AIR TRANSPORT

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL—REPORT ON MEETING WITH REPRESENTATIVES—INTENTION TO INTRODUCE LEGISLATION IF NEGOTIATIONS UNSUCCESSFUL

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there have been further developments since the announcement last evening by the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers Association of the December 20 strike date and I feel I should report these to the house.

I think the house should know that I met with the representatives of the three organizations concerned—Canadian Air Traffic Controllers Association, Public Service Alliance of Canada and Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada—for two hours this morning. As a result of these discussions I am encouraged to believe that both sides are prepared to show greater flexibility in their statements of position than has been evident heretofore. For one thing the three employee organizations have for the first time shown a willingness to meet together with us in a joint discussion of our common problem, and in my opinion this is a hopeful development.

Second, after the discussions which took place this morning the employee organizations have agreed to meet with representatives of the government later today and to continue discussions tonight, tomorrow, and for a further period beyond that, as long as there appears to be any hope of arriving at a mutual understanding.

I should further advise the house that, after giving notice this morning to the staff association representatives of my intention to do so, I have this day given notice of a resolution indicating the government's intention to introduce legislation to deal with this matter. The text of this resolution, having been filed with the Clerk, will appear in Votes and Proceedings for today and it is the government's intention to call the resolution as soon as the rules of the house permit—that is, unless the progress of our talks makes further action by parliament unnecessary. I hope very much that this will be so, and that parliamentary action will not be necessary. There is nothing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to do less than to have to proceed with this legislation.

I have, however, explained to the representatives of the employee organizations the position in which the government and parliament would find themselves, in the face of the strike deadline on December 20 next at 8 a.m., if notice of intention to introduce the resolution were not filed today. They have assured me that they understand this position and the reasons why the government finds it necessary to take this step at this time. More important, they have indicated that they are quite prepared to continue discussions in full knowledge of what the government has done, in the hope that further discussions will produce a settlement which will make it unnecessary for parliament to take further action.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, this announcement by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson), who is evidently one of the chief negotiators on behalf of the government, is nothing but a glossing over of the ineptitude of the government to settle this affair. This announcement and the whole matter of negotiations that have been going on for a great many months has about it an aura of mystery. I say this quite frankly, because there is no question in the minds of those who have received the report and studied the situation that this is so, particularly in the light of the union's accepting the recommendation of the conciliation officer appointed by this government, and the reluctance of this government to accept the reasonable recommendations—

Mr. Benson: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Starr: —of that report. Certainly there is a mystery about it.

Mr. Benson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege: There was no conciliation officer, as such, appointed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: This whole affair is shrouded in mystery. The statement made today by the minister and the statements made yesterday by other ministers about this matter certainly have an aura of mystery about them, especially when they tried to place the judge they appointed into some category that seems to be lost. Certainly the judge was an arbitrator, or he was acting in the manner of an arbitrator.

An hon. Member: Do not be foolish.

Mr. Starr: He dealt with matters affecting the union. Every person who is interested in union affairs in this country, except the government which appointed him, knows exactly what the role of the judge was. The minister in his announcement today says that everything is going well, that meetings have been held, that meetings will be held tomorrow, tomorrow evening and on Friday if necessary. At the same time the government is preparing legislation.

An hon. Member: They have a club to wield.

Mr. Starr: Why is this, if things are going so well? In a very simple situation such as this a settlement should have been reached today, and reached without legislation. All the government has to do is accept the recommendations of the judge it appointed. The union has agreed to them. No glossing over of any pretended progress being made can deter us in parliament from our responsibility of again later this day moving the adjournment of the house, so that parliament may have a say in advising the government about what should be done in this matter.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): The fact that the air traffic control personnel of the Department of Transport have notified the government they intend withholding their services, commencing at 8 a.m. on Tuesday, December 20, means that this country faces a serious crisis.

An hon. Member: The government does not care.

Mr. Douglas: We face the prospect of having every civilian airport in Canada closed during the Christmas season. It is difficult to understand why the government has procrastinated on this matter for so long. The discussions with this group regarding salaries have been going on for some 18 months, without reaching any settlement.

Mr. Woolliams: They need time.

Mr. Douglas: Last May the association asked the membership for a strike mandate and the government was so advised. The Minister of Transport, in order to head off a prospective strike, appointed Judge John B. Robinson to serve as a commissioner under the Public Inquiries Act. The President of the Treasury Board says the judge was not a conciliator that he was not a mediator. What was he? He was a commissioner appointed by the government. For the Minister of Transport to say, as he said yesterday, that the judge was merely an adviser is the sheerest nonsense. You do not appoint an adviser under the Public Inquiries Act. He was appointed to ascertain all the facts, to look into the complaints of the traffic personnel that comparable employees in the United States received over 50 per cent more in salaries and had better working conditions.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Transport rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I should say I am rising on a point of order. The hon. gentleman appears to be reading from a paper which purports to say what this gentleman was asked to inquire into. My colleague has the order-in-council. Would the hon. gentleman read what the government asked the judge to do, not his interpretation of it?

Mr. Douglas: That point of order is about as silly and nonsensical as most of the interjections in which the minister indulges. But I will say this: The minister's own views are set forth in a letter which he sent to the association and in which he said the government recognized the importance of achieving a solution to this problem, and the importance which must be attached to the findings of the special investigator. The government, he said, would make a report immediately available to C.A.T.C and would give immediate consideration to its findings.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman quote the whole letter?

Mr. Starr: Obey the rules.

Mr. Douglas: The air traffic control personnel were so seized with the minister's sincerity that, in advance of the findings of Judge Robinson's report, they agreed to accept his recommendations. But they underestimated the Minister of Transport. If the report had been favourable to the government, the minister would have looked upon it as coming from a mediator. But when the recommendations were more generous than the President of the Treasury Board was prepared to accept, the government said Judge Robinson was not a mediator, not a conciliator, but just an adviser to the government.

Nevertheless the minister's own letter makes it perfectly clear that he was appointed to find a solution, and he brought down recommendations which seemed to hold out the hope of a settlement. It is significant that the air traffic control personnel should have indicated in advance that they would accept the recommendations immediately. The minister has had this report since November 7. Five weeks have gone by.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Douglas: The minister is continuing to drag his feet. He refused to act on the judge's report. He has given the employees of his department no satisfaction as to the action he intends to take. It is only now, on the eve of a Christmas recess and faced with the prospect of a strike commencing next Tuesday morning, that the government is beginning seriously to bargain with its employees—and bargain, let me say at the same time as it is telling them it intends to introduce legislation to prevent them withholding their services.

If any other employer bargained with a club hanging over its employees' heads, the government would describe it as blackmail. But knowing it has these employees entirely at its mercy, and having rejected the report of its own appointee, the government now bargains, telling them at the same time: If you do not take what we give you, you will be compelled—

Mr. Starr: That is what they mean by free collective bargaining.

Mr. Douglas: —to continue to work on terms set down by the government and by parliament.

Mr. Grafftey: Another triumph for the right wing.

Mr. Douglas: This is the government's concept of free collective bargaining. Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for the government to put legislation on the order paper. It is not necessary to introduce legislation to prevent this strike next Tuesday morning. All the government have to do is accept the recommendations of their own appointee, Judge Robinson. All they have to do is to say that the salary recommendations which were put before them are acceptable to them.

For the government to hide behind the flimsy excuse that they must wait for the remainder of Judge Robinson's report, which does not deal with salaries and does not deal with wage schedules, is simply an attempt to stall these negotiations for a longer period of time. I believe that once they know the facts the people of Canada generally will take a very dim view of the government's continued vacillation. This government has not bargained in good faith with these employees. If the government wants to prevent a serious crisis facing the Canadian people, all it has to do is to accept Judge Robinson's report, recognizing that he made that part of his report in advance because he knew that this was the crucial question which had to be settled. I want to tell the government that if it does not get a settlement, and get it very soon, the people of Canada are going to be highly indignant at the procrastination and gross incompetence which the government has displayed in the handling of this whole affair.

Air Traffic Control Dispute

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, there is not much left for me to say. The two previous speakers have said it all much better than I could, and I agree entirely with what they said. Somebody once said that you can fool all of the people some of the time and that you can fool some of the people all of the time, but that you cannot fool all of the people all of the time. If the government would only get down to work, instead of twiddling its thumbs and beating around the bush, and discover what the real problems are, it could find a solution before the house collapses over its head.

This is not the first time that such a situation has arisen. Time and again the government has waited until the situation in question has become like a balloon ready to burst in the government's face. This is no different from the situation we saw in the railway strike, the longshoremen's strike, and other similar strikes.

The government sent a person to investigate this dispute. The opposition did not do it. In fact, the government sent a judge. But the government does not want to call him a mediator or a conciliator. The Minister of Transport has put his hand in a hat and pulled out the description of adviser for this person. That is one of the minister's natural tricks. But call him what you like, the fact remains that the government sent a man to investigate and report back to it. This man did his job in an efficient manner. He located the main trouble spot, which is the question of salaries. He made a recommendation to the government, but the government did not accept that recommendation, and has not accepted it even yet.

Why did the government send that man in the first place? Was it just a waste of time, a waste of money? Maybe the government was waiting for Christmas and figured it could then send Santa Claus.

I could recommend which minister of the government should play that role.

An hon. Member: Very funny.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, it is not funny. We still do not have any kind of legislation to prevent any other situation of this kind arising. I would not be a bit surprised if in the middle of next July we were called back to settle some strike on Expo island. Why? —because this government is too incompetent. They beat around the bush and expect us to beat around the bush with them.

[Mr. Douglas.]

An hon. Member: They have a task force.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): If this problem is not resolved to the satisfaction of those concerned, they will end up like the rabbit that is chased around the bush. They should remember there will be somebody behind them with a sawed off shotgun, close enough to get them. I am still on the subject of the incompetency of this government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not like to interrupt the hon. member, but perhaps I should remind him of the provisions of provisional standing order 15 (2a) to the effect that comment made on ministerial statements should not be designed to provoke debate. I will say no more.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I quite agree with you, Mr. Speaker. In this case, however, I think the provocation sometimes comes from the other side. I only hope that what the minister has in mind, which he probably has not yet told us, will turn out to be to the benefit of all concerned. At this time, just prior to the Christmas holidays, we need all our means of transportation. I hope the government does not have in the back of its mind the use of a club, because then public opinion would be against them and not against us. I do not think this would be wise. I hope the minister and his colleagues will keep the members of the house fully and truly informed in respect of all the facts, in their effort to avoid another strike on Tuesday next.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am sure, after hearing the three previous speakers discuss the announcement made by the Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson), we realize we are in a very serious and critical situation. I agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) that this country does face a serious crisis, but I certainly cannot agree with all the conclusions he has reached. I am sure that he, as well as other speakers who have taken part in this discussion, would have been just as keen to criticize the government had it accepted carte blanche the recommendations of Judge Robinson.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are too many interruptions in the house at the moment. I suggest the hon. member for Red Deer should be given an opportunity to make his speech in the same way other speakers were given the opportunity.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that they might listen with the same degree of respect with which I listened to the statements just made by the other three speakers. I should like to repeat that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, in bringing out certain points, failed to state that the report of Judge Robinson is not yet complete. The part which is still to be completed is to cover some very important areas which concern the entire problem involved in settling this issue.

I should like to say also that, in the past, strikes have been and today are a part of the legitimate process in labour-management relations to protect the rights of the workers. But strikes also can be used as a pretty heavy club. In fact, when it concerns a service which is as essential to the whole air transportation system of this country as that performed by the air traffic controllers, I think a strike threat at this Christmas season could amount to blackmail, and certainly is a very powerful club in the hands of those who are attempting to use it to achieve what they want.

It is one thing to criticize the government for its ineptitude and lack of initiative in dealing with this as well as in other recent strike problems—and members of the government deserve criticism in this regard. On the other hand, at this critical time we have a procedure which has been recommended by the government whereby legislation will be provided to deal with this matter and ensure that air transportation in this country will continue while at the same time talks, in which the government is taking a very direct part, are going on. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in our responsibility in this house it seems to me that we must face the issue as it is at the present time, and not be a part of any strategy or manoeuvring which might be an attempt to disrupt or hinder the negotiations going on now.

While we may feel very critical about what the government has done, on the other hand there is a responsible attitude which we as members of this house must take in respect of the situation, in the hope that an agreement can be reached which would avoid a strike, and avoid the implementation of legislation in this house, if a satisfactory agreement is not reached.

In my opinion the time has passed when the government should have taken the initiative to provide legislation to cover certain essential services in this country in the event of the possibility of a strike, because the economy of this country cannot go forward in a stable and satisfactory way if it is continually disrupted by strikes. On behalf of our party I should like to say that we will give our support to the legislation which is necessary to avoid at this time a strike which would completely paralyse the air transportation industry. At the same time, however, we will not be a part of any manoeuvre which would endanger the negotiations taking place.

Without repeating some of the legitimate criticisms which have been made of the members of the government for their lack of initiative in this area, I should like to say that at this point we have something more to do than just to criticize.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

LEGAL STATUS OF MEMBERS RECEIVING HONORARIA OR FEES FOR BROADCASTING

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in a question which has appeared on the order paper the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Brand) has raised a question regarding the situation in respect of members of parliament who accept fees from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I said that I would make a statement in this regard and I shall be glad to do so now.

• (3:10 p.m.)

First of all let me say that as regards the present parliament, no member elected in November, 1965, has been offered or has accepted a payment from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation since that election.

The question whether a member of parliament is disqualified from sitting in the House of Commons if he accepts a fee from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is governed by the Senate and House of Commons Act. Section 15 of that act reads:

> No person, directly or indirectly, alone or with any other, by himself or by the interposition of any trustee or third party, holding or enjoying, undertaking or executing any contract or agreement, expressed or implied, with or for the government of Canada on behalf of the crown, or with or for any of the officers of the government of Canada, for which any public money of Canada is to be paid, is eligible as a member of the House of Commons, or shall sit or vote in the said house.

Members' Acceptance of Fees from C.B.C.

Section 17 of that act provides for a penalty to be imposed on a member, who has become disqualified but continues to sit in the house, of $200 for each day on which he so sits. There are two qualifications here, however. Section 17 provides that the fine is not automatic; a suit for the forfeit would have to be taken. Section 23 provides that such proceedings have to be taken within 12 months of the date when the forfeiture or penalty was incurred.

It is also clear that only parliament itself can determine who is qualified or not qualified to sit as a member, and that disqualification in one parliament has no effect on a subsequent parliament. Indeed a disqualification to sit in one parliament does not bar a member from subsequently being a candidate and, if elected, from taking his seat unless there was a continuing contractual relationship with the crown, or an agency of the crown, that might disqualify him.

When a member of parliament has asked the Department of Justice for an opinion, as has been done on more than one occasion in the past, about his position in respect of the Senate and House of Commons Act, the deputy minister of justice has merely indicated his informal or personal view on the subject. The view of this kind, given of an M.P.'s position if he accepts a payment from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is that this is a payment by the crown, of which the C.B.C. is an agent, and therefore would appear to come within the provisions of the act which I have just quoted.

In February of this year the deputy minister of justice wrote to the C.B.C. to the effect that the corporation should "consider the appropriateness of offering to a member of parliament an honorarium or out of pocket expenses for his participation in a program".

The facts of the situation are that 17 members of the present parliament have accepted payment from the C.B.C. for participation in programs while members of the previous parliament between May, 1963 and September, 1965. This is the period covered by the question on the order paper. It covers of course the previous parliament.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, it would be difficult to go back much further than that because for each year an exhaustive search has to be made of C.B.C. accounting records. The 17 members that I have referred to included 5 Liberals, 5 Conservatives, 5 New Democratic Party members—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Monteith: There is where the money goes.

Some hon Members: Shame.

Mr. Pearson: —1 Créditiste and 1 Social Credit.

An hon. Member: What about the Independents?

Mr. Pearson: And no Independents.

Mr. Ricard: There were none at the time.

Mr. Pearson: No action was taken against any member of the previous parliament to invoke the penalty clause of the act because of the acceptance of such a payment. As I have said, in relation to the present parliament which was elected in November, 1965, no member has been offered or has accepted such a payment.

No payment has ever been made to a cabinet minister, so far as I have been able to ascertain. One of the 17 members of parliament I have mentioned later became a cabinet minister in a later parliament, and one had been a cabinet minister previously. In short, Mr. Speaker, no member of this parliament has done anything to disqualify himself from such membership because of any relationship to the C.B.C. However it seems to me that the legal position is a little uncertain and doubtful, and perhaps at an appropriate time it should be cleared up.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that greatly concerns the respect that Canadians should hold for parliament. It is one that is causing considerable difficulty in the minds of Canadians. I refer to the acceptance by members of parliament of payments from the C.B.C. The Prime Minister has referred to certain sections of the Senate and House of Commons Act. He did not refer to one other section. He referred to section 15. Section 16 of the Senate and House of Commons Act reads:

> If any member of the House of Commons accepts any office or commission, or is concerned or interested in any contract, agreement, service or work which, by this act, renders a person incapable of being elected to, or of sitting or voting in the House of Commons, or knowingly sells any goods, wares or merchandise to, or performs any service for the government of Canada, or for any of the officers of the government of Canada, for which any public money of Canada is paid or to be paid, whether such contract, agreement or sale is expressed or implied, and whether the transaction is single or continuous, the seat of such member shall thereby be vacated, and his election shall henceforth be null and void.

Section 21 (1) provides:

No person, who is a member of the Senate—

This deals with the Senate situation.

—shall directly or indirectly, knowingly and wilfully be a party to—

The Minister of Transport is looking forward to the early expectation of being in that body and is showing a particular interest in this section while I am reading it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let's go together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The section continues:

—or be concerned in any contract under which the public money of Canada is to be paid.

The Prime Minister glossed over the situation by stating that no member of the present parliament had received any payment from the C.B.C. The only reason they did not was that the C.B.C. refused to make any more payments. That is the only reason.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No one can deny this. I know personally what the C.B.C. did.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the right hon. Leader of the Opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Public Works—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to say that I personally—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am trying to arrange for a bit of order. I understand the Minister of Public Works wants to ask a question. He cannot do this without the permission of the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I first want to finish what I have to say, Mr. Speaker. I am always willing to answer the hon. gentleman. I was saying that the C.B.C. refused to make any payments after a legal opinion was secured from the law officers of the crown that the acceptance of any such payment would place in jeopardy the seat of an hon. member. That was not a passing opinion of the Minister of Justice; that was an opinion of the law officers of the crown. That is why in the present parliament no payments have been made.

Members' Acceptance of Fees from C.B.C.

The Prime Minister said that, whatever the rules may have been in the past, they do not apply from one parliament to the other. The only example I know in respect of a member losing his seat in the house was the case of the Hon. George B. Jones from New Brunswick. He found that his company had accepted certain payments from the Department of Indian Affairs. He resigned his seat immediately and was re-elected subsequently. That is the only case on record of which I know.

Furthermore I would point out that in September, 1964 the C.B.C. announced in a policy declaration that no further payments would be made because of the opinion given by the law officers of the crown. I think hon. members generally will agree that it is the course of wisdom not to accept payments for appearances from an institution such as the C.B.C., into which we sink such a large proportion of the moneys from parliament and from the Canadian people.

It is unfortunate that this question was not answered sooner. The Prime Minister said that the period of limitation has elapsed. I would point out to him that the following question was asked on May 16 by the hon. member for Saskatoon:

1. Has any member of the present cabinet, during the past three years received an horonarium or fee from the C.B.C. for appearances on television or radio?

2. If so (a) who (b) in what amounts?

This was a starred question and I bring it to Your Honour's attention because starred questions are not supposed to remain in cold storage for months and months. This is an example of the cavalier way in which the government has treated questions placed on the order paper when it does not suit their purpose to answer them.

A further question was asked on September 8—not a starred one—which was as follows:

Have any ministers of the crown who may have received an honorarium or fee from the C.B.C. in the past three years for appearances on TV and radio, returned such fee to the corporation?

2. If so, which ministers and on what dates were the cheques received and on what dates were payments made?

Answers to these two questions have been flagrantly postponed by the government, for which there can be no excuse whatsoever.

In so far as the law is concerned, the law officers gave their opinion. I am sure that hon. members in all parts of the house will come to the conclusion that the acceptance of this type of emolument is not in keeping with a member's responsibility. A member of the House of Commons must not under any circumstances, legally or otherwise, accept payments from an institution which, as I said a moment ago, receives so much of what is spent for the Canadian people.

Mr. McIlraith: Would the right hon. gentleman now permit a question? My question is this: Did the right hon. gentleman realize that he reflected on the character of each member of the House of Commons when he said that the only reason that members of parliament had not accepted payment from the C.B.C. was that the C.B.C. had not offered it to them?

Mr. Speaker: I propose to allow the right hon. gentleman to answer the question if he wishes to do so, but I have some doubt as to the propriety of putting such questions. I may have made a mistake in the first place, when I allowed the minister to ask a question. I believe the practice we have tried to follow on ministerial statements until now has been to allow a statement and comments on it. If we allow questions on the statements made by spokesmen on behalf of parties we will start full debates every day on the different statements that are made. However, as I said, the question having been asked, I am certain the right hon. gentleman should be given an opportunity to reply to it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is very clear that the C.B.C. said no more payments would be made. The fact that payments had been accepted up to that time is sufficient of itself to answer the question of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. When a similar statement was made the other day the Chair wasted no time in ruling a backbencher out of order. The backbencher was me.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have just admitted that perhaps I should not have allowed the minister to speak, but I did so, and hope that no such occasion will arise in the future.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party are in agreement with the statement which has been made by the Prime Minister, but we feel that some clarification should be made of the positions of hon. members with respect to the C.B.C. Conflicting rulings have been handed down from time to time by the Department of Justice as to whether or not members could accept out of pocket expenses. There has been a good deal of misunderstanding with respect to this point. This has not been merely an oversight on the part of the C.B.C.

I have received a letter from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation dated February 21, 1964. I am quite prepared to table it so that any hon. member can read it. I myself will paraphrase it. The writer, Mr. Alfred Scott, program organizer for "Front Page Challenge" quotes sections 15 and 16 of the Senate and House of Commons Act. He proceeds to say that because of these sections no honorarium will be paid. However, the act does permit the C.B.C. to pay out of pocket expenses, and he encloses a cheque for $50. I sent him a personal cheque for $38 by return mail because my out of pocket expenses were $12. No member wants to contravene the law for $12,—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: That is an admission.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order please.

Mr. Douglas:—nor would he want to do so for any other sum. I am simply seeking to point this out.

Mr. Speaker, this is a serious matter which hon. members should discuss seriously. An agency of the crown writes to members of parliament, quotes the Senate and House of Commons Act, and says that in its opinion, on the basis of legal advice, it is permitted to pay out of pocket expenses. It does not even ask for an itemized account. In this case I personally returned the major part of the payment and I gave an itemized account.

This places hon. members in a very invidious position. If the ruling of the Department of Justice is that members cannot accept out of pocket expenses, then the C.B.C. should not send members expense money and should make it perfectly clear to members that they are not entitled to accept it.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this matter ought to be clarified. It ought to be made clear once and for all that not only can the C.B.C. not pay fees to members of parliament or members of the Senate, but that they cannot pay those members out of pocket expenses. As long as this situation is left in its present state of ambiguity, there will always be this difficulty.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has said, it may be that some legislation will be necessary. But certainly, I do not think that members should be condemned for acting on the suggestion of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which informed members that while they were not entitled to any fees they were entitled to out of pocket expenses. If members have accepted those out of pocket expenses they have done so on the recommendation of the C.B.C. and with the distinct understanding that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation had sought legal advice prior to writing to the members in question. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Prime Minister will take whatever steps are necessary to see that the C.B.C. has the same opinion on this matter as the Department of Justice and that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will conduct itself accordingly.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I think there might be two solutions to this problem. One would be to keep members of parliament off television, which in some cases might be a public blessing. The second is that if they are to be allowed any out of pocket expense money they should be required to submit an itemized expense account in relation to all expenses which are legitimate. Otherwise, in view of the example cited by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), if some of the crown corporations operate in this way with regard to expenses they incur I can very well imagine why every year they have a deficit.

The law certainly needs some clarification and perhaps some amendment. At the moment, any member of a crown corporation or of the House of Commons or Senate can unwittingly find himself in quite a serious situation. I think it is up to us to look into the matter and to bring in the necessary amendments to patch up the law, if you wish, so that such a situation will not come about. It is up to the government to bring in the exact formula, which I presume they will do before some other awkward situation pops up where one of our colleagues either in the house or the Senate will find himself in a serious position, and we will have to bring in some amendments at that time.

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Lapointe rising on a point of order?

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to quote standing order 30 of the House of Commons, which says:

> If anything shall come in question touching the conduct of any member, or his election, or his right to hold his seat, he may make a statement and shall withdraw during the time the matter is in debate.

Now, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) has made his position clear and has taken this opportunity to make his statement. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, he and the sixteen others referred to by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and who do not intend to make a statement, should now withdraw from the house, as required by standing order 30, before debate on this matter continues.

Therefore, I ask that this standing order be applied and that the seventeen members mentioned withdraw, unless they signify immediately their intention to make a statement on that matter.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member for Red Deer be given the opportunity to make a statement while the Chair reflects on the point or order raised by the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, on that same point of order. I would like to point out that standing order 30 clearly stipulates that: "he shall withdraw during the time the matter is in debate". The debate is fully under way and after the statement of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) it will be too late—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It might have been better if the hon. member had risen on a point of order earlier. But he waits until the hon. member for Red Deer has the floor and without knowing what he will say. It might be a good idea to hear him first.

• (3:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very short. I believe the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) has brought up a very important point. I think the majority of the members in this house, at one time or another, have received from public funds money to cover legitimate—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacEwan: Speak for yourself only.

Members' Acceptance of Fees from C.B.C.

Mr. Thompson: If hon. members would wait to hear what I have to say, they would understand.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): We have heard enough.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, the noise some members make is matched only by their ignorance on some issues. The majority of the members of this house, at one time or another, have accepted money from public funds in reimbursement of travelling expenses. Most of the members have been on some form of delegation or other. Certainly a member is entitled to a fair repayment of out of pocket expenses incurred in legitimate travel while carrying out the normal duties of his office.

If a member of this house is to be condemned because he has received travelling expenses from the C.B.C., apart from any fees or any other type of remuneration, then I suggest this would be very unfair to him. I believe that if a check were made it would be found that most of the 17 members concerned, if not all of them, received only that kind of reimbursement. So I suggest, Mr. Speaker, to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) that in the investigation of this matter he be sure to include the question whether or not it is improper to receive legitimate travel expenses from the C.B.C., in the normal course of duty expected of one holding such an office, for such things as—

An hon. Member: External affairs.

Mr. Thompson: —for external affairs or for any other type of duty which he may have been performing. The respect of this house as far as the public is concerned has suffered enough at this time without our heaping upon ourselves more disrespect for something of which we are not really guilty. I am not one of those who has accepted even travelling expenses from the C.B.C.—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: How did you get to the Congo?

Mr. Thompson: The point that has been brought up by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is a very important one and is certainly part of this whole issue. If only for the protection of new members and of people not familiar with some of these matters, this matter must be investigated.

[Mr. MacEwan.]

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: It would perhaps be appropriate that, ex post facto, I should refer to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire). My understanding is that standing order 30 applies more particularly to a specific case where the conduct of a member has been questioned and where the matter is under consideration following a specific motion concerning a member. In this case, circumstances are entirely different, and I believe that the standing order is not applicable thereto.

*TRANSLATIONS PERFORMED OUTSIDE THE PUBLIC SERVICE

Will the government consider arrangements for translation services by non-public servants so that books and documents are not held up from public release?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the policy advocated has been followed by the Translation Bureau for many years.

The Translation Bureau already contracts out part of its workload to outside translators with proven competence to meet its standards of quality. There is at present a list of outside English, French and Foreign Language translators. These translators are recruited among former Translation Bureau translators and other persons who give proof of their ability to submit work requiring as little revision as possible.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

An expansion of this aspect of the bureau's operations is contemplated for the near future and will be reflected in next year's estimates.

Of course, some of the documents entrusted for translation to the bureau cannot be sent out for security or technical reasons.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 is, yes. The answer to part 2 (a) and (b) is as follows: Three cents first two ounces and 1 cent each additional two ounces, provided envelope unsealed and written greeting on card does not exceed five words, otherwise letter rates of postage apply.

*INSIGNIA USED IN POSTAL SERVICE

1. What inscriptions or insignia were used on (a) mail bags of Her Majesty's mail (b) mail boxes, and (c) mail trucks in each of the years 1962 to 1965 inclusive?

2. What changes have been made this year, and on what dates and under whose authority?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the reply is as follows: 1. (a) Mail bags purchased since April 1, 1962 to date are stencilled as follows:

The Crown insignia
The year
Canada

Mail bags purchased prior to April 1, 1962, many of which are still in use, generally have similar markings as follows. There are three different types.

Type of Bag	Marking
(i) Blue Air Mail Bags	The Crown insignia The year Canada Air Mail
(ii) Red Air Mail Bags	The Crown insignia The year Air Mail Registered
(iii) Letter Bags Newspaper-Parcel Post Bags Blue Fragile Bags Catch Post Bags	The Crown insignia The year Canada P.O.
(iv) Overseas Mail Bags	Canada Post Office The year When empty return to Canada

(b) Mail boxes purchased during the years 1962-1965 inclusive have the following inscription and insignia. There are four different types.

Type of Box	Marking
(i) Letter Carrier Mail Storage Box	Coat of Arms Canada
(ii) Group Mail Delivery Box	Coat of Arms Canada (on one box in each installation)
(iii) Street Letter Box	Coat of Arms (cast or moulded) Canada
(iv) Free Standing Street Mail Receptacle	Coat of Arms Canada (in addition, the purpose of the box is shown as "Parcel Post", "Letters" or "Mail")

Note: Prior to 1963, the letters "E" and "R" also appeared on (i) and (ii).

(c) Prior to March 1964, mail trucks under exclusive contract to the Post Office Department bore a variety of insignia and markings. Most trucks bore the following markings:

E Coat of Arms R
Canada

The trucks also bore the inscription "Royal Mail" or "Royal Mail" and "Poste Royale", depending on the part of Canada in which they operated.

In March 1964 it was decided to standardize the markings on a progressive basis as vehicles were replaced or repainted. The standard format is: The Coat of Arms, "Canada", "Royal Mail" and "Poste Royale". However, many trucks still bear the letters "E" and "R" due to the fact that replacement or repainting has not been necessary and decals in stock are still being used.

Highway mail service trucks are not required to display any insignia for security reasons.

Mailmobiles owned and operated by the Canada Post Office bear the Canada Coat of Arms under which appears the word "Canada".

2. No changes have been made this year.

3. Does this plan meet the requirements for registration contained in the regulations under the Income Tax Act in Bulletin No. 14, Canada Gazette, July 18, 1959, which reads: "A plan instituted and operated outside of Canada will only be accepted for registration in the most unusual circumstances. AIR TRANSPORT

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL—FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO ACCEPT REPORT IN LABOUR DISPUTE—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 to discuss an urgent matter of public importance, namely, the threatened strike on Tuesday, December 20, by the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association as a result of the refusal of the government to accept the recommendations of Judge John Robinson, the conciliator appointed by the government. I apologize, Mr. Speaker, for not having had time to have this motion translated into French.

Mr. Speaker: Can the hon. member address the Chair on the urgency of debate.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, without referring to what took place yesterday, my submission is that urgency of debate is clearly established by the exculpatory statements which the President of the Treasury Board made. It is necessary that we secure much fuller information regarding a matter that up to the present time has received desultory consideration by the government. The statements made today simply are delaying ones.

Surely, parliament will not be denied the right to discuss a matter which so directly affects the economy as a national strike of air control personnel, particularly following the explanatory statements which have been made. Here is the position of affairs: The air traffic controllers accepted without question the mediation report by Judge Robinson. The message I received today from the air traffic controllers was that they urge government implementation of those recommendations. Responsibility for the failure to act rests squarely on this government.

This is not the case of a labour dispute in which labour has refused to accept the recommendations made by a body set up by the government. It is a quibble to say that Judge Robinson was not a mediator or a conciliator, but merely a recommender or adviser. That is a transparent quibble. The government has been sitting on this problem for months. It has refused to act, and in order to bail itself out it will place on the order paper a motion to bring about compulsory acceptance of a recommendation made by Judge Robinson or, on the other hand, compulsory acceptance of whatever alternative the government has to offer.

This will be the first time in Canadian history that the government of Canada has tried to get parliament to bail it out for its failure to act in connection with a labour matter. There can be no excuse for further postponement. The bill to be introduced might well be described as the Benson-Pickersgill relief bill to relieve them from the carrying out of their responsibilities. Responsibility for whatever will happen in the event that a strike takes place rests absolutely on the shoulders of the government. That was made clear today. They have played with this, and now they talk of free collective bargaining—free collective bargaining with a shillelagh over the heads of labour and with parliament to be used as a pawn in this game which the government has been playing with the rights of the Canadian people. Could anything be more urgent?

The minister in charge of the Treasury Board says: we are talking now; we are meeting together. Why have they not been meeting all these weeks?

Mr. Pearson: We have been meeting.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) can smile with that supercilious sneer of his. He does that on every occasion. It is his responsibility and what he is trying to do now is to place on parliament the responsibility for his own failure.

An hon. Member: And that of the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And that of the government. Even he will realize that. An attempt is being made to place on the House of Commons responsibility for becoming an instrument of intimidation to set aside the rightful claims of the workers in this particularly difficult field of the operation of air control.

In the old days, when the question of the urgency of discussion arose, we had the right of appeal from rulings of the Chair. However, we removed that right in order to assure that there would be a degree of justice which would not be challenged. The other day I took a view which was not accepted by Your Honour. I do not complain of that. But I say again that failure to grant the request of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) for an adjournment will mean that the rules are so constricted today that virtually nothing will be urgent enough to permit of the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance.

This is the first time—

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a point of order. The right hon. gentleman, I suggest, is not arguing the urgency of debate. He is attempting once more to debate the substance of the motion which the hon. member for Ontario has asked leave to introduce, and I suggest once again that the right hon. gentleman contain himself and obey the rules like the rest of us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have a great affection for the Minister of Transport. I have a tremendous respect for him. When he rises, there is about him an aura. One almost has to wear coloured glasses to look at him as he speaks with that authority which he invariably vests in himself. I have dealt very gently with him in all I have said. What has annoyed him has been that I have been talking about the head of the Treasury Board.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now, I come to him on this question of urgency. The hon. gentleman pops up and down on points of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order; I invite the right hon. gentleman to return at this point to the question we should be considering, that is, the urgency of debating the motion proposed by the hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The interruption by the minister might very well have received your attention, too.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If I may say so, with great deference, invariably the hon. gentleman raises these gratuitous observations of his, and Your Honour does not see fit to point out—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order, I regret very much that I cannot agree with the right hon. gentleman. I believe the point raised by the hon. minister was a point of order; I did not consider it to be frivolous in any way. He suggested that members who take part in the debate at this point should restrict themselves to the very limited scope of the discussion, which is whether there is urgency of debate. I believe the point raised by the hon. minister was well taken.

On the other hand, I fully appreciate that it is not easy for anyone taking part in the debate at this stage to limit himself to this very narrow aspect of the subject. I always try to take this into account. I must say that when some degree of leniency has been exercised by the Chair in this way it is always a little easier, I feel, to rule against the hon. member who has made the motion. This is why, in general, I have tried in a very sincere way to exercise some leniency in judging the extent to which hon. members respect the limitations placed on them by the rules and by our practice. I know the right hon. gentleman will wish to take that into account.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what I have been doing. Had it not been for the usual repetitious interference by the hon. gentleman, I would have ended my argument long ago.

I do suggest, sir, that if ever there was a case of urgency, this is one. This house will not permit itself, if I sense the feeling of this chamber, to become the agency of the government in a matter as urgent as this is.

This house, if I have the feeling of the chamber, is not going to permit itself, on a matter as urgent as this because of the danger to the Canadian people and the economy, to be used as an instrument of intimidation against the air controllers. Yesterday Your Honour said, "Well, wait until tomorrow; there are discussions going on." How long are we to be denied?

Each day the minister can get up and say "It is not urgent today, the strike is not going to be until next Tuesday," while at the same time placing on the order paper an extension of the time for the house to sit, and also to sit on Saturday. In other words, nothing can be more urgent, otherwise the government would not have been impelled to place these extraordinary measures in anticipation before the House of Commons.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the house long. It does seem to me, sir, that the very fact my hon. friend, the President of the Treasury Board, has given notice of the resolution, which he gave at 2.30, is an indication that the government, if this matter does reach that degree of urgency that will require parliamentary action, has already taken the necessary steps to provide an opportunity for the debate.

In the circumstances I suggest, sir, that since the government of its own motion has taken the necessary steps to provide an opportunity for debate, we should not set aside the urgent business which my hon. friend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), has before the house at the present time in order to carry on a debate concurrently with negotiations which, as I said yesterday, cannot be very effectively carried on if the government's capacity in regard to negotiations is nullified by the necessity of making public statements about those negotiations while they are being conducted.

There will be that opportunity for debate, unless the matter is settled, in which case I would be quite happy to see the house use its privileges as much as it likes.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the minister answer a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest, sir, that until there has been an opportunity to see whether this accommodation can be reached, it would not be in the public interest to have a debate. I suggest, sir, that the urgency of debate does not exist because an opportunity will be provided for debate.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the minister answer a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Nielsen: If the government does not consider the matter urgent, will the minister tell us why it is giving notice on the order paper for this legislation? If it is not urgent, why introduce the legislation?

Mr. Pickersgill: I consider the matter of the greatest possible urgency. I said so yesterday, but I do not consider it a matter that urgently requires to be debated within the narrow terms of our rules. In my opinion, which obviously isn't shared by all hon. members, while these negotiations are going on this afternoon in another place it would not be in the public interest to have a public, acrimonious debate here.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi rising to ask a question?

Mr. Grafftey: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I desire to make only one point, and that is to refer Your Honour to the fact that yesterday, as recorded at page 11048 of Hansard, you rejected a similar motion by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), and in these words:

> The question proposed by the hon. member for Ontario is based, by his own admission, on an assumption.

In the latter part of the same paragraph, I read:

—I suggest the point was well taken by the Minister of Transport when he said this is not a fact but a hypothesis or a presumption.

Your Honour was referring at that time to the fact that a strike vote was in the process of being taken, and Your Honour pointed out that the strike vote might or might not result in a decision to withhold services. That point is now settled. There is no longer a presumption or an assumption. This morning the Air Traffic Controllers' Association notified the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) that the strike would begin next Tuesday morning at eight o'clock.

It seems to me there can be no argument now as to the question of urgency. The country is faced with a very serious crisis. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) argues as to the advisability of debate but he certainly has not argued against the urgency of debate. I point out to Your Honour that the minister says the government has provided, by its own motion, an opportunity for debate. But it only provided for an opportunity for the government to make a statement and for one member from each party to make a statement. This denied all other hon. members an opportunity to debate, and certainly denied us an opportunity to question the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. gentleman would not want to misrepresent what I said. What I meant to say, and I probably phrased it badly, is that the notice which has been put on the order paper will provide an opportunity for full debate unless there is an accommodation reached.

Mr. Douglas: I understood the minister to say both, and I was coming to that as well. The minister also said that there will be ample opportunity for debate if legislation is necessary. It is precisely because we hope legislation can be avoided by having a discussion that we support the call for an adjournment debate. We want to know two things: One, why the government has refused to accept the recommendations of Judge Robinson. I tried three times yesterday to get a statement from the minister on that, but he was not prepared to give such a statement.

We need to know why the government is so adamant. It may have perfectly good reasons, but certainly when those reasons are held so strongly that they bring us to the verge of a national crisis, parliament and the country have a right to know what those reasons are.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Also, the people of this country have a right to know what is in Judge Robinson's report. It is not going to be good enough for us to have legislation suddenly thrown at us late Friday afternoon or Saturday morning, with no opportunity to study Judge Robinson's report, no opportunity to know why the government has refused to implement his recommendations. We will have this legislation tossed at us and be told, "You must pass this legislation in a few hours or all the airports in Canada will be closed."

Surely, that is not fair to parliament or the Canadian people. We ought to have an opportunity here on Wednesday afternoon, December 14, to know what is in that report and to know the reason the government has rejected it. Then, knowing this, if legislation is necessary, we will be better informed and better able to discuss it intelligently. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there is a cast iron case for allowing debate, at which time the government can give us some of the information it has hidden from parliament up until now.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, judging by what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) has said, if he was speaking for the government and for the President of the Treasury Board, then the best axiom we can apply to the government is, "Why do today what we can put off until tomorrow?" That is not a good axiom and very early in life I was taught not to live by it.

With respect to urgency of debate and the motion presented by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), I point out that we are on the verge of a national crisis. If that crisis occurs it will be very awkward to have to start repairing all the damage then done which could possibly have been prevented prior to the crisis taking place.

I well remember the last occasion the house was called into session to discuss strike legislation. The strike in question was on at the time and I remember all the side-stepping, backtracking and tango dancing done by the government to revise its strike bill after the opposition pressed for something sensible in that legislation.

By allowing this debate today before strike legislation is introduced, parliament will be permitted to give its views. The opposition may present some sensible solutions that the government might wish to consider in drafting its legislation, rather than waiting until the crisis is at its peak. If legislation is introduced then, we will have to start fighting to put sense into the legislation.

I think one of the main purposes of a debate is that it would permit this government to listen to the views of the opposition in respect of what is becoming an urgent matter. At regular intervals we are faced with the same crisis—a strike threat here, a strike threat there, a strike here and a strike there. I think it is better that we try to control the disease instead of trying to provide a cure after it is at its peak. I cannot think of a more crucial or urgent matter which necessitates our immediate attention. At this time of the year particularly, we cannot permit ourselves to become involved in an air line strike. First of all, we would look like a bunch of nitwits here and, second, we cannot afford it. This is a very urgent matter and I strongly recommend this debate so that we can express our views on this matter to the government.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, with the other developments which have taken place since yesterday and the fact that the strike vote now has taken place, I think we are in order to move that a debate on this proposed stoppage be held at the present time. In our democracy we cannot predict the results of a free vote. The time is crucial. The government has a right to be concerned about the amounts recommended in the proposed settlement. We know they were not sufficiently concerned about the amount settled upon in the Montreal dock strike. This was very forcibly brought to their attention by all groups in the opposition. In effect, what has happened has been that the government has learned from the opposition to be a little more wary. I think we should congratulate them on this ability to learn. We should be concerned about the cost of air transport in Canada. Air Canada has just underwritten one of the most expensive experiments ever undertaken in the entire world in its agreement to buy supersonic aircraft. This is a development which has been relatively unnoticed in this house and yet it is one the cost of which is fantastic. We need to show more concern about this than has been shown up until now.

It is interesting to note that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) has advocated what has amounted almost to a proposal to raise the status of any mediator or conciliator automatically to that of an arbitrator. This is a policy which is not in accord with his party's avowed stand on compulsory arbitration. However, if we could bring that about in this way it might be the thing which would improve our system of dealing with strikes. We would simply appoint a mediator and both sides would be bound by whatever he decided, because surely what fits the left foot also must fit the right foot.

I should like to add one more point on this matter of urgency. We are in a crisis. It is ironic that the anniversary of the birth of the Prince of Peace also should be the reason of labour strife. The distortion produced in our economy by the Christmas season is a problem which we well might send to the Canadian Economic Council for consideration.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, in speaking very briefly to the point of urgency, I should like to say that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) in opening up this discussion of urgency referred to the fact that this parliament did not wish to be faced with a fait accompli. It might be argued that the government wants to put a resolution on the order paper so that we can debate the issue soon, but this is just what we in the opposition wish to avoid. The government's credibility in respect of settling labour matters has been seriously endangered over the past months and years because it has intervened on one side and sometimes on the other. If the urgency of debate is recognized, then this house can have a full and frank discussion of this crisis situation. It is very possible that by this means we might avoid the necessity for the kind of legislation that would only exacerbate the labour-management-government situation. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) time and time again in this parliament over the last weeks and months—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: You know, when a government feels guilty they always joke and make light of a situation; when they are pushing their heads in the sand, they laugh. In respect of our repeated request for management-labour-government legislation, the government has promised us a task force. When the late President Kennedy spoke of a task force he meant experts all across the nation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member not feel that he now is getting to some extent away from the question of the urgency of debate.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, the urgency of debate is this. We always deal with one situation, but this is not just one situation. The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) frankly admitted to us that not a week has gone by during his tenure of office when there has not been a strike. This kind of thing is going on every single week. The people of Canada want us to deal not with just the air strike but with the whole fumbling and bumbling of this government in terms of the overall problem.

If this matter of urgency is not recognized by the Chair, we will be faced with a fait accompli by a government which is to bring in legislation in this regard. As a member of Her Majesty's official opposition, I do not wish to have any part in the triumph of the right wing of that dinosaur cabinet. The kind of legislation which the minister wants to bring in, and which I want to avoid, is nothing more nor less than a triumph of the bureaucratic right wing of the cabinet. I want a debate here this afternoon in order to avoid that kind of legislation which will only hurt management-labour relations. I want to hear what the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) will have to say in this regard. We all wish to hear from this great friend of the labour movement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression the hon. member now is making the speech which he might have the opportunity to make if the motion is granted. I cannot think of any other speech he might make except this one. I do feel he is going beyond what I thought was the limited scope of the discussion at this point.

Mr. Grafftey: May I summarize very briefly Mr. Speaker. In order to avoid the kind of legislation which I think will be harmful to any future situation of this type, I think we should have a debate this afternoon. I do not wish to be faced in 48 hours with a fait accompli and be a participant in the triumpth of the right wing of the Liberal government.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make two or three points on this matter of the urgency of debate. May I respectfully point out to Your Honour your ruling of yesterday afternoon.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I might mention to hon. members that this was done in the course of the afternoon.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Lambert: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing wrong with referring to it again because it leads up to the remarks made by the Minister of Transport. Yesterday, the hon. gentleman said the vote had not been taken, and therefore it was presumptuous to decide anything on the basis of what might happen. Now, the Minister of Transport says there is to appear on the order paper, and notice is being given, a proposal to deal with this matter. However, with the greatest respect Mr. Speaker that settles nothing. Certainly, it should not be deemed that this debate would anticipate something that is already on the order paper. This is in the nature of a definite confession if it is deemed to be a reason this debate should not take place.

In any event, the question of opportunity of debate must always remain foremost in Your Honour's mind. There are no estimates left. There is no indication that the government is going to call this item of business. There is no indication that this house will sit extended hours on Friday or Saturday. There is no certainty about that; nothing has been decided by the house. It is not what the government decides that determines whether this house shall hold a debate. It is this house that decides whether there will be a debate, subject of course to Your Honour's approval. The decision is not based on the fact further negotiations are taking place, as the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) or the Minister of Transport indicated, because negotiations could continue until 0755 hours on Monday morning and at eight o'clock these people could be on strike. It is the strike that we want to prevent. There is the further principle that this house must debate, the question of participation by public servants in a strike, with parliament, the final arbiter, as one of the parties—because that is what it is.

The situation may be novel because this is one of the few times we have been faced with a direct strike by public servants, involving parliament and the government of Canada. We should not be precluded from discussing the matter, under the circumstances, even though the hour is late. In the light of what was said yesterday, I submit that Your Honour has no alternative but to allow the motion today.

Mr. Speaker: I know that a number of hon. members want to take part in the debate, and I do not want to cut off the debate on the point of order. However, there is just about an hour and a half left this afternoon, and even if the motion is granted at this point there would not be very much time to debate the matter. On such an important matter I do not want to preclude discussion, and if the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald) and the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) want to contribute further to the debate on the point of order, I will recognize them. The hon. member for Lapointe.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say that, to my mind, the debate is urgent, the matter is important and we should discuss it today. We must not wait until the strike is under way before trying to settle the matter; better to do so before it starts. In view of the considerable loss of money the strike would involve, and the fact that the government does not seem to be able to settle it, I feel the urgency of the debate is obvious. The other day, an appeal was made, on all imaginable grounds, to solve a certain problem as rapidly as possible. I believe the problem which confronts us today must also be settled as soon as possible. In order not to hamper the development of Canada, such strikes must be prevented. It is therefore imperative that we discuss the matter today.

That is what I had to say. Let us have the debate, so that we may suggest how to settle the labour dispute.

[English]

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I will make my remarks very short and to the point. I will point out three matters that I think are different today as compared with yesterday. Your Honour indicated in his remarks yesterday that the matter had not then come to a strike vote. We now know that 94.5 per cent of the controllers voted for the strike. That is the first fact. The second one is that the date has been set as next Tuesday. Some had expected the date to be set in January. The third, and most important fact I think, to be remembered this afternoon is that after seven hours of negotiation yesterday, the controllers in conference by telephone last night decided that on the basis of what they had heard in those seven hours they could do nothing but call for a strike next Tuesday morning at eight o'clock.

I think the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), when he suggested that discussion here would hurt negotiations going on elsewhere, is playing fast and loose with the whole purpose of the parliamentary process. If we have not a right to be discussing here, publicly, the issues that face this country, there is something wrong with my conception of parliament and Your Honour's. I think it is something that should be straightened out here this afternoon.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I have asked repeatedly over the last five weeks why we have been deprived of the opportunity of reading for ourselves what the Robinson report has to say. The Minister of Transport was very careful, when circulating this report to the bodies concerned, to keep it shrouded in the utmost secrecy. I think this does not bode well for the kind of negotiations under way at the present time.

In addition, I cannot see how the government can contemplate bringing in legislation of this kind which says, in effect: We have ceased to be able to run our own house and must now pass legislation to force our employees to work for salaries that are below the proper level. I think now is the proper time, and we are in the proper place, to discuss this issue of national and urgent importance.

Mr. Speaker: After the brainwashing to which the Chair has been subjected during the last few minutes it might be very difficult at this point for me to say that I am not in agreement with hon. members who suggest that we should have an adjournment of ordinary business at this time. It is not easy for me to reconcile the opposing views on this question. Certainly, a very strong point has been made by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and by all hon. members who took part in this debate that there should be an adjournment of the ordinary business assigned for today for the purpose of debating this matter of public urgency.

In view of what I said yesterday when this motion was made by the hon. member for Ontario, I am placed in an extremely difficult position today if I say that I cannot accept the motion. There is a seriously complicating factor, namely the notice of motion, with which we are faced. Hon. members know that the difficulty is there. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) referred to this question, but perhaps he should more specifically have mentioned standing order 26 (6) (d), which is rather difficult for the Chair to circumvent.

Mr. Lambert: I am fully aware of that. But it is not on the order paper.

Air Traffic Control Dispute

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will read the standing order he will see that it says, "with reference to which a notice of motion has been previously given". Notice has been given. The hon. member may not agree with this, but certainly notice has been given.

Mr. Lambert: No.

Mr. Speaker: It has been placed in the hands of the Clerk of the House, and there is no question in my mind but that notice has been given.

Mr. Lambert: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has had the opportunity to make this point. I take into account what he has said and have come to the conclusion, not necessarily easily, that the terms of this standing order do not preclude the acceptance of the motion. However, I feel this is a borderline case procedurally; there is no question about it. The only difficulty with which I am really faced at the moment is the notice. The notice, though filed with the clerk, is not on the order paper, and this places the government in a weaker position to oppose a debate at this time.

There is no doubt whatsoever that there is considerable public interest in this very important matter, as evidenced by the statements made by hon. members this afternoon. I am taking into account the fact that this is a short day, and that there is an hour and a half or so left in which hon. members might have the opportunity to indicate what, in their view, the government might want to do in connection with the settlement of this strike. In considering all aspects of the matter, the public interest and the fact that the procedural case against the motion is not too clear or too strong, I believe that I should accept the motion of the hon. member for Ontario.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member for Ontario would permit me to ask the house to allow me to revert to motions. I wish to table two copies of the first half of the Robinson report, so that it will become a public document. I regret that the judge did not have it printed and there are only a few copies, but I will try to get as many copies as I can. I think it is only fair to hon. members, Your Honour having made the decision, that they should have the document.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) moves that the house now adjourn.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in asking permission to table the first half of the document, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) has used the same argument that was put forward yesterday, namely that it was necessary for the government to wait until they received the second half of the report before any conclusions could be reached. May I say to the government and to the ministers who are involved in this whole affair, in particular the Minister of Transport, that the most important issue in the dispute is the salaries and wages of the members of the association. The first part of the report makes a recommendation in that direction. All the government has to do, without further procrastination, and in view of the fact that they appointed a renowned judge to inquire into the whole situation, is to accept his report. This is our advice, unless the government has not been frank and revealed to us the whole situation. The government has not told us up to date what are their reasons for not accepting the recommendations of Judge Robinson.

Let me tell the government that there must have been a reason for choosing Judge Robinson to take on this important task. I am well aware of the fact, owing to my previous association with the labour department, that on many occasions that department has used Judge Robinson's services in disputes between management and labour because he has a good reputation and he is renowned for his work in this area. I suggest this is the primary reason for the selection of Judge Robinson from amongst other judges. Surely, if he was chosen on that basis, then this government should have no hesitation in accepting his recommendations, especially since these recommendations are considered by at least half the people who are involved in the dispute, that is the employees, as a fair and just settlement. It is our opinion that what the judge recommends is fair and just, in view of the fact that he has recommended an average of a 15 per cent increase. We can only assume that these are the facts because we read about them. The government has not been frank with parliament and has not told us what are the true facts. If these are not the facts, then I think the President of the Treasury Board should inform the house as to why he does not consider the recommendations to be acceptable. Why is the government refusing to accept the recommendations which they requested Judge Robinson to make.

Having regard to the reputation of Judge Robinson I should like to know why, upon receipt of these recommendations, the government feels that he knows nothing about the situation. This dispute has not arisen all of a sudden in the past two or three days. It has been going on for some 18 months because of dissatisfaction amongst the members of the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association. Time and time again they have brought their grievances before the government. These have been considered by the Civil Service Commission and by the Department of Transport. Various means were investigated to find a solution to the problem, all to no avail. This problem could not be settled by the government, so they appointed His Honour Judge Robinson to help them in their dilemma. However, when Judge Robinson brought forward his recommendations for a just settlement, the government, which found no method by which to settle the dispute, rejected the sensible suggestions and recommendations made by the judge.

The government which, a few months ago accepted the recommendation of another appointee for the settlement of a dispute on the basis of a 34 per cent increase, now says that 15 per cent is not acceptable in this case. When will they realize that 15 per cent is less than half of 34 per cent and that a recommendation for such an increase should certainly not be subject to any criticism, particularly when it is generally known that the members of this association are entitled to a reasonable increase? Judge Robinson did not bring forward these recommendations in a few days. I suggest that if his recommendations are adopted at the present time, the employees would not strike. We are faced at the present with the threat of a tie-up in our nation's transportation. This strike is not similar to the one which was experienced by Air Canada for at least ten days; it would be a great deal worse. It will shut down all air services in Canada because the air control people are the most important people at the airfields. The air services of this country will be completely suspended and thus the economy of the nation will suffer.

I will not cast aspersions on any minister, but it seems to me that over the past number of years it has been brought forcibly to the attention of anyone who has had the opportunity to study the actions of this government in matters of this kind that the government has hidden behind the fence of free collective bargaining. This is nothing but a hoax. Free collective bargaining can take place in the various ways provided under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. The act permits the government to offer the services of mediators, conciliation boards and conciliators to conduct negotiations on the basis of free collective bargaining. In various disputes similar to this one, we have often heard the government defend the point of view that any interference by a minister of the crown would be an interference with the process of free collective bargaining. This argument is absurd and nonsensical. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) has a responsibility to the people of this country to act as a mediator on the basis of free collective bargaining in many instances where all other attempts at a settlement have failed. This has been my experience on many occasions. No one ever heard any criticism from either labour or management that free collective bargaining has been interfered with because a minister of labour acted as conciliator or mediator.

In this respect the government was guilty of a tremendous failure. This is the reason we have had a disruption of our economy and that labour-management relations, and in turn their relation with the government, have broken down and deteriorated in the past few years. The government has made no effort, but has sat back and waited and waited in the hope that some miracle of some sort would occur, and that a strike would not affect the various sectors of our economy. But it has not worked out this way.

This government must realize that they have a responsibility to the people of this country. This government must wake up to the fact that they have a responsibility in the field of labour-management relations. This government must wake up and realize that they must participate in labour-management relations and endeavour to bring about a solution to the disputes which have been occurring in this country.

By doing this they do not need to worry about injecting themselves into this field and disrupting the process of free collective bargaining—far from it. The government must assist the process of free collective bargaining. Any observer of the disputes that have occurred in the past years, particularly in the federal field of jurisdiction, will have noticed that time and time again, because of the prolonged negotiations and the dragging out of the processes of conciliation, labour and management have become impatient. They have only been going through the process, waiting for the time when they will throw the problem on to the table of the Minister of Labour. They have been waiting for him to deal with the problem.

However, Mr. Speaker, they do not want compulsory arbitration. Labour does not want it and neither do we. We do not believe in it if we are to maintain the principle of free collective bargaining. But labour and management do expect the government to negotiate as a third party in bringing labour and management together, and in this the government has once again failed.

The government say that they believe in free collective bargaining, that negotiations and meetings are taking place—two hours today, two hours tomorrow, a break for dinner, a break for the week end. Is this the way to conduct negotiations and to hold meetings in order to bring about a solution to a problem, Mr. Speaker? Certainly not. Anyone who knows anything about management and labour negotiations knows that you cannot break off; you must continue talking. The government is talking utter nonsense when it says that it met with these people on the west coast for two hours and then broke off for dinner for three hours; that it met them again the next day and then broke off for the week end. That is no way to carry on negotiations to bring about settlement, but it is the method that the government has adopted.

A few weeks ago when we had this disruption on the west coast involving the longshoremen, the Minister of Labour went to Vancouver and evidently put forward some formula that the stevedoring firms rejected. The minister came back to Ottawa and the government were ready to put through legislation to appoint an administrator who was to hold talks with the stevedoring firms. I suggest to the government that, as employers, they are failing in their attempt to resolve this question by not putting forward legislation to force these people back to work. The government should be doing the same thing that it wanted to do in respect of the stevedoring firms. I suggest that they bring in an administrator to run the affairs of the government.

This matter can be solved, Mr. Speaker. There is some hidden reason that has not been explained to parliament as yet for this obstinate attitude of the government, which has now injected itself into this very serious problem. The only thing bringing about this situation with which we will be faced next Tuesday night, December 20, is the inaction of this government. The government must be frank with us today and must tell this house the specific reasons for rejecting the recommendations of Judge Robinson.

Do not let the government tell us, Mr. Speaker, that they are waiting for the second report, because the second report has nothing to do with the settlement of this dispute or wih the strike that has now been set. Yesterday, we were talking about the danger of this situation and about the necessity for taking immediate action. If the government is unable to take immediate action, then parliament should be given the opportunity of expressing the feelings of the people of this country and of advising the government.

The reason given by the government for inaction yesterday was that our apprehensions about the result of the strike vote might be unfounded. The situation was hypothetical in that we were presuming the strike vote would be carried by a majority of the union members. What the result was going to be was quite obvious to everybody except the government—or were they using this as a smokescreen or an excuse? It is now evident, the result of the strike vote having been made known, that the government were actually throwing a smokescreen over the members of this chamber in order to procrastinate for another day.

Mr. Munro: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member who has the floor wish to receive a question from the parliamentary secretary?

Mr. Munro: Is the hon. member suggesting that mediation can only be successful when a minister of the crown intervenes?

Mr. Starr: Of course not.

Mr. Woolliams: He never said that.

Mr. Starr: There are occasions when this is successful, but it has certainly not been successful when any member of this government has been carrying on mediation.

But in this case, the situation is a great deal different because the government has appointed a mediator, a person who is experienced in labour-management disputes and who has continually been used as a mediator by the Department of Labour to intervene in many disputes, even in my time. He is looked upon as a person who has the experience to give wise judgment and be able to bring together both parties. He has been appointed by this government. Yet when he brings the most important part of his report, a strike vote having been taken and a date set, this government refutes his recommendation and throws it out of the window. They must tell us why they have done this.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member permit me to ask him a question. Has the hon. gentleman read the order in council which appointed the judge? It was tabled in the house at the time.

Mr. Starr: I heard what was said by the President of the Treasury Board yesterday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: According to page 28 of the report, the judge said he had the power, so that answers all that nonsense.

Mr. Turner: He extended his own terms of reference.

Mr. Starr: Is the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) questioning the integrity or knowledge of the learned judge, who has a great deal more experience in this area than has the Minister without Portfolio? According to his report, he said he had all the power required. I do not think that this judge would ever overstep his jurisdiction at any time, whether on the bench or in the field of labour-management negotiations. There has never been any criticism of him; and then all of a sudden, when he brings in a report which for some unknown, mysterious reasons this government does not want to accept, the government are prepared to besmirch his character and say that he is wrong.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The judge interpreted the position at page 28.

Mr. Starr: It was even hinted yesterday that there was no rush for parliament to discuss this matter; that the strike date might not be set until the first of the year. That was intimated. But what did the strike vote bring? It brought about the date, for next Tuesday. Now, we shall have legislation, as part of our pre-collective bargaining process this government hides behind, to force people back to work. This is through no fault of the employees but is because this autocratic, arrogant government is not prepared to give them what a renowned judge has recommended.

I will read from page 28 of the judge's report:

> In the Direction by the Minister of Transport dated July 14th, 1966, that a Commission do issue appointing this Commissioner and at paragraph 4 thereof we find the following wording:
> "4. . . . to report to the Minister of Transport . . . with such recommendations as he deems appropriate, including recommendations on the effective dates of any changes proposed"

Mr. Nielsen: Any recommendations he felt.

Mr. Starr: I continue to read:

> This wording, in my opinion, supports the interpretation that rates of pay are included within the terms of reference because it would confer jurisdiction upon the Commissioner to recommend retroactive changes and, as a general rule, retroactivity is applied to pay rates as distinguished from other improvements in working conditions.

That is why he brought down the first report.

> I might also refer to one additional consideration. If, as a result of a full and careful investigation, this Commissioner came to the conclusion that the present rates of pay, for this particular service, had not been determined upon a proper basis, due to the fact that the factors and considerations, which should be applied, had not been applied, then, surely, it would be an exercise in futility if, under such circumstances, the Commissioner had no jurisdiction to recomend appropriate changes designed to correct the situation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Starr: Let me finish reading from the Commissioner's report.

> Indeed, in my view, if such a result were to ensue, the whole purpose of the inquiry might well be frustrated with a consequent aggravation of the rather sensitive situation, the existence of which gave rise to this investigation.
> For the above reasons I have come to the conclusion that the terms of reference under this Commission do include jurisdiction enabling the Commissioner to make specific recommendations as to the rates of pay for Air Traffic Controllers, if, as a result of the investigation, it is determined that the present pay scales do not properly reflect the factors and considerations that should be taken into account in determining such rates of pay.

What could be more simple? The Minister of Transport says that he does not agree with this. He says the judge had no business writing these words into this report.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not what I said.

Mr. Starr: That is the intimation he gave. Does the government say now, having read this report "Throw it through the window; we know better. We do not want it because the judge has not recommended what we hoped he would recommend." This is a judge, I point out, who has experience in labour matters, and who has had discussions on many such matters. This is the judge who brought forward a report based on his experience.

Mr. Turner: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would the hon. member be willing to show the house where in the terms of reference, there is jurisdiction given to the commissioner to determine rates of pay.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the terms of reference yesterday. I am not a lawyer and I am not trying to protect myself in that respect. Believe me, if the government's terms of references have been worded in the same way they run this country, then no one can understand what the heck they mean. I am sure that not even the judge was able to understand them. He read the terms of reference and he felt that he was entitled to make these recommendations.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. gentleman, who is always very reasonable and fair would mind reading paragraph 3 of the order in council appointing the judge. That is to be found at the beginning of the report.

Mr. Starr: By asking me to read that I think the Minister of Transport is degrading the judge.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Starr: The minister is saying that the judge did not understand his terms of reference, that he has stepped beyond the bounds of the terms of reference drafted by this government. I rely on Judge Robinson, as I have always done in the past and as many others have done. I would rather take his interpretation of what the terms of reference mean than the interpretation of the Minister of Transport or the interpretation of the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Woolliams: Or the interpretation of the Minister without Portfolio.

Mr. Starr: There is no question about that. This government appointed a special investigator in the person of His Honour Judge Robinson. They asked him to do certain things. He read into the terms of reference what he considered were his duties, and he performed those duties. On November 7 he brought down the first part of his recommendation, the part that the whole situation hinges on now, the part on which the strike vote was taken. That vote was taken because the government refused to accept the recommendations. The date has been set for Tuesday, December 20.

I urge the government to change its mind. Unless the government is frank with us in putting forward valid and just reasons for failing to implement that part of the report submitted by Judge Robinson on November 7, grave consequences will follow. Is the government trying to convince the members of this house, representing the people of this country, that its judgment in this matter is better than the judgment of Judge Robinson? I do not think the government can maintain that view. I urge the government, in the interest of the Canadian economy and the people of this country to come to its senses and to be fair to its employees. I urge them to accept the recommendations of Judge Robinson and avoid the disruption that is viewed with apprehension across the country. Every week when people in different parts of the country pick up their newspapers they read about impending strikes in industries under federal jurisdiction. This does not help the morale of the people. I urge the government to mend its ways and to think this matter over. Do not bring in this repulsive legislation which will force men back to work in the government's employment. Rather, let the government see light and reason and accept the report and recommendations of His Honour, Judge Robinson.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the traditional position of civil servants in dealing with the government of Canada has been that their pay has been determined by the government arbitrarily. It has been determined on an arbitrary basis through a minute of the Treasury Board. Such a salary settlement was then imposed on civil servants.

Changes have taken place in this process since we became a government, and greater changes will take place in the future when we move into collective bargaining through the three bills presently before a joint committee of this house and the other place.

I have been berated by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) for being small and meagre. One of the most interesting things I have learned from talking to civil servants in the past few years is this: the basis for their being so far behind in salaries is that the former government headed by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) failed to provide civil servants with salary increases, when they should have had them.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: Is that your case?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. members who were so anxious to hear from the government would allow me to speak on behalf of the government, I will continue to deal with this important matter.

The position with regard to the air traffic controllers is this: Their salaries were set, along with the salaries of a large group of other employees, effective July 1, 1965. They were granted an increase of 12 per cent at that time plus an additional three per cent effective July 1, 1966. This totals 15 per cent. The figure used by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) with reference to the implications of the increase recommended by Judge Robinson, including longevity payments, does not add up to 15 per cent; I am informed it adds up to 23 per cent. So, what we are concerned with here is an increase of almost 40 per cent for the air traffic controllers over two years. These are the facts. Look at the report.

Mr. Lewis: Is the minister suggesting that the implementation of Judge Robinson's report tomorrow would involve a 23 per cent increase tomorrow? Is he not aware that the proposal relates to supplementary payments for years of service over a number of years?

Mr. Benson: The hon. member does not appear to recognize that Judge Robinson believes service to date should be recognized, and most operational controllers are in the operational category, which is group five, with seven to ten years service, and would be entitled to longevity pay. The point to point increase over a two year period, if it were granted, including the 15 per cent already given, would add up to more than 40 per cent, I am told by my officials. Mr. Speaker, I can just see hon. members on the other side of the house howling if we granted people a 40 per cent increase over a two year period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benson: I am very pleased we now have the hon. member for Ontario on our side, saying the government should give people great increases. He was complaining the other day about a 30 per cent increase for seaway workers over two years. Now, he says we should be giving a 40 per cent increase to civil servants.

Mr. Starr: I rise on a question of privilege. Hansard will record that I said nothing of the kind. The minister is trying to put forward a case based on false versions of what I have said.

Mr. Benson: I indicated that the figure of 15 per cent he used was absolutely wrong. The increase which was granted was made under a contract which expires on July 1, 1967 at which time negotiations will take place under collective bargaining arrangements which will govern salaries from that point onward.

Mr. Lewis: Are you sure you will not exclude them?

Mr. Benson: We hope no civil servants other than management will be excluded from collective bargaining.

Mr. Lewis: Is the minister assuring parliament that these air control people will not be excluded from bargaining untis by the government?

Mr. Benson: I have answered that question. No one will be excluded from bargaining units expect management personnel.

Mr. Byrne: Not even their lawyers.

Mr. Benson: To deal with Judge Robinson's report, we have not accepted that report although we have accepted the most important concept, in my opinion, which it contains.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Everything but the wage increase.

Mr. Benson: The Leader of the Opposition will have a further opportunity to speak provided he allows me to speak.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister has made a statement. I ask him what portions of the report are acceptable to the government.

Mr. Benson: If the Leader of the Opposition will give me the opportunity, I will deal with that point. I was about to say that one of the important recommendations in the report was that air traffic controllers should be compared with airline despatchers. We agree with this in principle—that their salaries should be comparable with those of airline despatchers.

There is, however, one error in the report—I do not say this to be critical of Judge Robinson. But there is an error in the report in that he has assumed a person can become an airline despatcher in two years. In theory this may be so, but we have checked with Air Canada and we find that one in the past ten years has become an airline despatcher in a period shorter than five years. The most usual period is nine years. By taking this longer period, the salary scales computed by Judge Robinson and included in his report are automatically thrown out.

As I say, we accept the principle that, man for man, with equal service in this particular field through assistant despatcher and on to airline despatcher, and through the various grades of air transport controllers, equivalent rates of pay should be given. What we cannot agree to is the proposition based on the calculation of rates of pay on the assumption that a person becomes an airline despatcher in two years. In Air Canada that is not the case.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether this would not be an appropriate time for the Chair to intervene and bring to the attention of hon. members that there are only about 35 minutes left for debate this afternoon. I am referring to no one in particular, but perhaps hon. members might wish to exercise some personal discipline in limiting the length of their speeches so that more members might have an opportunity to take part in the debate. The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Benson: This is the basic problem we had when dealing with Judge Robinson's report.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the minister a question?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure the minister would be most happy to answer my question.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister allow the hon. member for Yukon to ask a question at this time?

Mr. Benson: If hon. members opposite would allow me to finish—and I do not intend to speak at great length—I will be pleased to answer any questions they may have if it is within my ability to answer them.

For the reason I have given, the government was not able to accept the full report of Mr. Justice Robinson. This has been the subject of our discussions with the air traffic controllers over the past two weeks at least.

[Mr. Benson.]

With regard to the meetings which have taken place with the air traffic controllers I am told we met with the controllers whenever they requested to meet with us. Furthermore, we agreed to discuss the first part of the report without waiting for the second part of the report to come to hand. Again, the adjournment last week from Thursday to Monday took place at the request of the air traffic controllers. We have always held ourselves ready to meet with them and discuss this matter.

On Monday night we felt we could not accept the full report of Judge Robinson. Their position was: we must have the full report or we shall not be satisfied. The C.A.T.C.A. withdrew its negotiators at that point.

We met again this morning. As I indicated, I met personally with the members of the three associations. One of the difficulties here—a difficulty which does not exist when there is collective bargaining; and I would remind hon. members that there is really no basis for collective bargaining in the civil service at the present time—is that employees who are air traffic controllers are represented by three organizations and it is necessary to meet with representatives of these organizations separately.

• (5:10 p.m.)

This morning I asked them to come altogether to meet with me.

Mr. Woolliams: What are these organizations?

Mr. Benson: I mentioned them earlier. They are the Public Service Alliance, the Professional Institute and the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers' Association.

Mr. Lewis: The latter has the majority.

Mr. Benson: I am not going to get into a jurisdictional dispute as between the various associations at this time because presently we have no system for certifying anyone as a bargaining unit, but I hope with the assistance of the house and the committee we will get that very soon after the New Year.

This morning, as I mentioned earlier—

An hon. Member: What offer did you make?

Mr. Benson: I am not going to indicate to the house what offer we have made to the air traffic controllers.

An hon. Member: Because it is embarrassing to you.

Mr. Benson: I am not embarrassed but I do not think it would in any way help negotiations at this time. At the moment offers have been made to them. They have spoken to us and there has been an agreement that the discussions would be in confidence. I, for one, intend to keep confidence while the negotiations are going on.

There are two other things to which I would like to refer. After this morning's meeting, I believe there is some hope of getting together and solving this particular problem without the necessity for legislation. I, for one, certainly hope this will be the case. This morning I explained quite fully to the three associations the position of the government, that we as a government cannot afford to have the air lines in Canada closed down.

We have to have every concern for the employees of the government of Canada, but our overriding concern must be for the people of Canada. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, in negotiations, and in looking at Judge Robinson's report to decide what we could accept, the amounts we could accept, we have had the interests of the people of Canada in mind. One must always remember that in making settlements with a particular group in the civil service one does not settle with one group in isolation. Any settlement in the civil service means an adjustment of the structure; it means that the supervisors are going to get more money also. Hon. members may recall when we settled the postal strike over a year ago that I said it would probably cost us over $100 million within a year, and it has. This is because there is a ripple effect. What we are trying to arrive at is a fair and just wage for the air traffic controllers, considering their particularly difficult job and comparing them with the people they want to be compared with, namely, air line despatchers.

There is just one other thing I would like to say with respect to the appointment of Judge Robinson, although there is not any great point in arguing as to whether or not he was asked to report on salaries. Whether he was asked to or not, he did. In our opinion he was not asked to; in his opinion he was, and he has reported and made recommendations on salaries.

I have already told hon. members the point where we disagree with his analysis in regard to the comparison with air line despatchers. However, I should point out the difference between Judge Robinson and a mediator or an arbitrator.

We, as a government, felt that something should be done for air traffic controllers, probably because of the particular circumstances of their job since there is a great deal of stress involved in carrying out the tasks they have to carry out. For example, if an air traffic controller starts to lose his hearing, or something like that, he can no longer have that kind of job. This is the basic reason that we asked Judge Robinson to operate as a commissioner.

At this point I must remind hon. members that the salary rates had been determined by treasury board and the government, as the law presently provides, as of July 1, 1965, with another adjustment on July 1, 1966. The pay question, for all intents and purposes, was closed. The air traffic controllers had argued that they deserved special consideration because of the stress and tension under which they must operate. I would be the first to admit that it is a very difficult job, and our sole purpose in appointing a commissioner of inquiry was to look into the working conditions to determine if there should be variation due to the particular stress of the job.

If we had been appointing a mediator, such as we did in the postal dispute, all parties to the dispute would have been asked to agree on who should be appointed. In the first postal dispute Judge Anderson acted as the mediator, and it was agreed that neither party would be bound by the results of his determinations. In the recent postal dispute we had the good offices of Mr. Justice Montpetit as mediator. In both these cases all the parties agreed to the appointments and agreed that neither party would be bound to accept anything the mediator recommended.

In the case of Mr. Justice Montpetit he was able to come up with a recommendation that was acceptable to both parties, and both parties accepted it. But in the present instance we, as the government appointed Judge Robinson to carry out an inquiry for us. Whether he went beyond his terms of reference is not really worthy of too much debate, because actually his report is here, and what is in it; is in it. I simply say we are not willing to accept the report completely because we believe there is some fallacy in the basis of computation of amounts involved. But we do accept the principle that man for man, with equivalent service, there should be a reasonable equality of pay between air despatchers and air traffic controllers.

I do not really think that there is anything I can add beyond that point, Mr. Speaker. I have tried to make as complete an explanation as I can. I would like to assure hon. members that we intend to carry on negotiations to the best of our ability, and I for one hope we do not have to use the legislation which is on the order paper. We had to give 48 hours notice because of what happened in the house last week.

This morning I suggested to the parties involved that since negotiations were going better, maybe the strike deadline could be moved back. I said that we really were faced with an extremely short timetable at this point, and I said I would be putting the notice on the order paper providing they would continue negotiations in good faith. They agreed to do this, and I can assure hon. members that if necessary I will introduce the legislation, but I for one hope we do not have to do that.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): I would like to ask a question of the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would like to remind hon. members of what I said a moment ago. There are only about 25 minutes left in view of Royal Assent, and I think the Chair should be given the opportunity to recognize a spokesman for the minority parties. I understand the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) wants to speak, and it appears that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) has been writing copious notes and may want to ask a question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is all, Mr. Speaker. The minister has gone into a great deal of detail, and this shows the benefit of the discussion which took place here this afternoon.

Is it clear that with the exception of one portion of the report, on which the minister takes the view that the judge arrived at a wrong conclusion, the report is acceptable to the government, and has the treasury board so declared?

Mr. Benson: There is another point that we—although there may be adjustments in other ways—as a government at the present time have not accepted, and that is the principle of longevity pay. We are in a difficult position here because Mr. Justice Montpetit's report on the post office said longevity pay should not be introduced, and here we have a report from Judge Robinson recommending that it be introduced. I think that the problems can be overcome without facing up to the question of longevity pay. Ultimately we will have to face up to it and I hope this will be when we get into the collective bargaining processes. I would like to reiterate that the settlement being made is only to July 31 next, at which time the people involved will be in proper collective bargaining, under law, with the government.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): I wish to clear up some misunderstanding. In his remarks the President of the Treasury Board said that the comparison should be made—and he thought quite properly so—with the air line despatchers. Could he answer two questions related to this?

First of all, does he think the responsibility exercised by these despatchers is as great as the undertaking exercised by the air traffic controllers in relation to flight? Secondly, does he know any air traffic controllers who are over age 50, and if not why not.

Mr. Benson: Perhaps I might answer the second part of the question first. I do not know that many air traffic controllers. There are a thousand spread out across Canada, and I do not have an intimate knowledge of their ages. In respect of the first part of the question, I believe the duties of the air traffic controllers and despatchers are comparable. I do not know whether this goes down to the nth degree of comparison, but I know that both groups have very great responsibilities. Based on the submissions of the air traffic controllers and the suggestions of Judge Robinson, we believe there is a basis of comparison.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Is it not true that actually the pilot is responsible, on the advice of the despatcher, whereas the air traffic controller has the final responsibility in respect of the flights.

Mr. Benson: I am told that this varies from air line to air line. In some air lines the despatcher decides whether or not the aircraft takes off. I am not sure whether or not this is the case in respect of Air Canada, but in respect of C.P.A. I believe the pilot makes this decision. It varies from air line to air line.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I should like to suggest to the hon. minister who just sat down, and to other members of the house, that the issue is not at all what the minister tried to suggest it is. The issue is not at all whether or not he agreed with a particular calculation of Judge Robinson; the issue is not at all whether or not the government thought Judge Robinson had jurisdiction. The issue before this house and the issue, in my respectful submission, in respect of which the government has been totally wrong and which has undermined the total question of collective bargaining is whether or not the government as employer has a moral duty to accept the decision of a third party the same as any other employer in this country has. That is the issue.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question. Does the hon. gentleman say that before this appointment was made the employees were equally bound to acceptance because in that case what he is saying is that Judge Robinson was an arbitrator and he certainly was not intended to be such.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) and I have been friends for years, but it is not necessary for him to point out to me elementary things. I know the difference between a commissioner, an arbitrator and a mediator. I know the hon. minister likes to jump up and make interruptions, but I may say that I know the differences in these things as well as he does. I say to him that the whole philosophy under any kind of collective bargaining by law lies in the proposition that when the two parties cannot agree, a neutral party is introduced to look into the matter and make recommendations. The whole concept of industrial peace rests on the proposition that management and labour ought to be prepared to accept the judgment of a third party. This does not mean that they must accept it if the third party is not an arbitrator. It does, however, say this: that if the government which administers the labour laws generally is to have the respect of those in the private sector of the economy, and if the government which administers the labour laws ever is to have any hope that a management or union in the private sector will in fact accept the recommendation of a third party it, as an employer, has a moral duty to accept that recommendation when it is brought down. That is the principle involved.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a question, Mr. Speaker? Does the hon. member consider that this exercise was collective bargaining and, if it was, why do we have three bills before parliament now to give these civil servants the right to bargain collectively?

Mr. Lewis: What the Minister of Transport is saying in the course of a question expresses his and his government's attitude much better than I could. What he is saying, as a matter of fact, is that the air control people do not have the right to collective bargaining and that he in his great, magnanimous generosity sat down at the table with them not because they have any rights but because he wished to be generous with them—only they have to do what they are told. That is precisely the implication in the minister's remarks.

The Minister of Transport and the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) raised the question of whether Judge Robinson had the jurisdiction to deal with this matter. If they will look at this report, which I am sure they have studied much more carefully than I because I saw it for the first time only a little while ago, they will find that this very issue concerning whether or not the judge had the jurisdiction was raised by Mr. Love, I believe, the representative of the Treasury Board. The judge considered his responsibilities and his terms of reference. He looked over the material and came to a decision. Is the employer in this case entitled to say that he will not accept a decision of the judge who has adjudicated this matter?

Mr. Benson: Would the hon. member permit a question. He has had long experience in labour negotiations and he has my respect in that regard. Would he not admit that there are all sorts of third party appointments where the principle is agreed upon by the two parties but where one party or the other, or both parties, do not accept the findings.

Mr. Lewis: This is the kind of difficulty in which we are. Let me go back to the point I was making, and then I will come back to the question. As I say, it is not for the government, in this situation where it is an employer, to refuse to accept a decision of the judge on the very point of jurisdiction. He considered it. He adjudicated on it and they are stuck with it. When it comes to the question of who should be appointed, I am instructed by representatives of the association—

Mr. Pickersgill: Did the hon. gentleman say he was instructed?

Mr. Lewis: Informed, I beg your pardon; I was informed. I have the information on a piece of paper if the hon. Minister of Transport wishes to see it. I am informed by the air control association people that the C.A.T.C.A. was involved in the selection of a commissioner. Both sides placed names on the list. Judge Robinson's name was the third name on the list, and in order that he be appointed I am informed that the association must agree.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member who has the floor accept a question from the hon. minister?

Mr. Lewis: I will gladly, Mr. Speaker. My only concern is that because of these interruptions I will be taking up the time which might be allotted to other members who might wish to have the floor.

Mr. Benson: Perhaps I should rise on a question of privilege, rather than to ask a question. I did not wish to mislead the house in respect of this appointment. My officials did speak with C.A.T.C.A. with regard to the appointment, but there are two other associations involved which were not I believe consulted.

Mr. Lewis: This is the kind of thing I really regret. Had the minister originally said that the major organization so far as numbers are concerned, or one of them, had been consulted in respect of the recommendation of Judge Robinson, that would have helped the situation. But he did leave with me the impression that this was a unilateral agreement. That was the phrase he used. This is where the government has such a terrible responsibility. These negotiations have gone on over the past 18 months. The government was faced with the threat of a strike last May and as a result of that and in order to avoid a strike the government undertook to make the appointment and discussed it with C.A.T.C.A.

In a letter to C.A.T.C.A. the government said—I forget the exact words—it would give serious consideration to the findings of the commissioner. The government said it would give immediate consideration to those findings. The President of the Treasury Board cannot come here and say that these are terrible people, that they have the government in a bind because they are going to have a strike next Tuesday, when he has had in his hands for five weeks a report from the commissioner. The minister also said: We met with these people every time they asked us to meet with them. He may be right. I am not questioning him; I have never had occasion to do so.

He had a duty to ask them to meet with him, and not wait for them to come to him. I say to him that he knew last May or June that these men were going to take strike action if they did not get what they considered satisfactory, and he has no reason to sit back in his chair and wait for them to invite him to meet with them. In the interests of Canada, in the interests of the Canadian people, he should have been on his toes and got them into his office the day after he received the report and said: Gentlemen, we cannot agree with this.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. gentleman a question. He said he was going to take up all the time allotted to him, so I am sure he will be fair enough to allow a question.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, during the speech of the President of the Treasury Board we tried to ask questions. The minister has now risen for a third time to interrupt the hon. member. I think this is quite incorrect. If this is to be allowed, I should have been granted the privilege of asking a similar question of the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald) was allowed to ask a question.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I realize it is within my power to have the question asked, but I think I get your wink that I should not do so.

Mr. Speaker: It might facilitate the task of the Chair if the hon. member refused to answer questions.

Mr. Lewis: That is what I thought I saw in your eye, Mr. Speaker, at this distance, and I intend to follow that advice.

I am confident that is the principle involved in this matter. I say to the Minister of Transport and to the President of the Treasury Board that if they found an error in the calculation or in the premise about equality of age, they had the authority by order in council, which they could pass in five minutes, to remit this report to Judge Robinson. They could tell him that in their view he had omitted something, and would he look at it again and hear further representations on the point.

I am not prepared to accept the statement of the President of the Treasury Board. I have been for too long involved in this type of negotiation to accept the statement of either side in a dispute as being "it". I have no doubt that the air traffic control people have their views about what happened. I could almost guess what their view would be from the quick glance I have had at the report. The fact is that as far as the regulations of Air Canada are concerned, the air despatcher can be appointed after two years. That is what the regulations are, if I read them correctly. The fact that they have not been for four, five or six years cannot affect the regulations which permit this to happen.

The fact is that the regulations of the Department of Transport do not permit an air traffic control man to be in group 5 until after five years' service. That is the fact. No doubt the air traffic control people would take the position that they have to go by the book and not by what someone thinks, deviating from the book. I have no doubt that is what Judge Robinson had in mind. If the government disagreed with that and argued that there was an error in fact, the report should have been referred back to Judge Robinson. This is what the government is arguing about. They accept the principle, but say there is an error in fact. They had the authority on November 8, 1966, five weeks ago, or on November 9 if they needed a day to study the report and reach Judge Robinson, to say: We think there is an error in fact here. Will you please reconvene the parties and discuss this error with them.

This man was the third party, the neutral. He is a man who, as the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) has properly said, has had years of experience in labour disputes. I have appeared before him I suppose 100 times in my years of labour practice. I have appeared before him when he has been chairman of conciliation boards and one of the arbitrators. As a matter of fact, if I may say so without offending Judge Robinson, I have never found him to be a particularly generous person where wage awards have been concerned. He has always been pretty careful not to make any salary or wage awards which were not fully supported by the evidence before him. It does not take a representative of union or a labour spokesman to know that he is one of those judges who does not make determinations at all lightly. Indeed, if you look at his report even quickly you find that he has gone into this matter most carefully.

Judge Robinson analyzes the comparison between the air traffic control man and the air despatcher in Canada. He looks at the salaries of the air traffic control man in the United States as compared with those in Canada. He looks carefully at the duties of the air traffic control man. He quotes at length from articles which have appeared on the subject. Obviously, as is seen in the early section of the report, he had numerous meetings at which both sides presented their case. He took great care. There are several appendices to his report. He went into the organization of air traffic control. No one who takes even a quick glance at this report could for one moment suggest that his conclusions were made lightly or without very careful consideration of every submission put before him.

In that situation, has the government the right, as the employer, to throw that out of the window? Let me tell the house, if I may, that I do not know any of the secrets that took place in the negotiations, but I do know that if the government had at any time in the last two weeks indicated to the air traffic control people what the Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board indicated to us today, there probably would not have been a strike vote. At no point, I am instructed, was the proposition that they accepted the principle of the comparison put to the air traffic control people until the very last few days. I do not know, of course, the details of the offer made by the government, but I know from the snort I heard from the people with whom I discussed this matter that the offer made was apparently so much below what Judge Robinson indicated in his report that the air traffic control people felt completely desperate and had to call the thing to an end.

This is an impression I obtained, not from labour representatives because everyone concerned is as honourable as I know the Minister of National Revenue to be, and when negotiations are in confidence they are not revealed to anyone. But you can get a pretty good idea of what took place from the tone and attitude of the people concerned. It is perfectly obvious to me, from those with whom I have discussed this matter, that the offer the government made was nowhere near what Judge Robinson recommended.

Mr. Douglas: It was not even a serious offer.

Mr. Lewis: It was such that the air traffic control people could not take it as a serious offer. The Minister of National Revenue said this morning that something happened which makes him hope that an accommodation will be found. I sincerely hope he is right. This is the major point I wanted to make.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I take one more minute to say that I regret very much that a few members in this house take advantage of even this situation to start talking about all the strikes we have had and the need of legislation and action to prevent them.

I can almost hear the bells of compulsory arbitration ringing. This is totally unfair in this case. There is no union in this case, in any real sense of the term, because there is no collective bargaining in any sense of the term, as the Minister of Transport admitted in answer to a question.

Strictly speaking, I suppose, air traffic control people are public servants who may not be permitted to strike under the Civil Service Act. I am not sure of that and I will not give a legal opinion on it. However, what obtains here is a reckless, unforgiveable and indefensible action by the government in appointing someone to make an inquiry which involves salaries, in receiving a report from a third person and then saying to the people concerned "Despite this inquiry which we instituted—because you said you would strike if we did not do so, despite the number of hearings that were held and despite the careful consideration by the judge of all submissions we, because we are the government, will tell you and the judge to go and jump in the lake". The issue which is involved is that a government which should be a model employer and which should make it clear to every employer and every union that when a third party is appointed to inquire into a situation his conclusions should be treated with respect, treated the conclusions of Judge Robinson without respect and with a callous disregard for the results of its own action, for the plight of the air traffic controllers and for the interests of the Canadian people which are now about to be seriously affected.

If, after having done all that, the government fails to make the recommendation which it is their moral duty to make, then this parliament will be asked to order the men to stay at work despite their decision that they have certain rights for which they want to stand. I say, shame on the government for placing itself, the parliament and the Canadian people in this terrible position. There is no excuse for it. After having received the recommendation of a third party, they have the moral duty to abide by it.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know that I have only a few minutes left and I will try to speak without the passion of the hon. gentleman who, of course, has a much greater ability for histrionics than I do.

I want to reply primarily to the last point made by the hon. member for York South. He kept saying that we have the report. I am the minister who was responsible under part II of the Inquiries Act for the appointment of Judge Robinson. I asked Judge Robinson to do certain things for the government. The things which I asked him to do were agreed in advance with the three organizations. The third point was to examine the need, if any, for a special provision unrelated to established rates of pay to compensate air traffic controllers for these unique responsibilities and requirements. The first point was to examine the factors and considerations that should be taken into account in determining rates of pay for air traffic controllers, bearing in mind the unique duties, responsibilities and requirements that are expected to be carried out.

I did not ask Judge Robinson to make two reports: I asked him to make one. He saw fit, without any consultation with me or, as far as I am aware, with anyone connected with the government, to make a partial report.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Why?

Mr. Pickersgill: The government had appointed him to answer all the questions. I took the view that we had the right to receive answers to all those questions which the representatives of the air traffic controllers had agreed should be put to Judge Robinson, and that we should not attempt to make a determination on some of the matters without having his advice on all of them.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Why did he only submit the first part of his report?

Mr. Pickersgill: You will have to ask Judge Robinson. I did not ask for it. I did not want it. I do not think it was desirable. I do not want to be disrespectful to the judge who, I am sure, did his duty conscientiously according to his lights. As my colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) pointed out, the government is prepared to accept his basic recommendation that a comparable class outside the public service are the air despatchers, and we are quite prepared to make a recommendation based generally on that view.

However I also say—and the hon. member for York South gave us a long disquisition on collective bargaining—that there was no question of collective bargaining here, and the hon. member for York South was sufficiently honest and straightforward to admit this point at the end of his speech. It is the present government which has asked parliament to give civil servants the right to bargain collectively. We are not ashamed of doing that.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): What about the strike?

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member for Prince, who has had a little less experience in public life than I have, let me have my say, and later on I will listen to him just as politely as he does to me.

Mr. Barnett: Would the minister comment on the fourth point in the terms of reference?

Mr. Pickersgill: In the few minutes that are left to me I should like to say that when this incident arose last summer the air traffic controllers said that they considered the determination of their pay by the Civil Service Commission and the Treasury Board was not fair because they had been put into the wrong category. They asked to see me and I said that I was not entrusted by the government with the duty of determining their pay. This was the function of the Treasury Board and the Civil Service Commission.

I told them that we did not yet have collective bargaining, but, since I was the minister responsible for their activities, in order to discharge my work properly and to carry out the responsibilities entrusted to me temporarily by the government of Canada and the people of Canada, it was important to me that the morale of these workers should be good. I knew their morale would not be good if they had a sense of injustice. I said that of course I would be glad to listen to what they had to say. I would consider it very carefully, and if I felt that I could make representations to the Treasury Board, I would do so. In the course of our discussions, I said that it appeared to me that it would be quite impossible for me, as a member of the government or as a responsible member of parliament, to recommend to the Treasury Board that the Civil Service Commission classifications on which the pay of a great group of civil servants was based should be disturbed for one particular group after the determination had been made by a system which is now the law. I said that all I would be doing, if I were successful in making that kind of recommendation, would be to create discontent among all the other employees in the department who were in related categories and who were not getting this kind of special treatment.

I thought that either the salaries of the whole group would have to be redetermined or else it would not seem to me that any of them could be. That is why I was so very careful in drafting this document. The President of the Treasury Board was even more concerned to make it very clear that we were asking for recommendations with regard to some unique or special aspects, and that is why we put in the phrase "unrelated to established rates of pay". We were not asking the judge to substitute himself for the Civil Service Commission in determining the relationship between all these various classes. But we were concerned about making sure that no injustice was being done to the air traffic controllers because they have an occupation which, in my opinion, is much more stressful than the work of most of the employees in the public service. We know that this kind of work can only be done by relatively young men, and it seemed to me that this factor should be taken into account. I am referring to the additional stress and the liability to lose the capacity to do this work if there were any defect in hearing—and I know something about such a defect—or in vision. I said that if we can find anything that is unique and special to that group which should be recognized, I would fight for it to the limit. But, Mr. Speaker, on the eve of collective bargaining and after the pay determination of this whole group of employees had been made, I could not in all conscience support a change of the ordinary rules for one group of employees unless it were made for all.

I think all hon. members who know how difficult these things are to determine anyway will realize that it is very difficult to take any other position with respect to public servants. What we are seeking to do—and this is one thing that Judge Robinson recommended and for which I think he has made a very good case—is to recognize that these people do have duties that are comparable with the duties of some other group of employees, not precisely comparable but sufficiently comparable that the comparison is a worth-while yardstick. We have been quite prepared to accept that view and have been quite frank in saying so.

We are also quite prepared to accept the view that these men cannot expect to continue as air traffic controllers, particularly in the active pursuit of the grade 5 category, for the whole of their working lives because of the special stresses and strains which are involved in this very exacting kind of work. At one time or another the lives of practically every member in this chamber and the lives of a very high proportion of the Canadian people may depend on the work of these people.

No one in this house could possibly be more concerned than I am as Minister of Transport—even if I were just thinking in minimal terms of saving my own skin and reputation—with the importance of having a good morale among the air traffic controllers and all those other servants of the Department of Transport who have to do with the safety of human life in our community. If any member from any part of this house thinks that any member of the government relishes the prospect of having every civil airport in this country closed up five days before Christmas, they are wrong. Certainly hon. gentlemen opposite will not be blamed for this. We who sit on the treasury benches know perfectly well who will get the blame if this happens, and we have the deepest possible sense of responsibility in this matter.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we know perfectly well that if we take the kind of action which is going to create a sense of injustice in the minds of thousands of other civil servants because we have disturbed a basic pattern, a comparable pattern which has existed for a long time, and have done so after the pay determination for this two-year period has half expired, then we are going to create a situation which, while it may not be as dramatically critical as this one appears at the moment, will probably be very much more serious than this one. This is the problem, and it is a very grave and difficult one.

Mr. Douglas: So that I understand the minister, may I ask him a question? He says that this will upset the pattern among comparable staffs in the civil service. What comparable staff is there in the civil service who would in any way be related to this particular group of air traffic controllers?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he is as much of an expert on the civil service commission as I am. The pay research bureau of the civil service commission compared this group of people with a number of categories. Some of them were referred to by Judge Robinson. They are well known and represent many hundreds of employees. One group is in turn compared with others.

I am sure that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) knows—and certainly the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) understands this sort of thing. Once you start disturbing this pattern, it causes what my hon. friend the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) called a ripple effect which goes through the whole structure; there is no question of that.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the problem. If we were just dealing with air traffic controllers and could isolate them, and if they were not public servants and had not over the years been related to other groups, perhaps this problem would not be a very difficult one to solve.

Mr. Lewis: It is an artificial relationship though.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. member has done most of his conciliation in what is called the private sector. He has not yet got the whole of our activities in this country into the public sector, despite his efforts over the years.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether to rise on a point of privilege to inform the minister that I have been involved in arbitrations in connection with the Civil Service Association of Ontario as well.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has obviously served an apprenticeship. He is getting instructed. But seriously speaking, the private sector where all the employer has to do is answer to the shareholders is one thing; the public sector, where if we are to have a decent morale in the whole of the public service we must have the right kind of relationship between one group and another, is another thing.

In a case where we have appointed the civil service commission as an agency of parliament and not of the government, so that the government is not allowed to exercise favouritism over any appointments or any relativities, it would be a very dangerous thing if the government, or one minister or even parliament tried by themselves to disturb these relationships in an arbitrary way simply because the failure to disturb them was going to cause a crisis. The reason we are here and the reason we have a government and a parliament is to deal with these difficult problems; and we have to do our best to deal with them, as my hon. friend says, primarily in the interests of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PACIFIC COAST LONGSHOREMEN DISPUTE—PERSONNEL OF INDUSTRIAL INQUIRY

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, last week I announced in the house that, as part of the understanding that resulted in the resumption of operations in the British Columbia ports, an industrial inquiry commission would be appointed to investigate the causes of the stoppage, which has paralysed ports for so long and with such far-reaching adverse effects, also to make recommendations with respect to the avoidance of similar situations in future, and with respect to the undertaking for the consideration of the grievances of foremen.

I now wish to announce the appointment of Mr. Justice C. Rhodes Smith of the Court of Appeal of Manitoba as the industrial inquiry commissioner. As I am sure hon. members are aware, Mr. Justice Smith is a former minister of labour of the province of Manitoba and he served with distinction for a number of years as chairman of the Canada Labour Relations Board.

I am also pleased to announce that Mr. Justice Smith will be assisted by two assessors. One of these is Captain H. J. C. Terry, retired, of Vancouver, the former president of Northland Navigation Company Limited, who, since his retirement, has done such excellent work as president of the Pacific National Exhibition over the past few years. The other assessor is Mr. Joseph Morris, executive vice-president of the Canadian Labour Congress, who is well known and highly respected in all parts of Canada, especially on the west coast where he served with such distinction as president of the International Woodworkers Association before coming to Ottawa.

I am also pleased to announce that, pursuant to the amendments to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, to which royal assent was given late yesterday, an order in council has been passed today establishing regulations governing holiday pay for longshoremen for the eight statutory holidays. It is expected that the regulations governing annual vacations for longshoremen will be promulgated in the very near future.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL—REPORT ON DISCUSSIONS IN LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would ask the President of the Treasury Board whether he would amplify in some detail what he said yesterday about the dispute with the air traffic controllers. Can he hold out any hope that the threatened implementation of last minute legislation will be obviated and that he, representing the government, will not permit intransigence on his part, through the adoption of frozen stands, to interfere with a just and equitable settlement?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): First, I should like to deny that we have taken a frozen stand in any way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You said so yesterday.

Mr. Benson: If we had taken a frozen stand we would not now be talking with the parties involved.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They unfroze you.

Mr. Benson: Another meeting is to take place this afternoon. We have also agreed to meet tonight, and if necessary to meet all night in an attempt to solve this problem short of the Diefenbaker-Douglas formula of 40 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The latter part of the minister's remarks was entirely uncalled for.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask him whether he has forgotten the Pearson formula.

Mr. Pearson: That was only 30 per cent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Only 30 per cent.

Mr. Pearson: Ten per cent below yours.

Mr. Douglas: I have a question to address to the Prime Minister on another subject, but I rise now on a question of privilege to say I have never advocated a formula of 40 per cent. That is the minister's interpretation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Benson: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would suggest to hon. members that we should try to start this day on the right foot. I doubt that the hon. member has a question of privilege, although he certainly has the right to ask a question.

Mr. Douglas: The minister introduced an argument into his reply and I think I have the right to say that the estimate of the air traffic control employees is that the formula suggested by Judge Robinson amounts to 14 to 17 per cent.

An hon. Member: Plus 15.

Mr. Benson: What is 24 and 15?

Mr. Pearson: Thirty nine.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—PARTICIPATION BY CANADA IN NUCLEAR PLANNING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister with reference to the announcement that Canada is to be a member of the seven man committee to plan the nuclear strategy in NATO. Does acceptance of this responsibility involve repudiation of the pledge the Prime Minister made three years ago to negotiate Canada out of its nuclear role?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. Up to the establishment of this committee, nuclear planning matters had been dealt with by the NATO council as a whole. It is true that yesterday a nuclear planning group was set up as part of the NATO machinery, which will consist of seven members, including Canada, who will serve for an initial period of 18 months. At the end of that time certain members of the group will be replaced.

The purpose of the group is related to planning for nuclear defence of the alliance. It will permit broadened participation by member countries in making recommendations to the council on these matters.

The concept of a broadened participation by the members of the alliance is an important development for many reasons, not the least of which is the prospect it may advance international efforts to achieve an effective world wide non-proliferation agreement. It should be emphasized, Mr. Speaker, that membership in this group in no way increases Canada's involvement in nuclear matters. The establishment of nuclear planning machinery is simply a more efficient way of dealing with a problem which, in any event, would come before the council.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question, in view of the Prime Minister's statement that Canada has accepted the responsibility of being a member of this nuclear planning committee, at what stage are the negotiations for Canada's withdrawal from its nuclear role?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, there has already been an alteration in this respect in connection with our air division overseas. Perhaps the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) will be able to report on this matter when he returns.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if it has been brought to his attention that an old comrade of mine, a former secretary of state for external affairs, is reported as saying Canada is over playing her hand in trying to help run Europe and should consider withdrawing from NATO when the NATO treaty expires in 1969?

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO DEFERRED PROFIT SHARING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the hon. Minister of Finance but, in his absence, it may be that the hon. Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board can answer it.

Early in November I put a question on the order paper asking whether Section 79 (c) of the Income Tax Act would be amended. The hon. Minister of Finance then replied that amendments providing for the implementation of the proposed changes would be included in a bill to amend the Income Tax Act before the end of the year. As this time is fast upon us, can the hon. Minister of National Revenue tell us whether the amendments to Section 79 (c) will be put before parliament in the very near future?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, a bill will be presented to the house very soon to pick up the amendments which were included in the budget last spring, but which were not enacted at that time because of technical difficulties brought to our attention by the business community. I hope the bill will be forthcoming very soon, but I would have to consult with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) to find out when.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): As a supplementary question, will this new bill cover any possible recommendations or changes which the Minister of Finance now has in mind for his baby budget?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—CONSIDERATION PRECEDING POSSIBLE PERJURY CHARGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has referred to me the question of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker regarding Hal Banks, and asked me to answer it. Generally speaking it is not the practice to disclose what, if any, recommendations are made by the R.C.M.P., for the very obvious reason that responsibility for the ultimate decision must rest on the appropriate law officers.

The results of the investigation, to date, into allegations of perjury against Banks, were placed in the hands of the appropriate provincial authorities, and the question of charges is now under consideration by the provincial crown prosecutor in Ottawa. He has asked the R.C.M.P. to obtain certain additional information.

The two governments are co-operating on the matter closely, and as soon as conclusions have been reached any information that can properly be given at that time will be placed before the house.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in general I am in agreement with the view expressed by the minister that those things which pass between the federal and provincial governments regarding procedural investigations, charges and the like, should not be revealed. However, I should like to ask him this: Did the law officers of the crown in the Department of Justice not conclude that on the basis of the information which has been secured not only was there a prima facie case against Banks, but a very strong one.

Mr. Pennell: The right hon. Leader of the Opposition has referred to the law officers in the plural. I may say that the law officer in this case felt the result of the investigation was of such a nature that it should be placed before the crown attorney for consideration.

AIR POLLUTION

AVAILABILITY IN CANADA OF EXHAUST CONTROL DEVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, yesterday a Canadian automobile executive announced—and I should like to quote one very brief sentence—"that exhaust control devices to limit air pollution would probably be available in Canada in 1968 only as extra cost items, since these standards are not imposed by law as they are now in the U.S." I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether in 1968 Canadians will be protected by Canadian standards similar to those now mandatory in the United States to protect the health of our people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am just wondering whether the question as asked is urgent. I realize the importance of the matter, but the hon. member is referring to protection which might be afforded Canadians in 1968. I think the question might be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, the industry already has announced its intention. We cannot waste any time. In view of the statement by the industry is the Minister of Industry now satisfied that because of the auto pact Canadians can rely on United States laws and regulations for the protection of the Canadian people?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians are rather more interested in results than in the method or technique by which they are achieved. I do not think, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare has pointed out, that it has been established yet that the health of Canadians in a great many Canadian communities would be adversely affected by failure to adopt this particular exhaust device. I suggest where it is established that this is needed in Canada, it will be employed.

Mr. Grafftey: Have either the Minister of Industry or the Minister of National Health and Welfare been in touch with officials in either Toronto or Montreal, where this is a most serious problem?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oxford.

Inquiries of the Ministry

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE

REGULATIONS GOVERNING APPLICATION OF PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the Christmas season is now approaching I am wondering whether the minister could tell us how soon the regulations under the Canada Assistance Plan will be promulgated so that many of those people who are in need and disabled may know what qualifications they must have in order to receive assistance.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is a subject which was discussed in the house the other evening. I hope to have the regulations approved by the Governor in Council as soon as possible. Following that it will be possible to sign agreements with the provinces. I should like to point out to my hon. friend, however, that under the Canada Assistance Plan the federal government will share the cost with the provinces back to April 1 of this year.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL—IMPLEMENTATION OF WAGE PROVISIONS IN JUDGE ROBINSON'S REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the President of the Treasury Board. So that there will be no question in the minds of the people regarding this dispute, will he say now whether the government is prepared to implement the recommendation in respect of wages which is contained in the report of Judge Robinson, an appointee of the government?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada cannot afford a salary increase of 40 per cent over a two year period in this particular instance.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, of course this 40 per cent is a smokescreen on the part of the minister. The exact amount is 17 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the minister suggesting that Judge Robinson, a man of great experience, was simply appointed to play around with this problem so that the government could refuse to accept his recommendations?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the government has not been playing around with this report, it has studied it with care, it is the opposition that has been playing around with it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the minister, without in any way referring to the so-called 40 per cent increase. Is it not true that representations received from the staff associations have in fact included a concession to the Treasury Board? Have they not indicated they would be willing to accept something less than what was recommended by Judge Robinson in this regard?

Mr. Benson: As I said, Mr. Speaker, everything that takes place during the negotiations is, by agreement, to be kept secret. I do not intend to disclose what has happened during these negotiations between representatives of the employers and employees. Perhaps the hon. member has received information from some source, but I have undertaken not to disclose this information.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the minister, in view of the situation which now exists and in view of the fact that negotiations are still taking place this afternoon. Has the strike deadline been escalated or has it been set for a later date? What is the situation?

Mr. Benson: The strike deadline is exactly the same, as far as I am aware.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the minister, in view of his comments to the effect that the Canadian people cannot afford the recommended increase. Can the Canadian people afford to pay out $11 million on that pile of junk called the Bonaventure?

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether, when he is talking about a 40 per cent increase, he is talking about an increase which has been agreed upon? Is there any truth in the report that Judge Robinson recommended an increase averaging 14 per cent to 17 per cent? When the minister refers to 40 per cent is he in fact talking about the total increases which have taken place over a period of time?

Mr. Benson: In order to clarify this matter, Mr. Speaker, I should point out that we are talking about a two year period and a contract which was agreed to on July 1, 1965, running to July 1, 1967. During that two year period a 15 per cent increase will take place. Having in mind the additional amount, it is my understanding that the total will amount to about 40 per cent, if Judge Robinson's recommendations are accepted.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question. I am sorry to appear to be badgering the minister, but has the minister proposed to the staff associations an extension of the period during which this agreement will be in effect, or has he suggested that these staff associations should accept the recommendations of Judge Robinson in respect of July 1 of next year? Will the minister be frank to this parliament?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely frank with this parlia ment, except that I will not—

Mr. Diefenbaker: "Except".

Mr. Benson: —disclose what has taken place, so far as the negotiations are concerned, and I will retain that position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: You are throwing aspersions on the negotiations without disclosing the facts.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NOVA SCOTIA—UNEMPLOYMENT IN STEEL INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is he in a position to indicate what action the government intends to take in respect of growing unemployment in the province of Nova Scotia in the steel industry? This unemployment is now occurring in Cape Breton, and Amherst, where 200 employees have been put out of work.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): A meeting was held yesterday to deal with this matter of urgent importance.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Prime Minister indicated that proposals were being formulated to alleviate this situation in respect of the steel industry in Cape Breton. Has he any announcement to make on that, and if not will the announcement be made before the Christmas recess?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it will be made as soon as we can possibly make it.

SPORTS

PEE-WEES—REFUSAL TO AUTHORIZE TRIP TO EUROPE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Is the Prime Minister aware that two pee-wee hockey teams, one from Cap-de-la-Madeleine and one from Ville LaSalle, were selected to make an exhibition tour in Europe to defend the colours of Expo '67, and that the officials of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association refuse to authorize such tour? Would the Prime Minister use his influence to obtain such authorization?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Prime Minister has undoubtedly noted the suggestions made by the hon. member.

Mr. Mongrain: May I raise this question at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER PROCEDURAL CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question either to the Prime Minister or to the government house leader. In view of the fact that this session might end some day, and that when it does the provisional rules of procedure under which we are operating will lapse, will the government consider at an early date establishing an all-party committee to look at our procedures so that we can plan something for the next session of this parliament?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker this matter is already under very serious consideration. I hope that without any delay it will be possible to discuss this very important matter with representatives of other parties.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister not agree that the new rules do not improve our procedure and have been the cause of some delay in the work of this house?

Mr. Pearson: The present rules have been an improvement but I think we can improve the improvement.

FISHERIES

NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING 12 MILE LIMIT—ESTABLISHMENT OF BASE LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that President Johnson recently signed the contiguous fishery zone bill giving the United States an exclusive fishing area up to 12 miles off its shores, what progress is being made by the government to conclude negotiations on the 12 mile Canadian fishing limit which was to extend from straight base lines drawn from headland to headland on Canada's Pacific and Atlantic coasts, as agreed to in July, 1964?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, may I remind the hon. member that in the bill signed by President Johnson there is a provision recognizing historic fishing rights, which is quite similar to the policy adopted by the Canadian government.

With regard to the establishment of straight base lines, a meeting was held last week with officials of the United States. Also I understand that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will have discussions today on this matter with Secretary of State Rusk.

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that the United States have now established their own 12 mile limit, could the minister inform the house what objections they have to the establishment by Canada of a similar contiguous fishing zone off our own coasts?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I thought the hon. member was well aware of the fact that Canada is enforcing its 12 mile fishing zone. May I say for his information that only last week over 60 U.S.S.R. fishing vessels were operating off the west coast and every one of them was operating outside the 12 mile fishing zone, thereby abiding by Canadian regulations.

Mr. Crouse: I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I am well aware of the fact that the Canadian government is enforcing a 12 mile fishing zone; but could the minister tell me when the government intends to implement the 12 mile fishing zone legislation implied in the act which was passed in 1964, according to which the 12 mile zone would extend from straight base lines drawn from headland to headland?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very important matter and the minister should reply to my question.

Mr. Speaker: I did not say the minister could not reply. I rose for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the hon. member the fact that he should ask a question. He has now done so and the minister apparently wishes to reply to it.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to reply to this question, it was made very clear at the time that straight base lines would be established following negotiations with the countries involved. Such negotiations have been under way ever since the new act was passed by parliament, and we hope they will be completed in the very near future.

FREEDOM FROM DUPLICATION IN COMPILING MARKET ANALYSES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the President of the Treasury Board based on the replies given on two separate occasions this week by the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. These refer to the work that is being done in both departments with regard to a labour market analysis. I should like to ask him if officials in his department would investigate this duplication of services and thus effect a saving in the unnecessary expenditures involved?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. When a question on this subject was asked by an hon. member some days ago I stated that work in this field was being done by the Department of Labour and that some work was also being done by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. As a result of that question, and of a second question asked a day or so ago I directed that an investigation be made into the whole matter. I find that the work is now actually being done by the Department of Manpower and Immigration, and not by the Department of Labour. There is no duplication of the service and I apologize to the house for any misunderstanding which might have arisen from my earlier statement.

PUBLIC WORKS

PEMBROKE, ONT., WHARF FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the extremely unsafe condition of the old wharf on the Pembroke waterfront and the urgent need for new wharf facilities for small boats, can the minister tell us at what stage are the plans for improvement which were submitted last August 13?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe that the question should be placed on the order paper, or else the hon. member could discuss it in the adjournment debate.

Mr. Hopkins: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

UNITED NATIONS

RHODESIA—OFFER OF PEACE KEEPING FORCE TO SMITH GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, last Monday I addressed a question to the Prime Minister and I did not quite catch his answer. Instead of repeating my question I read the answer in Hansard. I could have repeated my question to the Prime Minister yesterday but I will do it today. It refers to the proposal of Prime Minister Wilson to Prime Minister Smith on the establishment of a small white peace keeping force drawn from some Commonwealth countries. In answer to my question the Prime Minister said that Mr. Smith had refused all proposals. My question was whether Prime Minister Wilson had advised Canada of such a proposal prior to his meeting with Mr. Smith.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether Prime Minister Wilson made this proposal in the terms in which my hon. friend has put it. There have been reports in the press that this was part of the exchange of views between the two political leaders. However, the matter did come up at the prime ministers conference which was held a year and a half or two years ago, at which the Rhodesian matter was discussed and at which this matter was put forward as a possible suggestion. I might say that at that time it did not receive too much support.

CANADIAN CONFEDERATION

OBSERVANCE OF BIRTHDAY OF SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask him whether now, in the absence of any official recognition by this particular parliament of one of the great architects of confederation, he would consider or ask the government to consider the establishment of January 11, the birthday of Sir John A. Macdonald, as a national holiday?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since this is such an important question I really think it should be put on the order paper.

EDUCATION

LICENCES FOR LABORATORY APPARATUS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I ask the Solicitor General whether in the light of the recent seizure by the R.C.M. Police in Toronto from a school teacher of a small distilling apparatus similar to that used in grade 7 science classes, it is the government's policy that all schools must now have licences for such distilling apparatus in their laboratories and classrooms?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure how urgent the question is but I suggest that, like the previous one, it might be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Fulton: I think there might be some urgency, since the schools might like to know what their position is.

BANK OF WESTERN CANADA

DIVERSIFICATION OF INTEREST

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance may I bring to the attention of the Prime Minister for his consideration a move by Wellington Finance Corporation Limited, which is now in the process of taking over a total of some 46 per cent of the assets of the Bank of Western Canada, when the bank charter that was granted was on the distinct understanding that financial support would be on the basis of diversified interests. Now, as a result of this action, the Sinclair Stevens interests and British International Finance Group will have an overwhelming controlling interest in a bank that presumably was set up in order to be of assistance to the prairie provinces. Will the Prime Minister have this matter looked into because, on the face of it, it seems detrimental to the public interest.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the premises on which the question was based I will be very glad to discuss it with the Minister of Finance and have the matter looked into.

UNITED NATIONS

SOUTH AFRICA—ABSTENTION BY CANADA ON APARTHEID VOTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I wonder whether he is able to answer today the question I asked on Tuesday, and which was taken as notice by his parliamentary secretary. My question concerned Canada's abstention in the vote in the United Nations on the resolution regarding South Africa.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be very glad to look into that, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

GUIDE LINES ISSUED BY U.S. TO CANADIAN SUBSIDIARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I will address my question to the Prime Minister, in view of the absence of the Minister of Finance. My question is based on a report received from Washington yesterday that the United States administration is issuing or has issued new guide lines to subsidiaries of United States corporations operating in Canada which, if followed, would have a serious effect on Canada's balance of payments position. The question I want to ask the Prime Minister is whether the government is reviewing any possible steps which can be taken to prevent this action on the part of the United States government, which would have this deleterious effect upon our balance of payments problem?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope my hon. friend will let me take this important question as notice.

TRANSPORTATION

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS CONNECTED WITH NATIONAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Are there any railway financial arrangements to be made, dependent on the new transport bill? If so, will the government negotiate extensions, if the new transport bill is still under discussion this calendar year and not passed by the house?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this question has to do with a matter which is to be discussed, I trust and pray, later today, and it would be more appropriate to ask the question in this debate than on orders of the day.

EDUCATION

MCGILL UNIVERSITY—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister state whether any action has been taken by his government to assist McGill University in its present serious financial crisis?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, McGill University does undoubtedly receive assistance from the federal government in the manner provided by the arrangements we have made with the provinces. No special steps have been taken in this regard.

Mr. Alkenbrack: A supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister not consider this situation to be discriminatory against this very important national institution of education?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—EXTENSION OF CHRISTMAS TRUCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister of which I have given him notice. Has the Canadian government made any representations to the governments in Washington and Hanoi with regard to the extension of the Christmas truce in the hostilities in Viet Nam along the lines proposed by His Holiness the Pope and the Secretary General of the United Nations?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for having given me notice of his question. The government has welcomed, as I am sure have all hon. members of the house, the decision to institute truces in the war in Viet Nam at Christmas and the New Year, and the proposal for a further truce at the lunar new year in February. The possibility of prolonging these truces and making them the basis for introducing an element of reducing and ending hostilities is one which we earnestly hope the parties to the conflict will consider very seriously, as it is an important preliminary step toward peace. It is with this possibility in mind that we have welcomed, as I am sure the house welcomes, the spirit in which His Holiness the Pope and the Secretary General have issued their appeals.

I have seen news reports from Washington this morning, as my hon. friend may have, which indicate that the United States government would be willing to discuss, if I may quote from one particular report, "a prolonged cease fire or any other reduction in the fighting in Viet Nam in direct negotiation with the communist side". That is the end of the quotation from the report.

I am sure that I speak for all members in expressing the hope that some comparable indication will be forthcoming from the other side. Canada's views on this problem, Mr. Speaker, are well known to the capitals concerned. These views have also been discussed with the Pope and the Secretary General of the United Nations.

Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, I can only say that if there is any helpful role that we can play in relation to a possible cease fire, either individually or as a member of the international commission, we would be only too happy to have the privilege of doing this.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CYPRUS—SHIPMENTS OF ARMS FROM CZECHOSLOVAKIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Has Canada made representations to the governments of Czechoslovakia and Cyprus regarding arms shipments to Cyprus which will have the effect of endangering the Canadian forces there?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government of President Makarios earlier this year concluded an arms deal with Czechoslovakia under which Czech arms would be supplied to the Cypriot police force, which is probably the basis of my hon. friend's question. The first shipment arrived in Cyprus toward the end of November and a second shipment is expected shortly. The Makarios government has stated, however, that these arms will not be issued at the present time and will be stored under mainland Greek control.

The Canadian government naturally regrets any action such as the importation of further arms into Cyprus, which can only have the effect of increasing tension on the island between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities. The importation of these arms is particularly regrettable since the Greek and Turkish governments are currently engaged in talks designed to make progress toward an agreed settlement of the Cyprus problem.

We are, Mr. Speaker, keeping in close touch with the situation in Cyprus through our High Commissioner in Nicosia and our representatives in the other countries principally concerned, including our representative in Prague.

TRANSPORTATION

DISCUSSION AMONG MINISTERS RESPECTING GENERAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that, according to a recent statement by Dr. Lizotte, Quebec minister of transport, the province of Quebec and several other provinces are refusing any kind of federal control over transportation, will the minister consider amending Bill No. C-231 or convening provincial ministers of transport to reach some kind of an agreement?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, while I do not think there is the slightest question that the exclusive jurisdiction in the field of interprovincial and international motor transport belongs to this parliament as clearly defined by a decision of the courts, I do not think we ought to enter into a debate on this subject at this time, sir, when the bill will be before us in an hour or so.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

ROCKGLEN-KILLDEER, SASK.—ABANDONMENT OF LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport in regard to an application of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to abandon 24.6 miles of line between Rockglen and Killdeer, Saskatchewan. In its application it stated that this line is in the "eligible for abandonment" category, without waiting upon the passage of Bill No. C-231, and that the board is prepared to proceed with this application.

In the light of applications for railway line abandonment now being heard by the Board of Transport Commissioners, will the minister assure us that the pledge he gave to the railway committee in June, 1964, is still in effect?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I think this would be a most suitable subject for discussion when the bill is before us.

AGRICULTURE

AVAILABILITY OF FEED GRAIN IN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Madill (Dufferin-Simcoe): My question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. I would ask him whether his department has been able to assist feed brokers in Ontario to acquire western wheat of grades nos. 5 and 6 for commercial use at the Collingwood and Midland grain elevators, which service the central Ontario feed dealers and feeders. The question is urgent, since we are now approaching the end of the navigation season, and Ontario has always been a market for western grain.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): For the hon. member's information, there is a shortage of wheat for feed inasmuch as the quality of the crop this year was very high.

[Mr. Allard.]

This matter falls particularly within the province of the Minister of Forestry and the new feed grain agency. I will draw it to the attention of my colleague to see whether that agency can take some remedial action.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

AMENDMENT TO CRIMINAL CODE RESPECTING CONFESSIONS OF ACCUSED PERSONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, a great parliamentarian who has more than once tamed the lions of the opposition.

My question is as follows: In view of the alleged police brutality going on in Quebec—which has led the bar of the province of Quebec to demand a royal inquiry—is the government looking into the advisability of introducing amendments to the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act, taking as a pattern a ruling handed down by the United States Supreme Court, ordering the courts to deny the validity of a prisoner's confession when the said confession with respect to a major offense is made in the absence of the prisoner's lawyer?

Mr. Speaker: I might point out to the hon. member that the question is probably not very urgent. He may put his question forward at ten o'clock.

Mr. Choquette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I feel my question is quite important. As a matter of fact, I am sending the provincial minister of justice, Mr. Bertrand, a report stating that one of my clients has suffered police brutality. I would like to know if the federal Minister of Justice has anything to say in this regard?

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION OF GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT AND DETERMINATION OF PENSIONERS' INCOMES

The house resumed from Tuesday, December 13, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-251 to amend the Old Age Security Act—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On Clause 1—Definitions

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose at the last sitting, clause 1 was being discussed. Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Simpson: Before clause 1 carries, can the minister tell us whether he has been able to get in touch with his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, concerning the questions I put to him at the last sitting?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, I have been in touch with my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. My officials have also had an opportunity to discuss this question with the officials of the other department. It appears that the number of Indians receiving supplementation of old age security pensions through extra payments from the department is not great and we expect that generally the great majority of the pensioned Indian population will be better off as a result of pension supplements.

In cases where the amount of $105 is not enough to meet the requirements of Indian pensioners, the department of Indian affairs will be prepared to pay additional assistance. We think the number of cases involved will be small, and that those mainly affected will be Indians in need of special care living off the reservations.

Mr. Simpson: The minister has told us that in his opinion the great majority of Indians receiving old age pensions, those who will be receiving the $105 a month, will be better off under this legislation. I agree that this may be the case. Nevertheless, in my opinion $105 a month is not enough for an old age pensioner living in an isolated area, bearing in mind the extremely high cost of living in such areas. And most of the people I am concerned about now do live in isolated areas. I happen to know that a great many Indian old age pensioners are receiving very little more than their $75 a month. The department has undoubtedly felt that $75 a month is sufficient. I say it is not.

In any case, it appears to me that the minister is not able to assure us that any of the pensioners who are now receiving supplementary assistance from the Indian Affairs branch, in addition to the $75 a month, will continue to receive assistance supplementary to the extra $30 a month they may be receiving.

I can understand the hon. gentleman's difficulty when it comes to giving such an assurance. But I should like to point out to him that if the federal government, which controls the department concerned, cannot give this committee an assurance that supplementary payments will be continued, it is setting a precedent for the provinces; faced with such an example, the provinces will be considering very closely the idea of decreasing their own supplementary payments to recipients of old age pensions. This is what I am afraid will happen. I do not think there is much hope that the provinces will continue to make these supplementary payments unless the federal government itself can assure the committee that it intends to take the initiative and continue this class of payments to old age pensioners among our Indian people.

Mr. Chatterton: I have two minor points. When we come to later clauses dealing with the application of this measure, we shall be asking some questions about the type of application which may be imposed.

I understand a draft application form has been prepared. Would the minister make copies of it available to us? We recognize it would merely be a starting point, but it would give us some idea of the type of application form which may be necessary for the purposes of this bill.

Second, has the minister consulted with the Minister of Veterans Affairs as to the possibility that the supplementary payment made under this amendment would not be considered as income for the purposes of war veterans allowance? I recognize that payment of war veterans allowance is not considered as income for the purposes of this bill, but it may work the other way around. The receipt of a possible $30 under this bill might prejudice the war veterans allowance payment.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, last Monday the minister and I were just commencing a very interesting discussion with regard to certain questions which could arise as to the legality of this legislation, having in mind certain actions which might be taken by certain provinces. Since then I have reviewed Hansard, including the discussion initiated by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, the speech made by the hon. member for Sherbrooke and the statement made by the minister in response to questions which I asked him.

I have too much respect for the minister as a good parliamentarian not to feel that his answer to me was carefully phrased to avoid answering very important questions, and I believe this bill should not be passed until we receive some better answers.

I have taken the position throughout, Mr. Chairman, that the responsibility of the federal government should be exercised in respect of subject matters which are essential to make the central government strong and viable. I have always supported the government in its efforts in that regard, but here we have something entirely different. Here we are getting into the twilight area, the gray zone between federal and provincial governments.

It is all very well for the minister to say to me, and quite correctly, that as matters now stand the government has a legal opinion to the effect it is entitled to enact legislation of this kind. I accept that fact. There is no doubt about it, but I am looking to what the situation will be respecting this legislation in the event that a province, as one province has already indicated, enacts legislation of a similar kind.

I can do no better, for the purposes of the record, than put the very brief provision of section 94A of the British North America Act on record at this point. It reads:

> It is hereby declared that the Parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to old age pensions in Canada, but no law made by the Parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to old age pensions.

It is notorious that this section was enacted in 1951, after several abortive attempts had been made to give to the federal government exclusive jurisdiction in this particular matter. In 1964, when the government secured the constitutional amendments providing for supplementary benefits, in the form of survivor and disability clauses, I brought this matter up in the house. I asked the Prime Minister a question in June, 1964. I asked why the government at that time, when securing a constitutional amendment, did not attempt to secure the exclusive right to deal with old age pensions and matters of this description.

I did not get any answer, but in the course of the debate which followed, when the address was presented by the Prime Minister, I again brought this matter to the attention of the government and the Prime Minister. I referred to the fact that when the first amendment was introduced in 1951, as originally proposed by hon. Mr. Garson, at that time the minister of justice, it was on a very simple basis. It was to the effect that notwithstanding anything in the British North America Act, the parliament of Canada may make laws in relation to old age pensions.

That was the orignial proposal of the federal government but the provinces would not accept it, for reasons which they thought adequate. So, as a result of discussions and correspondence between the premiers and the federal government, a condition was added which was, as I have just read, that "no law made by the parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature..."

The current situation has been inflamed by events. We have seen the introduction of a statement into the Quebec legislature that it is their intention to enact old age pension laws. What then will be the position of this legislation here? Let us assume—and it is not at all unlikely—that the type of legislation which the province of Quebec, or any other province, may introduce will establish certain age limits which may differ from the age limits in this legislation. They may establish in their legislation different amounts. They may establish in their legislation different conditions of payment and sources of funds.

Surely, under those conditions it cannot be successfully argued that the continued attempt to implement the provisions of this, and the original legislation upon which it is based, will not have the effect of interfering with the operation of a provincial act dealing with old age pentions? I am not going to follow this line of argument, nor is this the place to do so, through to its completion. But, Mr. Chairman, I suggest this is a very real possibility and so, while the minister was quite correct on Monday when he said the government has every legal right to enact this legislation—and that is a statement with which I wholeheartedly agree—this will not necessarily be the case when the province of Quebec, or any other province if it so sees fit, exercises its constitutional responsibility to deal with matters of this kind. The likely result of the operation of this federal legislation will be to interfere with the operation of the provincial legislation.

What is the government going to do then? What will be the position of the pensioners? What about the sources of funds? What about the old age security fund? These are matters with which the government must be concerned, and it is not for the minister to fob off the committee with the casual statement which he made on Monday. It is a very difficult problem.

The minister may well say in reply to my comments that this is all theoretical, that it is all hypothetical, but in the light of the statement in the speech from the throne in the Quebec legislature, it is getting to be more than theoretical. I think the members of this committee are entitled to some indication as to what the views of the government are, not as the situation is today but as it may well be if such an event comes about.

Before I resume my seat I make this suggestion to the minister, that he might well give serious consideration to the provisions of the Supreme Court Act. There is a very simple and adequate remedy under, I believe, section 55, where the Governor in Council has the right to submit to the Supreme Court references not only as to existing legislation but as to the powers of either the legislature of any province or of the federal government which have been exercised or which may be exercised.

I suggest to the minister that if it does become apparent that specific legislation is going to be introduced in the province of Quebec then there is a duty incumbent upon this government to seek, through the medium of the Supreme Court Act, an opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada as to what would be the situation. I put this suggestion quite sincerely to the minister. I suggest the government should not leave this question until the last, until we have in existence legislation of a province and this legislation of the federal government, which are in direct conflict. There is very grave doubt as to whether or not this legislation, which we are now being asked to enact, is in fact valid in view of the possible operation of provincial legislation.

Mr. Simpson: I wonder whether the minister would enlighten me a little further with regard to some of the payments which will not be considered to be income. I know that he has explained this quite fully in this house and on the national television service, but perhaps I might ask the question in this form: The minister has said that assistance from relatives, ownership of property, money which people may have in the bank, and I believe he mentioned social assistance, will not be considered as income when the income of the old age pensioner is computed. Are there other things which the minister has in mind? Could the minister tell us very briefly what other things he has in mind in this regard?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, under this proposed measure, we define income as it is defined in the Income Tax Act. In addition to those items which have been mentioned by the hon. member for Churchill we would not regard, for example, unemployment insurance benefits as income for purposes of this supplement; nor would we regard as income payment for workmen's compensation or any form of social assistance including war veterans' allowances; nor would we consider as income disability pensions received by veterans with regard to war service or indeed pensions in a form which in a sense is an award for damages.

These are among the additional items which are not included which come to mind immediately. We do not include donations or gifts from relatives or friends. Old age pensioners receiving gifts from their children, for example, would not be expected to regard these as income. As you may remember the Senate committee recommended that all cash income be regarded as income for the purposes of the program, but we have not accepted that definition. We have accepted the definition of income as provided by the Income Tax Act and, accordingly, we have knocked out quite a number of items which otherwise might have been included, if the Senate conclusion had been accepted.

Mr. Simpson: The minister may not be able to tell me this—I do not know myself—but I am wondering whether payments which are made to Indians under treaties are, under the Income Tax Act, classed as income. Perhaps the minister might assure the house that these payments will not be taken into consideration when the income of the Indian people is computed in respect of applications for the extra supplementary assistance.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, this point has been raised before. I will look into the matter and attempt to provide an answer.

Mr. Simpson: In checking the point, would the minister consider including this in the bill. He mentioned payments for damages. I would say that in some measure the treaty payments to the Indian people have been made to them in respect of a loss of something which they once owned. I think the minister should give very serious consideration to this, and have it included in the bill.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, there is one question I should like to ask the minister which is supplementary to those which already have been asked. I take it that it is fundamental that old age security is counted as income. What is the position in respect of the recipients of old age security in provinces where the provincial government is supplementing the old age security and has increased it, as in the case of Prince Edward Island, to $100 a month? Will the additional amount be counted as income? In other words, will the old age security recipients in Prince Edward Island qualify only for $5 from the federal fund or will the province be in a position to withdraw that supplement? If the provincial supplement is withdrawn will the recipients of old age security then become eligible for benefits under this legislation?

Mr. MacEachen: The pension payment made in Prince Edward Island was considered. In proposed section 9, as contained in clause 3, there is a provision that the amount of any pension or supplement and the amount of any similar payment under a law of the legislature of a province shall not be regarded as income. Therefore, if an applicant from Prince Edward Island applied for this guaranteed income supplement such an applicant would not have to put down on the application form as income the $25 of the P.E.I. pension payment. It is then up to the province to do what it wishes to do. We do not, however, disqualify any pensioner from receiving this benefit by virtue of a supplement received from a province.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I think the proposition which has been advanced here this afternoon dealing with the constitutional position in respect to old age pension legislation must be answered by the government. That the government should sit in solitary splendour and look on while a question of such importance is raised is something which cannot be accepted by this house. Indeed, it is quite amazing to me, as I read my correspondence from day to day, the number of people who write to me and say, "Well now, what stand is being taken on behalf of a straight pension to all Canadians in view of the fact that each Canadian who pays income tax, corporation tax, and the like, has made a contribution which entitles him to a pension".

No longer is there any suggestion in legislation of this kind that what is being granted is in the nature of an emolument or benefit. Today it constitutes an earned income in consequence of contributions made by all Canadians. I should like to make clear once more that our attitude has been, and still is, that what is being done here by the government is unjust and unfair, and that all Canadians who are entitled to the old age pension should receive the amount of the pension which we continually and regularly have advocated should be $100 a month.

What is perpetrated by this legislation is a departure from a principle established and accepted by Canadians as a whole, that everyone should be entitled to the same pension regardless of his or her circumstances. The argument that a means test should be applied today is one that cannot be accepted. This is simply a step backwards, as has been said over and over again during the course of this debate, and is detrimental to human dignity. No matter what attitude the government adopts, what is being done here is an application of the means test. The government tries to dignify it by calling it another name, but a rose by any other name is just as sweet and a thorn by any other name is just as "Sharp". This is without doubt an economic and political gimmick, because we are departing from a principle which has been accepted over the years.

I am not going to go into detail in respect of this matter as it has been dealt with fully by other hon. members, but I should like to point out again that the opposition has repeatedly moved amendments, in an endeavour to recruit the support of members on the government side, to increase pensions to $100 per month. We went as far as to suggest that a vote on such an amendment would not be considered a vote of non-confidence, but the government has lined up all the Liberal members in this house to vote against such an increase, amounting to $25 per month.

I do not intend to name any members, although I could name one or two immediately, who today in their constituencies are endeavouring to lead their constituents to believe they are in favour of a straight increase. However vociferous they may be in and out of this house, and regardless of whether the government is right or wrong, Liberal members are always of the opinion that the government is always right.

Having said that, let me now refer to a matter of major importance. This legislation ought not to be passed until we have received an answer to the question regarding the position to be taken by the federal government when one province or another passes legislation giving that province the power and authority to grant old age pensions. It is not just a coincidence that this legislation was put off for weeks and months, and suddenly rushed into the house when the government of Quebec decided to claim jurisdiction in respect of old age pensions.

Mention has been made of the British North America Act and the section dealing particularly with old age pensions, namely Section 94A. I should like to read it again because it does not require any interpretation. Any layman or any individual who is able to read English or French can interpret this section and realize what it means. It reads:

> It is hereby declared that the parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to old age pensions in Canada, but no law made by the parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to old age pensions.

In the month of April, 1963 the Prime Minister enunciated a principle, which I queried at the time and still do, which was disruptive of Canadian unity. That was the declaration of the concept of two Canada. Today that concept is being departed from, retreated from and abandoned by the government. The government showed by action that it does not believe in the concept of one Canada. This government stated in 1963, 1964 and 1965 throughout this country that we were going to build up a kind of dual nation—not a duality of citizenship based on the rights of French or English Canadians—but dividing Canada into two parts. The rights go back to 1775, 1791 and 1865 as amended since then.

With all the propaganda force at its command the government has today backed away from that concept. We do not hear anything more about co-operative federalism. That was a doctrine held up as one of the great concepts that this government had evolved. Co-operative federalism as a concept is as dead today as the dodo. This government was the creator of that concept, and the destroyer of it.

I am sure the minister has had this legislation ready for a long time, and I am sure it represents hours and days of work. We asked repeatedly for this type of legislation because we were willing to accept half a loaf on the basis that half is better than none. The government refused to bring it forward until the Johnson government of Quebec said it intended to bring in old age pension legislation, assuming jurisdiction in this regard in the province of Quebec.

The minister is able to recognize the government's promise during the last election campaign to increase old age pensions by $25 per month, and he is also able to forget about that promise after a period of 13 or 14 months. The minister possesses political agility and astuteness.

Mr. Byrne: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member for Kootenay East is one who understands agility possibly better than any other member of this house.

I should like to ask the minister what the government intends to do regarding this legislation. Surely, the government does not intend to gloss over this matter and get the measure through simply by sitting silent and inert. We want to know what is going to happen and what the government intends to do.

As a result of the amendment to the British North America Act of 1951, the provinces joined together in accepting the principle that the federal government could bring in old age pensions, but that amendment did not provide for exclusiveness. The very wording of the section indicates that it was intended to maintain and preserve this exclusive right of the provinces to provide old age pensions.

I will read this section again so that there will be no mistake:

> —but no law made by the parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to old age pensions.

When the legislature of Quebec passes the legislation which is embodied in the Speech from the Throne and determines, as evidence by the declaration which has already been made, to appropriate exclusively to the legislature of that Province jurisdiction over old age security in the province, what will be the attitude of the federal government? When Mr. Lesage was premier all he did was to ask, and generally he received what he asked for because the Federal government did not want to argue with a province which saw eye to eye with it in the legions of liberalism. However, suddenly this government has developed a new concept, and co-operative federalism has died an unnatural death. I am sure the minister will have gone into this matter most thoroughly and his advisers will have given the fullest consideration to the eventualities which will arise if the legislation is passed in Quebec.

Will the minister say to the province of Quebec that section 94A gives the federal government the right to pass the legislation on old age pensions? Section 94A gives us no exclusive right whatsoever; we only have a permissive one. If the province of Quebec passes legislation to provide a pension of $100 a month, is it the intention of the government of Canada to bring about something like the monstrosity which it brought forward in connection with health insurance? In the case of health insurance, the government accepted the principle of the duality of insurance plans. Does the government of Canada intend to hand over to the province of Quebec—by way of advance or by whatever other method is followed, such as a subsidy—an amount that will be sufficient to cover the total expenditure to be made by that province on old age pensions? The government finds itself in a desperate position, and I can understand the minister's unaccustomed silence in this regard.

The government finds itself today in a frightful predicament on the question of university education which was mentioned by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox. He asked what the government intends to do about McGill University, and the answer was that they would not get into that problem because it is within the jurisdiction of the province.

However, when we were in office we were able to bring about a formula whereby the province of Quebec—at the time when Colonel Sauvé was premier of that province—accepted the $27 million which had been amassed for university education, under a formula which was acceptable to both sides. However, under that formula the money that was paid to the province of Quebec for education could only be paid to those institutions that qualified. In other words, they qualified on a per capita basis in accordance with the same requirements which obtained in other provinces.

When this government took office it decided, in its wholesale denunciation of all those principles that had been acceptable for years to embrace the idea of co-operative federalism, under which the amount advanced to any one province for educational purposes could be used in any other area. In other words, what was paid to a province for university grants could be used for other purposes. This money was simply placed in a consolidated fund, and the designation of this sum for any one purpose was made by the legislature of that province.

Now, the government is in a fine jam. I am interested to hear how they will get out of it. If the legislature of Quebec passes this legislation—and if I read Mr. Lesage's views correctly he is certainly not going to oppose the adoption of this legislation—then what will the government of Canada do? They can say that this will come up later. We want to know now what they are going to do.

A moment ago when a question was raised in a general way and reference was made to a submission to the Supreme Court of Canada, the minister gave it his full attention but did not articulate any reply or make any suggestion regarding the attitude of the government. I would like to hear him now, as an authority on this subject. He must be an authority in view of the tremendous amount of expenditure that is now being made for social security, much of which is within the jurisdiction of the provinces. Naturally, he will be able to place before us clearly and succinctly answers to the following questions: first, has the government departed from the constitutional position that it adopted regarding the concept of co-operative federalism, which has now become unco-operative federalism?

Second, will the government push any province into the position of having to accept a measure that is unconstitutional? Far be it from this government or any government to do that, so the answer would be in the negative. Then, what will the government do? What does the government intend to do when the legislation is passed by the legislature of Quebec and receives royal assent? This is something that the people of Canada have the right to know. We have seen too much chiseling away at our constitutional rights in the last three and a half years not to demand now an accounting in the particular matter that is before the house. I await with anticipation and interest the explanation which the minister will make on behalf of the government of Canada. When the question was asked in 1964, as quoted earlier by the hon. member for Peace River, no answer was given. It might have been theoretical then, but today we are approaching the moment of truth. The legislature of Quebec intends to legislate exclusively on this question which is within its jurisdiction as set out in the constitutional amendment now embodied in section 94A. If the minister cannot answer this question himself but requires the assistance of the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General, who today has become to all intents and purposes the real law officer of the crown, then I suggest that this section be allowed to stand. Otherwise, the minister should give the committee a full, complete, comprehensive and intelligible explanation of what this government is going to do. If the section stands, the government will be able to produce those in charge of the justice department and Canadians will learn once and for all where we are tending under this government.

For three years this government has followed one policy and is now running in the opposite direction. We want to know what this government intends to do in this connection; and we have a right to know before this bill is given passage by parliament.

I see the Postmaster General is in his seat. He is a man for whom I have always had a high respect, and I should like to hear from him in this regard. Is he going to depart from the constitution? I should also like to hear from the associate minister of defence on this question. I think they are the only two ministers from Quebec in the house, and I want them in on this poll. I want to hear what is their attitude, not what they are going to say on the hustings in the province of Quebec or elsewhere in Canada but what they are going to say in parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, surely the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) was right in raising the questions he has just raised with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) with regard to the legality of Bill No. C-251. Will the amendment to the Old Age Security Act reduce in any way the vested rights of Canadian provinces, not only of Quebec, but of any province?

In fact, section 94A of the British North America Act says very clearly:

> It is hereby declared that the parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to old age pensions in Canada, but no law made by the parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to old age pensions.

Mr. Chairman, the province of Quebec has stated very firmly and straightforwardly that it intends to recuperate all its rights relating to old age security. In my opinion, it is obvious, in the spirit and the letter of the British North America Act, that old age pensions are a matter for the provinces rather than for the Canadian government.

However, it must be recognized that the Canadian government, some thirty years ago, took the initiative of giving the Canadian people legislation providing for the first old age pensions, the first old age assistance legislation in Canada.

At that time, all provinces were consulted and the provinces in general, except for the province of Quebec, which was then under a Liberal administration, agreed to let Ottawa take over legislation concerning old age security and allowances. Mr. Taschereau, the then Quebec premier said that old age pensions would amount to promoting laziness, that they would prevent children from helping their parents, in a word that children would become distorted sons or daughters, refusing to help the aged. One year later, old age pensions were accepted in the province of Quebec, as in all other Canadian provinces.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, you have to be fair with those who, at that time, were administering the country, at the federal level; as a matter of fact, they showed the way, so that the provinces might accept old age pensions. At the time nothing prevented the province of Quebec, like the others, from passing legislation to provide for the old age pensions; but, the initiative came from Ottawa and not the provinces. When we say today that Ottawa invades the rights of the provinces, when the provinces themselves were passive, paralysed or unwilling to act, I think that we have no right to blame the federal government for everything it has done in the field of old age security over the last 30 years.

Mr. Chairman, that does not stop us, however, from seeing the facts clearly as concerns Bill No. C-251 now under consideration, which provides for an increase of the pensions up to $30 a month, subject to investigations. Amendments to abolish such investigations, have been declared out of order or defeated, so that we shall have those investigations, with regard to any person who will receive any supplement to the existing pension. Even a pensioner over 70 years old, to be entitled to any old age security supplement, will have to submit to those investigations.

And I think, Mr. Chairman, that investigators and investigations will cost the Canadian taxpayers more than if the supplement of $30 proposed in the bill were granted to all those 65 and over.

It will create a bureaucracy stronger than the present one; it will be necessary to open throughout Canada offices which will cost millions of dollars to decide who is entitled to that supplement and who is not. And everyone knows that those investigations lead to gross injustice. It is obvious today when it comes to granting a pension to someone who is not 68 at the present time.

I think that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) should have inquired a little more about the cost of those investigations in Canada to find out who is entitled to a supplement and who is not. What will be required then, and who will decide if a supplement of $10 instead of $30, of $15 instead of $25 should be paid? The minister should have set up requirements, so that the members of parliament would at least know where they are going with that new bill.

I understand that the government's intention is to reach its goal, that is a minimum guaranteed income for every Canadian citizen. I do not think that the pensions will help it attain that goal, because even $100 a month is only $1,200 a year. Now, the minister is fully aware that nobody can live decently on $1,200 a year in Canada, in view of the present cost of living. It seems to me that is a well known fact.

Mr. Chairman, an interesting point was raised the other day by my colleague, the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise). He referred to a state pensioner of 65, 67 or 68 years of age, whose wife would only be 54, 55 or 58. She is not entitled to a pension due to her age. I should like to know whether two persons living together can manage with $105 a month for both of them. So, why is it not specified in the bill that when a man is eligible for a pension, his wife is also entitled to one?

At present, mothers of 55, 57 and 58 years of age must work as charwomen, at night in most cases, because her husband and herself are unable to live on $105 a month and even less on $75, as at present.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the Minister of National Health and Welfare should have urged his cabinet colleagues to be as generous for older Canadians as they are, for instance, with regard to national defence, trade and commerce, and foreign countries. I say again that we do not object to helping underdeveloped countries of the world, but let nobody tell me that our older people who get $75 or $80 a month are well off. Some people earn approximately the same amount in other countries where the cost of living is much lower than it is here. If some persons or families are reduced to poverty or destitution in several countries, we also have some in Canada. And the older persons in many cases fall in that group.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand that this bill is liable to be amended or improved any time when this or the following government will take that decision, but nevertheless, it is necessary to take into account the facts in our country which are evident to the world and show that we are one of the richest countries. If such is the case, we cannot deny Canadians, our older citizens who have devoted their life to their country, Canada, who have worked for its development and improvement, the strict right to a bare minimum, the right to have a decent standard of living in any province of our country, while respecting the wishes of each one of the provinces for, according to the British North America Act, each province has real and unquestionable priority rights in this field.

Even if Ottawa took the initiative 30 years ago, it must still respect the spirit and the letter of the Canadian constitution. It is not a question of amending the constitution, but only of respecting it, and from the moment it is respected, Ottawa will have done the provinces a service. We will even be able to say that Ottawa showed them the way 30 years ago and that, seeing that they have reached a certain maturity, we now come back to the spirit and the letter of the constitution and allow them to develop or pass legislation which they have the right to initiate in the best interest of both their population and the whole country.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Chairman, the day before yesterday I mentioned the very problem brought up today by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I was asking the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) to tell us, if a province should claim exclusive jurisdiction over old age security, whether he would be prepared to recommend that the federal government grant the province fiscal compensation to finance and administer a provincial old age secrity fund.

The minister, of course, reaffirmed what the Prime Minister stated this week to the house, namely that the federal government feels reassured with this bill as concerns the constitutionality of the legislation; in other words, the federal government is occupying this field and intends to stay there.

In today's context, that line of reasoning makes sense, of course, because as long as one, or all the provinces do not pass any old age security legislation, the federal government does not have to express its views on the matter.

However, since the Quebec government has announced in the speech from the throne that it is determined to pass legislation and to occupy the whole field of old age security, I think the federal government is now placed before an accomplished fact. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) and the cabinet should, so as to dispel any confusion that might exist in the minds of Quebec taxpayers, answer the questions we have asked, more particularly those put by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) and for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and put today by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker).

It is obvious, as the Leader of the Opposition pointed out this afternoon, that, should a province want to exercise its jurisdiction over old age security under section 94a, the federal government must withdraw from that field.

If we consider the spirit of the amendment passed in 1951, we find, especially on the part of Quebec representatives, a statement of principle to the effect that the province of Quebec, at that time, agreed to let the federal government exercise jurisdiction as regards old age security, but nevertheless kept the right to exercise its own jurisdiction in such a field when it deemed it advisable.

Now, the taxpayers of the province of Quebec are asking themselves the following questions: Should the provincial government set up its own old age security plan, will the federal government continue to exercise its own jurisdiction in the field of old age security along with the provincial government? Supposing the federal government refused to withdraw from this field, in order to administer this provincial old age security fund, will Quebec taxpayers be subjected to double taxation? Will the federal government act like in the case of joint plans? When I directed my question to the minister, I had joint schemes in mind, of course. We know that the federal government, in the case of provinces having withdrawn from some joint plans, under this system of co-operative federalism so often mentioned by the Prime Minister, decided to grant them fiscal compensation in return for the amounts they were not collecting under those joint programs.

This afternoon, the hon. member for Peace River asked the minister whether there would be any possibility of this constitutional issue, which is obviously not difficult to understand, being referred to the Supreme Court by the cabinet, so that it would have guide lines as to its exclusive jurisdiction in this field.

I must point out to the hon. member for Peace River that the premier of the province of Quebec stated before the Quebec legislature that the province of Quebec would not recognize the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court jurisdiction in this matter and that a decision by that court on old age security would not be valid. And this brings me to say that as a matter of fact, in the province of Quebec, the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court would not be recognized by provincial authorities, nor by the majority of the people concerning this constitutional jurisdiction in any field whatsoever, as to whether it belongs to the province of Quebec or to the federal government.

I believe it would be useless for the cabinet to refer this question to the Supreme Court, since the present premier of Quebec and even Mr. Lesage when he was premier of the province have often questioned the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and the validity of its decisions as regards the constitutional character of our legislation. I believe it is useless for the cabinet to ask for the opinion of the Supreme Court.

We ask the federal cabinet to reassure Quebec taxpayers and set their minds at ease, before this bill is passed, as to its eventual attitude concerning the old age security plan.

Will the central government persist in keeping this taxation field and will the taxpayers of the province of Quebec have to withstand double taxation, since they will be called upon to pay the costs of a provincial old age security plan?

Evidently, the federal government, according to the statements made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, intends to keep this taxation field.

In the reply to the question I had asked the day before yesterday, the Minister of National Health and Welfare said that according to the law and the constitution, any province is free to establish its own old age security plan.

Of course, the minister thereby suggests that the province of Quebec can establish its old age security plan, but this does not mean that the federal government will withdraw from this field which it now occupies.

In my opinion, according to section 94A, if a province wishes to exercise its jurisdiction in the field of old age security, the federal government has to get out. I believe that such is the spirit of the said section 94A.

I actually believe that it is not necessary for the cabinet to obtain an opinion from the Supreme Court in this matter. One has only to read carefully section 94A, as the hon. Leader of the Opposition said this afternoon, to be convinced that if a province wishes to exercise completely its jurisdiction in matters of old age security, it is fully entitled to do so. I think that the federal government should withdraw from a field that it occupies at present.

To my mind, there is only one solution the federal government should consider and I believe the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare can give us an answer before this bill is passed. The federal government should say this to the provinces: If you decide to set up your own old age security plan and administer it yourself, the federal government is willing to deal with you in this regard, as it does in the case of joint programs.

I ask the minister earnestly to give us an answer. The matter is of the utmost importance and the present situation is unsettling for Quebeckers. It is only fair and sensible to give us a firm reply, positive and definite, concerning his jurisdiction with regard to old age security if Quebec should decide, as it has clearly indicated it will, to take over exclusive jurisdiction in that field.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, from what we heard since the beginning of the discussion on this bill, it is obvious that every objection seems to be of a constitutional nature. However, in spite of the numerous requests put to him in this regard, the Minister of National Health and Welfare refuses stubbornly to reply to the important and essential question that representatives of all parties, as well as the independent member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) have been asking these last few days, namely: does section 94A of the British North America Act go against the bill now moved by the government in this house?

I think that the minister would help us enormously to shorten the debate and give it some direction if he had the courtesy to tell us clearly, without equivocation or shilly-shallying, as the minister responsible for presenting that legislation to the house, how he defines the responsibility of the federal government with regard to the application of that legislation under section 94A. It is not necessary to be very acutely aware of constitutional matters, Mr. Chairman, to see in black and white, at page 480 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, what is stipulated in section 94A. Here is part of it:

—but no law made by the Parliament of Canada . . . shall affect the operation of any law present or future—

It seems to me that the safeguard which the legislators included in the British North America Act is clear and protects the provincial legislatures against interference or centralization by the federal government.

Since I have other remarks to make, I am wondering if the minister is not being unfair and ill-disposed by refusing to take a stand and define the meaning he gives to that section 94A, since it is our only objection, but the main one, to that legislation.

I see that the minister is engrossed in the newspapers. Who knows but he may be reading precisely about objections raised in the house by hon. members who represent all the people of Canada. Personally, I represent a Quebec riding and I must therefore speak up for the interests of my province. Hon. members from other provinces have also made known their opposition to that legislation under that very same section 94A which is clear, unambiguous, and does not lend itself to any misunderstanding or even to a technical or legal interpretation.

In the meantime, Mr. Chairman, the minister is turning a deaf ear.

Why does he stubbornly refuse to make his position clear? What is the minister's interpretation of section 94A as far as it applies to old age pensions? The section is quite clear and it seems to me that the minister should give us an answer. If the minister says that his bill is not contrary to the B.N.A. Act, that it is not a challange to the Canadian constitution, in short, if he can give us the assurance that his bill is not contrary to the spirit behind all the legal opinions which contributed to bringing forward the 1951 amendment to the B.N.A. Act I say that he is wrong and that he is leading the country politically toward serious, to say the least, constitutional difficulties, as far as the future of this country is concerned.

If agreements between the central government and the provinces are not respected, Mr. Chairman, then what will be, in the future? Would the Minister of National Health and Welfare want, seriously and deliberately, to be instrumental in creating a strong disagreement between the provinces and the central government? Is that the spirit of co-operative federalism we have heard so much about since his government took office? If the minister would only answer our questions instead of showing silent arrogance, indifference and irresponsibility toward parliament—an attitude which has become apparent over recent years—I think serious problems could be avoided, problems which could become more serious if the government does not, as it should, spell out its understanding of the country's constitutional problems.

Some members of the house have called for constitutional committees and advocated measures so that the central government and the provinces would cooperate more closely. The present government has always postponed the matter. It has studied, it will study again; it has considered and will reconsider those problems, but has never made a positive, firm, unequivocal decision on those fundamental problems concerning the compliance with the provisions of the B.N.A. Act, a pact which has allowed us to live in a rather relative but, nevertheless, positive harmony in our country. Relying on a majority vote and availing himself of a numerical superiority, since the government can probably expect the support of the New Democratic Party, the minister wants to run counter to the B.N.A. Act and to the spirit which inspired it.

I therefore ask the minister—

An hon. Member: This is a dictatorship.

Mr. Valade: I hear someone say this is a dictatorship. It is even more, it is ostracism, it is a political hegemony that the minister is attempting to impose on this parliament, because he is fully aware that he is dealing with a means of political partisanship rather than a social measure.

