking Canadians. There is no way in which any unilingual or even bilingual Anglophone would be able to pursue a career within the French network. Now, Mr. Speaker, the English network has been made bilingual and careers in that network are already being denied in some areas to English Canadians. Even programming is affected in this way. I have complaints in this file from taxpayers in various parts of the country objecting to the use of French on an English network. They have a legitimate complaint. As far as I am personally concerned I like to see and hear a French program on the English network, when it is culturally advisable, but there are many people who do not. This works both ways. There are probably many French-speaking individuals who do not care to see and hear English programs on the French network. It may be they would not understand English, just as there are many English speaking people who do not understand French. It has already been announced that in future careers on the English network will be pretty well out of reach of English Canadians if they are not bilingual. I am sure hon. members can appreciate the point that is being made.

I have received several letters attesting to the fact that the NABET union local at the English network station in Ottawa now has a majority of French Canadians in its membership, while only a few years ago the proportion of French members was about 10 per cent. I have received complaints that Canadian performers such as Pierre Nadeau and Charlotte Gobeil are given preference over other English-speaking broadcasters. I have nothing against them. Miss Gobeil gave me a good reception and good guidance when I appeared on her program. I am just laying at your feet, Mr. Speaker, the complaints I have received along those lines; they might not be complaints I would personally make. But preferences are shown, it is said, in spite of the fact that the network receives letters objecting to shattered English being used.

Scores of people have written asking me whether the new language of Canada is to be Franglais, a mixture of poorly spoken French and poorly spoken English, which debases both. On the basis of documented cases of transfers, demotions and releases from the English network in Ottawa, I am concerned about the activities of a Mr. Martel in the administrative branch of the station. Mr. Martel has been characterized in the complaints I have received as a hatchet man for the Secretary of State's office and he has been responsible, I am told, for a number of personnel changes motivated entirely by the bilingualism policy.

Mr. Osler: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I think it is absolutely unfair of the hon. member to get up and name people who are employed in a Crown corporation, people he could confront quite easily when the Broadcasting Committee studies the estimates of the CBC.

Mr. McGrath: I hope the time spent on these spurious points of order is not taken out of the time allowed to my hon. friend.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Some time has already been allowed with respect to the previous point of order. It may be I should rule at this time on the point which has just been raised. I know that it is a practice in the House that public servants should not be mentioned by name in the course of debate, and attacked in circumstances in which they are not able to reply. I am sure the hon. member was not directly attacking the integrity of this civil servant. This is the position of the Chair.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, I trust you are not taking this time out of my speech. I should just like Your Honour to rule whether or not, the hon. member has a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair has made its ruling. It was not the impression of the Chair that the hon. member was reflecting on the integrity or qualities of civil servants, although he may have referred to them in general. I do not think he was attacking them specifically.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Osler: It seems to me that one particular man's name was mentioned several times in connection with the CBC. That is the point of order I was raising. The hon. member referred specifically to a certain person.

Mr. Paproski: Why don't you specifically sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I have made a decision and the hon. member who has the floor should be allowed to complete his remarks.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I object strongly to such tactics in the Public Service as I have outlined. They smell to high heaven. I would remind hon. members that what we are dealing with now is not bilingualism but a more sinister move, a move to promote the use of one language in every area of federal activity. And this is being done with tax money provided by all Canadians. I have been accused of using scare tactics to force this House to initiate a serious examination of this whole question, without offering any proof of my claims that the situation is approaching the crisis stage. I am not using scare tactis. If the revelations scare some people, so much the better, because I am afraid for the future of Canada. I do not want backlash from English Canada to cancel out the progress made over the past 100 years in furthering French-English relations in our country.

• (1500)

Many, many conscientious people in our country are being duped by this government into supporting a program that is operating under false colours. There is no resemblance between what is being done now and what was proposed to this Parliament in 1966 in the way of bilingualism. It was never the intention of the majority of members of this House to downgrade the English language and English institutions in Canada in order to give prominence to all things French. Since the present Prime Minister has held power the use of the word "Royal" has all but disappeared from our institutions. We are told that the French find the use of the word objectionable. So we have departmental names that reflect the French idion, and we are warned by Mr. Keith Spicer, the government's languages commissioner, that when he is finished making governments across the country bilingual, he is going after industry and other areas of activity.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, the languages commissioner—and I hope those who have interjected take note of this—has vindicated my stand, although I am sure he did not intend to do anything for me, nor did I ask him to do so, either. In spite of the fact that Mr. Spicer has been insisting that no one was suffering as a result of the languages policy, he announced on Thursday last that he favours moderation in the government's approach to bilingualism, and that efforts must be made to assist the casualties of the lingualistic revolution. I, too, feel that those people must be vindicated, and also compensated. However, I cannot understand how anyone can say that there have not been any casualties, and then suggest publicly that those casualties should be compensated.

I note that the Ottawa Citizen for last Thursday carried a report which stated that Mr. Spicer said he favoured a little moderation in implementing the Official Languages Act. The report continued:

In a panel discussion at Seneca College, he said a recommendation in his second annual report will be for such moderation.

It will oppose over-zealous enforcement of the legislation, particularly as it affects civil servants caught in mid-career by the bilingualism drive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must tell him that although the Chair has allowed him an extra four minutes the time allotted to him has expired. Unless he can get unanimous consent, he will be unable to continue his remarks. Does the House agree, that the hon. member should continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and may I thank hon. members for the privilege. May I just complete what Mr. Spicer said.

Mr. Spicer said efforts must be made "to assist the casualties of the linguistic revolution."

That is what I have been pointing out to this House since December 30.

He added that the anguish of civil servants caught up in it is "perfectly legitimate."

"We should be looking to exploit all the mechanisms of the language act to relieve the pressure," he said.

For example, he suggested holders of posts designated as needing bilingual expertise should be given six months' advance notice, to allow them to prepare for it.

The bilingual qualifications for a post also should be suspended for "anybody who has a legitimate claim to a job on the basis of technical competence."

That is the end of the quote from Mr. Spicer, and I thank him for vindicating my stand. The operations of the Public Service Employment Act are a further example of the fuzzy-headedness that has characterized the language policies and all other policies of the present power-oriented government. I serve notice on the government that I shall continue my fight against abuses of the languages act and the corruption of the Public Service Employment Act.

To those who work in the public service and to all of those who aspire to a public service career, I say that I will not abandon them, that I will fight civil service discrimination in the House of Commons and elsewhere, whether it be discrimination against English unilingualists or French unilingualists. My reason for that is fundamental, as it was at the beginning of my fight and always will be, namely to see that the youth of Frontenac-Lennox and Addington whom I have the honour to represent in this House have the same opportunity for employment in the public service as those from Lévis or Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: What will it be now?

Mr. Corbin: If you stay in the House you will hear. It is evident, Mr. Speaker, that the mood of the House today has turned sour, but the loyal opposition will have to answer for that. I am very reticent to speak under these circumstances, of which I am rather inclined to be ashamed as a Canadian. I hope that the Tory opposition will come to its senses, or show some form of responsible and constructive leadership soon in this House.

Mr. McGrath: We will; right after the next election.

Mr. Corbin: The sooner we get to an election the better, so the citizens of this country can deal with the promoters of this carnival that we have been witnessing from the other side of the House since this session commenced.

Mr. Paproski: Look who's talking.

Mr. Corbin: That is right. I have the floor, so you keep quiet.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, for a few days now, like some other members, I have had a feeling that I am wasting my time listening to the political speeches of the members of the opposition. I have always felt a certain amount of respect for the House of Commons but, since I have come here, I have much less respect for some of the members, who whine and whimper, complain for nothing and about everything, refuse to see the other side of the coin, ridicule, destroy and try to undermine the confidence of the Canadian people in the government and its ability to rule, in spite of failures which, very often, are none of its doing.

Obviously, the members of the opposition are making speeches these days that pertain neither to the Speech from the Throne nor to the routine proceedings in this House, but indeed to the coming election campaign. Yet, their constituents elected them to co-operate with the government when the time comes to pass good legislation such as that contained in the Speech from the Throne. In fact, the opposition has systematically tried to obstruct the passage of many bills since the beginning of the current Parliament. Their constituents will have the right to ask them to give an account of the quality of their so-called obstruction; frankly, I would hate to be in the shoes of a wavering Progressive Conservative, a foiled New Democrat or a swaggering "Caouettiste". I am firmly convinced that Canadians will renew the present government's term of office and strengthen it both as to quality and quantity.

I have had the privilege, Mr. Speaker, of serving for nearly four years now the riding of Madawaska-Victoria. I have served it loyally, honestly and with great dedication. In spite of the distance separating me from my riding, I have still been able to remain in contact with most of my constituents, mainly thanks to the co-operation of the regional weeklies and radio station and also to the indispensable communications tool of modern civilization, the telephone.

Before I go any further, I want to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I can tell the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), whom we all respect here because of his dedication to the area he represents, I want to say that his continued energy and courage in the face of the repeated but futile attacks of the opposition are two of his major qualities, and we, government members, appreciate him for what he is, a man of integrity, a conscientious and energetic representative of citizens and interests of the riding of Bruce which I had the pleasure of visiting last spring, and of which I have excellent memories.

I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that I am a little less acquainted with the new hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie). I am, however, aware that he came to us following a by-election, determined to grapple with the problems of his region with the same determination as his lamented predecessor. I wish the hon. member for Trois-Rivière a long political career and great satisfaction in serving his constituents.

I can now speak, Mr. Speaker, of my own riding, of my province, and at the same time of the Atlantic region. I wonder where my riding would be now, without the millions of dollars the government has poured into it over the past four years. Quite recently, I was still meeting people who asked me to explain why so much money has been allocated to northwestern New Brunswick in recent years.

They are right, Mr. Speaker. For example, and this is far from being a complete account, in the field of education, the federal government has paid to the New Brunswick government $6 million for the construction of composite and trade schools in the Madawaska-Victoria constituency and in the field of culture, the Secretary of State has given to various groups grants amounting to $60,000.

