The orator had much to say picture, and here is a brief extract from dependence. The orator had much to say about many things, and he said it well but, the real meaning of it all was that ardent and generous Canadian youth, the youth of two grest races, possibly the youth of one greater race when these two are united, must aspire to found here a nationality even greater than that of the young republic to the south of us. The enthusiasm and hopefulness thus display ed is good and cannot fail to have an inspiriting effect upon young men. No doubt there is a large body of mea in Canada looking towards the creation of a Canadian nationality. It it easy to see that the thought was in the mind of the Archbishop of Halifas, when, the other night, he spoke about Imperial Federations. He favored the Imperial Federation scheme, but in his mind he seemed to have the idea of Canada uniting as a nation with other English nations in the Federation, and he confessed to a feeling of something akin to humiliation at the thought of governors coming to us across the Atlantic; not because he felt that the Canadian people would be a greater people if they made their governors for themselves. The rain yesterday and to-day has produced a refreshing appearance to the farms and gardens, and gladdened the hearts of the tillers of the soil.

A Disturbance.

On Monday evening considerable excitement was caused by a fractious horse becoming frightened by the beating of the Salvation Army drum. The army had just left their barracks to parade and were marching towards the Square. A buggy was coming down the hill containing Mr. and Mrs. Frank Morrison. The horse was turned towards the marching army but the horse becoming frightened at the noisy beating of the drum bulted, and running against the lamp post at the Waverly corner wrecked the buggy badly, Mrs. Morrison being thrown out and Mr. Morrison becoming entangled in the reins was dragged about by the struggling horse. The army turned round the corner and up the hill, the drum and tambourine beating as lively a fusilade as possible. and seeming to rejoice at the destruction and danger they had caused .- A striking exemplication, certainly, of christian sympathy. The army marched on, and came down Street's hill turning the corner at McKeen's towards the Square. Coming along they were met by several persons who requested them to stop beating and the policeman made the request to the lieutenant in command who he thought agreed to do so and he stepped back when a rush was made to capture the drum and for a short time there was quite a tussle but no one was hurt and by the efforts of some of the bystanders the army was cleared and marched back to the hall.

Mrs. Morrison was bruised and badly shaken up, but received no serious injury The general opinion is that the army should discontinue the beating of the drum when frightened horses are near at hand and not persist in a more vigorous beating as if they would like to see a runaway and raise an excitement thereby. The beating of the drum is a nuisance at any time and if damage to property and persons is caused thereby it will have to. stopped. -Advocate.

'What vow?' with latent irritation.

'The vow never to tall any human being—Mr. Lascelles least of all, that I, or, for the matter of that, any one, advised you how to act toward him.'

'Oh, of course, I promise.'

'Promises are like pie crust,' replies Mrs. Dalton; then, with an air of great solemnity, she goes to a small bookcase at the end of the room, and comes back with a Bible. 'You must kiss the book, she says.

'Oh, oh,' cries Dolly, frightened. For the knows that she never kept a scoret in her life, and is terrified at being put on an oath which she may break in spite of herself a few hours later.
