The Choice.

Which shall it be, dear mother?
To which home shall I go?
The grand old castle beside the sea,
Or the little brown cot below?

Which shall it be, dear mother? A plain white muslin gown,
Or the richest and rarest of lace and silk
To be found in Insleytown?

Which shall it be, dear mother? A tiny plain gold ring, Or wealth of gems or diamonds rare That would ransom a captive King? My child your heart must answer

The question your lips have asked, Lest bowing in pride you sorrow When the harvest is overpast.

Choose with your heart, my darling; Let pride be swept away; Flowers are fairer than jewels, Gather them while you may.

Often glittering diamonds,
Conceal but an aching brow,
And the child heart's bitter throbbings,
Bear record of falsehood's, vow. Truth is the brightest jewel
That womanhood can wear;
Never a silken robe can cure
A heart grown sick with care.

This world is not all sunshine There's many a stormy day, And love is the sweetest shelter When clouds obscure the way.

So choose from your heart my daughter Remember this life of ours Must have some thorns and briers Among its fairest flowers.

But, thorns, tears, and darkest news Matters not, so love i true; While you climb keep step together, With the higher life in view.

With an amused smile, he looked at the back thus presented to his view, opened his lips to speak, hesitated, and finally walked away. Nattie, looking at him out of the corners of her eyes, door, and had a remorseful feeling that perhaps she had been crosser to him than he really deserved, for he was certainly very fine-looking. But what was done could not be undone, and with no expectation of ever seeing him again, she dismissed the matter from her mind

The best, perhaps the only really pleasant part of Nattie's life was her evenings, passed almost invariably with Cyn. Indeed, Cyn seemed to be a magnet, around which all gathered-Quimby, although, of course, Cya herself was not his chief attraction-Celeste Fishblate, who determinedly pushed herself into an intimacy, and Jo Norton who, had it not been for the fact so loudly proclaimed by himself, of his having no sentiment in his soul, would have been suspected of being on the road to falling in love with Cyn, so strangely was he attracted to her company. But this, of course, was impossible for him !

"That will do, dear," Cyn remarked, when Nattie related her little adventure with the young gentleman. "Do you know you have been in a dreadful state of mind ever since 'C' intruded his personality?"

Nattie colored a little as she replied, discontentedly, "Oh, it isn't that, I assure you; the truth is, I am ambitious. Cyn. I suppose I forgot it, slightly while I was interested so in 'C;' but I cannot be content with a mere working on from day to day, in the some old routine, and nothing more."

Cyn looked at her scrutinizingly, as she asked, "But in what particular way are you ambitious? to be rich, or

"On! not for money!" Nattie an swered, with a slight contempt for toa necessary and convenient article. "I am ambitious for fame! I want to be a writer; but when I think of the obstacles in my way, to an opening, even, in that direction, I am daunted. I have attacks of energy, it is true, but I fear it is fitful; it comes and goes."

"I understand," Cyn replied, with more than wonted seriousness. "Your ambition is great enough to render you useless and discontented, but you need something to stimulate your energy, else it will waste itself in idle dreams, Perhaps love may come to be that mo-tive power; perhaps—" and a shade crossed her sunny face—"some great disappointment."

There was a moment's silence, Nat-tie pondering thoughtfully on these words; and then Cyn continued,

"But in the meantime, since you can at present accomplish nothing, why not get all the enjoyment you can out of life, as it goes? So, when the opportunity comes, and you seize it, you will not have to look back on years wasted in vain longings for the then unattainable. That is my philosophy -and I, too, am ambitious."

"Your philosophy is cheery, at least," said Nattie, smiling. "But I am afraid it is very hard for ambitious people to take life easy: and that is not all of my troubles," she continued, gayly, "I can't get anything good to eat!"
"Poor child." said Cyn, with mock seriousness. "This is coming from the sublime to the ridiculous. What is the cause of the lamentable fact?"

Oh! I am so tired of both boardinghouses and restaurants. In the former they never have what one likes—and ah! such steak!—while in the latter you have to pick out all the cheap dishes, or ruin yourself at a meal."

Cyn laughed.