Under the Opportunities for Youth program of 1971, the young people of my area have received $90,000.

Under the Local Initiative Program of 1972, my area has now been awarded by the federal government a total amount of $1,150,000 to create 800 jobs.

Under the regional economic program, many industries have obtained from the department concerned grants totalling over $6 million.

The Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation has granted loans for some $3 million, thus encouraging the construction of low-rent housing and older citizens' dwellings, a thing which had never been done previously.

In agriculture, because of a very desperate situation, especially for potato growers, the federal government twice came to the help of the industry, by paying millions of dollars for price support.

The government has also helped to finance improvements to the regional airport at Edmundston, and the fight against pollution in the St. John River, by spending $3 million. It has provided several millions to improve the educational level of a large number of our fellow-citizens.

I do not want to run through the whole list, Mr. Speaker, and weary hon. members, but, apart from ordinary, administrative and current expenses for the numerous services offered by the Canadian government, the subsidies paid in the last four years have exceeded those of the 25 preceding years to reach a total of approximately $25 million.

I am being told that there is only one Progressive-Conservative member in the House. I do not believe that he is listening to me, that one. But there is nothing new in that.

The people of New Brunswick Mr. Speaker—

• (1510)

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: I am listening to every word.

Mr. Corbin: You are very kind; I thank you and I congratulate you.

[Translation]

—are presently under a Progressive Conservative government and I wish you would find time to make a short visit in my poor province to see what is going on. I wonder how long still this government could survive without the substantial financial contributions it gets from the federal government.

Since the beginning of this session, as in previous sessions, we have heard numerous criticisms directed against the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) as to the true effect of his subsidies on industrial development in the various areas of this country, and especially in the Atlantic region.

I for one have news for the members of the opposition, if they will bother to listen a minute. I shall quote an article which appeared on January 13, 1972 in The Cataract Weekly which, by the way, is a bilingual paper. The heading is as follows:

[English]

536 New Jobs Created in Grand Falls

[Translation]

This is my native village.

[English]

The town of Grand Falls and Victoria County have received as of September 30, 1971 from the Regional Development Incentives Act $3,139,900 which created 536 new jobs in this area. This places Grand Falls second only to Saint John, (the province's largest city) in the creation of new jobs during the past two years. Saint John has obtained the greatest number of new jobs, (1,197), followed by Grand Falls (536), and then by Moncton (311).

This fact was reported in the quarterly publication, "New Brunswick Economic Statistics", issued by the office of the Economic Advisor. The statistics are compiled since the Department of Regional Economic Expansion (DREE) announced its first approvals in October 1969 up to and including September 30, 1971.

[Translation]

So, Mr. Speaker, let not the members of the opposition come and try to make us believe that the programs for regional development are not successful. I invite them to visit my area.

Unfortunately, we have heard a lot about bilingualism today, although these questions also concern me enormously since I am bilingual myself and since I represent a bilingual area where the bilingual character of the citizens is respected.

However, I think that I am right in being concerned about the $4 million or so granted by the federal government for the benefit of the schools of the French minority in New Brunswick. I now quote an article published in the paper Le Madawaska on March 31, 1971.

The Société Nationale des Acadiens is concerned about knowing what will become of the $4 million granted by the federal government for the schools of the official language minority in New Brunswick and for the teaching of second languages.

The association takes advantage of a letter to the New Brunswick Education Minister to question him on that issue and to ask other questions concerning the training of teachers in the field of vocational education, the absence of Francophones in the vocational education division of the New Brunswick Education Department, the almost complete absence of French-speaking specialists in the curriculum and research division and what will become of the pupils attending the bilingual school in Fredericton now that the Health Department has condemned it.

I am glad to say that the matter of the bilingual school at Fredericton has been settled. A decent building has been provided for the young students and I congratulate the population of Fredericton for making that decision.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government granted $4 million to the province of New Brunswick, and I have learned from a reliable source, within the last few days, that those $4 million had been allocated to the General Income Fund of that province, so that absolutely nothing is done to promote bilingualism, certaindy not to the advantage of the New Brunswick minority. During the last few days, I got in touch with the Secretary of State and I asked for a report on that unfortunate situation.

The funny thing about all this is that the government which has to administer those $4 million is a conservative government which came to power in October 1969. And I quote now an article from a first-rate newspaper, Le Madawaska—

An hon. Member: A first-rate newspaper, indeed.

Mr. Corbin: Of course, as I was its editor during four years. But since I left it got even better.

And here I quote from that article published on March 6, 1969.

The Madawaska Progressive Conservative Association urges the government to act immediately:

At a general meeting of the members of the Madawaska Progressive Conservative Association that took place last Sunday under the chairmanship of Mr. Jim Morin at the New Royal Hotel in Edmundston, the following motion was unanimously carried:

Members of the Madawaska Progressive Conservative Association reaffirm their agreement on the principle of equality of linguistic chances in New Brunswick, regret the slowness of the provincial government in indicating its position and the steps which it intends to take, urge the government to act without further delay—i.e., in the next session—to make real the establishment in New Brunswick of a language system suitable for an officially bilingual province, and wish for complete support of those measures from both sides of the House.

The shameful thing, Mr. Speaker, is that the Conservatives who themselves wrote that resolution are now in power in New Brunswick and have done nothing to promote bilingualism. On the contrary, the population was able to realize the lamentable state of bilingualism following the film "L'Acadie" and the regrettable incidents which took place in Moncton.

How can you explain the lack of confidence of the French-speaking population of New Brunswick in the present government? How can you explain all the events which are taking place on the eastern and northern shores of New Brunswick? Can you blame those people for establishing their own political party, the Parti acadien? I would be ashamed to be a Progressive Conservative today! I would be ashamed to be in power in New Brunswick and be unable to serve the interests of the two founding groups of this country equitably, in a province which officially calls itself bilingual.

Fortunately, while receding in many areas, we have also made some progress. For instance, on August 25, 1971, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) announced the establishment within the New Brunswick public service of two French-speaking units, one in Edmundston and the other in Bathurst. Those are two federal manpower centres designated by the federal government under its program for introduction of French-speaking units in the public service.

Contrary to the stupid criticisms expressed by many members of the opposition, I think that there is cause for congratulating the chairman of the Public Service Commission, Mr. John Carson, for his realistic approach in administering the laws and instructions of the Parliament of Canada, with regard to official languages. There is, of course, room for additional French-speaking units both at home in New Brunswick and elsewhere in Canada, and I hope the present experience in this direction will prove fruitful and encouraging.

I note the absence from the House—and I hope it is a temporary one—of the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. Flemming), former premier of New Brunswick. These Progressive Conservatives do strange things.

As a matter of fact, the former premier of New Brunswick recently visited my riding for the first time since he was put out of office as provincial premier in 1960. He subsequently apologized because he had not met my fellow-citizens earlier and said a lot of rubbish in the same vein.

I would like now to quote and comment on an article which appeared in The Cataract Weekly of January 20, 1972. It is about a meeting attended by my hon. colleague from the South.

• (1520)

[English]

The Hon. Hugh John Flemming, former premier of New Brunswick—

[Translation]

—big fanfare and whatever you like—

[English]

—and member of parliament for Carleton-Charlotte, said Monday night that the federal government has never given proper explanation for the deterioration of the relations between Canada and the United States.

[Translation]

He was thus echoing some equally rambling and tenuous statements made earlier by his leader, the distinguished Leader of the Official Opposition, (Mr. Stanfield) in Edmundston, last fall. The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte then proceeded with his speech declaring that it was impossible to imagine—

[English]

—two neighbours who live so close together and who have so many exchanges and things in common, to have bad relations with each other.

[Translation]

For my part, I have only one thing to say to the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte and to his leader: if they see a problem in our friendly relations—and the relations between Canada and the United States are friendly—well then let them go to the U.S. and ask Mr. Connally for an explanation, and let them stop frightening themselves. And then—

[English]

He recalled that former Prime Minister John Diefenbaker didn't always get along well with the Americans,—

[Translation]

Yes, he was honest enough to admit it—

[English]

—"but he has never passed any legislation which was detrimental to us."

He never passed any worthwhile legislation, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Corbin.]

Mr. Corbin: If you can exaggerate, so can I, just to show how ridiculous your statements are, and that they do not stand up to criticism.

[Translation]

Those comments, Mr. Speaker, are unworthy of a grey-haired politician who was once the Premier of New Brunswick and who is considering my electros as bunch of ignoramuses. A man who used to be the Premier of New Brunswick should surely be in a position to contribute more constructively to such an important debate as that dealing with relations between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Speaker, my time is quickly expiring, I think that I still have a minute. I would have liked to discuss many other topics but I do not have enough time.

Before concluding, I would like to say that there is no greater honour for a member of any area whatever than to be in a position to rise in the House of Commons and defend the interests of his fellow citizens. As for myself, there is nothing I find more painful than seeing members from other areas rise in this House to disparage my area and my constituents. In my view, such an attitude should be condemned and the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte, among others, will have to answer for such uncalled for assertations at the next election, and I certainly wish him a good one.

[English]

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in commenting on the Speech from the Throne, I would like to deal with two or three things that I think are important to us as Canadians and as a country. In the main, I would like to point out to the government that what we need is a real opportunity for Canadians to build a better country, to control that country, and to play a real part in creating opportunities for those who live in it. The government has been pretty good on the creation of slogans but not too good on performance. We have been bombarded during the last two or three years with slogans such as "Opportunities for Youth". However, there has not been a real opportunity for our young people to get a job, to take part in the real, every day activities of this country so we set out a make work program and call it "Opportunities for Youth". If it had been called the "Make Work Program for Youth", it would have been more properly labelled.

