By and large, the only section of transportation users in Canada who have no protection under the law with regard to the kind of services which are provided or the rates which are charged are those who must depend upon transportation by water. Although I might agree that some of the regulations which control the operations of the railway companies are outmoded, I wish, nevertheless, to take this opportunity to emphasize once again that there are large areas of Canada where there are no railways. On more than one occasion I have sought to emphasize my concern for such areas by seeking to introduce an amendment to the Transport Act. I had hoped that when the present bill was introduced this particular aspect at least would have been covered by the minister's proposals. I was looking through some papers the other day and I found that on October 24, 1962, I placed a question on the order paper which read as follows:

> Has the Minister of Transport completed the consideration which on September 28 he stated he would give to introducing an amendment to the Transport Act to bring coastal steamer facilities in British Columbia under the jurisdiction of the Board of Transport Commissioners and, if so, what is the result of that consideration?

Well, here we are in 1967 and the fact of the matter is that the bill now before us does nothing to rectify the situation of which I complain. I want to emphasize the contrast between people who are served by railways as a basic form of transportation and people who are served by water and coastal services as a basic form of transportation. I might draw to the attention of the minister that not long ago I received a notice from the secretary of the Board of Transport Commissioners to the effect that there would be a public hearing held on the question of the withdrawal of a full-time agent from a certain station in a small community in my area and his replacement by a caretaker. A full hearing was held. Somebody from the Board of Transport Commissioners visited the area. Almost at the same time the people in another part of my constituency, where there are no railways received in the mail a circular which said:

> Accordingly, all freight received for shipment after midnight November 25, 1966 will be accepted at current tariff rates plus 10 per cent. Copies of the new tariff, which will be identified as Northland Freight Tariff No. 17, giving effect to the foregoing will be available on request as soon as received from the printers.

At this point I am not going to argue the merits or demerits of whether or not that particular increase was justified. What I am endeavouring to do is to point out that under the bill before us, which purports to comprise a new national transportation policy, that kind of increase can go into full effect without any possible recourse on the part of the users of that service regardless of whether it is justified and reasonable or unjustified and unreasonable. In a situation where people are dependent upon a monopoly service, despite the minister's adherence to the idea of competition in transportation I doubt that he would be willing to suggest that another freight run would be the answer in an effort to lower the rates. So I suggest that, despite the minister's claim that he has produced a new transportation policy, all he is doing in this bill is setting up a body which will replace three existing regulatory bodies.

I must say that I believe this is a forward step in the hope that there will be some coordination. The minister may be doing something to rationalize the operations of the railway companies. I do not profess to be able to express a considered judgment on that point. Far from bringing in a new transportation policy, by clause 1 of the bill now before us the minister, if it becomes law, has effectively nullified any hope we may have had that the present government of Canada could in fact bring about a rational transportation system in this country.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, this evening I am going to address my remarks to the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Peace River. Once again I am very pleased that the Minister of Transport is here because these remarks will be basic to the decision he will be attempting to arrive at between seven and eight o'clock vis-à-vis the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River. The amendment of the hon. member for Peace River is an effort on the part of the Conservative opposition to try to give guide lines to the new transportation commission which will help them make their judicial decisions. It is similar to subclauses (a), (b) and (c) of clause 1.

I should like to read part of the amendment again:

—it is essential to recognize the policy of equalization of freight rates to the fullest possible extent as a means of dealing equitably with all parts of Canada—

In respect of the first part of the amendment concerning the question of equalization, I have pointed out before and I should like to repeat that there is nothing which has bothered the people of Canada more than the question of equalization. Throughout the years, particularly in the maritimes and in the prairies, the unfairness inherent in the fact that it costs so much more to ship goods on the railways for a certain distance in the prairies and the maritimes than it does to ship them the same distance in the central provinces has been one of the great economic injustices which have divided this country.

This bill is an attempt to bring the railways up to full efficiency by permitting competition in the field of transportation between the railways on the one hand and other modes of transportation on the other. I believe the great majority of the people of Canada are willing to give a try to this policy of competition. On the other hand, since we are realistic we know that railways, truckers, air lines and others forms of transportation have not endeared themselves to the people of Canada in the past by evidence that they were honestly competing. There is too much evidence to the contrary. There is a good reason for this being so. The railways in effect are a type of semi-monopoly. When a railway goes through a certain area, in effect it provides the only service in that area. When you have a location in Canada where the competition is very keen, where railways run reasonably close together and where you also have water, air and truck transportation, you can visualize a situation where there is honest and genuine competition. There still are many areas in Canada, however, where in reality that guarantee cannot be given.

The phrase, "equalization of freight rates" is a clear direction from parliament and I think gives an axe to the minister and the new transportation commission. In recognition of the way competition works we have included the phrase, "to the fullest possible extent". I think that phrase gives sufficient leeway that the transportation commission can recognize in some areas that the equalization principle will have to be departed from.

One of the situations of which we all have knowledge is that in respect of the Panama Canal. It is a matter of common knowledge that you can ship goods from Montreal to Vancouver by water in competition with the movement of freight by rail from Montreal to Vancouver. Therefore, in order to give competition in that type of situation between modes of transportation the transportation commission would have to permit a type of freight rate which would allow the railways, one mode of transportation, to compete effectively with another mode, that of water. This, however, does not ease the pain for the people of Regina or Calgary who know that the freight rates they pay for rail transportation are so much higher than they are when the same goods are moved from Montreal to Vancouver. When it is cheaper to ship a particular article from Montreal to Vancouver than from Montreal to Calgary it is natural that the people will raise the cry of discrimination and nonequalization. As the hon. member for Peace River pointed out, royal commissions have tried to tackle this problem but have failed to come up with a precise answer. All we in parliament can do is suggest, as this amendment attempts to do, that the commission wherever possible provide an equalization of freight rates.

Obviously if there is to be competition between the three, four or five railway companies in Canada the rates cannot be precisely the same. Let me give some examples of what I mean in an attempt to explain possible situations which may still exist following the adoption of the this bill. I have given these examples in general principle on previous occasions.

Clause 68 is very carefully worded so as not to force the railway companies or the transportation commission to provide equalization of freight rates. In clause 68 under the heading "Traffic, Tolls and Tariffs" we find that subsection (1) of new section 381 states:

All tolls shall be just and reasonable and shall always, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions with respect to all traffic of the same description carried over the same route, be charged equally to all persons at the same rate.

On first reading that it looks like it provides for equalization of rates, but when you reread it in light of our experience over the last 40 years there is a loophole for discrimination provided by the phrase "carried over the same route". The words that are missing, of course, are "the same distance". We have tried by our amendment to include words which will indicate to the transportation commission that we want to achieve the major objective of this bill, namely, competition, while at the same time eliminate any possibility of discrimination.

Let me provide a hypothetical example. Suppose a particular item is being transported from Winnipeg a distance of 130 miles west to the city of Brandon at a rate which is lower than that applying to the transportation of the same item 130 miles from Winnipeg east to the city of Kenora. That situation could well exist within the terms of this bill but it would be discriminatory against the people of Kenora. Conversely, if the rate were higher to Brandon than to Kenora, it would be discriminatory against the people of Brandon. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River, which is being held in abeyance, was designed to prevent this type of discrimination from occurring by the inclusion of the words "to the fullest possible extent".

Let me propose another example. The majority of development in Canada in the future will take place in the paper and mining industries in our northern areas. At this time 90 per cent of our population live in a narrow strip in the southern part of the country within 10 per cent of our total area. A great majority of our transportation problems in future will relate to various methods of transportation from our newly developed areas. Under clause 68 of this bill it would be possible for railway companies, without in any way infringing upon the principles, to establish different rates for hauling similar ore from different locations over an equal distance.

Let me use Winnipeg again for the purposes of my example. If a mine were developed a specific distance to the northeast of Winnipeg and a similar mine were developed to the north of Winnipeg, provided the product was the same and the distance to the concentrator was the same the same rate should apply. Similar ore collected at the one mine and carried over the same distance as ore collected from the other mine should be moved for exactly the same rate. Under the provisions of this bill a different rate could be charged. Let me enlarge somewhat on this example. If ore were being transported from a mine in northern Quebec to a concentrator at a higher rate than ore transported from a mine to Winnipeg, to Sault Ste. Marie, Port Arthur or Fort William, provided the distances were the same the people in Quebec would feel they were being discriminated against. On the other hand, if the rate in Quebec was lower the people in Manitoba or Ontario would feel discriminated against.

