The case of the Bank of British North America vs La France which was begun before Mr. Justice Craig and a jury yesterday was being continued this forenoon with a strong probability of its being completed and given to the jury before the end of the day's session.

From the testimony adduced at the hearing yesterday and today it appears that for a number of years La France has been supplying the Dawson market with meat, his dealings being largely through Bossuyt who is one of the pioneers in that line.

KLONDIKE NUGGET.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 10, 1903.

RAILROAD CONNECTION.

No local action has been taken as yet in the direction of securing the extension of the Grand Trunk system into the Yukon territory.

There is no longer doubt that the Grand Trunk will push through to the Pacific as rapidly as men and money can do the necessary work and there seems to be little question that Port Simpson will be the Pacific terminal point.

A branch line extending through British Columbia to Dawson is a natural outgrowth of the company's plans, and all possible local encouragement for the furtherance of the project should be given.

The interior of this territory must be furnished with cheap and rapid transportation before anything in the nature of widespread development of its natural resources can occur.

Compared with the whole known gold bearing area of the territory, the number of square miles actually inhabited and productive is infinitesimally small.

The population of 15,000 of which the district is now able to boast ought to be no less than 50,000 and would be under more favorable conditions.

The history of the west on both sides of the international line has proven beyond question that suitable transportation facilities are the greatest essential in the development of any new country and viewed from a broad standpoint it may be said that this territory is not well provided for in that particular.

Whatever can be done, therefore, in the direction of securing the entry of the Grand Trunk into this territory will be a step toward the fulfillment of the great promises which the future holds out for this northern country.

TRUTH IN A JEST. The Toronto Globe suggests in a semi-jocular spirit that the time may come in the Yukon district when an agitation will spring up for the protection of the agricultural industry of the territory against foreign importation.

There is an element of truth contained in the Globe's pleasantry which is apparent at a glance to those who are familiar with local conditions.

In certain lines the Dawson markets were practically supplied last year by homegrown products. An extensive area was cultivated and the results were eminently satisfactory.

Imports of the ordinary garden vegetables fell way below the figures of previous years and will be less than ever during the current season.

Of the harder products such as potatoes, turnips and onions, heavy importations are still made, but that is due entirely to the fact that the cultivated area has not as yet been extended sufficiently to meet the demands.

There is no longer any question as to the ability of the district to produce its own vegetable supply. Results have shown what may be accomplished in that direction and it needs only that the scope of the agricultural industry shall be somewhat extended to place the whole territory entirely independent of the outside vegetable producer.

Within another year or two the territory's yield of garden products should be sufficient to meet all home requirements.

PUBLIC RIGHTS TO CROWN DOMAIN.

Three recent incidents go to illustrate the absurdity of viewing the crown domain, which belongs to the whole people, as a fit subject for speculative private ownership.

Under existing and now venerable regulations it is possible for a man to acquire a mining claim and let it lie unworked to await the time when, through the exhaustion of other metallic deposits, it may acquire a value to which the owner has hardly at all contributed.

Under other regulations it has been possible for a man to acquire in the Northwest territory the exclusive right to a timber lot, which, after the lapse of years, he finds to be of fabulous value though meanwhile it has been largely stripped of timber by fire and the Indians.

Under a special order in council a virtual monopoly of the use of the water in the Klondike and its tributaries for gold-washing purposes may be granted years in advance of the time when such a monopoly is found necessary.

Why should any portion of the crown domain be alienated until it is needed for exploitation, and why should the purchaser not be compelled to at once either develop his franchise or surrender it?

It may be said that, to eliminate speculative holding would be to retard progress, but a moment's consideration should suffice to convince anyone of the unsoundness of this view.

If the natural resources of a district are to be unimproved until they are made valuable by demand and competition, then they should remain vested in the crown, to be disposed of at the proper time in the interest of the community as a whole.

The regulations under which land is alienated for purposes of settlement are stringent enough, but they are perpetually violated by evasions of the law amounting to positive frauds.

