CHAPTER XXVI.
"Certainly," replied Gerald—"the sooner the better. He has a great capacity for learning; and one thing is quite certain. Lady Neslie—if he is not employed, he will always be in mischief."
She laughed with a certain readiness of good humour this time.
"If you will permit me," he continued, "I shall be happy to continue to devote some hours each day to him."
Miladi's eyes shone with a peculiar light.
"No, that will not do, Mr. Dorman. You have your own affairs to attend to. If it be really desirable to engage a tutor, I will engage one."
"Much will depend on the kind of tutor you engage. If he is high-principled he will make the boy the same."
"I consider myself quite competent, Mr. Dorman, to find a proper person," said Lady Neslie, still good humoredly.
Then she withdrew, and Vivien, true to her idea of peace and conciliation, followed her.
"I hope, Valerie," she said, "that you are not annoyed. It was I who suggested that Oswald should learn."
Lady Neslie turned a laughing face to Vivien.
"Annoyed?" she repeated. "No, I am not. You have solved a problem for me."
More than once that day miladi smiled as she said to herself—
"It is the very thing. I only wonder I did not think of it before."

CHAPTER XXVII.
"Vivien," said Lady Neslie, "I have been thinking over what Mr. Dorman said, and I quite agree with him; it is high time Oswald had a tutor."
Vivien's beautiful face brightened as though some real kindness had been done herself.
"I have resolved," continued her ladyship, "upon seeing to the matter at once."
"I should try to get an Oxford man," said Vivien, "if possible."
"I shall engage a Frenchman," announced her ladyship, laughing. "I am not English. Oxford scholarship may be all very well—it has no great charm for me, I should like my child to have a French training."
Miss Neslie did not like to object; it was certainly better to have a French tutor than none. She would have preferred an English gentleman, but then the matter was in miladi's own hands.
"I met a cousin of my own in Paris," continued Valerie. "I say 'cousin,' but he is really a distant relative

If Head Aches And Your Ears Buzz You Surely Have Catarrh

It doesn't matter how long you have suffered, or how often you have failed to get relief—even though Catarrh may affect every organ in your body, you can be permanently cured by inhaling the soothing vapor of Catarrhozone.
A few breathes through Catarrhozone inhaler clears the phlegm out of the throat and stops your cough. The nostrils are cleansed of offensive mucous discharge, and sneezing and sniffing stop at once. Partial loss of hearing and headache (very common symptoms of catarrh) are quickly cured, and in a short time every trace of catarrh disappears.
Nothing can be simpler or more ninth cousin, I should imagine—Henri de Nouchet—and he asked me if I knew of any engagement of the kind that was open. As I had never thought of a tutor for Oswald, I said 'No'; but now the idea occurs to me that he would be the very man."

"Is he competent?" asked Vivien, anxiously.
"My relations are not all ignorant, though you fancy me so," said miladi, proudly.
But Vivien would not take offence; she had too much at stake to give way to vexations; all small personal feelings must be set aside; she had a heavy interest at stake—the honor of the Neslies.

"Dear Valerie," she said, calmly, "I mean nothing unkind. A man might be all that's good and clever, yet not be qualified to teach; that requires peculiar capabilities."
"I shall please myself," announced miladi. "Henri de Nouchet shall be my son's tutor, or he shall have none, and I will write to-day and ask him if he will accept the post. He may refuse—it is a poor position for a De Nouchet; but he shall be handsomely paid, and treated as one of the family if he comes."
"That would not be very pleasant," thought Vivien—"still anything for the boy's sake."
"I want to talk to you about something else, Vivien. It will soon be quite a year since poor Sir Arthur died. Of course I am very sorry and all that kind of thing; but I really think we might have something to enliven us—a quiet dinner-party or a dance. You might leave off those depressing black dresses, and let us be a little brighter. If Monsieur de Nouchet does come, he will think it is a prison."

"You have full power in your own house," replied Vivien. "I should not dream of putting aside my mourning until the year is over; nor should I appear at any dance or entertainment. It would be disrespectful to my father's memory."
"You can please yourself," observed miladi, "and I shall do the same."
"Valerie," said Miss Neslie, "do not be angry if I say another thing. If this gentleman comes to undertake the education of your son, he will not surely expect to have all kinds of gayety offered to him."
"He will tell you that when he comes," laughed Lady Neslie. "I shall write to him to-day. I only hope he will accept. We shall have life a little brighter than it is."
And Vivien heard with considerable misgiving. She had a foreboding about the coming of this Henri de Nouchet which she would have been ashamed to confess, and could hardly explain in words. The old doubts and suspicions she had entertained of Lady Neslie returned to her. She was ill at ease—for the honor of the house was in her hands.