In view of the realities it is not possible to obtain complete equalization of rates. There may well be competitive factors involved. We have taken this into consideration in drafting our amendment. That is why we suggest there should be equalization of freight rates "to the fullest possible extent".

It is my hope that the minister and his officials will realize that we are not attempting to be obstructive in moving this amendment. What we are attempting to do is to make it clear to the commission that parliament desires equalization of freight rates to the fullest extent possible. We must take into consideration competitive factors, but if those factors are relatively equal there is little reason why the rates cannot be equal.

We have attempted to protect the various modes of transportation in this country. We have done so effectively by stating that no mode of transportation can charge a rate below cost. That provides a basic protection to every mode of transportation. But what have we done to protect the user? Users must realize that there is some body, in this case the national transportation commission, which has been directed by parliament to make sure as far as possible that similar goods carried a similar distance by a similar transportation system are carried at the same rate.

Mr. Hamilton: I think I have made my point sufficiently, and I hope fairly enough, to indicate that we are not trying to cause trouble for the minister or the people who will have to redraft this amendment. We are trying to arrive at something that will indicate to the national transportation commission that we are attempting to get over the old bugaboo of d scrimination which has plagued and divided this country for so long. We are doing this to show the committee something they should already know, namely, how serious this discrimination has been. Up to the year 1957, I believe, since the war increases in freight rates have been granted by the Governor General in Council amounting to 150 per cent. The whole burden of this tremendous increase in freight rates fell on the prairies and the maritimes and those areas apart from the competitive area between Montreal and Toronto. It did not bear on the people in the competitive areas.

I have already said that we cannot get rid of discrimination entirely, but as our country develops more and more in the northern areas this tremendous dissatisfaction will continue unless there is some assurance that the board to which we are giving these tremendous powers is working in the interests of the user. This is why there will be a great deal of trouble in regard to the definition of "public interest". Does "public interest" simply imply that you have competition between the railways regardless of the fairness to the user? If that is the motivation or theory behind this bill, it will cause just as much trouble as previous efforts by parliament to try and get out of this rut. We are trying to be helpful by suggesting what I think is a fairly constructive amendment which does not limit to the fullest extent the power of the new commission to do the right thing. But they should know that parliament is holding them responsible to try to arrive at the maximum amount of equalization possible.

In this bill we are telling the people of Canada that parliament will look after their interests properly and that the national transportation commission will defend those interests. But the public interest must, by the very nature of things, not only be loyal to the principle of competition but loyal to the reality of competition and the fact that in the end result we are trying to serve the user as fairly as possible.

I have one more point to make which is in harmony with what I have said in the house on previous occasions with regard to rationalization. I suggested to the house on second reading that one of our purposes in this bill should be to give the commission more power, the power to direct, the power to achieve positive purposes. Then at the committee stage I supported another amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River suggesting that this board, with all its powers, should have some controls placed on it. Those two viewpoints are not contradictory. They are, I think, realistic and practicable.

If we want to run our transportation system efficiently, it seems that we have to turn it over to a highly skilled board that can deal with it. This is the essence of the bill. But if we turn all these powers over to the board, not only should we in the drafting of the bill try to state our aims and objectives in the form of guide lines to the board but we should have some way of touching base with them occasionally. That is why we in the official opposition have suggested that there should be set up by statute some form of institutional framework which would guarantee to the people whose interests we are placing in the hands of this commission that their representatives in parliament will every year have to examine carefully what the board is doing.

In summary, Mr. Chairman, we are turning over more power to the board. I would even give it more power than this bill gives, namely, the power to direct as well as to recommend. At the same time I want to strengthen control over the board in a way which will not interfere with its efficiency in handling our transportation system. This amendment is not as fundamental as the earlier one, but I think it meets the long-standing grievance of the people in those areas which have been most discriminated against, northern Ontario, northern Quebec, the prairies and the maritimes. They will at least feel that we in parliament are giving the board, proper guide lines in this field.

If we try to tie the direction down to dollars and cents and precise details, it will destroy the purpose of the bill. We should set out our aims and objectives in such a way that will direct the board but leave some loophole whereby the railways can adapt themselves to the competitive position of different areas and within reason make the adjustments that are necessary.

We cannot reach the most perfect situation in the world but at least we want the people whom we represent and who have been discriminated against over the years to feel that a case is being made on their behalf. I believe that in this opening clause it would help a little if we included some phraseology that would give the assurance that the board was directed by parliament in an attempt to arrive at our objectives, rather than including such a provision in the section of the bill covering the powers of the board. If we included this amendment at least the people would know that periodically we will see that these things are carried out to the fullest extent possible as far as members of parliament are concerned in trying to set up legislation and maintain the right of the people to have some control over their masters.

The final point I wish to make deals with positive thinking and positive approaches. I believe in what I call dynamic, positive government. I believe we have an opportunity in this bill, in which we are delegating powers in respect of transportation to a national commission, to try to use this Canadian Transport Commission as part of national policy. I know that for many decades to come things will have to be done in the field of transportation that do not come under the ordinary rules of competitive private enterprise. I know that by roads, highways, air routes and possibly pipe lines we will have to open up our country by moving transportation into areas where there is no immediate monetary return to the carriers. I know that for periods of years, and perhaps decades, some of these operations will have to run at a loss.

We have agreed with the principle enunciated by the MacPherson Royal Commission that, if we ask any mode of transportation to take on these national functions, any losses will be recompensed from the national treasury. What I am trying to say is included in this amendment. I refer to the phrase "equalization of freight rates to the fullest possible extent as a means of dealing equitably with all parts of Canada and as being the method best calculated to facilitate the interchange of commodities between the various parts of the country"—and this is the part I want to emphasize—"as well as the encouragement of industry and agriculture in all regions and the development of export trade."

That last phrase is the positive one. We are there saying that the national transportation commission must have as its guide line in the national interest the developing of exports, our mining industry, our paper industry and even the agricultural industry. Many Canadians have not yet recognized that the last great backstop of all the hungry people of the world will be in northern Canada and northern Russia.

The great muskegs, with the greatest soil productivity in the world, will be the base from which we will feed the hungry millions. Even if one is accused of looking too far into the future, the Canadian Transport Commission, under this amendment as a guide line, will know that they have the responsibility of looking into the future and of proposing to air lines, pipe line companies, railroads and even water transportation around our coasts, that in the interests of developing our country they can make proposals to the agencies they govern.

I think all this is made possible in the amendment, and I hope that when the minister meets his officials between 7 and 8 p.m. today he and they will recognize that the additional paragraph we have proposed is put forward without any intention to interfere with the principle of competition. It also has the purpose of trying to carry out what I think every Canadian would like to see, namely a maximum equalization of freight rates. I have been very candid in saying that under certain circumstances one cannot provide perfect equalization, but there are so many cases of discrimination that it would be good to know that this transportation commission is actively watching and seeking at all times to end or reduce that discrimination.

Finally I shall repeat a point I have made already, that I would like to see an active, dynamic government which would not interfere with private enterprise. If this transport commission could do a certain amount of projection of the national policy, then the government would have through this commission a way of getting things done—something we have found very difficult in the past.

I know the minister does not wish to re-live that awful debate on the Pine Point railway. That was a classic example where private enterprise, in this case in the form of the Canadian Pacific Railway, did not see the obvious truth that there would be a need for certain mineral products in a short space of time, and refused to build a railway line to its own mining properties. The government of Canada of the day had to put money behind the Canadian National Railways to get this line built. Is it not a wonderful thing that we did it? Certainly we made money for the C.P.R., and all those who had invested in the Pine Point mines reaped large benefits. But the main thing was that we saved this country hundreds of thousands of dollars of foreign exchange and we saved it from having to import these minerals at much higher prices.