What is wanted in all new countries is not land owners, but occupants, men who are there to make or enlarge clearings, erect dwelling houses to live in, establish schools, make roads, and perform other pioneer duties.

It is scandalously unjust to add to the actual settlers' inevitable hardships by allowing uncleared lots to remain under non-resident ownership in the midst of otherwise progressive settlements.

The frightful persecution to which the Jews of Russia have been subjected calls for protest from every civilized power.

Russia's claims to a seat among the advanced nations will be open to question if such outrages are tolerated any longer.

The recent floods along the Missouri river have caused more damage than could be paid for by the entire output of the Klondike for a year.

The disastrous results will be felt in the states of Kansas and Missouri for years to come.

Recovers His Sight. London, May 23.—A man 30 years old, blind from birth, had his sight restored recently by an operation for cataract at a Glasgow ophthalmic institution, which Dr. Ransay describes in the Lancet.

The first thing the patient actually perceived was the face of the surgeon. At first he did not know what he saw, but the surgeon asked him to look down.

The sense of hearing, guided the eye straight to the source of the sound. The patient then realized that this must be a mouth. The first time he saw yellow it made him feel sick.

The first sight of red gave him pleasure.

THE DOG HABIT.

The People Must Reform or Keep Away From Ball Game.

Sergeant Major Tucker had a policeman stationed at the bridge near the entrance of the ball grounds to keep out dogs yesterday evening but nevertheless a number got in and worked considerable damage to the various flower and vegetable gardens within the enclosure.

Hereafter people accompanied by dogs will be denied admittance to the grounds. People must either shake off their dogs or stay at home with them.

River Rising.

Since yesterday morning the water in the Yukon river at Dawson has risen about 14 inches and is still coming up. The Klondike is almost bank full and much drift wood is being brought down.

Alligator's Song.

During the winter season the Zoo alligators are drowsy and dull, but with the coming of spring they begin to show signs of activity.

Then it is that they utter their peculiar roaring noise. Each spring, says the Washington Post, one certain alligator begins and leads the roaring, and the others join in and stop when he ceases bellowing.

This is the big saurian, the largest gator in the Zoo, and there are few sights more interesting than to watch the saurians when they are bellowing together.

The old fellow begins the song by elevating his head and jaws, and raising himself on his fore legs, and giving voice to that curious guttural and muttering bellow peculiar to the alligator alone.

To a person leaning with his back against the railing of the tank and contemplating the monkeys in the cage opposite, it is to say the least a trifle startling to hear the entire herd of alligators tune up in one thundering bellow from one end of the tank to the other.

The noise made by the gators is unlike the noise of any other animal. It can hardly be called a bellow, nor is it in the strict sense of the term a roar, such as one hears from the lions in the case opposite their tank.

The nearest one can come to describing the noise made by these creatures is to say that it bears a very close resemblance to distant though increasing and approaching thunder. There is a peculiar muttering or rattling noise that the saurians utter at the same time they are bellowing or roaring.

The noise-making of the Zoo alligators is a thing well known to a great many Washingtonians who resort to the Zoo on pleasant Sundays every spring. It is not always, however, that one can enjoy the novelty of listening to these lizards, as they are rather capricious and bellow only when they see proper.

The keepers of the National Zoo tell some interesting stories about the bellowing of these alligators. From what they relate it appears there are a great number of people who are in utter ignorance of the vocal powers and accomplishments of the alligator, and who are immensely surprised and startled when they hear these creatures tune up for a grand concert.

Contrary to the opinion frequently expressed the Zoo alligators bellow both in and out of water, although it is a notorious fact that the old leader always begins his song on dry land, and if there are any in the water, they join in the chorus, but swim as rapidly as possible to the high shelf where the leader of the orchestra is stationed.

The monkeys in the cages opposite the tank have become accustomed to these impromptu concerts and pay no attention to them, but it is a curious fact that whenever any new monkeys reach the Zoo and are placed in the cages with the others, they become greatly excited and alarmed the first few times they hear them, as well as over the roaring of the lions, doubtless recognizing in the roar of each the notes of their old enemies of the jungle.