"I assure you I can appreciate your feelings, from sad experience! I, myself, am positively longing for a nice sirloin steak." Then, a sudden thought striking her, "I will tell you what we will do, Nat, we will have a little feast !"

"A feast?" repeated Nattie, not exactly comprehending. "Yes-I have a little gas stove-low be it said, lest Mrs. Simonson hear and bring in a terrific bill for extra gas !-I use it sometimes to cook my dinner, when I do not feel like going out, and why should we not have a feast all to ourselves some day? and the sirloin steak shall be forthcoming! and what do you say to Charlotte Russe? In short, we will have everything we can think of, and you shall be assistant cook !"

"That would be splendid!" cried Nattie, delighted, "only it will have to be some Sunday, as that is my only leisure day, you know."

"All the better, for then we will be less liable to intrusion," responded Cyn, gayly. "So make a memorandum to that effect, for next week. We must not let Mrs. Simonson know, however, on account of the gas stove; I pay her too much rent now. I am afraid we shall have a little difficulty about dishes. The few I have are not exactly real Sevres china, or even decently conventional. But-

"Oh! never mind the dishes!" interrupted Nattie. "Anything will do! I have myself a cracked tumbler, and a spoon, that will perhaps be useful for something."

Agreeing therefore to hold dishes in strict contempt, the following Sunday found the two girls with closed doors in the midst of great preparations for a truly Bohemian feast, as Cyn termed it; Nattie with her crimps tied down in a blue handkerchief, and Cyn with her sleeves rolled up, and an old skirt of a dress doing duty as an apron.

"Let me see," said Nattie merrily, taking account of stock. "Two pounds of steak-the first cut of the sirloin, I think you said ?-waiting, expectant of making glad our hearts, on the rockingchair, potatoes in plebeian lowliness under the table, tomatoes and two pies on our trunk, Charlotte Russes-delicious Charlotte Russes-where? Ah! -on your bonnet-box, in a plate ordinarily used as a card receiver, and sugar, butter, et cetera, and et cetera lying around almost anywhere, and the figs, oranges and homely, but necessary bread, where are they? I see, on top of 'Domby & Son!'"

"And our dishes will not quarrel, because they are none of them any relation to each other!" laughed Cyn as she peeled the tomatoes. "I fear goblets will have to take upon themselves the duties of cups, and that cracked tumbler of yours must be used for something. I am sorry that saucepan is so dilapidated, but it is the best I own!"

"And in that saucepan we must both boil the potatoes and stew the tomatoes, Won't one cool while the other is doing?" queried Nattie, hovering lovingly over the steak.

"I think not;" Cyn answered. "You won't mind the coffee being boiled in a tin can, once the repository of preserved peaches, will you ?"

"Ah, no.!" replied Nattie emphatically, and sawing at the steak with a very dull knife, without a handle. "It will be just as good when it's poured

"I had a coffee-pot once, but I melted the nose off and forgot to buy another yesterday," Cyn said, putting on the potatoes

"We will call our convenience a coffee-urn; it sounds aristocratic," suggested Nattie, as she cleared the books from the least shaky table, and spread it with three towls, in lieu of a tablecloth. "But what shall we do for plates to put the pies on?" "Take those two wooden box covers in the closet," promptly responded Cyn. "That it is right, and see, here is room also for the coffee—pardon me, I had almost said commonplace coffee-po.!"

"But the tomato! what can we pour that in?" suddenly exclaimed Nattie, with great concern.

Cyn scanned every object in the room with dismay. "The—the wash-bowl!" she insinuated at last, determined not to be daunt-

"Don't you think it rather large? to say nothing of its being too suggestive?" said Nattie, laughing.

Cyn did not press the point, but shook her head, dubiously. "I have it!" cried Nattie, "there is a fruit-dish in my room."

"Just the thing!" interrupted Cynecstatically, "I will run and bring it, if you will attend to the cooking." "Look out for Miss Kling," said Nattie, warningly; "if she catches a glimpse of you making off with my fruit-dish, she will never rest until she finds out everything."

"Rely on me for secrecy and disatch," said Cyn, going. "If she sees me, I will mention nuts and raisins; merely mention them, you know."