This was a good policy at that time. The private enterprise did not see the necessity for it, but thank heavens we had a government which believed in this country and believed in taking dynamic action. I hope that the Canadian Transport Commission will be composed of people who will read into the amendment and into the remarks made in the house the meaning which we intend, namely that we hope they have some red corpuscles in their blood stream, and some adrenalin to enable them to take the dynamic action we hope such a board will take when national interests are at stake.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to put one question to the hon. gentleman for clarification, if he would permit me to do it. As I understand his interpretation of the purpose of the amendment, in so far as equalization is concerned—I am not talking about the other more visionary aspects which he mentioned in the latter part of his speech—it is not intended in any way to inhibit the railways or any other mode of transport from meeting competition, but is merely intended to say that in areas where there is no competition there should not be discrimination as between one part of the country and another. I do not know whether I made myself clear.

Mr. Hamilton: I think we are in agreement. As you know, rates are set for a certain product in a certain area, and no one ever examines them from year to year. These discriminatory rate structures remain for ever and ever. I was hoping this amendment would make it clear to the Canadian Transport Commission that their job is to try to set rates wherever possible on the basis of equalization, rather than on the basis of phraseology contained in clause 68, which deals with section 381 (1).

The other point I wish to make is that I think it is wrong in principle to worship the theory of competition to such a degree that you give to a private company, whether it is the C.P.R., the C.N.R. or the P.G.E., the right to decide what the freight rate will be for a certain new development as opposed to another new development. This, in the name of competition, gives too much power to the private company. If the Canadian Transport Commission were on the alert for this type of thing, it could be prevented. One can imagine that, with the interlocking directorates, and with the C.P.R. which is engaged in many forms of enterprise, if one of these enterprises belonged to the circle of their companies and another set of enterprises belonged to the competitive company, discrimination could occur.

I do not want to impute bad motives or to suggest that the railway would deliberately set a special rate to help their boys a little bit more than the others, but I would like to believe there was a referee or a judicial court set up to stop this sort of thing, unless there were good reasons for establishing lower rates at one point than at another. The principle should remain, that similar goods travelling the same distances should be treated in the same way.

In the case of the oil and gas industry, we do not bother with these details in legislation. We simply say to the pipe lines and to the gas distribution companies in the provinces: You are a semi-monopoly, but we watch you by setting the maximum rate of return on the capital which is usually set on the basis of the rate base. We allow these companies to compete and to do what they like pricewise because their competition has to be met in various areas. For example in Ontario there is discrimination in the gas rates, but the government controls them simply by making it very clear in the regulations what their maximum rate of return can be.

We have not set up this system in this bill. If we do not set up a system of maximum returns—which would be too difficult to attempt in the case of the railways—we have to put a finger of control down here and there, and that is what I think this amendment will do. If the transportation commission is aware that as far as possible parliament wishes to get rid of discrimination, then a great cause of disunity and unfairness will be removed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can assure the hon. gentleman that if my enunciation of the proposition was the one he had in mind, that is precisely the objective of the government. We feel that, where there is competition, the railways should be permitted to meet it and to get the business so long as the rates are compensatory; but where there is no competition we do not feel they should be allowed to discriminate between two shippers under similar conditions, even if one is at one end of the country and the other is at the other end. That is what we have sought to do in clause 16, and that is precisely the purpose of the language in that clause. If I can find some language which clearly sets out this principle, at eight o'clock I would be ready to propose that we include it.

It may be that instead I will have to ask that this amendment stand overnight, because sometimes the draftsmen have to see how the wording is likely to be interpreted. Those of us in here who think that if we were judges we would be able to settle it quickly will find that the lawyers do not always agree with us. If it is not intended to prevent the various modes of transport from trying to be competitive, but is meant to protect areas where there is no competition by making sure that there will be no discrimination, then I can assure the hon. gentleman that the government is wholly in favour of it. This is what we want to accomplish. I can say right now that I cannot accept the words in exactly the form the hon. member for Peace River has given them to us. However, we will try to devise something which will meet the objective he has in mind.

Mr. Hamilton: May I make one last observation. I believe the minister is aware that under section 68 to which I referred, all tolls shall be just and reasonable and shall always do certain things. I break off there to say that this language is fixed. The bill provides that for the carriage of goods over the same route the various carriers will have to have the same rate.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman realizes that clause does not apply to the railways at all.

Mr. Hamilton: The point I am discussing is that I point to this as an example of the type of fixed language we will find it difficult to amend. I believe the provision would be better put in the guide lines section.

Mr. Pickersgill: I quite agree.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I wonder if I could repeat my objection for the minister so that it might be considered during the supper recess? The hon. member for Peace River has put forward this amendment which recommends a recognition of the policy of equalization of freight rates to the fullest extent as a means of developing all parts of Canada. The amendment is akin to the complaint of some of us from the maritimes, that in embarking on this national transportation policy we somehow are putting aside the national policy of using transportation to develop the regions of Canada that have not been as fortunate as others, in so far as competition in transportation is concerned.

One of the objections the minister made to this amendment was that it might not consider the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the statutory protection that the maritimes have. Whether that is true, I do not know. However, perhaps we should place in the legislation, either in this or some other clause, the amendment which I suggested should be seriously considered. On an earlier occasion I felt it was important, but it is taking on a greater significance in my mind now, and I will tell the minister in a minute why that is so.

The amendment to which I refer is the one put forward by the Maritime Transportation Commission, when they made their presentation to the committee which considered this bill. That commission suggested that after section 1(b), the following words should be added, "except as may otherwise be necessary for constitutional, statutory or national policy purposes." If those words were in the bill, the objection the minister has to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River might be covered. This amendment also appeals to me because it ties in with the study that has taken place on maritime transportation problems. We have to buy a pig in a poke or pray that something is going to come up in the future.

I suggest that if these words are in the bill, then a future government will have to recognize this protection, whereas if these words are not there an entirely different method could be adopted for dealing with the transportation problems of the maritimes. I am not suggesting future governments would not be aware of this, and I frankly told the minister that I wondered whether we should put a full time order on this freeze. Although I cannot speak for my colleagues, I am quite willing to take a chance that there would be enough pressure from the maritimes to cause the government to act.

If there is not some statement in this bill to the effect that we recognize in this parliament that national policy as a means of providing transportation facilities on an equitable basis for every region is protected, then I am afraid a new government might not consider that aspect and might use something different on an experimental basis. I think the minister has my thought. Perhaps he will be able to work in something that will satisfy himself in connection with the weakness of this amendment and also make many maritimers happy in the knowledge that it has been stated that all will agree with a national policy on transportation as separate from a new national transportation policy.

There are one or two other points which perhaps I could develop at this time. They arise from some of the problems we discussed before the Christmas recess and about which we have had a chance to think further. Some hon. members have paid tribute to the minister's flexibility and good intentions. I did that in the committee. I think we will have to test these statements against the proceedings in the house on the bill. It has been said that we need definite direction, and that words are important in a section such as we are considering because the new transport board will be reading these words rather carefully and trying to ascertain exactly what we intended.

We all know that the minister is flexible, is good natured and that certain things are intended. Flour offers a good example of the difficulty of putting these intentions into legislative form. Everybody in the committee agreed that we wanted to provide the same protection for flour as there had been. I am not an expert in the matter, but I understand when the new legislation was brought forward flour was excluded from many of the provisions that affected grain. We were all desirous of at least putting flour in the position it was before. It would seem to me, as a layman, that since the west grows the grain and mills some of the flour and the east benefits from these lucrative flour shipments through eastern ports, everybody should be interested in Canada as a nation milling and shipping as much flour as possible. Two amendments have come forward, and they were put forward fairly. Everybody considered them. I understand now there is some difficulty in connection with the second amendment, in that some flour mills were not included. Unless changes are made, this might drastically affect about 50 per cent of the business that has been going through most of the eastern ports.

I know the minister and his officials are considering the matter, so I do not want my words to be taken as criticism of any departmental or railway officials who may be considering this matter. I just want to use it as an example of the fact that it is not easy to put into legislative form for all time the exact intent in providing a cure for these problems.

Another matter that came to my mind was this question of port parity. I understand we are still going to hear from the minister on this subject. Perhaps on that occasion he will give us a better indication of how that affects Saint John and whether the rates vis-à-vis the United States ports are going to be protected. I read in the paper the other day the industrial port commissioner in Quebec city, who of course is trying to promote business, made the flat statement that it is $14 per ton cheaper to ship newsprint through Quebec than through Saint John. He went on to say that this is an argument each shipper in Quebec should be able to count on, and that therefore winter navigation should be kept open. I see the minister is smiling but he has no need to worry; I am not going to get into the subject of winter navigation at the moment. I have already put substantial argument on the record over the years in this regard.