• (1530)

The same thing happened to the farmers in western Canada. The government established the "Lower Inventory for Tomorrow" program and called it Lift. It was not expansion the government sought, but rather a combination of bribery and pressure to force the farmers to cut down the production of grain upon which their livelihood depended. The result was a serious loss of production and of farm income.

The "Local Initiatives Program" also has a very nice title, but from my experience the decisions are not made at the local level but in Ottawa or Winnipeg. A lot of work has gone into this program at the local level. My figures are probably not accurate, but in my constituency there would have been something in the neighbourhood of 56 applications. Of these, two were withdrawn, 11 approved and 15 rejected. I am only able to put these figures together by reason of seeking information from the Department of Manpower and Immigration, from the provincial government and by writing letters to those who initiated programs to ask if they were rejected or approved. Those who initiated the two that were withdrawn got tired of waiting. One person wrote to say that the young people had picked up stakes and gone somewhere else to look for work because they could not afford to wait any longer. I am happy to say that some of the projects were approved, principally in the city of Saskatoon, and resulted in some employment. I make this point because if the government adopts this program as an alternative to an economy that would provide jobs, then I fear for the future of this country.

Just a few minutes ago one parliamentary secretary made some remarks about what the Canadian unions should do because a leader of the American unions said they would support the DISC program. Surely, he is aware that it does not matter very much what the Canadian unions do; the Americans will continue with whatever program they decide upon. The power and the responsibility to meet the American policies rests with the Canadian government and there is no use trying to slough it off on the Canadian unions. There is no use either trying to slough it off on the industrialists in Canada who are involved in manufacturing automobiles. They are probably trying to work out some deal with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). It is the government's responsibility to meet the situation as it exists. This means that they have to control the Canadian economy by one means or another and not simply delay the day of reckoning.

Charles Lynch, who is not very anti-government—

Mr. Rose: Is that called an understatement?

Mr. Gleave: You could call it that. In a recent issue of the Ottawa Citizen, when describing some of the programs I have mentioned such as Opportunities for Youth and others under the heading "The New Pork Barrel" wrote:

> Culture in particular, has become the new pork barrel in terms of jobs provided together with the new department of the environment and the department of regional economic expansion. They don't call it a pork barrel any more, of course—it's called improving the quality of life.

While these programs are draining the energies of Canadians and making short-term attempts to meet long-term problems, the real needs of Canadians and the real flavour of life in Canada is being neglected, and in some cases is rotting away. The just society that we heard about in 1968 is further off than it was when this government came to power. I was intrigued to hear the hon. member who seconded the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne declare, like Horatio on the bridge, that the just society had arrived. I do not know how he could tell; somebody must have sent him a telegram.

I want to go on now to one of the important matters concerning western Canadians at the moment, the transportation of our grain to the west coast and the movement of that grain into vessels. The situation is so serious that in a pamphlet issued by the Canadian Wheat Board it is stated that we are in danger of abdicating our role as an exporter of grain, and that we face a real crisis in the movement of grain. As far as I know, there is no program to meet this situation. An article by John Clark in the Globe and Mail was headed "Is the Vancouver Port Strangling?" As western Canadians, we have been aware for a long time—but I do not think the message has reached the east yet—that a heavier and heavier volume of grain was going to the port at Vancouver and that something should be done to meet that situation.

The other day a spokesman for the Canadian Wheat Board, a Mr. Hope, pointed out that there was only a single track railroad from the Prairies to Vancouver. This has been known ever since the days of Sir John A. Macdonald, when the first track was laid there. That is not news. We have known for a long time that there is inadequate storage on the west coast. That is not news. We know that almost every year there is a crisis in supplies of grain available for loading on board ships at Vancouver. We know that, and the government has not developed any plan to meet that situation. The last new storage facility was built by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool at a cost of about $25 million and it has been estimated that we could use over $50 million worth of additional storage facilities.

• (1540)

Instead of pouring money into odds and ends of programs across Canada as though we were pouring sand down a rat hole, because many of these programs will be forgotten after next spring, would it not make more sense if we were to spend our time and money improving transportation to the west coast, building storage facilities at the west coast and creating harbour facilities there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gleave: The government has failed to undertake such a program, and I do not know why. When an American company decided to move coal from Alberta and British Columbia to Japan, we built a whole new facility for them on the west coast. Yet we cannot seem to organize ourselves in order to build the kind of transportation and storage facilities we need to serve an industry that has been viable in Canada since the turn of the century—since confederation, in fact. We have not been able to do that, partly because there are ministers on the government side who insist on regarding the grain growing industry as a declining industry instead of an expanding one, and who much too often have displayed a negative instead of positive attitude toward the industry as a whole. They put too little muscle in moving our products where we want them.

According to a recent press release, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) announced a policy for accelerated storage for corn, and the establishment of grain dryers in eastern Canada. He suggested that the government is not at this time going to do anything about primary elevators in western Canada because we have to await policy development. In view of the situation existing on the west coast, can anyone tell us why provision was not made for accelerated depreciation, so that any grain company which built storage facilities on the west coast could write off the value for depreciation purposes in four years? If an emergency exists in Canada today in any area, it exists on the west coast in the field of grain storage. Perhaps failure to provide for this accelerated depreciation was an oversight. Accelerated depreciation would certainly encourage either a co-operative or private grain company to build storage where we need it. Could the railroads not have been given accelerated depreciation allowances for building a couple of thousand additional hopper cars for moving grain to the west and so ease pressure on the railroads. The reports of men who run the railroads—and I am not talking about the fellows in the executive offices but about the boys who run the locomotives—indicate that the railroads could use these extra cars. Mr. Speaker, I am not out to condemn the railroads. Actually, I believe the railroads rented or leased additional motive power to try and meet the situation. Nevertheless, the problem exists, and it has been met time after time and year after year on an ad hoc basis. The government has been operating the transportation end of the grain business on a do-it-today and forget-it-tomorrow basis. That is the situation we have faced. Unless these tactics are changed, we shall be in increasing trouble.

May I now refer to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board? I think the same minister still has responsibility for the Wheat Board.

An hon. Member: He is caretaker until the next election.

Mr. Gleave: The hon. member is right. The grain rationalization study has been released to grain companies, provincial governments and railroads. Actually, I do not know who has it. Yet he will not release it to the members of this House, and he will not release it to the public. While that study is sitting there, its contents unknown to us, decisions are being taken which affect the very heart and life blood of our industry. Should we consolidate ownership of elevators on the prairie? I do not know what the report says about that. Should we expand the use of interior elevators? I do not know what the report says about that. Of course, if the report contains no more than did the one on oil seeds, it does not matter very much whether it is made public or not. The report on oil seeds was a study which was strong on philosophy but short on recommending action. It has been lying in its pigeon hole and nothing has been done.

Mr. Rose: It has gone rancid.

Mr. Gleave: It has gone rancid; the hon. member is dead right. We need a positive and expanding approach to this particular problem, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, I should like to ask the government to tell us what its policy is for agricultural in total, not just for grain, but for the total agricultural picture. I notice that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced in Quebec the subsidy which was to be paid on hogs, his statement attracted a great deal of attention throughout the country. Parts of it were published in an editorial of the Western Producer. The Prime Minister is reported as having said:

> Agriculture will not be able to meet the challenge of the future if it does not become economically independent.
>
> Like any other industrial sector, it has to operate and will have to operate without subsidies, without outside aid, as a mature organism that has developed its full potential.

That statement, especially the last part of it, must take the prize for gobbledygook so far in 1972. I wonder what the Prime Minister meant when he said that agriculture must become a mature organism. Along with fishing and a few other occupations, agriculture is one of the oldest occupations known to settled man.

Mr. Rose: It is not the oldest profession.

Mr. Gleave: I was speaking of man.

Mr. Rose: Oh, I see.

Mr. Gleave: Since I know the hon. member and know how his mind works, I know how to take what he says. How in the world will the Prime Minister, in his wisdom, know when agriculture has become a mature organism? Will it be when we have farms of thousands of acres each or while we have farms consisting of 500 acres each? Will it be when 50 men operate a farm, or two? Will it be when a farm is capitalized at $50,000 or $200,000? There is no mention of the benchmark which the Prime Minister has used.

• (1550)

He said that, like any other industry, it will have to operate without subsidy and without outside aid. What nonsense it is for a government which has been handing out money in great gobs to sectors of industry all over Canada to maintain that the industrial sector operates without subsidies. I remember the premier of Saskatchewan saying that if you apply that yardstick to industries, you will see a lot of them disappear, particularly those east of the Great Lakes. Let us not have this kind of economic nonsense expressed to people in the expectation they will believe it.

Shortly after, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) found it necessary to write a letter to the Ottawa Citizen because his department's policy had been attacked by Mr. MacEachern. In fact, he said the Department of Agriculture had no desire to control the size or number of farms. He said that the department believes this decision should rest with the individual farmer. He contradicted Mr. MacEachern who said that the Department of Agriculture is a dying organization. It is a long way from dead, Mr. Speaker. It is half starved, but it is still running. People are still keeping watch at the old stand.

At the same time the minister is protesting about the construction that is being put on the actions of his department, he is doing two or three things which will probably have different results. He has introduced the farm credit corporation bill which will increase to $100 million the amount the corporation can lend. This of course, will encourage much larger farms. At the same time, he says he is in favour of the family farm, and denies that he in any way wishes to accelerate the trend towards larger farms. When you hear these contradictory statements, you wonder what the objectives of the Canadian farmer should be and where he can go.

One of the biggest problems facing any adjustment in agriculture is the lack of employment opportunities in Canada. Even those people who wish to seek a job outside of agriculture have a great deal of difficulty doing so. I am sure other members have had the same experience as I, that people have written or telephoned from the constituency asking if any jobs are available. It is now almost a privilege for young or old people in Canada to have a job and some security. This is the one thing that is necessary.