There was but one person she could consult, only one to whom she could go in her distress for counsel and comfort. To Gerald Dorman she told all that Lady Neslie had said.
"I cannot explain my foreboding to you," she said; "I had just such a feeling of depression and coming evil on the night you came in search of me when my father was taken ill. I cannot account for it, but it seems to me that if this stranger enters the doors evil will come with him, as it came with Lady Neslie."
He understood, but was powerless to help her.
"Would it be of any use for me to make inquiries in Paris?" he said.
"At least then we should know who this Henri de Nouchet really is."
"And what would it avail us, Mr. Dorman? Suppose even that we

"My ears buzzed by the hour and I had frightful head noises," writes J. P. Purdy, from Port Huron. "Catarrh fairly filled my whole head and throat. I got relief mighty fast when I tried Catarrhozone; it hit the spot instantly. You bet Catarrhozone has cured me and I simply swear by it."

find that Lady Neslie had selected two of the best rooms in the house for the tutor. He had a sitting-room that had been in former years a state-room, and one of the finest bedrooms.

"He is no common person," said miladi, proudly. "For any one like Mr. Dorman I should not think of arranging such rooms; but Monsieur de Nouchet is a French gentleman and a distant relative of my own."
"I always understood that the D'Estes were a wealthy family," observed Vivien. "How is it that this gentleman is compelled to work for his living?"
Miladi coughed a very little cough.
"My dear Vivien," she said, "my father was a D'Este, my mother a De Nouchet, and the De Nouchets were all poor."
The rooms were prepared, much to found him to be utterly unfitted, morally and mentally, for the post, we could not prevent miladi from engaging him. She has all the power. I can see now one mistake that my poor father made as to his will. He ought to have left some gentleman of note and position as Oswald's guardian, some one who would have had the power to interfere if he saw matters going wrong."

"Yes, it was an oversight," said Mr. Dorman. "The only thing we can do is to hope for the best. Lady Neslie will have some regard for public opinion if not for you. I do not think she would risk her credit by bringing any really unworthy person into the house. If she does, we must—"
Then he paused.
"Must what?" she asked, despairingly.
"We must appeal to the law. But until that time, dear Miss Neslie, live in hope."

She remembered so well the time before when he had called her "dear Miss Neslie," and she had been annoyed at it. Now matters were so altered that he was the only friend she had to rely on—the only one who could comfort or advise her. With a sudden frank, sweet impulse she held out her hands to him.
"You are a true friend," she said. "What should I do in my trouble but for you?"
And if she could have given him the whole world, she would not have made him so proud and happy as those few words did. There was nothing for it, she saw, but patient endurance. All hope of anything good from Valerie was at an end.

CHAPTER XXVIII.
Miss Neslie was somewhat startled when she entered the drawing-room, on the day of the tutor's arrival, to find him seated there, laughing and conversing with Lady Neslie on the most familiar terms. They were seated side by side on a fauteuil, and Oswald was playing near them. Her ladyship had laid aside the last vestige of her mourning—the widow's cap had long since disappeared. She looked radiant in a dinner-dress of rose silk and white lace, with diamonds gleaming in her hair and round her throat. Henri de Nouchet, with eyes full of admiration, was gazing at her when Vivien suddenly entered the room.

He rose quickly, looking with wondering awe at the tall, stately girl whose noble, beautiful face and white throat rose statuesquely from a cloud of soft black tulle. Valerie rose also, and introduced Monsieur de Nouchet in a few words.
"A cousin of mine," she said, and then, in reply to a laughing remonstrance from him, she corrected herself. "Not exactly a cousin, then, but a distant relation."
The tutor bowed, and said her ladyship "honored him greatly." Vivien spoke kindly to him, but she was annoyed at finding him there, and at the very familiar terms on which he seemed to be with Lady Neslie. He bowed low before the queenly beauty, whose dark, proud eyes seemed to awe him. He did not at first enter into conversation with her—he seemed rather to be studying her. He was quieter, too, after her entrance. He took the child in his arms, but Oswald did not seem to like him.
"Your eyes are black, and I don't like your face," he said, with his usual charming frankness. "I like Mr. Dorman best."