If this is true, I do not know whether any agreed charges are involved. I would assume the longshoremen would form a comparable category because they are now on identical rates. If it is true that it is $14 per ton cheaper to ship newsprint through Quebec than through Saint John, then there is something wrong with our freight rate structure. The very reason out province went into confederation, Mr. Chairman, was to get equalized rates so that we could be competitive. If these are taken away from us, then even without winter navigation I do not know what hope there is for us in the future. This thought occurred to me during the holidays when I was trying to be fair minded and was viewing the matter on a broad, national basis.

One other subject on which I think the minister should try to obtain more information concerns the freeze on the maritime freight rates. I am confused about this question, which is looming fairly large. As I stated in my earlier remarks, I think we would do better to put a time limit on this freeze. I have perused some of the records in this connection, and when we come to the particular clause I should like to have an indication of how much of our traffic is affected by this freeze. The departmental officials seemed to minimize it, and I am sorry I do not have before me their exact words. At the same time, in reply to me the other day the minister said that quite a substantial part of our traffic was involved. So I think we should know what we are talking about here.

In view of this I feel that if we were given some statement on national policy everyone would be happier. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle referred to this particular situation, which is of prime concern to the west, and I commend both him and the hon. member for Acadia for their speeches about free enterprise this afternoon. It is heart warming to hear these remarks, as one who comes from a city and a port which owes a great deal to one of our national transportation companies. I hope that these complimentary remarks, Mr. Chairman, will be taken as an indication that we are still interested in them, and we hope that they will be as interested in us in the future as they have been for years past.

In this regard the thought struck me that we were almost bordering upon the chief criticism which was made by the western provinces, particularly Manitoba, during the committee hearings. I feel that, in spite of the minister trying to drag section 16 into the picture this is one of the major weaknesses of a big section of this bill. We are really considering maximum rate control philosophy. This is one fear the west has. I as a maritimer think that the government, if they are not already aware, should be made very much aware of the fact that, every day, the maritimes is going further behind, in this field of transportation.

The statements that have been made on behalf of private enterprise to the effect that the big bulk shippers should be allowed to negotiate with the railways and to set their own rates sound pretty good, but I go back to what was said in the committee hearings about the wastage of our resources in Canada. Let us take for example the potash industry, which is negotiating with the railways for special rates. In my humble opinion I think these rates could be set very high, and due to the monopoly or near monopoly situation in the industry, particularly in the international market, there will not be an accounting. In spite of all that has been said, the bulk shippers will not come forward and declare themselves; they will simply make up the cost of these high rates by taking it out on the economy in the western provinces, perhaps through labour or through some other means.

I leave with the minister these general observations on the bill. It is a question of watching these rates every day and in every way. Otherwise we will find that the difference in rates will be lost in the economy and that the western provinces will end up as we did in the maritimes. About 50 years from now they will wonder what has happened to them because they have no industry left and their standard of living will be well below the Canadian average.

So I say to my western friends, particularly in view of their appealing speeches on behalf of private enterprise, that while I agree with them in this philosophy they had better be careful of the maximum rate control section of the bill and not listen to the story which is put forward, that this is great and that we should let the big companies and the railways work it out themselves. That is my centennial warning for the new year to the western members: let them watch this section.

May I call it seven o'clock, Mr. Chairman, if it is the intention of the committee to take a recess?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it is. Perhaps I may say again that I intend to give consideration as well to the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman about this other amendment, which I think could be summed up by saying that the hon. gentleman is in favour of equalization if necessary, but not necessarily equalization.

The Chairman: Order. Is it the wish of the committee that I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain), Canadian Pacific-discontinuance of Montreal-Quebec night train service; the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Klein), admission to Canada of deputy leader of National Democratic Party of West Germany; the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays), Northern Affairs—Grande Hermine —permanent berth for replica.

I understand that there has been agreement that the house will suspend sitting from now until eight o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the house also agree that we come back to committee and begin work at eight o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-231 to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: I do now leave the chair.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Transportation

SITTING RESUMED

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: The house is again in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-231.

Mr. Rock: I rise to speak on clause 1 of this bill, which will create a new national transportation policy for Canada. During our study of this measure in the committee on transport and communications I was interested in the area covered in clause 4, paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e), particularly in paragraph (c) which reads:

transport by water to which the Transport Act applies and all other transport by water to which the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends.

I asked the minister in the committee why the seaway authority was not included or mentioned in the bill, and he gave me a satisfactory answer. Nevertheless I believe there is a matter which at present comes under the jurisdiction of the seaway authority but which should, I believe, come directly under the authority of the Department of Transport. I refer to the operation of the second old Lachine canal, which was transferred to the jurisdiction of the seaway authority when the seaway became operative in order that the free toll Lachine canal would not be a competitor for small ships. This canal has been partially closed. No through traffic can use it and only a small western section has been left open for local traffic. This means that very few ships use it.

However, whether this old Lachine canal carries heavy traffic, little traffic, or no traffic has no bearing on the difficulties encountered by vehicular traffic attempting to cross the 6th Avenue bridge between the cities of LaSalle and Lachine. In the course of the past ten years these two municipalities have time and again requested in letters and resolutions that the federal government build a new bridge, or an extra bridge, to solve the traffic problem caused by the present outdated horse and buggy federal bridge. Serious traffic jams occur at present when the canal is closed for winter. From time to time traffic jams extend from this bridge for almost a mile along two arteries to LaFleur street in LaSalle, westward on St. Joseph boulevard for 15 blocks and down 6th avenue to the heart of the main shopping street in Lachine, Notre Dame street.

This problem has existed for many years and each year it becomes increasingly serious. The seaway authority and the Department of Transport say that responsibility belongs to the municipalities and to the province concerned. The government has no policy with regard to the matter. I would point out however that during my lifetime the federal government has built two bridges over the St. Lawrence river. And as hon. members know, the Champlain bridge was completed only recently. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that a similar federal responsibility exists with regard to the building and modernization of bridges along the Lachine canal. It is my belief that the same degree of responsibility as the federal government assumes in connection with railway crossings should also be assumed with regard to bridge building across federal canals.

[The Chairman.]

The first inhabitants of Lachine came in the year 1666, over 300 years ago. The first canal was built between the years 1821 and 1824, enlarged in the years 1843 to 1848, and again in the years 1877 to 1880. There was a complete reconstruction between 1896 and 1904. The four bridges which cross the two locks and the two water control systems were built between 1922 and 1924. They were built to accept the traffic of that era—the horse and buggy days. In the year 1904, when the reconstruction of the Lachine canal was completed, the population in the immediate area of La Salle and Lachine was around 6,000. At present the estimated population in the area of La Salle and Lachine is around 95,000. The serious traffic situation has been in existence for the past ten years, and therefore I believe that something should be done in this regard by the federal government.

I am aware of the possible closing of the Lachine canal. Personally I feel this canal, the first built in Canada, which enters the heart of the city of Montreal, should remain as an historic achievement. I believe it should be maintained as a harbour for pleasure craft and for Montrealers. The government has a policy for pleasure craft and I believe this canal should be part and parcel of that policy. There should be no more stalling one way or another in the matter of a decision. The Lachine canal should first be transferred from the seaway authority to the Department of Transport. Then a decision should be reached by the department or by the minister, either to close the Lachine canal and build a causeway between the two municipalities, or leave the canal open and build the bridge which has been requested by the two municipalities. I think the minister should study the possibility of creating a bridge fund, in the same manner the grade crossing fund was created. I believe he should give additional power and responsibility in this regard to the new Canadian Transport Commission.