Mr. Bowser Celebrates the Fourth

Mr. Bowser had a good-sized bundle under his arm as he came home the other evening, and, of course, Mrs. Bowser's curiosity was aroused as to the contents. His evasive replies made her certain that he had been investing in some new fad, and it was not until dinner was over and the bundle had been carried to the sitting room that he made ready to explain.

"Mrs. Bowser," he began, as he crossed his hands under his coat-tails, "in the year 1776 the American Colonies determined to throw off the English yoke of despotism."

"Yes, I've read of it," she replied. "In convention assembled at Philadelphia, on the Fourth of July, a Declaration of Independence was drawn up and signed, and American freedom was born. That is the reason we celebrate the Fourth of July. You probably never gave it a thought before, and you probably will forget it in half an hour, but I thought I would just mention the fact."

"Thanks—it is very kind of you," she said. "For the last three or four years," he went on, "circumstances have prevented us from celebrating the glorious day as patriotic citizens should, but this year we will make up for it. The man who would forget Independence Day is no true American. It is a day when we should remember what our forefathers passed through in order that we might be free men instead of slaves. I don't suppose you ever think of Washington, do you—the noble, patient and unselfish Washington?"

"Very often. You know, the Washington saloon is right around the corner, and I never pass it without thinking of the Father of his country."

"See here, woman!" exclaimed Mr. Bowser, as he began to flush up. "I don't like your flippant manner of speech. If you have no interest in the history of America—you can turn to some love-sick novel, but if you care to know whether you are the daughter of a Hottentot or an American patriot, you'd better listen with respect."

"Isn't Fourth of July a pretty old subject?" she asked. "It may be for traitors!" he pointedly replied, "but not for the grandsons of those who fought and fell at Lexington and Bunker Hill."

"Well, what about the coming Fourth? Has it anything to do with that bundle?" "There is this about the coming Fourth," he went on, "I'm going to whip 'er up with a bang. We have done so little for the past three or four years that people around here are beginning to wonder whether our forefathers were Hessians or patriots. I'm going to turn loose and let 'em know. I'll hang a flag from every window during the day, and when night comes I'll show the neighborhood such a show of fireworks as it has not seen for years. The bundle contains only the first installment. There are some empty rockets which I am going to fill myself."

"You don't mean that you are going to fool around with powder?" she exclaimed in alarm. "I am going into the dining room presently to fill some rockets, some thing new in the line of pyrotechnical display. While I am thus engaged I wish you would get down my American history and post yourself a little. I don't suppose you know, for instance, whether Lord Cornwallis was English or American?"

"I know that if you are going to handle powder around here I shall leave the house till you get through. What made you think of such a thing? You are sure to bring about an accident."

"I shall fill the rockets, Mrs. Bowser, and there will be no accident," he blandly replied. "When General Bowser handled powder at Bunker Hill the only accident was to the enemy. It was the same when Colonel Bowser handled powder at Yorktown. While I am doing the work I wish you would read the Declaration of Independence to me. I've read it a hundred times, of course, but as I may be asked some questions about it next week I'd like to be sure on certain points."

"I—I think I'll run into Brown's for half an hour!" she faltered. "There's no use of my reading the Declaration of Independence to you in order to be blown up at the finish. Mr. Bowser, don't fool with powder at night!"

"Nobody is going to fool, as you call it. You must take me for a ten-year boy. If you don't want to stay I shall not ask you to. I brought those rockets home to fill, and fill 'em I shall. You've got about as much patriotism in your soul as our old cat!"

Mrs. Bowser put on her hat and took a skip, and the dining room being clear, Mr. Bowser laid his bundle on the table and proceeded to business. Filling those rockets was an idea of his own. The man who sold him the empty shells and powder had sought to dissuade him, but that only made him all the more determined. He had just opened the package when the cook came in and caught sight of the contents, and asked:

"Is it fireworks ye are foolin' wid, Mr. Bowser?" "I'm making some rockets," he replied. "Then ye'll excuse me, but I'll go out in the back yard and take a seat agin the fence. I was blown up by gunpowder once, and me toes are not dane crackin' yet."