I think I have covered the main points I wish to put before the House. The government of Canada, not only in relation to the grains industry but to other sectors as well, should be spending our money and using our talents to develop this country. If we insist on leaving this to international finance and international industry, our country will be exploited. In all probability, they will not build the kind of Canada that we want. It will be tailored to their needs, objectives and desires. Canadians will then have to do what they can with what remains. They will be left to clean up the mess that has been left behind. We will be ravaging the garbage dumps that these people leave behind for us.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate this afternoon. It is an opportunity to deal with certain measures raised in the Speech from the Throne. I will deal with those shortly.

First, may I say I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) as he set forth some of the problems from his vantage point today. His is a vigorous voice, one we have listened to with considerable interest during this Parliament.

I would like to trace the development and emergence of a science policy in Canada. I would like to go back to the sixties for a moment, and take Your Honour and hon. members back with me. The sixties was a decade of quickening change, a decade of tension. For some, it was a decade of fear. These were the years that followed immediately upon Sputnik. These were the years when the young president of the United States said, we will put a man on the moon in ten years. These were the years of nuclear threats and fallout, deterrents and confrontation over Cuba. Yes, they were years of fear of war in Vietnam, of new technologies, napalm and new instruments of death.

They were also years of computers and more automatic ways of doing things, programming and depersonalization as far as the human dimension is concerned. It was a period of rapidly rising consumption, so rapid that our oil consumption doubled in the space of that 10 years. It was a period when our consumption of electrical energy doubled again. It doubled in the 10 years during the fifties and doubled again during the sixties. It was a decade when people started to ask themselves where population growth is taking us. They asked if the resources of this world could support the rapidly growing populations of the world.

These were the years when people talked about pollution, when new words became by-words. I refer to such words as environment and ecology. These are not words that we saw or heard in the fifties. If you read the speeches of hon. members and look at the press reports of the fifties, you only rarely find the kind of preoccupation that we now have as we start the seventies with words and processes like pollution, environment and ecology. This was a period when the drive of man shifted slightly from economic growth at all costs to economic growth and quality of life considerations. These were the sorts of pressures which gave rise to the emergence of science policy questions. It was these things that the OECD Committee on Science Policy was formed to look at.

I wish to read a paragraph from the last Speech from the Throne. This is reported in Hansard for October 8, 1970. This government, recognizing the need for instruments to deal with science policy questions, said:

• (1600)

> There exists in Canada a great wealth of untapped and uncoordinated scientific talent and experience not now adequately utilized in the quest for solutions to our modern problems. In order to serve better the industrial and technological sectors of our economy, as well as Canada at large, a programme will be introduced to gather and focus these sometimes divergent and competitive scientific resources. In this respect the government will consider with care measures recommended by the Senate Committee on Science Policy and the Science Council of Canada.

That is an extract from the previous Speech from the Throne. Out of it sprung, as we now know, the government reorganization bill, the bill which created the ministry of state concept. My ministry, the ministry of State for Science and Technology, was the second to be proclaimed following the passage of that reorganization bill. I want to talk about the follow-up of that Speech from the Throne in the time available to me this afternoon. Let me go back to the debate on the organization bill and in particular to the remarks of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) when he introduced the proclamation giving effect to the Ministry of State of Science and Technology. He said, and I quote from his speech as reported at page 7166 of Hansard for June 21 1971:

> It was only in the last decade—the sixties—that countries first began to consider science as a significant factor in national policy and to seek organizational structures to recognize this fact. As members are aware, it was the Royal Commission on Government Organization, the Glassco Commission appointed in 1960, which first made a comprehensive study of this subject in Canada and reported on it in January, 1963. As a consequence, as early as 1964 the government of the day established a science secretariat within the Privy Council Office to provide a focus for policy co-ordination of those matters which had a significant content of science and technology.
>
> About the same time, a major study was made on behalf of OECD by a distinguished group of international consultants headed by Pierre Piganiol, formerly Délégué Général de la Recherche Scientifique of France. The report of this group had a major influence on the creation of science policy bodies in many countries and was consistent with what had already been proposed in Canada.

He went on to say:

> With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to a number of important observations in this report of experts. I quote:
>
> > A nation needs a comprehensive and consistent policy for the support and advancement of science, because there are more opportunities to advance science and technology than there are resources available to exploit them all. The term "science policy" is ambiguous. It too often connotes only a policy limited to the needs of science per se, and excludes the effects of science and technology on the full spectrum of national policies. Maximum exploitation of scientific opportunities requires programs that combine concern for the growth of science itself and provision for the rapid, deliberate application of its fruits to human welfare. That is the substance of science policy in the full sense, as denoting consideration of the interactions of science with policy in all fields.

Those paragraphs summarize in a few words the essential thrust of science policy and of this government's direction of science policy matters. The Order in Council which gave effect to my ministry spelled out a number of activities which it expected the ministry to perform. I should like to place them before hon. members because I believe it is relevant to the development and emergence of science policy in this, the first ministry of science and technology in Canada, under its first minister. The Order in Council stated:

> The Minister of State for Science and Technology shall formulate and develop policies with respect to:
>
> (a) the most appropriate means by which the government of Canada may, through measures within its fields of jurisdiction, have a beneficial influence on the application and development of science and technology in Canada.
>
> (b) the co-ordination of programs and activities regarding science and technology with other policies and programs of the government of Canada, and
>
> (c) fostering of co-operative relationships with respect to science and technology with the provinces, with public and private organizations, and with other nations.

There is another paragraph I should like to quote.

> The Minister of State for Science and Technology shall in relation to the formulation and development of the aforementioned policies assist departments and agencies of the government of Canada in the formulation and development of advice to the Governor in Council with regard to:
>
> (a) the optimum investment in, and application of, science and technology in pursuit of national objectives.

I hope in the time available to me this afternoon to comment on some aspects of the responsibilities which have been assigned to the ministry and to the new minister. In particular, I shall be dealing with the statements made in the Speech from the Throne this year which the House is now considering. Before doing so, however, I should like to deal for a moment with the question of science policy itself. What is a science policy? Science policy is becoming an "in" phrase. The more one mentions it, the better it sounds, and the better it sounds, the more often it is used to support a particular point of view or is offered as a solution to a series of problems. It might be helpful if I were to tell the House what I think science policy is not. For instance, I do not think science policy is a document or a constitution for science. Many people have asked: Will the government produce a science policy?—implying perhaps that the government might produce a white paper or some new framework within which all measures of public policy which relate to science and technology can be fitted.

This is not my conception of a science policy. It is not a neat, compact matrix in which inputs on one side are matched by outputs on the other. It is not a simple set of priorities, either. If it were, it would be easy and we would have had a science policy in those terms long ago. No, Mr. Speaker, science policy is none of these easily defined things. A science policy is a living and evolving thing. It is essentially interactive, something that interacts between social and economic policy, on the one hand, and scientific resources, on the other hand. It is supportive. It is a practical thing, not a theoretical concept.

• (1610)

I think it is important here to note that the ultimate test of any policy is whether it will work. A science policy is no different from any other policy. This is why the test that the new Minister of State for Science and Technology has adopted is toward the practical, toward the pragmatic. The direction of the new ministry will be that of answering and meeting the test of whether something will work.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

There have been a number of recent reports published. We have report No. 15 from the Science Council "Innovation in a Cold Climate", and since then a second report by the Senate Committee on Science, sometimes referred to as "Lamontagne No. 2", both of which refer to the need for an industrial strategy.

The Speech from the Throne anticipates this particular question in this passage, as reported at page 2 of Hansard:

> Our economy is dependent, as are the economies of all industrialized countries, on the imagination of entrepreneurs and their use of research and innovation, as well as upon a rational industrial strategy. You will be informed in months to come of government proposals for improved policies in these areas which will be of immense importance to the long term development of our country: of policies for the use of science and technology designed to contribute not only to industry but to the qualitative improvement of the life of Canadians, of an industrial strategy prepared for the peculiar character of the Canadian economy. The basis of each will be spelled out as the session proceeds.

That particular paragraph emphasizes such things as innovation, entrepreneurship, policies for the future, long-run benefits, policies that are not peculiarly devoted to industrial growth; peculiarly Canadian, yes, but policies devoted to the quality of life of Canadians as well as policies that are devoted to industrial growth.

The next page of the Speech from the Throne contains another reference I should like to cite regarding my ministry:

> Closer scientific and technological co-operation with other countries can be expected.

This is the second item with which I should like to deal in my remarks this afternoon, but firstly may I go to the question of innovation and some of the questions that are being raised by the report of the Science Council, No. 15, entitled "Innovation in a Cold Climate". This report sets forth a number of impediments to innovation. It lists, for example, these sort of things on page 28 of the report: an inadequate technology base; limited market size and market access—and those who are close to the chemical industry of Canada will, I think, recognize the serious problem of market access and market size.

The third main area the report lists is the poor climate for investment. Here, I think the report is primarily concerned with the lack of maturity in our underwriting institutions when it comes to innovation. The United States banking system in many instances seems to be better able to support innovation because there are more units and more specialists on innovation.

The report also speaks of inadequate management skills. I have on previous occasions drawn the attention of hon. members of the House to the fact that management skills in Canada are not up to the level of management skills in the United States. I have also cited figures relating to the number of graduates and the need for more support—which, let it be known, is a provincial responsibility for the most part—for the business education type of course in our universities.

The report also refers to multinational corporations and to a more recent and separate study, a green report, from the Science Council dealing with direct investments and multinational corporations.

I do not propose to list all of the difficulties or the peculiar problems facing innovation in Canada, but I should like to refer to one of the recommendations made in the report to the effect that the federal government should use its purchasing power to support innovation in Canada. At page 40 the report indicates that wherever possible the government's purchasing powers should be used increasingly as a tool for implementing national industrial strategy.

The Lamontagne committee report "Targets and Strategies for the Seventies", the second report of the committee, goes into rather more detail with respect to the contracting-out principle. I should like to tell the House that the government of Canada supports the contracting-out principle so far as research and development is concerned, and will seek to advance it wherever possible.