If the minister knew that his silence can have serious, consequences, he would realize that none of the Quebec Liberal members had the courage to tell us, since discussion started on this bill, their position on this matter which is against one of the provisions of the B.N.A. Act. Why this silence on the part of all the Quebec Liberal members who, during the last election campaign, went around promising our senior citizens a $125 pension? Why this silence on the part of these pseudo-intellectuals, the Quebec Liberal members, namely the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier), the member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau) and other sensational Quebec members? Why do they remain perfectly silent, indeed, as silent as fishes over this bill?

In view of the fact that they represent the only province which has officially announced, through its speech from the throne, its intention to legislate in the field of old age pensions, the Quebec Liberal members sitting in this assembly have the moral and political obligation to state their position with respect to his problem.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Allard: You are asking much too much.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I am told that I ask too much but, out of the 40 odd Liberal members, I should be able to find at least one who would have the courage to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to give a clear explanation with respect to his interpretation of this particular section. And I wonder, Mr. Chairman, why it is that we must always come back on everything, implore, urge the minister to tell us what he thinks, how he interprets or what his definition is of a section of the constitutional act. Is this so very difficult for the minister?

This afternoon the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) stated that he considered the minister to be a brilliant man. I find the minister is brilliantly silent, because he knows that he is presently unable to give us his legal, historical and constitutional definition of section 94A. This is not difficult and it would be very clear. I wish to point out to the hon. minister that if he refuses to answer, he can expect that we will expose him—as we will have to—on the electoral platforms of the province of Quebec, along with those of his colleagues who refuse to give clear and plain explanations.

Mr. Chairman, our senior citizens are in urgent need. Several are in an extremely deplorable financial position. I represent a riding where the majority of voters are of the working class, and when they get to a certain age, these people can no longer earn a living with their trade, profession or occupation. Most of them are without any means of livelihood and they must receive government assistance. Whether this help comes from the provincial or the federal government does not matter, as long as somebody helps them.

Well, the Quebec government has shown its intention to assist them, to try and meet their needs, and that is why the federal government does not have to interfere in that field. It no longer has a priority nor a constitutional right to occupy the old age pension field, as it is doing at the present time, or as it wants to do.

The hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) said earlier that the federal government had taken the initiative to legislate as far as old age pensions are concerned; he was right. When the federal government did that, the provinces had shown no interest —because they did not have the means to finance such a legislation. But now the province of Quebec has shown its firm intention to legislate in that field, and if the minister keeps on refusing us a more precise definition of section 94A, I say that he runs counter to the law, he kills, right from the start, anything that we might contribute in future on the constitutional amendments, when we have developed a system for the revision of the confederation pact.

Mr. Chairman, I insist, as member of this house, and I ask and order the minister to give us an answer, or his interpretation of this section of the constitutional act referred to by several members of this house.

Why does the minister refuse stubbornly to give us an answer? Is he unable to do so? Is he short of legal advisers. Or is it because his colleagues from Quebec, on whom he based all his political propaganda during the last election, are unwilling to commit themselves with him in connection with that bill? The people have the right to know the reason for this silence which we disapprove, this silence which indicates to the people of this country the poor sense of responsibility shown by the minister in the House of Commons towards the representatives of the people. I do not understand why there is no standing order in this house compelling the minister to give explanations and state clearly his position about the discussion of a basic and unalterable principle, that is whether the minister is acting legally or illegally. I maintain, for my part, that he now acts illegally from a constitutional standpoint by forcing Quebeckers to submit to his act instead of the Quebec legislation as prescribed by the constitution.

Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that the members, and the minister knows it, are in a very difficult position or will be in a very difficult position when the time comes to vote for or against Bill C-251, because of the political aspect it implies. If members of this house were asked to vote on section 94A, concerning the bill before us, it would be a vote of censure toward the minister, and he knows it. That is why he remains silent and does not want to inform the house of his government's intentions.

We cannot afford, we, responsible members, to play politics at the expense of our senior citizens, because we consider that we have an important social role to play. But we also know that the government is not honest in introducing this legislation. Knowing already that the provincial government intends to vindicate its constitutional rights in that field, the present government and the minister place the members in a situation which does not correspond to reality and which may be interpreted as a denial of the advantages which we want to provide to our senior citizens, if we vote against the bill. And if we vote for the bill, it means that we are accomplices of the minister in betraying the provisions of the British North America Act.

That, then, is the dilemma to which this bill and the minister's silence reduce us. If the minister gave us a clear definition, an accurate interpretation of the act, I believe we could far more honestly and objectively take a stand. I feel that the minister will be responsible for whatever treasonable acts are perpetrated by his own colleagues of the province of Quebec, when the vote is taken on this bill if he does not throw some light on his present stand.

We know, Mr. Chairman, that the N.D.P. members will vote for it blindly and without hesitation. Under the cloak of social justice they flirted with the province of Quebec during the last election campaign. They said to the people of Quebec: "You know, we, in our party, understand the problem of French Canadians; we recognize the independence of the N.D.P. in the province of Quebec under Mr. So and So; we will intervene in the decisions that are made."

Today those people will blindly approve the government, without any discussion. And what are they going to say during the next election in the province of Quebec? They will have to be denounced also as opportunists who go into the province of Quebec, the way the Liberals did during the last election, gathering votes and, the following day, betraying their promises toward people who are too proud and too honourable to accept the dishonest compromise and dilemma which are being proposed to them today in this legislation.

And if the minister refuses to give answers, we shall hold him personally responsible and his government will suffer the consequences of such irresponsible action at the next election.

Mr. Chairman, I would like the minister to tell us what the British North America Act and clause 94A represent to him.

If he is unable to tell us, well, we no longer need an inefficient minister within the government, and we shall see to it that he is replaced. If the government is unable to explain itself clearly, we shall also see that it is replaced.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of prolonging this debate. Last Tuesday, on second reading, that is before consideration in committee, I had the opportunity of making comments on the subject matter of the bill as well as on its constitutional implications.

I followed with a great deal of interest this afternoon the speeches of hon. members and particularly those of members of the official opposition. The one who has just resumed his seat, the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade), as well as the speaker who preceded him, the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin), asked the minister some very judicious and important questions.

The hon. member for Sainte-Marie is wondering why the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), or the government, refuse to divulge their position and their opinion on the constitutional implications of this bill. Although the minister, it seems, does not want to answer, I think we were given a very solemn and imposing answer by another minister of the crown, the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) when we were examining another bill in this house during the present session. If I remember rightly, it was the bill concerning the creation of a cultural centre in Canada.

When some hon. members talked about the constitutional implications of this other bill, the Associate Minister of National Defence rose to condemn as shenanigans all these constitutional points often raised in this house by hon. members and based on the British North America Act. Yes, such is the attitude of Liberal members of this house and the cabinet ministers who come from the province of Quebec; for them, as for the government and the whole cabinet, constitutional implications are merely shenanigans. Hon. members should not expect an answer either for no government has ever shown such systematic obstinacy in not giving this house and the country explicit statements in order to eliminate undue conflicts. On the contrary, the government is aggravating those conflicts.

As the hon. member for Charlevoix pointed out, the government of the province of Quebec, through its new premier, Mr. Daniel Johnson, has already stated publicly that it would not accept that this point be decided by or referred to the Supreme Court of Canada.

His predecessor, Mr. Lesage, also rejected the authority of the Supreme Court as far as mining rights on the continental shelf were concerned. In that matter, in that parallel responsibility as set out under section 94A, it is clearly stipulated that a jurisdiction, a prior and exclusive responsibility is granted to a province, when it decides to enter into that field of action.

The Supreme Court, with due respect to its honourable members, is not a body which can rule on constitutional opinions and conflicts between the central and provincial governments within the federative system in which we are living. In a federative system, the central government as well as the provincial governments are equal and autonomous in their respective responsibilities. A body appointed by one level of government is not apt to rule on conflicts which could occur between the central and provincial governments.

I know quite well that before 1941, we had an objective and constitutional authority, namely the privy council in London, as decided in 1867. Now, when the two parties concerned, either the central and provincial government or provincial governments, disagreed on the interpretation of the constitution, the privy council in London delivered its ruling on the appeal. Before 1949, there was an objective organization to settle the disputes between two levels of equal and autonomous governments within a federative system. But the federal government of the day abolished appeals to the privy council, which was a very good thing, not from the viewpoint of the constitution but of the emancipation of Canada, of the achievement of domestic and international sovereignty. Among the signs of sovereignty, an independent and self-governing country within the commonwealth of nations had the power to decide its contentious matters, in last report, and it is under the provisions of the Statute of Westminster, of December 11, 1931, that the privy council, in London, was abolished as a final court of appeal in 1949. Since 1949, we do not have in our country an objective constitutional court, whose members would be appointed by the central and the provincial governments to represent precisely those various viewpoints, within federalism, of the various governments with regard to their equality and autonomy.

For the above reasons, the Quebec government and probably other provincial governments if they want to speak more openly, and millions of Canadians, are of the opinion that there is no court in our country to provide objective opinions on constitutional interpretations. And this government is always dragging its feet in this matter as well as in many others.

In regard to constitutional reforms, it has created, so it seems, an unofficial committee of public servants. Imagine, Mr. Chairman. Such is the spirit of liberal bureaucracy all right. It is not the legislators of this parliament who have to find, in 1966, a solution to the problems of our time and the necessary constitutional reforms, consistent with normal changes occurring over a 100-year period. No. It is not the legislators of this parliament who have to determine and discuss those problems. This Liberal government has created an unofficial committee of public servants, who are giving advice to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) or other members of the cabinet, in regard to possible reforms or adjustments. I think it is a serious mistake from the democratical as well as the legislative point of view.

How unfortunate that this should happen only a few weeks before we celebrate our centenary, since in a few weeks from now, it will be the beginning of the year 1967, meaning a record of 100 years for this magnificent country made up of so many Canadians of good faith from one ocean to another. Why is it that those Canadians do not understand each other sufficiently? Why is it that some, in a corner close to the Pacific ocean, and some others, close to the Atlantic ocean, are at times under the impression that they do not know each other and that it is very difficult to establish national understanding and brotherhood? I say that this Liberal government is greatly responsible for such a situation, for it has refused, since January 18, since the opening of this session, to give the Canadian parliament, the members of which come from different sections of this country, the opportunity to openly discuss, specify, establish constitutional taxation reforms, through a joint committee of both houses. Let the government rely upon the intelligence and the good faith of the hon. members.

Personally, I may have particular reforms in mind and at heart, specific reforms that some Canadians will find drastic, but I am ready to discuss the matter. I want to exchange views in an official way, through a committee appointed to this effect. I am sure I will be able to make concessions, as other members who might sit on that committee so as to enable Canada precisely to turn toward a better, a much more efficient federation than the one we have known until now and the centenary of which we are going to celebrate.

I will always maintain that the present government, by refusing to set up this committee, makes no effort to establish, realize and materialize national harmony and brotherhood.

Mr. Chairman, how do you expect provincial representatives to get along with their federal counterparts with respect to every problem that comes up, when our parliament denies us the opportunity—as intelligent human beings—to define, organize, direct and activate the different levels of government for the next one hundred years.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare will make his position known before the end of the debate. Let him not hesitate; we are prepared to hear him through, even though his views may be different from ours. But we want to hear what he has to say and let him not resort to this evasive way of going about things. The present government may very well decide unilaterally to embark upon a supplementary aspect of old age security, but it is not a unitarian system of government we have in Canada.

We live in a federative system. There will be conflicts. The Quebec government said so clearly, and I am sure that the premiers of other provinces will do so shortly, and this will occur again.

Today I put a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) concerning the refusal by Quebec and several other provinces to accept a federal control on transportation. But we get evasive meaningless answers, which perpetuate and multiply incomprehension in the country and increase tensions between the provincial governments and the central government.

In closing, like other members who took part in the debate this afternoon, I urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare to tell us his exact position on the constitutional implications of this bill and to tell us also whether his government considers that the Supreme Court is a competent constitutional court to deal with these constitutional conflicts.

We would appreciate definite answers from the hon. minister; we do not want him to answer that our interventions are only constitutional monkey-shines.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned a few days ago, following the speech of my hon. friend, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), it is quite obvious that the time has come for us—I say for us, members of parliament, and I emphasize the words "members of parliament"—to consider the true reforms to bring about in our Canadian constitution, while we are considering this bill.

[English]

Again, for the third time, let me say to the minister—

An hon. Member: Filibuster.

Mr. Grafftey: Hon. members from Quebec cry "filibuster". How can we be filibustering when we are talking about national unity and our constitution?

Mr. Guay: They are not from Quebec. Change your glasses.

Mr. Grafftey: My hon. friend made the same remark. I will be interested to hear the hon. member's maiden speech. At any rate, Mr. Chairman, let us face the facts and what is happening. Soon the B and B commission is going to report. Soon the constitution committee of the province of Quebec is going to report its findings. What is going to happen if we in Ottawa do not act? With whom do we hold a dialogue? The dialogue will take place in a vacuum, and our national unity and federal-provincial relations will suffer, if this sort of thing continues.

Hon. members opposite say there is not enough national unity in this country to get on with the job of constitutional reform. I say that there is. I say that in our centennial year there will be enough national unity in order for us, as parliamentarians, to use it as a base in our study of the constitution. What I believe we need is a committee made up of members of parliament from all parties and from all regions in this country to study in depth the Canadian constitution. Let us meet with similar bodies in provincial capitals, and then, as the leader of my party has said time and time again:

After such a dialogue with the other provinces, we are going to sit here in Ottawa with the premiers and the members of the other provinces, to get a modern constitution adapted to our modern days.

Mr. Chairman, we shall see, in the future, that our constitution has been perhaps or will be flexible enough for our existing needs. It may be necessary to amend it slightly or to rewrite it completely. As for me, I notice for the third, fourth, or fifth time in the House of Commons, that we must get to work without delay and exchange views with the other provinces. Within a few weeks, we shall know the decisions or the findings of the Laurendeau-Dunton commission. We are going to see a committee report in the province of Quebec. Therefore, there must be an exchange of views between the federal government and the other provinces, and we have our own responsibilities to assume here in Ottawa.

[English]

But, Mr. Chairman, what does the government do?

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I wonder whether the Chair would kindly advise us just what we are discussing at the present time. What is the measure now before the committee?

Mr. Grafftey: Some of us who are in tune with the real problems in this country, Mr. Chairman, think that we are discussing perhaps the future of this country. Maybe the hon. member is one of those centralizers who does not understand the problems, but we are going to try and make him understand.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I did not ask for any advice particularly from the hon. member. I asked my question of the Chair. What are we discussing here at the present time, Mr. Chairman?

• (5:20 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: May I remind the hon. member, and members of the committee that we are on clause 1 of a bill to amend the Old Age Security Act. I know that there may be observations about the constitution and about the constitutionality of certain matters——the constitutionality of the act. I believe the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) should depart from general terms and deal with the crucial point of the bill, namely the amendment to the Old Age Security Act.

[Translation]

[English]

Mr. Grafftey: I am on clause 1, Mr. Chairman. Time and again the opposition, and I speak for many backbench supporters of the government, have been faced with fait accompli legislation, especially in fields involving conjoint jurisdiction in the constitution. That is plain, Mr. Chairman. No matter what the constitution says, the political facts in Canada today are plain. We may do this and that, we may have our B and B study, but in the final analysis the constitution is a political document and politicians must deal with it. They should not bury their heads in the sand. Not a month goes by without some provincial premier drawing attention to problems. This time the premier concerned is the premier of Quebec. The government ought not to act unilaterally without consulting with the provinces. In centennial year, let us get down to the basic job of reforming the constitution. Section 94A of the British North America Act—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Grafftey: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman's argument, which I apologize for not having heard in full, that this parliament does not have jurisdiction to enact this bill?

Mr. Grafftey: This parliament does have the jurisdiction which is conjoint.

Mr. Pickersgill: It does.

Mr. Grafftey: Right; perhaps I ought to say a word about what I am arguing.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Grafftey: Let us not quibble about the letter of the law. We have jurisdiction. We can do lots of things, but let us do them in a way that will enhance federal-provincial relations and national unity at this stage of the country's development. The premier of Quebec exists, as do the premiers of the other provinces, yet this government does the kind of thing it is doing here without consulting these provinces. The ministers of the government say nothing about their ideas about basic constitutional reform. They are for national unity—

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask another question? I am trying to understand the hon. gentleman's argument and his position. When he thinks that something is exclusively within federal jurisdiction, which he has admitted—

Mr. Grafftey: No, no.

An hon. Member: No, he has not.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might be permitted to put my question without help. It may be a poor question, but the hon. gentleman has admitted that this bill—I am not talking about the subject matter as a whole—is within the jurisdiction of parliament.

Mr. Grafftey: Right.

Mr. Pickersgill: He admitted that a moment ago. Is he now suggesting that we should not introduce legislation that is within the competence of the parliament of Canada, before we have consulted provincial governments? Is that the position of the Conservative party?

Mr. Grafftey: No, that is not the position, and I will answer the hon. minister very briefly. Though I am a lawyer I would not apply such legalistic, narrow arguments to the broader questions of national unity and federal-provincial relations as they bear on this country we call Canada. We are the first country in the western world that has attempted to make a federal system work with parliamentary government. Without going into a whole lot of legal arguments, every member of this house, no matter to what party he belongs, realizes that things are not going well in 1966. I commend the Minister of National Health and Welfare for his humanitarian goals which I support, and I say to the Minister of Transport that we do have jurisdiction. But I also say that it is most important that we do not, by our actions as a government, exacerbate the situation.

It is up to us to tell the country as we approach centennial year what our opinions are relating to basic constitutional reform.

Backbenchers opposite say that any committee looking into such a problem ought not to be an all party committee. They say that such reform is the responsibility of the government. If that is the case let them accept their responsibility. Let them act so that ministers, such as the Minister of National Health and Welfare and other ministers, will not run into difficulties when, in future, they decide to plunge into these conjoint areas of jurisdiction to which I refer. Because things are as they are, because of unilateral action in conjoint areas, I see not one, but five or six unnecessary situations in which friction will be stirred up. We shall have friction until we get down to this basic job of constitutional reform.

The minister asks, what about section 94A.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not.

Mr. Grafftey: That section reads:

> It is hereby declared that the Parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to old age pensions in Canada, but no law made by the Parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to old age pensions.

That is the constitution. I know what the practice has been, and I think it is desirable that we have uniform social welfare legislation in this country. But, once and for all, let us face the facts of life in 1966. We have political people here called provincial premiers who should be consulted to let them know what is happening. Do not take this kind of unilateral action without consulting them.

Mr. MacEachen: May I ask the hon. member a question? Did the official opposition consult the provincial premiers when they moved an amendment earlier this session to increase the old age pension by $25—

An hon. Member: Unilaterally.

Mr. MacEachen: Unilaterally.

Mr. Grafftey: Let me say this, in spite of the things of which we are accused. I am sitting three or four feet from an ex-minister. He picked up the telephone and spoke to provincial premiers to let them know what was happening. When we were in power, did you hear about these troubles with provincial premiers?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: In my province, you tagged us with the gimmick that we were anti-Quebec. Did you hear about the winter works program? I was in the Minister of Labour's office and I told him about my problems relating to winter works. I was in his office when he telephoned officials in Quebec and the whole problem was cleared up. We made a go of the program, and it worked well because we consulted the provinces.

I say to the hon. minister that we want to see progressive legislation on the statute books, but many people are becoming worried about how it will work. If this government acts unilaterally in fields such as this, pretending with its head in the sand that the provinces do not exist, it will run into trouble and national unity and federal provincial relations will suffer.

I say for the tenth time—I see hon. members opposite are laughing. Some are saying, "I wish the bore would sit down". I say for the tenth time, let us start an all-party parliamentary committee to look at this question in centennial year and to discuss our constitution. How would it look in future, with all our B and B commissions and things like that, if we as parliamentarians cannot get together to discuss this problem? Let the committee go to the premiers and consult with them, and then come back to Ottawa to see what it can do.

An hon. Member: Let us get back to the bill.

Mr. Grafftey: If we do nothing else, at least we shall have tried. Members opposite might take this lightly. They are in a hurry, I know, to get progressive legislation on the statute books.

An hon. Member: They are jumping the gun.

Mr. Grafftey: They are jumping the gun, as a colleague says.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member may remember what the hon. member for Grey-Bruce said about pensions.

Mr. Grafftey: Let us all act, so that one year from now we may see how Canada looks with a reformed constitution. A reformed constitution will be better for the country and it will make our legislation work better. Hon. members, such as the independent member for Sherbrooke, are not speaking as they do for fun. I am sure were party discipline on the other side not so rigid, backbenchers of the government would make the speech I have made.

Mr. Pickersgill: God forbid.

Mr. Grafftey: Why is not one Quebec member from the other side making this kind of speech, when it is patently obvious that something is wrong? Mr. Johnson asked every one of you to think about this, and you sit there like robots automatically voting for this bureaucratic government. What is wrong? Are you not speaking, thinking that the people in Quebec will automatically vote Liberal?

• (5:30 p.m.)

Do members opposite intend to sit back, thinking the people of Quebec will vote Liberal automatically from now until doomsday? Those people will take a good look at this legislation and ask why the centralists have been allowed to run them down. The government wants the votes when the clutch is on, but ignores Quebec on a gut issue like this one. I say to members opposite: you will not be elected automatically in future. Call this a filibuster, call it what you will, but people who are looking at this issue very profoundly, and who want this type of legislation to work, are warning the government. I am only one of many members who are making speeches of this kind, and I am hoping the government stands so warned.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who wondered this afternoon what the discussion was all about because I listened to dissertations on the constitution which—to be sure—were enlightening at times, and which are certainly appropriate once in a while because if no one sounds the alarm, problems will evidently remain unsolved.

Nevertheless, I followed with interest the speech made by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) and I would agree with many of the things he said. At one point though, the member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) was the only one to applaud; there was not even one Conservative member applauding him; that is what brought discredit upon him, in my opinion. I began to worry at that point and I said to myself: there must be something unorthodox in what the member for Brome-Missisquoi just said. And—

Mr. Grégoire: That proves the superficiality of it all. It is not applause which determines the quality of a speech; it is the essence of the speech itself that counts. This just goes to show how superficial you are.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I am not expected to make more elaborate comments on the observations of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), since he has once again condemned the members of the Conservative party by stating that theirs is a superficial attitude.

However, Mr. Chairman, I feel we are considering a bill which meets a need. Is it constitutional or not? It appears that hon. members do not agree on that point since those who objected to the bill this afternoon asked that an interpretation be given of the pertinent section of the constitution. The mere asking for this interpretation immediately suggests that the meaning is not clear and that there is a possibility of being right in both cases.

I feel the situation should be viewed from a different angle but, mind you now, I am not condemning those who are presently demanding that the constitution be rejuvenated—I do not even blame those who maintain that this bill might be unconstitutional—because I am of those who feel that we must eventually bring our constitution to date.

Mr. Chairman, what worries me is that, if we delay passage of legislation which fulfil some needs, because there are terms we want to discuss here, it would be detrimental to the senior citizens who are anxious to receive those benefits; indeed, they are not much impressed by constitutional problems. Besides, what really counts for them is their cheque, and I wonder whether some compromise could not be found to settle the matter.

For instance, if any province should decide to pass legislation on old age pensions, I would think that the government should grant fiscal compensation to that province and transfer its responsibility to it. This would probably be a compromise that would make the government project more acceptable to those who now raise constitutional arguments against it.

Mr. Chairman, from my point of view, I cannot object to it because of a vital and urgent need for an increased old age pension to the senior citizens. This settles it. From there, let us strive to rejuvenate the constitution, straighten all those things, let lawyers agree among themselves—this may never be, perhaps it is wishful thinking—to try and arrive at an acceptable constitution formula.

A while ago, as I listened to my friends from Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) and from Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) and even to my deskmate from Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), who is a member of the legal profession and whose knowledge of constitutional matters I quite often admire, I said to myself:

Some people want to exert pressure on the federal government to establish a new constitution. I was thinking of my own province and I was asking myself: In my province, at least, are people in agreement on some formula? Do people know what they want actually? Would it not be rushing things dangerously to require that the constitution be reframed while taking into account all demands—the word "demands" might not be the proper one—from the province of Quebec, as long as there is no certainty about the consensus of those responsible for the future of that province?

Now, I do not feel that we are in agreement, and I still have fresh in my memory this remark from a previous Quebec minister who, also, was quite convinced that the constitution had to be revamped as soon as possible but, as he said: "The time does not seem ripe, since we are not in accord yet."

When the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi says, about this bill, that we should take this opportunity to establish right away the dialogue, to form a joint committee to discuss a possible new constitution, I do not share his opinion, since I believe that when we discuss such a constitution, we shall leave the responsibility to men like ourselves, politicians, who, though well meaning, will always be exposed to some resurgence of partisanry which will prevent them from coming to an understanding.

I believe rather that we should choose in the ten provinces people of recognized qualifications and uprightness, people who are not influenced by partisan considerations, who, in their respective fields, are acknowledged as authorities, and then form what I have called already a sort of Council of Wisemen. These wisemen, sitting around a table, will establish the good will dialogue as suggested by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, and thereafter will offer to the responsible provincial authorities and the federal government an acceptable constitution formula.

But are we going to wait for that before we give our old people and our sick what they need? I do think so, Mr. Chairman. I am not so exacting, while not condemning those who are, honestly and sincerely, because I feel the need here is vital, fundamental, and that our old people need those things. I shall therefore vote in favour of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to repeat, however, that, to my mind, fiscal compensation to the provinces which may wish to have their own plan is a necessity. Indeed, some people may have overlooked the fact that we are dealing here with a transitory legislation; within a few years the provincial pensions acts will gradually eliminate the need for it.

There will come a time where this act will play but an infinitesimal role. I see it as an interim act, an act of transition, to be replaced eventually by provincial pension acts now starting to be enforced but which do not cover everyone.

Now, Mr. Chairman, certain matters obviously worry those who will be entitled to those pensions. For instance, those who already have other pension benefits will see their income reduced because of the new pension plan. This should be provided for in this bill, because it seems to me that since they have paid for those pensions, they are entitled to them, the pensions should not be considered the same as income from the operation of a business or something similar.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat that we do not have the right, in my opinion, to refuse to the aged the minimum income they need to live decently until such time as the constitutional authorities of all the provinces agree on a new constitution, something which, in my opinion, will take several months and probably several years in the climate which prevails now.

I feel that in the province of Quebec a reasonable agreement has yet to be reached by a majority to adopt an acceptable formula. If the government could include in its bill—and I would have voted for the amendment if it had been moved—the principle of fiscal compensation for the provinces that want their own bill, such a compromise would probably meet the requirements of the majority.

Mr. Valade: Would the hon. member for Trois-Rivières allow me a question?

Mr. Mongrain: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Valade: Has the hon. member for Trois-Rivières read section 94A of the Confederation Act?

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I guess I read it 25 times. I find that it opens the door on both sides; it does not close it to anyone. I feel that if the government understands that there is an urgent need to fill, a need which the provinces are not filling at the present time, it is its duty to do it until the provinces take over.

Old Age Security Act Amendment

I noted that my hon. friend from Sainte-Marie said that those who will vote for the bill will lay themselves open to a charge of treason. Of course the charge is very serious. But as far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I will vote for that bill and with a clear conscience because it will help put a little more bread on the table of the old people of my riding and of the whole country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Beaulieu: Mr. Chairman, I listened with a good deal of interest to the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and to those of all the hon. members who represent the province of Quebec in this house.

At the present time, we are dealing with legislation which is of interest not only to the people of Quebec but also to every Canadian citizen. During the last election campaign, I remember, we promised $100 a month to each and everyone if our party came to power, and at that time, we could hear our opponents say: We shall give you $125 a month. But now that they are in the house, they sing a different tune. The party in office now introduces a piece of legislation and says: All those who received $75 at 70 years of age, without investigation, will now get $75 at 69, 68, 67 or 65 until everyone gets a pension at 65.

The position in which our fellow citizens find themselves in every province—and here I refer in particular to those in our own province—is that $75 a month is not enough to live decently.

When an additional amount of $30 is offered, but subject to a condition, in my opinion, it is a little undignified because the $30 difference is equivalent approximately to the increase in the cost of living, in Quebec as well as in the rest of Canada.

A little earlier, when we are dealing with the legal and constitutional aspect, it was stated that the province of Quebec had refused it. I think that it is the leader of the Quebec Créditistes who said: "It is Ottawa which took the initiative." I remember that, as if it were yesterday, because at that time I was entering provincial politics. It is true that the premier in office of that time refused, and he refused during seven years, to grant the old age pension to the people of our province, but was he wrong or right? That is a question one can rightly ask.

Mr. Chairman, at that time the province of Quebec had a yearly income of $75 million only, when today, its income reaches the $2 billion mark. As far as income is concerned, the province of Quebec at the present time is one of the richest in the Canadian confederation. But we fought, in 1936, claiming the old age pension for the people of Quebec because at that time, we were paying taxes to the federal government. Today, the problem is the following. The government wants to have investigations, to search through people's lives, to worry the aged, those who have $500 in the bank, the workers who managed to acquire a small property over 30 or 40 years and tell him: "Now you are going to assess your income to see whether you have a monthly income of $60 or an annual income of $720; if you do, you will lose your $30 completely.

People will be in a position where they are going to ask themselves: Are we going to make a false statement? Are we not going to take our $1,000 out of the bank and bury it?" Do they want all taxpayers in our province and in our country to act as hypocrites? I am reluctant to accept that, Mr. Chairman, and I think that the suggestion that was made, not only by our party but by almost every party and even by the Independents to give the full allowance to everybody, without asking any questions, would have solved the problem.

But the problem facing us at present is a constitutional one and as I have spent 19 years in Quebec, I have become sensitized to that question. Respect for laws in the provinces is very important to me. I know the federal government has rights, and that it is the responsibility of federal members to preserve them. But members in Ottawa also represent one province or another, and in our case, we represent the province of Quebec. With a population of 6 million out of the 20 million people in Canada, I feel we are representing quite an important area.

Clause 92A is probably the clearest of all clauses in the British North America Act. As regards clauses 91 and 92, there are discussions. It is being said "they are subjects of exclusive provincial legislation", but in a further clause, one can read:

—nevertheless, in case of urgency, in case of war—

hot war or cold war—

—the federal government may be granted the right that we regarded as exclusive to the provinces.

But in clause 94A, there is no doubt, whether it be past, present or future, a province may at a given moment, claim the exclusive right in this matter. Even if the federal government lays claim to that right, I am not denying it such a right, I say that if the province claims it, I wonder why the minister and the government persist in provoking the provinces.

In Canada, as we know, we are going through a difficult period at this time. We are going through a troubled period. And in the province of Quebec—more than anywhere else perhaps—people are awakening and claiming their rights. And that is the reason why I was listening with pleasure to the leader of the Conservative party (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he said, a while ago, that he wanted constitutional rights to be observed. And I heard other members saying: "We dread the decisions of the Supreme Court". Thus spoke the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) and other members.

And the present premier of Quebec, as well as his predecessor, Mr. Lesage, are unanimous in saying that they do not accept, in certain cases, decisions from the supreme court regarding constitutional matters. This is no wonder. The court in question is organized and appointed by the federal government; consequently, it cannot be a good judge in such a delicate and important field.

Concerning the arguments put forward as to whether the federal government should readily grant the provinces what they are asking for, Quebec demands recognition of a right to which it is entitled under the constitution. There is no doubt about that. But instead of saying yes, the federal government is defying Quebec once again. This situation occurred often enough. In my opinion, the time has come for the present cabinet, for the minister there—who means well, I admit it —to take a position which would contribute to better relations between the federal and the provinces. Actually, it would be very simple if the minister would only say: we will give the fiscal compensation to the provinces requesting it, because they are entitled to it. This, I think, is the viewpoint of my party: provinces should be given fiscal compensation; discussions with our provinces at every turn should come to an end.

As a matter of fact, the federal government will spend large amounts to initiate inquiries. It would be so simple if it only said to the provinces: administer the plan, whether it is $75, $100, $105 or $125 a month; the province may provide whatever payment it wants, and the federal government will grant it fiscal compensation, guaranteed by its own legislation, as it is bound to give it to all other provinces who will not accept to administer themselves the scheme under consideration in the house.

I am surprised to note that the ministers from Quebec do not stand up here to demand the rights of their province. I am surprised to note that members who, during election campaigns, in the province of Quebec, for all sorts of reasons, contend that their party is the defender of the rights of minorities, of provincial rights, do not stand up now to demand those rights here. They know that all parties in the Quebec legislature are unanimous in claiming those rights. But here, what the official opposition, the Créditistes, the independents ask for is not heard. One would say that their arguments fall on deaf ears. The minister does not want to; his attitude is such that it is provoking a reaction in the province at a time when the latter must remain calm, when it must sense what is coming, when it must prepare the future. The government in power has only about 50 members in whom the Quebec people have placed their confidence. Those men have no right today to cast a vote which would prevent the province of Quebec from getting what belongs to it, from claiming, in all fairness, the right to admister and to apply within Quebec, for Quebec and by Quebec, the social legislation which comes under its jurisdiction.

I think the minister would do well to review his legislation and to bring forward some amendments that are imperative. I am convinced, Mr. Chairman, that we could then bring back a climate of peace and good will between federal and provincial governments.

But especially, I would like a climate of good understanding between my province, the province of Quebec, and the government of my country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Béchard: Would the hon. member permit a question.

Mr. Beaulieu: Yes.

Mr. Béchard: The member said how much he was respectful of the rights of provinces. Is he more respectful today than he was in 1936 when he was accepting interference of the federal government in the field of old age pensions.

Mr. Beaulieu: Mr. Chairman, I want to answer that immediately. That is the reason why the Liberal party was defeated in the province of Quebec. That was when the former premier, the late Mr. Duplessis, conducted his campaign by saying: "We will accept the old age pension plan in the province of Quebec. We accepted it then, but we had only $95 million revenue". But today, full control is asked.

Mr. Béchard: The hon. member did not answer my question. Was he ready then to sacrifice autonomist principles for money.

Mr. Beaulieu: There was no principle to sacrifice. It was a federal piece of legislation; there was no principle involved.

Mr. Grégoire: I should like to say a few words following the last remark made by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Béchard). I think he does not quite understand the problem.

Under the constitution, the government has the right to pass this bill. That is understandable, as long as it adds, as suggested by my colleague, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), the hon. member for Saint-Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Beaulieu) and the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) and, one has to admit, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain), because he heard other members make the suggestion before him.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I want to point out that I did not hear the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire).

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, it does not matter who says it, as long as he hears it, that is good enough for him.

Mr. Chairman, how about adding a fiscal compensation in order to hand over to the provinces the sources of income equivalent to the amount the province of Quebec would have to pay for those old age pensions? This is what we are asking and it is a rather simple matter. It is said that both levels of government have jurisdiction, but if a provincial government wishes to enter this field, it has priority to do so. Provision should be made in the bill for a fiscal compensation to be paid to any province wishing to take over old age pensions. I wonder whether the hon. member for Saint-Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien) does not find it reasonable, since he is the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp), to provide for a fiscal compensation to be paid to any province that wants to take over old age pensions. This is what we are asking. There is no question of depriving older persons of their pensions or of an increase as soon as possible. We are quite willing to pass the bill, but only if a fiscal compensation is provided, all the more so since a provincial government has already made known in its speech from the throne its willingness to take over old age pensions.

If a province is also justified in wanting to take over old age pensions, why then would we ask the taxpayers in that province to pay twice? Why not immediately make provision in the act for fiscal compensation? That is all we ask, Mr. Chairman. And I feel that, under the constitution, this is a perfectly normal and logical procedure, and should be acknowledged by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. Chairman, section 94A provides precisely for this kind of situation. That is why I see nothing against introduction of this legislation by the federal government, under the present circumstances, but I would also like to include the section providing for fiscal compensation to those provinces wishing to take over this service.

Mr. Chairman, that is what I ask. I feel that it is the minister himself who should introduce this item. An appeal was made a while ago by the member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey). The member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) also made this appeal, and so did the member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade), and I urge the Quebec Liberal members to express their views on this particular point, to drive home the fact that this legislation should provide for fiscal compensation.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

[English]

The Chairman: It being six o'clock, and in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, I do now leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be debated at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), amendment to Criminal Code and Canada Evidence Act—concerning validity of confessions in certain circumstances; the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hopkins), public works—Pembroke, Ont.—wharf facilities.

PRIVATE BILLS

LEAGUE SAVINGS AND MORTGAGE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. S-30, to incorporate League Savings and Mortgage Company—Mr. MacEwan—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On Clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I must express my appreciation to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance for recognizing that this bill, relating to the League Savings and Mortgage Company, involves the incorporation of a company which operates in competition with the operations of a credit union incorporated under the Loan Companies Act. This bill was considered by the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, but it will be perhaps February or March before we will have the proceedings of that committee printed.

Perhaps I should repeat what I said at the second reading stage of this bill. For many years I have been a member of a credit union and I thoroughly endorse the principles behind the functions of such an organization. I do so because this is one method by which people can control their own financial investments. One principle in respect of credit unions is that a member has one vote regardless of the number of shares he may own. An individual member has only one vote regardless of whether he owns ten times as many shares as another member. This is in direct conflict to the principle which has been accepted by companies incorporated under the Loan Companies Act. To put it clearly, if an individual owns 100 shares in the League Savings and Mortgage Company he would have 100 votes whereas an individual who owns a thousand shares in a credit union would have only one vote, not 1,000 votes. There is this important difference between these two types of organization.

I hope this conflict will be cleared up by the sponsor of this bill before we complete this stage of our consideration. That hon. member did a very good job of explaining the purposes of this bill at the time he introduced it. He outlined the background of this proposed corporation. Inasmuch as the League Savings and Mortgage Company has been founded by a credit union movement in Nova Scotia, and inasmuch as it is in essence an extension of a credit union's financial operations, owned, directed and controlled by members of a credit union, hon. members of this committee are well advised to take some step to ensure that this company will be of benefit to the credit union movement. Any step which can be taken by this parliament to strengthen the credit union movement is a worthwhile step.

There is a very serious conflict between the philosophies of the credit union movement and companies operated on the basis of individual control.

The credit union movement has apparently found this to be the only mechanism they can use to reach the end which they desire. This is an effort to put together two philosophies which run counter to each other. On the one hand, we are seeking to give effect to the desire of the credit union movement to enlarge its activities into the savings and mortgage field, and on the other we desire to give effect to the principle of ownership and control which is contained within the credit union movement. However, we are doing this by superimposing another requirement, that of financially based ownership. With all due respect to the hon. member who is sponsoring the bill and with sympathy and understanding for the credit union movement, I submit that the committee should not be content simply to pass the bill because it seems to be a good idea. We should take a look into the future and plan some steps to guarantee and protect the rights of the credit union people by ensuring that the League Savings and Mortgage Company shall always act in accordance with the credit union philosophy and principles.

Of course we would be much better off in this regard if we had on the statute books some credit union legislation under which groups such as this one could operate. We should have a federal credit union law which would assist credit unions in joining their resources together so as to expand beyond the bounds of the individual credit union and encompass other fields of financing, which is not now possible with the limited resources which a small, community based, credit union might have.

Over the years it has been the hope of many of us that the parliament of Canada some day would get around to drafting legislation in the credit union field. If we had such legislation it would then be possible for the League Savings and Mortgage Company to apply for incorporation in this fashion and to apply for the expansion of the credit union movement for the purposes desired by this particular company. I should like to make reference to clause 7 of the bill even though we have not yet reached that clause. The powers and limitations of the incorporating act of the League Savings and Mortgage Company would then read as follows:

> The company has all the powers, privileges and immunities conferred by, and is subject to all the limitations, liabilities and provisions of the credit unions act of Canada.

This would be a far more desirable way of approaching this matter. To my knowledge, this is the first time that a group of credit unions has desired to embark on this type of project, and I hope it will not be the last time. I hope that other credit unions, even in the absence of a beneficial credit union law relating to them, will see the advantages which might come from this sort of incorporation. I hope that the government will recognize that something has been taking place in the credit union movement to which it should have given some thought several years ago.

I hope the government will take the course of drafting a federal credit unions act to enable credit unions all across the nation to expand rightfully and correctly into the fields of mortgage lending for housing developments, for individual home ownership, for investment for the expansion of credit union plans, and for the expansion of loans to co-operatives. The co-operatives have a comparable philosophy, except that they deal in the field of production and distribution rather than in financing.

I would strongly urge the government to appoint one of its ministers who may not have much to do—and there are many like that—to oversee the question of federal credit union legislation. He could, in consultation with the credit union movement, start drafting a federal credit unions act so that we might have in the near future some guiding legislation of which this parliament would approve for the advancement of the philosophy according to which human beings who own, control and direct their own means of production, distribution and, in this instance, financing, are far better off.

In the past the parliament of Canada has never hesitated to come to the aid of the free enterprise section of the economy by means of protective legislation. The company now under consideration is being incorporated under the Loan Companies Act, a law which was conceived by the government and passed by parliament. It is designed to enhance the position of the free enterprise section of the economy in the field of loans. We have the Companies Act, the Small Loans Act and a variety of other public laws which are designed to increase the position of the money interests. I submit that the time is overdue for the enactment of legislation which would enhance the position of the individual in the society.

A door is being opened to us and a group of credit unions is coming to parliament and saying: "Let us incorporate in this way because it is the only way in which we can do it. In this way we are giving to you an indication that federal legislation is lacking in the field of credit unions". I hope that the government will take cognizance of that fact, and take a serious look at it.

I take note of the fact that only one minister of the crown is present in the house this evening, namely the associate minister of defence. I notice that he is listening attentively, and I hope with approval, to what I am saying. I do not know the extent of his duties in the department of defence, or what his position will be when the forces are unified. Perhaps there will be an integration at the ministerial level also, and he will find himself out of a job. However, he is the only minister present this evening and this is commendable. He is listening to the debate, not necessarily because I am taking part in it right now but because the house is considering a certain matter. Knowing his sympathies for the rights of the individual and his desire to preserve those fundamental rights and freedoms, and particularly knowing there is perhaps a stronger belief in those rights in his province than in other parts of Canada, I am sure that he will immediately see the advantage that will accrue to human beings if this government enacts laws to protect the rights of the individual in the financial world. This is all the credit union movement is looking to. They have struggled against insurmountable odds up to now, working against the massive co-operative bulwark of the banking and insurance institutions of this nation which wanted to crush the credit union movement. They could see that it was a threat to the position of banking institutions in society to sell the concept of an individual controlling the means of financing his own needs. The government should recognize this, too, and take this necessary step.

I know that we cannot extract an answer from the minister at this stage. It is not a matter of estimates that are being considered. The minister may not feel he is in a position to make any commitment on behalf of the government. But if he would indicate that the proposals we are advancing will receive consideration and study, then I think this would be of advantage and would be lauded by the credit union movement in this nation as at least a start on something which is long overdue.

This, however, comes within the field of public law. I should like to hear, as I am sure other hon. members would, from the sponsor of the bill as to what guarantees might exist or be developed to ensure that this company remains an arm of the credit union movement. We would like to ensure that it is not likely to end up in the hands of the financial interests of this nation, which would love to get control of the finances of credit union members.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, I realize the concern which is voiced by the hon. member for Skeena, a concern which he brought forward on second reading of the bill. The bill was referred to the finance committee and at that time was given a thorough going over. Many interesting questions were asked along the lines suggested by the hon. member.

The managing director of the Nova Scotia Credit Union League, Mr. Rod MacMullin, appeared as a witness, and so did legal counsel. The situation is that the initial shares of this company will be held by the individual credit unions throughout the province of Nova Scotia and their individual members. The transfer of shares will be limited to credit unions and credit union members in the province through the by-laws; the by-laws will specifically state this.

In answer to a question Mr. MacMullin stated that the by-laws had not as yet been made up but were being drafted. He said that by way of the by-laws the transfer of shares would be limited to ensure this company would remain in the hands of the various credit unions making up the Nova Scotia Credit Union League, and as a result the shareholders would be the credit unions themselves and their members. As far as the number of shares in the company was concerned, this would be a matter of internal arrangement in the Nova Scotia Credit Union League.

Another thing Mr. MacMullin said was that he thought the annual meeting of this company, if incorporated, would be held at the same time as the Nova Scotia Credit Union League held its annual meeting. In this way those who would be attending the annual meeting of the credit union league would also be attending the annual meeting of the League Savings and Mortgage Company.

I thought I should put that on the record, because the hon. member stated that the proceedings of the committee might not be printed for some time. As I say, I am speaking from my recollection of the evidence, but I think that is what the witness MacMullin stated.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member tell the committee who are the people listed as the provincial directors and their connection with the credit union movement in Nova Scotia? I notice they are listed by their full-time occupations, and I think that this information might be of interest.

Mr. MacEwan: One is a clergyman, Rev. John Donald Nelson MacDonald. He was one of the originators of the Nova Scotia Credit Union League. Then, there is Roderick Gregory MacMullin, an electrician. Another is a policeman in the city of Halifax, Mr. Wrin. There is Mr. Cujes, a college professor of Antigonish. Mr. MacDonald, the clergyman, is from the village of Middle Musquodoboit and, as I say, was one of the original incorporators of the Nova Scotia Credit Union League. Then there is Mr. MacKinnon, an electrician, from Sydney. I am not personally acquainted with these gentlemen, but I do know of the work of Rev. MacDonald.

Mr. Howard: May I ask this question of the sponsor of the bill. The by-laws of League Savings and Mortgage Company will confine the issuance and the transfer of shares to credit unions and credit union members. It seems to me that this is a matter which should be spelled out in the law itself. Parliament has the responsibility of preserving a certain situation here. By-laws, of course, can be changed from time to time. While I am not suggesting that this will be the case, we do know that things which are done at one time are often undone at some other time. Often times matters develop which originally were not conceived possible.

I wonder whether the hon. member for Pictou could say whether any thought has been given to placing a provision in the bill which would outline the intent of the by-laws. In other words, let us make it the law of Canada. If this company is incorporated, such act will become the law of Canada; and I suggest it should also be the law of Canada which must confine the operation, ownership and transfer of these shares to the credit unions and credit union members. Has any thought been given to this?

Mr. MacEwan: This matter was referred to the parliamentary agent and also dealt with extensively by the managing director, Mr. MacMullin. The legal advice was that this would probably be unnecessary and this limiting could be done just as well by way of by-laws.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the last words uttered by the sponsor of the bill add some weight to the remarks made earlier by the hon. member for Skeena about the need for what I would term a federal co-operative charter for Canada, of which appropriate credit union legislation would be an important segment.

If my recollection is correct, years ago in this country in the insurance field there were organized what at the time were called mutual insurance companies. According to my information they were orginally organized in rural areas of Ontario. They were closely related to what today are known as co-operatives, or credit unions. They were set up under legislation with the idea that their policyholders would be shareholders. They were to be organizations democratically run, comparable and similar to credit unions being operated in the various provinces of Canada that already had credit unions.

Over a period of time, because of the legislation they were incoporated under, the effective control of these organizations passed out of the hands of the original organizers. The companies became companies controlled by minority blocks of shareholders, that is in numbers of people controlling the companies. Many of the older insurance companies, some of them still operating in Canada today and carrying the mutual label, have long since ceased to come within the real meaning of that term.

I share the concern of the hon. member for Skeena that this should not happen to organizations such as this, because this body is obviously being put forward as a bona fide body by the credit union movement of Nova Scotia. I am sorry that we have not the full printed proceedings of the committee before us when we are considering this bill, but I thank the hon. member for Pictou for having given a summary of the representations made to the committee by the credit union people from Nova Scotia. I thank him for the information he gave of the background of this bill at the second reading stage.

This bill, I believe, is another example of the sort of limitation placed on the growth of organizations like credit unions because of the lack of appropriate legislation. We take great pride in this country in our democratic process, that every citizen of the country considered adult and in his right mind, who has not been incarcerated for a criminal offence, has the right of the franchise. We make a great deal of one vote for every citizen, and that in our election process all citizens are equal in determining what eventually takes place in our representative institutions of parliament and the legislatures of the country. In spite of our pride in this political democracy, we effectively deny to the people who want to build an economic democracy the necessary machinery by which they can do this. In my view the terms of this bill show how difficult it is for people like the credit unionists of Nova Scotia to set up this kind of financial institution in a way that will make it clear to all the world that it is what it is. I am sure the credit unionists of Nova Scotia are proud they are taking this step. I am sure they have not changed much from what they were a few years ago, when I had the opportunity as a member of a committee to listen to a presentation on another matter by a credit union spokesman from that province.

At a cursory glance this bill seems no different from 101 other bills incorporating mortgage or finance companies across this country. This appears to be an ordinary company governed by the same principles, as the hon. member for Skeena says, that govern people in other companies wielding a big economic stick. It is unfortunate that this kind of mechanism has to be used for such an organization to be incorporated. Members of parliament ought to do something about this. A few years ago, in another field of the co-operative movement in Canada, the desires of co-operaters to develop insurance institutions in accordance with the principles of economic democracy were denied because of the lack of appropriate general federal legislation. It was impossible for them, within the framework of existing federal law, to ensure that economic democracy would prevail through the normal democratic principle of delegated representation at annual meetings.

I am happy to see this bill coming forward. I participated in the credit union in my home town. I saw that credit union grow from a small organization to one which now has several branches owning two or three nice buildings. It has a full time staff and is a successful business enterprise. It still retains the principles of economic democracy in its functioning. The credit union movement in my province has become an important factor, as a financial institution, within the province. That is true of individual credit unions and of the credit unions collectively, coming under such bodies as the credit union league and the central credit union of the province.

For a long time the credit union movement in British Columbia operated with inadequate provincial legislation. The attempts made—and this, I suggest, will happen in Nova Scotia—to provide services that people needed where there was a need for lending funds, were hampered by lack of provincial legislation to make this possible.

I am happy to say forward steps have been taken in recognizing the growing place of credit unions. Those steps have been taken within the framework of provincial legislation, and our central credit union now operates, as I understand it, within reasonably satisfactory provincial legislation. I assume the same process is taking place within provincial fields of legislation in some of the other provinces of Canada.

I had an interesting discussion with a person from the province of Quebec who is associated with the provincial department of co-operatives. He told me something of his work in helping to expand and make more attractive the operations of the credit union movement within that province. We in this parliament can no longer afford to ignore the credit unions and the co-operatives of Canada. As far as the parliament of Canada is concerned, such organizations do not even exist. Those of the type before us now demonstrate that quite well.

I support the passing of this bill with some reluctance. I do so because this appears to be the only legislative mechanism which is open to us at the present time. And I do so with some regret, because this is an important area of the activities of this parliament which has been ignored for too long. Ever since I became a member of the house, this question has been regarded as one which must eventually be dealt with. Yet no effective proposal has come forward from the treasury benches. It is time some concrete proposal was placed before parliament for consideration.

The mere fact that this bill is before us in its present form is, to me, sufficient demonstration of the great gap in our concept of what is required. There are acts galore having to do with the incorporation of private companies of one kind or another. It is about time that we who like to boast about political democracy took steps to make it possible for those Canadians who want economic democracy to develop more easily the institutions in which they believe and which would be of advantage to them.

I wish to thank the sponsor of the bill for the way in which he has provided information to the house and to the committee on the background of this measure, and I wish those who are interested in it every success in their endeavours.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I gladly give my support to this Bill, No. S-30, sponsored by the hon. member for Pictou, although I have some reservations about its possible effects.

I will admit that credit unions have been doing good work in all the provinces in which they are operating, particularly in the province of Quebec. In fact, the credit unions are about the only source of loans for housing projects, nowadays, at reasonable rates of interest. The rates vary; there is no strict uniformity about them, and this is because there is, so far, no overall plan covering a whole province. If there were such a plan, it might lead to the establishment of one rate, across the board, for everyone interested in borrowing, whether he lived in one corner of a province or another, or whether the credit union which dealt with this business was big or small.

What is the present situation? In my own province at the present time I think we have the only credit union or financial institution which is making mortgage loans at a rate of interest below six per cent—I cannot give the exact rate, but it is something about five per cent.

To make such a rate possible at the present time, the administration is bound to be fantastically good. Even the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation lends at 7¼ per cent, I believe, and that is supposed to be a decent rate of interest in present circumstances.

I had the opportunity to purchase some property not very long ago. I was informed that the rate of interest on a loan would be 8 per cent. This was the rate charged by an insurance company which a year and a half ago had lent money at seven per cent. The rates are capable of some alteration. Some people can get loans at 7½ per cent, possibly on better security. But I have said enough to indicate the interest rates which are charged generally on mortgage loans today.

One particular credit union in Thetford Mines, in my own constituency, is lending money at an interest rate of less than 6 per cent. All I can do is take off my hat and say: congratulations on a marvellous achievement. It is possible that a plan for integration involving the pooling of capital resources such as this bill provides will permit lending to be carried out on a greater scale. But I very much doubt whether such low interest rates as I have mentioned could be maintained in the future.

Consider the rate of less than 6 per cent to which I have just referred. I venture to suppose that this is the lowest rate in the entire country. But if there were an overall plan of the kind which is now proposed, I do not think it could be maintained at its present figure. Of course, what is to the disadvantage of one particular region might well be to the advantage of another. However this may be, I firmly believe that this bill, if passed, would not result in interest rates higher than the general level of interest rates which now prevails.

Private insurance companies are lending money at up to 8 per cent. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation rate is 7¼ per cent, and I do not think the rate to be charged by this company will be that high. I hope it will be below that. I do not know all the particulars about the financial state of credit unions in Nova Scotia, but I do think the government should give consideration to allowing the near banks and credit unions greater latitude. At present they are obliged to retain 50 per cent of their deposits on reserve. The big financial institutions in the country do not have the same limitation, but still they operate an efficient system.

In my home town one operation has been able to retain the interest rate on mortgages at a little over 5 per cent. I would think other financial institutions in the country would find it hard to match this record.

This bill has one good provision in that it keeps family affairs out of the business. I am talking about credit unions which make loans to the relatives of the people running them, and after loans have been given to all the brothers-in-law, fathers-in-law and sons-in-law, there is no money available for anybody else to borrow. Some people have a large number of relatives. It is something that is discovered when one checks one's Christmas list. But in the situation which we are discussing, I do not think any one individual would have a big enough family to cover the whole province. I could give specific examples where the public turned their back on credit unions simply because they discovered all the money was going to relatives.

I hope the effect of this bill will retain the interest rate at a level which the borrower can pay when he needs money for housing and similar projects. Having balanced the arguments both against and in favour of it, I think this bill will be of benefit to Nova Scotia, and possibly to other provinces, so far as credit unions are concerned.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive, agreed to.

On clause 5—Amount to be subscribed and paid before commencement.

Mr. Peters: Having been a member of a number of credit unions, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say I believe the people of Nova Scotia should be congratulated on this type of legislation. I hope the sponsor of the bill will tell the principals of this company that it is our desire they continue the development they have made in the past of the credit union movement in Nova Scotia and of the league itself. It is now moving into the mortgage loan field, and I hope these people will continue to press for national legislation which would allow the credit union movement to establish a national co-operative in the financial field. Then, all credit unions across Canada, instead of putting their money into an international organization, would be able to participate in a truly national lending agency capable of making loans to individuals on the basis of their background and personality, and not solely their wealth.

Clause 6 agreed to.

On clause 7—Powers and limitations.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, at some time in the near future I think the house would appreciate a declaration from the government about its intentions with respect to federal credit union legislation. We have discussed this matter earlier in the proceedings related to this bill. I do not expect an answer right now from the two ministers present, but I wish they would consult with their colleagues and see that a statement is made some day on motions.

Mr. Pickersgill: In answer to the hon. gentleman's very reasonable question, I may say I know this matter is receiving the consideration of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I move, seconded by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), pursuant to standing order 6(2) that the house continue to sit after 10 o'clock p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is moved by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), pursuant to standing order 6(2) that the house continue to sit after 10 o'clock p.m.

Mr. Howard: I will have to object to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 6(2) I must ask those objecting to please rise.

And eight members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being less than ten members objecting, the motion is deemed to have been carried.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, is it not in keeping with our rules that no votes are to be taken between the hours of six and eight o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would point out to the hon. member that under the standing order no debate or formal vote shall be held. The house will now proceed to the consideration of the business that was interrupted at six o'clock.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I might agree that there is no debate but there might very well be a point of order. I think the hon. member for Skeena brought up a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Fewer than ten members having risen, the order was deemed to have been carried according to provisional standing order 6(2).

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): If a vote was not supposed to be taken, I would suggest that it was not valid. I should like to have the opinion of the Chair on that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I might refer the hon. member to standing order 6(2) at page 4 of the provisional standing orders:

> A motion that the house continue to sit after the hour specified in section (1) may be made at any time without notice. If any member objects to the motion, Mr. Speaker shall request those members who object to rise in their places—

May I interject here to say that this is the procedure the Chair adopted.

> —and if ten or more members then rise, the question shall not be put on the motion. If no member objects or if fewer than ten members rise in their places, the motion shall be deemed to be carried.

Fewer than ten members stood in their places and therefore according to standing order 6(2) the Chair must consider the motion carried.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, if you continue to read you will find the following in standing order 6(3):

> If any member objects to the taking of a vote at any time between 1 o'clock p.m. and 2.30 o'clock p.m. or between 6 o'clock p.m. and 8 o'clock p.m.—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I should carry on and read the full standing order:

> No debate or formal vote shall be held on such a motion to extend a sitting.

If no formal vote is to be held, then I suggest to the hon. member for Timiskaming that standing order 6(3) does not apply. The house will now resume the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION OF GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT AND DETERMINATION OF PENSIONERS' INCOMES

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-251 to amend the Old Age Security Act—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Definitions.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon we heard members of this house ask the minister to state his position with regard to section 94A of the B.N.A. Act.

Far be it from me and previous speakers also, I think, to take up the time of the house only for the sake of it. The meaning of section 94A is of vital importance and it is extremely important that the position of the minister and, therefore, of the government, should be clearly defined.

As I said earlier, we are not seeking to prevent the passage of Bill No. C-251, but it is clearly the duty of members of the house to ask the minister to clearly state his position.

As Quebec members, I feel it is in our interest to know the minister's intentions. If we insist, it is because the interpretation given to section 94A could give rise to some disagreement, misunderstanding or even legal disputes prejudicial to mutual understanding and unity in the country. That is why, when I spoke on Tuesday, December 13, as reported on page 11061 of Hansard, I asked the minister as plainly as possible how he understood section 94A or what position he intended to take in that connection. After quoting section 94A, I put a few questions to the minister that I should like to repeat now. I said, among other things:

It is impossible to ignore the wishes of any Canadian province—

Mr. Chairman, as you know the government of the province of Quebec, through its premier, Hon. Daniel Johnson, has expressed its intention of invading the field of old age pension. Section 94A gives him that right and when we ask the minister to establish his position, we merely wish to prevent any difficulty.

Later on I said:

I therefore ask him not to miss the opportunity to make his positions known, because if this is not done, there may be . . . between the two levels of government a misunderstanding.

I repeat this same warning today and I add, Mr. Chairman, that I can hardly understand and interpret the attitude of the Liberal members of the province of Quebec. Throughout the speeches made on this side of the house this afternoon, the members on the other side of the house gave us the impression that they were losing patience and that they were feeling ill at ease about our remarks. And we repeat over again for the hon. member for Saint-Henri, that we do not intend to resort to a filibuster or make trouble for the government, we merely wish to establish clearly our respective positions. This is our only intention.

And from my seat in the house, I had the opportunity to notice this afternoon a conversation going on between the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) and the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) which lasted a good while during the speech of one of my colleagues. I thought that the Associate Minister of National Defence seemed worried.

Mr. Chairman, the continual refusal and obstination of the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare with regard to establishing his position certainly puts the Liberal members from the province of Quebec in a difficult situation. They cannot but realize that one day they will have to account for their vote on this question. They will not be able to step back every time or to justify their position, as they did for example at the time of their vote on the second flag and when they voted in favour of nuclear weapons. The people of the province of Quebec will not stand for the Liberal members from their province refusing much longer to assume their responsibilities here in the House of Commons.

This is why I should like the minister—and that is all I ask of him—to answer our questions and let the hon. premier of the province of Quebec know what his position will be with regard to section 94A of the British North America Act.

The statement of the hon. premier of the province of Quebec was quite clear. He said that nothing would stop him, which means that he could even resort to double taxation. I do not think double taxation would be in the public interest. If the hon. minister will not state his position clearly, I would like my Liberal colleagues from the province of Quebec to let us know at least what will be their attitude and their reaction with regard to double taxation. One must remember, Mr. Chairman, that the premier of the province of Quebec has the support of the liberal opposition in Quebec. The leader of the opposition himself, Mr. Jean Lesage, said he was supporting the principle set forth by the premier of the province of Quebec. In this matter, he was supported by the former minister of municipal affairs (Mr. Laporte) and he even has in this house a member supporting him, namely the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) who has also declared himself in favour of the principle under which old age pensions should be administered by the government of the province of Quebec. Will the minister keep on turning a deaf ear? Will he persist in his stringent attitude, in his arrogance? I am sorry to use this word, since I have a great deal of esteem for the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare and I would not like him to be looked upon on account of the position he has taken until now, as an anti-Quebecker, an anti-French Canadian.

And I allow myself to give him an advice, if he will allow me. He is still in the prime of life, great hopes are being placed upon him by the people, by his party, and I would not like him to commit political hara-kiri.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, it is always the same thing, you hear noise on the other side of the house, only noise, they have not enough courage, those gentlemen on the other side of the house to rise and express their own opinions. Interruptions, unusual noises, nothing else but that. Let them rise and answer with courage. All we are trying to do, on this side, is to lay sound foundations for mutual understanding, perfect understanding—

Mr. Boulanger: Will the hon. member permit me a question?

Mr. Ricard: —between the different governments. I will hear the speech, the "maiden speech" of the hon. member when I am through. I am very anxious to hear it, since this house has not heard his voice yet. You may be sure I will give him this opportunity in a few minutes, but I would like to pursue the few remarks I have to make. I add that the Liberal party, which during seven years, Mr. Chairman, caused the older people in the province of Quebec to lose their old age pensions, certainly has much to do so that people may forget its past turpitudes.

Mr. Chairman, one may recall that when premier Taschereau was in office, he refused over seven years to accept old age pensions because they came from the federal government. Today, we can understand that the Grits are attempting to have us forget the huge disadvantage they imposed on the Quebec population, and so they would like to create the feeling that they are innovating, that they are the initiators of the whole social legislation.

Some hon. Members: That is true, that is true.

Mr. Ricard: Well, you see, Mr. Chairman, these people are so confident in the strength of the opposition that they blame us for not having taken some steps while we were in the opposition. However, if we think it over, we could not bring in social legislation while we were in the opposition. On the other hand, you will recall, Mr. Chairman, that when we came into power in 1957, we immediately increased the old age pensions, what the "six-buck boys" on the other side of the house had kept putting off indefinitely.

Every time an increase in old age pensions is contemplated, members on the other side of the house say: "This would cost too much; we cannot do that." The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) said today, in answer to a letter from the council of a city in his riding that the government at the time could not afford to increase old age pensions. The present minister, in 1966, still puts forward the burden of cost and, in the same breath, says that he wants to extend to all the population the benefits of an increase in the old age pension.

• (7:20 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: A question, please?

Mr. Ricard: When I am finished, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Ricard: I would like to repeat it. When a Conservative member of the province of Quebec rises, the Liberal members who always call for national unity, are the first—

Mr. Habel: They are your colleagues.

Mr. Ricard: —to shout: "Sit down, shut up", or things of that sort. They lack breeding, Mr. Chairman.

I deplore it with you, Mr. Chairman, for it would never cross your mind to speak in such fashion to your friends across the way.

But it would seem that there sits on the other side of the house a certain class of people somewhat lacking in manners. The best advice I can give them, I think, is to mind their manners, and to learn how to behave. Their behaviour is not worthy of people appointed to represent a riding in the House of commons.

Mr. Chairman, I bring my remarks to a close, in a hubbub of interruptions, like those of the member for Saint-Henri—that is about as much as we have heard from him in the course of his whole political career—

Mr. Lessard: It is still better than the speech you have just made.

Mr. Ricard: Those interruptions do not scare me and do not make me lose my bearings. I have seen far worse. If that is all he can do, interrupt as he does, he should at least spare the house a spectacle hardly worthy of a member of parliament.

Mr. Chairman, in closing I say again to the minister that he must explain his position clearly on Section 94A to the province of Quebec and to the other provinces.

Mr. Éthier: It is in the bill.

Mr. Ricard: Another one has just proved that he understands absolutely nothing about what goes on here. I shall identify him: that was the member for Glengarry-Prescott (Mr. Éthier).

The minister owes it to the House of Commons and to the province of Quebec to make clear his positions and the positions of the government in this regard. It would be a pity if, through the stubbornness of a government, double taxation had to be implemented in Quebec and the other provinces that will ask for fiscal compensation. We have a duty to save the people from double taxation.

Mr. Éthier: Johnson.

Mr. Ricard: I hear the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott saying "Johnson". The government of the province of Quebec has rights and it asks, through its premier, hon. Mr. Johnson, that its rights be respected. We are entitled to retrieve our rights. And when Liberal members, as little knowledgeable as the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott, try to filibuster, well, I say to them that they do not face up to their responsibilities because they do not know what it is to be a member of parliament, and that it is better for them to remain in their seats.

Mr. Chairman, I again appeal to the minister and say to him: please, do not just sit there, for you will do the province of Quebec and Canada a disservice. You will be responsible for increasingly weakening Canadian unity should you remain adamant in your present attitude. Now that the premier of Quebec has made his position known, you ought to make your own position clear immediately, so as to prevent any possible misunderstanding.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, may I put a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Ricard: Yes, by all means.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, since the hon. member supported his argument by referring several times to section 94A and since he also mentioned that when his party was in office in 1957 it increased pensions by $20, could he tell us whether he had then the same opinion regarding section 94A of the constitution as he has now?

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, reviving the past will not change one iota in the bill before us. This legislation should be put through as expeditiously as possible, but not by encroaching upon the rights of a province, and that is the point on which I want to draw the minister's attention.

Mr. Mongrain: Would the hon. member permit a question? If the hon. member wants to be consistent, would he advise the senior citizens of his riding, after this legislation is passed, to return their cheques, because they will be coming from Ottawa and that will be unconstitutional?

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I wonder why the member for Trois-Rivières does not associate himself with those on the opposite side, since he really belongs there.

If the hon. member had followed my line of reasoning, he would have had no grounds to ask this question; as a matter of fact, I said again and again that the needs of our senior citizens are pressing, that we ought to do everything in our power to increase their pensions, but not at the expense of our most precious rights.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, with your leave, I would like to rise on a question of privilege on grounds that may seem more or less sufficient. The hon. member is being helpful to me when he recommends that I sit on the Liberal side. I thank him for his kindness; however, I should like to be the one who decides what position I shall take here; I do not want to abuse of the hon. member's good nature to the point of asking him to decide for me.

[English]

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, after listening to all the speeches this afternoon and on looking at this bill I am concerned about the legislative jungle into which we may be getting. I think there are a few principles which we have not yet considered. It has been stressed before that approximately 7 per cent of our population consists of people 65 years of age and over. In another 10 years this figure may go up to 10 per cent and it is quite possible that the rate of increase will rise more rapidly. I should like to make a point regarding taxation. If a tenth of our population becomes unproductive at the age of 65 they will increase the ranks of the unemployed but will still be consumers. This will put a big load on the younger generation, the wage earners of this country, and will create an imbalance in our economy. I think that in the future the trend should be to encourage these people to work beyond the age of 65 and to continue their productive years. I do not see why there should be an arbitrary age of 65 at which they should stop working. Some years ago the idea was prevalent that because of biological aging it was necessary to set a limit at which a person should stop working. Let us face facts. In 1900 the average age span of a person was 40 years but today, in 1966, the span of life extends to 70 years.

I submit that this fact should be seriously considered. The government says that it is short of money. I do not exactly agree with this but if it is so I think it is largely due to bad housekeeping. However, I will not go into that topic at the present time. The fact of the matter is that we have a growing aged population. Half the population of Canada is 25 years of age or under and in a decade the dividing line may be at the age of 35. There is no reason to doubt that as medical science progresses people could live to be 100. As a matter of fact, there is one place in the U.S.S.R. where research work is being done in the field of longevity. Their research has shown that people live to the age of 100 and are still able to continue productive work and to all intents and purposes are perfectly healthy. I do not know whether this fact has been authenticated but according to the reports of these scientists some people in that area live to the age of 125. This is a matter the house must consider because we are getting into a legislative jungle as far as the provinces are concerned. This is why, as the minister said, it would have been so much simpler to give the pensioners $100 a month across the board. Why didn't he?

As I have said before, we have an aging population and in this regard I should like to give an illustration of the economics involved to the committee. A friend of mine who had earned good money all his life retired on a pension of a little better than $15,000 a year. He had to quit work because of an arbitrary rule of retirement at 65. He laid around for a few months, visited here and there and finally got tired and accepted another post at $25,000 a year. Three years ago he was still holding down that position. He is paying tax on $40,000 in the United States where he lives. Why in the world tax a similar case in Canada on $25 a month? This is the point I am trying to make.

Let me look at the other side of the coin. What happens to people when they are prevented from working? If we look at the statistics and believe the medical scientists, geriatric societies and schools of medicine, people deteriorate when they stop working. It not only shortens their lives but can make them bed patients or put them into a home. This is something all of are concerned about because very soon we too will be old. So this legislation is of great concern to us now and to the people who will follow us.

Compulsory retirement at age 65 solves nothing; it just creates problems. As the population increases productivity must increase because the people must be fed and looked after. This puts us on the horns of a dilemma. People who are taken out of production are still consumers so this puts a greater burden on the workers. I suggest that the financial burden placed on the people of carrying an increasing number of older citizens would be intolerable, with the life span increasing as it is today, if everyone stopped working at age 65. Therefore it follows that we must utilize to the utmost the productive efforts of our older people.

I have an interesting article before me which states that some companies and many individuals know that compulsory retirement is often the wrong answer to just one of the challenges which are presented to business. A compulsory retirement plan allows a company tactfully to unload those it no longer needs but it also prevents companies retaining people they want to keep. The article asks whether the Canadian National Railways, for example, really wanted to lose Donald Gordon. Donald Gordon could hold his place with anyone on the board but, though able, he had to retire. I have indicated how this sort of thing affects the economy. I suggest any principle which taxes elderly people who are working on an extra $25 a month is wrong.

Let me now come to the little people who belong to the labouring class, the sort of people who do not work for corporations, people who are now 65 or over. I am referring to the kind of people who have not worked in factories or in other organizations from which they receive a pension. They have never earned a lot of money. They have little or no income. There are about 150,000 of these people across Canada. Approximately another 475,000 have incomes of $1,000 or less. These are the marginal workers who have to do gardening or caretaking, and the ladies do babysitting. These are jobs they badly need.

Let me illustrate my point with an actual case. I know a man who is a gardener. He cuts the lawns of a property owned by a busy executive and looks after the flowers. He earns around $700 a year. He is a nice man who never had much education; I do not think he got beyond second grade. But he does do a good job. He has an old car that he drives to and from his work. In the fall he covers up the plants and fixes everything up for the winter. As soon as spring comes and the ground is ready he tends the gardens and lawns for the rest of the season. He requires overalls, heavy boots and work shirts as well as a few tools.

Another case in point is that of a lady who babysits for three families when required. She does a little sewing. She really does not know what she earns but thinks it is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $600 to $800. She has never kept any books. She requires a few extra clothes, coats and overshoes for her work.

Both of these people are in the marginal labouring class and have had little education but are people to whom we owe a great deal. Many were born before 1900. What will these people be forced into if the minister's guaranteed income plan is put into effect? They are going to sit on the porch in the summer and deteriorate, and they will watch television in the winter. The man will do no gardening, and there are not too many others to replace him. Financially these two people will lose $25 to $30 a month by not working, but the man would have to spend more than this on his car, his clothes and his tools. Therefore he cannot afford to work. This man will be faced with deterioration, probably mentally as well as physically, and I do not think this is right. His incentive will have gone.

But this is not all, Mr. Chairman. Instead of encouraging him the government is discouraging him. It will destroy him. Idleness and boredom will lead to illness and soon he will go either to a nursing home or to a hospital. He will degenerate physically and mentally, and the government will have created but one more problem. It will have taken people out of their homes where they were self-sustaining and sent them to a nursing home or to a hospital much sooner than should have been the case. This is the situation that the government is creating. By so doing you remove the productivity of these men and women from the economy. And add to the burden of taxation on the younger people of the country. Make no mistake about that.

The younger people will have to support the institutions and hospitals populated by people who, but for the government's action, might not have been there. People in such institutions will cost millions of dollars in lost productivity and for the care which will have to be given them in these institutions. The aged population must be kept working in the factories and in the fields. In the factories it is mandatory that workers retire at 65. Education and retraining—I know the minister has advanced views on this subject—are needed. We do not need a means test on our senior citizens but we do need education and retraining for our people. That is the course to be followed.

We ought to draw on the skills and experience of our old people. You can be as educated as you like but you only get experience through time, and that is what the government is forgetting in this bill. The older citizens should be kept working. They will be healthier and better adjusted for it and they will be producers as well as consumers. I am disturbed about this bill. I cited some cases to prove my point. Perhaps 100,000 people in Canada are similarly situated, for all I know. The minister does not know about this either. I have spoken of two people I know in one little town. What about similar people in other hon. members' constituencies?

I am disturbed about another thing. What will become of the medical care cards which people will have in the province of Ontario? The minister has taken away one month's salary from these aged people. He has taken away one month through this so-called gift of a guaranteed income of $30 per month. What will happen, Mr. Chairman? Those people will come under the $600 taxable income provision, and that means that they will pay $30 a year for their medical cards. I will not go any farther, but I could have mentioned many other things that are not right about this bill.

In fairness to those people who themselves cannot do anything about the matter, to the marginal workers and those people over 65 in good health who still want to work, who still want to perform a useful service, who still want to add to the productivity of the country, I shall move this amendment to proposed section 8, subsection 1 in clause 3:

That subsection (1) of new section 8 of clause 3 be amended by the addition of the following proviso thereto:

"Provided that no deduction shall be made in the case of a single person having earned less than three hundred and sixty dollars in the preceding year and in the case of a married person, otherwise qualified, having earned less than seven hundred and twenty dollars in the preceding years."

[Translation]

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to tax the patience of my hon. friends—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Before the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Goyer) takes the floor, this—

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not to the clause under consideration.

The Deputy Chairman: That is what I wish to draw to the committee's attention. It is an amendment to subsection (1) of the proposed section 8 of clause 3.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Chairman, we have witnessed today a small marathon in which the handful of French speaking Conservative members who managed to get elected in the province of Quebec vied with each other in trying to amend the Old Age Security Act.

They did not speak about the benefits to be derived from the amendment to this act nor, as did other hon. members of the opposition, about the social philosophy embodied in the bill. They did not, of course, speak about the welfare which will benefit a large part of the needy in the province of Quebec. They neglected the whole social aspect, the whole welfare side of the bill and chose to deal instead with the constitutional aspect.

And it is surprising to see this sudden start on the part of the French speaking Conservative members with respect to the constitution, they who have remained silent I do not know how many times when intrusion by the Conservative government of the time, in fields of provincial jurisdiction, was criticized. This sudden awakening occurs on more than just shifting grounds. In fact, three lines of the speech from the throne delivered in a legislative assembly have caused this sudden awakening. And yet, these three lines are far from a bill. Because of three lines which the government of the province of Quebec inserted in its speech from the throne, at the opening of the session, we suddenly discover this great flurry on the part of the Conservative members who cry out: "Watch out for the constitution," having no knowledge of the implications of those three lines for the future.

And it is that much more surprising to discover this happening immediately after a federal-provincial conference, where all questions were discussed, and during which the government of the province of Quebec never once mentioned that they intended to take over old age pension responsibilities. This unilateral gesture on the part of the provincial government, coming immediately after a federal-provincial conference, is strange. And it is also strange to note that this unilateral action is being taken in a recognized field, within a field of joint jurisdiction and no one here can claim anything to the contrary.

Of course, the priority of jurisdiction can be discussed—and I would not like to discuss it here—but when a joint field of jurisdiction is chosen and a unilateral stand taken after a federal-provincial conference, it appears more clearly that the government of the province of Quebec is bent on picking a quarrel with the federal government and its quarrel rests on very shaky grounds.

It is strange also to see that suddenly a pact, an alliance is struck between the federal Conservative members of the province of Quebec and those of the Union Nationale. That pact is still fragile in view of the remarks made by the premier of Quebec who said that he had no alliance with the Conservatives of the province of Quebec. Therefore, the Conservatives of the province of Quebec are on their knees today before a provincial government which has given only three lines to that matter in the speech from the throne and on their knees before a provincial government which has clearly signified to the Conservative party that it did not want to co-operate with it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Goyer: And the Conservative members nag the Quebeckers, creating a diversion. Why do those Conservative members not ask the government they want to befriend, to deal with their own or joint spheres of jurisdiction? For instance, why do they not ask the Quebec government to take steps to welcome immigrants in the province? That was completely overlooked by the Union Nationale government. Why do those same Conservative members not ask their Quebec friends to take care of housing? That is sadly neglected in Quebec cities, while Ontario has for several years now set the example of a coherent policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Goyer: And why do those same Conservative members, in another field of joint jurisdiction, not ask their so-called Quebec friends, to busy themselves with research, which is of prime importance if we want to stand our ground in the world instead of dealing haphazardly with the well-being of our people?

Today, research is essential. But we have never heard of a Conservative member for the province of Quebec asking his Quebec friends to deal with it. There are three fields of joint jurisdiction where the Quebec government could work. But let the federal government introduce a bill that can be of benefit to the people of Quebec that can increase the well-being of people whose rights are denied, who are in need, and they rear up, take up the torch and want us to retreat before three words, three lines in the speech from the throne. What a queer bunch of members we have here before us, Mr. Chairman, to fight for the rights of the people of Quebec.

Would those members want us to give up our jurisdiction overnight so that old age pensions might be reduced in Quebec?

Are members not seeking to stir up those who voted for the Union Nationale in Quebec, and this seems to be the case when one witnesses what seems to be a putsch?

Mr. Chairman, what is important to consider at this time concerning old age security is the commitments of the government during this one session. That is what is important, and our friends in the N.D.P. should listen to this, as they have always preached that the social problems should be examined and solved as a total concept and not only within the framework of a matter of social security.

The federal government has announced a social assistance plan which will cost millions. It has had medicare passed, which will cost millions. It has announced a retraining program which will cost millions. All that in one session only. And today, the same government presents an amendment to the old age security act for a $30 increase for those in need.

Those are coherent social policies. But, Mr. Chairman, nobody at this stage can tell the total cost of all those commitments. Only time will tell us how many hundreds of millions of dollars we will have to spend to meet our commitments. In the field of retraining, we will have to train a large number of people because we must make up for time lost. And even more in the field of old age security since under the proposed legislation, those who will qualify for a pension will be able to receive it at 68, 67, 66 and 65 years of age.

Hence, we have very important commitments now and for the future. I do not deplore that, but the stubbornness with which we persist trying to concentrate everything on a single social measure, when all the social field must be provided for, especially family allowances which have not been reviewed for a long time.

From 1957 to 1966, total expenditures for old age pensions went up from $473 million to $927 million, while for the same period, total expenditures for family allowances increased from $437 million to $551 million. It means that over a ten year period, the total amount for old age pensions increased by $450 million while the total amount for family allowances went up by $114 million only. If we consider that the legislation announced will entail foreseeable expenses of $280 million for the first year, and $40 million per year for the next three years, we can see that we will soon reach, that is in three years, an increase in 10 years of $1 billion for old age pensions whereas, to date there has been only an increase of $114 million in family allowance expenditure.

If our friends of the opposition would like to be reasonable in the case of old age pensions, they should ask the federal government to review family allowances as soon as possible. That is where we should strike and demand because even though we should keep our senior citizens in mind, we should also consider those who are preparing to become the working group of our population. And today, we notice that we have neglected for too long the education of our young people and their educational opportunities.

Family allowances represent an education opportunity for the young. Therefore, from now on we must concentrate our efforts on them, on the young couples who also have to face more and more urgent obligations. That does not mean putting aside in any way the matter of old age pensions.

If we could do more in the field of social welfare, we would do it; if we could do more in the field of medicare, we would do it; if we could do more in the field of manpower rehabilitation, we would do it. Since it is impossible to do the maximum with regard to each piece of social legislation, it is necessary to be reasonable and to think about the other sectors of the population.

Those who are now neglected in Canada are the young couples, the young people and, from now, our demands must be directed to that social field. Let us stop making demands with regard to old age pensions only; the figures prove that we have invested and will invest in the next three years ten times more in the field of old age pensions than in the field of family allowances.

I think the time has come to be reasonable and those who are urging the government to increase to the full expenditures for old age pensions will delay social measures liable to help young Canadians. That matter cannot be considered otherwise, especially in the light of all our future social obligations during a single session.

Therefore, to show that we are well-meaning Canadians, that we are not only looking for political gains and trying to push the government into a corner and keep it from improving the lot of other groups of the population, we must instead direct our efforts towards a social program which unfortunately has been rather neglected so far and where we must catch up and where the opposition can do much to help.

[English]

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, after what has been said during the past several days I had hoped that the minister and those who support this bill would come to their senses and amend it so that it would do for the old folk of Canada what they expect from it. Since last taking part in the debate I have had an opportunity to check with several old people in my area, and I failed to find one who is in sympathy with this bill except those who will qualify for the full $30, but even then they do not want to be subjected to a means test.

People across the country have no doubt that the minister is attempting to impose a means test. If the government were in touch with the grass roots it would not be long in hearing what the people think. There is no question but that this bill would have been passed several days ago had it not been for the means test.

Last July, when the minister made his first statement, he said he was going to spend $225 million. According to the last speaker on the Liberal side the $225 million has now risen to $280 million, and I have heard another figure, $270 million, quoted. Let us see what these figures mean.

We should look at this question from the point of view of paying $30 a month to 800,000 people or paying $25 a month to 1,200,000 people. In the first case the cost would come to $288 million, in the second $360 million, and the difference between paying $30 and $25 a month would be about $72 million. Added to that must be the cost of administration, which is about $5 per capita and in the case of 800,000 people would come close to $4 million. The minister's figure is $3,600,000 but my guess is that it will reach $10 million. If you take into account office space, heating, lighting, stationery and things like that for the use of people administering the means test, the cost will be another $5 million or $6 million. This would make a total of about $15 million, and such a sum would help to close the gap between the cost of giving $25 a month to all old age pensioners and the cost of giving $30 a month to 800,000.

In addition, many of these people will be paying taxes. Some of them will be pushed up into higher income brackets and a good deal of the difference, if any still exists, would be recovered in additional taxation. When all these factors are taken into consideration the total difference will probably be less than $50 million. The means test is going to be a hardship to a lot of people, and since the difference between the two schemes will be not too great I cannot understand why the government is clinging so tenaciously to its scheme which in practice will not be in the best interests of anyone.

Mr. Schreyer: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Kindt: Just give me a chance to finish and then I shall be glad to answer questions.

There is nothing sacred about the figure of $105 which the Senate committee recommended as the amount which old people needed. In many cases many of them need more; possibly many of them need less. But in trying to arrive at an equitable distribution of the increase and administration of the legislation, I say there is not one of the old folk who would not be willing to sacrifice $5 and accept the $25 figure in preference to having a means test and being required to fill out a lot of forms.

Old people may have to hire accountants to help them fill out the forms. Many of them are not skilled in the income tax regulations, and if they hire somebody the charge will probably be about $5. None of this is necessary. All the minister needs to do is make the rate uniform. The people of this country are accustomed to a uniform rate. They think in terms of $75 and prior to that they thought in terms of $65, but always a flat rate figure without a means test. Now the minister is imposing a means test to decide who will qualify for an additional $30 a month.

This is going to cause discontent. The result will be that persons in a neighbourhood will be pitted against one another. There will be dissension. Some of these old folk will be filling out these forms and stating that they do not have income when they do have. This will make liars out of them for no good reason whatsoever. But the Minister of National Health and Welfare has entrenched in the back of his mind the idea that this is the way it has to work in spite of what people throughout the country are saying. I say to him that if he will go out and move among these old people during the Christmas vacation he will come back with a view vastly different from that which he now holds. There is no question about that. I do not wish to continue my remarks in respect of this bill. We have discussed it at great length. The difference between the one approach and the other, in terms of money and in terms of measures such as the mini-budget which have to be brought into effect in order to pay for it, is insignificant.

This whole issue boils down to the fact that there is the one principle which the Minister of National Health and Welfare is attempting to get the old folks to swallow and the other sensible method about which they all are concerned and to which they have been accustomed for years—a flat rate. I should be pleased now to answer whatever question my hon. friend may wish to ask.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. member for Macleod whether he would care to make more extended remarks about the matter of the increased administration costs. He made a logical reference to increased administrative costs. Could he indicate his source for the reference he made to a figure of $4 million, and so on?

Mr. Kindt: The Minister of National Health and Welfare mentioned a figure of $3.6 million in respect of the administrative costs of the program. I rounded out that figure to $4 million. I also said I am of the opinion that before he is finished it will be $10 million. I do not know what other figures my hon. friend would like me to enlarge on, but I should be glad to talk further on the subject if there is some part of my reference to figures which is not clear.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, it may seem strange that this old age pension measure has been under discussion in the house for most of the day without a speech having been made by any member of this party. I wish to point out that we are here and still have a good deal to say, but we are waiting in the main for some of the other clauses. Should the debate continue on clause 1, we may not be able to remain in our seats as we had planned.

I should like to join the hon. member for Simcoe East, however, in giving notice of some amendments which I shall be moving when we reach clause 3. It is not my intention at this moment to read the amendments, but so that the committee will know what is coming I should like to point out that when we reach clause 3 of the bill I shall be moving an amendment to 7(1) under clause 3, another to 7(2) under clause 3, and another to 8(1) under clause 3. I give this notice so that the committee will know that these amendments are coming and to indicate that when we get around to what we do wish to discuss we intend to suggest some of the ways in which we think this bill despite its difficulties can be improved. Our general position remains, as we have made clear, that we welcome the increase to $105 a month but think it should be across the board.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks and ask the minister some questions which I think are relevant to clause 1. These remarks and questions relate to the number of people that it will be necessary for the department to hire to examine the application forms. In closing the debate the other evening the minister stated that initially the department would have to hire about 675 part-time employees to examine the returns when the initial applications come in. There are a couple of questions I should like to ask. First, I should like to ask the minister whether he thinks his estimate is rather modest and whether in fact the number of employees who will be required may be nearer 1,000. Second, I should like to ask the minister how long these casual or temporary employees will be hired during the first year for the purpose of going through the large numbers of applications which will be made. Then I should like to ask the minister how many of these same people will have to be rehired in subsequent years to bring the applications up to date.

The estimate we made originally would indicate that there would be large numbers of people employed. I feel that the minister's estimate is low, but perhaps he can verify it. I should like to know whether in subsequent years it will be necessary to hire additional temporary help each year to examine the returns. I am wondering for how long a period the department estimates that each of these groups of people will have to be hired. It is my understanding that the verification of these returns can be carried out by examination of the income tax returns of the people concerned. I understand that this is the method which is to be used. I also understand that the supplement will be paid possibly in March of next year.

I should like to ask the minister how verification through the use of income tax returns can be made in respect of the year 1966 when many of these returns are not due and will not be filed until the end of April next year. I should like to ask him how any verification can be made until May or June. I am also wondering how verifications are to be made in respect of persons who do not file income tax returns at all and who on the basis of another criterion may be eligible for the supplement. If these people do not file returns we must assume that there will be no verification of the statements they make. Perhaps the minister would like to answer the several questions I have asked.

Mr. MacEachen: A number of casual employees will be taken on strength for three or four months. The number of employees to be taken on permanent staff will be about 400. It may be necessary in future years, as the plan goes into full operation, to take on more casual employees for short periods of time. However, I do not think the number will be anywhere near the number required at the initial stage. We propose to check the information on the application forms against the information received by the Department of National Revenue. It is true that we cannot verify this information immediately. We can only do so in respect of income tax returns for 1966. In respect of those who do not file income tax returns we can rely upon third party information and upon the system followed by the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Aiken: I thank the minister for his answers. There are two or three questions I should like to ask for the purpose of clarification. The minister referred to the number of employees required to administer this program. I am wondering how many of them will be permanent and how many will be hired for a short period of time. Also, will applications received in March and April be held up until verification is obtained by way of income tax returns?

Mr. MacEachen: We intend to accept as being accurate the information supplied on the application forms. We can do this on the basis that this information can be checked against income tax returns to be filed in 1967. The bill provides that recoveries can be made when inaccuracies occur. In connection with the hon. member's question regarding the number of employees to be hired, let me say that we expect to hire approximately 400.

Mr. Aiken: The minister suggested that 675 and 400 employees would be taken on staff. Should we add these figures together in order to arrive at the number of extra staff which will be required?

Mr. MacEachen: No. The one figure relates to a temporary category of employees and the other relates to a permanent category. The 675 casual employees will be hired from time to time during heavy workload periods.

Mr. Aiken: As I understand the situation, 400 permanent employees will be added to the staff and from time to time a number of casual employees will be hired, and I think the figure mentioned was 675. They will be hired, presumably, at the time income tax returns are being filed?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes. One must keep in mind the fact that there will be 900,000 individuals eligible for these benefits. There are ten district offices and it would be quite impossible for present staffs to handle this extra work. It would be undesirable to ask them to do so.

Mr. Aiken: I should like to ask the minister whether these employees will be hired in connection with the application of the Canada Assistance Plan? Will they be hired as employees of the federal government or will they be hired as employees of the provincial administrations?

Mr. MacEachen: These additional employees will have nothing to do with the administration of the Canada Assistance Plan.

Mr. Aiken: The minister has answered most of my questions but before resuming my seat I should like again to point out that there is a much more simple solution to the problem with which we are faced. During the course of this debate people have written me expressing their concern regarding application for the supplementary benefit. Just before I came to the house this evening I had a telephone call from an individual who has paid income tax throughout his life. He feels that he should be eligible for the supplementary pension. He has been frugal and has saved some money. He feels he should be entitled to receive every bit as much as another individual who has saved nothing during his life. There is a fundamental difficulty involved in a means test. I do not intend to say anything more about that at this time except that by adopting a means test we are taking a backward step in our approach to social security.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the answers given by the minister during the debate. I was particularly interested in his remarks regarding the number of additional employees required to carry out this old age security program. It seems to me that it would be much more simple and less expensive to carry out this program on the basis of the amendment to this bill proposed by the opposition. It would seem to me much simpler and perhaps not much more expensive if the minister would accept an amendment to the bill, in the same way as he accepted an amendment to the medicare bill, granting every old age pensioner in Canada an extra $25 a month. The reason I say it would not be much more expensive is that under the proposed plan account will have to be taken of the 400 additional permanent employees and 675 casual employees who will have to be paid and housed, and the setting up of an organization of this kind will increase the cost. When a calculation is made of how much extra money would be required to pay all the old age pensioners an extra $25 a month and the amount of money which would be recovered through income tax, and having in mind also the fact that it would not be necessary to impose a means test, or whatever the minister wishes to call it, I am sure the taxpayers of the country would greatly prefer this course of action.

There are one or two questions with regard to the application of this legislation which I would like to put to the minister. When an application is received and there is some doubt whether it is a bona fide one will investigators be sent to particular areas to ensure that applications have been made out correctly and that no money is being paid to people who are not entitled to it, or will the decision regarding the application be made on the basis of the information regarding the applicant's income as contained in his application?

[Mr. Aiken.]

Will all this be done in a central place? If you are going to send people out—and I do not see how you can avoid this in a great many cases —additional employees will be required to do this work, which will add to the cost of the plan. I hope that even at this late date the minister will be prepared to accept an amendment, or even to propose an amendment of his own, to grant to all our old age pensioners an extra $25 a month without the meanest of all tests, the means test. If this were done the minister would become a hero in the eyes of a great many taxpayers in Canada.

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest that a gift be made to all the senior citizens of our country by giving them on July 1 next a bonus of $100. However, I am quite aware that we cannot do so because we cannot spend any money. I should also like to suggest that our centennial year should be a tax-free year. These are the only two suggestions I wish to make.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, like most other hon. members I have not had the opportunity of being present at all times during the debate. I have one question which I should like to put to the minister and I believe that possibly it was referred to by my colleague from Cape Breton South. The other evening when the minister was speaking about the determination of income he mentioned that war veterans' allowance payments, gifts, and money from the sale of homes would not be classified as income. What I am thinking about at the moment are the small pensions paid to retired coal miners in the province of Nova Scotia. Some of these are very small. I should like the Minister to advise us whether the small amounts which they are receiving will be classified as income under this so-called income test or, as someone has suggested, the MacEachen test. I suppose that these small sums, which the retired miners are receiving could be considered as rewards given to them for having served for 30 or 40 years in the coal mines. As the minister is well aware, there was no joint contributory pension plan established in the coal mining industry in Nova Scotia. The only plan in existence was based on a certain sum of money which was contributed by the coal company.

Can the minister inform us whether the sums being paid to retired coal miners by different coal companies such as the Dominion Steel and Coal Company will be classified as income under the income test to which he has referred? If this is the case, I am afraid that these retired coal miners will not get much benefit from the present bill. I know that the minister is well aware of the situation to which I am referring and I am sure that he must have this information at his fingertips.

Mr. MacEachen: Of course the answer is that if the coal company pension is a company pension, as it is, it would be regarded as income under the Income Tax Act. I have received some correspondence—I was trying to find it—from the chairman of the pensioners' union, Mr. Joseph Nearing, who wrote to me about various cases of miners receiving the company pension. I believe that in all cases they will benefit substantially from the proposed legislation because the pensions are small. As my hon. friend pointed out, and because of the two-for-one principle, I believe they will benefit from the supplement up to the income level of $1,620 for a single person.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I should like to follow up that particular question and ask the minister where he got the information that the miners receive a pension. Can he also tell me whether Mr. Nearing did not object to the so-called means test?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Chairman, not in his letter to me. He asked me to explain what would be the benefits in what he thought were the standard cases which were being discussed among the retired miners. He made no comment about the income test.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I should like to make one further clarification for the minister's benefit, if he wishes to take my word for it. If not, he can check this out. The fact is that the miners in Cape Breton do not receive a pension but only a gratuity. Miners who have retired since 1952 have not received increases in their old age security pension because of the 2 per cent increment which was contributed. Actually what they receive from the Dominion Coal Company is a gratuity not a pension.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Would the minister advise me how he intends to verify these applications?

Mr. MacEachen: I explained a few moments ago to a member of the opposition how we propose to make this verification. When we receive an application from early in the year we will accept the information provided as accurate. We will not send people into the field to check on this form. If the information is incomplete or the form has been improperly made out we will write to the pensioner and tell him he forgot to include such and such an item. But we do not intend to send out investigators to check these forms. As I said, the only way we can check the accuracy of the information on these forms is to go to the Department of National Revenue and get the information from the income tax returns. That will be the source. We have no plans to go beyond that.

Mr. Kindt: A supplementary question. Did I understand the minister to indicate that when the supplementary forms are received and there is a question as to their accuracy they will be checked against the income tax returns? The minister nods his head and I understand that is what he intends to do. Is he within his rights, even though this is a government venture, to tamper with income tax forms?

Mr. MacEachen: I am not proposing to doing anything I am not asking parliament to approve in this bill. There is a very limited type of information contained in income tax forms which the Minister of National Revenue may make available to my department for the purpose of checking the accuracy of application forms. This is covered in detail in a later clause in the bill.

Mr. Mandziuk: May I ask the minister how he will verify applications by those people who do not file income tax returns? Thousands of old age pensioners do not file a return. They have small gardens, or a cow or a couple of pigs, but according to the income tax regulations they are living off the land and this is income. How does the minister explain this?

Mr. MacEachen: I am being attacked, as it were, from two different flanks here.

Mr. Mandziuk: Not attacked; we just want an explanation.

Mr. MacEachen: It has been suggested that the test is too strict; on the other hand, it is being suggested it may be too lenient. The matters mentioned by my hon. friend would be of no interest to us. I assume that an individual in the country who has an income of sufficient interest to national revenue will file an income tax return, and that is what we will accept. If other people who should be filing income tax returns are not doing so—I am not suggesting that such is the case—then that is a matter for the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Mandziuk: Are we to understand that those people who have not been filing income tax returns will not be rechecked as to their qualification for this supplementary pension? Yes or no?

Mr. MacEachen: There are two sources of income tax information. One is information received from the department with respect to an individual who files a return. The other source of information is what you might call third party information which is available even though an individual does not submit it in a tax return. These are the only methods provided for in the bill. From this explanation the hon. member will see that the test is quite different from any other test employed in the past.

Mr. Mandziuk: I am not trying to delay proceedings but I remember that when we had the means test for old age pensioners in days gone by the government of that day had two or three officials in an area who, if they did not like a pensioner, made an adverse report on him. On the other hand, if they did like him they made a favourable report. Is the minister going to depend upon a couple of Liberals in each area recommending whether a pensioner should be thoroughly checked? The pensioners are concerned about this and I do not think the minister realizes it.

Mr. MacEachen: I would not rely on Liberals for such a purpose, Mr. Chairman. I will not even rely on Conservatives.

Mr. Mandziuk: Are the income tax inspectors going to investigate these applicants? Would the minister put that on the record?

Mr. MacEachen: I am not reluctant to put this on the record. I have been putting it on the record. The system I mentioned is the system provided for in the clauses of the bill.

Mr. Mandziuk: A negative shake of the head does not show on Hansard. That is why I wanted the minister to verify it verbally.

Mr. Kindt: A supplementary question. If the income tax officials do not get in touch with an old age pensioner, is it the thought that representatives of the Department of National Health and Welfare will take it upon themselves to check the old age pensioner, which is in fact the same thing? I assume from the bill that this check will be made.

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Chairman, that is not the thought. If it were the thought we would require many more staff in addition to the people I have mentioned. We propose to rely on the system I have explained to the committee, and we have no other plans.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, getting back to the important question concerning what the retired coal miners in Nova Scotia may receive as a result of this bill, my colleague from Cape Breton South has stated that the amount they receive from the coal company is a gratuity or, as we term it in the area, a pension. This sum is for long, faithful and continuous service over 35, 40, 45 and in some cases 50 years. It represents the grateful thanks of the large corporation for their long and faithful service.

Since the minister is in close contact with the largest operator of the coal mines, can he advise the committee whether it is the intention of the coal company when this plan goes into effect to cut back or reduce the payments they make at the present time to the retired coal miners? When a retired coal miner has reached the age of eligibility for old age security the company has in turn cut him back by that amount, reducing the gratuity received from the coal company.

Can the minister say whether he has had any discussions with, say, Dominion Steel and Coal Company about whether they will reduce the amount they pay their retired coal miners at the present time? If all the predictions and forecasts are true, it may be possible that after a period of time the employer here will not be DOSCO but the federal government.

Mr. MacEachen: I cannot give any assurance that DOSCO will treat this supplement any differently from the way they have treated increases in the old age pension in the past. I cannot give any assurance but I shall be very happy to have a word with the president of DOSCO to see whether a different attitude might not prevail in this case.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I hope the minister will follow this matter up and I hope he will be successful in his endeavours with the coal company.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister a question or two following questions asked by other members. What is to be taken as income? A number of people in my constituency have incomes that are very limited indeed but they live in their own homes. Let me give an illustration. They live in their own homes, raise their own beef, grow their own vegetables, produce their own pork and produce their own fruit. They have their own canning plants, they catch plenty of sport fish, they burn wood for fuel and produce their own light. They have their own hydroelectric power service. They have access to considerable quantities of game, large quantities of wild fruits and so on.

An hon. Member: Where is this place?

Mr. Herridge: I am describing my own normal way of life. Would these things produced on such properties be included as income? The people I refer to may have substantial farms but there is very little sale of commodities. They have a small cash income with perhaps the old age pension and some other small income. Would these home-produced goods and commodities such as I have mentioned be considered as income when such people are completing their income tax forms?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I listened carefully to every item my hon. friend mentioned. I do not think there was a single item that would be included in the definition of income. I hope that this rather Utopian picture extends beyond the confines of my hon. friend's constituency and applies to many other old age pensioners who, with this type of resourceful living described by hon. members, will benefit from the supplement in this bill.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): There is one question which concerns me and which the minister has not answered so far as I am aware. Can he tell me what the difference in administrative cost would be between paying every old age pensioner $25 and paying those old age pensioners who have passed the means test $30 as is now proposed? What would the difference in costs be considering the return to be made to the treasury through income taxes?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the argument has been made and debated that it would be better, or almost as good, financially, to pay everybody the flat rate.

An hon. Member: Why don't you?

Mr. MacEachen: It has been argued that we could recover in the form of income tax such sums as would offset any administrative costs we might incur. It has been suggested that such sums would be as great as any savings in this program. I have put on the record the recoveries we would expect to make. For example, if the rate were kept at the present $75 the amount paid out, if the $75 were continued, would be $1,110 million. The recovery in income tax is relatively small. The figure that I recorded was $33 million. If we increased the figure to $105 a month the additional recovery would be $15 million. It is surprising that the recovery is so relatively small.

We think by this program, by concentrating the assistance in the low income groups, that even with greater administration costs we should, in comparison, be securing savings to the taxpayers of $97 million. That is a considerable sum from the point of view of the Canadian taxpayer. It underlines how relatively small the administration costs of this program will be and how relatively small recoveries would be if the figure were changed.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): The fact that the minister has placed on the record that the recoveries are so small is an indication that a great many of our old age pensioners need added income, and they will not be among the people receiving it. If they were receiving adequate income the recovery would be much larger. The minister defeats his own argument by saying that the recovery is so small that it is hardly worth talking about. There must be many old people in Canada needing this extra money.

Mr. MacEachen: That may be part of the explanation. The other part of the explanation is that pensioners with high incomes still retain a considerable portion of this pension payment.

Mr. Pugh: Having listened to the hon. member for Kootenay West describe Utopia and make his point about income, I wish to ask a similar question affecting people with small holdings and drawing veterans' pensions. I should like to know the definition of income or the rules and regulations applying to income affecting veterans with small holdings. Some of these veterans have allowances under the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Some veterans have small holdings of only an acre or an acre and a half. From these holdings they derive no actual income. They are assessed, I take it, on what is known as calculated income. The minister, I think, nodded his head in affirmation. That is an important point, because what the hon. member for Kootenay West said struck a cord in my mind. I am aware of veterans receiving war veterans allowance who have improved their own places and take fruit from extraordinarily small orchards to the packinghouses. Against what they receive for the fruit they have to set the cost of growing the fruit, pruning, spraying and so on. Spraying is the most important part of the process. The department will not take the net return as the assessment of income. It will not take what the grower receives from the packinghouse and set it off against the expenses of growing the fruit.

Before the minister reaches agreement with the hon. member for Kootenay West about what is and what is not Utopia, will he take this matter up with the Minister of Veterans Affairs and find out what effect the terms of this bill are likely to have on war veterans allowances? It is not as though only one or two people will be affected. In my area, as well as in the area represented by the hon. member for Kootenay West, there has been a great deal of settlement on what are termed small holdings and I am concerned about the inequalities which the payment of the additional $30 may have upon such men.

Mr. Nasserden: In rising to take part in this debate I cannot but think back to the days before I entered the House of Commons, the days when the Liberal party held sway in Canada and seemed almost impossible to defeat. Those were days when the Liberal party had a policy, had principles and believed in embodying those principles in the legislation which it brought forward.

In looking at this piece of legislation which has been prepared by the minister and the government I have reached the conclusion that it amounts to a reversal and repudiation of the policies which have for so long been followed by the Liberal party. I cannot help thinking of the men and women from one end of Canada to the other who took justifiable pride in a party which abolished the means test in regard to the aged citizens of this country, those who had pioneered, those who had come to this land to build their homes and bring into being a society better than the society in the countries from which they had come.

Now we have a Minister of National Health and Welfare who is unworthy of the traditions of the party to which he belongs. At a time when the cost of living has reached the highest point ever, he comes to this house with a proposal that certain classes of the aged should be subject to discrimination. The hon. gentleman can shake his head and make all the arguments he wishes to make in this regard, but this bill certainly does discriminate against a great number of those who are receiving old age security benefits.

Think of those who in order to meet expenses at the present time are earning a little income from odd jobs. Others are, perhaps renting a room to a student in order to make a few extra dollars. These are the people who are to be penalized. I think back to the election campaign before the party opposite formed the minority government. I think of the boasts which were made during that campaign. Twenty-five dollars was not enough. They said they would give more than that as of right to the aged people of this country, those who laid the foundations upon which we are building. During that election campaign we had men like the minister going from one end of this country to the other saying that their leader was a man who cared. What is there in this bill which fulfils the promises they made to the senior citizens of this country during that campaign?

It is disappointing to me to see the present Minister of National Health and Welfare disavow the principles upon which his party was founded and the policy followed during one of its greatest periods when it abolished the means test with respect to recipients of old age pensions. The minister cannot take much pride in the legislation he has placed before the committee. He will not only disappoint the Canadian people, who remember some of the promises made during the election campaign, but he will surely disappoint those who are the very bulwark of the Liberal party from one end of the country to the other.

There are other things about this bill which concern me. I believe that in its present form it will have an adverse effect on the productivity of Canada. After all, what is the incentive for an elderly person to earn a little extra money if the result is to be discrimination along the lines set out in this bill? A government which has boasted so much about its achievements in social legislation must surely have hesitated before bringing back the means test in old age security legislation. Then the Minister of Finance tells us he is going to be Santa Claus to the senior citizens of this country. I am reminded of a picture in one of the great daily papers of this city today—a picture of a lean and lanky Santa Claus. That is the type of Santa Claus which the government represents to many of those who receive old age security payments at the present time.

Today, as I have pointed out, the cost of living in Canada is the highest in the nation's history. This situation has come about as a result of action deliberately taken by the government opposite. Yet we have the spectacle of the government deciding that it will do something for some of those who are receiving old age security payments and nothing for others in the same category. How can we differentiate between those who pioneered in this land and gave of their best so that we could enjoy today the standard of living we have achieved and a tradition to hand on to the next generation which is worthy of a free people?

I am thinking of the many people who supported the minister and the government during the last election when I plead with the minister tonight to change his mind. In his heart he knows he is not doing what he promised the people of Canada during the last election campaign. He is not following the record of his party which it established when it abolished the means test some years ago. It does not matter whether the minister calls it a needs test. Everybody in Canada knows it is a means test and that it is the meanest test of all. It is unfitting for a young and youthful minister, with a great future ahead of him—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nasserden: —to bring forward this type of legislation. I am not so sure his future is going to be in politics if this is the type of legislation he is going to bring forward. Why don't hon. members opposite applaud that?

Those who voted Liberal in my riding and those who voted Liberal across the country will be disappointed with this measure because of the fact that it falls short of the traditional and historic stand taken by the Liberal party in years gone by. This legislation also reflects on the Prime Minister. He does not measure up to the standard that was set by former Prime Minister St. Laurent at the time the means test was eliminated. During the last election campaign the Liberals used the slogan in reference to the Prime Minister—"This man cares". But when I look at the bill I ask, what does he care about? Certainly he does not care for those people who will not benefit by this legislation, nor for those who will be discriminated against, nor for those who will enjoy a lesser standard of living because of the lesser productivity caused by the means test in this legislation.

A young man like the minister should be thinking of productivity in this day and age when people all around the world are finding it more and more difficult to compete in the markets for the goods that are sent from one nation to another. I hope the minister thinks about that, and that before this measure passes he will do something to eliminate this undesirable feature of a means test which he is asking parliament to reintroduce in its dealings with the senior citizens of our country.

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to inject one or two words at this point in the debate to ask the minister to consider some kind of supplementary benefit in this legislation that would be pegged to the cost of living. The guaranteed income supplement will certainly be a benefit to thousands of old age pensioners who for one reason or another were not able to provide adequately for their declining years, but it seems to me that the legislation is penalizing those who did succeed in one way or another in putting something or providing some kind of retirement income for their old age.

One of the most crippling and unsatisfactory aspects of this legislation is the blow it delivers to the Canadian spirit of initiative, individual responsiblity and enterprise. Thousands upon thousands of people in this latter category have a small retirement income which now, by some supreme irony, militates against them in their old age. I suggest that this is a sad state of affairs in a great country like Canada which was built on individual initiative and the spirit of individual enterprise.

These old age pensioners who have a small retirement income are severely pressed by today's high living costs and have no hope of escape from this trap unless we in parliament move to intervene on their behalf. I ask the minister, why should a man or woman who has worked all his or her life, say on a railroad or in some other job, be penalized now for having earned a small pension? That is what this legislation does. It penalizes the man who applied himself sufficiently to his job during his working years to lay up a small retirement income for himself.

The government should, without question, bring in a flat $30 a month old age pension increase across the board, with no questions asked. The Senate committee on aging recommended a minimum income of $1,260 a year for all Canadians. I say, all right, let us put that into effect for everyone. But at the very least thousands and thousands of old age pensioners need some help against the cost of living, and it seems to me that the top priority item in this legislation should be some additional supplement for all senior Canadians, pegged to the rise in living costs.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few words to say after hearing the remarks of the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) who says the present government promised during the election campaign such and such a pension and feels that the government is not generous enough. However, the hon. member forgot to say that his party was in power from 1957 to 1962. Who prevented his party, while in power, from passing the measures it is now advocating? Who prevented his party, while in power, from giving our older people what they are entitled to get?

Mr. Chairman, we must be honest all the same with the Canadian people and stop indulging in petty politics. It is good to hear the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) tell us about all the advantages that the party now in power could bring to the aged in Canada. But when they were in power, barely four years ago, why did they not give older Canadians what they are now asking the government to give them?

Mr. Chairman, honesty does not work only one way; it should exist on both sides. It is essential to be as honest and truthful with the Canadian voters. Today, the Conservatives criticize the advantages that the government will give to our older people, and yet, they had the largest majority in Canadian history, having had the greatest number of members elected to the house in 1958, since Confederation, that is, 208 out of 265, and they did less than nothing. There were then in Canada more than a million unemployed.

And today, the member for Rosthern rose to ask the government: "What are you doing about your election promises?" But what have you done, you Conservatives, about your election promises? In Quebec and throughout Canada, what did you do about that?

Mr. Chairman, I have no sympathy for the Liberals or for the Conservatives. Truth only must prevail, and the right must remain truthful.

Mr. Chairman, it is all very well to recall other parties' election promises, and it is even easy, when one has failed to keep one's own promises while in power. The Conservatives are acting in this way.

I see my good friend the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Régimbal). He knows I am right when I say this. His presence here is the result of lies told by the Conservatives in the province of Quebec.

Mind you, Mr. Chairman, I have nothing against the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes, on the contrary, I think highly of him. But I think he is in the wrong pew; he should not be sitting there, he does not have any elbow room. He must act according to instructions, according to the consensus of a party which has betrayed Canada since confederation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: One of my good English speaking friends who participated in this round of applause says he will answer me in a moment. He is welcome. Nothing prevents any hon. member to speak up and say what he likes in the house, Mr. Chairman. I am saying frankly what I have to say. I am not approving everything the Liberals do. Far from it. I believe—

An hon. Member: Almost.

Mr. Caouette: No, no, not almost, not at all. I believe our senior citizens deserve better treatment. I sincerely believe the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) should, first of all, take into account the wishes of the provinces. That is why, Mr. Chairman, I should like to move an amendment to the bill before us. The amendment I move—

An hon. Member: There is already one before the house.

Mr. Caouette: Which one?

Mr. Boulanger: There is none.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, is there an amendment before the committee? If so, I will keep mine as a handy substitute.

An hon. Member: There is none.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[English]

The Chairman: Order. There is no amendment before the committee at the moment.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, this proves one thing: I am the only one who is in step and the others are out of step, because several members shouted to me that there was an amendment; among them was the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger), who is always mixed up anyway.

Mr. Boulanger: I said there was no amendment.

Mr. Caouette: Not the hon. member for Mercier, Mr. Chairman, I mean the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay), who misled me. The hon. member for Mercier was right; there was no amendment. Therefore I move the following amendment to clause 1, which means to Bill No. C-251 as a whole:

"That while this house is of the opinion that the necessary steps should be taken to provide our senior Canadian citizens with an adequate pension, it believes that legislation dealing with an old age security plan in Canada would not be adequate unless it provides a fiscal compensation plan permitting any province that might so wish to establish its own old age security plan."

An hon. Member: It is almost the amendment of the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), word for word.

Mr. Caouette: The amendment moved by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) was not—

An hon. Member: Separatist.

Mr. Caouette: No, there is no separatism at all in this. There is simply confirmation as regards positions taken by the province of Quebec. This does not deal at all with separatism, Mr. Chairman, but only with the respect for the spirit and the letter of clause 94A the Canadian constitution, which provides that the federal government can only intervene in the social legislation or the old age pension field so long as the rights of provinces are being respected.

So, Mr. Chairman, such is the spirit of the amendment I move. The Conservatives, the Liberals, the members of the New Democratic Party may discuss it as long as they will; I sincerely believe that until the Canadian constitution is amended it must be respected in its present form, otherwise we will not reach that unity and that national understanding so necessary to the development of our natural resources and all the spheres of this country's economic activity.

Mr. Chairman, such is the amendment I am moving and I hope everyone, Liberals, Conservatives, members of the C.C.F., of the N.D.P., and we, of the Social Credit party, will accept it.

[English]

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I should like to respond to the invitation which has been extended to me by the leader of the Créditiste party to trace some of the history of the legislation which has been provided for the people of this country in the form of old age security. At the outset may I say that the government led by my leader, Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, the hon. member for Prince Albert, when he was prime minister of this country—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nasserden: —provided more in the way of old age security than any other comparable government in Canadian history. We remember how that government came to office. It came to office because of the "six-buck boys" across the way. There they sat with the old age pension at $40 a month. The hon. Mr. Caouette endorsed the—

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) is not allowed to call me "honourable Caouette". He must refer to the name of my riding, according to the standing orders of the house and, for his benefit, I represent Villeneuve county. I hope he can pronounce this name as well as I pronounce the name Rosthern, his riding.

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. Perhaps in the heat of the debate the hon. member for Rosthern has forgotten the usual method which is used in referring to members in the house.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say very frankly that for the moment I forgot the name of the constituency the hon. member represents. I regret any inconvenience that my reference has caused him. I hope he will accept my apology. I was about to say that the hon. member for Villeneuve reminded me of—

• (9:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nasserden: The hon. member knows that my heart is in the right place. The hon. member for Villeneuve reminds me tonight of the method by which the former administration came to office following the Liberal occupancy over a period of 22 years. The Liberals increased pensions to $40 per month and then they proposed, during inflationary years, to pay our senior citizens an extra $6 per month. Surely they recall what happened in this country at that time. The people receiving assistance took objection and brought that government to its knees.

The leader of the Créditiste party asked me what our party did for our senior citizens when we were in office. We raised old age pensions to $55 per month and then to $65 per month. We were not responsible for an increase in the cost of living such as we are faced with today. We did not create circumstances such as those created by hon. gentlemen opposite.

The leader of the Créditiste party has endorsed the action taken by this government which has resulted in an increase in the cost of living in this country. Interest rates and rents have gone up. The government of today increased pensions by $10 per month and immediately the cost of accommodation was increased by an equivalent amount. Has the leader of the Créditiste party and his followers in the House of Commons any answer to the obvious situation which the government has created—

Mr. Caouette: Would the hon. member for Rosthern permit a question?

Mr. Nasserden: Certainly.

Mr. Caouette: Would the hon. member indicate what the Conservative government would have done in the circumstances which exist today? If he could answer that question I am sure he would be saying more than he is saying at this time.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I will be pleased to respond to the hon. member's question if you will allow me to do so. A Conservative government would not have put into effect an 11 per cent sales tax. We would not have encouraged the highest interest rates in the entire history of this country, and we would not have increased the interest rate in respect of housing to 7¼ per cent as this government has done. We did exactly the opposite when we were in power.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order, please. I can understand the desire of the hon. member for Rosthern to answer the question posed by the hon. member for Villeneuve but I suggest he confine his remarks to the clause of the bill now before us.

Mr. Ricard: Members on the other side sound like wild geese.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I shall try to confine my remarks to the clause now under study. Let me answer the question posed by the hon. member for Villeneuve who has endorsed the action taken by the government. He asked me what we did when we were in power. We tried to provide additional moneys and accommodation for our senior citizens at a rate which—

[Mr. Nasserden.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Nasserden: Let me remind the minister who has interrupted that by our policies we enhanced the livelihood of our senior citizens by decreasing the costs of—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I suggest that this is not the time for Aesop's fables or Diefenbaker's fables. We ought to return to a consideration of the bill before us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, that admonition on the part of the minister reminds me of the time when he sat on this side of the house and the liberties he then took.

Mr. Pickersgill: Abide by the rules of the house.

Mr. Nasserden: I intend to abide by the rules. When this party was in power we increased assistance to the blind and the disabled. Pensions were increased by our government. We did a great deal compared with what the present government did during the period of time between the two world wars. This party when in power more than doubled assistance in respect of hospitalization.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, all I am trying to do is answer the false charges made by the leader of the Créditiste party.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order and a question of privilege.

The member for Rosthern says that I have made wrong accusations. Can he deny that, under a Conservative government, when his party had 208 Conservative members of parliament, we experienced the greatest difficulties, that there were over 1 million unemployed in Canada, something which Canada had never experienced before? Is the hon. member prepared to support his position?

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. The committee seems to be getting away from the subject matter of our discussion. Let me ask hon. members to co-operate with the Chair by relating their remarks to the clause now under discussion.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I immediately recall the days when we assumed office. At that time this country faced conditions the like of which had never before been experienced. It took three years to lay the foundations for the greatest period of expansion this country has ever known.

An hon. Member: What about the vision?

Mr. Nasserden: That is my answer to the "funny money" position.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman—

[English]

Mr. Pugh: I rise on a point or order, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The only period we experienced the worst credit restrictions, with "funny credit", was when the Conservatives were in power.

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. In my opinion the hon. member does not have a point of order.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the interruption of the hon. member for Villeneuve because he reminds me of the fact that when we were in office we improved the benefits of our elderly citizens by allowing an additional $100 deduction, so far as income tax was concerned, for those over 65 years of age. Apparently the leader of the Créditistes endorsed the action taken by hon. gentlemen opposite. We are against the means test. What is the position of the hon. gentleman in this regard?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

Mr. Nasserden: Well, Mr. Chairman, I can understand—

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member says that this party is against a means test—

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Caouette: Yes, Mr. Chairman, this is a point of order. When the hon. gentleman says that he is against a means test he is misleading the House of Commons.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I can understand the feelings of guilt that fall upon the shoulders and exist in the mind of anyone who would propose a piece of legislation bringing back into the statute books of this country a means test which would affect those who pioneered this land. Everyone in the House of Commons knows why the leader of the Creditistes has taken that stand tonight. We have heard that he believes there are more children in the province of Quebec than there are old people and therefore he would like to see family allowances increased rather than old age security payments. This is at the heart of the proposal which he has put forward tonight and of the charges which he has made.

We in this party, and I believe Canadians generally, believe that those who pioneered this land, many of them at great sacrifice, regardless of whether they were thrifty during their lifetime or not are entitled to a basic consideration in view of the contribution which they have made to the society which we are trying to build within this nation. This principle was endorsed by Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent and the administration of which he was the head. This principle has been repudiated by the government opposite and by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is a sorry sight to see an administration retreat from a position which was endorsed by a vast majority of Canadians in the years gone by. I cannot help but wonder what it was that brought about this repudiation and reversal of the policies and principles of a great party in their effort to do something for the senior citizens of this country.

When I consider the figure which the Minister of National Health and Welfare has given us with regard to the saving that this measure will effect—and there is no time tonight to go into it in detail—I cannot but feel that the minister has failed to take into consideration many aspects of the situation. However, the most important aspect of the situation is the loss of productivity which this nation will encounter because of the action taken by the government and, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Simcoe East, not only will it result in a loss of productivity for this country but also in the shortening of the life span of our senior citizens. It is important for them to know that they are still part and parcel of the productive channels of this nation in seeking to establish a better living for all our citizens.

Every member in his own community has seen active men and women who have retired and, when faced with inactivity, fade away and sometimes die within a matter of months after their retirement. I admit that this does not happen in all cases but we have seen it happen to people who have been active during the major part of their lives. By the very terms of the legislation the government is almost saying to them that they are no longer wanted in the productive machinery of this nation. This is something for the minister to think about. A few minutes ago I said that he was a young minister with perhaps a brilliant future of him. Let him ensure this brilliant future by making this legislation the cornerstone of that future instead of repudiating every principle for which his party has stood in the years gone by.

The Chairman: If the committee so wishes I would be prepared to make a ruling on the amendment submitted by the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment deserves some discussion. The hon. member for Villeneuve has come before us trumpeting his own virtues and has brought forward an amendment which can obviously only be moved on second reading of the bill and not in the committee stage. Apparently he does not know the difference when Your Honour is seated where you are and when Your Honour is seated in Mr. Speaker's chair. I think this should be brought to the attention of the committee. I know Your Honour will be kind to the hon. member for Villeneuve and will rule out of order the amendment proposed by him without giving him an extensive explanation of why it should be ruled out of order. The fact is that the hon. member for Villeneuve is not aware of what has taken place in the committee with regard to this bill, and I hope that Your Honour's ruling will make this perfectly plain.

The Chairman: Order. I will read the motion proposed by the hon. member for Villeneuve:

> That all the words following the word "that" be removed and replaced by the following—
> "That this house is of the opinion that the necessary dispositions taken to assure the senior Canadian citizens an adequate pension but furthermore believes that legislation dealing with an old age security plan in Canada would not be adequate unless it provides a fiscal compensation plan permitting any province that might desire to instal its own old age security plan."

[Mr. Nasserden.]

First of all I should like to point out to the committee that this amendment is not presented in the proper form. I consider this to be a substantive motion which cannot be moved on any clause in committee. Second, I refer hon. members to standing order 59 (2) which states:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

The proposed amendment now before the committee is not relevant to clause 1 of the bill which the committee is now discussing. Again I should point out to the committee that the form of the amendment might allow it to be moved on second or third reading but it cannot be accepted as an amendment to a clause at this time. For these three reasons I will have to rule the amendment moved by the hon. member for Villeneuve out of order.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I take pleasure in participating in this debate, even if I do so somewhat late, for three reasons. The first reason is the very obvious need of old age pensioners. The second reason is a statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to which I take very real exception. The third reason for my real interest in participating in the debate—it is a catalyst form of participation since the debate will continue whether I participate or not—is the motion moved by the Minister of Transport at seven o'clock tonight. From my brief experience in the house I suggest that the minister's movement, and he is known for many movements, is conditioned by the season of the year. Many members are in their seats tonight and it seems that the minister's motion, though ill-conceived perhaps, is in keeping with the mood of the season. His motion has brought all sorts of members into the house, which reminds me of the nocturnal activity in the days of Scrooge.

There is some analogy between the motion of the minister and the bill under debate to Mr. Scrooge, Bob Cratchit, his bookkeeper, and Marley's ghost. The hon. member for Rosthern said he had a great sympathy for the minister, but that he thought he was a little too avant garde. I think the minister should look to his derriere. This bill should make the minister look more to his rear than to his front. For just like Scrooge with the chains rattling in the basement and the apparitions appearing, so will apparitions appear before the old age pensioners, if this bill becomes law, at the thought of filling out a multitude of forms to comply with the terms of the bill. This will come home to the minister in the same way as Bob Cratchit and Marley's ghost home to Scrooge.

I take exception to the bill, Mr. Chairman. One of the first statements the minister made was that for one to suggest a means test was involved indicated one was either stupid or dishonest. I point out to the minister that the fact of the matter is that a test is involved. He calls it an income test but I suggest it is a mean type of test.

In the last few days he has taken great pride in pointing out that through this principle certain pensioners would receive more per month than they would with a flat rate, across-the-board increase. At one sweep of the pen without any administrative gobbledygook in interpreting this bill they would get a straight increase.

The minister has prided himself in saying that under the present bill the pensioners will get an increase of $30 a month. Compare this with what this party fought for in the election of November, 1965, an increase of $25 a month. Whether you call this test a means test, a needs test, an income test or MacEachen's test, the fact of the matter is that there are 50,538 pensioners in Nova Scotia in receipt of old age security payments. Taking 50,000 as a round figure, if an amendment moved in this house almost a year ago had been passed the pensioners of Nova Scotia would have received $25 a month supplement. Twenty-five dollars a month would have meant an extra $300 a year in the pocket of each pensioner and, multiplied by 50,000, some $15 million would have been provided our needy old age pensioners in Nova Scotia.

The minister castigated the opposition for suggesting an aboveboard, flat-rate increase of $25 a month. But the pensioners of Nova Scotia have lost $15 million over the past year because the minister and his colleagues sat on their derrieres. I suggest to the hon. member for Rosthern that the minister should not look ahead but to his derriere, because all of the actions of this government have been taken from the derriere. In suggesting that we on this side, who have tried to be constructive, have attempted to befog the issue and in standing up and repeating the words of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce that because we believe a test is involved we are either stupid or dishonest, the minister is departing from the standard of intelligence for which he has been known in certain areas of the country as well as in his native province.

I compliment the Minister of Transport, as I say, for this motion tonight because he has brought so many members into the house. He has many attributes I admire, but I am surprised to find him participating in this debate, having been close to the persons in power in 1951 when parliament decided that there would be no means test imposed upon the needy pensioners of this country. I do not care what the minister calls this test or even if he describes it in Gaelic. Fifteen million dollars could have been put into the pockets of 50,538 pensioners in Nova Scotia had the government not sat on its derriere.

I have noted with awe the sphinx-like silence on the part of the members from Quebec opposite. I have listened with great interest to the members on this side, as well as the members to my left and the independents as they have tried to explain the constitution to members who should be interested in the constitution. These 50 members opposite remind me of the sphinx of Egypt. It looks solid, it has been there for centuries, for aeons of time. The sands of time have whirled around the sphinx; nevertheless it still sits there, the winds, hurricanes and pressures of time billowing about it. It is just like the 50 members from Quebec who sit in their seats opposite silent and sphinx-like, with heads of rock and hearts of stone. They personify the sphinx, and unfortunately the sphinx personifies those opposite who have failed to participate in the very real constitutional issue involved in this legislation.

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Nowlan: For this reason alone I am only too happy to participate in this debate. I will not repeat the constitutional arguments which have been made to those with hearts of stone and heads of rock across the aisle; I leave it to their conscience. But regardless of the fact that Nova Scotia is not like Quebec, which is a province of great bounty and wealth, we are concerned about the constitution, and there is no doubt that this legislation runs counter to and conflicts with provincial jurisdiction.

My third reason for participating in this debate, other than to engage in this nocturnal activity—

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Business of the House

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Fulton: Would the hon. member permit me to move that the chairman of the committee rise and report progress?

Mr. McIlraith: And request leave to sit later this day.

Mr. Fulton: Would the hon. member permit me to move that the chairman rise and report progress? There is a matter which I wish to have taken up with Mr. Speaker. The committee could rise. The chairman could report progress and request leave to sit later this day.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

AGREEMENT TO EXTEND SITTING FOR ONE HOUR

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, between six o'clock and eight o'clock tonight there was a motion made that was contrary to an understanding that existed between the house leaders that such type of motion would not be moved between six and eight o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIlraith: In the light of that understanding and in order to attempt to live up to it I wonder if the house would not consider agreeing to sit until eleven o'clock to make some progress on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed? It is so ordered.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): May I ask the minister a question? Am I to understand that the Minister of Transport put his foot in it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The order made earlier is rescinded and we shall now proceed under the new order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to add to the embarrassment of the Minister of Transport, but is it the understanding of the house leader that the rule, properly interpreted, should not have permitted the making of that category—

Mr. McIlraith: I want to clear this up if I may. I think it is very important. I am not quarreling with the interpretation of the rule but I indicated that we intended when we drafted the rule, and we did not do a very good job—

An hon. Member: As usual.

Mr. McIlraith: —that we would not use this rule between six o'clock and eight o'clock if five members objected. That was the understanding existing between the house leaders. Regrettably and understandably that was not conveyed to all hon. members and they relied on the rule as it reads.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION OF GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT AND DETERMINATION OF PENSIONERS' INCOMES

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-251, to amend the Old Age Security Act—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Definitions.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, because we have made such good progress in the last five minutes I will not hold up the completion of this bill. That progress was hastened by looking at the clock and by circumventing any Pickersgillian efforts to pollute the rules of this house. There is a third reason why I do not hesitate to participate in this debate. I have already repeated two arguments and I shall now come to the third. We are all somewhat agitated about the progress of the bill and I think there is real merit in discussing and debating what it contains. As I say, I will not repeat all the arguments. In two minutes I wish to summarize, and I can do it. I am reminded of the schoolteacher who in grade 3 tried to implant in me the basic lessons constituting the three R's. Without talking about reading, writing and arithmetic, I wish to go back to this bill and compare it not with the three R's but with the three I's.

I notice that hon. members opposite are not standing up. They have been noticeably silent about this bill. In talking of the three I's as they apply to this bill I say that the first of those I's is incentive. This bill kills any incentive for old people to work because it cuts away their means. Incentive therefore is the first I. The second I stands for investigation and, whether the minister knows it or not, it is investigation under the Income Tax Act. It surprised me to hear the Minister of Public Works stand up trying to imply support for this bill because in the debate on a similar bill in 1951, as reported on page 1353 of Hansard for that year, the Minister of Public Works, then the parliamentary secretary to the minister of trade and commerce, said that no part of the Income Tax Act would be used without the previous consent in writing of the person making the return. That has been circumvented, because we shall have investigation.

The third I is inequality between the old age pensioners, those who have worked and saved a little of their income, and those who have not.

Mr. Knowles: And indignation.

Mr. Nowlan: Indignation is what people outside this house will feel.

An hon. Member: And indignity.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, and indignity, to which you can add insult and many other I's. The bill is against incentive, it is for investigation and it will perpetuate inequality. It will add to the difficulties pensioners have with the high cost of living, lack of income and all the rest of it. I go back to the words of the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes—

An hon. Member: Your two minutes are up.

Mr. Nowlan: Are they? The hon. member mentioned that if the gross national product in 1951 could provide a $40 or $50 old age pension, taking into account the same considerations the gross national product now could support a pension of $105 a month. The noise made by Scrooge's chains in the basement will be a heavenly minuet compared with the noise the chains binding the old age pensioners will make as those chains are prescribed in this bill.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That subsection (1) of new section 8 of clause 3 be amended by the addition of the following proviso thereto:

"Provided that no deduction shall be made in the case of a single person having earned less than three hundred and sixty dollars in the preceding year and in the case of a married person, otherwise qualified, having earned less than seven hundred and twenty dollars in the preceding year."

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I indicated earlier that I wished to move an amendment to the new section 7 being enacted by clause 3. I believe that this comes ahead of the part which the hon. member for Simcoe East wishes to amend. Also, there is a rule which says that amendments have to be made in the order of the clauses concerned. I should therefore like to have an opportunity of putting my amendment ahead of the hon. member's.

Mr. Rynard: I would be glad to let mine stand for the time being.

The Deputy Chairman: We are now considering clause 3 and we shall go to the new section 6. Shall the new section 6 of clause 3 carry?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I wish to move two amendments. I will deal with them one at a time. The first is an amendment to subsection 1 of the new section 7. If hon. members will look at it they will see that it contains a limitation. The general purpose is that a guaranteed income supplement is to be paid to every pensioner commencing with the year 1967. However, by the words which follow the guaranteed income supplement will never be paid to persons born after the end of 1910. This means that persons who are now 56 years of age or older have this supplement to look forward to when they reach pensionable age, provided they qualify for it. But persons now under the age of 56 will not have this supplement available to them when they reach pensionable age no matter what their income may be.

I recognize that the plan to phase out the guaranteed income supplement is related to the time when the Canada Pension Plan benefits reach their maximum level. But there are two things to be said. First, it will never be the case that all Canadians will be covered by the Canada Pension Plan. Why, then, should we exclude from the notion of a guaranteed income level those persons who will not get benefits from the Canada Pension Plan ten years from now?

The other point is that the exclusion of such people is inconsistent, in my opinion, with the idea of increasing the basic amount of the old age security pension. This clause says in effect: we are moving toward a guaranteed income level but we are adopting it for only a limited period. If the idea of a guaranteed income is as wonderful as the minister makes it out to be, if it is to take its place with all the great pieces of social legislation about which the minister has boasted, why place it on such a temporary basis?

I shall have something to say about later clauses. I shall have other amendments to move in an attempt to bring about further improvements which I believe should be made in this legislation. If I could make all the improvements I wanted to make I would, for one thing, turn the supplement into part of the basic pension. In any event, if this idea is as worth while as the minister pretends, why should we have its fruits only for the next nine years and then phase them out? If the plan is such a good idea, I suggest it be permanent in its effect. I therefore move:

That clause 3 of Bill C-251 be amended by deleting from sub-section (1) of the new section 7 being enacted thereby all the words after the words "every pensioner".

If hon. members will look at the clause they will realize that this has the effect of cutting out the words "born on or before the 31st day of December, 1910." The subsection as amended would then read:

Subject to this Part and the regulations, for each month in any year commencing with the year 1967, a monthly guaranteed income supplement may be paid to every pensioner.

I have copies of the amendment in my hand but I believe the table already has copies in line with the notice I gave earlier.

The Chairman: If there are any comments to make as to the validity of this amendment the Chair will be pleased to hear them.

Mr. MacEachen: I should like to argue that this amendment is not in order and that it should not be put to the committee. The effect of the amendment is, of course, to apply the benefits of the bill to all pensioners in perpetuity. If the principle argued by the hon. member were accepted it would do more than anything else to undermine confidence in the Canada Pension Plan and it would ultimately give the workers of Canada the right to complain that we perpetrated a fraud when the Canada Pension Plan was passed if we intended to introduce a parallel program which would exist in perpetuity. All kinds of questions would be raised as to equity between persons who were beneficiaries under the Canada Pension Plan and those who were beneficiaries under the income supplementation program.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister a question, since he is speaking on the substance of the amendment? Why would a $105 old age security pension be any more contradictory to the principle of the Canada Pension Plan than a $75 old age security pension? How can $105 be a fraud and $75 not be? Where did the minister get that nonsense?

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. MacEachen: The Canada Pension Plan was passed and its benefits were related to a pension of $75.

Mr. Knowles: Was it frozen?

Mr. MacEachen: No, it was not frozen.

Mr. Knowles: Well, what are you talking about, then?

Mr. MacEachen: I am well aware of the sensitivity of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on this point because the effect of his amendment would be to undermine confidence in the Canada Pension Plan and entitle the workers and contributors to that plan to conclude that this parliament had perpetrated a fraud because in the following year it had provided a parallel system of income support which would be bound to weaken the Canada Pension Plan. Why should people be asked to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan for benefits if, in certain income ranges, they could enjoy the same benefits from a general income support program? That is the question which my hon. friend has failed to answer, and just cannot answer. That is the conclusion; there is just no answer. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to argue the substance because I suggest—

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Barnett: The minister already has for five minutes. I suggest that makes the amendment in order for debate.

Mr. MacEachen: Presumably if the rule were to be applied the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should have presented his amendment and then sat down until it was determined whether it was in order before he made his argument in substance.

The resolution preceding this bill provides for "a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act, effective with respect to months beginning with January, 1967, to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund and for the charging to the old age security fund under that act of a monthly amount to be known as the guaranteed income supplement, to certain pensioners".

The expression "certain" was put in the resolution for the explicit purpose of confining the application of the measure to pensioners born on or before December 31, 1910. If that were not the purpose, Mr. Chairman, then the simple expression that has been used by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, namely, "to pensioners thereunder" would have been used. The word "certain" in the resolution is a limiting word which in my judgment makes this amendment out of order.

I refer to citation 246 in Beauchesne's fourth edition which reads in part as follows:

> The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all . . . not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications.

We have qualified and conditioned the royal recommendation by including in it the expression "certain", with the intention that it would limit the application of the benefit to pensioners born on or before December 31, 1910. For that reason. I suggest that the amendment goes beyond the scope of the resolution because it widens the effect to include all pensioners and not certain pensioners as contained in the royal recommendation.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on the point of order which the minister has raised, and I suggest that this is a very serious point of order affecting the question of whether or not parliament has any rights in this field at all. We all recognize the function of a royal resolution preceding a money bill. We recognize the rules and the citations and the requirements that a bill must not go beyond the specific conditions laid down in a money resolution. But there are also citations which say that care must be taken to draft a money resolution to cover the points that the government has in mind.

There was nothing whatsoever in the resolution that perceded this bill which suggested there was to be any cut-off in terms of the date of birth of a pensioner. For the minister to stand up and make the assertions that he did tonight is for the government to say, any time it brings in a bill, that there can be no change in it because "this is what we intended and that is it".

An hon. Member: Liberal arrogance.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, I am afraid the position the minister is taking tonight is one of arrogance. He has read the resolution and I invite Your Honour to read it. I find it at page 10707 of Hansard for December 5, and it reads as follows:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act, effective with respect to months beginning with January, 1967, to provide for the payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and for the charging to the old age security fund under that act of a monthly amount to be known as the guaranteed income supplement, to certain pensioners thereunder up to a maximum of 40 per cent of the amount of the pension payable under that act; to provide for the determination of the income of a pensioner for the purposes of such supplement and for appeals by pensioners against decisions or determinations made under that act; and to provide for other related and consequential matters.

The resolution made it clear that there was to be a limit as to the amount. The amount could not be more than 40 per cent of the amount of the pension provided under the Old Age Security Act. It made it clear that there was to be a provision for the determination of the income of a pensioner for certain purposes and so on, but there was nothing whatsoever in that resolution that said there would be any date in the bill phasing out this plan, that there would be anything in the bill that would say that people could not get this supplement if they were born after a certain date.

For the minister to take the position that the word "certain" in the resolution covered anything the government proposed to put in the subsequent bill means that from now on, if that position is supported, all resolutions preceding money bills can be extremely simple. All the government needs to do by way of resolution preceding a money bill is to say it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide certain things. Then we will get the bill and the things in that bill will be what the government intended, and the government can say that was what was contained in the royal recommendation.

I submit that we are back to the kind of procedural debate that we had when we were on the medicare bill, when we had many arguments over what was included or not included in the royal recommendation. Surely this resolution on its face indicates that there are some things that the government felt had to be covered—the amount of the pension, the question of the test and so on, but there was no reference whatsoever to a cut-off date such as is now in the bill. Therefore I submit, no reference having been made to it in the resolution, that the government has no legal right now to claim that we cannot move this kind of amendment.

I also point out that this is not the kind of a money resolution that sets an amount of dollars in any absolute figure. When we pass legislation of this kind which provides an allowance, pension or benefit we do not say that only so many thousands or millions of dollars can be spent. We pass a bill that lays down principles, and if people meet those principles the money has to be found to meet the payments. There is no over-all ceiling on the amount of money provided. It is simply a matter of principle, and there was nothing in the resolution to say that one of the principles would be this cut-off date.

I submit there is more at stake in the procedural argument we are having now than just this bill. What is at stake here is the whole question of the right of the government to conceal what it has in mind when it is drafting a resolution, to say as little as possible, but by putting in that word "certain", or something like that, to be able to claim that parliament cannot make any kind of amendment. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this point has got to be looked at very seriously, and I certainly contend that my amendment does not go beyond the terms of the resolution. As a matter of fact, my amendment accepts the alleged virtues of the resolution and says, if this is a good plan let us stay with it.

Since the minister did take some time to argue substance, perhaps I might point out again that it is no more inconsistent with the Canada Pension Plan to have an old age security provision of $105 a month or $150 a month than it is to have one of $75 a month. I suggest that argument was quite beside the point. However, I am keeping to the point of order and I contend that this amendment does not go beyond the terms of the resolution and should be allowed as in order.

The Chairman: Order—

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I should like to say that the resolution as proposed by the government refers to pensioners with different levels of income rather than what the minister referred to.

Mr. MacEachen: That is referred to in another sentence.

The Chairman: If the committee will permit me to make a ruling, I am prepared to do so now. I have had an opportunity to examine the amendment in the light of the resolution. The question before the Chair is not one of substance. The question before the Chair is whether or not the amendment is correct procedurally.

I should like to read part of citation 246 of Beauchesne's fourth edition:

> The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications.

[Mr. Knowles.]

In the resolution reference is made to the amount of the supplement involved. In this particular case it says that the supplement is to be 40 per cent of the amount of the pension payable. Therefore in respect of that part of the resolution I do not think it would be possible to effect a change. In the amendment we have before us, however, we are dealing with limits which were not set in the resolution itself. I can understand the argument which the Minister of National Health and Welfare uses with reference to the word "certain". While I think the word "certain" does in some measure limit something, the word "certain" does not say by how much.

I should like to refer hon. members to citation 278 at page 227 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. Paragraph 4 reads as follows:

> The committee is not bound by the terms of the provisions which the ministers have inserted in the bill; and, when no amount has been mentioned in the resolution, any member may propose to increase the grants specified in the bill or to extend the application of the provisions of the bill, whatever may be the cost resulting therefrom, so long as the power conferred by the royal recommendation is not exceeded.

In the recommendation which we have before us I cannot accept the view that the limitation set by the word "certain" is exceeded. May I refer hon. members also to page 799 of May's seventeenth edition. I should like to read part of the paragraph at the bottom of the page:

> As, however, the power of amendment of the committee is not limited by the terms of the resolution which is before it, but by the resolution which has received the Queen's recommendation, namely the resolution by which it was appointed, it is within its powers to increase the amount, to extend the purposes and to dispense with the limitations of the expenditure actually proposed to it, so long as these changes do not extend the terms of the resolution recommended by the Queen.

It is my opinion that in the motion which we have before us the terms of the resolution preceding the bill have not been exceeded. I therefore rule the amendment in order. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Chairman, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in essence is exactly the same amendment I intended to propose, but I had agreed that the hon. member for Simcoe East should present his amendment first. Therefore I have no hesitation in concurring wholeheartedly in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

I have had great respect for the ability of the Minister of National Health and Welfare but I am sorely disappointed at the reason he gave for opposing this amendment, namely, that it would undermine the confidence of the people in the Canada Pension Plan. To me that is absolute and unadulterated rubbish. I am sure the minister must know this. He must know what the Canada Pension Plan provides for. He must know that it is a compulsory plan. No one can opt out of the Canada Pension Plan provided he fulfils the requirements in respect of income and so on. He is compelled to contribute. How can his confidence be undermined if he has no option but to contribute?

Mr. MacEachen: Do you not think that persons who are compelled by law to contribute have a just sense of grievance if there is a similar program providing levels of benefits to which no contribution is made? Would this sense of injustice not serve to undermine confidence in the plan?

Mr. Chatterton: Certainly not. These amendments which the minister is proposing say that income from the Canada Pension Plan is income for the purpose of the legislation. Therefore if anyone is in receipt of $60 a year or more under the Canada Pension Plan he automatically cannot receive any more benefit from this legislation. So the argument falls flat. Furthermore, during the ten year period in which this supplement is payable to the pensioners many pensioners will receive a pension during that time which will be in a much greater amount than that which will be received by people in 1977 and 1978. If the minister would study the evidence given during the hearings in respect of the Canada Pension Plan he would see that there will be hundreds and thousands of Canadians who will not receive any benefit from the Canada Pension Plan in 1976 or 1977 or maybe even by 1980. Any person who is self-employed, such as a Newfoundland fisherman, who consistently has a net income of less than $800 a year will receive no benefit from the Canada Pension Plan.

In 1961, the last year for which figures are available, there were over 101,000 Canadians who had no income whatsoever. There were over 600,000 Canadians who had an income of less than $1,000 a year. When the time comes in 1976 all these people, if born before 1910, will receive no benefit under the Canada Pension Plan and they will receive no benefit from this proposal. I am surprised at the attitude of the minister. Certainly the bill has shortcomings, but the bill would be improved greatly if this limitation of 1910 were removed. In that way everybody would be treated the same for all time. If you wish to make another adjustment and say that in respect of the Canada Pension Plan the adjustment will be dollar for dollar, that might be an improvement if the minister wishes to accept such an amendment.

In my opinion the minister is forgetting the fact that there will be hundreds of thousands of Canadians in 1976 who will receive no benefit from the Canada Pension Plan. These are the people who will need assistance because their income will have been so low due to illness and other reasons that they will not have been in a position to set aside any savings for their retirement. These provisions such as they are should be continued without reference to the date of birth of the pensioner.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, if I recall my own birth date correctly, I believe I am under the line the minister is attempting to set by something like four months.

Let me say at the outset that I have no personal interest in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Like a number of other hon. members, I find myself completely amazed by the performance of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Many of us do not always agree with his arguments but we normally expect some semblance of reason and logic. The only possible explanation I can think of regarding the argument which the minister attempted to advance under the guise of discussing a point of order is that he has been sitting too close to the Minister of Transport and has acquired some of the logical mania of that hon. gentleman.

The minister might have some possible ground in logic for his earlier argument if he had based it on the assumption that all of the people who would be eligible for the Canada Pension Plan would be drawing the maximun of $104 per month. Surely the minister must admit that a great many people, apart from those referred to by the hon. mmber for Esquimalt-Saanich, will receive no benefit from their contributions to the Canada Pension Plan. A large number of individuals who will be entitled to benefits from the Canada Pension Plan will not be drawing the maximum.

It does seem to me that anyone whose income from the Canada Pension Plan is such that it would make that individual eligible for any of the benefits under this bill would be out of his mind to feel that anyone eligible for the benefits embodied in this bill was being better treated than him, or that anyone who was drawing $104 per month was being unjustly treated, even though he was getting a few dollars more as a result of this plan. Perhaps that is the type of thing the minister has in mind as being fair and equitable.

Let me suggest to the minister that he should reconsider his position in respect of the amendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The minister admitted to this house that no one whose income level was such that he would be eligible for benefits under this bill would begrudge the payment of these benefits. Surely to suggest that those of us who may contribute to the Canada Pension Plan might feel unjustly treated because in future years we would not receive these additional benefits is wrong. No one can accuse us of feeling unjustly treated because we are required to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan with the knowledge that it will do us no good.

Mr. Douglas: The reaction of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to the amendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, demonstrates very clearly what a complete sham this so-called guaranteed income legislation is. When the minister found it necessary to do something about old age pensions, because of the pressure brought to bear not only by members on this side of the house but throughout the country, he brought in legislation to reimpose a means test on persons applying for old age assistance. In order to dress it up in high-sounding phrases the minister made speeches about a new concept in respect of pensions. He suggested that we were going to provide a guaranteed annual income. Certainly there is a great deal to be said in support of the general policy of providing a guaranteed annual income, not to be confused with the guaranteed pittance about which the minister is talking when referring to the old people of this country.

Let me remind hon. members that this is not a program to provide for a guaranteed income for everybody. As the minister has said, by the provisions of this legislation no one who reaches the age of 65 years in 1975 will be eligible for these benefits. In other words, this is simply a temporary relief measure by which the government intends to pay $30 per month to certain persons who can qualify on the basis of an income test. When the Canada Pension Plan becomes completely effective the $30 per month provided by this measure will be phased out. This measure will not do any individual any good who reaches age 65 after 1975.

The minister says that this measure after 1975 will undermine the Canada Pension Plan and that in the next few years there will be people who will qualify for benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. If they are able to qualify for these payments they will receive them but if they cannot qualify they will not. The difference is whether they will or will not qualify by 1975.

There will be thousands of people who cannot qualify for the Canada Pension Plan. In other words, what the minister is saying is that the $75 per month old age pension is to be frozen in perpetuity. The minister has suggested that the Canada Pension Plan will help the workers of this country. This will make very little difference in five or 20 years from now because the old age security pension plan will still provide a maximum of $75 per month.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not what the minister said.

Mr. Douglas: That is exactly what he has said.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member knows that he is continually misrepresenting the facts to the people of Canada.

Mr. Douglas: The increase will only be 75 cents—

Mr. Pickersgill: My hon. friend knows different, and he voted for this measure.

Mr. Douglas: The Minister of Transport need not tell me what I know. Let me tell him that I know a great deal more about this legislation than he obviously does, as demonstrated by the slimy trickery he tried to pull off this afternoon. If there is any person who should keep out of the debate it is the Minister of Transport. He has already done enough damage. If the Minister of National Health and Welfare wishes to get this legislation through—

• (10:50 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: I accept the remark of the hon. gentleman but—

Mr. Douglas: If he wants to get this legislation through I suggest that he send the Minister of Transport to the Northwest Territories.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Minister of Transport wishes to rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I accept from the hon. gentleman the adjective "slimy" as coming from one who is an expert.

Mr. Douglas: That is the kind of interjection that one could expect from an adolescent. If there ever was a demonstration of arrested mental development, we have just had it. I say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that if he wants to get this legislation through with any expedition at all he should send the Minister of Transport to the Northwest Territories.

May I return to the point with which I was dealing before I was so rudely interrupted. The Minister of Transport says that there is an increase by virtue of the increased cost of living. Am I to take it then that the government says that the only increase there will ever be in the Old Age Security Act is the increase of 75 cents for each 1 per cent increase in the cost of living? Does this mean that the government never intends to give to the old people of this country any of the return that comes from increased national productivity? Does this mean that as this country increases its wealth and its production and as the general living standard rises, the old people are still to get $75 a month plus the small pittance which will be added by virtue of the fact that the cost of living has gone up? Is this all they can look forward to? This is what the government is saying, that the maximum increase for the cost of living will be 2 per cent regardless of whether the cost of living goes up 3, 4 or 5 per cent per year. The government has let the cat out of the bag. They have demonstrated that they never intended to bring down this legislation.

In the election of 1965 the government made two specific promises. One was to bring in medicare on July 1, 1967, and the other was the promise that old age pensioners would get $105 a month if they needed it. This was their program. They thought they were discharging the second commitment by bringing in the Canada Assistance Plan, and when the people of Canada and the members of the opposition made it perfectly clear that the Canada Assistance Plan based on the principle of need was unacceptable the government found it necessary to cook up some kind of legislation which would cover up their complete failure to deal adequately with old age pensions.

Instead of doing what members on this side of the house have been asking, what old age pensioners have been asking, what chambers of commerce, trade unions and farm organizations have been asking, namely, raise the old age pension to $100 or $105 a month to increase the earning power of the old people of this country commensurate with the nation's increased productivity, what did they do? They did not even have the honesty to come out and say, we are not going to give them an increased pension, we will give them a sort of relief bonus if they can pass a means test. Instead, they talked glowingly about a guaranteed annual income, and the inference was left that this was to be the beginning of a great new program of giving everybody a guaranteed annual income. This is what the press releases said and this is what the editorials said in the newspapers sympathetic to the Liberal party. This was the great step forward into a new epoch of social security, namely, a guaranteed annual income for every body. But when we see the bill it turns out that the guaranteed annual income is not granted.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I wish to rise on a point of order. The hon. member is making a general speech about the bill. Surely the rule of relevance must be applied. What is now before the committee is an amendment to a particular clause in the bill. I wonder if the hon. member could not be requested to come back to the point before the committee.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I am dealing with subsection 1 of new section 7 which says:

> Subject to this part and the regulations, for each month in any year commencing with the year 1967, a monthly guaranteed income supplement may be paid to every pensioner born on or before the 31st day of December, 1910.

I am talking about the guaranteed income supplement and pointing out—

Mr. McIlraith: It is the amendment which is now before the committee.

Mr. Douglas: Exactly. I am pointing out that subsection 1 of new section 7 should be amended by striking out the words which would prevent any person born after 1910 getting this guaranteed income supplement. I am pointing out to the committee that this means that the government has no intention of establishing a guaranteed annual income. What they are providing here is a temporary measure of relief to help the most needy persons until the Canada Pension Plan comes into operation. In the process of doing that they will deprive thousands of persons who are entitled to assistance and who will not get any benefits from the Canada Pension Plan. If we are going to give a guaranteed annual income, who is more deserving of such assistance than the people who are not covered by the Canada Pension Plan? There are thousands of people who will not be covered by that plan. The minister knows perfectly well that housewives, farmers, fishermen, many small self-employed persons and small businesses are not covered by the plan.

The Deputy Chairman: Pursuant to the previous order made by the house that the committee should rise at eleven o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we propose to continue the discussion of the measure which has been under consideration this evening. At this point I should add that the negotiations concerning the air traffic controllers are continuing. We anticipate that there may be a need to interrupt the proceedings tomorrow at any time to consider that matter. I cannot anticipate what will happen but I thought I should add this warning.

• (11:00 p.m.)

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour, and as the staff are involved, could we adjourn today's session now and forgo the usual adjournment debate?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that we do not proceed with the adjournment debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

It being two minutes after eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 16, 1966

The house met at 11 a.m.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE—PERSONNEL OF COMMONS ON JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Bernard Pilon (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House will unite with them in the formation of a Special Joint Committee to inquire into and report on the expediency of presenting an address to His Excellency praying for the removal of Mr. Justice Leo Landreville from the Supreme Court of Ontario, and that the Members to serve on the said Committee, on the part of this House be composed of: Messrs. Bell (Carleton), Brewin, Cashin, Choquette, Coates, Fulton, Laflamme, Patterson, Richard, Stafford, Tolmie and Woolliams.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL—EXTENSION OF SITTING HOURS TO DISCUSS LEGISLATION

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works) moved:

That, notwithstanding the provisions of any standing order to the contrary, on Friday, December 16, 1966, the hours of sitting shall be from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., and from 7 p.m. until 10 p.m., that the hour for the consideration of private members' business in the said sitting shall be suspended, and that, on Saturday, December 17, 1966, the house shall meet at 11 a.m. and sit without interruption until 6 p.m., and that the order of business and procedure for the said sitting shall be as for a Friday except that there shall be no private members' hour.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): It would be agreeable to pass this motion, provided it were understood that the extra time made available by the motion would be used to deal with the discussion of the air traffic control dispute only.

Mr. McIlraith: That would be agreeable. The purpose of the motion is to permit us if necessary to deal with the proposed legislation relating to air traffic control services.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Are we quite clear on this, now? We do not want any confusion, as there has been in the last couple of days. I move as an amendment the addition of the following:

—and that the only order of business to be considered during the extended sittings shall be the measure to consider the continuation of air traffic control services.

Mr. McIlraith: Agreed.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): If that amendment were moved and accepted by the government—

Mr. Starr: It has been.

Mr. Douglas: I believe it would meet the wishes of everyone concerned. Otherwise, if the present dispute were settled satisfactorily today, we would be required to sit this evening and tomorrow in the absence of any particular emergency, and we see no necessity for that.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I am of the same opinion, provided it is understood that we should sit to deal with this emergency and for no other reason. We would be willing to consider this motion if the government were prepared to amend it accordingly.

Mr. Starr: They have accepted the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Churchill) agreed to.

Motion as amended agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PERMISSION TO GOVERNMENT TO SUBMIT EMERGENCY LEGISLATION WITHOUT NOTICE

On the order: Government Notices of Motion:

(a) That standing order 41 be renumbered 41 (1), and the following be added thereto:

(2) Notwithstanding section (1) of this standing order, Mr. Speaker may cause to be prepared and circulated a supplementary order paper giving notice of any government business received by him during any extended adjournment of the house.