He flushed red as he glared at her, but she didn't wait, a minute before vacating her kitchen for the yard. There were six empty rockets and a pound of loose powder, and as Mr. Bowser looked away he couldn't see the slightest chance for an accident. All he had to do was to spoon the powder into the shells and put on the pasteboard cap and glue it fast. He had filled three of them, when it occurred to him that he might be called upon to deliver a brief address at his club.

"By George, but I ought to have something ready in case I'm called out," he whispered to himself as he suspended his labors to rise up and walk about. "Let's see? Let's see? I'd want to start in with the landing of the Pilgrims, of course. They wouldn't expect a speech over ten minutes long. I'd give two minutes to the Pilgrims—two to English tyranny and the outbreak of the Revolution—two more—"

Mr. Bowser fished a cigar out of his pocket and struck a light. He forgot all about the powder in trying to work out a speech. The powder didn't forget him, however. It was biting its time, and the time came almost with the first puff of the cigar. There was a great flash and a puff. The cook saw it through the open doors, but she had scarcely leaped to her feet with a scream when Mr. Bowser appeared at the back door. Close behind him were the rockets he had filled. They were spitting and spluttering and twisting and leaping, but always having his back as an objective point. The three hit him in chorus as he reached the door, and before the cook could get out of his way she was run over and slammed against the fence. She did not faint away, but could only dimly remember of three streaks of fire playing back and forth of yells and cuss-words—of some heavy body climbing the fence and falling kerplunk on the other side. Then the fire bells rang and the engines came, and for ten minutes water was being pumped into the lower part of the house at the rate of a hundred barrels a minute. Mr. Bowser was not with the crowd in front of the house. He did not show up when the firemen left. The bells sounded midnight, and yet he was absent. It was within an hour of daylight when he came sneaking in, and Mrs. Bowser sat waiting for him. His hair had been frizzled and singed, the back of his coat had been burned away, his eyes had a hunted look, and there was mud on his boots and blood on his ears.

"Wo-woman!" he began, as he stood before her with arm outstretched—"woman, I see how—" But he never finished. Mrs. Bowser took him by the shoulder and whirled him around and pointed up stairs and he bowed his head and humbly climbed up and fell upon the bed with a sigh of relief. As a patriot he was not a success and he knew it.

First Love Affair

Hartland said, with the least bit romantic, therefore all the more to her mind, this sitting in the box seat while her new husband handled reins and whip, and the smiling summer landscape melted into soft, dreamy distances, on either hand. They went at a rattling pace, and in the joy of it Avis almost forgot her new position and the unseen rival, thoughts of whom had haunted her through the nights. Of course she would never speak of her to Hartland. She knew he was taking her to his own big house—a house no doubt filled for him with memories of that earlier love. Suppose he tired of her—of her yellow hair, her baby dimples, her willful, beguiling, winsome ways? Suppose even in thought he sighed for the other? She could not bear to contemplate it.

They had been silent full five minutes. The sinking sun lay full in their eyes. Hartland saw it glisten upon bright drops welling over. He smiled under his mustache, but said nothing—only sent the horses through the gate and up the long avenue at their very best pace.

Leaping down, he lifted Avis and carried her well inside the big hall. "I thought you would be crying by the time we got here," he said, setting her down in a big easy chair. "Now that I have you hard and fast, hear the truth. You had a rival. She used to live on that panel over there between the window. She was only a picture—I picked her up in Europe, called her Marion and vowed my wife must look like her. That was, of course, before I saw you."

"Of course," Avis interrupted. "But why did you tell me such dreadful lies about her?"

"Because I wanted you so very, very badly," Hartland said, gathering her in his arms. "You were such a flyaway I knew you would never look at a sober citizen such as myself unless I could somehow persuade you that I was forbidden fruit. Confess! You would have played with me as with all the rest if I had not given you a rival."