At the present time my ministry is involved in working out criteria with respect to the contracting-out principle. I should like to say that I have appealed, through an open letter in a publication called "Canadian Research and Development" to those in industry and elsewhere to assist me with some suggestions as to how the contracting-out principle might be made more effective. The essential question so far as the contracting-out principle is concerned is, I think, that of spin-off benefits. When research is done in industry it is more likely to generate spin-off benefits which the industry or firm concerned may be able to design or to innovate as a commercial product or process.

This open letter addressed to the research community in Canada posed four questions. One, what are the special areas in which Canada could profitably concentrate with a hope of establishing a competitive position? Two, is there a role for the industrial research association in industries other than pulp and paper? Three, how can the support of research in academic institutions be turned to industrial benefit? What is the place of full-time research institutes? Four, do you know of any work done in government laboratories which could be done more effectively and more cheaply in industry? I am happy to say there has been a response to that letter and that I have received a number of suggestions on these points from private industry.

I should also like to talk about some of the other thrusts of my new ministry this afternoon. I have indicated that we will be concerned and we will give priority attention to industrial innovation and to research and development in Canadian industry. But there are other important areas where we have taken initiatives as well. The first one has to do with the supply and demand of highly qualified manpower. Some of you may have read the Science Council's study which was published within the last six months which indicated that there may well be serious problems in the coming year from the point of view of the balance between the supply and demand, the number of PhD's graduating from Canadian universities and the number of positions available to them in their own specialty. We have initiated a program aimed at establishing, measuring the stock of highly qualified manpower in Canada. We can update this stock by adding to it university graduates and immigrants as immigration takes place, and of course adjusting it by deaths and emigration. Part and parcel of this particular study is working with Statistics Canada in developing a program to measure the demand side of highly qualified manpower.

• (1620)

Basic research is yet another element in the whole area of science policy, and I think you will judge from my remarks this afternoon that when I spoke about science policy I was indicating elements of science policy rather than the conceptual framework sometimes used to describe science policy.

Now, I would like to say a few words about basic research. The Lamontagne committee has made a number of recommendations with respect to basic research. There are 45 recommendations in the second volume, a significant number of which touch upon the question of basic research in Canada. The Science Council also published a green report, that is to say a special background study, on the question of basic research in Canada. At the same time, I am delighted to say that the universities have recognized the special questions in this area and the Association of Universities and Colleges in Canada, under the joint chairmanship of Dr. Bonneau and Dr. Corry, is examining the whole matter of the rationalization of university research in Canada. We will be very much involved in developing criteria for federal support of basic research, and we intend to stress quality rather than quantity. The idea of centres of excellence has considerable appeal for me and my ministry. The concept of centres of excellence will be given a high priority.

I have referred to other areas where you can expect initiatives from the new ministry in the future. Let me go back to the areas of high technology for a moment. These areas affect both the industrial growth of the country and the quality of life in Canada, perhaps in its broadest sense. I refer to such areas as the computer industry, and high energy transmission. At Varennes, Quebec, there is a research enterprise, without question a world leader in high energy transmission. Nuclear power, space questions and transportation—these might all be described as national infrastructure areas of high technology. They will affect the quality of Canadian life and, I hope, they will represent important industrial opportunities in the future as well. We will be looking at the rather special questions of the north on a multi-disciplinary basis and we will be looking at the oceans as something of peculiar and major significance to Canada.

I referred in my opening remarks to another aspect of our responsibilities and I quoted from the Speech from the Throne referring to greater co-operation in international science and technology. I am delighted to report that in the few months of the ministry's existence—it is just about six months—we have been also able to organize a major mission to Japan. This mission will be 40 members strong. It will be drawn, roughly, one third from industry, one third from universities and one third from government service. I think there is a rather special reason to go to Japan. The percentage of the research and development activity in the two countries is comparable. Many people have criticized the Canadian research effort in that it is too basic research oriented, that 23 per cent of our research goes into basic research. The situation is similar in Japan, and orders of magnitude are comparable as well in development and innovation. It seems to me that the significant difference appears in the performance sector.

In Japan, roughly 60 per cent of research is done in industry, whereas in Canada less than 40 per cent is done in industry. Secondly, in Japan roughly 55 per cent of the research and development expenditures are paid for by industry while in Canada about 30 per cent of research and development expenditures are paid for by industry. So from the point of view of the proportionate emphasis on activities, the support for and the performance sectors, these are all of particular interest to Canada at this time, and we would hope, with our Japanese opposite numbers, to identify areas where, through mutual exchange, we can both profit. There will be eleven Canadian groups in eleven different specialties meeting the Japanese groups. I do not think I have time to list them all.

In the one minute left to me I should like to state that the Lamontagne Committee report to which I have referred several times this afternoon will be given very careful attention by my ministry.

In conclusion, let me ask: how do we find the right place for science in politics, and put it there? I should like to quote to you from the "New Statesman" of September 10, 1971 as follows:

> Science is too important to be left to the scientists: if there is one message to emerge from the annual meeting of the venerable British Association for the Advancement of Science, this is it. Scientists are unfitted to the task of shepherding the creature they serve ... Who is to control it? During the past week eminent members of the scientific establishment have expressed wildly divergent views on the relevance of science and technology to society. But in the end the decisions—or some of them at any rate—have to be taken by politicians. They, in the name of the public, must therefore learn that the position of science in our society has changed—that it now occupies the centre of the stage. How do we find the right place for science in politics, and put it there?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I know the minister is about to complete his remarks but his time has expired. Is there unanimous consent to allow the minister to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1630)

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for their co-operation and I will not take advantage of their good nature. I will bring my statement to a rapid close. It seems to me that the central question is: how do we find the right place for science in politics, and put it there? That is the central question that I and my ministry are concerned with; that is the reason the government created the Ministry of State for Science and Technology. That is why the words in the Speech from the Throne that I have quoted are so important.

It is this perspective which distinguishes this government from other Canadian governments and, in my view, it is this perspective which distinguishes this government from the opposition parties.

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, it seems to be the normal thing around about this time, with a federal election imminent, for a member either to take a trip up one side of his riding and down the other, mentioning all the place names and so on, or to try to catalogue in the half hour available all the deficiencies and shortcomings of the government.

Mr. McGrath: That would take days.

Mr. Peddle: There isn't enough time, because if I started now to name all the place names in my sprawling riding I would go well over the time allotted, and if I tried to enunciate and enumerate the deficiencies of the government I am afraid this would take several hours. I am sure the House would not give me that courtesy.

I have already personally congratulated the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) on his loyalty to his floundering party, and on his valorous attempt, in moving the Address in Reply, to make the government appear credible and responsible, and deserving of further support from the Canadian people. Despite the hon. member's effort, Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but feel that he was fighting the old axiom that you cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear.

The type of Throne Speech that we heard recently is the type you would expect in a country that has all its other problems solved and could afford the luxury of preoccupation with the aesthetic things. In the speech there is mention of Heritage Canada, vast spaces, rugged coasts, babbling brooks, throbbing vitality and serene tranquility. It is a typical Trudeau presentation, the presentation of a Prime Minister who is very affluent in his own right, a man who has never experienced the pangs of poverty or the torture of unemployment.

An hon. Member: Like Frank Moores.

Mr. Peddle: Maybe like Frank Moores, but I am not talking about Frank Moores. I am talking about a man who has never known the responsibility of having to support a family, always faced with the problem of trying to spread too little too far. This is the type of speech we have had, the presentation of a Prime Minister who can never understand or appreciate such things. He never experienced them, he has never been exposed to them, and I suppose in sweet charity we have to understand that.

I regard the Speech from the Throne as largely the impractical prattlings of a poet, of a romantic who becomes positively ecstatic at the smell of a rose or some other flower, and obviously becomes nauseated at the smell of such things as a barnyard, cod fish, or the other things we have in Canada.

Mr. Foster: Tories?

Mr. Osler: What do cod fish have to do with barnyards?

Mr. Peddle: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to make a point, and obviously I made it or we would not have had these interruptions from hon. members opposite.

I note with interest the so-called cabinet shuffle. I suppose, as in any other endeavour, we have the shuffler and the shufflees. The Prime Minister was the shuffler, and the people who were shuffled were the shufflees. A number of them are going around saying they were promoted. The former minister of finance says he was promoted to National Defence. In my opinion he was not promoted; he was rescued. And we have the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) saying he was promoted. Mr. Speaker, he wasn't promoted; he was sacrificed. The same applies to the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs, who made so many bad friends with the competition bill. He, too, in a sense was rescued, and his successor was sacrificed. I think the shufflees recognize the real positions in which they find themselves.

The government stands by its record of tax reform. Members of the government say that it meets with the approval of the majority of the Canadian people. If the tax reform was so good and so well accepted by the Canadian people, why was the minister who introduced it not left in his post for the final test? Why was he rescued and spirited away to the non-controversial position of National Defence? This is the real meaning of a cabinet shuffle. While it may be presented to the Canadian people as something in their interest, it is nothing more or less than political strategy to save some ministers and sacrifice others. Is it real concern? No! But there is no question about the political strategy.

Mr. Foster: Did somebody say "Burgess"?

Mr. Peddle: Burgess doesn't enter into this situation, Mr. Speaker. He is being properly dealt with.

Today we have the worst unemployment situation that the country has ever known. Unemployment is rampant. Upwards of 8 per cent of the Canadian work force is unemployed. But what is the pet subject of the government? Despite the tragic unemployment situation, members of the government feel they have to have an issue to divert the minds of the people from unemployment. So what do they come up with? Where is their emphasis now? It is on Canadian nationalism.