But Miss Kling, for once, was napping; perhaps dreaming of him Cyn the torpedo-Celeste's father and she obtained the dish, reached her own door again without being seen by any one except the Duchess, and was congratulating herself on her good luck, when suddenly, like an apparition, Quimby stood before her.

Cyn started, murmured something about "oranges," slipped the soap-dish she had also confiscated into her pocket, and tried to make the big fruit-dish appear as small as possible

She might, however, have spared herseif any uneasiness, for this always the most unobservant of mortals, was too muck overburdened with some affair of his own, to notice even a two-

"Oh! I-I beg pardon, I-I was coming with a—a request to your room," he said eagerly. "I—would it be too much to—to bring a friend, he knows no one bere, and I am sure he and you would fraternize at once, if I might bring him, you know."
"Certainly—yes!" replied Cyn, too anxious to get away to pay much at-tention to his words, particularly as an odor of steak reached her nostrils.

"Thank you! I—I never knew any one who understood me as will as you!" he said with a grateful bow, and without more words, Cyn lett him,

"How long you have been gone !" Nattie remarked, looking up, her cheeks very red, and her nose embellished with a streak of smut, as Cyn entered. "Did. you see any one?"

"No one except Quimby, who stopped me to ask about bringing a friend to call some evening," Cyn replied, displaying the fruit dish and producing the soap

Mercy on us!" Nattie said, looking rather a hast, "it is rather large, isn't it? and what did you bring that soap dish

"I thought it might come handy," laughed Cyn. We will make a potato helder of it for the time. To what base uses may we come at last ?--Why-" in a tone of surprise, "here is the Duchess!" And sure enough, up by the window at that sagacious animal, winking and blinking complacently, and evidently determined to be a third in the feast. "She came in unnoticed under the shadow that fruit dish threw," said Nattie, teasingly. Cyn shook an ovster fork at her threat

"Say another such word and you shall have no steak !" she said tragically, "in_ stead a dungeon shall be your doom. We will let the Duchess remain as a receiver of odds and ends. I suppose her suspicions were excited by the sight of these articles. A rare cat! a learned cat! now set the table, for our feast will soon be prepared !" and Cyn bent over the sizzling steak that emitted a most appetizing odor. Setting that table was no such easy matter as might appear, for with the big fruit dish, wooden covers, different sizes of plates and other incrongruous articles, considerable management was

"I shall have to put the sugar on in the bag," Nattie said, incautiously backing to view the general effect, and so stumbling over the sancepan of potatoes that sat on the floor, but luckily doing no

"Ah, well! Eccentricity is quite the rage now, you know," responded the philosophical Cyn, "and certainly a sugar bowl so closely resembling a brown paper bag as not to be distinguishable from the real thing, is quite recherche. But my dear Nat, where am I to set the steak, if you have that big fruit dish in the centre of the table, taking up all the room?" "I shall have to put it on the floor, then." Nattie answered, despairingly, "for I have tried it on all parts of the table! If you set it on the edge," s added hastily, seeing Cyn about to do so "you will tip the whole thing over!" "Then we must have a side-board,"

Cyn announced, with a plate of steak in one hand, and the big fruit-dish in the other. "Put my writing-desk on a chair please; spread a towel over it, and there you have it!" "But what a quantity of entables we have! Two pounds of steak, ten big potatoes, a two-quart dish of tomatoes. polatoes, a two-quart dish of tonatoes, two large pies, two Charlotte Russes, an urn of coffee, a dozen oranges and a box of figs —good gracious! Think of two people eating all that!" exclaimed Nattie, decidedly dismayed at the prospect.

"It is considerable," Cyn confessed, surveying the array with a slightly daunted expression. "You see I am not used to busing for a family and I was a family ed expression. "You see I am not used to buying for a family, and I was afraid of getting too little. But,' brightening, "there isn't more than one quart of the tomatoes, and there are three of us, you know—the Duchess!" "To be sure; I had forgotten her!"