(b) That standing order 42 be rescinded and the following be substituted therefor:

42. (1) A minister of the crown may at any time, notwithstanding any standing order, in relation to any matter of urgent public importance, make a motion to suspend any standing or sessional order or orders relating to the need for notice, the hours of sitting on any day or days, and the number of stages of proceedings to be taken on any day or days.

(2) Upon the making of such a motion, the house shall not be adjourned until it is disposed of and, after the minister has explained the reason for the motion, Mr. Speaker may permit debate thereon for one hour and shall then forthwith submit the question to the house without amendment or further debate. If ten or more members rise to object, the Speaker shall deem that the motion has been withdrawn.

(3) The suspension permitted under this standing order shall not extend to any proceedings not specified in the motion made under this order—The Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section (2) of standing order 21 this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders later this day or at the next sitting of the house.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, there may be some urgency in considering this matter and some suggestions of amendments have been made. I would like the right to revert to it later in the day, if that were agreeable to the house and it were thought desirable, bearing in mind the possible necessity for some kind of order relating to the emergency of legislation. I put forward that precautionary note.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is it not the case under the rule which Your Honour has just cited that it is up to the government?

Mr. Speaker: Exactly. It is under government orders that it will be taken up later this day.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT AMENDMENT

BROADENING OF LENDING PROVISIONS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act to extend until December 31, 1969 the time during which guaranteed improvement loans may be made under the Act; to extend the guaranteed loan provisions of the act to cover loans made to small businesses engaged in construction, transportation or communications; to remove the restriction that now applies in the case of loans made under the act for the purpose of constructing or purchasing premises; to increase the maximum limit that now applies with respect to the annual gross revenue of a small business enterprise from $250,000 to $500,000; to provide that the aggregate principal amount of all guaranteed business improvement loans made by banks during the new lending period shall not exceed $300,000,000; and to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the act.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Starr.]

JUDGES ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION FOR ADDITIONAL COUNTY COURT APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to provide salaries for one additional Ontario county court judge and one additional British Columbia county court judge.

Motion agreed to.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL—MEASURE TO ENSURE CONTINUATION OF SERVICES

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the continuation of air traffic control services; to provide also for an increase in the remuneration of air traffic controllers.

He said: Mr. Speaker, is it clear that this use of the words "next sitting" refers to today's sitting?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, not without unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that "next sitting" means next sitting. Is it the pleasure—

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask that we have unanimous consent to consider it at this sitting, if it becomes necessary to do so.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest the house leader ask for that when the necessity arises. Probably it would be much easier to get it then than now.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I agree with you that "next sitting" must be taken as meaning the next sitting. There is no argument about that. But is there not a method of saying that it be taken at the next sitting or later this day, as the case may be?

Mr. Speaker: Actually this suggestion was made by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith), but this would have to be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a doubt as to whether or not it will be required that we consider this later on in the day, and I am not in a position to give an absolutely firm answer to that question. Perhaps in view of that I should ask that the motion stand until we know precisely what the situation is, and I would ask that I have the right to revert to motions and raise the matter again later in this sitting.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, we are not being difficult with respect to the substance of what the government is placing before us, but we do think that standing order 21 should be observed. We observed it with respect to the other matter because it came under standing order 21(2); we handled it properly. But here a matter under standing order 21(1) is posted for consideration at the next sitting of the house. However, it is always possible for the government to ask, when the time comes, for unanimous consent to deal with a matter that is urgent. The motion has been carried which makes this an order for the next sitting of the house, but it is up to the government to ask for it later in the day, if it wishes.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BANKRUPTCY

NORTH AMERICAN GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY—INVESTIGATION RESPECTING COLLAPSE OF COMPANY AND PARTICIPATION IN FRAUDULENT PRACTICES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as this matter covers several departments I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the North American General Insurance Company, which is a federally incorporated company, a subsidiary of Prudential Finance, and other companies today causing tremendous losses to Canadian workers, pensioners and investors, and a loss of faith in financial institutions.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister what investigation has been undertaken by the Department of Insurance into the circumstances surrounding the collapse of the North American General Insurance Company. I should also like to ask whether there is any truth in the statement, apparently well supported by documentary evidence, to the effect that in January, 1966, William Gruber made allegations of fraud and misappropriation to officers of the Department of Insurance, the Department of National Revenue and the bankruptcy division in respect of Prudential Finance, one of the associated companies.

What action does the government intend to take so that people, who have suffered grievously as a result of financial manoeuvring and manipulation, will have some hope that their savings will not be lost to them, especially since they relied on the fact that this is a dominion company?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this matter with the Minister of Finance who has been investigating it. I am going to ask him to reply to the questions.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the steps which were taken by the Superintendent of Insurance relating to the North American General Insurance Company already have been put before the house in answer to previous questions. I might add that since receiving information concerning the statement made by Mr. Gruber I asked the Superintendent of Insurance specifically whether he had received such information and what he did about it. I am advised that Mr. Gruber had conversations with Mr. Humphrys, the Superintendent of Insurance, and also with Mr. Brereton, the chief examiner of the department.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When?

Mr. Sharp: In January of this year. Mr. Gruber said that he had information to disclose which would be significant to anyone concerned about the affairs of Prudential Finance or its subsidiaries, but would only make the disclosure if he was offered legal protection. It was impossible for the Superintendent of Insurance to offer him legal protection under the law. The Superintendent of Insurance did, not as a result of information given by Mr. Gruber but because the Superintendent of Insurance himself was concerned when the North American General Insurance Company was purchased by Prudential Finance—

Mr. Diefenbaker: When was that?

Mr. Sharp: I think I gave the information earlier. I do not have it in front of me now, but it is some months ago. The Superintendent of Insurance was concerned at that time about any changes in management practices that would take place as a result of the change of ownership. At that time he advised the North American General Insurance Company not to buy or invest in any notes of its parent company, and it never did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about the average Canadian; was there any warning given to him?

Mr. Sharp: So far as the federal government is concerned its responsibility was only in respect of the North American General Insurance Company.

Mr. Howard: The public be damned.

Mr. Sharp: It was as a result of the investigations made by the Superintendent of Insurance regarding the change of ownership that a close watch was kept of the affairs of the North American General Insurance Company. It was as a result of that careful watch that a great many special investigations were made, which resulted in the discovery of the theft of securities. There has been no other activity on the part of the North American General Insurance Company which was in any way illegal or contrary to the law. Of course the theft of the securities resulted in the default of the company.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I should like to direct to the acting minister of national revenue or the Minister of Finance. What action did the government take as a result of information received last January in respect of specific allegations of fraud involving $2 million and frauds in respect of income tax laws and bankruptcy proceedings?

Mr. Sharp: Perhaps I can answer the question on behalf of the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You had better consult him.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Gruber did provide some information to that department. As hon. members know, it is illegal for any officer of the Department of National Revenue to discuss the affairs of any income taxpayer with anyone.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, surely in regard to a matter which involves the loss of millions of dollars the minister is not going to hide behind the question as to whether an income tax revelation was made. Was evidence of fraud given by Mr. Gruber, who had knowledge of this matter, and what action did the government take between the months of January and September or October, when information was available about this theft?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the right hon. gentleman would wish to suggest that there are any circumstances under which an officer of the income tax branch should discuss the affairs of any income taxpayer with anyone else. I have heard the right hon. gentleman defend that principle on a number of occasions.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is just a smokescreen, Mr. Speaker. I would like the minister to indicate what the Department of National Revenue and the bankruptcy division did after the message was received in January from Mr. Gruber to protect Canadians against the possible loss of money as a result of frauds that were revealed by Mr. Gruber.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied, so far as my responsibilities as Minister of Finance are concerned, that every precaution was taken to make sure that companies under our jurisdiction did not act in an illegal way. I am confident that the Superintendent of Insurance did everything he could to protect the positions of the policy and shareholders of this company.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What did he do?

Mr. Sharp: So far as income tax information is concerned, I do not think there are any circumstances under which the affairs of a taxpayer should be discussed with anyone, either a member of the government or anybody else.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary, but perhaps it should be directed to the Minister of Justice. Is it not a fact that Mr. Gruber, who was an accountant, informed the Superintendent of Bankruptcy in January about his allegations regarding wholesale fraud and losses affecting this particular company? What action was taken by the Department of Justice or the Superintendent of Bankruptcy in regard to these allegations?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there have been several allegations of pre-bankruptcy fraud during the year. I am not sure whether Mr. Gruber actually made an allegation in this particular case. If he did, I am absolutely convinced that the Superintendent of Bankruptcy would have taken all necessary steps to avoid any such incident.

An hon. Member: What did he do?

Mr. Brewin: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Justice inquire, if he does not know, just exactly what information was given to the Superintendent of Bankruptcy in January by Mr. Gruber, and what action, if any, was in fact taken?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, if Mr. Gruber did give any information, I would be happy to report it to the house.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did not Mr. Gruber, in January of 1966 inform the minister and the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, over whom the minister had jurisdiction at the time, that several cheques of a fraudulent nature had been written by officials of Prudential for half a million dollars each? If the minister felt this did not fall within his jurisdiction or that of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, did he have any discussions with or pass that information on to the Attorney General for Ontario?

Mr. Cardin: I do not know whether Mr. Gruber made any allegation to the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, but it did not come to my attention.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Following all the statements and troubles we have had with fraudulent bankruptcies in the country, including this most recent one, in view of the whole situation does the Prime Minister contemplate having a royal commission inquire into this subject matter as soon as possible?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker; I do not think a royal commission would be helpful in the circumstances.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance has said that the Superintendent of Insurance discovered the theft of some half a million dollars of securities from the North American General Insurance Company. When did the Superintendent of Insurance discover this theft?

Mr. Sharp: In November, Mr. Speaker. He made an inspection in September, and everything was in order. The theft apparently occurred in the month of October. He discovered it early in November.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Minister of Finance the nature of the protection or immunity asked for by Mr. Gruber, and did he say why he felt he required it? Of what was he afraid?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am advised that he felt legal action might be taken against him by third parties.

Mr. Fulton: In what respect?

[Later:]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Kamloops. I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Is it the minister's information that Mr. Gruber was in fact the auditor for the Prudential and that group of companies?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I gather that Mr. Gruber was employed by the auditor of the Prudential group, and was dismissed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This matter cannot be brushed aside quite as easily as the minister is attempting to do. Will the minister table the letters received in January, 1966, from Mr. Gruber, and the replies from the Department of Insurance, the Superintendent of Bankruptcy and the dominion department of income tax? Will he produce the letters and the replies so we can understand what happened between January and September, when apparently nothing was done? I want to ask the minister, too: Is the government not going to give any consideration to protecting these poor people who have lost their all, relying on the fact that these corporations are subject to inspection?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I will look into the first question asked by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. I am not quite certain what correspondence is on the file.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thought you knew.

Mr. Sharp: I shall have to add this word, however. I do not think it would be appropriate for any minister to table correspondence that would reveal the income tax position of any taxpayer in this country. I would adhere to this position, notwithstanding the representations of the right hon. gentleman. On the second point, the question of responsibility is divided here between the federal and the provincial governments. The real issue here, I regret to say, is that the laws of Ontario do not protect the investors and the policy holders of provincial companies as well as they should.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are talking about the dominion laws, laws administered by this department, the department represented by the Minister of Finance. We are asking what you are going to do about it? Not somebody else. What are you going to do for these people who invested, and relied on these companies being reliable?

An hon. Member: Accept your responsibility.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have made it quite clear that I take full responsibility as far as the administrative responsibility of the federal government is concerned, and that relates at the present time to federally incorporated insurance companies. In that respect I have outlined to the house clearly the responsibility that I have accepted. I am willing to answer any questions about this matter. It was a question of fraud and of theft, against which it is very difficult to protect investors or policyholders. I have called the insurance companies together for January to discuss how we could improve our legislation, and I am prepared to recommend to this house whatever is found to be necessary. But I cannot accept responsibility for the administration of Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. I wonder if the minister could tell us whether any of the experts in the field of bankruptcy had knowledge of this matter in June of this year and did not disclose it—experts who happen to be in this house, incidentally?

Mr. Cardin: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Did the Superintendent of Insurance as early as last January, when he knew that something was wrong in this particular company, check to see whether the securities were on hand and in possession of the company?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. There were no irregularities as far as the Superintendent of Insurance could discover until his audit in November. His audit in September showed that everything was in good order.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. Will he obtain for tabling, and table, copies of the correspondence sent to the Superintendent of Bankruptcy in January 1966 and the replies thereto?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, if there is such correspondence and if it is not confidential in any way, and if it is possible for me to do so, I will.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): A supplementary question. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether, when Mr. Gruber brought to the attention of the Superintendent of Insurance the information which the minister says could not be processed by the federal government, the Superintendent of Insurance or any other federal government official suggested to the proper and responsible officials of the Ontario government that they might well look into the affairs of the Prudential company?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding—though of course I can only speak from what might be termed hearsay—that Mr. Gruber also made his information available to the Ontario government, which was primarily responsible in this matter.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF NATIONAL CO-OPERATIVES LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Some weeks ago he assured the house that a committee was preparing a draft of legislation respecting co-operatives. In view of the fact that the co-operative movement has been urging the introduction of such legislation for several decades now, could the Prime Minister give the house any assurance that co-operative legislation will be introduced at this session, or at least early in the next session?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government hopes to be able to consider the draft bill shortly. After that consideration I will be able to make an announcement to the house as to when it could be introduced.

INCOME TAX

INCREASE IN BASIC EXEMPTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Finance and Receiver General.

Will the hon. minister propose that the basic income tax exemption be raised, when he tables his mini-budget, next Monday?

UNITED NATIONS

SOUTH KOREA—WITHDRAWAL OF FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Considering Canada's recent initiative to seat mainland China in the United Nations, could the Prime Minister tell us whether Canada has stated its position on the two resolutions to come before the United Nations Assembly concerning the withdrawal of United Nations forces from South Korea?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to look at the text of the two resolutions before I reply in detail to the question. My hon. friend has probably read that the government of Korea has asked that no steps be taken to change the present situation in regard to UN forces in that country. I will have a look at the text of the resolutions.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

LIKENESS OF SCHOONER "BLUENOSE" ON COINS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the interest among maritimers, and all seamen who have ever sailed a ship and felt the salt spray on their faces, is it the intention of the government to return the likeness of the Lunenburg schooner Bluenose to the back of the Canadian dime in 1968, after issuing the special coins struck for our 100th anniversary?

Mr. Speaker: The question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I believe this matter is of such urgency in the Atlantic provinces and the whole of Canada that the minister would welcome an opportunity to reply.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—CLEMENCY TO TRADE UNION LEADERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. On December 5 last I asked the Solicitor General, in keeping with the spirit of good will at this season of the year, whether the government would consider granting clemency to the trade union leaders jailed in British Columbia, so that they will be able to join their families for the Christmas season. The hon. gentleman replied that the matter was still under consideration. Has he any further information to give the house with respect to his consideration of this matter?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be able to answer this question on Monday.

GRANTING OF AMNESTY ON CENTENNIAL VISIT OF HER MAJESTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question. I wonder whether I could ask the Solicitor General if on Monday he will also be able to advise the house about government policy with respect to clemency next year, in view of the centennial and the visit of Her Majesty, thus reviving the traditional way of giving clemency.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

ROCKGLEN-KILLDEER, SASK.—ABANDONMENT OF LINE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Assiniboia asked me a question in which he quoted a letter from the secretary of the Board of Transport Commissioners to the effect that a certain branch railway line was "eligible for abandonment", without waiting upon the passage of Bill No. C-231. Several other hon. members at an earlier sitting raised similar questions including reference to representations from the Branch Lines Association of Manitoba.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I had not previously seen the letter from which the hon. member quoted—that is, the letter from the secretary of the board—which I readily admit is ambiguously worded. I am assured it was merely intended to indicate that the board was free, in respect to the unprotected lines, to begin assembling the necessary up to date information which would be required when the time came to hold hearings, and that there was no intention of holding any such hearings before January 1, 1967, when the board had anticipated the new legislation would be in effect. I have now received an assurance from the chairman of the board that no hearings will be held while Bill C-231 is before parliament. I regret very much that this misunderstanding has arisen.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING POLICY ON MANPOWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the decision made by the government of Quebec to open employment offices in all 108 constituencies of that province, has the hon. minister recently met with the Quebec minister of labour, and discussed with him certain principles governing manpower and the authority of both levels of government?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not had this opportunity.

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration?

Can the hon. minister tell us whether the Quebec government is pursuing negotiations toward a federal-provincial agreement on a manpower retraining program?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, officials of the department and the provincial government have met. I understand that an agreement has almost been finalized and should be signed eventually.

AIR POLLUTION

EFFECT ON HEALTH OF FAILURE TO ADOPT EXHAUST CONTROL DEVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I addressed a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare about Canadian standards relating to air pollution control being similar to United States standards. In a supplementary answer the Minister of Industry said, as reported at page 11151 of Hansard:

> I do not think, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare pointed out, that it has been established yet that the health of Canadians in a great many Canadian communities would be adversely affected by failure to adopt this particular exhaust device.

Was this statement made on the basis of advice given to him or his officials by an official or officials of the automobile industry?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): No, Mr. Speaker. I think this is a most unfortunate insinuation as well, if I may add that.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question. Who gave the minister the advice on which he based this statement?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I need to seek advice when I say that it has not been established to my satisfaction. If I may cite the example of the hon. gentleman's constituency, I do not think it has been established that the health of the citizens in communities in his constituency suffers from the lack of this device.

Mr. Grafftey: In my constituency there are no centres with over 50,000 population. May I ask a further supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is now developing into a debate between the minister and the hon. member and I do not think it should be pursued further along those lines.

Mr. Grafftey: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister before making that statement consult people who were taking measurements of pollution in our large urban centres in Canada?

Mr. Woolliams: Such as Montreal.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I was referring to large urban centres when I made this statement. It had not been established that this was necessarily so in all communities in Canada.

INDUSTRY

CANADA-U.S. AUTOMOTIVE AGREEMENT—EXTENSION TO INCLUDE REPLACEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry. Is it the government's intention to extend the Canada-United States car treaty into the field of replacement parts, tires and tooling?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): As I think the house is aware, Mr. Speaker, this agreement will be coming up for review in the not too distant future. At that time, and as a consequence of the review, a decision will be taken in respect to the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question. Would the minister give the assurance that all those interested in these various trades will be consulted?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, in the negotiation of the original agreement there was very extensive consultation with all those interested. Their views were sought and considered, and such would be the practice with respect to the review.

TRANSPORT

FREEZE ON ABANDONMENTS DURING CONSIDERATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I understood him to say in the house the other day that there would be a freeze on any rail line abandonment. I am still getting notification of applications to the Board of Transport Commissioners for abandonment. Would the minister reassure the house that no abandonments will take place until this new bill is through?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that if the hon. gentleman would read the answer which I have just given to the hon. member for Assiniboia it will answer his question.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

EDMONTON, ALTA.—COMPASSIONATE PAYMENT TO WIDOW ON DEATH OF CONSTABLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to address to the Solicitor General in connection with the death of the 23 year old R.C.M.P. constable in Edmonton who was shot, and who had been married less than 90 days. Is the cabinet going to make any compassionate payment to his young widow in view of the very short service of this officer, the fact that he had only been married about 90 days, and because he died as a result of a criminal act?

Mr. Speaker: It is difficult for the Chair to intervene in a matter such as this. Perhaps hon. members might want to make an exception to the rules and allow the minister to answer the question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we shall follow the policy laid down within the department in a matter of this kind.

Mr. Cowan: May I ask what the policy is?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

FISHERIES

MCIVOR REPORT—MARKETING OF FRESHWATER CATCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): My question is addressed to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister tell the house what concrete action, if any, is being taken as a consequence of the report he received more than two months ago from the royal commission of inquiry into freshwater marketing.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, a meeting of the federal-provincial committee on fisheries was held in Ottawa on Tuesday of this week to consider the McIvor report. The committee was also attended by the representative of the Department of Trade and Commerce. Also attending were officials of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Ontario and of the Northwest Territories.

Following this meeting a special working party of federal and provincial officials, including officials from the Northwest Territories, was assigned the task of studying in detail the recommendations of the report and its implication. The party was asked to report as soon as its study is completed.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PACIFIC COAST LONGSHOREMEN DISPUTE—TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour arising out of the announcement he made yesterday about the personnel of the inquiry commission to consider the Pacific coast longshoremen dispute. I ask the minister first whether he will table the order in council setting out the terms of reference of this commission and, second, if the minister at this time could tell us about the timetable under which this commission would work to make its report.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I will be very pleased to table a copy, not of any order in council, but of the order signed by the Minister of Labour, establishing the commission. The timetable for the hearings has been discussed with the commissioner and with the two assessors. There have been some discussions with parties involved.

In view of the conditions existing in Vancouver and other ports, the backlog—and I might say that encouraging progress has been made in cleaning up the backlog—and because of the holidays, it is understood that the commissioner will open the inquiry on or about January 17. In the meantime both sides will be notified of the date and they will be able to prepare their respective cases.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the Minister of Labour if, in the settlement he arranged between the two parties to the dispute, the right of grievance regarding wages and conditions of employment for the foremen is guaranteed in perpetuity? Or, on the other hand, is the agreement merely temporary, pending the report of the commission of inquiry?

Mr. Nicholson: An assurance has been given by the stevedoring companies concerned that they will introduce this grievance procedure. One of the terms of settlement agreed to by both sides, however, is that the grievance procedure that I suggested should be referred to the commissioner who of course, will seek the advice of the assessors in the matter. He will consider this matter and bring down his views. He will let us have the benefit of his views on the subject matter. What happens thereafter may well depend to a large extent on the commissioner's report.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. So that there is no misunderstanding or future debate on this, can the minister clear this matter up. The impression I got from his statement to the house when the settlement was reached was that the formula the minister had submitted and the union accepted was part of the settlement. The statement made by Mr. Strang of the B.C. Employers Association was that this was a temporary concession. The minister might clarify this position, so that there is not another dispute on the waterfront.

Mr. Nicholson: I do not think there is any real difficulty. I cannot assume responsibility for Mr. Strang's statements. In my view, the exchange of telegrams with union and company officials clarifies this point.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a question for the Minister of Labour relating to a question asked by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. The Minister of Labour said he could not take responsibility for Mr. Strang's statement, and that the union officials involved were in agreement. Would he say what unions he is speaking of and who the officials are?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I am talking particularly about local 514 of the I.L.W.U.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Who are the officials?

Mr. Nicholson: The president, vice president and secretary treasurer, among others.

[Later:]

Mr. Nicholson: I mentioned three officials of Local 514. These three officials, I know, were "in on" the discussions. It is quite possible that the exchange of telegrams was in the name of the international representative. But I know that some of the consultations were with the president. And these other officials participated in the discussions.

BANK OF WESTERN CANADA

EXTERNAL OWNERSHIP OF FINANCIAL ORGANIZATIONS—EVASION OF ROYAL COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I see the Minister of Finance is here. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Prime Minister a question about the Bank of Western Canada. I now ask the Minister of Finance whether the Bank of Western Canada has secured a certificate to begin operations?

If so, did the government take into consideration before granting it, the financial operations of the British International Finance group in Toronto, and the Stevens interests referred to by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) on December 1? Is it in order, when a firm such as British International Finance Corporation has external interests in companies such as the Wellington Bank of Canada International Ltd. of Nassau, and Wellington Financial Corp. Ltd., to allow Canadian banks to be owned externally by a simple plan such as this, thereby evading the recommendations of the Porter Commission that banks in Canada should be owned by Canadians?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a very technical question. I understand that the affairs of British International Finance Corporation were examined extensively in the committee of the house concerned with financial matters, and it was established clearly that this is a Canadian company, owned in Canada. The whole of the financial affairs of the bank was taken into account when the Superintendent of Banks recommended to me that a certificate be issued by the Treasury Board to begin the operations of the Bank of Western Canada.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the Minister of Finance if anybody in his department is able to understand and explain the intricate business relationships of the Wellington group?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance would not hold himself out as an expert, but there are many in my department who advise me on these matters. They seem to understand the situation.

FINANCE

INFORMATION RESPECTING THIRTY YEAR 3 PER CENT BONDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister. Some weeks ago I wrote to him personally about the 30 year 3 per cent bonds. I have had no reply, and I have answers to give to citizens of modest means who have written to me about this matter. I wonder when I can expect a reply to the matter I raised.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The matter has been dealt with by the Minister of Finance. I apologize if I have not replied to my hon. friend's letter. I shall look into it right away.

Inquiries of the Ministry

STATEMENT ON GUIDE LINES ISSUED BY U.S. TO CANADIAN SUBSIDIARIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) asked a question about a report received from Washington that the United States administration is issuing or has issued new guide lines which would affect subsidiaries of United States corporations in Canada in import and export positions. I shall be glad to answer that question, though, in so far as it applies to financial institutions perhaps it should be referred to the Minister of Finance.

The answer is that the United States administration has issued new guide lines with respect to direct foreign investment by United States corporations applicable to the two year period 1966-67, similar in form to the guide lines issued about a year ago for the period 1965-66. Following the announcement of the United States guideline program about a year ago, Canadian ministers attending the joint United States-Canadian committee on trade and economic affairs held in March, 1966, sought clarification of the intent of the program and were given assurance that the guide lines were not intended to interfere with normal business practice. The existence of these guide lines during the past year did not interfere with the realization in Canada of a substantially larger capital investment program.

Yesterday in Washington I discussed with Mr. Connor, Secretary of Commerce, the revised guide lines applicable to the 1966-67 period. He assured me that the same consideration applies to these revised guide lines. The essential principle is that both they and we expect subsidiaries in Canada of foreign companies to conduct themselves as good corporate Canadian citizens. Our own set of guiding principles inform all such companies of our views. The government will be keeping the situation under close review.

• (12 noon)

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PERMISSION TO GOVERNMENT TO SUBMIT EMERGENCY LEGISLATION WITHOUT NOTICE

On the order: Government Orders.

(a) That standing order 41 be renumbered 41 (1), and the following be added thereto:

(2) Notwithstanding section (1) of this standing order, Mr. Speaker may cause to be prepared and circulated a supplementary order paper giving notice of any government business received by him during any extended adjournment of the House.

(b) That standing order 42 be rescinded and the following be substituted therefor:

42. (1) A minister of the crown may at any time, notwithstanding any standing order, in relation to any matter of urgent public importance, make a motion to suspend any standing or sessional order or orders relating to the need for notice, the hours of sitting on any day or days, and the number of stages of proceedings to be taken on any day or days.

(2) Upon the making of such a motion, the house shall not be adjourned until it is disposed of and, after the minister has explained the reason for the motion, Mr. Speaker may permit debate thereon for one hour and shall then forthwith submit the question to the house without amendment or further debate. If ten or more members rise to object, the Speaker shall deem that the motion has been withdrawn.

(3) The suspension permitted under this standing order shall not extend to any proceedings not specified in the motion made under this order.—The Minister of Public Works.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Under standing order No. 26 of the House of Commons it is possible for any private member to move that the house be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance. This procedure is used from time to time, and there are—

Mr. Howard: I rise on a point of order. Do I understand correctly that the minister has moved, and is now speaking to, a motion proposing rule changes in standing order 41? If I am correct I wish to object. This is a terrible situation. A whole air line is being shut down. The government has asked for unanimous consent to sit through the day, and tomorrow, to deal with the air traffic control bill. Having obtained that consent, the minister is now cluttering up the time for which he asked by proceeding with a preposterous rule change proposal. If he is permitted to continue we shall spend the rest of today and tomorrow debating these rules, and the government will have placed itself in the position of being unable to deal with the air traffic control bill.

Mr. Speaker: That is hardly a point of order, but I suppose it is a consideration upon which the minister might wish to comment.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, I refer to page 11218 of Hansard where the minister is reported as saying, last evening, under the heading "Business of the House":

Tomorrow we propose to continue the discussion of the measure which has ben under consideration this evening.

[Mr. Winters.]

That is not the business which is before the house, now. The hon. gentleman went on to say:

At this point I should add that the negotiations concerning the air traffic controllers are continuing. We anticipate that there may be a need to interrupt the proceedings tomorrow at any time to consider that matter. I cannot anticipate what will happen but I thought I should add this warning.

So the minister did give the house his assurance last night that we would be dealing with the old age security legislation or—

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member would understand if he would just listen, for a change. His example shows the harm done by useless interruptions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Public Works has the floor.

Mr. McIlraith: I sought on motions to make an explanation in which I thought the house would be interested, and which I believed to be relevant to the business before us. I was not given that opportunity, so I had this particular order called and I started to give that explanation. In the course of doing so I was not able to proceed very far, as the record will reveal, before this interruption took place.

I believe hon. members are trying to anticipate a difficulty which does not exist. If they would bear with me for a moment or two, since I am in order and proceeding under the rules in a wholly correct way, I think they will be well satisfied, and the anticipated objection of the hon. member for Yukon will disappear. And I hope the anticipated objection of the hon. member for Skeena also will disappear. I am quite sure they will.

Mr. Howard: I must say that my objection is not an anticipated objection; it is an outright objection. May I ask the minister a question? Do I take it, then, that the minister intends only to make an explanation about something and then withdraw the motion?

Mr. McIlraith: No; that may not be a wholly correct statement. I should like to explain the situation in my own words because, somehow, they are more suitable for delivery by me than are someone else's words.

The situation is this: Under standing order 26 a private member has a right to move the adjournment of the house to consider a matter of urgent public importance. This is done from time to time, and we have had two recent examples in connection with emergency matters where this power has been used. It is a curious anomaly that there is no corresponding provision enabling the government to bring any proceedings relating to the same matter before the house without notice. Proceedings under standing order 26 are without notice because of the urgent public importance of the particular matter to be discussed. What is sought in this proposed rule change is some means of giving the government a right in similar circumstances—and the phraseology used is identical namely, "urgent public importance"—a right to submit legislation to parliament in these emergency situations, unless ten members, as a minimum, object.

Since the notice of this proposal was placed on the order paper, suggestions for amendment have come from various hon. members. I should like to arrange a meeting at which this matter could be discussed further, privately. I think it would be useful to consider these points in more detail before deciding this matter, especially as some of the amendments suggested seem to improve the original wording. But I should remind the house that we may have a need for emergency legislation discussions later today, a need in which there will be questions of abridgement of time. For example, I draw the attention of hon. members to standing order 75. Later today we may require leave under this proposed order, where the government could proceed to submit without notice a government motion abridging the time, or alternatively to proceed with a special order later this day, permitting the house to discuss all stages of the emergency measure.

There are two alternative ways of handling this situation, one having to do with this proposed rule change under which, if accepted, the government could submit the necessary motion as a matter of right, and the second of submitting a motion, without having dealt with this rule, and I wanted to explain that situation to the house because I felt it was something with which the house was very much concerned, and would wish to deal. If the house cares to discuss that point, it would be useful. But with respect to the substance of the motion, I should like to reserve that for either a later period today, if we found it necessary to revert to this order, or for a later occasion.

That is the point I wish to make, Mr. Speaker, and I regret that because of the uncertainty right up to 11 o'clock I was not able to make this explanation before that time to the house leaders of the various parties, as I would have wished, and as it would have been desirable had it been possible to do so.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house listened with some confusion to the explanation given by the minister. He is usually very clear, but today that clarity was not apparent. As I understand it, this is a motion which, if accepted, is going to make a material change in the rules of the house and we are asked to accept it without careful examination. The government finds itself in a predicament in connection with the possible strike of the air controllers. Having delayed action for months, it now desires us to make a material change that can only have the result of further reducing the rights of the opposition. I for one intend to oppose such a motion.

If our rules are to be changed, then there should be full examination by the committee, which has been more or less dormant in recent months. The committee should look into this. The house cannot be pushed around in this way, and asked to accept a permanent change in the rules because the government finds itself in a quandary.

No one wants to see the government held up by the rules on any matter of national and emergent importance, but we are not going to capitulate to the desire of the government to extricate itself. To alter the rules for all time to come, at least until a further change is made, gives the government still greater powers to control and throttle the house.

I have no sympathy whatever with the unjust device of withholding unanimous consent when unanimity is desirable, but in order to cover that situation we are being asked to throw away a major right and to alter the rules of the house in a manner not in effect previously.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. gentleman appreciated one point which I may not have made clear in my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The minister has already taken part in the debate.

Mr. McIlraith: I am asking a question.

Mr. Speaker: Is he asking a question?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) accept the question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if he appreciated the point, that I was asking not to proceed with the motion now?

Mr. Diefenbaker: We have a motion before us. The minister explains what will happen when the motion is brought in, when the government needs emergent powers. Now the minister says, "I am really not forcing it." Well, if he is not, I am not opposed to that.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I trust it is clear that the issue that concerns the House of commons now is not the substance of the rule changes. There are two of them proposed by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith), and I reserve comment on the substance of those two changes. I am being asked behind me why I reserve comment, but my hon. friend will see in a moment that there are other ways and better opportunities for expressing comment.

What does concern us, Mr. Speaker, is the way in which this attempt is being made to change the rules of the House of Commons. I do not know how many times it has been said on this floor—but apparently it has to be said again—that the rules of this place are the rules of the house, not the rules of the government. The rules of this house have been changed a good many times in the last hundred years. On two or three occasions they have been changed on the initiative of the government, by government motions being introduced. Nineteen hundred and thirteen was a case in point; 1965 was another case in point. And each time the rules are changed on the basis of the government taking the initiative, we run into trouble both in getting the changes made and with the rules that result.

The best way to change the rules of parliament is to have parliament do it by means of an all-party committee, or by means of consideration in committee of the whole house. But in this instance the government is by-passing any all-party consideration. It is even by-passing the possibility of consideration in committee of the whole house. What is before us at the momemt is a sudden death motion which is capable of only one stage of debate, which does not permit going into committee of the whole. And if this motion which the minister has moved were to pass, it would make two permanent changes in the rules of the house. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that even though there may be merit in the two changes, this is not the way to go about it.

I also think this is hardly the time to change rules, just because some emergency situation has arisen. The house is granting the unanimous consent necessary to deal with that situation. For example we have all already agreed to sit tonight and tomorrow. I submit therefore these rule changes are not needed for the immediate situation, and in the government trying to make these changes we are faced again with a complete lack of comprehension on the part of the government.

Mr. McIlraith: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question. Did he appreciate the point I sought to clear up in my earlier remarks and by my question to the Leader of the Opposition? Did he understand that I did not propose to proceed with the motion at the moment, that I called it in order to be able to explain to the house what I had wanted to explain at an earlier stage in the proceedings today, about the possibility, later in the day, of having to ask for an emergency order of some kind relating to the legislation concerning the air controllers?

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Churchill: May I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. What business is in front of us at the moment?

Mr. Speaker: I believe hon. members know what the business is. It is a motion moved by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, he says he did not move it.

Mr. McIlraith: No—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, it is clear what is before us. It is a motion by the Minister of Public Works which would have the effect of changing two rules. The minister asked me whether I heard his suggestion that this matter be not proceeded with at this moment, but that somehow it might be discussed and brought back later in the day. Yes; I heard all that. But apparently he does not understand the point the Leader of the Opposition and I are attempting to make, with a good deal of support and that is that the way to change the rules is not to have the government bring in its suggestion, and then condescend to have it looked at.

Yesterday, in view of the fact that this session might end some day, and so on, I asked the Prime Minister whether he would agree to the appointment of an all-party committee to look into the rules. What was the Prime Minister's reply? His reply was that the government is looking into this matter and soon hoped to have something to discuss with representatives of the other parties.

Mr. Speaker, that is the wrong way to go about it. The rules are the rules of the whole house; the rules are the rules of parliament, and satisfactory rules are not produced by having the government prepare its draft and then condescend to let the other parties have some opportunity to discuss those proposals. This is the reason we are having trouble in respect of some of the provisional rules under which we are operating at the present time. They were brought in, not as a result of an all party committee, but were brought in by the government acting as the government.

I suggest that it is not good enough that the Minister of Public Works let this motion stand, so that later an all-party committee of the house might study it. What he should do is withdraw this motion. Then an all-party committee should be appointed to study, not just this situation but the rules as a whole. This business of changing the rules piecemeal as emergency situations arise does not produce a good set of rules.

I agree with the comment made a few moments ago across the floor, that there are many provisions in our rules which need to be changed; but that is parliament's function. You do not achieve this by having the government produce a draft. What is needed now, first of all, is—

Mr. McIlraith: Might I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Knowles: If it is a point of order, we cannot stop you.

Mr. McIlraith: I am not sure whether it is; I hope it is. I should like to make clear to the house that I am perfectly willing to end this confusion by withdrawing the order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIlraith: Apparently I was not able to make clear to anyone opposite—or at least to two of the parties opposite—what was intended. If it is the wish that this be withdrawn, I am quite happy to ask that it be withdrawn.

Mr. Knowles: I welcome the suggestion that this be withdrawn, and I agree.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Ontario.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, there is one thing which should be made clear. Is this motion to be withdrawn from the order paper? Is that what the agreement is?

Mr. Speaker: Is it the understanding that there is unanimous agreement of the house that the motion be dropped?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to give this kind of agreement, because I am of the opinion that this never should have been introduced today in the manner in which it was. For this reason we find the government because of that idiot across the floor sitting beside—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member is being carried away at the moment by his feelings. I think he should keep in mind that certain expressions are not in keeping with the dignity of the house.

Mr. Peters: I withdraw the expression, Mr. Speaker. The situation which developed last night, in my opinion, is not in keeping with the conduct of this house. I would suggest that what has happened is just the kind of thing which makes it almost impossible to obtain the unanimous consent which is necessary in an emergency. This type of legislation is not necessary. What happened the other day was a specific case of one individual bargaining with the government. That saves the government a great deal of embarrassment. It is my opinion that it really did not hurt the situation at all. I should like to suggest that the minister would be much better advised to withdraw this, without introducing it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, perhaps again it is a matter of my wording. He raised the matter today and it should not have been raised at all. I suggest this is the kind of thing which prevents co-operation. I am not going to be obnoxious about it. I think this should be withdrawn.

Old Age Security Act Amendment

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member completed his participation in the debate? Is there unanimous agreement that the notice of motion be withdrawn?

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I would hope that the government would be less secretive with the house from now on. I think it would behoove the Minister of Public Works to acknowledge what obviously is a fact, that he is no longer the house leader and that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) is.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the withdrawal of this motion, but I trust that the members of this house and the public generally will recall how spokesmen for the various parties in this house pleaded with an hon. member last week to consent to legislation being brought in, and were frustrated. I should like to suggest that they look back at some of the words of the people who pleaded with the member at that time. If they read these words, I think they might realize some of the reasons it was thought a rule change might be acceptable to the house at this time. I should also like to make it clear that at that time I did not plead with the hon. member, because I felt it was beneath the dignity of this parliament to be put in the position in which it was put at that time by its own rules.

Although there may be cause for levity and amusement today, to the people of British Columbia and the people involved in losses as a result of the dock strike it was not a cause for amusement or levity. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that there are ways to change the rules. He knows the problem: The problem is time. Again, I am sure that the people of this country feel that perhaps we should move a little more rapidly. I have no objection to withdrawal of the motion, but I think some of these things should be understood.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister the consent of the house to withdraw the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION OF GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENTS AND DETERMINATION OF PENSIONERS' INCOMES

The house resumed from Thursday, December 15, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-251, to amend the Old Age Security Act—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 3.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose last evening we were discussing the amendment to clause 3 moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Knowles: Question.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few comments in respect of the amendment, and explain the attitude of the government in putting the provision in the bill confining the income supplement to pensioners born on or before December 31, 1910.

As hon. members may recall, the Senate committee recommended a program of income maintenance to be applied to old age pensioners. One of the changes we made in the proposal of the Senate committee was to limit the application of the supplement to those pensioners born in 1910 or earlier. We carefully considered the relationship of permanence, in contrast to a transitional program, to the role of the Canada Pension Plan.

Members of the committee will recall that the joint committee on the Canada Pension Plan and the Senate committee on aging expressed concern about those people who were too old to benefit from the Canada Pension Plan. We assumed, and still do, that the main retirement program for the people of Canada was the Canada Pension Plan, which is based upon contributions from both employees and employers. The supplement therefore is intended to serve as a transitional measure, while the contributory retirement pension program is maturing.

This supplement will be payable to those current and future old age security recipients who, by reason of age alone, will be unable to benefit substantially from the provisions of the Canada or Quebec pension plans. That is the rationale behind the approach put forward in this bill.

It was pointed out in statements last night that there will be a group of persons born after 1910 who for one reason or other will not have an opportunity, to participate in the Canada or Quebec pension plans. We believe that such a group will be relatively small and we doubt whether a parallel income support program should be developed strictly for application to this particular group, especially in view of the fact this house passed the Canada

Assistance Plan which can be used as a program for general public assistance. The Canada Assistance Plan also provides health and welfare benefits.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam expressed some concern about the coverage of the Canada Pension Plan. The fact is, of course, that the Canada Pension Plan provides comprehensive coverage. It is in fact one of the most comprehensive contributory programs of its kind. It does cover farmers and fishermen. In respect of housewives, as referred to by the hon. member, our approach has been to provide a combined pension for the husband and the wife so that the wife can derive a bigger pension should the husband die. It should be borne in mind that many housewives will be contributors in their own right and will derive benefits, as well as the income support, because their husbands have been contributors.

Hon. members may not agree with what I am saying about the relationship of this program to the Canada Pension Plan. I do not object to that, but I should like to communicate my concern about a permanent parallel program of income support in connection with the Canada Pension Plan. If the supplementary program is not limited in this way, and this is an income guarantee program, younger workers and certainly lower income workers will wonder, though compelled by law, why they should contribute to the Canada Pension Plan or to the Quebec pension plan when they can get a supplementary pension without any contribution.

That is precisely why this program is transitional in nature. We felt that a parallel program of income support of a permanent character would undermine the confidence among those in lower income groups in respect of compulsory contributions which they must make under the Canada and Quebec pension plans. That is the point of view I am putting forward, and that is the explanation for the inclusion of this clause.

I just want to say to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that the fact we are putting forward this transitional program in the form of a guaranteed income in my view should not detract from the fact that we are attempting to develop a new approach—a guaranteed income approach to income support. We are applying this on a transitional basis. It may be that the experience we will gain in the development of the income guaranteed approach to this group—admittedly it is a transitional measure—will provide us with a basis on which, at a later stage, we can apply the guaranteed income program to a greater proportion of our population.

As time goes on I think members of the house and members of the committee will want to consider the guaranteed income approach in relation to all other social security programs in Canada. I cannot foresee the future, nor can I make any policy statement as to the attitude of the government, but it certainly is a fact that the experience gained in respect of this program will be of great importance in years ahead in deciding whether the guaranteed income concept should be applied on a broader basis.

In my judgment we are definitely breaking new ground in applying the guaranteed income approach. Aside from the amounts that are contemplated in this approach, the principles are the same. We are attempting to create an administrative structure. If we succeed, and I hope we will, this will provide a possible basis for a broader application of this measure in the future. I make that point because I do not have in mind, in confining this concept to a group on a transitional basis, that it would undermine possible application in the future on a broader basis.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say one or two words and then ask the minister two questions. I gladly assume that the minister was sincere in the statement he just made to the committee, and that he honestly believes there is some conflict between the two plans. I am afraid he has not communicated to me, even though he said he was attempting to do so, any reason for concluding that there is this conflict.

I have a fear that the minister has yielded to advice which officials often give because of their excess fears about things. My two questions are simply these—and I do not want to make this a long speech. First, is the Minister of National Health and Welfare suggesting to this committee that there will be no one born after 1910 who will not be covered by the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan? I am sure he cannot suggest that there will be no one in the country not covered. My second question is: Is the minister trying to persuade this committee that a young contributor to the Canada Pension Plan will feel he is being gypped, when he has contributed with the expectation of $104 a month as his total pension under the Canada Pension Plan, if I remember correctly, plus whatever other adjustments are built in, as against a possible maximum of $30 a month under this plan?

Surely, Mr. Chairman, that simply is not logical.

I suggest to the minister that if there is anyone who is likely to be left out in the cold, even if there are no more than 10,000 of the total number in Canada, because they were born after 1910 and are not covered by the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan, and so on, this income maintenance, poor though it is, ought to be maintained. I should like the minister to comment on my two queries.

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could ask the minister a question and he could answer it and the hon. member's questions at the same time. In considering the question of whether the program should continue or whether there should be a deadline, the minister must have made an estimate of the number of people who will retire, say in 1976, who will have no pension under the Canada Pension Plan. He must also have considered how many will have a pension of, say $10, how many will have a pension of say $20, and how many will have a pension of $30 only. Can the minister give us some indication of the number of people who will be in those categories?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I have not any statistics available at the moment. I will try to get them, to see whether there is any estimate of the future level of benefits and the numbers. As I have stated, I believe that the point of this measure is to look after the people who because of age will not benefit from the Canada Pension Plan. That is why it is a transitional measure.

The hon. member for York South asked me whether there would be persons who would not be eligible for benefits under the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan. I think there undoubtedly will be. We think the number will be relatively small. If we had no other program, I think it would be a matter for concern if after a period of 10 years there were considerable numbers of people who had been incapable, for one reason or another, of participating effectively in the economy and and could not benefit.

It seems to me that perhaps the solution is in some other direction. I am talking about a guaranteed income approach. Having decided upon that course—and hon. gentlemen opposite have taken a different view—it is still a fact that younger workers, and especially low income workers, could legitimately say, "Why should we be contributing to the Canada Pension Plan out of our relatively small earnings, and be compelled to do so by law, when there is another program that could provide us a supplement?" I admit that if I accepted the view of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and adopted the flat increase at this point, the situation would of course be different.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: But in terms of the approach now being recommended to parliament, I think it is wise to limit it in this way. This is really the point of view I am putting across. I am not hopeful that hon. members opposite will agree with me, but I am hopeful that they will at least understand the reason, even if they think it is not acceptable.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I am as puzzled now by the minister's theory as I was last night. He made it more specific today when he said that low income workers would resent this program. Has he had representations to this effect? On what grounds does he base this weird theory that he is developing?

Mr. Lewis: On some bureaucratic advice.

Mr. Barnett: I will give an example in round figures. According to rough calculations, a worker who earned $2,000 a year would be eligible on retirement for something like $42 a month from the Canada Pension Plan. That is as I understand it. Under this bill as it stands, if this is regarded as income he would have about $21 a month taken off his eligibility.

Is he going to resent the fact that, because of his limited ability to contribute in the way in which most of us expect to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan, when he retires he will receive a pension of only $42 a month? Is he going to resent the fact that he is entitled to an extra $9 under another plan? I just cannot understand the minister's argument.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. MacEachen: This is the point, Mr. Chairman. This is a problem that is quite far in the future. But I believe that workers on low incomes who have to sweat it out and contribute can look at another program and say, "Why should I have had to contribute, having been compelled to do so by law, when if I had not been compelled to do this and had a choice in the matter I could have benefited perhaps as much from this supplement?" This is the point.

Mr. Barnett: The minister has less faith in Canadians than I have.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question on the matter to which he has just referred. He said this category of worker would object to making payments to the Canada Pension Plan because they may be able to get the supplement under this program. I wonder whether the minister realizes that the payroll deductions of workers today are so numerous that one more little deduction for the Canada Pension Plan, even if they are not getting very much out of it, will make very little difference and they will not even think about it. Is there not some way in which the Canada Pension Plan could be related to this supplement, in such a way that there would in fact be a guaranteed annual income for every Canadian?

The minister has admitted that some people will not benefit under the Canada Pension Plan. If there is one person left out, it is one too many as far as I am concerned. I do not understand why we cannot have some relationship in these plans and guarantee every person an income of, say $130 a month. Surely the minister can devise some way in which this plan could be related to the Canada Pension Plan to achieve this objective.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I do not quite understand what the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) is trying to put over on us with his bill, by objecting to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

The title of the bill reads as follows: "An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act" and I, for one, feel that the Old Age Security Act should be amended by adding improvements to it, and not by taking away benefits which it already provides. By refusing the amendment moved by the member for Winnipeg North Centre, the minister confirms what my friend the member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) stated last December 5, when he said that the minister's amendment did not concern old age security but rather social assistance, which is already in force in the province of Quebec and, probably, in all Canadian provinces.

Therefore, as far as I am concerned, I am in favour of the amendment moved by the member for Winnipeg North Centre to the effect that the words "born on or before the 31st day of December, 1910" be struck out; this would make the proposed increase available to everyone having reached 65 years of age. For this reason, I support the amendment moved by the member for Winnipeg North Centre.

[English]

Amendment (Mr. Knowles) negatived: Yeas, 61; nays, 66.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, may I rise on a point of order. We are debating one clause, but as members know it extends from page 2 to page 10 of the bill. The hon. member for Simcoe East gave notice last night that he will be making an amendment to the proposed section 8 on page 2. I suggest that for orderly consideration in committee Your Honour might call, say, clause 3, section 6, and then section 7 and so on, so that we will not be moving back and forth over these eight pages.

The Chairman: For purposes of discussion would the committee agree to call each of the 12 proposed sections in clause 3, and complete discussion on each one chronologically?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: We will now consider clause 3, section 6.

Mr. Douglas: We passed the proposed section 6 last evening.

Mr. McCleave: I do not think we passed anything. This is the reason I made the suggestion, because we immediately went to the proposed section 7.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, is not the language we use at this point "Is discussion on the section concluded?" I believe that section 6 was concluded and that we were on 7, which is how I got my amendment in.

Mr. Douglas: I should like to say a few words on clause 3, section 7. The minister's explanation as to why this section, which provides that persons who were born after December 31, 1910 will not be eligible for benefits under this legislation, is included in this clause makes very clear what this legislation really amounts to. The minister has now said that this is transitional legislation; that it is old age assistance legislation; that it is a temporary relief measure to take care of old age pensioners who have very little income, other than their old age security pension. The minister's argument for presenting this rather niggardly program is that if the government were to make this a permanent feature of our legislation it would somehow or other undermine the Canada Pension Plan.

I want to point out two things to the minister. The first is that he can resolve that problem very easily by incorporating this $30 in the basic old age security pension. There would be no feeling of injury then from 1975, on, if those who had contributed to the Canada Pension Plan knew that in addition to their entitlement under that legislation they were also entitled to a basic pension of $100 or $105 a month. This is why we have been arguing that this money, which the government is now proposing to pay, be incorporated into the old age security pension.

What the government are really doing—and it is becoming more transparent day by day—is really to fix $75 a month, plus whatever additional increments will come as a result of the increased cost of living, as a permanent feature of our social security legislation. This will mean that from now on $75 a month plus 75 cents a month for a 1 per cent increase in the cost of living, with a maximum of $1.50 for 2 percentage points, irrespective of whether the cost of living rises by 3 per cent, 4 per cent or more, will be fixed as the basic pension of the old age security pensioner. In many instances it will not even keep pace with the increased cost of living, let alone allow our elderly citizens in this country to participate in the nation's increased productivity. The old age security pension is now fixed, as I say, except for the increment arising out of the increased cost of living.

I am sure that when the government introduced the Canada Pension Plan it was not apparent to most Canadians that the old age security pension was being frozen, except for the cost of living bonus. But it is now perfectly apparent that it has been frozen. It is also apparent that the measure now before us is not going to be the basis of a universally guaranteed annual income. It is purely and simply a relief measure of a transitional nature to provide assistance on the basis of a means test for those persons whose income is insufficient today to keep body and soul together.

On the basis of the minister's explanation, Mr. Chairman, this makes a hollow mockery of all the pretensions we have heard about, to the effect that we were launched on a new era of social security legislation, and that the government was laying the basis of a guaranteed annual income program. This talk of a guaranteed annual income that the government has been promulgating from one end of the country to the other is now exposed as probably the greatest hoax ever perpetrated on the people of this country.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Anyone with any doubts about this can read subsection 1 of section 7 as set out in clause 3 of the bill, and realize that after 1975 there will be no new applications under this legislation. Payments will continue to those already on the list who have qualified under the means test, but new persons will not come on the list. Those who do not qualify under the Canada Pension Plan, and there are many—the minister said that farmers and fishermen are covered; it is optional for them, but a good many small farmers and fishermen have net incomes of less than $1,000 a year—will not be able to contribute. Farmers and fishermen would have to pay employer and employee contributions totalling 3.6 per cent, rather than the 1.8 per cent paid by industrial workers.

Many self-employed persons engaged in small businesses, in one-man barber shops, in one-man shoe shine stands or one-man filling stations cannot afford to make the 3.6 per cent contribution.

An hon. Member: Don't forget farmers.

Mr. Douglas: The small farmers and fishermen I have already mentioned. Even where small farmers and fishermen with net incomes of less than $1,000 make contributions, the benefits they will be entitled to under the pension will be relatively small. To leave these people absolutely bereft of assistance under this plan demonstrates in my opinion a callous disregard of the needs of the situation.

We have registered our protest against this provision; I do not think we can do more. I hope it is perfectly clear to hon. members of the house and to people of the country what the government's legislation means. It means old age assistance with a means test on a temporary, transitional basis.

Mr. Chatterton: I wish to say a few words on the proposed section 7. When I asked the minister a few minutes ago if he had figures estimating the numbers of people in 1976 who will be getting no pension, or a very small pension, he said he had no figures. I think these amendments were drafted according to some nebulous theory I have not been able to understand. They are based on some nebulous principle, and not on the facts of the situation.

Mr. Dinsdale: It was expedient.

Mr. Chatterton: It was an expedient measure introduced in a hurry, largely because we exposed the Canada Assistance Plan as not being an effective social security measure.

The recommendation of the joint committee on the Canada Pension Plan was that the combination of old age security and Canada pension should bear a certain relation to earnings. In 1961, for instance, Mr. Chairman, close to 600,000 people in non-farm families earned less than $1,000. I maintain that large numbers of people will get little or no benefit from the Canada Pension Plan in 1976. I tell the minister, judging by his performance in this proposal, that he may not be Minister of National Health and Welfare in 1975. I can assure him that, if some measure is not introduced to help the people who will get very small pensions or no pensions at all from the Canada Pension Plan by 1975 or 1976, amendments will have to be brought in to take care of these people.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I should like to continue on the points brought out with respect to subclause 1 of clause 7. The point I wish to make in this connection may be appropriate at a later session. I wish now therefore to carry out the intention I mentioned yesterday, to move another amendment to new section 7 being enacted by clause 3 of this bill. The point I wish to make perhaps is narrow in terms of the number of people affected. If we are to show decency and generosity at Christmastime the minister ought to accept the request I shall make in the terms of an amendment.

If hon. members look at new section 7, subclause 2, paragraph (c) they will discover that pensioners outside Canada, away from the country for more than six months, are not entitled to draw the supplement or the so-called guaranteed income payment.

I am pleading the case of not many people, though many seem to write to me. I am strenuously pleading the case of people who have no vote in this country, who have moved to warmer climates in the south or to the United Kingdom. They do not vote in Canadian general elections. To me this is all the more reason for doing the fair, decent and generous thing.

As hon. members know, it has taken us a long time to get the Old Age Security Act amended to make it possible for people who find it necessary or desirable to live somewhere else to draw the old age security pension. We finally achieved this in two jumps. In the first place we provided some years ago that a person qualified for a pension in Canada, who has started drawing it while living in Canada, may go anywhere in the world and continue drawing that pension provided he had lived in Canada for 25 years subsequent to his twenty first birthday. That provision was enacted some years ago, and it was a good one.

More recently when dealing with the legislation enacting the Canada Pension Plan we made another improvement. We looked at the person who has had to leave Canada before attaining pensionable age. He may have had many years of residence in this country; he may have been born in this country, but he was denied the pension unless he came back and lived here for another 12 months.

The kinds of cases coming under this heading surely are well known to hon. members. For example there will be the case of a man and his wife, the man being of pensionable age and his wife not. They go to England; the man gets his pension but the wife cannot because she went there before she was of pensionable age. Or there are single persons moving about for one reason or another, going to various places, the most common of which would be the southern parts of this continent. We resolved the problem of the person who cannot get back to the country by another provision now in the act under which, if a person had a total of 40 years residence in Canada subsequent to age 18, he need not come back to this country to get his pension.

I have already come across sad cases of people who are a few weeks short of the required 40 years. I recall the case of one woman who was born in this country, as her parents were born in this country, but who cannot qualify because she is two or three months short of that 40 year period. I do not intend to go into these provisions. I merely indicate that we have made them. It was difficult to get this concession, and the qualifications are difficult to meet. But the concession has been made. Now, by this provision in subsection (2) of section 7, we say that even though people have met the qualification and are drawing the basic pension in, for example, the southern states, or in England, they cannot get the supplement.

Mr. Chairman, how mean can we be? How unthoughtful can we be? Some might argue that if these people have been able to go away, they have resources. Well, if they have resources they would not get the supplement in any case under this legislation. But if a person is entitled to a pension on the basis of the 25-year clause or the 40-year, and needs a supplement, I think he should get it.

I am not trying to set people against each other when I point out how unfair the present discrimination can be. Please note that a person who did not come to this country until he was 54 or 55 can get a pension in ten years time. And if he stays here he can get a supplement, provided he meets the means test incorporated in this bill. I am in favour of that; let that be clear. But it does seem odd that a person who has been in this country ten years can draw the $105 if he needs it, while another, who may have been born in this country and lived here for 58 years, cannot get a supplement because he has gone to England or some other part of the world. It seems to me that this is unfair and that it is carrying the unChristmas spirit a little too far.

The minister told us in the speech he made that this provision had been included in the bill deliberately. I feel strongly that it should come out. We have made it possible for those people who have to go away, and who meet the various conditions, to get a pension. They should have a right to get the supplement as well. For the most part we are concerned with people whose health in their latter years does not permit them to endure our winters. Or they are people who have moved to other parts of the world for family reasons—to live with relatives, and so on.

I am not talking about the millionaires the minister seems concerned about. If the millionaires have gone to California, they cannot beat the means test. But having found the answer as far as the basic old age pension is concerned we should not make it impossible for pensioners to receive the supplement because they are living elsewhere. I urge the minister not to give us a long song and dance telling us why this cannot be done. My files upstairs are full of letters from the previous minister, from the hon. member for Perth, when he was minister, from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, when he was minister of health and welfare, explaining how difficult it was to make pensions payable to people who did not come back to get them: It just could not be changed; it was impossible; there were too many difficulties. But we solved these difficulties with the 40-year rule. Of course some people who might have benefited from that rule died before it could come into effect.

Let us not take ten years to resolve this problem. Let us do the decent thing without delay and say that all these people who have qualified for the basic $75 and who can meet the so-called test for the supplement shall get the other $30. To this end, I move:

That clause 3 of Bill C-251 be amended by deleting paragraph (c) from sub-section (2) of the new section 7 being enacted thereby.

The Deputy Chairman: Are there any observations as to the admissibility of the amendment?

Mr. Chatterton: I suggest that this amendment falls into exactly the same category as the amendment moved yesterday by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and which the Chair accepted.

Mr. MacEachen: I have one comment to make in respect to this amendment. I merely wish to mention that at some point the Chair will have to determine the meaning of the expression "certain pensioners" used in the resolution. If, successively, all these amendments are ruled in order, the effect will have been to rewrite the resolution to which the royal recommendation is attached.

Mr. Knowles: On the point of order, may I suggest that it is not a valid objection to an amendment to say that, if it is in order, then one, two, ten or a dozen other amendments might also be in order. The situation might be embarrassing for the government, but the objection which the hon. gentleman has raised is not a procedural one.

I believe the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich has stated the proposition correctly, in a nutshell. This amendment provides for a change in the bill in an area which was not dealt with at all in the resolution preceding the bill. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, you will find it difficult to find in any other way than you found last evening. Surely the use of the phrase "certain pensioners" does not give the minister the right to come along now and say: This is what we meant by it. When the same point was raised last evening, my hon. friend from York South said: Suppose the minister had put in a clause saying that people with read hair were not to get a pension, this could have been what the minister had in mind when he said "certain pensioners". I think the Chair was right in the ruling it made, and that there is really no reason to discuss the matter further.

Mr. MacEachen: The point I made was that the resolution had been carefully framed so as to be limiting, and the limiting expression was the word "certain". I argued this point last night and I will not repeat it now; but if all these amendments are declared to be in order the effect will have been to rewrite the royal recommendation. I think this would be altogether improper.

• (1:20 p.m.)

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, the fact that the minister did not write the royal recommendation properly is no concern of ours at this point. He has put the words "certain pensioners" in the royal recommendation, which could mean all pensioners except one, or could mean pensioners with certain physical attributes. The thing permits itself of a very wide interpretation indeed.

I think the ruling yesterday would be applicable. It was accepted by the committee. It was not appealed by the government side, and I think should stand with regard to these others which are on all fours with it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, when earlier in this debate I heard my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referring to the minister as a Scrooge, I did not realize quite how correct he was, because as the debate goes on, and as one looks at the picayune attitude of the minister, one realizes how miserable and mean he is being. I suggest to the minister that he stop thinking of this bill as being—

The Chairman: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member to say to him we are now discussing whether or not this amendment is in order, and maybe the remarks he is now making could be made some other time.

Mr. Knowles: Let us have your ruling.

The Chairman: I am prepared to make a ruling now, if the committee so wishes.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: I can say to the committee that the Chair has considered this amendment in the light of the resolution which preceded the bill. I have paid particular attention to the statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and the meaning which he places upon the word "certain."

It is the opinion of the Chair that while this word "certain" does impose some limit, it is a limit which is defined in the bill; and since the limit is defined in the bill, then to change the limit in the bill, or to express certain limits, does not at all do any violence to the resolution preceding the bill. The word "certain" may have limitations. The bill states what these limitations are. But I do not think the committee is bound by the limitations placed upon the word "certain" by the bill itself.

I would like to read again from Beauchesne's fourth edition citation 278(4):

> The committee is not bound by the terms of the provisions which the ministers have inserted in the bill; and, when no amount has been mentioned in the resolution, any member may propose to increase the grants specified in the bill or to extend the application of the provisions of the bill, whatever may be the cost resulting therefrom, so long as the power conferred by the royal recommendation is not exceeded.

It is my opinion that this amendment does not exceed the royal recommendation, and I would therefore rule that the amendment is in order.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, just before you made your ruling I said that I found it difficult to understand the reasoning and the point of view which the minister is taking with regard to this amendment. As I said, he was referred to earlier in debate as a Scrooge. I am not going to repeat the long arguments and discussions we have had on the principle of whether $30 a month should apply to all people who are entitled to the old age pension, or just to those who can satisfy the needs test. This has been debated for days. We have had a number of votes in which the house and the committee have expressed their points of view. We on this side of the chamber disagree with the government and with the minister, but that decision has been made.

However, Mr. Chairman, surely the number of people covered by this amendment is so small, and the reasons this small group of people leave the country are so valid, that the government does not have to drive the last nail into the coffin. This is not a new question. It took many years argument before the government of Canada agreed that any old age pensioner who left the country could get a pension. Finally, some years ago, it was agreed that people who qualified could draw their pension, regardless of where they lived.

There are not many of these people. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has already said, those who have left the country have done it mainly for two reasons. One is a health reason. I have just come back from my home city of Winnipeg where the people have had a month of below zero weather. It is no wonder that some people who are in their late sixties and seventies find it difficult to live in Winnipeg during the winter, and think it a good idea to go down to the United States, or some other place, where the conditions are easier for them to live. I also know some people, the bulk of whose relatives have already died, but they have brothers or sisters down in the United States, or in Great Britain. They have decided it would be easier and more pleasant for them to finish the last few years of their lives in close association with those brothers or sisters.

These are valid reasons which were recognized by the government of Canada and the parliament of Canada when the pension legislation was amended to permit people to live outside Canada and still draw their pension. But now the minister comes along and says, "Well, that is all right for the people who get the $75 a month. They can live in the United States, they can live in Great Britain or anywhere else, but they cannot get this supplementary benefit."

I cannot see any logic behind this and, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, I wish the minister would stop thinking of this bill as being like the Ten Commandments tablets which cannot be changed under any circumstances, and that he would exhibit some of the compassion which some hon. members and some people throughout the country thought he had, but which he is rapidly demonstrating he does not have.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, there are of course two Scrooges, and I would not like to apply the description Scrooge to the minister without hoping that he is in a sort of period of conversion from the earlier Scrooge to the later Scrooge. We must hold out hope not only for the Scrooges of this world but for the Minister of National Health and Welfare also.

Mr. Douglas: Better conjure up one of those ghosts for him.

An hon. Member: Marley's?

Mr. McCleave: The amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre commends itself handsomely to the members of the official opposition because the battle, mentioned earlier, about residence requirements with respect to old age pensions was one brought to a happy end by a former minister of national health and welfare, the hon. member for Perth. That was one of his outstanding humanitarian accomplishments.

Dealing with the merits of the amendment I would point out to the minister that obviously the number of people involved will not be large. The old age pensioners who can go abroad on either $75 a month, or on a maximum of $105 a month, is not going to be substantial. If they have not already made their pile to go and live in Spain or Florida during the harsher months of the year, they are never going to make it.

I suggest that the type of person who will take advantage of this will be somebody who, in any event, is helped by his or her family to move to a softer clime so as not to experience the great Canadian winter. I further suggest that the families of such people are making considerable sacrifices, and that these sacrifices are being made only for one purpose, for the health of their relatives who find it necessary to move to milder climates.

I do not think the treasury of this country is going to suffer any great expenditure. I would picture it as something in the order of six figures a year. So, I should like to end where I started; there were two Scrooges, the miserable fellow at the beginning of the Dickens story and that kind, benevolent soul who emerged after an exhausting ordeal—

An hon. Member: After the change.

Mr. McCleave: —and found a way to become an enlightened employer of Bob Cratchit and a friend to all those around him. I hope that the minister could come back into the chamber and show this same startling metamorphosis with regard to these amendments.

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Chairman, it has been acknowledged by all Canadians that the old age security pension is an entitlement to the people who have contributed toward the growth of the nation. It is quite clear from the minister and the government that this supplement is not considered as a right. By virtue of this provision the government has discretion to decide which of these senior citizens, having complied with all the requirements of the old age security provisions, shall be entitled to this supplement. In order to point out the anomaly, I should like to make a comparison to the situation in respect of the Canada Pension Plan. Under the Canada Pension Plan a person can move here from some other country. He can live here for ten years, take his full Canada Pension Plan, and then go back to the place from which he came. Hon. members might say: "Oh, yes, but that is a contributory pension plan". The fact is that such a person, particularly if he is earning $5,000 a year or more when he retires, can draw his pension after contributing for ten years only and receive a bonus, an unearned increment, which is paid to him by the other people of Canada to the tune of some $18,000.

On the other hand, under this bill, a person who has lived in Canada for 20 years after age 21—he may have lived here for 40 or 50 years—who on account of health of other reasons wishes to live in some other country is not entitled to the supplement. Perhaps the minister could tell us how many of these people are affected. Will granting the supplement to these people increase the cost in respect of this measure to any appreciable extent? If not, why does the minister take this "Scroogey" attitude in respect of these citizens who have earned a right to the supplement?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a very earnest appeal to the minister to change his mind in this regard. I wish to do so for several reasons. I think he was wrong in not accepting the earlier amendment which was moved. In that case at least, I think he had some reason which I believe I understood. Unfortunately, somewhat to the shame of Canada, there are people whose income is so low that their pensions under the Canada Pension Plan would not be greater than the supplementary income that the early subclause represented. So, at least he had some reason.

I suggest, with all the earnestness which all of us can possibly muster, that there is no reason for the stand the minister is taking. First, as has been pointed out by other speakers, the number of people who will be able to leave Canada and go elsewhere, having only $75 or $80 a mnth, obviously is exceedingly small. They will be people who are ill or who have children living in Detroit, Rome or in some other place and who wish to spend the remaining few years of their lives with their children and grandchildren. The denial of this supplement to them, to me seems to be an act of inhumanity of which I thought the minister was incapable. I mean both parts of that; it is an act of inhumanity and I would have thought that the minister was incapable of it. How many thousands of dollars are involved in this? I suppose one of the reasons the minister wishes to have this subclause in the bill is that his officers have persuaded him it would be very difficult to check the forms containing the income returns from people who are resident elsewhere. I should like to say to him in passing that this is another reason to condemn his income test.

Even if this were the case, let me remind him that there are dozens of laws on our books which unfortunately are violated daily by residents and citizens of Canada which the governments, federal and provincial, do not bother to police, because the cost of policing would be greater than the few pennies they would gather as a result of such policing. Everyone knows that. It is unfortunate, but it is a fact. He is not worried about that. Governments are not worried about the little infractions which cost the treasury a few measly thousands of dollars. When the minister suggests that people who have lived most of their lives in Canada who reach the age of 65 eventually and now age 69 or 68, and who find that they would like to spend the remaining few years of their lives with their children and grandchildren somewhere outside Canada, cannot get a pension above the $75 a month under the old age security provisions, this is picayune; it is petty. It is petty in mind and petty in heart, if I may use that term. It represents no money; it represents no principle. It represents a bureaucratic intrusion which has absolutely no basis in fact, logic or anything else.

This attitude represents a sacrifice of simple, human compassion for some kind of procedural difficulty which might occur in respect of some loss of the occasional measly dollar which the treasury might have to endure because a person is out of the country for six months. I am making my statement as others have—and I am not saying that I am any different from the others—not with any intention of embarrassing the minister or the government. From my short experience in parliament, I believe that if we leave the government alone it does enough to embarrass itself. No one on the opposition benches has to aid them in that direction. With all my heart, I am making the plea to the minister that he realize he is making a mistake. He is making a mistake of pettiness for which he will be branded as the Scrooge which people have called him, just as his department will be branded as a department without imagination and without heart.

If the minister could tell us how many thousands of dollars this will cost the treasury of Canada or if he could tell us what it is he is trying to protect himself against, I would be glad to listen to him. However, I have applied my mind to this matter and my experience in respect of the older people in this country, which probably is as wide as that of anyone else, and for the life of me I cannot see why, when the old age pensioner is entitled to receive the old age security pension when he is beyond the boundaries of this country, this little addition of $30 a month—and it might be less—should be denied him. The only explanation I can see is that some officers in his department must have advised him concerning the procedural difficulty there would be in respect of checking the applications and so on. So what? So, you cannot check them.

An hon. Member: It is to be a very simple form.

Mr. Lewis: It may well be a simple form, but a person who pays no taxes may have difficulty. My question is, so what? Out of 1,200,000 pensioners, which is the number there are now, I should like to know how many in fact live abroad. This whole question does not involve only how many live abroad, because there might be very many pensioners out of the country. The $75 is paid as a matter of right even to those who can afford to go abroad. I want to know whether the minister really thinks there is a substantial number, significant number or even a small number of pensioners who are living outside of the country and do not receive at least $105 per month in income. It is absurd to suggest that there is a crack in the wall of financial responsibility in this regard which would cause any embarrassment or any loss worth a tinker's damn.

Often the minister does accept advice, yet in this case he has a certain approach to legislation which leads him to bring in this kind of petty, mean provision which is what it is. It is a petty, mean provision of no consequence to the country, of no consequence to the treasury, but of consequence only to a few thousand people who will be living with their children or grandchildren outside this country. Those are the few who will benefit from this additional pittance provided by this bill. I appeal to the minister to recognize the validity of the representations made by hon. members on this side of the house in order to show that he has some understanding of, if I may say this without any offence, the workings of a genuine democratic legislature or assembly where a minister does not simply put legislation on the desk and say we must accept it. In a democratic assembly the minister and the government have sufficient humility from time to time to accept propositions from those who oppose them, given in good faith and in all sincerity. If the minister does not accept this amendment which does no violence to the principles of the act and no violence to anything else which is of consequence, I can only conclude that he is becoming—I have not known him long enough to say that he has been—the kind of administrator who is more bound by his bureaucratic fears than he is by his principles as a human being.

Mr. Schreyer: As I look upon the minister's mournful countenance, I wonder whether he regards us as being unseemingly persistent in pressing forward this amendment. If the minister is really anxious to press forward with greater speed and expedition, it seems to me he should be prepared to give us some concrete, statistical information as to the cost involved in the proposition before us. I suspect, because I have not seen any figure, that what is involved by way of additional cost is not of any great magnitude. If that is the case I should like to say to members opposite and to the minister that if we must choose between administrative stringency on the one hand and the generosity of Canadian society on the other, we ought to choose the latter. One must be prudent in dealing with measures of this kind, but if there is a very substantial cost factor involved there is an onus on the minister to bring forward concrete statistical information to indicate the range of additional cost involved in the proposal suggested by this amendment.

I might say that I also regard the provision in subclause (a) as being unnecessarily stringent. If I were to speak about that provision at this point I would be out of order so I shall defer my remarks until after we have dealt with this amendment.

Mr. Knowles: Let us hear from the minister.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak to the committee with great diffidence after the avalanche of unpleasant adjectives that have been thrown at me in respect of this amendment.

First of all, we kept in mind the fact that this supplement will be paid in all cases for the month a pensioner leaves Canada and for a maximum of an additional six consecutive months. Payment will be stopped at that time, but will be resumed the month the pensioner returns to Canada.

The hon. member for Halifax and others made allusions to what had been done in the past by former ministers. The policy being followed in this case is precisely the policy applied to pensioners receiving the basic $75 a month who have left the country and have not put in 25 years residence after age 21. That is a provision of the Old Age Security Act. That principle which is included in that act was applied to the supplement payment. A pensioner will get it for the month he leaves Canada and for a maximum of six consecutive months thereafter. If he remains outside the country beyond that period payment will be suspended, but it will be resumed when he returns.

Mr. Douglas: Why?

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre talked about pensioners who could not stand our cold winters and moved to the south. We provide for this situation by the six or seven months during which payments will be made. We have taken it for granted that persons who leave Canada and live permanently in other countries are eligible for any benefits which are available to permanent residents in those countries.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. MacEachen: That must be taken for granted.

Mr. Lewis: Why should we take that for granted? Other countries may have residence qualifications such as we have.

Mr. MacEachen: I do not understand what the hon. member is saying. Surely, the countries to which most of these pensioners move are advanced countries in the western world. They would be eligible for the various assistance available in those countries. That is all I am saying and we took that for granted. We felt that these persons would become residents of the countries to which they moved and would be eligible for benefits available in those countries.

Mr. Douglas: The countries to which most of the people move are Great Britain, the United States and Italy. How would any old age pensioner in receipt of old age security benefits qualify for social security benefits in any of those three countries, unless he had established a long period of residence, just as an individual must establish residence in this country? An individual must live ten years in this country before qualifying for old age security.

Mr. MacEachen: I do not accept all the inherent assertions of fact in the hon. member's question. We will save some money through this proposal, but it will cost money to make these payments to these pensioners who move. Any amount I might mention would be purely an estimate.

It would depend upon the income standing of the recipient, if we had any way of checking it. These people are living in 60 different countries. How would it be possible for any administration, even the bureaucratic administration alleged to exist in the Department of National Health and Welfare, to have any way of verifying incomes in 60 different countries? In this case we would be asking residents of Canada to provide us with information that we could not possibly ask residents outside the country to provide.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, would the minister permit a question at this point? How does he square this with his assurance time and again that it is a very simple declaration people will have to fill in, and the department is going to take their word for it?

Mr. MacEachen: It is a simple declaration. I explained yesterday the procedures that would be involved in this program.

Mr. Knowles: You haven't any snoopers abroad?

Mr. MacEachen: It is not a question of snoopers abroad. We have stated in the bill that we will check the accuracy of information provided to us. We have no way of doing this for persons abroad in 60 different countries, with varying income levels. We expect people living in Canada to provide us with this information.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Chairman, would the minister permit a question? Does the minister maintain that each and every successful applicant for the supplementary $30 will have had the application checked against his income tax return?

Mr. MacEachen: I covered that ground in the house yesterday for about an hour. We went into that matter fully. I appreciate the point of view of hon. members in seeking to make the advantages of the income supplement available to persons permanently resident abroad, those who stay abroad beyond the period of six months. I appreciate their concern. All I am saying is that we are following a principle that is now embedded in the Old Age Security Act with respect to persons who have failed to put in 25 years residence in Canada after age 21. That provision is in the law now.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister permit another question, Mr. Chairman? When he says he is following what is in the law now, he should distinguish between those people who claim their pension on the basis of only 10 years' residence and who therefore when they go abroad cannot draw the pension continuously, and those people who go abroad after having had 25 years in Canada subsequent to age 21, or went abroad before they became recipients of the pension with 40 years residence in Canada subsequent to age 18. I am talking about these two groups of people, the 25-year group and the 40-year group, with respect to whom we have said they can have the $75 pension. No matter whether they are living in the affluent United States, where they have a social security scheme, if we give them the $75 and they are in need, why cannot they receive the supplement? I plead with the minister not to confuse the issue about the 25-year and the 40-year groups by talking about what applies in the case of the 10-year group.

My amendment would not give this supplement to those people with only 10 years residence in Canada who stay abroad beyond six months, because they do not get the $75. But why not treat in the same way those we have finally been decent with in regard to the basic pension, whether they go abroad or remain in Canada?

Mr. MacEachen: That was quite a long question, Mr. Chairman. But I am dealing with the argument that has been advanced by members of the opposition alleging there is something un-Canadian, as it were, about the approach being taken in this particular bill. All I am saying is that we have applied precisely the same approach to the old age security recipients who have failed to put in 25 years residence in Canada after age 21. I refer the hon. member to section 5 (1) of the Old Age Security Act. This is the argument I am making; it is a reply to the statement that has been made on the other side of the house. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre makes a rebuttal argument and attempts to build it into another argument for his own purposes.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. When I made this amendment, it was clear that I was talking about the groups of people covered by the 25-year clause and the 40-year clause. I took more time than I thought I needed to describe those clauses. It is not a matter of coming back later and putting forward another argument. I am talking about the people who are entitled to stay abroad and draw the full pension; they are the only ones I am talking about. I think the minister should address himself to the question of those people.

Mr. MacEachen: I am addressing myself, Mr. Chairman, to the arguments put forward in the committee. One of the arguments patently made in the committee was: Why do we not treat these people in the same way as we treat the recipients of old age security who can take their pension abroad without qualification? This is the point I am answering. I am answering it by referring to this particular provision in the Old Age Security Act. I am not drawing any further conclusion than to point out that we are following this particular policy. This is the only point.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, would the minister permit a question? Perhaps I do not know enough about the Old Age Security Act, but am I wrong in thinking that if this particular subclause were deleted, the residence qualifications that apply to the old age security payment would apply to the supplementary payment? That is all the deletion of the subclause would accomplish, is it not? It would not wash out, would it, the residence requirements that are already there? It would make those residence requirements applicable to this group of people; is that not right

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Chairman, one of the arguments the minister used to oppose this amendment was that under this bill the advances made to those people living abroad permanently, and who would presumably be eligible for advances from the country in which they reside, would be considered as income. This is right, is it not? Therefore, if they receive over $60, they would be disqualified from this benefit, and if they receive up to $60 there is a commensurate reduction in the supplement? Am I not correct?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member is suggesting the complexity of the administrative operation in making these benefits available. I am not arguing against the concern of hon. members; I am arguing about the difficulty of trying to administer the program and establish equity between persons resident in Canada and those resident abroad. They can be abroad up to six months and draw this supplement. If they come back they will immediately go on benefit. These people are living in 60 different countries. There are 1,000 pensioners living in Hong Kong. We just cannot possibly hope to administer the program in any effective way and relate 60 different countries, with different income standards, when this program is geared to our own Canadian income level. It seems to me the committee is asking me to undertake something that is almost impossible to accomplish effectively. I do not want to argue against the concern of hon. members of the committee, but I would like the committee to understand the difficulty their suggestion presents and with which I am asked to deal.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, the minister has let the large cat out of the bag. It is not a question of the spirit of this legislation or the intent of what we are trying to do for Canadians, whether they live at home or abroad; but rather it is a question of how such an amendment to the Old Age Security Act could be administered. The minister has spoken about administrative difficulties. This is a point that many of us suspected was really in his mind when he opposed this very reasonable suggestion. Now, the minister has confirmed our suspicions.

The argument that has been made before by several hon. members is a perfectly proper one. We are not, by this legislation, creating a new class of pensioner. This legislation will simply provide a supplement, an extra benefit, to a class of pensioner already in being. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for York South, and I intend to point it out again because perhaps by repetition we will get this point through to the minister, the provisions in the present legislation are surely all the guarantee that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, his department and his government require. What we are being asked to do by enacting proposed section 7 (2) (c) is to legislate something which is superfluous. These powers already exist in the legislation we have. I say it is redundant in the same sense that to use the phrase "a round wheel" is redundant or to use the phrase "foolish minister of transport" is redundant.

Mr. More: I am somewhat surprised at the attitude of the minister of health and welfare. It does not coincide with the judgment so many of us have formed of him since he has been in the house and I simply do not understand it. Perhaps some of us have missed the point that puts him in the position of apparently being out of character. Perhaps some of the statements that have been made and put on his shoulders originated from the Minister of Finance, who is probably the strong man responsible for much in this bill that goes against our grain and which, if the truth were known, probably goes against the grain of the minister.

If the minister thinks that the committee was confused in their arguments a short time ago, I suggest he look at the words he used when he gets the blues. In his opening remarks in defence of his position he said that this bill was treating people who would be entitled to this benefit in the same way as the Old Age Security Act treats the pensioners. He did not distinguish between the ten and 25 year qualification in his opening remarks.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman.—

Mr. More: I should like the minister to let me make my case, and then he can reply if he wishes.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. More: I did not interrupt the minister.

Mr. MacEachen: —I rise on a question of privilege. Not only did I relate my argument to this particular 25 year provision, but I cited the section in the Old Age Security Act which makes provision for this. I merely stated that we were following the same policy with respect to payment of the supplement that is provided with regard to this class of pensioner who is covered by section 5(1) of the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. More: Mr. Chairman, I am trying to make a presentation, not to raise the minister's ire. If the minister looks at the blues, I am sure he will confirm that in his opening defence of the requirements of this bill he did not make any distinction. In fact, he made the statement that every old age pensioner living abroad had to return to Canada within six months. If he will look at the blues he will notice that, but I think other hon. members will verify what he said. Subsequently, the position was clarified with a question, or I should say a dissertation, from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I was sitting in my seat with a dissertation prepared, and the hon. member asked a question which was more like a dissertation, judging from the time it consumed. However, he knows the rules better than I, and as this is a matter of keen interest I do not blame him for stretching them.

I think this whole thing is iniquitous. I am just amazed at the concern of the government for a few pensioners. Only a few pensioners are able to qualify under the 25 to 40 year provision.

I rather liked the statement made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam yesterday. He asked who would want to transgress the law for 12 bucks? I suggest there are not too many old age pensioners really in need of this supplement who would transgress the law in this respect. I understand that all the minister is going to do in order to police these provisions is to make spot checks. I think he assured the house that there would be no big group of private-eyes poking their noses into people's homes, but that there would be a sampling made. I suggest that the old age pensioner who makes a simple request for the supplement because he needs it would not be outside the scope of such a sampling. By showing a little humanity and ignoring the heavy hand of the Minister of Finance, the minister could get the co-operation of these people.

I like to think that I had something to do with the action taken by the former minister which made it possible for the 25 year group to live abroad without returning to Canada to collect their pension. I think my suggestion gave rise to the minister's investigation and, I think he will agree, brought about the measure which accomplished this.

I cannot sit here and accept a derogation of this principle, the minister casually ignoring the representations that I have made to him. I recall that during the election campaign in 1962 the present Prime Minister made a great speech about the responsibility of the government in this matter. He said that a Liberal government would not spend one penny or ask for additional income through higher taxation unless it brought about greater productivity, which in turn would mean additional revenue. But what is taking place today? We have this big complex in Ottawa, the cost of which has risen from $9 million to $40 million, and the government has not batted an eye. They will have to produce this extra revenue from somewhere, and we see it being taken out of the hides of our old pioneers, the people who should be the concern of the government. This is something I cannot accept.

If the government is concerned about the excessive expenditure of money, let them take another look at some of the huge expenditures being made for the glory of our country and in tribute to our pioneers. I do not think any of us in this generation or in the younger generation either, wants the government of Canada to take it out of the hides of these pioneers. I urge the minister to forget about the policing, which he says he cannot undertake, and to place some confidence in the people who have sweated and toiled to build this country of which we are now the trustees. I ask him to accept this very reasonable amendment, which will improve this iniquitous bill. For that is what it is; it is a cover for the lack of government action to meet the real needs of our senior citizens.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I have just a few words to say and I hope it will not take me as long as my question did a moment ago. The minister keeps trying to say that all the government is doing is treating pensioners who are outside Canada in the same way as those inside Canada. Then he starts to talk only about those who qualify for the pension on the basis of 10 year's residence in Canada. The fact of the matter is that people in Canada today who have 25 years' residence as the basis of their qualification can go abroad and continue to draw their $75 pension for the rest of their lives, as opposed to the 10 years' residence people who cannot.

All that we on this side are saying is that those people already given the entitlement to go abroad and draw their $75 for life should be treated in the same way as if they had stayed in Canada—in other words, as if they had the right to draw the supplement. It is as simple as that, and I think the government and the minister ought to agree to do this.

Mr. Churchill: I just want to say a few words, Mr. Chairman. The minister of health and welfare is disclosing his true character in the course of this debate. He is not the far-sighted minister that we thought we had in this department. He is not the generous type of minister we thought we had.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): You are disillusioned, Gordon.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, completely disillusioned, along with all the other members of the house. The minister is now restricting. He is now the minister of restrictions. What has happened to all those brave words of his of a few days ago about this new concept that was being introduced into our social security legislation? As reported at page 10882 of Hansard he said:

—the bill before the house represents an important development in the structure of social security in Canada. It is a measure that will take its place beside the Canada Pension Plan, the Canada Assistance Plan, and within the old age security program to give this country one of the most advanced and most complete systems of income maintenance for its retired citizens.

Those are the great words of December 8. Now, on December 16 the minister is withdrawing and restricting. What has happened to that great propaganda expression "guaranteed annual income"? That is the way he introduced this measure.

Mr. Knowles: It is only for certain persons.

Mr. Churchill: Having told us he would make a great advance in social security by providing for our older people a guaranteed annual income, minister says that those going abroad for more than six months are not to have that income. Surely, this is Scrooge at his best. We have the name for the minister now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Would the hon. gentleman explain the difference between Scrooge at his best and Scrooge at his worst?

Mr. Churchill: That is a first class question. There is no difference at all between the Minister of Transport at his best or worst. It is just a worse situation every day.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare is attempting to destroy the value of his introductory remarks to this bill. The guaranteed annual income obviously is restricted to certain people. I am sure all hon. members feel that if a person has put in all the residence requirements which have been talked about, the 25 year period and so on, he should then be able to go abroad without worrying about losing the guaranteed annual income.

Why should those people not apply for the additional $30? They will get the $75, and for many pensioners the amount will go up to $105. If pensioners receiving the greater amount see fit to stay outside the country and not return, their pension goes down to $75 and the guaranteed annual income is meaningless.

I suppose this minister or his officials thought anyone going abroad and drawing this supplement would get additional money somehow or other. They would be getting more pension than they would be entitled to had they stayed at home. You must consider the large group with which you are dealing. Let us consider that these people will be honest, because statistics show that most people are honest. They are not trying to gouge the public or do something contrary to the laws of the land and deprive the government of taxes. Most people are honest. Why should we assume that the old age pensioner who goes abroad is not as honest as the old age pensioner who stays at home. The fact it will not be easy to check on additional income the pensioner may get abroad is no reason for us to be suspicious.

I doubt very much if anybody will seek additional income, having gone abroad. The minister could provide for a simple form to be filled out every year. Surely, a simple way of checking on these people could be found.

I support the amendment. I think it fits into the broad program the minister outlined to increase social security benefits for our old age pensioners. Let us not talk of too many restraints. Let us not make it too difficult for our pensioners. Let them have freedom of movement. We realize that the situation has changed within the last 15 years. People are much more mobile than they used to be and if they want to move to a neighbouring country why should they not move? These people have made their contribution to Canada. There is a 25 year limitation, but most of our old age pensioners I am sure have given to Canada 50 years of their lives in one way or another, from age 20 to 70, or from age 18 to 68. Most people have made that contribution to the life of Canada and should be given this return without any uncharitable tag ends being imposed today.

I appeal, as have other members, to the Minister of National Health and Welfare to revert to the nature we thought he possessed two or three years ago and to be a little more expansive and not restrictive. Otherwise, he will be made Minister of Finance within the next ten days and there will be a cabinet shuffle. He may find his proper place. I think he has an opportunity in the Department of National Health and Welfare to make a better name for himself than he is making at the present time.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Now we are for it.

Mr. Mackasey: I have a few remarks.

An hon. Member: Filibuster. Scrooge.

Old Age Security Act Amendment

Mr. Mackasey: Now that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has been classed as Santa Claus he is more interested in Christmas carols than questions in the house. I find it strange that our present Minister of National Health and Welfare should be referred to as Scrooge. What other minister of national health and welfare in the past half century has been responsible in one way or another for bringing in, during the short period that this minister has been in office, social welfare programs such as medicare, the Canada Assistance Plan, the Canada Pension Plan and now the amendments to the Old Age Security Act. Why should speaker after speaker tag this minister with an unfair label? I think this is a remarkable record for a young and dynamic minister of national health and welfare.

An hon. Member: Forget the record.

Mr. Mackasey: The pride that the people in the maritimes have for this representative of theirs in cabinet is seen by the way that hon. members from that part of the country, though they are in another party, stand up and pay tribute to him, asking him questions—

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): You speak for yourself. We can speak for the maritimes.

Mr. Sharp: Could not a nice word or two be found for the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Mackasey: It is hardly necessary to say anything for a minister of finance who has acted as responsibly and ably as the present Minister of Finance has. These are qualities that should be synomymous with the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Could this little love fest continue behind the curtains.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Chatterton: May I ask the hon. member a question? If this bill is so good, why is he delaying its passage?

Mr. Mackasey: I do not accept the hon. member's premise that I am delaying the passage of this bill. Most of the editorial writers whose columns I have read in the morning papers take the position that it is the opposition which is taking part in a filibuster against this legislation. No one can accuse me of holding up the bill. This is the second opportunity I have had of taking part in the discussion. I did speak briefly on second reading. I hesitated to take a greater part in these proceedings because I realize I do not have the experience on the subject which some hon. members possess, particularly the Gold Dust Twins from Winnipeg who have all these things at their fingertips.

An hon. Member: What about the amendment?

Mr. Mackasey: The amendment is as ridiculous as all the other amendments they have brought forward. I suppose that if I shared the opinion of members of the New Democratic Party that the basic principle behind this legislation was bad, I would bring forward a similar amendment. They think that what is best for this country would be simply to increase the benefit from $75 to $100 a month.

Mr. Knowles: No, to $105.

Mr. Mackasey: It is $105, now. The hon. member is converted.

Mr. Stewart: Would my hon. friend like to try to explain to the committee why if, in the opinion of the opposition, this is such a bad piece of legislation, its provisions should be made both perpetual and universal?

Mr. Mackasey: I will simply say that the amendment is logical if one believes that the principle of this bill is bad and that it would be better to raise the present $75 to $100 or $105, the figure to which the hon. member has now been converted.

I support this bill because I believe that for the first time in the history of Canada a measure has been introduced which will for all time take the question of old age security pensions out of party politics. This is why I support the bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Mackasey: There are so many hon. members who agree with me that I cannot absorb the wisdom of all their remarks. Basically, we are taking old age security pensions out of party politics. I do not have copies of newspaper editorials with me at this moment but if hon. members opposite want to read a telling editorial in their official voice in the province of Quebec, I would refer them to the Montreal Gazette.

The Gazette this morning points out that this legislation is a step forward from the days in which, every time the parties wanted to woo the votes of the older citizens of Canada, they attempted to outbid each other and insulted the senior citizens by saying, in effect, that their votes were worth so many dollars to the party. Finally, we have had the courage to get away from that system. I have heard hon. members say in the course of this debate that it is unsound politically to depart from the traditional practice in this field. Perhaps it is. But morally it is the finest thing this parliament will ever do.

Then again, no one has pointed out that many of our old age pensioners who remain in this country might well resent a provision which would enable those who leave Canada, possibly for economic or selfish reasons, to obtain an extra $30 a month automatically regardless of whether they were poor or rich. The minister has drawn attention to the fact that our senior citizens are living, at present, in some 60 different countries; some in eastern Europe, some in Hong Kong, some in western Europe.

It is time hon. members began to discuss this bill in a more objective manner and ceased to label the minister with a tag he does not deserve. If hon. members over there wish to be fair and objective, let them christen him as he is—perhaps the most imaginative and fair Minister of National Health and Welfare this country has ever had.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Winkler: On a question of privilege, three members on the government side entered the chamber from outside the chamber after the vote was called.

Some hon. Members: Out.

Mr. Winkler: In all fairness, I was behind the curtain all the time. I ask any hon. member who wishes to do so to get up and attempt to challenge that statement.

The Chairman: Order. All those in favour of the amendment please rise.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Amendment (Mr. Knowles) negatived: yeas, 40; nays, 55.

Mr. Winkler: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order, please. Before the committee proceeds any further, may I cite standing order 12 (2) which reads:

> When Mr. Speaker is putting a question, no member shall enter, walk out of or across the house, or make any noise or disturbance.

I ask the co-operation of the committee in this respect.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, would you repeat that to those gentlemen on your right who were not listening to what you said?

Mr. Winkler: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I must say that during the vote I saw the hon. member for Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie, the hon. member for Mercier and the hon. member for Cochrane coming from away outside the chamber and they cast their votes.

Mr. Loiselle: The hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac came into the chamber too.

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege, I did not vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: Order please.

Mr. Loiselle: I want to apologize to the hon. member. I was looking at other hon. members back there, the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

The Chairman: Order; the item before the committee is subclause (7).

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Will the minister give hon. members a copy of the application form that is going to be sent to old age pensioners? The reason I ask for this is that in answer to the hon. member for Marquette yesterday the minister said, with regard to pensioners who would not make out income tax forms, that the advice of a third person would be sought whether their applications would be considered or not.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, it is not customary to submit a proposed form to the committee before a bill is passed. It is without precedent in our parliament to do this. I do not mind trying to tell the committee the kind of information that will be sought. I stated yesterday, in respect to any check on the accuracy of the information provided, that we proposed to rely on information provided by the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask what the minister meant when, as recorded at page 11,200 of yesterday's Hansard, he said:

> The other source of information is what you might call third party information—

What is that?

Mr. MacEachen: What I had in mind was information provided on income tax returns.

Mr. Churchill: Let me read the whole sentence:

> The other source of information is what you might call third party information which is available even though an individual does not submit it in a tax return.

This is not from an income tax return.

Mr. MacEachen: The point is that while the individual himself or herself may not submit an income tax return, information with respect to that person may be available on another income tax return, for example, provided by an employer.

Mr. Rynard: I am concerned about persons who receive the guaranteed income and for health reasons have to leave Canada. There are many reasons why older people have to leave. I can mention circulatory disturbances, emphysema, and chest conditions in which case people are advised to go to Arizona. Is there no provision whereby such people can go there? What provision is being made for that?

Mr. MacEachen: The provision that is being made is that the supplement will be payable for the month of departure and for six additional months, so that a person who must leave the country for part of the year for health reasons, would be fully looked after.

Mr. Rynard: But a percentage of these people have to remain in a dryer climate all the time. What does this bill do for people who have to live in a dry climate outside Canada for 12 months of the year? The number, may be small, but I think they are entitled to the guaranteed income.

Mr. MacEachen: This whole issue was fully debated on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

The situation is as I have described it. Such a person certainly will be eligible to remain outside of Canada for a good part of the year when the climate is unfavourable to him. This is in accord with one provision of the Old Age Security Act. There really is nothing further I can add to the debate which already has taken place.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether over the week end he will consider the implementation of some provision in respect of these people who are few in number. It seems to me there should be a provision which would cover their position and entitle them to this guaranteed income. It should be as simple as that.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer to new subsection 2(a) of proposed section 7. I think possibly the minister should provide a specific answer in this connection. It seems to me that the provision in this paragraph is unduly restrictive. If the minister has some explanation he can give us concerning the reason this paragraph has been included in the bill, of course I should like to hear it.

It is my understanding, however, that the provisions of the Old Age Security Act are such that they would not prevent a potentially eligible recipient obtaining the pension even as late as a year after, and for a year retroactive to, the date of the application. Now, if this provision in this paragraph were to pass as it stands, it would seem to me to preclude certain pensioners who are eligible for the supplementary payment but who, because of some unavoidable reason or some contingent circumstances, were not able to file their return on time. It would seem that they might lose what it is their right to receive. Is it really necessary to have this type of a restriction?

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Chairman, I think the point is well taken. From memory, I believe that in the Canada Pension Plan there is provision for appeal in cases where the application was submitted late. Perhaps the minister could include a provision of this nature so that when these persons, through no fault of their own—many of them are quite elderly—do not submit their applications on time, at least there would be an opportunity for appeal or perhaps discretion with the minister to take care of the situation. I think the point is well taken and I hope the minister will give it his consideration.

Mr. MacEachen: In general, in reply to the hon. member for Springfield, I should like to say that the supplement is payable to recipients of old age security who already have established their status, so to speak, and therefore have qualified for the old age security pension. We wished to give some degree of retroactivity to the pensioner who may have mislaid the form or who may have forgotten to submit it. Because of the fact that these people are recipients of the old age security and likely will be alert to the possibilities under this program, we thought a period of four months retroactivity would be sufficient. However, I shall be glad to consider the point made by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich. It may be that the appeal procedure is a way in which the rights of the persons could be secured.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the minister in respect of new section 7. Before doing so, I might say that I presume the minister will say this matter has been debated during the past few days, as he did in answer to my previous question. Despite the fact that the minister may say the matter we are discussing now was debated fully, may I say that although it may have been debated fully it certainly was not explained fully. In relation to new section 7 the minister has pointed out that the recipient of this supplementary payment may leave Canada for a period of six months or more and receive the payment for six months. Then, he said when that pensioner returned to Canada he again became eligible for the supplementary payment. Can the minister tell us how long that pensioner would have to remain in Canada upon his return in order to become eligible, and then leave the country and receive it for another six months?

Mr. MacEachen: That is a good point. I presume, once his eligibility is re-established upon his return to Canada, that he is then put back on the benefit and can leave the country for a further six months. However, I should like to check a little further into this question.

Mr. Simpson: Do I understand that there is nothing in the legislation which covers this situation? When the minister is checking into this I wonder whether he would endeavour to assure the house that when this pensioner returns to Canada and makes an official application it will not be necessary that he remain in Canada for a lengthy period until the validity of his application is determined.

Mr. MacEachen: We would require that the person tell us about his or her return to Canada. We certainly would try to avoid any undue delay in giving the person the benefit. The situation is as I have described it to my hon. friend.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer to clause 7, paragraph 2 and ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) to state clearly whether all the present pensioners will automatically receive the application form which would enable them to receive the supplement provided in the measure? Would the minister also tell the house what will happen if an applicant dies between January 1 and the four-month period? In other words, if a pensioner files an application for income supplement and passes away two months later—say in February or March—will this increase be payable to his estate?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but I did not hear the complete question asked by my hon. friend. If he would be good enough to repeat it I will try to answer it.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I would first like to ask the minister to explain clearly whether all the present pensioners will receive, without having to send for it, the application form which will entitle them to the supplement provided in the legislation? I would also like to know what will happen if an applicant passes away between January 1 and the date upon which he should receive his supplementary income benefit. If a pensioner should die in February or March, for instance, would his estate be eligible to the retroactive payments?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister why the six months period was chosen. In some parts of this country the cold period lasts longer than six months, although it might not be as cold as in the middle of winter.

• (2:50 p.m.)

There are certain periods during the year when, because of dampness, people with poor health are forced to leave the country. I am wondering whether the minister will reconsider and allow an extension in these cases so that an applicant who receives a pension but lives outside the country will not have to go through the difficulties of again applying to the department each time he returns and leaves the country.

Mr. MacEachen: We are aware of this particular problem but there is a provision in the bill for the payment of the pension during six months following the applicant leaving the country. As soon as such an individual returns and is reinstated, he can again leave. This point was made earlier by the hon. member, and I will give it some consideration.

Mr. Scott (Victoria (Ont.)): I should like to ask the minister whether it is true that approximately 900 additional employees will be required to administer this change?

Mr. MacEachen: I have answered this question fully. We anticipate we will require an additional 400 permanent employees and an additional number of casual employees during the first four months.

Mr. Scott (Victoria (Ont.)): How many casual employees will be required?

Mr. MacEachen: I have placed this figure on the record on several occasions. I shall be glad to put it on the record again. The number of casual employees required is 675.

The Deputy Chairman: Does this conclude our consideration of proposed section 7 of clause 3?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: We will now proceed to a consideration of the new section 8 of clause 3.

Mr. Rynard: This is probably the most clumsily drafted bill ever presented in this house. This is also the opinion of a number of people who are trained to draft bills of this kind. We should return to the principle of drafting bills which communicate their purpose to hon. members of this house.

I intend to move an amendment to assist those people in Canada who are over 65 years of age but who did not go past the third or fourth grade in school. They experienced two world wars and a great depression. They are now faced with increasing automation. This group comprises approximately 150,000 people in Canada. They have little income but are physically and mentally able to work. I refer to these people who do casual work such as gardening, cutting lawns, shovelling snow, babysitting, sewing and perhaps cleaning. These people earn in the neighbourhood of $400 to $800 per year. They do not keep books. They are faced with the necessity of paying their carfare to get to their jobs and buying tools and extra clothing. These people are happy to perform these small tasks and they are assisting the economy of this country.

As a result of the provisions of this measure we will be forcing these people to stay at home rather than work. They require transportation, extra boots, extra clothing and in some cases, tools. As a result of these necessary expenses they will find that by working they are money out of pocket. These people will find it cheaper to stay at home sitting on the front porch in the summer and watching television in the winter, if they can afford a television set. We are destroying these people mentally and physically. If they stay at home and do nothing they will degenerate to the point where they will have to be taken care of in homes or hospitals. One can find many of these people in our institutions. These people have not had the opportunity of earning very much during their lives and I ask the minister to give them some consideration.

By the provisions of this bill we will be doing a great disservice to those Canadians who for health purposes leave Canada on the advice of their doctors. There is a tremendous increase in the number of elderly Canadians who suffer from respiratory diseases such as emphysema, bronchitis and asthma. By discriminating against these people we are being penny wise and pound foolish.

In order to provide some opportunity for these people to obtain happiness I move:

That subsection (1) of new section 8 of clause 3 be amended by the addition of the following proviso thereto:

'Provided that no deduction shall be made in the case of a single person having earned less than three hundred and sixty dollars in the preceding year and in the case of a married person, otherwise qualified, having earned less than seven hundred and twenty dollars in the preceding year.'

• (3:00 p.m.)

The Chairman: Perhaps for the information of the committee I may read the amendment moved by the hon. member for Simcoe East:

That subsection (1) of new section 8 of clause 3 be amended by the addition of the following proviso thereto:

"Provided that no deduction shall be made in the case of a single person having earned less than three hundred and sixty dollars in the preceding year and in the case of a married person, otherwise qualified, having earned less than seven hundred and twenty dollars in the preceding year."

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Chairman, I merely address myself to the propriety of the amendment, if that is satisfactory. I submit that this amendment is in the same category as the two amendments submitted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in that the royal resolution refers only to "provide for the determination of ... income". There is no definition whatsoever or restriction in the resolution as to the word "income". The proposed amendment does not interfere with the 40 per cent; it defines merely the income that is referred to in the royal resolution.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Go back.

Mr. Ricard: The question has not yet been put; what are you Liberals talking about?

The Chairman: Order, please. The question has not yet been put by the Chair; therefore hon. members are entitled to enter the chamber. I am now about to put the question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Amendment (Mr. Rynard) negatived: Yeas, 42; nays, 60.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I, too, indicated yesterday that I had an amendment that I wished to propose to the new Section 8, subsection (1), being enacted by clause 3 of Bill No. C-251. It is not necessary for me to restate at any length our basic position with regard to this legislation, but it does seem to me that the validity of our position has been strengthened as this debate has continued. Our position is that we welcome wholeheartedly the proposal to raise the amount available as an old age security pension in this country to $105 a month. but at the same time we feel that amount should be paid across the board. We are therefore opposed to any test of income, by whatever name it might be called, that denies to some of our senior citizens the full amount of that pension.

As the debate has continued, it has brought out the fact that the complications in connection with this program are going to be numerous. It has brought out the fact that the differences that will be established among people will be most unfair. I think that by now the Minister of National Health and Welfare should be persuaded that it would have been far better in the first place to have brought in a straight, across the board increase to $105 a month. I, therefore, rise now to give him the opportunity to consider this proposition again. It is not too late to make the kind of Christmas present to our senior citizens that would really be appreciated; and I do not have in mind the kind of celebration for Christmas that the Minister of Finance suggested out on the west coast the other night.

The new section 8 provides for a supplement to be paid on top of the $75, which for the year 1967 would be $30 and for any year after that would be 40 per cent of the amount of the old age security pension. That reference to 40 per cent in the case of years after 1967 of course takes into account the fact that the basic $75 may be increased by a maximum of $1.50 a year if the cost of living index rises by 2 per cent in each year. But the provision of this total package of $105 a month to pensioners is qualified by a test which is to be found in the first three lines on page 3 of the bill.

I think that test should be removed. Perhaps I may for a moment refer to the arguments the minister advanced when he did not like the fact we were asking that this legislation be extended and made permanent. I am sure he knew then that it was our view that not only should the legislation be made permanent but that it should be without a means test. As far as we are concerned, these two propositions go together.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in order to give the minister an opportunity once again to consider removing the test and making this $30 increase an across the board improvement in the pension, I move:

That clause 3 of Bill C-251 be amended by deleting from sub-section (1) of the new section 8 being enacted thereby, the words "minus one dollar for each two full dollars of his monthly base income, being one-twelfth of his income for the preceding year", as found in lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 3 of the bill.

So as to be clear, Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is accepted it would remove the test and make the $30 increase in 1967, and the 40 per cent of whatever the basic pension is after that, across the board without the kind of means or income test that is presently in the bill.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I want to argue this point of order—

The Chairman: I hear the committee ask for the question. Perhaps I should first ask for comments about whether or not this amendment is in order.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, this amendment is quite different from any amendment proposed to the Chair thus far. The deletion of the words "minus one dollar for each two full dollars of his monthly base income being one twelfth of his income for the preceding year" would basically change the scheme contained in the resolution. The resolution provides for partial supplements ranging from $20 to $360 a year, or ranging up to $30 per month.

The resolution reads:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act, effective with respect to months beginning with January, 1967, to provide for the payment . . . under that act of a monthly amount to be known as the guaranteed income supplement, to certain pensioners thereunder up to a maximum of 40 per cent—

I suggest that if this amendment were ruled in order it would have the effect of making $30 a month the only amount payable, and it would be payable to every pensioner in Canada.

Aside from whatever argument may be made as to the unsoundness of the hon. member's basic proposal, the resolution which carries the royal recommendation proposes a scheme which is explicitly declared in the resolution as making partial payments up to 40 per cent of the pension payable to certain pensioners. It seems to me that an amendment which makes the supplement payable to all pensioners and which removes entirely the possibility of a partial payment is certainly going beyond the scope of the resolution. It differs basically from any of the amendments proposed up to now in the committee, and I suggest it is out of order.

Mr. Knowles: When I prepared the three amendments that I have now presented to the committee I dared to hope that all three of them might be found to be in order so that as a result of our proposals we could make this the kind of plan it ought to be. As one who appreciates the rulings the Chair has given on my other two amendments I am going to have to say that, whatever you rule on this occasion, I shall be prepared to accept. I recognize the difference between this amendment and the other two. The other two related to subjects which were not mentioned in the resolution preceding the bill. In this case, what I am talking about in the amendment is referred to in the resolution. But it will be up to Your Honour to decide whether the form in which it was mentioned, namely, to provide for the determination of the income of a pensioner, is precise enough to prevent the committee from looking at this kind of provision when it is inserted in the bill.

I wish to argue that it is in order but at the same time I do not want to detract from the point that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has made, namely that the purpose of this amendment is to remove the test and make the pension automatic across the board.

I hope that Your Honour finds it in order; but if you do not we will find another opportunity to deal with the matter.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for a ruling now.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: The amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre reads as follows:

> That clause 3 of Bill C-251 be amended by deleting from subsection (1) of the new section 8 being enacted thereby, the words "minus one dollar for each two full dollars of his monthly base income, being one twelfth of his income for the preceding year", as found in lines 1, 2 and 3 on page 3 of the bill.

This amendment too has received the careful attention of the Chair, and it is the opinion of the Chair that if the amendment were adopted it would have some very far reaching effects. Indeed, one of the effects of this amendment would be to repeal the latter part of the resolution adopted by the house on December 5. It would eliminate the supplementary nature of the payments envisaged by the bill, and would substitute therefor a fixed and certain payment of 40 per cent of this pension payable to recipients under the Old Age Security Act.

The latter part of the resolution reads as follows:

> —to provide for the determination of the income of a pensioner for the purposes of such supplement and for appeals by pensioners against decisions or determinations made under that act; and to provide for other related and consequential matters.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would delete from the bill the method or formula by which the income of a pensioner is determined for the purposes of such supplementary payments. If the amendment were to carry, payments under this bill would be fixed rather than supplementary payments. As stated at page 551 of May's seventeenth edition, paragraph (13):

> Amendments or new clauses creating public charges cannot be proposed, if no money resolution or ways and means resolution has been passed, or if the amendment or clause is not covered by the terms of the resolution.

I recognize that this is the third amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I regret that on this particular occasion I will have to spoil his batting average by declaring the amendment out of order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I regret it too but I accept your decision, naturally. However, I wonder whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare would not be willing in this case to do what he did in respect of the medicare debate. When reasonable amendments were proposed from this side of the house—one in particular which he said was out of order without a royal recommendation—he got this royal recommendation and brought the amendment in himself.

I wonder, in view of the argument that has taken place, whether the minister would not now reconsider his position on this matter and bring in his own amendment to provide for the $30 increase to be without a test of any kind.

Mr. Chatterton: I have a suggestion for the minister that I sincerely want to make. I will not move an amendment. I refer to the new Section 8, with regard to amount.

The minister has said that this is a new procedure. It is a new principle almost, being accepted for the first time by way of legislation. I ask the minister to consider this.

It is well established that the older a person gets the greater his requirements become. Evidence given before the Canada Pension Plan committee showed that a person needs $3 per month extra for every year by which he exceeded the age of 70. Ample evidence was presented to the Senate committee on aging to the same effect. I suggest to the minister—he may have to bring in a new resolution—that he consider the provision of an additional sum, another $10 or 33⅓ per cent, to old age recipients arriving at the age of 70. I hope the minister will consider this.

I am sure my proposal will be accepted by all hon. members. It does not disturb the principle of this measure but adds a new principle in a manner of speaking. The existing Old Age Security Act recognizes that at a certain age a person has certain requirements. My proposal goes one step farther, recognizing that a person reaching 70 needs more than a younger recipient. I urge the minister to bring in a resolution embodying my suggestion, because I am sure it would gain support from all sides of the house.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, this is an important bill having to do with the livelihood of our senior citizens. From the very outset of the introduction of the resolution we in this party endeavoured to put forward to the government what we considered the proper treatment of our senior citizens. At the resolution stage we moved an amendment which was defeated.

Since entering the committee stage, under the able leadership of the hon. member for Simcoe East who, with others, has done a tremendous job on this bill and who has led our party in the putting forward of amendments to the bill, we have tried to move humanitarian amendments on behalf of our senior citizens. Those amendments were voted down by government members with heartless determination.

We have exhausted all arguments to try to convince the government that it should not treat our senior citizens in the callous way it is now treating them but with human feelings. Our senior citizens have built this country, contributing to it through their taxes and work. It seems that the government is adamant in its position that the bill cannot be amended. The bill has to go through as it is before parliament. In view of this, I feel there is nothing further to be done by our party and we are prepared to pass the committee stage of this bill within the next half hour.

The Chairman: Is the Committee ready to deal with new section 9?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, new clause 9, or subsection 9 of clause 3 is headed "Calculation of Income." As I understand it, this new section, which is rather complicated in its phraseology, sets out the basic principles of the matter. The minister enunciated that under this bill income is to be determined basically according to what is deemed income under the Income Tax Act. As I understand it, this new section is founded on the provision of section 10 of the Income Tax Act which says that there shall not be included in computing the income of a taxpayer for the taxation year an amount that is declared to be exempt from income tax by any other legislation of the Parliament of Canada. That, I take it, is the foundation for this proposed new section of the Old Age Security Act.

When this new section is passed it will provide, generally speaking that while the determination of income in considering eligibility for supplementary benefits will be governed by the definition of income in the Income Tax Act, nevertheless certain items that would be calculated as income under that act will not in fact be deemed income for purposes of eligibility for supplementary benefits.

The particular part of the proposal interesting me is the one set out in paragraph (a) (1), which says that income shall be computed in accordance with the Income Tax Act minus:

—the amount of any pension or supplement and the amount of any similar payment under a law of a provincial legislature—

If I understand the meaning of that paragraph correctly, its purpose is to say that some of the payments made at the present time to recipients of old age security under the provision of certain provincial laws will not be considered income.

Relating this directly to the situation in British Columbia, I understand that what is colloquially known in British Columbia as the provincial bonus, paid to some recipients of old age security of limited means, will be outside the calculation of income so far as qualifying for the federal benefit of up to $30 a month. In other words, what we are saying in this parliament is that people in British Columbia now getting $30 a month—the amount proposed in this bill—or a portion thereof do not have to have that taken away from them, they will still get the $30 provided to them.

As I understand it, if the old people in British Columbia are to continue getting the provincial bonus some action by the legislature of the province will be required. Some change in the current regulations of the province will be required.

I understand that the premier of British Columbia was asked about this the other day, and he said he had no comment to make then. Nevertheless, I would hazard a guess. It is unlikely that the $30 provincial bonus will be withdrawn from those in British Columbia currently getting it as the result of the passage of this legislation. That being so, it seems to me we must address ourselves to the fact that some people will be getting payments similar to those provided under provincial law.

As I read the section, these people will not be able to deduct, when computing their incomes, payments similar to those being received by citizens in various parts of Canada as a result of actions by provincial legislatures.

I have particularly in mind the situation of Indians and Eskimos for whom the parliament of Canada has a direct and peculiar responsibility. There was some discussion about the needs of these people earlier, and if I understood the minister correctly he indicated to the committee that some arrangement could probably be worked out whereby payments to the Indian people could be continued. However, as the matter stands, I do not see any ground on which the minister could make such a statement. The wording of this section is specific. Supplementary payments can only be exempted from income when those payments are made as a result of action by provincial legislatures. It would seem to me that the payments which have been made through the Indian affairs branch would not be exempt. This is an important consideration; in my opinion it is one which should be discussed further before the clause is carried.

As a result of discussions we have had on Indian affairs during consideration of estimates and on other occasions, I believe we are making some progress in assuring that the Indian population receives the same level of benefits, the same general services in such fields as education, health and welfare, as do other residents of the provinces in which they live. We know that arrangements are being worked out with the provinces in this respect. It would therefore be most regrettable if by this legislation we were to place these people in a category different from that in which other citizens of this country find themselves.

I find the drafting of this section complicated, as I have mentioned, but I have attempted to close what appears to be a gap in the provisions of the new section. I should like to put forward this proposal in the form of an amendment, so that we may at least consider the pros and cons. I should like to move:

That clause 3 of Bill No. C-251 be amended by adding thereto following the words "provincial legislature" in the new section 9, where they appear in line 17 thereof, the words "or of the parliament of Canada".

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I should like to press the minister more closely on a matter I raised a few days ago, that is, the arrangements which have been made with the provinces. I have not been here during the entire debate; I have been attending other committee meetings, and so on. But as far as I know the minister has made no statement on the subject of definite arrangements with the provinces apart from the first statement he made.

I have here a newspaper report from the Victoria Colonist of December 13 in which the premier of British Columbia is reported to have said that while he had been officially notified about the proposed payments increases, the situation was "still not too clear so far as Ottawa is concerned". The report added that Premier Bennett had no comment to make on the matter yet. The premier of British Columbia has thus taken the position that the information the minister has given him with regard to the arrangements for these supplementary payments is not clear, and he is not yet in a position to comment on it. For this reason, I believe the minister owes it to the committee to tell us now what arrangements have been made with the provinces with regard to the payment of this supplement?

All over this country elderly people are very worried about what will happen to the provincial supplements they are now getting, when this legislation comes into effect. People are anxiously asking us to find out just what will happen to the provincial payments; they are very worried lest these payments be discontinued. Can the minister tell us what further communications he has had with the provincial premiers, specifically with Premier Bennett? The premier is on record as having said the matter is not clear to him. Would the minister clarify the situation as far as the provincial supplement is concerned?

Mr. MacEachen: I would be happy to oblige the hon. lady and try to clarify the situation. There are two aspects of this problem. The first is: how do we treat supplementary assistance payments made by the province of British Columbia? Well, those are not reported as income for our purposes. They are excluded because they are not included in the definition of income under the Income Tax Act. So, an applicant from British Columbia receiving assistance in 1966 and applying to us would not be obliged to include that amount as income.

Therefore, the benefit being received from the province of British Columbia would not disqualify the person, or reduce in any way the benefit available from this program. Our definition of income is such that a person in receipt of that assistance supplement in British Columbia, is not disqualified.

The second point raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has to do with the amount of any pension or supplement, and the amount of any similar payment under the law of a provincial legislature or of the parliament of Canada. The effect of that amendment would be to do something which is already done under the law because we could not include the Old Age Security pension, and the supplement, as part of income. Therefore, his amendment is totally redundant in that sense.

What we are asking here, which is something different to the point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, is that if a province pays a pension like the $75 pension, how would we treat it under this program? We provide that it, or any supplement similar to our supplement, would not be treated as income for our purposes. The effect of that is to make it possible for a provincial resident to receive a benefit from a provincial government without losing any benefit under this bill.

There are two different aspects here. There is the aspect with respect to an assistance payment, which is excluded from the definition of income, and there is this direct provision which does not include as income the amount of any pension or supplement, and the amount of any similar payment under the law of a provincial legislature.

The only case in existence in Canada is the $25 payable by the government of Prince Edward Island. It is an across the board $25, above the $75, to every pensioner in Prince Edward Island. Under this provision the recipient of that pension from Prince Edward Island is not disqualified in any sense, so far as we are concerned, from receiving our supplement.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Is there anything in this legislation which will protect the income of the old age pension recipient in the provinces? Is there any bargain with the provinces whereby they will not reduce their payments by the amount provided in this supplement from the federal government?

Mr. Orlikow: I had the experience of listening to precisely the same argument while I was a member of the Manitoba legislature. The Conservative government of Manitoba in 1959 passed a social allowance act under which people in the province, whose income was less than an amount calculated by the province as needed to give a decent standard of living, were entitled to supplementary assistance from the province. This included people who got old age pensions from the federal government.

When I was a member of the legislature the federal government increased the old age pension from $55 a month to $65 a month, and every single person in the province of Manitoba who was a recipient under its social allowance act had the amount which they received from the province reduced by $10. This is precisely the point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

There is the possibility that Manitoba, British Columbia and Ontario, three provinces which I know have such plans, will take steps once the federal government pays this extra $30, or any part of it, to reduce the amount provided by the provincial plans by the $30, or whatever part of it is given to a pensioner by the federal government. I would like to know if the minister has consulted with the provinces about this point.

Mr. Pugh: Several days ago I asked precisely the same question of the minister as to whether any reduction would be made in the benefits paid by the provinces. I suggested that the minister had a duty to get in touch with the provinces to try and find out their intentions, and inform this committee of the results of his conversations. I do not know whether he did or not but I wish to ask him now, has he had any communication whatsoever with his opposite numbers in the provinces during the last two or three days? Has he asked them directly to give an assurance that there will be no reduction in provincial benefits and, if so, what reply did he receive?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I have not been in touch with the provincial ministers of welfare to seek assurances that any benefits payable in the provinces would be reduced because of this program. But that is not because of any lack of interest. It is because this is a matter within the jurisdiction of the provinces and they could properly take some offence if I said to them, "We are doing this; please tell me your program is not going to be affected."

The maximum supplement provided by the province from which my hon. friend comes is $30 a month. This benefit which we are providing will not be affected in any way by that benefit payable by the province of British Columbia. But the question arises, what will the province of British Columbia do with respect to its additional $30? Will it make the total pension $135? Will it strike a figure somewhere between that and $105? This is a matter for the province to decide. All I can say is that if any province, including British Columbia, decides that additional supplementation is required above the $105, we certainly would be very glad to co-operate under the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan and share the cost of the additional supplementation.

I think this will be a natural development in high cost areas of Canada. I believe that where pensioners need more than the guaranteed income of $105 a month under the Canada Assistance Plan, it will be provided and we will co-operate and share with the provinces in that. I hope my hon. friend will understand that the reason I have not sought the assurance is that I thought it was a matter for the province and I would have no real business to interfere.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, may I continue on this other point? I do not wish the minister to think for five seconds that I was suggesting he might lack interest, because I know full well that this is his bill; it is his baby. I am sure that he wishes to give it a good launching. I think there has been a lack of communication. Two provinces have been mentioned. I do not believe that British Columbia will cut the supplement in any shape or form, but the province of Manitoba has been mentioned. When an old age pension increase was made, there was a corresponding decrease in the supplement paid by that province.

Any legislation passed by the federal government should apply equally to each and every person under similar circumstances throughout Canada. Does the minister have any information to the effect that one province might treat its elderly and needy citizens in a different fashion? Since this is federal legislation, I believe it is most important that there be quality. I do not wish to reiterate the suggestion I made, but it seems to be a most important one; that is, that there should be equal treatment in respect of all citizens across Canada who need the benefit of the federal supplement. I do not have anything against this federal supplement. I think it is a good thing. But if in the giving of this we produce inequality in the different provinces throughout Canada, then to my mind that is wrong. This is a situation which could be prevented or cured through previous consultation with the provinces.

On many occasions, in respect of much of our legislation on various subjects, we have heard a great deal about the lack of communication with the provinces. In fact, the government has been castigated fairly severely from time to time because there had not been this prior consultation. The former Minister of National Health and Welfare started off on another plan. It had to be scrapped because immediately the premiers of the provinces said that they did not want that plan. The minister has stated that under this legislation we are not going to treat the provincial pensions as income; that is, if the people are receiving any side benefit in any province that benefit will not be treated as income under the Income Tax Act and therefore will not upset the payment of the maximum amount of $30 to each and every citizen who is entitled to it. We know that. That is all right. But, we do not know how the provinces will treat this supplement.

We do not know whether the provinces will maintain their present supplements in the form in which they are and have what you might call a reciprocal arrangement with the federal government. The provinces could say to their people that anything they receive from the federal government will not be regarded as something which would upset what they are receiving in the way of a supplement from their province. I think it is important that we know that. The situation in respect of Manitoba has been pointed out. There is a strong possibility that the supplementary old age assistance which will be paid by the federal government will have a lesser effect in respect of the citizens of Manitoba.

I feel quite confident that in the province of British Columbia there will be no diminution of the amount paid. That province is, if not ahead of every other province, certainly second to none with regard to payments. Why should the citizens of the province of British Columbia be treated in the end result any differently than the citizens of the province of Manitoba?

As I have said, the minister was delinquent in his duties. I might put it the other way around. I wish the minister would take the trouble to co-operate in this regard with the provinces. Having said that, I should like to ask the minister to reply. I think that sums up my remarks.

Mr. MacEachen: I assure my hon. friend that we will consult with the provinces in every way in respect of their programs. There is, in fact, an inequality which exists at the present time among the aged people of Canada, because some provinces make supplements available and other provinces make little if any available. The federal system is such that all will be treated exactly the same. This is the reason the bill has been written in this manner. The pensioners in every part of Canada will be in precisely the same position with relation to this legislation.

Mr. Mather: I have been listening to the minister, but I would like to be quite clear on one point. Am I right in thinking that there is nothing in the proposed legislation which in any way would prevent a province continuing its present $30 supplement to the older people?

Mr. MacEachen: That is right.

Mr. Mather: Thank you.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question and I hope he will not consider it to be a request for a legal opinion. Earlier he mentioned the word "pension" in referring to this section and suggested there is only one province in Canada, namely, the province of Prince Edward Island, which had enacted a pension. I can understand the intent to cover the situation in the province of Prince Edward Island, but I find the wording here a little puzzling in respect of how it would relate, for instance, to pensions enacted under the Municipal Superannuation Act which we have in the province of British Columbia or the British Columbia teachers pension which is set up under the law of the province of British Columbia. As this is worded, is it the intent that pensions of this type which are provided under provincial laws are not to be regarded as income?

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: I think the expression "pension" used in this respect is a payment similar to payments under the Old Age

Security Act. In other words, a pension under the Old Age Security Act is the monthly payment authorized to be paid under this act. It is different from a pension paid, for example, to a superannuated teacher.

Mr. Barnett: I am willing to accept the minister's point in that regard although I find it a bit puzzling. We now come to the phrase "any similar payment under a law of a provincial legislature". I raise this question because I have not heard the minister during the discussion this afternoon state whether he has any objection to the subject of my amendment. If the minister is prepared to support it I should be glad to hear him say so, because it might be of some guidance to other members of the house.

The minister has said nothing to clarify the position of the Indian people of Canada. As I said, these people are my main concern so far as my amendment goes. What is the position of Indian people on reserves who do not receive similar supplementary payments from the provinces? The minister gave us a long answer about the benefits people get from the provinces but what happens in respect of those people getting similar payments as a result of the actions of this parliament? As I read this part these people will be disqualified and discriminated against. The minister has not dealt with that question.

Mr. MacEachen: I have dealt with it. My hon. friend is talking about assistance payments which are not counted as income for the purpose of this program. Any assistance payment received by any person, including Indians, will not disqualify him for payments under this bill.

Mr. Barnett: Will the minister point out where this bill states that assistance payments are not regarded as income? This bill has its complexities so far as drafting is concerned, but I have not been able to discover that reference.

Mr. MacEachen: The bill refers to income for a year computed in accordance with the Income Tax Act, and that act excludes assistance payments as income.

Mr. Barnett: Can the minister tell us where the Income Tax Act states that assistance payments are excluded as income? I looked at section 10 of the Income Tax Act before drafting this amendment. I may have missed the reference. It does spell out as exclusions workmen's compensation payments, unemployment insurance benefits, certain payments under war veterans' pensions and compensation received under the regulations of section 5 of the Aeronautics Act. It also refers to the Halifax explosion and payments made by the Federal Republic of Germany.

I am not anxious to press my amendment just for the sake of pressing it but I am anxious to make sure that the superintendents of Indian Agencies across this country are not going to be put in the position of having to cut down on payments to Indian people. I want to make sure that the Indian people are to be eligible for benefits under this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that certain hon. members on the other side contain themselves while the minister peruses the act.

Mr. MacEachen: I do not wish to detain the committee, but I cannot find in my papers the exact provision which excludes assistance payments. These payments have been excluded for the purpose of the Income Tax Act. If there is any doubt whatsoever in this regard this will be spelled out in revisions to the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Knowles: Can the Minister of Finance not help you?

Mr. MacEachen: He just has, very obligingly.

Mr. Barnett: I do not wish to delay the committee. I have the 1965 consolidation of the Income Tax Act in my hand, and if it will be of any assistance to the minister I will send it across to him. It just is not good enough for the minister to say that under some vague undefined provision of the Income Tax Act this situation will be looked after. That is not the kind of answer we expect when we are being asked to deal with legislative proposals in this house.

Mr. MacEachen: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would listen for one moment and be reassured that, by practice under the Income Tax Act, in respect of the Indian population, with whom he is so greatly concerned, assistance payments have never been included as income for the purposes of that act. If my hon. friend regards that practice as being inadequate for his purposes let me give him my assurance that this exclusion will be spelled out in the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, so that we have this clear let me say that I know income of Indian people derived from their reserves is not regarded as income under the Income Tax Act. What I am talking about are supplementary payments which are equivalent to payments made under provincial laws. Are those people who are receiving the old age security pension under the existing act eligible for the benefits of this provision provided they meet the other qualifications? I am not talking now about someone who may have outside income. Are these people going to get the $30 per month in addition to what they now receive in the way of assistance payments from the Indian affairs branch? The minister has not dealt with that question.

Mr. MacEachen: This is the third occasion this question has been raised. I dealt with it on each occasion, but I will be glad to do so again. The fact of the matter is that the number of payments or supplementations paid to Indian pensioners is very small. The great majority of Indian pensioners will be much better off because of this provision in this bill. We believe that in most cases Indian pensioners will be better off because of this supplement which will bring their incomes up to $105 per month. If their requirements are in excess of this supplementary payment, further assistance will be made available in accordance with the practice in the provinces.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I listened to the minister say exactly the same thing the other day. As far as I am concerned, he is saying that in no case is an Indian living on a reserve in the province of British Columbia going to receive more than $105 a month, whereas other citizens in the province of British Columbia, if the provincial government decides to take action, will receive up to a maximum of $135 a month. I may be wrong about this and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is in the chamber and can correct me if I am wrong, but my understanding is that there is already in effect or in process of negotiation an arrangement whereby the Indian people in British Columbia living on reserves will receive the same amount as other citizens of the province or as Indians who live off the reserves in respect of what are described here as similar payments, in other words, the supplement, welfare payments and the like.

The minister has just finished saying that Indians across Canada who are receiving old age security are now getting very little, if anything, more than the basic old age security. This is something some of us have realized for a long time, and we have not been very happy about the situation. The minister has said in effect that when this bill comes into effect these little bits of payments they are now getting, which do not amount to much, will be withdrawn because they will be receiving the $30. The minister still has not shown us that there is any provision in the law to take care of this situation, as is done by the amendment I have proposed which would put people receiving those kinds of payment under legislation of the federal parliament in exactly the same position as people receiving them under provincial law.

Mr. MacEachen: The payments which Indians may be receiving from the department cannot be considered as a pension or a supplement under the terms of this particular clause. This is the point I am making. They are not a pension or a supplement. I have said that the provision of this supplement will improve the income situation of the great majority of Indian pensioners. There is no doubt about that. They will be better off. If in any province additional support is required, it will be made available in accordance with the practice that is followed by the department. This is really the point.

Mr. Barnett: The practices followed by the department in the administration of Indian Affairs are fairly hard to define. I might point out to the minister that I could make an argument that his department is illegally administering a program of health services for the Indian people, that there are no rules or regulations governing this sort of thing, that as far as I have been able to find out there has never been any transfer of duties under the Transfer Of Duties Act to give the minister that authority. But I am not suggesting he stop making these payments.

What is the meaning of the phrase "of any similar payment"? I took it to mean that, whether it was called a provincial bonus, mother's allowance or social welfare under provincial law, these amounts would not be regarded as income for the purpose of computing eligibility under this act.

Mr. MacEachen: "Pension" is defined in the Old Age Security Act and the expression "supplement" is defined in this particular bill. The words in the clause are:

(1) the amount of any pension or supplement and the amount of any similar payment under a law of a provincial legislature,—

This has to do with a pension or supplement, not welfare payments. The hon. gentleman is talking about Indians receiving welfare payments. This is not a welfare payment.

Mr. Barnett: We could debate that point, Mr. Chairman, and also whether what some people in British Columbia call "Bennett's bonus" is a welfare payment. I have never been able to see any distinction between the two. I am not trying to be obstinate. Does the minister see any harm in agreeing to this amendment, in case some of these vague sections in the Income Tax Act which he has not been able to find do not apply?

Mr. MacEachen: We are talking about a pension or a supplement, which are defined in the Old Age Security Act and the amending act. The amount of any pension or supplement and the amount of any similar payment under a law of a provincial legislature and the parliament of Canada, which refers to the pension or supplement, is by virtue of new section 9 (a) (i) exempted from income. In other words, it really repeats what is already done in the section. This is the only point I have to make. What the hon. gentleman is seeking is already accomplished. This is the only reason I do not accept his amendment.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the minister keeps giving us his assurances that things are going to be all right. He has given us the assurance that it will be a very simple matter to apply for this supplement. I was reminded of this a moment ago when he read about eight or ten words from the new section 9 which we are now discussing. The minister read the words, "is his income for that year computed in accordance with the Income Tax Act". I draw his attention to the fact that those few words are taken out of a section which is 27 lines long, has in it 181 words and comprises one sentence. I suggest that probably a good many members of the house have not yet read the whole sentence.

Despite the minister's assurances, I am afraid that when supplement applicants are presented with an application form based on this definition of "income" they will have to go to a lawyer, their member of parliament, or what have you. The minister shakes his head. Let us have that on the record. He says it will be a simple form. I cannot see how a form that carries out the lengthy definition of "income" in the new section 9, or the estimate of "income" in the new section 10, plus the special provisions for married applicants in the new section 11, can be anything but a very complicated document that will confound applicants. I regret very much that the minister has not seen fit to let us have a copy of the form that people will have to use for this purpose.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would help us by telling us how a pensioner is going to fill in this simple form. If the pensioner rents a room or two, will he be able to deduct from the income derived therefrom a percentage for depreciation, a percentage for heat, light and insurance? Are these things going to be set out in the simple form that the minister hopes to present to the pensioners? Second, if a person derives income from a mortgage under which payments are made in respect of principal and interest, will the government help the old age pensioner determine what is principal and what is interest? Third, if the old age pensioner has a boarder who pays his room and board, what allowance is made for the cost of the food and all the other aspects of depreciation of effects? Would the minister assist me on this?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, there is an effort to complicate this procedure beyond all reason. The hon. member knows that most citizens in Canada, including old age pensioners, fill out income tax forms. There has never been any indication that filling out an income tax form was beyond the intelligence of most Canadians. If people do run into difficulties they can get help from friends, neighbours, relatives, sons and daughters.

The income tax form itself is a familiar document and is filled out by the majority of the population in Canada. The form that we are proposing is simpler in nature than any income tax form—in my view much simpler. The hon. member has raised very technical questions, but the pensioners is in no different category from anybody else who fills out income tax forms. If they do need assistance it is available either from the income tax department or from district pensions offices. So let us take the view that for the great bulk of the old age pensioners it will be a relatively simple operation.

Even though the pensioners in my riding are not part of any urban group I know they can take steps to obtain help if needed in filling out these forms. But if the old age pensioners do encounter technical questions of the nature raised by the hon. gentleman, they would undoubtedly seek assistance.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I am rising on a question of privilege. I think it is opportune to do so now because it is the first opportunity I have had. I have learned something within the last few minutes which I feel compelled to raise at this time.

Yesterday the Minister of Transport resorted to shabby trickery when he put forward a motion at a time when it was understood among the house leaders that this would not be done. As a result we wasted more than three hours, which could have been fruitful hours spent considering this bill.

Last night we passed clauses 1 and 2 and today we have been putting forward some amendments, without success. Approximately an hour ago I rose from my seat and stated in effect that, having exhausted our efforts to convince the government it should take a more humanitarian view toward our elderly citizens, and it being evident that the government was adamant in its position, we were prepared to pass the balance of the clauses in this bill within the next half hour. Of course, the N.D.P. members have had points to make, for which I do not blame them.

It has been brought to my attention, Mr. Chairman—and this grieves me more than anything else—that the government house leader has made a statement over the radio and in the press to the effect that the opposition is indulging in a filibuster and making threats with regard to the Christmas recess if certain things were not done. I have always trusted people with whom I have dealt and I like them to be frank. If they have anything to say to me they should say it to my face instead of using the press as a battering ram, a means of communication for putting forward statements that are not entirely true. That is my question of privilege.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I have neither heard the statement nor read it, but I should advise the house that this morning when I came to the house I went to the hon. member's office and was unable to find him there. I telephoned him at his hotel and asked him to come up to the house because I wanted to discuss the rule change proposals I had. I spent a considerable time, about an hour or so, before eleven o'clock talking to him.

I came directly to the House of Commons and the hon. member saw me here. I left the house for a very brief time over the noon hour, had my lunch privately in my room with a man who, I can assure hon. members, was in no way associated with the press. At the conclusion of that I returned to the house and then, left for a very brief interview with the mayor of one of the local municipalities, whom I was very glad to meet. Having talked with him I came back into the House of Commons. I have not seen any newspapermen today nor talked on the telephone with any newspapermen or communications men. I have had no contact with anybody in the television, radio or newspaper world today.

I simply do not know what the hon. member is talking about. I do not wish to discuss what I think about the conduct of the hon. member's party at times, but I certainly have had no occasion to say what I think about its conduct within the recent past and I do not think it would be germane to do so at the moment. I am a little surprised at some of the things said in the house earlier today by their leader, but they may have been due to lack of communication. But in any event I have done or said nothing to warrant any requirement to apologize or anything else.

Mr. Starr: Then, Mr. Chairman, on my question of privilege—

Mr. Choquette: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Starr: I am speaking to a question of privilege.

Mr. Chairman, I have just heard the house leader tell the committee what he has done today, but in order to put the record straight I point out that the story in today's Ottawa Journal by the Canadian Press is as follows:

> M.P.'s may have talked themselves out of a big chunk of their Christmas vacation.
> Government house leader George McIlraith said in an interview Thursday night there's been so much debate on the government's guaranteed income measure that the Commons may have to delay the start of its proposed 11-day vacation by one day.
> It also might have to come back a few days earlier, he said.
> Mr. McIlraith accused the opposition parties of conducting a filibuster against the guaranteed income legislation which would add as much as $30 monthly to needy old age pensioners.

The minister did not mention in his interview the shabby trickery of the Minister of Transport in this house yesterday in introducing his motion. If the minister was going to give interviews, instead of undermining the trust amongst the house leaders he should have told the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

Mr. McIlraith: I did state the whole truth. Last night I came into this house and found the most obvious filibuster going on that one could imagine.

Mr. Starr: Based on the shabby trickery of—

Mr. McIlraith: Hear me out; I have been courteous to the hon. member. When I found this out I may have said last night that what was at issue—

Mr. Starr: May have? You did.

Mr. McIlraith: I may have said that in view of the progress with legislation in the house we might have to curtail our prospective recess. As I said, Mr. Chairman, I have not seen the press statement, but if that is what is in the article it is perfectly accurate and I would have said it to anybody. When I found this filibuster in progress I immediately and as quickly as I could—

Mr. Starr: You are not telling the truth.

Mr. McIlraith: —took appropriate steps, or what I thought were appropriate steps, to correct the situation. I moved very swiftly, firmly and directly into the situation.

Mr. Starr: Because you knew you had done wrong.

Mr. McIlraith: Furthermore, when the hon. member speaks of telling the truth perhaps he will tell his colleagues in the official opposition what I said about my attempt to get an appropriate recess settled. Perhaps he will report to his colleagues, as he obviously has not reported to his seatmate, on some other subjects that we were dealing with.

Mr. Churchill: You are using the club.

Mr. McIlraith: I do not wish to be accused of not telling the truth, because in dealing with matters I find the only way one can carry on is to tell the truth, if for no other reason. There are other reasons for telling the truth but that is a good one. I did not expect in any way a charge from the hon. gentleman. I have not in any way undermined him. I have the right to express a view of his party's conduct, and I should think that he would apologize to the house for his lack of communication. In any event, I will not press that. I hope the house is fully satisfied with the explanation. I hope we can get on with the urgent business now before the house.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Starr: Sit down. I have made my point.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

The Deputy Chairman: Having heard arguments from both sides of the house, let me bring to the attention of members of the committee article 41A of our standing orders which says:

> Unless notice of motion has been given under standing order 41, any member proposing to raise a question of privilege other than one arising out of proceedings in the chamber during the course of a sitting shall give to the Speaker a written statement of the question at least one hour prior to raising the question in the house.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, may I very gently draw to the attention of the committee the point that we have before us an amendment, and my understanding of the rules is that we must observe relevancy in discussing amendments before the house.

Amendment (Mr. Barnett) negatived: Yeas, 31; nays, 48.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Knowles: Before we leave new section 9 will the minister explain the last part starting at line 31 with the word "minus" and continuing for five more lines?

Mr. MacEachen: "Minus . . . where the spouse of that person"—

Mr. Knowles: That is it.

Mr. MacEachen: In calculating the supplement payable to a married person the idea is to take into account the combined income of a married couple. This part provides for the case where a married pensioner has an unmarried spouse—

Mr. Knowles: An unmarried spouse?

Mr. MacEachen: I beg your pardon. A non-pensioned spouse.

Mr. Knowles: What does this provide, Mr. Chairman? This is interesting.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let us keep sex out.

Mr. MacEachen: Let me start again. This provides for an old age pensioner with a spouse who is not an old age pensioner. In collecting the supplement the combined income of the couple is taken into account. In the case of calculating the supplement in this particular situation $900 of the non-old age security income is sort of put to one side to take into account the non-pensioned spouse. By taking that out of the income and putting it to one side you of course increase the supplement payable to the pensioner, which otherwise you would not do. This is basically the way it works.

Take, for example, a pensioner who has other income—forget his pension—of say $100 a month, and the non-pensioned spouse has no income. The combined income is $1,200 and in order to calculate the supplement, the pensioner who has applied will divide that $1,200 in two. You therefore have $600 and you substract $450, which is six times the amount of the pension that may be paid to a pensioner for any month in that year. The remaining income on which the supplement is paid is $150. The effect of the operation of this part is to put to one side half of the income of the spouse in receipt of the pension.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that an example of how simple this bill is? It would take a Philadelphia lawyer to understand it.

Mr. Knowles: There may be members in the house who can understand it, but how will the minister make this clear to the married pensioner with a non-pensioned spouse seeking to fill out the form?

Mr. MacEachen: We hope that we shall make it clear to pensioners by means of examples. I admit that when you read this legal sentence it is quite baffling. It was to me. Perhaps it is not to the hon. member for York South or other legal personalities.

An hon. Member: He would make it twice as long.

Mr. MacEachen: It is really a way of providing a higher supplement in the case of a pensioner who has a spouse not on pension. I thought that to have that additional benefit it would be worth having the four complicated legal sentences in here. I took that risk hoping that the benefit to pensioners would outweigh the criticism I would get for this complex paragraph.

The Deputy Chairman: Does this terminate consideration of new section 9 of clause 3?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall new section 10 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall new section 11 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall new section 12 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall new section 13 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall new section 14 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall new section 15 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall new section 16 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Shall new section 17 carry?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, would the minister tell us what precedents there are for this digression from the general rule under the Income Tax Act? This seems to be a section which makes it possible for the Minister of National Revenue to give information to the Minister of National Health and Welfare obtained from the income tax returns of individuals. We had a long dissertation this morning from the Minister of Finance about the sacredness of income tax returns. Perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare would tell us whether there is any precedent for what is proposed in this section?

Mr. MacEachen: I do not know of any precedents. I have not checked but I am not aware of any precedents. Nor can I say there are no precedents.

Mr. Knowles: Should we not take a moment to consider this question even at the risk of being accused of filibustering? If we are for the first time making it possible for information obtained by the Department of National Revenue to be communicated to another department, should there not at least be some defence or some justification of this innovation?

As we have pointed out, the minister has not yet convinced us that this process is a simple one. He has not really convinced us that there is not a means test in operation here. I do not wish to borrow the word

"snooper" which the Leader of the Opposition used, but is this not what is implied by the provisions of this section? Even apart from my own use of the words "means test" and the use of the word "snooper" by the Leader of the Opposition, should we not have a clear statement about this departure from the established practice under the Income Tax Act?

Mr. MacEachen: I think I have covered this point already. All we are providing here is that the Minister of National Revenue may, upon the request of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, furnish information on the income or source of income of an applicant or beneficiary. This is information about income, and the purpose of this provision is to provide some means of checking the information provided in the statement of an applicant. All this has been made clear to the committee from the beginning of our discussions when I pointed out this would be the only check available to us for this purpose.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am astonished by the minister's explanation, because it is not very long ago that the Minister of Finance stood in his place and raised his hands in horror at the thought that any hon. member would ask him to contravene the Income Tax Act by revealing information about skulduggery in the financial world, information which, had it been revealed, might have prevented many people from losing money. But it is now proposed to set aside this provision of the Income Tax Act in order to snoop on old age pensioners. I should like to see the two ministers get together, because the Minister of Finance was extremely self-righteous about this very point earlier today.

Mr. Sharp: This legislation, as I understand it, is authorizing the Minister of National Health and Welfare to obtain information from the Department of National Revenue for a specific purpose. Parliament is being asked to give its approval to that procedure. As far as I know, parliament has not approved any procedure which would enable the tax returns of individuals to be revealed to anybody else. If parliament feels this proposal is unreasonable, it can turn it down. As far as I am concerned, I do not have access to income tax returns, and the Minister of National Revenue has no authority from parliament to reveal any information on individual taxation matters to me or to anyone else.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As I recall the minister's remarks, he was objecting not only on legal grounds but as a matter of high principle, and was surprised that any hon. member would suggest that he or anyone else might seek information which is confidential to the income tax branch. Yet apparently he can accept with equanimity the proposal which is contained in this new section.

Mr. Sharp: If parliament authorizes the necessary statute, it can give the Minister of National Revenue the right to show income tax returns to anyone he wishes, and I would have no protest to make. But he does not have that authority. Parliament is now being asked to authorize a provision which will allow tax information to be communicated for certain purposes, or for a specific purpose, and if approval is given, the situation would be altered accordingly.

Mr. Lewis: The obvious answer to the Minister of Finance is to say that when he first found out about this skulduggery he could have done precisely what the Minister of National Health and Welfare has now done. He could have come before parliament and asked for exemption from the secrecy provision which attaches to information in the Department of National Revenue in order to get at the people concerned and put an end to these depredations.

I also wish to point out to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that he has not told us the full extent of the power which is made available in this new section. The section says, in fact:

> —the Minister of National Revenue or any person designated by him for the purpose may, upon the request of the minister, furnish to the minister or any officer or employee in the Department of National Health and Welfare—

Information and so on. This seems to amount to snooping of the worst kind. It means that any employee engaged in this field can go and ask for this information without even asking his minister to authorize him to do so. It seems to me that this is entirely reprehensible.

Mr. MacEachen: A few minutes ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked whether there was any precedent for this action and I said I was not aware of any precedent. I have now to advise him that there is a precedent under the Canada Pension Plan legislation. The authority given there is considerably wider than is sought here.

Mr. Lewis: Is there the same provision that any officer or employee may have access to the information?

Mr. Knowles: There is a difference between the Canada Pension Plan and this piece of legislation. The Canada Pension Plan is based upon contributions and an individual account for every pensioner. That is not the case here. It strikes me that the example given by the minister is not sufficient precedent for the action now proposed. In view of the statement made by the Minister of Finance earlier today, I feel it is not good enough to assume that parliament will now agree to this proposal. I therefore move:

That clause 3 of Bill No. C-251 be amended by deleting paragraph (a) from subsection (3) of the new section 17 being enacted thereby.

It starts at the bottom of page 9 and concludes at the top of page 10. I have only one copy of the amendment because I have just drafted it within the last minute or two.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman satisfied that the bill would make sense with this amendment?

Mr. Knowles: It does not destroy the rest of the section. It still leaves section 3 with another part, and the law officers of the crown have the authority to do any repunctuating that is necessary. The effect of this amendment is to strike out lines 41 to 49 on page 9 and the first five lines on page 10 of the bill, and I suggest it has no effect on anything that was set out in the resolution preceding the bill.

The Deputy Chairman: For the information of the committee I will read the amendment. It is moved by Mr. Knowles that clause 3 of Bill C-251 be amended by deleting paragraph (a) from subsection (3) of the new section 17 being enacted thereby.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be wrong to proceed further without pointing out that parliament is not being asked to take an unusual action in approving this particular section. As a matter of fact, the authority granted by parliament under the Canada Pension Plan is much wider than the authority sought in this bill, because it provides that notwithstanding any other act or law, any information obtained by an officer, clerk or employee of the Department of National Revenue, the Department of Finance and the Unemployment Insurance Commission "for the purposes of the administration of this act may be communicated by him to an officer, clerk or employee of the Department of National Health and Welfare". Therefore there is a system in vogue by which the Department of National Revenue can make information available to the Department of National Health and Welfare. We are asking for this authority with respect to certain items affecting the income of persons, and the whole concept we are attempting to build up would be destroyed if this amendment were accepted. I ask the committee to reject the amendment.

Mr. Barnett: If the minister would reread that section of the Canada Pension Plan Act which he has just read, it should be apparent to him that far from being much wider than what is proposed here it is a very narrow and specific provision. I have not got the text in front of me but I think he will find it is restricted to contributions with respect to the Canada Pension Plan.

But this new section in this bill opens up the whole field of income and the sources of income of an applicant, and I submit this is a very different thing from the provision which the house agreed to with respect to the administration of the Canada Pension Plan. At that time we agreed that for the purposes of economy of administration officers of the Department of National Revenue could transmit the appropriate information with respect to contributions made by individuals to the other department which was going to handle the payment of pensions under the Canada Pension Plan. My understanding is that it was a very narrow and very specific provision for the obtaining of information from the Department of National Revenue and that it did not include anything of the kind that is proposed in the new subsection, which reads in part as follows:

—relating to the income or income from a particular source or sources of an applicant or beneficiary or the spouse of such applicant or beneficiary or otherwise relating to any such applicant, beneficiary or spouse—

The whole question of income and all the factors relating to it are opened up for inspection under this proposal, and I submit the minister is completely in error when he tries to say that the Canada Pension Plan provisions are wider than the implications of what is being proposed here.

Old Age Security Act Amendment

Mr. McCleave: If we adopt what is proposed in this legislation we will be incorporating in it a nuclear bomb to drop on a very few malefactors, and that seems an excessive approach. If somebody is going to set out to defraud the taxpayers a check could be made in other ways. Perhaps neighbours would tell on him, or these 400 or 500 civil servants who are going to be hired to administer the plan would find out. This is a very far-reaching weapon to catch a limited number of people, and for this reason I support the amendment to delete it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, will the minister reconsider this matter? On the face of it the amendment seems like a reasonable one. We do not want to establish a "snoopocracy" in this country, but that is what is going to happen under this new section.

Today we had an unusual answer given by the Minister of Finance when he spoke in such pious terms of the sanctity of the information that could be furnished or secured. He garbed himself in the clothes of legal righteousness and said, "I would never allow a thing like this to happen." Thousands of people are going to be defrauded. That is what has happened. Millions and millions of dollars are lost to Canadians, and the minister said, "Oh, we cannot do anything about that." The minister had information in the month of January. He did not ask parliament then for a release in respect of information that was available and which would have prevented or at least alleviated a gross fraud on thousands of Canadians with small incomes. These people trusted, and now they are going to suffer. The government has taken the attitude that it cannot or will not do anything.

If there is to be one law applicable to those who are powerful, let there be the same treatment for the average Canadian of 69 years and over who makes an application for this extra supplement. Certainly this reveals that the whole proposition is one of a means test. Why, in respect of Canadians who are poor and needy, does the government place itself in the position of securing information to be used against these people when at the same time it shows, as did the Minister of Finance today, such an unusual solicitude for the powerful who defraud? An amendment such as this would have covered the situation in respect of the frauds that have been committed by those connected with the insurance company to which reference was made earlier today.

[Mr. Barnett.]

I say to the minister that the section he referred to in the earlier act is not as comprehensive and as wide as the power sought here. I do not have the section before me, but the hon. gentleman who preceded me said it is much less ample than the one that is going to be applied to the old people of our nation. I can only say that as I listened to him I came to the same conclusion. In this case there is amplification to a degree which cannot be justified. This section, on the face of it, would seem to indicate that the government is fearful that it is going to be terribly defrauded by a few who may endeavour to take advantage of the situation. Do not let us pass an omnibus section like this in order to check on the poor and the needy while at the same time those who are powerful financially will remain immune under the protection they already have.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, lest these remarks of the Leader of the Opposition should be taken too seriously—

Mr. Diefenbaker: They are very serious and should be taken seriously.

Mr. Sharp: —I should like to make some comment to show the sheer hypocrisy of the view he has taken—

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Sharp: —and to suggest that he does so entirely for purposes which he seems to have in mind—

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Sharp: —and because of his desire to put the administration—

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman is an authority on hypocrisy after his exposition today.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I hope I will be permitted to make a few remarks. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition has suggested that in some way the federal government interfered with the prosecution—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Failed to act.

Mr. Sharp: —of people who had defrauded the public.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Failed to act.

Mr. Sharp: There was nothing in what I said this morning which could lead to this conclusion. What I said then I will repeat now. As I said, I confirmed that Mr. Gruber had been in touch earlier in the year with the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Insurance. I do not know about the department which is concerned with bankruptcy, because this is not within my purview. Just the other day I learned about this approach by Mr. Gruber. I inquired about it. I discovered that so far as the Department of Insurance is concerned the officials there had acted with all due diligence to protect the interests of that insurance company which is under the supervision of the federal government. So far as the Department of National Revenue is concerned the question was, should the officials who received the information pass on information about taxpayers' interests to the public at large?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Or to the government of Ontario.

Mr. Sharp: On that occasion, as I have said, they did not, and of course they were acting in accordance with the law. In this regard I think they should have the support of the right hon. gentleman rather than his condemnation. I should like to add something which the Leader of the Opposition has conveniently overlooked, and I am surprised about that because he has asked a number of questions to which I have given the same answer. In respect of the responsibility of the Ontario government, Mr. Gruber gave the same information to the Ontario government that he gave to the officials of the federal government. Therefore I did not feel we had any responsibility to pass it on.

Mr. Diefenbaker: To the provincial government?

Mr. Sharp: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How did you know that Mr. Gruber did that?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Gruber was in touch with my office just two or three days ago and he told me, in the course of the information which he dictated to my secretary, that he had passed this along. I asked the Superintendent of Insurance about this and he told me that Mr. Gruber had told him the same thing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, Mr. Chairman, would the minister answer this question? If he only found out within the last few days that Mr. Gruber had passed this information on to the provincial government, why did he not pass it on to the provincial government between January and November?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Gruber passed it along at the same time that he passed it on to the federal government. We did not feel we had any responsibility to pass on the information which Mr. Gruber himself had said he passed on to the Ontario government. I again hesitate to criticize the Ontario government's administration, but the right hon. gentleman has forced me to do so on five or six occasions already and I regret having to do it again.

An hon Member: Where do you live?

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chairman is in some doubt concerning the relationship of what is being discussed now to new section 17.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, and with great respect to you, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance without talking about any part of the bill, had the permission of the Chair to make a statement in answer to certain allegations made by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition in the course of a speech when he was referring to a certain clause in the bill.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Lewis: With great respect to you, sir, the Minister of Finance ought not to get away with such a statement as he has made, which in my view contains a number of unacceptable propositions, without an opportunity—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lewis: —being given to someone else to say something about those propositions. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I should like to have that opportunity.