"Where is she now?" Avis demanded.

"In retirement, ready to be sent to a nunnery which has been wild to buy her," Hartland responded.

Avis sat up straight. "Bring her back! At once!" she said. "You know I live to set—axims topsy turvy. You shall be off wif the new love until you are on again wif the old."

Mr. Bowers Lightning Change

"I was just thinking," said Mr. Bowers as he laid aside his paper the other evening, "how foolish it is for men to strive for money beyond a certain point."

"Yes," quietly replied Mrs. Bowers as she looked up and wondered what was coming.

"Take our case, for instance. While we are not rich, we take solid comfort. We have all the necessities and many of the luxuries. If we were worth ten million dollars you could not be a more loving or devoted wife."

"Do you really think so?" she asked, and a smile of pleasure rested on her face.

"Think so! You bet I do! You are the best and the dearest little woman in all this world, and I am a cantankerous old crank and kicker."

"You are a good man, Mr. Bowers."

"No, I ain't! I'm an obstinate, selfish and cranky, and I sometimes wonder why you don't run away and leave me. I wish I were a better man."

"You are good enough for me," said Mrs. Bowers as she went over and patted his bald head and kissed his left ear.

"But I'm always blaming you, while you are never to blame. Don't you remember me buying that horse?"

"Yes, dear."

"You warned me that I'd regret it, but I would buy him, and I lost a clean one hundred dollars and came near breaking my neck. Then I got the crazy idea of keeping a cow, and I was twenty-five dollars out on that deal. Then I bought a pig, then I got the chicken fever, then I had the back yard plowed up for a garden, then I invested in a fire escape, then—"

"Never mind, dear," she interrupted as she fondled his chin.

"But I can't help but mind," he persisted. "Think of the idea of my investing ten dollars in that microbe destroyer when there wasn't a blamed microbe within one hundred miles of our house! And then I paid fifteen dollars for a family medicine chest and nearly poisoned the whole of us the first dose! Mrs. Bowers, if I had listened to you—if all husbands had the sense to listen to their wives—I'd have been a heap better off."

"Do you really think so?"

"I know it, and am free to confess it."

"Then, dear, I want to tell you something."

"Crack ahead. It will be the common sense, whatever it is."

"Won't you please get over those idle fancies in regard to your health? In the last two weeks you have bought a lung pad, a liver pad, six

RUSSIAN JEWS

Count Cassini Cause of the Trouble

Washington, May 18.—Count Cassini, the Russian ambassador, in a conversation today with a representative of the Associated Press relative to the Jewish troubles in Russia, said:

"There is in Russia, as in Germany and Austria, a feeling against certain of the Jews. The reason for this unfriendly attitude is found in the fact that the Jews will not work in the field or engage in agriculture. They prefer to be money lenders. Give a Jew a couple of dollars and he becomes a banker and money broker."

"In this capacity he takes advantage of the Russian peasant, whom he soon has in his power and ultimately destroys. It is when the patience of the peasant is exhausted that a conflict between peasants and Jews occurs. Ordinarily, the Russian is a very patient person, but it is only natural that he should entertain a feeling of resentment for the one who has wrought his ruin."

SEEKS TO AID THEM

Emperor Nicholas sought to help the Jew by ordering the establishment of agricultural colonies in Southern Russia, hoping to induce the Jews to engage in agricultural pursuits. Instead of money lending, but the effort was useless, nor have other projects been successful.

"The situation in Russia so far as the Jews are concerned is this: It is the peasant against the money lender and not the Russians against the Jews. There is no feeling against the Jew in Russia because of religion. It is as I have said, the Jew ruins the peasants with the result that conflicts occur when the latter have left all their worldly possessions and have nothing to live upon."

"There are many good Jews in Russia and they are respected. Jewish genius is appreciated in Russia and the Jewish artist is honored. Jews also appear in the financial world in Russia."