On December 20, when speaking in respect of clause 1, I addressed some remarks to the minister on the subject of railway crossings. I have an amendment which I should like the minister to study. I would hope that this amendment could be accepted by him:

That Bill C-231, an act to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions, be amended

(a) by renumbering clause 78 on page 65 thereof as subclause (1) of clause 78, and

(b) by adding, immediately after the renumbered subclause (1) of clause 78 thereof, the following:

"(2) Section 265 of the Railway Act is amended by adding thereto immediately after subsection (9) thereof the following subsection:

"(10) Where in the opinion of the commission any railway crossings of highways or highway crossings of railways at rail level, (in this section called a "level crossing") constitutes a present hazard to safety and no agreement satisfactory to the commission has been reached between the authorities or bodies concerned and the company for the construction of either such grade separation or such installation of signals as may be required for the removal of the hazard to safety, the commission shall

(a) publish a statement, in at least one newspaper circulating in the area in which the level crossing is situated, of the action required to remove the hazard to safety at such level crossing, and

(b) make a full report thereon to the governor in council for whatever action he may wish to take."

I should like the minister to study the possibility of accepting an amendment of this nature.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, at this point perhaps I might assure the hon. member who has just spoken that I will be very glad to give consideration to his amendment. I am afraid it will not be today, because even I, an eternal optimist, do not expect to reach clause 78 today, although I hope we will reach it tomorrow. I will consider it overnight to see what may be possible.

In the meantime may I say that I have given consideration to the suggested amendment that was tabled, although not moved, by the hon. member for Peace River and the suggestions made by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert. Of course I already have undertaken to accept the suggestion made by the hon. member for Acadia.

I have come to the conclusion that the easiest way to deal with this problem would be to have an amendment moved, if this meets with the general view, to remove present clause 1 altogether and replace it by a new clause. I think in this way it would be much easier for hon. members of the committee to follow, rather than attempt to make two or three amendments by substituting words here and there. The amendment I would ask one of my colleagues to propose, if it meets with the general approval of the committee, I think would incorporate the substance of what hon. gentlemen opposite had in mind in respect of the three points. Perhaps it is not necessary that I read the preamble which is to the effect that the bill be amended and so on. I might just read the part under clause 1, and if I did not have so much competition from some of my colleagues on this side of the house I might be able to make this a little clearer to those who are interested in it.

The new clause would be as follows:

1. It is hereby declared that an economic, efficient and adequate transportation system making the best use of all available modes of transportation at the lowest total cost is essential to protect the interests of the users of transportation and to maintain the economic well-being and growth of Canada, and that these objectives are most likely to be achieved when all modes of transport are able to compete under conditions ensuring that having due regard to national policy and to legal and constitutional requirements

(a) regulation of all modes of transport will not be of such a nature as to restrict the ability of any mode of transport to compete freely with any other modes of transport;

• (8:20 p.m.)

(b) each mode of transport, so far as practicable, bears a fair proportion of the real costs of the resources, facilities and services provided that mode of transport at public expense;

(c) each mode of transport, so far as practicable, receives compensation for the resources, facilities and services that it is required to provide as an imposed public duty;—

There is no change in that regard.

Paragraph (d) represents a substantial change and perhaps I should send a copy to the hon. member for Peace River, so that he can follow it. It states:

(d) each mode of transport so far as practicable carries traffic to or from any point in Canada under tolls and conditions that do not constitute

(i) an unfair disadvantage in respect of any such traffic beyond that disadvantage inherent in the location or volume of the traffic, the scale of operation connected therewith or the type of traffic or service involved, or

(ii) an undue obstacle to the interchange of commodities between points in Canada or unreasonable discouragement of the development of primary or secondary industries or of export trade in or from any region of Canada—

The rest is the same as before.

It will be apparent to every hon. member on the other side of the house that I, representing Bonavista-Twillingate, cannot accept the phrase "industry and agriculture" as it appears in the original amendment. Everyone must recognize that the fishing industry is as important as agriculture and a much older industry in Canada. In order to meet that point I have used the expression "primary and secondary industry". This will convey the same impression and include all primary industry.

I think I—or perhaps I should say the draftsman on my behalf—have pretty well covered the second part of the hon. gentleman's amendment. He will note that the first part of his amendment is pretty much in the same language as clause 16. In this regard there are two advantages to my amendment. It makes it very clear that the commission in determining "public interest", must take this point into account so that anyone seeking to establish a prima facie case does not have to prove it, but merely allege it. I think this meets the point raised by the hon. member before Christmas.

I believe this amendment incorporates what the hon. member for Acadia had in mind, and certainly the substance of what the hon. member for Saint John-Albert suggested. I believe it also does what the hon. member for Peace River sought to do in spirit and intent by his amendment.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, in so far as I am concerned I think subparagraph (ii) of paragraph (d) suggested by the minister meets the principle I had in mind. When we come to a consideration of this matter perhaps we will see what has happened in respect of clause 16. It would be very simple to remove any obstacle so far as public interest is concerned in respect of clause 1. I think this subparagraph will give a direction to the commission to bear these things in mind when they adjudicate or make orders and directions. Under those circumstances I am prepared to withdraw the amendment which now rests in purgatory.

Amendment (Mr. Baldwin) withdrawn.

Mr. Pickersgill: Under the circumstances, Mr. Chairman, it might be convenient to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs to move this amendment, so it will be before the committee.

Mr. Teillet: I so move.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Is it understood by the committee that the hon. member for Peace River has withdrawn his amendment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I expect to have French copies in a very few moments.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I rise to say a few words at this time regarding this bill in respect of a transportation policy in this country. Surely nothing more important has come before parliament in the past or will come before it in the future than this question of which the committee is now seized. We on this side of the house consider a transportation policy as a national policy. It has been the historic stand of the opposition over the years that a transportation policy is of prime importance. This attitude has developed from the concept expressed by Sir John A. Macdonald and his ministry, which brought about the unity of the provinces in this nation from coast to coast. Although in this year we are faced with a much more complex situation than existed in the past we still have substantially the same challenge before us which faced those pioneers who tried to build a great nation north of the 49th parallel.

It was particularly interesting to me to listen to the lip service given to the benefits which might accrue from competition, but those benefits cannot be used to gloss over the fact that for many years in many places the transportation services now in existence or likely to emerge will represent little more than a monopoly to the people in industry in those areas. A domestic air policy for light aircraft is one of compelling and vital importance today. This is worthy of more consideration than parliament has given it in the past. It is also worthy of consideration from the standpoint of the ultimate development of the manufacture of light aircraft in Canada.

When I listened to the compliments extended to the Minister of Transport I could not help but remember the stand he has taken in a personal way and as a front bench representative regarding suggestions brought forward in years past for the development of this nation. I make reference to this fact because I believe those who will be responsible for administering this act must in the future be concerned with this integral part of national policy. Great areas of this country must be developed, and it is useful to establish guiding principles for those who must administer this act. We must give them direction in the establishment of incentives which will encourage that development and raise the standard of living to a level which will attract to this country the new people so vitally necessary at this time in our history.

I cannot help but think of the Pine Point railway and the attitude taken by hon. members who now serve in this government, and particularly the minister when he sat on this side of the house, as the government of that time sought to lay the foundations for a development that had not taken place in the past. I can only hope that when this bill is passed, its final terms will be such as to encourage development in those many areas of Canada that still require development, and may require it for a number of years in the future.

I think of the potash development in the province of Saskatchewan. I believe that the railways today are in a position to take care of that development. But when I think of the potential iron ore developments in the northern part of the province of Saskatchewan, I cannot help but think of the need for transportation in this regard. This also applies to the other minerals that we believe exist—and there is evidence that they do exist—in those northern areas. There will have to be much more of a pioneering spirit on the part of our railways and other transportation facilities than we have had in the past if this development is to proceed in an orderly and worthwhile way, in keeping with the concepts of this modern day and age.

Looking at transportation policy for Canada, I believe we cannot fail to give consideration to the potential posed by the Hudson Bay system, which generally speaking has been stalemated or at a standstill for so many years. In this connection I believe the provinces as well as the federal government will have to provide some incentives. Perhaps this is the time to suggest it, but I believe some of the provinces will have to provide assistance for warehousing facilities in order that there will be a two-way trade over those routes. This is one solution that might change the picture in some regard.

A while ago in this debate the minister referred to the vision. He did not really make the usual references that he makes when he talks about the vision, as it has been promoted from this side of the house. I believe that those who are responsible for transportation policy in this country must have a great deal of vision if we are to reach the development that our country deserves, and can achieve if we will it so.