The Chairman: Order, please. I have recognized that some of the remarks made by the Minister of Finance were out of order. I believe a continuation of this argument, which has no relationship to new section 17, is also out of order. I would ask hon. members to confine their remarks to new section 17 of clause 3 and the amendment thereto.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on the amendment which is before the committee. I should like to say that it seems to me no case has been made out which would permit this intrusion into the secret information in the Department of National Revenue by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or by officials and employees of his department whom he may appoint. I say that on this day we ought not to agree to this in view of what the Minister of Finance said earlier and in view of what he also said a few moments ago. Whether or not his department has any responsibility going beyond the particular corporate entity known as the North American General Insurance Company, he has the responsibility in my submission, with all the emphasis I can give, to look after the interests of the people of Canada. Even though he may have known that the authorities in Toronto were given the same information he had, surely he had a responsibility to make sure (a) whether or not that information was given to them, (b) whether the same information was given to them and, (c) whether they were doing anything about the information which was given to them. He should not hide under the narrow umbrella he has now built for himself.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Lewis: Hon. gentlemen opposite who are crying "order" had a duty to shout "order" when the Minister of Finance spoke. This clearly is another example—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: Order, please. I think the hon. member for York South realizes that I have some doubt whether the remarks he is making are in relation to new section 17 and the amendment thereto. I respectfully solicit the co-operation of the hon. member in getting along with the consideration of the actual amendment which is before the committee.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I am sure you had the doubt which you have expressed while the Minister of Finance was speaking but you expressed it after he spoke. With great respect, I would ask that you extend to me the same generosity. Let me say to those hon. members opposite, who did not interrupt at all when the Minister of Finance spoke entirely without relation to the bill, that they are showing their unprincipled partisanship.

The Minister of Finance has made it very clear that the only time he is prepared to hide behind the cloak of secrecy in the Department of National Revenue is when a corporation is concerned even though it is to the detriment of the Canadian people. I suggest that the committee should not pass this clause and that it should be deleted from the bill. We should not permit snooping into the affairs of old people in receipt of pensions. If you are going to treat corporations one way the least you can do is treat the aged people of this country in the same way, leaving them that privacy which the minister has insisted should be left so far as insurance companies are concerned.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Churchill: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Peters: It is five o'clock, Mr. Chairman. There is some doubt about the private members' hour today, but in view of the fact we have not had an announcement regarding the air traffic control dispute the regular order of business should take precedence.

The Chairman: I do not know whether I have interpreted the order made by this house this morning correctly, but it was my understanding that the house was to sit from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. and from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m., and that private members' hour was suspended.

Mr. Knowles: There does seem to be some misunderstanding, but in view of the fact that the Prime Minister is in the house and the press gallery is full—I imagine because an announcement is to be made—perhaps we should rise and report progress so the announcement can be made.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, would you read the complete motion and the amendment, both of which were adopted this day?

The Chairman: The motion passed this morning reads as follows:

> That, notwithstanding the provisions of any standing order to the contrary, on Friday, December 16, 1966, the hours of sitting shall be from 11:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., and from 7:00 p.m. until 10:00 p.m., that the hour for the consideration of private members' business in the said sitting shall be suspended, and that, on Saturday, December 17, 1966, the house shall meet at 11:00 a.m. and sit without interruption until 6:00 p.m., and that the order of business and procedure for the said sitting shall be as for a Friday except that there shall be no private members' hour.

The amendment thereto, which was also agreed to, reads as follows:

> —and that the only order of business considered during the extended sitting shall be the measure to consider the continuation of air traffic control services.

It appears to the Chair that the amendment relates to the extended sittings, so that the order of business to be considered during the extended sitting should be taken up at seven o'clock.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, would you not take the view that because of the suspension of the private members' hour that hour becomes part of the extended sitting?

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Churchill: You must read the motion and the amendment as a whole.

The Chairman: While I do not propose to answer questions, perhaps I should say to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that what I have said is my interpretation of the order passed by the house this morning. I have given this matter a good deal of consideration during the last hour or so. It is my belief that the house suspended the private members' hour this morning and that the amendment regarding the extended hours refers to a particular type of business which can be considered during those extended hours. It is my belief that the extended hours of sitting will begin at seven o'clock.

Mr. Churchill: I take it we are now considering new section 17 of clause 3. When I spoke on this bill two or three days ago I drew attention to this new section and I pointed out that there were nine areas in which the Minister of National Health and Welfare could undertake extra investigation to determine the incomes of applicants for this supplementary pension. He said I was misinterpreting this provision. Nevertheless it was at that stage I said he was going to have snoopers looking into the incomes of old age pensioners.

Now that we are down to a detailed study of new section 17 we find that I was right in my suggestion, that this snooping process is going to take place in an area which heretofore has been considered sacrosanct. This morning the Minister of Finance indicated that income tax forms do fall into this category. It has always been our understanding that no one could look at an income tax form unless there was a special order to do so. A special arrangement is now being made in respect of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

I understood the minister to say that if the house passes this measure authority will be given to investigate income tax forms. For this reason we should resist such action to the greatest extent possible. This is an indirect way of destroying the confidentiality on which people have relied up to this time. The seriousness of this move is now apparent to hon. members. We should support the amendment and we should do everything in our power to prevent this change in the law. I believe that the suggested change in the law should have been resisted by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue. These two people who are responsible for the finances of this country should be the first to object to snoopers in their departments looking at forms which contain confidential information. Alternatively, if snoopers are to be allowed to look at income tax forms filed by pensioners they should be allowed to look at forms filed by companies or corporations.

It is my belief there will be a storm of criticism in this country when the public become aware that the door is being opened to this extent. I doubt that anyone wants his income tax form examined by a casual observer. There are two inherent dangers in this situation. We are putting the stamp of approval on snoopers and we are invading the privacy of the individual. We will be destroying the confidentiality of income tax returns. Let the Minister of Finance tell us whether he thinks this is not a bad move. I believe it is because people will say that the act which amended the Old Age Security Act made it possible for snoopers to investigate income tax returns. They will believe that no serious objection was taken, although the fact is that our objections are always brushed aside. They will believe that this having been done it can be done in the future in respect of other acts. They will believe that we have given approval to this type of investigation.

In some other bill brought forward in the future we will find a similar provision. Other people will be given the privilege of investigating income tax returns and the whole matter will then be wide open. The time to stop is when the first break appears in the dyke. This is when the hole should be plugged. We would lack diligence in the performance of our duty if we permitted such a provision to go through at any time. This involves more than simply protesting. The whole proposal must be resisted to the very limit. I add my words of objection to this particular section and I will support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman—

Settlement of Air Traffic Control Dispute

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might, with the consent of the committee, suggest that we rise, report progress and revert to motions so I might make a statement?

Mr. Knowles: That is what I suggested ten minutes ago.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder why all this is necessary, since the Prime Minister just said that the house would be very disappointed that a settlement had been reached.

An hon. Member: Sit down, smarty.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF WITHDRAWAL OF STRIKE DEADLINE

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, during the past 24 hours we have been meeting almost continuously with representatives of the three organizations representing the air traffic controllers. We have reached a position where these representatives have agreed upon terms with the government that they are willing to recommend to their membership. They have also undertaken to withdraw the strike deadline for Tuesday next.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a question of privilege and say that I inadvertently misinformed the house the other day when I said, on the basis of what I thought was accurate information that had been given to me, that the three organizations concerned had been consulted about the terms of reference. I had a telegram this morning from Mr. Barnes, the executive director of the professional institute, saying that his organization had not been consulted and that I had misinformed the house. I regret this very much and I felt it my duty to make this information public.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the house that we return to the business interrupted by the announcement of the Minister of National Revenue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION OF GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENTS AND DETERMINATION OF PENSIONERS' INCOMES

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-251, to amend the Old Age Security Act—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-251, to amend the Old Age Security Act. The committee is now considering new section 17 of clause 3 and an amendment thereto.

On clause 3—

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few observations on this matter. I intend to support the amendment. I can do so with consistency because at the time a proposal of a similar nature to that which the government now advances was raised in connection with the Canada Pension Plan I opposed it.

When we examine the type of legislation being introduced by governments now, and this government in particular, with regard to matters of this kind—this was the case with the Canada Pension Plan—we find that all too often the principle governing the immemorial right of a person who may be charged with any offence, namely, to be convicted only as and when evidence is produced by the crown to establish his guilt, is being altered. There is in this proposal which the government advances, as in other cases, the suggestion that evidence can be obtained from other sources, government documents and government records, on the basis of which people can be convicted by statements which they themselves have made and which were made on the basis that they were privileged and not subject to inspection.

I think the amendment is one that should be supported. I believe there should be no doubt, having in mind the provisions of the section which provides for the establishment of offences and punishments, that the committee should support the amendment. In view of the remarks that have been made, this section should not be allowed to pass in its present form. Surely the onus lies upon the government to justify their attempt to establish this extraordinary power. They do not successfully discharge that onus merely by saying, "We did it once before". I do not care whether this government or any government did it before. It is an extraordinary remedy that they are asking the house to approve, and far more effective and compelling reasons must be given before the committee should pass it. I for one intend to support the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I should like to see hon. members in all parts of the house examine this section. This is an extraordinary power that is being sought. It is over and above anything that has been given before, and I am aware of the amendment that the house passed on another occasion. We are here being asked to give approval to mass snooping into the affairs of Canadians. This is a section that I would have thought the government would have been loath to bring into effect.

In reference to this legislation we have been saying throughout that what is being done is to bring into effect a new principle in connection with old age pension legislation whereby the means test is to be restored. The government endeavours to get around that by explaining that it is not really a means test. They give it another name. This section will make it the meanest test of all. It is an inexcusable intrusion into the rights of the individual. Why should there be one law for the old age pensioner and another law for everybody else? That is what it amounts to. Income tax records of Canadians in general are not looked into except within the limitations of our law. But when it comes to the old age pensioners, that group cannot be trusted. That is what this amounts to. They cannot be trusted. We are going to provide the necessary machinery so they can be hunted down and their representations in connection with their income can be investigated

The government has even gone so far as to provide a penalty in section 21 for those who commit an offence under section 17. I will read the proposed section 21 to indicate how far it goes. It provides:

> Every person who
> (a) knowingly makes a false or misleading statement in any application—

This is the law today.

> —or statement required or permitted by this act . . . or obtains any benefit payment by false pretences . . . or > (d) contravenes section 17,
> is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

This is an extraordinary position for a government to take, a government which goes around the country boasting of what it has done in connection with social security. It makes every old age pensioner who asks for this supplementary payment a person to be suspected, to be snooped upon, to be examined. And if perchance an old age pensioner makes a mistake, he is subject to a penalty as prescribed by this section.

I am amazed to find the government taking this position. They do not need this power. Surely they can rely on the integrity of old age pensioners as much as on the integrity of other Canadians. But the government is going to set them apart and say that when they make statements it will check and cross-check those statements. The government is going to examine the income tax records of the old age pensioners, and if it finds any mistakes the pensioners are going to suffer.

Surely the government is not going to set the old age pensioners apart in a class by themselves to be discriminated against so far as any representations they make as to their income are concerned. If they falsify they deserve to be punished. But the onus of establishing this should be on the Crown. Instead the government puts forward an amendment which in effect casts aspersions on every old age pensioner who makes an application. This amendment puts the government in the position of being able to ferret out, to snoop upon and examine the income tax returns of those who make application for extra assistance.

To me, Mr. Chairman, this is a section that reveals in its nakedness that what this government is doing by this legislation is to bring in the means test, and I repeat that over and over again. I know that the government has denied it but this section reveals what it has in mind. I can just imagine every old age pensioner applying for this additional payment being hunted. All the forces of the law will be after him. The Department of National Revenue will be looking into his records, although he was given to understand when he filed them that they would not be subjected to snooping. When Canadians make income tax returns they make them on the distinct understanding that the information they give will be confidential. That was the basis upon which the law was founded. We are going to remove a basic principle so that the government will be able to do that which they undertook to Canadians would not be done, namely, to regard income tax returns as nonconfidential whenever the government decides it is beneficial so to do.

Old Age Security Act Amendment

I come back to what was said a little earlier about the statement of the Minister of Finance this morning. This government secured information from Mr. Gruber in the month of January and did not pass it on to the government of Ontario. They did not know that the government of Ontario had the information and they did not do anything about it until a few days ago when they found out that Mr. Gruber had also given the information to the Ontario government. In other words, they were very solicitous that nothing should be looked into, Mr. Gruber having asked for protection against possible action. What action he had in mind I know not.

I suggest we must have the same solicitude for all Canadians, and I resist, resent and will continue to oppose a measure that is going to place the old age pensioners in Canada in a class of their own.

Mr. MacEachen: That is not true.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The old age pensioner is going to be set apart from the rest of us whose returns cannot be examined. An open season is being declared by this government, through this particular section, against those who make application for the additional $30. The minister laughs at this, but that is what it amounts to. There is to be a closed season for those who are powerful and for the rest of Canadians, but an open season on old age pensioners. I object to that kind of legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I cannot allow what my hon. friend the Minister of Finance called hypocrisy a little while ago of the gross character to which we have just listened to pass without comment. The right hon. gentleman said that we were making a special class of a certain group of old age pensioners by verifying or seeking means to verify the accuracy of statements they make about their income. Every income taxpayer in this country is subject to the verification of his income tax return by the crown. Surely if the crown is entitled to examine the accuracy of a person's statements when he is obliged to have money taken out of his pocket by the state, the crown is entitled and it is no more humiliating to verify the truth of statements of someone making application to have money put into his pockets by the state.

The right hon. gentleman in his usual, skilful manner confused the facts and the purposes of this legislation by suggesting that a communication from one privy councillor to another, for public purposes only and for the protection of the revenue, is comparable with the revelation of the private affairs of a taxpayer to some other private person or agent.

Mr. Nielsen: The section says officer or employee.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest that this is the grossest possible distortion. If we are going to trust Canadians and are going to say that we will run our affairs simply on the basis of trust, then we will accept everybody's income tax returns and make no verification of them at all. This rule would have to apply to the millionaires to whom the right hon. gentleman referred, the rich and the powerful. We would accept their word. We know that 99 per cent of the taxpayers and 99 per cent of the old age pensioners will submit true returns. We also know that a lot of people may make mistakes.

• (5:40 p.m.)

It does seem to me that to weep these crocodile tears, and everybody knows that is what they are, is going too far. Nobody can produce them by the gallon as well as the right hon. gentleman, except the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I should like to see them in a competition. But the ordinary Canadian will not be fooled by this. The ordinary taxpayer paying taxes on $2,000 or $3,000, subject to having the truth of what he says verified by the Minister of National Revenue, will not think there is anything unfair about having verification of a statement of income.

Mr. Churchill: By whom?

Mr. Pickersgill: That verification applies to those who will have some of the tax handed over to them. That is exactly what this process is. We are doing this because people need the money, because we have a social conscience and accept our social responsibilities.

Mr. Nielsen: Where are the crocodile tears now?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is only fair to the taxpayers, the small ones as well as the large ones, who contribute to the funds used in this way that we should take reasonable steps to see that what is expended is expended on those for whom parliament intended to have it expended. That is all that is sought to be done in this bill.

The real measure of the hypocrisy of hon. gentlemen opposite is that at 3.30 this afternoon the hon. member for Ontario rose and, speaking for his party, said that his party was satisfied with the rest of the bill. "The government is adamant", he said, "so we are ready to have it passed in half an hour". This present objection was not known by these bright people on the other side, including that distinguished lawyer, the Leader of the Opposition. He did not know anything about this until it was pointed out to him by the N.D.P. That is the measure both of their study of the bill and of their sincerity. It seems to me it is about time we recognized that there is a great difference between a simple verification—

An hon. Member: Filibuster.

Mr. Pickersgill: —done entirely within the structure of the treasury—

An hon. Member: Of the means test.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and the revelation of private income tax affairs for other purposes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I have been here long enough to expect almost anything from the hon. gentleman and I am never surprised. To hear the power of snooping described this afternoon as revealing the social consciousness of the government is going beyond anything I have ever heard.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Transport has reminded me of more things to say than I had intended to say. In the first place I think he had better read the section he was so knowledgeably discussing because he has obviously never read it. Had he read it he would not have talked the nonsense about one privy councillor whispering in the ear of another privy councillor information about some taxpayer's income. New section 17 (3) in the bill reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding any other Act or law,
> (a) the Minister of National Revenue or any person designated by him for the purpose—

Heavens, Mr. Chairman, he may designate the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Pickersgill: I happen to be a privy councillor.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I continue:

> —may, upon the request of the Minister, furnish to the Minister or to any officer or employee in the Department of National Health and Welfare designated by the Minister for the purpose, any information obtained pursuant to any other act relating to the income or income from a particular source or sources of an applicant or beneficiary or the spouse of such applicant or beneficiary or otherwise relating to any such applicant, beneficiary or spouse, for any purpose relating to the administration of this act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister says, "exactly."

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): What does the minister want? The question will not be sensible. Let us have it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am afraid I could not hear the hon. gentleman's remark.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I did not intend commenting on the minister's hearing. I was referring to something else. Let us have the question.

Mr. Pickersgill: Unfortunately I am deaf. What I intended asking the hon. gentleman was this. Does he not realize that officers of the department are all bound by the Official Secrets Act and that this information can be secured only for the purposes of the administration of this act?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Next I want to turn to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and quote some words he spoke on December 5 of this year. He was describing to us that strange, esoteric difference between a needs test and a means test. It is one of those difficult philosophic questions I have found it hard to come to a conclusion upon. The minister made an attempt to describe the means test which, heaven forbid, this government would not think of imposing. But whatever they call it, it is a means test, just that. It involves the examination of the nooks and crannies of a person's financial status, the money he has in the bank, whether he owns a car or a home, the ability of relatives to contribute to his support, his earnings and so on. The government rejects entirely that it is a means test; it is merely applying a needs test. The minister described precisely what this government will not do when he said, as recorded on page 10708 of Hansard for December 5:

> No information will be asked for that is not already required for income tax purposes; there will be no snooping, no prying into financial affairs, no demeaning questions. This program is an innovation—

For heavens sake, let us have some honesty from this government. If they consider it necessary to snoop and pry into the affairs of old age pensioners, let them have the courage to say so instead of pretending as this minister did. The kindest thing I can say about his speech of December 5 is that it was extremely disingenuous. The speech conveyed the impression of the people of Canada that the old people were to be treated as responsible and honest citizens and not as objects of snooping and prying. In the bill we have a clear indication that the government does intend to do all the things the minister described, and the things described are part and parcel of the full means test which he rejected out of hand.

The minister says he is not going to examine the nooks and crannies of a person's financial status, the money he has in the bank, whether he owns a car or home, the ability of relatives to contribute to his support, his earnings and so on. The minister may smile, but the bill reads precisely in these terms. It will bring about the snooping and so on I have described. The investigators can seek any information they want under this section that is received under any other act. In other words, there is no limit to the snooping. I suggest that the minister explain his position again perhaps a little more clearly, a little less disingenuously than he did on December 5.

Mr. MacEachen: I want to thank the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. He has been kinder to me than most hon. members. Having been described as Scrooge, mean and miserable I am now described as disingenious. I have improved my standing in the committee. The procedure we propose to follow under the bill has been made clear to the committee. It has been suggested that this is a move without precedent, that we are embarking on a practice which is somehow un-Canadian. The hon. member for Peace River, making a point earlier, said he did not like a similar provision in the Canada Pension Plan. The fact is that the law already makes it possible for the Department of National Revenue to exchange information—any information—not with respect to the relatively small number now affected but with respect to five million people.

The intentions of the government on this point have been made clear from the beginning. We have never concealed from anybody the idea that we would seek information about an individual's income and that we would verify this information with the Department of National Revenue. That has been made clear time and time again, so it ought not to come as any surprise. I do not believe hon. members can find anything particularly repugnant about this. The hon. member for Wellington South has argued that in order to apply a guaranteed income program it is necessary to know what a person's present income is. We ask pensioners to tell us their income on a simple form which we send to them. They tell us. All that happens here is that the Minister of National Health and Welfare or an officer of the department may ask the Department of National Revenue to verify the information. It may at times be of benefit to pensioners to have this information verified.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: It has been suggested by hon. members that in one sense this program is too lenient, that there are not sufficient checks. The hon. member for Halifax asked why the department did not go around talking to the neighbours of pensioners to find out what their incomes were.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre said we had nine different ways of checking income.

Mr. Churchill: And I am objecting to every one.

Mr. MacEachen: But the hon. member is miscontruing this proposal. The only department to which we can go, at our option, to check this information is the Department of National Revenue. We are coming frankly to parliament and seeking approval to do so in order to administer this program. If we are to make any progress in this country in establishing a guaranteed income program in the future, this seems to be a realistic and sensible authority to seek.

I assure hon. members that it is not the intention to conduct any kind of un-Canadian investigation. This is merely intended as a means of checking the information provided. I am sure that if I came to parliament and put this program before parliament without seeking authority of this kind I would be subjected to great criticism for having failed to make such a provision in the bill.

I have tried to understand the arguments put forward. I think maybe that the developments of the afternoon have led to a certain high temperature in our proceedings. I hope, nevertheless, that hon. members will realize that this is not an effort to denigrate the standing of old age pensioners but a move to maintain what I consider to be a simple, private method of checking information as necessity arises.

Mr. Korchinski: Having been treated to a tear-jerker by the Minister of Transport, several questions occur to me and I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to answer them. The minister told us that because 99 per cent of income tax returns are accurate the same degree of accuracy might be expected in returns from old age pensioners. Why, then, does the hon. gentleman need a staff of 400 persons and 675 employees on a part-time basis to deal with these applications?

Income tax returns are normally sent in during one short season of the year. If only 1 per cent of these returns are likely to be incorrect is it worth engaging 675 employees on a part-time basis to snoop into them and take account of what might be an excess of $5 or $10 beyond what is normally regarded as allowable income? Does the minister really think it is worth the time and the effort to employ 675 people in his department to snoop on a few old age pensioners to make sure they do not get a few extra dollars?

Mr. MacEachen: The staff is intended not to snoop on pensioners but to process the hundreds of thousands of applications which will have to be processed. The intention is to recruit a casual staff for a few months in order to get this program into operation.

Mr. Korchinski: The minister says the need for extra staff only arises at certain times of the year. How does he explain that?

Mr. MacEachen: The extra staff will be needed when the applications are being received.

Mr. Knowles: One of the claims the minister keeps making is that the test of income embodied in this legislation is not the kind of means test which has been incorporated in the past in other legislation. I draw his attention to the fact that in the original Old Age Pensions Act, which did contain a means test —there is no doubt about that—no provision was made for getting information from the income tax branch. I also draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that at the present time there is a means test embodied in the War Veterans Allowance Act. Yet I know of no provision in that act which enables the government to get information from the Department of National Revenue with respect to veterans who apply for allowances.

I submit that the government is writing into this legislation a method of checking which has not been used in relation to other means tests. This places the minister in a difficult position when he maintains he is offering a pension which people get after filling out a simple form, being trusted all the time. I believe the minister should think about this over the week end, since it is now six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Filibuster.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, in case by chance there should happen to be an hon. member present who was not here a few minutes ago when the announcement relating to the air traffic control services settlement was made, I want to mention that it has been announced that there is no need for legislation on that subject. Consequently, it will not be necessary to meet tonight and tomorrow.

The business we propose submitting on Monday is, of course, the budget at eight o'clock in the evening, but subject to that we propose to continue the discussion of item 111, the bill to amend the Old Age Security Act, and on the completion of that, item No. 92, the transportation policy bill.

Mr. Churchill: Might I ask the house leader if he can tell us what other business there might be next week, when the house will rise for the Christmas recess, if it does rise, and when we will be coming back in January.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to be able to do that at the start of proceedings this morning. I had outlined a plan on certain assumptions, but I am sorry to say they have gone rather far astray today so I am not in a position to announce the plans for a Christmas recess, much as I would like to be able to do so.

An hon. Member: Blackmail.

Mr. McIlraith: No, it is just a lack of communication in the house, not on this side and not on a large part of the other side.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we have already had a budget this session, may I ask the minister under what standing order will the Minister of Finance be making his statement on Monday night at eight o'clock?

Mr. McIlraith: My understanding is that it is done on a motion that the Speaker leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of ways and means. I think that is the form of a motion on the budget. I have not checked the procedure, but I am quite sure that is the procedure.

Mr. Knowles: Has the minister checked that standing order recently? Does he not realize that it says that that order is passed without debate, except for the budget presentation? Since we have already had the budget for this year, hadn't the minister better look at this.

Mr. McIlraith: That is right, but I could not find any provision saying there can be only one budget in a year. Indeed, there have been many occasions in the past when the rule has been used, and I think the interpretation clearly permits the procedure that has been proposed for Monday.

Mr. Knowles: Maybe we will not get these taxes at all.

Mr. McIlraith: It looks more as if we will not get the old age pension supplement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Following the statement made by the Minister of Public Works that there is no legislation dealing with air traffic control services, am I correct in assuming now that the house agrees to consider the order of the house passed this morning as being discharged?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged.

It being six minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REPORT BY MINISTER UPON RETURN FROM PARIS MEETING

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like with the consent of the house, and in accordance with regular practice, to report briefly on the NATO ministerial meeting in Paris from which the Minister of National Defence and I have just returned.

The major problems which arose at the last meeting in Brussels concerned the process of adjusting to the consequences of France's decision to withdraw from NATO's integrated military structure. By contrast, at this meeting, France's relationship with the alliance was not a subject of discussion, since the necessary adjustments had already been largely completed. Our discussions reflected the fact that a new relationship between France and the 14 other nations in the alliance is being achieved.

The new foreign minister of Germany, Mr. Brandt, made an important statement. The coalition government having just taken office in Germany, particular interest was attached to this first statement of policy. Mr. Brandt gave welcome assurance of the German government's dedication to the alliance and of its desire to make progress in its relations with the countries of eastern Europe.

Mr. Brandt also spoke of his government's intention to promote contacts between the peoples of west Germany and east Germany, without compromising the Federal Republic's position on the non-recognition of the German Democratic Republic or on the important goal of German reunification. He stressed the German government's intention to maintain democratic institutions. He reiterated that the Federal Republic seeks neither national control of atomic weapons nor national ownership of such weapons.

In December, 1964, Canada proposed a study of the future of the alliance. This suggestion was adopted by the council but was not acted upon, for fear that it would lead to a break with France At this meeting, however, with France already having taken its action in respect of NATO, it was decided at the suggestion of the Belgian foreign minister that the time was now ripe for a wide-ranging study of the objectives and future tasks of the alliance. This study, which is to be presented to the meeting in December, 1967, could enlarge the area for political activity by the alliance.

The main attention at this meeting was directed to east-west relations. A full study prepared after the Brussels meeting confirmed that it was desirable to improve our relations with the countries of eastern Europe, bearing in mind that the over-all objective is a peaceful settlement in Europe. The meeting recognized that for the present bilateral relations represented the most likely area for immediate progress.

As one suggestion for improving east-west relations, a number of countries, including Canada, alluded to the possibility—and I do not suggest that this is for the immediate future—of reciprocal reductions in opposing NATO and Warsaw pact forces.

In the political sphere, the Russians have recently shown interest in encouraging improved relations between east and west. This is an attitude which NATO's military strength has encouraged over the years since NATO was formed. However, Soviet forces in eastern Europe are being continually strengthened. Accordingly, while we want to encourage improved east-west relations, we cannot afford to reduce our over-all level of forces unless the Soviet side is prepared to do likewise.

I suggested that it might be useful to keep under review possibilities for gradual reductions in western and Soviet forces in central Europe. Then if opportunities arise we should know what was reasonable to propose on our side, and what reciprocal action we might expect on the other side.

For Canada's part, we continue to support the alliance as the best guarantee of the security of its members. We consider that Canada's interests and responsibilities require at present an appropriate continuing contribution to the military strength of NATO.

NATO, of course, has great military strength. This strength is contributed by the members of the alliance collectively and its management is equally a collective responsibility. Important progress was made at the meeting with the establishment of new improved machinery for nuclear defence management. Membership in the new organization does not increase or affect the nuclear commitments of its members. Its purpose is to permit fuller and wider participation in the formulation of NATO's nuclear defence policy and to give the non-nuclear countries a readier appreciation of what is involved in planning for defence against possible nuclear attack.

Another important aspect of this decision is its direct connection with the practical pursuit of disarmament. We are determined that this new method of co-operative defence will make it unnecessary for the western countries to set up any new joint nuclear force such as the proposed multilateral force. Indeed, I believe that what we are doing in NATO is already helping in bringing within reach a non-proliferation agreement, that is, an agreement to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons.

With this statement, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table copies in English and French of the final communiqué.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the minister is to be congratulated on the report that he has given. It is terse and reasonably complete. It indicates that the meeting of the NATO powers did bring about a new stance, if one can use that expression.

Mr. Willy Brandt brought to NATO new concepts which cannot but be beneficial. In particular I refer to the agreement set out in the communiqué whereby these nations, all of them that are members of NATO, agreed that there should be a call for development of human, economic and cultural contacts between the two parts of Germany. This is a long step forward from the occurrences of the last 15 years.

In so far as reduction of forces is concerned, Britain today has some 55,000 members of its armed services stationed on the continent; the United States has 225,000 and Canada has the force that it has had there in recent years. At this time, when there seems to be a diminution in the tensions between east and west, there are widespread demands that there should be a pronounced reduction in those forces. The demands spring from the point of view of the assurance of peace, and also to benefit the economic situation in the various countries, because the contribution to the NATO forces has added greatly to the costs of those countries.

I am beginning to feel that with a diminution of tension, and because there is a preponderance of nuclear power in the United States the ground forces do not have the importance they had from the beginning of NATO.

Canada should give consideration to reducing the numbers of her forces on the continent of Europe. There was reference to the contribution by Canada to non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. I am not going to bring back other days, sir, but in 1963 when we took that stand, realizing that the day of the bomber was over, we were strongly criticized by the Liberal party. In the intervening period they have become converted to the idea that there should not be proliferation. This is indeed worthy of comment and appreciation.

I should have liked to hear the minister place before this house the reaction of the nuclear powers to the Canadian government's adoption of unification of the forces. That would have been an interesting story. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) shakes his head in an affirmative way. We have seen him do that before when the facts were opposite. I should like to hear him in this regard, because I am sure he rose to heights of eloquence in placing before the NATO powers the fact that Canada is going to become a pioneer in the field of removing all the insignia and traditions of the past.

I wish the Minister of National Defence would translate that nod to a vocal assertion. I am sure the house would find it interesting because the information the press gave is that the nations of NATO laughed at the idea. We shall see if we are able to get an answer from the Minister of National Defence, something we have not succeeded in doing up to the present time.

However, if the Secretary of State for External Affairs always reports to parliament with the lucidity and clarity he exhibited today, he will always receive a welcome.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) has said so many kind and flattering words to the minister that I will not endeavour to repeat them.

We shall read very carefully and with a great deal of interest the statement of the minister and the communiqué. May I say, however, that I believe we and many other Canadians may have very serious doubt and regret about the fact that Canada has felt it necessary to take part in a committee to examine or to concern itself with the exercise of the nuclear component of the alliance. We believe it would be better for Canada to take the position that we are not a nuclear power and do not wish to have any responsibility in any shape or form for this nuclear strategy. Also, along with many other people in the world, we view with apprehension any suggestion that West Germany in any shape or form should have any control, or participation in the control of nuclear weapons.

We believe this has been one of the obstacles to a non-proliferation treaty. We would much prefer Canada's taking the position that she has no wish to participate in the nuclear strategy. We should say to our ally, West Germany, that we think it would be better for the peace of the world if it, too, took no part whatsoever, not only in the actual physical control of nuclear weapons, but in any nuclear strategy, and as a member of the NATO alliance renounced any wish to take any such part in any way, shape or form.

I regret that in this statement once again there was absolutely nothing definite about any proposal made by Canada to phase out or get out of the present tactical nuclear role in which she is engaged in Europe. We believe that the diminution of tension to which the minister referred provided a first rate opportunity for Canada to say that her contribution to the alliance should be purely in the form of a mobile force without nuclear armaments of any kind whatsoever. We regret that we are apparently failing to do this, and that the minister has said absolutely nothing about acquainting our allies with an intention, not to reduce our forces as the Leader of the Opposition suggests but to opt out altogether from this nuclear role. These omissions we think are serious and important, and we hope we will have a chance to hear something from the minister in respect of these matters.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my comments will be brief on welcoming back the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence (Messrs. Martin and Hellyer) who have just returned from the last NATO meeting held in France.

According to the statement made by the minister, it would seem that recent political events in Germany had caused some concern to the other members of NATO. However, the fact that reunification was studied should lead us to believe that Europe is committing itself to finding a way which will bring peace to that area.

One point worries me however, and I wonder if I understood clearly the statement made by the minister, which statement I am anxious to read at my leisure. I note that once again we discussed disarmament while unfortunately, taking care to ensure that we are armed to the teeth. We are told that the United States will soon conduct another nuclear explosion; in fact, some are being announced here and there throughout the world. New countries are adopting nuclear arms, taking great care to say that these are intended for defence. But the fact remains that nuclear arms are dangerous to handle. I feel that no effort should be spared toward disarmament and that, once and for all, that aspect of peace should be looked into. So long as we plan for war, we cannot achieve peace.

We will study the statement made by the minister on the NATO meeting in order to benefit therefrom as much as possible.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs following his visit to the NATO ministerial conference. I would have appreciated some reference by the minister to reports which appear in today's press regarding the withdrawal of some of the R.C.A.F. squadrons, both reconnaissance and attack, serving at the present time under NATO. Likewise it would have been appreciated had the minister told us something about the relocation of No. 1 wing at Marville, and the headquarters at Metz. While this was not a direct concern it must have formed part of the discussions which were held, because it is related to our own NATO contribution.

It is reassuring to hear the minister suggest that the policy of the government is to continue its support in the NATO alliance. I think it is realized that while the United Nations has its place in the whole area of peaceful negotiation in the world, the real peace keeping organization is NATO, and the fact that Canada will continue her role in that organization is most important. I had hoped the minister might have mentioned the decision that will have to be made regarding the approximately 70,000 troops that France has in Germany at the present time, and whether these forces will continue under some bilateral agreement.

It was reassuring also to hear the minister say that the new German foreign minister and the defence minister reiterate the stand taken by their predecessors, that Germany really has no intention of wanting any part in or control of the NATO nuclear deterrent. This does not detract from the fact that it is now general knowledge that the communist build-up of their forces on the eastern side of the dividing line in Europe is continuing to increase.

Unless there can be some agreement that gives the assurance that this will not continue, and that there will be a co-operative decrease in the forces of the Warsaw pact countries, we cannot really talk about cutting down our own contribution. Co-operative defence is one of the reassuring areas of co-operation among nations, such as we have among the nations of the NATO alliance.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REPORT OF MEDIATOR IN RAILWAY DISPUTE—EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION TO DR. CARL GOLDENBERG, Q.C.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 9 of the Maintenance of Railway Operation Act, Dr. Carl Goldenberg, the mediator, submitted a further report to me on the evening of Saturday last, just a few hours before his extended term expired. With the consent of the house I wish to table a copy of his report in English and a copy in French.

I might say that the terms of the settlement are not set out in the report. This could not be done until the railway workers concerned had been advised of its contents. I am reliably informed that the bargaining representatives of the 100,000 railway employees directly affected by the settlement reached, and the two railways concerned, have already expressed their appreciation of the job done by the mediator, Dr. Goldenberg.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nicholson: The negotiations were complex, they were difficult, they were time consuming, involving long hours on many occasions during the mediation proceedings. I should like at this time to express publicly the thanks and the sincere appreciation of the government to Dr. Goldenberg for a job well done. I am sure that I also speak for parliament and the people of Canada in expressing appreciation for this very good work under difficult and trying circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nicholson: Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that Dr. Goldenberg is in the visitors' gallery this afternoon and that he has had an opportunity to hear this expression of appreciation from the members in all parts of this house.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table the report to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Later:]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask that the report of Dr. Goldenberg be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard if the house is agreeable.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this should not be printed as an appendix to Hansard, but that it should be included in Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, such a course will be quite satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker: It is understood that the report will be printed as an appendix to the Votes and Proceedings.

PACIFIC COAST LONGSHOREMEN DISPUTE—TABLING OF DOCUMENT APPOINTING COMMISSIONER

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to an assurance I gave the house last week, I should like to file a copy of the appointment of Hon. Mr. Justice C. Rhodes Smith as the industrial commissioner to inquire into the recent work stoppage on the west coast.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the minister file a copy of the appointment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BANKRUPTCY

PRUDENTIAL FINANCE CORPORATION—OBSERVATIONS OF MINISTER FOLLOWING STATEMENT OF WILLIAM GRUBER

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in view of the questions which were directed to me last week, and of certain statements made by Mr. William Gruber over the week end, I thought I might make a brief statement.

First, may I say that Mr. William Gruber was once employed by Mr. Morris Stein, the former auditor of the Prudential Finance Corporation, and was dismissed by Mr. Stein. Mr. Gruber first contacted the Toronto office of the Superintendent of Insurance in January of 1966. Because the department of insurance had no legal authority to assure him that he would be protected from legal action, he refused to disclose even the name of the company about which he said he had information. From the remarks which Mr. Gruber made, however, officials of the department of insurance concluded that he was probably referring to Prudential Finance.

As I said, he did not say that; this was just an inference which the officials drew. The department of insurance was already exercising close surveillance over its federally incorporated subsidiary, The North American General Insurance Company, as a result of its recent purchase by the Prudential group. The result of this surveillance was in part the discovery in November of the theft of securities from the North American General Insurance Company.

Subsequent to his discussions with the department of insurance in January, Mr. Gruber met with an official of the Department of National Revenue and, under the protection of the Income Tax Act, made certain statements about Prudential Finance. He was informed that the Income Tax Act prevented that department from forwarding that information to any other department or authority.

Mr. Fulton: Can the minister inform us of the date?

Mr. Sharp: I do not know the exact date but it was some time in January. As I said, Mr. Gruber was informed by the officials at that time that the Income Tax Act prevented that department from forwarding information to any other department or authority.

When the department of insurance inquired further from the Department of National Revenue, that department properly refused to divulge any information, but did say that there was nothing in what Mr. Gruber said that was of concern to the department of insurance, nor did his statements contain any evidence of tax evasion. The officials of the Department of National Revenue also indicated that they had had previous contacts with Mr. Gruber on a number of occasions, which had led them to feel that he was generally an unreliable informant.

The department of insurance has had no correspondence whatsoever with Mr. Gruber on the subject of Prudential Finance or the North American General Insurance Company. The only correspondence it has had with him at all referred to a toy company, which is not related. This letter was forwarded to the Superintendent of Bankruptcy by the department of insurance. The acknowledgement received in reply by Mr. Gruber is apparently being displayed by him as proof that he told these agencies about the affairs of Prudential. It is not related.

Neither I nor any other minister has ever met Mr. Gruber personally. In fact his first direct approach to any minister was on December 13, 1966, just a week ago, when Mr. Gruber left a telephone message at my office indicating that he intended to make public what he called "the facts" about Prudential at a creditors meeting on December 15.

He indicated that the Ontario Securities Commission knew of this matter, and he also gave the name of Inspector Thurston of the Ontario Police Commission as a further reference. He said as well that he had corresponded with the hon. member for Yukon, Mr. Erik Nielsen.

When Mr. Gruber spoke with officials of the department of insurance in January he refused to provide them with anything that they could possibly refer either to another federal department or to the authorities of the province of Ontario. In any case he made it clear that he himself was contacting other federal government departments and the Ontario authorities with the intention of revealing the information he had refused to the Superintendent of Insurance. I understand that Mr. Gruber now denies this, but this was the clear understanding of federal officials.

Officials of the federal department of insurance have a close and continuing contact with officials of the Ontario department of insurance. In fact over the past year federal and provincial insurance officials have had numerous conversations involving North American General Insurance, Wenworth Insurance, which are subsidiaries of Prudential Finance, in the course of their regular business.

Federal officials have been aware for some time of the Ontario government's interest in Prudential Finance. Had Mr. Gruber provided any worth-while additional information, it would have been transmitted to them in the normal way. He did not do so.

Bankruptcy

The office of the federal Superintendent of Bankruptcy was not contacted at all by Mr. Gruber about Prudential Finance or its related companies until after Prudential had made a proposal to its creditors in November of 1966. The Superintendent of Bankruptcy had no previous knowledge of the affairs of Prudential Finance, and in any case his responsibility commences when a firm is declared bankrupt or makes a proposal to its creditors, and not before.

However, I am informed by the office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy which received last week this information from Mr. Morris Stein, the former auditor of the Prudential Finance Corporation of Toronto, that Mr. Ted Brown, chief auditor for the Ontario Securities Commission, has met with Mr. Stein, to discuss the affairs of Prudential on several occasions since 1963. In March of this year there was an inquiry into the affairs of Prudential Finance at which Mr. Harry Bray, director, Ontario Securities Commission, Mr. Ted Brown, Ontario Securities Commission, Mr. G. Gillman, Ontario Securities Commission, Mr. Brien, president, Prudential Finance, Mr. William Deslauriers, of Tory, Tory, Deslauriers and Binnington, Mr. Morris Stein and a stenographer were present.

In June of this year Mr. Gillman of the Ontario securities commission reviewed the affairs of Prudential with Mr. Stein once again.

Prudential Finance is a provincially chartered company and the Ontario authorities have been aware of its problems for some time. The federal government is concerned when any group of Canadians suffers in this way. We have a particular interest in this latest case, beyond the general protection of Canadian investors, because a federal company, North American General Insurance, was undermined by the collapse of a provincial company—Prudential Finance. The collapse of Prudential Finance and others that have gone before could only have been prevented by the improvement of provincial laws and administration.

Our jurisdiction is limited; nevertheless we are not satisfied with the general level of protection afforded the investor in Canada. The provincial authorities must find ways to make that protection more adequate, and the federal government is prepared to assist them. We are already reviewing our own laws and administration as they relate to federally incorporated finance companies. We urge the provinces to do the same within their areas of jurisdiction.

In conclusion, may I make clear, in view of what Mr. Gruber said over the week end, that I have never been contacted personally by Mr. Gruber at any time and he did not call my office until after the collapse of Prudential on December 13. At no time did he reveal to the department of insurance anything of value, not even the name of the company.

The Ontario authorities were fully aware of the Prudential Finance, which is a provincially incorporated company subject to provincial laws and administration.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to the minister producing a mystery within a mystery. He obviously had a prepared statement designed in general to exculpate the government of Canada and, in particular, himself. With the greatest respect to the minister, and accepting his statement that the man in question never communicated with him, that in no way answers the situation that has been created.

It is the most amazing story that the minister tells. Gruber did meet with government officials in Toronto and no one knew what he was talking about. The officials had a suspicion he was talking about the Prudential Finance Corporation, and when they were informed of that they made certain investigations, apparently, although they did not say anything to the government of the province of Ontario.

The minister says now that the government of Canada is disturbed over the losses. Why was there no communication? The excuse he gives is that the Department of National Revenue could not furnish any information because of the provision of the statute. If ever there was an example of transparent excuse and subterfuge, that is one. While this department plays around and the minister engages in this artful dodging, 20,000 Canadians will have their insurance policies cancelled, according to the liquidator. The minister produces an alibi for the fact nothing was done to notify the government of Ontario.

Mr. Sharp: We had nothing to notify.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nothing was done. Why? Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, whatever the information was, it must have been of some consequence.

Mr. Sharp: No, it was not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was not?

Mr. Sharp: Not even the name of the company.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nobody communicated with the minister. Whatever was said in Toronto on January 24 to officials in the civil service was not transmitted to the minister.

Mr. Sharp: It was not important enough.

Some hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Twenty thousand people.

Mr. Diefenbaker: "It was not important enough"; that is interesting. At what degree does a matter become important enough?

An hon. Member: To this government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, to this government—to have it brought to the attention of the minister? It was brought to the attention of the Department of National Revenue and that department showed a complete lack of concern. They relied on the letter of the law rather than recognizing that the information they had should give cause for investigation.

I feel sorry for the minister. There he was in solitary isolation, nobody telling him what was going on. At the same time there apparently was information of such a nature that the informant was afraid unless he was given protection, he would be in danger. What he was afraid of I do not know, but that is what he said. Surely a person with information he was afraid to reveal in detail should have produced a very complete and thorough investigation. It is a mysterious story. It is patent, Mr. Speaker, that the minister today is trying to get away from the responsibility of the federal government.

Mr. Sharp: Trying to tell the facts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They have no responsibility for insurance companies. That is the attitude.

Mr. Sharp: Trying to tell the facts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They have no responsibility. That has been their attitude on bankruptcies for too long. That has been their attitude. They say: We have no responsibility. Surely this government cannot stand idly by in a matter coming under a federal charter. Surely a simple inquiry by the Superintendent of Insurance is not enough in a case involving dislocation and financial manipulations on a massive scale. Yet the minister's whole attitude is that there is really nothing for the Government of Canada to be concerned about.

Are we to tolerate piratical actions by those who operate insurance companies? What happened to the $500,000 in securities? They were there in September and gone in November. The minister says nothing can be done. Surely some law should be in effect regarding foreign corporations in Canada.

Mr. Sharp: Why did not the right hon. gentleman bring one in?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Surely the federal government, which more than any other government is responsible for the direction of economic development is responsible to Canadians who invest in companies, as these did. Something must be done other than wafting idle verbiage before the House of Commons, and believing the matter has been settled.

Surely, when the national economy and the savings of so many are involved, there is need for more than a passing gesture representing almost contemptuous disregard of people's rights. The overwhelming number of businessmen and industrialists in Canada are honest and progressive; they operate on a fair and reasonable basis.

An hon. Member: Within the law.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nevertheless, it is obvious that an increasing number of interests are placing themselves in positions of control. They apparently make the rules as they go along. They have little regard for ethics, law or the interest of shareholders. What about this government's attitude? I would have thought the minister would have risen today and said: We are getting to the bottom of this.

They do not want an investigation into this, Mr. Speaker. We asked for the appointment of a royal commission, to operate immediately, and this was turned down. Now I suggest that we get the facts—not the ex parte prepared, exculpatory statement which has been produced, but the true facts. Let us place this whole matter before a committee of parliament and get the facts. Surely the minister will immediately agree to that.

Mr. Sharp: There is no objection.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He agrees. He is willing to agree to that. We have made some advance from the other day. I look forward now to the government's immediately making available to a committee of the house the power to investigate, to look into the entire ramifications of this matter. I thank the minister for his acceptance of the idea.

Sir, because of the revelation Canada's reputation for honesty and integrity in business is being challenged in various parts of the world. We cannot allow that reputation for integrity to be questioned. We cannot permit Canada to be a happy hunting ground for unscrupulous operators who believe that the law of the jungle should be their guiding theme.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I will have more to say about this on a later occasion. What the minister has done today is to open a box so that we just get a glimpse of what it contains. The degree of supervision exercised over the activities of companies under federal responsibility is not what it should be. There have been several instances of sufficient magnitude in the past two years to cause uneasiness and disquiet. There have been failures on a large scale; there has been a legion of bankruptcies in suspicious circumstances. These things will, I hope, first be looked into by a committee of this house.

Before I conclude, I have certain questions I should like to address to the minister. Did the federal government or the office of the bankruptcy division receive information from Mr. Gruber regarding no fewer than five other bankruptcies this year? Did Mr. Gruber write to the bankruptcy division on November 2 last relating to a bankruptcy in Canada, and what action was taken? I think the letter will be available.

Finally, I say the time has come for this government to shed its present attitude of not being responsible. Hon. gentlemen opposite are responsible as far as the insurance companies are concerned. Let them shake themselves out of this lethargy, so that in the future not only other Canadians may be protected from wrongdoing, but so that those people who invested because this was a company under federal responsibility will not be made the goats, and suffer, because they believed that an insurance company was something apart from the ordinary run of corporations. They thought that when they took out insurance they would be protected, and that when they bought shares in an insurance company they could do so in the confidence, on the basis of experience and law, that examinations would be made regularly to the end that they would not suffer financial loss.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

The minister laughs and smiles. He and his hon. friends smile while unfortunate people are suffering losses.

An hon. Member: Who is smiling?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Do they interject and say, no? These people invested their life savings. They have lost them, now, and all the government says is: We wash our hands; we are without sin; we did not do anything, but we did not have anything to do. That answer is insufficient.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): The matter the house is now discussing discloses a shocking lack of legal protection, both federal and provincial, against irresponsible profit seekers in the finance and acceptance corporation field.

I must say that the minister's statement today astonished me somewhat, because parts of it were in direct contradiction to one of the things he said last Friday. If I heard him correctly, he said that Mr. Gruber saw members of the insurance division of his department in January last and told them something about a toy company, which was not connected with Prudential at all.

Mr. Sharp: I said that the only correspondence on file between Mr. Gruber and the Superintendent of Insurance related to the bankruptcy of a toy company.

Mr. Lewis: I am glad to hear that correction. The hon. gentleman left with me the impression that I stated. But I would remind him, merely to make a point which I think is of wider and more important application, that as reported at page 11221 of Hansard he said this:

> In January of this year, Mr. Gruber said he had information to disclose which would be significant to anyone concerned about the affairs of Prudential Finance or its subsidiaries—

The minister went on to say that Mr. Gruber would only make the disclosure if he were offered legal protection. To date I have not heard what sort of legal protection he was asking. The main point in that statement is that he said he had information which would concern anyone interested in the affairs of Prudential Finance or its subsidiaries. And one of its subsidiaries is, of course, the North American General Insurance Company for which the minister has responsibility.

Mr. Sharp: May I rise on a point which disturbed me a little when I read Hansard? I am informed by my officials that they only made an inference about Prudential Finance. The first time they spoke of this they had not looked at the records and their recollection was that Mr. Gruber had mentioned Prudential Finance. But when they looked at the notes which had been kept they discovered he had not named the company, and they had only drawn the inference. I should like to make this correction now.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister to stop being defensive, and to cease concerning himself about who surmised what? The important fact, as far as the Canadian people are concerned, is that the officials of his department had reason to be concerned about a company, a subsidiary of Prudential Finance, over which the federal government had jurisdiction, and it was their duty to do something about it. It was also their duty at that time to get in touch with the provincial authorities. It was not good enough for them to take the lofty position the minister took on Friday, as appears at page 11271, that as far as he knew Mr. Gruber passed the information along to the provincial authorities at the same time as he passed it to the federal government. Mr. Gruber now denies having done that. I do not think any member of this house is concerned with precisely how much reliance is to be placed on Mr. Gruber's statement. I have never met him in my life; never spoken to him. I submit that what is of concern to this parliament, and what the minister would do well to admit for the sake of Canada, is that there was a slip up—there was a failure to act when the department should have acted last January.

If the minister had the touch of greatness which is required, I believe he would do this. It is not his personal responsibility, and we would know that having admitted a failure in this case a similar failure was less likely to occur in the future. But one cannot help being concerned at this attempt, now, to gloss over something which is indefensible, this failure on the part of officials of the hon. gentleman's department who might otherwise be entirely competent and good officials—I do not know them, either. But in this case they did a disservice to Canada and a disservice to the policyholders and investors who had trusted Prudential Finance and North American General Insurance.

I want to make two or three points of a more positive character. It seems to me this entire, regrettable and shocking case shows that there is great danger in permitting any person, and any group of people who are concerned with nothing else but the profit they can make out of it, to set up finance companies, to lend poor consumers' money at exorbitant interest rates, and then to permit them to proliferate into all sorts of subsidiaries which may swallow up insurance companies at the expense of the policyholders and of the integrity of this country.

I say that what is needed is not an inquiry by a parliamentary committee, which seems to me to be very limited indeed. On our behalf, I urge the minister to consult with the provincial authorities in this country, to make a thorough inquiry in this entire field, both federal and provincial, of these small insurance companies and of these, as it turns out, thieving finance and acceptance corporations.

I say secondly, Mr. Speaker, this situation clearly shows a lack of adequate legislation on the federal level and the provincial level. It is not enough for the minister to blame the Ontario government and to try to clear his skirts by doing that. I agree with the minister that the Ontario authorities are fully as much responsible, if perhaps not even more directly responsible, as the federal authorities. But it seems to me the federal government has a responsibility to convene a conference of all provincial authorities, not only the insurance companies but the authorities within the provinces, in order that a combined and consistent effort can be made to plug the loopholes in our legislation and a stop called to this thieving that has gone on, with the failures that have followed.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, as we approach our centenary, may I say it is a heartbreaking thing to see these important events, affecting the lives and the future of thousands of Canadians, taking place in separate compartments in this country. The lack of co-operation between Ottawa and Queen's Park, and the similar lack of co-operation between Ottawa and other provincial centres, is a disservice to this country. I express the hope that this sad incident, which cannot now be cured so far as the investors, the policy holders and the many people who have lost their savings are concerned, will teach us to establish a line of authority and co-operation between the federal and provincial governments that will be of real value to our country.

On behalf of our party I should like to urge the right hon. Prime Minister that the federal government seek to co-operate with the provincial government of Ontario, and other governments if they are involved, to find some way of compensating the poor investors and policy holders who have suffered from this tragedy which our government and the provincial government failed to prevent.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to try to attach any blame, or to comment on the relationships of the failure of the Prudential Finance Corporation to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). However, I think the minister has a responsibility to see whether or not there are any other federally chartered insurance companies that may be controlled by these so-called "10 percenter" finance companies. These finance companies, of course, are under the jurisdiction of provincial governments.

I agree that we have had too many of these failures which have involved the savings of a lot of innocent people. Therefore, there is an important responsibility on the part of the Minister of Finance to see that these insurance companies are not being bought up or controlled by this type of finance company.

The minister said earlier that there was nothing said to the officers in his department that was worthy of referring to any other department or, for that matter, to the officers in the government of Ontario. When Mr. Gruber came to the office of the superintendent of insurance and explained to the officials there that there were some problems involved, I cannot accept the fact that those officers did not at once examine the corporate structure of the company to see how it was controlled. Surely if there is any reason at all for requiring a federal charter for insurance companies, it must be to give some legal protection to the people who invest in those companies.

I am not suggesting that a federal charter in any way guarantees success within those companies, but it certainly ought to guarantee honesty, something which has not been present so far as the administration of the North American General Insurance Company is concerned.

The minister also said that Mr. Gruber never called at his office, never telephoned him, and so on. That is of no particular consequence to me because I think there are other ways of communicating information, such as to the department, and the department should act on that information. The minister went on to say that he is not satisfied with the federal legislation we have at the moment respecting this kind of problem, and that he is not satisfied with the federal legislation we have at the moment respecting this kind of problem, and that he is not satisfied with what is in the provincial statutes. We, too, are not satisfied in that respect, and we can at least agree with him that something ought to be done to tighten up these laws so that there may not be a repetition of this incident.

We would support the suggestion that an inquiry should be made into this matter. I am not entirely sure a parliamentary committee should be the first step taken to look into the matter, but I think it might be a logical second step, after we have had a thorough investigation by a royal commission to make sure there are no more corporate structures of this kind whereby provincially chartered companies have control of federally chartered insurance companies.

If there are such corporate structures and we see that there may be the possibility, or the probability, of some of them being in a weak financial condition with respect to their obligations, then some action should be taken, and taken right away. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say on behalf of this party that we are not satisfied with the explanation that has been given today or with what was done with the information that was in the hands of some of the federal government officials several months ago. We hope we are not going to have any more excuses or buck-passing in the house, and that positive action will be taken to clear away this mess and strengthen legislation so that there will be no repetition of it.

BANFF NATIONAL PARK—ACCOMMODATION CONCESSIONS

Question No. 2,106—Mr. Fane:

1. From whom were tenders received regarding hotels, motels or room accommodation concessions in Banff National Park, Alberta in 1964, 1965 and 1966?

2. What is the name of the company or companies submitting tenders that were accepted?

3. What are the names of the directors and members, and the offices held, of the successful firm or firms?

4. What are the amounts of the tenders accepted?

5. When were the hotels, motels or room accommodations authorized and when were or will they be opened for business?

6. What companies are now operating them if already opened for business?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Few tenders were called for the provision of hotels, motels or room accommodations in Banff National Park in the years 1964-65-66 because nearly all suitable serviced land is already under lease by private persons or corporations. The function of the Minister is confined to confirming whether the proposed use of the land is consistent with the terms of the lease and the zoning regulations. An exception to this is and will be the visitor services centres, the first of which is being developed at Lower Lake Louise. A tender for the development of Motel Site No. 3 in this centre was received from Power Corporation Developments Limited on September 8, 1965. A tender was also received from Brent Holdings Limited for the development of low cost staff accommodation in Banff Townsite on November 30, 1965.

2. Power Corporation Developments Limited's bid was not accepted because it did not meet specifications. The bid submitted by Brent Holdings Limited of Edmonton was accepted on condition that suitable financing would be arranged. The company was unable to arrange the necessary financing and the bid was withdrawn on March 15, 1966.

3. Hans Hartwig, President; Marianne Hartwig, Secretary-Treasurer.

4. The tender submitted by Brent Holdings Limited and accepted conditionally was $222,000.

5. As indicated in (1) above, most or nearly all suitable serviced land is already held under lease by private persons or corporations. In this category, the following hotels, motels or room accommodations were either started or completed in the years 1964-65-66 according to the department's records: Deer Lodge: Banffshire Inn Motel, Voyager Inn Motor Hotel, Bow View Motor Lodge. Banff Motel: Mountain View Bungalows, Pinewood Bungalows, Sunshine Village Lodge. Ski Club of the Canadian Rockies: Charlton Cedar Court, Towne House.

6. See 5 above. New or expanded accommodations either started or completed in the years 1964-65-66:

Name of Company	Name of Development	No. of units	Cost of construction
1. Crosby Company Limited	Deer Lodge	24	$239,000

6. Thomas Brown and Coy Amelia Brown	Mountain View Bungalows	6	$ 14,300
7. Marob Holdings Company Limited	Pinewood Bungalows	24	$ 70,000
8. Sunshine Village (Banff) Limited	Sunshine Village Lodge	60	$592,000
9. Ski Club of Canadian Rockies Lake Louise	Ski Club of Canadian Rockies	24	$ 82,488
10. Elmer Robinson Charlton and Grace Charlton	Charlton Cedar Court	16	$115,000
11. Brent Holdings Limited	Towne House	42-bachelor apartments	$715.575

CALENDAR REFORM

Question No. 2,125—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has any consideration been given by the government to the subject of calendar reform?

2. If so, when and by what agency of government?

3. Have any tentative conclusions been achieved?

4. Have there been any negotiations or discussions with any international organizations or with other nations on the subject of calendar reform?

5. If so, what is the nature and result of such negotiations or discussions?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): 1. The subject of calendar reform was considered in 1955 by several departments concerned with the effects of a reform of the calendar as a result of a request by the Secretary-General of the United Nations that the Canadian government forward its views on the desirability of reforming the calendar.

2. See answer to previous question. The matter was considered in 1955 by an interdepartmental committee on calendar reform composed of representatives of the Departments of Citizenship and Immigration, External Affairs, Labour, Mines and Technical Surveys (Dominion Observatories), Secretary of State, Trade and Commerce (Dominion Bureau of Statistics) and Transport.

3. No firm conclusions have been reached on this matter. The reply to the Secretary-General's request, embodying the recommendations of the interdepartmental committee, stated that "the Canadian Government has come to the conclusion that a study, under the auspices of the Economic and Social Council, of the possibilities of calendar reform might prove useful. While expressing an interest in a study of calendar reform proposals and possibilities, the Canadian government does not wish at this time to support or commit itself to any specific reform". Generally speaking, it is considered that for Canada to initiate a reform of the calendar on its own would be to invite many inconveniences, not only to ourselves, but to other countries dealing with us. Consequently, whatever reforms are made should be made on an international basis. Should a serious international interest in reform plans develop, the government would be prepared to consider the question in a worldwide context under the auspices of the United Nations.

4. The question of world calendar reform was considered in 1956 by the twenty-first session of the United Nations Economic and Social Council, of which Canada was a member at that time. In the brief debate which took place in ECOSOC most representatives expressed the view that the time was not ripe calendar reform. At the close of the discussion a proposal to adjourn indefinitely consideration of the question was adopted by a vote of 15 to 0 with three abstentions. Canada abstained on this proposal because we were unwilling to vote in favour of the indefinite postponement of this question and felt that continued study of calendar reform under United Nations auspices would be worthwhile. At the same time, we recognized that there was relatively little interest internationally in this question. There has been no further discussion on the matter of calendar reform in the United Nations since 1956.

5. See answer to previous question.

SAINT-HYACINTHE, P.Q., RAILWAY TUNNEL

Question No. 2,313—Mr. Ricard:

What was the cost of the tunnel that was built under the Canadian National Railways in Saint-Hyacinthe?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Assuming that the question refers to the subway constructed at the crossing of the Canadian National Railways and Highway No. 9, Sir Wilfrid Laurier Highway, Saint-Hyacinthe, P.Q., the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advises as follows:

The total cost of constructing the subway was $583,238.89. The board authorized and paid from the Railway Grade Crossing Fund $466,591.11; $87,485.84 was paid by the Quebec Department of Roads and the Canadian National Railways paid $29,161.94.

Question No. 2,319—Mr. Coates:

1. Did the Department of Public Works receive a proposal from the government of the province of Nova Scotia for construction of grade-separation structure at the intersection of the Race Track Road in Cumberland county that would be part of the Trans-Canada Highway agreement with the province of Nova Scotia and, if so, what was the decision regarding this proposal?

2. If a negative decision was reached, what was the reason for such a negative decision?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. A proposal was received, but it was not approved under the Trans-Canada Highway agreement.

2. Traffic on the Race Track Road is too light to satisfy the established criteria under the agreement.

3. What is the estimated cost of building this road?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. The government has no knowledge of any road being constructed between Forteau and Churchill Falls and is obviously making no contribution to such a project.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FOR CANADIAN WORKERS IN U.S.

Question No. 2,332—Mr. Dionne:

Have further steps been taken by the government with the aim of concluding an agreement with United States authorities to make it possible for Canadian workers in the U.S.A., particularly in the states of Maine and New Hampshire, to receive unemployment insurance allowance and, if so, what are the results to date?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): No. Representatives of the government of Canada have made repeated efforts to arrive at such an agreement, especially with respect to Canadian workers employed in the states of Maine and New Hampshire. At the time of the most recent discussions those states made it clear that they were not willing to make such an agreement and this was reported to this house at the time.

BANKRUPTCY

PRUDENTIAL FINANCE CORPORATION—PAYMENTS TO COMPENSATE FOR LOSSES THROUGH COMPANY FAILURE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, since this matter covers more than one department I should like to address my question to the Prime Minister. Whatever the division of responsibility between the federal and the provincial governments, will the government give consideration to making good the losses of investors in the insurance company and ensure that the 20,000 people who have purchased insurance will be protected by the transfer of their policies to other companies with the government on behalf of the people of Canada covering the expenses in that connection?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest sympathy with the purpose behind the right hon. gentleman's question, as I am sure have all hon. members. We are looking into the implications of action of this kind and I certainly should like to study the situation before I give a considered reply, which I hope to do very very shortly.

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS TO ENSURE INSPECTION AND REGULATION OF FINANCE COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The minister on Friday told us that he had called the insurance companies together for a meeting, in particular to discuss the possibility of improving and closing loopholes in the legislation in their regard. I should like to ask the minister now whether, at the same time or at an early date, he would consider a similar process with regard to finance campanies incorporated under the laws of Canada. And simultaneously in that connection would he discuss with the provincial ministers as well, the question of tightening the loopholes in the operation of the laws relating to finance companies, with a view possibly to bringing them under an over-all umbrella of control in the form of inspections and regulations, possibly through some such device as the lender of last resort, or other measures which might be considered. Will the department look into this at the same time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I said, I am calling the insurance companies together to see whether we can specifically improve federal regulations. I have also already called a meeting of my own departmental officials to look at the more general questions surrounding the adequacy of control that now exists in the general field of finance companies.

I took the opportunity this morning of talking to one of the Ontario ministers, Mr. Rowntree, to find out whether he would be interested in meeting with us. I do not know whether he spoke on behalf of his government, but he indicated he would be willing and very eager to hold such discussions.

Mr. Fulton: When the minister is making these urgent requests, may we understand that the scope of these conferences will be such as to include representatives of the provinces, as well as federally incorporated finance companies?

Mr. Sharp: Yes. My purpose in speaking to Mr. Rowntree of Ontario was to find out whether he would be interested personally in such discussions. I think he spoke for his government. If ministers of other provinces are like-minded, we will hold such a conference.

FINANCE

ACTION ON ROYAL COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING SECURITIES CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. It deals with the fact that on April 30, 1965 I asked this following question of the Minister of Finance:

> Will the minister tell the house if the government intends to take any action on the Porter Commission recommendation concerning securities administration and control?

The answer given by the minister at that time, Hon. Walter L. Gordon, was that the matter was under study and had been for some time. In view of the circumstances of this past week, would the Prime Minister now give very urgent consideration to carrying out the recommendation of the Porter Commission dealing with the national securities commission, in co-operation with the provincial securities commissions, and also in co-operation with the S.E.C. in the United States.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows the federal government has been looking into this matter since the day of that question, indeed, before that. We set up a task force under a very competent and experienced lawyer who visited every provincial capital and discussed the problem with all the provincial governments. As a result of that discussion and the report which he made to the federal government, a federal-provincial conference was held which reached certain conclusions. It is hoped that these conclusions will result in legislative action, both federally and provincially, in order to deal with this very serious problem in a more efficient way in the future than perhaps has been possible in the past. As has been pointed out, action already has been taken at both levels of government and we hope before long to be in a position to announce what we will be able to do legislatively. We hope that the parliaments and governments of the provinces will be able to take similar effective action.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister also consider the obvious necessity of having some sort of understanding between our national securities commission in co-operation with the provinces, and also with the securities commission in the United States, because of the flow of securities and the necessity to maintain Canada's reputation in these fields at all times?

Mr. Pearson: This is one aspect of the problem which undoubtedly will have to be considered, and which is being considered. It will require that kind of co-operation between the agencies of both countries, if this action is to be fully effective in our country.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this matter is becoming more urgent daily, could the Prime Minister give some indication of when we might expect some action? Some time in the future could mean that it might drag on for months and years.

Mr. Pearson: Yes; it could drag on for months and years. As a matter of fact it had dragged on for many many years before the action which we began. I agree that action should be taken and not merely considered. We are in the process of drafting legislation ourselves, and we will be considering that legislation with the provincial governments as quickly as we possibly can. As a matter of fact there is a federal-provincial meeting in Ottawa today. The Minister of Finance was in attendance at this meeting this morning and will be returning this afternoon.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SYDNEY, N.S.—REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY MEASURES TO RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT IN STEEL INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I should like to ask him whether he has received a telegram from a citizens committee of Sydney, Nova Scotia, expressing great concern about the continuing unemployment resulting from the fact that 35 per cent of the Sydney steel plant work force is directly affected either by lay-offs or wage reductions, and asking him and other members of the government to take emergency measures. If the minister has received that telegram, would he or one of his colleagues inform the house whether such emergency measures are being contemplated and what they are.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have received such a telegram this morning and I have discussed by telephone with Mr. Nathanson, who sent the telegram, the possibility of a meeting in order to discuss this problem at the earliest possible date.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. According to the telegram to which reference has been made, 35 per cent of the working force at the Sydney plant has been directly affected by the lay-offs and wage reductions, and emergency action should be taken. Will the minister indicate what immediate action is being taken to meet the bleak future for the whole area of Cape Breton? Is it a fact that an agreement has been arrived at between the federal government and the province of Nova Scotia whereby some $50 million will be made available in the Cape Breton area over a period of years?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the Minister of National Health and Welfare answers the question let me say it should be obvious that when the original question was asked by the hon. member for York South, I took it for granted, perhaps erroneously, that the question had reference to action which might be taken by the minister in his capacity as minister of the department.

On other occasions I have ruled, rightly or wrongly, that a question of this type could not be referred to a minister in his capacity as a representative of a provincial region. I believe that ruling is supported by precedent. I will accept the question now posed by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, if it has reference to the minister's responsibility in his official capacity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I asked the supplementary question without in any way endeavouring to evade the very sound ruling you have made in that connection. Let me direct this question to the Prime Minister, who is responsible for certain decisions in every department. In order that the Prime Minister will know what the question is, let me again ask him what emergency action is to be taken to meet what has been described in the telegram as a very bleak situation in Cape Breton. Has there been any arrangement entered into between the federal government and the provincial government of Nova Scotia whereby some $50 million will be made available to the Cape Breton area over a period of years?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): In respect of the first part of the question, I shall discuss what emergency action has been or can be taken with the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Perhaps one of those ministers will be able to reply tomorrow.

In respect of the second part of the question, as was indicated in the house last week, we have been discussing with the government of Nova Scotia an agreement regarding a coal policy for Cape Breton. I hope that agreement has been almost completed. One or two points are still outstanding, but we hope to have them cleared up within the next day or so, after which I will be able to make what I hope to be a fairly comprehensive statement on this whole question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have difficulty in knowing to which minister to direct these questions. The Minister of Labour is always willing to answer, so perhaps I should direct the question to him. I do not see the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in the house at this time, so perhaps by way of elimination the Minister of Labour gets the opportunity to tell the people of Cape Breton what is going to be done by way of emergency legislation activity to meet the problems faced by these people.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, regrettably I cannot add much to what the Prime Minister has stated. It is a fact that my colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, myself and two or three other colleagues have had discussions, and some of my colleagues have had talks with the province regarding this subject. We hope to be able to announce something tomorrow.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I have a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister discuss this matter with the Minister of National Health and Welfare as well? He really looks crestfallen.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, arising from the reply he made to the Leader of the Official Opposition. If it has not already been done, will the Prime Minister, in respect of any agreement with the province of Nova Scotia take into consideration the DOSCO-owned mine in the constituency of Pictou, which will also require aid?

Mr. Pearson: All relevant matters have been considered in relation to this very important question.

UNITED NATIONS

PEACE KEEPING—ATTACK BY RUSSIAN REPRESENTATIVE RESPECTING CANADIAN ROLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will he indicate to the house what reply he has made to the action taken by the U.S.S.R. at the United Nations? I refer to the unwarranted attack made on Friday last by the U.S.S.R. against Canada in relation to her role in peace keeping, and the Canadian motion now before the United Nations which would make peace keeping and peace keeping financing more practical?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian ambassador at the United Nations replied to the statements made by the Soviet Union representative regarding the Canadian peace keeping resolution. There was a motion this morning at the general assembly to postpone the vote until this afternoon. I do not know what the outcome will be.

SHIPPING

MONTREAL, P.Q.—CAPSIZING OF "CABOT" IN HARBOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Although the minister may already have taken some action, I should like to direct a question regarding the capsizing of the Cabot in the Montreal harbour on Friday, with a consequential loss of life to two men aboard that ship? Has the minister taken any action in respect of an inquiry into that accident?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this very unfortunate accident was under investigation by my department within a matter of a few hours of its occurrence. I am afraid that investigation has not reached the stage at which I could throw any light on the cause of the accident.

Mr. Howard: I have a supplementary question. I presume the inquiry that is taking place is being conducted by an officer of the minister's department. Does he have any intention of directing a formal inquiry into this accident, which was very similar to another accident involving the Fort William?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be wise to wait for the report of the first investigation before deciding to hold a second one.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—SUGGESTED COMMITMENT AT PARIS CONFERENCE TO REDUCE NAVAL STRENGTH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the serious reduction in personnel strength of the Canadian navy and the reduced number of ships now available for service, can the minister indicate what reduction in our NATO commitment was made by the minister at the recent NATO conference?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No reduction was made, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friend will be pleased to know that the maritime commander expects we will be able to man all of our post-war destroyer escorts next summer. Let me again reassure my hon. friend that the capability of the Royal Canadian Navy, in so far as its primary role in the anti-submarine field is concerned, has never been higher.

Mr. Churchill: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which will give the minister the opportunity to make another bombastic reply. I am not talking about next summer. What is the state of the efficiency of the navy right now, in the personnel available and the number of ships available? Supposing an emergency arose immediately, what is the state of efficiency of the navy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think the minister should be given the opportunity to make a bombastic reply.

Mr. Hellyer: It would be a very short reply, Mr. Speaker: Just "excellent".

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of National Defence could advise the house whether that assurance, which is most welcome, about the manning of ships includes members of the reserve force, in order to make up the required complements?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker. But my hon. friend will be glad to know that in so far as our forward planning is concerned, we are trying to obtain more realistic co-ordination between the reserve forces of this country and the regular forces in being. I think this is just another indication of the kind of intelligent, forward planning of which the Department of National Defence is capable.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Where did you get the intelligence?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the questions now being asked are of a very general nature. Hon. members might have an opportunity to ask these questions when the national defence bill is before the house, perhaps before Christmas.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

UPWARD REVISION IN PAY SCALE OF RESERVES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. Has the decision been made to revise upwards the salaries of the reserve forces? The minister indicated some weeks ago that the matter was still under consideration.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker; but the whole question of the pay of the reserves is under review, in order to make it as realistic and effective as possible and to provide some incentive for those members of the reserves who have undergone training, as against those who are just entering. Once again, I think this is a forward step and reflects credit on the director of the reserve forces, who is doing an excellent job in this whole area.

REQUEST FOR CONTINUATION OF HYDROFOIL PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a specific supplementary question. Will the minister and his department continue the hydrofoil program?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is being carried on for a number of weeks while we assess more precisely the extent of the damage caused by the fire. Certain parts of the repair process are proceeding in order to give us a clearer picture of exactly what is involved in time and cost, as well as the technological problems which may have developed from the fire. Once all that information is at hand, which will be a matter of about two months, we will be able to decide whether to proceed.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, following that question, I wonder whether the minister would reply to the question I placed on the order paper on November 8 regarding the hydrofoil. I refer to question No. 2,166.

Mr. Hellyer: I will be very pleased to do so, Mr. Speaker. I do not know exactly what the question is at the moment. I will look it up.

FINANCE

U.S. GUIDE LINES—IMPOSITION UNNECESSARY BECAUSE OF TRADE DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the announcement of the decision of the United States government to tighten its guide lines controlling the operation of all United States companies operating in other countries, has the Canadian government advised the government of the United States that we already have a trade deficit with that country of more than $1 billion, and that therefore there is no need to tighten those guide lines in this country?

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would not think the question asked by the hon. member is in order at this time. The hon. member seemed intent on making representations and giving information rather than seeking information with his question.

Mr. Hees: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I am really seeking information. I think it is a most important question, and I believe the Prime Minister would like to answer it, if he were allowed to do so.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was merely going to say that I appreciate the concern of my hon. friend in this matter. I heard him express this concern last night on a very interesting television program. In reply to his question, I would say that we have made the United States government aware of our interest and concern in this matter, not once but several times.

Mr. Nielsen: You could not have been watching Mr. Gruber.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SHEPPARD REPORT—ALLEGED BREACH OF PRIVILEGE THROUGH PUBLICATION IN PRESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. On October 7 I asked the hon. lady whether she would be prepared to table a copy of the Sheppard report. She stated at that time, as reported at page 8443 of Hansard, that this is a confidential report prepared for the office of the Secretary of State. She also said that if it was to be tabled, and that decision had not yet been made, it would not be soon. In view of the fact that the report has apparently been printed on page 25 of Saturday's Toronto Daily Star, would the Secretary of State now be prepared to let the house in on the rest of the contents of this most interesting report?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): It is confidential, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members will just have to buy last Saturday's Star.

Mr. Brand: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I think this is a very important matter. This report has obviously been released to the Toronto Daily Star. If it has been released to them and not the House of Commons, I think it is a breach of the privileges of this house.

Miss LaMarsh: I agree that it is a breach of privilege arising from some place, Mr. Speaker, but it was not done with the authority of my office.

[Later:]

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I have a question for the Secretary of State, supplementary to one asked by the hon. member for Saskatoon concerning a report by Gordon Sheppard. I should like to ask the minister, now that the report has been at least partially revealed, whether she would consider tabling the rest of it so as to give some assistance to the committee on broadcasting when they are discussing the white paper on broadcasting?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): This report concerns cultural affairs in the government generally. It has been sent to all agencies for consideration, but no response has been received from them as yet. The fact that someone has permitted this to be published without having authority to do so, notwithstanding the fact that the author has been paid, and the fact that there is a contract which gives ownership of the report to the government does not mean that the government will change its mind and hand the report to the committee before the government has had full opportunity to consider the report.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PENSION INCREASES—REQUEST FOR EARLY ENLARGEMENT OF COMMITTEE TERMS OF REFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board? In view of the minister's personal commitment to bring before the house a motion enlarging the terms of reference of the joint committee on the public service so that we might discuss the question of the pensions of retired civil servants, could that matter be attended to before we rise for the Christmas recess?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate this particular committee on how it is proceeding with the very important legislation before it. I can assure the hon. member that I will continue my battle to see that the matter to which he has referred is brought before the committee.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that at least two of us in the committee have committed ourselves not to debate this motion in the house? In the light of that, will he bring it on soon?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer with respect to commitments of hon. members; I can merely carry out what I have indicated I will try to carry out.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I think the house would be interested in knowing who the minister is battling to get this motion before the house. He said he would continue his battle. I would be very interested to know with whom.

Mr. Pearson: The opposition.

Mr. Benson: It is mainly a battle with the opposition, but time is involved.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister would have to battle with the Chair to answer the question.

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO REDUCE HIGHWAYS DEATH TOLL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Having in mind the announcement over the week end by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics that there has been a 21 per cent increase in the death toll of Canadians in traffic accidents on our roads, will the minister give consideration to an early introduction of amendments to the Criminal Code aimed at reducing this death toll, which is now up to 588 a month?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as part of the general Criminal Code amendment program, particular consideration is being given to the problem of impaired driving with a view to reducing the serious hazard to life from this cause. No final decision has yet been reached. Of course the hon. member realizes that there are other aspects to the problem which must be taken into account.

The hon. member will also appreciate that a total or complete solution to the problem of traffic deaths in Canada does not lie within the realm of federal jurisdiction alone; but to the extent that we do have responsibility in this matter, every possible consideration is being given to the problem.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF DECISION RESPECTING 3 PER CENT PERPETUAL BONDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to address my question to the Minister of Finance. In his absence, I would direct it to the Prime Minister. With the confidence of a large number of investors being replaced by a feeling of distrust of finance companies today, and in view of the uncertainty and resentment on the part of holders of Dominion of Canada 3 per cent perpetual bonds issued in 1936, will the minister review his decision and redeem this issue? It seems very unfair that the government should exercise an option in a manner that is so detrimental to such a large number of Canadians who invested in these bonds in 1936.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that his question goes beyond the normal limits of a question. It was put more in the form of a representation, which I am sure the minister will take into consideration.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—REFUSAL OF ENTRY TO CONSUL GENERAL IN HONG KONG

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the government has recently been extending an olive branch to the People's Republic of China, can the minister offer any explanation as to why the Peking government has reportedly so abruptly snapped off the olive branch by refusing the Canadian Consul General in Hong Kong permission to visit the Peoples' Republic of China?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the answer. Of course, this is not the first time this has happened, but I would not think there was any necessary relation between the event and the fact referred to by my hon. friend.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST THAT APPLICATIONS FOR ABANDONMENT BE HEARD BY NEW BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

[Mr. Cardin.]

In view of the continuing uncertainty, could the minister assure the house that all applications for the abandonment of unprotected lines in western Canada will be processed under the provisions of the new act and the new board rather than the old act and the old board, as is the case with the current data being assembled by the Board of Transport Commissioners?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I think the hon. member could do more than I to achieve that objective. No one can abide by a law which has not yet been passed.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a supplementary question. The minister referred to an ambiguous reply the other day. I think the same can be said of his reply today. Will the processing of branch line abandonments be done under the terms of the new act when it is passed?

Mr. Pickersgill: Sir, I think it would be a very useful subject for debate in about three quarters of an hour.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): The minister is usually very helpful in his answers. This is a matter which affects many towns and villages in western Canada. Apparently the railway companies, or one of them, is proceeding as though parliament did not intend to act. In view of this, will the minister not make representations to the railway companies to desist from their actions in giving public notice of the probable closure of railway lines, until this legislation is passed? Surely a representation like that, coming from one with the authority and prestige of the minister, would have some influence on the railway companies.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the right hon. gentleman, with his many other responsibilities, failed to read the answer I gave to the hon. member for Assiniboia. My answer last Friday was quite clear and precise, namely that the chairman of the Board of Transport Commissioners had assured me that none of these applications would be heard while the legislation was before parliament.

I think the question of what will be done when something else is done is a hypothetical one which it might be appropriate to consider when we are debating the legislation but about which I could not possibly be expected to give a categorical answer on orders of the day, even when asked for in such a conciliatory way by the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Apparently even the minister's unambiguous answer on Friday was completely misunderstood. Did the minister receive a telegram from Fred Tully, executive secretary of the Branch Lines Association of Manitoba? After having read the clear statement, which the minister describes his statement as having been, I am still very gravely in doubt as to what it actually meant.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know whether I received another telegram. I answered one on Saturday by letter. Evidently the hon. gentleman's mail deliveries are more rapid than mine.

Mr. Dinsdale: Can the minister make a very short reply to a very unambiguous question? Is the Board of Transport Commissioners still gathering data with a view to processing railway line abandonments?

Mr. Pickersgill: I expect so, but the method by which the hearings will be held has not yet been determined.

THE SENATE

CONSIDERATION OF FRENCH-ACADIAN ASPECT IN APPOINTMENT FROM NOVA SCOTIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare has been waiting very patiently and now he may have the floor.

Mr. J. O. Bower (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Although he has apparently indefinitely postponed making the appointment to the other place of the representative from Nova Scotia, I should like to ask him whether he intends still to give predominance to the French Acadian fact in making this appointment?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that the question can be asked at this time, although if the hon. member feels that it is a matter of grave urgency he has a remedy; he might discuss it at ten o'clock.

WINTER WORKS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AS TO CONTINUITY OF PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, but in his absence perhaps his parliamentary secretary can take it as notice. There is an impression among the municipalities that this is the last winter in which the municipal winter works program will apply. Could the minister make a statement in the near future denying this, so as to allay the fears of the municipalities and assist them in their preparations for next year's budget?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): As acting minister, I will bring these representations to the attention of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR EARLY PROCLAMATION OF BASE LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, before orders of the day are called I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him whether he will be in a position to fulfil his commitment that the straight base lines will be proclaimed before the end of the year?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I doubt that I could assure my hon. friend that they will be proclaimed before the end of the year.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION OF GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENTS AND DETERMINATION OF PENSIONERS' INCOMES

The house resumed from Friday, December 16, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-251, to amend the Old Age Security Act—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 3.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose on Friday, December 16, an amendment to clause 3 proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was under consideration. The amendment reads as follows:

> That clause 3 of Bill C-251 be amended by deleting from sub-section (1) of the new section 8 being enacted thereby, the words "minus one dollar for each two full dollars of his monthly base income, being one-twelfth of his income for the preceding year", as found in lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 3 of the bill.

The question is on the amendment. Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I have a few words to say about the amendment. First of all, I should like to say that there is a growing tendency in the government for interdepartmental snooping. When I first came to the house it was a recognized fact, as I understood it, that no one was permitted to look into the returns of the Department of National Revenue.

• (4:20 p.m.)

No information was given out. Next, we had the social security number, and the suspicion grew that this was the opening of the door for snooping. Then, along came the Canada Pension Plan Act and the suspicion grew that it was necessary to have interdepartmental communication, it became a fact. Now, the government has gone a step farther. There must be communication between the officials administering old age security, or the guaranteed income, and the Department of National Revenue. If this trend continues, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare has to agree with it, we shall become completely state controlled in the too distant future. There will be no private life, everybody's business will be public knowledge. This, I say, is a downward path and is certainly invading privacy as it has never been invaded before.

Another thing bothering me, and this was brought out by the Minister of Transport, is that the old people will be paid 2 per cent extra for the rising cost of living per year or $1.50 per year. That is completely wrong on principle because everybody knows that food costs last year went up by 10 per cent and rents by 10 to 20 per cent. Giving them only 2 per cent or $1.50 is a disgraceful way to use our older people.

It means, Mr. Chairman, that in 1975 that 2 per cent base will remain the same over the year. One only has to think back to 1935 and compare the dollar of that day with the dollar of today to realize that that dollar only has one third of the value of the 1966 dollar. I am sure that can be verified by asking the Minister of Public Works who sat in the government at that time, I believe as secretary to the minister of trade and commerce. In one year alone, recently, inflation increased by 15 per cent. How, in all sincerity, can we ask the old people to accept 2 per cent, when many of them cannot work to help themselves. If they do work, they will be penalized. The minister will not grant them any benefit even though they earn low wages.

Another point bothers me, and if my arithmetic is not correct I ask the minister to look into it. The Minister of Transport the other night stated in the house that only 1 per cent of income tax returns needed checking, and that less than 1 per cent of the old people of this country would put in false returns. The Minister of Health and Welfare also said in the house that on the average, 900,000 old people get $22 per month. If you take 1 per cent of that number you get 9,000 who might make false returns. If that is not correct, will the minister say so?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the $22 figure I mentioned was the average supplementation paid by provincial governments to recipients of old age security. This is the average benefit they received.

Mr. Rynard: Then, Mr. Chairman, I shall not have to adjust my figures. Taking the figure at $22, and bearing in mind that 9,000 people will be dishonest—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. gentleman will permit me to say a word.

Mr. Rynard: On a point of order?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, not on a point of order. I am sure the hon. gentleman did not want to take what I said in a figurative way as literal. He knows, as well as I know, that we cannot be certain how many old people will make mistakes. We do not know how many people will make false returns. All I was trying to say, in an exaggerated way, was that I believed most of my fellow citizens are honest, just as the hon. gentleman believes that.

Mr. Rynard: Perhaps I was hewing to the line too closely, but I was just repeating the statement of the minister. If the minister was a trifle overgenerous in what he said perhaps he might be forgiven around Christmas time. At any rate, taking 1 per cent of the people, or 9,000 pensioners, the total cost comes to $2,367,000. Let me explain that.

You will have to pay snoopers to snoop —because this is snooping—into the private affairs of people who have always minded their own business. Some of these people had not much education. They had not the same chances as the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the Minister of Transport to obtain an education, many of them not attaining more than a grade 3 education. At today's wage levels the 400 full time civil servants at $7,000 each, needed to carry out investigations will cost $2,800,000. That figure does not provide for offices, cars or incidental expenses. Right there, we have a figure greater than that involved in the 1 per cent the Minister of Transport cited.

Let us go farther and take into account the 675 part time workers. If I understood the Minister of National Health and Welfare correctly, he said most of them would be employed at income tax time. I may be wrong, and if I am I hope I shall be told I am wrong. My opinion is that unless there is some collusion between the income tax department and the minister's department, these 675 employees will work a minimum of nine months in the year, because, as I read the relevant clause, applications must be in by the first day of October. If the part time workers are paid, say, $3,500 a year the cost would be $2,362,000. If my figures are correct, here you have an expenditure of $5,162,000 to bring about a check on overpayment of $2,367,000. Is something not wrong? Does this not show the minister that Parkinson's law will be in operation? We shall be getting more and more bureaucracy and building an empire at the expense of the poor old age pensioner. I resent this. I think the old age pensioner is getting a beating.

He is getting it on the 2 per cent increase in the cost of living which we have found over the years is much greater than that, and now we are beating the taxpayers of this country. Tonight we are to have a mini-budget, when all that was required was a little saving in departments which have spent so much money. Instead, the minister is coming here to tell us: we had to make these tax increases for the old age pensioners. But will he tell the house that the government is proposing to employ civil servants at a cost of over $5 million, not counting their cars and incidental expenses to save $2,367,000.

I hope I am not being too critical, but this is something which bothers me as a Canadian and as a member of this house, that we should just be doing these things carelessly while pretending they are being done for the benefit of poorer persons. Talk about a guaranteed income. This is just a poverty income. We are treating the old people of this country unjustly.

In many parts of Canada it costs between $125 and $150 a month to enable a single person to live. We are to employ a group of civil servants to administer this plan, yet the people who need the money have to resort to the Canada Assistance Plan for help. The government should have raised the pension to $100, fair and square, and then allowed the Canada Assistance Plan to operate through the provinces in cases of need. Instead, we have another group of civil servants imposed on the taxpayers and on the old people of this country. That is my criticism of this clause.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not wish to speak at length. I want to point out there are certain questions which the minister has left unanswered—questions which we asked earlier and to which no reply has been made. We are anxious to co-operate during the passage of this legislation, but we have a right to hear the answers to the questions which have been asked. I have in mind particularly a subject which has not been dealt with by the minister at all, that is, the way in which this bill in general, applying as it does a means test, will be applied in the province of Quebec. What are the plans in this regard?

The setting up of a separate scheme in the province of Quebec would mean the presence of two systems in Canada. Will this means test which is contemplated by the government apply in the province of Quebec in the event legislation is passed in that province? I see the Postmaster General is saying something. I do not know whether he is giving some information to the minister or not, but if he is I would be happy to have that information. Suppose the province of Quebec were to pass its own legislation,—and under section 94A it has that jurisdiction—how is this means test to be applied in that province? Any province which chooses to bring in legislation in this field would constitutionally have the right to do so. Certainly this was the view taken by Mr. Mackenzie King. I could deal at length with what he had to say in 1942 and 1943. His view was that the provinces had exclusive jurisdiction in this area. That jurisdiction has not been taken away by the agreement which was made between the federal government and the provinces when the amendment to which I referred some time ago, was passed. I want the minister to explain to us whether, if the province of Quebec passes legislation which does not contain a means test—call it what you will, an income test, a poverty test—this section will apply in the province of Quebec.

Will the legislature of that province, when it brings in such legislation, be able to secure a grant or a subsidy from the federal government to the extent that is required to provide the additional payment under this legislation? The minister has not dealt with this point at all. He felt the other day, no doubt, that this problem would be solved by the efflux of time.

It has not solved itself in that way. The minister suavely smiles. He believes that is a substitute for information. But we cannot accept it as such, greatly though we appreciate being the recipients. We want to know how this scheme is going to work.

Let us place an example before the minister. The legislature of Quebec brings in legislation providing for a pension of $75 a month. As far as the initial amount is concerned, does the government of Canada intend to follow the course it has followed in other fields and make a subsidy available? If the legislation in the province of Quebec provides for a pension of $105, with a means test in respect to the extra $30, what will the government of Canada do? Will it pay to the province of Quebec a subsidy to cover the $30? The minister is bound to answer that question.

A moment ago there was a suggestion that this aspect might be ignored. It cannot be. The parliamentary secretary is a man of unusual capacity for language. I should like to hear him on this subject, because he must have given ad hoc consideration to the question. How will this means test be applied when the legislature of Quebec carries out the undertaking which was given in the speech from the throne? That is the first question, and it is one which must be answered.

We do not intend to end this debate before we get this information. We can conclude it quickly after consideration has been given to the amendment now before us, provided we are given this information. But we do not intend to give a blank cheque to the minister to spread around in whatever way he can manage through a diplomatic approach to any province.

We believe Quebec or any province has the right to enter the field of old age pensions. But when a province does so, what are the arrangements the minister contemplates bringing into effect in order to assure the operation of the plan?

I do not want to repeat what has already been said about this section, but it is a strange commentary on a government that when people, who invested in insurance companies and the like, could possibly have been forestalled in their wrongdoing, the government took the stand that the national revenue act prevented any revelations regarding income tax. That was a declaration based on the law. Why change it when the old people of this nation are involved? Why place them in a position where the government will apply to them something it will not apply to those who are strong and powerful?

A moment ago the hon. member for Simcoe East said that we started on the downward path with the social security number. I was opposed to that security numbering. I did not want to be numbered. I have never taken out a security number because it can only be excused as being a step along the way to an autocratic state. I am one of those who have never taken the number. I have not got one, and the minister is in the same position.

Mr. MacEachen: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, he is numbered.

Mr. MacEachen: You haven't got my number.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If you don't give that $25 million to Cape Breton your number will be up. Anyway, no matter what hon. members say, the old people of this nation are going to be subjected to examination by Peeping Toms who are going to do that which snoopers are always desirous of doing, namely, examining the income of other people. What will be the result? I have had many letters on this subject. I am sure hon. members supporting the government have had their share of letters condemning this plan. The Minister of Public Works indicates in the negative. Will none here in Ottawa be affected?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I was not indicating anything about the right hon. gentleman's remarks. I was quite preoccupied with something else.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman is always preoccupied with something else. He was shaking his head in a negative way and sitting by himself. Maybe he was holding a cabinet meeting with himself. I took it that he was indicating he had not received such letters, but it seems he was in private consultation with himself.

I have before me a memo sent me by a person who, through the years, denied herself little trips, denied herself those luxuries that provident and prudent people allow themselves. Now, she finds herself in a position where, because she deprived herself, she is going to be denied any additional pension, even though she cannot live on $75 a month.

The attitude taken by my parents, and I am sure it was a view shared by the parents of most of us, was that under no circumstances should there be anything taken from the state.

That was the general philosophy that built this country. Now, here is a lady who says, "I have pinched my pennies over the years to have a little set by for the time I achieved old age, and now I am going to be denied. My income will be about $5 more than the maximum fixed, and therefore I am to receive nothing."

She points out, without criticism, that people who came to Canada within the last 12 years, who did not contribute a lifetime of effort to this country, will be entitled to the additional amount of pension. She spent a lifetime doing her bit to build this nation, but she is denied the extra amount. That shows the unfairness of the plan. She has gone on to say, "To subject our old folks to a means test is degrading and I know many who would rather starve than go through it."

The government is dividing our senior citizens over 69 years into two groups, the haves and the have-nots. You can imagine pensioners meeting each other and asking each other, "Are you going to get it? Are you a have, or are you a have-not? " This thing is all wrong. The government is bringing into effect the widest possible snooper legislation ever placed on our statute books.

I looked at the provision in the previous act, and it was the pathway to the highway of today. Surely, the government doesn't need this power. Surely it does not want to tramp on the right of a Canadian, a right that should be upheld at all costs, not to have his income tax returns examined for the purpose of ascertaining that the statements he made were the truth.

The government did not do that with the insurance company when it was going into bankruptcy. Today the Minister of Finance wrapped himself up in the garments of legalized purity and said, "We could not do that." Some 20,000 shareholders got cheated because of a government that did not act. Now, the old age pensioners are to be treated as second class citizens in order to qualify for the $30, or any portion of it.

The Liberal party used to stand for freedom for the individual. That was prior to 1940. Since then its members have followed another course. Since then they have developed the philosophy that, "After all, it does not really matter so long as it is efficient". Just yesterday I read the interesting memoirs of Chubby Power. I doubt if the hon. member for Verdun paid attention to the same section that I did, and which I found very interesting. I found his revelations regarding the conscription issue very helpful to an understanding of what happened.

I just interpolate at this point that the Minister of Finance, who tonight will bring in the mini-budget to tax us although there is $400 million already on hand in the old age pension account, must have studied under the late hon. C. D. Howe.

We have a government with a bureaucratic mentality—efficiency rather than freedom; get it over. Let them snooze. Chubby Power was considering whether he would become a candidate in 1948 for the Liberal leadership. It is interesting that he was approached by Sir James Dunn of Algoma Steel to become a candidate. He said:

> I stated further that the only thing that might induce me to accept the nomination would be if Howe were to be the directing force behind St. Laurent. In that event there would be no change for the better in party politics, as Howe had consistently disregarded parliamentary procedure, and apparently did not believe in a government responsible to the people through their representatives. Actually he favoured government by boards, committees, crown companies, and commissions, all headed or controlled by the same person: Howe.

Now, the Minister of Finance is an understudy. His attitude with regard to a powerful corporation engaged in skinning prospective investors is that you do not have their income tax returns looked into. But, when it comes to the old age pensioners, the bureaucratic mind comes to the fore, and we are asked to pass this legislation. I know, Mr. Chairman, that in your own province of Newfoundland that legislation would not go through, but we in parliament are asked to say to the government of Canada, "Here is a ticket for snoopers". What a field day it is going to be.

I have said enough to indicate that I am opposed to this clause. If there should be any misunderstanding, I wish to make that clear. Here we have a legion of Liberals who have come in during the last while to be ready for the vote and to be here to stand up for the principles of Liberalism. This clause is the embodiment of the tyrannical dictum to "line them up". Surely, you are not going to do that. You cannot get away with the explanation that you are doing it for their own good. You are doing it because so many in this government are former civil servants. You admit that only less that one per cent, under any circumstance will endeavour to mislead for the few dollars you anticipate might be saved by this procedure. I ask this house not to vote down the amendment which has been moved, but to support it.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Knowles) negatived: yeas 31; nays 62.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, before you dispose of this proposed section in clause 3 of the bill, and before we leave it, I should like to point out an apparent complete inconsistency which further supports the argument made by those who were opposing the inclusion of subparagraph (a). I should like to ask the minister whether he does not think this whole proposed section should be taken back for reconsideration and redrafting. The inconsistency I should like to point out arises when you look at subsection 4 of section 17 in clause 3 of the bill. You will note that subsection 4 provides:

> Notwithstanding any other act or law, no officer or employee of Her Majesty shall be required, in connection with any legal proceedings, to give evidence relating to any information that is privileged under subsection (1)—

Now, what is the situation that we find here? We find that the minister is asking parliament to enact that in the courts of the land—and it is in the courts that the rights and obligations of citizens should be determined—no officer or employee shall give a breath of information, notwithstanding anything in any other act. In other words it will not be right to demand of the public service that they disclose information; that is the principle asserted here. And this is the same minister who in respect of the preceding proposed subsection, said that public servants within the government may pass confidential information back and forth between one another, at will, it order that privately, behind closed doors, they may determine the rights and obligations of citizens.

That is the situation. How can the minister, who says in respect of proposed subsection 3 that this confidential information can be passed back and forth behind the backs of the people, then say in respect of the next subsection that with regard to legal proceedings in Her Majesty's courts of Canada—in which courts by our tradition the rights and obligations of our citizens are determined—this information which they are so ready and so willing to make available to everyone for purposes of private snooping, cannot be produced?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

How can the minister square these two completely irreconcilable and different principles? Unless and until he does, the whole new section should be opposed and should be sent back for redrafting.

I have some reservations as to whether or not this kind of information should be immune from production in court where one has the protection of the judge and the rules of evidence. These safeguards would make it certain that the information was not frivolously or improperly sought or produced. There may be some argument, however, that even under those circumstances it should not be produced. I would have to hear such argument, and think a good deal about it, before I would be convinced of the soundness of that proposition. But I have no doubt whatsoever about the complete inconsistency here between subsection (3) and subsection (4). This inconsistency makes the whole proposition intolerable and unacceptable. Has the minister no explanation? Has he nothing to say about the courts? Does he not care about the position of the courts in this regard?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, subsection (4) is intended to remove a situation which has prevailed in the past. If the hon. member will turn to page 12 of the bill he will see that section 9 subsection (1) (d) provides that a person who discloses or communicates any information or evidence obtained under the act or the regulations, unless the disclosure or communication is necessary for the administration of the act or is required by law is guilty of an offence. In other words, members of the department who have received information under the Old Age Security Act for the purposes of administering the act are not entitled to disclose that information. On a number of occasions, one of the points at issue has been the whereabouts or location of individuals. Naturally there is a great deal of information available to the department in respect of the whereabouts of individuals who are receiving old age security or family allowance. Individuals write to the department asking us to indicate where such a person is. The attitude taken by the department is that this information cannot be disclosed.

Apparently officers of the department have been asked to go to court as witnesses and have by court order been obliged to disclose to the court the whereabouts of persons as derived from information which they have obtained for the purposes of administering the act. They have naturally been placed in a position of conflict because, on the one hand, the act says they cannot disclose that information, yet on the other hand the court orders them to do so. It is for purposes of clarifying that situation that section 17(4) is included.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the subsection goes far beyond what the minister has just said. There may be a type of case in respect of which information obtained as a result of a return under this act should not be subject to production in court. That does not mean that the whole area should be blanketed by one provision. That is the first inadequacy of the minister's explanation. The second is his complete failure to reconcile what I point out again is a most blatant discrepancy.

The minister would have parliament say on the one hand that not one tittle of information will be given to a court, no matter what the prejudices may be to an individual whose rights and obligations are on trial in that court, even though these individuals would be subject to the safeguards of the rules of evidence and the protection of the judge. In spite of that not one scintilla of information could be given to the courts to determine those rights. On the other hand, by the immediately preceding subsection, everything in a return can be made available as between departments for a secret determination, behind closed doors, of the rights and obligations and position of persons concerned. It is that irreconcilable difference that the minister has completely failed to explain.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that because of the argument adopted by the hon. member for Kamloops he places himself in a contradictory position. He is objecting to the fact that the Department of National Health and Welfare may ask the Department of National Revenue to match certain income information which they have received. We are not asking for authority to examine income tax returns and no official of the Department of National Health and Welfare will ever see the income tax returns.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, that is contrary to the terms of the provision we have just been discussing.

Mr. MacEachen: All that is being sought is authority to permit the Minister of National Revenue to match information in respect of income. The procedure to be followed is simply one of a request to the department to match information we have received. It is not proposed that officials of my department will ever see the income tax returns.

Mr. Fulton: May I just say to the minister—

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member for Kamloops is objecting to this very limited exchange of information between two departments, and he is now objecting to the fact that we are preventing officials from giving the courts information that we regard as privileged. This is a contradictory position, because the purpose of this subsection is to protect officials from giving information which the law prohibits them from giving by a literal understanding of the law.

Mr. Fulton: That is my objection. The minister need not worry about my position because there is no contradiction in it. There is a contradiction in his own position which he deliberately refuses to admit. He has now let the cat out of the bag. He has said that subsection (4) is to protect the officers of his department. That is what the minister just said.

Mr. MacEachen: I said it was to protect the officials from being placed in a position of conflict.

Mr. Fulton: I think I heard the minister correctly. He just told us, by his own words, that subsection (4) is to protect his officials, not citizens, and protect them from the courts.

Mr. MacEachen: To protect them from disclosing—

Mr. Fulton: That is who the minister is protecting.

Mr. MacEachen: —information that they are not entitled to disclose.

Mr. Fulton: He is protecting them from liability to an order of a court requiring them to give information. Surely, one place where information should be acceptable is in a properly constituted legal proceeding, because this is the proper method of determining the rights and obligations of the people. The minister has just told us that subsection (4) is included to protect officials from orders of the courts. That is a strange concern on the part of a minister of government, in view of the fact that the same concern is deliberately withheld from citizen taxpayers.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I could finish, and I will be only a moment, exposing the extent of the minister's contradiction and the callous attitude of this bill. There is not contradiction in my position. I have said that, with some reservations, I think the provisions of subsection (4) are perhaps wrong. I have also just finished voting for the deletion of subsection (3), which I think is totally wrong. I ask the minister how he can justify the retention of subsection (3), which gives his department the right to obtain complete disclosure of all income tax material? This information can now be completely disclosed as between officials; his officials can rush in and snoop around the documents in the other department; or if they are in a hurry they can ask; "Can you give us complete information about the income tax return of so-and-so?" There is absolutely no protection of the taxpayer there.

The minister says that kind of disclosure is confined to very limited matters relating only to income and the source of income. This is not the case at all. The minister has not read the section. I ask him to read it with me. Subsection (a) says:

—the Minister of National Revenue or any person designated by him for the purpose may, upon the request of the minister—

That is the Minister of National Health and Welfare sitting opposite; our colleague in this committee.

—furnish to the minister or to any officer or employee in the Department of National Health and Welfare designated by the minister for the purpose, any information obtained pursuant to any other act—

That includes the Income Tax Act.

—relating to the income or income from a particular source or sources of an applicant—

That refers to the applicant, but it is not confined to him.

—or beneficiary or the spouse of such applicant or beneficiary—

So, it applies to the spouse or beneficiary of such applicant. But note this:

—or otherwise relating to any such applicant, beneficiary or spouse, for any purpose relating to the administration of this act;—

Where in those words can the minister find the restrictive qualification about which he spoke? This subsection refers to actual income or sources of income—

Mr. MacEachen: What I said is stated there clearly.

Mr. Fulton: I direct the minister's attention, again, specifically to the words which I quoted last, from lines 2 to 5 at the top of page 10. I am sorry if his deputy minister did not bring this to his attention, but the words are there. The information covered is not just concerned with the income of the applicant, his spouse or beneficiary; it is information "otherwise relating to any such applicant". It covers any information about the applicant contained in the return; such information can be disclosed to the minister or any official of his department.

Mr. MacEachen: Does not that relate back to income?

Mr. Fulton: Certainly not; not in my view nor in the view of my colleagues who are learned in the law. But, Mr. Chairman, let us not make too much of the point of how narrowly this information is restricted. In my view, it refers to information relating to anything covered in the return. All such information can be revealed. But the important point is that there is no protection of the taxpayer or the old age pensioner. The only protection afforded by this provision as proposed is protection of officials. Protection against what? Protection against an order of a court; an order which would in any event require that to give information for this purpose it must be established to be logical, legal, lawful and reasonable. What a use of the word "protection".

Apparently our words fall upon deaf ears, because the principles of Liberalism are now foreign to hon. gentlemen opposite. But those are the facts. This is a most ill-Liberal, inconsistent and repulsive section, and the whole thing should be defeated. It should be taken back, redrawn, scrapped and started all over again.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to make one point in reply to what has been said by the hon. member for Kamloops. The point is simply that no information received by an official can be given out, either in court or outside of court, except with respect to the administration of this act. That is the point. The purpose, of course, is to protect the citizen.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How does that protect the citizen?

Mr. MacEachen: It protects the citizen in the sense that information received in respect of the administration of the act could be given out freely in the absence of this section, and has been given out in court even though it was information acquired in connection with the act and not asked for in connection with the act. The purpose—and I am not arguing with hon. gentlemen; I really want to make the point—is that no information, in accordance with this section, can be given either in court or outside of court unless it is information in connection with the administration of the act. If that is a bad feature, then hon. gentlemen can defeat it.

Mr. Baldwin: The enforcement of the act, too.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, there is another point that disturbs me in connection with the section we have just been discussing. It is the fact that not only is the return of the applicant or beneficiary involved, but also his spouse or any other person whose return relates to such applicant or beneficiary or spouse. I maintain that this provision extends the permission to examine information in other persons' returns far beyond what has ever been allowed in other acts. This subsection is worded in a very broad manner, and the wording is:

> —relating to the income or income from a particular source or sources of an applicant or beneficiary or the spouse of such applicant or beneficiary or otherwise relating to any such applicant, beneficiary or spouse, for any purpose relating to the administration of this act;—

As I read this subsection, it would permit information to be given from the income tax returns of a spouse of the applicant where there may be no relationship between them financially or they may not even be living together.

Mr. MacEachen: Would the hon. gentleman not consider that the final phrase, "for any purpose relating to the administration of this act", limits the purpose and extent of the information?

Mr. Aiken: How do you know whether it is going to relate to the act until you have looked at it? After you have looked at it, what difference does it make, because the information has been revealed?

Mr. MacEachen: The Minister of National Revenue would not be permitted to give any other information.

Mr. Aiken: This provision says, "otherwise relating to any such applicant, beneficiary or spouse", which would cover any employer or employee of the applicant, his landlord, or his tenant if he were a landlord; it would cover the returns of any person with whom such individual had had any financial relations. The minister says it is purely for the purpose of this act. Those words are there. But what happens when a person tries to establish in court his right to a supplement? The department has information which he cannot get.

Mr. MacEachen: Oh, yes. If it is an action in court with respect to this act, then of course this information could be produced.

Mr. Knowles: The lawyers are confusing one another terribly.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Aiken: If that is related to this amendment I ask then how can the returns of the landlord, tenant, employer or employee of an applicant be brought before the court when the applicant himself cannot get this information? The department has knowledge which the applicant himself cannot get. For example, he cannot find out whether his landlord, tenant, employer or employee has filed a return which is consistent with what he knows or believes. Therefore, he has no way of preparing himself for his application, and yet this information is in the hands of the department.

This is where I believe the provision goes far beyond what we expected in permitting the return of the applicant to be revealed to various people. Unless I have misread the clause, it states that the return of a person relating to the applicant, a beneficiary or spouse, can be examined for the purpose of this act to find out what the financial relationship is. The minister says that this is done only for the purpose of this act. This may be true, but if this information relates in any way to the individuals involved, the departmental officials can say "we have to find out something about this man's wife and what she is earning so we will have to look at her employer's return".

This is what I am objecting to. I would like the minister to say whether I am wrong in assuming that these people are liable to have their income tax returns examined. For example, if I were employing someone who had applied for the supplement to the old age security pension could I assume that the Department of National Health and Welfare could go to the income tax people and say "I want to see what is being paid to this employee so may we have information on the employer's income tax return"? It will not be enough to obtain information regarding one person only. We want to know the whole payment rate because we want to see whether it is reasonable and consistent."

I would hate to see this provision used to have my income tax returns hauled out of a file in the Income Tax Department and information contained in them provided to the Department of National Health and Welfare. I would like to be certain as to what information would be provided. The minister says that this will be done only for the purpose of this act. Can he tell us where the line will be drawn and what extracts can be taken out?

Will only information regarding one person be supplied or will the whole employment record be turned over? Who is to make the decision? I wonder how much information will be revealed for the purpose of this act.

As the hon. member for Simcoe East has said, this is an extension of the provision. We made objections to the cross-checking of information under other acts. This bill seems to go much further than other acts and it is expanded to include other persons than the applicant himself.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, all that the Department of National Health and Welfare will want to do is to cross-check the information of the Department of National Revenue. The most likely procedure to be followed would be for the officials in the Department of National Health and Welfare to ask the Department of National Revenue to tell them whether the information which they have is correct and whether it matches with information which that department has. Sometimes mistakes are made. We do not intend to have any income tax forms in our department and we do not intend to have any employees of the Department of National Health and Welfare looking at these forms.

All we want to do is to verify the information provided to us with respect to information which is available on income tax returns. The other day we were told by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre that information with respect to a pensioner who does not file income tax may be available on his employer's form. This is all we have in mind in this proposal with respect to the purposes of this act. This is all that is involved here.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask the minister whether anyone from his department will be located in the income tax branch to examine and extract information from the income tax returns?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Chairman, this is not the proposed procedure. According to the proposed procedure we will ask the Department of National Revenue to tell us whether such and such information is accurate by way of an exchange of correspondence.

Mr. Knowles: What is the difference?

[Mr. Aiken.]

Mr. MacEachen: The difference is that employees of the Department of National Health and Welfare will not be examining income tax returns in the Department of National Revenue. All that the Department of National Health and Welfare will have is limited information with respect to income telling us whether the information which we have is correct.

Mr. Knowles: The officials of the Department of National Revenue will be examining income tax forms for the purpose of assisting the Department of National Health and Welfare to check on the correctness of the applications. What is the difference?

Mr. MacEachen: We would agree with the editorial which appeared in this morning's Gazette that if the whole income tax system is offensive we should do away with it, but it does not seem to me that an additional problem is involved in permitting the same officials who are acquainted with the forms to look at them for this reason.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago before the minister spoke I tried to catch your eye for the purpose of suggesting to the minister that if the bill had said what he has just finished saying, we might have avoided a rather extensive discussion both before and since the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was voted upon. The minister has made a statement of intention concerning what he has in mind with regard to supplying certain information. In effect, the Department of National Revenue will tell his officials whether or not a statement contained in an application for the supplement is correct.

I agree that this might be reasonable under the terms of the bill, and under the system which the minister is proposing, but I submit that this is not what the bill says. We have been told many times in the house that we cannot rely upon the statements of intention given to us by the ministers while a bill is under discussion. We have to go by what the bill says. The bill says that the Department of National Revenue can disclose to officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare all the information about the income, sources etc., of people who may be applying for this supplement.

If the bill had said that when the minister and his officials get an application they think is not quite correct they could send it over to the Department of National Revenue for the officials to see whether it is correct, then the minister could inform the applicant that the Department of National Revenue states his application is not correct and until the department is satisfied he will not qualify for the supplement, that would have been reasonable. One might accept that as a reasonable proposal within the general framework of the minister's bill.

That is not what the clause says. If the minister intends it to be that way, why does he not bring in a bill saying that? Why does he not leave out all these details of income, etc. which are to be available from the Department of National Revenue people to the Department of National Health and Welfare.

We have listened to many lectures from many ministers at various times over the years about the sacredness of the information in the hands of the Minister of National Revenue and his officials. Some of us have been sold on this idea to an extent that may prove embarrassing to this minister. Why should he unnecessarily depart from that principle? If all the minister wants is to be able to check whether an application is correct and then to be able to inform the applicant about this, why is all this necessary?

Mr. MacEachen: There is no reason to have any further information so far as the administration of this program is concerned. That is the purpose of this clause, to empower the Minister of National Revenue to supply information about the accuracy of information we get. As you will notice, minor differences of up to $24 in certain categories would not be material. And, if the Department of National Revenue says, "There is a singificant variation, or a difference here" we would write to the applicant and say, "You have made a mistake. What is wrong? Would you like to reconcile this?"

We think this is a reasonable request and that is the purpose of the clause. I do not think anything I have said is inconsistent with this authority sought in this part of the bill.

Mr. Baldwin: I have spent a great number of years representing people when the crown has exercised rights which different acts gave it. I point out to the minister that under subclause 4 there is nothing to stop the income tax return itself from being introduced as evidence. Subclause 4 reads:

> Notwithstanding any other act or law, no officer or employee of Her Majesty shall be required, in connection with any legal proceedings, to give evidence relating to any information that is privileged under subsection (1)—or to produce any statement or other writing containing any such information.

Subclause 5 goes on to say that so far as the proceedings concerned with the administration or enforcement with this act are concerned, subclause 4 does not apply. In my interpretation, if subclause 4 does not apply, then that does not apply to information with regard to various matters referred to in paragraph (a). Gone is the prohibition against producing a writing containing information. What other writing contains the information here referred to than an income tax return? This is a possibility. Granted, we hope that the right conferred by this part of the bill may not be exercised. On the other hand, taking these words in their common, ordinary interpretation, they give an officer of the department the right of being called as a witness in court and in testimony producing writing which contains the information in question. No longer shall people be covered by the cloak of protection surrounding income tax returns.

Mr. Fulton: This is what concerns me also. The protection is gone if the government is prosecuting, if it is enforcing this legislation. Then the officials can produce any information they wish, including the income tax return. But, for a private citizen seeking to establish his rights, the cloak of secrecy is on, because officials must be protected to use the ministers' words.

Mr. MacEachen: The officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare will not produce income tax returns because they will not have them.

Mr. Barnett: That is not what the act says.

Mr. Fulton: That is the point I just dealt with.

Mr. Crouse: Did I understand correctly that these provisions, are to enable the national health and welfare authorities to check with the authorities in the income tax department on applications made? Does this mean that every application, for example, will be checked with the income tax department? If that is so, surely the income tax department will require an additional number of people. Also, it seems to me that having breached the security of the Income Tax Act, primarily for the purpose of this act, there is nothing to stop the government from taking similar action in future to find out about returns being filed by citizens of Canada.

The truth is, and this is my view, that our income tax returns are no longer the confidential documents they have been in the past.

My question to the minister is this: how many of these applications will be checked? Will you take a spot check of so many applications or will you only check those which have been improperly filled in, ones you feel are attempts to make false representations to secure funds? What will your yardstick be before going to the income tax department and asking for a person's income tax return to be made available to your department so that your officials can make a comparison.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, we shall not ask for an income tax return to be made available to the Department of National Health and Welfare. If there is any reason to believe that a form is mistakenly filled out, then we shall ask the information to be checked. I think the normal procedure would be to conduct a sample or cross check, as recommended by the Senate committee.

Mr. Fulton: In my humble submission there is nothing in this act to limit its operations in the way the minister suggests. In paragraph (a) the Minister of National Revenue may make information available to the Department of National Health and Welfare relating to any applicant:

—beneficiary or spouse, for any purpose relating to the administration of this act—

There is nothing in that subparagraph or subsection which says that the Minister of National Health and Welfare cannot get from the Minister of National Revenue a copy of an income tax return for the purpose of making available the information that is sought. Furthermore subsection 5 says:

Subsections (1) and (4) do not apply in respect of proceedings relating to the administration or enforcement of this act.

As I said a moment ago, it is intolerable that if the department is prosecuting in proceedings relating to the enforcement of the act the information, so to speak, is home free.

Then the officials can talk to their hearts' content, but when private citizens are involved the veil of silence falls.

However, leaving that point aside, I submit that in any proceedings for the enforcement of this Act the obvious way for the minister to establish the point which the department is trying to maintain would be to produce an income tax return at variance with a return filed under this legislation. How could a court be convinced that there was documentary evidence to the contrary unless the department produced an authenticated copy of the document itself? The framing of the legislation invites the production of the return when the department is prosecuting, and there is nothing here which would limit or prohibit production in such case. If the intention is that the complete income tax return should not be shown to the minister or to his officials, but only information extracted therefrom, then in my submission the legislation does not say so. Over the course of time, it invites those developments which I have in mind whenever the department, in the process of administration on enforcement decides it will go to court and produce the evidence at its disposal.

Mr. MacEachen: I appreciate the comments which have been made by the hon. member for Kamloops. I can only repeat the statement I have made about the procedure contemplated. The Department of National Health and Welfare does not propose to have income tax returns at its disposal. Not having the advantage of a legal training that the hon. member for Kamloops and the hon. member for Peace River have enjoyed,—

Mr. Knowles: Is that an advantage?

Mr. MacEachen: —I would think that the expression "for any purpose relating to the administration of this Act" limits the information which the Minister of National Revenue could make available. He could only make available information relating to the purposes of this Act.

Mr. Fulton: Would the minister look at subclause (5) in that connection? Subclauses (1) and (4) do not apply. In other words, the limitations are removed in respect to proceedings relating to the enforcement of this Act. So, whatever restrictions there may be are lifted when it comes to administration or enforcement.

Mr. Knowles: Then what does the clause say?

Mr. Fulton: I think the proper procedure would be to request that this proposed section 17 stand while the minister considers with his officials the introduction of words in the bill which would embody the limitations which he himself has stated to be in contemplation, so that the measure may reflect the practice which he says will be followed. I suggest that consideration be given to whether one or two of the subclauses might not be reworded so as to carry into statute law the expression of intention which the minister has given us.

Mr. MacEachen: A moment ago the hon. member for Kamloops argued that this information should be available to the courts. Now, he has changed his mind and is suggesting that it should not be. He has turned a full circle.

Mr. Fulton: Let us not move into the area of semantics. I have said only that if there are to be restrictions on disclosures, they should be complete. I have objected to limitations being placed on disclosure when a citizen who wants the information for the purpose of protecting his rights in court asks for access to it, but full right of disclosure being given to government for purposes of administration and enforcement. But it is obvious that the minister does not intend to remove the limitation in the interest of the citizen. Again, I have won the argument, though we would probably lose the vote if a vote were taken on the point.

But now, I am asking the minister to look at the other side of his own argument. He says that the complete information available in income tax returns will not be disclosed to him or his officials even for the purpose of enforcing that Act. I am asking him to write that into law, because there is nothing in the law as it now stands to prevent that happening. Indeed, the lifting of the limitation when it comes to enforcing the act invites the disclosure and production of the whole income tax file.

Mr. MacEachen: I would argue that we are limited. The Minister of National Revenue can only give information to us which is necessary for the administration of the Old Age Security Act. He cannot go beyond that. I would argue that the Income Tax Act does not permit the minister to make the form available to another department. It follows that the document would never be in our possession or in the possession of officials for the purpose of prosecution.

Mr. Baldwin: I am compelled reluctantly to disagree with the minister. Let me remind him of subclause (3) which says "notwithstanding any other act or law—". We come down to the question of enforcement. Unless countermanded in this bill, the rules of evidence are that the best evidence must be given and I have no doubt that any judge would tell an official who appeared before him and attempted to give hearsay evidence as to the contents of a document, that the document itself should be produced.

The rule is that the best evidence must be produced, and it appears to me that under certain conditions the rule would only be satisfied by the production in writing of the document on the basis of which the enforcement proceedings were begun. The minister has told us what his intentions are. In the circumstances, it would be simple to insert a subclause here to the effect that it is the intention that no income tax returns shall be available for use in court at any time. It would be a simple clause giving effect to the protestations the minister has made. This would set at rest the very real fears which have been expressed on this side of the house.

Mr. Aiken: I should like to put a direct question to the minister in connection with the administration of the act. Let us suppose that the income of an applicant is questioned. Let us suppose that the spouse of an applicant has given information concerning her income. Let us also suppose that the applicant and the spouse dispute the information which is in the possession of the investigating officer. In such a case, I would assume, the officer interviewing the applicant would say: "You say you only got $300 last year, but your employer says you got $500." The applicant says: "That is not true; I do not believe what you are telling me."

Is it not to be expected that at this point the applicant would go to his wife's employer and say: "I got this information from the man at the national health and welfare office. He has your income tax returns and he say that you paid more than I said."

• (5:50 p.m.)

What is the employer going to feel about the confidentiality of his income tax return if some person who has worked for him casually for a few weeks during summer comes to him and says, "I have been told your income tax return shows certain things. I got this from an investigating officer of the Department of National Health and Welfare, and he has the information on his file"? It seems to me there is both a legal and practical implication here, and I cannot think of anything worse respecting the confidentiality of income tax returns. This is a practical example of what could happen.

The broadness of the words proposed, "relating to any applicant, beneficiary or spouse" could extend the provision into other areas such as the relationship between landlord and tenant, or any other financial relationship with any other person who files an income tax return. If the minister's intention is to keep the information limited within the department, then let the new section clearly say so. This is the only basis upon which we could reasonably accept the wide wording of this subsection which would appear to allow income tax information to enter the hands of any local investigating officer.

I am sure there would be no point in saying that the information will be revealed only to somebody in Ottawa, because the information will be passed to the local investigating officer, in Vancouver, Parry Sound, or anywhere else, who will be dealing with the individual applicant. I think the wording is much too broad and much too loose, and I support the arguments that have been made that the bill should have a definite provision stating how far the Department of National Revenue can go in providing information.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I think sufficient information has now been supplied to the minister to show the weakness of the proposed section. The suggestion that the section be stood and an attempt made to redraw it, is sound. I like the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, suggesting that instead of the Department of National Revenue providing information to the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of National Health and Welfare should submit the information supplied it by an applicant to the Department of National Revenue, with a simple request asking whether the information is accurate or inacccurate. If the information is inaccurate then the applicant would be obliged to furnish the Department of National Health and Welfare with a better statement.

This would avoid disclosure of income tax returns, which is what hon. members are objecting to, and would keep inviolate the requirement pertaining to income tax information. Despite what the minister may intend, there is a loophole in the proposed section as it now reads, which might be taken advantage of by someone. Our purpose is to put the bill in such a form that it will not have to be modified within 12 months, and that it will not permit people to take advantage of some omission on our part. The suggestion made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni might well meet the objections that have been raised from other quarters in the chamber.

As I understand the minister, all he wants to know is whether an applicant is giving correct information with regard to his income. If we are correct in our assumption that a very small percentage of people will give inaccurate information, perhaps a few deliberately and some by inadvertence or error, then why open up the Income Tax Act and the secrecy surrounding returns? The minister's purpose would be accomplished by a simple answer from the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Fulton: The minister appears to be determined to ignore the reasonable request that the final three subclauses stand. As an alternative, and not to put the minister on the spot, may I suggest that we rise for two hours during what is normally the dinner recess so as to allow him to consider the matter?

Mr. MacEachen: I have listened very carefully to the representations made by members of the committee, and I have listened to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni who, I know, understands the procedure which I am recommending in this connection. The first point to be made is that the Minister of National Revenue makes information available on the request of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister of National Health and Welfare must ask the Minister of National Revenue for information relating to the income, or income from a particular source or sources, of an applicant.

Mr. Fulton: Any person designated by you could make that request.

Mr. MacEachen: It is upon the request of the minister, and naturally we know officials are designated to act for ministers, but the information sought is related to the income "for any purpose relating to the administration of this act". The Income Tax Act would prohibit the Minister of National Revenue making the full income tax form available to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or any of his officials. He could not do that because there is information on the income tax return which is much broader than information required for the "administration of this act."

I think we are agreed as to the procedure to be followed, and I do not see any better way of reflecting this in the law. I have explained to the committee the procedure we propose to follow. It is precisely the procedure as described by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and the hon. member for Winnipeg

South Centre. We will say to the Department of National Revenue, "You tell us if this is accurate." If it is not accurate, if there are significant differences then we will have to ask the applicant for further information.

Mr. Churchill: The minister has ended up on the right note but he did not start that way. The minister started by saying his officials would ask the Department of National Revenue to give information with regard to the income of the applicant. That is wider than what is suggested by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and by myself. What we have suggested is that the minister, or his officials, submit the statement of the applicant to the Department of National Revenue and ask the simple question, "Is the income statement on this form accurate or inaccurate"? They should stop at that point.

Mr. MacEachen: Well, this is precisely the procedure which we propose to follow. We will submit the information and ask whether it is accurate. Naturally, if it is inaccurate, the department will tell us and we will have to obtain more information.

Mr. Fulton: That is the reverse of what the bill says.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Perhaps at this time the Chair might be permitted to give the questions to be asked on the adjournment debate.

[Translation]

It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be debated at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), shipping—use of Russian icebreaker in St. Lawrence River; the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hopkins), public works—Pembroke, Ont.—wharf facilities; the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), administration of justice—amendments to Criminal Code and Canada Evidence Act with respect to prisoners' confessions.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I had in mind asking whether we were going to have any time off for supper, but I see the Minister of Transport in his place and he is never interested in things like that.

Mr. Barnett: Invite him to leave the house, and then come back to your question.

Mr. Knowles: I will return to this matter later. May I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare what the plans of the department are at the inauguration of the supplementary payment? As I see it, in the months of January, February and March the department possibly will receive three quarters of a million applications for the supplement. With respect to how many of these does the department intend to check the information from the Department of National Revenue and on what basis will these cases be picked up?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I dealt with this question earlier in reply to a question raised by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg. I am quite satisfied that the main procedure will be to conduct a sample check of these forms, unless there is some apparent reason that the forms should be verified. This is the procedure which has been recommended by the Senate committee; that is, that sample checks be conducted. This is the main procedure which will have to be followed. We do not propose to send every form to the Department of National Revenue for verification. We will do it on a sampling basis.

Mr. Knowles: In other words, it will just be made clear to the applicants that any particular application may be sent over to the Department of National Revenue for a check.

Mr. MacEachen: I think it will be a good idea to make that clear to the applicant.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, it seems that it is going a bit far to start sampling when you do not have an idea there is anything wrong. I think that if the applicant files a return and there is nothing in it which suggest there is anything wrong you should not take this discriminatory action. This is something to which I object in respect of other forms of legislation. It is an act of discrimination when merely because somebody's name turns up in a hat a check is made of that individual's form. In this case, the individual is put through the wringer while dozens are going scotfree. I do not think this is a proper procedure at all. Surely, there must be a better way in which to find out whether or not there is anything wrong. I think that in looking at an application the individual dealing with it should have a question in his mind about it before he does any checking.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggested that I make a try for the supper break. I should like to do so even though the Minister of Transport shakes his head. That is not unusual conduct on the part of the Minister of Transport.

The point I wish to make is that by suggesting the sampling of a certain number of applications the minister is opening the way for a game of Russian roullette with the problems of our old people. It seems to me that the danger in respect of these proposed sections is that they open the way for spiteful letters to be written by people who do not sign their names. These letters might be written to a department indicating that some old age pensioner is not entitled to receive the supplementary benefit. I think by this action the minister is opening up a Pandora's box of every type of imaginable evil. I hope he will consider the very good suggestion made here in respect of amendments to proposed section 17 which were presented by those who have taken part in this debate.

I seem to recall an occasion, under the former administration, when a court held that an income tax return was compellable evidence and the Minister of National Revenue of that day immediately caused an amendment to be made to the law to see that the complete umbrella of privilege was given to the income tax return. I commend that course to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I should like also to point out that if these 500 people who are hired full time to look into these returns wish to keep themselves occupied, surely they are going to have to write to an equivalent number of civil servants in the Department of National Revenue who will haul out these returns and give the answers. Not only will we have the direct proliferation of 500 full time civil servants plus the part time civil servants in the Department of National Health and Welfare—what an empire builder the minister could become—but in the Department of National Revenue, not for empire building but for the sake of preserving the department's sanity, hundreds of civil servants would have to be hired to answer these questions.

It is easier to ask these questions than it is to answer them, so the net result may be that for every new employee hired by the Department of National Health and Welfare you would have to have two new civil servants appointed by the Department of National Revenue. I think the minister should be persuaded to allow us a supper break while he looks into the points I and other members of the committee have made this afternoon.

[Mr. McCleave.]

Mr. Olson: Could the minister give us some explanation in respect of the handling of these applications from those people who feel they made available through the post offices? Will the provincial welfare departments assist in filling them out in the initial stages, or will the applicants have to wait until there is a federal staff in the field which can take the applications from those people who feel they may be qualified? How is it going to be done? Perhaps information in this regard would assist members of the committee a little in trying to evaluate all the ramifications which will be involved in getting the applications back to the department in as accurate a form as possible.

• (6:10 p.m.)

Perhaps the vast majority of those who will be eligible will have their applications approved in time to receive their payments toward the end of March.

Mr. MacEachen: We propose to send out application forms to all old age pensioners so they will be able to fill them out and return them as quickly as possible. My hope is that the bulk of the cheques will go out in March, with perhaps a few going out in April, but that situation may in fact be reversed. I have no authority until this bill is passed to have these application forms printed, and that will take some time. After this bill is passed, we will get the forms printed and mailed out as quickly as possible. We think most old age pensioners will be able to fill them out quickly and send them back. We will process them as soon as possible.

Mr. Olson: Is the minister now saying that these forms will not be as complex as the income tax forms, for example? In some cases I presume there will be some complexity in calculating net income, particularly on the part of those pensioners who have property investments of one kind or another. In some cases the senior citizens will have to deduct the expenses involved in administering their property, in which case these application forms may be as complex as income tax returns. The minister knows, as does the Minister of National Revenue, that most citizens in Canada who have a complex income structure cannot fill out income tax forms by themselves but go to lawyers, public accountants and chartered accountants for assistance.

Perhaps the minister could explain to the committee how a senior citizen who has an involved income structure will be able to arrive at a net income in some way more simple than that required in respect of income tax forms. Does the minister have some other basis of calculating income in mind in so far as applications for supplements are concerned which would be significantly different from the method required under the Income Tax Act.

The Income Tax Act is very complex, and while there are reasons for that complexity perhaps the minister can tell us how this process of arriving at net income is to be simplified for these applicants for the supplement?

Mr. MacEachen: The proposed form is to be much more simple than the regular income tax form. If there are pensioners with complicated income structures, then they must be filling out income tax returns and are aware of the complexities involved. I believe the number of pensioners with complicated problems such as those suggested will be small. We will give every possible assistance through the income tax offices and district pension offices. That is the way we hope to proceed.

Mr. Olson: Let me pursue this subject a little further by asking one more question. I cannot agree with the minister's suggestion that all those pensioners who have complex income structures are now filing income tax returns. It is possible to have a complex income structure without receiving sufficient income requiring you to file an income tax return. Only those people who have a taxable income after claiming their personal exemptions are required to file an income tax return.

Some senior citizens may have small property holdings which do not return a sufficient net income to be taxable. It seems to me that in fairness we should apply the same laws in arriving at net income in order that our senior citizens may obtain the benefit of supplements. They should be allowed to make the same deductions from their gross income as they are in arriving at net income for the purposes of taxation. Many of these senior citizens are not familiar with deductions and exemptions. Their net incomes may have been worked out over the years by the national revenue department. With all deference to the minister, I cannot accept his suggestion that senior citizens who have complex income structures necessarily file income tax forms.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak on the matter before us, but I should like to make a serious appeal to the ministers present that we have a break for dinner. I am reminded that the hon. Minister of Transport and I attended what was called a hunger lunch earlier today. We ate little and learned much. We are expecting the budget to be brought down at eight o'clock, which may be a little tough to take on an empty stomach. In all seriousness it seems to me we would not be wasting our time by taking a break. On the contrary, we may actually save time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the hours of sitting are prescribed. We hope, too, to have a recess for a longer period of time and not just for those purposes suggested by the hon. gentleman. It is not the intention of the government to call any other item of business this afternoon once the item of business before the house now is concluded. If this bill can be passed, I would then ask the committee to rise to take a break for the necessary purpose so eloquently referred to by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, we are constantly being subjected to specious types of blackmail. We are always faced with the suggestion that we can take a supper break if we agree to certain things.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I think the hon. gentleman on reflection will regret the use of that word. Perhaps he was not present in the committee last Friday, when at three thirty in the afternoon, his colleague the hon. member for Ontario indicated that the members of his party had completed their discussion of the bill in committee and thought that it should be dealt with in about half an hour. I do not know what circumstances have arisen to change that situation, but we have not objected to the time that has been spent on this bill. We agree it is one of the most important pieces of legislation we have ever had before us. I think if we used the time prescribed by the rules to get on with this business and pass this legislation, we would be assisting the Minister of National Health and Welfare in getting these application forms printed in order that the measure can be carried out.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I have no regret about my use of the word "blackmail" and I use it again. I was present last Friday during committee proceedings. We were prepared at that time to go ahead, but circumstances changed between then and later as they have changed now. I was also here on Thursday night when the Minister of Transport tried to practice some of his well known trickery on the house. I say, following what was said by the hon. member for York South, that we are being subjected to blackmail in this house because of various things the government wants to do. Yet we have worked all year, and faithfully, and sat through luncheon hours and dinner hours to accomplish our purpose.

However, Mr. Chairman, now we are told that if we do not do this we will not have a supper break, or we may have to stay later before Christmas or come back earlier after the new year. This is the type of thing to which I object. We are here on serious business, and the serious business before us right now is trying to get this bill put into the shape in which it should be, in order to meet valid objections that have been raised by responsible members in the house. What surprises me is that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will not yield, when the point has been impressed upon him time and time again, and make the necessary adjustment.

Let me repeat our point. The secrecy of the Income Tax Act is being affected by this intrusion if the bill. All we are asking is that we retain the secrecy of the Income Tax Act and not try to modify it through other bills that may be passed by this house. In order to bring the matter to a head, Mr. Chairman, I propose the following amendment:

That section 17, subsection (3) (a) be modified as follows:

That all the words after the word "purpose" in line 46, page 9, be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "a report as to the accuracy of the information concerning income submitted by the applicant."

Then the section would read as follows:

(3) Notwithstanding any other act or law,

(a) the Minister of National Revenue or any person designated by him for the purpose may, upon the request of the minister furnish to the minister or to any officer or employee in the Department of National Health and Welfare designated by the minister for the purpose, a report as to the accuracy of the information concerning income submitted by the applicant.

I send this amendment up to you, sir. I move it, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario. I suggest that if this wording is not satisfactory to the law officers of the crown, it can be modified so that it will stand up under scrutiny. The intent and purpose as expressed by the minister himself is contained in the suggested amendment. There will be no intrusion on the secrecy of income tax returns. It is not a question of the officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare asking the Department of National Revenue to give them the figures on income tax returns of an applicant; it is the other way around. The Department of National Health and Welfare submits the figures given by the applicant in disclosing his income for the purposes of this act, and the Department of National Revenue, without showing any form of giving any additional information or anything of that nature, or disclosing the secrecy of the information they have at their disposal, simply replies, "the information is accurate" or, "It is inaccurate". I suppose they would have to expand upon the last statement and say, "There is a lack of disclosure of further income". Then, the onus of proof rests on the applicant to show that he has disclosed his full income.

There is no need then for any search of additional questions by the Department of National Health and Welfare of the Department of National Revenue. The income tax return then stays as it is now, not open to any one at all. The Minister of Finance twice, last week and again today, mentioned the fact that under the act of that department they are prohibited—these are the words he used today—from forwarding information to any other department or authority. It is rather interesting that on Friday the Minister of Finance used words similar to that and again today he used those words, just as if he were somehow indirectly attempting to influence the Minister of National Health and Welfare with regard to this section in the bill. I am sure the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue could not agree on this provision because it is opening the door to what has been secret in the past with regard to income tax returns.

I would, therefore, suggest that amendment, sir, or an amendment that can be fixed up by the law officers of the crown so that it will not be misunderstood by anybody. I drafted the amendment hastily here, of course; but I repeat that it shows the intent that the minister himself disclosed this afternoon.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether while the minister is being given a minute to consider this amendment I might humiliate myself a little, and perhaps in doing so restore some good humour that may temporarily have gone from the committee. I was told years ago that one should never apologize and never explain. I never thought that was a very good principle; I have tried to apologize every time I thought there was any real ground for doing so. I have taken the things that have been said about me, and what happened the other day, in as good a part as I could without any attempt to make any reply. But I do hope that hon. members, whatever they may have said publicly, do not really feel that what they said was quite justified. I may have acted in a foolish fashion, I may have acted in a tactless fashion, but I did honestly think I was following the rules. No one had ever told me there had been an arrangement of the sort that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works told me about when he came in that evening.

I readily and immediately agreed that if I had made that kind of mistake, it ought to be repaired. I just want to say that, Mr. Chairman, because although I really do not particularly relish having to say this, it happens to be the truth.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, what the Minister of Transport has said is a fair statement. I fully believe that he was acting within what he considered to be the rules of the house the other evening. Frankly, I did not say it to his face but I told my colleagues that he was just being quite alert and politically smart, in the proper sense of the term. But we have had a full explanation now of what was intended during the course of the year, so we will absolve the minister from anything with regard to what some people would call skulduggery. However, we will keep a very close watch on him in the future. If he really wants to be in the proper Christmas spirit and help everybody out, I hope he will immediately get in touch with Air Canada and find out whether they are supplying as many flights to the maritimes and western Canada as they are to Florida and places like that. Some of us would like to know whether we will be able to get home for Christmas.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think hon. members on the other side of the house are more particularly interested in this information and it is desirable that they receive it. I will do my best to help to facilitate arrangements of that kind, and I will do it very happily. My hon. friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare is considering the amendment, and it has been suggested to me that he would like to further consider the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Perhaps we could allow this new section to stand and proceed to consideration of the next one.

The Chairman: Order, please. Perhaps for the benefit of members of the committee I should read the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre:

> That section 17, subsection (3) (a) be modified as follows:
> That all the words after the word "purpose" in line 46, page 9, be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "a report as to the accuracy of the information concerning income submitted by the applicant."

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I should like to have an opportunity to consider this amendment and especially to ensure that it is put in proper legal form. I do not know whether members of the committee have any further problems with respect to the remaining clause in the bill. Perhaps we could move on to that clause and dispose of it. We could then recess and deal with the clause now before us at 7.45.

Mr. Barnett: I think the suggestion just made by the minister might very well appeal to hon. members in all parts of the committee. However, while the committee appears to be in this mood, I would like to take a moment to sing the praises of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, something which perhaps does not happen every day of the week from this particular quarter of the house. I appreciate very much the fact that he has taken the trouble to draft in amendment form a suggestion which I put before the minister previously. I certainly agree that the drafting of this particular amendment should be carefully considered. It appears to me that this might be a situation where the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and I might be close together and we could come to a very happy accommodation on the point which has been the subject of considerable discussion.

Mr. MacEachen: As far as I am concerned, the general intent of the amendment is acceptable. I want to make sure of what the report covers, that is if it does not check we want to have more information than just the fact that it does not check. We also want to provide for the necessity of acquiring information on the income of the spouse in the case of a joint application for married couples under the act.

I would be quite happy to agree to an amendment that would call for a report from the Department of National Revenue instead of income tax returns which I never intended to have anyway. I am very anxious to see the next clause passed before we adjourn and then to come back at 7.45 to consideration of the amendment before us. I do not think there is anything very difficult in the next clause. It has to do with regulations which affect what has been passed already.

Mr. Knowles: I think this suggestion is not unreasonable. It is my impression that we may not be very long on the next clause on which I have one or two comments. However, I wonder whether instead of coming back at a quarter to eight we could not do so later tonight, after the budget speech and the remarks from the hon. member for Perth. If we come back at a quarter to eight and do not complete our consideration of the bill then the Minister of Finance will be frustrated and we would not want to be the cause of that.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, we have no objection at all to the amendment. We think it covers the point I was trying to make a while ago because under the bill we are asking for a comparison and a statement if the information of the Department of National Revenue does not agree with that which is supplied by the applicant. This satisfies the point I was trying to make.

Mr. Churchill: May I say one more word? The hon. member for Peace River and the Leader of the Opposition raised a constitutional issue on Friday and again today to which the minister has not yet given an answer. Will we have an answer with regard to this matter before this bill is passed because this is one of the stumbling blocks at present?

Mr. MacEachen: I will be glad to make some comments on that before the bill is completed. I am sure there will be an opportunity for that during third reading of the bill.

The Chairman: Does the committee agree to stand new section 17, which of course means that the whole of clause 3 will stand, and to proceed to a discussion of clause 4?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 4.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I have a brief word to say with particular reference to the new section 18 being enacted by clause 4, and more particularly with reference to sub paragraph (a), which has to do with the application forms which pensioners will be required to complete in order to receive the supplement. The minister has told us that this is a very simple form, but that he cannot let us see it in advance.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Perhaps I should not be so suspicious just six days before Christmas but I have a gnawing notion that when we see this form, and the explanations which will be given to the people on how to fill it out, we will find it not to be as simple as the minister assures us it is. I think he should be more precise. He must have some idea of what will be in this form. I think he should read the terms of it to us. I do not think it would be proper for him to insist that he does not know what is in it because he is a member of the Liberal party and I received today the Bulletin of the Liberal Federation of Canada dated December 1966 which deals with the guaranteed income plan. It is a very interesting document. My chief quarrel with it is that the document ends with a preposition, but I have a few other things to say about it as well. The following sentence appears in the middle of one paragraph:

> If the bill is approved before the Christmas recess a simple form will be mailed to all recipients of old age assistance—

I believe the Liberal Federation made a mistake. It should read "old age security". It then goes on:

> —in their January cheque envelopes. All the information that this form requests is the gross income of the pensioner in the previous year, this same information is provided by the pensioner each year on his income tax return, and the only purpose of the form is to calculate the amount of extra benefit the pensioner is entitled to.

I ask the minister to take note of the tense of that sentence. It reads: "All the information that this form requests is". Apparently the Liberal Federation of Canada, located at 251 Cooper Street, Ottawa, has seen the form. If the Liberal Federation has seen it and knows what is in it, why should not parliament have it too?

Mr. MacEachen: I assure my hon. friend that the Liberal Federation has not seen the form and if it had, the commentary would have been somewhat different. I think the form is quite simple, maybe that is because I am a bit simple minded. It is simpler than the income tax form.

Mr. McCleave: Anything is simpler than that.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: The applicant will be asked to list his sources of income. There will be several categories as reminders; there will be earnings, interest and so on. Other information will be asked with respect to age, date of birth, marital status and if they want to take one of the retirement options in the bill.

They will have a chance to place a tick in the appropriate spot and we shall send out a form to them. The sources of income are listed. There are eight sources and above that there is an indication of what not to regard as income along the lines I described to the house. I think that is it.

Mr. Knowles: It sounds as if the minister is looking at a copy of the form. If he has got one he should let parliament have it. What he said in the last few minutes shows it is not as simple as he says or as the Liberal Federation insists. If there are all these categories of what is and what is not income, and if the calculation of income as defined in the new section 9 and the statement as set out in new section 10 are included in the form, I am afraid the pensioners will find themselves with quite a job when it comes to filling out this form.

A moment ago the minister said he was a simple minded person. I wish he were simple minded enough to realize that it would be far better if we did not have this test at all. What we should have is just a straight addition of $30 a month to the old age security payment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: And do you know what, Mr. Chairman? I think the minister agrees with us.

Mr. Leboe: Can the minister tell us whether the figures on the form are to be net figures after taking into account depreciation on such things that may be needed to bring about a net figure? Will depreciation, and so on, be considered? Will you be asking for net figures?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Of course we should require net figures. I think there has been an excessive desire to make the subject look complicated. Undoubtedly, there will be a small number of pensioners who will have a complicated financial picture. I suggest that some of those are already familar with filing income tax returns and would not be bewildered. If there are pensioners with complicated problems, they can get assistance from the income tax department, from the district pension office or, perhaps, from members of parliament.

For the great bulk of them, it will be a simple operation. For a small group, there may be complications but they can get help.

Mr. Leboe: These figures then are to be net figures, no matter if there are complications? If the pensioners are to put down figures on the application form those figures will be what they consider net figures, I take it?

Mr. MacEachen: That is right.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I had to pass on my Liberal Federation bulletin; there seems to be a great deal of interest in it. But may I ask the minister whether the Liberal Federation was correct in the statement that these forms would be mailed out to our old age pensioners with the January cheque?

Mr. MacEachen: It depends—and I am very timid about making this comment because I do not want it to be thought that I am trying to push the committee faster than it wants to go—on when the bill is passed. I would give authority to get these forms printed then. It takes a number of weeks to get them printed because of printing schedules. It will be January or possibly February before we can get them out.

Mr. Knowles: It seems to me that the minister should make an effort to get the forms out sooner than that.

Mr. MacEachen: We did make that effort.

Mr. Knowles: Granted that it will take time to process the forms, but if we ask these people to fill out something they should have a chance of having it before them. They should have a chance to fill out the forms.

Mr. MacEachen: I agree with my hon. friend. I have been trying to accelerate the printing. The moment parliament passes the bill the printing will get under way as quickly as possible.

Mr. Barnett: Perhaps the minister might get a little help from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who, at some time, was a printer. Perhaps, he could help with the forms.

Mr. Knowles: It would be an awfully simple form if I printed it.

Mr. Barnett: I wish to ask a question of the minister arising from the new proposed section 18 which has to do, as I understand, with a re-enactment of the section in the Old Age Security Act providing for authority to make regulations on the part of the governor in council.

Up until now the only questions involved in old age security administration, so far as qualifications are concerned, have been age and residence. I have already spoken of those. This bill does, of course, open up other considerations which have been discussed at great length. Before posing my question, I should like to remind the minister of a statement he made to be found at page 11266 of Hansard of last Friday. Hansard records this:

> Mr. MacEachen: In calculating the supplement payable to a married person the idea is to take into account the combined income of a married couple. This part provides for the case where a married pensioner has an unmarried spouse—
> Mr. Knowles: An unmarried spouse?

The question I wish to ask the minister is, what about the case of the unmarried pensioner who has an unmarried spouse? The minister will recall that in certain other legislation, such as veterans' legislation, there is in fact provision made for this kind of situation, what is commonly referred to as a common law marriage. I ask the minister whether there is any arrangement within the redrafting of the regulations providing benefits where a pensioner has a spouse who has not been legally or formally put into the position of being a spouse. I do not want to get into a lengthy discussion but it seems to me that this situation might properly be taken care of under regulations without having it set out in great detail in the bill itself.

I again remind the minister that this situation has been dealt with by parliament in certain other related legislation. I particularly refer to legislation affecting war veterans' pensions. I hope to get some sort of answer from the minister to the question I posed.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Mr. McCleave: The minister may wish to wait a few moments while advice comes to him from the gallery where, no doubt, his officials are.

Since we are close to rising for supper, perhaps I may make a suggestion to the minister. Admittedly, it has to do with proposed section 21. This is the last suggestion for an amendment that the official opposition would like to make with regard to this bill. If the committee is agreeable, I could proceed to make a short speech outlining it now. If not, I will wait until later.

I take it that the committee is agreeable. The danger about 21 (1) (c) is that summary conviction proceedings may be used against any person who had received overpayments or who had wrongly received benefit. Under new section 20, such a person is required to return the amount of the overpayment or benefit. But under the paragraph I have just mentioned, criminal action could be taken. I make this brief point: the courts of this land are most unwilling that criminal processes should be used to recover civil debts. By putting these words in the bill a heavy club is placed over the heads of the people who might, in all innocence, have been unable to fill out the form correctly.

These people might think they are entitled to benefit when they applied and then, after they had received it, it would turn out that they were not. Ordinarily, under the criminal law, mens rea or criminal intent would be a factor. But this is not so under 21 (1) (c) which deals with a simple failure to return an overpayment. A person might not be in a position to do so. He might have received the money without there being a criminal thought in his head. Yet, he can be brought before a magistrate's court.

I realize the minister may say this is precisely the same procedure as that which now exists in connection with old age security legislation. But I do not believe it is the same. I can see that under old age security legislation if a person fraudulently gives an incorrect age as a means of obtaining benefit to which he is not entitled, that person should be punished. But in the present case the mistakes which arise will, more likely, be errors of judgment. For this reason, I suggest that either 21 (1) (c) be removed from the bill or, if the minister wishes to keep this paragraph, the word "fraudulently" be placed in front of it so that there must be evidence of criminal intent before any action can succeed in the courts.

Mr. MacEachen: The answer to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni is that the case he has mentioned is provided for inasmuch as an applicant may in this case apply as a single person, if he so wishes, or as a married person.

Mr. Nasserden: I should like to support the argument put forward by the hon. member for Halifax with regard to the provision to which he was referring. A number of cases have come to my attention concerning people who find themselves in difficulties after receiving supplementary assistance under the Old Age Security Act. An estimate is made of their income during the year. Then, after the year has gone by, it is found the amount was $12 or $14 or $25 higher than had been estimated. The department then rules that they were not eligible for any assistance at all, and they are charged with the entire amount of benefit they have received. In most cases, the money has been spent and there is no way in which the money can be recovered. I understand that in fact the department deducts if from pension cheques in succeeding months. Nevertheless, much hardship is caused to these old people. In many cases, it appears to me that the situation is brought about by whoever in the department had determined that a certain figure would be a fair estimate of the income of the person concerned. Surely there is no need to include in the bill a provision as harsh as this one seems to be.

Mr. McCleave: I understand that the minister will be studying my suggestion with his legal advisers during the supper period. My suggestion is that the word "fraudulently" be inserted, but if the minister can think of some better term we should be interested to hear what he has in mind. The hon. gentleman will understand our concern about using a criminal action in order to follow up what is essentially a civil wrong.

Mr. Régimbal: We have been objecting strongly to the "snooping" aspect of this legislation. Here, we have a good example of the way in which these things can build up and spread. The minister has suggested that some of these pensioners might be able to count on the assistance of friends or relatives when filling out these forms—that they could, perhaps, consult a relation or a member of parliament. Does not this imply that those who help in this way may have to hire "snoopers" to find out whether pensioners are telling the truth or not?

Mr. MacEachen: Has the hon. member never helped an old age pensioner to fill out a form? I certainly have.

Mr. Régimbal: But this is brand new. We are not familiar with these forms. What control has one over the information which is given. If misleading information is given, do these helpers become accomplices? When there is snooping, one thing leads to another.

Mr. MacEachen: With regard to the point raised by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave). What was he referring to?

Mr. McCleave: It was 21 (1) (c) on page 12.

Mr. MacEachen: I do not understand the point. We provide for refunds in the case of overpayment.

Mr. McCleave: I am not objecting to the principle of recovery. That, of course, involves a civil action and under new section 20 the minister clearly has the right to proceed for recovery of overpayments. I am objecting to this additional club which is being placed over people's heads inasmuch as they can now be taken into court under a process of summary conviction, found guilty and either fined or sentenced to a jail term for failing to return the amount of the overpayment.

My point is that the criminal courts are reluctant to be used as a means of recovering civil debts. The second point is that it would be simple enough for a person to make a mistake when determining income, for example, and find himself the recipient of a few extra dollars each month. Eventually, the department catches up with the mistake. Not only is action taken for recovery of the money, but there is a threat of action in the courts, and the danger is that a perfectly innocent person, with no intention to defraud, would find himself treated as a criminal.

Therefore I suggest to the minister and his officials that they use some word such as "fraudulently" so that the element of criminal intent is clearly brought in. Then, if somebody sets out to defraud the treasury of Canada of even a few dollars, he will be punished. I have no brief for any pensioner who engages in fraud. My brief is for the person who can fall into error, who can make a mistake in arithmetic and suddenly finds himself threatened with criminal action.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, in support of the point that the hon. member for Halifax is making, is it not enough, except in cases of fraud, that the government has the power to recover by withholding what is owing from future cheques? Most people who are going be affected by this legislation, whether they are pensioners or beneficiaries of pensioners, are going to be the recipients of government cheques—old age pensions or what have you. So I repeat my question, is it not enough that the money be recovered by retaining payments out of future cheques except in cases of fraud? Is that not what the hon. member for Halifax is asking?

Mr. Pickersgill: The words are there now.

Mr. MacEachen: We are merely re-enacting what is in the law now. It applies to a person who knowingly makes a false or misleading statement.

Mr. Knowles: But "knowingly" does not apply to (c), only to (a).

Mr. MacEachen: It reads:

—being the payee thereof—fails to return a cheque or the amount thereof—

There is no semicolon there.

Mr. Knowles: But, Mr. Chairman, the "knowingly" is in paragraph (a) and I submit therefore applies only to paragraph (a). If it were intended that the word "knowingly" was to apply to paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d), it would be in the top line after the phrase "every person who."

Mr. McCleave: The minister makes the error that all these are combined in one offence. Paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) contain four separate offences.

Mr. Knowles: I suggest that the minister might look at this over the supper half hour, which we might yet get.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, maybe it is because I have been in the committee so long that I do not understand the point of the complaint that is made. Persumably the hon. gentleman is referring to a pensioner who, by accident, receives an overpayment—

Mr. McCleave: Yes, that is it.

Mr. MacEachen: —and has not done so knowingly. Then, of course, it is up to the department, and it is only in case of absolute fraud that the department has ever taken any action. It has only been very rarely that it has taken such action.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If that is so, why not provide so?

Mr. MacEachen: Only a few very rare cases have been brought to my attention since I became minister where it would be essential to prosecute because of obvious fraud. However, we would be glad to take another look at this language over the dinner recess.

Mr. Knowles: Has the government not got protection under the Criminal Code in case of obvious fraud? Where there are overpayments the government has the authority, under section 20, to recover them in various ways. The Financial Administration Act gives power to recover. Where there is fraud the provisions of the Criminal Code would apply.

Mr. Leboe: I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has suggested the answer when he referred to putting the word "knowingly" in line 20 after the phrase "Every person who."

Mr. McCleave: I think a person would know he was failing to return a cheque, but I believe the person the department would want to get after would be the one who defrauds from the very beginning.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, if the minister gives consideration to this point I think he will make the alteration, because the fact that the section is almost a duplicate of the old section 9(1) indicates that we failed to do our duty when that legislation was before the house.

With respect to the "knowingly", I point out that you cannot knowingly fail to return a cheque just because you do not return it. The "knowingly" cannot refer to the failure to return a cheque or the amount thereof, as required by section 20. No one wants to convict a person for failure to return a cheque or the amount thereof, as required by section 20, unless that is done in a fraudulent manner or with intent. The minister says that of course the department would not prosecute a case unless there were fraud, but the fact remains that the law being what it is, on the face of it a person could be convicted.