They have to have something to stir the Canadian people up, and so they say we have got to redeem ourselves from United States economic domination. Why don't they realize that we have 8 per cent unemployment, and that that type of an issue, in all common sense, must wait until we have taken care of some of the real priorities? They talk about economic domination and the jobs created in Canada as a result of American investment. Do they want the unemployment rate to double to 14 per cent or even 20 per cent? The people who are unemployed and those who recognize the terrible unemployment situation will not appreciate that very much.

• (1640)

When I heard the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, I was embarrassed for His Excellency who had to read it. The speech confirms my suspicion that the Prime Minister is totally out of touch with the needs of the people. There is no question about that in my mind. The speech indicates that unemployment is of great concern. Bully for the government—what an admission! With a federal election imminent hon. members opposite are trying to justify what has happened in this country over the last four years. I cannot say that I blame them for trying, politics being what it is.

An hon. Member: It has been a disaster.

Mr. Peddle: But I blame the Canadian people if they are duped in the coming election as they were duped in 1968.

Now, I should like to touch on another subject and perhaps it will not be too long before I hear cries of "bigot" from the other side. The moment one raises the question of bilingualism and biculturalism, the long finger points and there is the cry of "bigot". I am not a bigot and I do not want to be called one, but I reserve the right to raise the question.

Mr. Dinsdale: You are a Canadian.

Mr. Peddle: A week or two ago a question was raised by the Premier of British Columbia, and the reaction of the Prime Minister was so great that his finger almost stretched from here to British Columbia as he cried "bigot". I do not think the comment was necessarily bigoted and I do not think that what I have said is bigoted. There is no bigotry in me. In my 12 years or so in public life I have always been subjected to majorities—religious majorities, political majorities, racial and every other kind of majority. When I was running in municipal and provincial politics, if someone had suggested to my opponent that he stress that he could get a better deal for them because he was one of them, there would not have been anything wrong with that. I would not say those people were bigots. What is wrong with people exercising their majority?

At the risk of being labelled a bigot, I cannot help feeling that for the past number of years the tail has been wagging the dog in this country and that is not a good situation. People who know more about this than I do know that minorities are inclined to be prejudiced. If the English speaking people of Canada were in the minority today, and I was one of that minority, I honestly feel I would be prejudiced because that is the way with minorities. But that is no good reason for the majority being afraid of somebody pointing the finger at them and calling them bigots. The big weakness of the majority in this country is that they have this fear. They know whether they are bigots and I know whether I am, but I defy anybody to say that I am.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peddle: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a great danger of the majority in this country or any other becoming too magnanimous. This is the situation in the United States where the majority has become afraid of the minority pointing its finger and saying "Be careful you don't become a bigot". They should not feel that way. Personally, I have no bigotry. If I order a hamburger in a restaurant I do not care whether I order in English or French. If it were a Chinese restaurant and I knew Chinese I would order it in Chinese—just as long as I got the hamburger. But a lot of people think that if you go to a Chinese restaurant you should order in Chinese and if you go to a French restaurant you should order in French, whether the staff speaks the language or not. I believe that is nonsense.

I agree that there is a difference in the temperament of people, but I think this aspect is being exploited. I really believe that the temperament of the different racial origins of Canada is being exploited by irresponsible politicians. I believe that our friends in the province of Quebec are interested in the same things as the people of any other province in Canada. That is not B and B, bilingualism and biculturalism, but B and B meaning bread and butter, or meat and potatoes if you like. That is the basic need of all people, and it is the basic need of the people of Quebec as it is of the people of Newfoundland or any other province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peddle: The other thing that has been foisted upon us is the view of the long-haired intellectuals that nobody can figure out what it is the people of Quebec want. There is no mystery. They want the same as any other Canadian, not a living passed to them on a platter but the right to earn a living. This is a very careful distinction. They want the opportunity to earn a living. I say, Mr. Speaker, if that opportunity were given to the people of Quebec it would minimize what are known as the problems of national unity. I should like to see that tested. I do not really mind these so-called intellectuals who write articles and get on television and radio and say that the people in Quebec want something that nobody can put his finger on, that it is something mysterious. But I have known a lot of people from Quebec and I cannot see that their basic needs are different from those of other people. However, I cannot understand why irresponsible political people want to make something different out of this and present issues to the people which are not true. I think that is what is happening today.

Mr. Paproski: Shameful!

Mr. Peddle: We had in Newfoundland what was known as the Salt subsidy program for fishermen, but when this government came in it decided to abolish it. They chose the minister from Newfoundland, the then minister of transport, to enunciate their views. What he said was, "Look, this is a bandaid program." That was back in 1968. He suggested that this government had finished with bandaids and said, "We will not have any more bandaids; we will bring in lasting programs which will benefit fishermen in Newfoundland." We do not know what happened, and we do not know what replaced the promised program, because since then we have seen any number of different programs that have been bandaids in the true sense of the word. The unemployment situation in the country became so drastic that Opportunities for Youth was born. Mr. Speaker, it was born on an impulse and is the product of a government that governs by brainstorm, by impulse. Today, a program does not exist, but tomorrow you have the Opportunities for Youth program, and away we go.

• (1650)

Mr. McGrath: Now you see it, now you don't.

Mr. Peddle: The same can be said of the so-called local initiatives program which, by itself, I suppose is good. It is providing some jobs. Obviously, little thought went into it; obviously, control is lacking. Do not let anyone tell you that these programs are under any measure of control, because they are not. They are programs that were born out of political panic. The government said to itself, "The people of this country are berating us about the lack of jobs; let us try to fill up the holes." So, it introduced Opportunities for Youth, the Lift program and several others, the names of which escape me at the moment. Yet, early, near the beginning of this parliament in 1968, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) said, "Look, we will take away these bandaids." Ever since, we have seen a series of bandaids. The government has introduced some programs, in the process no doubt creating some jobs but not making a dent in the total unemployment problem of this country.

While we face this terrible problem, this government will face the electorate again. The issue the election will be fought on—and, obviously, this will be the issue in the next election—will be the issue of American or foreign domination of our country. If that is not the height of complete stupidity or utter callousness, I don't know what is. As I say, if the government is not stupid, it must be utterly callous. Trying to hook the people of this country with that kind of issue right now, when some 8 per cent of our work force is unemployed, is either stupid or callous. I just cannot figure out who is going to buy that nonsense. I can only express the sincere wish that the Canadian people do not. Of course, I do not know if they will, but I hope they do not.

As I said, there are not many problems that I can deal with specifically in half an hour, except to note that the election campaign is on. We remember the campaign of 1968.

Mr. Foster: Regretfully.

Mr. Peddle: Not regretfully; this has been an education for us and the Canadian people. They have been shown that they made a mistake which they will not repeat.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: The people on the government side will be the ones to regret it.

Mr. Peddle: I do not blame the hon. member on the other side for trying to defend his indefensible position. If I were over there, I would be doing the same thing.

Mr. McGrath: One cannot blame him, especially since he is the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Peddle: If he were not loyal, and his loyalty certainly is one of his redeeming features, he would have left the government side long ago and be sitting on this side. So, I appreciate his loyalty.

Mr. Paproski: He can go back to his dogs and cats.

Mr. Peddle: Yes. His loyalty is fine, of course.

Mr. McGrath: But misplaced.

Mr. Peddle: There is no question that in 1968 the Prime Minister strongly appealed to the people of this country. He came zooming down into shopping plazas all over the place, kissing the girls and listening to people, and thousands of people lined up to touch his garments.

Mr. McGrath: As if he were the Jolly Green Giant.

Mr. Peddle: I concede that, from a political point of view, he took this country by storm. Yet, almost immediately after the election, the transition was fantastic. He settled in and became a different character altogether. He was not nearly as accessible to people as before. He made all sorts of statements across this country; on Parliament Hill he suggested a menu to the Lapalme drivers that I would not care to repeat.

Mr. McGrath: Shame.

Mr. Peddle: Down in Toronto only a couple of weeks ago he told the people that this unemployment is a lot of nonsense. He said, "Just look at the want ads in the paper; you will see that there are lots of jobs available."

Mr. McGrath: Let them eat cake.

Mr. Peddle: It is almost like telling hungry people to look at all the food advertisements in newspapers and suggesting that they cannot be hungry. What nonsense, Mr. Speaker. And here we are, sitting in a parliament that is three years and 45 weeks old, and we wonder about what is to happen in the next several weeks. We had a preview on television. The Prime Minister was wearing coonskin caps; he went down a mine and came up with mud on his face. He has gone around touching people and they are touching him. I do not know if the old trick will work again; I fervently hope it will not, for the good of this country.

Mr. McGrath: For the good of us all.

Mr. Peddle: I say right now that although I have no particular desire to see an NDP government in Canada, if there is to be a choice between the Liberals and the NDP—I say to the people for goodness sake let it be an NDP government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peddle: I say that because I do not want to see another four years of this type of government inflicted on the Canadian people.

Mr. McGrath: God spare us from that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peddle: I will finish now. I doubt if anything I say will have any appreciable impact on the Canadian people. I will say this, however. I wish it were possible for every voter in Canada to be here today, because my message to them would be this: if they repeat the mistake they made in 1968, despite the work of various organizations designed to save this, to save that and to save the other thing in this country, and if this country has inflicted on it a government like the one of the past four years, there will be nothing left to save.

Mr. Paproski: You are right on.

Mr. Douglas Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, I received in the mail a copy of a letter that the Shuswap Rural Ratepayers Association had written to my colleague, the new-appointed Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford). The letter, signed and sent under the signature of the pro-tem secretary, Mrs. Lillian Smiley of Enderby, British Columbia, reads as follows:

The Shuswap Rural Ratepayers have taken exception to the unfairness of the fact that at present NHA loans cannot be obtained for the building of a new house, unless it is going to be built on a sewer line. We feel that where it is admissible under local health regulations, the people building new homes under NHA be allowed to use a septic tank and outfield system.

I could not, Mr. Speaker, agree more with the position as set out by this particular association, and presumably by others of similar structure established throughout the nation. And you know, Mr. Speaker, I find it rather sad upon reflection to note that apparently little has been done on this problem since I made the very same point and voiced exactly the same objection in this House over two years ago.