The tutor's face darkened.
"Who is Mr. Dorman?" he asked after a few minutes; and miladi replied—
"A nondescript. He was my late husband's secretary. He is secretary, steward, agent, and everything else now to Lancewood. He has rooms in the Abbey. Sir Arthur thought it more convenient than for him to live away."
"I see—a kind of upper servant—trusted confidentially."
"Yes," replied miladi.

Several days afterward Valerie said to her—
"You remember, Vivien, what we were lately discussing—the engagement of a tutor for Oswald? I am glad to say that I have succeeded in my wish; Henri de Nouchet has consented to come."
Miladi was looking at her with laughing, mischievous eyes.
"It would be such a relief to me to have some friend of my own whom I can trust near me. Henri de Nouchet is very clever, of course. In the years to come, Oswald will go to your favorite place, Oxford, and then I intend Monsieur de Nouchet to succeed Mr. Dorman."
Vivien said nothing. Words were all so useless.

"Vivien," continued miladi, "I hope you will find it worth your while to be civil to my friend. If you are not, you know the alternative. I am quite determined that the house shall be made comfortable for him."
For the sake of the heavy stake—the honor of her house—she restrained the burning passion of her indignant pride. Alas, if she went, what would, in the present state of things, become of Lancewood?
"Alas, my father," sighed the unhappy girl, "what a charge you have laid to me!"
She was somewhat surprised to find that Lady Neslie had selected two of the best rooms in the house for the tutor. He had a sitting-room that had been in former years a state-room, and one of the finest bedrooms.

"He is no common person," said miladi, proudly. "For any one like Mr. Dorman I should not think of arranging such rooms; but Monsieur de Nouchet is a French gentleman and a distant relative of my own."

Sentimental Least Common Denominators.

By RUTH CAMERON.

A neighbor of ours has married again. The woman he has married is totally unlike his first wife. Yet he was very happy with his first wife and he appears to be very happy with his second. If he is satisfied with the one he could have devoted to the other and vice versa, is, as usual, the question over which the neighborhood delights to mull.

They Appeal to Different Sides of His Nature. Of course one answer is obvious enough—they appeal to different sides of his nature. Yet isn't there something more than that to the situation? Isn't it possible that these women, who to us appear so different, have some deeper likeness which we cannot see, of which even the husband may be unconscious, and yet which has helped attract him?

Someone advanced this idea, the other day and thence we drifted into a discussion as to whether this least common denominator theory could be applied to our own past love affairs.

How about it, reader friends, have the people that have attracted you from time to time been the same or different types? And if they have been of apparently different types has there been some least common denominator of similarity among them all?

How Seldom We Marry Our Physical Ideal. In looking back over my own experiences, ranging from the little boy in the fifth grade, with the beautiful voice to—well, I won't say to what—can find no similarity in personal appearance. Grey eyes, dark hair and a lean face is the type of masculine good looks that I theoretically admire and only one possessed anything at all like this bill of features. That is another interesting thing about the matter, by the way, how seldom we fall in love with or marry the type of appearance we theoretically admire. An old friend of mine who always admired tall light men ("They look so clean and fresh, my dear") is now married to a short very dark man—and is absolutely satisfied, while the girl whose ideal was a thin face with deep-set grey eyes has married a rosy-checked, round-faced, man with prominent brown eyes. And she also appears quite content.

A Character Common Denominator. To return to the main road: after diligent search I could find one least common denominator among all my memories—a certain reserve of character and quietness of manner.

In remembrance of this sort I think there is a tendency to confuse the people who have attracted one with the people who have been attracted by one. Quite a different thing, although it may ultimately result in mutual attraction, since the fact that someone admires you is a strong recommendation of your discrimination and good taste and makes you willing to become better acquainted and perhaps even paves the way to love.

As someone has said, "Fill a woman full of self love and all that flows over will be yours."

It is an interesting field for reminiscences. Taking out one's memory vignettes of the faces that once stirred one's heart has the same fascination as reading over old letters. Try it some day when you are in the mood for day dreaming.

Gorizia Fighting Recalls Port Arthur Struggle.

Many Features of Japanese Method of Investment are Being Adopted by the Italians, Whose Successes Against Great Odds Win Praises of Military Experts.

Rome, Aug. 4.—One phase of the Italian campaign has come to an end. A relative pause has ensued and, in order that it be not misunderstood, the Italian authorities have issued a semi-official statement in explanation.

This phase has been marked with success and has exalted Italian arms to a new position in the estimation of military experts in all countries.

The moment war was declared the Italian army swept forward to snatch the offensive from the Austrians, to whom it belonged by right of position.