For example, let us say I receive a cheque. I place myself in that position, not that I will ever get one under this legislation or indeed under the old age pension legislation at all, but if I got a cheque and did not return it it could have been negligence. It could have been through failure to appreciate the necessity of returning it. Therefore I am sure that if the minister looks into this he will realize that as it stands mere neglect could convict a person under paragraph (c). With respect to paragraph (b), that paragraph reads:

(b) being the payee thereof, negotiates or attempts to negotiate any cheque to which he is not entitled,

There the intent is present because if the payee negotiates or attempts to negotiate any cheque to which he is not entitled the law presumes that that person knows the natural consequence of his act. Paragraph (b) is therefore all right, but under paragraph (c) the failure to return the cheque or the amount thereof should only be made an offence when it is done with a fraudulent purpose. I can see no reason why the minister would not accept the reasonable suggestion made by the hon. member for Halifax.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I will be happy to consider this aspect and see if we can produce some wording to cover this point. If this is the last point in connection with the last clause I suggest we stand new section 21, pass the rest and then rise for a brief dinner adjournment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Until a quarter to eight.

The Chairman: Is there any further discussion on new section 18? Is it agreed to stand new section 18?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Is there any further discussion on new section 19? Is there any further discussion on new section 20? Is it agreed that new section 21 stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Chairman: Is the discussion on new section 23 completed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I wish to have this clear. I have to report back to the committee on this particular point which we have discussed for some time now, and on the points raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Churchill: May I say one other thing. It would be wise to discuss the matter I raised earlier about the confidential issue in committee, rather than on third reading. On third reading we are restricted in debate, so there will be these three things to be covered.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know the minister is just panting for the opportunity to be able to answer the questions about the situation that might be created by a province. It can happen under proposed section 23 which reads:

• (7:10 p.m.)

(1) There shall be established an account in the consolidated revenue fund to be known as the old age security fund to which shall be credited from time to time in respect of each fiscal year.

(a) an amount equal, in the opinion of the Minister of National Revenue, to

(i) the old age security tax collected, in that year before the time of crediting, by virtue of section 22, minus

(ii) the aggregate of

(A) amounts previously credited in respect of that year under this paragraph, and

(B) such amount as should be allowed for refunds that have been made or will have to be made; and

(b) the amount of each temporary loan made pursuant to this section.

(2) All benefits payable under this act shall be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund and charged to the old age security fund.

All these sections, of course, will be difficult to interpret should the legislature of the province of Quebec carry out its intention as evidenced by the speech from the throne. I should like to hear from the minister in this connection. We have been waiting with anticipation and hope that he would be able to explain what on the face of it appears to be unexplainable. Possibly that is the reason that up to the present moment he has shown no avid disposition to place before the committee and the country the views of the government on this very important matter.

When these moneys are paid into the consolidated revenue fund and a province has opted out—I presume that is the proper expression to use—from the federal legislation, what is the government's intention? There must be a decision made in this regard. The government knows now what it is going to do. No doubt it has discussed this matter at length. It evolved the system of opting out. I want to see the government opt in in so far as this legislation is concerned and place the house and the country in full possession of the facts and the view of the government.

The minister has an unusual capacity for explanation. He has shown that in respect of different bills. He has made a thorough study of this matter. The very simple question I place before him arises out of the constitutional issue. Does the government not agree that if any province so decides it may have its own old age pension plan? If that be the interpretation, and I can see no other on the basis of the statute as it now is and on the basis of the section in the B.N.A. Act, then if the legislature of a province decides it is going to have its own system for its own province, old age pensions being within the jurisdiction of the province except in respect of the limitations made by the amendment of some years ago, how is the government going to go about it? Are you going to take the moneys out of this fund which have been collected from the people of nine provinces and hand them over to the tenth province? If two provinces follow this course, are you going to use the moneys collected from the people of eight provinces and hand them to the other two provinces with no strings attached?

You are not going to get this legislation through until you tell us this. We simply want your answer. We will accept it. We know that you will have an ingenious plan in mind. I should like to know how you are going to do it and on what you have determined. The Prime Minister has stated in effect that constitutionally the government is convinced that the course it is following is entirely a correct and apt one. However, the government of the province of Quebec, following in the footsteps of its predecessor and also the incitement given by the Prime Minister and members of the government to the opting out concept, has declared its intention to establish its own system. We want to know what you are going to do about it. This is not a matter for next month or next year; it is not being postponed until July 1, 1968. This legislation is to come into effect immediately and, that being so, we are most anxious to know how this abstruse proposition is going to be met by a government noted for its diplomatic approach to problems and its failure to face up to those problems.

I am sure many thousands of people will await with tense interest the explanation of the minister. It is something that will tax the capacity of the government. That is about the only thing which has been left untaxed by this government, and we will get more taxes tonight. How are you going to do this? You collect the money through taxation, and the rumours are that all this government will be able to do will be to increase the income tax of those who have incomes of $6,000 or over. My friend moves his head in a negative manner. What are you going to do about this matter? When you collect the money how are you going to distribute it? You cannot force any province to accept something which constitutionally falls within the ambit of its authority.

I do not wish to detain the minister. It may be that he is not ready to reply and would like to stand this question along with the others until he is able to secure information.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I promised the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, and I repeat the promise to the Leader of the Opposition, that I will make some comments on the issues which have been raised. I am sure they will be inadequate to meet the much more experienced constitutional mind of the Leader of the Opposition. I am an amateur in this field but I will try later to make some comments.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why not now?

Mr. MacEachen: There has been an agreement that we rise until eight o'clock. Otherwise I should be quite happy to remain until eight o'clock to discuss the matter. At eight o'clock we have the budget and when that is completed we will return to this order. I should like to make the point that the committee has concluded its discussion of proposed section 23 and therefore we will have to discuss this point and the other two points which remain on the title.

Progress reported.

Mr. McIlraith: Eight o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Am I to take it that there is agreement to suspend the sitting until eight o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SITTING SUSPENDED

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

ADDITIONAL FINANCIAL MEASURES OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is not intended to be a full-fledged budget statement with the usual details of our finances and of the economic situation. I shall take the opportunity for a brief interim review of our fiscal position and its relation to the economic situation, but my main purpose tonight is to place before the house proposals for financing the guaranteed income supplement for those receiving old age security pensions. We shall be having to pay out about another $280 million a year for this purpose, commencing as soon as possible after January 1st, and I shall propose that we raise additional revenues of about that amount for budget and economic reasons.

In July, at the time of the announcement of the guaranteed income supplement, it was made clear that the government intended to cover the cost by additions to revenue. On September 8th, as the house will recall, I stated:

It was indicated in July that revenue measures would have to be considered to meet the burden of the income guarantee program. I have reached the conclusion that when this program is enacted it will be necessary to increase taxes or to introduce new taxes to meet our total requirements and to prevent the government's own increasing expenditures from having inflationary effects.

In the last two completed fiscal years, 1964-65 and 1965-66, that is, the two years ended 1966, our budgets have been very close to a balance in terms of our public accounts —there have been deficits amounting to only about one half of one per cent of our revenues. Looking at the position from a somewhat different point of view, that is, the overall economic effect of the federal government's receipts and disbursements, what the economists refer to as the national income accounts, there were surpluses of some $300 million in 1964-65 and about $600 million in 1965-66. These surpluses, in economic terms, have been helpful in pacing our economic expansion and in providing some of the savings required to finance the high level of investment needed for our rapidly growing economy.

Current Year Figures

In the current fiscal year I now forecast that our budgetary revenues before the tax changes I shall propose would be approximately $8,240 million compared with $8,300 million forecast in the budget last March. The reduction is chiefly due to corporate profits turning out to be less than expected, with the taxes thereon correspondingly reduced. In addition of course, the forecasts now reflect the effects of additional income tax abatements granted in favour of the provinces effective January 1st. I expect that our expenditures will be about $8,580 million compared with $8,450 million forecast in the budget last March. The increases here are spread over a large variety of programs and reflect in considerable part the increased levels of pay and prices. These forecasts of revenues and expenditures would leave us with a budgetary deficit of approximately $340 million compared with the budget forecast of $150 million. Our surplus in terms of the national economic accounts I would forecast at roughly $140 million compared with the budget forecast of $455 million. The refundable tax on cash profits is excluded from both of these figures.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Our net financing requirements for non-budgetary transactions, before tax changes and excluding transactions in our own debt, I estimate to be $342 million compared with $190 million at the time of the budget, taking into account the refundable tax. Members of the house will recall that in my last budget speech I said that it was not my intention to disburse the funds received from the refundable tax but to hold them as an addition to cash balances unless economic circumstances were to change and make it desirable for us to borrow less and ease the pressure on the capital market. This is still my intention. The possibility cannot be excluded of course, that our requirements will make it necessary for the government to borrow extra funds in the market before the end of the fiscal year.

Prospects for 1967-68

I do not propose at this time to forecast the budget for the next fiscal year. That will be done in the spring as usual. Our expenditure programs are still being worked out by the Treasury Board. It is still too early to forecast the economic position with enough accuracy and confidence to estimate our revenues. It is already evident, however, that our expenditures will continue to rise next year quite apart from the guaranteed income supplement. We have already taken on two major commitments in increased equalization payments to the provinces and substantially increased assistance for higher education. We have many large and important programs which are expanding, such as those for scientific research and development, and those for foreign aid. These are worthy projects supported strongly in this house and by the public. Having said this, I want to repeat what I said in this house on September 8th and on other occasions, that we must moderate the rate of increase in new public expenditures. Neither the capacity nor the willingness of Canadians to pay higher taxes should be taken for granted.

On the revenue side the situation in the next year is complicated by our relations and arrangements with the provinces. Already we have undertaken to recommend to parliament a further abatement of our income taxes—personal and corporate—next year in order to make more room for the provinces to increase such taxes to meet the rapidly rising costs of higher education including technical education. The income tax bill, which I plan to introduce before the recess to implement the portions of the March budget resolutions not dealt with in the bill passed in July, will contain clauses to provide for these abatements. In view of the discussion in the committee last friday, I might also mention at this time that we had put in this bill a specific provision exempting from tax social assistance payments based on needs or means, and made under either federal or provincial legislation.

Economic Situation

When I reviewed the economic situation in September, I thought that it might be necessary to increase our revenues in order to counteract the increase in some of our other expenditures this year, and to make possible some relaxation in monetary restraint. Developments in the past three months, however, suggest to me that the undesirable acceleration of the demands upon our economy has moderated. There has been some economic readjustment taking place following the excessive rates of expansion that occurred earlier this year. The effects of a large number of strikes have also been appearing in the statistics. My judgment is that the economic expansion now taking place is more in line with the capability of our economy to grow steadily without inflation. While prices and wages are increasing at rates that are still excessive, I now believe we can expect some moderation in the trend of wage increases and further restraint in pricing policies. Our current position is one of delicate balance and we want to ensure that our economic policies do not contribute either to a serious decline in 1967 or to a re-emergence of strong inflationary pressures as we attempt to adjust to a sustained rate of economic growth.

The Canadian economic outlook for 1967 cannot be fully assessed as yet. We do not yet know enough of the capital spending plans of business or of provinces and municipalities. I believe, however, the rate of increase in such capital expenditures will be less than in the past two years, and should be a closer match to our growing capacity. Moreover, our exports, and our general business behaviour, are much influenced by the economic situation in the United States and that is unusually difficult to foresee this December. Within a few weeks we will know much more of United States policy in regard to defence expenditures and the fiscal measures likely to be proposed to deal with them. We will be in a much better position in several months to appraise our outlook and take promptly such action as may be necessary. Should some relaxation of restraint be needed there will be no difficulty in moving quickly in either the monetary or fiscal field or both. For example, the government will not hesitate to bring before parliament at short notice a measure to end the collection of the refundable tax on business profits or even to make reductions in taxes if that is necessary to achieve a proper fiscal policy for economic reasons. I believe, and in this my views are shared by the governor of the Bank of Canada, that the appropriate mix of policies in such circumstances would be one which permitted some easing of the credit situation.

On the other hand, in 1967 we cannot be expected to permit a degree of expansion of the total demands on the economy that would encourage or endorse further increases in wages and prices at the rates that have been occuring during 1966. If some moderation in demands with inflationary consequences does not occur we may well find it necessary to impose sufficient fiscal restraint upon the economy as a whole to check them. At this time, I am very happy to say, it does not appear such further action will be necessary, and I certainly hope it will not be.

General Policy

Consequently, I am not proposing tonight any general changes in taxation for the purpose either of stimulating or of applying further restraints to the economy. The measures proposed are intended only to counterbalance, financially and economically, the expenditures on the guaranteed income supplement with a small margin to allow for the fact that the payments we make to the old age pensioners are sure to be spent while some of the revenues we get will come out of savings. Given our present economic and budgetary situation, I believe this neutral action to be about right.

To raise all the revenues that are required by all governments in Canada—about $18 billion a year currently—requires a large variety of taxes and charges. We can count on a growth in these revenues as our economy grows and prospers but the rate of real growth in the economy is limited by the growth in our labour force and the improvement in its use and productivity. It is all too easy to anticipate the growth in our revenues and to commit ourselves to spending programs that outrun it. The consequence of over-running it, which those who elect us and make demands on us must face, is that we must raise by increased taxes for public purposes or for redistribution of income an increasing fraction of our total national product. It is because we are in that position that tonight we are asking the Canadian public to accept increased taxes in order that we may distribute more to our old age pensioners with low incomes.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Old Age Security Fund

I turn now to the tax measures I am proposing—two increases in existing taxes. The first is an increase in one of the taxes under the Old Age Security Act, which will increase the revenues of the old age security fund. Let me first explain the situation of that fund and the policy I propose in regard to it.

When the Old Age Security Act was passed late in 1951 it set up this fund to which were to be credited the revenues from certain specified taxes levied under that act, and which were regarded at the time as essentially contributions for the financing of the pensions authorized by the act. While individual pensions were not related to the taxes or contributions paid by the pensioner, it was felt the aggregate pensions should be related to the revenues of the fund. This was intended to be a means of ensuring the proper financing of the pensions and of ensuring a sense of responsibility in determining from time to time how much the pensions ought to be. The Minister of Finance is required to review annually the state of the fund and to recommend measures to increase the revenues of the fund if it appears the revenues for the ensuing year will not be sufficient to meet the charges on the fund without further loans from the consolidated revenue fund.

I would ask permission of the house to insert here in Hansard, for the convenience of hon. members, a table showing for each fiscal year since the act was passed the pension payments made from the fund, the revenues credited to it for each of the three taxes levied under the act, and finally the deficit or surplus for the year, with footnotes indicating how these deficits were dealt with.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[1]Program commenced January 1952.
[2]Estimated (excluding the guaranteed income supplement and tax change).

Mr. Sharp: It will be noted that during the first eight fiscal years of its operations, the fund incurred deficits amounting in all to $602 million. These were met out of general revenues, or in one case charged to the reserve against losses on realization of assets, which amounts to much the same except for accounting purposes. Hon. Donald Fleming, in his budget of April, 1959, concerned over these increasing deficits taken in conjunction with the recent increases in pension rates, increased the rates of all three old age security taxes from 2 per cent to 3 per cent, which brought about a rough balance in the fund for the next three years. Increasing deficits then occurred, accelerated by the increase in pensions early in 1962. They were financed by temporary loans from the consolidated revenue fund. When the rate of the pension was increased to the present level in the autumn of 1963 the rate of contribution from the tax on personal incomes was raised from 3 per cent to 4 per cent effective January, 1964. This, together with the removal of exemptions from the sales tax and the effects on revenues of increasing incomes and sales, brought in sufficient revenue to produce surpluses in the fund during the past two fiscal years, and this year as well. These have resulted in the repayment of the temporary loans made to the fund in the preceding two years and the accumulation of a credit balance of $217 million at the end of the last fiscal year, and of $353 million at the end of October. This surplus is much less, it will be noted, than the total deficits in the fund in the 1950's that were not carried forward but written off. Over the whole period of the fund up to this October, the expenditures have exceeded the revenues by $238 million.

Parliament has recently imposed large additional future burdens on the fund by providing that the age at which payment of pensions will commence will be reduced year by year starting in January, 1966 until it reaches age 65 in January, 1970. Even after taking account of the growing revenues of the fund, the increasing pensions would exceed the annual revenues in the fiscal year 1970-71, when the full effects of the age reduction are first felt. Addition of the guaranteed income supplement, however, would immediately bring the pensions in the next fiscal year 1967-68 above the revenues anticipated from the present taxes, and this annual deficit would grow rapidly. It would use up the accounting surplus in the fund by mid-1969 and produce an annual deficit of nearly $400 million in the fund by the time the age reduction already in the law takes full effect.

Such is the situation in terms of this particular account. When we consider the economic and financial effects of old age security payments, however, we must look not to the position in a single account but to total cash flows. In introducing the guaranteed income supplement we are adding $280 million a year to our cash outflow, and this must somehow be matched by increased cash revenues if we are to avoid increasing our cash deficit with all its financial and economic consequences. The accumulated surplus of the old age security account is not held in a separate cash balance. The cash received and credited to this account is and always has been pooled in the consolidated revenue fund into which parliament requires all revenues to be paid and from which the payments authorized by parliament are made. If parliament increases the payments out of this consolidated revenue fund, it must replenish the fund with revenues, or the government has to borrow more to finance the deficit. Given the present and prospective economic situation I do not think that we should finance this large increased cash outflow by increased borrowing. If the economic situation should develop in a way that makes it desirable to reduce our cash inflow from taxes, and borrow more, we can quickly take action to do this. But we should not use the possibility of such a contingency as an excuse for taking the soft option and dodging a difficult issue.

Old Age Security Tax On Income

I am proposing therefore that we act to meet our immediate cash requirements and also to provide properly in our accounts for the burdens which parliament has imposed and is now imposing on the old age security fund during the next four years while the age reduction program is coming fully into effect. The first measure I recommend to the house, therefore, is that we raise the maximum amount payable by an individual on the 4 per cent tax on personal income under the Old Age Security Act, from $120 per year, as it has been for the past three years, to $240 per year. This would yield about $135 million a year at current income levels. It would be effective from January 1st but since deduction at the source cannot start immediately, relatively little will appear in this fiscal year's accounts. The forecast effects of this change on the future years' accounts of the old age security fund are shown in a table which I would ask permission to place in Hansard at this point for the assistance of hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[3] Deficit of $25 million at March 31, 1965.

Mr. Sharp: It will be seen that with this increased maximum tax the requirements of the fund, to which the law directs our attention, are met until the end of the 1970-71 fiscal year, the first full year after the age reduction program is complete. By that time parliament will have had ample opportunity to review our whole tax structure and decide what should be done not only with this element of our taxes but with the old age security fund generally.

This tax change will affect only those taxpayers with taxable income exceeding $3,000 after all exemptions and deductions. This means that a married taxpayer with two children will not have any increase unless he is earning more than $5,700 a year—which is well above current average wage earnings. The proposed tax increase will affect only the upper third of present income taxpayers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grafftey: The Liberal party is the only party in history that can applaud a tax raise.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Sharp: I continue.

Addition to General Revenues

The second tax change I am recommending is intended to add to our general revenues to provide the remaining cash required to pay the guaranteed income supplement.

The choice of the tax to increase for this purpose is a difficult one. Normally one would look to our regular personal income tax because, being progressive, it is one of our fairest taxes. However, we share this tax field with the provinces. We have emphasized to them in recent months that they have access to this field of taxation just as we do and must share responsibility for its use. We are proposing, as I have said, to abate our income tax for 1967 to make it easier for the provinces to raise theirs in order to help finance the rapidly growing burden of higher education. We will want to discuss with the provinces in the coming year or two various ideas proposed to reform the income tax so that we may achieve as much harmony as possible in our use of this most important tax field.

In these circumstances and having in mind the impending major overhaul of our tax system which we will undertake in the light of the report of the Royal Commission on Taxation, I have come to the conclusion that we should not use the personal income tax to raise the additional funds we need now. We must, at this time, as the provinces frequently have to do, rely upon other taxes to meet our increasing burdens.

In making the choice of taxes we must also keep in mind that the corporate income tax in Canada cannot get seriously out of line with that in the United States without endangering our competitive position. Already our competitive position is being weakened by recent increases in costs.

Sales Tax

I have come to the conclusion, therefore, that we should obtain the revenue we need by adding one per cent to our general sales tax, making it 12 per cent in total, instead of 11 per cent, with two exceptions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Shame, shame. You will never get away with it, never.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Sharp: The only comment I wish to make, Mr. Speaker, is that if we had followed the advice of members on the other side of the house it would have led to much greater taxation increases.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: I hope that hon. members realize that the government in this respect is being responsible not only with respect to its expenditures but also with respect to its taxes.

Mr. Grafftey: I have always admired the minister's modesty.

Mr. Sharp: This will be done by amending the Excise Tax Act. I propose that this change take place January 1st so there will be no danger of confusion or price increases arising from it during this Christmas period. The foreknowledge of an increase as small as this for this short period should have no significant economic effects. The revenue authorities will be careful to ensure that sales which are properly taxable after January 1st are not attributed by some artificial action to the period between now and then.

Last spring, we decided that the sales tax should be removed from production machinery and equipment in two steps, one in April, 1967 and one in April, 1968. It is proposed that the one per cent increase in the tax now being made should not apply to these goods for the three months before the changes now in the law come into effect.

I am also proposing that the increase in the sales tax should not apply to building materials. The government wishes to see more houses built in 1967. The competition of other demands for capital funds this past year has brought about a serious reduction in mortgage lending for the building of houses and particularly of apartment houses. Unless this trend is reversed it will lead to shortages of housing and increased rents. The government is pressing ahead with action under the National Housing Act, as recently amended, to help meet this situation. Most of the houses needed, however, must be financed and built by private enterprise, subject to market forces. We would not wish an increase in the sales tax to impede an expansion of house building at this time.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): But everything else. Everything else.

Mr. Sharp: I suggest again to my hon. friend who is interrupting that the expenditures he proposed would have compelled me to raise taxes—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: The indignation of my hon. friend is greatly misplaced.

Mr. Crouse: Why throw it on the Conservatives?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Live with Mitch. Sing along with Mitch.

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

Mr. Sharp: The yield of this increase in the sales tax at the current level of sales and prices my department estimates to be approximately $155 million a year, taking the exemptions into account. It should add about $20 million to this year's revenue.

We shall wish to reform our sales tax as well as our other taxes over the next few years. I recognize, just as I am sure all members of this house recognize, that any sales tax cannot fully take into account ability to pay, although our tax, which exempts food, fuel and services, is better than many. Over a fairly wide income range it is proportional or mildly progressive in its incidence. Taken in conjunction with our progressive income tax, and the heavy taxes on certain items such as liquor, it produces an over-all result which is reasonable. We will examine this over-all result in revising our tax structure and will aim, of course, at a fair incidence of the total of taxes and benefits after our reforms are made.

The increase in sales tax can be expected to increase the prices of those goods subject to it—though just how much will depend on the market conditions in each commodity and in various distribution channels. Indeed in some cases the increase may not be passed on. Certainly it should increase the cost of living by much less than one per cent, taking into account that services and a wide range of goods are exempt. I should remind consumers that virtually all foodstuffs are exempt from the sales tax and therefore this increase in rate will have no effect upon this very important portion of their expenditures.

Conclusion

Before concluding, I would ask permission to place on Hansard at this point for convenient reference a brief table showing our revised forecast of revenues and expenditures this fiscal year, and the old age security revenues and expenditures and other non-budgetary requirements after taking the proposed tax changes into account, compared with the forecasts made in the budget in March.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think I should recall the positive, humanitarian purpose which motivates us tonight.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: We are creating in Canada a most complete system of old age pensions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: The best in the world probably.

Mr. Sharp: One of my colleagues says it is probably the best in the world.

Mr. Grafftey: I admire the minister's modesty.

Mr. Sharp: For the long term we have the combination of the basic old age security pension and the Canada Pension Plan. For those in special need we have the Canada Assistance Act. For those already retired or retiring in the next few years and whose incomes are small we will have this guaranteed income supplement. All Canadians will share its cost under the measures proposed tonight. It is fitting in this Christmas season that we should be engaged in making a major contribution to the comfort and dignity of our senior citizens.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT RESOLUTION

Resolved that it is expedient to amend the Old Age Security Act to provide that for the 1967 and subsequent taxation years the maximum amount of old age security tax payable on the taxable income of an individual be increased from one hundred and twenty dollars to two hundred and forty dollars.

EXCISE TAX ACT RESOLUTION

Resolved that it is expedient to amend the Excise Tax Act to provide that, effective January 1, 1967, the rate of the consumption or sales tax imposed under section 30 of the said Act be increased from eight per cent to nine per cent with respect to all goods subject to the said tax, except articles enumerated in Schedule V to the said Act and building materials that were exempt from the said tax immediately prior to June 14, 1963.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance started off this evening trying to maintain throughout his speech a tone of sweet reasonableness. So reasonable were the minister's remarks that there was an almost complete lack of applause from his side of the house.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Monteith: Oh, yes. What happened when he announced the increase in personal income tax from $120 to $240? What happened when he announced the increase in sales tax, which means, incidentally, that he is presuming to impose the sales tax on the old age pensioners? He is taking the pensioners' benefits away in higher sales taxes. The sales tax hits everybody. There has been nothing in the minister's remarks to change what I had intended saying.

Miss LaMarsh: It would not have been much of a speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Monteith: We fully expected that there would be increases in taxation. This budget has been called a mini-budget. That name is applicable to it. It should be compared with a mini-skirt. Taxes are getting higher and higher but covering less and less. The budget has been said by the minister to contain a Christmas present for the older people of Canada. I claim that this is no Santa Claus budget but a Scrooge budget. It appears to me that tonight a quotation from Charles Dickens well describes the minister—"with affection beaming in one eye and calculation shining out of the other."

• (8:40 p.m.)

Before discussing the details of the budget, let us turn for a few moments to a matter of urgency which is now before the Canadian people, and to a situation which is in itself a reflection of the inaction of the Minister of Finance. I refer to the inept handling of the Prudential Finance shambles—

An hon. Member: By the province of Ontario.

Mr. Monteith: As I understand the situation, this company had a provincial charter but operated outside Ontario as well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Monteith: The company has failed dismally, causing untold hardship to countless citizens who had every reason to suppose their life earnings were safe. Many hundreds are destitute. This sort of thing has gone far enough. How many more financial calamities will there be before this government acts?

An hon. Member: Ask Robarts.

Mr. Monteith: There seems to be a difference of opinion as to the extent of federal and provincial jurisdiction in certain fields of finance. To a degree I think these differences arise because of the lack of a proper definition of banking. During recent meetings of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs almost all witnesses have indicated their belief that there should be an alternative to the present definition which simply says that a bank is "a bank to which this Act applies". Then a list of banks is given in a schedule. I suggest that the government should at least take action to the extent of asking the Supreme Court of Canada for a decision; otherwise we could go on forever suffering confusion. I know there is no law which prevents any individual from accepting money and paying interest thereon, but when corporations set themselves up in the business of taking loans, then surely protection should be afforded to persons lending money to such corporations.

The minister told us he acted in the only way open to him; he could not have done other than he did. I say he was wrong. Whether or not Mr. Gruber expected the Minister of Finance to pass on his warnings to the Ontario authorities is beside the point. I say the minister should have done so. It was his duty. The fate of hundreds and hundreds of depositors was at stake. The minister says it was none of his business. I say it was. Surely he owed something to those people all over Canada who today are suffering from this mess.

The minister has not only been negligent; he has done a great deal of damage to the reputation of sound and reputable Canadian insurance companies. On December 12 he made statements both inside and outside the house which could have implied that only British and foreign companies were dependable and safe. The inference was that Canadian companies do not have any securities deposited with the Department of Finance in Ottawa. In this connection I would refer to a letter which I have received from the managing director of a Canadian insurance company. He writes:

> As you probably know, a good deal of damage to the reputation of Canadian insurance companies has been done, principally because of the impression created that the Canadian companies do not have any deposits at all in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but it seems to me there are too many conversations taking place in the chamber at the moment.

Mr. Monteith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know there have been many complaints from the other side concerning the contents of the budget, and of course they are taking it out on my speech.

The managing director goes on to say:

> As one of the smaller Canadian companies we have deposits with the minister in excess of $400,000 and of course comply fully with the requirements of the department. Our securities are held for safe custody by a trust company in their vault. The provisions of our by-laws insure that no securities can be released except on the signature of two officers of the company and consequently there would therefore have to be collusion to execute any misappropriation. Actual instruments never go through this office, but are handled exclusively by the trust company and, as a further safeguard, all officers and members of the staff are bonded.

The letter goes on to point out that the minister's somewhat half-hearted retraction received considerably less publicity than his original damaging statement. The damage has been done, the writer states. The minister should make a stronger retraction. I suggest this is an example of the ineptitude with which the minister has been handling this whole affair, offering nothing but alibis.

Mr. Howard: Would the hon. member permit a question Would he mind identifying by name the insurance company whose managing director he has just quoted?

Mr. Monteith: I have no objection. It is the Perth Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Stratford. The minister even procrastinated about the one small step he has taken in the hope that it might eventually provide some protection. His deposit insurance legislation is not obligatory on institutions other than the chartered banks, so I understand, and the chartered banks do not need it. The most important aspect of this matter, however, is that we have not seen the legislation. It has been promised for months and months, and when asked about it the minister simply says, "soon". This ridiculous situation has existed continually since the finance committee has been meeting to study amendments to the Bank Act. We have expert witnesses appearing before us; yet we can only ask hypothetical questions because the legislation is not available to us. It is an unbelievable situation.

I would also make a strong complaint about the lack of action on the part of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) in the deplorable bankruptcy of Prudential Finance. When the officials of his department heard allegations of possible fraud, why did his income tax inspectors not make an investigation for income tax purposes? He would have been justified in taking such action. It is easy to conclude what would have been the result if he had taken this step. The minister should not suggest it would be improper to take this action. We know his inspectors often make investigations of taxpayers on less evidence than was available in this case.

Income tax inspectors often take action after receiving anonymous tips. Maybe these are provided to the department out of pique, jealousy, or for some other reason. Sometimes, I understand, the department even pays rewards for such information. Here we have a case where a definite warning has been ignored. Had the minister acted promptly something, at least, might have been saved.

Now let us look at tonight's budget. In a way it too is in the pattern of this government's failure to look at Canada and the practical needs of our people. Mr. Speaker, I suggest this budget presented to us tonight should never have been delivered. There is no need for it. True, the minister said last September 8 he would present a budget this autumn. But that was last September. He knows the economic situation in Canada is standing still, if not in a recession, and I suggest the minister is not doing anything to improve the situation.

If any second budget is necessary then it should only be because of a real crisis. I claim there is not that crisis to bring on this effort of the minister's tonight, even though there has been plenty of poor planning. All this is going to do is make it more difficult for the average person to get by in his or her day-to-day existence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: We have faced, are facing, and will in the future face frightening increases in the cost of living. Is it really any wonder that we have been having demands for larger pay increases? The housewife goes marketing and she finds food, clothing, whatever it may be, continuing to rise in price and at a rapid rate. She goes home and tells her husband and naturally he is unhappy and anxious to demand higher pay, but the Pearson formula of wage increases has set standards which can have only one outcome. The resultant increased costs have not even been felt yet, and now the minister takes another slice off the husband's take-home pay.

It is interesting to compare some of the prices the housewife in Canada pays compared with those the housewife pays in the United States. I have here a comparison list of food prices in Canada and the United States. I have taken prices from advertisements in the Ottawa Journal of December 14, and American food prices from advertisements in the Washington Post of December 12, just two days previous.

In Canada sirloin steaks were advertised at 97 cents a pound; in Washington they were advertised at 87 cents a pound. Bacon in Ottawa was advertised at 89 cents a pound and in Washington at 65 cents a pound. Chicken breasts were advertised in Ottawa at 65 cents a pound and at 45 cents a pound in Washington.

An hon. Member: What size?

Mr. Monteith: Frozen french fries were advertised at 59 cents for two pounds in Ottawa and at 29 cents for two pounds in Washington. Hon. members opposite may think this is funny, but the average Canadian housewife does not think it funny when she goes to the supermarkets.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: I give one more example. Picnic ham was advertised at 49 cents a pound in Ottawa and at 37 cents a pound in Washington. These are just five items from the list. The housewife in Washington is paying considerably less for food than the housewife at the local supermarket in Canada.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): And the salaries are better in the United States.

Mr. Monteith: Yes, the salaries are better. There are many things that the minister could have done to bolster our economy at this time when it is so direly in need of bolstering. He could have accelerated the withdrawal of the sales tax on building supplies and materials. This would have encouraged home construction, so badly needed. Tonight the minister apparently thought he was doing quite a thing when he refused to add the extra 1 per cent sales tax on to building materials, but he has left the tax on construction materials. If he really wanted to do something to encourage the Canadian economy I repeat that he could have accelerated withdrawal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building supplies.

He could have rescinded the 5 per cent forced savings tax on certain corporations. This would assist in expanding production to meet the demand and help combat inflation. He could have abolished the amendments to the Income Tax Act introduced by his predecessor, which were supposed to encourage minority Canadian ownership in foreign controlled companies. It has not worked. The minister knows it, and abolishing it might have stopped some repatriation of funds to the United States.

But the best thing of all that he could have done would have been to admit his error and not brought down a budget until next spring.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, all predictions seem to be that tight money is here to stay for some years. When a company like Imperial Oil issues 20-year debentures at 6¾ per cent, non-callable for 12 years, it is easily seen what it thinks of the money market. These high interest rates can only add to the cost of production and the high cost of living. Mr. Speaker, we are being squeezed out of the markets of the world by the restrictive and negative approach that the government has been taking.

Why does not the government itself practice some economy and set a pattern for others, particularly other governments? Surely this would be the first step in any sensible approach. Mr. Speaker, I claim the government is guilty of gross fiscal mismanagement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: Spending money like a drunken sailor.

Mr. Monteith: Let us look for a moment at Canada's economic condition and ask ourselves what will be the effect of more taxation. Look at housing. In the third quarter of this year house construction dropped by 25 per cent, from 49,551 units to 37,145 units. Housing construction is in a serious position, so what does the minister do? Tax more.

Look at the stock market. There is actually a net outflow of funds to the United States because American equity stocks now look so attractive by comparison with prospects here. This is a dreadful commentary on the state of Canada on the eve of its centennial. In the first eight months of 1966 we had a net outflow of $308 million compared with $174 million in the same period of 1965 and only $53 million in the same period of 1964. So we tax more.

We should be encouraging Canadians to invest in their own country. This is not the time to raise taxes in Canada. There are many signs that while the cost of living continues to rise, there is a tapering off or a slowdown ahead in economic activity. This is happening both in Canada and in the United States.

Car production and steel production have declined in the United States. New car sales are down. A particularly volatile item is the level of debt in the United States. The average United States consumer is now paying out 22 per cent of his income to pay off debt, compared with 19 per cent only six years ago. The consumer, so important in maintaining a boom, is in no position to increase his spending in that country.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, in Canada consumer credit is high. Total consumer credit now stands at over $7,000 million, compared with only $4,000 million just six years ago. The cash loans of consumer loan companies now are double the level of just six years ago. The personal loans of chartered banks are some $2,370 million, nearly double the level of just over two years ago.

Our people are so in debt and our financial institutions are so lent out that there is a real danger that demand cannot be sustained in the consumer sector of the economy. Yet this is the time the government adds to the burden by increasing taxes. President Johnson has held off any tax increase in the United States; yet our government goes ahead in its stubborn way. I wonder whether the Minister of Finance really does know the state of the Canadian economy. Dr. Deutsch, the distinguished head of the Economic Council of Canada, had this to say before the joint committee on consumer credit:

> At the present time the economy is flattening out. Up to recently, it has been fully loaded, until this flattening out. It may be a little overloaded in some respects. If this flattening out continues and even goes down, it will not be overloaded.
> Only a few months ago, the economy was fully loaded and in some ways overloaded; but since then there has been a flattening off and the pressure has come off a bit and the problem now is, is this flattening out going to continue and become a turndown. If it is there will be room then for production—

A few lines later, he continues:

> If it flattens off, it will not take long before you find yourself not absorbing your labour force and you are really not using your capacity. The question now is: do we continue to flatten out or go up again, or will we go down?

That was Dr. Deutsch speaking. At that time he intimated that there are signs pointing in both directions. What does the Minister of Finance say about all this? Incidentally, these are the remarks of Dr. Deutsch when he was speaking on November 24 and they are reported at pages 1540 and 1541 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on consumer credit. It was only two weeks later, on December 9, that the minister declared that there is nothing to this talk at all. The minister replied to a question asked in the house by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees). The hon. member referred to the statement made by the president of the Banque Canadienne Nationale which contained the following words:

> The current state of the economy presents a forewarning of an impending recession or at least a very serious slowing down of the growth.

What did the minister say? These are his words:

> This is not the consensus of view of all economists in the country, least of all is it the view of one of the most eminent advisers, the head of the Economic Council of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the minister get together with Mr. Deutsch. Whose advice are we taking? Which way are we going?

An hon. Member: Not your way.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, I should like to reiterate that this party is against the means test. Our party's position is firmly against the means test in old age security. Now we have added the other side—a mean tax. We have proposed a $100 a month pension to all pensioners at an estimated additional cost of $100 million.

We are against the government's new gimmick. I should like to point out why. It reintroduces the means test which has been abolished since 1951. The minister has said that out-of-country benefits will not be paid because they are too hard to investigate. Are we going to bring back the régime of the prying eye? We are against it because it does nothing for the pensioners who are faced with cost of living increases, and again tonight there is going to be an increased cost of living to the pensioners. The $75 a month to the pensioners, given later in 1963, is worth a lot less today. The consumer price index has jumped nearly 12 points since the last pension increase. Today's pension of $75 is worth less than $66 in real terms. Yet nothing is being done to improve the lot of these Canadians.

Mr. Ricard: Another one per cent has been added to the sales tax.

Mr. Monteith: Yes, another 1 per cent has been added to the sales tax tonight which will have to be met by those in the middle and high income groups. I am not pleading the case for those in the high income brackets. I am thinking of those in the low income brackets. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance what is the size of the old age security fund. I believe he gave us that information this evening. I think it was $353 million as at the end of October. What right is there to overtax the Canadian people and hold out on our old age pensioners? Is the government by any chance holding off until the eve of another election?

I realize that the cost of social welfare has to be met, but I understand that the legislation concerning the Canada Assistance Plan has not yet been proclaimed and that no payments are to be made under the old age security amendments which are now before us until at least next March or April. But then, this is Christmas. As Dickens said of Scrooge:

> And it was always said of him that he knew how to keep Christmas well, if any man alive possessed the knowledge.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, why bring in this tax now and further dampen down the economy? The date of the next regular budget would have been plenty early enough. Psychologically this is not the time to increase any taxes. To me this budget seems to be an exercise in nonsense. It is not needed and will only put a further brake on our economy and again increase the cost of living as do all taxes.

This budget obviously does not meet the needs of Canadians today. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard):

> That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:
> The government give consideration to meeting the proposed selective means test payments for old age pensioners by drawing on the surplus now in the old age security fund, before any increase be made in the oppressive burden of general taxation whose effects at this time will intensify rather than alleviate the hardships being experienced by Canadians generally, whose living standards are being seriously reduced by inflation and by the steadily rising cost of living.

Mr. Speaker, may I adjourn the debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps someone else might move the adjournment because the hon. member at this point has an amendment before the house. I am sure there will be no difficulty about someone else moving the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

An hon. Member: It was moved over here.

Mr. Monteith: May I move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker?

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Of course, there is the procedural difficulty that the hon. member cannot put two motions at the same time. Perhaps the simple solution would be to allow the amendment to stand, which would have the effect of allowing the hon. member for Perth to move the adjournment of the debate. The amendment could then be formally put when the debate was resumed.

Mr. Monteith: I should like to allow my amendment to stand, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McIlraith: I move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In order to make this clear let me understand what the hon. member for Perth wishes. Do I take it he has suggested that his amendment be put formally when the debate is resumed and that in the meantime he will move the adjournment of the debate?

Mr. Monteith: No, I meant to put the amendment formally at this time. You then ruled that I could not move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, with all respect I think there is a precedent for the proposition of the hon. member for Perth. An hon. member speaking on the main motion may move an amendment. After moving the amendment it is put and he then moves the adjournment of the debate. As soon as the amendment is put the hon. member is speaking to the amendment and at that stage he moves the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member can cite a precedent in support of the proposition he is advancing I will consider it, but I am advised to the contrary. Since there seems to be little consequence I wonder whether the easiest way to proceed is that to which the hon. member for Perth has agreed. I assume that what he intended was to continue his speech later.

Mr. Monteith: It was my desire to move the amendment but you intimated, sir, that having done so I could not adjourn the debate and continue my speech later.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the circumstances I repeat my suggestion, that the motion to adjourn the debate be allowed to remain in the name of Mr. McIlraith. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

OLD AGE SECURITY AMENDMENT

PROVISION OF GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENTS AND DETERMINATION OF PENSIONERS' INCOMES

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-251, to amend the Old Age Security Act—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 4—

The Chairman: When the committee rose earlier this evening new section 21 of clause 4 had been stood.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose we were discussing new section 21, paragraph (c) of clause 4. Hon. members raised a point in respect of paragraph (c) which reads:

(c) fails to return a cheque for the amount therefor as required by section 20, or

It was argued that a person who merely failed to return a cheque should not be regarded as punishable on summary conviction. I might point out that this merely carries forward a paragraph which has existed in the Old Age Security Act. However, after considering the eloquent point made by the members of the opposition I am prepared to have my colleague, the Minister of Transport, move the following amendment:

That paragraph (c) of new section 21 of clause 4 be deleted and that the word "or" be inserted in line 30 and that paragraph (d) be renumbered as paragraph (c).

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I so move.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

• (9:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Does this complete the discussion on new section 21?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Old Age Security Act Amendment

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Mr. Knowles: As amended.

Clause as amended agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now revert to clause 3, new section 17.

On clause 3—

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre proposed an amendment which was not put to the committee. He asked to have his amendment considered and suggested that if I could put the essence of it in suitable words he would be agreeable to considering my effort. I am quite agreeable to accepting the intent of the amendment, which was to make clearer the purpose of this particular subsection of new section 17.

In this particular provision we had in mind that the Minister of National Revenue would be empowered to give a report to the Minister of National Health and Welfare with respect to the income of applicants or beneficiaries of the supplement. There was some fear that this report might take the form of an income tax return from the Department of National Revenue to the Department of National Health and Welfare. Accordingly the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre proposed an amendment to strike out all the words after "purpose" in new section 17 (3) (a), line 46, page 9, and substitute therefor: "a report as to the accuracy of the information concerning income submitted by the applicant".

During the dinner adjournment I have considered this amendment and am quite prepared to accept its intent, namely, that a report be given by the Department of National Revenue to the Department of National Health and Welfare. I have gone further and am prepared to delete the words "any information" from line 47 in the relevant subsection.

I am also prepared to delete from paragraph (a) of new subsection (3), lines 2 and 3 on page 10, the words, "or otherwise relating to any such applicant". These were the offending points, as I understood them. I am quite prepared to accept the clarifications proposed by members of the committee. Accordingly, Mr. Chairman, I will read to the committee the proposed amendment, which I have in both languages and which if acceptable might be moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. There would be a new section 17, subsection (3), paragraph (a) which would read as follows:

(a) the Minister of National Revenue or any person designated by him for the purpose may, upon the request of the minister, for any purpose relating to the administration of this act,—

This makes it clear with respect to the purpose.

—furnish to the minister or to any officer or employee in the Department of National Health and Welfare designated by the minister for the purpose, a report providing information available to the Minister of National Revenue relating to the income or income from a particular source or sources of an applicant or beneficiary or the spouse of such applicant or beneficiary; and

The reason I have deleted the word "accuracy" is that there might be a presumption in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre that the information in the files of the Department of National Revenue was the correct information, while it is just as likely that the information provided on the form submitted by the applicant to the Department of National Health and Welfare would be accurate. It is for this reason that the word "accuracy" was removed, merely to remove the presumption that the information in the files of the Department of National Revenue was the accurate information, when it is just as likely that the information in the form submitted to the Department of National Health and Welfare would be as accurate. If this is agreeable to the committee, I would be happy if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre would move this amendment.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, it is very kind of the minister to suggest that I should do this, but I am not certain whether his wording is exactly what I would recommend if I had time to study it. I should like to be even more charitable and allow the Minister of Transport to move this amendment. He had such difficulty striking out a clause that I should like him now to have the opportunity of putting one in.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am delighted and flattered, and I so move.

The Chairman: Order. Before the Minister of Transport moves this amendment, perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—

Mr. Knowles: Winnipeg South Centre.

The Chairman: —the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre would like to withdraw the amendment he moved earlier this evening.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Churchill: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the earlier amendment.

The Chairman: The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. Pickersgill: I so move the amendment referred to, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The Minister of Transport moves to delete paragraph (a) of subsection (3) of new section 17 of the bill and substitute therefor:

(a) the Minister of National Revenue or any person designated by him for the purpose may, upon the request of the minister, for any purpose relating to the administration of this act, furnish to the minister or to any officer or employee in the Department of National Health and Welfare designated by the minister for the purpose, a report providing information available to the Minister of National Revenue relating to the income or income from a particular source or sources of an applicant or beneficiary or the spouse of such applicant or beneficiary; and

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word here. This amendment goes part way toward what we were asking and is perhaps a remarkable concession on the part of the minister, who has been rather reluctant to accede to any of our requests. It does not go the full way. It still does not put it the way we wanted it put, namely, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare would submit his information to the Minister of National Revenue who would thereupon declare whether it was accurate or inaccurate. But I believe that in view of the concession made by the minister, which will improve his standing with the opposition, perhaps we might let this go through on division.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Ballard: Mr. Chairman, I am wondering about the workability of this amendment as it is now proposed. It is all right to say under this legislation that the Minister of National Revenue may—I emphasize the word "may"—supply this information, but if memory serves me correctly section 133 of the Income Tax Act forbids the minister or any employee of the Department of National Revenue supplying this type of information to anyone. As a matter of fact it has been a longstanding custom of the Department of National Revenue to treat all information supplied to it by taxpayers in a very confidential manner. The sort of amendment which is proposed now endangers the tradition of confidentiality between the Minister of National Revenue and the individual taxpayer.

I believe that this year an amendment was made to this particular section of the Income Tax Act which leaves a slight loophole in the law. This was demonstrated in a recent case in Ontario where a court was able to call on an employee of the income tax department to supply certain information in connection with an estate. I cannot recall the name of the case at the moment but this information was supplied by the income tax department. I think this was probably the first instance of the department supplying such information except in a criminal case.

I suggest that this amendment does not do what the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre intended it to do. I suggest that the legislation is permissive but that the Income Tax Act is self-restrictive in this matter. Therefore the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre should be heeded and the amendment worded in such a way that the Department of National Health and Welfare can check the veracity of statements made by old age pensioners but on the other hand the Department of National Revenue cannot be asked to make its files available even to another government department. Therefore I think that the amendment must be reworded.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Churchill: On division.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I had an understanding with the Minister of National Health and Welfare that in answer to the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Peace River and before we completed discussion of the bill in committee an opportunity would be given to exchange opinions across the house on a certain matter. I think it should be considered under clause 3 because the discussion started on Friday under this same clause. I am speaking about the constitutional issue which was raised by the two hon. members on this side of the house.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I am quite happy to make whatever few remarks I can on this subject at this time in the committee rather than later. Hon. members opposite have quoted frequently section 94A of the British North America Act which provides that the parliament of Canada may make laws in relation to old age pensions and supplementary benefits including disability benefits, irrespective of age but no such law shall affect the operation of any law, present or future, of a provincial legislature in relation to any such matter. We believe that section 94A of the British North America Act provides the authority to the parliament of Canada to legislate in the field of old age pensions. That right has been exercised by previous governments and it is a right which still exists.

If it is constitutionally appropriate for the parliament of Canada to legislate an increase of $10 a month or $25 a month in old age pensions, then this supplement is granted on exactly the same basis. We believe that the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction in the field of old age pensions. We also believe that the provinces of Canada have concurrent jurisdiction in the field of old age pensions. There is one example in Canada at present of a province paying an old age pension. The province of Prince Edward Island is now paying an across-the-board increase of $25 a month in old age pensions. This step was taken by the former government of Prince Edward Island and the payments are still continuing.

There is a provision in this bill by which any supplement or pension paid by a provincial government will not disqualify a recipient from receiving the benefits of the Old Age Security Act or the benefits of the supplement. At least in this case there is nothing to prevent the pensions payable in Prince Edward Island from continuing and the pensions proposed in this legislation from being paid to the citizens of Prince Edward Island, so that each jurisdiction is exercising its authority.

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition and other hon. members have asked me to speculate on what the situation would be if the province of Quebec were to establish a system of guaranteed income in that province. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Dollard, we are faced with a statement of intention contained in the speech from the throne in that province, and it certainly would be unwise for me to attempt to describe a situation based on hypothetical assumptions. Members of the opposition have asked what would be the situation if such and such happened. It certainly would be very unwise and improper for me to go beyond what I have stated already. When hypothesis becomes reality, that would be the occasion to make a statement on what would be the situation in these circumstances. This summarizes all I have to say on this particular question at the present time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, that answer was one which must have taken considerable contrivance because it answers nothing. It bases the refusal to give an answer on the fact that the question asked is hypothetical. There is nothing hypothetical whatsoever in the declaration which was made by Premier Johnson of Quebec nor in the declaration of intention in the speech from the throne. It is of significance that the government of Canada did not act in bringing forward legislation on this question until the declaration of intention was made by the government of Quebec in the speech from the throne.

What the minister said was simply, if I understand it, that there is nothing to prevent a province from providing old age pensions, that the section in question of the British North America Act constitutes a declaration of equality, as it were, between the federal and provincial authorities on the subject of old age pensions. But he does not meet the problem by pretending there is something hypothetical about the matter. He says that the questions are founded on hypothesis. They are founded on an actual declaration. It was apparent that the reason the government rushed on with this legislation was its concern to offset the effect of any action taken by the government of Quebec. The problem cannot be brushed off in the manner the minister is attempting. What he actually says is that he will wait and see. That has been the attitude of this government. They have done a lot of waiting in respect of everything that has come forward.

In this case they face a situation where the government of Quebec contends that when it legislates on the subject of old age pensions that subject falls within the jurisdiction of the province. The provincial authorities have some ground for believing that the federal government only has jurisdiction if it has not been countermanded by subsequent action by a province making declarations and legislating.

What is the attitude of the federal government today? Are they going to pay a sum to any provincial government that takes itself out of the federal old age pension plan or assistance plan? That is the question you have to face. Has it been discussed in any way at any of the dominion-provincial conferences? Has a legal opinion been secured from the law officers of the crown? My information is that there has been an opinion from the law officers, and the house has the right to see it. The government should produce that opinion. There is nothing confidential in respect thereof. Legal opinions used to be regarded as not available. In recent years, however, the trend has been in the direction of making such opinions available.

I say to the minister that the brush-off he gives to a matter that is serious in respect of the national unity of our country cannot be excused. We want to know where the government stands, if it knows. Surely it cannot have contemplated bringing a plan such as this before the house without having weighed the situation. Furthermore, since the declaration of the government of Quebec an anomalous situation has been created which demands that the view of the federal government be given. I impress on the minister the necessity of going farther than he has gone. We are not to be brushed off with a cursory statement that is meaningless and brief. What attitude does the Canadian government take?

The Minister of Manpower and Immigration is quite an authority on the subject of constitutionality. He had strong views about the C.N.T.U. and the right of the C.N.T.U. to bargain within the province of Quebec. Those were his declarations before he became a minister. After he became a minister he forgot all the declarations he had made in that connection in the past. I should like to hear from him because invariably he seems reluctant to enter the discussions when the question of constitutionality arises. Is he of the same view that he was three years ago which was, as I recall it, that old age pensions came within the jurisdiction of the provinces?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): He nods his head.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He nods his head affirmatively. This indicates that the two ministers had better get together. I say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that he can afford to sit at the feet of Camelia, Camelia in the form of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration has effectively accepted the proposition I have advanced.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, well—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, I did not ask the Minister of Transport what his opinion was, but with his customary restraint he has propelled himself into a subject about which at the present time he has revealed no knowledge. Has he consulted with the minister of manpower in this connection?

Seriously speaking, however, this again indicates the cabinet solidarity that prevails. One wing takes one view and another takes the opposite view, and the minister says, "Do not ask me, I am not making any declaration on this question because it is hypothetical". It was not hypothetical when the Minister of Manpower and Immigration mounted his charger of provincial autonomy in this connection.

The Minister of Manpower and Immigration was one of the most eloquent of men before coming to the House of Commons. Since then he has maintained, with one exception, a discreet silence. The exception had to do with the Ottawa terminal bill. He rushed in and got into an argument one day and gave his view. The Prime Minister came along and shrugged the whole thing off to one side. The government withdrew the bill to save the Minister of Manpower and Immigration from the embarrassment which we are all glad he was saved from.

Mr. Prud'homme: What has happened now?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now there is a young man with views. I wish I had his faith, because he is tremendously interested in expressing his views outside the house in connection with this problem. He has not expressed them in the house because they would come in conflict with what the government has declared.

Mr. Prud'homme: Come on, be serious.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am trying to understand the views of the minister. I want the views of the minister speaking for the government. At the present time I have not experienced any degree of success. It is most amazing the degree to which this government, when faced with problems, endeavours to dissipate them by not discussing them. They believe that problems go away. That is what happened to the Minister of Finance in connection with companies in Toronto. He thought the problem would go away but now it is on the doorstep. That is why this problem is now on your doorstep. You do not clear up matters such as this by saying, "Well, I am not going to discuss mundane matters such as hypothetical questions."

Old Age Security Act Amendment

• (9:50 p.m.)

I do not intend to say anything which will be in disagreement with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration or, indeed, with the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, who is not present on this occasion but has expressed himself in stentorian tones about the rights of his province under this great national plan of co-operative federalism. We have plenty of time to hear the minister on this subject. We want to know what his stand is on this question. What does he intend to do? I ask the simple question: If legislation such as has been promised is brought in, is a subsidy to be handed to the government of the province of Quebec? Hon. gentlemen opposite have to face this question. This legislation will be meaningless unless it covers Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But you do not go about covering Canada unless, constitutionally, you have the right to do so.

Mr. MacEachen: May I ask the Leader of the Opposition a question? Is there any doubt in his mind as to the constitutionality of this bill, the right of the federal parliament to legislate this bill? That is a simple question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That does not in any way give an answer to the question I asked.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You have the right under that section, provided the province does not exercise its right. The provinces enjoyed a particular right when the agreement was entered into between the federal and the provincial governments to permit this amendment to the constitution. What was accepted was that the provinces would still have this right.

An hon. Member: They do.

Mr. Fairweather: Not if it is occupied.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are all getting into the act. Hon. gentlemen opposite think that by hiving together, as they are doing now, they will frighten us. But even when they hive together they are separate as far as the views of some of them and the views of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration are concerned. We want to know what the government intends to do about this. I should like to hear from the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. He is usually so vocal about these things; he can speak without any preparation or knowledge of the subject.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like him to do so now. Five minutes are available and I know that in five minutes he will be able to tell us everything he knows about the subject. We wait for him right now.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the commotion now going on shows how courteous the Liberal members can be.

While the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) was delivering his budget speech, his baby budget, all members listened to him and made little or no remarks, but when the financial critic of the opposition made his comments—I believe it was the former minister of national health and welfare (Mr. Monteith)—a continuous uproar could be heard on the Liberal side. When a Liberal member is speaking, all the others listen to him politely. When the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) was speaking earlier, I listened to him without saying a word. On the other hand, as soon as an opposition member speaks, catcalls are heard all the time on the Liberal side. It shows how polite they are.

Mr. Chairman, this is nothing new. Some will say after this: here is one who wants to destroy everything here. And that is the example set for us, or for me, during the past five years, by those rude and impolite Liberal members. That is the example they are giving us. That is why we sometimes act as they do, even though we try not to. I hear some of them whispering, yet they never rise to speak. They are perhaps satisfied with whispering because their whip tells them: Do not speak, keep quiet.

The Deputy Chairman: I would ask the hon. member for Lapointe to deal with the matter now before the committee, clause 3 of Bill C-251.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I shall revert to clause 3. I said what I wanted to say on this subject and I hope that they will take heed of this lesson.

Clause 3 refers to payments made to the provinces under the Old Age Security Act. Moreover, section 94 (a) of the British North America Act has been quoted so often here, since the beginning of the debate, that I do not think it necessary for me to read it over again. In other words, this section provides that if a particular province wishes to legislate in this field, it has priority.

In view of the fact that, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) so ably said a while ago, the province of Quebec has indicated, in the speech from the throne, that it intends to take over their rights in the field of old age security, I wonder why the Minister of National Health and Welfare does not include a provision in his bill granting a tax credit to those provinces who, in the future, may wish to occupy the field of old age security.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has an answer for this: he says this is hypothetic. Mr. Chairman, it is more than a hypothetic question, since it was announced in the speech from the throne. The speech from the throne represents the will of the Queen of Canada, through the lieutenant governor of the province of Quebec. Does the voice of the Queen of Canada, heard through the lieutenant governor of Quebec, have no meaning for the Minister of National Health and Welfare? If so, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is guilty of high treason.

Mr. Chairman, I think, on the contrary, that the intention indicated in the speech from the throne is serious and that the Minister of National Health and Welfare should amend his plan accordingly.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Should I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again at the next meeting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask what the business of the house will be tomorrow. Before I do so I might ask the government if it would consider this situation. I have been informed, as we all have, that there is a possibility we may recess on Thursday evening. Instead of sitting on Thursday evening I would ask that we sit on Wednesday evening and that we sit on Thursday only until six o'clock. If possible, we might conclude the business before us on Wednesday evening so that we might adjourn for the recess on Wednesday evening rather than on Thursday. In any event, if that is not possible we could sit Wednesday evening and recess at six o'clock on Thursday.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the house leader is not here at the moment—

Mr. Starr: Here he is. It may be necessary, Mr. Speaker, for me to repeat what I said earlier. I was asking whether the government would consider sitting on Wednesday evening, instead of Thursday evening, and recess at six o'clock on Thursday. If the government saw its way clear to agree to sit on Wednesday evening we might be able to recess on Wednesday.

Mr. McIlraith: With respect to the business of the house, I still hope that some time we will get the old age pension supplementary payments bill through all stages and to the other place. We want to get royal assent to that bill before the Christmas recess. The other place has been ready and waiting for it for some time, and they have made it clear—

Mr. Fulton: We were waiting for it for some time too.

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps I should not deal with this digression, but I would invite hon. members who interrupt to think about what the conduct of their party has been both Friday and today with respect to that bill, especially in relation to the time spent on it and the wish, I believe of almost all members on both sides, to get it passed.

To come more directly to the question asked by the official opposition house leader, I would hope we could get that bill through so that we would not be in a position of having to wait for the other place to deal with it and so be kept here unduly late for the Christmas recess. This is the problem. It is a very real problem, as I explained to the house leaders. It is a matter of trying to get the bill over to the other place.

Then there are a few smaller bills to be dealt with and there is the transport bill which, because of its implications to a great many municipalities and their plans and to certain shippers and other interests, we are most anxious to get before the committee of the whole house and to have the discussion advanced before the recess.

As I indicated this morning, I was very anxious to be in a position to make a firm commitment for the recess and I would like to do that, but I think all hon. members will appreciate that it must be dependent on the progress made with the old age security supplementary payments bill. There is one thing I might suggest for the consideration of the house. If the old age security supplementary payments bill had passed the committee stage tonight it could have been printed for use tomorrow on third reading.

Mr. Fulton: Why not sit tonight?

Mr. McIlraith: If the house wishes to consider that, it is up to the house. I am not pressing it particularly but I would draw to the attention of the house that it might be helpful in making progress. I believe that the house might wish to complete the committee stage tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): No, no.

Mr. Fulton: I don't know why you insisted on the medicare bill going through when it was not necessary.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It is just bad management.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask how the passage of certain sections of the transport bill will assist in the financial arrangements of municipalities?

Mr. McIlraith: Because the bill contains legislative provisions effective the first of the year, and it would remove the fear that some of them seem to be developing that the house is not willing to deal with the measure.

Mr. Crouse: This is ridiculous.

Mr. McIlraith: You must remember it is some three years and 13 days since that legislation was first presented to parliament.

Mr. Crouse: Why didn't you bring it in before medicare?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Why didn't you postpone the medicare bill?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

[Translation]

SHIPPING—USE OF RUSSIAN ICEBREAKER IN ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, last December 13, I put the following question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill):

Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether it is true that the Russian government recently announced that a Russian icebreaker would be assigned to the St. Lawrence river next winter in order to make winter shipping easier for Russian ships on that river?

I was expecting a serious answer from the minister as to whether that was true or not. But all he said was that he was not a spokesman for the Russian government. Well, I think that if the Russian government had to choose a spokesman, it would not select him.

Mr. Speaker, my question was based on an article published not on the news page but as an editorial of the Toronto Telegram on December 9, 1966. This is what it said, and I quote:

[English]

Moscow also recently announced that a Soviet icebreaker would be assigned to the St. Lawrence river this winter to ease the way for the vessels of the Soviet merchant fleet. Surely Canada won't permit this. If we are to have a winter route, we should maintain it ourselves.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is quite clear and written not by a news reporter but by an editor. All this was taken from a notice published by the Minister of Transport in number 48 of a weekly publication which is not even published in French in spite of the statements of the hon. minister concerning bilingualism in Canada. The December 2, 1966 edition—which is fairly recent—of this publication, Notice to Mariners, contained notice No. 1023, entitled:

[English]

The St. Lawrence river—Quebec harbour to Montreal harbour—assistance of icebreakers.

Commercial shipping using the St. Lawrence river ship channel between Montreal and Quebec is hereby warned that floating aids to navigation cannot be depended upon after November 30 owing to possible ice conditions.

Commercial shipping is also warned that icebreaker assistance to ships will not be available in this area. A small force of icebreakers will be working there but this will be for the sole purpose of preventing flooding.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the notice is very clear, icebreakers will not be there to give assistance to winter shipping but for the sole purpose of preventing flooding.

To have 11 icebreakers and not allow them to open the St. Lawrence to winter navigation and moreover to force the Russians to attend to this matter is something ridiculous and stupid.

I have here an editorial from La Presse of Saturday December 10, 1966, signed by Mr. Roger Champoux, bearing the title: "Running with the hare and hunting with the hounds".

The Gilles Grégoire incident, which has been for 20 hours the subject of current events, has permitted the minister to give those who are interested in winter navigation on the St. Lawrence, the most ambiguous answer possible.

Closely questioned by Mr. Grégoire, the minister, who means to be wise, (and he is so), answered the following: "I do not propose to take extraordinary steps to accelerate such navigation no more than I propose to take any steps to impede it". The hounds . . . are Halifax; the hare . . . is Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, another newspaper that can surely not be branded as separatist, the Montreal Gazette, said in its editorial on December 10, 1966:

[English]

The government is making a mistake in limiting the role of its icebreakers in keeping the St. Lawrence channel open in winter, up to Montreal.

• (10:10 p.m.)

It is easy to understand that the government is sensitive about feelings in the maritimes. If too much is done to keep the St. Lawrence open in winter, if too much is done to make Montreal a winter port, complaints from the maritime ports will come thick and fast.

But in its policy the government is really trying to turn the clock back or, at least, is hesitant about helping it forward.

[Translation]

That is, Mr. Speaker, the government's policy. In that respect, the Estates General of French Canada submitted a working paper at their last meeting and here is their conclusion.

We conclude that it is unacceptable that, to satisfy the ports of St. John and Halifax, the government should impede directly or indirectly the development of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence and the Saguenay rivers, experience having shown that winter navigation is possible and economic for the big ports on the Saguenay and the St. Lawrence up to Montreal inclusive and that it is more economical for shipping to go as far as possible inland.

And it is asked that the ports be open, that navigation be open. That was a conclusion of the Estates General of French Canada.

Why this refusal to open up winter navigation on the St. Lawrence? Merely not to displease the port of Halifax. And the journalist from La Presse, Jacques Pigeon, admitted it himself when he said, on December 8 last:

As one knows, that is a psuedo-problem which, in theory—

The La Presse journalist may call that a pseudo-problem, but the editorialist of that paper admitted that the problem was real.

—a pseudo-problem which, in theory, sets maritime members (the Minister of Transport represents a Newfoundland constituency) up against Quebec members.

Naturally, the government could not grant his request.

That is my request.

The Le Devoir journalist, Jean Dufresne, went further when he said, on December 8:

Indeed great pressures are being placed upon the government by maritime port interests and the department does not wish to further promote navigation on the river, for this would be detrimental to the port interests on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. Speaker, all this is inadmissible. Halifax harbour cannot prevent the development of Montreal harbour. We are told that this is due to pressures on the part of some members. I will say this to the hon. Minister of Transport: there are only two members of parliament for Halifax, and both of them belong to the Conservative party. On the other hand, Montreal has 18 members, 17 of which are Liberals, and only one Conservative. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, and I conclude by saying—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order.

Mr. Grégoire: Never has Montreal been so badly represented by its 17 Liberal members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Grégoire: I still have one minute left, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Miinster of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lapointe asked me whether the Toronto Telegram was correct in a report which contained a statement that the Soviet union proposed to send an icebreaker to the St. Lawrence. I do not regard the Toronto Telegram, any more than I regard myself, as a spokesman for the Soviet Union. The Toronto Telegram is not my favourite reading and I had not seen the story. I did make some inquiries and I understand the same story appeared last year with exactly the same consequences. Of course a Soviet icebreaker, if it came to Canada purely on a visit, would be quite welcome, but if a Soviet icebreaker came here to deal with the problems which are encountered in our territorial waters, I do not think that would be acceptable to any Canadian in any part of Canada.

As to the broader question raised by the hon. member, I did say in Halifax the other day and I repeat here that I believe the government is pursuing the right course in doing nothing at the present time to accelerate icebreaking activities, and in doing nothing to impede navigation. Those owners of ships who want to take the risks of plying these waters in winter are not impeded in any way. If they get into any kind of distress, then, as with any other ship, we do our best to meet their problems. It would cost many, many millions of dollars—

Mr. Grégoire: How much?

Mr. Pickersgill: It would cost many millions of dollars and it is hard to estimate—

Mr. Grégoire: It would cost not one more.

Mr. Pickersgill: I obeyed the rules when the hon. member was speaking and I ask him to hear me out. It would cost many, many millions of dollars which would have to be collected from Canadians in every part of Canada to ensure regular and reliable navigation each winter in the port of Montreal.

I am sure that some day, with technological developments, it will come. But at the present time it would be a really tremendous addition to the cost of government in Canada which I doubt would be warranted by the amount of benefit that would come to Canada from the assurance of traffic during the winter months. We have to remember that it would take a comparatively small amount of money to subsidize the traffic to Halifax and Saint John. If we are to use the taxpayers' money in one way or the other, I think we have to balance the one against the other. At the present time we are taking the view, and I think it is the right view, that ships that are ice-strengthened and want to take the chance of going up to Montreal, because there has to be ice-breaking during the winter to prevent flooding, can take advantage of that, but that exceptional expenditures at the present time would not provide a benefit comparable with the cost.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that all the Montreal members who are present applauded, which is a shame.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I would point out to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) that at this stage of the business of the house, according to standing orders a member has seven minutes to make representations; and the hon. minister or his representative has three minutes to answer. Following these two interruptions, the time allotted for debate has expired.

PUBLIC WORKS—PEMBROKE, ONT., WHARF FACILITIES

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, at this time I want to put forth two or three vital arguments to explain why it is necessary to get improvements under way on the Pembroke waterfront next year. The present wharf was built after the first world war and consists of wooden piles which support a relieving platform of wooden material. The platform in turn supports a concrete cap and earth fill. When the Des Joachims hydro dam was built, the water level of the Ottawa river in front of this wharf changed considerably and the water level was lowered. As a result portions of the wooden piles and the relieving platform were exposed to the air and serious rotting set in. As the wooden supporting timbers rot, the earth fill on top drops into the water and much of this fill is carried away by the current. In past years large quantities of fill have been placed in the holes that have occurred, but in its present state the wharf has become a menace to the public. Signs stating "This wharf is in disrepair" have been erected and flex-beams now enclose the whole wharf area. These were put in about three years ago.

At the present time there is a great danger of children being trapped underneath the relieving platform, and several near fatalities have been narrowly averted. The plain truth of the matter is that during the last 40 years very little maintenance work has been done on the wharf and it no longer provides any service. In fact, it has become a detriment to the public.

Therefore my first argument is based on the need for safety by removing this danger. It is now proposed to cut or remove the piles and relieving platform and drop the concrete cap, which would form a shore protection along the north and west end faces, rather than reconstructing both these sections as wharves. A new timber crib wharf, about 200 feet long, should be constructed along the east side, which is generally protected from winds, rather than constructing the north and west faces as wharves. A small breakwater, about 40 feet long, would also be required at the northeast corner to give protection from the prevailing northwest winds.

The cost of this proposal would not be greater than that of the original proposal advanced by the town about two years ago. In my opinion this is a much better scheme in that the total cost is not more than the original one and furthermore it would develop a small bay at the mouth of the Muskrat river where the town has already placed a large amount of fill to raise a swamp area to be made useful for a small boat harbour.

A fire destroyed the many boathouses in front of the government wharf several years ago and no suitable area has been developed since that time to accommodate the hundreds of boats in the area. I use the term "hundreds of boats" because I have made a check with the customs office in the town of Pembroke and have learned that there are 3,131 small boats registered for that area. This points out the great need for launching facilities on the Ottawa river. In addition, we depend a lot on the tourist trade during the summer months and want to promote this industry inasmuch as Renfrew country in general is so suitable and so attractive.

A launching ramp was placed on the shore of the bay at the west end of the present wharf but there are two major problems with this location. The bay itself has to be dredged now and will have to be dredged from time to time in the future because silt is constantly drifting into it and settling there. Second, in order to launch a boat in that location one must block a road with his car and trailer. The road serves as an exit and entrance to the adjoining municipal park. There is also no place to park cars and trailers satisfactorily. For this reason it has been proposed to move the location of this single boat ramp and put in a double launching ramp at the head of the bay at the mouth of the Muskrat River. The town would be quite willing to deed a right of way to the Crown in that area. The money that would have to be used to dredge the bay at the west end of the present wharf could be used to pay for part of the cost of constructing the double launching ramp in the new location in the bay near the mouth of the Muskrat river and east of the present wharf.

I know how much this new development will mean to the safety of youth and to the large percentage of the 3,131 boat owners in the area who would make use of the new facilities. The total amount of money that has been spent on such projects as tourist wharves and launching ramps has been very small over the past years and I would like to recommend that this small amount be increased because it helps to provide good recreation for Canadians.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I have nothing but admiration for and confidence in the present Minister of Public Works, and I would like to thank him for his excellent co-operation in the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: This is the Christmas spirit.

Mr. Hopkins: Due to the fact that very little money has been spent on projects of this type in the town of Pembroke during the past 40 years I would appreciate it and the mayor and the council of the town of Pembroke would appreciate it if the minister could see fit to give this situation his serious consideration in 1967.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I must begin my remarks with a word of appreciation for some references the hon. gentleman made at the conclusion of his remarks. I am completely unaccustomed to receiving that kind of comment in the House of Commons and it was indeed refreshing and a pleasure to hear it.

Mr. Knowles: Even the opposition joined in.

Mr. McIlraith: I do not want to deal with the project in a detailed way because it seems to me that that would not be particularly helpful at the moment. Rather I want to use the limited time I have to indicate that I think there are two problems here. One relates to the existing public wharf that is in a state of bad disrepair. The department has studied this matter and at the moment is giving active consideration to undertaking the requested repairs in the coming year. That part of the problem can be settled.

The second part of the problem relates to developing what is a rapidly increasing small boat requirement in the area. This involves certain works to make the harbour or dock, very much in demand in this pleasant part of the magnificent Ottawa river, really effective. That comes under marine policy and is dependent on arriving at a satisfactory agreement with the municipal or local authorities. That is in the process of active study and it is a question of what agreements we are able to work out to complete this matter. I hope then to give the matter active consideration resulting in appropriate cost-sharing agreements.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—SUPPLEMENTARY AGREEMENT RESPECTING ATOMIC POWER PLANT

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table in English and in French copies of a supplementary agreement amending the agreement between the government of Canada and the government of India relating to the Rajasthan atomic power station and the Douglas Point generating station signed in New Delhi on December 16, 1963. I also wish to table copies of an exchange of letters between our high commissioner in New Delhi and the secretary of the Indian department of atomic energy spelling out safeguard arrangements for the whole project.

THE BUDGET

SUGGESTED LEAKS BEFORE PRESENTATION IN HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I would ask the Prime Minister whether his attention has been directed to two facts, one that for some days before the budget was announced various elements in the press predicted that there would be an income tax addition in the budget but that it would not cover those with an income below $6,000, which was unusually accurate and, second, the statement made by the president of a securities organization in British Columbia, as reported in the press, that he had a conversation with the Minister of Finance and was convinced that there would be a 1 per cent addition to the sales tax?

Would the Prime Minister have an investigation made to ascertain where any such leaks took place, because it is obvious that the correctness of both indicate more than coincidence.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have seen the reports and I also have talked to the Minister of Finance about the matter. The minister has made a statement to the effect that there was no leak from the Department of Finance in this matter and that the reports were merely speculation. If there is anything further to be inquired into in this matter I would be glad to do so, but I believe the statement made by the Minister of Finance should dispose of the matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the Prime Minister not feel that the fact that two such intelligent observations should be made indicates a power of prophecy that never has been equalled before in the absence of a leak.

Mr. Pearson: I would not like to say that the powerful prophecy in this case has been unprecedented.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, may I give a supplementary answer to the question raised by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition regarding the so-called budget leak. As a result of a communication which I have just received and in justice to the Minister of Finance, I would like to put on the record a telegram which has been sent to him by the president of the Vancouver Stock Exchange. It reads as follows:

I would like to confirm my statements to the press last night that the Minister of Finance in no way confided the contents of his budget to me last Wednesday or at any other time and that my predictions were pure guesswork arrived at from my years of experience in the financial community. Mr. Sharp and I did not discuss the budget in any way either alone or in the company or others.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

REPORT OF CARTER COMMISSION ON TAXATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Prime Minister when we might expect in the house the report from the Carter commission.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a supplementary question.

[Later:]

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I will now repeat my question to the Minister of Finance. I ask the minister when we might expect the Carter commission report to be put before the house.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I met with the provincial ministers of finance this morning; that is why I was a little late in arriving. I informed them, and therefore I will now inform the house, that while I cannot be too firm in my predictions it is our expectation that the report will be delivered to us in both languages in March. I understand the report has been completed in the English language and it is now in the hands both of the printers and the translators.

Mr. Knowles: Will that be March 1967?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—CLEMENCY TO TRADE UNION LEADERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General of which I have given him oral notice. It arises out of representations made to him by various organizations in British Columbia, as well as by myself, in respect of clemency with regard to four union leaders who are serving jail sentences as a result of a proceeding for contempt of court. Questions also were asked of the minister by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and the hon. member for Kootenay West to which the minister replied that he was giving the matter consideration. Is the Solicitor General able to tell us what decision he has reached with regard to each of these four men?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I wish to acknowledge that representations were made to me as outlined by the hon. member. Representations also were made by the hon. member for Kootenay East and the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.).

Clemency under the royal prerogative has been extended to the four men in question in the following manner: The person sentenced on September 30 to three months imprisonment was released on December 16, and the balance of the sentence has been remitted. The person sentenced on September 30 to four months imprisonment will be released on December 22, and the balance of the sentence will be remitted. The other two men who were sentenced on the same date to six months will be released on December 22 until January 3 on which date they will be required to return to continue serving their sentences.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, would the Solicitor General say whether he will give further consideration to remitting part of the sentence of the two men who are to be returned to jail on January 3?

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to commit myself on that question at this time. However, in due course, consideration will be given as to whether further clemency should be recommended.

PETERBOROUGH, ONT.—AMNESTY TO MEN IMPRISONED FOLLOWING TILCO STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York Humber): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. Solicitor General, in view of the fact that they are granting clemency to these people in Vancouver, whether it is at all likely the cabinet will grant amnesty to the two men who were sent to prison from Peterborough at the time of the Tilco strike?

[Later:]

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): The hon. member for York-Humber asked me a supplementary question which I was not able to catch.

Mr. Cowan: I will repeat the supplementary, but I have another question I wish to ask. The supplementary is this: While the cabinet is granting clemency on the west coast, will clemency also be granted to workers from the Tilco plant at Peterborough who were sentenced to terms in jail after court convictions?

Mr. Pennell: I understand, subject to correction, that the men referred to by the hon. member have now been released. By the nature of things, there are no set rules governing the granting of clemency under the royal prerogative. I appreciate that it is unlikely that any course taken in a given case will meet with unanimous approval. One of the considerations which was borne in mind in the west coast case in connection with the date on which the men are to be released is that they could not earn the remissions which are normally granted to prisoners in our penal institutions.

UNITED NATIONS

PEACE KEEPING—PARTICIPATION WHEN ENTIRE COST BORNE BY CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the negative decision by the UN in respect of the Canadian resolution which was designed to establish a satisfactory basis for financing the peacekeeping operations, is the Canadian government considering any change in its policy of participation in operations where the entire cost of maintaining its forces must be borne by Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wished to make sure that I understood my hon. friend's question. There is no United Nations force, in which Canada is participating, where the full cost of our forces is borne by Canada. In the case of Cyprus we bear some of our own maintenance costs, but certain other costs are paid by the United Nations. In any event the disposition of our resolution—not a negative result in the sense that it has been defeated, it has simply been put over to the resumed session—does not in any way involve a change of policy on behalf of the government of Canada. We continue to believe that peace keeping is an important function of the United Nations, and we continue to believe that we must strive for an equitable way of financing future United Nations peace keeping operations.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a supplementary question I should like to direct to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the disinterest in, and indeed hostility to, the expansion of the peace keeping capabilities of the United Nations as exhibited yesterday by the disastrous defeat of the Canadian resolution in the general assembly, will the minister now give serious consideration to revising his plan for a single unified service?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Most certainly not, Mr. Speaker. When the white paper was written in 1964 it was decided on the basis of our experience that the best way we could contribute to future peace keeping operations, if and when they were authorized by the United Nations and the government of Canada, was by developing a well trained and well equipped mobile conventional force. That is the policy that was laid down in the white paper and it was the policy of the government. It is still the policy of the government and the armed forces. The forces we are developing are precisely those which can make a maximum contribution, not just to the deterrence of war in Europe or the central front, but anywhere else they are required for peace keeping operations whenever the need arises.

Therefore, my hon. friend should take some comfort from the fact that we are able to contribute whenever and wherever we are required to do so. The forces we are developing will give us the flexibility to carry out our obligations.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is not the entire statement of the minister purely theoretical in view of the fact that the government suffered a major diplomatic set-back in the defeat of the Canadian resolution.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the description in the press.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the fact, and you know it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me ask the minister this. In view of the fact that his plans for a unified peace keeping force have been swept aside as a result of the attitude taken by the U.S.S.R. and France, does he not agree that if he develops a unified force he will then have a force all dressed up with no place to go?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it becomes the right hon. gentleman to cast reflections of this kind. Let me tell him that this government is persistent in its pursuit of peace throughout the world and will do everything possible at the United Nations and elsewhere to forward that pursuit. We are not going to be deterred by any small set-back.

We intend to persist in what we believe to be a very important undertaking in this country for this country and the world. We are trying to develop some better method of settling world disputes than are presently available. As my right hon. friend should know, we are developing the kind of force which can make a maximum contribution, regardless of the circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: That is a mouthful of malarkey.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister not agree that all his fantastic theories were swept aside yesterday by the attitude taken in the United Nations? What is he going to do with his force if the United Nations persists in the view it has taken? Is he going to the U.S.S.R. and France to show those nations that he is right and everybody else is wrong?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GRAIN

DATE OF FINAL PAYMENTS ON 1966 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his capacity as the minister under whose jurisdiction the Canadian Wheat Board falls. Would it be possible for the Canadian Wheat Board to make the final payments in respect of last year's crop before the end of the year, so that the mini-budget will not take it all?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the final payments will not be made before the end of the year. I announced earlier that they will be made some time toward the end of January, 1967.

Mr. Rapp: This is not fair.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—ACTION BY CANADA TO IMPOSE SANCTIONS—REQUEST FOR FACT FINDING COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What further actions, if any, have been taken or are contemplated by Canada in order to comply with the resolution of the Security Council of the United Nations for mandatory sanctions, including oil sanctions, against the illegal régime in southern Rhodesia?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would be surprised if any further action was required. However, after the resolution imposing mandatory sanctions was passed, I asked the law officers of the crown to make sure that this was the case.

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the great concern in this country about the Rhodesian question, would the minister consider sending a fact-finding commission composed of members of his department to Rhodesia to ascertain first-hand the situation there?

An hon. Member: Send Bob Thompson.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think the action taken by the Security Council of the United Nations is the right kind of action at the present time.

RHODESIA—GIFT OF FUEL FROM ORGANIZATIONS IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This question arises from a publication from Rhodesia showing a gift of 1,500 gallons of gas from Friends of Rhodesia organizations in Canada being handed over by a Mr. Gostick of the Toronto Friends of Rhodesia, who said: "The gift indicates the sympathy and support of the Canadian people." I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what he can do about this situation.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will be very glad to look into the matter and read the article, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Starr: What about the food supplies in North Viet Nam?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister told me that two weeks ago, and has not looked it up yet.

TRADE

EASTERN EUROPE—OPPORTUNITIES FOR ADDITIONAL MARKETS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of his recent trips to socialist countries of eastern Europe and his statement that there is Canadian trade to be had in those countries, will the minister take the first opportunity of advising the members of the house specifically what those trade opportunities are, and what additional trade initiatives are going to be instituted to take advantage of them?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member is asking for a very general statement. I do not think that kind of statement can be made on questions.

Mr. Hees: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I am not asking for a statement now. I am asking whether the minister will take the first opportunity to advise the house.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker.

SHIPPING

INQUIRY INTO DEATH OF SAILOR ABOARD "ONTARIO POWER"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. If he does not have this information readily available at his fingertips, I hope he will take the question as notice. Can the minister advise the house how the inquiry is proceeding, or has it been completed, into the death of a sailor aboard the Ontario Power earlier this year?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am afraid I have not the information available, but I will get it.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE RESPECTING TAX PAYMENTS TO PRAIRIE MUNICIPALITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the unforeseen delay in passing the new transport bill through this house, because of other priorities, I wonder whether the minister would undertake to get in touch with the Canadian Pacific Railway in an attempt to ensure that the municipalities in the prairie provinces will receive the taxes that the C.P.R. has promised for the year 1967, even though this bill may not be passed by December 31 this year.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman's question is one that I could answer more effectively when we get on to consideration of the bill. Though perhaps there is not much hope of getting it passed, I do hope we will have a little time on it before the recess. I will be glad to deal with the question then.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): You had better write to Santa Claus.

Mr. Olson: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Transport could not give some indication to these municipalities, because they will need it in their budgeting for 1967. We do not have the bill before us and if this information is not supplied the municipalities would still need some indication before the end of the year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, it would be useful to answer this question, if you will permit me, and to say that, as hon. members are already aware, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has agreed voluntarily to give up an immunity which this parliament could not take away from it without introducing a constitutional amendment. The most that I could do would be to pass on the representations of the hon. gentleman, my own and anyone else's about this matter. However, apart from that, it seems to me that it would be better to discuss this matter when we can have some give and take across the floor of the house and I hope that this will not be delayed long.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF TEXTILE PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the deep concern expressed by Mr. Daniels, president of the Canadian cotton industry, and to repeat the recent request made by the Confederation of National Trade Unions, does the government intend to set up a royal commission of inquiry shortly, in order to appraise the financial and economic situation of the textile industry in Canada, and particularly in Quebec?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think any inquiries that are necessary can be made without setting up a royal commission.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

POSSIBILITY OF REFORM IN CENTENNIAL YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In a very short time the Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism and the constitutional committees of both Quebec and Ontario will be reporting their findings. In view of this will the government be announcing its intentions relating to constitutional reform early in the centennial year?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal of work to be done by the federal government before an announcement of this kind can be made. I think it would be a very great mistake to give the impression that it is desirable or necessary to have a full-fledged constitutional conference before adequate preparatory work has been undertaken.

Mr. Grafftey: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I was asking the Prime Minister whether, in view of the fact that the commission and the committees will be announcing their findings soon, the government would not consider clarifying its stand early in the new year, so that the dialogue will not take place in a vacuum?

Mr. Speaker: I would bring to the attention of the hon. member the fact that he has asked the same question twice.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. I can think of nothing more important than constitutional reform that will be facing the nation during the centennial year, and therefore I would like the Prime Minister to inform the house as to whether the government will clarify its stand early in the new year, so that the dialogue will not take place in a vacuum.

Mr. Pearson: We will do so as soon as the work has been completed.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question to that asked by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. I understand the Prime Minister to say that before there would be any constitutional conference a lot of preparatory work was required. Is the Prime Minister and the government still considering the possibility that a committee of this parliament might assist in the preparatory work with regard to constitutional changes?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, when the government has completed its own preparatory work, consideration could then be given to setting up a parliamentary committee to which the government might make a report.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

LINGUISTIC CAPACITY OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogene Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

On November 3 last I put a question to him and he was supposed to give an answer within the next two or three days. Would he have an answer now?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my memory does not go back to November 3. I wonder whether my hon. friend would be good enough to remind me.

Mr. Ricard: Yes, Mr. Speaker. At that time I was asking the Prime Minister whether the statement made by the Secretary of State to the effect that it was not necessary for one to be bilingual to be appointed chairman of the C.B.C. was in accordance with the fact.

Mr. Pearson: I think, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State herself will be able to deny that she made that statement. I consulted with her at the time and she said that the report was very inaccurate indeed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BIRTHDAY GREETING TO MISS LAMARSH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the name of the Secretary of State has been mentioned, may I take this opportunity to offer her our best wishes on her birthday?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—REFUSAL TO AUTHORIZE EUROPEAN TOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Could the minister advise the house whether someone in his department or himself, or someone in another department, recently took some action to get the authorization that is essential for the European tour of two hockey teams sponsored by Expo '67?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe it may be the hon. member's intention to deal with this matter at ten o'clock.

Mr. Mongrain: Ten o'clock tonight.

BANKRUPTCY

PRUDENTIAL FINANCE CORPORATION—SUGGESTED INQUIRY BY FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of the Prudential Finance Corporation and the North American General Insurance disaster. I should like to ask the minister whether he, the Minister of Justice or both are proposing to the Ontario provincial authorities a joint royal commission of inquiry or some other form of inquiry to ascertain the concatenations which led to the disaster.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be premature to do that, but what I am proposing to do is to meet with the ministers of the provincial governments, with whom I met both yesterday and today. At both of these meetings my suggestion that the provinces and the federal government should meet to discuss the whole field of operations of financial companies was greeted with considerable enthusiasm.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If I understood the Minister of Finance correctly, he said in answer to my question that he thought it was premature to hold any kind of inquiry. May I ask the minister whether this very large failure at this time of Prudential, following so quickly upon the failure of Atlantic Acceptance a year or a year and a half ago, does not disclose a situation an inquiry into which cannot be delayed?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member I am very much concerned about these matters. Indeed, as soon as the attorney general of Ontario heard of the failure of Prudential Finance he informed me about it because he was concerned about the implications upon the financial world as a whole of the failure of another Ontario company. I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, and it will be the object of the conversations that we will be having with the provincial officials to see whether we can each in our own respective jurisdictions improve the regulation of these companies. I am quite confident, of course—at least, I am not confident but I am very sure—that the province of Ontario, which has jurisdiction over Prudential Finance will be conducting a very thorough investigation.

PRUDENTIAL FINANCE CORPORATION—PAYMENTS TO COMPENSATE FOR LOSSES—INVESTIGATION OF BUSINESS PRACTICES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the minister also take up with those provinces which are particularly affected the matter of compensation to investors and depositors who rely on the fact that governments have responsibilities in respect of those who have invested their hard earned money and have lost it through fraud?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that that subject will be discussed by the provincial and federal government ministers when we meet. That does not mean that we will necessarily make that recommendation to our respective jurisdictions, but I am quite sure that the subject will arise.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can I ask the Minister of Finance whether representations have been made in recent months either to himself or to the officials in his department regarding the practices of other insurance or finance companies—and by that I mean other than Prudential and its associates—the suggestion being that there might be practices within other companies as well which could lead to disasters. If that is so, what has the minister done about them?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, so far as insurance companies are concerned we have a responsibility under the laws approved by this parliament to supervise the operation of federally incorporated insurance companies. The Superintendent of Insurance does everything he can to ensure the solvency of these companies.

However, Mr. Speaker, I should like to repeat what I said previously, that it is very difficult indeed for any jurisdiction to offer protection against the sort of fraud and theft that occurred in the case of North American General, where securities which were shown to be in the books disappeared.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question. The minister has given us some very interesting information but he did not answer my question, which was whether he or officials in his department have received representations with respect to other companies which could lead his departmental officials to believe that there might be further collapses of companies in the insurance or finance field? If so, what has he done about those recommendations?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I will inquire of the Superintendent of Insurance whether he has received any such reports. I think hon. members will agree, however, that it would not be desirable to create the impression that federally incorporated insurance companies are on the verge of collapse. This is a matter of very serious significance. I am sure the hon. gentleman would not want me to create any such impression, nor would he wish to create that impression himself.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, do not the very warnings or the caveat given by the minister indicate that there should be immediate action taken to protect the 20,000 policyholders in this insurance company? Does he not feel that that is of first importance in order to preserve proper respect and regard for the integrity of Canadian companies?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept this proposition. The federal government is doing everything it can under federal law to protect the interests of policyholders and of investors in insurance companies, but there are certain types of fraud and theft that it cannot protect against, unless we change the law. One of the points that was made by the Leader of the Opposition and others in criticism of me was that I should have suggested earlier that we might have to improve the law in order to give as much protection to the policyholders and investors in Canadian companies as in British and foreign companies which operate in Canada.

I think this is an initiative on my part that helps in improving the confidence that the public will have in these companies, and I have no hesitation whatever in saying that I intend to pursue these discussions with the companies, and eventually with the provinces.

[Mr. Sharp.]

AIR CANADA

FLIGHTS TO THE MARITIMES AND WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and it has to do with Air Canada. Has the minister found out whether or not Air Canada is supplying the proper number of flights to the maritimes and western Canada, or have those flights been restricted or curtailed because of flights going south?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I conveyed the hon. gentleman's question of last night to Air Canada. I did not expect a reply like that, and I did not get one.

TRANSPORT

DIFFICULTY IN OBTAINING RAIL ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Transport let the house know why it is that transportation by rail has become so difficult in the last two years. It is almost impossible to get reservations without about three months' notice.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question about railways transportation raises an entirely new subject this session and I will have to go into it at length.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REMOVAL OF TRAIN BETWEEN MONTREAL AND QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, in that connection, has the hon. minister received representations asking him to intervene with a view to getting back into service the night train between Montreal and Quebec that was cancelled?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt that this can be considered a supplementary question. I do not believe the question, as it is now worded, can be allowed at the present time.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CONFESSIONS OF PRISONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should have liked to address the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand), because the agenda of my good friend for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) indicates that to-day is his birthday also. However, due to the nature of my question I must put it to the hon. Minister of Justice.

I merely wish to ask the hon. minister whether, in connection with the Sicotte case and police brutality, he has had conversations with the provincial minister of justice (Mr. Bertrand) with a view to amending the Criminal Code so as to refuse validity to the confession of the accused when it is made in the absence of his lawyer?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, nothing has been received from the Quebec minister of justice with regard to the matter brought up by my hon. friend.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN BENEFIT TO MARRIED PERSONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour concerning unemployment insurance benefits. It is of general interest, but it is of particular urgency because of the lay-offs in Cape Breton. Is any thought being given to an early increase in the $36 a week unemployment insurance benefits paid to married people?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): The possibility of changes in the unemployment insurance regulations is under constant review. If any change is to be made—and I am not saying one is even contemplated—it will be announced in due course.

VANCOUVER B.C.—REGULATIONS DENYING BENEFITS TO FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Perhaps I could ask the minister by way of a supplementary question whether he has yet come to a conclusion regarding the unemployment insurance regulations as they affect fishermen on the west coast?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Since the copy of the letter on this subject was handed to me the other day by the hon. member for Skeena I have caused inquiries to be made and I have also been in touch with the vice president of the fishermen's union. As a matter of fact, I have been trying to get in touch with him on the telephone within the last hour to arrange an appointment to discuss the matter.

The problem involved arises out of changes in the fisheries regulations, and some new formula may well have to be found, to be included in the unemployment insurance regulations to overcome the difficulty. I shall be very surprised if a meeting does not take place to discuss the subject within a matter of days with representatives from the west coast.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

REQUEST FOR AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation amending the Unemployment Insurance Act? Will this be done during the latter part of this session?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): It is extremely doubtful, as I think I said earlier, whether the large number of amendments dealt with in the interdepartmental report based on the study ordered by the Prime Minister could be considered and covered in legislation for action during this session of parliament. We are, however, giving serious consideration to bringing some of these amendments into effect by order in council as early as possible next year.

UNITED NATIONS

SOUTH KOREA—WITHDRAWAL OF FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. A few days ago I inquired of him whether Canada had stated its position on two proposed United Nations resolutions concerning the withdrawal of the United Nations force from Korea. He said he would like time in which to examine the text of the resolutions. I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman has any further comment.

SHIPPING

WINTER NAVIGATION ON ST. LAWRENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Transport a question related to the statement he made last night about what it would cost to facilitate winter navigation on the St. Lawrence. Can he tell us if his department has investigated that matter and, if so, if he is ready to table the figures?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The matter is under study continuously but I have no special report to make at this moment.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister of Transport table the report or notes he referred to last night before mentioning those figures? And could we know what they are?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: The only figure I mentioned was "many millions", sir.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Calgary South has the floor.

OLD AGE SECURITY

AMENDMENT TO INCOME TAX ACT TO MAKE INFORMATION AVAILABLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Ballard (Calgary South): My question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Having regard to the amendment which was placed before the committee of the whole house last night in connection with the measure to assist old age pensioners, whereby the Minister of National Health and Welfare would be authorized to call for information from the taxation branch of the Department of National Revenue, does the minister intend to bring in an amendment to section 133 of the Income Tax Act to permit him to make this information freely available to the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the hon. member is pursuing a debate which has been going on in connection with the consideration of a bill now before the house. I would think that his inquiry might very easily be made when we return to the consideration of that measure.

Mr. Ballard: May I raise this matter at ten o'clock?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR MEASURE TO INCREASE EFFECTIVENESS OF PAROLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): My question is directed to the Solicitor General. Has he considered any measures which would give wider application to the parole system? I have a particular case in mind, but I believe there is urgent need to make the parole system a better rehabilitative tool in carrying out penal reform.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): I should like to advise the hon. member that amendments to the Parole Act and to the Criminal Code are now under study with a view to attaining the end he suggests.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION OF GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT AND DETERMINATION OF PENSIONERS' INCOMES

The house resumed from Monday, December 19, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-251, to amend the Old Age Security Act—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 3.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Monday, December 19, clause 3 was under discussion. Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman—

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Last night, when the house adjourned at ten o'clock, I had been speaking for five minutes, I think, and I was the one who called it ten o'clock. Therefore, would it not be normal that I be allowed to conclude today the remarks I had begun to make yesterday?

[English]

The Chairman: The hon. member for Lapointe.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I have only a few comments to make on this particular clause of the old age security legislation.

I feel, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) did not provide a satisfactory answer yesterday concerning the question of provinces which might want to implement or take over the old age security program.

The minister's defence is that this is merely hypothetical. Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out to the minister that it is more than a hypothetical question since it was specifically referred to in the speech from the throne, delivered at the opening of the present session of the Quebec legislature: That means that the government of Quebec firmly intends to take over the old age security field, since it announced it in the speech from the throne. Consequently, when he asks us to pass this bill, I feel it is the minister's duty to inform us as to the position he will take when the Quebec government decides to implement its own old age security program.

The minister must not ignore a situation which, obviously, is about to occur, since, as I said earlier, it is mentioned in the speech from the throne. The minister must not, like the ostrich, hide his head in the sand; on the contary, he should know what action will then be required. That is why we want an answer from the minister, since the speech from the throne clearly indicates that Quebec intends to recover control over the field of old age security. Faced with such a situation, what will the minister do? Why not provide, in the present legislation, for a fiscal compension to be paid to the provinces—or to Quebec, if that were the case for that province—which would decide to take over the control and administration of old age security?

I feel the Minister of National Health and Welfare should give us an answer in that connection. As a matter of fact, he should even provide in this bill for a fiscal compensation that would reduce or remove the problem raised by section 94A of the B.N.A. Act which grants priority rights to the provinces in the field of old age security.

I therefore ask the minister to tell us plainly what he will do when Quebec has passed the piece of legislation announced in the speech from the throne. I also ask him whether he does not intend, at this stage, in view of what will happen, to amend the bill so as to provide for a fiscal compensation to be paid to any province that wants to establish its own old age security plan.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, now that the Prime Minister is present opportunity should be taken to let the house and the country know what is the attitude of the government with reference to a situation that will shortly arise when the legislature of Quebec implements legislation to exercise its jurisdiction in reference to old age security and old age pensions in general? We have been endeavouring to secure information about that on two or three occasions.

Is it the intention of the government of Canada, in pursuance of its avowed dedication to unity to assure a province that in the event the province utilizes the power it has, the federal government, by subsidies and the like, will make available the necessary money to the province when it withdraws from the national plan? That is not a suggestion on my part in any way. It is simply a question as to what is going to be done. We have endeavoured to secure information from the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but the information has been as arid as the Sahara. We have not been able to get anything.

This surprises me, because I recall so well the various steps taken by the Prime Minister in his vocal adhesion to co-operative federalism. Is it now the intention of the government to desert its declaration in favour of that principle, or does it intend to apply it in such a way that, in a manner similar to that provided for in health insurance, the province or provinces can adopt a duality of system within this country? Where any province takes unto itself the enactment of legislation within its jurisdiction, the federal parliament has correlative jurisdiction, as provided by section 94A of the B.N.A. Act.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the right hon. gentleman has complained that he has not been able to get any information from this side on the constitutional point which he has brought up. But I would remind him that he got a statement last night from the Minister of National Health and Welfare, which I think dealt quite clearly and conclusively with this question. I have little to add to that statement.

Naturally, we believe we have complete constitutional authority to introduce this legislation, just as the federal government had authority to introduce pensions legislation in the first place. I recall that after that legislation was introduced there were many occasions in Quebec when the right of the provincial government was reserved to introduce legislation of this kind under the constitution, if they saw fit, because they do have the right to do it also. But there is no doubt in our mind of our constitutional jurisdiction in this field. We are exercising it now, Mr. Chairman, as it was exercised in the past. Indeed, as my right hon. friend himself was going to exercise it when he moved an amendment to this bill adding $25 to the pension.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: The right hon. gentleman—and I do not criticize him a bit for doing so—though it was quite fitting to make that kind of amendment even after the prime minister of Quebec had made his statement in Quebec. We are taking the same kind of action in a different way, and perhaps I might add for the same reasons and within the same understanding of our constitutional authority.

The right hon. gentleman said that a situation will shortly arise in Quebec by which we will be confronted with a particular piece of legislation. Mr. Chairman, he bases that statement on an intention in a speech from the throne in a provincial legislature. We do not know when that intention will be implemented. We do not know in what terms it will be implemented, if it ever is implemented, so to postpone action in this house in a matter of this kind because of that hypothetical situation would, I think, be entirely irresponsible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Pearson: If and when a situation of this kind should arise where there is concurrent jurisdiction exercised provincially and federally, we would then know in what terms that exercise took place and what was the problem and what we might have to do to face and solve it. Meanwhile, I think we would be very ill advised were we to throw any doubt on our own jurisdiction by suspending action in this matter of supplementary pensions because of a declared intention in a speech from the throne in a provincial legislature.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: So, Mr. Chairman, I think what we should do now is complete consideration of this legislation, get it into effect as quickly as possible and, if and when the contingency arises—I repeat if and when it arises—we will then know how to deal with it in the terms in which it has arisen.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister has created a straw man, and then has demolished his straw man. I never at any time suggested the suspension of this legislation. I never at any time suggested its postponement. If the Prime Minister laughs, I would ask where in the statement I made did I infer that there should be a postponement? What I did ask was, what is this government going to do if there is a government in the province of Quebec which will carry out the undertakings which were made in the speech from the throne? I know that this government placed a lot of stuff in several speeches from the throne. They regard that as simply decoration. But I believe when the province of Quebec today places anything in the throne speech, it means to bring in the legislation and depart from the lack of principle that has been characteristic of this government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am convinced that the government of Quebec has a capacity for integrity in carrying out its pledges which has never been characteristic of this government. Until I find the contrary, I must accept that. Now then, I say to the Prime Minister, why all this evasive by-play? Nobody is objecting to the legislation which is before the house. What we are asking is this: What is going to happen to your highly vaunted co-operative federalism which you marched forth on every occasion in the past and ran away from whenever you were faced with reality? What are you going to do? The answer of the Prime Minister is one of complete evasiveness. He refuses to answer the question because he seems to believe that when the federal parliament passes this legislation it will then have exclusively occupied the field of old age security pensions and that from that day on the provinces will have no authority. That is not my reading of section 94A.

Mr. Pearson: If the right hon. gentleman felt this way, why did he move an amendment to this pension legislation adding $25?

Mr. Diefenbaker: You see, that is like asking a question when the answer is perfectly obvious.

An hon. Member: Answer it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want an answer to the question I asked. What are you going to do?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is fine; the interruptions of hon. gentlemen opposite, as in so many cases, represent the complete contribution that they make to debate in this house. The only thing I regret is that they cannot be recognized individually by Hansard by their oh's and ah's, so that at least among their constituents they would be given credit for these interruptions.

What is obvious is that the Prime Minister will not answer because he is in difficulty. He dare not answer, and realizing the consequences of the declaration made by the minister he resorts to building up an imaginary situation. The fact still remains that the government does not know where it is going in this legislation in view of section 94A, and not knowing where it is going, as in so many cases in the past, it shuts its eye to the problem. It moves ahead ultimately toward difficulties; crises develop, and then ex parte legislation is introduced in order to meet the situation. The Prime Minister has given an answer. I accept it. They do not know where they are going.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the issue which has been raised and which is being discussed obviously is of the greatest importance to Canada. I should like to say a word or two on it, but not in terms of asking the government to say now what its policy may be if a certain thing should happen. Personally, I have the feeling that for the government to attempt to do that would not be a service to Canada or to federal relations with the provinces. To attempt to say now what may be done in circumstances, the precise nature of which are not yet known, would not be, as I have said, a service to the future of confederation in this country.

I suggest that when, in 1951, the amendment to the B.N.A. Act was made, it was obviously made because of a conviction across the country, shared by the provincial governments as well as by the federal authorities, that care of the aged of Canada must be so far as is possible equal across the country, subject to anything more that the provinces themselves may be able to do.

The principle on which this parliament has functioned in this field as I understand it, is precisely the principle that all the aged people of this country, wherever they may reside, are entitled to at least the little we are giving them to live on for the rest of their years in some dignity and self-respect. There are parts of this country which would not be able to afford such treatment for their elders within their boundaries unless the federal parliament took action.

If I may put it this way, the frightening thing about what has happened in the province of Quebec at this time is that not only did the government of that province demand exclusive jurisdiction in this field in the throne speech, but that the official opposition in that province expressed full agreement to that demand. As a result of that, I have no doubt that at some future date we will be faced with a very real and difficult problem, a problem which will be created not only by the Union Nationale government in the province, but also because the position taken, as I have read in the press, is fully supported by the official Liberal opposition. I am not unaware that there are some members of my own party in the province of Quebec who take a general line of this sort. The problem is not a partisan one in this country. The problem is a very real difference of opinion regarding certain fundamental constitutional matters.

While the Prime Minister, as far as I am concerned, is right in saying that he will not attempt to make any decision now on a particular problem, the precise nature of which we do not yet know, I do hope that the federal government itself, as I have no doubt it is—I would be heartbroken if it is not—is occupying itself very actively with this problem in its long term context. I hope that soon—and when I say "soon", I mean soon—the federal government will have the courage, if I may put it that way, to state to parliament and to the people of Canada the path which it intends to follow. We need a policy which will guarantee the kind of co-operation between the federal and provincial governments which will be designed for the benefit of all Canadians and not at the expense of the elderly people or any other section of our people who might suffer through a fragmentation of welfare legislation which is now within federal jurisdiction or to the extent that it is now within federal jurisdiction.

I did not rise to make a lengthy or impassioned speech, but merely to indicate that we, like all other members of this committee, recognize the seriousness of the problem. I agree that a decision cannot be made until we all know the precise nature of the problem, if and when it does arise. However, I urge the government that the time has come when we, as a country, must face some of these problems and come to decisions. If this means a confrontation of ideas in this country, the longer we delay that confrontation the worse the situation will become. As we enter 1967, it seems to me the time is long overdue for us to make some definite decisions, so far as constitutional matters can ever be definite. We must make some definite decisions in these fields which concern the welfare and future of the whole of Canada and every section of our people.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, I cannot accept the general and diffuse interpretation given a while ago by the right hon. Prime Minister to section 94A of the Canadian constitution, thus bestowing steadily upon the central government a responsibility in the old age security field.

Section 94A is very clear, it is one of the sections of our constitution that lends itself the least to confusion and it is to the effect that the central government cannot hinder, neither now nor in the future, the provinces that decide to exercise such authority, such constitutional responsibility.

Besides, it is consistent with the spirit and the letter of the constitution. If we take the time to read the 1865 confederation debates, we will find out easily that the fathers of confederation, the politicians of that time in Canada, wanted to leave to the provinces the whole field of social security. And the 1951 constitutional amendment implies such priority, such precedence on the part of the provinces as regards social security.

I say that an active province, which Quebec is preparing to become in this matter as stated in its speech from the throne, and which decides to occupy the old age security field has a priority right. And when its legislation is passed, well it becomes an exclusive right on its territory.

Evidently, the central government can continue to legislate and operate in the old age security field for inactive provinces which prefer to let the central government look after the matter. This is the only meaning in my opinion, which can be given to section 94A. And this is why, in view of that crucial problem which will very soon arise, probably during the winter, in Quebec city, when a provincial legislation will be passed so that the Quebec government will take possession, according to its constitutional and prior responsibility, of the old age security field, it should now be foreseen what the federal government will do, if it will merely legislate in the case of other provinces, but not for the province of Quebec.

To govern is to anticipate. It is a truism we learned in college. We have had few opportunities to see it put into practice in this house since last January 18. Yes, to govern is to anticipate. And in this case, the antecedents or the precedents are what matters. When hon. members ask for a fiscal compensation, their arguments rest on antecedents, on other federal legislation where a fiscal equivalent was granted. And to quote a few examples, we have the education grants in 1964, if my memory is correct, and payments to universities in 1962. Therefore, if that procedure has given satisfaction and has abolished dissension between Canadians, between the provinces or a province and the central government, I fail to see why the present government refuses to anticipate. It is its responsibility to govern, anticipate and include in the present legislation the fiscal compensation for the provinces which will want to assume that field of social security.

The basic principle of federalism is a matter of balance and a matter of social justice also. And to reach a balance under our legislative system, it is necessary to anticipate clauses which will not result in discrimination and injustice toward any province which will want to occupy the field of social security.

If the central government refuses to anticipate, in the right direction, one can imagine what conflicts and disagreements will ensue when a province occupies the field of social security. And all this, Mr. Chairman, would occur during our centennial year, in that very year when Quebec, for instance, is going to pass within a few months, in 1967, legislation to get into the field of old age security. And the present federal government is going to let dissension occur during the centennial, when finally Canadians from coast to coast, in a fine constructive spirit, must try to prepare and cultivate further national harmony and fraternity.

I hope the government, and therefore the Minister of National Health and Welfare, will agree to amend the bill if they want it to pass rapidly and if they really want it to be free of discrimination and injustice against a province or provinces wanting to occupy the field of old age security.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I referred to this matter first a week ago last Monday, on December 12. I did not do so because of a frivolous reason but because it is obvious, as the hon. member for York South stated, that there is a deep and serious problem here with which the government may be faced. One does not blame the government for introducing this legislation, although one may differ with the terms, but it is proceeding on the basis that in the past this field has been largely occupied by the federal government.

In view of the very definite and categorical statement by the province of Quebec, certified by the government and approved of apparently by the official opposition, it appears to be quite definite that we will shortly see provincial legislation dealing with old age security. It is not enough for the minister to say, and as the Prime Minister has said today, although there is a problem the government has a constitutional right to introduce this type of legislation. This is quite correct. I do not think anyone differs from that view. Of course, the government has the right to introduce it. But it is surely our duty, as the legislative body which authorizes the government to change the existing laws to provide for this supplement, to take a look at the future and see what will be the situation. We say to the government, here is a problem. Will you not admit it? Will you not tell us what you propose to do?

I made a suggestion, which I will come to in a minute, which I think might well be considered by the government. The hon. member for York South has raised the point. I believe that there is a very meritorious case to be made for arguing that the field is one which should properly be completely and exclusively dealt with by the federal government. I am not arguing that point now; not giving my view; there may be other opportunities to do so. But it is quite obvious that in 1951, when the then government attempted to offer that solution it was rejected by the provincial governments. We now have section 94A in its present form.

In 1964 the government, seeking the necessary constitutional amendments to permit it to introduce the Canada Pension Act, asked and secured from Westminster an amendment to section 94A providing for supplementary pensions including old age and disability. At that time I suggested the government give consideration to dealing with the provinces in an attempt to make the field exclusively federal. Obviously, there were difficulties and impediments; the provinces no doubt did not agree. We are, therefore, faced with the situation that exists today.

I think it would be a very embarrassing, ludicrous and impossible situation if, without there being any indication of what this government intends to do, we found that the province of Quebec, or for that matter any other province, had exercised its obvious constitutional right by enacting legislation which so far as the amount, ages and conditions are concerned differed completely from the federal old age security legislation.

If you consider section 94A and its obvious, plain meaning, it would appear that the ultimate jurisdiction still lies with the provincial government. The provincial government may say: In our opinion pensions should commence at a certain age. They should be for a certain amount and should be paid under certain conditions. If this were the case, it would quite obviously not be meeting the intention indicated through their legislation with regard to limits if, in addition to the amounts they prescribe, pensioners received the amount prescribed by the federal government. It would be an impossible situation, and one with which this house must be concerned now.

The law is there. I suggested to the minister that he might give consideration to making it quite plain that the minute the province does legislate, before that legislation was actually implemented the matter would be referred to the Supreme Court. Statements, with which I do not agree, have been made in this house and outside, that this is not a matter in respect of which the Supreme Court can adjudicate. I reject that argument. On one hand, the provinces turn to the British North America Act and say, because of the way this legislation is worded we have the right to enact social security legislation. We stake our claim on the ground of the British North America Act, but reject that act when it comes to establishing the forum in which this question can be discussed and tried if there is a conflict of opinion.

That is a proposition which I cannot support. It seems to me that the government should say: There is a problem. We did not create it, but it exists. We may be coming into a situation wherein we will be met with provincial old age security legislation which differs materially from ours. Under those conditions, we recognize the problem and intend to deal with it. I think that under those conditions we, as a legislative body, should bring the question to the attention of the government and suggest alternative solutions. The government should recognize and accept the fact that the difficulty does exist. If we place alternatives before the government, I think we will have done all we can at this particular time.

I believe this is an important issue. It is not being raised for frivolous or delaying purposes. I think the house is entitled to raise the matter and obtain as competent and complete answers as it is possible for the government to give. I do not believe it is sufficient merely for the government to say that parliament has the right at this time to pass the legislation which the government has introduced. I agree with that position, but that is not a sufficient answer to the problem. A situation may occur in the future in this respect. I believe it is incumbent upon the government to indicate that they intend to solve the problem by negotiation and discussion, or if necessary by a reference as soon as possible to the proper forum for a final and binding adjudication. Anything less than that really does not satisfy me.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I only have two words to say. Considering what has been said in the course of this debate, I must reaffirm the position I have already taken on this matter which I, for one, call fiscal compensation in connection with this bill.

The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) says he is not prepared to make a statement now, and I understand him perfectly; as a matter of fact, I approve of his attitude, because I think such matters cannot be negotiated on the basis of newspaper articles or even on the basis of a speech from the throne, but as a result of talks and discussions between the provinces concerned and the federal government.

I might remind the government that a federal-provincial conference of ministers of finance is now going on at Ottawa and that this perhaps could afford an opportunity to initiate talks, particularly with representatives of the province of Quebec, or with spokesmen for any province which might eventually apply for fiscal compensation.

I do not agree with the member for York South (Mr. Lewis)—although his arguments are sound, sober and quite logical—when he submits that it is time for the government to face the provinces and maintain its position in the field of old age security. I admit that this is an area in which the federal government naturally has the right to intervene, but the provinces also have a priority in this field.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, I intend to vote in favour of the bill, because I feel that the federal government must take action where the provinces do not and ensure a certain degree of uniformity between the ten provinces. I personally feel that, when the time comes, the federal government must also grant fiscal compensation to those provinces wishing to administer their old age security program themselves. I would urge the government to take this suggestion into account, even though we recognize that the time is not yet favourable, that discussions have not yet taken place between the provinces and the federal government, and that it would be advisable to extend the period of dialogue and look into the situation at greater length.

I am referring to my province in particular, although the same situation may apply elsewhere. The federal government must recognize the fact that the government of the province of Quebec is presently demanding control of the old age security program and that the Liberal opposition endorses this claim.

I may say that a great majority of intermediate bodies of the province of Quebec would consider this a wise move on the part of the government, if it endeavoured to find a solution which would not encroach upon the rights of others and yet accommodate everybody. I repeat that this may not be an urgent question, a problem to be solved within the next 24 hours, but say in the next few months, following consultations which are necessary in such a case, the government should show good faith and take the necessary action, even if it imposes the minimum conditions providing for uniformity in the ten provinces, which I find is in order.

In certain quarters people will be surprised to see that I support the conclusions of my friend, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) on this matter. Even if I disapprove his way of presenting the project, or some of his arguments and expressions, I cannot but agreee with him when he has a flash of common sense, which does not happen too often. Mr. Chairman, I hope the hon. member for Lapointe will forgive me this smart remark, but this is a case where I feel compelled to stand in favour of his conclusions, as well as those of my neighbour in this house, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard). Even though I do not accept all their reasoning, I think we cannot escape the conclusion, not only with respect to Quebec province but also with respect to several other provinces.

It would probably help mutual understanding if the government were to say: Eventually, when we are through with the discussions that are necesary in order to come to some understanding on the terms and conditions of transfer, we shall agree to grant fiscal compensation to the provinces on request.

Mr. Chairman, I make this request of the government, in the best spirit possible and with the intention of being as constructive as possible.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, as can be seen, the requests for explanations are not limited only to the group to which I belong, for the few remarks that were made this afternoon came from all corners and from all parties. This proves that the hon. minister must definitely make his stand clear, as regards section 94A.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) has asked the minister three times as well as the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), to state clearly what would be the position of the government as regards section 94A. This is also the third time I rise to ask our friends opposite to tell us where they will stand, once the government of the province of Quebec actually moves into this field of old age pensions.

There is no doubt that the premier of Quebec has clearly established his position when, in the speech from the throne of December 1, he stated the intention of his government to take action in the field of old age pensions. Mr. Chairman, his position is that much stronger because he has the firm support in this connection of the Liberal opposition in the Quebec legislature. It seems that he also has the support of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette).

I said last week and I repeat it again this week: it is urgent that positions be clearly established, not only to prevent misunderstanding but also unnecessary legal proceedings which would bring about friction and suspicion between the parties concerned. We merely ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to tell us what he will do when, for instance, the citizens of Quebec will declare themselves, by way of referendum, in favour of the occupation by the provincial government of the field of old age pensions.

There is no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that the population of the province of Quebec, if it is asked, will respond favourably to the question of knowing if the government of the province of Quebec should look after old age pensions itself. If, as the hon. minister has said, we are going to wait and see what happens, this will only postpone the administration of a remedy, which could be done right away, because for human relations, the situation is almost the same as for diseases; one ounce of prevention is worth one pound of cure. Now, in order to avoid meeting countless difficulties for the minister, we ask him to state his position right now.

He told us three times that the provincial government had jurisdiction in this field, and the federal government also. He did not have to tell us, we knew it already. The answer is in section 94A. What we do want to know, on the other hand, is whether the hon. minister will grant the fiscal equivalent to the province that decides to take over old age pensions.

This does not mean that the province of Quebec, sooner or later, will be the only one that will decide to assume the responsibility for old age pensions. It way well be that other provinces will decide to do so as well. We would like the hon. minister to tell us clearly whether he intends to give fiscal compensation to such provinces as may decide to have their own old age pension plans.

Will the same policy as was followed in other fields also apply to that of old age pensions? That is what we want to know. It seems to me that this question is reasonable. I would understand the minister being careful, if the question originated only in the Conservative party, but it so happens that it comes from all sides of the house. I am sure that several of his Liberal colleagues have also put this question to him in the inner circles of the caucus. I would like him to answer everybody, because no one will be led to believe that this question does not create concern in the minds of certain members opposite from the province of Quebec.

Surely, this matter is of great concern to them, and the minister should take advantage of this opportunity to allay the concern of those with whom he shares party responsibilities.

Let him, therefore, tell his Liberal colleagues what will be the position of the government if the province of Quebec and other provinces choose, some day, to move into the old age pension field. In a situation such as this, is the minister going to grant or refuse fiscal compensation? A denial will lead inevitably to double taxation.

Those are the questions we are asking the minister, and I urge him to reply, because they concern not only the people on this side of the house, but also several members from the province of Quebec.

[English]

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question? Shall clause 3 carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, before this clause carries, I should like once more to tell the minister that his attitude is totally inconsistent with the spirit of mutual understanding all across Canada and, some day, he will certainly regret refusing the house the information to which it is entitled.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

House in committee on Bill No. C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—National transportation policy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether on clause 1 I might make one or two observations about the bill itself which I think are directly related to the progress of the bill.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, if it is not against the rules, I want to express my very deep appreciation to the hon. member for Hamilton West, who I think all members of the committee in every part of the house will agree, did a painstaking job as chairman of the committee. It has certainly not been my experience that any piece of legislation that I have had anything to do with has received a more thoroughgoing and conscientious scrutiny by a committee. I want to say that I do appreciate the part played by members from all parts of the house in their consideration of this bill.

I think we all realize that transportation, as I have said too many times already, is the bony structure of our country and that it is very important to keep the skeleton healthy if the body politic is to be at all healthy. We had a big responsibility, when we came to do something about its basic structure, to make sure that we did it well.

At the same time, I might be permitted to point out what will be the legal and administrative consequences of our failure to complete this bill by December 31. In saying this, I am not trying to kid anyone that this parliament will be able to dispose of it by December 31. I would hope this house might, but I do not think that in the few days before Christmas we could dispose of the bill in committee here and expect the hon. members of the other place to rush through a bill of this magnitude in an hour or two.

At the same time we should be aware, as I say, of the legal and administrative consequences, as nearly as I can outline them, of our failure to pass this bill. It seems to me they illustrate the importance of making as much progress as we possibly can between now and the adjournment, so we can dispose of the measure as early as possible in the new year and offset the effects of these consequences to such extent as we can.

There is no provision in the estimates for any further payments to the railways beyond December 31 of this year. It was assumed and hoped, and I think expected until fairly recently, that this bill would have become law by that date. As these payments to the railways are to some degree made in recognition of certain things that they are doing voluntarily, it will be somewhat difficult to expect them for a long period—I hope not even for a short time; but certainly not for a long period—not to exercise what rights they may have under the law existing on January 1 unless there is evidence that we seriously intend to make changes in the law along the lines which, as a result of the deliberations of the committee, I think most of us seem disposed to make.

As hon. members know, the non-competitive freight rates have been frozen. Originally, they were frozen by law. That law has long ago expired and the rates have remained static by the voluntary action of the railways. If there is reasonable evidence to show that we are not going to take too long in the new year, I hope there would be no disposition on the part of the railways to disturb that freeze. But we should remember that it is not part of the law and what they are doing at the present time they are doing voluntarily.

Whatever criticisms hon. members may still have of some aspects of the new bill, I think all of us would feel that it would be very regrettable if there was any attempt to make any rate changes under the old law. We do recognize the many disadvantages that those rates have. This is particularly true in the Atlantic provinces or the select territory, which includes the eastern part of Quebec.

In that area we are not merely proposing in this legislation to maintain the freeze for two years but we are proposing to maintain the roll-back, which would also cease to operate after December 31 unless the railways voluntarily decide to continue it in the hope that parliament will act in good faith and with reasonable expedition.

The order in council providing for the at-and-east grain rate freeze also expires on December 31. Since that order in council provides for compensation to the railways for maintaining these rates, and since no funds have been provided for this purpose in the estimates, again because we expected that this legislation would take the place of the estimates, an awkward problem once more arises. I do not say it is an insuperable problem. But it is an awkward problem.

Then, there is the question of the undertaking given by the railways to withdraw all their applications for branch line abandonment on the so-called protected lines. They have given an undertaking to withdraw them as soon as this bill receives the royal assent, and they have so signified before the transport commissioners.

That undertaking is, of course, contingent upon the passage of the legislation. I am glad to say that the Board of Transport Commissioners, as a result of the intervention I made when the measure was brought up here in the house, has agreed not to hear any applications for abandonment in the prairie provinces while this bill is before parliament. However, if we spend a prolonged period on this measure it is a nice question whether we can in reason and in equity maintain a freeze of this kind. Here again, I trust there will be no problem because we will proceed with the kind of expedition which I hope will be shown.

The present provision for the grade crossing fund also expires on December 31 and was to be replenished under this legislation. It will, of course, be possible in anticipation—because this is a genuinely unforeseen situation—to make some temporary provision to ensure that none of this very necessary work is held up. Again, this means that extraordinary action will have to be taken because we have not been able to deal earlier with the measure before us. I am not criticizing anyone when I say this. I recognize that there has been much to do. But I feel we should know what the facts are.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat brought up a question, on the orders of the day, about which I might say another word. This is something about which the government can do nothing of its own motion, except pray. The Canadian Pacific Railway has voluntarily undertaken to pay grants equal to one third of the municipal taxes which would otherwise be levied but for their constitutional exemption. They have agreed to pay these taxes in the first calendar year after the passage of this legislation. It was anticipated when this offer was made that the year in question would be 1967. The railway will pay two thirds in the following year, and the full amount in the third year and thereafter.

This is a voluntary undertaking and while I could ask the company to overlook the fact that we have not found it possible to act by the end of December—and I would naturally be glad to do this—we must remember that this offer was made in anticipation of the freedom which would be granted under this new legislation. This freedom would enable the railways to compete for revenue in a way in which they are not able to compete at present.

Since the company is paying money out of its own treasury on the assumption that it will get this extra revenue, it would be rather humiliating for the government to have to say: notwithstanding the fact that we could not do what we had hoped and expected to do to enable you to earn these additional sums, we would nevertheless like you to pay these taxes. I hope that if we do not take too long in our consideration of this legislation in the new year the C.P.R. might, from the point of view of public relations, be disposed to listen to some such prayer. But there is no way of compelling the company to do so.

With respect to the government's announced intention of asking Canadian National Railways to pay grants in lieu of taxes of the crown-owned part of the C.N.R. system, that too, was contingent upon our placing the Canadian National in a position by the first of the year to earn this money. The government would, I think, have to reserve its decision as to whether it would impose this extra burden on the treasury—because that is what it would amount to—if parliament took too long about putting the railways in a position to earn the additional revenues which they had hoped to earn as a result of the passage of this legislation.

I think these are the main difficulties which arise as a result of our inability, up to now, to dispose of this legislation. I put them forward so that we shall all be reminded of them here, and in order that the country may be aware of them. If we in this chamber can in the next three days dispose, or largely dispose, of the committee stage of this bill so that it could be dealt with by the other place early in the new year there will not, I hope, be any serious conseqences arising from the delay. But should there be a protracted delay there may be considerable difficulty, as I think hon. members will agree.

It seems to me that if there is not a disposition to deal with clause 1 reasonable quickly we might agree, after some discussion of it—and I think there should be some discussion of clause 1 because it is so fundamental to the rest of the bill—that we might proceed to consider some of the other clauses and make progress with them. There are some hon. members who are not present today. I would be quite agreeable, if other hon. members thought it fair, to having some discussion on clause 1 and then adjourning the debate on that clause.

If hon. members felt, after having some discussion on clause 1, that the clause should be stood to give an opportunity to other hon. members not now present to make observations on it, I would be quite agreeable. In the interval, we could make progress with some of the other clauses and thereby save time after the Christmas adjournment.

The bill speaks for itself. It is reprinted with the amendments that were made in the standing committee. There are one or two additional amendments that may be proposed during consideration of the bill in committee, but in the main I am recommending it to the committee as it is now.

Mr. Olson: What are the clauses that the minister is considering amending? Possibly he has not got the exact language of the amendments before him, but it would be of assistance to know which clauses are to be amended.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am told that one of our colleagues is going to make a proposal with respect to mergers and the purchase of transportation companies by other transportation companies. I have seen his proposal, and it looks to me like a pretty good amendment. I am rather disposed to accept it but I want tc hear the views of the committee before reaching a final decision.

There is another amendment, not small in amount but in scope, relating to the transitional subsidy clause, which arises out of protracted consideration which I gave to some of the representations that we received when the bill was being considered in the standing committee and on which, at that time, I had not reached a conclusion.

I promised the hon. member for Saint John-Albert and the senior hon. member for Halifax that I would look again seriously at the bill to see if we were adequately protecting any rights in existing legislation which the Atlantic ports have in order to make absolutely sure that any such rights were not taken away by this bill. I have had an explicit amendment drafted which I will be proposing at the appropriate time.

Then, there is a very small, technical amendment about the apportionment of tolls. Those are the only four upon which I have definitely decided. There is one other possibility that I am still thinking about, but I have not yet been able to make up my mind.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, we have just listened to a plaintive plea which arises from a mismanaged house. Instead of dealing with what this bill will accomplish for Canada, the minister dealt at some length with the manner in which the bill was introduced and the deadline that he placed on himself in introducing it. He told us that at one time he had great hopes of having it passed by December 31, but now he does not think it at all possible that this can be accomplished. I would like to state that it cannot be accomplished because of the government's mismanagement in bringing this legislation before the house.

We spent something like seven to ten days discussing medicare, which will not become effective until 1968. If this transport legislation was so urgently required and had to be passed by January 1, 1967, why did the house spend seven to ten days on medicare which will not become effective until July, 1968?

Mr. Rynard: Maybe.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): And maybe not even then. Why did the government insist on the house spending something like nine days debating unification, for which Canada has no immediate need and which would not save the taxpayers $1 million even if it were implemented today? Why did the government keep the house bound up in that debate for nine days if time were required to consider this legislation which is urgently needed?

Why did the government play on words with regard to the old age security bill with which we have just been dealing? Four months ago we were told that there would be no means test, no needs test. But then the government introduced an income test, which is nothing more than a play on words and has aroused a great deal of indignation across the country. To top it all, the government introduced a budget last night and blamed the tax increases on the senior citizens. This is shameful treatment of our senior citizens. The government has used time consuming methods with respect to these three pieces of legislation, one of which is almost passed and the other two which it hopes to have passed soon.

I honestly believe that the Minister of Transport did his best to get this bill through the house by January 1. I hold nothing against him, except I am sorry he did not have more persuasive power with his colleagues. He should have been able to convince them that this legislation should have been introduced sooner because consideration of it would require more time than is available between now and January 1 next.

I want to point out that we on this side of the chamber co-operated fully when the legislation was introduced. We gave up the resolution stage debate, which could have lasted ten days on such an important piece of legislation. We gracefully acknowledged the fact that there was only so much time left for consideration of the bill, and then we proceeded as quickly as possible to give the bill first and second reading and send it to the transport committee.

In the transport committee we heard one brief after another in rapid succession. I do not hold this against the minister, the government or the committee chairman, but we heard the briefs in rapid succession. In the process 3,000 pages of evidence were piled up, in an endeavour to return the bill to the house as soon as possible so that it could be dealt with by January 1, 1967. If it is not now dealt with by that date I say the responsibility lies with the government, and not with the minister or with the opposition. Both the minister and the committee worked to meet the time objective, but we were unable to convince the minister's colleagues that they should co-operate.

This is an important piece of legislation, and I am going to quote the minister's exact words, as recorded at page 1666 of volume 23 of the standing committee's proceedings, to show hon. members what we are dealing with here. The minister said:

> There is not, I am sure, any more important piece of legislation before parliament, not even the Bank Act, which I do not wish to disparage in any way but which is, after all, just a revision of existing legislation.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Then the minister went on to say:

> This is a fundamentally revolutionary change that is being proposed here.

This is not in an ordinary thing; this is a fundamental, revolutionary change which is being presented in this bill. In the light of this, I urge the committee to consider this bill very fully. Then, he went on to say:

> We are proposing for the first time since 1903, when the board of railway commissioners was first established and rates were set for practically all kinds of railway activity, to put the railways in a position of running themselves like any other business does except in the areas where they have a monopoly.

In other words, after this bill is passed, the railroads will be like any other business, except in areas where they have a monopoly. That has been the contentious issue. Where are those areas, and what protection does this bill give those areas?

Then at the top of page 1667 he went on to explain what a difficult time he had in attempting to agree with this revolutionary change. He said that it was difficult to come to such an agreement. He dealt at quite some length with the difficulty which he had in wrestling with this whole problem. So, this bill is put before us. It contains a revolutionary change, a departure. In the committee on transport and communications, we were asked to consider this at length.

I should like to touch a little on the history of transportation in Canada. The Manitoba brief, in proceedings and evidence No. 38, dealt with this question. I should like to read from page 2555 of the committee proceedings:

> In the early days of confederation, national policy was concentrated mainly on fostering the political unity and economic integration of the newly united provinces.

In other words, transportation played a real part in bringing us together politically and economically. Now, this policy is going to be discarded in this new bill. We are going to treat the transportation system as just another business. That is the first real step we are taking in clause 1 of the bill. The submission continues:

> Due to the distances which separate Canada's producing territories and consumer markets, development of the country's resources depended upon railway construction and low transportation charges to facilitate the flow of products to market. The people of Canada have given the aid necessary to procure adequate transportation facilities.

In other words, down through the years, through taxation the people of Canada have provided adequate transportation facilities to enable the producing areas to get their goods to market and the consuming areas to utilize the goods produced all across Canada. The submission continues:

> The ultimate goal of the public policies of the various federal governments since confederation was to maximize and equalize opportunities and benefits for all Canadians in all regions of the country.

That has been the basic reasoning behind all transportation policies in years gone by. This bill is a revolutionary change from all that. It will set up the railroads as business entities and the suggestion is that we no longer need them as public utilities. In a sense, this is what we are being told; this is what this bill purports to do. Let us look at the possibilities. Are they still public utilities? Are they something similar to General Motors, or are they something similar to a Canadian utility which is providing power, for example, to the city of Ottawa, or something like that? According to my interpretation they certainly still are to quite a large extent public utilities.

One has only to go through the committee proceedings. One might look at page 1669 of committee proceedings No. 23 where it is outlined clearly by the minister that these rates are going to be subsidized. These are subsidized rates for grain moving to the maritime ports. In other words, there is an area here in which the railway still is a public utility. We see in the bill, as the minister points out on this same page, that the Crowsnest pass rates will be maintained at a subsidized rate, and in a sense the railways still are a public utility.

One could go through the areas of Canada and point out the many aspects in which the transportation system in Canada is still basically a public utility. Even if it is only partially so, then government regulations should have something to do with the permissible earnings of that public utility. If the government is going to give somebody a sole right to serve a given area, then it is its duty to make sure that the level of rates charged in that area are not exorbitant or abusive. If one feels they are not a public utility but rather a corporate entity, then of course there is nothing to stop them going ahead and charging any rates they wish.

One other aspect with which I should like to deal is that clause 1, in a sense sets up, the commission and does so in such a way that it causes some concern to the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. The commission is not necessarily going to be a cure-all. Just because we link all modes of transportation under one commission does not necessarily mean we are solving all our transportation problems. This is outlined very well by the C.P.R. in committee proceedings No. 28 at page 2059. The C.P.R. had this to say about the establishment of the commission itself:

> The McPherson Commission did not contemplate a commission having jurisdiction over all modes of transport.

Many people believe that this piece of legislation is based directly on the MacPherson Commission report, but here the C.P.R. points out that the MacPherson Commission did not envisage a commission such as this bill would set up to have jurisdiction over all modes of transportation. It recommended the creation of a national transportation advisory council to undertake the task of conducting the studies necessary to achieve the goals of a national transportation policy. They go on to deal at some length with what a national transportation policy should include. They say this:

> It is important that care be taken that the study and research function of the commission does not become confused with its regulatory function, nor that it results in the commission assuming some of the functions of management.

In other words, a warning is given. The MacPherson Commission did not necessarily recommend a commission which would be as all encompassing as this one is.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. MacDougall also suggested the MacPherson Commission felt that care should be taken to make sure that the research and administrative functions of the commission were not to be too closely knit or related to the regulatory functions of management. As recorded at page 1728 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the committee on transport and communications a representative of the C.N.R. said:

> Well, the new national transportation legislation that they have in the United States in so far as the regulation of railroads is concerned, is mainly directed to the general sort of administrative and research aspects. They have not attempted by that to take over into this new body the functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission in regulating and controlling various modes of transport.

In other words, in the United States the national transportation policy is related to administrative and research aspects while the Interstate Commerce Commission is the regulatory and controlling body. Through this bill we are trying to link these together. At the same page Mr. MacDougall of the C.N.R. dealt at some length with the dangers involved in linking these several functions.

At pages 1768 and 1769 Dr. Bandeen pointed out that the research aspect must be kept independent. He said:

> First of all, we have a feeling that there is a need for independent research—independent of the government, independent of industry in Canada—

He wondered whether or not this independent research would really remain independent over the years if it were linked closely with a regulatory body. There is a danger in this regard. Caution should be taken in setting up this commission to see that all modes of transportation are not placed under its jurisdiction. The two briefs presented to the commission which dealt to any extent at all with commodity pipe lines suggested that their operations should not fall under the jurisdiction of a commission such as will be set up by this bill, and that they might better be left under the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board. I think we are going too fast by placing regulatory and research functions in the same category, and by placing all modes of transportation under one commission. That is not a recommendation of the MacPherson Commission. Representatives of the railroads themselves have expressed fear about putting regulatory and research aspects under one commission.

I should like to mention one other aspect of this bill to which the minister has referred, and I have in mind the formula devised for rail line abandonments. Some years ago 4,000 miles of railroad trackage on the three prairie provinces were the subject of abandonment applications. If my memory serves me correctly, 1,800 miles of trackage on the three prairie provinces is to be abandoned. That is nearly half the trackage involved in the prairie provinces. In this regard, I intend to move an amendment to clause 1 of this bill which I hope the minister will consider seriously. It is my proposal that the word "adequate" should be added to line 4 of the first page of the bill. In other words, it now reads:

> It is hereby declared that an economic and efficient transportation system—

I suggest the word "adequate" should be added so that it would read:

> It is hereby declared that an adequate, economic and efficient transportation system—

That may appear to be unimportant, but I suggest it means a great deal when you consider the wording of that clause and the attitude of representatives of railway companies, particularly in areas of the prairie provinces. What is the most economic and efficient transportation system? Perhaps one track running through the heart of the prairies would be the most economic and efficient, but that is taking efficiency and economics to the 'nth degree. This clause does not take into consideration the adequacy of the system, as was suggested by the Manitoba brief.

Let me deal now with this general rail line abandonment aspect of a transportation system. On the prairies, we are very concerned about these abandonments because when the minister made his announcement regarding this bill there were 4,000 miles of track proposed for abandonment. The minister announced that 1,800 miles of the 4,000 miles involved in applications for abandonment had been nailed down to protect certain areas. He said the other 2,200 miles—

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman has inadvertently made a factual error which he would like corrected. I said we had nailed down all but 1,800 miles. What I said was exactly the opposite of what he suggested.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I accept the correction and I thank the minister for it because I was wrong. There were 2,200 miles nailed down and the other 1,800 miles were up for abandonment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Actually more than 2,200 miles are nailed down.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I was referring to the applications before the board prior to the minister's announcement.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Those applications are now before the Board of Transport Commissioners. In the last week there has been renewed interest in these applications. The minister stated clearly in the house last Friday that these applications would not be proceeded with until the bill before us was passed. I should like to be clear on that point, because when this bill is passed presumably these applications will be dealt with by the new commission. I should like this difficulty cleared up before we pass clause 1 of this bill. If 2,200 miles of trackage on the prairies is to be nailed down, the citizens of the areas involved should know why one track is to be maintained until 1970 whereas another will be abandoned. In other words, in order that various lines be treated on an equal basis they should all be considered under this new transportation concept. I have some doubts in this regard as to clause 89.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

My interpretation of this new concept is that applications now before the Board of Transport Commissioners will be dealt with after this bill is passed and the new commission is set up. What I should like to know is whether the Board of Transport Commissioners will then deal with the applications now in existence. That is what the railroads think. This is the reason I am raising the question of rail line abandonment. If some lines are to be saved under this new transportation concept, the commission should judge other lines in the same light. I cannot stress this point too strongly because there is, without doubt, a great deal of concern across the country in this respect.

I should like to deal with one other matter under clause 1 of the bill. What does this measure do? We are setting up a commission to regulate all modes of transportation. We are going to remove, to some extent, the regulations that now govern and control the railroads. We are going to free the railroads. What will be the end result of this measure? I have come to the conclusion, after sitting in the committee for many, many days and asking numerous questions, that the end result will be increased freight rates. One has only to read pages 1765 and 1766 of the committee proceedings to come to this conclusion.

As will be seen from page 1765 of the committee proceedings, Mr. Gordon was asked this question, and Mr. MacMillan was asked questions in this connection at the top of page 1766. The answer given was that there was no alternative, freight rates would be increased. The hon. member for Wellington-Huron prodded the president and future president of the C.N.R. The answer was that freight rates would be going up. The question was asked in Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 28, as will be found at pages 1970 to 1972. It was asked of Mr. Crump, chairman of the C.P.R., and he said that after careful consideration freight rates would go up. They have to go up because the subsidies are being reduced and the railroads have been subjected to a freight rate freeze. Everything has been going up.

The result of this bill will be an increase in freight rates. Let us consider that aspect of the matter alone and ask ourselves whether we should hurriedly pass this bill. Inflation has run rampant across Canada in the past year. It is now slowing up a little. What effect will the passage of this bill have on the economy? Transportation has a bearing on the cost of everything we consume and produce. The presidents of the two major railroads have said that if this bill passes, freight rates will go up. The price of goods will therefore go up; there is no alternative. Any increase in freight rates will be passed on to the consumer in Canada or some other country. We are going to increase inflationary pressures with the passage of this bill. There is no other conclusion to which one can come after reading those pages of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the committee to which I referred.

The consumer will pay a higher price for goods because the cost of transportation is a built-in cost in respect of everything we produce and consume in Canada. This is another matter that we, as legislators, should consider very, very carefully at this time. We have seen inflation run rampant across Canada. Housewives from Vancouver to Halifax have become organized and have been boycotting supermarkets to an extent never before envisaged in this country. Certain measures have attempted to deal with the problem of inflation. I refer to the attempted budget of a couple of months ago, and the budget of last night. These measures attempted to deal with the problem of inflation. I believe that inflation is reaching the end of its course, and that the passage of this bill will result in more fuel being thrown on the fire of inflation. Once again, prices will spiral.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the committee would not be disposed to allow the hon. gentleman to continue?

The Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent that the hon. gentleman should be allowed to continue his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This is very generous of the committee, Mr. Chairman, and I will not abuse the generosity of hon. members by continuing at length. I have said what I think this bill will do. It is an all-encompassing bill. It sets up a commission to look into the problems of transportation. In summary, I would say I am gravely concerned about this commission. I wonder whether it will have the proper facilities to undertake research and look into the regulatory and management aspects of transportation. A real attempt, should be made by the commission and the government to keep these two aspects as separate as possible. The whole country, particularly western Canada, wants an answer to the question I have raised with regard to rail line abandonment. Will the applications now before the commission be dealt with by the commission after this bill passes, or will they be dealt with by the old Board of Transport Commissioners? This is a question to which many, many people in western Canada would like an answer. They are very concerned about this matter.

The people of western Canada see some rail lines being saved under our new transportation policy, and some discarded. In a sense that is just what they are, discarded. There is some hope held out for some lines until 1975, and no hope for others. These people want to know the formula which provides this degree of safety for some lines but not others. That formula was never given in committee. There was an attempt at rationalization on this question. An hon. member asked whether the criterion used was so many thousand bushels a day to be hauled per mile of track. The minister said no, we could not really peg it on that. He said that criterion was used, but we could not peg it on that sort of thing.

The question of rail line abandonment is extremely important. Of course, the most important aspect of this whole transporation legislation is this: We as legislators, must ask ourselves whether we consider the railroads in Canada to be corporate entities with no obligation other than to make a profit for their shareholders, or do we consider them still to be providing a public service and to be partially, if not completely, public utilities? This is the question we must ask ourselves before this bill passes or even before too many clauses are dealt with. When we reach clause 16, say, we will have to decide whether we consider railroads to be 50 per cent or 60 per cent public utilities. We will have to direct our remarks to this aspect of the matter and decide whether clause 16 will give the protection necessary in order that the shippers and citizens of this country may utilize the public utilities which we have set up and enjoyed over the years.

In concluding my remarks on clause 1, Mr. Chairman, I point out that I will be moving an amendment to this clause. I will not do so at this time because it would be fairer if the minister had an opportunity to consider my suggestion. The suggestion is to include the word "adequate" in the clause. I hope the minister, his officials and the government, will consider the inclusion of that word because I believe it should be in the clause. I think that all people in this country, particulary those in the west, believe we must have an adequate, economic and efficient transportation system.

• (5:10 p.m.)

This was suggested in the brief submitted by the Manitoba government.

I will conclude my remarks with the suggestion that if the bill is passed at this time—even if it is passed by December 31 as the minister urges that it should be—we will be adding fuel to the inflationary fires because the costs of transportation will go up. I believe that this point should be considered during the debate on the bill. We should remember that inflation has been one of the greatest problems which has faced Canada during the past year.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, the preamble to the bill advises us that the bill is intended to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada. In the minister's own words the intent of the bill is to bring about a fundamental change in our transportation policy, in the freight rate charges, etc. This being so, I think the minister was quite right in pointing out a little earlier that he really does not expect us on this side of the house to hurry along the passage of this legislation. It is unfortunate if the delay in processing this legislation will cause some embarrassment to the government. However, this problem will have to lie on their doorstep because it is the result of their own actions. When the minister spoke about the awkwardness which will result from the delay in the passage of the legislation he must have realized that he will simply have to find ways and means of extricating the government from this awkward position. He mentioned the fact that certain orders in council will lapse at the end of the year. I suggest that if it is only a case of orders in council lapsing, the cabinet will have to deal with that problem as they see fit.

Mr. Pickersgill: Unfortunately, it is not only orders in council which will lapse but also statutes.

Mr. Schreyer: In that case, I expect that the railway companies and the government will be able to come to some understanding so that the spirit and intent of the new legislation will be honoured in the interval until it actually comes into effect.

I wish to take this opportunity to make some remarks on the over-all purpose and intent of the legislation. It seems to me that in putting forward the legislation the government and the minister have committed one rather obvious error. They have taken the railway transportation and freight charges further away from regulation and have put too much faith in competition as an effective means of protecting the public interest. It may well be that certain evidence has come to light in the past years which would indicate that competition has increased in recent years, and has thereby become more effective in protecting the users of transportation services. That premise is certainly open to debate. But even if it were to be conceded that in some respects competition in the transportation industry has increased, it is also a fact that in certain regions of this country this is less true.

I think that those regions of this country which produce primary products will be adversely affected by the provisions of this legislation when it becomes law. I submit that there has not been sufficient evidence put forward to date to indicate that we would be well advised to consider competition as a proper basis for the control of freight charges in this country. I believe the hon. member for Acadia was right when he said that it is in the national interest to continue regarding railway transportation as a public utility. I think he said this on several occasions. If it is, in fact, to be considered as a public utility then we should continue to rely upon regulation as the proper means of protecting the public interest.

However, I wish to give the minister credit for the fact that, after having introduced the bill and having sat in the committee where representations were made by various organizations, he acknowledged some errors in the legislation. In fact, he proposed a large number of amendments to the bill.

I have made a rough estimate of the amendments which have already been incorporated into the revised version of the bill and they number around 60 or 64. The net effect of the more important aspects of these amendments was for the government to retreat a little way toward a greater reliance on regulation as a means of protecting the public interest. I think the minister, after having heard the numerous submissions made to the committee, realized that too many people were concerned and worried by the tendency of the legislation to emphasize competition rather than regulation. After this was pointed out to the minister, he acquiesced to a certain extent and put forward some amendments to the bill.

Even if we acknowledge at this stage that we should rely on regulation more rather than less, it must also be said that if regulation is to prove effective it must be given a chance. By this I mean that the commission, which is the regulating authority, must be given proper terms of reference and proper statutory authority to do its job. However, what do we have in the bill? The most important clauses of the bill having to do with rate control and regulation contain terms of reference and formulae which are not based on reality but on some fictitious standards.

Almost every organization which appeared before the committee and presented briefs has objected vociferously to those standards which, nevertheless, have been allowed to remain in the bill as originally drafted. I wish to say to the minister that, owing to the fact these important objections have not been dealt with and the right kind of changes were not made in this respect, I and several other hon. members here would find it very difficult to vote in the affirmative on these clauses. Of course, it follows that we would find it difficult to vote in the affirmative on the entire bill.

I do not want to take time at this stage to enter into any kind of polemic debate or digression as to the desirability for or relative effectiveness of public ownership versus private ownership in our transportation policy. But it seems to me that if we are to be really serious about defining and implementing a national transportation policy that is rational to the highest possible degree, we must enter upon such a debate, and the sooner the better.

There may be no virtue in public ownership in itself. I submit there is no virtue in private ownership in itself where there exists the kind of circumstances which require pervasive regulation in order to protect the public interest. Yet, that is precisely what we must have; we must have pervasive regulation of our transportation services in order to protect the public interest.

As I have already said, the reason for that is that there is simply not enough evidence to date to show conclusively that we can move toward more and more reliance upon competition as the means of protecting those who use our transportation services in order to stimulate their functions in our economy.

As a member of the standing committee on transportation and communications which was charged with the responsibility of studying this bill clause by clause, may I say I found the experience very worth while. In many ways I felt we did accomplish something. But in one very important respect the work of the committee was an exercise in futility. I refer specifically to the fact that the committee really could not make a proper and definitive evaluation of this bill and its likely effects unless it were provided with certain necessary and crucial cost accounting data which was in the possession of the railway companies.

On one occasion the hon. member for Medicine Hat and myself moved a motion asking that the committee be given precisely this information. Without it, it was simply impossible to arrive at any conclusion as to the efficacy of the proposed section 336 having to do with rate control. The rate control which is referred to in that clause has to do with costs incurred by the railways and the formulas which are based on costs incurred by the railways. The committee could not get this data that related to costs.

My motion was defeated, Mr. Chairman. At that point I did give notice that I would raise in the house, as I am now, this grievance, and I believe it is a real grievance. I contend that the committee was foiled and frustrated in its task by being refused cost data in the possession of the railways.

The ostensible reason given was that this information was part of the proprietary rights of Canadian companies. While the information could be given to the transportation commission, it could not be given to any other group, including a committee of this parliament, because it might break some kind of confidence and put the railways at a disadvantage in relation to their competitors.

I submit that this kind of argument is completely unacceptable. It would not be accepted by any legislative committee of the United States Congress or, I submit, of the British parliament. I might add that the submissions made by the three prairie provinces were to the effect they considered it unfortunate that this information was not provided to the counsel for the three prairie provinces. They mentioned specifically that it was unfortunate this data was not made available to the members of the parliamentary standing committee.

So I must say, Mr. Chairman, that no member in this committee, with the possible exception of the Minister of Transport, can say with any degree of confidence or assurance that he really comprehends the impact of certain proposed sections in this bill, particularly section 336 and one or two others. He has never been provided with certain data which would have enabled him to evaluate the effect of those sections. Parliament should be apprised of these facts. In a sense, Mr. Chairman, we are being asked to pass upon legislation the effect of some of the clauses of which is a matter of mystery, doubt and uncertainty. I am wondering whether parliament likes to be put in the position of passing legislation on that basis.

I wish to advise the minister that during the course of the clause by clause consideration of this bill I will have a number of amendments to propose. I propose to move them in such a way as to facilitate discussion, to give the minister an opportunity to indicate why they should or should not be accepted, and then we can move on. I certainly agree it is important at this stage to put this legislation through as quickly as is prudently possible, even though in major respects we find this bill to be based on faulty premises and questionable grounds.

We shall certainly expect from the minister further elaboration and clarification—because he is in a better position to do so than other members here—as to the likely effect of this bill particularly on western Canada and those regions of the country which are primary producing. According to my understanding of the bill and of the formulae contained in it, it would seem to militate against those very regions which produce what might be called heavy loading commodities, bulk commodities—in short, for want of a better term, primary products.

There are, of course, safeguards in the bill with respect to grain and so on. But what about, for example, regions in northwestern and northern Ontario which are dependent upon shipments of lumber and forest products? What about shipments of natural resources in their raw state? How will these areas be affected? It is my opinion that they will be affected adversely by this legislation.

May I also point out to hon. members that in the submissions made by some rather learned men in the fields of transportation regulation and transportation economics, much the same kind of statement was made to the listener or inference left to the reader, namely that it is these I have mentioned that will be at a disadvantage following the passage of this legislation.

If I may make this suggestion to the minister, I would say that the proper basis for regulation, whether of transportation of utilities of another kind, is permitted earnings, fair returns and allied concepts. I know the minister does not think much of this basis for regulation bacause I have heard him say, in jocular fashion during the hearings of the committee, that the idea of a fair return is a medieval notion.

Yet, that is precisely the basis which most of our public utility regulatory bodies use. What other basis can there be? Fictitious formulae, that is all we have in this bill. The idea of a fair return, a permitted level of earnings, is one which has been put forward by the province of Manitoba and by the counsel for the province of Alberta. I do not know whether they have been converted to the politics of social democracy. Nevertheless, they have advocated this basis as a foundation for a regulation in the transportation field.

I do not think there is anything medieval about a notion of this kind. I think it is timeless. I think it has existed in the minds of men for ages, and that it will continue to exist even though it seems to have departed from the minds of some hon. members, who in many other ways are very fine gentlemen but who do not appear to be impressed by such a valid and attainable idea as regulation based on the notion of a fair return.

Before resuming my seat, I want to ask the minister whether he would not take a minute or two for the purpose of elaborating what he had to say earlier about the intention with respect to applications for branch line abandonment. I know that in the past two or three days the minister has been questioned in the house regarding an application which is said to have been sent to the Board of Transport Commissioners by the Canadian Pacific Railway requesting the abandonment of a particular branch line.

The impression I have is that the minister gave an assurance some time ago that all applications for abandonment would be withdrawn, and would not be entertained until this legislation becomes effective. How, then, does he explain the fact, if it is a fact, that the C.P.R. has made an application for abandonment in the course of the past few days? I believe the minister said earlier today that the board would not consider applications. It is my understanding that the board will not even accept applications until this legislation becomes effective.

In order to play my part in co-operating with the minister I will confine the rest of my remarks on this bill to the appropriate clauses.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member for Medicine Hat allow me to reply very briefly to the question about the branch lines before he speaks? Then, if he is not satisfied with what I say, he can deal with this aspect at the beginning of his speech.

Mr. Olson: I was about to ask the minister if he would outline the ground rules which are now in effect in this field. It would be useful if the minister would deal with this question briefly, now.

Mr. Pickersgill: The situation is this: The hon. member for Acadia said there were four thousand miles of line—I have not checked the figure myself, but I have no doubt he is right, or approximately right—which have been the subject of applications before the board for a number of years. The railways have agreed not to proceed with these applications.

Then, one day last September I think it was, the government issued a statement and published a map showing the lines on which no abandonment would be permitted to take place before January 1, 1975, if this legislation passed. We could not give any kind of guarantee as to what would happen if it did not pass, because the law is the law. But we said it would be part of the policy of which this legislation is another part, that these lines would be protected, and if the railways were losing money on them they could in due course under this legislation get a subsidy.

As for the rest of the applications affecting the other 1,800 miles of line, the applications had already been made. To the best of my knowledge no new applications of any kind have been made. Both railway companies wrote to the board indicating that they intended to abandon all their applications affecting the protected lines on the day this legislation received royal assent, and asking the board to take note of this fact. The board undoubtedly did so.

Whether on the initiative of the railways, particularly the C.P.R., or on its own, the board began to gather information about the other lines so that whenever the time came for hearings to be held, those hearings could go forward and the necessary up-to-date statistical information would be available. The board is a court of record, as hon. members know. It does not report to me what it does, as a court. I did not know that this information was being gathered—I say this quite frankly—until the matter was brought to my attention, first by a telegram from the Manitoba Branch Line Association and then by hon. members in this house. I inquired promptly about it, and I was assured there was no thought whatever of holding any hearings or dealing with these applications as long as the legislation was before the house. All that was being done was a certain amount of housekeeping, and I have a formal assurance to this effect from the chairman of the board.

The other question which has been raised by the hon. member for Acadia and by the hon. member for Springfield—I am sure it will also be raised by the hon. member for Medicine Hat—is whether, if and when this legislation is passed, the protection of the legislation with respect to branch lines will be brought into effect immediately so that all the hearings and applications will be under the new rules, or whether the old rules will still apply. This is a question which, I believe, is not resolved one way or the other in the bill. When we come to our study of the particular clauses I will be glad to make a more detailed statement. One would have to pay some attention to the fact that it is always wrong to assume that a piece of legislation is ever going to pass. It is, therefore, a little difficult to answer this question right now.

I am aware of it, but one factor will depend upon how long it is before we can expect the legislation to pass. However, I shall be prepared to give a categorical answer to the question when we reach clause 89. I think I have explained what the situation is now. So long as this legislation is before parliament and has not received royal assent, the chairman of the board has assured me no hearings whatsoever will take place on any of the applications, some of which have been before the board for years. I think that is the essential thing for the moment.

Mr. Olson: That is useful information because I and other hon. members during the last few days received letters from the secretary of the Board of Transportation Commissioners asking us, as interested parties, if we had any objection to certain applications being approved now. As the minister has said, hearings in some of the cases were held a long time ago, and there may not be serious objection, for example, to abandoning a small spur line in which there may not be much public interest.