Nattie said, recovering her equanimity, and glancing at the purring animal, who was looking on approvingly, and evidently appreciated the difference between sirloin and her usual rations of round. "Then let the revels commence, at once!" chied Cyn, rulling down her sleeves, while Nattie wiped the smut from

But now another difficulty presented itself; the chairs were all too low to ad-mit of feasting with the anticipated rapture; this was soon overcome, however, by piling a few books in the ingliest chair, by piling a few books in the inguita-and appropriating the music-stool.

"Now for a feast," exclanned Nattie, exultantly, as they sat down triumphaut, and she brandished her big kinie and extremely small fork, while Cyn poured the coffee from the -urn : an un ing accepted with some difficulty, and requiring caution; and the Duchess look-requiring caution; and the Duchess looked on expectantly.

And then—the goal almost reached—upon their startled ears came a dreadual sound—the sound of a knock at the door!

Down to the ground went Natura knife and fork, the coffee-urn narrowir escaped a similar fate, up went the back of the Duchess, and two dismayed Bohemians and one impatient cat gazed at each other.

THE ACADIAN,

WOLFVILLE, N. S., MARCH 13, 1885.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The New Star, backed by money and influence, first made its appearance on the literary horizon some eight months ago fixing the centre of its orbit in this town and promising to be a bright and shining light to guide and direct all those upon whom its rays should fall. It has continued to shine at irregular intervals with more or less brilliancy during these months until a week ago when all of a sudden it failed to appear. It's brilliancy it appears was not sufficiently appreciated to secure its prominent location here, neither has its brightness been sufficient to extinguish or in any way dim the unassuming light of the Aca-DIAN, which still continues to appear at its stated intervals. What has actually become of the New Star we know not. It is true that it left Wolfville several days ago taking a westerly course, and report says it intends to be come a fixed star in the shire town (fir a period at least) where it lopes to be able on account of its wonderful powers of attraction to absorb within itself the other Great Light, or educa. tor of the people, the W. C. Failing in this it is assumed that it will still go west and perhaps in time be able to shine so brightly that it will become the great political power that shall. overthrow the present Dominion administration and give us the long promised "4"free trade" policy.

The ACADIAN, as our readers know, first made its appearance under very different circumstances, having no powerful friends or money influence at its back, it was obliged to begin at the very foot of the ladder and to strive (by diligence, energy and close attention to business &c., as well as to the interest of its patrons and advertisers) to win the respect and encouragement of the public, and its most sanguine expectations have been realized.

We have made Wolfville our home and by henesty, industry, perseverence, and economy, hope to be able to remain here. Since the first issue of the Aca-DIAN we have endeavored to give our subscribers in a condensed form as much of local matter as it was possible for us to gather; our general news has been selected with a view of giving only such items as would be of general interest, and leaving war, political and foreign news for our dailies and larger wecklies to dispense.

The time has now come when we think it would be desirable to again enlarge, believing that Wolfville should be able to afford a newspaper that would be a credit to a much larger town. We are willing to do our part towards making the ACADIAN such a paper, and if the business and literary men of this place should give us such encouragement as would be easy for them to supply, we promise to give a paper that shall be second to none in this County.

STATUTE LABOR.

In his report for 1884, Mr. Murphy, the Provincial Engineer, makes the following suggestions respecting "necessary reforms" in the road service:

- 1. A system of letting the construction of public roads by tender and contract. 2. The abolition of the present sys- tem of statute labor, and levying a tax of say 50 cents per day in lieu of the day's work as at present employed.
- 3. The County Treasurer to collect this tax by assessment, and account for it to the Municipal Council.
- 4. A County Surveyor to be appointed for each County to look after roads, bridges, prisons, workhouses, and other municipal property. He would be a salaried officer, appointed by the Executive Council. He should be independent in his position, and hold office quring good behavior.

5. General specifications, embracing from twelve to lifteen classes of roads, with drawings or sections attached thereto, with description of repairs, form, drainage, etc., to be adopted as standards and printed for the province generally.

The roads and small bridges within fixed points, of from five to ten miles in length, to be let by lease for a fixed term of years, say three or four, at so much per mile or rod per annum; all lettings to be advertised, and to be let by tender and contract, with security for due fulfillment of same.