PUNISH GUILTY ONES

"The Russian government affords the same protection to the Jews that it does to any other of its citizens, and when a riot occurs and Jews are attacked the officials immediately take steps to apprehend those who began the riot and visit severe punishment upon them. In the past Russians have been punished severely for attacks upon Jews. But, notwithstanding these conflicts, the Jews continue to do the very things which have been responsible for the troubles which involve them."

Continuing the conversation, the ambassador said:

"The Russian, readily assimilates with the people of all other races, and if he cannot assimilate with the Jew it is apparent that the fault

RAILWAY COMMITTEE

Ottawa, May 6.—The Railway Committee of the House held a stormy session this morning, dealing with two C. P. R. western bills, which were opposed by Mackenzie & Mann, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, Mr. Drinkwater and Mr. Creelman. Mr. Drinkwater and Mr. Creelman were present for the C. P. R. Messrs. Mackenzie, Mann, Lash, Moor and Norman Guthrie were arrayed in opposition. The Great Northwest Central bill was reported on a compromise basis, but the Manitoba & Northwestern bill was strenuously opposed, and the discussion was not concluded.

Mr. McCreary's bill for the extension of time for the completion of the Great Northwest Central Railway was first taken up. The bill had been acquired by the C. P. R., and Mr. McCreary stated that they have put it in good shape and have built sixty miles in the last two years.

Mr. Creelman, for the C. P. R., explained the long and complicated course of legislation affecting the company. The clause in the original act which it was desired to extend empowered the company to complete its line from the original point near Brandon to the Rocky Mountains, via Battleford. The company had not defaulted in building the sections required by the extending acts. The C. P. R. had paid off all liens and claims against the company.

Mr. Z. A. Lash, on behalf of Mackenzie & Mann, opposed the application. The bill, he said, was a roving commission to build a railway from Brandon to the Rocky Mountains by way of Battleford. The next bill on the order paper respecting the Manitoba & Northwestern Railway Company, provided for the building of another C. P. R. line in the same direction, and along the route of the Canadian Northern. He explained that the C. P. R. could parallel the Canadian Northern from a point east of Battleford clear through to the Rocky Mountains. He asked that in these two bills it should be made clear that the line of the Canadian Northern should not be paralleled within, say, sixty miles, or, at places, forty miles.

Dr. Douglas asked for an assurance that the C. P. R. intended to complete the line across the Assiniboine.

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy explained the need of the country around Brandon for increased railway accommodation. He was quite willing that the line should not be extended more than 200 or 250 miles without further legislation, or to have a clause inserted keeping the C. P. R. out of Battleford for ten years.

Mr. Blair announced that the government had concluded that the lines which were being projected for construction in our western country should be so laid out by one and all companies that the country, through which they were to pass should be best served. They had come to the conclusion that the lines of rival railways should not parallel within forty miles.

The chairman then read a suggested amendment that the bill be passed, subject to a clause to be framed satisfactory to the minister of railways and the chairman, that the present extension shall not apply to more than 200 miles westerly from the present western terminus.

The amendment by Dr. Sproute, requiring the completion of 25 miles each year, was deleted, and the bill was reported, subject to the 200-mile proviso.

The bill respecting the Manitoba & Northwestern Railway Co. was then taken up. The bill permits the company to construct from a point on its main line between Yorkton and Prince Albert westerly and northwesterly to a point on the North Saskatchewan river, in the vicinity of Battleford (Saskatoon), thence to a point near Wetaskiwin, on the Calgary & Edmonton Railway, also a railway from a point at or near Church Bridge, on the company's main line, southerly to a junction with the Pheasant Hills branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, at or near Esterhazy. Mr. Creelman explained that the company desired to build the railway as a business proposition, without any subsidy, in order to get into Saskatoon, and to reach the branches of the Calgary & Edmonton without expense to the country. It would serve a part of the country in urgent need of railway accommodation.