I think the minister, so far as he was able, gave us the ground rules that will be used in proceeding with the applications for abandonment. If I interpret him correctly he has said the status of the applications remains frozen, that they will not be proceeded with until this bill is passed and new rules and regulations come into effect. Is that correct?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would not use the phrase "proceeded with" because it might lead to misunderstanding later on. I do not think there is any objection to the board going ahead and gathering statistical information and things of that sort, to make hearings possible, but there won't be any hearings and there won't be any decisions.

Mr. Olson: So far as I am concerned, that is satisfactory and we will have more discussion on it when we reach the appropriate clause. Though I have some criticism of provisions in the bill, the minister may be surprised that I wish to commend him for the attitude he adopted when the bill was going through the standing committee. I also want to express commendation to the chairman of the committee, who I see is now on the right side of the house—

Mr. Baldwin: Gaining wisdom.

Mr. Macaluso: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I am on the right side of the house geographically speaking but not philosophically speaking.

Mr. Olson: In any event, I want to offer my commendation upon the enormous amount of work that went into study of the bill, notwithstanding the fact that I am not completely satisfied with the result. The minister and the department should be commended for making use of a standing committee of the house in the way that I believe such standing committees should be used. The hon. member for Springfield pointed out that there were over 60 amendments accepted by the minister in the committee, in response to representations made by various witnesses and also, I hope, in response to suggestions made by members of the committee.

I was a member, in fact the chairman of the subcommittee that reviewed the committee structure of the house a few months ago. We concluded that if we were going to strengthen and up-grade both the position and the responsibility of backbenchers, and I am one, then it would be a useful exercise to transfer some real work and responsibility to standing committees. On occasion it is nothing but an exercise in futility to discuss the clauses of a bill in a standing committee, only to find that the minister responsible for it adamantly refuses to accept any amendments, no matter how well founded the arguments in favour of them may be. That was not the case with this particular bill, and the procedure adopted by the transport committee is one that should be commended to the house and to other standing committees.

As I said at the outset, I will be disappointed if the bill does not go through in time, particularly because of the deadline mentioned by the C.P.R. with respect to the making of payments in lieu of taxes to municipalities in western Canada. On the other hand, I accept in part the explanation of the minister that it is beyond his control to do anything about it if the C.P.R. sticks to its suggestion that payments will be voluntarily made in the calendar year following passage of the bill.

I do not criticize the house for giving priority over this bill to the old age security pensions bill. The opposition had a right and a responsibility to debate clauses in that bill. It was completely beyond the control of the Minister of Transport, or of the government as a whole, to determine how long that bill was going to be discussed in the house. Now, it has passed committee stage, and to my knowledge this is the first opportunity the Minister of Transport has had to bring this transport bill back to the house after it was dealt with by the standing committee.

I hope the minister will have some success with the representations he intends to make to the C.P.R., to extend the period further into January, 1967, for the making of voluntary payments to western Canadian municipalities.

The minister has suggested he is willing to accept amendments respecting mergers of transportation companies and the transitional subsidies. I think he also mentioned several other possible amendments. If the minister is still considering additional amendments, I ask him to consider one which would give real meaning to maximum rate control in those areas of transportation where there is no effective competition.

In spite of the 60 or 65 amendments that have been made to the bill, that provision is still absent from it. One of the rules used in other countries, and one which has been part of our transportation policy up until now, deals with maximum rate control where there is no effective competition. I believe such a rule still is needed in the public interest. There should be a provision that no rate can be higher for a shorter haul than for a longer haul, for a like commodity under like conditions. There is such a provision in United States law, and in the railway act which we are now amending there was a lot of protection against discrimination as between one shipper and another.

In most cases, the difficulty was to convince the Board of Transportation Commissioners that discrimination existed, but there was provision for the board to take action if one could convince it that discrimination did exist.

That is no longer in the bill. I look, for example, at new section 16. Even that is an improvement over the bill as it was prior to having this new section 16 included in it; but here again any shipper first of all must prove that the public interest has been prejudically affected. Then, of course we get into the interpretation of what is meant by "public interest". Public interest in so far as the context of new section 16 is concerned never has been defined. The minister knows that members of the committee, including myself, many times have asked what is meant by "public interest". What does a shipper have to prove if he is going to make an appeal to the new transport commission? Up until now no satisfactory answer has been given. Perhaps the minister does not know. He has been asked, for example, whether the shipper has to prove national public interest. Is it public interest in so far as one region or, for example, one community is concerned? Is that sufficient ground on which to plead that the public interest has been prejudicially affected? This is not defined in the bill.

During the course of the committee hearings the suggestion was made that the public interest may be involved only if a shipper is being affected. But we have no assurance of this, and we do not know what the new transport commission will do in interpreting and applying the words "public interest". We do know what the governor in council had to say in order in council, P.C. 1963-1041, passed on July 9, 1963, regarding public interest in so far as an individual shipper is concerned. On the last page of this order in council, it is outlined as follows:

> That in any case subsection 2 of section 33 of the act authorizes the governor in council to refer to the Board of Transport Commissioners for investigation of an agreed charge, only in the event that the governor in council considers the agreed charge to be undesirable in the public interest, and notwithstanding that an agreed charge made on a basis contrary to that specified in paragraph 6 of section 32 might give a valid claim against the railway by a shipper who is a party to the agreed charge and who suffers prejudice, however, such an agreed charge would not be a matter of public interest on that ground.

I should like the minister to look this up, but what I think it says fairly clearly is that if a shipper is adversely affected this is not a ground for arguing the case for public interest. Many members have argued in the committee that in invoking the provisions of new section 336, the bill does not give any effective maximum rate control at all. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Springfield, he and I endeavoured to get some cost figures so that at least we could do some calculating to find out what the end result of using new section 336 would be. We were denied this by the officials of both railway companies. We were also denied it by the minister. The minister did not have it, but I suggest to the minister that if he had insisted that the railways provide him with this information he would have received it.

I wish to repeat the argument we made at that time because I think it is very important that the members of this house, if they are to do their job responsibly in the interests of the people of Canada, should have a right to be able to calculate the result of applying the law which we are asked to pass. Under new section 336—and the minister is familiar with this—there is a very important factor in respect of the variable costs which get into the formula when calculating what the rate will be under the maximum rate control. Unless one has the variable costs, it is impossible to do the kind of calculation which would indicate what the net result of using that formula would be. All we did in committee, when we moved the motion, was to ask for some samples. This was turned down in the committee. I am not going to say why, but it seems that the minister had been convinced there was something wrong with giving the information to the committee.

We have had, I suggest, some of the most eminent experts on the North American continent look at this new section. It appears that it is absolutely impossible to arrive at what the rate would be unless, of course, you have all of the factors in the formula. The variable cost is by far the most important factor. There are other things in the formula, but you cannot determine what the rate would be. It has been argued time and again before the committee, by railway officials and others, that there may not be a captive shipper. We do not know what a captive shipper is. It is suggested that the only captive shipper would be someone who has to pay class rates, and so on. It is admitted that there are very few of these.

If we are to have any maximum rate control at all, surely that maximum rate control should be within the realm of reasonableness. If the application of new section 336 is to produce a rate which is three, four or five times higher than the rate which is charged now, then it is a useless part of the bill. It is the law that all rates must be compensatory. Therefore, if there is a rate in effect now for the moving of steel sheets, potash, nickel concentrate, or whatever, and if that rate is only 20 or 25 per cent of what the class rate would be, or if it is only a very small fraction of what the application of new section 336 would produce in rate, then what is it good for.

It is good for nothing, because the railways already are getting at least compensatory rates. That means they are getting their variable costs plus a contribution, albeit a small contribution, to overhead and profit. So, we are disappointed that this information has not been provided by the minister. We believe it is wrong for parliament to be asked to pass laws when members of this parliament are not given an opportunity to anticipate the result of the application of those laws. I think that is a pretty good general statement in so far as our responsibility is concerned, either in respect of this railway legislation or in respect of any other key legislation. We have been denied that information in respect of bill C-231.

C.P.R. witnesses and others have said that marketplaces, negotiations and so on will determine what will be fair rates. I do not accept that suggestion because I know at the present time the railways are free to charge higher or lower rates in respect of many commodities. Let us take for example the movement of steel sheets from Hamilton to Edmonton, and this is a commodity which was discussed by the committee. We know that the rate at this time is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1.86. The same company, using the same cars over the same line through Edmonton to Vancouver, charges $1.05. If the $1.05 rate from Hamilton to Vancouver is compensatory, if it meets all the variable costs, the overhead and provides a profit, then the $1.86 rate from Hamilton to Edmonton is at least 100 per cent more than the variable costs. Is it fair to charge 100 per cent in one case and 5 per cent or 10 per cent in another? That is the situation which exists at this time. While we do not have any facts because the C.N.R. would not give them to us, if the $1.05 rate from Hamilton to Vancouver is compensatory it is reasonable to assume that the compensatory rate from Hamilton to Edmonton would be about 85 cents to 90 cents. The rate today is in fact $1.86.

We also believe it is a retrograde step to remove the right of a shipper to claim discrimination and ask the transportation commission to fix a non-discriminatory rate. That right is being removed because public interest must be proved. We are particularly concerned in this regard, not for the protection of large companies such as Imperial Oil or International Nickel, but in respect of who is going to have the authority to determine where regional industrial development will take place.

It is common knowledge at this time that the C.P.R. has a wholly owned subsidiary, namely Canadian Pacific Investments, with a portfolio, at last accounting, of some $300 million. That portfolio encompasses investments in mines and in mining industries, commercial enterprises, gas, oil, real estate and other things. If the Canadian Pacific Railway is not required to give the same or equal rates to all shippers moving the same kind of goods over the same line under the same conditions, it will have the power to give a very wide level of rates and discriminate in favour of those companies in which it has an investment.

For example, at the present time the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company is developing a potash mine southwest of Saskatoon. If that company is given a rate at or near variable costs and other companies shipping out of Esterhazy are required to pay variable costs, plus overhead and profits of between 100 per cent and 150 per cent, that is not fair or just competition. It is entirely possible that this is happening at the present time, and I suggest that because we know the rate from certain points in Saskatchewan for shipping grain to Vancouver is between $2 and $3 a ton. We know that because this was brought out very forcefully at hearings of the MacPherson Royal Commission.

The rate for the movement of a 150,000 pound car of potash from Esterhazy to Vancouver is about $9 per ton. If the rate of between $2 and $3 a ton on grain is compensatory and meets variable costs, then the rate for moving potash represents variable costs plus about 200 per cent. Potash could be hauled as cheaply as grain. This puts our new industrial expansion and development in jeopardy in relation to other nations of the world.

There is a valid case to be made for some control by parliament in areas where there is no effective economic competition. It is our suggestion that there is no competition in the transportation field relating to the hauling of such things as potash, grain, nickel concentrates from Thompson, Manitoba to Fort Saskatchewan in Alberta and lumber from British Columbia to interior markets. There is no effective competition or even an effective alternative to railway transportation in the area. I do not intend to go into this any further at this moment, but I should like to discuss certain other clauses of this bill. The minister is already aware of some objections I have raised.

Let me suggest one simple amendment to the minister, in view of the fact he is considering a number of others. At page 57 of this bill there appears clause 68 which deals with section 381 of the Railway Act. The only difficulty is that this clause applies only to telephone and telegraph lines. A similar clause should be included to deal with railways and their tolls and tariffs in respect of the movement of non-competitive commodities. If that were done, I suggest we would have a bill which would give the measure of political and statutory control needed in relation to monopolistic businesses.

Clause 68 suggests that there shall be no unjust discrimination but that tolls must be just and reasonable. It states that the commission will have the power to determine what is just and reasonable and what is or is not discriminatory. In clause 68, new section 381(3)(b) it is stated that the new commission shall have the power to suspend, postpone or disallow tolls. That is good in respect of telephone and telegraph lines, but I think it should be written into this bill to apply to railway traffic as well.

The minister may argue that he is going to free the railways to the point that they will no longer be a public utility, yet telephone and telegraph lines will remain as public utilities. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, and the minister, that in many areas, particularly in western Canada, for all practical purposes railways are still monopolistic public utilities which require political and statutory control so far as rates are concerned.

I shall conclude by recommending that the minister give consideration to this question, particularly in view of the fact that Canadian Pacific Railway is now a gigantic, complex empire that has within its power and under its control by way of investment many companies and enterprises not directly related to the railway business. In the negotiation and setting of rates, it is possible for the C.P.R. to make concessions to their wholly or partially-owned companies, which is an unjust and unfair discrimination against other companies.

Whether or not this bill passes before the end of the year, I wish the minister well in making representations to Canadian Pacific Railway to see that at least finally some justice is done to those cities and communities in western Canada which have been under the burden of the statute of 1881 respecting the forgiveness or non-application of municipal taxes. I should also like him to take into account the fact that there are still some areas of uncertainty in so far as maximum rate control is concerned.

I know the provisions of the bill will be brought into effect gradually because the subsidies now being paid by the federal treasury will be withdrawn gradually. Even if the minister is not disposed to making all the amendments I have suggested, I hope he will consider them very carefully and will watch very closely what the railways do under the provisions of the bill. I hope the minister will be prepared to come back to the house with amendments that will give effect to what we think is just and reasonable as we try to develop a transportation policy that is in keeping with Canada's modern requirements.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister and the rest of us would not better digest the eloquent remarks just made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat if we were to adjourn for an hour or so for dinner?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think there was a disposition, with a view to having an adjournment for Christmas as early as possible, to make use of such time as we had today. I hope I will not be pressed on the point.

The Chairman: Perhaps hon. members would permit me to interrupt the debate to announce the proceedings on the adjournment motion.

It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the Committee that the questions to be debated at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), labour relations—C.N.T.U.—report of ministerial committee; the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), criminal code—amendment respecting confessions of prisoners; the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain), Expo '67—re sponsoring of tour of pee-wee hockey teams in Europe.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the minister that we are quite willing to co-operate and my remarks will not be very long. We have so many members on this side of the chamber who wish to speak on this policy item that we will have to cut our speeches short in order to get them all in before Christmas eve. It makes me wonder even more about the great desperation of the minister to put this bill through. Although he gave some reasons this afternoon, I wonder whether his reason is not the Senate appointment about which we have been hearing. I am sure great progress would be made if the minister rose and in some way indicated that a Senate appointment for him before Christmas depended upon the early passage of this bill.

Mr. Baldwin: It would not get through the Senate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member for Saint John-Albert say what effect it would have?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): We love the minister, but I think that if we knew he was going to the Senate he would receive a great deal of co-operation to help him get there.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest that the hon. gentleman speculate.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The minister asked for the early passage of the bill, or at least the passage of some of its clauses before Christmas. This matter deserves consideration. Without dealing with all the points at length, I believe that one of the matters to which the minister referred was the C.P.R. negotiations with municipalities in the west and the intimation that there may be a hold up in roll-back payments. These matters are important, but we have a greater responsibility as members of parliament to see that this important measure is given full consideration.

[The Chairman.]

We may be criticized in some areas for not rushing this measure through, but I am sure that greater criticism would fall on us if this very important bill were rushed through just before the Christmas recess.

I also believe, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Acadia, that a great deal of the responsibility here falls on the government for its mismanagement. This bill has been considered for a long time, but it could have been brought forward earlier. I wish to compliment the committee on the work that was done. I think we had good hearings, and those responsible for the success of the hearings have full marks from me. I referred to Votes and Proceedings and found that the committee had considered 36 briefs; 73 witnesses appeared before it, and we had 33 meetings. I do not know how many amendments were moved. There must have been more than 100. I attempted to count them once, but because there were amendments to two or three parts of clauses it was difficult to arrive at a figure. The work done in committee is a tribute to the co-operation of members from all sides of the house. Although in the last few days there has been some dissipation of the good will that we worked to build up, I hope we can now co-operate and go forward with this measure.

Some of the amendments considered in committee were of interest to those of us in the maritimes. Although I have remarks to make on the two major clauses and their effect on the nation generally, particularly the west, I want to take a moment before the recess to put thoughts of mine on record in regard to the maritime provinces. They are just as much concerned as any other part of this country about a revolutionary bill such as this which is probably as important as any measure that has been brought before this house in the last 50 years.

The matter of the shipment of flour through the maritime ports was considered. There was great consternation that the bill might bring about a restriction of flour shipments through Halifax and Saint John. Everyone knows there is a very thin spread in the cost of exporting flour, and if this gets out of balance in any way the tendency is to export the grain and mill it in the recipient country. Therefore, we were very much concerned with the briefs put forward by millers and port officials, and through co-operation amendments were made that we believe will protect us fully in so far as the shipment of flour is concerned.

We were concerned with the matter of port parity. This matter has not been definitely defined in many of the acts, but it has always been felt that there should be parity of rates through Halifax and Saint John with those of United States ports. There were some fears that the power this new measure gave the railways to set their own rates would bring about a situation whereby Halifax and Saint John would be placed in a non-competitive position with, for example, Portland in the United States, and we would lose business thereby.

The minister has indicated tonight that an amendment will be put forward in this regard, so we will refrain from any further criticism of that matter. In fact, I have an amendment which I suggest should be considered in this policy clause. It alludes to the matter of port parity which has been considered our national policy and an unwritten law for many years.

Another matter which I think we should keep in mind is the Maritime Freight Rates Act. It comes into consideration because of the new transportation study which is being conducted and other related transportation affairs in the maritimes. The Maritime Freight Rates Act is written into our laws and, of course, cannot be removed except by a special statute. Throughout the years the effect of this act has deteriorated because of the horizontal freight increases, and of course this bill will create an even further deterioration in this respect. The non-competitive rates have been frozen for two years and we envisage a time at the end of the two years, before the report is brought back and acted upon, when there will at least be some concern about the non-competitive rates.

I will say frankly to the minister and to members of the house, that I cannot make up my mind whether it would be better to continue the freeze indefinitely or to have it run out, thereby putting pressure on the cabinet of the day to act in this matter. I am inclined toward the latter solution, but I know that some of my colleagues are still worried about the freeze being continued until there is new legislation.

I should also like to make some general remarks about the maritimes in relation to the national picture. This bill is very comprehensive and far reaching. The minister has lulled us with comporting words and, I find it hard to disagree with them. But we are worried about the unknown and sinister parts of his statements which always seem to appear as far as the maritimes are concerned. At the time of confederation the big problem was the disparities which existed in our nation owing to our geography, and as our centennial approaches we think of them again. New Brunswick and Nova Scotia were two of the four partners in the confederation, and we entered into it mainly on the strength of the transportation promises which were made to us.

We were told that subsidies would be granted so as to bring us together and to eradicate the disparities of an economic nature which existed in our nation as a result of our geography. These subsidies—or whatever polite word you want to use—have always been necessary in any national fiscal or monetary policy. However, now for the first time in our history we are confronted with a full national transportation policy with which none of us quarrel in general terms. Nevertheless, I am still concerned as a maritimer about our transportation problems. I wonder where the national fiscal policy fits in with relation to this new transportation policy. Let me go back to the words of the MacPherson report in order to bring to light the relationship which the commission felt existed between a full national transportation policy and a national policy which includes subsidies and other fiscal measures. On page 181 of the MacPherson report the following words appear:

> The primary objective of national policy in Canada has always been to preserve and enhance the political and economic welfare of the Canadian people. While many and varied means have been used in the pursuit of this objective . . . experience has proven the use of the means of transport to be of singular importance to its attainment.

Here is a full recognition by the MacPherson Commission, whose recommendations formed the basis of this bill, of the use of a national policy in the treatment of the transportation ills of this country. The transportation and communication committee report No. 38, at page 2719, contains the very interesting brief of the Port of Halifax Commission. It is unfortunate that they were not able to appear but they handed in their brief which dealt with this matter in a very frank fashion. I should like to quote a part from their brief which reads as follows:

> There is therefore, and there has been since confederation (indeed, a very little study of the confederation agreements shows that without it the maritimes would not have federated) a national policy the objective of which was and is to provide maritimes manufacturers and merchants with railway facilities at rates which would permit them (despite high line-haul costs) to sell on the wider market of Canada, rather than on the restricted one of the maritimes only.

I could go back and quote the preamble of the Maritime Freight Rates Act or the Duncan Commission Report to revive the memory of the inherent promise made to the maritimes with respect to transportation.

I recall that last year I was ambitious enough to go over some of the pre-confederation debates, and I found some very interesting promises contained in the speeches made by the politicians of that day who later became Fathers of Confederation and whom we will be honouring next year. I found many promises of this nature, not only those made to the maritimes regarding transportation but some with respect to the ports of Halifax and Saint John. I only mention this as one of the main worries which we have of a general nature, and I will be watching these two unresolved matters.

I think that consideration should be given to the amendment to the first clause as put forward by the Maritime Transportation Commission. However, I am not insisting on it at the moment. Perhaps this should be subject to the amendment put forward by the minister regarding port parity. In any event we might well consider later the amendment which was suggested by the Maritime Transportation Commission in its brief, as reported on page 2533 of the committee report:

—that Section 1, Subsection (b) should be amended by adding the words "except as may otherwise be necessary for constitutional, statutory or national policy purposes".

These are only words, but such an amendment would give further recognition to that part of the national transportation policy to which I am referring.

Having said this, I will now deal with another aspect of the matter on which there has been some misunderstanding in the maritimes. While I do not think this has been put forward as a deliberate attempt to mislead, an impression has been created that because of truck transportation everything is improving in the maritimes. Hon. members who were on the transport committee will recall that we questioned Professor Borts and Professor Williams very closely on this matter and they said that even in the United States, where there is much greater truck competition, many of the basic transportation problems have not really been solved. I recall asking one of these expert witnesses from the United States whether they felt that the fact truck transportation was on the increase in the maritimes would be of much assistance to us.

They did not give me a completely negative answer, but they were not very optimistic.

This takes me to something that the minister said which was of some significance to me. In his opening remarks, which I think he made in September when the bill was being introduced, he made a statement which I think is very true, and those of us who were privileged to visit the U.S.S.R. recently may agree with the minister. He said that nations such as Canada and the U.S.S.R., with such widespread territory and related problems, pay a greater price for their transportation than any other country in the world. May I add to this that if it is true that Canadians generally pay this high price, the maritimers are paying an even higher price. Therefore, as a matter of simple arithmetic, those who live in the maritimes are paying more for transportation than any other people in the world. I can quote the minister as an authority in this regard.

• (6:30 p.m.)

This brings to mind what Mr. Craig Dickson, who appeared on behalf of the Maritime Transportation Commission, had to say before the transportation committee. Figures were produced tending to show that truck transportation, on the increase everywhere in Canada, had helped the maritimes. I think it is worth placing on record in this committee what Mr. Dickson had to say. I was asking him about the Department of Transport figures with respect to increases in truck traffic, and it is significant to note that he said this, as reported at page 2501 of the committee report:

The Atlantic provinces is still the area with the least competitive rates and agreed charges. I think this is found in a yellow-covered submission made on behalf of Canadian National and Canadian Pacific, a memorandum on railway freight rates which was submitted the day that C.P.R. appeared.

May I interject here to say that this was an excellent brief, and helped those of us in the committee who found it difficult to understand freight rates. It was a co-operative effort by both railway companies and to my knowledge was not criticized by any hon. member. As I say, it was of tremendous help. Mr. Dickson continues:

It indicates on page 7 that 50.4 per cent of the revenue calculated on the basis of the waybill analysis in the maritime region came from competitive rates and agreed charges. In the eastern region, which is the large block of Ontario and Quebec, 64.7 came from competitive rates and agreed charges, and in the western region competitive rates and agreed charges produced only 39.5 per cent. But I think in fairness, to make a comparison with the eastern region and the maritimes, you must include statutory grain rates, because they did not take any increase at all and competitive rates and agreed charges may have. Therefore, if you include the statutory grain rates, the western region is 69.5. That still leaves us on the low end of the pole.

My contention is that the maritimes are more dependent on the railways than any other section of Canada, and truck competition has not assisted our problems to any great degree; let there be no mistake about that.

These, Mr. Chairman, are my two main contentions. I wish the minister luck with respect to this bill that is being brought in after many years of consideration and study and, I might say, procrastination.

It is significant that in the United States, for the first time, a secretaryship is being established in the transportation field. One of the first speeches of the new secretary contained an appeal for co-operation between all modes of transport. The secretary said that he must have the confidence of all of them; that they must all work together. I am sure that is good advice.

Before I conclude, I cannot resist saying just on a general note that I cannot understand why the government seems to have such a fear of subsidies. It seems to be trying to get away from subsidies, and we in the maritimes are worried about this. We do not know what is going to replace them or where we are going. We think there is too much bureaucratic control in the government which is now running the affairs of this nation. They are concerned with continentalism and are even trying to revive the old myth of liberal free trade, and those of us in the extremities of the nation are going to suffer. I want to know in this connection whether we in the maritimes are going to receive consideration under these new policies. We did feel we were going places, but where is the great expansionist policy that we need?

How will this new bill, Mr. Chairman, bring about the industrial development for which we are so earnestly seeking? I see the Minister of Industry sitting in the front benches listening very attentively to this plea on behalf of secondary manufacturing in the maritimes. The new industrial incentive act has not helped us. Even if Halifax, Saint John and Fredericton were included, I would still have doubts about what benefit this would be to the Atlantic provinces.

I should like to digress for a moment because this certainly ties in with transportation and the development of secondary industry. If the major cities of Halifax, Saint John and Fredericton were brought within the ambit of the industrial incentive act, at least the bill would be strengthened and some of its aims and objectives could proceed. But to us it has been a failure. The St. Lawrence seaway, which was subsidized, of course, has not helped. We do not know just where we fit in many other directions. This government has created grave concern in this regard and seems to be suppressing the development that started.

I think the government is being pessimistic about us by adopting the terms of the present bill. No hope is given. It is taking for granted that we will not be moving ahead, which is not a very pleasant thing for two of the original partners to confederation to look forward to in our centennial year. But having said that, let me inform the committee that many speeches will be made by the members of our party. We have amendments to make to many of the sections, especially to the first section relating to policy which is very important because it deals with the objectives of the bill. Amendments will be moved by the hon. member for Peace River, the hon. member for Acadia, and perhaps others. I think its passage will take considerable time. But we are willing to co-operate fully, keeping in mind that we have a great responsibility in dealing with this giant bill which has taken so many years to bring about.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, as I look around this chamber it becomes apparent that the responsibility the government has in the general field of transportation it also has here this evening, trying to fill in the blank spaces. How could anyone look at a map of this country and not agree wholeheartedly with the Minister of Transport when he stressed the particular importance of this whole problem of transportation and transportation policy? I, for one, can bear witness to that.

Over the last eight or nine years since I have been down here—though not necessarily in direct relationship with the problem—the northwestern part of Canada, that great hinterland north of the 55th parallel and between the Rocky Mountains and the Canadian shield, has seen an enormous change in development as a result of transportation. Gas and oil pipe lines have moved into that territory. Railways have been constructed to the Pacific coast, to the Northwest Territories and another one is now being completed. Highways have been constructed.

• (6:40 p.m.)

These things have all stimulated the development of the northern part of Canada more than anything else could have done.

We are all impressed by the serious nature of our transportation problems in a country the size of Canada, its population situated as it is. In the future, the manner in which we paint on this great map the colours of economic and social development and settlement will make the difference between a great country in which to live and one in which problems will continue to plague us.

I do not intend to deal exhaustively with the bill at the present time, since the various clauses automatically suggest areas in which the appropriate discussions can take place. But I should like to say a word about one of the comments made by the minister when he told us that the C.P.R. had agreed to pay taxes despite the constitutional limitation on the power of municipalities to tax that company. Is it the intention of the C.P.R. to give up, by proper constitutional methods, its power in this regard, or will there simply be a series of undertakings by the company that these taxes will be paid? If the C.P.R. has a constitutional right to its freedom from taxation, the undertakings in this field are undertakings which can be revoked at any time. This is a matter to which the minister might give his attention.

While the minister is too sagacious to say so himself, the impression has been created that this bill contains the ultimate and perfect answer to all transportation problems, past, present and future. Certainly, a number of the news media have conveyed this suggestion. But let us not delude ourselves. From the time over 60 years ago when legislation was first introduced to set up what has now become the Board of Transport Commissioners, and even before that time, we have passed a number of acts of parliament, set up numerous royal commissions and inquiries; the Duncan Commission, the Duff Commission, several reports by Mr. Justice Turgeon, the Macpherson Royal Commission, inquiries instituted at the request of different governments by the Board of Transport Commissioners including the waybill analyses, yet there is still no true, equitable, lasting solution, nor even the appearance of one.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Bearing in mind the vast size of this country, its small population and its disparate economic and social conditions in a changing world, I do not think a complete solution can be found, now or in the future.

This bill attempts to introduce into one measure provisions dealing with air transport, pipe line commodity transport and highway transport, the latter complicated by the spectacular growth of the metropolitan areas. The best anyone can say is that we have pulled back the curtain to peer out at the complex, tangled and ever-increasing possibilities of transportation stretched interminably into the future. At the moment, we are still lost in a labyrinth which seems to have no beginning and no ending.

I am reinforced in this view when I read the evidence of those who appeared before the standing committee. The puzzlement and misgivings expressed, the anxieties and concerns shown, and, above all, the widespread uncertainty as to the effect of most of the key clauses, suggest doubt about the answers and indicate that prospects for finding answers, if there are any, will lie with the super-commission to be set up.

If there is one thing which is common to the evidence given by the representatives of the agricultural and farm organizations, by representatives of all the various groups which appeared, it is doubt as to the effect of the various provisions made in this bill.

The transport commission to which I have referred will have to chart strange courses in unknown seas. The scope of the act is enormous, and equally vast will be the overriding supervisory authority of the transport commission. Let there be no doubt that if this bill is passed without any material change we shall have surrendered to those men who will compose the commission almost complete authority over a variety of subject matters in the field of transportation which so deeply affects every Canadian and every part of Canada.

In doing so we shall be following a general trend, not only in Canada but in other countries, to hack off large areas of our economic and social life and deliver them into the custody of some board or crown corporation set apart from the people and generally placed beyond the practical authority of parliament.

These tribunals tend to cultivate a cloistered existence, developing autocratic characteristics derived not only from the legislation itself but from their own innate character. Irrespective of the personality of the people who compose them, it is but natural to expect that these boards will have a strong inclination to remove themselves from public participation and that they will become intolerant of criticism and opposition. All too often they exercise control without much real appreciation of the consequences which will follow from their actions. All too often the people become mere cogs in the machine, nothing but statistics. I think there is a line in Shakespeare about man "dressed in a little brief authority, most ignorant of what he's most assured" which is applicable to so many of these crown corporations and boards.

This bill, and the establishment of the commission, constitute a tacit admission by the government that it is unable to cope with the problems of transportation, and that the rights of parliament in this field, exercised by hon. members on behalf of their constituents, are to be restricted.

Once this bill has been passed, and once the commission has been established, parliament will have no effective way of dealing with the issues involved. We shall be limited to asking questions or to examining estimates. Too often we shall be met with a bland assertion by the minister responsible that these matters will be referred to the board or to the corporation.

I am not prepared to accept such a situation, having in mind the tremendous power which could be exercised by the transport commission. I suggest there is a way in which we in this house would be placed in a position of authority without in any way curtailing the freedom which the commission must enjoy. I have an amendment to put forward. I do not propose to move it at this point, though it might well be moved as clause 1(a). I think it might better be moved as a new paragraph 28(a). This is the clause dealing with the powers and authority of the board. Since this involves what I believe to be a new concept, I intend to read it. I have some copies here in French and in English.

• (6:50 p.m.)

On this basis the government might have some opportunity to consider this and, by the time the amendment is formally moved at a later date, to come to some conclusion. Here is the amendment which I propose to move at the appropriate time, and which I propose will be a new clause 28(a):

That, the following clause be added:

(1) As soon as practical after the commencement of the first session of each parliament, in any event not more than fifteen days after the commencement of the said session, a committee of nine members of the House of Commons (to be known as The National Transport Act Committee) shall be appointed for the duration of such parliament according to the practice of this house with reference to the appointment of members to serve on standing committees.

(2) There shall be a chairman and a vice-chairman of the committee who shall be elected by the members from time to time provided however that the chairman shall be a member of the opposition.

(3) Save where otherwise provided herein the general practice as established by the standing orders shall prevail with regard to the meetings and acts of the said committee.

(4) The powers and duties of the committee are

(a) to examine the annual report made to the Governor-in-Council by the commission—

Which I think is made under clause 20.

—and to report to the house with such comments as it thinks fit any items or matters referred to in this report; and

(b) to inquire into any question which is referred to it by the House of Commons and to report to the house upon that question.

(5) The committee may, and at the request of the witness giving evidence shall, take in private evidence whether oral or documentary which in the opinion of the committee relates to a secret or confidential matter.

(6) Where at the request of a witness evidence is taken by the committee in private the committee or member shall not, without the consent in writing of the witness, disclose or publish the whole or part of the evidence.

(7) Every person competent to give evidence touching any matter under discussion in the committee shall be a compellable witness.

(8) A person who gives evidence before the committee shall not without just cause (proof whereof shall lie upon him) refuse

(a) to be sworn or make a statement;

(b) to answer a question put to him by the committee or member thereof; or

(c) to produce any document which is required by the committee to produce.

I would have added to that a provision that the committee shall have made available to it such expert and other assistance as may be required in order properly to perform its function. However, I realize such an amendment would not be in order because it involves the expenditure of money, but I hope if the government sees fit to follow along the lines I have suggested in this amendment it will see this is done. Without help of this kind, of course, a standing committee of this nature would not be able to function and perform a service.

I said this is novel in concept, although it is used in one or two other Commonwealth countries. This is a statutory committee. It does not draw its authority per se from the house but from an act of parliament, in this case the bill which is before us. There are terms of reference. Its powers under the terms of reference are statutory powers, and while it is possible under the amendment for the house to add to these terms of reference, there are certain terms of reference imposed upon the committee without needing to wait for the government to suggest these to the committee, nor need we wait for the government to establish the committee.

There is the right to take evidence in camera. There may be hon. members who take exception to this, but after listening for a number of years to evidence before the sessional committee which has dealt with the national railway and national air line, and after reading the transcript of the proceedings taken before the standing committee, it is quite obvious that there are and will be a great many instances where people in order to establish a point, do not feel free to expose in public the details of information which they have every reason to feel should be kept confidential.

True enough, I assume the transport commission will have the right to hear all evidence, and the people who appear before that commission in order to make a case will give all evidence, whether in camera or publicly, but I think the committee should have this option. This is a concept which might well be applicable to other corporations. I am thinking of the C.B.C. and the problems which are going to be faced by the government and the house shortly as to how to deal with the C.B.C.

I feel a small committee of this kind, established under statute and its powers given under statute, will be able to exercise the type of watchdog function which is going to be essential if this parliament, composed of the representatives of the people, is going to retain some measure, not of control, not, I suggest, as an appellate tribunal, but simply the power to see what is happening; the power to see the impact and the effect of the regulations and functions which this transport commission is going to exercise.

It may be suggested, why not leave this to the standing committee? As I said, I read the evidence given before the standing committee. I think it did a tremendously important job. Its functions were exercised to the fullest. I think the chairman and the members of the committee are entitled, as I said before, to the gratitude of the house for the way in which they performed. But this standing committee will be seized, as usual, with the jurisdiction in connection with examining the estimates of all the various crown corporations and different bodies, and generally will be dealing with the whole question of transportation. Of course, the estimates of the Department of Transport will be before the standing committee. It will, of course, deal with legislation and it will, no doubt, be exercising some jurisdiction over what was formerly done by the sessional committee examining into the C.N.R. and Air Canada.

I suggest that a body of the kind I envisage will be competent to do what must be done if parliament, and this house in particular, is not to surrender the authority which I suggest it should continue to have within its four corners. By examining the report it will have the right to look at any of the operations of the transport commission.

Surely, there is a need to have parliament clothed with a method to bring to the attention of the commission, the government, and the public, the actual effect of the proposals and actions of the commission. In my judgment, the lines of communication from people to their members provide the best means of relaying to this committee, and thence to the commission, the knowledge, the interest, and the inquiries which will be provoked throughout the country.

In my view, Mr. Chairman, it is going to be many, many years before the actions of this committee will have had their impact, before we will be able to see precisely what is happening. It will be many years before we will know the effect of the regulations and orders made by the transport commission in respect of the number of diverse subject matters which have been assigned to it.

I suggest, therefore, the establishment of this committee is the most effective means presented to the House of Commons whereby we can continue in a proper way our right to evaluate, to examine, to criticize, and to suggest.

I do not accept the proposition that parliament should be asked to abandon its responsibility in such a vast field of operations, and yield in a practical sense the powers and the authorities to the commission without a safeguard of some kind. I use the words "in a practical sense" because this, of course, is what this bill will do. The government may retort and say, "We have always the power to legislate." But, Mr. Chairman, we have given this tremendous authority over these various fields to the commission, and I am quite sure the commission will continue to be seized of them without too much change for a number of years. It is my belief this house should not be asked to yield up, without some safeguards, its rights and responsibilities to the people who have sent us here.

If this is not done, I am quite convinced that the powers of the commission will grow swiftly and, in due course, it will become harder and harder to find any method of examining or suggesting changes and alterations when it is essential to do so. Once we give up this right, I doubt that we will ever get it back.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up too much time of the committee, although I should like to say a few words in respect of this bill. I was a member of the committee on transport and communications which sat fairly consistently all through the summer studying the bill and the briefs submitted in respect of it. We had the opportunity to question the various witnesses. At the outset I should like to say that I agree with the other hon. members who have spoken that the committee members were very attentive and attempted to do a good job not only in respect of Bill C-231 but also in respect of everything else which came before the committee during the summer months. I wish to congratulate the minister for having given an attentive ear to the various briefs. As a result he came up with a number of amendments which were in line to some extent at least with the points raised in the briefs presented by the various provinces and other parties concerned with the provisions of the bill.

In so far as the intent of the bill, to define and implement a national transportation policy, is concerned, I am sure all members of our party are in agreement that this is something which is very necessary in a country such as ours where the geography is such that we have miles and miles of sparsely populated land and thousands of acres of land which are not productive in the sense of providing something which will assist the various modes of transportation. This bill deals with an over-all transportation policy and provides for the setting up of a commission which will have some control over the various modes of transportation, but the fact remains that basically the bill deals with railway transportation. I think this indicates that the railways are still one of our major modes of transportation, particularly for bulk goods such as concentrates, potash, grain and so on. Because of the tremendous amount of these commodities which the railways are called upon to handle, when we move away from some kind of regulation of such operations I think we are doing something which has an effect on people all across Canada.

The purpose of this bill is to provide an economic and efficient system, making use of all modes of transportation. This too is a very worth-while endeavour, but I am wondering how far in this direction we can go through the medium of this bill when it deals almost completely, I would say, with railway transportation. There is not too much in it which ties down other modes of transportation. It only deals with them, one might say, in a negative sort of way.

I believe the railway strike last fall is one of the main reasons that the presentation of this bill was expedited. At that time it was felt that we cannot afford to have such things as general railway strikes. We saw the effect that the railway strike had on the economy of our country. Therefore we felt we had to look at this whole situation from the point of view of how further strikes might be avoided.

I believe it was brought out very clearly that the problem which had developed between the railways and the unions was created because of the fact that the railways to a great extent had been restricted and were not able to operate as other industries operate in a free enterprise system. Therefore labour and management just could not get together. Management would not move to try to negotiate with labour because in the first place the railways thought they were so restricted that they could not afford to negotiate. As a result we had a major railway strike. Out of this railway strike came Bill C-231. It, of course, is the offspring of another bill, C-120, which I understand never reached the floor of the house.

I am wondering how we can provide an economic and efficient railway system—here I am dealing with railway transportation only —when at the same time we are removing the regulations which now are in effect in respect of the railways. We must take into consideration that the railways are restricted, as they must be, in a good number of areas. There must be regulations in respect of the handling of grain and other commodities. The maritime freight rate freeze is another example. This leaves a limited number of areas wherein the railways can increase rates.

I am afraid of one of two things, either that freight rates will be increased to such an extent that they will be excessive and will be a real burden on the people who must use railway transportation or, on the other hand, the railways will price themselves out of the market when they are free to increase rates. Perhaps they might even do so deliberately if they see that the present restrictions are too onerous on them. I believe that if we are to provide an efficient and economic system of transportation we cannot get away from our system of subsidies. I think it was the hon. member for Saint John-Albert who said something to this effect—why are we so afraid of subsidies. I think the use of subsidies is perhaps one of the fairest ways to allocate the cost of railway transportation in a country such as ours. Perhaps this is not the case in a country which is as heavily populated as the United States, for example, but I believe it is certainly the case in a country such as ours where many areas are sparsely populated.

I do not think we should place the burden on some small areas. I think this would be the result were we to remove the regulations in respect of railway transportation, and I am afraid this is what will happen when Bill C-231 comes into effect. I am not too critical of the bill because, in the first place, I do not think I have any right to be critical of it. I sat through all the committee meetings, as did numerous other members. We certainly tried our best to come up with something which would be of some benefit to the people as a whole. Sometimes, however, as was the case after we had gone through the bill very thoroughly, one keeps mulling things over in one's mind. I am still wondering what Bill C-231 is going to accomplish.

I come from an area in respect of which the latitude to be given to the railways will have a detrimental effect. We all think in terms of the areas from which we come. I think it is perhaps good that we do this. I come from an area where great amounts of pulp chips, lumber and timber supplies of all types are being shipped constantly. I am afraid that the latitude which the railways are to have may have a very detrimental effect on this area. This is an area where I think the railways will be given an opportunity to move fairly freely when it comes to increasing rates. I do not intend to go into the implications of clause 314D because the hon. member for Medicine Hat and my colleague the hon. member for Springfield dealt with it thoroughly. Let me point out that one of the real weaknesses of this bill is to be found in this clause and I hope that when we reach discussion of it we will devise something much better than it now contains.

[Mr. Fawcett.]

Even though we were told by representatives of the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. that they could not think of anyone who could be considered a captive shipper at this time, the hon. member for Medicine Hat made it clear that a person who is now paying a class rate can in many instances be considered a captive shipper if we follow the definition of a captive shipper as outlined in Bill No. C-231. Many of these people have to pay a higher rate than a competitor who is better able to negotiate with the company.

I do not intend to take up very much more time but I should like to give notice now that I intend to move an amendment having to do with abandonment of branch lines and dislocation of employees. The proposal embodied in my amendment is one which was recommended some time ago and can in fact be found in the proceedings and evidence of December, 1963, of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. Nothing in this bill even touches upon the difficulty I have in mind and I hope consideration will be given to my amendment which I intend to propose at the appropriate time.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Peace River very carefully referred to the inherent dangers of Bill No. C-231, and I hope the minister will pay careful attention to his suggestions regarding the preservation of the rights of parliament and the responsibilities of this committee.

The hon. member for Acadia was very forceful in his remarks and I do not intend to repeat his arguments. The hon. member for Saint John-Albert spoke just as concisely about the difficulties in the maritime areas.

As a representative of a developing area in southern Saskatchewan I intend to consider this bill from a prairie point of view. I realize, however, that each one of us must have a national as well as a regional outlook. My first concern is that the bill in part is based on conditions which do not exist at this time. The Minister of Transport has emphasized the fact that government transportation policy has been influenced by the MacPherson commission report. This commission conducted an exhaustive inquiry into railway problems and made a very complete and comprehensive report, but let me draw to the attention of the committee that it was set up in 1958. Its recommendations related to railway problems as they existed eight years ago. Advances in transportation facilities and equipment since that time have rendered some of its recommendations obsolete. This is exemplified by the forerunner to this bill introduced in 1964, Bill No. C-120, which was also based on the MacPherson report but was left to die on the order paper because of criticisms expressed before the transport committee. Bill No. C-231 has been introduced in its place.

The general purpose of Bill No. C-231 is to remove present transportation regulations and controls to allow more freedom to vary charges on the basis of competition. It has been proposed that there will be a 17-member commission, the Canadian Transport Commission, which will attempt to integrate rail, air, water, truck and commodity pipe line operations in order to give greater freedom to transport agencies in the setting of rates for shipments without rigid government control. It is expected that competition will eventually control the fixing of rates.

When the minister made his opening statement he sounded hopeful of early passage, but a practical and workable transportation policy cannot be evolved so easily. There is only a short time before the Christmas adjournment to discuss this bill, but I think it is important to make a start in order that the general public will at least be partially informed as to government intentions in this latest attempt to solve the country's transportation problems.

I made a recent week end trip home to discuss this bill with usually well-informed constituents and I found they had very little knowledge of how the proposed legislation would affect their particular area, and I refer particularly to southern Saskatchewan. They also had little knowledge of how it would affect the country as a whole.

• (7:20 p.m.)

The whole impact of greater rate freedom must be realized, particularly in inland areas such as southern Saskatchewan, and for that reason I hope we have a lengthy debate on this bill during our consideration of clause 1. On clause 1 we are, of course, speaking in general terms. We will be going into a more detailed consideration of the bill during the clause by clause study. I think probably all of us have some amendments which we shall move at that time. I consider that the general policy should be carefully scrutinized first as, I repeat, a means of informing the public, or perhaps I should be more forceful and say alerting the public regarding some of the proposed transportation changes.

There will be no opposition to the stated objective of the bill as outlined at the beginning of clause 1:

> —an economic and efficient transportation system making the best use of all available modes of transportation at the lowest total cost is essential to . . . the economic . . . growth of Canada—

Just what the government considers to be the best use of all modes of transportation and what the cost will be must be our main concern. In an earlier statement the minister said:

> This proposed measure provides the framework for a national transportation policy and establishes new machinery for carrying out that policy.

The words I want to emphasize in that quotation are "policy" and "new machinery". Those are the debating points for this committee, namely, the government's proposed policy and the new machinery it advocates for administering this policy. I repeat once more that these matters must be brought fully to the attention of the public before definite action is taken under the terms of the bill. What is decided in this committee and finally approved on third reading will have a large part to play in deciding the economic future of Canada. This is the reason for the necessity for slow and very careful passage of this bill.

The standing committee on transport and communications, of which I am a member, had a very busy time with this bill, as other hon. members have pointed out. The first meeting to consider Bill No. C-231 was on October 6, 1966. The committee held 33 meetings, morning, afternoon and evening in many cases. It received and studied 33 briefs and heard evidence from 73 witnesses. As I said before, I am speaking mainly in the interests of the area from which I come, southern Saskatchewan. Among the witnesses from this area and from the west generally were members of the National Farmers Union, the three western wheat pools, the Saskatchewan government, the Manitoba government, the Alberta government, the Manitoba Branch Lines Association, the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce, the Coal Operators Association, and opposition members of the Saskatchewan legislature. There were others, of course, but I just mention those in passing.

Mr. Pickersgill: And the leader of the Liberal party of Manitoba.

Mr. Pascoe: Yes, and the leader of the Liberal party for Manitoba. He presented a brief. In the briefs presented there were at least 75 recommendations for changes to the bill. I shall not refer to them all, but I have them all here. I shall refer to one or two. I mentioned the three western wheat pools, which are joined as the Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers. I will read one or two of their recommendations:

> Provision must be made to introduce in commission membership perhaps three or four informed laymen.

This point was expressed several times by witnesses, namely, the need to have laymen on the commission who could take a clear look at the whole situation. The thought expressed by some of these representatives from the west was that the commission, with all the members of the Board of Transport Commissioners embodied in it, would be fairly well railway-oriented. The purpose of this bill is to integrate all forms of transportation and that is why they asked for laymen to be on the commission. They said that this would guard against the possibility of the new look in Canadian transportation being thwarted or upset by those called upon to administer it.

I repeat that their thought was that the commission may be too much railway-oriented. They also made this statement:

> We are unsure about the provisions which have to do with railway freedom in rate-making, unjust discrimination and undue preference, especially in an area like the prairies where there is really no effective competition to the railways.

That is a point I want to bring out again, that Saskatchewan is fairly well tied to railway transportation. They also said:

> We want an opportunity to be heard in advance when the ground rules for costing procedures are being worked out by the commission, especially in connection with Crowsnest Pass rates.

They also made this recommendation, and it is the last one I shall quote:

> There should be powers to allow for the refusing or granting of government payments where they are provided as a railway subsidy and for the withholding or granting of permission to abandon trackage or discontinue a service.

A great many changes were made to the bill as the result of the hearing of witnesses before the transport committee. With at least 60 amendments, the legislation we now have before us bears little resemblance to the bill initially given to the transport committee last October. That is why I think it is important that we spend a great deal of time on the clause by clause study of the bill. I have referred to some of the western presentations. There was also a combined brief from the western provinces and the maritimes in which the province of Saskatchewan did not participate. Saskatchewan is the province that could be most seriously affected by the provisions of Bill No. C-231, and to me it was very surprising that the Saskatchewan government's views were not more forcibly expressed. Saskatchewan has the greatest number of branch lines open to possible abandonment, despite the freeze on many lines until 1975 as indicated by the minister.

The departmental map which was issued from the minister's office clearly shows the number of branch lines in Saskatchewan. Saskatchewan produces the most wheat which has to move by rail for export. The province's potash industry is expanding rapidly, and reasonable freight rates are vital for the long haul by rail to market. Sodium sulphate also moves to market mainly in rail hopper cars. When a shipper has no effective alternative means of shipping his product, as I have indicated is the case with regard to potash, sodium sulphate and other products, he becomes a captive shipper. The minister is aware of the arguments which were advanced on the definition of a captive shipper during the committee's hearings. As other hon. members have pointed out, Bill C-231 is supposed to protect the captive shipper from expensive transportation rates. For the economic welfare and in the interest of all the areas in our country—again I am speaking for Saskatchewan in particular—we must make absolutely certain that this protection is provided.

I will have more to say regarding the maximum rate formula for captive shippers as set out in new section 336, clause 53 of the bill, when that clause comes up for consideration. All I wish to say now is that the proposed formula of variable cost for a 30,000 pound car plus 150 per cent would produce a rate which would be three or four times greater than the present rate. I am mentioning this to indicate that the bill provides very little protection to captive shippers such as I have mentioned. In spite of the consideration which we may give to the minister's plea for fast passage of the bill we must ensure that every clause in the bill meets the needs of all parts of Canada.

The minister will be familiar with the following point which I wish to bring to his attention because I referred to it several times in the transport committee. I am referring to the proposed removal of the $7 million a year bridge subsidy for the long haul north of lake Superior in northern Ontario. The proposed removal of the bridge subsidy, which has served a very definite purpose in the development of the prairies, will in my opinion greatly affect the cost of transportation. At one of the committee meetings the minister said it was not possible to legislate for geography. We from the prairies consider that the bridge subsidy was an attempt to give due consideration to geographic areas and distances. At one of the meetings of the committee during which the bridge subsidy was discussed a witness stated that the payment of the subsidy represented a saving of, I think, 10 per cent in the cost of farm machinery to the prairies. I could hardly believe it. I will have more to say later on the long-haul problem when the clause regarding the bridge subsidy comes up for consideration.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member permit a question? It is my recollection that I did not say we could not legislate for geography. I think I said one could not legislate to remove geography.

Mr. Pascoe: I do not see much difference between the two statements. I am still pleading for consideration for the prairies with regard to this matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: After all, I represent Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Nielsen: They did it with Lake Centre.

Mr. Pascoe: Much of Saskatchewan's future development depends on fair rates for long-haul marketing of low grade heavy commodities, and I am again referring to potash, sodium sulphate, coal and timber. I warn the minister that I intend to speak at greater length later with regard to this matter.

I should like to ask the minister to give us a definite assurance regarding the date of what he said was a commitment by the present Board of Transport Commissioners that there would be no abandonment of branch lines until Bill C-231 comes into effect.

I have a letter from Mr. Rump of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada dated December 14 and I trust that the minister's statement was made subsequent to that date. The letter states definitely that the application of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to abandon its Kelfield Subdivision from Brass to Kelfield in northwest Saskatchewan, a distance of 27.9 miles, is on file with the board. The letter states:

> The line is in the "eligible for abandonment" category without waiting upon the pasage of Bill C-231 and the board is prepared to proceed with the application.

I ask the minister to give us a definite assurance that this does not mean that the board has made a decision to abandon that line, and again may I point out that the letter is dated December 14.

Mr. Pickersgill: I gave my assurance since then. I repeat that I gave it after the hon. member for Springfield spoke and before the hon. member for Medicine Hat spoke. I have had an assurance from the chairman of the board since that date that while they may go on gathering statistics and other information of that sort no hearings will be held and no decisions will be made while the legislation is before parliament.

Mr. Pascoe: I thank the minister. I wanted those words put on record to ensure that this commitment was made after December 14. I shall therefore make no further reference to this matter.

I have one or two further questions. Last week I asked the minister a question but I did not press him for an answer because I knew that the transportation legislation would be coming up soon. I am referring to a news report in the Moose Jaw Times-Herald saying that the C.P.R. was raising its passenger fares for one month starting December 9 during the Christmas and New Year holiday season. It said that this increase was in line with the C.P.R. policy of raising rates at a time of greater demand for space on passenger coaches. It said that the fare increase would vary in different parts of Canada. It gave two or three examples and said that the fare from Moose Jaw to Calgary during the holiday season would be raised by $5, that is, from the regular rate of $16 to the special holiday rate of $21. It said that the fare from Moose Jaw to Winnipeg would be increased from $16 to $17.50 on week days and up to $18.50 on Fridays and Saturdays. The fare from Moose Jaw to Toronto was also raised, in accordance with the C.P.R. policy to raise fares during times of greater passenger demand, from $30.60 to $39.10. I asked the minister at that time if the company had the authority to make this decision on its own or whether it had to receive approval from the Board of Transport Commissioners.

• (7:40 p.m.)

While I was in my constituency I consulted an official who is very well connected with transportation agencies and he told me definitely that the trucking industry, which according to the bill is supposed to be in competition with the railways so as to keep rates down, was going to raise its rates as of January 2 by 10 to 15 per cent and that the railways, particularly the C.P.R., would follow suit. I have a few more remarks to make but perhaps the minister would let me know whether raising rates without reference to any commission is in line with his idea of competition as we remove the present government regulations.

I conclude with a statement that has been made by others in regard to what the minister said was one of the main purposes of the bill, namely, to remove the necessity for the government paying a subsidy to the railways out of the federal treasury, which now amounts to around $110 million. The railways were questioned about this and I think they indicated they would have to make up the subsidy somehow. If they could not get more business they would have to increase rates to make up the $110 million, which to me is certainly an indication that there will be further increases in rates.

I should like the minister to answer these three points. The first concerns the provision of passenger service and whether the railways need authority to raise fares. I have also been given what I consider official notice that the truckers will be raising their rates by 10 to 15 per cent on January 2, so how will the railways meet this? Third, how does the minister think the railways will make up for the removal of the subsidy of $110 million?

Mr. Pickersgill: If the committee will permit me to give very brief answers to the three points made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre I will be glad to do so but I do not want to restrict the opportunity of anybody else to speak. I am in the hands of the committee.

Mr. Pascoe: I should like to hear the answers if possible.

Mr. Pickersgill: After the hon. gentleman asked his question the other day I made inquiries and was told that the C.P.R.'s rates, even their holiday rates, are lower than the rates that have been prescribed by the Board of Transport Commissioners. I gather one can look at it two ways. Either their rates are lower when there is little traffic in order to attract more traffic—and, of course, as the hon. member knows, the air lines do the same thing—or their rates are slightly higher when more traffic is involved. However, I am told that both ways the rates are well below the ceiling and therefore are not under the control of the Board of Transport Commissioners. I am told that the same thing was done last year as well as in other years. I am just telling the hon. member what I was told. I do not know of my own knowledge.

As to the second point about whether or not the truckers are going to raise their rates, I do not know if they are. They are not under the control at the present time of any agency of the government of Canada. If they want to raise their rates and think they can get enough traffic and can increase their profits, I suppose there is nothing to stop them. As we all know, their costs have certainly gone up because there have been very substantial increases in labour costs. Under the law as it stands the railways can raise their competitive rates whenever they feel inclined to do so as long as the usual notice is given to the board. So really that has nothing to do with this bill.

As for the much bigger question, which was also put by the hon. member for Acadia, about whether or not railway rates will go up, I think the passage of this bill will make very little difference. The freeze is a voluntary freeze. If the bill is not passed within a reasonable time, under the existing law the railways can apply for a horizontal increase.

Mr Pascoe: But they must apply for the increase?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. As everybody knows, all they need do is to show that their costs have gone up fantastically since they had their last increase in 1958. So the idea that the passage of this bill will make it easier to increase rates is quite wrong.

Unless parliament is willing to freeze the rates indefinitely and to pay for that freeze, there are going to be changes in the rates whether or not this bill passes. It is important that we get this through our heads. As hon. members know, the great objection to the present system is that the horizontal increases apply almost entirely to the non-competitive rates. It is our hope that when this bill passes and there is greater freedom on the part of the railways they will be able to operate faster with competitive rates, get a bigger share of the traffic, and therefore will not have to put up their non-competitive rates as much to recover their costs.

That is my great defence of this bill, Mr. Chairman. I agree that in the really monopolistic areas we must give protection to the shippers, but in the competitive areas I think we must let the railways have a chance to compete. It is obvious that as between the truckers and the railways commodity rates on items which could be carried by trucks are competitive, and they are at the present time not under any control.

Mr. Rock: Mr. Chairman, speaking on clause 1 of Bill No. C-231, an act to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions, my immediate interest will centre upon clause 78 which pertains to level crossings and the grade crossing fund. The government provides up to 80 per cent of the cost of such works, with a maximum of $500,000, 15 per cent being payable by the highway authorities be they municipal or provincial and 5 per cent being payable by the railway companies. This bill extends these provisions for a further three years.

The Minister of Transport is aware that I have asked him to study the possibility of amending this bill in order to give the new commission the power to initiate, plan and execute works to eliminate level crossings. At that time he referred me to the transport committee of which I am a member. I have had occasion to ask whether this could be done and I was told by legal advisers of the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. that they believed that the present board has this power but has never exercised it. Some of the officials of the transport department, backed up by justice department officials, are of the opinion that the commission does not have this power. They believe it would be unconstitutional for the federal government to impose works and costs on a provincial department or on a municipality which comes under provincial jurisdiction. For this reason I intend to ask that clause 78 stand until the minister can explain whether we can or cannot bring in such an amendment. If we can, I should like to have the opportunity to put forward an amendment of this kind.

• (7:50 p.m.)

All members of the house are aware of the serious level crossing accident which occurred in Dorion. A day later another occurred on Sources Road which divides Dorval and Pointe Claire. Recently there have also been serious level crossing accidents at Port Hope and Pickering, contributing to a total of 480 serious level crossing accidents in Canada ending in death or serious injury. The average is more than one level crossing accident a day.

The general public, and especially those who live in my constituency, are concerned about safety. Recently the officials of the city of Dorval requested that a pedestrian underpass be built beneath the Pine Beach pedestrian level crossing at Dorval. The Board of Transport Commissioners has informed me that the roads department of the province of Quebec will execute works to separate the grade at Sources Road in Pointe Claire-Dorval and St. Charles Road in Beaconsfield immediately after Expo closes.

The reason the roads department is holding back construction is that they feel it would cause undue traffic delay during the period of Expo. Officials of the city of Pierrefonds are meeting with an official of the board on Thursday of this week to discuss the possibility of separating the grade at Monte de Liesses.

What disturbs me is this: suppose the grade crossing fund has been depleted as a result of the interest shown lately by municipalities which stand to benefit from it. Will the minister ask that a supplementary amount be voted in order that no shortage of finances will cause delays in the construction of overpasses or underpasses to eliminate dangerous level crossings?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might be permitted to say that I will consider very carefully what the hon. member has said.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, to my knowledge Bill No. C-231 is probably one of the most comprehensive and most elaborate bills ever introduced in this house.

I do not intend to read over the national policy, as it is described in the first paragraphs, since all my colleagues have had the opportunity to read the bill.

I will simply say to the minister that, in my opinion, this appears to me as very timely legislation, since there seems to exist, in the Canadian transportation field, a situation reminiscent of the Middle Ages, because of the extent to which it has become unable to keep up with events. It was time we looked into the situation.

I will not analyse in any definite way all the clauses of the bill, because I went over it rapidly, but I do want to hear the opinion of all my colleagues concerning some of the clauses before I make up my mind. Let us simply say that, in general—and I repeat what I said earlier—it will help to clarify a chaotic situation, which has resulted in a kind of adverse condition for the Canadian economy and, in that connection, I believe the bill could be classed among all those bills of major importance which we have had the opportunity to consider during the present session and to which members of the house have made positive contributions, even though there may have been, here and there, a few partisan eruptions.

Mr. Chairman, I say this legislation is timely because, for one thing, there has been gross neglect on the part of the railways. But I will speak of that later. I should now like to point out, however, that much of my criticism does not apply to the C.N.R.

It seems to me that, in the last few years, the C.N.R. has progressed considerably thanks to the impetus it was given by its president, who is soon to retire, and a few of his fellow-workers. There was a time in Canada where it was said that the C.P.R. was endowed with an exemplary management, but things have changed since. The C.N.R. should now be held up as a model, while the C.P.R. should be severely criticized.

I presume, and I hope, that the minister, when appointing the members of the board, will want it to represent, first of all, the ten provinces, and I should like to specify, be representative of Quebec. Incidentally, I should like to explain to the minister, who on occasion has said that he could not lend himself to racism for personal reasons, that I respect those who from time to time protest in favour of Quebec. I am thinking of that category of people who, to my mind, are reasonable and full of good-will. Of course, I exclude my colleague for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire). I am referring to those who, back home, prove their goodwill. Those protests are made with a view to reminding the minister that national unity will not be achieved unless those legitimate demands made by Quebec are studied carefully, for they do not denote racism but rather an instinct for self-preservation. Now, those people want to exchange views with all Canadians in all provinces, but, of course, they are not ready to do so at the cost of their survival, from the cultural point of view and in all other respects. I emphasize this, sir, because a bill brought forward by the government contained a list of English speaking persons only; no French speaking people had been included. I do not admit that there is not at least one competent man within our ranks in that field. Again, I do not blame the government, but I would like my criticism to be taken as constructive criticism. I know that the government is well disposed in this regard, as they have shown in many circumstances, and I simply want to draw their attention to this matter.

Therefore, the commission should be representative of the ten provinces; it should include people of unquestioned competence, for it will have a tremendous job to do. It will have to deal in particular with some cases of evident neglect and with some railways which abolish without qualms passenger train service under the pretext that it is uneconomic when they have secured from the government, as everyone knows, untold benefits. They even succeeded in diverting their interests in a multitude of companies and they give everyone the impression at the present time that they want to keep only those undertakings which are truly economic and get rid of those which are not but serve the public. And yet when they obtained those services, they promised the government that they would give such a service.

For instance, take the cancellation of the Montreal-Quebec train which, in my opinion, was absolutely unjustified. People who live in the cities and localities between Montreal and Quebec have been making representations ever since it was cancelled. Representations were made in the provincial legislature; some were made by chambers of commerce and city councils, but the C.P.R. turns a deaf ear.

Mr. Chairman, it is said openly—but I never saw the agreement myself—that some years ago, thanks to the services of a minister who was also a famous politician here in parliament and a lawyer for the C.P.R., some kind of agreement was allegedly reached by the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. to the effect that the C.N.R. would never serve Trois-Rivières and would never compete with the C.P.R. Such a situation, even though justified at the time—I am unable to judge, because I was not there—is no longer justified today. As a matter of fact, Trois-Rivières should be served by the C.N.R., if only to provide us with a better service than the one given by the C.P.R. and ensure a competition which is always sound in that field.

Mr. Chairman, it would be possible to establish such a service, because there is already a railway line going through a village called Charette, approximately 15 miles from our city. Our station could be used jointly by both railways, like the Ottawa station at present. This would not involve extensive outlays and would probably prompt both railway companies to provide an adequate service in the area I represent which numbers from 350,000 to 450,000 inhabitants.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the service is rotten all along the line. It is not the fault of the service agents who are doing their best in hopeless conditions. The staff is reduced, trains are cancelled and the cars are dirty. The railway stations in the province of Quebec are in a shameful condition. I am not speaking about the other provinces, because I know my colleagues will want to do so. Some of those stations would never be tolerated in cities; they would be considered hovels. I am of a certain age, Mr. Chairman, but I think a few of those stations have never been painted in my lifetime.

It will soon be the time of Expo; we are going to invite millions of visitors and show them along our railway lines, hovels used as stations and surrounded by dumping grounds. We could at least cut the grass, prune trees, paint buildings if we do not want to rebuild them.

I would say that the Board of Transport Commissioners should have a lot more power to control those public companies which have taken the cream of the natural resources of Canada. They were granted so many things that they grew rich, but now they have to meet some public obligations, they refuse to do so.

Mr. Chairman, I would have many things to say on this matter, but I know some of my colleagues would like to make a few comments. Some hon. members have already expressed their views and by repeating unnecessarily what has been said I would only extend the debate. However, I just want to point out that, in most railways, I think labour-management relations have been pitiful up to now, but some provisions in this bill will tend to improve those relations and boost employee morale sufficiently to ensure passenger service with a smile.

Mr. Chairman, there is another important matter to which the Board of Transport Commissioners could give full consideration, and that is the trucking industry. It is up against a kind of competition that trucking companies feel unjustified, since railways are receiving grants which, of course, are not available to trucking firms and which place the latter in a most difficult position.

Mr. Chairman, I think we should look into this situation, because the trucking industry has its justification. The private companies who have set up truck transport, incurred the risks, invested the funds needed, and they are not very happy with the competition of railroad companies, which obtained from the Canadian government or the Canadian people all the privileges we know—which they placed in other companies that they now operate to enrich a large number of their directors.

Then, they demand subsidies to compete against private enterprise which tries to meet the needs of the Canadian economy. The Board of Transport Commissioners will need the authority, the will, to straighten out that situation.

Mr. Chairman, I note that the bill tends to standardize the various provincial legislative measures on transport. That, I think, is wise. When one is familiar, for instance, with the type of jungle found in the U.S.A., where each state has its own laws, where it is practically impossible for transport companies to give decent service because of wide differences in their respective governing legislation, I feel it is wise, with all due deference to those provincial ministers of transport who think differently, for the government to assume its responsibilities and ensure trucking some kind of uniformity, in order to avoid the expensive complications which lead to delays and are detrimental to our Canadian economy. I will not go so far as to advocate, in a definite way, perhaps, that truck transportation should be subsidized also, but I believe that this industry is faced with problems which must be examined and considered carefully, at least so as not to favour competition.

Mr. Chairman, with your permission—I do not know whether this is in order—I still have a few remarks to make, but I see that the Minister of Public Works and house leader (Mr. McIlraith) would like to ask for the unanimous consent to take up another measure. I am prepared to resume my seat, provided you agree to recognize me again upon resuming consideration of Bill No. C-231, because I would need about five minutes more.

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should answer the hon. gentleman now and say that we propose that this measure will be before the house tomorrow when he will have full opportunity to continue his remarks. I want to thank him for his courtesy in enabling me to rise now. I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether I could ask the committee to rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, in order that I may detail some plans for the further business of the house.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit later this day or at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions among the house leaders and with some other members about the business and we have some suggestions we would like to put forward which we think will meet the wishes of all hon. members. They are that we now proceed immediately to deal with third reading of the old age security supplementary pensions bill. When that is completed tonight we will consider certain items which I shall outline now. They are items Nos. 93, 100, 79, 96, 104, 110 and 117. The first two items, the one dealing with the export credits insurance bill and the other with incentives for scientific research, we would wish to have finished.

Mr. Starr: Would you repeat them again in sequence?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. The export credit insurance measure would be first. That is item 93. The second would be item 100, the legislation for incentives for the expansion of scientific research. We might not complete the other five of the seven items I have mentioned, but we would like to complete the first two if we could tonight and we would like the consent of the house to continue our sitting after 10 o'clock tonight in order to accomplish this.

Tomorrow we expect to be able to have royal assent to the old age security bill at or about ten o'clock. We would, of course, continue tomorrow with the transport bill, and we would need the concurrence of the house to continue our sitting tomorrow night after six o'clock. We would then adjourn the house for a recess and the adjournment would be until January 9. I shall have the formal motion for the adjournment on the order paper tomorrow. I have given notice of it this afternoon and it will be on the order paper for tomorrow. If that course of action is agreeable, I should like it so ordered and to proceed in that way.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the house leader. He specifically mentioned that items 93 and 100 on the order paper would be dealt with tonight after the normal sitting hour. On the other hand, he also mentioned there were some seven items. How will we be able to deal with the other items? Will they be dealt with tomorrow?

Mr. McIlraith: I should like to deal with them tonight if it is possible to do so. I would not like to undertake to call them tomorrow. We might not proceed with some of them.

Mr. Starr: Is the time for sitting after ten o'clock any particular time?

Mr. McIlraith: I would be glad to put some reasonable limitation on it which would accomplish the business we have in mind. I should like to get the old age security measure and these first two measures through in any event. But if we finish those items before 11.30 we would then take any of the other items I have mentioned. That might be a fair suggestion if it could be so ordered.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, the house leader has accurately stated the conclusion we reached at our meeting this afternoon. We are prepared to agree to the house order which he suggests. Perhaps I should emphasize our understanding about tonight. It is that we are prepared to sit after ten o'clock for whatever time is necessary to complete the old age security item and the first two items which the minister mentioned. What we do after that will depend on what time it is, the mood of the house, and so on.

Mr. McIlraith: That is right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is it agreed by the house that following the discussion of the business of the house third reading of Bill C-251 will be taken?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house also agree to sit beyond ten o'clock this evening?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that in sitting beyond ten o'clock no time limit has been set. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Starr: Provided, Mr. Speaker, that we undertake only the legislation which has been mentioned and not the transport bill.

Mr. McIlraith: That is right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It having been agreed that the house will sit beyond ten o'clock, I understand that the two bills which are to receive priority are those set out in order No. 93 and order No. 100 on today's order paper.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It seems a little difficult to make an order on this, but I understand that if possible consideration will be given to orders numbered 79, 96, 104, 110 and 117.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: But it was decided that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The government house leader also asked the consent of the house to sit beyond six o'clock tomorrow. Again, does the suggestion of the house leader that we sit beyond six o'clock tomorrow contain no time limit?

Mr. McIlraith: Until ten o'clock tomorrow night. From six until ten o'clock tomorrow night.

Mr. Starr: Or sooner.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: So that there will be no misunderstanding, may I go over the different points again. Following this discussion we will have third reading of Bill C-251. We will then discuss items 93 and 100 on today's order paper. If there is time remaining we will consider items 79, 96, 104, 110 and 117. The house will sit after ten o'clock this evening with no time limit specified. Tomorrow the house will sit from six o'clock to ten o'clock. Does the house agree that it be so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION OF GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENTS AND DETERMINATION OF PENSIONERS' INCOMES

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-251, to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, in order to conform to the geniality which exists I will be as brief as possible in making my point. First of all, I think I should bring to the attention of the house the fact that in the course of this session we have passed a very substantial amount of business and legislation. I understand we have dealt with 100 items, which is far in excess of the amount of work done in one or possibly two normal sessions. Be this as it may, and inasmuch as we are dealing with the supplementary payment to old age pensioners, I should like to say to the house and through the house to the country that it seems that quite a substantial number of senior citizens will benefit from this legislation, with which principle I heartily agree, but regrettably a good number of those who will benefit from it will be placed in a position of prejudice.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that if I thought for one moment the amendment would carry I would move that we stand this bill and return it to committee for the consideration of a flat payment to all recipients of old age security today. All these people have assisted in the growth of this country and we are now enjoying the fruits of their efforts. All these people have assisted in making a contribution to our society and our economic position in the world today. I think they should have the right to share in this. They unquestionably pay for this privilege because those who have the income or who have the money behind them are assessed accordingly. I feel it would not cost the taxpayers the money that this bill and the resultant mini-budget will cost the taxpayers of Canada.

I know this whole question has been discussed, but I think we should consider a few ways in which prejudice will take place. Since this legislation has been under consideration I have received calls from many people. In particular I should like to mention a few just to indicate what it will mean. A lady who has passed the age of 70 and is very adept in the art or craft of dressmaking probably makes $40 or $50 a month under present circumstances. Of course it will be to her advantage to stop doing the work she is doing. Then there is the elderly gentleman who finds it beneficial to do a job after he has reached age 70. Now he will say to himself that it is no longer right or good for him financially to do this, and he will quit. So, as has been said, in my humble opinion this legislation will be a detriment in these cases. These people are discriminated against and will be prejudiced as a result of this legislation. I have heard these people say that they are prepared to settle for less than $30 a month provided it is on a flat rate basis. Surely the people who are concerned are the people who should know.

The government has taken the position that this is not the case. They have said no. It astounds me when I think of the ability of this government to turn the people and society against them. When I think of what this government has done or has omitted to do I think of students, medical people, paramedical people, workers, unions, senior citizens, farmers, and I would have more to say about them had the minister remained in his seat but he has gone. I also think of the people who should receive the benefits inherent in the designated area program, and I think of the investors in this country who do not receive the consideration of this government. I am reminded of what has been done on an international basis as a result of the actions of this government.

Having regard to the budget brought down last evening it seems to me that the government did not inform Canadians that they are now going to have to pay for what we now know old age pensioners require. In other words, the old age pensioners are being blamed for the increased taxes announced last evening. That is wrong because there is approximately $330 million now in the fund. With that knowledge I am sure every Canadian must realize that it was unnecessary to increase taxes for this purpose.

Let me now refer to the different segments or classes in which old age pensioners are to be placed. We are to collect taxes to pay for the $75 basic old age security pension, taxes to pay for the Canada Pension Plan and taxes for supplementary payments. It is high time that we should think about efficiency instead of recruiting a vast number of bureaucrats to tidy up the existing mess. The government is overtaxing so far as the old age security plan is concerned, and it is overtaxing to pay for the Canada Pension Plan. It now intends to overtax, bearing in mind the $330 million in the fund, to pay for supplementary payments to old age pensioners. All this overtaxation is unnecessary because the necessary amount of money could be saved by increasing administrative efficiency. We should have one administrative staff instead of three to handle social security measures.

An hon. Member: How do you pay for them?

Mr. Winkler: We certainly are not going to find the money by hiring an additional but unnecessary administrative staff, and if the hon. member does not realize even that much he has not been here long enough to know what is happening.

[Mr. Winkler.]

All our social security measures should be put under one administrative staff in order that we can be efficient. The extra taxes now being imposed are unnecessary. Rather than thinking of the various segments of our society that can be taxed to a greater extent we should think of saving money. All we are doing is creating a bureaucratic kingdom without end. That is a Grit philosophy, not one of ours. I hope the press will take up this point and bring it to the attention of the people. We have three small but very important segments of taxation for the same purpose; yet we are being totally inefficient in the administration of our social programs.

While I feel it necessary to vote in favour of supplementary payments to our old age pensioners I am obliged to bring to the attention of the house the fact that our taxation policies are unjust. This government has not even thought of efficiency with regard to handling our social measures on behalf of the people who have built this country. It has not adopted an honest attitude in building a future for those people who will enter our economic society in days to come.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the house is asked to give third reading to Bill No. C-251 I wish to make one more appeal to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) and to the government of the day to transform the bill into the kind of legislation it ought to be. We welcome as heartily as we can the fact that a new figure has been set for old age pensions in this country, namely, $105 per month, but we regret that this bill involves a retrograde step in its departure from universality in that the government is applying what it calls an income test but which most people in this country will call a means test. I intend to give effect to our appeal on third reading by moving an amendment, but let me hasten to say that the minister need not regard my amendment as a motion of non-confidence.

It is my belief that if the minister were willing, as I am sure in his heart he is, to accept the proposition we intend to put from this side of the house and go back to the idea of a full pension without a means test, he would find the house prepared tonight to pass all stages of whatever legislation is necessary to provide a pension of $105 per month to all pensioners without a means test. I can speak only for myself in saying there would be no debate, but I am fully confident that would be the attitude adopted throughout the house. I am confident that if the government said that the house need not vote on the amendment moved by the member for Winnipeg North Centre and was prepared to bring in a simple amendment to the Old Age Security Act providing a pension of $105 per month without a means test it would receive the complete support of this house and such a bill would move through all stages tonight.

Let me appeal to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is responsible for this legislation, to throw it out. I ask him to do this on the basis that in our kind of society an income test, calling it by the government's name, is inherently wrong so far as our old age pensioners are concerned. Other members during the course of this debate, including the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) just now, have drawn attention to the horror with which many of our pensioners face the fact that a means test is coming. Attention has been drawn to the elements of discrimination in the test, which need not be repeated now.

I do want to say to the minister that what we are creating as a result of this legislation is a jungle in the field of old age pension legislation. There was a time, after many years of coping with this problem, when the parliament of Canada set up a special joint committee which went into the matter very thoroughly and came up with the recommendation of old age security, namely, a pension without a means test to all who reached a certain age. For a time that plan seemed to meet the needs of the aged in this country. True, the original amount had to be increased but the general plan seemed more or less satisfactory. But the time came when it was realized that old age security as a flat-rate program had to be matched with an earnings related program. Thus the Canada Pension Plan was evolved.

I am still prepared to say that those two plans, properly integrated, properly thought out in relation to each other, made a good pension package, the flat-rate old age security and the Canada Pension Plan on an earnings related basis. However, not enough thought was put into the relationship between the two plans. Not enough thought was given to what the amount of old age security should be in relation to the Canada Pension Plan. So the day came when the government began to try to fill the gaps. The first attempt to fill the gaps was the Canada Assistance Plan.

For a number of weeks we were told that it would solve the problem. The government soon discovered that even that plan did not fill all the gaps, even that plan did not solve all the problems. So the government came along with another gap-filler, namely, this means test supplement to old age security. In addition to the four programs which I have named in this brief historical summary, there is also the Old Age Assistance Act. I recognize that it is phasing out as the eligible age for old age security drops year by year until it gets down to 65, but at least at the moment when this bill has been passed we will find ourselves in this country with five pieces of legislation respecting retirement in old age. Those five pieces of legislation are the Old Age Security Act, the Old Age Assistance Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Canada Assistance Plan and now supplementary old age security payments.

This is not a well thought out plan. It is not the kind of plan that will stand for all time, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare said when he introduced this bill on second reading. This is not the kind of complete system of old age pensions that is good for all time, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) said last night. If I may repeat myself, it is not a well thought-out plan. I suggest that the word used by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), namely, "jungle", does apply to this arrangement. I regret that the confusion that was already there, confusion brought about because of this business of filling the gaps instead of thinking through the whole situation, has been compounded by the action the government is now asking parliament to take.

But it is not too late to improve this situation. The kind of improvement that is really needed, of course, is to go back and think through the whole scheme, the whole program, the whole plan. At least until such time as there could be a recasting of the whole program we could avoid adding this fifth method of dealing with retirement and old age, namely, a $30 supplement on a means test basis. The way to avoid that is simply to add the $30 to the basic old age security pension and to pay the full $105 without a means test of any kind.

I say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and if he were free to say so I think he would probably say he agrees with me, that the five-part plan we now have, or will have if this bill goes through, will not last; it will not be very long before changes will be made to it. In fact, I would not be surprised if the government in power today were to propose changes to it before the next election. If it does not propose changes before the next election, it will probably go into the next election promising that it will make changes. One of the promises I think this government will make, even if it does so under pressure, will be that it will remove the income test as the Liberals call it, or the means test as the Canadian people call it, from the extra $30.

If this does not happen at the next election, it will happen in a matter of a few years. Canada will not be satisfied with this five-part confusion which we have built up with respect to old age security. We could simplify it. Time will take care of the Old Age Assistance Act as the eligible age for old age security comes down to 65. The Canada Assistance Plan is mainly a plan for other areas of social need. If we were to take the proposal that is before us tonight and incorporate it into the basic old age security pension, we would be back basically to a two-part plan—on the one hand a flat-rate benefit, and on the other the earnings related benefit in the Canada Pension Plan.

I believe that those two schemes, if given the chance to work together as they ought to, would produce a good pension package. My theory is that this fiddling around we are doing with supplementary means test payments, with the Canada Assistance Plan and old age assistance, is unfair to the principles of the Canada Pension Plan in that the legislation this government brought in is being interfered with by this kind of arrangement.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is my earnest plea to the government to take one more look at this matter before it asks us to give third reading to this bill in its present form. I could go over all the points about this bill that were gone into on second reading and in committee of the whole. I will not do so. I could read, if there was plenty of time, the mail I have been receiving in the last few days from people who are horrified and mystified by this arrangement, who cannot understand why the principle of the last 15 years cannot be continued. I will not do that tonight. I have such letters by the score upstairs.

I am making my appeal to the government on the basis of its own approach. I believe there was a time when the Liberals who now occupy the government benches felt that we had to do something to improve the old age security system and they came up with the idea of the Canada Pension Plan. If they had just put more thought into making these two plans work together or making them fit into each other, instead of coming up with the hodge-podge of a jungle that we now have, we would have something of which we could be proud. The document from the Liberal federation that I had here last night ended with the sentence that the means test supplement in the proposed scheme is a plan of which Liberals can be proud. I do not think that the Liberals who tried to build up the pension program in the days when they were on this side of the house, who tried to improve the pension picture in this country, are proud of what they have now achieved, namely, this five-part jungle of old age security, old age assistance, the Canada Assistance Plan, the Canada Pension Plan and the $30 means test supplement. This is not worthy of the parliament of Canada in the 1960's. We can do a great deal better, and we can start on that road tonight by saying here in this House of Commons that we are not going to go for confusing the situation by building this means test into the pensions which our senior citizens receive.

Therefore I urge that before we take the vote on third reading the government think seriously about this matter. As I said, I will give effect to this appeal by making the appropriate amendment on third reading and I hope that the government will consider my suggestion that a vote on it is not necessary if the government is prepared to bring in a simple bill amending the Old Age Security Act and raising the pension to $105 a month. I say to the government that if it is not prepared to do it tonight, if it is not prepared to do it at this session, it will be done some day by the parliament of Canada. If this is the case, then why not do it now so that the older people today will enjoy the dignity and self-respect of a pension free of any test and so that Canada will continue to be a country with a pension plan which respects the rights and the dignity of our older people?

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis):

> That Bill C-251 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house for the purpose of reconsidering the income test provided in clause 3 thereof.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that I have drafted this amendment in line with citation 415 on page 287 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, and other citations immediately thereafter. Under our rules we are entitled on third reading to ask for reconsideration of a matter with which we have dealt in committee. I ask for a reconsideration of what the government calls the income test and I hope that that reconsideration will result in the test being removed. We are asking for the $105 pension to be universal. If this amendment comes to a vote, this is what we shall be voting for. We will be voting for a pension free of any income or means test, for a full $105 to be paid to all our eligible old age pensioners, and I ask the house to support this amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For the benefit of the house I shall read the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

That Bill C-251 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house for the purpose of reconsidering the income test provided in clause 3 thereof.

I would invite comments from hon. members regarding the acceptability of this amendment.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on the reasons for referring this bill back to the committee of the whole. In the first place we believe that this legislation, if it goes through, will create so many problems that within five years it will have to be changed beyond recognition. We have pleaded for an increase in old age security to $100 per month as a matter of right because we believe in the wisdom of the joint committee and the wisdom of the parliament of 1951 when they stated that there must be no means test.

We came to this conclusion for the following reasons. First, we consider that all senior citizens have contributed to the building of this country, and not to give them an increase would be unfair. In 1951 we believed that the means test was demoralizing and destructive to our senior citizens, and this is still true today. We also believe that the cost of administration of this program would be so high as to eliminate any savings which might be effected. If this bill is passed and put into effect we will reach the conclusion in a very short time that the administrative costs are too high.

No longer do we want our senior citizens to be hauled into court as if they were common criminals. This can and may happen under the legislation. We believe that this so-called income test is just as irritating and severe as poison ivy, and whether or not it is scented it will be just as troublesome and even more so. We have taken the attitude over the past three years since the old age security payments were raised that during that time the cost of living and rents have increased so rapidly that strikes have taken place all across this land. In the last year wage increases have been as high as 30 per cent, and two thirds of our senior citizens were in difficulty through no fault of their own.

In 1951 the gross national product amounted to $21 billion. In 1966 the gross national product is approximately two and a half times that figure. It is our opinion that since it was felt in 1951 that the figure of $40 was fair and equitable we can assume that old age pensions should be raised now by two and a half times which would bring them up to $100 a month. We feel that our senior citizens are entitled to share in the growth of this country and that since they have contributed to that growth they should be entitled to a pension of $100 a month as a matter of right.

We feel that this pension is a necessity since the cost of food alone has gone up 10 per cent in the last year and rents have gone up as much as 20 per cent and in some cases more. Taxes have gone up. In the last three years there has been an 11 per cent sales tax and a provincial sales tax of 5 per cent. Last night we were told that taxes would be increased by another $290 million. This increase will hit hardest the person on fixed income, the pensioner. In my opinion it will increase the demands on the Canada Assistance Plan.

I have another criticism to make. I believe that the cost of administration of the program will run close to $10 million. I also feel that there will be a great deal of duplication of services. Let us take the case of a pensioner who receives $105 a month and for whom this amount is not sufficient. In such a case the Canada Assistance Plan will come into play. In other words, the person who requires $125 a month will have an investigator inquiring into his income up to $105 a month and another group of federal civil servants checking on the remaining amount. This is the duplication to which I referred which will increase the costs tremendously. These pensioners will have two groups of investigators riding on their backs.

Mr. Munro: As the hon. member mentioned, there may be areas in this country where people may need $125 a month. Would he recommend a flat increase in the old age security pension which would bring it up to $125 a month?

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Rynard: I made myself perfectly plain. I recommended up to $100 a month without a means test, and I will give my reasons later.

Mr. Munro: What about those who need $125?

Mr. Rynard: I have come to the conclusion that the hon. gentleman does not realize what the Canada Assistance Plan is about.

Mr. Munro: Does the hon. member not object to some type of needs test under the Canada Assistance Plan?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for Simcoe East wish to accept a question?

Mr. Grafftey: You are going back to the 19th century; you are embarrassed and you know it.

Mr. Rynard: Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but let me recapitulate that the senior citizens of this country who qualify for both the supplement and assistance will find themselves with two groups of civil servants, one at the federal level and one at the provincial level, on their backs. This is unnecessary duplication and we will get into a morass of legislative difficulty.

We are opposed to this bill, Mr. Speaker. What happens to pensioners at age 65 as far as medicare is concerned if they get this $30 a month? In the province of Ontario one month's increase, $30, will be taken away, so instead of receiving $30 for each of the 12 months they will lose one month's increase.

Let me go a little further and ask what becomes of the man who finds himself in a home, either in the province of Ontario or any other province? He will find the province deducting another $30, so he will be short two months' increase. I go even further and ask what becomes of this new income tax payment for which they are liable, and what about their hospitalization? The $30 a month which we are so magnanimously granting them will be whittled down and they will only receive nine months' payments if they are lucky. These are some of the reasons we in this party cannot agree to accept this bill. It is a bad measure.

Last night in the house the Minister of Finance added another 1 per cent to the sales tax. So in effect a 2 per cent tax is being imposed at retail level upon the people least able to pay it. This is why we oppose the bill. It is true we brought in two amendments and that the major part of one was recognized, resulting in stopping the interdepartmental snooping envisaged by the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of National Revenue. We felt this was a terrific abrogation of people's rights. The minister straightened this out, at least part of the way, and we thank him for that crumb.

We are also grateful that some further consideration was given married couples, one of whom is over 65. If we are forced into the position of denying senior citizens eligibility for this increase and make them accept a makeshift loaf, then in the very near future the minister will find himself amidst a forest of legislative tangles from which he will find it hard it extricate himself without destroying the whole thing. It is just a jungle, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre put it.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we are opposed to the bill because in 1975 the $30 a month will be withdrawn, and with the erosion presently taking place under this government the value of the $75 pension will have fallen to about $55.

Mr. Fulton: Maybe $40.

Mr. Rynard: Maybe $40, as the hon. member for Kamloops suggests. The only provision the government has built into this legislation is a 2 per cent erosion. But last year alone there was a 10 per cent increase in the cost of food and a 10 to 20 per cent increase in rents. So you do not need much imagination to figure out what the $75 pension will be worth by 1975.

What are the thousands of Canadians across the land who will receive no benefit from the Canada Pension Plan going to do with a pension that will have decreased in buying value to say $50 or, as the hon. member for Kamloops suggested, perhaps $40? What in the world will become of them? Are we going to increase the legislative tangle in an effort to look after these people? In my opinion this legislation is so full of loopholes that I believe that in five years it will have to be drastically changed or we will have to dispense with it entirely and bring in a new bill. I suppose that in the final analysis we are placed in the philosophical position of either giving the pensioners half a loaf or no bread, in view of the fact that the government is continuing to be stubborn by applying a means test. We in this party have shown that we appreciate fully the plight of our senior citizens.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the third reading stage of the bill is the stage when the members of the House of Commons stand eyeball to eyeball with the bill, with its principles and with its provisions. I was not sure from the comments of the hon. member who has just taken his seat whether his confrontation with the bill would lead him to support it or to oppose it on a vote.

Rarely, Mr. Speaker, has legislation before this house produced such chameleon and contradictory comments from hon. gentlemen opposite. On the one hand, the program is condemned as iniquitous and parsimonious, an attempt to legislate guaranteed annual poverty. Yet in the next breath we are urged to extend the program into perpetuity and to apply its provisions without qualification to Canadian pensioners residing in 60 different countries.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, with all the hand wringing and haranguing, hon. members opposite have failed to meet or to overcome the crucial and central advantage of the guaranteed income approach, which is that it does more than any alternative proposal for those older people who are most in need of additional income, those who are now trying to get by on the $75 a month old age security cheque.

Mr. McCleave: Could I ask the minister a question. Who wrote his speech?

Mr. MacEachen: I would be happy to give a speech without a text if the hon. member insists.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Hon. members opposite, especially the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Alkenbrack), painted a compelling picture of those older persons who have only $75 to get by on each month. The hon. member said that the poor senior citizen who now receives a pension of $75 a month must reveal all of his private affairs to the government before he can receive any supplementary amount up to $30 a month. I simply remind the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox that the people he describes—

Mr. McCleave: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the minister is even more short-sighted than we are accustomed to his being in this house. In the second place, he appears to be reading from a printed text, which is not permitted by the rules of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McCleave: Let those opposite sigh and bleat like sheep, but I am raising a point of order. If the minister has anything to say out of his heart or his mind, he should be able to say it without a printed text. I am merely invoking the rule which has been invoked in the house for a long time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It appears that the minister is following his notes very closely but we shall probably find that as he proceeds he will be able to depart from the text.

Mr. MacEachen: I assure the hon. member that I do have notes and that I intend to extend them a great deal, if only for the purpose of satisfying the petty attitude of the senior member from Halifax.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: It would be much more appreciated if the minister would shorten them.

Mr. MacEachen: I will make my comments as brief as the situation requires but I would remind hon. gentlemen opposite that they occupied four days on second reading of this bill, five days in committee, and on third reading, which has just commenced, they have engaged in a series of destructive comments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: I rise on a point of order. The opposition has made a concession to the government by agreeing that the third reading of this bill may be considered this evening. We did not do so in order that the minister might get up and make a political speech as he is doing now and as he did on another occasion when the opposition allowed him extra time beyond the limit allowed even to a minister. If he persists in doing this we shall continue the debate on third reading for the balance of the evening and tomorrow. He will either have to change his mind and co-operate or this is what we will do. The minister has to give consideration to this point if he wants the bill to go through tonight.

Mr. MacEachen: That is not a point of order. I propose to answer the comments which have been made about this legislation and it is the responsibility of the opposition if they wish to pass it or not.

Mr. Starr: You have said it.

Mr. MacEachen: I will not be blackmailed into curtailing my comments by the remarks of the opposition house leader.

Mr. Starr: You will never get it through tonight.

Mr. MacEachen: I made no request to the official opposition at any time that they should shorten their comments on this bill at any stage. I have waited and I have listened to their comments and I expect members of the opposition to do the same for me. If they wish to hold up the passage of this bill, that is their responsibility.

Mr. McCleave: That is fine.

Mr. MacEachen: I repeat what I said earlier. By using the guaranteed annual income approach we are able to put an additional $30 million a year or more into the hands of the 500,000 to 600,000 older Canadians whose only declarable income is the $75 a month old age security benefit. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) attempted to get round this point by raising his party's flat-rate ante to $105 a month. But I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this auctionary manoeuvre on the part of the N.D.P. in no way changes the basic question of policy, which is whether any additional amounts available for old age pensioners should be distributed among the low-income groups or whether they should be diluted over the entire band of old age security recipients. Merely to escalate the amount of the flat-rate increase does not effectively resolve this basic policy question.

The government has carefully examined all aspects of this question and has decided that the amount of money available at the present time can best be deployed through an income guarantee program. The question raised by the N.D.P. is simply this: shall we tax wage earners more in order to pay flat-rate pensions of $105 a month in perpetuity to those who really do not need them? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre accepts an affirmative answer to this basic question.

But let us examine his solution for a moment. First of all, a flat-rate pension of $105 per month will not put an additional penny into the pockets of those 500,000 to 600,000 whose sole source of income is now the $75 a month old age security. It may mean extra dollars for some of those 300,000 Canadians who will be eligible for partial benefits under the guaranteed annual income approach. But by far the greater portion of the additional $170 million which would be required to finance the N.D.P. proposal would go to those in higher income brackets, above the guaranteed income limits set out in this legislation. In other words, of the additional $170 million which the N.D.P. proposal would cost, close to 60 per cent of it would go to the 25 per cent of the people in higher income brackets. This would mean, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and his colleagues would impose additional taxes on Canadian wage earners to put extra money into the pockets of a relatively small number of retired persons in the higher income brackets.

The supreme irony of this proposal is that it would transfer tax moneys from present wage earners, many of them supporting young families, to those whose income in many cases would be higher than the incomes of those workers who would be financing those additional benefits through taxes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that this indeed is a curious argument coming from a corner of the house which has so carefully and assiduously cultivated its image as the Holy Grail among the workers of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: I ask hon. members who have participated in this debate and who have argued against this proposal, should we as responsible legislators tax wage earners of this country to give pensions to people whose incomes are greater even than those from whom taxes are collected? That is the basic policy question that has not been answered by any criticism coming from the other side of the house. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and his colleagues have given their answer to this policy question by their amendment. The answer of the government is embodied in this bill, and I am quite prepared to accept the judgment of the Canadian people on this particular approach—

Mr. Knowles: So are we.

Mr. MacEachen: —because I think the majority of the taxpayers of Canada and the people of Canada will regard this approach as a responsible and realistic approach.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sherman: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. MacEachen: I would be glad to answer any questions after I have completed my remarks. I have been asked to be as short as possible and I will answer questions when I have completed my remarks.

Mr. Churchill: You will have all day tomorrow.

Mr. MacEachen: Hon. gentlemen opposite, especially the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and the hon. lady from Vancouver-Kingsway, have been eager to put their correspondence from old age pensioners on the record, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has constantly referred to the fact that he has scores of letters from old age pensioners who are saying in a united chorus that the approach the government is taking is wrong. Well, that is their correspondence. I have had correspondence from old age pensioners and I would like to read a paragraph from one of the letters because it underlines the point that I have been making up to this moment. The first sentence is flattering but I do not read it for that purpose.

My wife and I send you our congratulations on your personal perseverance in presenting . . . the increase of $30 a month. As my wife and I are in our 70 year bracket and (get) $150 for us both, I can tell you it has been hard sledding, but the fact that neither of us smoke or drink was a big factor in getting along.

Referring to this legislation, the writer says:

This, in my mind, is the only legislation where the poor gets more and the rich gets nothing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: "Where the poor gets more and the rich gets nothing" is the defence for the approach that the government is taking, the approach that no hon. member has tackled on its merits in the course of this debate. I say it is important that the government and Candian society maintain some equilibrium, some equity between our responsibilities to the taxpayers and our responsibilities to the older people, and I repeat again that the guaranteed income approach provided for in this legislation achieves the most judicious and realistic balance between these important responsibilities.

As I noted earlier, Mr. Speaker, and I put it on the record again, in 1967 this program will cost taxpayers approximately $100 million less than the least costly of the alternatives put forward by members of the opposition. Yet despite that feature of this legislation, because taxes are being raised to finance it, the tax raising process has been bitterly denounced by hon. members this very evening. This variation in the cost will increase as time goes on, as more and more Canadians become eligible for higher and higher benefits under the Canada and Quebec pension plans. Indeed, by 1970 the cost of the guaranteed income supplement will be almost $200 million less than the flat-rate increase advocated by members of the official opposition.

Hon. members opposite have criticized this proposal because it is a transitional program and, notwithstanding its inadequacies, they have urged that the program not be transitional but that it be applied in perpetuity, that it be made to apply forever. All I can say in reply to that argument is that the government accepts the recommendation made to it by the joint Senate and House of Commons committee.

That committee, of which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was a most vocal and active member, recommended that some additional form of income maintenance be made available to those persons who, because of age, could not benefit in full or could benefit only in part from the Quebec and Canada pension plans, and the purpose of this legislation is to put into effect the recommendation of that joint committee with respect to this specific identifiable group.

Mr. Knowles: That was not the only recommendation.

Mr. MacEachen: Well, this is the recommendation that is being put into effect by the legislation before us tonight.

Mr. Knowles: But you ignored the other one, which was more important.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there is one other point that I would like to cover in some detail, and it is the subject matter of the amendment that is now before the house on the third reading of the bill. This is the question of the income criteria used to determine the level of benefits under this program.

Hon. members opposite have done, in the word of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron), their disingenuous best to distort this feature of the program and to spread what I regard as false fears among the older people of Canada. The hollowness and the hypocrisy of the amendment that the house is now asked to deal with—and I repeat the word "hypocrisy"—are clearly exposed when one compares the comments of the N.D.P. in December with those of last June.

I have already placed on the record the statements made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), and it might be appropriate to remind the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre of the summertime romance that the deputy leader of the N.D.P. carried on with the guaranteed income approach. This is what he said in reply to a question I put to him, and I asked him the question because I had in mind this very point, this very amendment, when we were considering the Canada Assistance Plan. I asked him, "How do you find out the income", and he replied:

> Obviously, if you have an income maintenance program you have got to find out what income a person has . . . I am sure the minister knows that as well as I do.

Of course we know that, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) might suggest that we would get this income information by some process of extra-terrestrial perception, as he calls it, but this is an uncertain method to derive the income information we require for this program. In this legislation we are carrying out precisely the recommendations of the Senate special committee on aging, proposals which were energetically and enthusiastically endorsed by the leader of the N.D.P., by the deputy leader, and by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). We are putting into effect the proposals made by the Senate committee on aging which the N.D.P. endorsed in June. But this is December. This is what the Senate committee said:

• (9:20 p.m.)

> The establishment of an income guarantee program to provide allowances throughout life to all persons, beginning at age 65, on the following lines:
> (c) that the procedure call for the completion of a simplified income form annually and that the amount by which the declared income falls short of the established minima in any year constitute the benefit of the year following.

That is the recommendation of the Senate committee on aging. The next point is that there be sample checks periodically to catch abuses but no means or needs test inquiries on traditional lines. That is precisely what we are doing in this legislation. We are carrying out the recommendation of the Senate committee. I should like to remind the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) that this is a report which has been endorsed by some of the leading luminaries of his party such as a former cabinet minister, a former minister who served with him in the former government, the party's one-time national organizer and a one-time adviser emeritus from the home territory of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. Do the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and his colleagues suggest that these venerable and respected followers of the Conservative party are snooper-lovers as he has suggested in respect of this bill, legislation which follows the Senate committee's recommendation? I wager that when this bill gets to the other place none of these Conservative gentlemen who served on this committee will have a word to say in opposition to these proposals.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has stated: When we are using the Senate recommendation, the proposals endorsed by the deputy leader of the New Democratic Party, we do so because we do not trust the old age pensioners.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I did not say a word about what the minister has just mentioned.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, at page 11,065 of Hansard the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is reported as having said:

> He—

Referring to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

> —obviously does not trust the old age pensioners.

Mr. Churchill: What does that have to do with the report of the committee?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, I said nothing about the report of the Senate and House of Commons committee. That is what we were talking about.

Mr. MacEachen: I quite agree. I am just saying that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has stated that we do not trust the old age pensioners.

Mr. Churchill: That is right, and I repeat it.

Mr. MacEachen: Of course we do not accept such a view nor the view expressed by the hon. member, for example, for Prince Edward-Lennox who said:

> There will be many instances of unrecorded income . . . people are not dumb; they will not always report everything.

We do not accept that view. We believe that most of the old age pensioners will report their incomes and that the check that will be made in the manner in which it was described yesterday will be effective, will be humane, and will respect the dignity of the Canadian old age pensioner. The purpose of this amendment is to strike out, to reconsider the income test in respect of this legislation. We regard it as an important feature of the legislation and in putting it in the bill we are taking into account the recommendation of the Senate committee on aging.

The senior member for Halifax talked about the need for checking fraud in cases where it might take place. He suggested that neighbours could be asked to inform on pensioners. Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McCleave: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I never suggested that neighbours might be asked to check on fraud. I said that under the legislation presented by the minister neighbours would be encouraged to inform in respect of fraud. There is a definite difference between those two points.

Mr. MacEachen: The words of the hon. member, as reported at page 11,270 of Hansard, are as follows:

If somebody is going to set out to defraud the taxpayers a check could be made in other ways. Perhaps neighbours would tell on him—

Mr. McCleave: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. MacEachen: Those are the words of the hon. member for Halifax. Mr. Speaker, that really would be snooping; it would establish an underground army of super-duper snoopers. I cannot understand what the great fuss is all about. People are asked to fill out income tax forms accurately and to the best of their ability, and most of them do. Pensioners will be asked to fill out declaration forms to the best of their knowledge and most of them will. Undoubtedly mistakes will appear when declarations are cross-checked and I venture to say that on occasion the correction of these mistakes will work to the benefit of the applicant.

There are no penalties for those who make mistakes. Pensioners who fill out their forms accurately and to the best of their knowledge have nothing to fear. Mr. Speaker, I do not have very much more to say, except that I should like to remind—

Mr. Starr: You have said too much already. You have ruined everything.

Mr. MacEachen: I should like to remind the house of the words spoken by the hon. member for York South, who unfortunately and regrettably is not present to hear my comments. He had some rather pungent comments to make in an earlier debate about public disillusionment with parliament. He traced this cynicism and disillusionment to the callous way in which promises made at election time are disregarded, ignored and betrayed. Maybe that is a source of cynism, but if there is cynicism there are other reasons for it. The hon. member for York South himself suggests there are other reasons. One of them is the wide discrepancy between how members in the opposition talk and how they vote in this House of Commons.

I cannot match the hon. member for York South in making sermonettes in this house or in delivering judgments on mere mortals from his Olympian heights, but I venture to suggest that members do nothing to foster faith in the institution of parliament when they take a totally destructive line in respect of legislation and then turn around and vote for that very same legislation.

I have already put on the record what the hon. member for York South and his colleagues had to say last June about the guaranteed income approach. Now, simply because the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre refuses to be switched on to mid-twentieth century thinking, they have performed a graceless, mass philosophical flip-flop. The summertime romance has ended in a December divorce court simply because the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre cannot forget that committee of 1951.

Mr. Knowles: That is right. Its principle still stands.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: He cannot forget it, and he convinced his leader, his deputy leader and the member for Vancouver-Kingsway that what they said in June was incorrect, and they performed a graceless and mass flip-flop in the period from June to December.

I suggest that members of this house who have termed the provisions of this legislation "iniquitous", as did the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. More), "a guaranteed pittance", as did the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), "petty in mind and petty in heart", as did the hon. member for York South, "guaranteed annual poverty", as did the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, "a sham, a hollow mockery", as did the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), "inherently wrong", as did the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, "wrong and unjust", as did the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, and "a retrograde step", as did the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, should be expected to be prepared to follow through and accept the responsibility of voting against this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, this type of behaviour cannot help but erode parliament's image. There is only one word to describe it and that word is "hypocrisy" or if you want a word more in keeping with the season and the tone of the opposition's epithets to me, that word is "humbug".

Hon. gentlemen have raised the "Dickens" in connection with this program and have attempted to give "Scrooge" a new currency. One is tempted to explore this area even further, and, if one does one must conclude that this house is fairly filled with Dickensian characters.

The 'umble and unctious Uriah Heep? He is reincarnated at least several times in the diagonally opposite corner to my right. When considering Mr. Gradgrind of Nicholas Nickleby, ladling out specious knowledge and soupy sustenance to his cringing charges, one does not have to look beyond the front benches of the official opposition to see where and how Mr. Gradgrind lives on. While the possibilities are limitless, I will not develop them further except to say this: one thing about Scrooge, pre-ghost and post-ghost, and he was a very unpleasant person, was that he had one outstanding quality. He was a person of conviction by word and by deed. Perhaps the N.D.P. might learn something from that characteristic.

At the end of my comments let me say that almost every speech made by members of the opposition has contained provocative and destructive statements about this measure with which I cannot agree. Let me remind the hon. member for Oshawa, who spoke earlier—

Mr. Starr: Ontario.

Mr. MacEachen: I was referring to the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) and I apologize for that mistake. It is my duty to reply to the criticisms which have been made in respect of this bill, but before we vote on the amendment to third reading of the bill let me say that we spent a whole day debating the resolution preceding the bill, four days on second reading and this is the fifth day on committee and third reading. We now have an amendment before us that the bill be sent back to committee for reconsideration. This bill has been considered fully in committee of the whole and its provisions have been studied thoroughly. The very purpose of this amendment has been fulfilled by discussion on amendments already proposed.

Last Friday the hon. member for Ontario suggested that we could complete the committee stage of the bill in half an hour or an hour. All I can say is that up to that time and since criticism has been levelled and every possible amendment has been moved. There could be no benefit from acceptance of this amendment to send the bill back for further study. It is time we came to a decision for the sake of Canada's old age pensioners. The house should know that for every additional day spent on this legislation our old age pensioners must wait another day for income support.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a question. He referred to the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre regarding the flat-rate increase. I gather from what he said that he feels such an increase would become inequitable for people in the higher income brackets rather than those in the lower income brackets. I am wondering where the inconsistency is between an approach to pensions on this level and an approach to pensions on the basic level. Do not the same mathematics and the same ethics apply to granting a pension on a universal basis on all levels?

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has made a point. There is a consistency between establishing a floor, which the $75 per month represents, as a matter of universal application, and further income support on the basis of income levels. I do not think they are necessarily inconsistent but I am not arguing that point strongly. I am suggesting that there is a difference in approach in deciding to spend a given sum of money among the whole income spectrum or deciding to weight it in respect of the lower income groups. This is the point I am making. I think they are different approaches.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps fortunate that not very often one finds oneself in the position of having of necessity to discuss a measure of this importance and deal with such a partisan diatribe as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) has just delivered.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: I say it is fortunate that one does not find oneself in that position of necessity very often, but the minister has placed us in that position tonight because he has given not one argument or answer to the merits of the proposals made on this side of the house or the amendment now before us on third reading. About all the minister has done is pose. Pose, I say, and I say it deliberately. It is a pose that ill befits him as a friend of the old age pensioners, because he is not. He is their enemy.

We hear about the Christmas spirit. In this bill, whether the minister likes it or not—and I know it is not deliberate on the part of the hon. gentleman—he is not serving the best interests of the old age pensioner. We hear a great deal about Scrooge. I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare must have observed well what his colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) said last night. This minister had a good lesson in Scroogeship last night. We hear about other Dickensian characters. We had before us in the speech given by the Minister of National Health and Welfare a perfect illustration of another children's rhyme. I refer to the rhyme about Little Jack Horner. You remember that Little Jack Horner sat in a corner, eating his Christmas pie, and he stuck in his thumb and pulled out a plum and said, "What a good boy am I". And all the good Liberals applauded him as he said, "What a good boy am I". But he pulled out a plum only for this government; he pulled out no plums for the old age pensioners.

The minister spoke a great deal about hyprocrisy. At the conclusion of his speech he accused those on this side of the house of hypocrisy, and he used the word "humbug." He said, "How can those who used these words", which he placed on the record, "to describe this legislation follow a course, if they are sincere, other than to vote against it?" I tell the minister that the word "humbug" ill comes from him and his government who have adopted in connection with this legislation the most hypocritical attitude of any government in the history of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: We recently passed, against a good deal of opposition and constructive criticism, a measure to implement medicare. With regard to medicare the government clutched to their bosom the principle of universality. These social measures, they said, had to be universally applicable and anyone who opposed the principle of medicare was opposing the best interests of the country. That was the attitude of the minister, who now pretends to be disinterested in this discussion. He looks up to the gallery where sit the officials of the Liberal party who provided him with his partisan speech.

The attitude of the minister with regard to medicare was that everything must be universal. This is the minister who repudiates that principle when he brings in a measure which he says is designed to assist the old age pensioners of Canada. Now it must be carefully selective, and selective on the basis of snooping. The minister's officials will determine who is qualified to receive this benefit. We are going to be selective on the basis of the government's say-so. If there was ever an example of hypocrisy, it was revealed in the reversal of this government from their stand on medicare to their stand on the old age pension legislation. It is a complete and typical illustration of hypocrisy.

I say to the minister that we are not going to be frightened by his ranting and roaring. We shall vote on the amendment to third reading moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—

Mr. Nielsen: Next week.

Mr. Fulton: —next week, or whenever it comes up for a vote. We will take our stand on it. We are not afraid to take our stand. We are not going to be bamboozled by this loudmouthed minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: We shall also take our stand on the vote on third reading. Little Jack Horner may have put in his thumb and pulled out a plum for himself, but he has pulled out a very small plum for the old people of Canada. They will understand perfectly well that after fighting as best we can to get this wretched bill improved, and having all our amendments rejected by the minister, it remains almost as bad a measure as it was when he first introduced it. But it still gives the old people a small plum, a plum which the government is trying to make a big plum for itself, and we would rather see the old people of Canada get a small plum than nothing at all. That is about all they are going to get—small plums from this government. There is no inconsistency, shame or hypocrisy on our part in voting reluctantly on third reading for this inadequate, pitiful, miserable measure in order that whatever may be derived in benefit therefrom may be secured for the old people of Canada. That does not prevent our criticizing and exposing the weakness and hypocrisy of the government's stand.

The minister opened his remarks tonight with some extraordinary words. He said that on third reading the house stands eyeball to eyeball with the bill. They are rather odd words for a minister introducing a pet project. It reminds me of nothing more than a myopic individual who cannot see the print that is before him because he has left off his spectacles. So the minister stands eyeball to eyeball with his bill, the victim of the dictates of the Minister of Finance and the reactionary wing of the Liberal cabinet, and because he cannot see the weaknesses of his bill he keeps it close to his face and defends it. Eyeball to eyeball, indeed. The minister does not dare stand eyeball to eyeball with the old age pensioners of Canada.

The minister describes the criticism of the bill, in language of personal affront, as having been hand-wringing and haranguing. Seldom have I listened to more roaring and ranting than was indulged in by the Minister of National Health and Welfare this evening. He read us some letters.

Mr. MacEachen: One letter.

Mr. Fulton: He read a carefully selected expression from one letter he has received.

Mr. Churchill: He wrote it himself.

Mr. Fulton: In that letter appeared the phrase that this is the only legislation where "the poor gets more and the rich gets nothing." The minister said that is a characteristic description of this legislation. What about last night's budget? Are the poor getting more and the rich getting nothing? Who is going to pay the one per cent increase in sales tax? The minister, with tears in his eyes, tells us he is trying to help the old age pensioner. The person who has nothing but his old age pension to live on will have to pay. What about the 2 per cent increase in the cost of living because of the budget introduced last night by the minister's colleague? What about that for hypocrisy? The poor will not only have to pay the cost of this proposal but they will be subject to the greatest extension of snooping by super-duper snoopers in the history of this country. Their affairs will be pried into; their confidential returns will be exposed to the gaze of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and possibly to the courts in the course of prosecution.

[Mr. Fulton.]

What about the number of questions in connection with the legislation to which answers have not been provided? What about old age pensioners in the province of Quebec? Not once have we had an answer from the government on that very important question. We still have some time left on third reading and I hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will direct his attention to some of the real problems in connection with the legislation instead of skirting around the edges as he has done in the debate so far, because these are not hypothetical questions.

I now address my remarks to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) because the Minister of National Health and Welfare could not be less interested in the discussion of his own bill.

What about the position of the old age pensioner who is a taxpayer in Quebec? Notice was served upon us that the government of Quebec intends to take over the administration of the old age pension system in that province. Let me ask the Minister of Labour, who is a responsible and serious-minded minister although his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not, what will be the position of the taxpayer in Quebec when the government moves into the field of old age pensions because a tax measure was imposed by the Minister of Finance of Canada?

Has the government addressed its mind to this question? The Minister of Labour is silent, which shows that obviously it has not. The Minister of Transport is silent and so are the Ministers of National Defence and of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Not one of these great wizards opposite has thought about the implications of the measure which they are presenting to the House of Commons. Will they give us an answer? Their silence is an eloquent tribute to the lack of thought on the part of the government.

What about a bill which penalizes the principle of thrift? The Minister of National Health and Welfare talks glibly about a guaranteed income program, but what does it mean? Has he defined it? Has he said anything which will convince us otherwise than that it may mean in many cases a concession to mediocrity because it penalizes thrift?

There are many people in need of a guaranteed and stabilized income, but why should those who have observed the principles of thrift, of self-reliance and of storing for a rainy day be penalized and deprived of this increase while many who took no such precaution and paid no attention to these principles which the minister espouses by lip service will benefit? Why should those who in days gone by followed the time-honoured injunction of laying up a store for themselves be penalized?

In the measure that is before us on third reading and in the speech which the minister made to the house tonight we find complete and absolute support of the statements made by Mr. Peter Newman, a friend of the Liberal government. In today's Toronto Star there appears an analysis of last night's budget speech. Mr. Newman has frequently exposed the cynicism of this government, a cynicism exemplified in the attitude of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, a minister who talks about cynicism displayed by the difference in attitude of people who talk one way and vote another.

What about the cynicism exemplified in the conduct of this government which promised medicare by July 1, 1967 and then turned around and said, "You will not have it until July 1, 1968"? What about the cynicism of the Minister of National Health and Welfare who, above all others, identified himself with the program of medicare to be put into effect on July 1, 1967 and then supinely stood up and supported the proposition that we could not have it until July 1, 1968? What about the cynicism of the government which, having decided to postpone medicare until 1968, then brought the measure before the house in advance of the old age pension legislation and now has the hypocrisy to say, "If you talk about old age pensions at this stage you will be depriving the old people of Canada of their much needed benefits"? Who deprived them of those benefits? It is the government who put the medicare plan which it decided would not be effective until 1968 ahead of old age pensions and then had the effrontery to try to bluff and blackmail parliament by saying, "If you do not pass medicare tonight you will be the ones who will be denying the old people their much-needed assistance".

In this attitude we can see exemplified perfectly that which Mr. Newman said about the budget last night. I have here some choice quotations illustrating the victory of the right wing reactionary section of the Liberal cabinet, the cabinet which refuses to answer any questions regarding the implications of this pensions bill. Here is what Mr. Newman said as reported in today's Toronto Star:

> The message was unmistakable: Under Mr. Sharp's stewardship, there will be no more social welfare benefits, unless they're directly tied into an equivalent tax increase. This will be true, whether or not the government actually needs the extra revenues.

What does the Minister of National Health and Welfare say to that? Little Jack Horner is so pleased with himself that all he does is congratulate himself on his own speech.

Then Mr. Newman goes on to say:

> After a decade of carefree spending, this amounts to a brand new budgeting approach. It casts the tone of government finances back to the pre-election budget of 1957, when Walter Harris, the then finance minister had a budgetary surplus of $258 million, but for what he considered to be sound economic reasons, paid out only $100 million in additional welfare payments.

We used to talk about "six buck Harris". Now we apparently have "thirty buck needs test MacEachen".

Mr. Newman goes on to say:

> In his budget, Mitchell Sharp moves even further toward fiscal orthodoxy, by pegging not only the amount but the exact timing of the new benefits to the collection of the new taxes.

We understand that the increase in pension cheques will not be effective until March or possibly April of next year. Might one not ask the following question? Why then do we need a budget harming the very old age pensioners whom we are supposed to benefit on January 1st of this year? Why should they be paying extra taxes for three months before they get any benefits? Can the minister answer that? Can the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development answer that question? Can the Minister of National Defence answer that, or is he supremely indifferent? Can either the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Labour answer that? I also see the Solicitor General, the Minister of Industry and the Minister of National Health and Welfare. They are all here but none of them is sufficiently interested to answer the very important question of why old age pensioners who will not receive any benefits until March or April should start paying the taxes in January of next year.

This is an example of the solicitude of this government for the old age pensioners whom they are supposed to be helping. We have not heard from them one word of explanation. Again their silence gives assent to the criticism that is made.

I will give another quotation from Mr. Newman's analysis of the Sharp budget.

There are one or two other passages which I think should be placed on the record because they are very appropriate in this context. He wrote:

> Not the least of this budget's many implications is that wage earners can expect a sharp boost in their tax liabilities when the government's medicare scheme goes into operation, 19 months from now.

So the principle is pretty clearly established. It does not matter what the increase in the gross national product is and the increase in the revenues of the government resulting from the increase in the gross national product. It does not matter about that. The old people of this country, those who need the benefit of increased social security payments, are going to have to pay every last dollar it costs. This is a government which says that it is going to soak the rich to pay the poor—a government that increases sales tax by 1 per cent.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Again, Mr. Newman says:

> This deliberately grey, neutral budget confirms the fact that the Pearson government has completed its cycle of welfare legislation, and that from now on the administration's legislative initiatives will be in other directions. It may have been this realization which has reportedly pushed Walter Gordon, Mr. Sharp's predecessor, to take the final step and sever his last remaining ties with the Liberal party.

More significant and more dramatic for the Minister of National Health and Welfare is this concluding paragraph:

> But the Sharp budget, as it stands, confirms a drastic alteration in the style of the Pearson government. The period of progressive experimentation has ended, and the era of meticulous orthodoxy has begun.

What an interesting and sorry conversion we have seen over the past two or three weeks while this house has been discussing welfare measures. On the one hand, we have seen the spectacle of the reluctant but complete conversion of the Minister of National Health and Welfare from a rather attractive era within which he experimented, within which he wedded himself to forward-looking and progressive policies and identified himself with the needs and interests of those who need help, to the tame, lame and partisan recital of the financial orthodoxy dictated by the Minister of Finance on the other hand.

In this house, sir, perhaps we may have some sympathy for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As members of parliament we can understand the pressures which have been brought to bear upon him. But as members of parliament concerned about the welfare of Canadians, particularly older Canadians who need help, as members of parliament concerned with the maintenance of the principle of self-reliance and self-sufficiency, and as members of parliament concerned to oppose measures which will penalize those who have subscribed to those principles, we can have nothing but condemnation for the retrogressive and backward step taken by this minister under pressure from his cabinet colleagues.

As members of parliament concerned about the general economic climate and the welfare of Canadians, we can also have nothing but condemnation for a government which so cynically reverses itself. Here I refer once more to the minister's criticism of the hon. member for York South. This is a government which promised universality, which pledged and wedded itself to this principle in connection with medicare on the one hand, but which reverses itself and adheres to careful selectivity determined by departmental officials in connection with old age pensions on the other hand.

How dare this government and this spokesman criticize anybody for hypocrisy when the government made such a complete reversal itself. This is a government which pledged itself to introduce a far-reaching social welfare measure by July 1, 1967 but which reverses itself and said it will not come into effect until July 1, 1968. How dare this government have such effrontery to criticize anybody in this house and allege hypocrisy. How dare the minister, speaking on behalf of a government that has played so fast and loose with every principle of sincerity, which has made the most far-reaching and extravagant election promises but fallen so far short of their implementation, criticize anyone in this parliament for the exposure of the weaknesses of this bill.

These are the questions in the minds of members on this side of the house, Mr. Speaker, as they examine the details of this legislation. What has the minister said? Having tried our level best to improve this legislation, being rebuffed on almost every occasion by the government majority, now faced with a bad bill but admittedly a bill that does a little something, he now accuses us of hypocrisy if we do not vote against the bill.

The minister shakes his head now, but carried away by his own eloquence and pomposity that is what he did say. This is typical of the whole sorry, shameful and shoddy performance of this government in connection with this bill as well as the other social welfare measures it has brought before the house.

What is the reaction of the people in this country, Mr. Speaker? I bring as witness a paper from the minister's own province, the Halifax Chronicle-Herald which carried an article about this bill the heading of which is "Many Pensioners To Pay Income Tax For First Time".

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Fulton: Does the minister deny that that is the effect of his own legislation?

Mr. MacEachen: I do not deny it because one of the effects of the legislation is to bring people into the class in which they do pay income tax.

Mr. Fulton: In other words, you give with the one hand and take away with the other.

Mr. Crouse: Ebenezer exposed.

Mr. Fulton: My colleague has characterized the minister better than I can, but I still think he is a little Jack Horner sitting in a corner, putting in his thumb and pulling out a plum for the government. That is my primary concern.

This is the article carried by the Chronicle-Herald for December 20:

> The introduction of a supplementary $30 a month in the old age pension for recipients on limited income will push many thousands of pensioners into the income tax paying bracket for the first time.

Again:

> But persons of 68 and 69 years who receive the maximum pension next year will be required to pay taxes.

These are facts the pensioners should know about.

> In the case of the average single taxpayer with no other source of earned income the levy will be on $160, after allowing for the standard $1,000 exemption plus $100 for medical expenses.
> For maried couples who are both in the 68-69 age group, and with no other source of earned income the levy will be on $420, after allowing for $2,000 exemption plus the $100 for medical expenses.

So we see, sir, the kind of effect that this government's so-called generosity toward the old age pensioners is going to have upon those whom they allege they are trying to help.

One could go on to expose the weakness of the legislation, but I think it has been sufficiently analysed in the debate in committee. The analysis we have had of the bill there, plus the example of the minister's speech on third reading tonight, has in my view been enough to convince this house and the country that it is a bad bill, that there is nothing to be said for it except that it is partisan hypocrisy on the part of the minister. No amount of bluffing on his part will persuade us to alter our position on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Reluctantly, when that is disposed of and the minister's dictatorial attitude is finally forced upon the house, we shall have no alternative but to vote for the bill. This is not because it is a good measure but because little Jack Horner has given the old age pensioners a small plum, a small and mean Christmas fare. Nevertheless it is a contribution, small and mean though it is, of which it would ill behoove us to deprive the old people of Canada who desperately need not just this but a little more besides.

Mr. Nicholson: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question and a supplementary question? First of all, has the hon. member for Kamloops read the new section 7 set out in the bill as part of clause 3? If he has read that clause, does he not agree that the guaranteed income payments become effective on January 1, 1967, not in March, 1967 as he suggested earlier?

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Fulton: I did not say a word about a guaranteed income. My remarks had to do with the cheques which would reflect the increase in pensions. Is the Minister of Labour telling us that the cheques reflecting the increase will go out on January 1?

Mr. Nicholson: No, but I understand that payments will be retroactive to January 1. I say this in view of the earlier observation by the hon. member that there should not be legislation to collect taxes on January 1 when the cheques will not be paid until March 1.

Mr. Fulton: Why should a tax be placed in advance on the very old age pensioners who will benefit from it? What is the justification?

Mr. Nicholson: It is easy to answer that question. The payment will be retroactive to January 1.

Mr. Fulton: Let us be clear about this. This is the first time it is clear.

An hon. Member: It is in the bill.

Mr. Fulton: Is the minister telling us something the Minister of National Health and Welfare would not tell us? I am asking for an interpretation. Will the payments be made on January 1?

Mr. Nicholson: The minister is telling you that payments will be made as provided under new section 7 in the bill, and I do not think you need to be a lawyer to interpret that provision.

Mr. Fulton: This obviously means that the increases will not be received until March or April but the recipients will be taxed on January 1.

Mr. Chrétien: Is the hon. member serious when he says that the government will give with one hand and take with the other, when the sales tax increase is one per cent and an old age pensioner will receive $360 a year more and in order to pay that back to the government, with the new one per cent sales tax, will be obliged to spend $36,000?

Mr. Fulton: My point is this. We believe that those who need help should not be taxed in order to pay for that help. If hon. members opposite were sincere in their applause of the statement of the Minister of Finance last night and of the Minister of National Health and Welfare this evening when he said, cynically and hypocritically, that this is the only measure from which the poor will get more and the rich wil get nothing, why do they tax the poor by imposing a tax on the articles which the aged people will have to buy? And what will the hon. member do about the people of his province of Quebec when they are subjected to double taxation?

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member is supposed to know that it is not possible to do things in that way.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me it is an exercise in futility for the two hon. members who are indulging in this exchange to try to convince each other. They have made up their minds and are not listening any more. They do not want to be confused with the facts.

We in this party are keenly interested in getting the increase to the senior citizens of this country as quickly as possible and I suggest that the most expeditious way of doing so is by voting against the amendment and for third reading of the bill and doing it soon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Olson: I am really surprised that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) should move an amendment of this kind at the present stage.

An hon. Member: Pure hypocrisy.

Mr. Olson: We know that over the years he has tried to create an image of himself as the champion of the senior citizens whether they are recipients of old age security benefits or the recipients of civil service pensions.

Mr. Byrne: As long as they have a vote.

Mr. Olson: He is also one of the most experienced and knowledgeable members of the house with regard to the rules of procedure. Of all members, with the possible exception of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), he ought to know that the effect of passing the amendment which he has proposed would be to kill the bill. He knows this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: He knows it perfectly well, but he cannot desist.

Mr. Knowles: Does the hon. member not know from his own experience of procedure that there is a difference between an amendment of this kind on second reading and an amendment of this kind on third reading? He is applying a second reading argument to a third reading situation.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre knows very well that the effect of carrying the amendment he has proposed would be to refer the bill back to the committee of the whole, the committee which considered it after second reading. He also knows very well that in committee of the whole he or any other member on this side of the house is prevented from moving the kind of amendment he has put forward. Nevertheless, as I was about to say, neither he nor the other members of his party can resist the temptation to try to make a little political hay at the expense of the old age pensioners even though they know very well that what they are asking cannot be done by them.

Let me give an illustration which will add more weight to what I am saying. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre tried to move an amendment in committee of the whole, the committee to which he now wishes to have this bill referred. As reported on page 11255 of Hansard he said:

Therefore, in order to give the minister an opportunity once again to consider removing the test and making this $30 increase an across the board improvement in the pension, I move:

"That clause 3 of Bill C-251 be amended by deleting from subsection 1 of the new section 8 being enacted thereby, the words "minus one dollar for each two full dollars of his monthly base income, being one-twelfth of his income for the preceding year", as found in lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 3 of the bill.

Then he used these words:

So as to be clear, if this amendment is accepted it would remove the test and make the $30 increase in 1967, and the 40 per cent of whatever the basic pension is after that, across the board without the kind of means test or income test that is presently in the bill.

That is exactly what he is seeking to do in the amendment before us. He knows very well what the result was. If we turn to page 11256 we find that the Chairman ruled the amendment out of order. If he was ruled out of order in committee of the whole when he tried to do this previously, then surely if we are to be consistent in our rules he would be ruled out of order again. As recorded at page 11256 of Hansard for December 16, the Chairman, after listening to argument as to the propriety of the amendment, gave his ruling as follows:

• (10:20 p.m.)

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre reads as follows—

I shall not take the trouble to read the amendment again. The Chairman continued:

This amendment too has received the careful attention of the Chairman, and it is the opinion of the Chair that if the amendment were adopted it would have some very far-reaching effects. Indeed, one of the effects of this amendment would be to repeal the latter part of the resolution adopted by the house on December 5. It would eliminate the supplementary nature of the payments envisaged by the bill, and would substitute therefor a fixed and certain payment of 40 per cent of this pension payable to recipients under the Old Age Security Act.

The Chairman went on to explain the other reasons why the amendment was out of order, and then he said:

I recognize that this is the third amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I regret that on this particular occasion I will have to spoil his batting average by declaring the amendment out of order.

How can the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre come before the house now and expect hon. members to believe that he has any better chance of having this amendment accepted if the bill is now referred back to the committee than he had on December 16 when he tried to move the other amendment? He knows this is nothing more nor less than a waste of time.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Olson: Certainly.

Mr. Knowles: Does he not think it would have some bearing on the situation if a majority of the house voted for this amendment? Would that not give a guide line to the committee, to which it would have to pay some attention, if he would only vote with us?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows better than I do that there is only one person who is competent to move an amendment which involves an additional charge on the treasury, and that is a member of the treasury board or of the cabinet. The hon. member has heard the minister explain that he is not prepared to accept that kind of amendment. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is a great waste of time. It represents the kind of political tactics we have seen in the house from time to time where some members are not interested in reaching a practical solution and finding some way of doing something effective. All they are interested in is holding up, invoking all the rules of procedure and wasting time hoping they will gain some kind of political advantage. I think it is wrong to use the senior citizens of this country as a political football.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to repeat what I said at the outset. The mover and all other members on this side of the house who intend to vote for this amendment know very well that the effect of doing so is not going to add one iota to the benefit of the old age pensioners. It is going to waste time, and I suggest that they set this political boxing aside for the time being and get on as rapidly as possible to do something positive and effective for the senior citizens of our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, tonight we have added a new phrase to the English language. We have had Santa's little helper and now, thanks to the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), we have Scrooge's little helper because he, sir, is trying to exculpate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) from a purely—I have used the word "purely" but I prefer to withdraw it and substitute "impurely"—political speech that he made earlier this evening. I would like to place on the record the fact that not one member of the cabinet on the front benches on the other side applauded the speech of the minister while he was trying his best to talk out this measure tonight. I suppose any hon. member could call it ten o'clock but I do not intend to do so. I simply want to throw back at the minister all the mistakes he has made in trying to bring this measure before us for third and final reading.

He has tried to twist any word of criticism that has been uttered against this measure, and there have been many. There has been criticism of snooperism, criticism of bureaucratism, criticism of the easy way out by a government that fears that somehow, somewhere, some person of 70 years of age is going to take $2.20 out of the treasury of Canada to which he is not entitled. That person is to have the whole establishment of government come down on him. He is to have the R.C.M.P. march upon him, he is to have the Department of National Revenue march upon him, he is to have the Department of National Health and Welfare march upon him, and he may be subjected to any type of malicious letter, signed or not, which can be brought against him. None the less, witting or unwittingly—and I would not like to think a fellow Nova Scotian would take an unwitting approach in a case like this—this is exactly what will happen.

We in the opposition are castigated and categorized because we simply want to bring some small element of common sense into the supplement to old age benefits. The minister has been given a chance to be one of two Scrooges. He can be the Scrooge that was or the Scrooge that would be, and our society has not dealt very kindly with the Scrooge that would be.

We have taken the abject, loathsome figure, hard on his employees, hard on society in general, and depicted that figure as the Scrooge. Yet there was the latter Scrooge, the one who was motivated by Christian kindness, by the spirit of Christmas, who wanted to do something better for his employee and for the world around him. This is the chance we have given the minister from the word go on this particular bill. But in response to our rather kindly offer of metamorphosis he has chosen to take the speeches made by those in the official opposition and in the N.D.P. and has twisted them and attacked them, as he did earlier with respect to my efforts, the efforts of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and others. This, sir, is no way to accomplish legislation on behalf of the old age pensioners of Canada.

We have gone through Bill C-251 clause by clause and have tried to make it a little less harsh, a little more humanitarian and understanding. Our purpose on this side, once we got past the great battle of a means test or no means test, was simply to make the legislation work to the benefit of the aged. I do not think anybody should really quarrel with that, no more than anybody should quarrel with what the minister originally started out to do before he began to play partisan politics.

We have been met with ridicule and abuse from the other side. That surely is not justified. We are not here, if I can turn a phrase back on myself, as Scrooge-like people. We are here to do our duty for the constituents whom I, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and other members in the house represent. Surely it is uncalled for for the minister to ascribe motives to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) or to other members of the official opposition, to members of the unofficial opposition or to those few members in the corner who rarely are heard except to sing out praises for the government. We have taken the attitude that surely nothing should require the great resources of government to be used against the simple resources of the individual citizen of Canada.

What is wrong with that approach? If we are going to haul somebody into court and say to him that somehow he has received a couple of miserable dollars out of the treasury of Canada more than he is entitled to, why should we throw the whole of the weight of a government department against that lone individual? We have made a partial correction in respect of income tax returns. Why should we use the full weight of the state, why should we use the police and other people, including the minister's 500 or so permanent new additions to his staff and whatever others he may add?

An hon. Member: Investigators.

Mr. McCleave: Yes, investigators. Why should we place the crushing weight of all these people against somebody who probably quite innocently has managed to get two or three dollars or $36 or $40 extra a year out of the Dominion of Canada? Yet that is what the minister in his zeal, in his endeavour to push his legislation through, has in mind. We are asked to use the whole strength of society, the stringent means of the police and the bureaucratic establishment against people such as these.

I believe we are making a reasonable plea to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the government. In fairness I must say that some of our pleas have been met but others have not been. We make the plea that the minister try to ameliorate the legislation in some small way so that receiving the old age pension supplement will not be a disgrace to the citizen and so that it will not put him in the position where he must crawl. He should not be placed in the position that if he has received a penny more than he is entitled to some fearsome apparatus will descend on him and squeeze him like people in the middle ages were squeezed in iron maidens and the like.

We have simply endeavoured to bring some element of common sense to the situation. I think we have tried to say that government is big enough in Canada today and that if some citizen somewhere has figured out some way to get a few dollars more, that person is entitled to it. To bring into play the whole impact and intent of this legislation is, as I said earlier in the debate, similar to using nuclear bombs to crush mosquitoes.

Until tonight I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare did very well, but when he made that fierce speech directed partly to the official opposition and partly to the New Democratic Party I think he was preaching for a call. Heaven only knows where he thought he was being called to.

An hon. Member: He is not going to get there.

Mr. McCleave: He is not going to get there tonight, as someone has kindly pointed out. The fact is that the front bench, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer), and a few other ministers here when the Minister of National Health and Welfare was preaching for a call, refused to respond to the siren song of a man who was going nowhere with his speech.

I suggest that we have gone through a great deal of debate in this house to provide these old age pension supplements. I say that we have settled the main issue, that is, whether it should or should not be on the basis of a means test. Admittedly, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has his amendment before the house. I for one intend to vote for it because I believe in what has been said during these days of debate. We do not need partisan speeches. If I am giving one, and I am sure I am, then I am doing so because the Minister of National Health and Welfare provoked me to the point where I felt I should rise to my feet. Otherwise I would have remained silent. That is a courtesy which we Nova Scotians owe each other. Once having disposed of this issue, then let us get on, pass the measure and do what we can to help the old age security pensioners.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McCleave: Aware as I am that this amendment will go down to defeat, I know that the bill will pass with the amendment made and that this legislation will come back to haunt all parliamentarians. There are people in this country who simply cannot understand what we have been up to for the last couple of days. When it is their turn to receive these benefits, when they realize the mill they will have to go through in order to receive these benefits, when they realize that when they fill in these forms people will descend upon them and say that they are not entitled to this or that, when they see the police descend upon them, then they are going to vent their wrath upon this parliament, and it will be a justified wrath.

• (10:40 p.m.)

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) is quite capable of making an eloquent and constructive contribution to the debates of this house when he is talking about something on which he is knowledgeable and, indeed, I thought he was doing that this afternoon during the debate on the transport bill. However, the hon. member does from time to time lapse into a narrow procedural argument in an attempt to justify the unjustifiable. At such times he becomes less eloquent and less logical with every word he utters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Barnett: Since he has raised this narrow procedural question in reference to the amendment moved earlier by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), one should take a moment or two to deal with the matter.

The hon. member was obviously confusing the amendment before us with an amendment during second reading stage of a bill. Apparently he forgot we are now at the third reading stage, or he does not realize there is a difference between a vote in the committee of the whole and a vote in this house. I do not profess to be a procedural expert, but I have been around long enough to understand perfectly well what the purpose of this amendment is. I have listened to the hon. member for Medicine Hat at times when I thought he did know something about the rules, and I am sure he understands perfectly well the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. Olson: Would the hon. member permit a question? Can he tell us whether he understands perfectly well what the effect of this amendment will be?

Mr. Barnett: That is exactly the point I had in mind. The effect of the passage of this amendment, and perhaps it would pass if the hon. member for Medicine Hat would vote for it, would be to force the government when we return to committee of the whole to take some action in accordance with the terms of the amendment.

Mr. Olson: Has that ever happened in this house?

Mr. Barnett: Perhaps not, but it could happen a first time, and it would be more likely to happen during this parliament that any other of which I have been a member. In falling back on this narrow procedural argument the hon. member for Medicine Hat and his colleagues are passing up a great opportunity to do a real service to the senior citizens of Canada. The passage of this amendment would place before the government a clear choice. Either get off the treasury benches and let someone occupy them who can bring in good legislation or vote for the amendment, go back into committee of the whole and immediately bring in a proper amendment to the bill according to the wish expressed by this house.

The proposition put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is simple and clearcut, and I am sure the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) understands it even though the hon. member for Medicine Hat may not. I really do not want to take up too much time in respect to the procedural argument because I think what is involved in the substance of the amendment is much more important.

In reference to what the government has proposed let me say that I felt that the minister's speech was one of the most pitiful spectacles I have seen in this house. The minister, understandably goaded by some of the discussion which took place in the committee, admittedly fairly extensive, made a reply during the third reading stage in respect of the amendment now before us. As he continued he slowely fired his own imagination with his own eloquence. He must have sensed that his colleagues sitting behind him needed some kind of lift as a result of the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) last night. In response to the urge to create an element of enthusiasm within his own party he went on and on and referred to remarks by the hon. members for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) and York South (Mr. Lewis) in another debate in an attempt to suggest there were inconsistencies between those remarks and the proposition put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in this amendment.

When the minister came to the conclusion of his statement we heard a round of applause from backbenchers on the government side such as we have not heard for a long time. When the applause subsided the minister was reduced to the confusion of a trembling jellyfish by one question. If I recall correctly the question was posed by the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Sherman). That hon. member suggested that as the minister's speech progressed it had become more and more apparent there was an inconsistency in his argument. His question was whether the minister by arguing in the way he did was introducing legislation to abolish the present $75 old age security pension. That was the only logic to the minister's speech.

Far from accusing the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre of being inconsistent and not being able to get beyond the ideas of the 1951 committee, the minister ought to take a quick look at the logic of his own point of view. Perhaps one of these days we will reach a stage of development in this country through technology and technocracy where we can have a guaranteed basic income for all citizens of our community which will make irrelevant questions regarding basic and minimum levels of income for senior citizens. That time has not arrived, and probably it will not arrive with the kind of government we now have.

• (10:50 p.m.)

It is complete and utter nonsense for the Minister of National Health and Welfare to stand up in this house and suggest that the statement made by the leader of my party regarding the bill now before us has no basis in foundation or logic. If the minister wishes to follow the concept of old age security on a universal basis without a means test as established by the committee in 1951, let him stand up in this house and say so. Let him not waffle arund with the meagre provisions of the bill he has brought in.

As to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, it should be apparent not only from its terms but from what the hon. member said when introducing it that this is the central issue on which he is seeking to focus the attention of the house at this time. We all know that the substance of this amendment if carried would in effect increase the universal old age pension, without a means test, from $75 a month to $105 a month.

Mr. Langlois (Chicoutimi): Where would you get the $100 million more?

Mr. Barnett: We can argue about what is an appropriate level but the fact that the amendment has been proposed from this quarter of the house indicates that we believe this would be an appropriate level. If the minister wants to think we are turning and twisting in this respect, I suggest that he look at his own face in the mirror and decide who is doing that, because we are standing foursquare behind the amendment and the basic concept now in the Old Age Security Act.

We say that this basic concept should be maintained and enhanced because it is necessary in this country in the foreseeable future. This is the issue involved in the amendment. This is why we are asking support from hon. members in all parts of the house. The house by its vote can give clear instruction to the government on its desires and wishes. We would expect that even this government would then act upon the clearcut view expressed by parliament assembled, as we now are, with the Speaker in the chair.

One can brush aside the specious and narrow procedural argument advanced by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson). If the members of his party are interested in the welfare of the older people of this country, as he said they were, they would support this amendment. I am sure the hon. member for Medicine Hat would agree with me. I have cleared up the procedural misconception that he obviously had when he spoke earlier.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If it is the wish of the house, I am prepared to make a ruling on the admissibility of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the motion that Bill No. C-251 be now read a third time, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre moved:

> That Bill C-251 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house for the purpose of reconsidering the income test provided in clause 3 thereof.

In considering amendments to a bill on third reading three considerations at least must be taken into account. First, does the amendment offend against the resolution preceding the money bill? Second, does the amendment contradict the principle agreed to when the bill was adopted on second reading? Third, does the amendment include matters that are not contained within the bill itself?

There can be no doubt about the intent of the amendment now before the house. If it were to have any real and practical effect it would indeed offend against the resolution which preceded the bill, it would be contrary to the principle adopted on second reading, and it would introduce a matter different from that contained in the bill. But the Chair is concerned too about the wording of the amendment. First, the amendment recommits the bill to the committee of the whole. It is not out of order to recommit a bill. May I read citation 415 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, paragraph (2), page 287:

> Bills may be recommitted a number of times with or without limitation;—

Having considered the fact that a bill may be recommitted. I would say to the house that, whatever the intent of the amendment may be, the purpose as expressed in the amendment is to "reconsider" the income test provided in clause 3. To reconsider a bill in committee of the whole may not be out of order under certain circumstances, although in this particular case I would have very grave doubts that any practical change could result from such reconsideration.

However, in view of the wording of the amendment and having weighed in my own mind both sides of the question, I propose to rule the amendment in order, and I do so now.

And the Clerk proceeding to announce the result of the vote:

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand that in the course of the vote it was not ascertained definitely whether Mr. Drury voted for the yeas or the nays.

Mr. Drury: Yeas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: I hope, Mr. Speaker, that it is recorded that he voted for the yeas.

Mr. Speaker: It will be so recorded. Did I understand that the minister votes "yea"?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Speaker. Nay, nay.

Mr. Hellyer: Yea, he voted nay.

An hon. Member: Give him another chance.

And the result of the vote having been announced:

Mr. McCleave: I am sure I was paired with the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Jamieson).

Mr. Pennell: I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Sherman: I was paired with the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Andras). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Habel: I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, before the motion for third reading is agreed to, I would like to move an amendment concerning the fiscal compensation for any province deciding to occupy the field of old age security itself.

Several members have asked the minister and the government to express their opinion on the matter. The minister did not answer the question; he is probably in favour. At all events, I want to move this amendment without resuming the debate, since I expressed my opinion this afternoon. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Chapleau, Mr. Laprise:

That Bill No. C-251 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house for the purpose of reconsidering the advisability, while being of the opinion that the necessary steps be taken to ensure to senior Canadian citizens an adequate pension, that no legislation providing for a service of old age security in Canada would be sufficient, unless providing for a system of fiscal compensation for any province wishing to establish its autonomous old age security program.

An hon. Member: The amendment is not in order.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members will have surmised, there is some question in the mind of the Chair at the moment whether this amendment is acceptable. I do not propose to rule on it without inviting hon. members to express their opinions on the procedural aspect of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Sherbrooke, though I might say that I have serious reservations about it.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I am prepared to make a ruling now.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I would refer hon. members to May, seventeenth edition, at page 571, and perhaps more particularly to Beauchesne, fourth edition, at page 288, citation 418. It will be found from these citations that the proposition advanced by the hon. member is beyond the scope of the bill and is actually not included in the principle of the bill.

• (11:30 p.m.)

Hon. members know that there is an essential difference between amendments which may be moved on second reading and amendments moved on third reading. The scope of amendments on third reading is much more limited than on second reading, and this is borne out by citation 418 in Beauchesne's fourth edition. I do not think it is necessary for me to read it for hon. members, and if they consult it I am sure they will agree with the Chair that the amendment cannot be accepted at the present time.

[Translation]

For those reasons, I must rule that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Sherbrooke is out of order.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the main motion. Mr. MacEachen, seconded by Mr. Pickersgill, moves that Bill C-251, an act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be now read the third time. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Mr. Fulton: You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that they are voting against their own bill.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. MacEachen) which was agreed to on the following division:

Messrs:

Allard—1.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

• (11:40 p.m.)

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted for the bill.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a point of order in connection with the vote. I should ask that the record of the vote be read but on account of the lateness of the hour I do not intend to do that. However, I should like to reserve the right to raise a point of order tomorrow after I have seen the record of the vote in Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a point of order to raise, I suggest he should do so now.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I believe the point of order which I wish to bring to the attention of the house is a rather important one. I hesitate, however, to take the time of the house at this late hour. It is in connection with a principle which I consider to be very important, namely, that when hon. members rise to challenge Mr. Speaker's interpretation of the sense of the house they automatically are declaring themselves to be in the group which Mr. Speaker has determined to be the minority. Therefore those members who rose tonight to call for a formal vote should have their names recorded with those who voted against the measure.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a very important point to me. If one refers to clause 48, I believe, of the British North America Act it will be seen there that questions in the House of Commons are decided by the voice of the house. I am quite familiar with rule 9, I believe it is, in our rules which states that five members may rise and therefore require that a vote be recorded. I suggest that that rule is deficient. If you refer to rule 1, where there is no precedent for this sort of thing in our rules, and refer to the rules and customs as they exist in the British House of Commons, you will find, of course, Mr. Speaker, that although the system of taking a recorded vote is different there than it is in our House of Commons, there is one principle which is an obvious one. It is that when Mr. Speaker estimates whether the yeas or nays have it, it is only those whom Mr. Speaker has deemed to be the minority who have the right to call a recorded vote, because the voice of the house is what decides whether a matter is carried or not and the recording of the vote is only to determine the voice of the house when it is nearly even or when it is not clear that the Speaker is not in error.

I should have liked to do this tomorrow when I will know what the vote has been. In order to save time I refrain now from asking that the vote be read by the clerk, which I believe is my right in circumstances of this sort. It is clear, however, that under our rules, upon a division the yeas and nays shall not be entered upon the minutes unless demanded by five members. But it implies that these five members are members who are challenging your decision and therefore they are in the group which Mr. Speaker has declared to be the minority. There are many references to this in the British rules. For example, Mr. Speaker, in respect of the British House of Commons May's Parliamentary Practice, sixteenth edition, has this to say:

> In the Commons the Speaker takes the sense of the house by desiring that "As many as are of that opinion say, 'Aye,'" and "As many as are of the contrary opinion say, 'No'".

Then it goes on to say that members cannot give one voice when the yeas and nays are called and then vote contrary to that. There are many references to this in British practice and in the British rules which make it quite clear that votes which are recorded can have no other effect than to do again what has been done by the voice vote and which has been declared by the Speaker as carried or not carried as the case may be. Our practice is a frivolous waste of time of the house because it can have no effect. I am perfectly aware of the fact that this practice has gone on in this House of Commons for many years but I believe it is a practice which originated in an error and that this error has been compounded by references to errors in the past.

The situation is such, Mr. Speaker, that if the respect for this House of Commons is to be raised in this country we should start by eliminating frivolous procedures which have no effect on the passage of legislation in the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): There are many cases, Mr. Speaker, with which you are familiar—although this is a slightly different point or a development of the point—which establish that in the British House of Commons the Speaker has the power to declare that the recording of a vote would be frivolous if only a small number of members stand. There are many cases, for example, where the Speaker so declares.

Finally, to make this brief at this late hour I would refer you, sir, to the third edition of Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure at page 500 where we find this statement:

> In the commons the yeas and nays can be taken only in conformity with the following rule:—83. "Upon a division, the yeas and nays shall not be entered on the minutes, unless demanded by five members".

That is the old rule which is still in existence but which I think can be regarded as being deficient. The note at the bottom of the page has this to say:

> • (11:50 p.m.)
> It has often been suggested that it is advisable to adopt the English practice, by which a member who calls out with the noes and forces a division should vote with the noes on the obvious principle that it is for the minority alone to appeal from the Speaker's decision to the ultimate test of a division.

This is a principle which is long overdue for adoption in this House of Commons. I do not expect you to rule on this matter at the moment, Mr. Speaker, but I would respectfully suggest that you would do a great service to Canadian parliamentary life if you made this your centennial project.

The footnote of this precedent continues as follows:

> But such a practice has never obtained in the Canadian House, and whilst attention has been frequently directed to its propriety, no Speaker has ever attempted to enforce it.

I think the time has come when that should be done.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Even at this late hour I feel I should be given an opportunity to rule on the very interesting and important point raised by the hon. member for Queens. I can assure the hon. member I have taken this into serious consideration. In many ways his point is academic because he knows, as intimated by his remarks, that at least to some extent we are faced with a standing order which is part of our Canadian rules and governs the practice of this house. That standing order is to the effect that on a division the yeas and nays shall not be entered unless demanded by five members. Standing order No. 9 states that if five members rise there shall be a division.

As hon. members appreciate, it is rather difficult for the Chair to decide whether the five members rising are among those who said "Yea" or "Nay". Perhaps what the member is suggesting is that Chair at the moment should ask the five members whether they were among those who said "Yea" or "Nay".

The hon. member suggested that this should be the Chair's centennial project, which is perhaps a good idea, but I would suggest that it should be the centennial project of the House of Commons. Hon. members know that the Chair under similar circumstances is bound by precedents. Conveniently it has been brought to the attention of the Chair that in recent years there have been a number of instances on which a division has been held where not one objecting voice was heard. There was one on Thursday, July 24, 1958, one on Monday, September 14, 1958, one on March 4, 1959, one on June 4, 1959, one on June 9, 1959, one on March 7, 1960, and one on August 1, 1960. I could go on enumerating them to hon. members—

Old Age Security Act Amendment

Mr. Starr: Would you do so for the record, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I am not suggesting to hon. members that this is the procedure we should follow but—

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, would you kindly continue to record these occasions so we will have a complete record?

Mr. Speaker: I wish I could do that but I can only read from the incomplete record given to the Chair.

Mr. Starr: Did that record stop in 1960?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Knowles: It was done on the Family Allowances Act in 1944.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members know that going back to 1867 this has been the situation in the house. If ever there was a Speaker who wanted to take it upon himself to change 100 years of practice in the Canadian House of Commons—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please? If there ever was a Speaker who wanted to change a practice which has existed in the House of Commons for 100 years it is not this Speaker. I can only inform hon. members that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Queens is an interesting and practical one. It may be that the time of the house should not be taken up by the calling of divisions when it is known in advance what the result will be, but certainly it is not for the Chair to make such a decision, and certainly it is not for the Chair to interpret standing order No. 9 in any other way than it has been interpreted over the years.

Suggestions have been made during the last week that a committee should be set up to study changes in the rules of the House of Commons. I suggest to hon. members who may be members of that committee that this is one rule which should be given consideration with a view to eliminating the possibility of votes being held when the result is known in advance. Such a situation took place this evening. I thank the hon. member for Queens for his suggestion which I know will be taken under consideration by hon. members of this house who will be named as members of that committee to study possible changes.

In view of 100 years of practice I do not think I should change these rules at midnight today or tomorrow, and therefore I must rule against the hon. member for Queens.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. Had I been allowed to vote I would not have added to the confusion of the recorded vote.

[Translation]

Mr. J. A. Habel (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Athabaska; otherwise, I would have voted for the motion.

[English]

Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, it being after eleven-thirty, the hour at which we agreed to adjourn, I suggest we do so.

Mr. McIlraith: We agreed to adjourn when the three bills had been put through.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS AUTHORIZING GUARANTEES TO BANKS, AGREEMENTS WITH FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS, ETC.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-253, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time? Now, or at the next sitting of the house?

Mr. Knowles: By leave, now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Winters moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

RESEARCH

PROVISION FOR GRANTS TO CORPORATIONS FOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-252, to provide general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and development in Canada and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert: No, Mr. Speaker. In the circumstances, and regardless of the hour, there is no particular reason to gallop. In this case the minister, on behalf of the government, is coming before the house with a rather lengthy bill and the house is entitled to a full explanation. Therefore we now call on the minister to make a statement. We are not going to have any more of this nonsense. The jokes are over for tonight.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, no one is more pleased than I am at being given the opportunity, in spite of the lateness of the hour, to say a few words in support of this bill in which I heartily believe. The purpose of the bill is to provide a new and more effective incentive for research and development in Canadian industry to replace the incentive presently provided by section 72A of the Income Tax Act. This tax incentive is due to expire at the end of the 1966 taxation year.

The impact of science and technology on our economy is reflected in the flow of new products, in more efficient production techniques, in improved services of all kinds, and above all in a steadily rising standard of living. The intensive application of science to industry has also introduced a new and potent force in economic and commercial affairs. With our relatively "open" economy and the progressive reduction of trade barriers throughout the world, Canadian industry will be faced with more intense competition at home and abroad; and that competition is not merely a contest of price. More and more it is becoming a battle of invention and innovation in which scientific superiority and technical excellence are major weapons.

For Canada, the attainment of the desired rate of economic growth will depend to a greater extent than ever before on the expansion of an efficient manufacturing industry: This in turn will necessitate more effective exploitation of new technology. Therefore we must look to research and development to spark the process of industrial expansion and economic growth for the future.

The basic principle underlying the proposed legislation is that economic progress stems from increased productivity which derives in large measure from new and improved technology. Systematic and sustained investment in research and development by industry is no less important to competitive survival than capital investment in new plant. New technology affords wider opprotunities for investment and generates greater productivity, and thus provides the seed for the long-term expansion of firms, industries and nations.

Looking at the structure of our over-all scientific activity we find that industry performed only 36 per cent of the national total as contrasted with 63 per cent for Britain and 74 per cent in the United States. This anomaly in allocation of effort would indicate that insufficient emphasis is being placed on the practical exploitation of science and technology.

This comparison of industrial research activity in other countries demonstrates the necessity for a major expansion in the current level of innovation activity in Canadian industry. On analysis it would appear that a target almost three times the current figure is required to bring Canada more nearly into line with comparable industrialized countries. The attainment of this target within a reasonable period of time would require a virtual doubling of the previous long-term growth rate for industrial research and development.

This then, Mr. Speaker, is the task we face: to create a favourable climate for industrial innovation so as to ensure the rapid and effective exploitation of scientific and technological advances for the benefit of Canada and Canadians. Obviousy, a "quantum jump" in industrial research and development of the magnitude I have suggested requires special efforts on the part of government and industry alike. The general incentive for industrial research and development proposed in this bill will be one of the key measures for implementing government policy in this regard.

We are proposing that the cornerstone of our various programs for stimulating technical innovation should be a general incentive for increased research and development freely available to all companies carrying on business in Canada for the performance in Canada of bona fide scientific research and development likely to benefit Canada. Our primary objective here is to introduce advanced technology and the associated skills into industry where they can be directly exploited for economic ends. To be effective, such an incentive must cover the broad spectrum of innovation activity from basic research to engineering development with the selection and direction of projects being the responsibility of the entrepreneur. Participation in the program is to be open to all taxable companies incorporated in Canada without discrimination as to type or class of industry, size, ownership or profitability.