7. The county surveyor to visit each pad within the year; to have power to suspend payment for bad or inefficient work; and in the event of the road be-ing still kept in an unsatisfactory condi-tion after notice to the contractor has been given, the surveyor to have power to step or forfeit all payments, subject to the sanction of the municipal council.

Mr. Murphy is a gentleman of sound practical common sense, and although these suggestions may not in all cases meet the wants of the County, they are worthy of careful consideration. A change in the present statute labor law is admitted by most to be a necessity, and it is hardly possible to frame a law more irksome to all and more unjust to the poor man than the present one, or a system more improductive of results for the time spent and money expended. If the money or labor calld for under the present act was judiciously expended by tender and contract under the supervision of a competent engineer, there would be ample to keep the roads of this County in better repair than at present without one dollar of provincial money. At plesent one can safely say more than half the work is done under the supervision of men totally unacquainted with the art of road making, and who only undertake the work because compelled by law to do so, and who shuffle through it in the most superficial and slovenly manner, glad to get rid of an irksome duty. Again, most farmers feel it a hardship to be compelled to work for fifty cents a day and yet will do it instead of paying cash. The consequence is that in some sections the work is largely done by the poorer class of laborers, and boys whose only thought is to get in the time. Perhaps the worst feature of the whole law is the unjust proportions borne by the poorer class of men. The farmer assessed for one thousand dollars does more than half as much work as his neighbor owning four times as much. If we are going to have a law based on the value of property, let us have one; but not this patent sliding scale that puts seven days' work on the first thousand and one on the fifth. The only wonder is that such an unjust sample of class legislation should disgrace the Statutes of Nova Scotia as leng as it has.

Gentlemen of the Legislature, please give us a change. You can't make it

Poultry Hints.

(Continued.) Plymouth Rocks lay large dark-colored Being but little liable to the ordinary diseases of "chickenhood," they are able to take care of themselves and scratch their own paths turough life, much sooner than the Asiatics and their crosses. Like the Leghorns they mature very early: pullets well cared for commence to lay at five months old. The chickens make our best early table fowls. Even when very young they are remarkable for their plump full breasts and large thighs. In the markets both the eggs and the chickens are eagerly bought up at the highest prices. In many of the large cities of the United States the dark colored eggs of the Plymouth Rocks and Brahmas bring considerably higher prices than white eggs. It is maintained they are richer and contain more custard forming material than the lighter colored one. While decidedly predjudiced in favor of the dark eggs, we have been unable to decide this matter from actual experience, nevertheiess we have often noticed that at hotel tables where eggs of both colors were offered the dark eggs were first taken. It is doubtful whether anyone with his eyes closed could tell whether the egg he was eating had a white shell or a dark one; nevertheless it is an undisputed fact that the eggs laid by hens who have ev. ry day generous rations of grain and commeat are much richer and bester flavored than the products of hens who are obliged to scratch for a living, and who find their "tit bits" among the decaying garbage of sink hoies or compost neaps. Plymouth Rocks have good appetites, and possibly consume more food than the Leghorus. Nevertheless it would not be wise to be stingy with them at meal times. The feed will t.il. Aithough they may not turn out quite so many eggs in a year as the Leghorns, yet at almost any period after their first moult, they are in a condition to die happily and reach the dining table plump and juicy, fit for prince or peasant. The yellow color of their flesh increases their value among Americans and enables them to head the fowl markets. Plymouth Rocks are quiet, close sitters, but are net inveterate brooders. A few days solitary confinement generally dispels the desire to sit. Having small legs they don't crush their eggs in leaving and returning to their nests. They are careful mothers, their large wings and abundant fluff forming ample protection for their chickens from the cold spring winds. It seems to be necessary to confine them in separate coops, as we have observed that when several flocks of chickens were allowed to wander unrestrained in the same lot, that the mothers have been less peaceable than Brahmas or Cochins. The breed endures the cold well; the hens making first-class winter layers when not fattened by too much corn.

