Poetry.

TO THE MEMORY OF
FANNY OWEN FARMER, who died suddenly, on Sunday night, 5th March.

Thou hast passed away, sweet Fanny,
Like a flower from the parent stem,
Thou hast passed away, sweet Fanny,
As the trace of a beautiful dream.

The mirth of thy girlhood's home,
Is hushed by the quiet tread—
And sorrow—too mighty for words—Hath bowed thy parent's head.

The bright light of thy father's house,
The joy of his widowed years—We pray—Oh God to sustain him;
And lovingly—dry up his tears.

Thy brothers—thy dearer near the heart, Deep sorrow look, and in love,
For once they have stayed their gay sports,
The sister, they love so, has gone!

And friendship doth silently weep,
For a life so transient and brief, A beautiful flower from our vale, We cannot see plucked, but in grief.

Yet our flower doth die—but to bloom
In a brighter and happier land; She hath left her friends for a while,
That the joy of her soul might expand!

We fear no gloomy shadowy tomb—When the eyes of faith it can trace, Remembrance, for friends that are severed—When cleansed by the fountain of grace.

Campbell, March 8.

The Moonlight Hour.

BY M. J. JONES.

There is loveliness in the morning beam, How it silvers over the lake and stream,
And tinges with beauty rock, tree and flower, Yet sweeter to me is the moonlight hour.

As he takes his course the bright orb of day, Shed over all things his radiant ray, When such is the beauty of land and sky,
That beings of earth might forget to die.

I have gazed on the gold and crimson gleams, That mark the exit of the sun's last beams, The faded and gone was gorgeous hue,
And the landscape of green was lost to view.

There is holiness in the sun's last beams, Those brightly shining lakes and streams,
And they tinge with beauty rock, tree and flower, Yet sweeter to me is the moonlight hour.

Miscellany.

THE ROMANCE OF REALITY.

FROM THE RECORDS OF A FRENCH DETE-CTIVE TRANSLATED FROM THE PACIFIC.

MONTHLY.

I had some renown as a successful rogue-catcher; and I had some experience, too.
My field operations, as a usual thing, lay within the confines of the Department of the Lower Alps; and though I served under the Sub-Prefect of the third Arrondissement, yet the Prefect of the Department called upon me when he chose. One morning—I received a note in the latter part of May—I received a note from the Prefect, ordering me to come to Digne, and see him with all possible dispatch. The message came through the office of our Sub-Prefect, so that I had nothing to do but get ready and start. I took an early morning, assumed the dress of a peasant, browed my face and hands, and set forth.

I reached Digne just at nightfall, and as soon as it was dark I waited on the Prefect.
He seemed to be relieved when he saw me and took me to his private closet.

Now, said I, have you got work for me?
Yes, he replied; sit down and listen.

We sat down, and he proceeded: Within a few months past there have been some of the most mysterious murders committed in this Department, and in the Department of War, that have ever come under my notice.

They are done mostly on the road—from Castellane to Aups. The first victim was a Marseilles merchant, who had come up to Castellane to purchase preserved fruits.

His body was found by the roadside, near the line between the two Departments, and at first it was supposed that he must have fallen there and died in a fit, as he was of an advanced age, and had been very ill.

His pockets had been rifled, however. The next one was found near Aups, and under the same circumstances. He was a merchant from Nice. Since then, five or six more have died upon the same road in the same mysterious way, and no marks of ill-usage have been found upon any of them; but all have been robbed.

Have most of them stopped in Castellane?

Is asked.

The Prefect told me they had.
And I suppose they must have put up at the same inn there? I remarked.

Yes, said the Prefect.

I then supposed that some of the landlords must be concerned. But my companion informed me that they had been narrowly watched, and that no shadow of evidence rested against them.

But, said I, is there not some poison in this matter? Some innkeeper may administer the poison, and then send an accomplice after the victim.

No, returned the Prefect, with a shake of the head. Experienced physicians have examined the stomachs of the dead men, but no trace of poison had been found. It is a mysterious affair. The Sub-Prefect has done all he could, but without effect, and now we can give the whole thing into your hands. You must go to Castellane at once, and there you can get such further information as the Sub-Prefect can give you.

After conferring a while longer with the Prefect, he let me have a suit of ordinary citizen's clothing, and, thus habited, I went to a hotel and put up for the night.

In the morning I procured a horse and set out, reaching Castellane before noon. During the day I pretended to be doing business. I went to the woolen factory and examined a lot of stuff, and also visited several places where preserved fruits were put up. I learned that most of the people who came there on business put up at an inn kept by a man named Juan Fontaix; so I left my horse there, and engaged lodgings.

After dark I called upon the Sub-Prefect.
He told me that he had used all the means within his power, but had been able to gain no clue to the guilty party. Most of the murdered victims were from Marseilles, and the excitement in that city was intense. Gen-darmes had been sent upon all the roads, and secret police had been upon the watch. The last victim had fallen only four or five days before, and the deed was done only fifteen minutes after the policeman had passed the spot.