At this juncture, I think it relevant to quote portions of just what I did say on May 30, 1969. I quote from Hansard:

• (1700)

Firstly, it is my contention that the government should give top priority to the problems of rural area residents and in particular, make more NHA funds available to those who reside in the relatively small communities therein.

I submit that all people in rural areas should be afforded the opportunity of participating in federal housing loans, be they residents of municipalities or unorganized territories. Their lot should not be discounted in the light of the problems inherent in the larger urban centres. I suggest that present government policy and support regulations are directed in the main to the benefit of major population centres and to the detriment of the many thousands of our citizens situated in rural areas.

For too long, too large a proportion of available mortgage funds has been allocated to the large cities of Canada for the propagation of multi-million dollar apartment buildings and like projects. This imbalance should be rectified and the government should cultivate a willingness on the part of private financial institutions to place funds in more remote regions by itself overcoming an apparent reluctance to invest needed capital in places of rural habitation.

Contrary to lingering government thinking, a home to those living in Lumby, Vernon, Armstrong, Enderby, Sicamous, Revelstoke, Golden, Invermere, Kimberley, Cranbrook, Jaffray, Elko, Fernie, Sparwood—and so many other smaller centres in my constituency, is no less important than is the necessity of accommodation for the folk of Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal.

May I suggest that the principal ogre perpetuating this inequality in lending policy is CMHC's present regulation requiring the construction of piped services to housing. In a phrase: no water or sanitary sewer—therefore no eligibility for NHA financed loans.

Although there are stated exceptions to this rule, in my experience, leniency in their interpretation has never been the federal corporation's watchword. And there are many areas in this country, and Okanagan-Kootenay is representative, that will never be serviced with piped sewer and water. So, at the moment, hundreds of people living in unorganized portions of my riding and several thousand more who reside within municipal boundaries are effectively shut out from public assistance because they are on wells and/or septic tanks. And, for those who intend to locate and build, to join their fellow primary producers or take their employment in the extractive industries, the same fate awaits them.

Facilities which are entirely satisfactory to many of my people, and have been for years, are still effectively quite unacceptable to the Crown corporation. Moreover, even though modern technology has provided us with a number of more sophisticated and proven sewage disposal systems, CMHC has steadfastly refused to accept them. And, as a result, of these overly restrictive regulations, it is impossible for many and too tough for most to comply.

I therefore say this, even though I share the concern of all levels of government for the pollution of ground and water, which concern undoubtedly has given birth to these constrictions, and even though I am quite aware that the use of septic tanks in concentration will create difficulties in curbing pollution, surely a workable set of regulations, which would supplant those that have outlived their usefulness, can be formulated which would then permit the use of certain lands, presently exempt from mortgage financing, and a goodly portion of which will never be equipped with piped services, on a septic disposal and water-well basis. Such a solution would inject a new and needy borrower into the program and would raise the generally low standard of housing prevalent in sections of our country, certainly in several of the more depressed portions of my riding.

I hope it will not be necessary for me to rise again at some future date and remake the same point. I trust the new minister responsible for housing will see to it that this is not necessary; that is, I hope he will sit down with senior officials of the corporation very shortly and formulate a realistic and workable policy that will accommodate the needs of residents wishing to construct accommodation in Okanagan-Kootenay and other, like rural areas of Canada. I invite him to do so.

A second matter I would like to touch on this afternoon is one which I have raised from time to time and in various places. It deals with the movement of non-board feed grains from Alberta into British Columbia. I appreciate what the minister responsible for the Wheat Board had to say in this connection, namely:

"The Canadian Wheat Board regulations concerning the movement of feed grains are designed to ensure the orderly marketing of wheat, oats and barley produced in western Canada", and that it is "the objective of the board's marketing system to allocate delivery opportunities fairly among all producers to ensure that producers receive a fair market price for their product—by agreeing to sell their grain destined for interprovincial or international markets, through the Canadian Wheat Board."

I say I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker, because in theory it sounds great, which it would be in fact if it were to work that way. We all know that there is great difficulty with control or with policing the system. Surely the Canadian Wheat Board does have the power to control the movement of grains between provinces, and it exerts it by placing inspectors at weight scales near border crossings. Just as surely, however, the board does not have the power to control, nor does it exercise effective measures which restrict the movement of grains intraprovincially. Therein lies the rub as the situation affects the ranchers and farmers in my riding.

Economically and geographically, the livestock producers in Okanagan-Kootenay, certainly those in the Columbia valley and south country, are attached to Alberta because that province is not only their source of supply of feed grains but also the market outlet for their livestock. Thus, the producer in my riding must attempt to be competitive with his brethren, the livestock producers in Alberta. However, how can he realistically hope to compete when the Alberta operator does not have to buy feed grains through the Wheat Board, while the grower in my riding is obliged to pay about double the price to that which can be had from non-board sources within Alberta?

Add to that other costs of operation, such as truck hauling of both grains to site and livestock to market, and it is little wonder that the grower in my riding is heard to exclaim, "A law you cannot enforce is worse than no law at all." May I draw but one example from a letter I received some time ago from a Grasmere constituent, who said in part:

[Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay).]

I should like to make the point to you that the Hutterites in southewestern Alberta, who can purchase non-quota feeds, sell eggs, poultry, ducks, geese, etc. in the Fernie, Sparwood, Natal area. A British Columbia operator, who would have to purchase feeds through the Wheat Board, and be competitive in the same area, could in no way do it. This is just an example, it can be applied to any business requiring the use of Alberta feed grains.

As the British Columbia Farmers Institute, District "I", put it in one of their recent briefs:

This situation becomes no ludicrous at times that livestock men are tempted to move grain illegally, because we know that these impractical policies are virtually unenforceable.

I know that solutions to problems such as the one I am raising now are not easily found because the over-all implications are many and varied. I am confident, however, that the minister responsible for the Wheat Board will, after duly considering the many recommendations he has received on this subject, come up with an alternate which is more plausible than the policy now in question. I understand that he and his departmental officials are presently studying this whole question of interprovincial movements of grain. Hopefully, this in depth review will be completed in the near future and the intentions on a new approach will shortly be made known.

• (1710)

Before I resume my seat I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) and the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie) who moved and seconded the Address in Reply. Their speeches were in my view excellent, as is the quality of their continued contribution to this country and to the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the 1972 Speech from the Throne is, more than any other I have had the opportunity of listening to, an election straw man, built of words and rhetoric, empty of any economic notions or solutions.

Even after one reads it or rereads it, what does it mean? Absolutely nothing. But it will give the Liberals a chance to say or promise anything they want, depending upon the needs of their propaganda. It is brain-washing by the Liberal party as a prelude to June elections. The Liberal party feels the need to purloin power, once again and immediately, for another four years. This Speech from the Throne will allow it to say anything at all without compromising itself.

Mr. Speaker, as far as purloining power is concerned, I take my hat off to the Liberal party, it is the best tool of finance which supplies it with all the resources needed to win elections as in the past, and thus continue to exploit Canadians through an archaic, unjust, antisocial and barbaric economic system.

Social and economic problems will never be solved by those who belong to that system, who cause all our problems. In Canada, the traditional parties are political twin brothers, begotten to ensure the survival of the present system that created and nourished them. They are part of that system and will disappear with it.

Mr. Speaker, the faults of the system are known to those Canadians who suffer from them; only a few need be identified: unemployment, poverty in the midst of abundance, taxes, deficits, bankruptcies, debts, inflation, deflation, economic depressions, strikes, insecurity, social upheavals, juvenile delinquency, robberies, the decadence of moral values, the loss of initiative, social welfare, class stuggles, etc.

This unhealthy economic system, Mr. Speaker, leads also to centralization of the means of production, that is to production trusts, to centralization of wealth in the hands of a few. The loss of property constitutes also another one of its consequences, as well as migration from farms, economic rule by a few, excessive interest rates.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office in 1968, thanks to the false slogan of "the just society", instead of correcting the present system to achieve a just society and thus get rid of the evils that I have just enumerated, he did this incredible thing through the Department of Finance or the then Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson): he increased the rate of interest for banks, for finance, that is for the mistress this government goes to bed with every day.

Interest and these ever-growing increases, since 1968, are the prime cause of the ever increasing debts which have become impossible to pay under the present system. Spiraling debts and salary boosts are reflected in rising taxes at all levels, and taxes and spiraling increases cause spiraling prices, or the inflation we are experiencing.

I should now like to refer to an editorial on Channel 7, on February 16, by Rev. Emile Bouvier of Sherbrooke who expressed the following views:

The burden of land taxes in Quebec.

Quebecers pay in one way or another at least 50 per cent of their income in taxes. A family of four, with an annual income of $5,200 was paying, in January 1, 1969, $1,686 in all types of taxes in Quebec.

At the municipal level, the Montreal taxpayer, with an annual income of $5,200 and a family of four, paid $375 in land taxes; with an annual income of $10,400, a family of four in Montreal paid $750.

On a $15,000 one-family dwelling total taxes in Montreal are $478.

Taxes are increasing to the extent that small property owners are being crushed. What is the use of encouraging people on the one hand to build a house, to develop a healthy home while on the other hand crushing them by municipal and school taxes, denying them stability in their own homes? All kinds of social action are being resorted to against unemployment, but none to encourage the small house owner to keep his home.

Mr. Speaker, spiraling prices—or inflation—cause an intrinsic loss of bonds, securities or property. Loss of bonds, securities or property saps private initiative and its disappearance spells the end of free enterprise. The elimination of free enterprise, Mr. Speaker, is the pet child of socialists.