Taken all in all, no one fowl more ompletely combines "Beauty and Use-ulness," "Eggs and Flesh," "Precocity and Hardiness." In confinement they are thrifty, and may be restrained by picket or lath fences six feet in by picket or lath lences size height. The small breeds in enclose height. ures are restless and discontented. Plymouth Rocks may be crossed with good results with Leghorns, Hamburgs and Light Brahmas. Here endeth the story of "The Plymouth Rocks," the New Star man to pack up his little baggage and sojourn further west so soon: but when we come to think it all over, it is only a fair illustration of that good old saying, whose age, if nothing else, brings it respect-"You can't sometimes most always tell what you least expect the most." Yes, the poor little Star is gone. And, as I walked by that building the other day, wherein, but a short week ago, the New Star shone in the height of its glory, a feeling of sadness came over me-not for Wolfville, oh, no! not much! we're not that way inclined; but for its poor little self. I've often been told that if there were two things that the Star man couldn't do, they were, to edit a newspaper and to teach school. I don't profess to be a judge on literature and never did, so will refrain from expressing my opinion on his literary capabilities; but as a school teacher, I always liked him. Many good old times we scholars have had at school while he was our teacher; in fact I suppose the happiest day of my life was while going to him. It was in the good old summer days, and our geology class was doing well. Most of them seemed to like the study great, and the amount of stones eggs of good flavor. The chickens that was brought into that schoolhouse are generally strong, and like for inspection was altogether beyond Leghorns feather very early. people's conception who didn't know anything about it; but I somehow didn't seem to tumble. I thought there was a far nobler calling for me than picking stones. But on this little day that I speak of, when he commenced saying that geologists would rather find specimens than apples under an apple tree in omeone's orchard away behind his house out of sight somewhere, I thought I'd be one; for if there was anything in this world that I liked better than apples, I wanted to go in for it. Well, I did go in for it, and after school was dismissed he detained me behind the rest and said he was highly pleased to see the great interest I had taken in this all important study, and in high appreciation of my efforts would present me with a petato bug and a piece of chalcedony. Well, I guess I was about the happiest boy around that place that day, and you bet there wasn't very much grass grew under my feet going home. I kept the potate bug chained up for about a week when one dark night it got away from me, but with the chalcedony I had better success, and before many weeks were past had barrels more of specimens. Some people say the best place to find specimens is around the cliffs of the sea; but I'm not proud, around home is good enough for me. Of course its all very well for those who have their life insured or some of those uncommonly lucky people. but if I were to try any such thing, I'd get left right of. I'm not one of that kind of fellows who runs any risk, and I'm always a little careful about hunting for specimens in such places after tlat little adventure he was telling us of one day about narrowly escaping being buried alive with stones. But I'm not going alive with stones. But I'm not going to tell tales out of school; that's not my style. Well, I feel sorry for the New Star. I had great hopes for it when it was started and felt proud that a teacher of mine should attain such high eminence, but as it has gone to Kertville I haven't much hopes for it. But one thing, he can't blame me, and after all, between you and me, I guess he'll do about as well there as here. Thanking you for space, I remain yours, JACK HYDE.

BAPTIST SOCIABLE.—The vestry of the Baptist Church in this village was the scene of a very enjoyable gathering on Wednesday evening last. Church Sociables are rather a novelty with us, but this one was well attended and was in every way a decided success. The Committees having the matter in charge did their work well in giving the room such a very cheerful appearance and in providing such an excellent literary and musical programme. The Rev. T. A. Higgins presided. Dea. J. W. Barss, as the oldest member of the Church, gave a very cordial address of welcome. He welcomed all, not only to social enjoyment, but to christian work, and hoped that many who heard his voice might assist in building up the Church, the prayer meeting, and the Sabbath School. He gave an especial welcome to the young people from the Institutions. Mr. Higgins also gave a very appropriate address. During the evening there were readings, by Miss Wallace and Mr. Cummings; solos, by Miss Vaughan and Miss Godfrey; and several choruses, by the choir. These were all excellent. In the interval between these selections the people assembled made the most of their opportunity for social converse. Old and young, male and female, vied with each other in promoting general sociability, and the unanimous sentiment at the close was that all had spent a very enjoyable evening. We hope there are more of the same kind to