I asked the Sub-Prefect if he had any suspicions. He answered that all the suspicion he held was fastened upon Juan Fontaix, the innkeeper. Nearly all the murdered men had stopped at his house, and he must have known something of their business.

I bade the officer keep perfectly quiet, not even to let one of his own men know of my presence. Then I returned to my inn, and busied myself with a conversation with my host upon the subject of mysterious deaths.
He pronounced it wonderful, and assured me that it had injured him more than he could tell.

"Parbleu!" he muttered, "they're suspecting me next, if they have not done so already."

I was, soon satisfied that Juan Fontaix knew nothing of the guilty party. He was very fearful, and at times blanching and trembling at the thought. Most people would have seen in this signs of guilt; but I thought differently.

I spent all the next day in town, ostensibly engaged in business, but in reality hunting after some clue to the object of my mission. Night came, again, but I had found nothing new. I was perfectly satisfied that the murderer had laid his plans so deeply that no circumstantial clue could be found. If I would find him, I must catch him with the proof upon him.

I had given an assumed name at the inn, and stated that I belonged to Toulon. On the next morning I called for my bill, and informed my host that I was off for home.

Then I went to the fruit preserver and told him the same, stating that I must confer with my partner before I concluded my bargain.

After this I went to the woolen factory and saw the business agent. His name was Louis Cazabon, and he had come to Castellane about a year before. He seemed to be a straightforward business man, and yet he was the only one I had seen whom I had thought of suspecting.

In conversing upon the murders, he had been a little too free and handed, treating the subject more coolly than a man with a heart would be apt to do.
But still I had thus far been able to find nothing against him. On the present occasion I told him, as I told the others, that I must return to Toulon.

If you have not the money with you, we can give you credit, he said.

I told him I had plenty of money, but was not fully prepared to pay the price he had demanded. He said, "Very well, I will let that be settled; but I am very happy to sell you some of my goods. I have them every day, and they are of the best quality. As soon as I was alone, I began to suspect Monsieur Louis Cazabon in secret. When I told him that I had money, he did not purchase, because he charged me too much, why didn't he hinder me?
Simply because he wished me to leave town with the money in my pocket. At least so it appeared to me. This was sufficient ground for me to work upon, and I resolved to watch the man a little while. So I rode on an out-of-the-way place and left my horse, and then returned and concealed myself in a position where I could see the movements of Louis Cazabon. In a few minutes he came out from the factory and walked away. His step was hurried and eager. I felt sure that he was not the man who did the direct work of death. The plot was deeper than that, or he would have been discovered ere this. So I resolved to wait awhile and see if he returned.
I would have followed him if I could have done so with safety; but he might have detected me, and that would not do. However, in less than fifteen minutes he came back, he walked now with a sober, innocent air.

I saw Cazabon at his desk, and then I returned to my horse. I knew that I had a risk to run, but I was ready for it. If the factory agent was at the bottom of the crime, and meant to have me robbed, he had already set his machinery in motion and the next development would be upon the road. I examined my pistols, and then left the town, taking the road along the river, towards the Alps.

At the end of half an hour I came to the slope of the Baquis mountains, and soon afterward entered the wood. I now began to be very careful and keep my eyes about me.
I will not say that I was wholly without fear; for the mysterious manner in which the murders had been done, and the close proximity upon the marvelous, that a sort of superstitious dread attached to it. Had the victim been shot or run through with a sword or other deadly weapon, I should have felt no sort of dread. But this was new ground. Death had come here, not by any means new. It might have come from an invisible hand and in dead silence. Yet when I reasoned upon the subject, I felt sure that the murderer must approach very near to his victims, and the blow was struck, since it must be some direct and powerful agent that could cause death in so strange a manner.

I had crossed the little cascade of Saint Raphael, and was descending a short steep hillside, when I saw a young man by the roadside, at the foot of the cascade, engaged in whipping a mule. He was a slightly built fellow, and his coarse garments were covered with mud. I knew that there was a mill upon a branch of the Verdon not far back, and supposed he might be the miller's boy.

As I came nearer, I saw a large sack lying upon the ground, close by where the mule stood.

What is the matter? I asked, and drew up near him.

This ugly mule has thrown both me and my bag of grain from his back, he answered.
Are you hurt? I continued.

My left shoulder is hurt, he said, and I can't lift this sack again. If Monsieur would help me, I would be very grateful.

Until this moment the idea of suspecting the young man had never entered my head; but the suspicion dashed upon me now. He was altogether too keen a looking fellow for a miller's apprentice. He gave a glance from a pair of quick, sharp eyes, that meant more than he had spoken. And then, if I had not been very much mistaken, I had seen him holding his mule firmly with that left hand.

I leaped from my saddle, and moved toward him, being careful to watch his every movement.