If this bill can remove the discrimination that has existed between one portion of the country and another, and one station and another, sometimes within the same province or between neighbouring provinces, it will have removed some of the conditions that in years gone by have subjected our transportation systems to a great deal of criticism. The more I think of the references to competition in this field, the more I think of the railway systems in this country. As I see the situation, they have almost entirely failed—I refer not only to the national railway system but to the other railway system—to live up to the problems associated with those areas of our country which have a great potential for development. I emphasize and repeat that this is one of the cornerstones of a sound transportation policy as part of the national policy of this country.

That of course raises the whole problem of whether there can or should be subsidies to the transportation facilities that are provided, whether they are of rail, air or ocean. Looking back at the history of this country and considering our geography and the undeveloped areas that we still have, I cannot see how in 1967 and in the decade or two ahead we can proceed with the implementation of a national transportation policy that will not have somewhere within its structure those subsidies necessary to provide an equal opportunity to people in all sections of our country, and at the same time provide for the development of those areas that are so vital to the future if this nation is to achieve its real potential.

There will be other opportunities to deal with clauses of the bill as they come forward. I do not intend to make any further remarks at this time in regard to the general objectives that I believe we should be trying to achieve under a national transportation policy. But before I close, Mr. Chairman, I cannot help but say a word or two about rail line abandonment and the alternatives that perhaps should be given consideration. I think people across this country, and even those in areas which may face a problem of rail line abandonment, realize that uneconomic lines cost something to those who ship products, as well as to the other taxpayers of this country. But let us consider the situation in western Canada, where the Crowsnest pass rates were almost, and I believe were, a part of confederation itself—I see the parliamentary secretary shaking his head. I have always understood that the Liberal party was first and foremost in holding forth and promoting the idea that the Crowsnest pass rates should always remain inviolate; that they were one of the guarantees to those who live on the prairies, and that they now form, if not a written part of the constitution, indeed one of the unwritten parts which are even more vital than those which have been written in words in our constitution.

When we think of the effects of rail line abandonment in the communities concerned, I hope it will not be forgotten that other modes of transportation should be assured to those people so they will not suffer the personal cost and loss of their rights under the Crowsnest pass rates as they were originally guaranteed to those who went to settle in western Canada.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I have had only a quick glance at the amendment but with respect to the part in which I was interested I think it will go a long way toward satisfying the request that the Maritime Transportation Commission put forward.

Many hon. members may think that it is not necessary to play on words like this, but as we said before supper, when the commission begins its work it will refer to the directions regarding its objectives which are contained in this clause, and this is extremely important. I think that where there is any conflict between the objectives of the new transportation bill and the national policy objectives, by which the Canadian government can deal with the disparities in the rates in different regions, this amendment will have gone a long way toward resolving this conflict. Also this applies not only to the maritime freight rates but it might apply also to the seaway tolls and the Crowsnest pass rates. So that the statement of the protection contained in the amendment regarding national policy will make those in the maritimes who are concerned a lot happier.

The part mentioned by the hon. member for Peace River is good, I think, and his action in bringing it forward is worthy of commendation. I think this should be noted. Also we should keep in mind the flexibility of the government which has gone this far with regard to the amendment. I like the new phrasing which allows for the trading of commodities between the different regions, with particular mention of the export trade which is of concern to the eastern parts of Canada. It seems to me, after a quick perusal, to fulfil the objectives that I at least had in mind.

Mr. Korchinski: I have a few remarks which I should like to address to the Minister of Transport on this occasion. They are of a rather general nature and cannot be dealt with under any particular clause of the bill and therefore perhaps should be considered as an over-all comment.

The minister has been very co-operative up to now. He has paid far more attention to the suggestions which have been put forward than have any other ministers charged with the responsibility of piloting a bill. I think this should be drawn to the attention of the house. However, even though he may be paying attention to those suggestions this does not necessarily mean that he intends to do anything about them. I hope he will give more consideration to the west than just to say that the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who comes from the west, seconds the bill. This seems to be all the consideration the minister gives to the western provinces.

The bill before us is very complicated and far reaching. This being the centennial year of Confederation, this bill will perhaps affect people a hundred years from now. I think that the majority of the members of this house are not fully aware of its ramifications. Neither is the minister himself nor the people in the department. I do not think that the extent to which the bill will affect the lives of people in the future is fully realized.

One thing certain is that those people who are protesting vociferously at present will be affected immediately. One of our greatest concerns in the west is the fact that in the past we have been the ones who have been burdened with the payment of the bill of any transportation policy of the government. Whenever the railways have come around to settling their disputes, regardless of whether it concerns wages or the payment of interest on the capitalization of any of their projects, because of the fact that we in the west are further away from the markets than other parts of Canada we have had to contribute a larger per capita share of the costs than have the other more populated regions of the country. If we were in the position of having a greater proportion of the population in the west we would not be so vociferous but the policy under the bill does not contribute to the increase of industries in the west.

I can well remember the time when the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam was the premier of Saskatchewan. On many occasions he trotted out the old Prince Albert pulp mill deal. This was offered to the people at every election. This particular deal was offered as a political bribe and incentive to the people. We thought it was a very good idea, regardless of whether we accepted it or not. Even now the present premier of Saskatchewan has gone so far as to assign to a firm the responsibility of conducting a survey or study of the potentials in the northern area. We know where are the markets for wood and pulp but we do not know how to get around the transportation problem. Has the minister dealt with this problem under the bill now before us? I would suggest that the bill does not offer solutions. The premier of Saskatchewan will not be any happier on the day we pass the bill than he was on the day when he first commissioned that survey, because nothing in the bill will lead anybody to think that there is a possibility of cheaper transportation. We know where the wood is to be found and we know there will be a potential market in the United States but what are we to do to get the people working in this area? Prince Albert has always been suggested as the proper place for the pulp mill. The sum of $60 million should be put into a pulp mill, but what does this bill do for this type of industry?

We already have legislation which is supposed to help the needy areas which the government is going out of its way to assist. And yet nothing is being done about the legislation which we suggest to the people is necessary to overcome the weaknesses in our economy.

When I suggest that transportation is one of the great problems I am referring to the fact that it does not solve our unemployment. Part of the problem is that people are simply moving out of Saskatchewan. We have been trained that way ever since the days when the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam was the premier of that province. We simply left this area to go to places where employment was more available, namely in eastern Canada. If eastern Canada is to get the benefit of this legislation, then I suggest that somewhere along the line we have been misinformed. I am not suggesting that subsidies are necessarily the wrong solution. After all, during all the time that I have been in the house I have been hearing of the sacred cow, the C.B.C., receiving $100 million; but the same cannot be granted to the C.N.R. or the C.P.R. or any other transport facility.

I would like to see the people in my area employed to the fullest possible extent, and I would like to see my own people work in my own area because this is in the best interests of the country. Despite the very clever drafting of this bill it accomplishes nothing. A suggestion has been made by the hon. member for Acadia for the inclusion of the word "adequate". The minister has been very cooperative. He said he even agreed. I wish he would agree to it to the point of introducing it in the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for St. Boniface, the Minister of Veterans Affairs—and I emphasize St. Boniface to show that we are not forgetting the west—has already introduced an amendment incorporating that suggestion. He did this a few minutes ago.

Mr. Korchinski: All I can say is that I wonder why this has not been done before, and why this was not realized sooner, after all the committee meetings that were held. Perhaps the minister thought he could get away with the bill as presented to us. Is this entirely a railway bill or is it a bill for the people of Canada? What have we in mind? Have we in mind the fact that the railways have to show a profit, or have we in mind the fact that legislation should be for the benefit of the people of Canada? What have we in mind? Surely when the government talks about an over-all transport policy they must have in mind something that will benefit the people. This is the purpose in passing legislation. At least my interpretation of the role of every member here is to serve the people of this country, and not to serve the railways of this country.

I am suggesting again that perhaps if the minister had introduced this statement in the first place, then we would not have had to go through all this speechmaking in order to understand exactly what is being done. I do not know whether it is to the advantage of the minister to introduce this program in bits and pieces; I do not know what his reasons really are for doing it in this way. For example, after listening to those speeches which were made before Christmas, and after having his departmental officials digest them, if the minister had said, yes, we will accept these suggestions, then that would have cut down this debate. He says it would not, so I am going to continue.