Mr. Davis objected strenuously to the proposed change in the route of the Manitoba & Northern Railway Co., or any extension of its line, until the line shall have been constructed into Prince Albert on the original route, along which a great many people had settled, on the strength of the railway being built.

Mr. McCreary explained that the C. P. R. took over the Manitoba & Northwestern, and were completing it without any land grants. He denied that there was any large amount of settlement in the district indicated by Mr. Davis.

Mr. Davis contradicted this, and declared that the C. P. R. were taking this charter simply to prevent others from building in the same territory.

The committee adjourned at 1 o'clock, when the discussion was at its warmest. The chairman will appoint a day for the further discussion of the bill.

"Will you marry me?" tremblingly inquired the honest youth of the only daughter of the sprightly widow.

"Oh, kind sir," answered the diffident maid, "you must ask mamma first."

"I did," avers the truthful swain, "but she said she couldn't have me, as she was engaged to old Goldrex."

GOOD GAME LAST NIGHT

Full of Errors, But Spectators Enjoyed It

Belief There is a Hoodoo on the Gandolfos—Seems They Can't Win.

That there is a hoodoo hovering over the Gandolfo baseball team there can be but little doubt and until the spell is broken they will never win a game.

The Gans put up a better game last night than they have at any other time this season and they really had a right to win the game.

There were two new men on the Gans, Kershaw who played third and McCappellain at short.

Four shutouts were credited to the Service and three to the Gans and twice during the nine innings the latter had the lead though unable to hold it any length of time.

Both took ciphers in the second. Delfel lammed out a single to center field only to die in an effort to reach third on a force out.

Another cipher for the Service in the third, Winters, Harrison and Culligan going out at first on light hits.

Each side took two in the fourth. Delfel fanned, Dowd put a single to second and died at first, and Smith died at second trying to steal a base.

to center field and brought in both Dowd and Dundas. Winters hit safe and Harrison put a liner to first, retiring authorities leaving Brzier and Winters on bases.

In the fifth Shannon opened the ball by putting a pop-up fly in Forrest's hands. Culligan sent a single to short, circled the bags and made a pretty steal to home on a play to first.

In the sixth the Service pulled out the bags full. He made a good hit but went in a trance immediately after.

Both sides again took ciphers in the seventh. Dowd put a hit to second and Chadwick had another error scored against him.

In the eighth Winters went out at first and Harrison hit light to short which through the fumble of McCappellain gave him first.

Each side took three scores in the ninth. Dundas put a peacherino into "Slim's" territory and he dropped it like a hot spud.

Civil Service—Catcher, Bennett; pitcher, Brazier; shortstop, Delfel; first base, Winters; second base, Dundas; third base, Culligan; right field, Dowd; center field, Harrison; left field, Shannon.

Two base hits, Forrest, Brazier, Harrison and Smith. Three base hits, Bennett. Struck out—by Forrest, four; by Brazier, two; by Brazier, one. Base on balls—by Forrest, one; by Brazier, four. Umpire, Leroy Tisdler. Official scorer, W. H. Lyon. Time of game, one hour and forty-five minutes.

Table with columns: Played, Won, Lost, Aver. Civil Service, 4, 3, 1, .750; Amaranth, 3, 2, 1, .666; Idle Hour, 3, 1, 1, .500; Gandolfo, 4, 0, 3, .000. Game tied.

ONE DOLLAR AND COSTS

Was Result of Mountain's Labor

In Trial of Simple Assault Case Tried in Police Court This Morning.

In police court today, Mr. Justice Macaulay presiding, all of the forenoon was occupied in the trial of a case which terminated in the accused being fined $1 and costs on the charge of simple assault.

John Harvey, according to both police and territorial court records, is averse to paying toll for use of the Klondike bridge and he in court some time ago was charged with having headed a crowd that defied the toll keeper and crossed without paying on April 30th.

Last Saturday Harvey, single-handed and alone, again attempted to utilize the bridge without paying and in so doing was arrested on the charge of simple assault on John Laumeister, toll keeper, and John R. Howard, one of the three owners of the bridge, the other owners being Thos. O'Brien and Joseph Segbers.