Now, said he, if you will take hold of that end, we will put it on. He lifted at the other end, and pretended that it hurt his shoulder, and begged of me to lift it on alone.

I professed to be willing to comply, and stepped down from my saddle, keeping my head in such a position that I could watch him by a sidelong glance. As I bent over and took hold of the sack, I saw him carry his hand to his bosom and draw something out.
I saw his dark eye flash and heard his quick eager breathing. In an instant I seized his wrist and beat it upward, and, as I did so, I heard a sharp report, like the explosion of a percussion cap, and saw a gray wreath of smoke curl up from the hand I held. He struggled to free himself from my grasp, but I held him with a grip of iron, and fastened my gaze upon him.

I have found you, he said, drawing one of my pistols and cocking it. I will simply inform you that I am an officer of the Prefecture, and that I have been hunting for you. Just offer a particle of resistance, and a bullet goes through your brain! Now give me that weapon, and I will release you.
The young man was frightened and trembled violently.

It is only a percussion cap, he said, and he handed it to me. I saw that he was not entirely at liberty, like the others, and I began to think that he was an ordinary mechanic, and that the blow being colored as though by long use, was only the number piece of a machine. I did not stop to examine it then, but turned my attention to his owner. I saw that he was still trembling with fear, and I knew that now would be the time to work upon him.

So you are selling your soul to Monsieur Louis Cazabon? I remarked, by way of letting him know I was thoroughly informed. He started, and I saw very plainly he knew just what I meant; but he tried to recover himself, and clumsily asserted that he did not know anything about the individual I had named.

You needn't lie to me, I sternly replied.
I know all about you. Louis Cazabon has been watched by me when he did not dream of such a thing. He thought I was a traveller. But you are young, and I would save you. Confess every thing to me, and I promise your life, shall be spared.

I saw that he wavered, and I followed up my advantage; and ere long I had him bent to my wishes. I made him understand that I held his life in my hand; that I could protect him from the vengeance of any one whom he might criminate, and that he had every thing to gain and nothing to lose by a full confession. He came to it gradually and finally; but my wit finally triumphed over his secret.

His name, he said, was Henry Dupin.
He was born in Paris, but never knew who his parents were. He went to live with Cazabon when quite young, and had been with him ever since. He said Cazabon used to be a chemist, and did some business in that line; and that it was in Paris he invented the infernal machine which they had used with such fatal effect. About two years previous to the present time, they left Paris together and spent nearly a year in travelling over the kingdom, murdering and robbing for a living. Finally they came to Castellane, where the master got his present situation. Cazabon marked the victims that were to be robbed, and the young man then did the work. He used various artifices in carrying out his plan, but the usual one was the one he tried upon me.

The young man then explained to me the secret of the pipe. Only the outer surface was of mechanism. Within it was a pistol of the finest steel, and of the most exquisite workmanship. The stem was the barrel, and the lock was concealed within the bowl, and coated with tobacco. A thin plate of metal protected the curiously contrived lock, and upon this the tobacco rested. A pressure of the thumb or finger upon this plate discharged the weapon. In order to cock it the plate had to be removed. And now I mentioned the fatal feature of the contrivance: The powder used in the little barrel, was of Cazabon's own manufacture, and very powerful. For a wall a piece of lead was used, and on the top of this was placed the missile which did the mischief. The young man had two of them with him, tucked up in the lining of his cap. He took them out and showed them to me. This projectile was a thin arrow, not larger than a cambric needle, with one end sharp, and the other beat down to a thin feather. It was of fine steel, but coated with a greenish yellow substance, which was the most violent and speedy poison that the chemist's art could discover.
The needle once within the course of the blood, and death was already at the heart.
It would no mortal eye could detect it.
I pictured the skin not so palpably as the prick of a pin. He who sent it on its fatal errand made sure of his aim, generally striking the neck, and the victim would fall into insensibility ere he could comprehend what hurt him.

I returned to Castellane with my prisoner, having left him in charge of the Sub-Prefect.
I took a gentleman along with me, and went to the factory. Monsieur Cazabon was surprised to see me back again so soon; but he was more surprised when I asked him to take a walk with me; and when I called upon the agent and bade him put the handcuffs upon the agent, he was ready to sink to the floor. We had him secured before he had enough sense to resist, and he was conveyed to the Sub-Prefect without trouble. At first he denied everything; but when he found that this would not avail him any, he swore he would tell his accomplice.

In due time Monsieur Louis Cazabon was tried and condemned to death, and the Prefect of Digne took possession of the infernal machine. Before the villain was executed he confessed his crimes—told how many years he had worked to perfect his fatal instrument and produce the poison—and also avowed that the young man had been driven to help him through fear of his life.

So the record was closed. Henry Dupin, my accomplice, spent two years in confinement, and was then set free, and commenced an honest life. As for me, I got all the praise I deserved, and perhaps more.
At all events, I had done the country some service, and the people were not slow in acknowledging it.