First, they satisfied themselves that the attack was to be through the Trentino, and the hustling activity of the operations against Roveret and Trent lent color to their argument.

Then the critics and the world in general woke up to find that the Italians, after establishing a strong protective barrier on the Trentino and Cadore fronts, actually had attempted the seemingly impossible, the carrying of the Isonzo front by storm, and what is more, had succeeded in breaking the Austrian line of defence.

Gorizia is another Port Arthur and many features of the Japanese method of investment are being adopted for its capture. It will involve a great sacrifice of men and material, but from a military point of view, the end, if achieved, will justify the sacrifice.

everywhere, as seen in France and Poland, they are far more so here, where they are supported by formidable natural positions.

The first phase of our operations has been to break this continuous bulwark in front of us. For this purpose has served first of all our own line of fortifications, which, being constructed later than the Austrian line, is superior to the latter and dominates it.

In the second place there has been the action of our mountain troops combined with that of our mobile artillery of medium and large calibre.

The difficulties of warfare along the armored line of the Isonzo are enormous, it says; for it substantially is siege work against a mountain wall which nature and man have rendered formidable beyond any artificial fortress.

The difficulties of warfare along the armored line of the Isonzo are enormous, it says; for it substantially is siege work against a mountain wall which nature and man have rendered formidable beyond any artificial fortress.

The Austrians early retired behind their imposing line, convinced that it was unconquerable. Along the lower course of the river they were established on the left bank, while on its upper course they were entrenched on the right. We attacked the Austrian wall at several points. We smashed the links of a chain that seemed unbreakable.

Above all it must be pointed out that the Austrian frontier is provided with an uninterrupted series of permanent fortifications, all of modern character, and that at various points they spread out into veritable entrenched camps.

Japan Leads as Fishing Nation.

Japan is said to be the leading fishing nation, not in the actual value of its fish products, for in that respect several other nations exceed it, but in the number of persons who make their living by fishing, in the proportion of fishers to the rest of the population, in the relative importance of fisheries in the domestic economy, in the ingenuity and skill of the people in devising fishing apparatus, in preparing fish and in the zeal shown by the Government in promoting the interests of the fishing population.

The islands comprising Japan stretch diagonally from northeast to southwest, between two and three thousand miles, giving a great range of climate, and consequently of waters, from almost tropical to almost arctic.

It is estimated that one person in 20 in the entire Empire is more or less of a fisherman and fish appear in some form on the table of every Japanese family daily, if not at every meal.

A thousand species of fish have already been identified in Japanese waters, and almost every one of them is edible. One of the commonest, most wholesome and most sought after is the shark, which the western people have never learned to eat, but which a fishery expert of this Government who has visited Japan pronounced excellent.

Much fish is eaten raw by the Japanese, a fact that is said to be much more easily understood by Americans after they have tried raw macaroni or fish dipped in the delicious sauce the Japanese employ in this relation.

The prominence of Japanese fisheries is due to the encouragement of the Government. Officials have been sent to the United States as well as to Europe to study the methods in vogue and there is at Tokyo an imperial fisheries institute, a school with which no other in the world can compare.

The summer is slipping, the season so warm, and soon will come Yipping the boreal storm; the frost and the blizzard, all species of gale, from a down to Izzard, from antlers to t a i l. Instead, then, of fuming around and re-peat, and blasting the blooming old summertime heat, instead of de-nouncing the sun and its glare, and ranting and bouncing ten feet in the air, you ought to be grateful that August is on deck, for soon the storms hateful will land on your neck. I'd rather be frying than wading in sleet, with chilblains a-trying to ruin my feet. I'd rather be cooking than facing the snows, with icicles hooking their roots in my nose. I'd rather be baking right here in my den, than freezing and aching and thawing again.

The high collar is very much here. Summer hats even are trimmed with fur. Waifs makes the most satisfactory of summer dresses. Girls' middy blouses have colored smocking on them. White and net chignon are good for the evening dress. Cotton jersey garments are increasing in numbers. Fashions will favor furs, whether it be summer or not. The charming mode of the transparent hat continues. Stockings and shoes are exceedingly gay in coloring. Smocks are strong rivals of the old-time middie blouse.

Home Defence Corps.

A meeting of the officers and ex-officers of the City Brigades was held at the C. L. B. Armoury last night to discuss matters in connection with the formation and training of a corps for Home Defence.

The meeting was largely attended and was presided over by Lt.-Col. R. G. Rendell, of the C. L. B., who stated that the principal object of the meeting was to ascertain how many men were available for assistance in the organization of such a force.