This is called a transport bill, but I am suggesting it is a railway bill and that is the way it should be labelled. We talk about air transport. One commission is to be established with jurisdiction over all modes of transport. However, what we are dealing with here really is railway needs. Nobody is concerned about Air Canada not making a profit. Nobody is talking about that. What we are talking about is how to get the railways out of the red. If this is a transport bill, as has been suggested, there has been no mention made of the need of this country for roads. There has been no mention of what the government intends to do about the roads-to-resources program. There has been no suggestion what the government intends to do about providing alternative transport in cases where railway lines are abandoned. Will they assist the provinces? Will they approach the provinces in a meeting and say: Look, we have not got a policy and we cannot interfere with provincial jurisdiction, but we know if this railway line is abandoned some other means of transportation will have to be found. Is the government doing that? They are doing nothing. This pulp mill to which I referred is not going to be served. This lumber, potash, fish, or whatever you may have to bring out of these areas that are still not developed, is not going to be moved by the provisions of this so-called transport bill. The bill does nothing for the development of this country.

All this bill does is to set up a commission which is to be judge and jury; it is to be a court of record, as they say. The commission will be charged with the responsibility of getting all the information, and from whom will they get it? They will get it from the railways. If the railways suggest a certain branch line should be abandoned, they will feed information to the transport commission. The transport commission will ask, does it sound right?

How can the commission really make a finding when nobody contests these things? Nobody will be in a position to really contest these cases. Will there be anybody with the authority to challenge the railways to give all the figures? The transport committee of this house has never been provided with full information.

As a member of parliament I thought we should do whatever is necessary, be sworn to secrecy if necessary, in order to get all the information before the committee so the committee could decide for itself the value of this transport policy. Instead of that, what happened? The committee was denied information. How can the committee suggest a policy for the government when even the government itself shies away from mentioning these facts in the house? I do not think I took any oath of secrecy here to the effect that I was not to divulge any information. If the government wishes that type of ceremony, then I suppose it could be arranged. Then, a committee could be set up and sworn to secrecy, and that committee could be provided with this type of information.

We know for example which branch lines will be subject to abandonment in the next few years, and we know which lines have been frozen. Why could not this committee be set up to challenge the right of the railways to abandon these lines? I do not know where the lines are. So far as I know, the railway lines in my area are not the subject of abandonment proceedings. I am afraid that one day, after this legislation is on the statute books, all uneconomic lines will disappear and all the people served by those lines will be asked to move out. Why will this be done? It will be done because someone in the higher echelons of government, if you like, will have suggested that Saskatchewan is the wrong place in which to live. Suggestions have been made in the past that the people should move out of the maritimes.

This is not the right approach to a transportation policy for Canada. Let us face it, this is not a transportation policy for western Canada nor is it a transportation policy for eastern Canada. This may be a transportation policy for the people of Toronto. I have not heard too much objection from the Toronto area. This policy may be ideal for them, because they are right on the waterfront and have ships coming in to move their goods. Who is going to pay for all the combines that may be going out? There is only one person who is going to pay for them, and that is the westerner. Why must they be transported into one area, and then transported back?

Then there is the question of what is going to be done about the Crowsnest pass agreement. Never before has there been a suggestion contained in legislation that we study the Crowsnest pass agreement. We all remember that in 1961 there were rail lines that did not pay for themselves, and the minister knows it. These lines did not pay for themselves for several years because trade was being held back. What happened? The railways could very easily prove that they were losing money. This has been the talk of the railways: We are losing money on the shipment of grain. Why do we not hear that talk today? Obviously they are making money on the shipment of grain.

I can show the minister several years in succession in which the railways made money, yet the railways only have to produce one year in which they lost money and they say: We will abandon the line. Then everybody has to struggle, without any assistance from the government, to fight the government transportation commission. The railways, organized as they are, have all the facilities at their disposal, and have all the figures that they are going to use. We have to try to disprove those figures. What chance have we got? We do not have very much chance. Yet the minister tells us that this is a transport bill for Canada, that this is going to be good for us, and that this is what we have been waiting for.

As a matter of fact, we are told the bill must be passed before a certain time because the railways must have it, or else. The railway representatives came before parliament and told parliament to get this transportation bill through. They said the workers were demanding higher wages, and the railways could not pay them. Of course they were; that is common practice nowadays. After all, every other union is doing the same thing. Perhaps these higher wages were deserved; I am not trying to compare one union with another. But the fact is that the railways told parliament to get this bill passed because the legislation was preventing them from dealing with their workers.

That is nonsense, Mr. Chairman. I listened to what the president of the C.N.R. had to say and he impressed upon us exactly what was necessary. In effect, the railways were holding the big stick before the government and were expecting parliament to rush this bill through. The bill was faulty in many respects, and I have mentioned only a few of its weaknesses.

This bill will not do anything for the province of Saskatchewan. I wish the premier of that province had made the presentation of that province before the committee, but unfortunately he was away somewhere else in the beautiful Beechcraft plane he uses for his personal use. Had he appeared before the committee he could have told us how necessary it was to have a new air lines policy, or whatever is necessary.

You would have thought the province would have protested against this bill, because they are unable to put their pulp mill in Prince Albert into service. The bill offers no assistance in this regard. The government of Saskatchewan are in the same position as the former government of the province; they are unable to shift for themselves or to take advantage of companies willing to put up money. We talk of investment in Canada, Mr. Chairman, but Saskatchewan is just waiting for investment of this sort.

The minister is quit familiar with the port of Churchill, but we do not make sufficient use of the railway which was built to that port. For years the port has been shunned. Now that a few facilities have been built at that port the government are still able to find excuses for not using it to full capacity and for shipping out of Hudson Bay. Here we have a small town, every resident of which is willing to do everything in his power to attract industry. Yet they are struggling and are hoping that the province of Saskatchewan, the federal government and the railways will take them seriously. These are serious minded people and they want the railways to carry shipments from the prairies to that port. They have two mills operating there, but apparently the railways do not want their business. The government tells the people of Churchill that they are situated in the wrong area. It admits it is one of the have-not areas and that a little assistance is required, but they get it in dribbles. The government knows they are there if needed.

I have made mention of the lumber industry, but also in this area are silicon deposits which could be utilized by the mining industry. If the government would provide some assistance we would be able to develop industry in this area. Yet what does this bill do? It makes darned sure that the railway gets their share, and industry is told that if it is in the right place at the right time and shines up in the right way it will get some consideration also.

Some of the other comments I wanted to make may take a little more time, Mr. Chairman, so perhaps I can reserve them until we reach the appropriate clauses. But I wish the minister would give some consideration as to how this pulp mill I have mentioned might derive some benefit from this bill. Would he give me some indication what he proposes to do, and why it is necessary that this Crowsnest pass agreement must be very carefully checked. What is to happen after the three years expire? Is that to be the end of it, or will we continue the process until one year we find that it is not a paying proposition? We all remember 1961, though we have had better years since then, but is the present practice going to continue?

Could the minister also tell me why it is not possible to set up a permanent secretariat or, as has been suggested, to have a committee of the house oversee the functions of the transport commission? Surely that commission must listen to the views of the railways to a certain extent; but there must be a double check on the commission, which will undoubtedly try to find an excuse to allow the railways to get away with certain things. This would not be the case with proper supervision.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, it is with disappointment that I speak tonight on this transportation bill, because I wish the minister had accepted the sincere invitation I extended to him some months ago to take a trip east to find out how the people in my area are served with transporation. Had he done so I am sure that tonight he might have been able to provide some favourable answers to meet the problems we have been facing over a period of years.

It is probably repetitious to say that this long awaited legislation is welcome. For a number of years there has been much confusion in the transportation policies of this country, in the sense that there has been a multiplication of work in the absence of any clear direction our transportation policy should follow. Often additional expense was caused, not to the government but to the one who always pays, the consumer.

I realize that this legislation will bring under one board the matter of transportation policy and the provision of assistance to transportation in Canada. I am sure that the amendment which has just been moved by the Minister of Veterans Affairs will reflect the principles which should be inherent in a national transportation policy. I also hope it will serve to satisfy all regions of the economy which depend on transportation, and more importantly will recognize the regional problems of transportation.