The trial revived recollections of college days and Caesar, also of the man who alone defended the wooden bridge "tergo ruptus sunt."

LONDON ANXIOUS

Is Worried Over the Mad Mullah's Doings

London, May 23.—British army officers and war office officials are becoming anxious over the situation in Somaliland. The recent disastrous defeat of the British force under Col. Plunkett and the skill shown by the Mad Mullah scattering his forces have earned for the Somali chief the name of "the sable De Wet."

His happy hunting ground is the desert called the Haud, in the interior of Somaliland. It is a small Sudan, from 120 to 200 miles across, and almost utterly waterless.

He is a man in the prime of life, tall and spare—an ascetic of the desert. He is not beautiful by western standards, but his face, for all its African molding, is strong, fierce and virile. He wears a straggling goat beard.

He is low-born, and has acquired his influence by talking. Also, he has practiced on the superstition inherent in the African by representing himself as semi-divine. His pretensions are doubtless the more convincing because he believes in them himself.

His followers believe in him implicitly. He has worked miracles before their eyes. A British warship was off the Somali coast one night, and was playing her searchlight on the land. The Mullah's followers, encamped in a jungle near the sea, beheld this wondrous new star with awe, and appealed to the Mullah to explain it. The Mullah had seen searchlights at Aden.

At one time he was friendly to the British. It is said that his fanatical hatred of Christians was first aroused by seeing some French missionaries in Somaliland training up the native children as Christians.

In 1899 the consul general of British Somaliland reported that he was collecting arms and men with a view to establishing his authority over the southeastern portion of the protectorate.

MUM IS THE WORD

Two Tananaites Who Refuse to Talk

Arrived on Sunday and Will Return With Pack Horses and Flume Hose.

A man named Krause, formerly a hospital nurse in Dawson who went to the Tanana in February or March, returned on the steamer Tyrrell which came up from Eagle Sunday morning.

A great secret of the Mullah's strength is his mobility. He can travel about 100 miles a day in case of need. His followers are inspired by his unquestionable success in recent times, and they are very well armed. He can count 5,000 to 10,000 men, armed with rifles—all secretly and illicitly imported into the country—and about 20,000 men provided with spears only. The country is all in his favor; water is very scanty; the land is mostly sterile in the extreme.

There is no doubt the Mullah was at an early date thoroughly warned of the present British plan of campaign, which, by arrangement, with Italy, is being conducted on what is nominally Italian territory, inasmuch as the enemy have been accustomed to make the inaccessible hinterland their headquarters, and then to descend in raids into the British sphere. Accordingly the Mullah steadily fell back before the British advance, apparently, just as last year, waiting to strike a blow, and this he has at last done.

IS LEBARGE YET OPEN?

Is Question Frequently Asked Today

The question of the day is as to whether or not Lake Lebarge is yet open. A telegram received last night said ice was ranging from the lake into the Thirtymile river and another wire said today says the lake is free from ice as far as the eye can reach. Similar word comes from Upper Lebarge, but the fact that but little ice is being emptied out of the lake today leads many to believe that it is yet still solid in the center.

The wire received today says that the lake is rising very rapidly and from that it is thought that even if it is not yet open for navigation it is but a question of a day or two when it will be.

Agent Mortimer had a wire from Whitehorse last night to the effect that the Casca would sail today but up to 3:30 this afternoon he had received no further information.

BAD FOR GARDENS

Cloudy Days and Cold Nights Ruin Yards Growth.

Never in Yukon history has there been such a general attempt at gardening as this spring and never has vegetation been more backward in coming to the front. Unless planted in hot beds seedslinger in the cold ground two or three weeks before sprouting and two or three weeks later the plants, then only one or two inches high, seem to regret their advent into this cold, retrograde world. There is no spring tonic that will offset the effect of the present cold nights on vegetation that is in open beds, and without a run in hot water bags at its feet. In fact all vegetation this year seems to be of the Early Dwarf variety.