Since 1962 the Income Tax Act has provided an incentive for this purpose whereby companies have been able to deduct from their income an additional allowance of 50 per cent of the amount by which their expenditures on scientific research exceeded their total expenditures for this purpose in the 1961 base year. In the intervening years, this incentive appears to have had a beneficial effect on industrial research expenditures generally, the most marked improvement being in the area of capital expenditures. However, a number of problems and shortcomings in its operation have become apparent which is evidenced by the fact that in 1963 only 265 out of a total of some 600 firms performing research and development were able to claim benefits under the additional allowance. The proposed legislation is designed to overcome these deficiencies.

In the first place, the use of the income tax laws as a vehicle for subsidizing research and development effort is essentially discriminatory since eligibility depends on the firm's tax position. Under these circumstances, many small or growing firms which are not yet in a profit-making position, but which perhaps have the greater need for research and development assistance, are excluded. Hence, in order to broaden the availability of the general incentive and in the interests of equity, it is proposed to remove it from the Income Tax Act and to provide a system of statutory grants, or credits against tax liabilities if firms so choose, for which all firms could qualify. Further, unlike a tax allowance, the cost of a grant system is readily apparent and can be accounted for to parliament in the same way as other expenditures.

Under section 72A of the Income Tax Act, operating and capital expenditures were combined for the purpose of establishing the base and for calculating the additional allowance. Since capital expenditures fluctuate widely from year to year, this provision presented a serious handicap to those firms who had made major expenditures in the 1961 base year.

In our view, all capital expenditures for new facilities or equipment represent a prima facie expansion in the research capabilities of a firm and therefore should qualify fully for the bonus without regard to any base. Accordingly, we are proposing to treat capital expenditures separately from operating expenditures for the purpose of the new incentive.

With regard to operating expenditures, the incremental feature is being retained, since the primary objective of the incentive is to produce a major expansion of research and development activity. To retain the effectiveness of the incentive and at the same time to improve its suitability for a program which is expected to continue for some years, a moving average base rather than a fixed base will be employed. Further, with regard to the determination of eligible research and development for the purpose of this incentive we are proposing to adopt a broader definition to emphasize eligibility and to bring the definition into line with the accepted international usage.

Finally, the responsibility for administering this new incentive program will be placed in the Department of Industry which has been charged by parliament with the responsibility for promoting the growth, efficiency and improvement of Canadian industry.

The government is convinced that a substantial increase in the level of industrial research and development is essential if Canadian industry is to accelerate its productivity and grow both in scope and size. The legislation envisaged by the bill before us will make a major contribution to the achievement of this goal.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, there is a question which I should like to put to the minister. I understand that there is some agreement with respect to expediting the passage of certain measures today and I am the last person to suggest that we should depart from an understanding. I regret that I had not understood the implications of the apparent understanding. To my mind this is an extremely important and far-reaching measure and I think it is a mistake to try to pass it at a quarter past 12 four days before Christmas when obviously we are not going to have the kind of discussion which the measure merits. I think that there should be, and there may well be, some discussion going on among the house leaders. I hope I will not be accused of a breach of understanding if I suggest that we should certainly go no further than second reading tonight and be afforded an opportunity to discuss this measure further in committee after Christmas. I say this because it is a very important and potentially far-reaching measure.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think that a number of hon. members are here as a result of the understanding which had been reached among the house leaders. I may point out that one of the reasons for the understanding reached is that the present income tax incentive legislation under section 72A of the Income Tax Act is, as I mentioned in my earlier remarks, due to expire at the end of the current 1966 taxation year. I think that no one in the house would wish a gap or hiatus to be left in which there might be uncertainty as to what the future holds in this very important field. I suggest that perhaps the house would prefer to proceed with this measure which, I agree with the hon. member, is important. I would also suggest that it is necessary that we pass the bill before the end of the current year.

Mr. Fulton: I realize that the calendar year expires on December 31st but I had the impression that the taxation year ends on March 31st. Is that not so?

Mr. Drury: Although I am not giving a legal opinion, the government's fiscal year ends March 31. It is normal for most corporations to have their taxation year coincide with the calendar year.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the minister. Has he made any calculations as to the amount of money that may be involved in the grants proposed under the bill?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, it is assumed that initially the grants will be roughly the same as those now claimed as deductions under the Income Tax Act because the legislation does provide statutory grants to corporations which are not in a profit position. If the hon. gentleman would like an estimate of the amounts in the past years, I would be glad to provide it.

Mr. Lewis: I think it would be interesting to know, Mr. Speaker. I do not blame the minister for not having the information, but it would be useful to have on record the amount of money which is involved.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, on this point I think the minister is obliged to provide the house with an estimate of the cost of the legislation which has been brought in if it does not coincide with the amount which was written off income tax in the past. In addition, the government is under obligation to give an estimate of the total cost of the legislation which is proposed.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that this legislation is what one might call enabling legislation. The amount to be provided to meet these grants, as in other instances, is normally provided through the Appropriation Acts.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I say first of all that I find it extraordinary that the minister was hoping that this legislation would go through after midnight. I can do nothing more than endorse most vehemently and with all the energy I have the remarks made by the hon. member for Kamloops. This is a 15-page bill. It contains measures which I am sure have more than baffled the minister in their complexity because these are very complex income tax provisions. This house has not had this legislation for any great length of time. The bill was given first reading on December 6. I find it a somewhat lame excuse for the minister to come forward at this late date and say that we must pass it before the end of the year. I would say that if this is important legislation then, to put it crudely, this is a hell of a way of running the shop because this legislation should have been before the house long ago.

I am sure the minister will appreciate the fact that members of this house should be afforded the opportunity of studying the legislation unless they are to sit here as mute cattle and not say anything. Opportunity should be given to the opposition to examine the legislation in detail. The minister knows that when his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), comes forward with income tax provisions he always affords the house the opportunity of detailed study. Detailed examination of this measure should be undertaken by the bodies which may be affected, namely, the manufacturers' associations and some of the research bodies which might be interested in this type of provision. However laudable may be the government's objective in putting forward the legislation, the very complexity of such provisions may defeat their objective.

Although I must say that I have not been able to give the bill the fine tooth comb treatment I can see already that there are some great lacunae in it. First of all, the definition which has been given to "corporation" will mean that most industries will not benefit from such research in Canada because their operations in Canada are carried on either by divisions of foreign companies or by foreign companies merely registered in Canada. The definition in clause 2 completely eliminates such corporations, unless the minister can tell me otherwise. Forgive me if I make a direct reference to the clause.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We cannot hear the hon. member. It seems to me that the loud-speaker system is not working; we do not understand anything.

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) could perhaps move to another place.

Mr. Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe): If the hon. member would speak louder, we could perhaps hear him.

Mr. Lambert: If the hon. member would like me to speak French, it would take me twice as much time.

Mr. Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe): Your microphone is shut, the system is not working.

Mr. Lambert: I regret that the loud-speaker system is not working; I will therefore speak a little louder.

[English]

I will just have to speak a little louder, Mr. Speaker. Clause 2, subclause (f) says:

"Corporation" means a corporation incorporated in and carying on business in Canada, other than a corporation that is exempt from tax under Part I of the Income Tax Act by section 62 of that act;

Perhaps the minister can tell us which corporations are exempt from tax under the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, these are charitable and other non-profit corporations, in case the hon. gentleman does not know.

Mr. Lambert: I thank the minister for the information but he will see the point I am driving at. In many industries of this country which have very extensive operations the operating units in Canada are not necessarily incorporated in Canada. I should like an opinion from the minister—he can seek one from the law officers of the crown—whether a foreign incorporated company that is registered to do business under any of the provincial companies acts would qualify under this bill for the grants. That is item No. 1 with which I have found a little difficulty.

[Mr. Lambert.]

However, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the general principle I do not know whether coming forward with this legislation is a confession that the legislation which existed in prior years, the incentives under the Income Tax Act, have failed to do the job that had been claimed. If I remember rightly—I am subject to correction—I seem to remember that a great deal was being made by the minister's former colleague, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), when he was minister of finance and introduced legislation dealing with industrial research incentives, that it was going to be a great boon. I know that a hesitant start was made in years prior, but many of these ideas have humble beginnings. I should like to know why the changes are being made. Why has the system of tax incentives which has been in existence hitherto been found not to be as successful as desired?

There is no question that there must be an almost explosive expansion of industrial and other research in Canada, not only basic but applied research, if we are to keep our trained personnel. There has been a noticeable reversal in the flow of scientific and other university trained personnel; they are now coming back to Canada. But I suggest, first of all, that we have to look at the matter of trained personnel from two points of view. We have to keep them here and we must encourage those who have gone abroad to come back to Canada.

The bill makes provision for research to be carried on at universities in that corporations may pay universities to do research for them. What I should like to know is this. If a consortium of companies gets together in a particular industry and wants to do research, none of them being big enough to undertake research on their own, will they qualify under the bill? I have known organizations which wanted to do this sort of thing.

Some of my colleagues wish to raise further questions with regard to this bill. I have looked briefly at the question of the base period, the period of operation of five years. What about a new firm which has been reorganized and reincorporated or the business has been transferred to other interests? These are all matters which will have to receive very careful attention during the clause by clause study.

My concluding remarks at this stage are these. We will want an indication from the minister of the type of regulations which will be made under clause 14. This is one of those horrible omnibus clauses about which I have spoken many times with regard to various bills.

In other words, it is legislation that isn't. As a matter of fact, the bill that is brought before parliament is the bare bones. The real operation is conducted by regulations which are not subject to review by parliament. They are merely tabled.

We have before us another bill delegating powers which should be subject to review by a special or standing committee of this house appointed to review regulations made under delegating legislation. I will continue to insist upon this because I think it is a valid principle. This provision exists in the British parliament and is of fairly recent experience. The hon. member from Montreal can grin all he wants, but if he paid attention to some of the bills which come before this house perhaps we would have him on his feet from time to time participating in their discussion, indicating what is his knowledge of such legislation, legislation which he so assiduously supports from the back but never stands up to comment on.

Let me once more indicate that the regulations are highly important and can either make or break this bill. There are some very complicated interpretations of the income tax provisions. For example, what shall be the eligible current expenditures, what shall be the capital expenditures, the recovery of which is subject to regulation? I put it to hon. members that this will require very careful delineation and some explanation from the minister. I hope he will give us his undertaking when we get to the clause that the regulations will be tabled in the house as soon as they are made, not left to be filed on some statutory date according to other requirements of this house.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker—

• (12:30 a.m.)

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to seek information. I should like to know precisely what undertaking or arrangement was made or what order of the house was adopted at six o'clock. I return to my point that this is far too important and far-reaching a bill to be dealt with at this time of the day—in the early morning.

It is with the greatest reluctance that I even appear to run counter to any understanding which may have been reached but I say again to the minister that we should go no further tonight than second reading and that we should let the committee stage stand over until tomorrow. I realize that there is concern in the mind of the government to the extent that the bill is supposed to cover research expenditures incurred in a fiscal period ending in 1966. It is supposed to give tax relief for those expenditures. Understandably the government has made commitments in this connection and it therefore wishes to get the bill through before the end of the year, in other words, before the adjournment.

But the Income Tax Act has been and can be amended retroactively. If we do not get this bill through before December 31, 1966, the government could give effect to its undertaking by an amendment to the Income Tax Act made when the Minister of Finance introduces his budget next year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: That is quite possible. It is not unusual. In any case there is a principle involved here to which we should not be irrevocably committed at 12.30 a week before Christmas with very few members present. As I say, I am prepared to have the bill given second reading and for it then to be set over until tomorrow for the committee stage. If that is not agreeable I should like to ask the Speaker to tell us what the order of the house was and I would then call it 10.30 or 11 or whatever time was agreed on as the hour of adjournment. I am not prepared to see this bill go through in a rush tonight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): May I point out that there was an order made by the house to proceed with order No. 93 and order No. 100 on today's order paper and then to adjourn.

Mr. Churchill: Would you read the exact words which were spoken about 8.15?

Mr. Fulton: There was no extension of the hour of sitting, was there?

Some hon. Members: Yes, there was.

Mr. Churchill: What is the wording?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I will read what was said. This is the Deputy Speaker speaking:

> Having agreed that the house will sit beyond ten o'clock, I understand that the two bills which are to receive priority are those set out in order No. 93 and order No. 100 on today's order paper.

It was agreed then.

Mr. Fulton: There was no order of the house made?

Research

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): If hon. members wish me to read further, I will do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: So that there will be no misunderstanding may I go over the different points again? Following this discussion we will have third reading of Bill C-251. We will then discuss items 93 and 100 on today's order paper. If there is time remaining we will consider items 79, 96, 104, 110 and 117. The house will sit after ten o'clock this evening with no time limit specified. Tomorow the house will sit from six o'clock to ten o'clock. Does the house agree that it be so ordered?

This was agreed by the hon. members.

Mr. Lambert: There is nothing there which indicates that this bill should be taken through all its stages. The contention which my hon. friend from Kamloops is putting forward is eminently reasonable. If we gave second reading to this bill and proceeded further tomorrow, that would be agreeable. But I must protest against this inordinate haste in trying to put through a bill which has been brought into this house on the eve of this very day.

An hon. Member: Fourteen days at least.

Mr. Thompson: It was generally agreed and it was ultimately passed as an order of the house that after completing Bill No. C-251 we would proceed with Bill No. C-252 and Bill No. C-253. We spent between three and three and a half hours in a somewhat futile debate on Bill No. C-251 which took up most of our time tonight. Be that as it may, I think it is reasonable that we should accept the point of order which has been raised by the hon. member for Kamloops. After all, there are 19 clauses in this bill covering some 15 pages. We cannot do justice to it tonight, though I believe we are in general agreement as to the principle of the bill. So I support what the hon. member for Kamloops has just said, that we pass second reading and then adjourn for the day.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I want to make one point clear. The order of the house tonight clearly provided that this bill should be passed. But in view of the obvious desire among members to discuss the bill in some detail and in view of the fact that other bills took longer than we anticipated, I would be quite agreeable, if it meets with the wishes of hon. members, to stop as soon as the second reading stage has been concluded. However, I would like to call a third reading item.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Fulton.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it unanimously agreed that the order made previously tonight be rescinded?

Mr. McIlraith: No. The order stands. But we ask to proceed to the second reading of this bill at this moment—

Mr. Churchill: And stop there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is the house unanimous?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I find myself confused by the motion Your Honour has just put. I understood that a motion for the second reading of this bill had already been made.

Mr. McIlraith: We have just carried it.

Mr. Barnett: On a question of privilege, before all these points of order were raised I had been recognized by Your Honour as wishing to speak on the second reading of the bill. My understanding of the agreement—

Mr. Monteith: It was second reading which was being discussed.

Mr. Fulton: Would the hon. member permit me to make this point? I felt we should not agree to proceed with all stages of the bill tonight as we had apparently been asked to do, and I felt that as a compromise we might agree to second reading and let the bill stand there. We can make any further speeches in committee on the bill tomorrow. Nobody's position is compromised since anything we may want to say on second reading can, I think, be said in committee.

Mr. Barnett: With all deference to the hon. member for Kamloops, I had been recognized by the Chair and though I have no desire to make a lengthy speech I do wish to make a few remarks on the second reading of the bill. Certainly I was not a party to any agreement that second reading should be deemed to have been passed. The hon. member for Edmonton West made a speech on second reading. The Chair then recognized me. I assure hon. members I have no desire to make a long speech, but my understanding is that we will finish second reading and not proceed with the committee stage. Is that correct?

• (12:40 a.m.)

Mr. McIlraith: That is right.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it agreed that we consider this bill in committee of the whole at the next sitting of the house?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify the matter. We have the right to call the items of business that come before the house. I said we would be agreeable to proceeding only with second reading of this bill tonight, and then I made a qualification that there was another item, No. 96, a third reading, that we wanted to call. I believe no one wishes to speak on it.

Mr. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): After this merry-go-round I have almost forgotten what I wanted to say. However, some of the points I was going to raise are now qualified by the agreement which has been reached not to proceed with all stages tonight. I agree with the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) that this is an important piece of legislation. It is obvious that his colleague, the house leader, had not appreciated it was as important as the minister and many of the rest of us consider it.

One can readily agree with the basic principle of the bill, the furtherance of scientific research and development in the industrial field, and to that extent at least I am prepared to support its passage on second reading. On the other hand there are what I would call ancillary principles in the bill which raise serious questions in the minds of some of us.

One of the principles in the bill is that it is to be administered directly by the minister and that the determination of who is to get grants and for what purposes grants are to be made rest in the minister's hands. There is a provision that he can seek advice from such bodies as the National Research Council, but I think it is legitimate to question whether this is the soundest approach that could be taken and whether such matters should rest entirely in the hands of a minister or a department of government. It is possible that they could be better determined by some kind of scientific board. Not long ago we set up a science council for Canada. I do not suggest that it could function more effectively than the minister in this connection, but from the opportunity I have had to study the bill I question that the matter should rest entirely with the minister's department.

With respect to a bill of this kind, which will have such far-reaching and permanent effects on the direction in which scientific research is to go in Canada and its relationship to the industrial development of our country, there should be an opportunity for examination in depth before it is enacted as a statute. Though I and my colleagues are prepared to give at least conditional approval to second reading tonight, in our view this kind of bill could be better handled not by desultory discussion in committee of the whole house but by referring it to a standing or special committee where its implications, both financial and scientific, could be considered in depth and where representatives of industry and science could be called to explore the full implications of the bill.

As the hon. member for Edmonton West said, it is unfortunate that we are faced with the suggestion that if the bill is not passed by the end of the year there may be some hiatus in the research programs undertaken by certain firms. But rather than rush an important measure like this through the house, I think it would be better to act quickly to provide for an extension of the provisions of section 72A of the Income Tax Act, so that the present program could continue until this bill, or one which would result from detailed consideration of it, could be enacted.

This bill has appeared but recently on the order paper, with no advance warning until today that it was going to be called before the recess. Thus my understanding of it in some respects is still rather fragmentary. I am sure this is the case with many hon. members. Therefore I would ask the minister to give serious consideration to requesting his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), to bring forward a temporary solution to meet the particular problem and give the house an opportunity to make a proper examination of what I think basically is a sound idea.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to speak on second reading but since we have agreed to give approval to the principle of the bill, and due to the lateness of the hour, I reserve the right to speak in general discussion when we reach committee stage of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

MANITOBA-NORTHWEST TERRITORIES BOUNDARY ACT

DECLARATION OF BOUNDARY LINE SURVEYED AND MARKED

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved the third reading of Bill No. S-47, respecting the boundary between the province of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will be dealing with the transport bill and subject to royal assent being given to the old age pension supplement legislation, which we expect to have tomorrow night, we will be proposing that we adjourn for recess until January 9. That notice is on the order paper and I hope we can carry it out.

May I add one cautionary note. We may wish to revert to the bill which was under discussion just now some time during the day tomorrow. If this situation arises, however, I will be speaking to the house leaders about it.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, a number of members have looked at this bill and feel it is a very important one. I understand there will be a great deal of discussion in respect of it, including discussion by members on the government side. I wonder whether the house leader would consider not dealing with this bill tomorrow.

Mr. McIlraith: I tried to introduce the cautionary note that we might wish to do so and if so I would speak to the house leaders about it.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader a question concerning the transport bill? When he introduced the bill today the Minister of Transport suggested he would be willing to stand clause 1 and move on to some of the other clauses if the house was in agreement. I am wondering whether any further consideration is being given to this.

Mr. McIlraith: I cannot very well settle that at the moment. I understand that this suggestion was made by the minister and I will draw the remarks which have just been made to his attention.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps at this point I should bring to the attention of hon. members who are still here after midnight that earlier in the course of the evening a point of order which I considered was very interesting and important was raised by the hon. member for Queens, at which time certain precedents were brought to the attention of the Chair. Since then additional research has been made on behalf of the Chair, and to the list of precedents which I at that time mentioned I should add the following dates: November 12, 1963, November 18, 1964, and October 11, 1963. I do not suggest this is a complete record of the precedents, because as I indicated at the time the precedents go back to 1867, but they perhaps may indicate a more objective picture of the situation.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, do I understand you are calling the proceedings on the adjournment motion? I wonder whether hon. members who are concerned in the adjournment debate would consider forgoing it.

Mr. Churchill: I think it should be the prerogative of Mr. Speaker to determine that and simply rule that there will not be a debate on the adjournment motion.

Mr. Speaker: According to the new rule a motion to adjourn the house is deemed to have been moved, so no formal motion is required. I would suggest, however, that there is no power in the hands of Mr. Speaker to say to the hon. member for Sherbrooke, the hon. member for Lotbinière, or the hon. member for Trois-Rivières that they will not have an opportunity to have their say in connection with the matters they raised earlier today.

LABOUR RELATIONS—C.N.T.U.—DEFINITION OF BARGAINING UNIT

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, December 13, I put the following question to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson):

> "As the ministerial committee has submitted its report to the cabinet, does the government intend to introduce shortly a bill defining the negotiating units and recognizing them on the natural as well as on the national level?"

The head of the government thought it best at that time not to answer. Maybe he hoped that I would repeat my question on proceedings on the adjournment motion, so that he might have the opportunity to make a more substantial and complete statement. At least, we all hope this is the case, since the controversy was brought up several months ago and has not yet been settled in any positive and efficient manner.

Early in 1966, the C.N.T.U. made violent protests to the cabinet over C.C.R.O. decisions and also protested against the type of representation in this federal organization. In addition to voicing grievances in connection with the lack of equal representation at inter-union conflicts, the absence of bilingual members of the C.C.R.O., and the importance of the president's vote whenever a problem opposes unions represented at the C.C.R.O., the C.N.T.U. criticized—and rightly so—the exclusive meaning which the C.C.R.O. attributes to the negotiating unit.

The C.C.R.O. insists that the negotiating unit applies only on the national level and refuses to recognize it on the natural level.

This corrupt and unchanging attitude of the C.C.R.O. is detrimental to the freedom of workers. It is up to the employees to choose their union. This choice must not be dictated by the employer, unless we want to apply to Canada—either directly or indirectly—the theories which are predominant in communist and totalitarian countries.

It must be pointed out that if the C.C.R.O. has limited the scope of negotiating units to the national level, it is because they have—in their narrow-minded way—interpreted the law itself which does not give any precise definition of the negotiating unit.

This is why it has become more than urgent to amend section 2, subsection 3 of the Industrial Relations Act, so that certain unfair and antidemocratic decisions may be rectified, thus allowing recognition of the negotiating units, on the natural as well as on the national level.

This uneasiness is not of recent date. A ministerial committee was set up last April. It took the committee nine months to submit, last December 8, a report of its findings to the right hon. Prime Minister. I hope the Prime Minister or his parliamentary secretary will not go into a prolonged nirvana, but that one of them will assure the house tonight that the act will be amended very shortly, so that justice, freedom and equality may finally be respected in Canada.

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, according to our parliamentary tradition and custom, the proceedings of such a committee can be made available to the public only when its final report is ready for publication. I am surprised that the hon. member is not aware of this basic rule of our procedure.

At any rate, I can assure him that the committee is very active and since its membership includes the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand), one can see the seriousness with which this government considers the problem; it ensures the value of the report which will be published in due course.

CRIMINAL CODE—AMENDMENT RESPECTING CONFESSIONS OF PRISONERS

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I am greatly moved to speak—

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Under provisional standing order 39A, at ten o'clock p.m. on any Monday, Tuesday or Thursday Mr. Speaker may, notwithstanding the provisions of standing orders 6 (3) and 32(2), deem that a motion to adjourn the house has been made and seconded, whereupon such motion shall be debatable for not more than 30 minutes. This provisional standing order does not say anything about one o'clock on the following day; it refers to ten o'clock p.m. In view of the fact that it is now one o'clock a.m. I suggest that this debate is entirely out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): There seems to have been unanimous consent to proceed with the adjournment motion following the suggestion by Mr. Pepin, supported by Mr. McIlraith, that we continue with the adjournment proceedings.

Mr. Churchill: I objected to that earlier.

Mr. McIlraith: No, no one took exception at that point.

Mr. Mackasey: May I speak on this point for a moment, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): No. I have ruled that we should proceed on the adjournment motion.

Mr. Churchill: This is a shocking abuse of the staff of this house.

Mr. Choquette: It will only take me two minutes to complete my remarks.

Mr. Churchill: That is a pretty selfish attitude on your part.

Mr. Choquette: You have abused us so much, I shall continue.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief, but I want to say, first of all, that I am greatly moved to speak before such a large gathering.

My question was the following, to which I will add a preamble.

In a modern society, Mr. Speaker, every effort is made, of course, to assure its members maximum protection against evil-minded citizens who are a menace to law and order. Police action is an inescapable necessity in a civilized country, and, too often, the merits of the police force are not recognized as they should.

It is therefore of the utmost importance that existing laws do not paralyse crime detection, and sufficient latitude should be given to investigators who, sometime heroically, have to unmask the crimes and wickedness of blackguards who only understand the language of force.

Nevertheless in Canada, considering the advanced stage of North American civilization, our country being foremost in the social field, human sciences are being developed rapidly enough to allow us to resort to something else than brute force on inmates, to serve the purposes of justice.

Therefore, I should like to make some suggestions in regard to the deplorable acts of violence, in regard to which the Quebec Bar requested a royal inquiry. I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that in order to prevent such police brutality against accused persons and inmates, first of all, those in charge of questioning them should have had intensive training, should know enough about human sciences, should be proficient enough so far as the interrogation of inmates is concerned to be able to obtain a confession without resorting to violence and brute force.

Second, I believe there should be close co-operation between the officers representing justice on the one part, and defence counsel on the other part, so that the latter may seek something else than proving at all costs the innocence of their clients. If, on the contrary, they are able to throw some light on the case and serve the purposes of justice, if they are convinced of the guilt of their clients for instance, let them cooperate more closely with justice instead of dealing with lost causes.

Third, the accused should not be requested to make a confession in the absence of his lawyer. This does not prevent police officers from being free to question the prisoner, but any confession which was obtained otherwise than in the presence of the lawyer of the accused would not be valid.

Fourth, the provisions of the Bill of Rights should be enforced more energetically than they are at the present time. Moreover, the Criminal Code should stipulate that any policeman or any officer of the law who refuses to let a prisoner get in touch with his lawyer is guilty of an offence punishable by summary conviction. And so, the stipulations of the Bill of Rights would be enforced, which they are not today. We know what happens too often: policemen or officers of the law refuse to let their prisoners get in touch with their lawyer.

I shall sum up my considerations. We cannot paralyse police action by cynical laws. The policemen must be given some latitude, for they are often brave or heroic, but, on the other hand, we should censure loudly any brutality on their part. If we applied the suggestions I am putting forward, we could, I believe, avoid the excesses that we had to deplore recently.

[English]

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that the hon. member for Lotbinière brings his problem before the House of Commons because his reputation in support of his fellow man is well known in the House of Commons. He has demonstrated that support by his interest in safety measures on the highways at level crossings. It is natural that he should take this opportunity to express his concern in view of the fact that in recent days in the city of Montreal there have been at least six fatalities brought to the attention of the public.

Certain safety measures have already been incorporated by the United States. They have adopted the principle that accused persons should be represented by legal counsel regardless of whether or not they are in a financial position to do so. This is a principle which should be adopted by Canada, and it presents a great challenge to the members of the bar, some of whom are present here. Too many Canadians are penalized, because of their financial position, by being inadequately represented in our courts. I highly commend to the Department of Justice the worth-while and sensitive suggestion of the hon. member for Lotbinière.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: I wish to thank the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) for the generous compliments he paid me.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

SPORT—PEE-WEES—REFUSAL TO AUTHORIZE TRIP TO EUROPE

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, at the risk of being out of order, I would like to say first of all how shocked I was at seeing all Conservatives help in wasting the time of the house a while ago and then object to our taking seven minutes.

I shall state my case briefly. What is involved in the question I wish to raise? Two pee-wee hockey teams, in the 10-12 age group, were selected by the Montreal Expo to make a tour in Europe. Then, what is the problem? Well, the problem is that they cannot get on the ice in Europe without the authorization of the C.A.H.A. and of the Q.P.H.A. Now, what we ask is that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), who is responsible for Expo, and perhaps the commissioner general of Expo talk some sense into the manager of that monopoly, of that trust which goes by the name of C.A.H.A., which so often has been a cause for complaints here, in the House of Commons.

When I make this request, Mr. Speaker, I am in good company, since I have the support of the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) and of the hon. member for Saint-Henri (Mr. Lessard). I am also supported by the mayors of Ville LaSalle, Cap-de-la-Madeliene, Trois-Rivières and Montreal; I have in my hand the documents referring to those matters and I also have the material submitted by the Expo commission which endorses this tour.

What is the excuse alleged to prevent that tour? Trivial, childlike, frivolous, even false reasons have been given in many cases.

They say, for instance, that there is a breach of the rules under which the authorization for such a tour must be requested. We requested it and it is refused to us. We are told that the teams are not permitted to go and play against European teams; they are not going to play against European teams, they are going to play one against the other. One will represent Expo and the other the centennial commission.

They say that the C.A.H.A. cannot vote against its own rules; we are going to prove to them that it has done so 15 times. Then, it is stupid to think that the men are made to serve the rules. I would rather think that the rules are made to serve the men and that there are some exceptional cases.

They say that there is a rule which forbids the young people to go and play outside the province, outside the country. That is true and we agree to it; we understand the desirability of such attitude. However, we say that on many occasions the C.A.H.A. made exceptions and we feel that Expo '67 and the centennial are exceptional cases.

It is said that those young people run the risk of falling ill if they go to Europe. They will be accompanied by their parents; they will also be accompanied by serious people such as Mr. Jacques Plante, some mayors and city councillors. They will get the required vaccinations before they leave. We could mention the case of 25 young people of the same age going to Europe with their parents, to study, and who are not any the worse for it. They are not going to China or Japan; they are going to England, France, Belgium, Germany.

It is said that some industries would endorse or support the venture for advertising purposes; that is not true. It is said that they are free to go if they want to. Yes, but what is not said is that afterwards they will be forbidden to play in organized hockey for many years because there is a trust, a monopoly called the C.A.H.A. which prevents them from going.

It is said that the C.A.H.A. is afraid of being held responsible. Those who sponsor that trip are taking all the insurance necessary and are ready to sign all the documents needed to release the C.A.H.A.

Now, those who are organizing the trip are not asking anyone for money. They will put up $20,000 to finance it. All they are asking for is to be left alone, to be allowed to advertise Expo, nothing else.

It is suggested that the Physical Fitness Council objects to such things. We understand that, because, as a rule, it is not the policy to allow those young people to go and play abroad. We feel that in view of the precautionary measures taken in the present case and due mainly to the extraordinary event called Expo '67, they should be allowed to go.

Mr. Speaker, we are only asking—and it is not the first time we do so in the house—that the proper authorities bring to reason the responsible people in the C.A.H.A., who exert full control over sports in Canada, so that they will grant the permission being asked in this case. Of course, the unusual circumstances requiring those young people to go and play in Europe are appreciated.

As I said earlier, we are not asking money of anyone, we are accepting all the responsibilities. We are only asking not to be hindered. If we do not get that permission from the C.A.H.A., we shall not be able to make a good showing in Europe. Does that make any sense? Those young people are liable to penalties.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to insist on the fact that all the sport reporters in the province of Quebec, without exception, provided all those concerned with a considerable amount of clippings on this subject and endorsed the project. They cried shame when they saw that the C.A.H.A. would not listen to reason in such a case. Like many others, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the time has not come to bring the C.A.H.A. to its senses for good.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, following the question put this afternoon to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), probably in view of his responsibility concerning Expo '67, the minister contacted the president of the Canada Amateur Hockey Association, Mr. Page.

The minister has asked me to point out to all those concerned the importance of this matter. Indeed, the matter has been brought to his attention by two members, the hon. members for Saint-Henri and Trois-Rivières (Messrs. Lessard and Mongrain). In view of those representations, the minister felt himself bound to discuss the matter this afternoon with officials of the association.

The minister has reviewed with Mr. Page all the details of this matter and has asked him to make sure that all angles of this problem are taken into full and serious consideration; he also expressed the hope that a decision will be taken only in the light of all the circumstances in order to ensure a just and fair decision.

I expect that the hon. member will be satisfied that the minister went as far as he was allowed to.

I may add, in my personal capacity as member for Quebec South, that I would look favourably upon the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association taking exceptional decisions in exceptional circumstances. I would be happy to wish "Bon Voyage" to our pee-wees.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 1.18 a.m., pursuant to special order.

TRADE

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE ENCOURAGING EXPORTS

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), I wish to table copies in English and French of two letters designed to give further effect to the intensified trade promotion program which the minister announced in October, 1966.

One letter is directed to companies which are deemed to have export potential, but which are not active in the export field to date. The other is written to companies which already export.

The purpose of the letters is to encourage Canadian companies in their export programs and to make the facilities of the Department of Trade and Commerce available to them.

I therefore ask leave to table those letters.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to table the letters to which he has just referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN EXECUTION OF GERMAN WAR PRISONERS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the undertaking I gave on November 8 in response to a question by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather), I should like to make a further statement regarding the trial and execution of the German sailors, Dorfer and Beck, in Amsterdam in 1945. Hon. members will recall that on October 11 last I dealt with this matter in the house. Since that time I have had further investigations made. Those investigations are now complete and I wish to assure the house that nothing has come to light which would in any way modify the statements I previously made on this subject.

In sum, any suggestion that any Canadian officer or soldier acted illegally or that the executions of Dorfer and Beck were Canadian inspired or encouraged by the Canadians is absolutely false.

The suggestions that have been made have, I think, been based on some misconception as to what actually occurred and the context in which events took place. The Germans, by the terms of surrender, were made responsible for the discipline of their troops who were awaiting return to and disbandment in Germany. The surrender terms made no mention of any change to be effected in the German disciplinary processes available to them for the maintenance of discipline. As I said in an earlier statement on this subject, restrictions on German disciplinary procedures were contained in military law No. 153. This was not received by the headquarters 1st Canadian army until the afternoon of May 14, the day after the execution took place.

There is no information that Dorfer or Beck deserted because of any appeal from the allies and indeed the evidence as set out in the article in Der Spiegel is to the contrary. Similarly, there is no evidence to support any suggestion that either of the two men had been engaged in collaboration with the allies during the time of their desertion from the German forces, and indeed all available evidence is to the contrary.

While the local Canadian military authorities furnish captured German rifles and ammunition for the execution, and provided transport, these two matters have been completely misinterpreted. The Germans had been disarmed and, if the sentence was to be carried out, rifles had to be returned to them for that purpose. When these were given to the Germans, the German authorities stated that they were going to carry out the execution on the spot in full view of their own troops, which would also have been in view of Canadian personnel. The Canadian officer present refused to allow this and was accordingly requested by the Germans to furnish transportation so that the executions might be carried out elsewhere. This was the only reason that a Canadian truck was made available for the condemned men and the firing party.

The suggestion that Canadian authorities instigated the trials and the executions is, as I have previously said, absolutely false. After the court martial the Canadian officer at the scene refused to allow the execution to take place until the matter had been referred for direction, even though the German officer in charge of the camp repeatedly made representations that unless the executions were carried out before nightfall that officer would no longer be responsible for the discipline of the German troops. The Canadian officer maintained his refusal to permit the executions until he was informed through Canadian authorities that approval for the carrying out of the sentence had been given by the chief of staff of German 30 Corps.

No approach has as yet been made to us by the German authorities for assistance in their investigations of this matter. Should such an approach be made the government will, of course, afford all appropriate co-operation.

I am sure all hon. members will agree with me when I say that the whole incident was most regrettable, but I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in view of the fact it is now over 20 years since the war ended, nothing is to be gained by our carrying this matter further.

FINANCE

TARIFF BOARD REPORT ON MACHINERY, APPARATUS AND PRINTING PLATES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am tabling today copies in English and in French of the Tariff Board report on reference No. 133 relating to machinery, apparatus, printing plates and related products for the printing and allied industries. I am also tabling a transcript of the evidence presented to the board at its public hearings.

I assure the house that the Tariff Board's recommendations contained in this report will receive most careful consideration by the government. I should also like to take this opportunity to invite interested parties to let me have promptly any comments they may wish to make on this report.

INCOME TAX ACT AMENDMENT

INCORPORATION OF PROVISIONS ANALOGOUS TO THOSE IN CANADIAN VESSEL CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE ACT

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-259, entitled an act to amend the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN DEVELOPMENT ACT

GUARANTY ON PURCHASE OF EQUITY SHARES

Mr. Steven Otto (York East) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-260, to incorporate the Canadian Development Corporation.

Mr. Knowles: Explain.

Mr. Otto: The purpose for this legislation is to establish a crown corporation which would enable Canadians to buy back our national industrial future from foreign hands. This is a matter which seems to have been removed from the government's urgent list, but a matter which most Canadians consider to be of national importance. The bill would establish a crown corporation to ensure to Canadians the purchase price of approved shares. In my opinion, since Canadians have been skinned so often by our stock market manipulators, the only thing which will convince them they are getting a fair deal is a government guaranty for the equity shares they purchase. I am absolutely confident that if the subject matter of this bill is acted upon, Canadians will buy back control of their industrial potential within a short time.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

POSTAL SERVICES INTERRUPTION RELIEF ACT

MEASURE TO RELIEVE LOSS OR HARDSHIP RESULTING FROM INTERRUPTION OF SERVICES

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-55, (from the Senate) to provide relief in certain cases against loss or hardship suffered as a result of interruptions of normal postal services.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

OKA, P.Q.—HIGHWAY THROUGH INDIAN RESERVATION

Question No. 2,140—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Is land on the Oka Reservation in Quebec being surveyed as a part of a highway project?

2. If so, who is carrying out the survey and on whose behalf is it being done?

3. Have the Indians concerned been consulted?

4. If so, have they approved of the survey, and what agreement has been drawn up?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. A pre-engineering survey of the existing 2.8 miles of road, known as the Middle road, in the Oka settlement has been completed.

2. The location survey of the road was carried out under the direction of the division engineer of the provincial highways department on behalf of the Indian residents, and at the request of the Indian affairs branch.

3. Yes, the survey has been authorized by resolution of the elected band council representing the Oka Indians.

4. Written agreements have been concluded with all Indian property owners whose lands are required for road purposes. Each property owner will receive compensation after reconstruction has been completed and a legal survey undertaken to establish the precise land areas involved.

FEDERAL GRANTS TO FACULTIES OF MEDICINE

Question No. 2,183—Mr. Isabelle:

Does the government make grants to faculties of medicine of various universities in Canada and, if so, are there any minimum standards demanded by the government of those faculties and, what are the standards set for the admission of students to the faculties of medicine at (a) Laval University, (b) Montreal University, (c) McGill University, (d) Toronto University, (e) University of British Columbia (f) Saskatchewan University?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Department of National Health and Welfare as follows: Under the health grants federal assistance is provided for projects submitted by the provinces for provincial health programs which may include the support of training, research and clinical services provided by or under the supervision of the faculties of medicine of Canadian universities. Under the new health resources fund, federal assistance will also be provided to projects submitted by the provinces for the construction and renovation of buildings for teaching and research in faculties of medicine. (a) to (f) Faculties of medicine are developed and operated under the authority of the provinces. Federal standards have not been established for the admission of students.

*OWNERSHIP OF PERPETUAL BONDS

Question No. 2,187—Mr. Rynard:

1. Has an analysis been made of the present ownerships of the government of Canada perpetual bonds issued in 1936 in the amount of $55,000,000?

2. Has an estimate been made of the capital gains which would accrue to present holders of these bonds who are not the original purchasers or heirs or trustees of the original bonds if they were redeemed at their par value?

3. What is the estimate of capital gains which would accrue to present holders of these bonds who were not the original purchasers or heirs or trustees if the interest rate was raised above 3 percent?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance and Receiver General): On September 15, 1966 there were 4,698 registered holders of perpetual bonds, of whom 330 were original registrations. The total registered holdings accounted for about $27,500,000 par value of which the 330 original registrations accounted for approximately $700,000 par value. It is not known how many bearer bonds totalling approximately $27,500,000 are still in the hands of original purchasers. Since the date of issue, September 15, 1936, the perpetual bonds have changed hands at many prices within the range of about $50.00 and $104.00 per $100.00 par value. The various prices at which present perpetual bond holders, other than original purchasers, purchased their bonds cannot be determined. Consequently, it is not possible to estimate the amount of capital gains which would accrue if the perpetual bonds were redeemed at par or if the coupon rate of 3 per cent were raised. However, as noted by the Minister of Finance in the house on October 5 purchases of perpetual bonds in recent years have been made at market prices which were substantially below the original issue price of $96.50 per $100.000 par value.

CAUSEWAY STAGE OF NORTHUMBERLAND CROSSING

Question No. 2,198—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. When is it intended to call for tenders for causeway stage of the Northumberland crossing between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick?

2. What is the estimated time for completion of this phase?

3. What is its total length?

4. Has there been a delay in the estimated time or call of tenders and, if so, what are the reasons for such delay?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. January, 1967.

2. Two years.

3. About 11,700 feet.

4. There has been no delaying; however, tenders cannot be invited before an agreement on sales taxes has been made with the provinces.

Question No. 2,248—Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert):

What was the total of housing starts in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island in each year since 1960 with separate figures on urban construction, particularly N.H.A. direct, indirect (insured), and conventional financing?

Data on housing starts by source of financing for individual provinces are not available, but data for the Atlantic region are given in Table 2 below. Data on N.H.A. financing of housing in the four provinces since 1960, showing loans approved by lenders and the corporation separately, are given in Table 3 below.

I would ask that it be done more slowly in the future.

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I gave an English copy of that text to the translator. I do not know whether the messenger took it to the right booth, but that is another matter.

MERCANTILE BANK—EXCHANGE OF NOTES

Motion No. 189—Mr. Diefenbaker:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of notes exchanged between Canada and the United States in the last three months on the subject of the Mercantile Bank and on the bank legislation now before the house.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a request for the production of an exchange of notes between Canada and the United States. I am sure that my right hon. friend will agree that such notes are privileged and on that account cannot be produced. I would therefore ask my right hon. friend kindly to withdraw the motion if he is so disposed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am not so disposed because that is not the rule. I wish to refer Your Honour to the various authorities on this question and make reference to the fact: The hon. gentleman who has just spoken made a statement on February 2, 1966 as reported on page 602 of Hansard.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I had not understood that motions of this sort were debatable. That being the case I am sure my right hon. friend, who usually observes the rules so carefully, would agree that this should not be proceeded with.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am asking you to make a ruling on this. I was quoting the hon. gentleman's own words, and of course he does not like to have them quoted back to him. On February 2 there was a motion for production of a copy of a letter or letters written by the President of the United States asking for Canadian military assistance or any other kind of assistance in reference to the conflict in Viet Nam, to which the hon. gentleman replied:

There is no objection to accepting this motion, but it can, of course, be done only with the usual reservation, in this case the usual reservation being the necessity for obtaining the concurrence of the President of the United States.

So on the authorities, Mr. Speaker, these documents are not privileged. The only privilege—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understood the Leader of the Opposition was rising on a point of order; that is why I heard the argument he submitted. With respect, I am sure the right hon. gentleman accepts the views expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that the motion is not debatable—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not debating the motion.

Mr. Speaker:—and that the minister is right to ask that it be transferred for debate—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker:—at which time I suggest the argument being submitted by the Leader of the Opposition would be pertinent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there was no request by the minister that it be transferred for debate. In this matter the house is being denied information which is made available in the United Kingdom whenever requested.

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the minister whether it was his request that it be transferred for debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I will put the motion.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion negatived.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Ormiston). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Andras). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there ought to be a word said about this vote because it involves an issue that certainly is not clear, in the nature of the vote itself. It seems to me that this motion should have been transferred for debate because it involves an issue that reaches right into the heart of our national and economic autonomy, where Wall street financial interests moved directly through to the United States state department and, in so doing, were practising the kind of imperialism which seeks to bring pressure to bear on Canada—pressure which we do not need or want—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) that this is a point of order. It seems to me that in the remarks he is making he is reflecting on the vote of the house, which was a decision of the house taken on the request that the motion be put. The motion was put; a decision was reached by the house. The reflections of the hon. member, or his comments, might have been acceptable in the course of debate, but in view of the fact that there was no debate I suggest his remarks cannot be made at this time on a point of order.

DOMINION MARINE ASSOCIATION—APPLICATION OF LABOUR (STANDARDS) CODE

Motion No. 190—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the government or any agency or department thereof and the Dominion Marine Association dated on or about November 22, regarding the application or deferment of, or relating to Part I of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable to the government and the correspondence can be filed forthwith or very shortly. In fact I have already given the hon. member a copy of the letter.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion deemed to have been adopted by the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BANKRUPTCY

NORTH AMERICAN GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY—CHARGES FOLLOWING DISAPPEARANCE OF SECURITIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It has to do with the disappearance of $529,000 in securities from the custody of the North American General Insurance, termed by the Minister of Finance a theft. I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether this is being investigated by the R.C.M.P. Has any charge been laid regarding the disappearance of that very considerable sum and, if no action has been taken as yet by the R.C.M.P., what communications have taken place which obviate or explain the reason for such a long delay?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have no personal knowledge of the matter referred to by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. However, perhaps I may be permitted to comment that, as the house is well aware, the administration of justice generally falls within the jurisdiction of the provinces and theft, I feel, would be a matter to be dealt with by the provincial authorities. However, as I have indicated, I have no personal knowledge but would be pleased to make inquiries.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the minister of course knows that the company from which the alleged theft took place is a dominion incorporated insurance company, and as such is the responsibility of the federal government. In this connection I would suggest that the minister look into the question of prosecution.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. May I ask the Solicitor General whether he would not be well advised to follow the example set by his colleague, the Minister of Justice, who now is prosecuting, for violation of the Criminal Code, some persons in the province of Quebec in respect of certain activities they were alleged to have been engaged in.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

INDUSTRY

CANADA-U.S. AUTOMOTIVE AGREEMENT—ENTITLEMENT TO TRANSITIONAL BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. I should like to ask the hon. minister whether he has received a letter from Mr. George Burt, the Canadian director of the United Automobile Workers, protesting against the minister's proposal that the transitional assistance benefits be paid only after the supplementary unemployment benefits have been exhausted by laid off employees as a result of the Canada-U.S. agreement. If he has received the letter, would he inform the house whether this policy has been definitely decided upon and whether regulations to this effect are in preparation or have been adopted.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have received such a letter. Government policy in this matter was announced in the house some weeks ago, after discussions with Mr. Burt and some of his colleagues, and after extended discussion with his executive assistant, who remained here and participated in the detailed discussions before the announcement was made in the house. Regulations have been drafted and if they have not yet gone to the cabinet for consideration, they will be submitted within the next day or two.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? Perhaps I should know—and I apologize if I should and do not—but would the minister inform the house whether unemployed people would have to exhaust their supplementary unemployment benefits before becoming entitled to the transitional assistance benefits under the regulations which have been drafted.

Mr. Nicholson: The amended regulations I hope will be published within a matter of a few days. I do not think answering this question before then, and having an extended debate on it, would be fitting on the orders of the day, at least until the regulations have been published.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MERCANTILE BANK—INTERFERENCE BY U.S. STATE DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like to ask whether or not the Canadian government made any protest to the United States state department against the interference with Canadian policies relating to the operations of the Mercantile Bank.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there have been of course very full discussions between the two governments. The last note of the state department which was received on November 11, will shortly be replied to.

IMMIGRATION

VISITING PRIVILEGES OF CENTRAL EUROPEANS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the large number of rejections of applications for visiting privileges in Canada by people from central European countries, particularly countries such as Poland, I should like to ask the minister whether this is as a result of government policy or whether it is based on the minister's prerogative.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think we are applying exactly the same policy which has been applied for years and years.

FINANCE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING DEPOSIT INSURANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Some time ago he intimated to the house that he was hopeful that his deposit insurance legislation would be given first reading before the recess. Apparently this has been impossible, but I wonder whether the minister could give us any further information on this.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received the bill in proper form, and therefore I can assure the house that it will be on the order paper right at the resumption of the session.

PUBLIC SERVICE

TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER RETIREMENT PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the President of the Treasury Board would not mind if I ask this question of the government house leader. In view of the fact that all of us seem to be agreed to the proposition of amending the terms of reference of the joint committee on the public service to deal with the matter of the pensions of retired civil servants, can the house leader say how soon this will be attended to.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might answer the question. This government, of course, always has been vitally concerned with the welfare of civil servants and retired civil servants. As I have indicated, we intend to proceed with this matter as soon as I am persuaded that a few other people would allow it to go through the house without debate.

Mr. Knowles: Is the minister not aware that those concerned are prepared to let it go through the house without debate?

Mr. Benson: All I am aware of is that my hon. friend speaks for himself.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGGESTED MEASURE TO ENCOURAGE EMPLOYMENT IN CENTENNIAL YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the two latest forecasts that the economy will slow down next year, made yesterday by the minister of finance for the province of Ontario and by the minister's own deputy minister, Mr. Bryce, would the government give consideration to introducing a measure to stimulate the economy so that we do not celebrate our centennial year here with rising unemployment.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm what is reported in the paper concerning what my deputy minister said at the meeting of the provincial ministers of finance yesterday. He said at that time that we could expect an increase in the volume of production in Canada next year of approximately 4 per cent. This is about the same as the increase the United States authorities are now expecting in that country.

May I draw the attention of the house and my hon. friend to the statement made by the Economic Council in its third annual report:

By early 1966, it was therefore clear that an adjustment to a more moderate and sustainable rate of growth was necessary.

Mr. Hees: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? Does the minister not realize that his deputy minister forecast a reduction in our growth of about two thirds, from 6 per cent to 4 per cent?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

VANCOUVER B.C.—ARRESTS BY U.S. SERVICE POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to the question of the right hon. the Leader of the Opposition on Friday, December 2, with respect to certain allegations that United States authorities were checking in Vancouver for deserters from the United States armed forces. I am informed that the persons who believed that the United States authorities were conducting such inquiries in Vancouver were interviewed by the R.C.M.P. and were not able to confirm that the persons suspected were in fact acting on behalf of the United States authorities.

[Mr. Benson.]

I am further advised that the R.C.M.P. made inquiries of the F.B.I. and were informed that the F.B.I. had not conducted any such operation. They were told that the F.B.I. inquiry of the United States department of defence did not disclose any connection on the part of the United States military authorities with these allegations.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What plans has the minister in mind for 1967 to re-establish Canada's prestige abroad in view of—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill:—in view of the failure in 1966 of the minister's efforts in respect of Rhodesia, Viet Nam, the two Chinas and the United Nations peace keeping forces?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It may be that the minister would like to reply to the question on a question of privilege, but I doubt if this question is in order.

WATER RESOURCES

PARTICIPATION BY CANADA IN "WATER FOR PEACE" CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, there is a matter I should like to take up with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact this is the last time we will have the opportunity of obtaining information prior to the new year, I should like to ask the minister to advise the house in respect to the present position regarding President Johnson's proposed "Water for Peace" conference, and in particular whether Canada has received or accepted an invitation to attend. Will Canadian representatives be instructed to take a firm position against any commitment to divert Canadian waters until Canada's own needs are ascertained and assured for the future?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, a paper on this subject will be presented to the cabinet tomorrow and an announcement will be made early next year. There is no doubt we will participate, but the extent and the form of that participation will be defined later.

UNITED NATIONS

CYPRUS—REQUEST TO MAINTAIN PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will he inform the house whether or not the Canadian government has accepted the request of the Secretary General of the United Nations to maintain its peace keeping contingent in Cyprus, in view of the recently renewed Security Council six months mandate?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Security Council has renewed the United Nations commitment in Cyprus for a period of six months from December 26. I hope the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre will not regard this as a further indication of failure, when I say that the Canadian government believes firmly in the concept of the United Nations peace keeping, and has decided to continue to serve in the Cyprus force from December 27 until June 26 next year, the period set for the renewed mandate.

SOUTH KOREA—WITHDRAWAL OF FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke asked the Prime Minister a question as a follow-up to another question concerning whether or not Canada had announced its position regarding two resolutions proposed at the United Nations in relation to the withdrawal of the United Nations forces from the demilitarized zone in Korea. Has the Prime Minister any answer to that question?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): There were two resolutions presented to the United Nations assembly on December 16 regarding this subject. One was proposed by certain communist delegates and was to the effect that the United Nations should withdraw from Korea. That resolution was defeated. The other resolution, of which Canada was a co-sponsor, was to the effect that United Nations forces should remain in Korea until the government of Korea asked for a withdrawal or until conditions make it possible to do so. Of course Canada voted in favour of that resolution.

TRADE

SOUTH KOREA—AGREEMENT RESPECTING TEXTILE QUOTA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the treaty signed yesterday by Canada and South Korea, have quotas been set for textiles entering Canada from Korea?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Minister of Trade and Commerce will table tomorrow the text of the treaty and I invite my colleague, the hon. member, to study it well.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. I would like the minister to put the answer on the order paper because tomorrow we will not be here to examine it.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

COMMITTEE TO DEAL WITH SUGGESTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works in his capacity as the minister who reports for the National Capital Commission. Having in mind the increased interest in our national capital, will the minister give consideration to the establishment of a committee of this house which could meet annually to concern itself with suggestions of all Canadians regarding the national capital?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Starr: That is a concise answer.

Mr. Knowles: You sound like Paul Martin.

LABOUR RELATIONS

C.N.T.U.—INQUIRY RESPECTING REPORT OF MINISTERIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Inquiries of the Ministry

It has to do with the preliminary answer given in this house last December 8. At that time I asked the Prime Minister whether the government had received a report from the ministerial committee considering the status of bargaining units and the merits of the C.N.T.U.'s grievances and whether the house could expect a statement very shortly in that respect. The right hon. Prime Minister gave the following reply on December 8:

The matter is under consideration and I hope to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Is the right hon. Prime Minister now in a position to make such an announcement before we adjourn for the Christmas recess?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I cannot say more at this time than that this matter is still being considered. A meeting of a committee of the cabinet was held yesterday and another meeting will be held next week. I sincerely hope when we reassemble I will be able to make a more definitive statement.

WATER RESOURCES

REPRESENTATIONS FROM CITIZENS COMMITTEE ON POLLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has he or his department received any report, brief or representation from a group calling itself the Canadian Citizens Committee on Pollution?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I shall make inquiries. May I observe that the committee first made representations to the province of Ontario which, generally speaking, is responsible for water pollution in that province.

Mr. Aiken: I have a supplementary question. Has the minister been in touch with provincial authorities to discuss financial assistance in respect of water pollution control?

Mr. Pepin: No, Mr. Speaker, not since the conference on pollution held at Montreal. As I already indicated, I hope the members of the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers will meet early in the year to discuss this subject. May I mention that some assistance has already been provided by the Canadian government toward anti-pollution measures through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and income tax regulations.

[Mr. Allard.]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED INFILTRATION BY SEPARATISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): I have a question for the Secretary of State. A few days ago the Montreal weekly, Dimanche Matin published the names of employees of the C.B.C. who are active in the separatist movement in Montreal. Can the hon. lady indicate first whether she is familiar with that report, and whether any investigation has been carried out to verify the report?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for forwarding a copy of the article, which is to the effect that there has been an infiltration in the Société de Radio Canada by a group of separatists. I am informed that some members are in effect attempting to prevent freedom of speech and association. That is detrimental to this country. Let me remind hon. members that article VIII, subsection 3 states that full-time employees may not give public support to election candidates, or themselves run as candidates.

I can only say from this that it seems to me an individual who works for the C.B.C. is entitled, as is every Canadian, to have his own personal views about the country. This is a right we all have. But he must be scrupulously careful when holding those views to keep himself completely objective, and not put them forward over the air.

GRAIN

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.,—FAVOURABLE CONSIDERATION OF REQUEST CONCERNING ELEVATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I say at the outset that I know beneath his lean and light frame there is a very jolly disposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howard: I would like him to exhibit that jolly disposition by making a favourable announcement about the grain elevator in Prince Rupert.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has now epitomized me as the Cassius of the House of Commons, I should like to cheer his Christmas a little by telling him that a favourable decision has now been made and an announcement of the terms will be made very shortly.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of Prince Rupert may I thank the minister for this Christmas present.

WINTER WORKS

FURTHER REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AS TO CONTINUITY OF PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he can reply to the question put the day before yesterday about the municipal winter works program.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what is going to happen to this program next year. The cabinet will have to make a decision. I think the program will be revised or abandoned.

[Translation]

INCOME TAX

REQUEST TO INCREASE PERSONAL EXEMPTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General.

Now that the principle of a minimum guaranteed income has been established by Bill No. C-251, does the minister not think that amendments should be made to the Income Tax Act to raise personal exemptions to $1,260 instead of the present $1,000, thus treating all Canadians equally?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is very general and I really do not think it can be allowed at this time.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I will make my question as brief as possible, because my hon. friend from Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) also has a very urgent question.

I wish to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister, and since this is the last day of the session, I would like to offer him my best wishes and pay tribute to him, on the eve of 1967, as the father of a new Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should like to remind the hon. member that, particularly on Wednesday, we have only a few minutes at our disposal.

Mr. Choquette: I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Here is the question I have. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is ready to act upon the recommendation of the consumers credit committee by establishing a department of consumers affairs.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are giving very careful consideration to the important recommendations of this particular committee, including the one to which my hon. friend has referred.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BELL ISLAND, NFLD.—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO UNEMPLOYED MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to whom I should direct this question. Perhaps the Minister of Labour will accept it. It has to do with the situation on Bell Island and the difficulties of 8,000 Canadians there, many of whom find themselves in a position verging on destitution as they approach Christmas. This situation has existed for several months. What emergency action is the government going to take? Will it make available something in the nature of a federal subsidy, or what will it do so that the several hundred unemployed there will receive equal consideration with Canadians in other parts of the country?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think direct action in this particular case would have to be taken by the Department of Manpower and Immigration. I do not know whether my colleague, who is in the house, is in a position to answer the question today. Perhaps he can.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are doing in Bell Island what we are doing everywhere in the country; we are trying to help those workers. We are ready to grant them allowances so they may find jobs somewhere else. We have counselling services for them, and we are doing all that we can in the circumstances.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Have any taken advantage of this rather less-than-generous offer to these people who have suffered for a long time, and are suffering particularly at this moment?

Mr. Marchand: If any special measures are to be taken they will have to be decided by the cabinet.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a hope.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—GIFT OF FUEL FROM ORGANIZATIONS IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, yesterday my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question with regard to the gift of 1,500 gallons of gasoline from Friends of Rhodesia organizations in Canada. The article to which she referred carried a picture with the legend: "The gift indicates the sympathy and support of the Canadian people." The minister promised to look into the matter and read the article. My colleague has gone, and asked me to ask the minister whether he has been able to look into the matter, and has any comments to make about it.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, according to reports which we have received, 1,500 gallons of petrol were turned over to the illegal Smith régime at the end of October by a Mr. Ronald Gostick who was acting on behalf of the Friends of Rhodesia societies in Canada. The article to which the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway called my attention itself points out that the delivery of the fuel was made from South Africa.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REMISSION OF SENTENCES DURING CHRISTMAS SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Can the minister inform the house how many other remissions of sentence have been granted for Christmas and the New Year, in addition to the Vancouver labour leaders who were referred to yesterday?

[Mr. Marchand.]

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give any exact figures, but a considerable number of cases forwarded from various institutions across Canada were considered, and granted clemency under the royal prerogative and approved for pre-Christmas release.

EXPO '67

EDMONTON, ALTA.—FAILURE TO SECURE TRANSPORTATION FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received a telegram from the centennial co-ordinator of the Edmonton school board protesting the fact that after two months they have not been able to negotiate an agreement with the C.N.R. to take 2,000 Edmonton children to Expo?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question cannot be answered at this time.

NATIONAL ANTHEM

COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER AUTHORIZATION OF "O CANADA"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I have taken the precaution of not giving him notice of it. In view of the expected adjournment of the house this evening, and the prospect that Canada will be launched anthemless into its centennial year, could the Prime Minister advise the house when and how parliament will get the opportunity to adopt "O Canada" as our national anthem?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this matter should be sent to a parliamentary committee for consideration. I hope that a resolution to that effect will be on the order paper when we reconvene, and that we will have this matter settled well before Canada Day in our centennial year.

CANADIAN CONFEDERATION

FURTHER REQUEST FOR OBSERVANCE OF BIRTHDAY OF SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether Canada in its centennial year will commemorate the birthday on January 11 of Sir John A. Macdonald the statesman who was recognized by Sir Wilfrid Laurier as the architect of Confederation. A number of schools across Canada have, without any direction or dictation, suggested this as a means of indicating that we in Canada commemorate those who gave us our nation.

Let me point out that party considerations disappear after one dies; that is one of the characteristics of our country. The hon. gentleman from Lotbinière is always abolishing things here, but political considerations are forgotten after one dies.

An hon. Member: They are not forgotten here.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Possibly they are not forgotten by Liberals sitting in the house, but they are forgotten by Liberals in all parts of Canada, and in fact by all people regardless of party affiliation. I ask the Prime Minister whether he will not bring this to the attention of the cabinet.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my right hon. friend that no one wants to abolish Sir John A. Macdonald, who stands pre-eminent in our history as one of the Fathers of Confederation. I think the suggestion the right hon. gentleman has made, and which has been under consideration for some time now, is a very good one indeed. I think we should act on it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the house allow me to say this to the Prime Minister: Thank you for that recognition and for that answer.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, after what has been said here, I move that we adjourn now.

• (3:50 p.m.)

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, December 20, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-231 to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—National transportation policy.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last evening clause 1 was under discussion.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to repeat what I said yesterday. I will limit my comments to the new Canadian Transport Commission, and once more urge the minister to have the proper agency take, as soon as possible, the necessary steps to force the railways to make their stations more presentable, by cleaning up the surroundings and painting the buildings so that the millions of visitors to our country may see something other than a series of slums, since that is what most of our stations are at present; indeed, they seem to belong to another day and age and are in the worst state of neglect.

I would also like to put on record—at the request of a correspondent—the transcript of a complaint which he made to the Board of Transport Commissioners with respect to the C.N.R. I have not had the opportunity to check personally the allegations in the complaint, but I nevertheless wish to put it on the record so that the proper authorities may make the necessary investigations and see if it is necessary to intervene, because the complaint seems serious enough. I repeat that it is the transcript of a complaint forwarded to the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada; the title reads as follows:

The C.N.R. is threatened with serious dangers.

I am complaining against the C.N.R. which, for the past two or three years, has not been providing adequate protection to train passengers and to its employees.

It is all due to the fact that the C.N.R. has decided to make some changes in the management of stations. It has centralized the work in certain stations and appointed terminal traffic managers, assistant terminal traffic managers, staff supervisors freight sales, to manage and supervise those stations. Those gentlemen are not qualified to fill those positions. They have control over operating agents and operators without having the required qualifications, because those appointed to such positions, express and freight agents, know nothing about the regulations governing the operation of trains.

In addition, those men have authority over agents and operators. It is shameful for the C.N.R. to do such things, because you, the Board of Transport Commissioners, have issued a manual of regulations on railway security that the operators and agents must know and put into practice. Those unqualified men who have authority over agents and operators often give orders against security. I feel that you, the Board of Transport Commissioners, should require the C.N.R. to appoint qualified persons to those positions.

Those terminal traffic managers and others are so ignorant in matters of railway security that they claim that operators must carry out orders last of all, and force them to become clerks.

I must say that with this new change, stations are farther apart, but those that remain have to take a lot of orders. But once again the terminal traffic managers—

Mr. Chairman, I apologize if that copy is not very clear.

—and the others do not seem to be aware of it and they are burdened with clerical work, which makes the position of operator most dangerous.

I trust you will take my letter into consideration, that you will demand of the C.N.R. that it appoint qualified people to supervise operating agents and operators.

If you do not obtain that from the railways, we can then expect the worst slaughters.

It is signed:

From a former C.N.R. employee.

Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to give the name and address to those concerned, if anyone is interested. But I put the letter on file, for it strikes me the accusation is warranted; it is serious and certainly deserves to be studied and looked into carefully.

Mr. Chairman, there may seem to be some disparity in the rest of my remarks, which I began to make last night, but as the order of procedure does not permit me to bring these matters to the attention of the government at other times, I take the opportunity to do so upon consideration of this bill.

Thus, I should like to make a remark concerning grade crossings, and I suggest that the new Canadian transport commission will have to review the grade crossings policy. I believe that municipalities are being required to pay a much larger share of the cost of construction of grade crossings than they can afford. Our Canadian municipalities are in a sort of financial strait jacket. They have about reached the limit of their investment capability and it seems to me, if railways want to go through our cities, that it is elementary that they should take care themselves of the costs incurred by such grade crossings it is intended to remove. I say grade crossings because that is what the act says, but they are eliminated mainly through the building of underpasses.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that it is unreasonable to ask the municipalities to assume part of the cost as they do now. Their share is exaggerated and prohibitive and should not be borne by the taxpayers but by the railway companies which must take steps to prevent accidents.

I would like to add that, under the present legislation, it takes far too long to secure the building of underpasses instead of grade crossings. Unless I am mistaken, it takes three years of negotiations to get an underpass instead of a grade crossing. That is much too long, Mr. Chairman, and it should be recommended to the Board of Transport Commissioners—I hope it has the power to do something—to take steps so as to shorten the negotiations and to lower the cost of building underpasses to eliminate grade crossings.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to join with all my colleagues who expressed the wish that grade crossings will disappear throughout the country as soon as possible. On many occasions I helped people who had just been involved in grade crossing accidents and all hon. members should have the opportunity to see those dismembered bodies to become convinced that it is urgent to remove grade crossings, whatever it might cost. The human capital we would protect by eliminating those grade crossings is worth far more than the millions of dollars it will take to eliminate them. I think that the new Board of Transport Commissioners should be instructed to take the necessary steps to get rid of grade crossings.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I presume the new transport commission will have some responsibility regarding winter shipping on the St. Lawrence. I will not speak in the same tone as was heard here. I refuse to spread hate or myths. I would not want to claim for my riding or my province anything at the expense of the other provinces. I am not blaming the government for winter shipping conditions, because I have followed winter shipping ever since it began. I must say—and I am not saying this only about the government but also about its predecessor—that shipping conditions on the St. Lawrence in winter have improved over the years. I am speaking advisedly because, everything considered, the riding I represent, Trois-Rivières, probably benefits more than any other from winter shipping.

The progress made in this field over the years is commendable. I think that my colleague who, the other day, raised the matter in a tone that shocked the whole house and the whole country was not too familiar with the problem. If he had been aware of the facts, he would have known that ships, at this time of year, or even when the St. Lawrence is more open to navigation than it is now, would not venture to ply through the ice of the river unless it has a reinforced hull; this is elementary, and anyone knowing anything about navigation knows it. Such ships are called icebreakers, but they are not really icebreakers. In fact, they are ships which northern countries build to sail icy seas. They are equipped with armour-plated hulls to be able to ply through the ice. That is why there is less navigation in winter.

But that was not exactly the point I wanted to raise. To be courteous toward the minister, and also to get used to speaking the English language, I will try to put my point across in English.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[English]

There is a real problem, Mr. Chairman—

[Translation]

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand French just as well as English.

[English]

Mr. Mongrain: I know that the minister very often extends to us the courtesy of speaking French, and I am trying to reciprocate as best I can.

There is a real problem about this winter navigation, and there is a lot of misunderstanding between those in the maritimes and cities along the St. Lawrence. I have been down to the maritimes and held discussions with all kinds of bodies. Some years ago I even conducted a forum over the television in Halifax and St. John's.

I suggest to the minister that either his department or the new transport commission convene at the earliest possible moment a meeting of responsible people from Halifax, St. John's or the other maritime ports who are interested in the subject, as well as responsible persons from the cities along the St. Lawrence such as Quebec, Trois-Rivières, Montreal and perhaps other places, to discuss this problem.

Personally, Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any conflict between the interested parties in both regions of Canada. If there is, then we can easily find solutions which will neither hurt the economy of the maritimes nor prevent development of navigation on the St. Lawrence, which in my opinion is a necessary development under present conditions. I do not think it is advisable that we should prevent, for any reason, the normal development of the economy of our country. I do not believe the development of winter navigation along the St. Lawrence would in any way hurt the maritimes if all interested parties would get together and discuss the problem with the responsible officers of the Department of Transport. As I say, if there are any problems I still insist they are minor and that solutions will be easily found to them.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I hope that once this commission is created it will deal as soon as possible with this problem, that may not be as acute as some may want us to believe, but that nevertheless deserves attention, since developments are still possible in that field.

I think the Canadian Transport Commission should also deal with air transport. In this connection, I would like to suggest that this commission, or those sub-commissions, should establish an overall policy as regards air fields. The present procedure is not very satisfactory. In view of the extensive development in air transport, I believe there are things the government should do in order to encourage not only the development of commercial airports, but also the building of certain runways, that could be called emergency runways, in secondary cities; this would be useful for increasing private air transport. More and more people or businessmen are travelling by air and it seems urgent to bring about a proliferation, so to speak, of those secondary runways that need not be built like those of Montreal, Sherbrooke, Trois-Rivières and Quebec airports. In certain cases, they would not have to be paved. But there should be some in cities of secondary importance. I do not wish to mention any names, so as not to hurt those of my colleagues representing such cities. But I believe this should be one of the responsibilities to be assigned to this new transport commission.

In any event, Mr. Chairman, I conclude by saying that the bill we are going to deal with is rather bulky and it will certainly bring about amendments, which is normal; but on the whole, it answers a need for standardization and even modernization and unification of services. It is therefore in this spirit that I intend to support it, even though I will have occasion to make a few other suggestions on minor points.

[English]

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, I should like to go on record at this point in the debate as saying that there are many philosophical aspects of this proposed transportation legislation with which I agree. I agree with the implicit attempt which is embraced by the legislation to give the railways of this country more freedom to compete for business without being inhibited by unnecessary regulation and control from the top. I agree with the emphasis that the proposed legislation places—as did the minister in his pronouncements in various parts of the country—upon a quest for a national transportation policy, upon the need for integrated planning among the various facets and arteries of our national transportation body, upon the importance of research in the transportation field, and upon the encouragement that is offered regional air carriers.

However, Mr. Chairman, I do have a fundamental objection to hurrying this proposed transportation legislation through the standing committee and through this house. As has been pointed out in this committee, there has been a surfeit of briefs and representations made to the standing committee on transportation and communications in regard to this legislation. My colleague from Acadia pointed out yesterday that some 3,000 pages of evidence were compiled and submitted to the standing committee. It has been, to say the least, difficult to assimilate and absorb the highly technical and in some instances highly expert body of information contained therein. The subject speaks for itself, when one deals with a piece of legislation as revolutionary as this, as revolutionary as the minister has stated it to be on occasion.

When one is exposed to some 3,000 pages of evidence and technical information in a limited period of time, it must be obvious to members of the committee that it is extremely difficult to absorb and understand the nuances and finer points of the subject. As a member of that standing committee and as a member of the committee of the house dealing with the legislation, I plead for more time to acquaint myself with the highly complicated subject at hand.

Having said that one of my objections at this stage is the hurry attached to the processing of the legislation in the house, I would emphasize that my main fear in connection with this legislation is for the shippers and consumers of western Canada. I ask the minister to what extent he feels it is safe, economical, practical or realistic to give the railways virtually complete freedom to compete for every freight dollar they can get. I submit that is the effect of the proposed legislation. It takes the shackles off the railways in this country. Here, I might say that many of us in the committee hearings have asked for an explanation of these shackles. We have never been satisfied what these shackles were in the minds of railway executives. But when these so-called shackles are later removed under the terms of this proposed legislation from the railway companies in this country, the companies will have free rein to charge what the traffic will bear, to fight for their own survival in a free, competitive environment, and presumably in a free and competitive national economic market.

As a member of the Conservative party, philosophically I am a believer in and supporter of the free enterprise system. I believe wherever possible free enterprise should be encouraged, stimulated and protected in this country. But I question whether, at this stage of our national development, in the particular economic crisis in which this country is involved at this time, in the particular stage of evolution of the railroads and development of their role in the building of Canada, it is advisable or in keeping with the best principles of the free enterprise system, to give those railroads carte blanche to compete for profits in the market place.

Bill C-231, like the abortive Bill C-120 preceding it, grew out of the recommendations of the MacPherson Royal Commission on Transportation. The MacPherson Royal Commission laid the groundwork, and did the basic research into problems connected with transportation in this country, that spawned Bill C-120 and subsequently Bill C-231. Circumstances in the railroad business and circumstances in every facet and every level of society have changed sharply since the MacPherson Royal Commission carried out these investigations. When the MacPherson Royal Commission looked into transportation problems, and railroad problems in particular, in this country the railroad industry was in serious trouble. I submit that this is hardly the case now. I do not think anybody in this committee can argue that the railroad industry is in serious financial trouble today. Its potential for profit, progress and success is unlimited. Witness the bumper wheat crops which have been Canada's good fortune in the past five to seven years; witness the huge wheat contracts signed with other countries round the world; witness, for example, the rise in the potash industry of Saskatchewan, a dream undreamed seven years ago when the MacPherson Commission began its investigation.

When this type of development appears in the Canadian economy, and when this type of progress and expansion has made itself felt, with all the impact of the three economic examples I have given; when other aspects of the economy have similarly progressed and expanded in the past seven years, naturally, in total and in combination they have a profound effect on the nation and on the sinews of its economy, such as the railroad companies.

The whole economic picture for the railroads in this country has changed for the better in the past seven years since the MacPherson Commission embarked on its deliberations and studies. Nobody could have envisaged seven years ago the potential profits and the potential, immeasurable financial successes available to the railroads of this country today.

Regardless of the reasons, regardless of the stimulus for the situation—call it an act of God, or what you will—resulting from our bumper wheat crops and our discoveries of potash, to take two examples, facts are facts. The whole economic picture has changed and the railways today can look forward to unprecedented business successes, and profits if you like, in the years ahead. As a consequence some of the basic concepts that went into Bill C-231 are now outdated. The thinking that spawned and generated this bill is similarly outdated; it does not apply to the economic situation in Canada today. The railroads are in an indisputably viable economic position now, and this point cannot be emphasized too strongly in our deliberations on the proposed legislation. I say it is wrong to judge the industry in the context of the economy and Canadian society existing in the years when the MacPherson Commission was first engaged on its investigations.

We are concerned in western Canada that Bill C-231 will give railroads carte blanche to charge whatever freight rates the traffic will bear. This has been an historic concern in communities of western Canada and that concern is no less important or acute in the prosperous west of today than it was in the struggling west of 40 or 50 years ago. In the standing committee on transport and communications where we were exposed to the pages of evidence to which I referred—the deliberations of that committee have been diligently attended by the minister—we have discussed this anxiety existing among western members of this house. So far, the fears of the west in this regard have not been allayed, sir.

We are particularly unhappy with the maximum rate formula prescribed by the new legislation, and with the mechanics by which it will be enforced. If I may be permitted the indulgence of referring to a communication from which I would like to quote directly, sir, I would underline the concern and the anxiety which we in the west feel on the subject of the maximum rate formula and its application.

As members of the transportation committee know, the counsel for the three prairie provinces, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, have been attempting for more than a year to obtain, through the Department of Transport, costing data from the railways relative to the proposed maximum rate formula. But accurate costing information has not been forthcoming. Therefore, on September 14 of this year, counsel for these three provinces wrote to the deputy minister of transport as follows, regarding Bill C-231—and I may say I am going to condense the communication but shall not paraphrase it:

> As counsel for the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, we wish to advise you of the strong views of our governments with respect to the maximum rate formula set forth in the proposed section 336 of this bill.
> We have participated in discussions with yourself and your officials since the early part of 1965. It became apparent at an early stage that there could be no meaningful consideration of the maximum rate formula proposed in the earlier bill C-120 unless the provinces had sufficient Canadian railway cost data to enable them to assess the practical effect of the formula.
> You will recall that the discussions in 1965 culminated with a conference between the premiers of the prairie provinces and the Atlantic provinces with the Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport and the associate minister of transport on July 19, 1965. At that time it was decided that the maximum rate formula would be reviewed in joint discussions between representatives of the Government of Canada and representatives of the provinces. It was understood that the discussions would be on an expert or technical level directed primarily to the practical effect of the formula on existing and prospective Canadian freight rates.
> Following this meeting, the prairie and Atlantic provinces retained two outstanding American authorities in this field, Professor Ernest Williams of Columbia University and Professor George Borts of Brown University. Both men have had extensive experience in Canada and participated in the presentations made to the MacPherson royal commission.
> The provinces were advised by their consultants that there could be no meaningful discussion of or comment upon the maximum rate formula unless certain cost data was made available to them for consideration and study.... The provinces are left in the position where they cannot prepare a meaningful presentation on the maximum rate formula for the consideration of the parliamentary committee. All that the provinces will be able to state to the parliamentary committee is that this essential cost information requested on the advice of experienced consultants has been refused. It would follow that the provinces must also say to the committee that the committee itself, in the absence of such information, is not in a position to validly assess the practical effect and long-term consequences of the maximum rate formula.... It is impossible to determine whether the proposed maximum rate formula will afford any protection to captive shippers. We strongly believe it will not. Whatever its effect, parliament is being asked to enact it without the slightest assurance that it will serve to remove the discrimination and distortion in the freight rate structure which was the reason for the creation of the royal commission.

There is considerably more in that communication than these paragraphs which I have quoted, but they constitute the essence of the message, and of the complaint and anxiety which we in western Canada feel about the maximum rate formula. If we could obtain this costing data we would have the opportunity to assess the impact of the formula, and the lack of this data has been one of the thorns which has stuck in the side of committee members since they began study of this legislation earlier this year.

This lack of data has been a roadblock to us in our pursuit of a reasoned judgment and assessment of the legislation. Apparently, there has been no inclination on the part of the railroads, or on the part of the government itself, to make this costing data available. On the contrary, it has been emphasized fairly strenuously that such costing data will not be available. In the light of that fact, we submit it becomes a purely academic exercise for us in the standing committee, or for members in committee of the whole house, to try to assess properly all of the key points and all of the key clauses in this revolutionary piece of legislation.

What does this maximum rate formula mean? What will its impact be on shippers? How can we answer unless we have the mathematical information necessary to proceed with a reasoned and intelligent study of that point?

Another aspect of the legislation with which we are distinctly unhappy is the definition of the term "captive shipper." This is also a point which was argued strenuously and long in the deliberations of the standing committee, but on which we have still not achieved the satisfaction that is necessary if we are to assess the legislation properly.

It is probably a question of semantics. The minister has stated on occasion that when entreaties have been made to certain of the western provinces to suggest to the government, or to the standing committee, some shippers that they feel would fall into the captive category there has been no haste on the part of those provinces to supply such a list. I hope I am not attributing a sense to the remarks of the minister which is not correct, but I believe this is the essence of what he said on this subject to the committee. Probably one reason there has been no attempt by the provinces, or by the shippers themselves, to classify themselves as captive at this stage of the deliberations is that they are reluctant to tip their hand with respect to legislation that has not been passed.

Another point on which I am distinctly unhappy—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question about that?

Mr. Sherman: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not quarrel with what he said about shippers, but a formal request was made. I think the hon. gentleman probably has the document with him, and I also have it here somewhere. A formal request was made to the provincial governments to submit samples of those persons now paying class rates whom they believed would be likely to be captive shippers. I think the hon. gentleman made a very good paraphrase of what I said, but I thought I would like to have the actual phrase on the record.

Mr. Sherman: I appreciate the minister's explanation of that point. I think it is valuable to have the actual statement of the minister on the record in this context, and I thank him for injecting it into the debate at this stage.

Sir, another point on which we in the west are distinctly unhappy is the scale of rates and the extent to which they will go up for a captive shipper. Under the legislation as it is presently worded, the maximum rate imposed on a captive shipper would consist of the variable costs plus 150 per cent, on 30,000 lb. carload lots. Evidence submitted by experts in this field, including the two United States experts referred to in the communication from which I quoted a few moments ago, plus argument from counsel for the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, have demonstrated to us that this particular rate which the railroads may charge will go up in an explosive fashion on carload lots over 30,000 pounds.

For example, on carload lots of 140,000 pounds, the maximum rate imposed on a captive shipper would consist of the variable costs of the shipment itself plus a surcharge of more than 600 per cent, and not the 150 per cent as in the case of the 30,000 pound carload lots. These are the mathematics of the formula, based on the differences in the basic costs to the railroads themselves when dealing with carload lots of certain sizes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. gentleman would not wish to create a wrong impression. He suggested the rates would go up on these larger shipments. Of course, as I am sure he realizes, the actual rate would go down, but the mathematical proportion he has given, I think, is quite accurate.

Mr. Sherman: The return to the railways themselves.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right.

Mr. Sherman: The profit figure for the railroads would increase by that much. Also in the west, we are distinctly concerned with the manner of appeal by a shipper against his rate, provided by this legislation, and the difficulty involved in proving public interest. In one particular clause in this bill, for which I am searching at the moment and which I have at my fingertips—

Mr. Pickersgill: Clause 16.

Mr. Sherman: No; clause 55 on page 52 of the bill, where it refers to amendments to the Railway Act. I read:

> The said act is further amended by adding thereto immediately after section 338 thereof the following section:
> "338A. (1) Any person, if he has reason to believe that a tariff of tolls for the carriage of passengers of a company, or the conditions attached to the carriage of passengers in such a tariff, are prejudicial to the public interest, may apply to the commission for leave to appeal such a tariff or conditions, and the commission, if it is satisfied that a prima facie case has been made, may grant leave to appeal and may make such investigation of such tariff or conditions as in its opinion may be warranted.

Now, we submit that it is demonstrably difficult, if not well nigh impossible, for a private company or private individual with private interests in the market to prove public interest. How does one go about proving public interest to the satisfaction of the commission? Does public interest, for example, mean that only the province of Alberta, the province of Saskatchewan, the province of Manitoba, or a comparable body can make the appeal? A private company would have difficulty to prove public as opposed to private interest. It is difficult to find any legal concept of what would be public interest. There are cases which say that private interest definitely is not public interest.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to point out to him that the clause from which he was reading refers to the carriage of passengers. I think the clause he really wants is clause 16 of the bill where the language is slightly different. It is the clause which refers to carriage of freight.

Mr. Sherman: I appreciate the distinction which the minister has drawn, but in terms of the concern felt in the west in respect to various parts of this legislation, I do not see that it makes that much difference whether we are referring to clause 16 or clause 55.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope the hon. gentleman does not mind my interruptions. I am not trying to be controversial. I think it does matter, because if you look at subclause (3) of clause 16 you will see that in this clause we have accepted almost exactly the language used in the Manitoba brief. This is not in the clause which deals with passengers, because it really is not relevant to passengers but is relevant simply to freight. I think, therefore, in order to deal with the point, the hon. gentleman would prefer to follow clause 16.

Mr. Sherman: Well, I looked at clause 16 at the same time I looked at clause 55. On the basis of our studies in Manitoba with relation to this proposed legislation, we still do not feel satisfied on this particular point.

I am prepared, however, to discuss this subject independently with the minister at a different time. I can assure you that in the opinion of the western shippers, and in the opinion of the counsel for the three prairie provinces to which I have referred, we still are not satisfied that the clause to which the minister refers removes the danger and the threat to certain aspects of the economic position in western Canada which we feel are affected unfavourably by this proposed legislation.

I should like to say also that I share the concern expressed by the hon. member for Acadia yesterday on the question of branch line abandonments. This is a point which I should like to discuss at a further stage in the deliberations. I am not going to elaborate on that subject at the moment. I believe the case was put eloquently yesterday by the hon.

member for Acadia. I am sure that in subsequent deliberations in respect of this legislation there will be an opportunity for us to reinforce the western point of view and western concern with regard to branch line abandonments.

I might say that the three prairie provinces have waged a tireless campaign for justice and satisfaction in respect of branch line abandonments and in respect of many of the other points to which reference has been made in these past few moments. So far, there still is the anxiety, concern and fear in the west to which I already have made reference. There still is anxiety, concern and fear that the new legislation frees the railways to an extent which will redound to the disadvantage of western shippers and western consumers.

When these new maximum rates are imposed, the question arises as to how they will be borne. When new freight rates are imposed at any time at any point, the question arises as to how they will be borne and who will bear them. One concern we have is that the anticipated rate increases will be buried in the economy of western Canada; that if certain shippers in the west are classified as captive shippers, either through their own appeal or through a classification being imposed upon them from without, they will pay rates which they cannot afford, and the effect of these rates will be buried in our economy. It is feared that this exercise will militate to the disadvantage of western Canada. The fear is that the rates will be buried in higher prices charged by the manufacturers and shippers themselves, and that they will also be reflected in lower wages on the prairies.

We feel that these economic problems are acute and very important ones at the present time in western Canada where a whole region of the country is attempting to win for itself an equal share in terms of national development in this nation. The result of higher freight rates will certainly be higher living costs for all. In this connection, in the few minutes remaining to me, I would also mention the importance of the new railway wage settlement which recently has been announced, and the effect it will have on the western consumer and the western freight rate payers.

As I understand it, the new agreement in respect of the 70,000 member brotherhood of railroad trainmen and the 55,000 residual non-operating group is to provide wage boosts of 24 per cent for unskilled workers and 28 per cent for skilled workers over a three year period. Similar settlements for wages and fringe benefits were reached earlier this month by federal mediator Carl Goldenberg with the 25,000 member shop craft union group. An agreement in respect of the 20,000 member Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport and General Workers is still to be settled.

The non-operating groups, totalling 100,000, were averaging $2.22 per hour before this increase went through. The 20,000 trainmen were averaging $3 per hour over a three year period. By simple arithmetic, it can be determined that under these new wage contracts the railways are faced with meeting a payroll over the next three years which will amount to tens of millions of dollars more than anticipated. Simple experience tells us where they are going to go to find that extra revenue, to meet that additional expense. They will go to the freight shipper, as a result of which freight rates will go up.

Western Canada, because of its long-haul position and its dependence on the railroads, is going to suffer most. The long-haul shipper must suffer because of his fundamental dependence on the railways of this country for shipping the bulk of his produce. He is the one who will really bear the burden of this wage increase. This is a classic position of discrimination against western shippers and consumers. The MacPherson commission was intended, among other things, to remedy this historical imbalance. The intention was to eliminate this discrimination which caused an increase in prices to consumers.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has now expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have the opinion the hon. member has almost completed his remarks. Perhaps the committee would allow him to conclude.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that the hon. member be allowed to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sherman: I thank the minister and members of the committee for their indulgence, and I should like to say that I have reached the final moments of my remarks.

The MacPherson commission was set up in large part to do away with this element of discrimination against shippers in certain parts of the country, such as western Canada. Some of the most energetic studies of the MacPherson royal commission were undertaken with this end in view. Western Canada finds itself in a position where, despite what the MacPherson commission recommended in terms of establishing a national economy which was equitable, and despite its own attempts to create an equitable transportation system in this country, it must still face today the difficulties of an ancient inequity so far as transportation costs in this country are concerned.

Let me, therefore, make a plea at this stage of the debate, on behalf of western shippers, that a go-slow approach be taken to this legislation. I appreciate how important it is from the minister's point of view, and perhaps from the point of view of the nation. But in order to come to some determination in respect of this important bill which has taken years to formulate, it is important that we consider these wide-sweeping and revolutionary changes very carefully. We should approach them with reasonableness and expertise. On behalf of every consumer, housewife and shipper in western Canada therefore, I ask that this whole situation, as well as every aspect of this proposed situation, be considered thoroughly before any final disposition of this legislation is made.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before you recognize the hon. member for Halifax perhaps I could be allowed to ask the last speaker a question. I do not expect him to answer it now, but I should like him to reflect on it during the vacation between now and January 9 when we will again be considering this bill. Does the hon. member think that the consequences to western Canada would be more appropriate if we continued with this present legislation instead of making these changes? I ask this question with the thought in mind that the presently frozen rates obviously cannot be continued in view of the pressure to which the hon. member has referred as a result of specific wage increases which would require a general horizontal increase.

Mr. Sherman: Let me respond by saying that my thinking in respect of this whole question is conditioned by the environment from which I come. I do not speak just for myself, but for the constituents and the region I represent. A great many people there, who are more informed than I, have extreme anxiety in respect of the ramifications of this bill so far as western Canada is concerned. Surely, we need a great deal of time to consider all the aspects of it. Frankly, I do not have the expertise, and I need time to acquire it. Let me assure the minister that during the Christmas recess, when I am not fulfilling my domestic responsibilities I will reflect on his question and continue my study of this bill. Perhaps, when I return to this committee in the new year, I will come in a spirit of conciliation and co-operation. The minister may indeed be surprised at the change in my demeanor.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, my remarks this afternoon will be parochial and provincial. I intend to deal, as the minister has likely anticipated, with matters of broad but direct concern to the ports of Halifax and Saint John. I wish to refer not only to the effect of this bill on rail transportation, but the general effect on all things relating to winter navigation on the St. Lawrence. I then intend to refer to the adequacy or inadequacy of our port facilities, grain facilities, piers, back-up landings and so on.

It has been said many times in this chamber by more eloquent speakers than I, in the context of the bill before us regarding the economic impact of this situation on the city of Halifax, that the local environment has much to do with the efficiency of rail transportation. Let me point out to members briefly once again the extent of the economic impact in these areas of transportation facilities.

In the wintertime thousands of people are employed in the general field of transportation, including about 1,200 longshoremen, 900 to 1,000 freight handlers, the National Harbours Board staff, the steamship agency people, the tugs pilots, customs and immigration staff, railway employees, railway checkers, freight handlers, truckers, men employed in ship repairing, maintenance yards, freight forwarders and a vast range of other individuals including ships chandlers, and equipment suppliers to lumber yards which are partly dependent on the marine business. It has been estimated in two or three studies that if you bring all these people together some 8,000 to 10,000 people are indirectly affected by the norms of the port of Halifax. With regard to those directly affected, however, in terms of people drawing salaries and receiving direct benefit from the port, the estimate is around 3,000 jobs at winter peak traffic periods and about 1,000 during the peak summer periods.

In terms of money, with general cargo volume running in the order of 1¼ million tons annually, as it has been for the last year or so, it can be reliably estimated that revenue accruing to the local economy in the first instance—this is the direct benefit—is of the order of $16¼ million. Bulk cargo is running around 7¾ million tons. This bulk cargo will create another $2 million to $2¼ million, making in all a direct value to the port and the local economy of some $18 million annually. This is direct money, money that has the effect of diffusing itself throughout the economy. The figure of $18 million is a fairly conservative one; it could be higher, and indeed we wish it were.

It has been reliably estimated by the Port of Halifax Commission and other studies, one of which was carried out for the Atlantic Development Board a couple of years ago, that the further implementation and encouragement of year-round navigation on the St. Lawrence river will substantially cut into this volume to the extent of some 30 per cent to 40 per cent. Here again, I use a conservative estimate; some people have suggested it could go as high as 60 per cent to 70 per cent. In terms of the frozen position in which we find ourselves with regard to general traffic through our port, the latter figure I mentioned is more likely to be the accurate one.

In terms of tonnage we will take the more conservative figure of 30 per cent to 40 per cent. This will mean a drop from 1¼ million tons annually to fewer than 750,000, tons the economic consequences of which to the port would indeed be very grave and serious. It can be seen quite readily that this is a serious matter for the port of Halifax. The port is indeed one of the main economic sectors in the area. If it falls into a loss position of this order, or even worse, there is no possible way other than by government planning, to regain or recoup our position.

The loss of some 500,000 tons of general cargo would represent, at current approximate rates of pay, some 400,000 longshoremen hours at approximately $3 an hour, or $1,200,000 in direct pay and compensation. But the over-all revenue that would be lost to the ports could be of the order of $6,500,000. These figures are based upon the current rate of some $13 a ton for the handling of cargo in Halifax.

Substantiation of these figures may be found in a study by J. Cates and Associates, a consulting firm who carried out a study for the Atlantic Development Board in 1964. In their report to the Atlantic Development Board, they estimated that the ports of Saint John and Halifax have experienced a combined loss due to the direct and indirect effect of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river and the gulf of some 150,000 to 250,000 short tons per season of trans-shipment or through-cargo. Because of the difficulty of estimating what the traffic patterns of the Atlantic and lower St. Lawrence river ports, chiefly Quebec, Trois-Rivières and Montreal would have been in the absence of winter navigation, the assessment of traffic loss must be regarded solely as broad approximations, but nevertheless relatively accurate.

It is considered by the consultants that however you look at it, the approximate loss of 200,000 short tons is a reasonable estimate of the annual traffic that we have lost since the extension of winter icebreaking on the St. Lawrence river. In terms of dollars and cents, the same consultants have advised the Atlantic Development Board that on a seasonal basis this would represent a loss each year of some $3 million of direct income to the port economies and some 3,600 man-months of seasonal employment. This is an area that has long been close to the minister's heart, I am sure. His record inside and outside the house has been commensurate with the extent of its seriousness.

It can be seen from this that any further attempt at this time to extend, encourage, foster or fail to impede the extension of navigation on the St. Lawrence river, without first having committed some public authority, and in this case it must be the federal authority, to sound planning with regard to Halifax and Saint John will have a disastrous effect. I think the minister knows well what the feelings are in Halifax and Saint John. We accept the position—we accept it more privately, admittedly, than we do publicly—that we cannot continue to fight the battle against the ports of Montreal, Quebec, Trois-Rivières, and so on, too much longer. It is incumbent upon us, however, to fight that battle so long as the government has not clearly enunciated its plans for the ports of Halifax and Saint John. I will deal with that matter in a little more depth later on.

In its submission to the transportation committee, the Port of Halifax Commission dealt with this question. Perhaps I might interject here briefly to say that this committee has been sitting for some months, I think with considerable success, and is deserving of the praise of the members of the house and all the people of Canada. The committee worked hard and long and listened to many learned papers, briefs and positions on this new and very complex bill that is before us. Not having been a member of that committee, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to express my appreciation and thanks for the work they did. Among the briefs the transportation committee received was one from the Port of Halifax Commission. In their brief they took the opportunity to raise, in their terminology, an extremely strong objection to the federal government's new bill, claiming that it is diametrically opposed to the intention and objectives of national policy for overcoming the geographical disadvantage of this area. This matter was alluded to by the previous speaker. Indeed, the western populace are not the only ones who suffer from this disadvantage. The geographical disadvantage has prevailed in the maritimes since before Confederation. There is no need for me to reiterate the promises that were made in such glowing terms prior to our taking advantage of the opportunity to join the partnership of Confederation some 101 years ago.

The Port of Halifax Commission pointed out to the committee that the bill would tend very definitely to increase the general level of railway rates in the Atlantic provinces as compared to the other parts of Canada. As the minister knows only too well the effects of this would be to make it much more difficult for the industry in that region, for the merchants and manufacturers, to sell and deal in the great market which exists in this part of Canada. They put forth the proposition that it would bring about a situation which would permit the railways to set what they termed as outrageously high maximum rates without giving satisfactory protection to the captive shippers in the Atlantic region. They expressed their fears particularly with regard to that sector of the shipping community which is involved with higher loading weights per car. We know only too well from earlier studies on Bill C-120 and earlier hearings in the committee the degree to which shippers in the maritimes can be termed captive shippers. We know that we sit on the long, cold, abandoned end of that pole. We do not enjoy the degree of trucking competition which has kept the brakes on the railway companies so satisfactorily in other parts of Canada.

We fear that, lacking truck competition and competition from other forms of transportation in the maritime regions, the railways will be free to use this massive Yankee Stadium of a playground, and indeed it is their business to make money. Nobody objects to the principle of making money in business. Businessmen are not in it for charity. However, it is the absence of protection for our people, which is automatically built in through truck competition in other parts of Canada, and the absence of further protection in the bill, which gives some concern to the people in the maritimes.

The commission also expressed the fear that what remains of the existing port parity tendencies on the part of the government not only tends to disappear but will disappear completely and forever. I was very pleased to hear the minister refer in his opening remarks to the concern expressed by the senior member for Halifax. I am a little regretful that the minister did not spell out a little more clearly what he intended by this statement. Perhaps, while he is sitting there listening, I could draw to his attention section 42 of the agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company in 1903, one of the provisions of which reads as follows:

> —the through rate on export traffic, from the point of origin to the point of destination, shall at no time be greater via Canadian ports than via United States ports.

This remains one of the few statutory bases for our position. Indeed section 13, chapter 6, Acts of 1911, regarding the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company, provided that:

> —the through rate on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall at no time be greater via Canadian ports than via United States ports.

Again, this is a word for word repetition. Chapter 20, Acts of 1914, regarding the Canadian Northern Railway System, provided that:

> —the through rate on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall not be greater via Canadian ports than it would be via United States ports;... and that the Canadian Northern and the several constituent and subsidiary companies shall not in any manner within its power or control directly or indirectly advise or encourage the transportation of any such freight by routes other than those above provided.

Also Section 14 (2), of the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act, first edition, volume VIII, Chapter 25 provided that:

> The board of directors shall so direct, provide and procure that all freight destined for export by sea which is consigned within Canada for carriage to National Railways either at point of origin or between that and the sea shall, unless it has been by its shippers specifically routed otherwise, be exported through Canadian seaports.

As the senior member for Halifax has pointed out—and I am sure he will bring it to the minister's attention again early in the new year—we would like to know whether this policy will be continued and what guarantee the bill may contain to ensure that this is done.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the hon. member let me repeat what I said yesterday in this regard? It is my intention to propose an amendment when we reach the appropriate place in the bill to the effect that every advantage as to rates or routing now enjoyed by the Atlantic ports by any law now in effect will continue to be in effect notwithstanding anything in this bill. Of course, these are not the actual words which I used, but the sense.

Mr. Forrestall: I thank the minister for that statement. I accepted it yesterday with the hope that the minister might go a little further and specifically spell out the form of the port parity policy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman not think that we ought to allow these experts, to whom we are paying a considerable sum of money, to make proposals to us next March for general improvements in the Atlantic region and in this way earn their pay rather than try to anticipate their conclusions?

Mr. Forrestall: Not at all, Mr. Chairman. I am not at all sure what it is they will do, and as a maritimer in whose constituency lies the port of Halifax I am not about to accept in principle a pig in a poke. I have greater confidence in what the minister is able to tell the House of Commons during the next two or three weeks. I would far sooner accept that, and hope that the special study which is being conducted will take due note of the minister's responsible directions. After all it is Christmas time; perhaps the minister could at least indicate to us that this is a matter close to his heart and is receiving his fondest, warmest and most charitable consideration.

Mr. Chairman, in most respects the bill accommodates railway transportation. At a later stage I will make one or two comments about the facilities in the port of Halifax, but at this point I would like to say a few words on the hearings of the committee with regard to the broad scope of the bill. I suggest to the minister that it was regrettable, not only to me but I am sure to many others in the chamber that during the course of the hearings briefs and papers were not encouraged, or indeed invited—maybe there was not enough time—from various segments of our air transportation industry. I refer to our main line domestic and international carriers, to our regional air carries, but more specifically to the aviation field in general, the charter companies.

If you would review, Mr. Chairman, some of the national statistics relating to class 4 air carriers you would find that they are performing a role in Canada, the absence of which would indeed impose very strong hardship on vast segments of our rural and northern life.

It seems to me that on a bill of this magnitude, which sets out to reshape the administrative responsibilities for all forms of transportation in Canada, the committee not only could have but should have set aside at least two or three hearings for the purpose of exploring views of our main line carriers as well as the smaller regional and charter companies.

For example, Mr. Chairman, domestic policy, which still falls within the purview of the air transport board, has suffered from change, innovation, amendment and goodness knows what else for so long now, without any proper public exposition of this policy, that it is not only regrettable but quite lamentable that some occasion has not been provided the air transport industry within the recent weeks to put forward their positions. I think the government should have taken the lead in the matter and invited, indeed encouraged, their representatives to come before the committee. The fact that this has not been done will, I hope, not prevent the minister in any way from pursuing this question at some stage early in the new year.

Most of us welcomed his position paper on regional air policy. We found in it some most meaningful and helpful directional instruments. But this is just one segment of air policy; there are at least two others, possibly three, deserving of and requiring similar attention. It seems to me that this was the time this attention should have been given.

For example, Mr. Chairman, we should be looking at the adequacy of our air terminals, runways, refuelling facilities, passenger handling capacities and distances from airports to urban centres. Problems in air traffic control still exist. But the whole spectrum of flying has been ignored in the sense that none of the industry's representatives in this field participated in the committee hearings which have now brought us to this stage. Again, I suggest this is regrettable.

There are one or two other areas about which I wish to speak which deal primarily with facilities in the port of Halifax. The minister knows all too well the difficulties the port of Halifax experienced during the shipping season 1964-65 resulting from cramped facilities, overcrowding and the total inadequacy of the port to cope with the traffic which came to it. This came about accidentally; we had not anticipated the strikes and bad weather which diverted the traffic which came our way. Indeed, it is true that in the last shipping season matters straightened themselves out, and the appointment of a co-ordinator for the harbour board was most effective. I hope the accomodation provided by this bill in relation to the internal functioning of the National Harbours Board will permit the expansion of this type of assistance directly at the port level.

This year the port of Halifax does not appear to be overcrowded; but the experience of the 1964-65 season pointed up the need, as I suggested earlier, for total studies of the port from the point of view of having an effective land usage-waterfront usage formula involving not only Halifax but Dartmouth and the basin itself. We are aware, because of the obvious economic advantages, of the necessity for keeping contained within a close-knit group the customs buildings, the ship handlers, the ship brokers and those engaged in ship movement in and out of port. Now is the time that the minister and his department should be looking very seriously at an over-all program of development and utilization of the facilities that we have in Halifax.

The type of shipping season we have enjoyed in the past has been the traditional one. Our harbour has accommodated the 7,000, 8,000, 10,000, 15,000 and 16,000 deadweight-ton ships; the old, traditional variety which we see pictured on canvas lying tied up in the ports all over the world. But, Mr. Chairman, this day has gone. The traditional utilization of small, economic units of 8,000 to 10,000 tons employed for the trans-shipment of bulk cargoes and large general cargoes is quickly coming to an end.

When the minister was in Halifax earlier this month to speak on Atlantic ports day he soft-pedalled a policy which, while it was not the most palatable in the world, the people in Halifax and Saint John accepted. We are aware—and the minister's admonition to us was quite acceptable—that if we are going to survive in Halifax we must find survival in the process of innovation, of the acceptance of new forms of cargo handling, containerization, bulk transportation and the integral train. All of these things—

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired. Does the committee—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I suspect the hon. gentleman had only one more paragraph, and I think we should like to hear it.

Mr. Forrestall: May I conclude by saying that we are approaching the era of 100,000-ton, indeed of up to 300,000-ton, vessels. The economics of this type of ship cannot be denied. To my knowledge no harbour other than, perhaps, Portland, Maine, which concerns itself with deep water naval operations, that is developed or even partially developed and lies between the minister's good province and Florida has the accommodation and the natural advantage that we enjoy with regard to deep water in the port of Halifax.

• (5:20 p.m.)

If the bill before us, and the general policy embodied in it, does not embrace this concept in a functional way we shall lose the advantage this port may be able to gain over ports of the United States. The United States will build ports to accommodate the types of traffic I have mentioned. We know that considerable, or even massive investment will have to be made. Piers must be redesigned, back-up land acquired and land reclaimed in the interests of accommodating a large port. If we fail to do this some other port, very likely in another country, will carry out such a program and will reap the benefits of it. I trust that the minister will do all in his power to encourage plans or policies leading to the accommodation in the port of Halifax of the types of shipping I have mentioned. If the minister does this we shall let him plow out the sea lanes all the way to Montreal with complete regularity. Instead of going to some other place, when the minister leaves us I hope he might consider heading the commission in question. We should love having a maritimer on it.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to say that I am pleased the minister is in his place. My remarks will be directed to him almost exclusively because I believe he is the last hope we have in the house of bringing in changes desperately needed in this bill. It falls to my lot to introduce my remarks with rather harsh comments dealing with a definite commitment made by the minister, that there would be no proceedings relating to applications for abandonment of lines in western Canada until this bill was completed. Though the matter has been raised—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman quote my exact words?

Mr. Hamilton: The minister wishes me to quote what?

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman quote my exact words?

Mr. Hamilton: I shall do that in a minute. These remarks are not aimed at the minister, as will be seen in a minute. I point out that there was an understanding that during the discussion of the bill certain things were not to be done. We hoped that a new philosophy would be in effect, and that a new type of thinking in this bill would be brought to bear on these lines being considered for abandonment. What we have seen in recent weeks, I think, can only be described as a breach of faith.

I am going to read some letters. The first letter I became aware of is dated December 6, 1966, from the Secretary Treasurer of 9 Rural Municipality in Saskatchewan, addressed to C. W. Rump, Secretary of the Board of Transport Commissioners. The letter reads:

Dear Sir:

Application for leave to abandon Hatton Subdivision, C.P.R.

We are in receipt of a letter from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under the date of November 21, 1966, in which an application for leave to abandon Hatton Subdivision has been made to you, the Board of Transport Commissioners.

I will not read the balance of the letter because it has no bearing on the point I was making.

On December 14, 1966, the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek received a letter from C. W. Rump, secretary to the board, referring to the Hatton Subdivision. The letter reads in part as follows:

The above mentioned application is on file with the Board. The Company has advised that a copy of the application and supporting documents were sent to various interested parties. The supporting information has been updated to 1965.

I want the committee to pay particular attention to this following paragraph:

The line is in the "eligible for abandonment" category without waiting upon the passage of Bill C-231 and the Board is prepared to proceed with the application.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

It is this statement by the secretary of the board which caused some of our members to feel that we were being double crossed with respect to the understanding we thought we had with the minister. I wish to quote the exact words of the minister on this subject, and I shall read from the standing committee records of Friday, June 19, 1964, at page 283.

Mr. Pickersgill: 1964?

Mr. Hamilton: I will not read the entire statement, but only the relevant part:

I have given an undertaking on behalf of the government, so long as the present government is in office, that there will be no abandonment on the prairies of these branch lines until the legislation which is now before the house has been disposed of.

The reference was to Bill C-120. About that legislation you can argue, on strict interpretation, that once it was flung out it was disposed of. I have an exact quotation of the minister of September 2, 1966. I refer to unrevised Hansard of that date, page 8034. Some part of this I can leave out without falsifying the minister's intention.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would it not be better to quote it straight through?

Mr. Hamilton: Very well. I shall read more than I had intended. I did not wish to condemn the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand.

Mr. Hamilton: I was going on to something else. I quote:

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is awfully good to let me intervene at this point to answer his question,—

This was when I had posed the terms under which we might consider passing second reading.

—and I appreciate it very much. I saw the presidents of the railways this morning, but for another reason. I took advantage of the meeting to ask them whether I might be permitted to say that on the very day on which this legislation passed they would withdraw all their existing applications for abandonment on the prairies and that they would revise their applications in the light of the decisions made by parliament and put forward in the legislation, not as it stands at the moment necessarily but as it emerges from the committee and is passed by parliament. I was given the authority of the presidents of the railways to say that that would be done.

That is a statement from the record of what the minister said.

In other words, all those applications which are in suspension, none of which is being proceeded with, will be withdrawn on the day the legislation is completed. I think it is only fair that they should wait until then, because they would prejudice their own position if they acted and if we did not proceed with the legislation.

It is clear from that, I think, that the minister was trying to say these new applications, or these applications in question, would be judged on the basis of the new legislation as it emerged from the house.

Then on December 20, yesterday, the minister made another remark following his opening statement, as recorded on page 11373 of Hansard:

Then, there is the question of the undertaking given by the railways to withdraw all their applications for branch line abandonment on the so-called protected lines. They have given an undertaking to withdraw them as soon as this bill receives the royal assent, and they have so signified before the transport commissioners.

This deals with the protected lines. I am quoting from the minister's statement of September 2.

That undertaking is, of course, contingent upon the pasage of the legislation. I am glad to say that the Board of Transport Commissioners, as a result of the intervention I made when the measure was brought up here in the house, has agreed not to hear any applications for abandonment in the prairie provinces while this bill is before parliament.

It is my contention that when the minister said he took this up with the board and they would not hear any applications, the reference is to the September 2 statement of the minister. Therefore, I think some of the members, including myself, had a right to feel that we had received an indication of action on the part of the Board of Transport Commissioners that was not too helpful to our confidence in the promises, made over and over again, that this bill would be setting up new types of thinking. Then, the new board could deal with these applications on the basis of the new type of thinking that we produced out of the committee and out of the house.

The minister must be aware that we have had reason to be suspicious, and I say this not too unkindly because the minister, like it or not, over the years has developed the reputation of being unable to resist an opportunity to move pretty fast and take short corners. But since not only the people of the maritimes but of the west, in fact all the people of Canada, depend so much on this bill, we should try to work on the assumption that if we work together to produce the best bill we can, then the minister's reputation and the house's reputation will be more greatly enhanced than if the minister tries to lead us to pass the bill and then we find ourselves in a trap.

I do not think there is any question but that the bill before us is the first one since the passage of the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act which deals with fundamental questions relating to railways and all types of transportation. I know the minister wants to have a good bill. I know he has been working hard to try to understand every form of transportation, but I am suggesting that the action of the secretary of the Board of Transport Commissioners in saying, "We are now proceeding with those applications", was such as to alarm us all. I only hope that all these letters which have been sent out, and which have caused that fear that I referred to in my speech on second reading, will be recalled.

We will be rational, you may be certain of that. But we have certain responsibilities here to make sure that when we pass a bill we do not find ourselves led to the slaughter. I have sat in the house and heard the fear expressed by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert and the hon. members for Halifax. This fear is equally held in the west.

We will help in making and passing a good bill. But we want the conviction in our hearts that, if we turn all this power over to the national transportation commission, we will not have this situation arise in which the minister says no consideration will be given to present applications by the present board, only to have an employee of the board send out letters like that which I have just quoted. This breaks down the trust that there must be.

The Board of Transport Commissioners must have ignored the minister's statement on September 2, or jumped when the Canadian Pacific moved. We have to face the fact that what has caused the lack of respect for the Board of Transport Commissioners over the years is that when original guide lines were set out by parliament for their decisions these were guides for making judicial decisions. Over the years what has created the trouble is that the precedents set up by the board's decisions have carried the force of law which has not been made by parliament. In effect the board made its own law, and in a good many cases that law was the law of the railways. Railway figures and opinions were always accepted as fact.

We did not have the experts who could match the competence of the railway experts.

No one blames anybody for this, but the fact remains that all over this country where people are knowledgeable on matters coming before the Board of Transport Commissioners these people have always felt—and this suspicion is not only a suspicion, it is almost an article of faith—that the board has been at the jump and call of the railways.

This letter which was sent, just because the C.P.R. made a move, was, I think, a direct slap in the face to the minister. If I were in his position there would be a serious reprimand given to the Board of Transport Commissioners for having made such a fool of the minister. I have to say these things, Mr. Chairman, because, if we are going to proceed with this bill with confidence, we have to realize we are drafting legislation not only for railway transportation but for all forms of transport, affecting tremendous segments of the whole national economy.

We have tried to be helpful, and the minister can continue to get our help. In the standing committee some 48 amendments have been made, mostly from the government side because it has the staff to draft the amendments. I think the minister has said there will be five more from the government, and I believe there are 14 more coming from our group alone. This means that there is a serious effort on the part of the parties in opposition to be constructively helpful. All we are asking in exchange is that we have no more of this type of hanky-panky that brings all these suspicions of 60 years up to the surface again. We know we are handing over our very future to this national transportation commission. I would like to believe that it will be embarking on its history with some feeling of good will.

In my remarks on second reading, I tried to put forward a general attitude which I would like to emphasize as a preliminary to my main remarks this afternoon. I emphasized that the pessimism of the last 40 years regarding railway operations in Canada should end. I pointed out that traditionally railway management itself, traditionally the economists of this country, and traditionally government officials have felt that railways were a declining part of the whole transportation picture. There was a great deal of evidence to bear out this pessimism, but many of us are concerned about this bill because it reflects that pessimistic attitude instead of taking up the attitude that the facts now warrant.

The facts now warrant the assumption on the part of those drafting the legislation, and that is the members here, that there is going to be tremendous growth and expansion in all our transportation agencies, not least of which are our railways. Without repeating in great detail some of the evidence, let me remind the committee of some of the salient facts.

There is a tremendous difference in the economy of railways when they are hauling 400 million bushels of grain a year as compared with when they are hauling 800 million bushels a year, because the railways are largely a fixed cost industry. If you can double the amount of volume you tremendously increase the per unit profit in the carrying of those goods. With the tremendous flood of money that has gone into the prairies over this last five years there has been a tremendous increase in the back-haul of machinery, fertilizer and all the other things that make a back-haul profitable to the railways.

I outlined on second reading the tremendous development of minerals in Canada, the tremendous demand for these minerals all over the world, and the tremendous bulk hauling of them available to the railways which is very profitable. I outlined the tremendous need in the world for our paper and lumber, a need which will increase hugely over the next few years. Therefore, the railways should be thinking in terms not of consolidating, not of holding the line, but of spending capital to provide the services to meet this tremendous challenge.

The MacPherson Royal Commission report was based on the assumption that the railway era was over. They were trying to work out some system whereby the railways could live within the amount of traffic that would fall to the railway form of transport. All that pessimism of the MacPherson Royal Commission report should now be put completely out of the minds not only of railway managements but of the economists of the country and, particularly, of government officials as well as the new transportation commission.

We in the house recognize, as ordinary laymen, that sometimes we can speak with more common sense and more vision of the future than the people who only look to the past. I say that this bill, if it is going to be a good bill, must have in it this concept that we know we are in for a period of growth and expansion that won't stop in two or three years. This growth is not dependent on any one single product, but will take place across the whole economy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hamilton: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I agree with what he has said, but isn't he disagreeing fundamentally with the hon. member for Northumberland who has been telling us we are going to have another slump?

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I think it is only fair for me to comment that the minister uses this technique of interrupting my speeches with inconsequential questions that have nothing to do with what I am saying.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I am not talking about 1967. I am talking about the next 10, 20 or 30 years when this bill will bear on the economy of Canada. I do not think I can accept questions from the minister if he is going to take that attitude. I refer, in respect of this bill, to the fact that we have not learned the lessons we should have learned from the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act. In that act, following the Duff Commission, certain recommendations were made by parliament, thinking that they were leading the railways into a new age. Parliament asked the railways to correct all the mistakes of 40 years in respect of railway operations. Over and over again the statement is made in this act that they should adopt these proposals for efficiency in running the railways and reducing freight rates. Since the passage of that act in the mid 1930's, the railways have demonstrated that they have not paid any attention to this phrase "may recommend". Yet, through this whole bill we find the phrase "may recommend" repeated over and over again.

In drafting this bill I think the government has ignored the position we took on second reading that there should be some form of direction. I cannot draft the regulations. I cannot draft the amendments this afternoon, because there are so many clauses in the bill that are interlocked. I suggest that those who are responsible for the drafting of this bill, over the next few weeks, should take the time to redraft these clauses so that the minister can compare them to what the bill now says. If this new transportation commission is not going to make the same mistakes that were made 30 years ago, it must say that the board may direct. There is a big club we could use to enforce this direction. The club is the fact that we start out with large subsidies. Then, if you use the words "may direct" you can put in a clause which says that if they do not follow the directions of the board, then the commission has the power to reduce the statutory subsidies.

I make these remarks with all the seriousness I can bring to bear, because although we do not want to run a dictatorship through the national transportation commission, I or any other layman who thinks back to the days of the Duff Royal Commission can point to scores of examples of inefficiency in the operation of our railways in western Canada. I have raised these questions in the committee. I have asked the men who know more about the shipment of grain in western Canada than anybody else in the world, the heads of the co-operative elevator companies, whether they are aware of the savings which could be made by better operation of our railways on the prairies. They all agreed that they were. These savings could have been made 30 years ago, if the Board of Transport Commissioners had had the power to direct. Now, with the subsidy in this bill, the Commission can be given the power to direct and the penalty for non-performance is the reduction of the subsidy.

I make these remarks, Mr. Chairman, in the belief that only the minister can bring his influence to bear on this. I do not think there is any use in attempting to tell this committee that the railways have learned their lesson and will run a rationalized railway system in western Canada on the basis of "may recommend". I pointed out in the committee that we know, from the figures we collected over the last 30 years, the number of bushels of grain per mile generated on the railway lines. We know that the line which had the second highest volume of grain per mile of any branch line in western Canada was involved in an application for abandonment. Once you have an application for abandonment, you must include in the application a willingness to sell it for its salvage value. The only reason anyone could advance that the second most used line in western Canada would be up for abandonment was the fact that the grain had to be back-hauled over 250 miles of prairies to Saskatoon and then back over the south line. This back-haul may have made the haulage of the grain less profitable. When you look at a map, however, and realize that 200 miles of the back-haul could be saved by routing the grain across a bridge belonging to another railway company, you realize the savings which could be made.

Perhaps I might give a hypothetical example which may or may not be close to being accurate. If it costs one cent, per 100 miles to haul a bushel of grain and if 30 million bushels are coming off a branch line each year on the average, 30 million times two cents is 60 million cents a year which is going into the revenue of the railways. If much of that cost involved in carrying that grain to produce that revenue could be reduced by using the other person's line, then I think this would be a rational solution to the problem of reducing the cost to that railway.

Under this bill, there is the power to recommend that these things be done. I simply say that after the experience of the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act of the 1930's, this new board should learn from the mistakes of the past and should have the power to direct national operation. I put this view forward to the minister because only he has the influence to say to his officials that they should draft new amendments to these clauses in order to make this possible.

So, it is up to the minister now. I think he knows my views. I made them known in respect of Bill C-120 two years ago. I made them known again in the committee in respect of Bill C-231. I made them known in the house through my remarks on second reading. He knows that these observations are supported by the biggest customers the railways have, the grain companies of western Canada who provide most of the profit of both railways. He knows that they want it. He knows they have suggested it. He knows also that this is the mistake we made in the 1930's in respect of the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific bill. If this parliament wants to go forward with this bill as it is today and repeat the same mistakes, then those on the governement side cannot say they have not been warned.

In all sincerity, I ask the minister what harm would come from giving this national transportation commission the power to direct and the power to penalize by reducing the subsidy. What harm could there be? The only objections would come from the railways who are trained in squawking. On behalf of all Canadians, I should like to say that for once in this parliament I would hope that we could learn from the mistakes of the past and produce legislation which is a result of learning from those mistakes. I would hope that we could establish guide lines and give power to the national transportation commission so that it would be in a position to do something which we have been requesting for years.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

When I say this I have in mind the Duff report and all the speeches which were made by politicians when the act was passed with such high hopes over 30 years ago.

In the second part of my remarks which I address to the minister, I should like to refer to the essential problem of democratic government. In the history of democratic government, as more and more of the economy has come under the control of elected governments, it has become necessary to turn over the administration of large sections of parliament's responsibilities to boards, crown corporations, and other agencies of the crown. No one denies the history of the last 40 years in this regard, but one thought keeps coming to mind. If parliament turns over its power to a non-elected board, an appointed crown corporation or an appointed agency, how will the people through their representatives have any control over the actions of that board, crown corporation or agency without interfering with the efficiency of the operation? That is the key problem involved.

We have all witnessed the troubles parliament has experienced in respect of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Had parliament been wiser in laying down guide lines at the beginning, and in renewing them from time to time, much of this trouble would not have existed. In respect of the transportation system we have a situation which involves not just what we see or hear on television and radio, but what we will experience economically because of the delegation of tremendous powers over all transportation services. There is nothing in this bill which indicates we have learned from our mistakes in delegating powers to other agencies, boards or crown corporations. All we have in this bill in respect of powers can be found at page 12 in clause 20. This provides that the board shall present a report to parliament each year.

No matter how carefully or how many times one reads this bill, nothing can be found of a definitive nature which gives parliament any control over the body established by this bill. Members of parliament cannot be fully informed about the operations of this transportation commission, nor can they under any circumstances be adequately qualified to deal with its operations in detail. The only thing we can examine is the report which is submitted to parliament. No definitive action can be taken.

Last night the hon. member for Peace River, in consultation with the committee of this party which deals with transportation, outlined an amendment which he proposes to make at the appropriate time. I commend that amendment to the minister for consideration, along with the suggestion that it be added to the clause in this bill regarding duties and powers. If we are trying to maintain some form of control on behalf of the people over this board, which will have unlimited powers, we must set up machinery through which this parliament has statutory control over its actions. That is the significance of the amendment to be proposed by the hon. member.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we all want to hear what the hon. member has to say because he is being very constructive.

The Deputy Chairman: There seems to be unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue.

Mr. Hamilton: Thank you very much. My remarks will only take me about five minutes. In Saskatchewan, we were suddenly faced with the creation of a large number of crown corporations and agencies following the election in 1944. The new government set up machinery the like of which has not been duplicated here in Ottawa, or in any other province of which I am aware. This machinery was elemental but it worked. A committee of the legislature was set up, namely the crown corporations committee. Any question asked about crown corporations was directed to the committee which was composed of approximately 75 per cent of the total members of the house. This committee is able to call before it ministers representing various crown corporations, boards of directors, branch heads and division chiefs. They can all be questioned by the elected representatives of the people. This gives the people the feeling that they have some control over the operations of these corporations.

The representatives of the people have control over the operations of these corporations in this way, and also have some method of providing guide lines on policy. In this way the people whom they represent feel they can control the actions of the corporations.

The minister, I am sure, will immediately say that the transportation commission is not a crown corporation, and that is true. I am sure he will also say that it is a court of record, and that is true, but it is also an administrative body. The only opportunity parliament has to influence an administrative body is through established guide lines. Surely those guide lines should be part of this bill. After the bill becomes law, it is through a parliamentary committee that we can effect policy.

Over the next few days I should like the Minister of Transport to consider the amendment to be proposed by the hon. member for Peace River, because I think its adoption would provide some relief from worry so far as the members of parliament and the people they represent are concerned. I am sure what the hon. member had in mind was that there be experts gradually seconded to the transportation committee whose loyalty would lie with the chairman. These members could develop an expertise in so far as transportation generally is concerned. They could then keep the chairman informed, who in turn would report to parliament through the committee reports.

If this amendment is adopted a standing committee would be established immediately a new parliament meets. Canadians would then have the feeling that competent people with expertise would be representing them so far as transportation problems are concerned. The hon. member did not suggest this would solve all our transportation problems, but he did suggest that this would, in effect, provide some parliamentary control over the board's actions. In this way our transportation systems could be operated in such a way that efficiency would not be hurt and still keep some parliamentary control.

The concept of this bill is good and we wish to support it. But it would make our task easier if the government indicated its acceptance of the amendment to be proposed. This amendment would not interfere with the efficiency of the board, but it would give some form of democratic control. If the government accepted this amendment we would not only benefit from the lessons we have learned as a result of the operations of the C.B.C. and the Board of Broadcast Governors, we would also benefit from the experience of hon. members on all sides of this house.

The placing of this tremendous segment of parliamentary power in the hands of an independent board is a great step. It must be considered in the light of the effect it will have on our responsibilities to the people we represent. If we turn this power over to this independent board, we should have some way of examining and controlling it without interfering with its judicial capacity or efficiency of administration. This amendment would have two main results; we would have some control over the operational side of our transportation systems and some parliamentary machinery by which positive expansionary concepts of railway development could be put forward in a proper manner through permanent parliamentary machinery. The railways have demonstrated in the last few years that you have to twist their arms, tails, and everything else before they see the future as for example, the Pine Point Railway. I hope the minister, on whom our hopes now rest, will consider the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Peace River as being well-intentioned and not designed in any way to embarrass the government. I trust he will consider it to be an improvement to the bill that would make hon. members on all sides of the house very proud of our work on this bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. gentleman would permit the minister to say a word or two on the last point that he raised. The amendment suggested yesterday by the hon. member for Peace River was very similar to a proposal made in the standing committee by the leader of the opposition of Manitoba; in fact, it is almost identical to that proposal. The idea of having a standing committee with some kind of trained staff that will assist them in dealing with so important a matter as the whole spectrum of transportation is certainly one that appeals very much to me.

There is a procedural question in my mind, namely, whether the right way to achieve that result is to allow the Senate and the Governor General to participate in making the rules of this house, or whether we should do it under our own standing orders. However, I am very much in favour of the objective of the hon. member for Peace River, endorsed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

Mr. Hamilton: On that point, Mr. Chairman, if I may trespass upon the time of the committee for a moment, I think the minister recognizes that our concern is that it be done under the ordinary procedures of the house. The minister did not quite give that guarantee. There is close to the surface all this suspicion that has been generated over 60 years. We have to establish a statutory provision.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

Then, this matter would be written into the statute. It would not seriously affect the house rules, but it would impress upon the people who think we are going blind into this new era and turning powers over to a super-board, that we are guaranteeing by statute that this body will not get out of complete touch with parliament. That is the whole point of the amendment; we want a guarantee in this respect.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few brief remarks to make at this time. Before raising the serious objection that I have to the principle of the bill, I should like to take this opportunity of thanking the Minister of Transport for the assistance he and his department have given to the Waterloo-Wellington Airport Commission in the extension of the airport runways. The minister appeared recently in the riding to inaugurate the runway extensions. This has been a great help to us, and we appreciate the efforts of the minister's department in looking into the problems involved.

The difficulty this bill raises is the question of whether the best interests of Canadian transportation can be served by competition in the field, or whether there is a need for an over-all, comprehensive body that will direct the use of transportation in this country and integrate our resources in the best way possible.

I think the question that has to be asked is not which is the best ideology, but which works best and which will result in the best service at the lowest cost to this country. Canada starts off with the disadvantage that we have higher transportation costs than other nations. Because of the vast distances that have to be covered in our thinly populated country, our transportation costs tend to be high. Every effort must be made to lower those costs if we are to raise our productivity. We certainly cannot afford to have any wasteful efforts in the field of transportation, whether those wasteful efforts be under the direction of the government or private companies.

This bill is somewhat schizophrenic: it says we are going to have competition, but at the same time we are going to lay an extremely heavy hand on that competition and see that it does not get out of control. I think we will wind up getting the worst of both worlds. We will not benefit from the advantages possible under a competitive system in those areas where competition will work effectively; neither will we get the benefits of a regulated system for which the transportation field seems to call. We impose regulations and say that the railroads cannot undercut trucking companies; they cannot drive them out of business. I am not going to argue the merits of the railroads doing this or not doing it; I merely raise the point to indicate that we have seriously interfered with the effective working of the system. In order to have a free enterprise system working properly, to achieve competition there must be great freedom within the competitive area; you cannot pass regulations of this type saying, "You cannot compete ferociously with someone else."

The national interest that is involved in transportation is of the kind that the market cannot decide. What happens in transportation profoundly affects many other areas of our economy. For instance, exports are vital to Canada. They affect our balance of payments and our ability to buy from other countries those things which we cannot or do not produce. This nation may have to make a decision, under some circumstances, to maintain our exports at a level that will find acceptance in world markets. One such decision may have to do with the cost of transportation, which affects the cost of our exports and the price ultimately obtained for them.

Is a competitive system going to give us this kind of judgment? Can you expect a competitive system to make this kind of judgment? After all, the elements within that system can only act according to their own self-interest; you cannot expect them to act in the national interest when no one else is doing so.

For this reason, in our transportation policy there must be a concept which provides that the national interest is paramount. Transportation is so fundamental to everything in this country that it is paramount. It is at the root of whether it is possible to raise our productivity to the level to which it should be raised. We cannot leave this kind of decision to the free play of the market forces and the competitive elements. We have to equalize distance in this country. This nation was built on the basis of a railroad going from east to west. The people who built that railroad knew that parts of it would not pay in any purely commercial sense. It was true at that time, and is true today, that without a transportation policy that takes into consideration the difficulties in creating and holding together a country like Canada, we would not be able to easily maintain our nationality. The west will require special consideration for certain products.

The maritimes obviously need special attention for other reasons. There is hardly a part of Canada which will not be affected in a different way. We can talk about subsidies and we can deplore them but the truth of the matter is that everyone in Canada is subsidized. If we do not subsidize railroads, then we subsidize such things as old age pensions or we are subsidized through family allowances. Some of us subsidize others through tariffs that are put on products coming into this country. We are completely interrelated and interlocked, and it is impossible to distinguish those areas which are subsidized from those which are not. To try and make this kind of distinction is both futile and hopeless. I think we will have to devise a transportation policy for the benefit of the entire nation, and of those parts of it which may be uneconomic but will have to be carried by areas which bring profit. There can be no other way of doing this in a country such as ours. If we are to make a clear distinction between what is subsidized and what is not, then I would suggest that we will have to remove the entire machinery which we have built up, from tariffs down to social allowances, in order to return to some kind of a base. We cannot start from the base which we have now.

If we are to have a competitive system, then we have to remove the barriers which now restrict competition. We have built up a structure which by and large is a good structure: I am not suggesting that it be dismantled. What I am suggesting is that whenever we talk about a transportation policy we should recognize that this structure exists, and that it is neither possible nor desirable to make a clear distinction between what is subsidized and what is not subsidized as the bill attempts to do.

I would like to give to the committee an example illustrating the inefficacy of competition as far as railroads are concerned. If we had to depend on competition, I think we would have discontinued the railroad passenger service by now. There was a time when the C.P.R. tried to eliminate its passenger service as quickly as it could. During the committee's trip through the west, we heard some fairly clear indications from people who gave evidence before us that the C.P.R. was just about kicking off its passengers. They did not want them. The competing railroad, namely the C.N.R. was in a similar position from the financial point of view. They were not making any money on passengers either. However, the difference was that the C.N.R. had a responsibility to the people of Canada and to national objectives.

Because of this responsibility, it brought back the passenger service. Although it sustained losses at first, we now see that it may pay off. The time may never come again when passenger service will bring money to a railroad, but I think we all agree that there are people in Canada who depend on trains to get them from one place to another. If this kind of service requires a subsidy on the part of the nation generally, then that decision has to be taken and we have to go along with this approach. The point I was making was that this decision was not made on the basis of free enterprise and competition. The decision was made by the railroad because it had a responsibility to act according to the needs of the people of this country.

I am afraid that if you say that transportation must be competitive, the effect will be that as soon as a railway discovers it cannot make a fast dollar on a particular service it will discontinue it. We have to ask ourselves whether this bill contains sufficient safeguards to prevent this from happening, and I am not convinced that there are. We have to ask ourselves whether this is the system that we want, a system whereby the profitability of the company will determine the transportation service which the nation will have. We should seriously consider whether the profitability of the company is really a reflection of the advantage to the nation as a whole.

I was interested in reading the evidence of a representative from the chamber of commerce who testified before the joint committee on consumer prices. The question of the cost of transportation as it affects consumer prices was raised by Senator Carter. I would like to quote that part of the proceedings as an illustration or what could happen. The purpose of competition in transportation services is to give the railroads a break and to allow them to raise their rates. The effect of an increase in railway rates will clearly be to raise the rates of every transportation facility in this country which will use the railroad rates as a base against which they will calculate their charges. In effect we will get a system very much like our tariff structure where the price of goods in Canada is determined under some circumstances by the price in the United States plus the tariff cost. The two combined constitute the Canadian price.

I would like to read into the record part of the proceedings of the joint committee on consumer credit in which Senator Carter asked questions and the witness, Dr. Farrell answered him. This appears at page 1878 of the joint committee proceedings:

Senator Carter: You are saying that competition is a good policeman so far as prices are concerned. On page 10, at paragraph 27, you say, "The very basis of the enterprise economy is competition." Then on page 24, at paragraph 75, you talk about freight prices going up, and you say: Thereafter the railways can be expected to adjust their rates along commercial principles. Then you go on to say: . . . it is anticipated that the highway carriers will raise their rail competitive rates to roughly similar levels.

Dr. Farrell: That is what we said.

Senator Carter: Is that not competition in reverse? How do you square these two sets of ideas?

Dr. Farrell: Well, the end of any era brings adjustment problems, and when railways are given a new set of working rules and are told to function, well, without a lot of rates being frozen, then charges are going to go up, and after the transportation industry has adjusted to the new set of rules, I think they are going to be efficient and will contribute more to Canada.

I will interject at this point to say that this very pious hope was certainly not borne out by his prior statements before the committee. I will continue the quotation. It reads:

Senator Carter: But these railways are making a profit or they would not be in business. So if they raise the rates because the other carriers do they are just increasing their profit.

Dr. Farrell: In the highway sector, yes, but then if they raise them so far—

Senator Carter: But how do you square that with competition as the great factor in regulating prices and costs?

Dr. Farrell: Is anyone from transportation here? I should like some comment.

Mr. Whitelaw: The transportation representative has just left.

Dr. Farrell: I must plead a certain degree of ignorance in trying to answer something on transportation.

Co-Chairman Senator Croll: That has nothing to do with it. Take the problem in its principal sense. What he is talking about is competition. You admit that the railway companies will have a new set of rules?

Dr. Farrell: Yes.

Co-Chairman Senator Croll: And you also admit that the transportation companies are now running along and making money.

Dr. Farrell: The highway sector.

• (6:20 p.m.)

Co-Chairman Senator Croll: What you say is that when the railways get a better deal the highways will immediately match them; and Senator Carter's point is that they are then taking an undue profit.

Dr. Farrell: For the short run it may well be—

I am afraid that this short run may turn out to be the long run; that the railroads may set up a system upon which other services will base their prices, which may not be to the benefit of the public.

I should like to restate my point about the importance of low transportation costs in Canada. We simply cannot afford the luxury of any waste or excessive transportation costs because we already suffer from a geographical disadvantage. I would go further and say that this is one area where even the profit derived from transportation operations should accrue to the benefit of the public in an attempt to lower transportation costs so that we may increase our ability to become more productive.

This is terribly important, Mr. Chairman. The Economic Council of Canada pointed to one of the reasons we are less productive than the United States, and it is because of our higher transportation costs. It is vital that whatever we do in terms of bringing forward new legislation, that legislation should reflect our concern in the matter and be used as a means to provide the lowest possible transportation costs in Canada.

The government offers a mishmash. They have obviously recognized that they simply cannot throw the field of transportation wide open to competition. No one argues this anymore; not even the government defends that contention. So, the government imposes some regulations. I suggest that some of the regulations may be more unworkable than other aspects of competition. I regret to say this but the government has abdicated its responsibilities in taking this kind of philosophical position. It has shown its lack of willingness to govern.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, a planned system is difficult; no one will argue it is easy. It is easy for the government to wash its hands of this system and to say it will not make any decisions which caused difficulty in the past, or that it will only make partial decisions. The government can let the competitive forces which exist within the system make a lot of the decisions. Planning is not easy. It involves moving into an area with which we are not completely familiar. However, this should not deter us. Nothing great is ever easy. Nothing worth while is ever simple. New approaches have their problems. But the role of a progressive government is to face up to the problems instead of abdicating their responsibilities, and not worrying about the problems because they are too difficult.

In the field of rail abandonments, it is tough to decide that one piece of line should be abandoned and another retained. But somebody has to make the decision. Some formula has to be worked out to recompense those who are hurt. Our competitive system cannot make these decisions; they are decisions a government must make. Admittedly, the government has included some provisions in the bill to take these considerations into account; but since that is the case why not plan things properly and look at the total picture?

I suggest that more difficulty will be created if the government only just touch upon the problem, than if they really plan things in the best interests of the people involved right off the bat. For example, the government will not have too much trouble in deciding the wages of railway workers and when they should receive a raise. They can say that the railroads are competing with each other, and if one railroad does not have enough money to raise wages they need simply raise their rates. that is very easy to do, but the national interest is involved here.

An hon. Member: What would you do then?

Mr. Saltsman: I hear someone ask me what I would do. There is an approach to a sensible policy to which essential industries will have to face up to later. We will have to find a way to cope with the problem of generating confidence between labour, management and the government; of reconciling the interests of management, labour and the population in general. Why avoid it? We must do this sooner or later so we might as well start here.

The bill shies away from this. It indicates that the government does not want this kind of responsibility. The government seem to be saying "We have had enough of it. We have not handled it too well in the past and it has given us many headaches; in the future we want no part of it". This is an abdication of responsibility from the public's point of view.

In their planning, the government will have to allocate carriers to certain groups. Which ships will go where? Where will trains best do the job? Where will a trucking company operate more efficiently? Where do you build a highway or a canal rather than a roadbed? These are tough decisions, but nevertheless decisions which in the interests of Canada have to be made. The government must accept the responsibility for making them. We have to weigh one factor against another, which is not easy to do. But the decision cannot be abdicated.

My time is nearly up, and the only point I wanted to raise this afternoon was this: Despite all the work done on this bill and the hundreds of amendments proposed, some rejected, some accepted, we are now trying to go even further and bring in new amendments improve this, that or the other clause. But what the bill really needs is a complete re-examination of the principle upon which it is based. I suggest the government has taken the easy way out, and rather than plan for the benefit of the whole nation it has tried to find an easy way of avoiding the hard job of governing.

Mr. Nielsen: I was not a member of the transport committee when this bill was being considered, but having looked at the proceedings one of the most glaring omissions appears to be that there was no evidence at all adduced before the committee with respect to transportation by air, both of a private and of a commercial character. The second most glaring omission is that there does not appear to have been any evidence at all with respect to transportation in the northern areas of our country.

Sitting here listening to various members speak about transportation problems and the ramifications of the provisions of this bill, it struck me, as it often strikes me, that the members who sit here—I say this not unkindly—tend to confine their mental projections from St. John's, Newfoundland to Victoria on Vancouver Island.

They fail to appreciate the great need for north-south communication in this country, and for internal communication facilities above the sixtieth parallel as well as in the northern portions of provinces. The only reference in some 3,000 pages of testimony that I can find to air transport is that contained in a brief submitted by the Canadian Pacific. At pages 31 and 32 of the brief, they refer to a legitimate complaint not dealt with by the bill before us. The complaint should be dealt with by placing Air Canada under the same authority that other carriers are placed under. The bill before us brings transport by air, as the Canadian Pacific brief points out—to which the Aeronautics Act applies—under the jurisdiction of the new Canadian commission. The Aeronautics Act applies equally to all carriers except Air Canada. On an application for a licence Air Canada need not establish that the service is and will be required for the present and future public convenience and necessity. Its licence cannot be made the subject of the controls and conditions applied to licences granted to other carriers. In effect, the Governor in Council is the individual, with the Minister of Transport—not the Air Transport Board—controlling the domestic routes operated by Air Canada and the conditions under which they shall be operated.

Once Air Canada has made an agreement under section 15 or 24 of the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act with the Minister of Transport, it can make application to the board and the board is required to grant to Air Canada a licence under such terms and subject to such conditions as will enable Air Canada to perform the agreement. It seems to me that Canadian Pacific makes a valid point in its brief to the transport committee. The bill should direct itself to matters such as I have mentioned rather than dealing, as it does, with amending the Aeronautics Act for purposes of bringing dry leases on aircraft under the control of the board.

I, too, am fearful of the tremendous power to be given to this new commission with respect to one of the most vital segments of our country's economy. The Minister of Transport said he was very much in favour of the kind of parliamentary control suggested by the hon. member for Peace River, and the amendment the hon. member proposed yesterday. I was happy to hear what was said. The government is becoming more and more complex as the world takes on the complexities of the space age. This is no excuse to carve out of segments of public affairs concerning the people as a whole, great chunks of administrative authority and turning them over to what inevitably must become bureaucratic control. There are many shortcomings adopted in the methods of the Air Transport Board in dealing with the myriads of questions coming before it, with the only appeal being to the minister. Regardless of how valid an application might be for the beginning of a commercial air service, for instance, there is no appeal from the decision of the Air Transport Board. Almost invariably, the board bases its decision on evidence taken at public hearings before an individual who is not even a member of the board.

Counsel or assistant counsel hold hearings which are sometimes of great length, listening to volumes of evidence as to the public interest. Then, because of the routine adopted with respect to the internal management of the affairs of the Air Transport Board, the individual hearing evidence presents a brief either in written or verbal form to the board. It is on the basis of that kind of information that decisions yea or nay are made.

What will happen? Under the bill there will be set up various committees or subcommittees of the Canadian Transportation Commission. One of those committees will deal with matters affecting air transport in the country. A provision of the bill ensures that the chairman of the Air Transport Board, whoever he may be at the time of the coming into force of this act, will be the chairman of that subcommittee. Over him and over all the other committees will be the chairman of the commission, who, in effect, will be the czar of Canadian transport of all kinds over which the government of Canada has jurisdiction.

This is a tremendous responsibility and tremendous power to put into the hands of an individual. Such administrative control cannot be abdicated by the parliament of Canada, by those of us sitting here representing the people by due process. The immediate word coming to mind, when looking at legislation such as this is Lord Hewart's new despotism. Such will be the inevitable role that this commission will play in affairs of transportation in this country.

Some sort of appeal procedure seems to have been written into this legislation. An appeal simply to the minister, as exists in the present Air Transport Board routine, is insufficient, notwithstanding that with his usual benevolence the minister probably views all such appeals with that impartiality for which he is noted. How does the bill affect air transport generally? The committee proceedings, as I have said, said nothing about this except for two pages in the brief produced by the Canadian Pacific.

The announcement which the minister made to the house on October 20 of regional air carrier policy deals with every phase of air transportation except one. It deals with the two main line carriers in Canada. It deals very briefly with commercial charter operations, but says nothing about general aviation. Notwithstanding the fact that we had recent amendments to the Aeronautics Act, the new despotism is still sniping at an area of aviation which made aviation possible in this country, indeed made Canada a leader in aviation matters throughout the world.

I refer to clause 93 of the bill. If it is passed as it stands it will make every person who is the owner of an aircraft, and who desires to lease it, subject to obtaining first the approval of the Canadian transport commission, or the subcommittee on air. This is an entirely undue restriction. I speak not simply because I happen to be found in a personal position here. Many people in general aviation throughout this country acquire aircraft and are able to do so because of the probability of being able to lease them on a dry lease basis.

I know there are lots of bootlegging operations of frustrated air carriers who purchase aircraft simply for the purpose of getting into the business and lease them to licensed air carriers. But when you pass a blanket provision, such as this amendment which is prepared to the Aeronautics Act, you are catching all the little people who happen to own aircraft.

The minister has been a champion, certainly while he has been Minister of Transport and I have no reason to believe that his philosophy was ever any different, of protecting the government air line, Air Canada, at all costs. In my view, this has worked to the disadvantage of air progress in Canada. I am sure he is aware of the editorials that have been written with respect to his policies, both past and present. When he announced in 1964 a segment of his air policy, he said that in the domestic field any development of competition should not compromise or seriously injure the economic viability of T.C.A. main line domestic operations which represent the essential framework of its domestic network services. In other words, he said there must not be the kind of competition which would put T.C.A. into the red.

The minister nods his head that this is right. I disagree with the minister, as have many editorial writers. I submit to him that this is not true Liberalism when he adopts this kind of philosophy, because it completely negates the philosophy of free competition. The air line that is going to survive will be that one that can compete efficiently and economically, and that is what a mass of editorials have pointed out.

The minister has said that the policy on regional services calls for a reasonable role for regional air carriers, which will give the regional air carriers a reasonable chance to operate without government subsidies. He used the word "reasonable" twice, and that indicates the extent to which the minister feels there must be that degree of control which will ensure that there will not be any degree of competition which would have the effect of putting Air Canada into the red, no matter what kind of operation it may be, efficient or otherwise.

An editorial from a Saskatchewan newspaper commented as follows:

> Whenever a government determines on a policy which necessarily involves subsidization, this amounts to an increased direct tax on individual Canadians. In this reference, competition—which means less not more government intrusion in business and industry—is the only certain safeguard the taxpayer has against extravagant policy-making.

That is the view which has been generally expressed with regard to this concept of the minister's.

I notice in the guide lines of the government respecting regional air carrier policy that he tabled in the house on October 20, he has dwelt at length on the relationship of Air Canada with not only C.P.A. but other regional carriers. With respect to routes, route transfers and the division of routes between the two national carriers he said that some anomalies exist and more may develop as a result of future growth with respect to these divisions.

I suggest that when these guide lines were being prepared, the minister had no real regard or concentrated concern about the northern portions of the provinces and northern Canada generally. If ever there were areas in which there must be a far-sighted attitude developed toward the provision of transportation facilities, it is in those areas.

I can recall the minister's attitude when he was on this side of the house when it was suggested that a rail line be constructed to Pine Point. He and his supporters of the day joined together and voted against that. Now, of course, they clutch it to their bosoms as though it were their own idea, and a good thing. The minister of northern affairs was not present when the vote was taken on that matter, and so he can now feel free to say a very laudable thing was done in the construction of that railway, an operation that was paid for far earlier than was ever anticipated even by the proposers of the legislation at that time.

Similar developments are now taking place in the Yukon, the Northwest Territories and the northern portions of the provinces. I am sure the minister of northern affairs has acquainted the Minister of Transport of the tremendous development taking place in the Yukon where rail facilities are going to be necessary. The government has caused a survey to be made, paid for jointly by it and by the private concern that is interested in developing the ore in the area, but these developments will not come about unless transportation facilities are provided there.

What consideration does this bill give to the nagging problem of the barrier of the panhandle of Alaska cutting off, as it does, a great portion of the coast of British Columbia and the entire Yukon Territory? We have a copper mine coming into production next spring in the Yukon, New Imperial Mines Ltd., with a long-term contract for the supply of copper to world markets.

The normal docking facilities on the panhandle, on United States territory 105 miles away, are not adequate. It is now discovered that the ore will have to be brought from its place of production all the way to Vancouver in order to be trans-shipped to world markets, even though tide water is only 105 miles away.

• (6:50 p.m.)

All we get from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is studies, studies and more studies. We are being snowed under by studies. The same number of studies will be undertaken now with regard to that problem as have been, and likely will be, undertaken with regard to the provision of a paved route between Alaska and continental United States. I do not particularly blame the members of this government any more than I blame the vast majority of the members who sit in this house for not being oriented geographically to the fact that there exists this vast area and this vast potential in the northern part of our country. Were it not for the transportation costs which form the major factor in respect of any decision which would bring a new development to fruition in the north, there would be all sorts of economic development in this part of Canada.

The richest silver mine in North America now is closing because the costs have risen to the stage now where they no longer can continue to compete in world markets. The biggest single factor in the cost of producing that product is transportation. Then there is the living cost. If hon. members believe that costs are skyrocketing here in the south, they would not need to pause very long in reflection to realize what the transportation cost for 1,500 miles from the port of Vancouver to White Horse means in relation to the additional cost of everything used in the north. When we have to carefully consider and think twice before we order an extra package of insulation because it costs more to transport that 1,500 miles than it does to transport a pound of butter and such things, then we have some small insight into the over-all problem. Everything that reaches us costs more.

I do not think that subsidies are the answer. I do not think the subsidies which were suggested in the air policy that the minister tabled last October are the answer. If there were a more enlightened view taken in respect of allowing competitive services to generate in these areas, that well might provide the answer. If the government would get out of such operations as Eldorado aviation and allow private enterprise to fill the gap—which it can do and which it has assured the government it can do—that might be part of the answer. Then of course, there always is the government's obligation to provide surface means of transportation in the form of highways and railways.

Instead of sniping away, as clause 93 of this bill does—and I am only picking on clause 93 because it is an indication of what is happening and how the freedom of the individual is being eroded by this sort of direction—what the government should be doing in respect of the provision of adequate incentives to the development of aviation in the country is paying perhaps a little less attention to the Canadian main line and major regional carriers in the country and a little more attention to general aviation, which after all was the birth place of what the minister now is so proud of, Air Canada.

General aviation is being put in a straitjacket of rules and regulations which stifles the growth of this segment of the air industry. One example of this is that it is contrary to the air regulations to land or take off at an unlicensed air strip. It is a recognized fact that aircraft are being used more and more in the agricultural industry in this country. Aircraft are being used by the farmers. Yet, if he takes off and lands on a strip which is not licensed or which is on his farm, he is guilty of an offence. Of course there always are the over-zealous police officers who come along and lay charges. Under the regulations as they now exist this farmer would be guilty of an offence by flying under 500 feet when he was landing or taking off from his unlicensed airstrip. He may be engaged in spraying his crop, counting his cattle, or looking over his land in the spring preparatory to seeding. A very excellent television film about the part aircraft are playing in respect of the agricultural industry was shown last week end.

This type of niggardly regulation should be done away with. Instead of looking for more ways to restrict the growth of aviation in this country, the government and the officials of the Department of Transport should be looking for sections which they could take out in order to make it a little easier for private aviation to grow in this country.

Another good example of the way in which the healthy growth of aviation is being stifled in this country is the airport policy which does not allow convenient usage of private airplanes. I was in the city of Vancouver where persons wishing to use a private aircraft sometimes must wait until half a dozen other airplanes are pulled out of the way before they can take off. The reason for this is that the Department of Transport, by its policies, will not allow the construction and placement of "T" hangars such as the one now in use at Uplands airport. There is no earthly reason that this policy should not be changed so as to allow this kind of convenience for those who are in a position to take advantage of it.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I did not expect that I would have an opportunity to speak on this bill. I have, however, been very interested in reading it. I should have liked to have had the opportunity to participate in the work of the committee which gave consideration to this bill. I believe only the Minister of Transport could have designed a bill which starts out with a very clearly defined policy and then arrives at as many "ifs", "ands", and "buts" as this bill has. The bill indicates that there cannot be any real transportation policy. This really is not a transportation bill, as I had envisaged it a number of years ago when I moved a resolution suggesting that we have a national transportation policy.

• (7:00 p.m.)

I have long been concerned with many parts of the problem in Canada which relates to a national transportation policy. I was particularly interested in the shenanigans which took place in connection with the railways and the public attitude toward those railways. There are those who say that the Canadian National is a crown company and that the people of Canada own it. I do not think this is true; we do not own it. It is a little like the case of the man who pays $10 on a new car and finds himself with a $10,000 debt. It is much similar to what is said about the Canadian National. We pay so much interest on its debt it is doubtful that we can say the C.N.R. is a government agency owned by the Canadian people. It would be more logical for those operating the C.N.R. to fit its operations to the needs of the public. They should provide leadership in the field of transportation. From my own experience I can say that in the field of public relations the Canadian National, so far as transportation of passengers and goods is concerned, is no more interested in the welfare of this country than a number of other railway companies. In fact some others in many ways serve the public better.

It is foolish for the government to suggest that a national transportation policy should be adopted, such as the one outlined in th s bill, if this whole problem is not faced, and I refer to the duplication of lines by the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. In my area there has been talk about abandoning a line. Yet people working for the railway have said that the cost of repairs in recent years warrants the operation of the line, without any increase in the volume of business, for a considerable period of time. There is a potential increase in transportation need in this same area as a result of the development of natural resources, but the railway company continues to threaten abandonment of this line.

Surely it is foolish to have two railway companies operating duplicate services across this country, competing in areas where competition is of no value. Railways in certain areas should be considered as public utilities and there is an advantage to the public in owning these facilities. With the advent of the block system, with one dispatcher controlling all the trains in a division, it would seem reasonable to operate these two lines as one. The minister will eventually have to face up to the necessity of public ownership of this public utility.

An hon. member suggested it would be to the advantage of Canada to place both railway companies on a free enterprise basis. If we do not combine them and operate them as a public utility perhaps that would be advantageous and would lead to a solution of our transportation problem. The railway companies admit they are facing a problem which they will not be able to solve even with the limited freedom provided by this bill.

[Mr. Peters.]

I am always bothered when the C.N.R. comes to parliament for more money, particularly when I think of its inefficient operations and the waste it incurs without satisfying the needs of the people it serves. I remember when I first came to Ottawa in 1957. At that time one could get a berth on a train running from here to northern Ontario. Anyone who had a little money could get an upper berth. Someone with more money could get a roomette, and someone with even more money could get a drawing room or a bedroom. Very soon after the railway company decided to stop sleeping car services at Englehart. This meant that people travelling from northern Ontario to Montreal had to get up very early in the morning at Englehart and travel the remainder of the distance by coach.

Not very long after that it was decided that sleeping car accommodation should be abandoned at North Bay. People travelling to or from this area had to make special arrangements in order to obtain sleepers. All this took place at a time when the railway companies purchased sleeping cars from the New York Central Railway at $10,000 per car. Those cars may well have been satisfactory for operation in southern Ontario but they were not satisfactory on this line. On occasion one would find the left side of a car completely frozen up while at the same time the temperature on the other side of the car was about 100 degrees. After discovering this fact I found out that the C.N.R. was charging the province of Ontario $250 per month to keep these sleepers on this line in northern Ontario. Presumably it did not take the C.N.R. very long to pay for the cost of these cars.

Obviously these companies were and are not interested in passenger service. An example of this is the fact that trains going to northern Ontario and northern Quebec met at stations at about two o'clock in the morning. They did not depart until four hours later. During the interval the passengers waited in cold stations. I remember leaving Ottawa on numerous occasions to catch a train which was supposed to depart at 10.55. After several such trips I arrived no earlier than 1.30 a.m., only to find that I was approximately an hour early.

I was very surprised when I went there one day to find that the train had gone. One of the chaps at the station said it had left at the regular time. That night it left about 11.30. The railway had made the service so bad that obviously nobody was travelling on the train.

Then it went before the board and asked permission to drop the Continental, a train that travelled from Montreal to the west coast. The railway dropped it. I invite hon. members to travel from northern Ontario to Ottawa or Montreal by train. They will find that you get to North Bay at about twelve o'clock and the other train arrives any time after two o'clock. The minister may smile, but this is how the Canadian National operates. The connecting train was so late that, not having anything to do in North Bay and not particularly wanting to sit in the station all night, I stayed on the other train, went to Toronto, had my breakfast in Toronto, spent two hours there and caught the train from there to Ottawa which was held up here at the Beachburg siding for five or ten minutes while the train from North Bay passed through on its way to Ottawa. In the meantime I have travelled half way around Ontario to fill in the time. The railways have not been interested in passenger traffic.

Then there is the question of freight. I was interested to learn that nobody in my area ships cows by rail. If under the community sales system they ship cows by rail to Toronto, a distance of about 350 miles, it takes anywhere from two to four days for the cows to reach Toronto. Anyone who ships cattle knows the cost involved in feeding and watering them, taking them off the cars and putting them back on again, and the fact that there is four days' shrinkage in the cows also has to be taken into consideration. This is a very expensive way of moving cattle to Toronto. These people can ship their cows from the community sales barns in New Liskeard and Earlton at night and they will be in Toronto the next morning and on the market that day. I have asked the railway why they cannot provide this type of service. They admit that they could but say they are not going to bother because it would take some planning and they would have to make arrangements they had not previously considered making.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Peters: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman talking about the publicly owned railway, and is he giving this example as an illustration of the kind of advantages of public ownership for which his party stands?

Mr. Peters: We are not really involved in public ownership. The Canadian National Railways are not publicly owned.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: We bought it but we have never paid for it. The minister can laugh. Just let him look it up.

Mr. Pickersgill: We have been paying for it for years.

Mr. Peters: We have been paying for it ever since the Grand Trunk went bankrupt. We are still paying for it. We do not repay anything on the principal; we are having enough trouble paying the interest. We do not own it. We might as well be renting the damn thing. This is also true of some things in the ownership of the Ontario government.