Found! a Plum Tree that will no

The Masters Plum Tree has stood the test 40 years in Kentville, King's County, Nova Scotia. Chas. A. Masters, of Kentville, found this tree growing on lands now owned by Judge G. A. Blanchard forty years ago, and removed the tree to his garden in the village, where it now stands a healthy bearing tree, and is now owned by me. There are scores of trees throughout the village in bearing from 4 to 20 years old which bear every year, and not a vestige of black knot appears on one of them. The tree is an annual bearer of rapid growth, growing tall not spreading The Plum is quite large, pnrple color, and of excellent quality. It is the best preserving plum grown, and sells higher than any plum brought into the market. Last year, while the crop was immense, this plum readily brought $3.00 per bushel, $1.00 more than any other variety offered for sale. We have several hundred first class trees to offer for the spring planting and intend to plant 6,000 root grafts here. That this is the best and most profitable Plum Tree to plant that is grown in the Dominion of Canada, and that it will not black knot we refer the planters of this delicious fruit to

STOOD BY HIS FLAG.

A dozen rough but brave soldiers were playing cards one night in the camp. What on earth is that ?" suddenly exclaimed the ringleader, stopping in the mids of the game to listen.

In a moment the whole squad were listening to a lew, solemn voice which came from a tent occupied by several recruits, who had arrived in camp that day. The ringleader approached the tent on "Boys, he's a-praying, or I'm a sinner!" he roared out. "Three cheers for the parson!" shouted another man of the group as the prayer ended.

"You watch things for three weeks! I'll show you how to take the religion out of him !" said the first speaker, laughing. He was a large man, the ringleader in mischief.

The recruit was a slight, pale-faced young fellow of about eighteen years of age. During the next three weeks, he was the butt of the camp. Then several of the boys, conquered by the lad's gentle patience and uniform kindness to his persecutors, begged the others to stop annoying him.

"Oh, the little ranter is no better than the rest of us!" answered the big ringleader. "He's only making believe plous. When we get under fire you'll see him run. These pious folks don't like the smell of gunpowder. I've no faith in their religion !"

In a few weeks the regiment broke camp, marched towards Richmond, entered the wilderness, and engaged in that terrible battle. The company to which the young recruit belonged had a desperate struggle. The brigade was driven back, and when the line was re-formed behind the breastworks they had built in the morning, he was missing.

When last seen, he was almost surrounded by enemies, but fighting desperately. At his side stood the brave fellow who had made the poor lad a constant object of ridicule. Both were given up as lost

Suddenly, the big man was seen tramp ing through the underbrush, bearing the dead body of the recruit. Reverently he laid the corpse down, saying, as he wiped the blood from his own face,-

Boys, I couldn't leave him with the Rebs-he fought so! I thought he de served a decent burial."

During a lull in the battle the men dug a shallow grave and tenderly laid the -remains therein. Then, as one was cutting the name and regiment upon a board, the big man said, with a husky

"I guess you'd better put the words 'Christian Soldier' in somewhere! He deserves the title, and may be it'll console him for our abuse."

There was not a dry eye among those rough men, as they stuck the rudelycarved board at the head of the grave, and, again and again, looked at the in-"Well," said one, "he was a Christian soldier, if there ever was one! And," turning to the ringleader, "he didn't run, did he, when he smelt gunpowder?"

"Run!" answered the big man, his voice tender with emotion, "why, he didn't budge an inch! But what's that to standing for weeks our fire, like a man, and never sending a word back?

He just stood by his flag and let us pepper him—he did!

When the regiment marched away, that rude head-board remained to tell what a power lies in a christian life.

· CLEAR HEADED

One grain of common-sense will precipitate a great deal of nonsense. In the superstitions times a century or two ago, when every one believed in witchcraft. a woman was tried in England, on a charge of being a witch.

Several witnesses for the prosecution swore that she could fly. The judge, a hard-headed man, noted for his cool, keen sense was disgusted.

Turning to the woman, he said, "Prisoner, can you fly ?"

"Yes, my lord." answered the poor de mented creature.

"Well, then, you may; there is no law against flying," and he turned the case out of court.

PRIDE'S FALL. - "Yes," said Clara-"your Maltese kitty is pretty enough, but he can never come up to my bird." That was all she knew about it. The kitty did come up to her bird that very day, and it was all day with the bird.