Our economic system is called "economic liberalism" and, almost everywhere in the world, things are going badly because of this system. In fact, the same effects and troubles, which I mentioned a moment ago, are felt there. Similar causes produce similar effects and, everywhere in the world, economic liberalism leads people in the same direction, that is toward socialism, toward control by the state, while the state remains under the control of high finance, as is the case under present economic liberalism, because the old parties are the political servants of the economic liberalism under which we are living.

• (1720)

The old parties are the bedfellows of financial monopolies. That system of political and economic concubinage with finance, namely banks and their branches, and monopolies, is called economic liberalism, namely the law of the jungle.

The present economic liberalism leads to economic "barbarism." Then the state asserts itself as a socialist umpire and governs everything except finance which continues to maintain a socialist state, exactly as it was leading the state previously through the electoral funds which finance the old political traditions or economic liberalism by means of monopolies which are the offshoot of banks.

In the socialist state, finance is still protected from everything. It is supreme, for world socialist government are finance's bedfellows, in exactly the same way as under economic liberalism, political parties are the bedfellows of monopolies which are again bank subsidiaries.

This explains the economic history of nations which have turned to socialism, where banks, through the power to extend the line of credit which they obtained from government, control the latter through electoral funds. In turn, they can lead economic liberalism to its end which is to cause all the above-mentioned social evils and disorders, as well as socialism. And banks keep on controlling governments through financing, just as they were doing under economic liberalism.

The credit monopoly is the worst of all, because it creates and maintains all others. The monopoly of issuing money is never disturbed by socialists. The only known change introduced so far by socialists in the field of banking is that they centralize banks, but still leave them the power to issue money to one gank or to banks. Monopoly over the creation of credit has never been disturbed by socialists since all they do is to socialize means of production in the hands of government by eliminating monopolies, which are the "children lost in their tender years" of the banks' power to create credit.

The present economic liberalism creates and engenders the causes which lead to the effects of socialism— the system dear to the heart of our prime minister. The power to create money, legalized by governments and left in the hands of a few individuals called "banks", leads to complete control over the economic system by monopolies supported by banks. Through their monopoly over the creation of money, banks create the other monopolies of production and the like, and only naïve people would believe that monopolies are not the creation or the tool of banks; for if the latter decided to stop financing monopolies through credit, those same monopolies—whether they be called E. P. Taylor, Western Empire, Bronfman, or Steinberg—would crumble overnight like so many houses of cards, in the same way as the commercial empires of 1929 crumbled when the banks decided overnight to demand that their loans be repaid. Every production empire or monopoly, no matter how powerful, is at the mercy of the bank system which gave it birth. This is why Judge Brandies of the United States Supreme Court said, following an inquiry by a committee of the U.S. Senate which for two years investigated American trusts and monopolies—I quote:

There is only one monopoly, which is monopoly over the creation of credit.

Or, in other words, monopoly over the bank system.

The bank system creates monopolies; monopolies create the economic consequences already mentioned, which in turn lead to socialism, which leaves the bank system alone.

The newspaper Le Droit of January 14, 1972 wrote:

For many years the Liberal party has been operating thanks to the support of 95 major Canadian companies.

However, some innocents are still convinced that the old parties are the people's parties. They are two balls of different colours on a string which are made to swing according to the whims of finance which controls them.

Some other innocents think that the Canadian socialist party, the New Democratic party, is the party of the poor. Come on!

Recently, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said that there was $2 million in the kitty for the next federal election. Where does that money come from? Certainly not from the old age pensioners.

There are a number of monopolies and particularly union monopolies. I was struck by another fact which is that about 60 years ago, at the time of the foundations of the London School of Economics, sir Ernest Cassell, one of the Bank of England's directors, made a $7 million contribution for the establishment of this school and said that its purpose was to educate and train future socialist statesmen.

No wonder that our Prime Minister who attended the London School of Economics, this socialist oriented school, did not have the same ideology when he completed his studies in London as he had a few years before when he left the Jesuits of the Jean de Brébeuf college in Montreal.

This is what made our Prime Minister state, when interviewed by Mr. Norman DePoe, as reported in issue No. 13 of the Weekend Magazine of 1966, that the internationally famous Marxist professor of the London School of Economics, Mr. Harold Laski, was, and I quote:

[English]

—was the most stimulating and positive influence he has encountered.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, how are we to believe today all these socialist economists of the London School of Economics who have taught and still teach socialism in our universities or in the textbooks of economics, and who have tried to make us believe that the 1929-1939 economic crisis was due to sunspots, while the only and real explanation was that it had been provoked by financiers who had resolved, through the banking system, to cut credits generally in order to induce a stock crash and increase the economic power of banking institutions and their monopolies, which, as if by magic, thus received a windfall of securities.

Mr. Speaker, another economist of the London School of Economics, Mr. Louis Rasminsky, is the present head of the Bank of Canada. It is not surprising to note that this bank operates not in the interest of the people, but as a white elephant aimed at keeping back our Canadian banking system for the benefit of the few and to the disadvantage of the many.

Economists who have graduated from the London School of Economics could not and still cannot point to their masters, and the credit controllers as being responsible for the social uneasiness and malaise referred to earlier, because they are the offsprings of the banking system. They have been nursed by the banks' university. They are part and parcel of the system and have to guarantee its continuance and survival.

The present banking system, the only real monopoly, has created its own university, its own students, and its own creatures. I have only pointed out two examples: our Prime Minister and the Governor of the Bank of Canada, but I could mention many others. The banking system has established its university with a view to securing its world control, and the banks maintain their economic supremacy and power in three different ways.

First, by training teachers in economics who will carry on their teaching in universities.

Second, by protecting, supervising and maintaining their power through the application of their theories by their economists who pollute both officialdom and the public service.

• (1730)

Third, by political control over governments by way of election funds they supply directly or indirectly through their monopolies which are their own extension, which they generated and which they continue to supply through the financial credit they create with the permission of the governments serving them.

This banking system, Mr. Speaker, breaks the economic backs of all nations. The Créditistes who advocate monetary reform are still fighting against the banking system the same war already waged by several presidents of the United States such as Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln, Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, and also former members of Parliament, Mr. McGeer, a Liberal member for Vancouver and Mr. Slaght, for Parry Sound-Muskoka, who advocated the same monetary reform as we do.

Following in their footsteps, as many others did, Mr. Speaker, the Créditistes recognize that the physical power to produce rests in the hands of the people and in the resources to be developed. Those resources must be developed through the physical power of individuals, that is to say through work. This results in the immense production that we now have, and that production in accounting terms is defined by the word "debit". But for the debit side, that is to say production, to reach consumption you need a means of exchange between production and consumption. This means of exchange in modern terms of economic accounting is called money or credit and for the economic accounting of a nation to work properly, the credit side—money or means of exchange—must be at the service of the debit side—production—so that the credit side—money—will be an instrument of exchange and not an instrument of control as we have it today. Since production, or debit side, comes from the people, the money, or credit side, must also come from the people. But as each person cannot and must not develop its own monetary system, the power to create credit or to issue money must also be wholly exercised by a central institution called the Bank of Canada, the governement bank or the people's bank.

Until now, the people's government has assigned control of money and credit to some private organizations that we call banks, and the banks, which have control over the country's credit side, are pursuing profits for their advantage, which is the reason for all the economic disturbances that we have been and are still experiencing. The list of these ills I gave at the beginning of my remarks.

As long as the government does not create its own credit through the Bank of Canada, it will remain dependent on the credit being granted by the private banks and, consequently, the barbaric system that we know will only become worse, with all the economic ills that follow, because its ultimate goal is complete dispossession of every citizen, concentration of all material means under the control of the state, as well as the latter's submission to the banking powers.

The members of the Ralliement créditiste favour private enterprise and, accordingly, they consider that the banks, as business concerns dealing with financial matters, are entitled to a reasonable profit, regulated by competition between the banks, with financial organizations and with the savings of the individuals.

The money invested by the banks' shareholders, or borrowed by the banks, or the money accrued through profits must be loaned at a profit, and in this connection, the Creditistes are committed to the defence and protection of the banks against all forms of State intrusion in their services, their assets or their transactions. Bankers have the right to live and the banks' shareholders are entitled to a return on their savings just as any other individual or company which provides services to the community. However, they are not entitled as commercial entreprises to create money in the way shoes are manufactured.

The right to create money and to circulate it does not belong to any individual, company or bank. It is a sovereign right, and only the people is sovereign.

That right is entrusted to the government by Canadians and it is through its bank, the Bank of Canada—not through private institutions—that it must create the money or the credit which is the means of exchange of the nation and which must be based on production.

It is for the government to see constantly to it that the Bank of Canada circulates as much money as there are items to be exchanged; otherwise, the social problems which we have had and which will face us have no solution, and traditional political parties will continue to promote democracy according to the extent of freedom which they are given by financiers.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to join those who have preceded me in praising the mover of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) who has so brilliantly appraised the economic, social and political situation in our country. He has all the qualities, wisdom and courage of the "with it" Canadians. I am proud to be associated with him through the Liberal party.

He and his fellow members from the great province of Ontario, the province which has sent so many brilliant Liberal members to the House of Commons, the great majority of them with ministerial capabilities, are devoted to the Canadian adventure deeply rooted in their province but nevertheless accepting the Canadian challenge with open mind and generosity. His contribution, like a great number from this side of the House, strives toward the unity of Canada. They are not seeking a few votes through petty politics. They have respect for the intelligence of the people of their constituencies and will not indulge in excesses of language to make political hay.

Mr. Skoberg: Oh, come on now.

Mr. Dupras: That is so, Mr. Speaker. These devoted men, along with all real Canadians, are going to make this country great and powerful. They are unlike the opposition party members, who are saying out of one side of their mouths that they support the Official Languages Act and out of the other side have launched a campaign in parts of Ontario and attacked the government on the issues of the economy and bilingualism, using, as my colleague the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) reported, the "some of my best friends are" routine. Do these members belong to a new branch of the Conservative party? If so, will this branch be represented in my province, and will it have candidates in other parts of the country?

[Translation]