If we are to have a truly national transportation system we will have to relate it to the needs of the people and provide a satisfactory service. The minister can laugh. We can put any public utility out of business if we wish to do so. We can slow down or stop any train operating if we wish to do so. All we have to do is make the facility so bad that it does not satisfy the needs of the people using it. We have done that very well in the cases I have cited as examples.

As I see it, this policy is not going to help the situation one bit. We are trying to relate the problems that face us to Canadian Pacific and Canadian National without really helping either company to solve them. Before we really solve the problems in this area we have to provide a utility that is publicly owned and controlled and will be used for the advantage of Canada. We the people of Canada are willing to make the necessary contribution in the way of subsidies.

I do not think the situation has changed since the days when the bridge principle was introduced. I do not believe there is really any objection to the subsidies we provide for those areas that cannot carry the facility. In my opinion we have to try to get some advantage out of the facilities that are provided. Revenue must be obtained from them. Only recently have the railways given any consideration to some of these problems. Canadian National and Canadian Pacific recently made a deal whereby Canadian Pacific would get out of the transportation field in the Ottawa area. What has happened since this arrangement was brought about? We now have trains running from Toronto to Ottawa and Toronto to Montreal which are providing a reasonable service. For the first time we are finding that the people of Canadian National are proud to talk about their Rapido train. This is no advance in railroading; this type of transportation has been provided in Canada for years. I can remember when the Silver Bullet of New York Central travelled through Canada with one stop at St. Thomas. That train averaged over 80 miles an hour; on a number of occasions it averaged over 90 miles an hour.

We now find the Canadian National, 20 years later, bragging about the fact that they have the most rapid transportation system on the continent. This type of facility was present in Canada for a number of years, sort of in bondage, but it was there for Canadians to examine and find out how transportation could be made profitable. As long as we are not willing to face the problem of Canadian National and Canadian Pacific and their relationship, as long as we are willing to call for competition between them, this bill will not provide the type of national transportation policy that the government suggests it will provide.

Other problems will have to be faced more realistically than they are today. This bill is a catch-all to the extent that the government has introduced a completely new category of transportation and has literally thrown it in with the National Energy Board. We will have to face this problem because it relates to the railroads and their ability to produce economically. I refer to commodity pipe lines. There is on the order paper now a bill involving the Shell Oil Company and the building of a small pilot, research pipe line at a cost of approximately $50 million. The company hopes that this commodity pipe line will carry sulphur, I believe, from Saskatchewan to its refinery on the coast.

I think we should be quite happy to support it in its desire to develop this facility, which has been used in other countries. It means that through the medium of oil as the carrier they will be able to move the vast supplies of sulphur, potash and gypsum that are being found on the prairies and are now being hauled by the railroads. This is a new form of transportation that will create as much havoc as the railroad freight differentials, tariffs and the advent of trucking facilities, particularly trucking facilities which are under the control of the railroads and are competing with the railroads for similar types of freight carriage.

Under this bill these lines are classed as combined lines. Even the government could not make up its mind whether they would be commodity-handling capsules, sludge carriers or lines handling commodities transmission. In recent days we have had some experience of pipe lines, as has the government. This experience will probably indicate whether the National Energy Board should control the licensing and handling of the transmission of commodities by pipe lines. Our experience indicates that the National Energy Board's operations in licensing and controlling the transmission of commodities owned or bought by companies should be governed by the national transportation policy.

Pipe lines will play a very important part in the future. In England it has been found that coal can be moved by pipe line. Experiments have been conducted in the use of pipe lines for the movement of capsules and packaged freight. According to the developments outlined in the submission by Shell Oil, I am sure that Canada will lead in the movement of many commodities through this medium. Of course this means that the miles and miles of box cars which one sees travelling across the prairies may eventually come to an end. It may be possible to transport grain and other commodities such as sulphur, gypsum and potash by this new transportation medium, and this will have a direct bearing on the volume of business undertaken by the railroads.

I think a saving could be affected if the government would think in terms of the public ownership of rail transportation facilities because I believe that there is a vast duplication of services in this area. It seems that the Canadian Pacific Railway wishes neither to continue nor to discontinue passenger service. It appears to be a dog in the manger in this field. If the C.P.R. were to say that it will upgrade its passenger service and let the C.N.R. out of that service, then I think the government would be well advised to consider such a proposition. However, I think it is possible for the two railways to provide the kind of service which the Canadian public should have and to do so economically through competition between the two railways which are operating side by side.

It is a fact that the C.P.R. has tried to discontinue certain lines. I remember comparing C.P.R. and C.N.R. fares for the same kind of accommodation on the North Bay-Ottawa run. I found that the C.P.R. rate was three times as high as the C.N.R. rate. This is an indication of Canadian Pacific's interest in that service. It is also an indication of the non-existence of competition between these two companies because obviously the Canadian Pacific had increased the fares so as to discourage passengers from using its service. I am sure that considerable discussion will take place on some of these clauses but I believe that our attention should be drawn mainly to clause 1 because it seems to me that in the preamble of this bill the minister has expressed the hopes and aspirations of every member of parliament to define and implement a national transportation policy.

I think also that hon. members are concerned about the operation of highway transportation and the role it plays. I am referring both to C.N. transportation and to the subsidy we pay for C.P. freight as well as the role played by independent transport in this particular field. It is certain that the advent of increased shipping on the St. Lawrence seaway must be considered in relation to transportation. I am aware of the argument recently advanced in the house regarding the closing of the ports on the lower St. Lawrence river and the fact that this plays a considerable role in the freight costs and the movement of goods through the ports in the maritimes. I am also aware of the responsibility which the government must bear with regard to those ports and to communities dependent on the facilities that are provided. I believe that the general public is aware of the fact that these problems will not be solved with the passing of the bill.

I know that the hour is late and that the possibility of the minister commenting tonight on some of the major problems is remote. However, I should like to ask him to give the house a reasoned explanation of why the government will not consider the nationalization of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company so as to make possible the integration of the two railway companies and eliminate what I am sure the minister will agree is excessive duplication. Even in their present operations the railways are attempting to eliminate some of this duplication. Not long ago a matter was dropped from the order paper relating to the operations of an independent distributor for the express and freight sections of both railways in the Ottawa area. The railways tried to make an arrangement whereby these services could be integrated so that only one truck would make the deliveries from both railways instead of having two separate services. This duplication extends throughout the whole system. I think everyone here would agree that great savings could be effected if duplication in this particular field were eliminated.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time not to make a speech on this bill but to ask the Minister of Transport if he would not consider it wise for the house to recess at this stage until the call of the Chair for royal assent. Alternatively, would he not agree to the house taking an hour off to enable us to have some refreshment? The minister has been in the house now for several hours and I am interested in his health. I think he should have a little relaxation. Would he consent to either of those two suggestions?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the solicitude of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has almost but not quite melted my heart. An arrangement was made last evening behind the curtains to adjourn the committee stage on this bill in order to expedite other business to enable the house to adjourn for the Christmas recess this evening instead of tomorrow. This was done on the express understanding that today we would use the time available to deal with this bill which I, and I think a lot of us, had hoped could be passed before the end of the year. My hon. friend the house leader has indicated that this present session of parliament is very far from over. We have to have another session in 1967, and some of us think that it would be rather a good idea to have a relatively short session in 1967 with some time to enjoy the centennial in the middle of the summer.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South said earlier today that this bill should not be rushed but should be given adequate consideration. Therefore I had hoped that we would have all the speeches made today by the members who are in Ottawa at the present time which are to be made on clause 1. I know there are some members who are greatly interested in the bill but are unable to be here today. They will want to say something about it when we come back on January 9, but as the hon. member for Winnipeg South very fairly said earlier, although he thought we were trying to move too fast with the bill he also admitted that the process had been going on since 1958.

There is no question that we are going to be faced in the new year with a very serious problem, particularly with respect to the railways. All sorts of deadlines have to be met, as I indicated yesterday, by December 31. If this bill cannot be accepted by parliament within a reasonable time in the new year, all sorts of interim arrangements will have to be made that I think would be very undesirable and not really in the public interest. Therefore as long as there are any members who have anything more to say on clause 1 of the bill I would hope we will take the time to proceed, and that those hon. members, even the most conscientious, who really feel the need for refreshment will do what I did, I confess, a little while ago, which was to take half an hour off and get something. If the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre would like to go up to my room I will have some sandwiches sent in to him.

Mr. Churchill: I see the minister does not agree with the two useful suggestions I put forward. I am prepared to agonize with him over the difficulties which face us if the railway bill is not passed early in January, but everything he has said to us now should have been said to his colleagues in the cabinet. Apparently his influence has diminished to such an extent that he has to make an appeal to the opposition. We are very sympathetic toward this minister and realize he was pushed out of the way by the Minister of National Health and Welfare; otherwise his bill would have been before us a lot earlier than this. He has not had much support from his party today, but we will co-operate with him and I will make my speech on the bill later.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, looking closely at the bill I have realized that it arises out of the recommendations of the MacPherson royal commission. In a sense it is born out of that commission. The hon. member for Winnipeg South pointed out earlier today that the atmosphere in railroading today has changed. The minister admitted this in the committee and I could quote his own words. The railroads admit this too. The C.P.R. and C.N.R. have admitted that the atmosphere that brought about the establishment of the MacPherson royal commission has changed greatly between then and now.

In 1959 the atmosphere was depressing; the railroads were in financial difficulties. Today the opposite is true. Railroading has been given a tremendous boost by the recent huge grain shipments, by the development of the potash industry in Saskatchewan, by the iron ore mining developments in the Peace River country and by the development of the Pine Point railway, which we brought about and which the minister voted against. The hon. member for Winnipeg South went into this fully and I will not repeat what he said, but I think it should be pointed out that the shippers or consumers initially brought about the MacPherson commission. The commission was appointed to look into their complaints.

The commission was asked to look into the inequities in the freight rate structure, their incidence upon the various regions of Canada, and the legislative and other changes that could and should be made in furtherance of national economic policy to remove or alleviate such inequities. One could interpret these terms very broadly, and the commission did. They even studied the Crowsnest pass rates, and I think in a sense studied them for too long.

In opening his remarks yesterday the minister said something about the railroads being the backbone of Canada. He then went on to say that their bony structure must be healthy. By that statement and by his statements in the committee he has shown he is vitally concerned about the financial position of the railroads. This is why I ask why the royal commission was set up in the first place. It was set up to iron out some of the inequities experienced by consumers or shippers in the matter of freight rates.

What did the British Columbia government say in their brief to the committee? They said:

> We must conclude that the recommendations of the royal commission in regard to inequities in the freight rate structure are not reflected in Bill C-231.

In other words, Bill C-231 does not answer what the royal commission was set up to study.

The brief goes on:

> It is a well known fact that in 1959 the railways did not request the government of the day to appoint a royal commission.

That is a well known fact. The royal commission was brought about by representations made by shipping concerns and consumers in the transport industry generally which urged the then government to study the whole question of freight rate inequities. I happened to come across that quotation in the British Columbia brief to the effect that the bill does not answer these inequities, but I point out that this bill was born out of the royal commission, and I think this is very important. The answer given by the bill to meet these inequities is, in a sense, to be competitive. Competition will aid the shipper and consumer in the transport industry. It will also aid the railroads.

If competition is the answer we must define what we really mean. In reading clause 1 and studying some of the amendments suggested to the committee on this clause one must take into consideration that ultimately competition is the answer. If that is the case, then do we mean by competition, competition between the railroads or competition between the trucking industry and the railroads? We believe firmly that trucking firms must compete with one another. If competition is the ultimate answer why does the bill not spell it out? Railroads must compete with one another. It is well known that the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific do not compete. They operate under the same rate structure. Under the Railway Act the Board of Transport Commissioners has provided one rate for one haul up to now. The railways have the same rate structure for a given haul. If I am to believe that competition is the answer then the railways must compete with one another and they must be able to fix any rate they want to. Referring to that subject I point out that the manufacturing industry presented a brief, part of which is to be found in committee proceedings No. 27 at page 1926. They were speaking about an amendment to the bill.

As the minister and the committee know, I have not gone along with the idea that competition is the ultimate answer. I doubt that the amendment suggested can be incorporated in the bill. If the bill is to pass and if competition is the answer, then let us have full competition and not partial competition. Paragraph (a) of clause 1 says:

(a) regulation of all modes of transport with due regard to the national interest will not be of such a nature as to restrict the ability of any mode of transport to compete freely with any other modes of transport;

The association recommends that these words be added:

Nor any carrier to compete freely with any other carrier.

As the clause stands it deals with any mode of transportation competing with any other mode of transportation. In other words, we want competition between the railroads and the trucks, between the railroads and the air industry, but we do not necessarily spell out that there shall be competition within the various segments themselves of our transportation industry. I repeat the words of the suggested amendment:

Nor any carrier to compete freely with any other carrier.

The minister believes that competition is the answer. I know he has wrestled with this problem because in committee proceedings No. 23 at the top of one page he says that this was a difficult conclusion to come to but that after a great deal of thinking he could only come to the conclusion that competition was the answer.

The amendment I have referred to has much to commend it and I think it would go a long way toward solving the inequities of the freight rate structure. If we are to have competition let us have full competition. I should like to hear the minister's comments about this suggested amendment. What is wrong with it? Will the railways be able to compete with one another, because we shall have no rate-setting board such as the Board of Transport Commissioners under this new legislation? Under the old act the board had a lot to say about fixing rates. That is the first matter on which I wish to hear from the minister.

One can look at what Mr. Gordon had to say about competition with the Canadian Pacific in committee proceedings No. 24 at page 1765. Mr. Gordon said:

—but certainly we will talk to the C.P.R. and they will talk to us, when there are particular freight rates to be fixed. We will consult with each other because usually the applicant is dealing with both railways—

That is the point. Usually the applicant is dealing with both railways. We are looking for the complete answer. It may be that the railroads consult with one another in trying to find the proper rates for a given haul. I am asking, what will happen when both railways are not providing similar services to the same industries?

I am in some doubt the interpretation of paragraph (c) of clause 1. It is my belief that this all encompassing commission will in a sense regulate and set out areas. This board will take unto itself the thinking formerly done by bodies such as the Air Transport Board, the Board of Transport Commissioners, the maritime commission and so on. It will be an all-encompassing commission and under it various segments of the transportation industry may be more or less parceled out. In other words, it may say that air freight can do so much but no more, or it might step on the railroad industry. The same thinking might apply to the trucking industry.

My question is, will the commission parcel out parts of the transportation industry to the various modes of transport in the industry?

This is the difficulty the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States faced. If we run into that difficulty then the loser under Bill C-231 will be the consumer of the services of the transportation industry, the shipper or the buyer of goods shipped. As soon as the commission starts parceling out various segments of the industry to various modes of transportation, in a sense you do away with competition and bring about a situation where instead of bringing in lower prices there is a tendency to create higher prices.

I am not the only one in doubt about the interpretation of paragraph (c) of clause. 1. With regard to the Canadian National brief, as found in committee proceedings No. 24, page 1769, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce said:

> But (c) seems to deal mainly with co-ordination in development, regulation and control. It seems that that co-ordination should be necessary in a large country like Canada where we have limited funds for investment in transportation generally.

In other words, he believes that to some degree it is necessary to bring all modes of transportation under one commission so that parts of the industry can be parceled out to various modes of transportation. This is the interpretation of paragraph (c) given by Doctor Bandeen, a statistician for the C.N.R., who said:

> Well, the minute you do that you are saying that competition will not let the best or the cheapest carrier come to the top and prevail. You are saying we have to go beyond competition and determine which carriers shall be where, and how much, and how effective. That is what we are arguing against. Either the bill is for competition as it says at the beginning or it is not. The problem that has come up in the United States has arisen—

This is the point I want to drive home and this is the argument I make.

> —precisely under this same type of wording—

Under this same type of wording.

> —where they are attempting to co-ordinate the various modes.

• (7:50 p.m.)

I would like to hear the minister deal with this point in regard to paragraph (a) and paragraph (c) because Dr. Bandeen, a very capable economist, said in the committee that the difficulty in the United States "has arisen precisely under this same type of wording." I think there should be something more definite in the clause. If this type of wording got the United States railroads into difficulties, we should consider the problem. I could read the rest of this page of the committee proceedings and the top of the next page but I will not take the time to do so except for this sentence, again from Dr. Bandeen's evidence, when he is talking about the commission acting as a research and regulatory body:

> We fail to see the advantage of having these two combined but, since the bill suggests they should be, all we are doing is cautioning that if they are combined, let us hope that they keep their two arms separate and do not misuse their research powers in a regulatory field.

Dr. Bandeen said we should not get into the same difficulty that the United States got into with its transportation policy and the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I believe he made a very sound argument.

I could read what the chairman of the standing committee said when questioned on whether or not the committee would again hear the C.N.R. and C.P.R. witnesses after some amendments were approved by the committee. I shall quote what the chairman said because the question may be asked now, why did you not get that fully explained in the committee? We were led to believe in the committee that the C.N.R. and C.P.R. witnesses would be recalled after we had heard briefs from other users of the transport industry. As recorded at page 1751 of the proceedings the committee chairman said:

> May I bring to the attention of the committee that it is the intention—it was the steering committee's intention earlier—to bring the C.N.R. back to this committee. The C.P.R. will be coming back—

There are no ifs or buts about that.

> —and I would think that after the questioning and the information has been laid before this committee as to what costs they are putting before the committee, we will be in a position to act, after the other briefs have been heard.

So we had reason to expect that the C.N.R. in particular would have been back and that we could have questioned Dr. Bandeen and other C.N.R. officials on Dr. Bandeen's statement that this precise wording got the transportation industry into difficulty in the United States.

I should like to touch on one other subject very briefly, namely, the amendment I have suggested to line 4 of clause 1. I suggested that the word "adequate" should be added. I have talked to the minister about it and he, having had time to think about it, has said that this word is acceptable to him and to the government. I do not have very much more to say except that I hope the minister will answer some of the points I have made with regard to paragraphs (a) and (c). Whether the minister wishes to move the amendment I suggested or wants me to move it does not really matter.

At the end of the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South the minister asked permission to ask one small question. He said, "What else can we do? Can the freeze that is now on the railroads go on forever?" In other words he was saying, Isn't this bill better than doing nothing?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, no.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I thought this was a rather weak argument because no one believes that the freeze placed on the railroads in 1959 and the subsidy paid because of it should go on forever. But if a freeze was considered necessary in 1959, so necessary that it was acceptable to parliament and the country, how can one readily accept a bill which says, Take the freeze off and let everything go? How can one accept those two principles? This is where the minister's argument was weak.

Certainly we agree that legislation is necessary, but should it be legislation that takes the freeze off and opens the gates wide? The freeze was put on to control freight rates. If you are going to take the freeze off you should not allow freight rates to go sky high. I agree that there should be legislation and that the freeze must eventually come off. Maybe now is the time to take it off, but if it is taken off it should be done in such a manner that there will be some degree of hesitancy on the part of the railroads to increase freight rates, and there should be some overseeing body with the authority to question and examine the necessity for any freight rate increases after the freeze is removed.

The minister's argument was weak when he said, "This surely is better than nothing." If the bill is being introduced for that reason and that reason alone, then we would be better to stick with the freeze until the minister and his officials or the transport committee can devise a new bill or proper amendments to this one to solve some of the inequities in the freight rate structure which were the cause of the MacPherson royal commission being established. This bill is born out of that commission but it solves none of the inequities of the freight rate structure other than to say that the structure is too complicated so we should throw it wide open, start all over again and see which rates go up and which are abused, and if a shipper is abused and complains loudly and proves he is being hurt by sky-rocketing freight rates we will give him a hearing. In some cases he will be expected to prove not only that his interest is affected but also the public interest, be it the welfare of his community or province.

This bill really does not solve the question that the commission was set up to study. It does not bring about a solution to the inequities in the freight rate structure. It does the very opposite and therefore is not the answer that the Canadian people want. The bill takes the freeze off but it is a bill and nothing more than a bill and the reasons advanced are not good enough for the house to pass it before January 1 or even by the end of January. But who knows?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I hope hon. members will not die of shock when I say that the speech that has just been delivered by the hon. member for Acadia is much the best speech I have ever heard him deliver in the house and one of the best speeches I have heard in the house on a very complicated subject. But before I deal with his speech I want to say a word about something I was told. This is perhaps very unfair to the hon. member for Waterloo South and if he wishes to say so I shall accept that, but I was told he said, and certainly I heard the hon. member for Timiskaming say in what I thought was the most extraordinary speech in favour of public ownership I have heard in the whole course of my life here, when he condemned it up hill and down dale and then said we should have more of it. I do not imagine that the hon. member for Waterloo South, who perhaps has a greater capacity for consistency than the hon. member for Timiskaming, would have made that kind of speech.

I believe, however, that any discussion of nationalization is beyond the scope of this committee. In the committee we are supposed to discuss the bill which is before us. I think it is proper on second reading to argue that we should not have this bill but rather a bill to nationalize the railways or any other type of transport, but once that point has been settled by the house I think we should then deal with the bill which is before us. I did not object when hon. members wandered back into this field, but I do hope that at some stage we will decide to stick to the bill before us and deal with it.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, would the minister permit me to ask a question? He referred to the discussion we had on second reading.

Does the minister recall that on second reading of this bill he said that he appreciated the suggestion that it go to a standing committee and made it very clear that in passing second reading we were not in the ordinary sense committing ourselves to its principles. He suggested that on clause 1 we could in effect reappraise our whole position in respect of the principles set out in this clause.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not agree entirely with the hon. gentleman. We both are speaking from recollection and one's recollection sometimes is not borne out by the written record.

Mr. Barnett: If the minister will allow me to say so, I noted that statement at the time because it was a rather unusual one for the minister to make.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. member would listen to my reply. The position I took was, I think, that there were only one or two points which I thought were being decided on second reading and one of those points was that the principle of nationalization was rejected. I am just saying now that we have had nearly two days of general debate under clause 1, and I would hope that after one or two members who are not present in the house and who I know wish to say something on this clause have spoken when we come back in January, we will be able to get down to the content of the bill.

As the hon. member for Comox-Alberni very properly said, apart from the broad principles of the bill, I will be quite willing to consider any reasonable amendment which I think will improve the bill, no matter which side of the house it comes from. When I say this I should like to add that I am pleased to say now that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Acadia about putting the word "adequate" in clause 1 to me seems to be a distinct improvement. Like him I do not care which of us moves it. I might beat him to the punch, but in any case he was the author.

Both the hon. member for Acadia and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle earlier talked about the pessimism of the MacPherson commission report and the much changed conditions since the time that report was produced. I will not be so partisan as to give any reasons for those changed conditions, but I am very glad to have the nod from the hon. member for Acadia. I was particularly cheered when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said he believed that the prosperity was going to continue, because I really did not like the gloomy tone of the hon. member for Northumberland who seems to be trying to talk us all into a depression again.

I do not think that anyone who has anything to do with western Canada these days can feel very depressed, because there is the kind of atmosphere in western Canada that there was when I was a boy and which unfortunately has been rather lacking through much of my adult life. I think every Canadian is very glad that this is so. I really do not think that the main purpose of the MacPherson commission was to deal with the inequities of freight rates. That was one purpose. I think the main purpose was to deal with a problem which had arisen because of the horizontal rate increases which were rolled back by the previous government at the time that commission was appointed. In order to roll them back the policy of paying subsidies to the railways was started, both in respect of the C.P.R. and the publicly owned railway. This was a new departure. To be quite fair to the previous government, I must point out that they did not say it was a policy. They said it was an expedient while a policy was being formulated.

The basic problem so far as the railways are concerned, however, is that those subsidies which started at $20 million have now reached $110 million. The subsidies which are being paid today do not take into account the new wage settlement in the railways which is approximately 24 per cent over a three-year period. Unless the railways in some way or other are permitted to improve their financial position, these funds will have to be raised somehow. They can be raised only in two ways. One source is from the shippers and the other is from the taxpayers. I think most of us in every part of the house feel that taxes are pretty high now and that we do not want to have automatic increases in taxation for specific services if those services can be made to pay for themselves.

I think it is as important to get rid of waste, inefficiency and redundancy now as it was when this was recommended by the MacPherson royal commission. It is just as important now as it was then, notwithstanding the great prosperity we have at the present time. We have to face this. We cannot forever keep putting it off.

Just as much as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle does, I regret the misunderstanding, call it what you will, about the action of the Board of Transport Commissioners. I do not think it has facilitated the passing of this bill. I think hon. members have been very charitable with me because I think they realize that nobody was more embarrassed than I. The fact is, however, that we really must not put off forever the abandonment of lines which really are not needed, because in this way we are just making the taxpayers pay for them for very little purpose. At the same time we must make sure that we do not abandon any part of the structure which is needed or which will be needed. This is one of the things with which we have tried to deal in a constructive way, partly in this bill and partly by the government's voluntary action in undertaking to protect the great majority of the lines in western Canada. I think that action has created a much better climate in western Canada than there was before, and I think hon. gentlemen opposite were generous enough to say that.

That is not the only redundancy. There are services which were once important but which the railways should get rid of when there is no social advantage involved and when we have to collect taxes out of the pockets of the Canadian public to pay for them. To the extent we can get rid of redundancy and unnecessary services in order to make the railways more efficient and obtain better value for our money, we will not have to raise extra money through taxes or through increased freight rates and rates for other services.

In order to get away from the problem of ever-mounting subsidies we must rid ourselves of useless expenditures, or at least those that cannot really be justified. We must recognize that we cannot have increases in costs and wages and continue indefinitely to have static freight rates, unless the taxpayers are going to pay the bill. That is what has been happening ever since the freeze was established. We are faced with a real crisis in this regard and there is no question about that.

Up until December 31 we will have paid in the neighbourhood of $100 million because of these various freezes. We have not taken any account yet of the latest wage settlement, and I include in that statement those settlements reached through legislation and those which, happily, were settled by mediation. What are we going to do about this problem? Should we take the freeze off and allow the present law to operate?

I do not think the hon. member for Acadia understood my question to the hon. member for Winnipeg South, and I am not surprised because I sometimes do not make myself as clear as I should. I asked the hon. member for Winnipeg South whether he would rather have the present law operate—I do not mean the freeze, because that is not the law, but a voluntary acceptance on the part of the railways of something less than the law—and let the railway companies go to the Board of Transport Commissioners to ask for a horizontal rate increase to meet increased costs and wages, or have the new bill. My opinion is that the former would be much worse for western Canada and even worse for the Atlantic provinces where there is a greater rollback. That is the point I tried to make to the hon. member for Winnipeg South. There is not a choice between continuing the freeze or adopting this bill but there is a choice between the old system of horizontal increases and adopting this bill.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I should like to ask the minister whether the difficulty in respect of the maritimes is related to the fear which is brought about by a lack of understanding?

Mr. Pickersgill: The Atlantic provinces will have two full years to observe the experience of other parts of the country regarding the unknown because their freeze will continue. If we do not adopt this bill the Atlantic provinces will suffer most. Not only will the freeze be removed but the rollback will also be removed.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Is it not the freeze in rates which makes the people in the maritimes unsure about the essence of this bill?

Mr. Pickersgill: The freeze exists in respect of non-competitive class rates and non-competitive commodity rates. This is a large part of the spectrum where a removal of the freeze would enable the railways to apply for a horizontal or another kind of increase in respect of these non-competitive rates. In my opinion the case the railway would make for an increase in rates would be unanswerable; otherwise we have been wasting the taxpayers' money by voting these subsidies all these years. That is my point.

We are faced with this stark choice, and I do not think we have faced it squarely before now. We have three possibilities before us. We must maintain ever increasing subsidies and ever increase taxes, as we have been doing since 1958, or adopt this bill or let the present law operate. I think we have reached the end of the road of subsidies. If we continue in that direction the people of this country are going to rebel against the burden of taxation.

The second alternative is to follow the law as it now exists, let the railway companies go to the Board of Transport Commissioners and increase their rates wherever they can and let them apply for abandonments wherever they feel they are necessary without interference with the present law.

The third alternative is to adopt something more constructive. I think I will be successful in convincing the house that we have something more constructive in this measure. What we are saying in clause 1 of this bill is that we believe it is feasible to allow rates to be determined by competition wherever there is competition. We believe that we can rid ourselves of a great deal of regulation in this way. You may ask, what does that mean? It makes a lot of difference. Thousands of man-hours in the form of very expensive labour, such as the services of Dr. Bandeen, are wasted every year in hearings before the Board of Transport Commissioners and dealing with unnecessary regulations. We feel strongly that we should not regulate things that need not be regulated. If we can protect the public, both shippers and consumers, by competition without having a whole lot of bureaucrats measuring the rules and interpreting them we will save a great deal of money.

One of the difficulties regarding competitive rates is that though during the freeze competitive rates could be increased, so much notice was required that other transport companies could often under-cut the competitive rates. We want to give the railway companies an opportunity to compete in competitive areas. We believe there is so much regulation now that these companies do not have the opportunity of operating as competitively as possible. I personally believe that railway companies can obtain far more revenue from competitive areas if they are allowed to compete. If they get more revenue from these areas they will not have the necessity to charge such high rates in non-competitive areas. This will result in more equitable freight rates for non-competitive areas.

The hon. gentleman asked whether the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. compete for business. Surely each of us judges that for himself and forms some ideas. There are more ways of competing for business than by rates. Even in areas where there is no alternative mode of transport, wherever two railway companies provide a service customers will go to both to see which one will give the best rate.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

That fact leads me to a point raised yesterday by the hon. member for Medicine Hat and another hon. member who raised the same point. They seemed to assume that, in some way or other, the railways under the law can set secret rates to favour one customer over another. There is no way whatever under the present law that the railways can lawfully set any secret rate. Every rate the railways charge any customer is, by law, available for inspection. I know a number of hon. members, particulary hon. members from Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, are very worried about the situation of the shippers of bulk commodities who obviously have no other way to ship except by rail. Therefore in that sense, not in the special sense of this bill, they are captive shippers. In other words, they have no other place to go than to the railways.

For almost all commodities many shippers have access to both railways. Once one of the railways has set a rate that is acceptable and has been published, under clause 16 any shipper who is charged a higher rate under similar geographical circumstances, similar circumstances of volume and so on, will have a grievance. He will have a grievance if he is charged a higher rate and it will be against the public interest to charge it. That is what the clause says. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg South did not thoroughly appreciate the fact that this clause was very substantially modified compared with the earlier provisions of the bill, the proposed section 317.

The modifications were based mainly upon the representations made by the government of Manitoba and it seemed to me they met the point fairly precisely. I believe that clause 16 has pretty well accomplished what many members hoped would be accomplished, and which would never be accomplished by a maximum rate formula such as there is in section 336. The purpose of the maximum rate formula is to protect the relatively small shippers, who at the present time, have to pay class rates. We have tried and have not been able to find any way to devise a maximum rate formula that would provide anything like reasonable revenues for the railways on small shipments that now go by class rates and would fit the circumstances of bulk shippers who now have commodity rates. Unless we are going to go right back into the field of complicated regulations, which we are trying to get away from, I do not believe it can be done. I say this because some of the best experts I have been able to find have tried very hard and in various ways to find such a formula. I just do not think it can be devised.

I think there is far more protection of the kind that is really needed in the new clause 16 for commodity shippers than any kind of maximum rate formula that could possibly be devised. But we do need the maximum rate formula to protect the small shipper. I was rather interested that Dr. Bortz in his evidence before the committee indicated that under his calculations as well as he could make them, the shipper shipping small quantities would, under the maximum rate formula, in a substantial number of cases have a lower rate than he is now paying under the class rates. So it does appear to offer some reasonable measure of protection to the only kind of shipper that in my view a maximum rate formula can protect. The improved clause 16 will, I think, provide the protection needed to shippers of bulk commodities.

I should now like to deal with the question of the public interest. The public interest is not circumscribed, but there are certain things that are definitely said not to be in the public interest. The most important of these is found in subclause (3) of clause 16 on page 9 of the bill:

> In conducting an investigation under this section, the Commission shall have regard to all considerations that appear to it to be relevant—

In other words, the commission may say that anything that seems to it to be relevant is part of the public interest.

> —including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing,
> (a) whether the tolls or conditions specified for the carriage of traffic under the rate so established are such as to create an unfair disadvantage beyond that which may be deemed to be inherent in the location or volume of the traffic, the scale of operation connected therewith or the type of traffic or service involved;

That really means that if you are shipping from roughly the same geographic area to the same point, say on the coast, and are shipping at roughly the same volume, it is against the public interest to charge one shipper a different rate from another shipper. That is said quite specifically in this bill to be against the public interest. I think it would also clearly be against the public interest for a railway to seek to charge a rate which would in fact be so high as to make it impossible for a shipper to export who already had established himself and had had a rate previously, so long, of course, as a lower rate was compensatory, because that is one of the other requirements of the bill. We are saying that the railways are not permitted to charge rates that are not compensatory, except in certain specified cases where the treasury will make up the difference. When you take all these geographical and other factors into account and take the fact that there are two railways, to which certain hon. gentlemen object but which I think provides a quite considerable protection to shippers, it seems to me there is in clause 16 a pretty adequate protection, about as effective a protection as can be devised.

There seems to be—I do not think it is explicit at all—an implicit assumption that in some way or other the government is anxious to get railway rates higher than they need to be. I have to be elected. All my colleagues have to be elected. The members on this side of the house who are supporting the government have to be elected. They are not going to get many votes by giving the railways higher rates than they need. They are much more apt to get votes by any protective device that will keep the rates down. At the same time, we are not likely to continue to get public support for very long if we keep the rates down by dishing out endless subsidies and then bringing in increases in income tax and sales taxes to pay for them. This is the problem. If it were an easy problem to solve it would have been solved long ago. It would have been solved by the previous government without ever appointing the MacPherson royal commission. It would have been solved during all these years in between. It has not been solved.

It is just about as difficult and intractable an economic and social problem as one could think of. I do suggest that, although there may still be some improvements and refinements, as a result of the conscientious work of the committee, based on what I like to think was a pretty good framework to start with, we have the makings of a good piece of legislation which, however, cannot be absolutely perfect. That is why we have made two or three provisions for statutory reviews of these procedures, because we know they are not going to be perfect and we know they will have to be improved in the light of experience. But I doubt that we will get a very much better bill by taking another six months at it. I certainly agree that we need a few more days.

I am disappointed, as are the hon. gentlemen opposite who are so sympathetic to me, but everybody knows that I really have been pushed around terribly by my colleagues. I am the low man on the totem pole. I admit that quite readily and I appreciate the tremendous, and I am sure utterly sincere, sympathy of all hon. gentleman opposite for my plight. However, I still think that we all have a job to do which most of us have been trying to do quite sincerely ever since this legislation was first introduced in the shadow of another crisis in the transportation industry last August.

I hope sincerely that early in January we can hammer out the remaining clauses of the bill and send it to the other place after which it will receive royal assent so that we can meet some of the problems in a new way instead of having to fall back on the existing legislation which was considered so bad by the previous government eight years ago that they appointed a Royal commission and started this process which we are trying to finish now.

I would be inclined to take the view that if there are other hon. members who have general speeches to make we should perhaps go on a little longer. But if this is not the case I might be inclined to yield now to the blandishments of my personal friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre who has expressed such solicitude for me.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to the comments made by the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill). He always has interesting things to say, being either humorous or showing a great understanding of human problems, or simply because of the philosophical way in which he accepts criticism.

But there is something in his argument which did not strike the right note in my mind; let me try to explain.

At one point the hon. minister says, if I heard him correctly—and if I did not, I hope he will set me straight—that if the railway companies—this appears to be the new philosophy in the field of transportation—cannot make ends meet with the present rates, only two solutions remain: either raise the rates or ask the government to pay larger subsidies.

The hon. minister seems to think that the government contributions have reached a ceiling beyond which we cannot easily go. Therefore, passenger and freight rates will have to be raised. I presume this is what the hon. minister believes; personally, I have a different outlook on the problem.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman has left out what I believe is the most important element of all. Before we consider increasing the subsidies or setting higher rates there are two other things which should be done first. One is to get rid of everything that is wasteful or unnecessary so as to reduce costs, and to that extent there will be no need for higher subsidies or higher rates. The second thing is to give the railways a chance to get more business by enabling them to compete more actively for the traffic and to do so in a more businesslike way so that by getting more business at the existing rates they can improve their financial position and as a result will not have to raise their rates so much. I thought I had made that point. I believe that this is the most important point of all.

Mr. Mongrain: Up to this point I am in perfect accord with the minister but I do not agree with him when he says that this is the most important point. There is something else which troubles me and I would be very happy to hear the comments of the minister on this point which weighs on my conscience as a Canadian citizen. We all remember the time when the railways came to parliament and requested all kinds of grants, rights and benefits. They wanted to have rights in real estate, in natural resources, rights to operate air lines, steamship lines and hotels.

They promised that they would give the country the best of services for both passengers and freight and thus serve the best interests of the country. They were granted those benefits. Later they realized that it would be advantageous to them to organize all kinds of companies such as air line companies, steamship companies, real estate companies and hotels. I apologize for my English. It is not what it should be. However, I know the minister will understand me because he is very bright.

To return to what I was saying, they decided to keep those companies which brought profit and wash their hands of those which were not profitable. Then they came back to parliament and said, we are not making money on the passenger service and on some freight services. We seem to be in the red on some of the lines. Either the government should subsidize us or we will have to raise our rates. There is something wrong somewhere. The railways were granted all kinds of benefits when they first came to parliament. In spite of this they decided to discontinue the operation of those companies which did not bring a profit and then said, we have to raise our rates or get more subsidies from the government. Maybe I am naïve, and I know there are things I do not know, but it seems to me that there is something wrong somewhere and I would like to have the minister's reaction to what I have said.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is a question to which, if the hon. member for Trois-Rivières had been brought up in Manitoba as I was, he would be very hesitant to give an answer because I am sure that the answer I would give would not command universal approval in western Canada. I will try to give the answer as straightforwardly as I can. Knowing I will never be able to defeat any of the members from Winnipeg anyway, I will not have to answer for my remarks in Winnipeg.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: You can always try. It might help us.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would not give the hon. gentleman many chances in my constituency either.

First of all, I do not think it possible to have one rate structure for the Canadian Pacific Railway, to which the hon. gentleman's remarks applied, and an entirely different one for the Canadian National Railways. The companies which form the Canadian National Railways were also given a lot of the public domain to build the railways. They dissipated those assets and went broke. They were taken over by the government during the first world war and afterwards, and in my view they are publicly owned, though the hon. member for Timiskaming in an extraordnary kind of convoluted argument this afternoon seemed to suggest they were not publicly owned. At any rate they have been a tremendous drain on the treasury for a very long time.

There is no doubt that one could say to the Canadian Pacific Railway, because you have been provident when all the other private railways were improvident, because you made good use of the assets you had when Canadian Northern, Grand Truck Pacific and all the others dissipated theirs you should therefore take the revenue from all these assets into account and because you make so much out of Consolidated Mining and Smelting and other investments of that sort you can afford to give the Canadian people free service, or practically free service, on your railway. If they did that, wherever there was any competition, the Canadian National would get no traffic at all. This is one of the practical difficulties of this concept.

The Solicitor General will correct me if I am wrong about this but I understand that the courts have determined why the grants were made to the Canadian Pacific Railway. They agreed to build the railway if they got these concessions. A great many other Canadians received concessions out of the public domain in the 19th century for doing other things, but to my knowledge nobody has suggested they should provide their services at an uneconomic rate because either by good fortune, good luck or good managment they made the most of their assets.

If the Canadian Pacific were really the kind of soulless corporation it is customary to protray it as in political speeches, this problem would not be so difficult. We could say that they could take their revenues from their assets and run their railway at a loss because they are making so much out of other things. However, one must remember that Lord Mount Stephen, Lord Strathcona and Sir William Van Horne are all dead. Even Lord Shaughnessy and Sir Edward Beatty are dead. The securities of the C.P.R. have changed hands hundreds of times.

If we told the C.P.R. that they had to provide their services at a loss and derive all their revenues from these other companies, I can just see the Leader of the Opposition talking about the widows and orphans who own C.P.R. stock and how the Minister of Finance ought to compensate them for the shocking injustice being done to them by the public. The tears we have seen him weep would be nothing in comparison, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would not be far behind.

I have tried to avoid controversial subjects like this and like icebreaking on the St. Lawrence, where if you say something pleasing to one part of the country it is sure to displease another part. I am like the hon. member for Trois-Rivières, rather naïve and simpleminded. There are times when I find it a little hard to perpetuate the old-fashioned hypocrisies in which no one really believes but which in politics we so often repeat over and over again.

The other day in Halifax I took my life in my hands, politically speaking, when I said I would not do anything to prevent the development of navigation on the St. Lawrence, that we were taking no extraordinary measures to accelerate it but would not do anything to prevent it. Five years ago if any politician had said that in Halifax he could not have got out of the city fast enough. Perhaps the junior member for Halifax is naïve too, but he said I was fairly well received there.

The plain fact is that once in a while we have to face the realities of public life. Whether or not it was wise to give the C.P.R. 25 million acres of land, whether or not Sir John Macdonald, who is also dead, made a great mistake in doing this, we cannot undo it now. Whether or not it was wise to give this grant to build a railway I am not going to say. When I leave this place and return to a university to lecture in history I will give my opinion on this question, but I will not do so today.

Nevertheless this is a fact of our political life and the consequences that flow from that fact are with us. There is no practical way I can see of solving this problem simply by saying to the Canadian Pacific Railway that they have to undo all that has been done in the past, treat the revenues from all these other assets as though they were railway revenues and run the railway as a kind of public charity. That is just not practicable, and I do not think anyone in the house in his heart believes it is either. And if we do not think it is, why go on saying so? That is about the only answer I can give the hon. member.

Mr. Mongrain: It is always charming to listen to the Minister of Transport. He has such a sense of humour that he should have been a lawyer. I do not know whether he is.

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

Mr. Mongrain: Apparently he is not. He would have been a good lawyer and made a lot more money than he makes in the House of Commons, because he is really bright.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I will now speak French again, because it is easier for me to say what I mean.

Like all other hon. members, I was impressed by the argument of the Minister of Transport, because he argues with unassailable logic and such good nature. However, as I said a little earlier, he did not answer my question. My problem is a matter of conscience, Mr. Chairman, as a Canadian. I think that all hon. members have the same problem and I have the impression, although that may be a rash judgment, that the minister feels the same way also, although he may not be as free as I am to say it publicly.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

The minister said a little earlier: Because the C.P.R. has been given generous concessions and has displayed an intelligent and objective administration, should we take that as an excuse to beg that company for low rates? Of course, he is right; we are not asking for very low rates for passengers, freight, etc. It is not that at all. We simply want to know—and this is the question I am putting to the minister—if an objective, non partisan assessment could be made by neutral people concerning the concessions granted by Canada to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, since it began operations, in every field, when there was no question of subdividing the companies, so that we can find out which companies make a profit and which companies do not, thus enabling the government to grant subsidies to those companies operating at a loss.

There was no mention of this, when the Canadian Pacific Railways were established, and all these concessions were made. Would it not be advisable to clarify the situation today and make an appraisal of all that has been granted to the C.P.R.? As for those who later became millionaires and have since left us for a better world, I hope the Almighty is watching over them, because I do not want to trouble their eternal rest or that of their heirs. Nevertheless, I feel that when Canada granted them certain privileges, natural resources and operating rights, Canada was not entering into a ten, 20 or 50 year contract, but rather a contract which was to last as long as our country should survive. As for those who made millions with these concessions, it is not our worry whether they be in Heaven or elsewhere.

Our problem is whether the company, originally called Canadian Pacific Railways, which has since subdivided its operations to find out which would make millions and which would be in the red, thereby being subsidized by Canada, our problem, as I say, is whether we should not now make a re-appraisal and say: You have been conceded much up to now, but it is necessary that we should establish some common denominator in order to ascertain whether you should give back to Canada what it gave to you. And this, to a certain extent and taking into account the fact that such enterprises should bring in some profits, some dividends, certain advantages which we have no objection to.

I am not talking about nationalizing railways. I am for private enterprise as much as possible, at least just as long as contingencies do not require otherwise. But I am one of those who, through simple-mindedness or candour, is a little surprised to see that the C.P.R. was given everything to start with and that subtle questions were not asked as to what would be economic and what would not, and that in 1966-67 the C.P.R. should say to us: well, railways, airlines, hotels and mines are all economic and we will keep them—I do not know, I am not familiar enough with the whole organization to make an objective analysis—but passenger service is not; therefore, let the government take it over or subsidize it. Well, there is something wrong here. An agreement was made with the C.P.R., tremendous advantages were conceded. I realize that the C.P.R. ran some risks at the time, but history has now proved that there have been ample rewards for the risks that were taken.

Should not the Canadian people today, who, after all, own those natural resources and those rights we have granted them, be justified to say: Give us a balance-sheet, showing what this has brought you up to now and what you have contributed to this country? And we should say: Do not subdivide companies so as to keep only those that are economical and leave us with the ones showing a deficit.

And I do not accept the minister's philosophy to the effect that every company should be maintained through charity. Oh no. Whenever I travel from Ottawa to Trois-Rivières—well, in my case, there is no problem as I have a pass like all the other members—if I were not a member of parliament, I would be very happy to pay my fare.

This is an aside, Mr. Chairman. I wish to point out that the Canadian National is giving, at the present time, a better service than the Canadian Pacific, for many reasons. The Canadian National is a crown company. But if we were to talk about private companies, we could say to the Canadian Pacific: You should at least give us the same advantages.

[English]

I should like to summarize very briefly, Mr. Chairman. Let the minister forget that he is a minister of the crown. Let him remember that he is a Canadian and I am sure that he will feel as I feel. Let us have a balance sheet of what the Canadian Pacific has had from this country up to now. Let us investigate to see if the Canadian Pacific should keep everything it has had from this country. Let us see if the company is not trying to keep for itself what is a paying proposition and leaving to the country what should be subsidized by the government. That is the point.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, we know that the Canadian Pacific cannot be taxed by the municipalities on its main line in western Canada. That is part of the contract of 1881 and that contractual right is part of the constitution of Canada at the moment, I regret to say. At least, the lawyers say it is. The Canadian Pacific Railway was built pursuant to a contract between the government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1881, if I remember correctly. The first statute of the session of 1881 was a statute confirming that contract.

It is true of course that this parliament is sovereign and we can abrogate any contract we like with or without compensation. That is the theory on which our constitution rests. But it has been the custom of all governments of Canada up to the present time to respect contracts into which governments have entered even if sometimes they were improvident contracts. I was speaking quite seriously a little while ago when I said that whether that contract originally was provident or improvident, it is a contract and it has to be construed by the courts. We can make a law saying that the contract is abrogated. Except in the one respect I have mentioned, I do not know of any other respect in which we could not abrogate it unilaterally. But we just do not do that kind of thing. We never have up to now and we have never had a government or parliament willing to do that.

If the Canadian Pacific is not carrying out that contract, if it is doing anything to divest itself of certain of its assets which is illegal, then of course we should make the C.P.R. obey the law. There is no question about that in my mind. If they are doing something that is against public policy we can make a law to stop it. I think perhaps that is where I would not disagree much with the hon. gentleman. If the Canadian Pacific is rearranging its assets in such a way as to be contrary to good public policy—I am not saying whether it is or is not because it is not a question I have studied—if it is rearranging its assets in such a way, and I know that there are many people who think it is and some people think strongly that it is not, then it would be an appropriate subject for this parliament to deal with and correct.

But I think there are other things that we sometimes forget. When they got those 25 million acres in 1881, most people said the land was not worth anything. In the period after 1881, and particularly after 1896 and indeed up to the time my father homesteaded between the lakes in Manitoba in 1911, you could get a quarter section of land for five bucks. The land was free. You filed on the land and then you had to clear so many acres over three years and then you could get a patent and it was yours.

In some cases those lands turned out to have tremendously valuable minerals on them. In some cases they did not. As the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale knows as well as I do, homesteading was a lottery. But we have never said that the fellow who struck it rich has got to give it back, except to the extent anybody else does who makes money any other way, in ordinary taxes. This has gone on all over western Canada. It is not only the C.P.R. which have received grants of land.

I think we would have to look at that problem as a whole, deal with one case compared with another and do similar justice to all. Otherwise I think we would be creating a very serious injustice which would be visited upon people who had no original responsibility for the situation. But I certainly agree that to the extent that the hon. gentleman was able to show, or that anyone else was able to show, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was arranging its affairs and assets in a way that was contrary to public policy, in other words, that it was really milking the railway, so to speak, and particularly if we were paying subsidies at the same time, then that would be something that certainly should be corrected. But I do not think that up to now that case has been proven. I think it is an open question. It is a question on which there can be some debate, but so far as the construction of the original contract is concerned that contract is there and open for everybody to read. I understand it has been construed several times in the courts and, unless we change the law, as the courts have construed it, it remains the law.

Mr. Churchill: Shall we rise and report progress?

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Chairman, since second reading of this bill I have learned that several mining companies in western Canada are somewhat concerned about certain provisions of the bill. I refer to provisions which permit the railway companies to fix freight rates for the transport of bulk commodities.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

The legal firm of which I am a partner has been acting for several years for several of these companies, and I personally have acted for several of them for a number of years. Under these circumstances I suggest that the proper procedure for me is to disclose an interest and refrain from voting in connection with the matter before the house and unless instructed otherwise by you, Mr. Chairman, or by Mr. Speaker, that is the course I propose to follow. I do not propose to vote on any clauses of this bill which relate to rate fixing by railway companies in respect of commodities which might be shipped by clients of our firm for whom I have acted in the past.

Mr. Baldwin: I want to ask the minister a question which I do not expect him to answer now. First, may I say I think this has been a very useful exercise. The very frank statement the minister has made will make our dealing with the subsequent clauses much easier when we come to them. The minister dealt extensively with clause 16 and the question of public interest, and rightly so. The minister suggested that when we come to subclause (3) we will in effect be defining the public interest. Is the minister not really begging the question, because subclause (1) refers to certain conditions which "may prejudicially affect the public interest?"

Once there has been a prima facie establishing of that point the commission can then institute an investigation, but it is only when the investigation has commenced and is under way that you take into account the different aspects which are dealt with in subclause (3). So really you have no more definition of public interest than what the commission itself may decide is a proper and reasonable interpretation, unless a matter reaches the stage where a court might give that definition. I am concerned because the words "public interest" could be so construed, so interpreted that to establish this prima facie case it would be essential to bring it to the attention of the commission, which would mean that a full, very wide and very deep type of interest was being prejudiced.

I will not go any further now. I think this matter affects people coming from regions such as mine who may feel there may be something that affects the interests of the Peace River country and northern Canada, but they may come up against the suggestion that the "public interest" here means the national interest in the sense in which "national interest" is used in clause 1. Somewhere in our proceedings could some consideration could be given to this matter? I do not think it is the kind of phrase you can put a limiting definition on, but we could say, without limiting the generalities of it, that we have taken it to mean certain things. This is important because any benefits which flow from clause 16 must be founded on a wide and proper interpretation of clause 16.

If I am a shipper and feel I am being discriminated against, and in the course of my business I deal with so many hundreds of people, is this considered to be the public interest or must it be public interest in that it affects a very substantial area or region? This is a point that needs clarification.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. and learned gentleman's intervention demonstrates to me quite conclusively that I would never like to be opposite him in court because he has raised a point that had never even occurred to my lay mind until he raised it. Since he has raised it, I would want to get legal advice on it before I reply, because it had not occurred to me that if one said in any part of the clause that the investigation would take particular account of one set of circumstances that those circumstances would not, ipso facto, be one definition of the public interest. I am sure that is what is intended. It is certainly what was intended in the mind of the nominal author of the bill, the Minister of Transport, but perhaps I should consult the real author, the draftsman, before I attempt to give an answer to the hon. gentleman. I thank him very much for raising this question because I think a proper answer to it will help us a great deal in our consideration of the bill when we come back to it.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister mentioned his trip to Halifax. I think the minister's performance now indicates that he can come to almost any part of Canada and be well received. I recall many years ago when the hon. minister was in opposition that we were talking about a railway to Pine Point and the minister then made a very strong and determined attack in which he was aided and abetted by the Prime Minister, then leader of the opposition, and the then hon. member for Laurier, so much so that even months after mothers in my area persuaded their children to go to sleep by saying that if they did not the bad Pickersgill would get them. I think the minister could now go safely into the Peace river country and we might even set aside for him one of those homesteads about which he is becoming so nostalic.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say one word about the Pine Point railway. I do not apologize for any argument I used. It was a long-shot gamble which the C.P.R., although it owned the mine, would not take and which I did not think the taxpayers of Canada should take. I did not think that that reckless gambler, Donald Fleming, should have gambled the public's money in that manner. But I admit that it has paid off.

Mr. Hamilton: I cannot resist rising to take part in this debate. Does the minister not remember that as minister of northern affairs and national resources of that day I pointed out to the house and to the minister, when he was in opposition, that if we did not get that mine into operation that by about 1962 or 1963 we would have to import lead and zinc into western Canada and that in the national interest it was imperative that we move forward. Surely he must remember that debate. It is not right to say that this was a gamble when there was a sure market.

Mr. Pickersgill: All I can say is that the C.P.R. missed a big opportunity when they did not make the hon. genteleman the president, because they would have built the line and would have had the profits. We now know who the gambler was. It was not Donald Fleming at all. All I can say is that the hon. gentleman is noted for his vision and this certainly is one vision which has turned out.

Mr. Hamilton: I must rise again to say that "gamble" is the wrong word. It was a pure case of a calculated risk which had very little gamble in it. It is just one of the ten proposals made in 1958 which have turned out well.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I move that we rise, report progress and ask—

Mr. Pickersgill: Before that may I say a word or two and while I am saying a word or two perhaps my hon. friend the house leader might say a word or two to the whip on the other side. I know we do not usually draw attention to these matters.

Mr. Forrestall: Direct your remarks to the port of Halifax while you are doing this.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is precisely what I got up to do. I realize I have been negligent in failing to say anything tonight in respect of the intervention by the junior member for Halifax who made a very thoughtful if somewhat parochial speech this afternoon. I was hoping that before the end of his speech he would get as far as Musquodoboit but apparently he only got across the Angus Macdonald bridge to Dartmouth, and I am sure that will not do him any harm in the future.

Mr. Forrestall: I got out to the airport too.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. The hon. gentleman, when he is not parochial, is always up in the air.

Mr. Forrestall: Or out at sea.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say that I agree entirely with what the hon. gentleman said about the real future of the port of Halifax. I think the hon. gentleman has been quite generous to me since he came into the house, and as an old man I appreciate it. I think the hon. gentleman is quite right when he says that the future of the port of Halifax—I am paraphrasing what he said—is not in getting crumbs from the rich man's table. It is in developing in a modern way and taking advantage of the most magnificent natural harbour on the east coast of Canada.

Mr. Forrestall: I hope you will say that in February as well as in December.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh yes. This is a harbour which has the tremendous advantage of having really deep water and easy access. It is adapted to the ships of the future and I am convinced that they will bring great economies to maritime transportation in exactly the way that the St. Lawrence ship canal has brought great economies and I believe will bring greater economies to transportation in the central parts of Canada. I think we must have real foresight. We must do everything we can to take advantage of what we have and be ready both on the east and the west coasts. The last time I was in Vancouver—

An hon. Member: Is that parochial?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not want to be parochial. My parish is Canada. I recognize, however, that Halifax is a very important part of Canada. I believe the real future of the port of Halifax depends upon two things. One is the development of the hinterland of Halifax and the bringing of that part of Canada into a position where it will not be dependent upon the winter traffic from other parts of the country. It is, nevertheless, entitled to the historic rights it has and we will safeguard them in this bill.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

That, however, is not the future of Halifax. The future of Halifax will be far more dynamic. First, there will be the development of the hinterland and, second, Halifax has a real place in the future because it is a port which can handle these ships of the future to an extent to which no other place in eastern North America can.

Mr. Forrestall: Will the government help us in this task?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have done a fair amount already, as I am sure the hon. member knows. I hope we will pass this bill before I have been the Minister of Transport for three years, which will be by the beginning of February, but in the three years during which I have been Minister of Transport I think the improvements in the port of Halifax have been very substantial indeed. We are not going to stop where we are now. We are going to go on trying to be at least one step ahead of these developments so that we will be ready for them in Halifax.

I am advised that there might be some disposition on the part of the house to deal with item 85 on the order paper in the next few minutes, if I were to ask the committee to rise. If I can ascertain in a rather unusual way, but through the usual channels, whether there would be some disposition to take a few minutes to deal with this item, I should be glad to do so.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the minister's words let me extend the season's greetings from the people of Halifax. We were pleased to receive his in the form in which he has seen fit to deliver them.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the hon. member for Halifax. If my understanding is correct item No. 85 on the order paper is to be dealt with at this time. I would ask the chairman to rise and report progress in order that we can deal with this matter of business.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I rise and report progress?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has already advised the house that item No. 85 on the order paper should be passed tonight. It has received third reading in the Senate and was discussed clause by clause by the committee of that place. It was referred to a committee of this house and discussed here clause by clause. I hope that we can revert to the committee of the whole in order to dispose of this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it agreed that we allow the minister's request?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA LABOUR (SAFETY) CODE

PROVISION FOR EMPLOYMENT SAFETY IN FEDERAL WORKS

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. S-35, respecting the prevention of employment injury in federal works, undertakings and businesses.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the members of this party could have one copy of the bill which is now under discussion.

The Chairman: Perhaps I should inform the hon. member that members of the committee will receive copies in a few minutes.

Mr. Barnett: While copies of this bill are being distributed perhaps I could say a word or two as a member of the standing committee which considered this measure. In its present form the bill is not sufficient in its application in so far as members of this party are concerned. As the minister has suggested it did receive thorough study in a committee of the other place as well as in the standing committee of this house. While we regret that our amendments were not supported by a majority of this house we are satisfied to allow the passage of the bill without extended discussion. We are prepared to allow the minister and his department to have a whirl at this measure in its present form. We may have some further remarks to make about it at a future date in respect of how it could be improved. The bill in its present form represents a constructive step in the field of safety for employees of this country, and we are appreciative of the fact that the proposal was brought forward at this time.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 8—Special committees.

Mr. Starr: In respect of clause 8, it is the intention of the government to provide for consultative and advisory committees?

Mr. Nicholson: I am pleased to assure the hon. member that we are very interested in this measure and we certainly will welcome the advice of representatives of employees and employers.

Mr. Crouse: My remarks may not relate to the appropriate clause but the bill does state that it applies to all federal works, undertakings or businesses. I assume this means the shipping industry. Will this bill apply to a company employing stevedores in the event that a stevedore is injured?

Mr. Nicholson: Yes. Under the definition in this bill longshoremen employed by stevedoring companies will be included in the general category of shipping. This is a safety act, and we are by the provisions of this measure attempting to provide certain safety measures.

Clause agreed to.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Clauses 9 to 31 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Nicholson moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask a question for clarification under clause 30 but we went from clause 28 to clause 1 while I was making up my mind. Can the minister tell me whether this measure will cover federally owned and controlled ships under any type of repair, overhaul or refit in any private dockyard or shipyard?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, it would certainly cover the operations in dockyards. It covers generally any work or business undertaking that comes within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada. It is broad enough to cover that.

Mr. Forrestall: I am not certain that the answer the minister has given covers the area that has concerned me for many months. I refer to certain situations that developed in the Dosco shipyards in Halifax some months ago. As a result of a fire on board one of the military vessels of the Department of National Defence, certain injuries were sustained by employees. The investigations have not yet been successfully concluded to the satisfaction of union or management. I understand some claims are still outstanding. Because of this concern I wanted to raise the question in committee, and I apologize to the house for raising it now.

Mr. Nicholson: I am informed that the point raised by the hon. gentleman was dealt with by the other hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) before the committee. The reason I gave the answer I did was that this bill does not cover the public service of Canada. That is covered by government regulation. I am told this matter was gone into at some length in the committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication addressed to the Speaker of the House of Commons:

Ottawa, 21 December, 1966

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that Hon. Emmett M. Hall, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor-General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 21st December, at 9.45 for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EXPRESSION OF CHRISTMAS WISHES

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It is a very real privilege to be able, as the leader of the government, to wish all hon. members here the compliments of the season. I feel that I am wishing these compliments to a gallant band of survivors who have resisted the temptation to fly home prematurely and have even resisted the temptation to stay out in the lobby and watch a hockey game on television. It has been a long and hard session. In our own ways, and they have not always been the same ways, we have done our best to make it a productive session in the best interests and welfare of the people of our country. I think we have earned a Merry Christmas. I hope we will deserve a Happy New Year.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, we wish to thank the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) for his good wishes and the hope that we have a happy new year. I do not think the new year can be very prosperous in view of all the taxes with which we have been saddled and with which we expect to be further saddled in the next budget to be brought down. However, in all sincerity we wish to reciprocate the Prime Minister's good wishes and say to him and his colleagues that we wish them a very merry Christmas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party may I express our thanks to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) for the good wishes he has extended. We are very happy to reciprocate those good wishes to the Prime Minister, and we convey them also to the members of the government and to all hon. members of all parties in this House of Commons. We would like also to extend our special greetings to you, sir, as our first commoner—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: —to the other occupants of the chair, to those at the table, the staff, the page boys, and because it is Christmas I might even include the press. We join in the sentiments the Prime Minister has expressed. We trust we may all have a merry Christmas and that our work in the coming months will make it a happier new year for the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to express to you and to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) the heartfelt admiration of our group. We offer you our best wishes for a long and happy life.

We extend the same wishes also to all the hon. members of this house, to all those who worked to make Canada a better country and give it better legislation and a higher standard of living.

Last year, I said that I would do my best to convince the house to increase family allowances. I have not won my point, but

I hope that 1967 will be a year of achievements and that family allowances will be increased, so that every family may benefit from its share of the technical, scientific and other progress achieved, and everything to which families are entitled.

I express the wish that each and every Canadian family will enjoy a better standard of living all through 1967 and share in the growth of production that we will have again in 1967, because Canada is developing and going ahead. Moreover, if such development occurs in Canada, it must also be reflected in each family and in each home, because every individual should get his share.

Such is the wish I make, saying thank you to everyone and wishing a Merry Christmas to all.

• (9:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Social Credit group I would like to express our appreciation to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) for his words of greetings and best wishes. We also wish to convey our good wishes to the right hon. gentlemen, to the government, to you, sir, and to every member of the house.

In the past weeks and months we have witnessed acrimonius debates which may not have been conducive to a happy Christmas, but I am sure that now that we have drawn close to the time of the year when we remember the birth of the Prince of Peace we will all join in some soul-searching which will help us when we return to carry out our responsibilities in a pleasing and satisfactory manner.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my small group, I wish to thank the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) for his good wishes and I wish to extend to him and his party, and also to every member of this house, my best wishes for a happy and prosperous year 1967.

Obviously, 1967 will be a very important year for Canada. Indeed, we will be celebrating our first centennial and we will play host to a world exhibition.

In this our centennial year, may all Canadians, from sea to sea, finally realize that national harmony and brotherhood cannot flourish in this country unless everyone receives fair and equal treatment.

And, in connection with the world exhibition, may all foreign visitors to our country feel with us that we are part of a single and great family here on earth and realize that we must all work to banish war from this earth and love one another as individuals and as a people, true to the teachings of the Divine Child, from the day he was born in the manger and throughout his whole life.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: On behalf of my colleagues in the chair, of the table officials and of the staff of the house, I thank hon. members for the gracious greetings and wishes which have been extended by them.

May I take this opportunity to invite hon. members to call on the Speaker in room 16 to give me an opportunity to extend my personal greetings to all of you.

PRIVATE BILL

EVANGELICAL COVENANT CHURCH OF CANADA

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, it is with some reluctance that I ask the house to consider now a private member's bill which has been on the order paper for a long time, namely Bill No. S-38. It has been considered by the committee on private bills and returned to the house without amendment. I should like to ask for passage of the bill tonight.

Mr. Speaker: Is there agreement to the request of the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The house in committee on Bill No. S-38, to incorporate the Evangelical Covenant Church of Canada—Mr. Rapp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 17 inclusive agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHRISTMAS ADJOURNMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, January 9, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF HON. H. H. STEVENS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, from time to time it is the privilege of members of parliament to refer to the presence in the gallery of distinguished citizens of other countries. Today, if the house will allow me to do so, I should like to refer to the fact that in your gallery, sir, is an individual who as a member of the House of Commons for three decades was a great parliamentarian and humanitarian, Hon. H. H. Stevens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: His presence indicates that being a member of parliament for that length of time does not in any way impair one's health or capacity for service.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the right hon. gentleman has called attention to the presence in the gallery of such a distinguished Canadian. I have had the pleasure and privilege of knowing Mr. Stevens for many years. Indeed, I once had the honour of serving as secretary to a parliamentary committee of which he was the chairman. We worked very closely together in those days and have been friends ever since.

• (2:40 p.m.)

As the right hon. gentleman has pointed out, in his long career of service to the country and his activities in Vancouver at the present time Mr. Stevens has shown that there is no connection whatever between age and energy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

THE MINISTRY

LIST OF MEMBERS OF GOVERNMENT—REAPPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table a list of the members of the government in order of precedence by portfolios consequent upon the appointment of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon) to the administration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: I would also like to table order in council P.C. 1967-17 of January 4 reappointing the parliamentary secretaries for a period of 12 months.

TRADE

TABLING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND REPUBLIC OF KOREA

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the text in English and French of the trade agreement between Canada and the Republic of Korea and the documents pertaining thereto. The agreement came into force—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Has the minister leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Winters: The agreement came into force upon signature, which took place in Ottawa on December 20. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and I signed on behalf of Canada. Under the agreement, Canada will accord to imports from Korea the rates of the most favoured nations tariff which are now applied to imports from the United States, Japan and other most favoured nation countries. In return Canadian goods are assured of as favourable tariff treatment by Korea as those from any other country.

There is also an understanding with respect to the access to the Korean market for goods of particular interest to Canada which may be affected by the balance of payments controls applied by Korea. This understanding is in a separate exchange of letters. There are also separate undertakings to deal with possible problems of market disruption which may arise in the future as well as the application by Korea of voluntary restraints on exports to Canada of certain goods for the 12 month period beginning January 1, 1967. These goods are listed in the annex to the correspondence between the Korean embassy in Ottawa and the Department of Finance.

This agreement marks a further step in our program for expanding Canada's trade and economic relations with our neighbours across the Pacific. Canada has supported the accession of Korea to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade which is expected to take place shortly. At the present time trade between Canada and Korea is relatively small. Under this agreement we look forward to a mutually advantageous expansion of this trade. With the signing of this agreement, Canada now has formal trade relations with a total of 104 countries.

THE LATE RODGER MITCHELL

TRIBUTES ON PASSING OF HON. MEMBER FOR SUDBURY

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to announce to the house the passing, since we last sat, of Mr. Rodger Mitchell, our colleague the hon. member for Sudbury. Mr. Mitchell had been ill for some time. He had borne that illness with the quiet courage and uncomplaining spirit that was characteristic of him. Only a week or so before he died I had information that he was making a recovery, which was very unusual in the circumstances, and we hoped that perhaps he would get over this illness. That was not to be.

Hon. members on all sides of the house will, I know, join me in regret at his passing. I think he was one of the most highly regarded and best loved members in the house. He was quiet and sincere in his devotion to duty as a member and also a very dedicated and loyal Canadian. He will be greatly missed, I know, by all hon. members, perhaps by me as much as by any other member because we represented adjoining constituencies in the House of Commons and I have benefited for many, many years by his wise advice and good counsel.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Rodger Mitchell was one of those members who enjoyed the respect of hon. members in all parts of the house. He did not participate in debates generally, but he gave devotedly to his constituency and to his country. He had a wonderfully friendly disposition and, above all, in recent months when facing a fatal illness, of which he knew, he displayed a courage that was almost unbelievable. I talked with him on the last occasion he was here, and he was still full of hope and optimism. All of us in Her Majesty's loyal opposition wish to extend our sympathy to his loved ones, to the Prime Minister and to the members of the government party.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): The members of the New Democratic Party wish to associate themselves with the tributes which have just been paid to our late colleague Rodger Mitchell. He gave good service to his constituency and to the House of Commons. He was highly regarded and greatly respected by all those who worked with him. Those of us who have been associated with him know what a pleasant travelling companion he was. Despite the fact that he was suffering from ill health, he was one of the most active members of the house, and all of us who worked with him on various occasions came to have a very high regard for him. I am sure that his loss will be felt keenly not only in the house but in the constituency which he so ably represented in parliament.

Members of this party would like to extend to the bereaved family, to the Prime Minister and to Rodger Mitchell's colleagues in the house our deepest sympathy in this sad time of loss.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party and personally, I wish to join with the previous speakers to deplore the passing away of a member of this house, Mr. Mitchell. I knew him personally as a fellow member on two delegations. He had a very strong social awareness; he was a very interesting travelling companion and a hard worker.

To his leader and his party, as well as to the members of his family, I wish to extend our party's deepest sympathy.

[English]

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, the members of the Social Credit party would like to associate themselves with the remarks which have been made. We are saddened by the passing of Rodger Mitchell who, as has been said, displayed in this house courage and integrity which have served as an example to each and every one of us.

This sad event reminds us of life itself and of the frequency with which we have to rise on occasions like this because of the passing of one of our colleagues. We would like to extend to the Prime Minister and his party our sincere regrets. To the bereaved family we wish every comfort that God can give them at this time of dire need and sorrow.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I should like to add a personal note to the expressions of sympathy which have already been voiced. Coming from northern Ontario as I do, possibly I have had occasion to know Rodger Mitchell a little better than many other hon. members. I have had occasion also to visit him in his drug store in Sudbury, the city in which he was affectionately known as "Mitch the druggist". He was a man who was always available to his constituents. He knew most of them on a first name basis. Certainly he will be a great loss to them, to his party and to this house. He was one of the finest gentlemen to ever grace the floor of this chamber.

TRANSPORT

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I should like to table a copy, in English and in French, of the report of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority on the sufficiency of seaway tolls.

BONUS ON AGRICULTURAL LIMESTONE

Question No. 2,340—Mr. Fairweather:

In keeping with this policy, the decision was taken to discontinue federal support for provincial programs of lime assistance after March 31, 1967. Such programs are regarded as being well established and within the financial capability of the provinces, taking into account the additional resources to be made available through equalization and the other fiscal transfers from the federal government to the provinces.

INCOME TAX ALLOWANCE FOR AUTOMOBILES

Question No. 2,351—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Will the government examine section 11 (1) of the Income Tax Act which provides that certain taxpayers are eligible to claim capital cost of an automobile that is used in the course of their employment to help earn income, and consider amending the act to provide similar capital cost allowances for those individuals who substitute an aircraft for an automobile for the same purpose?

2. Why are the words "and/or aircraft" omitted from section 11 of the Income Tax Act which now applies only to a taxpayer's use of an automobile?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1. This has been examined in answer to representations made in past years and the decision reached was to propose no change.

2. The subsection referred to permits certain employees, who require transportation from place to place as they perform their employment, to claim capital cost allowances in respect of an automobile required for use in the performance of their duties. It has been considered sufficient to allow this deduction in respect of the means of transportation most generally used and unnecessary to allow a deduction in respect of the capital cost of a boat or aircraft acquired by an employee for use in his employment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMMUNIST CHINA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the serious turmoil taking place in communist China, is the Secretary of State for External Affairs in a position to give a statement to the house regarding the danger, if any, to Canada's trade in wheat with that country? In view of these circumstances and the seriously increasing foment which, indeed, is approaching civil war, is the government going to postpone its apparent intention of giving recognition to the Mao régime.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the basis for the question my right hon. friend has just asked in the concluding part of his statement. The government did indicate it was giving consideration to this matter. Naturally the events in China, as they are unfolding, remain to be finally assessed. This undoubtedly will be a factor in whatever decision the government takes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister advise whether the situation there is of such a nature as to cause a degree of fear respecting the potential future deliveries of wheat to communist China?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have no information that would warrant that conclusion, Mr. Speaker. The best information I have is that the rioting continues, principally in Nanking. There is a continuing feud between workers and the red guard in some of the factories. There is a conflict between agricultural and urban elements. However, the final pattern, in the judgment of those countries which have representation in Peking, has not yet been determined.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister be able to inform the house whether he has seen a copy of the message sent from Peking to the Canadian representatives at Hong Kong refusing entry of the Canadian trade commissioner into China? Has the minister seen a copy of that message?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have not.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the unsettled conditions in China has the minister any information to give the house about the possibility of future wheat orders from that country being discontinued or not being placed with Canada?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. There is no evidence to indicate that.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the refusal of China to allow the Canadian trade commissioner to Hong Kong to enter that country, is the government taking steps to facilitate the efforts of Canadian businessmen to build trade with that country?

Mr. Winters: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can assure my hon. friend that we will lose no opportunity to keep as close to those markets as we can.

Mr. Hees: Can the minister give the house briefly some idea of what he has just said?

Some hon. Members: Oh,oh.

INDUSTRY

PRICE INCREASES BY STEEL COMPANY OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister with respect to the action of the Steel Company of Canada in raising the price of steel bars and the decision of the government not to intervene. I would ask the Prime Minister what events have taken place since last September which would warrant the government in changing its position and now accepting an action which it asked the company to defer a few months ago.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, any answer to that question would require an analysis of recent economic and financial developments which would not be appropriate for the orders of the day. I can only say that the government felt this was not a situation which required intervention. I am also informed that the action taken now is not in all respects the same as that proposed some months ago.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the right hon. Prime Minister if the government would consider referring this matter to the Senate and House of Commons committee on consumer credit and cost of living which is studying the whole question of price increases at this time.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be quite unnecessary to refer this particular matter to that committee.

FINANCE

MERCANTILE BANK—RESPONSE TO NOTES FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): My question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Some time ago the hon. member for Red Deer inquired about the government's response to the notes from Washington regarding the Mercantile Bank. Has the Prime Minister anything to report on this matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

PERPETUAL BONDS—INQUIRY AS TO REPLACEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, but in his absence I shall direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the answer given to question No. 2,339 regarding perpetual Dominion of Canada bonds—today a $100 bond is worth only $54—

An hon. Member: It is a shame.

Mr. Crouse: It is a shame; I agree with the hon. member who made that comment. Would the Prime Minister give consideration at least to implementing this clause in that bond:

> When the coupons attached hereto are exhausted the bearer hereof or if registered, the registered holder hereof on surrender of this bond will be entitled to receive in exchange therefor a new bond of like tenor with coupons for a further period of years.

I ask this because the bonds have dropped to almost half their value and the banks have not received notice to date about replacements for the bonds, with coupons attached.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that I shall discuss this particular matter with the Minister of Finance who will be in Ottawa later in the day.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

SASKATCHEWAN—REPORTED DELAY IN MILK SUBSIDY PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture in reference to the subsidy for milk and cream which the farmers are supposed to receive quarterly. The farmers in Saskatchewan are very much dissatisfied with these payments. I should like to bring to the attention of the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask a question.

Mr. Rapp: What will the minister do to improve these payments, coming quarterly or semi annually?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, the payments pretty well have been brought up to date. From the first of the year they will be made monthly instead of quarterly. If the hon. member knows of instances where farmers are not receiving their payments I should be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. Rapp: Supplementary to that, Mr. Speaker, I have letters, but I should not like to show them to the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture if there will be further legislative items in regard to his department or agriculture generally during the balance of the session.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, may I now put my question to the Minister of Agriculture. I should like to ask him whether there will be any agricultural legislation in the balance of this session?

Mr. Greene: If there is, it will be announced in the proper manner.

COAL

CAPE BRETON—IMPLEMENTATION OF ANNOUNCED GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask him whether he intends to make a statement to the house regarding the arrangements, which he announced in a press release dated December 29, for a crown corporation and related policies to deal with the Cape Breton coal situation. Will he deal not only with the crown corporation but also with the particular elements of that policy and the coal problem itself.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the statement in connection with the press release should be tabled. That will be done tomorrow, I am sorry it was not done today. There may be an opportunity before long to discuss this matter.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the right hon. Prime Minister what sort of negotiations are now taking place with the Dominion Steel and Coal Company for the acquisition of whatever rights the company may have. Is it the intention of the government to compensate the Dominion Steel and Coal Company for relieving it of its financial burdens?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we should be poor negotiators if we answered that question this afternoon. Negotiations are taking place for ways and means to implement the principles outlined in the statement. In due course, I expect, legislation will be required. That legislation will be before the house.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the Prime Minister, as there seems to be a similar phasing out of the steel industry on Cape Breton Island as indicated by the closing of the rod mill, and similar events which have taken place, whether the government has given thought to widening the scope of the crown corporation to include any phasing out or diminution of the steel industry in that area.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any phasing out of the steel industry in the area. We have been talking of the phasing out of the coal industry.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he has received a communication from Dr. Malcolm MacLellan, president of St. Francis Xavier University, in regard to the serious lay-off of approximately 1,000 employees of the DOSCO steel plant at Sydney during the closing months of 1966. Further, if the Prime Minister had received such a communication, what reply was given? Also to use the words of Dr. MacLellan, what extraordinary steps are being taken by the government to restore confidence and a sense of security to the Cape Breton industrial community?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I shall have to look into that telegram. I believe I received one. I shall have to look into it.

PENITENTIARIES

KINGSTON, ONT.—REPORTED SIT DOWN STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister at present in the house prepared or able to answer for the penitentiaries service what the situation now is at Kingston penitentiary where, as reported, a sit down strike is in progress. What steps have been taken to restore discipline in that institution?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to take that question as notice.

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

PARTICIPATION BY MEMBERS IN OTHER ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether he is in a position to deal before the house with the question of the Company of Young Canadians, whether guide lines have been given to these young people, and whether that mysterious mixture of imitation and confusion which apparently activates them today is to continue. Does the government agree that these young people, who are supposed to be doing their part to overcome poverty, not only in Canada but elsewhere, should be permitted to participate in programs rather far removed from the objectives of the Company of Young Canadians as set out by the government when the legislation was introduced.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The right hon. gentleman's question covered a good deal of ground, and my answer will have to be a little longer than would normally be desirable. I should like to begin by saying that the peaceful demonstration in Toronto to which the right hon. gentleman was obviously referring had nothing whatever to do with the Company of Young Canadians, which was not involved. The two volunteers reported in the press as having taken part did so in their personal capacity as citizens of a free country.

When this house approved the establishment of the Company of Young Canadians last summer we knew, I believe, that we were creating an organization which was expected to be characterized by a spirit of innovation, and of zeal in a new and uncharted field of public service. I stated at that time, and I am glad to repeat it, that "this is not only to be a company for young Canadians, but a company of young Canadians, a company in which young Canadians themselves will play a major role in determining the plans, operations and objectives." In this regard, I believe, the company must have a maximum degree of independence as it seeks to channel the idealism of youth into constructive social action.

I believe it is important at this time to make it clear that the original purposes of the company still have the fullest support of the government and, I hope, of the house. I wish to take this opportunity of reaffirming my confidence in the young men and women who are now serving in the company as volunteers, as staff members and as members of the provisional council. I believe they are a responsible group of men and women; I believe they will discharge their duties in a responsible way, and I do not think the government should interfere with the details of their operations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: While at all times supporting the principle of freedom of speech, I ask the Prime Minister this. Does he agree with the views expressed, and are they consistent with that spirit of innovation in the written statement to which he referred and with the acceptance of a meaningful degree of independence, that a volunteer belonging to the Company of Young Canadians should say he would like to see Yorkville free of police harassment and without restrictive laws against LSD and marijuana? Is this part of the code which is to activate these young people, most of whom are devoted? I suggest to the Prime Minister that this type of thing is not in keeping with Canada's reputation or, indeed, in accord with the understanding of the Canadian parliament when the Company of Young Canadians was set up.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pearson: There are a great many expressions of individual viewpoints with which I do not agree, some inside the House of Commons and some outside the House of Commons.

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): A supplementary question. There was a news report to the effect that the Company of Young Canadians had issued an objectionably worded circular. Is any safeguard attached to the spending of public funds, or any direction given these young people that public funds should not be used for the purpose of disseminating such literature, or at least literature which uses foul language?

Mr. Pearson: I understand this was a news sheet circulated among the membership of the company, and the council of the company has already taken a look at this particular news sheet. I do not believe I am in a position to comment on the details.

Mr. Nugent: The Prime Minister said these people were independent. Are there no guide lines at all, even with regard to good taste or decency of language?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, there are guide lines. The company was set up under an act of this parliament and is governed by regulations laid down under that legislation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They are not being carried out.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—LETTER FROM COMMISSIONER RESPECTING CARROTHERS REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): My question is addressed to the Prime Minister. I should like to ask him whether, in view of the letter dated December 13, 1966 from the commissioner of the Northwest Territories to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in which the commissioner criticized the failure to take action to bring about a greater measure of political development in the north, the right hon. gentleman would tell the house when the government intends to make its views known with regard to the Carrothers commission report, and what plans the government has to implement this report.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I hope the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who will be here tomorrow, will be in a position to do this before long. I will be very glad to discuss the matter with him, including the terms of the particular letter to which my hon. friend has referred.

Mr. Orange: Can the Prime Minister prevail upon his colleague to make an announcement soon with regard to the appointment of a successor to Mr. Sivertz, the commissioner, and, when so doing, impress on him the importance of the recommendation of the Carrothers commission that the status of the new commissioner be equivalent to that of a deputy minister.

Mr. Pearson: I hope this announcement can be made shortly. I shall be very glad to take up this important point with the minister.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would ask the Prime Minister whether he agrees with the view expressed by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories, as reported in today's Globe and Mail, that Mr. Sivertz spoke for the entire territorial council as well as for a very large number of northerners when he complained about the lack of a government statement on the Carrothers report.

Further, if that view be correct, why should there be a suggestion that Mr. Sivertz would be punished for saying something which the hon. member for the Northwest Territories has stated to be right and proper?

Mr. Pearson: I am sure the right hon. gentleman would not wish me to comment on a statement made by another member of the house before I had had an opportunity of reading it. As for punishing Mr. Sivertz, that question does not arise at all.

Mr. Diefenbaker: According to the paper, a government authority said he would be punished.

[Later:]

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and relates to matters raised by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories. Would it be possible to have the commissioner of the Northwest Territories appear before the committee on northern affairs?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to consider that suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I do so in keeping with the understandable desire that all members of the house should be fully enlightened at all times.

In view of the puzzlement expressed by the minister on a C.B.C. program last night arising out of a certain recent appointment to the cabinet, may I ask whether the Prime Minister has yet told him the score in that regard, whether he would let us all know.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the newly appointed Minister without Portfolio.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member realizes that the question must be within the minister's ministerial responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howard: I was just getting to that. I must congratulate Your Honour on your foresight. I was about to ask the hon. gentleman if at some convenient time in the not too distant future he would outline to the house just what his duties are, in order that we may know what questions to direct to him.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question cannot be directed to the Minister without Portfolio.

Mr. Howard: Then may I direct it to the Prime Minister? He probably knows the answer.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, I will be very glad to answer that question in due course. Meanwhile I can satisfy the hon. gentleman, I am sure, by stating that the appointment which has been made underlines the unity of the government and of the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of external affairs, in order to start the new year off properly. Last Thursday Radio Barbados carried a report that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had a conference with the Prime Minister of Barbados concerning Viet Nam. Was that the purpose of the minister's holiday visit to the West Indies, and if so what was the result?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The result of my visit was that I was more widely appreciated in Barbados than was my hon. friend who I understand was holidaying in Antigua.

[Translation]

TRADE

TEXTILES—EFFECT OF IMPORTS FROM JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of several lay-offs in the Canadian textile industry and the considerable harm caused by imports, particularly those from Japan, does the government intend to make a special inquiry into the matter and take the necessary steps to obviate the economic difficulties involved?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This matter is under continuous consideration by the Department of Trade and Commerce. There are also discussions going on at Geneva with regard to international trade matters, discussions which affect our industry. We hope these will be completed shortly with good results for Canada, but until they are completed it would be unwise, I think, to take any specific steps.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

"GRANDE HERMINE"—PERMANENT BERTH FOR REPLICA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): I had a question to direct to the minister responsible for Indian Affairs and Northern Development but in his absence I would direct it to the Prime Minister. It concerns a statement made by the mayor of Montreal at the Richelieu club dinner in Quebec city on December 28 concerning the final berth of the ship Grande Hermine. Can the Prime Minister assure us that the government is giving serious consideration to changing its present policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are getting closer to 1968 but the question cannot be asked just yet; not at this time.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that the mayors and public bodies of the province of Quebec, representing over 80 per cent of the population, have expressed the wish that the ship be berthed at Gaspé? If so I hope the majority in this case will rule.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the impression that this question was asked previously. In any event it should be placed on the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister been contacted either by the Nova Scotia Federation of Agriculture or the Nova Scotia government, or both, with regard to recent proposals made by the federation in respect of necessary assistance to that industry in Nova Scotia in an amount in excess of $50 million? If so, what action does the minister anticipate taking in this regard?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, at the present time I have no knowledge of such a communication, but I should be glad to take the question as notice and inform the hon. member.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF DEPUTY LEADER OF GERMAN NEO-NAZI PARTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Milton Klein (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the government refuse admission to Adolf von Thadden, deputy leader of the neo-nazi National Democratic party of West Germany, in his announced intention to visit Canada, on the same grounds that his American counterpart Rockwell is excluded from Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I read about this in the newspaper. I am making extensive inquiries concerning Mr. Adolf von Thadden and I hope that later on I can make a statement in the house concerning this matter.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—CONSIDERATION OF INCREASED TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the matter of the seaway tolls, in respect of which the minister has just tabled some documents. Can the minister advise us what consideration the government is giving to the general matter of seaway tolls?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for making sure that I had not been overlooked today. I was beginning to be worried. The matter is under discussion with the government of the United States. I think it would be premature for me to say anything in the house.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to assure the minister that in the next few days he very definitely will become aware that he has not been overlooked in respect of the transport legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member going to ask a question?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I should like to ask the minister whether he will give an early report on this matter, in view of the fact that many shippers in an important segment of our economy depend on this knowledge in respect of their activities for the season and the months ahead.

Mr. Pickersgill: I agree with the hon. gentleman.

SHIPPING

GREAT LAKES—EXTENSION OF TRUSTEESHIP OVER MANAGEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I had a question which I wished to ask the Minister of Labour. In his absence possibly I might direct the question to his parliamentary secretary. What is the situation concerning the extension of the public trusteeship of the great lakes maritime management as has been done, I understand, in respect of the unions?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that on his return the minister will wish to comment on this.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD

INQUIRY AS TO PLANS FOR HONOURING BIRTHDAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Can he advise whether the government has any plans for honouring the birthday of our country's first prime minister beyond the tepid and inadequate measure of recognition outlined in the press release issued from his office on January 5 last?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree that the plans which were announced during the recess are inadequate in the circumstances. On Wednesday, which is Sir John's birthday anniversary, I think it would be appropriate to table the proclamation and make it possible for representatives of all parties to pay tribute in this house to Sir John.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's statement of a few days ago to the effect that this would be a matter for decision by parliament, has the Prime Minister or any member of his government given consideration to some action which would ensure future commemoration of the first prime minister of our country?

Mr. Pearson: Yes; consideration has been given to that and will continue to be given to it as well as to certain other factors dealing with the commemoration of other important events in our history, including the commemoration of the Canadian flag.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his capacity as the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I wonder whether he could inform the house when the Canadian Wheat Board will be mailing the final payments to the farmers of western Canada, and whether the amount paid will be 55 cents per bushel as reported in the newspapers.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the accounts of the Canadian Wheat Board for the last crop year are being cleaned up now. I hope that later this week or early next week I will be in a position to announce the date of the final payment and the amount.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WOMEN

STUDY OF STATUS BY ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of the statements made over the week end by the Secretary of State I should like to ask him whether it is his intention now to set up a royal commission to inquire into the pressing matter of the rights of women. Does he agree with the Secretary of State in her statement to the effect that members of the cabinet are males, and when you have harpies harping at them they will get their backs up?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

POSSIBLE RETURN TO CANADA WITHOUT AMENDING FORMULA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, now that we are in our centennial year may I ask the Prime Minister a question regarding our constitution. If it is not possible to reach agreement on an amending formula before July 1, is the government considering taking steps to bring the constitutions to Canada as it is?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to give consideration to that very important question, but my first reaction is that it would be unnecessary now to dissociate this particular constitutional problem from the major problem of bringing our constitution in line with the realities or the necessities of our time. That will take time and will require a great deal of preparatory work. That preparatory work is going on in our provincial governments and also in the federal government. In due course there should be consideration of that matter by this parliament. I think, however, that the whole subject matter should be considered together.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister not agree that our centennial year would be a most appropriate time to convene a national conference on the constitution? Canadians are desirous of doing whatever they can this year to ensure the strength of this nation for the next hundred years.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it would be a wonderful idea, if we had a reasonable chance of reaching agreement at that conference. It would be a deplorable idea if such a conference concluded in division rather than in unity.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question relating to the matter being discussed. Has the Prime Minister given any further thought to the suggestion of the hon. member for Greenwood that a parliamentary committee be set up to study this whole matter rather than waiting until some amending procedure is worked out between the federal and provincial governments, at which time parliament would be presented with a fait accompli?

Mr. Pearson: I agree that consideration should be given to this matter by parliament, in the first instance through a parliamentary committee, and I am aware of the proposal of the hon. member for Greenwood and the interest he and others have shown in this regard. It seems to me that before such a committee is set up the government should formulate its own views and make them available to that committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the government not got any views?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, lots of them.

BILL OF RIGHTS

RESUMPTION OF PRINTING OF ENGLISH VERSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the continuing heavy demand for copies of the Canadian Bill of Rights in English, will the Prime Minister look into the matter of having the printing of this document resumed as a centennial project for the printing bureau?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. That matter is now under consideration, and if the Secretary of State were here she might be able to make a report in this regard. I will bring it to her attention.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REQUESTS FOR AID TO WAR VICTIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding aid for civilian war victims in Viet Nam. Has the department received any request from the Canadian Society of Friends or that particular group of young people who held a vigil here in Ottawa between Christmas and New Years for further financial assistance to aid war victims in both South and North Viet Nam?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not aware of any such request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question arises out of a long editorial which appeared in the Montreal Gazette on Saturday headed "How Canada Messed Up a Chance to help Viet Nam's victims". In light of Dr. Gustave Gingras' recommendations I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs is now giving consideration to the establishment of a rehabilitation centre for the children of South Viet Nam.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my attention has been directed to the article which appeared in the Montreal Gazette, and I may say that in part it is inaccurate. Dr. Gingras was sent to Viet Nam about a year ago for the purpose of ascertaining whether it would be possible for Canada to provide a rehabilitation centre for the civilian population of South Viet Nam. Unfortunately in spite of his efforts it was not possible to reach an agreement with the government of South Viet Nam which would make it possible to establish this rehabilitation project. I had hoped at the time it would have been conducted under the direction of Dr. Gingras, who is the outstanding authority on this subject in this country.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): I have a further supplementary question. In light of the rapidly changing developments in that country is reconsideration being given to the proposal of Dr. Gingras?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no question of reconsideration being given. The government continues to be ready to participate in and provide for such a project, but it depends on acceptance by the government of South Viet Nam, and that has not as yet been forthcoming.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question. Is the government of South Viet Nam withholding approval in respect of Dr. Gingras' proposal because of an insistance that the doctors and members of the staff come under military medical personnel?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Speaker. The government of South Viet Nam was not reluctant to agree to this project but it felt it did not have the necessary facilities available to operate the project Dr. Gingras had in mind, which the Canadian government was prepared to provide.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO POSITION HELD BY DR. S. C. BARRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Is Dr. S. C. Barry still the deputy minister of agriculture and, if not, when did he cease to occupy that position?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, Dr. Barry is now the chairman of the new dairy commission.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not indicate when he ceased to be the deputy minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether this type of question should be asked on orders of the day.

HISTORIC SITES

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF MANOIR SIR ÉTIENNE TACHÉ

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) who will answer on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. If the quesiton is not considered urgent, I shall raise it at ten o'clock.

Does the government intend to comply with the request of the Junior Board of Trade of Montmagny to restore the manor of Sir Étienne Pascal Taché in commemoration of one of the Fathers of Confederation who happens to be my ancestor?

Mr. Speaker: The question is quite urgent, but I would not want to deprive the hon. member of the pleasure of raising it at ten o'clock this evening.

AIR CANADA

REPORTED VARIATION IN TREATMENT OF EMPLOYEES DURING STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has he looked into allegations of the Canadian Air Lines Employees Association to the effect that during the recent strike against Air Canada, non-striking union personnel only were laid off and that the annual vacation period granted to the striking international association of machinists was extended only to the non organized personnel and not to members of the C.A.L.E.A.?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, these allegations were brought to my attention and I in turn brought them to the attention of Air Canada. I understand they are not correct.

[Later:]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport regarding the question asked by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich. Could the minister make available to hon. members, either by a statement in the house or by making them public, the reasons Air Canada gave to the minister in which they claimed that the allegations by the union were unwarranted and inaccurate?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I will give very careful consideration to the tabling of the relevant correspondence.

POLLUTION

ALLEGED LACK OF ACTION BY FEDERAL AUTHORITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that no federal action has been indicated in the anti-pollution field, has the government decided to leave this field to the provinces?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker. We will operate in this field so far as we are entitled by the constitution to do so. I am pleased to report that the guide lines reached at the November conference have now been collected and analysed. A meeting of the Canadian council of resource ministers' co-ordinators will take place on January 16, to be followed in due course by a meeting of the ministers themselves.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be allowed to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the mounting concern regarding pollution in North America, and in view of the fact that so many departments of government are involved, will the Prime Minister consider appointing a top level committee of the cabinet representing all the departments that are concerned so that an all-out attack can be made on this problem of pollution before it is too late?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have an interdepartmental committee of the government working on this particular problem as well as a committee of the cabinet.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs and ask him whether he has anything to report in respect of the Wood commission study?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the most recent information I have in this regard is that it is hoped the report will be available later this month or early next month. It has been completed and is now being printed.

NATIONAL ANTHEM

COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER AUTHORIZATION OF "O CANADA"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, just before the Christmas adjournment I asked the Prime Minister when we might have the opportunity to adopt "O Canada" as our national anthem. In his reply the Prime Minister expressed the hope that this matter would be referred to a committee, and this would appear on the order paper when we reconvened. The Prime Minister's hope does not seem to have been fulfilled, and I am wondering whether he can indicate when we may expect such a resolution to appear.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the resolution will be presented today. It will appear on the order paper tomorrow. The committee will be set up in a few days.

[Later:]

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the question directed to the Prime Minister, may I ask the right hon. gentleman whether he is not aware that he has now on the order paper a resolution dealing with this subject matter, and whether he intends to introduce another resolution? If so, what is the purpose of that?

Mr. Pearson: The next resolution, Mr. Speaker, will be one setting up the committee to deal with this matter.

BANKRUPTCY

PRUDENTIAL FINANCE CORPORATION— REQUEST FOR JOINT INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, but in his absence perhaps I should direct it to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that since this house recessed the Attorney General of Ontario has made a statement suggesting that the disaster of the Prudential Finance Corporation and other associated companies was in some measure the responsibility of the federal government, and the Minister of Finance has said the opposite, has or will the government propose to the government of Ontario the establishment of a joint judicial inquiry to inquire fully into this matter as it effects both jurisdictions in order that similar disasters may be prevented in future?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I doubt whether a joint judicial inquiry would be the best way of proceeding in this matter.

[Later:]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago in answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Broadview with regard to Prudential the Prime Minister indicated that he did not think a joint judicial inquiry would be of value. If that is the case, is the government considering some kind of inquiry set up by the federal government alone in order to make sure of the reasons not only Prudential but North American General Insurance Company got into the position in which they did get?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the responsibilities of the two levels of government are very different in this matter. It seems to me that any inquiry that should be made by the federal government should be made into its responsibilities. I will be glad to discuss this matter with the Minister of Finance.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ACCIDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, before the recess I posed two questions to the Minister of Transport about shipping accidents, one involving the ship Ontario Power and the other relating to the capsizing of the John Cabot. Can the minister provide the house with any information about those two matters?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I have been slightly negligent. Although I have the information, I do not have it at hand. I will be glad to give it tomorrow.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State I wonder whether I might pose a question to her parliamentary secretary or to the acting minister. It was 11 months ago today that this house passed three motions in my name for the production of papers. I wonder whether those papers might be tabled before the first anniversary arrives?

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed, from Wednesday, December 21, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Wednesday, December 21, 1966, clause 1 of the bill was under discussion.

Transportation

On clause 1—National transportation policy.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, no piece of legislation that will be before the house this year will be of greater importance to the future development of the Atlantic provinces than this bill. I feel certain that the Minister of Transport is well aware of the fears and apprehensions of the people of that area in so far as transportation policy is concerned. We have found in the past 100 years that in so far as transportation policy is concerned everything has been a gamble in the hope of improved conditions in our area in respect of development, a gamble that has almost constantly and continuously proven to be a poor one as far as we have been concerned.

In recent weeks we have seen a certain attitude developing in the province of Quebec with regard to the celebration or lack of celebration of our centennial year in that province. All I can say is that if there is an area of Canada that has less reason to celebrate confederation than the maritime provinces I would like to know what area it is, but certainly it is not the province of Quebec. Our area of Canada has contributed the most and received the least for its contribution in becoming a part of confederation. While we have made this contribution and recognize this fact, we still believe that the move we made in 1867 was the right one. We face our problems, we try to do something about them, and we like to join with Canadians in all parts of this nation in celebrating a wonderful year, one which we hope will lead to 100 years of prosperity for all parts of Canada.

As has been enunciated by the hon. members for Halifax and the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, for those in our port cities there has been a very substantial deterioration each and every year in the degree of business available to those ports because of policies which have been adopted by the Department of Transport and are continuously being implemented with regard to opening up shipping lanes in the province of Quebec and especially to the port of Montreal. I read over the week end an article which appeared in the Montreal Star of January 7. The statistics quoted in that article indicate to a significant degree the reason for the concern expressed by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert and the hon. members for Halifax, and the extent of the deterioration in our port business.

In December the Minister of Transport was in our area of Nova Scotia and also in New Brunswick, attending port dinners. In effect he told the people in the audiences at those dinners that he was not going to do anything about what was happening in so far as shipping on the St. Lawrence river was concerned and the ice-breaking facilities of his department. As usual, lack of action by the government will cause the economy of the maritime provinces to lag.

• (3:50 p.m.)

I think it is worth while putting the statistics on the record. They refer to ship arrivals at Montreal between January 1 and March 31. In 1960 five ocean-going vessels and two coastal traders tied up at Montreal, or a total of seven ships. The foreign tonnage represented was 14,971 and the domestic tonnage was 2,398. Let us compare these figures with the year 1966. During the six years between 1960 and 1966 the number of ocean-going vessels which tied up in Montreal increased from five to 56, the number of coastal vessels increased from two to 63, and the total increased from seven to 119. The tonnage carried by foreign vessels increased from 14,971 to 214,352, an increase of about 200,000 tons. Domestic tonnage increased from 2,398 to 289,942, or 287,600 tons more than in 1960. If the government does not act there will be no more business at the ports of Halifax and Saint John in the wintertime than in the summertime, and if this situation continues the economy of the Atlantic provinces, especially the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, will greatly deteriorate.

Last night on the television news photographs were shown indicating the greatly decreased shipping at the port of Halifax. Indeed it is shocking to discover the small amount of business at that port at the present time and the great unemployment among stevedores who have to depend on winter employment for their yearly earnings. If the Minister of Transport has his way, this situation will be allowed to continue. We are dealing with a national transportation policy. If this is to be part of that policy, then God help the maritime provinces because the government will do nothing to help them and the Lord is the only one from whom hope may come. We must pray a great deal if we ever hope to get anything because it is quite evident that we will get nothing from the government.

If we were the kind of people who did not believe in contracts that we had signed, once again black bands would be worn in Nova Scotia as they were in 1867 when that province became part of this nation. These are dark days for the people of the maritime provinces so far as the transportation policy is concerned and in many other fields, as is indicated by the substantial lay-offs which have been taking place in many of our industries.

Not all our problems concern coal. We have problems with steel and problems in just trying to survive. The policies which the government has been putting forward every day do not spell progress for us. Surely we should be able to expect something more from the Minister of Transport who represents a constituency in the Atlantic provinces. He has seen the statistics on the tonnage which our ports are losing. We are told by him that we can expect nothing more than we have received up to date. He sits on his hands and lets the business which for years we expected to come to us go to the province of Quebec, an area which does not wish to take any part in the centennial program because its people are not happy with what they are getting at present. If they are not happy with what they are getting now, let us realize how much sadder we in Nova Scotia should be when every day that this government is in office we get less and less.

This is not the kind of policy which we were led to believe would be established when this government came to office. In 1965 we indicated through the ballot box that we had no trust in this government and that we did not believe the stories they told us in 1963. If there are many more statistics like those indicating the increase in shipping at the port of Montreal and the decrease at the ports of Halifax and Saint John at the present time, we will not believe the government at the time of another general election whenever it may be called. Furthermore, we will not be happy with the kind of policies about which the Minister of Transport tells us even though he knows that by doing nothing he is doing damage and is shattering our hopes for improvement.

I certainly look forward to hearing from the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough because from statements he has made both in the house and outside I gather that he does not agree with the kind of transportation policy which would take business away from us every day of the year. He believes in a transportation policy which will give us some hope of economic improvement. I believe this is a most important aspect of our future in so far as transportation is concerned.

I should like to hear from the Minister of Transport on the proposal put forward by the Leader of the Opposition concerning the building of a new railway link between Quebec and the Atlantic provinces which would go through the centre of New Brunswick and eliminate a great deal of mileage. It would get our goods to market cheaper and faster than is possible today. I should also like to hear from the Minister of Transport on the corridor road. Here is a means of providing a link which will get our goods to market.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? When he referred to the corridor road did he mean the highway which is being advocated by the Fredericton Gleaner or did he mean the railway which is being advocated by his leader?

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Coates: If the hon. gentleman would sit in his seat and listen he would discover that I was speaking about the railway and now I am speaking about the highway. I do not know what the situation is in Newfoundland but I always thought that the minister was a great advocate of both railways and highways in that province. I do not see why we in the Atlantic provinces should have to expect only one or the other. Why can we not be considered to be just as good Canadians as the people in other parts of Canada and have both? What is there about the maritime provinces that puts them in a position where the people have to accept one or the other when the people in other parts of Canada can have both? This is the kind of philosophy that we find coming from the Minister of Transport and his colleagues. It is about time the government woke up to the fact that the maritimes are a part of Canada and deserve just as much as any other part of Canada.

I have nothing to say about the fact that the government has retarded the building of the Prince Edward Island causeway. I understand the project is going forward now, but it has been a long time in coming. We have learned that we have to take things whenever we get them. We may get them five years after everybody else, but we have been told to take them and like them or we may not get them at all.

I say to the Minister of Transport that we should be moving forward faster with these things than we are at the present time because there is a greater indication of recession in the Atlantic provinces than anywhere else in Canada. If the minister does not believe that statement let him go to my constituency. There are lay-offs taking place now such as we have not seen for quite a number of years. He will see the same situation in Cape Breton island. Let him go to Halifax or Saint John, and he will see these things there.

There is one thing for which the government should be complimented and that is the substantial contracts awarded to the shipyards in Saint John. These contracts will be of material benefit to the economy of that area. However, there is not much sense in giving the area one thing and taking away something else. This is what is being done by the icebreaking on the St. Lawrence River. It is taking jobs away from people in the maritimes to a degree that I do not believe most people appreciate, but they will if they read the article that appeared in Saturday's Montreal Star. Anyone reading that article will discover that the philosophy of the province of Quebec is not to get less shipping at the port of Montreal but more. They cannot get very much more because we have not very much left in the maritimes. The maritimes will soon be forced to close down their ports.

I should like to know what program is going to be initiated to provide employment for those who lose their jobs as a result of the icebreaking services provided by the Department of Transport on the St. Lawrence River. It is pretty bad when government policy destroys the economy of two regions of the Atlantic provinces by means of these icebreaking services as effectively as it is being done today.

In view of the fact that a few moments ago the Minister of Transport mentioned the proposal of the Leader of the Opposition for a rail line which would cut through the centre of the province of New Brunswick, I should like to ask him for his ideas in connection with that proposal. What is the government's attitude toward it? It is a proposal that could mean much to the development of the economy of the Atlantic provinces. Surely the minister must realize, since he is so closely associated with the Atlantic Development Board, that if we are to industrialize our region to the extent we want to, if we are to find the kinds of jobs for the people in Cape Breton that we must find, then we must have transport. When I refer to Cape Breton I want to include the area of Inverness-Richmond because there is no area in which there is more poverty than in the constituency represented by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. If we are going to revitalize this area, I should like to know of a better way of doing it than by providing less expensive transport leading to the centres of population in this nation. If we are going to agree to a national transport policy, certainly we have a right to know just how much is going to be available to us by way of assets to offset the liability incurred by the minister's policy of allowing more and more of our port business to be transferred to the port of Montreal.

There are other important matters to be considered. The hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg and the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare have asked innumerable questions of the Minister of Transport about a second ferry link to the New England states. It is just like asking a question of a mute because you receive no reply that throws any more light on the subject than if you had said nothing in the first place. The only thing that is obvious to the people of the maritimes is that they have members in Ottawa representing them who are interested in their problems, but they do not have a government in Ottawa interested in their problems or willing to take the kind of action that has to be taken if that area is not only to survive but to go forward.

Mr. Stewart: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether the hon. member would permit me to ask him a question? I should like him to let the committee know if the government of Nova Scotia has yet given any indication as to which Nova Scotia port it favours as the Nova Scotia end of this proposed ferry link?

Mr. Coates: I do not happen to be privy to information from the government of Nova Scotia on that subject. Perhaps the Minister of Transport would be in a better position than I am to indicate what the Nova Scotia government has proposed to him. The questions that have been asked from this side of the house have elicited no information from the Minister of Transport except the explanation that the proposal is receiving serious consideration. This is a very nice answer, and I hope that in the near future the minister will be able to tell us the result of that serious consideration.

Mr. Stewart: Would the hon. member agree that discussion of this proposal would likely be advanced if the government of Nova Scotia would make public its views on this question?

Mr. Coates: I do not see how a public declaration by the government of Nova Scotia would be of material assistance. I was always under the impression that each province had to be careful about this co-operative federalism, as it is called, and that there must be consultation with all parties to ensure that everybody is in agreement.

[Mr. Coates.]

Mr. Stewart: Would the hon. gentleman not agree that the government of Nova Scotia has already shown that it accepts the primary responsibility for such a second service by commissioning the Margison report on terminal locations for a second Nova Scotia-New England ferry service?

Mr. Coates: I think the government of Nova Scotia always accepts its responsibility and has indicated this in many ways. I am sure that if the federal government would assume the same degree of responsibility that the government of Nova Scotia has with regard to the second ferry link, we could expect one in the very near future. I am not as convinced that the federal government is as willing to assume its obligation as I am that the government of Nova Scotia is.

There is one other area in which I feel we could do more than we are and where I think the federal government could be of material assistance.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I am referring to tourist roads and the kind of assistance that was made available under the roads to resources program. I have in mind the Fundy vacation trail, and I am sure there are other roads in the maritime provinces of a similar nature. There is one in Cape Breton about which there has been a great deal of talk. If a special program were put forward to provide tourist roads to what we feel is a potentially great resource, I think there would be material benefit not only to the people who live there but to the many visitors we optimistically hope to attract to our area each and every year. Our tourist potential has only been tapped slightly.

Mr. Stewart: Would the hon. member permit me another question at this time? I am sorry to interrupt him. Does he realize that in the year 1966 there were 89 federally-assisted highway projects under way in the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Coates: The hon. member is, of course, a much better statistician than I am, and as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Public Works he is in a much better position to secure that kind of information than I. What the hon. member says may be true. All I am saying is that the roads to resources program was dropped by this government. As far as the Atlantic provinces were concerned, as far as the maritime provinces were concerned, it was a very good program. That is the kind of program I should like to see. I do not care what you call it or how it is applied, whether nationally or specifically in the Atlantic provnces, but I should like to see a similar program put forward. This would enable proposed projects such as the Fundy vacation trail to qualify for a special type of assistance.

The people in the maritimes do not feel that the program being proposed is going to take anything away from an existing program to which the provincial government involved has already committed X number of dollars. If we could revive or reintroduce in the Atlantic provinces, a program similar to the roads to resources program, so far as the tourist trade is concerned I think we would be taking a step that would have a substantially beneficial effect from an economic point of view and would materially assist the economy of this particular area of Canada.

After all, Mr. Chairman, this is what we want from a national transportation policy. It is all very nice to talk of a second trans-Canada highway and things of that nature, but so far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned what we would like are more tourist roads.

Mr. Stewart: Would the hon. member permit me to pose another question?

The Chairman: Order. I would point out to the hon. member for Cumberland that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Stewart: Then I will forgo my question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any question in the mind of any member sitting in this chamber as to the great consequences this bill will have on the entire transportation system of Canada. On reading the bill there can also be no question in anyone's mind as to its complexities. No one quarelled with the objective that the government had in mind in introducing this bill, that of trying to evolve a transportation system to serve Canada as a whole. I do not think anybody took serious issue with the government over an honest attempt to put the railways in the position where they were self-sustaining rather than financed by government subsidies to such a large extent.

I was impressed with the presentation of the minister on television when he was questioned on this subject. He stated that the taxpayers would be duly concerned about any increase in subsidy above $100 million, and I think he is correct in making that assumption.

My reason for rising today, Mr. Chairman, has to do with the fact that during this entire debate and in the many debates which have preceded it on the subject of transportation constant reference has been made to the vast distances between the eastern and western regions of Canada. We are told about the vast distances covered, the services rendered and the costs involved in covering these vast distances.

The arguments in this connection are very valid indeed, but what we tend to forget are the complexities and problems which arise as a result of similar vast distances between the northern and southern areas of Canada. I think, for example, of the distance between Windsor in Ontario and the port of Churchill in northern Manitoba. The problems relating to the port of Churchill and to the northern areas of Ontario and Manitoba will be dealt with in detail by other hon. members but I wish to take a few moments, if I may, to talk about the particular problems with which we in southern Ontario are faced as a result of our geographic location.

If you were to refer to a map of Canada, Mr. Chairman, I am sure you would realize what a problem we have owing to the fact that we are located so far to the south. As a matter of fact, I believe southern Ontario is almost on the same latitude as the city of New York. As a result of this geographic location the people of southerstern Ontario engaged in industry and in business as well as in various aspects of transportation have for many years felt that they have been working under a tremendous handicap as a result of the regulations previously laid down to govern transportation, especially railway transportation. I am sure the minister is aware of this.

Recently a presentation was made to the transportation committee by the Windsor Chamber of Commerce which, may I point out, spoke with the complete support of the various chambers of commerce and municipalities in that area. When the presentation was made to the transportation committee in connection with this particular problem, I am certain I am being fair when I say that the minister expressed sympathy with their view and also expressed the hope that when this bill in its amended form was once more presented to the house certain areas would be granted the relief which they sought.

In talking with the various interests concerned with transportation there appears to be a general feeling that the amendments which have been made in the revised version of the bill will not provide an avenue for granting the relief which was so earnestly sought. There is no doubt that the people of southwestern Ontario will find it increasingly hard to compete with other areas of Canada if the present system of railway rate allocation is incorporated in this revised bill.

• (4:20 p.m.)

You will recall, Mr. Chairman,—it has been pointed out by many briefs from that area and also in this house by myself and other members—that because of our geographic location we are subjected to one type of railway charge in moving goods eastward and to another type in moving goods westward. This means that in moving goods from Windsor to the harbour of Halifax the rate on first-class goods on a pound per mile basis is roughly twice as great as the rate from Montreal to Halifax. This appears to be fair and justifiable because the distance from Windsor to Halifax is almost twice as great as from Montreal to Halifax. But when we move goods west we find that this is not the system followed. When goods are moved, for example, from Windsor to Winnipeg, though Windsor is 600 miles closer to Winnipeg than is Montreal the rate from Windsor is almost identical with the rate from Montreal. We maintain that this does not appear to be fair. Because of our location, when we wish to move goods westward we are charged on the basis that all goods moving out of our area have to move east, almost to Toronto, before they can move west. Therefore we are subjected to a double rate.

That this sort of thing will have a tremendous impact on our area, if incorporated in the new bill, is borne out by the fact that when the area in question in southwestern Ontario was made a designated area with special tax concessions, over the period of the next two or three ensuing years there was a tremendous influx of almost every type of industry. The industries ranged from the very large to very small subcontractors. This influx had the effect of bringing a vitality to the area which had been sadly lacking for some time.

Those who have studied this subject are convinced that if we are subjected to an excessive charge in moving our goods westward the effect will be to slow down the influx of new industry, to curtail the expansion of industries already in the area, and generally to apply the brakes to growth. As a matter of fact this has already started. Some industries have thought that under this bill the relief that is necessary will perhaps not be obtained.

It is true that large industries, because of their political power and because of the tremendous tonnage they move, are able to negotiate special rates with the railways. One would expect this to be so. Perhaps in the new bill as envisaged by the minister more scope will be given for this type of negotiation. A tremendous number of small industries will not derive benefit from this type of negotiation, first, because the volume of goods they ship does not merit such negotiation and, second, because they have not the necessary pressure to enforce their wishes in negotiating with a body as large as a railway company. It is true that small industries will not be able to negotiate in this way but the aggregate tonnage of the production they ship is tremendous. Were such industries to act as one body they could perhaps obtain the rates now enjoyed by some of the major industries.

The minister has said that under the terms of this bill special consideration will be given to captive markets. I know the minister will dispute with me, perhaps with justification, any allegation that the area I represent in southwestern Ontario is a captive market. He will say, I am sure, that not only have we access to two railways, to four if you count United States lines, but that we have access to trucking and water transportation companies. If this were the entire story the minister would be absolutely correct in his assertion. But from the point of view of businessmen I am sure the minister will agree with me that we have a tremendous volume of goods to ship and there is a tremendous amount of money involved in freight charges. In that way we are indeed a captive market. That is so because the rates that the trucking and water transportation companies fix follow very closely, up or down, any revision in the railway rates. The minister is as well aware as I am that if there is a tremendous increase in railway rates there will be a corresponding increase in trucking and shipping rates in our area. Because of such actions on the part of the companies engaged in various methods of transportation I feel that special consideration should be given to our particular problems.

In regard to our particular area there is another factor which ought to be considered. I have spoken of the influx of industry which took place because the area was designated and thus enjoyed tax incentives. Though large corporations can obtain special rates, new industries in looking to this particular area as one in which to locate logically in order to take advantage of power and other facilities will be discouraged because they will not have available to them the special rates negotiated by large industries. New industries will have to rely on economic evaluations and on the rates published by the railway, trucking and water transportation companies.

We are finding that industries in the main feel that the area between Toronto and Montreal, because of the lower rates to the east and west, particularly to the west, offers a more attractive location than our area. We believe that something ought to be done at this time. We are aware that the transportation bill, because of its many complexities and because of the tremendous amount of preparation that went into it, will, when passed by parliament, remain in effect for some time to come. We plead with the minister to consider especially our geographic location and to take into account what we have recommended.

From long experience we have learned that whenever a new transportation bill comes into effect the processes provided for appeal are long and disappointing, even though in the eyes of the minister, the committee and the house adequate provision for appeal has been made. Even when a favourable recommendation is handed down, as the result of an appeal, the delay which occurs has usually caused irreparable damage. We believe that now is the time for the government to show the special consideration which is needed, not at a later date, and for this reason I ask the minister whether he can indicate to the satisfaction of those who are vitally interested in this question that the necessary measures to give the relief that is required are in fact contained in this bill. Is there something which we in our perusal of this measure have overlooked, or is our understanding correct? Are we still faced with the grave problem to which I have referred.

There is one other matter to which I would like to refer. It affects the entire area and it concerns the withdrawal of subsidies. "Phasing out" is the term used nowadays, I understand. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that for some time the producers of feed grain in the area from which I come have asked for the same consideration as is given producers of feed grain in western Canada in moving feed grain to the markets of the east. We should like to know whether the government is contemplating the phasing out of the subsidy paid to the feed grain growers of the west—

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps in the most friendly way possible I might suggest to the hon. member that this subject has nothing whatever to do with the present bill. The feed grain subsidies are paid under entirely different legislation introduced by the Minister of Forestry. Nothing in this bill would have any effect on them in one way or another.

Mr. Danforth: I wish to thank the minister, particularly for the last part of his statement in which he told us that nothing in this bill will affect the subsidies which I understand, are now to be handled by a new committee set up under the Feed Grain Assistance Act. This is a matter which we have been considering very seriously. Does this bill supersede legislation administered by other departments? The minister shakes his head.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not unless it repeals it.

Mr. Danforth: I appreciate that. We now have an indication from the minister that other government agencies will continue to be concerned with subsidies affecting the railways. This is bound to add to the complexity of the legislation we are considering. Since the minister has told us that the transportation bill will not affect feed grain subsidies I should like to return for a few moments to the contention I advanced earlier in regard to the special problem of the area I represent. The debate has shown us that the transportation question must, because of the location of the commercial centres of this country, resolve itself into a series of regional considerations. The minister has told us that nothing will be done to interfere with the Crowsnest Pass rates. He also told us, I believe, that a two year trial period in the maritimes will precede any change in freight rate structures there where subsidies are involved. There is a growing fear, particularly in southwestern Ontario, that once subsidies to the railways and the other transportation media are phased out the additional revenue will come mainly from the provinces of Quebec and Ontario and perhaps to some degree from British Columbia.

These subsidies now amount to some $100 million and could increase to $130 million as higher wages are paid to transportation employees. The government has put forward the view that automation and increased efficiency can go a long way toward reducing the need for subsidies. Despite this, we all know that additional revenue will have to be found by the transportation media and that it will be achieved as a result of increases in freight rates. As I say, there is the greatest fear in my area that since fabourable rates are to be retained in the west and in the maritimes—and I have no quarrel whatsoever with those special rates—the additional revenue will come mainly from the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia.

I believe we are justified in assuming that there will be increases in freight rates and that they may be increases which will prove to be frightening. Bearing in mind that there is no real competition among the various transportation media, and since we are paying almost double the rate applicable to western shipments we feel the minister should give special consideration to the particular plea we are making at this time by indicating that the government is agreeable to bringing in the amendment necessary to meet our case or, alternatively, by showing without a shadow of doubt that the present bill contains provisions which would enable us to relieve ourselves of the burden which we foresee. Should the minister fail to do this it will be necessary for me, as a member who is honestly presenting the views and interests of industry in southwestern Ontario, to seek desperately during the clause by clause perusal of this measure to persuade the government to accept recommendations designed to achieve the end which we believe is so necessary.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I offer no apology for intervening a second time in this debate on the clause by clause study. I consider that the debate which took place in the house before the Christmas recess was very useful and I commend the minister for his frank and honest answers. Similarly, I believe that hon. members on this side made useful and constructive suggestions. The interchange has made it easier for us to consider where we are and where we are going.

I may tell the minister at once that I propose to offer an amendment to clause 1, the clause now under study, in the firm belief that this legislation is somehow lacking. There is an element missing here, and it is one which is essential with respect to the legislation offered to this house and to the country as containing the elements of the national transportation policy needed to provide a better and fairer means of carrying goods and people between all parts of Canada.

In offering this amendment to clause 1, which I understand is an indication to the commission to be established of the extent it should take into account a number of factors,

I do so because as I indicated earlier this commission will be venturing into uncharted courses like a spaceman reaching for one of the planets. It will come up against problems which it never has contemplated and which I am sure neither the minister nor those persons who drafted this bill have considered. All one needs to support this is to look at the report of proceedings and evidence of the committee. It is my belief that the element which is mentioned in this bill is one which has been the subject matter of a great number of directions. It has been the basis for inquiries made heretofore over a great number of years. I am speaking of the direction that the board have responsibilitiy for regulating and setting freight rates to provide for as great a measure of equalization as is possible within the very difficult circumstances which we have in this country because of the matters of geography and economies.

I do not care what is done; you cannot escape the fact that there is going to be some inequity and some discrimination. It will be impossible to reach that measure of equalization which we would like to see. Perfection in this aspect of our problems is not at all possible. I readily accede to that. However, under the existing law which we are to replace to some extent there were some attempts to eliminate this inequity and bring about equalization. I am referring to section 336 of the present Railway Act which, of course, will be eliminated by the provision we are now making.

A very brief historial record I think will help to place my views before the committee and indicate the reasons I am moving this amendment. In 1925 order in council P.C. 886 was passed by which the Board of Transport Commissioners was directed by the government to examine the freight rate structure and attempt to bring in harmony and provide for a measure of equity in all parts and regions of Canada. Later, in 1948, by order in council P.C. 1487, there was a further direction by the then government to the Board of Transport Commissioners.

The board of transport commissioners, in taking this responsibility, required a number of years to report. I do not think it was until some time in 1955 that they filed their report. At that time they made a statement which was quite correct. They said that equalization in Canada involved the establishment of a fundamental base and a statistical survey which would take many years of study to complete. The board of transport commissioners proceeded some distance along this line and was successful in making certain suggestions. However, in the interval between the time the Board of Transport Commissioners was directed to do this and the time when they made their report, the same government established the royal commission which served under the late Mr. Justice Turgeon.

Mr. Pickersgill: He is still very much alive.

Mr. Baldwin: I am sorry. I should have said the former Mr. Justice Turgeon still very much alive as an individual. The recommendations in the report were brought in in 1950. They led to the amendment of the Railway Act in the second session of 1951. The minister may correct me if I am wrong, but I think it was in the second session of 1951 that section 336 of the present Railway Act was brought forth as being the answer in part to the suggestions and recommendations of Mr. Justice Turgeon and his commission.

Then we had the royal commission which was set up in 1959 by the Conservative government under the leadership of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. One of the terms of reference to the royal commission was that it report upon the inequities in the freight rate structure in Canada and so on. What I am pointing out is that if you examine one by one the various directions—these terms of reference—to the royal commissions and the directions to the Board of Transport Commissioners, you will see that there is a similar vein running through them in the form of a direction to them to examine the very serious problem regarding the inequities and the necessity of equalizing freight rates throughout Canada so far as possible in order to bring into closer alignment the disparities which have been created because of our geography.

Transportation policy, monetary policy and fiscal policy are the three weapons by which a government can partially bring together—lower the heights by raising the valleys—the different parts of the country. Certainly by no means the least of these is transportation policy. I should now like to repeat what I said when speaking on the resolution stage. I think it is necessary to do so because the commission which is to be established by Bill C-231 is directed in clause 1 in its activities and functions to carry out, under the same arrangements, the same directions, regulations and jurisdictions as the Board of Transport Commissioners now possesses. We are faced with the fact that, like the Board of Transport Commissioners, the commission which is now to be set up will establish its own jurisprudence and will be bound by these decisions.

As I pointed out once before, if you read the report of Mr. Justice Turgeon you will see quite readily that Mr. Justice Turgeon was very much of the opinion that the Board of Transport Commissioners, acting under the powers it then had, fell far short in its jurisdiction or power of trying to bring the equalization principle into effect. At page 23 of the royal commission report Mr. Justice Turgeon also said:

> In the first decision of the board filed in the 30 per cent application on March 30, 1948, the position of the board with respect to its jurisdiction and powers to reduce rates to assist industry or to equalize, through the prescription of reduced rates, production costs, geographical location, or climatic conditions, was dealt with at considerable length.

The board said quite frankly that it did not think it had the power to do so. Again, at page 24—these are excerpts from the report of the royal commission—there is the following:

> Railways are not required by law, and cannot in justice be required, to equalize natural disadvantages such as location, cost of production and the like.

Then, further on:

> The board has many times said that it is not concerned with equalizing costs of production.

And again on this page:

> It has been held time and again that rate-regulating commissions have no right whatever to attempt to equalize geographic, climatic, or economic conditions.

And so on. That is the situation. If this bill passes without any amendment, particularly to the declaration of policy enunciated in clause 1, we will be back in the same position because the present clause 68, which purports to deal with discrimination in rates, just and reasonable rates and so on, takes us right back to where we were prior to 1951 in that it says:

> All tolls shall be just and reasonable and shall always, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions with respect to all traffic of the same description carried over the same route, be charged equally to all persons at the same rate.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Let me point out the significance of that wording. When the Board of Transport Commissioners reported to the Governor in Council following the direction they received in 1948, the terms of which I have mentioned, they pointed out that the wording of the order in council was very much narrower than the wording subsequently included in the new section 336 of the Railway Act. I refer to the Railway Act as it was before the amendment provided by this bill. It read:

It is hereby declared to be the national freight rates policy that, subject to the exceptions specified in subsection (4), every railway company shall, so far as is reasonably possible, in respect of all freight traffic of the same description, and carried on or upon the like kind of cars or conveyances, passing over all lines or routes of the company in Canada charge tolls to all persons at the same rate, whether by weight, mileage or otherwise.

The board said this is far wider than the wording which now appears as proposed new section 381. This section will no longer be in the act if we pass this bill without change. The Board of Transport Commissioners, with its fund of expert experience and knowledge, said that the wording of section 336 was far wider and broader, giving greater power to the board than the proposed new section 381 in the bill now before us. Keeping that in mind and the needs of the constituency which I represent I must test the government in this regard by proposing an amendment. I wish to make a few more comments but I will read this amendment and send it to the minister so he will have a chance to consider it.

My amendment is as follows:

That clause 1 of Bill C-231 be amended by adding after (c) the following:

Provided however that it is essential to recognize the policy of equalization of freight rates to the fullest possible extent as a means of dealing equitably with all parts of Canada and as being the method best calculated to facilitate the interchange of commodities between the various parts of the country as well as the encouragement of industry and agriculture in all regions and the development of export trade;

That would be added immediately prior to the final paragraph which now follows (c).

Let me read the first eight or nine lines of clause 1 of this bill.

It is hereby declared that an economic and efficient transportation system making the best use of all available modes of transportation at the lowest total cost is essential to protect the interests of the users of transportation and to maintain the economic well-being and growth of Canada—

That is very good and I agree with it so far as it goes, but I am disturbed as to what is meant by the term "Canada" in this sense. I referred to this matter the day we recessed by asking the minister about "public interest" and "national interest". I was in a quandry as to whether the commission which will be charged with the responsibility of interpreting these words will decide that the growth of Canada will occur when there is a substantial advance in the gross national product for the country as a whole. Such an advance indicates growth in Canada but does not necessarily mean growth in all regions of the country.

It is my considered opinion that it is essential during this centennial year to look upon it as a year to initiate policies and programs throughout this country which are designed to bring every part of Canada up to a greater approximation of the economic level those more favoured parts enjoy. By accepting the terms of my amendment we will provide a mandate to the transportation commission, when it considers its functions and responsibilities, to consider the growth of Canada as a whole and as well the growth of various regions of Canada. If that is not done there will be a substantial omission in this bill. There are a number of excellent features of this bill with which I am in complete agreement, but it seems to me that a direction of this kind would be useful.

Before resuming my seat let me remind the minister of what he said in reply to some doubts expressed by Mr. Frawley, counsel for Alberta. I was not present at the time but I have read the transcript. The minister is reported as having said in relation to the doubts expressed by Mr. Frawley, similar to those I have put forward today, that clause 16 would constitute at least a partial answer to his fears. The minister suggested that within the four corners of clause 16 might be found an opportunity to deal with the problems raised. I am wondering whether that is so and, while I recognize this is not the time to deal with clause 16, I must make this observation because it relates to my amendment.

Clause 16, subclause (3) paragraph (a) provides that when the commission gives consideration whether or not a decision has been made which is prejudicial to the public interest it will take certain things into consideration. The paragraph states:

(a) whether the tolls or conditions specified for the carriage of traffic under the rate so established are such as to create an unfair disadvantage—

If it stopped there it would provide a complete answer to the problem I have brought to the attention of the committee, but the paragraph does not stop there. It continues as follows:

—beyond that which may be deemed to be inherent in the location—

And so on. The hon. member for Kent (Ont.) referred to new section 336 as it relates to captive shippers. The question of location is a very vital factor which the commission must consider when deciding whether or not there is a captive shipper. If we remove the right of the commission to consider the question of location in deciding whether or not in fact there is an unfair disadvantage under section 16 the principle of equalization goes out the window. I mention that to the Minister because my amendment will involve consequential amendments, one of which will be required to remove the word "location" in clause 16. I hope the minister will give some thought in this regard when he is considering my amendment.

My point is a simple one. Does the wording of this bill actually provide equalization or will various areas of this country be limited to that relief we can expect to find in the combination of the new section 336 and clause 16 of this bill?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the hon. gentleman has not yet moved his amendment. I hope I am correct in that regard.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment has been taken as moved.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are you moving the amendment now?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: Right now?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

The Deputy Chairman: With the permission of the committee I will read the amendment submitted by the hon. member for Peace River. This is the proposed amendment to clause 1 of Bill C-231:

By adding after (c) the following:

Provided however that it is essential to recognize the policy of equalization of freight rates to the fullest possible extent as a means of dealing equitably with all parts of Canada and as being the method best calculated to facilitate the interchange of commodities between the various parts of the country as well as the encouragement of industry and agriculture in all regions and the development of export trade;

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to deal with this matter at any great length because I want to raise some questions in this connection and do not feel that I should right at this moment indicate that something along the lines the hon. gentleman has suggested might not be acceptable. I do not think it would be acceptable in the form in which it is now drafted. Perhaps I should deal first with my fears that if this amendment were incorporated in the bill it would certainly be a declaration that we should no longer have the Crowsnest pass rates, because if you equalize freight rates to the fullest extent possible the discrimination in rates in favour of wheat exports would have to go by the board. I think it would also create great fears in the Atlantic provinces that this was an attack upon the Maritime Freight Rates Act, even though it would not directly repeal that act. It would certainly indicate that parliament felt that this kind of discrimination —because that is precisely what the Maritime Freight Rates Act does; it discriminates in favour of that region to compensate for other disadvantages—should no longer take place.

Therefore, if one considers the phrase "to the fullest possible extent" I think there would be a feeling that a great many embedded discriminations, which I do not think anyone in the house is seriously arguing should be taken away—indeed the hon. member for Kent (Ont.), if I understood him correctly, seemed to suggest that there should be still another special consideration given to a region—would in fact be removed. I am not saying what the legal effect of the amendment would be; I would like to obtain legal advice before saying anything about that. But I think the effect it would tend to have would be that we would get rid of all these historic discriminations—and I use the word "discrimination" in its correct etymological sense—in favour of certain regions, and certain activities would no longer be within the spirit of the new transportation policy. That is something I could not consent to at all. I think it would be contrary to the whole spirit of the bill. I think, however, that objection could probably be overcome by a rewording of the amendment.

The other difficulty that I see at first glance—and I am putting these points forward so that members of the committee may consider them a little before we come to take a decision about the amendment which is now before us—is that it is going to be very difficult to apply such a provision. I recognize that this could only be a declaration of principle which would be applied by the commission when the commission had something before it, but it seems to me it would be very difficult to square this amendment with the view that was taken by the MacPherson commission and accepted by the house on second reading. Most of us seem to accept this view in principle for every industry except the one we are interested in. I refer to the view that there should be the maximum amount of competition.

If anybody disliked the rates set as a result of competition, the presence of a phrase like this in clause 1 would make it possible for a case to be taken before the board. It could be said that it was not an equitable rate having regard to other rates. In that event I think we would not only be back where we started from but perhaps a few steps behind the point from which we are now starting. I thought there was general acceptance of the view that there should be the maximum amount of competition. I think it would be rather inconsistent with the other three parts of the clause to say that we must have competition but that if anybody dislikes the competition we must look and see whether the rates are all equalized.

I am glad the hon. gentleman referred to clause 16. In that clause we approach the question from the opposite point of view, that is, the point of view of making it clear that there should not be any unfair discrimination. By "unfair" one means something that is not provided in the law, not the Maritime Freight Rates Act, not the Crowsnest pass rates, not any maximum rates established by any formula, not the frozen rates there will be for two years for the Atlantic provinces, but anything where there are like circumstances and unlike treatment is given. It seems to me this is what we really want to achieve. It might very well be that we could meet this problem. and the other legal problem the hon. gentleman raised before Christmas about the wording of clause 16, if we could find some general declaratory words that could be put in clause 1. I am not promising to do that, but I would like to give a little consideration to the possibility of perhaps indicating in clause 1 that this was one of the principles that had to be taken into account. Then it seems to me there could be no doubt that when the commission came to consider clause 16 it would be apparent that this kind of discrimination would be contrary to the public interest.

I would really like to have this matter stood so that I might have a chance to consider it. Perhaps I am wrong again, and after a recent experience I am very hesitant to say anything about what is going to happen in the house or in committee, but I think my hon. friend the house leader was to have discussions with representatives of the other parties with a view to having it agreed that we would not sit between seven o'clock and eight o'clock. If that is a correct understanding of the disposition of the committee, I would like to have the chance to talk at that time with my advisers to see whether we might find some phraseology that would meet what I think the hon. gentleman has in mind. I am quite sure that the hon. member for Saint John-Albert and I would find great difficulty in going along with something that might be construed as calling into question the continued application of the Maritime Freight Rates Act or some similar measure.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the minister a question? I talked about consequential amendments. I had intended to deal with the very practical problem posed by the minister. I would suggest the insertion of the phrase "notwithstanding any other provision of this act", ahead of these sections at a time when movement of such an amendment would be appropriate. This is a time-honoured way by which governments can forget one part of an act while dealing with another. I did not think this was the appropriate time to this but I understand that the minister has said that there is a real question of policy which needs to be considered and therefore I have no objection.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no doubt that the hon. gentleman is correct and we can get over the first problem I raised in the manner he has proposed, although I suggest this might be a rather cumbersome way to do it and might still create fears. We heard the hon. member for Cumberland who seemed to have a great many shadows in his mind earlier today. We do not want any more of these fears or shadows which we can avoid.

The second and more fundamental problem can be approached in two ways. The difference between these ways is the same as the one which exists between the Bill of Rights and the ten commandments. The Bill of Rights endeavours to say what it is we have a right to do, while the ten commandments take a more modest approach and lay down specific things which we should not do.

Mr. Baldwin: One is for the government and the other for the opposition.

Mr. Pickersgill: Personally I would prefer a ten commandments approach to this particular problem. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would be willing, instead of formally moving his amendment at this time, to let it lie on the table and have us proceed to the consideration of other aspects of clause 1. This would have another advantage, namely, that of being able to deal with the amendment which either the hon. member for Acadia or I will move, and perhaps we could dispose of it in the interval. I have it all drafted for him. In view of the fact that it appears earlier in the clause, I should not like to be faced with a technical impediment to proceeding with the consideration of the clause, if that would be agreeable to the hon. member for Peace River and to the committee.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that the amendment submitted by the hon. member for Peace River be stood?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would suggest that it be considered to be tabled for the moment.

Mr. Baldwin: That it lie dormant.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask the minister whether, at the same time that he is considering this amendment, he could give some consideration to the amendment proposed by the Maritime Transportation Commission to which I have referred and which has the intent of protecting the national interest? I do not agree with what the minister said about the amendment which has just been tabled or held in abeyance but if at the same time this amendment to subclause (b) could be considered I think it might have a good effect on the maritime provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will also give some thought to that.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words with regard to the transportation bill. First, since the minister has agreed with the amendment I suggested prior to the Christmas recess, perhaps it would be proper to allow him to word it so as to suit himself and the government, so I will leave that up to him.

There is another amendment which I should like to suggest to him but before doing so I would like to say a word or two about the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River. Certainly I can speak wholeheartedly in favour of the suggestion made in this amendment because if it is followed through it will give more substance to clause 16. The general fault which I find with clause 16 is that it lacks certainty of protection against discrimination and also lacks a proper definition of the public interest. I am wholeheartedly in support of the suggestion made by the hon. member for Peace River.

However, my thoughts today lie more along the lines of competition. The minister has brought forward the bill in a rather hasty manner. I say this with due regard to Bill C-120 which was dropped two years ago and with due regard to the number of meetings held by the transport committee because it seems to me it is evident that this bill has been considerably amended. In fact some 65 to 70 amendments have been proposed and accepted by the minister which would point to the fact that insufficient consideration was given to the bill in the first place. Surely a bill which needs 70 amendments before being presented to the house is one to which insufficient prior thought was given in the initial stages of its drafting. While I do not lay the blame for this on the minister in particular I think that his staff should have drafted the bill more carefully so as to avoid the need for such a large number of amendments.

This bill brings together every mode of transportation in Canada, namely, railway, air, water, truck and even pipe lines. The theme of the bill is competition. If one really believes that competition will be the answer to our transportation problems in Canada then one must inject competition into every mode of transportation. But has this bill really achieved this? Clause 1(a) says that there shall be no regulations which will in any way restrict competition among the different modes of transport. Is this really enough? Does this clause really say that there shall be competition between the various carriers in any mode of transportation? It does not. This is why, after having given some thought to the matter during the Christmas recess, I once again put forward a suggestion which I made before the Christmas recess that perhaps we should implement an amendment suggested by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association as it appears in transport committee proceedings No. 27 on page 1926 and which provides that after the word "transport" in clause 1(a) the following words be added: "nor any carrier to compete freely with any other carrier".

If we really believe that competition is the answer I think we should state that there shall not be any regulations restricting competition between one carrier and another. Surely this follows particularly with regard to the railroad and trucking industries, if trucks are to fall under this legislation and if clause 1 of the bill is really intended to deal with every mode of transportation. As I read this particular part of clause 1 it refers to any mode of transportation. We must therefore state that we will not allow regulations which will restrict competition among the carriers in any mode of transportation. I should like the minister to consider this suggestion because I think I will move it as an amendment before clause 1 is agreed to.

I should also like the minister to give some thought to competition in every mode of transportation in Canada. What does this bill do with regard to railroads? If railroads are not included they will continue to set rates which are not necessarily competitive. What does the bill do with regard to air transportation? It does nothing. The Air Transport Board and the Aeronautics Act are included under the bill which, however, does not incorporate competition in this field in any real sense.

This bill does not touch Air Canada and leaves that company in a monopoly position all across Canada. It does not say that in the future steps will be taken to bring about a greater degree of competition.

It is interesting to note that during the committee proceedings Mr. Crump of the C.P.R. made a statement which appears in report of committee proceedings No. 28 at page 2009. I am not going to read it, but he stated that air cargo is developing into a very significant factor in intercity ton miles. I am paraphrasing what he said. There is no denying the fact that passenger traffic on air lines has increased tremendously during the last ten years. It is my belief, as it is Mr. Crump's, that in the next ten years air freight is going to increase to the same degree.

What does this bill do with regard to air freight? It does very little, if anything. Surely we cannot continue to say that this commission is going to regulate all modes of transportation when the bill does nothing with regard to air freight except transplant the machinery of the Aeronautics Act to this commission. The bill does not touch Air Canada at all. Certainly one of the significant factors in this regard is that Air Canada does not have any competition. If competition is the real theme of this bill, then we should seek some avenue in the bill which in the years ahead would provide a road for greater competition in air freight and air passenger travel as well as air transportation generally.

Every other air line, whether it be a little one operating between Regina and Calgary or Trans-Air in eastern Canada, has to apply for a licence under the Aeronautics Act or I suppose to the new commission that this bill will set up. However, Air Canada can operate all across Canada without applying for a licence and can discontinue a service without anything more than a public hearing. We saw that very thing take place on the prairies a few years ago.

This bill does very little, if anything, to bring about any degree of competition in air traffic, whether it be air freight or passenger travel. Let us not fool ourselves by saying that this bill brings all modes of transportation under one commission. The verbiage in the bill may well be to that effect, but it does nothing to bring about any adjustment of the conditions in which we now find ourselves with regard to air traffic. One only has to think back to the recent strike of Air Canada personnel to realize that transportation was severely tied up in Canada. More costly ways had to be found to move many of the perishable commodities which have normally moved by Air Canada. I should like to see some avenue created in this bill by which in the years ahead steps could be taken to create a greater degree of competition in air passenger travel and air freight. We should recognize the fact that there is room for such competition in Canada.

What does this bill do with regard to water transportation? There is a provision to the effect that transport by water, which falls under the Transport Act and is generally under the jurisdiction of the federal government, will fall under this new commission. What was the government's attitude just a year ago with regard to the competitive factor in northern Alberta? The government bought out its only competition on the McMurray waterways. At that time Northern Transportation, a government company, bought out Yellowknife Transportation for some $2.5 million. It was the only competition the government company had. Was that any way for a government to act which now comes to us and purports to believe that competition is the answer to our transportation problems in this country? They are not holding true to their belief of a year ago when they felt they had to buy out competition in order to survive. Today the government purports to believe that we must return to competition.

Let us look at truck competition. The minister says we are going to include a clause, I think in part III or perhaps part II of this bill, which will deal solely with truck competition. Without the amendment suggested by the Canadian Manufacturers Association, how does clause 1 apply to truck transport? We should state quite clearly that we will not allow any regulations which will restrict competition among carriers. This is a very strong point with regard to truck traffic because if you look at the major trucking concerns in Canada which operate from the maritimes through to western Canada you find you can name them on the fingers of both hands. Most of them are owned by the two railroads. Therefore we should not allow any regulations that would prohibit free competition among carriers in the trucking industry. I firmly believe that the amendment suggested by the Canadian Manufacturers Association is necessary in order to safeguard competition within the trucking industry.

During the proceedings of the transport committee we tried to find out the percentage of long-haul trucking services which the railroads really owned. We were not forceful enough in the committee to ascertain just what that percentage really was. There was some indication that this information could not be given out. The trucking association presented a brief to the committee and stated they would like to have that information but they could not really ascertain it. One of the great handicaps under which the transport committee worked was that the committee was not given enough facts to ascertain the value of this bill when one considers the fact that according to the bill competition is the answer to all our transportation problems.

Many people in Canada believe that there is not enough competition between the large trucking concerns because the Canadian National alone, I believe, owns practically outright over half a dozen trucking firms and Canadian Pacific must own a similar number. When you ascertain how many trucking firms there are, for instance, operating in the maritimes you realize that there is little real competition. If one were to project that thinking into other areas of Canada, I am sure one would come to the same conclusion.

With regard to the commodity pipe line aspect of this bill I believe this amendment should be included. The Shell Oil Company presented a brief with regard to commodity pipe lines. This company believes that commodity pipe lines really need not come under this bill because there is no such thing in Canada yet and pipe lines will come under two federal boards, the National Energy Board, which in most cases will regulate the commodity in the pipe line, and this new commission which will regulate the transportation aspect of that commodity. Pipe lines are a means of transportation whether they carry oil or whether they carry sulphur. If jurisdiction over a pipe line carrying oil is with the National Energy Board, I see no reason why that same board could not regulate the charges made for the transportation of sulphur as well as the charges made for the transportation of oil.

After all, Mr. Chairman, the least government is the best government. That is a principle which is generally accepted in a free society. But what is taking place in this bill? We are including in the bill a clause dealing with commodity pipe lines when we do not have any commodity pipe lines in Canada and when we do not know what commodity pipe lines system will be used in Canada. We are projecting our thinking into the future and are saying that we should have another regulatory body to govern such pipe lines when we already have the necessary machinery to handle them at the initial stage. I see the minister shakes his head but let him hear me out first.

It may well be, Mr. Chairman, that if these pipe lines should develop into a well-accepted means of transportation there would then be ample time to bring in any required legislation. I did ask the minister whether there had been any prior consultation with the provinces about trucks and commodity pipe lines and the minister replied that he would have meetings with the provinces in this regard.

Why do we include a clause in a federal bill dealing with the trucking industry, which is mainly a provincial matter though not entirely, without prior consultation with the provinces? Where is the co-operative federalism we heard so much about two years ago which was going to solve all our problems? The government was going to have ample prior consultation with the provinces on every matter of concern to them.

What have we seen in this house since that time, Mr. Chairman? We have been asked to pass one piece of legislation after another on the pretence that after this house had passed it the government would consult the provinces as to their views. Where, oh where has that co-operative federalism gone? It is certainly not evident in this bill.

As I said in my initial remarks on this bill, I believe that both the government and the minister have proceeded too hastily with the bill and have not consulted the provinces to any extent. They drafted a bill which required some 70 odd amendments and there may yet be further amendments. Surely if some thought had been given to the drafting of the bill and prior consultation had been had with the provinces about the trucking industry and commodity pipe lines, the government would have presented a bill which would have been readily acceptable to the house, the provinces and the people of Canada in general. I can only hope that in the coming week or weeks we will be able to iron out the problems in this bill so that some good will come out of it. Either that or the minister should withdraw it altogether and redraft the bill in light of the amendments proposed and the amendments which have been already accepted.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, while the hon. gentleman's point with respect to clause 1 (a) is fresh in my mind and before he moves any amendment I should like to suggest one or two difficulties which I think would be encountered in attempting to draft any effective amendment which would purport to forbid the commission to restrict competition within the same mode of transport.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle made a very powerful argument for rationalization of the railways, with a large part of which I completely agree, with a view to reducing, in the interests of the economy and the efficient transportation of grain competition, which is of the wasteful sort.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Wasteful competition, yes, but not fruitful competition.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman knows that the whole intention of the Aeronautics Act has been to provide competition where there is enough traffic to warrant it, to make sure that in the case of regional carriers and others there should be adequate scope to operate effectively and to enable them to make a financial success of their operations, and to avoid the kind of cut-throat competition which would make it impossible for any of them to operate effectively.

The hon. gentleman said that we were not amending the Air Canada Act in this bill. We are not amending the Canadian National Railways Act or a great many other statutes either. We are laying down certain general principles.

When the hon. gentleman's friends were in office they did permit a limited amount of competition on main air lines, and I have indicated that this government has no intention of changing that policy. Indeed, I am hopeful that in the very near future I will be able to make a statement with respect to that matter.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

The hon. gentleman made three points, two of which I have dealt with and the third I have not. I think what we are seeking to do in this general statement in clause 1 is not to lay down particular rules for the railways, for the air lines or for any other particular mode of transport. What we are trying to do is to lay down guide lines for competition between those modes of transport and for the relationships between them.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in these circumstances we would be making more difficulties for ourselves than we would solve by attempting to change this particular subclause in the manner suggested by the hon. member. We do have very keen competition now between the railways and there is certainly very keen competition between the two air lines wherever they are allowed to compete. I do not think we need insist on this kind of competition in this legislation. What we are seeking to do is to make it possible for the various modes of transport to compete.

While I am on my feet, though this does not relate to clause 1 at all perhaps I could say a few words about each of the other two points raised by the hon. gentleman. First with regard to commodity pipe lines there is no provision in the law of Canada at the present time for commodity pipe lines, apart from pipe lines to carry oil and gas. It was the view of the government that some provision should be made the first time appropriate legislation was brought before parliament to meet that gap, and it is a gap in legislation. I think it is appropriate to meet this gap in the way it is being met in this bill, which will not involve any double jurisdiction at all. A commodity pipe line that does not carry gas or oil will be exclusively under the jurisdiction of the new commission.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What if one carries both?

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: If one carries both then there is provision made in the bill. This is covered by one of the 70 odd amendments which were made, although I am not sure the hon. gentleman's figure is correct. I did not bother to count them. I thought it was wise to make any improvements in this bill that it was thought should be made. I do not think it is any criticism of the draftsman that this has been done. I am not criticizing the hon. gentleman because he criticizes me. Every opposition says that if a government accepts an amendment it means that it was a sloppy draftsman and did not know its own business, but if it does not accept amendments it is stubborn, obstinate and arrogant. You have to pay your money and take your choice. No matter what course you take the opposition will do nothing but condemn you.

We are, I hope, nearly through the rhetorical aspects of clause 1. Perhaps we can get down to the bill and forget how many amendments there are. If we see some way to improve the bill, let us do that even if it brings the amendments up to 71 or 72. But if there are to be improvements I think it is perhaps wise, not to do as the hon. member suggests.

The highway situation is somewhat different. Parliament 10 or 12 years ago passed legislation when the Privy Council decided that this parliament, and not the provincial legislatures, had jurisdiction over interprovincial and international trucking. This parliament has legislation empowering the provincial boards to act as federal agents. Many people do not understand that they act as federal agents. They have no power conferred on them by the legislatures. That could not be done. Such power can only be conferred by this parliament. To the extent that this delegation will continue to work there is no disposition to change it. But we have some reason to believe, because of certain decisions the courts have made, that some of these provincial agencies will not be able effectively to carry on their task. This is a matter about which the provincial governments, of course, should be consulted because they have allowed their agencies to act for us until now. The provincial governments should be consulted in due course about whether a change should be made. I do not think that provincial governments should be asked their views about the legislation—the legislative act is exclusively within the jurisdiction of this parliament—any more than we should expect the government of Alberta or any other province to consult us before introducing legislation exclusively within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature.

Where the division of authority is completely clear it seems to me that on the whole we get along better if we mind our own business. Whether it is advisable to give this reserve power to this new commission is something we can discuss when we come to the clause dealing with it. The same holds true with respect to pipe lines. Both these matters in my view show deficiencies in the general law at the present time that it is desirable to correct.

I shall come back to the point that really concerns clause 1. I shall reflect on what the hon. gentleman has said. I do not like rejecting anything out of hand. I see great difficulty in trying to formulate any general language in subclause (a) that would not create conflicts between the Aeronautics Act and probably the Railway Act, and certainly the clauses we are proposing to put in relating to branch lines. I think we should gain very little by attempting to do such a thing.

Perhaps the hon. gentleman will permit me to take a crack at him and to say that 30 years ago, when I was as young as he is, if any farmer in this house had got up and commended anything suggested by the Canadian Manufacturers Association he would never have come back. Apparently that is not as great a disability as it used to be.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We farmers in the west are very broadminded these days.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, if it will not come as too great a shock to the minister I wish to commend him on his flexibility in agreeing to accept some of the amendments proposed in the committee. No one can accuse the minister of having gone hastily into the preparation of this bill when one looks at its genesis in the days of the MacPherson Royal Commission appointed by the previous administration.

Having said that, I wish to comment about the extraordinary piece of verbiage the minister has included in clause 1 of the bill. This is a most amazing piece of drafting. One might consider the language as the preamble to the bill. If one turns the page and sees the short title referred to in clause 2, one might be pardoned for thinking that the language in clause 1 is the preamble to the bill. The more I have looked at clause 1 the more I have become convinced that the minister's thought about a new transportation policy has gone down the drain.

As I read clause 1 it virtually assures that the new transportation commission the bill seeks to establish will continue to flounder in the sea of misunderstanding and illogicality that has prevailed in the Canadian transportation system over a great many years. In clause 1 the minister, it seems to me, has most effectively sought to perpetuate the confusion in which our transportation system has found itself for a long time.

The bill starts with these words:

An Act to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada—

That is high-sounding. I have no objection to ministers introducing bills with high-sounding titles. It is within the bounds of reasonable ambition on their parts to have bills with high-sounding titles on the statute books to perpetuate their memories.

When one reads the first sentence of what I call the preamble, because it is not properly clause 1 as I define it, one sees this statement:

> It is hereby declared that an economic and efficient transportation system making the best use of all available modes of transportation at the lowest total cost is essential to the economic well-being and growth of Canada—

Few Canadians will find much to disagree with in that statement. But when one goes beyond that one immediately enters into the strange realm of thought that has prevailed for all too long, that some mystic benefit is to be derived from competition in transportation. I listened to the hon. member for Acadia, who obviously wallows in the quagmire in which the minister wallows. Some people think that if we could have competition, if we could get 25 railway companies to build lines across Canada to transport goods cheaply, somehow or other we should have an efficient transportation system working in the interests of all transportation users in Canada. That is the attitude that has prevailed. I am no authority on railway history, but if we look back in history I am sure we will find that it was the kind of philosophy I have just alluded to that forced the government of Canada in other days to set up the Canadian National Railways.

In spite of all this experience, this myth about the value of competition as being basic to the efficient functioning of transportation in Canada is being perpetuated, indeed, enforced in an act of parliament by virtue of clause 1 of this bill. This is the situation which has produced the conflicts to which I have been listening between supporters of the government and members of the official opposition. The minister has pointed out that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle contends there should be a greater degree of control over the railways to ensure that grain rates remain low. I hear voices from the maritimes in favour of moves to ensure that the maritime freight rates subsidy should continue. Now the hon. member for Peace River has introduced an amendment which in some ways I find to be laudable. But I would suggest to the hon. member for Peace River that his attempt to bring reason and order into what is contained in clause 1 is a hopeless effort. All it is likely to do is to add to the confusion which already exists.

To my mind the basic situation is clear. The best way of ensuring an efficient transportation system in Canada is to bring about a system whereby all modes of transportation and all the vehicles used complement one another instead of indulging in unnecessary and fruitless competition. It is through this approach that we are likely to get the most effective and economic system of transportation best suited to the needs of the people of this country. I suggest to the minister that the best thing he could do would be to remove clause 1 entirely and renumber clause 2 as clause 1. We could then consider the bill from that point. As things stand, all we are doing in effect is to ensure from the very start that the transportation commission will be unable to function in the manner proposed in clause 14. I put it to the minister that there is an inherent contradiction between what is set out in clause 1 and what is contained in clause 14 as to the powers and duties of the proposed commission. In order to illustrate my point I will quote the relevant part of clause 14.

> It is the duty of the Commission to perform the functions vested in the Commission by this Act, the Railway Act, the Aeronautics Act and the Transport Act with the object of co-ordinating and harmonizing the operations of all carriers engaged in transport by railways, water, aireraft, extra-provincial motor vehicle transport and commodity pipelines;

Here we find set out what I consider to be a realistic transportation idea. Unfortunately the idea that the duty of the commission is to co-ordinate and harmonize the operations of all carriers is completely nullified by the terms of clause 1 where we find it stated that these objectives are most likely to be achieved when all modes of transport are able to compete—a contention which maintains and perpetuates the paradoxical transportation policy which has prevailed for far too long in this country.

I know that when he introduced the bill the minister urged strongly that it be allowed to go to the committee where its details could be studied. Many of us were prepared for that to happen. In fact we expedited the passage of the bill to the point at which it could be sent to committee for that purpose, recognizing that certain changes were long overdue particularly with respect to the operations of the national railways.

I do not profess to be in a position to discuss in detail the proposals contained in this bill with respect to railways operations. Some of my hon. friends who are more directly interested in rail transportation matters have studied these proposals in committee and I am satisfied to accept their judgment in this connection. However, it does seem to me that not only the bill itself but the attention of the committee and of the house have been focused to far too great an extent on the rail transportation aspect of this subject. I am not denying that this in an aspect of transportation which requires urgent consideration. But in a bill which purports, as stated in the preamble, to be a bill to establish a national transportation policy it does seem to me that those of us who are concerned about other modes of transportation, water transportation, for example, have little to be thankful for. As I understand the legislation it brings about no change in existing water transportation policy; it effects no change in the provisions of the present Transport Act. This means that unless there is much more to be read into the operations of the new commission that is set forth here, those in Canada who are primarily dependent on water transportation for the carriage of freight will find their situation unchanged.