I am sure that were we all to live within the golden mile of Canada we would not have too many transportation problems; that there would be sufficient room for all to operate; that competition would be good and that there would also be a satisfactory cost factor as far as the consuming public were concerned. This has been impossible. We shall never have a good national transportation policy unless we take into account those regional problems evident throughout the country.

I heard the hon. member for Mackenzie appealing strongly to the minister for ways and means to be found to increase productivity in the hon. member's province. The hon. member worried also about the increase of population in his province. The problems of our region are similar. Instead of worrying about the increase in population, our people are concerned with being able to live at the same standard as is enjoyed by people in other areas of this land. I am not denigrating this government in particular, but it seems that most governments forget the regional problems of the country. We are preoccupied with urban areas, with highly industrialized areas, and we forget about those hundreds of thousands of people living in the remote areas of this country—those people not living in the heavily populated, industrialized areas.

It is unfortunate that in 1967, in this country, we still have those problems which have been caused by the lack of cohesion between departments of government. There is no cooperation between departments. One department does not understand the problems of another. Although deputy ministers of different departments consult one another, making themselves aware of problems in other departments, it seems evident that what they do is not enough. For example, I can suggest a recent development in the department of the Postmaster General. I am sure the Minister of Transport is not aware of it. This development will deprive the Canadian National of much revenue, having to do with deliveries of mail to various parts of Canada. The mail, with this development, will be delivered a few hours earlier in most parts than is possible now. Had the Postmaster General's department and the Department of Transport consulted one another I am sure that the Canadian National would have found ways and means of delivering mail with the same speed as it is anticipated the mail will be delivered following the development in the department of the Postmaster General. Instead, what happens? We deprive the Canadian National of revenue and we pay out of the federal treasury more money for the transportation of mail.

We waste the Canadian taxpayers' money because we have not taken the time to understand problems, to try to work out some way to provide the service envisaged and save untold dollars. We cannot deprive the Canadian National of all its income and then expect it to give that service we claim from it. This is one instance where we have been small, where we have been negligent. The Prime Minister said that we have looked after the social justice measures in this country. From now on I hope we shall look after those living outside the large areas, those living in the remote areas, and that they also will be considered part of our affluent society.

I can show the minister another instance where possibly we have been negligent with our taxpayers' money. I think of wharf construction, where we have built wharfs which to this date will never be of benefit to the people of this country. We have subsidized their construction, but those subsidies do not help consumers and do not reduce the prices of products brought to their homes.

For this reason I ask that instead of a committee of the house supervising the policy of the Department of Transport we make use of one of our ministers without portfolio. He could co-ordinate the activities of various departments. Such a minister could go into the problems existing between any two departments of government. He could bring his knowledge to bear for the benefit of our Canadian public.

I can also think of the policy this government has of meddling in provincial affairs, of building highways in provinces where we have no business building highways, outside of the Trans-Canada agreement.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to seem to pick on the hon. gentleman but I have been very patient indeed in listening to speeches that quite often do not seem to be relevant to any part of my bill. But when we start talking about things which have nothing to do even with my department, much less with the bill before the house, it seems to me it is going a little beyond the scope of the rules of this house. We have had now two or three days of general speeches on clause 1. I wonder if it would not be possible in the course of speeches to glance at the clause once in a while.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, I sincerely believe that everything I have said has dealt with transportation policy in this country. I have not gone outside the bill as presented. I am suggesting that there should be co-operation and co-ordination between departments to better the national transportation policy of this country.

I am deeply concerned about the manufacturing industries of the remote areas of the country. As the minister knows, the costs of production of industries in remote areas are high when compared with urban costs of production. For the products of remote industries to be marketable and competitive, those products must be moved quickly and cheaply to the market. I am sure the minister is also aware that industries in the remote areas require secondary products to be brought in, to help in the manufacturing process.

This all involves additional expense and it is my contention that if we do not enable all these areas to enjoy the form of transportation which will help make their products competitive, then our national transportation policy has failed. There will be no prosperous Canada until these regional problems are solved. I think now in terms of air transportation, and I ask the minister whether he will consider the request which was made by the chamber of commerce in the town of Gaspé to extend the length of the present airfield there to 7,000 feet. As the minister knows, this area is far removed from the large population centres of eastern Canada, though the presence of a manufacturing industry, a mining industry and a paper industry in addition to the fishing industry makes it important that our people should have adequate means of travel at their disposal—a transportation system which would allow them to move fast and as often as desired. In order to make this possible it is necessary to provide airstrips which can operate in conjunction with a regional airfield. I hope action can be taken in this direction in the near future; I understand that some applications have been pending before the Air Transport Board for as long as a year and a half without decisions being reached. The people who are suffering most in this connection are those who are waiting. I hope a decision will be taken in the very near future to determine which carriers shall operate out of the region.

I am also disturbed about the fight continually taking place between the truckers of this country and the railways which operate trucking systems. It seems to me there is some ill will on both sides; I hope that they can make a pact which would prove beneficial to consumers, based on an arrangement whereby products will be brought into an area by rail and distributed by trucks. The piggyback system appears to be one which would help consumers in remote areas to get the benefit of cheap and efficient transportation. I cannot understand why the efforts of both sides could not be directed toward ensuring the cheapest form of transportation to those who live away from the more populous centres.

When I consider that in the lower St. Lawrence region 80 per cent of the products imported are brought in by rail, I also take account of the fact that in one large area some 150 square miles in extent, there is no railroad at all. The people who live in this area are obliged to pay an excessive price for transportation—as much as two or three dollars per unit for products which may cost only two dollars a unit. This is most unfair. Surely there is some means by which the national carrier could take the products as close as possible to the consumer, after which the truckers by land carriers, could distribute them. Surely some reasonable system of distribution could be worked out, even if it involved some subsidization.

Often in this house I have asked the minister questions in connection with railway passenger service, especially that between Matapédia and Gaspé. I have invited the hon. gentleman to visit this area but he has not accepted my invitation. I have spoken to him about the cold buns. I have spoken to him about rail journeys lasting 24 hours without food. I have spoken to him about the toasters which he should have asked the C.N.R. to provide on their trains. Unfortunately I have not received an affirmative reply on any of these matters.

It is true the service has improved of late, but it still does not reach the standard which I think is appropriate. We have white table cloths, now, and we have serviettes of which we were deprived a year ago. When food is available, the quality is improved. However, people have recently been obliged to travel for 36 hours without having even a sandwich to eat. In this year 1967 it is ridiculous to ask people to stay on trains for 36 hours without even a cup of coffee or a sandwich to refresh them.

This happened on three or four occasions during the Christmas holidays. It was not the result of snowstorms. It was brought about directly through the negligence of the C.N.R., when it came to providing favourable service for 200,000 people. Even though the minister sits there laughing I hope he does not one day undertake that trip because I will see to it that he does not get a sandwich, and he will know what it feels like when he arrives at the other end. It is time we took notice of what is going on in some of these other areas of Canada. These people have been patient. They have waited for years. The minister is still laughing, but the people of these areas where the service is so poor will realize that his policy will do nothing to satisfy them.

We have asked for an interview with the minister so that we might explain some of these things but as yet we have never been able to get a favourable reply.

Mr. Pickersgill: I really think the hon. gentleman is allowing his eloquence to run away with his accuracy. I have no recollection of any requests which the hon. gentleman has made to me for an interview to which I did not accede.

Mr. Keays: I think the minister is correct. I did not make the request, but I have been informed that such a request was made by a member of this house and I have been informed by him that the minister did not find it possible to grant an interview.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the hon. gentleman makes general accusations of that kind it might be a good idea for him to check his source of information, because I know of no occasion when I have refused to see anyone who had any reasonable representations to make to me. It sometimes happens, of course, that even I am busy and cannot arrange these things at a time which suits others. But I always do try to make time available when I can. Only recently I received a large delegation from the hon. member's region and spent the best part of an hour with them discussing an important transport problem. I assure the hon. member there is no one in any part of his district to whose representations I would not be happy to listen.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, if I have been carried away to the extent that I have made some statements which the minister considers irresponsible, then I feel very sorry about this. I am however, taking the word of another member of this house, and I have reason to believe those words are reliable. In any event if the minister is disposed to listen to representations from our area, then I trust he will be able to intercede for those people on whose behalf I speak, so that they will be able to have the rail service which they request and will be able to benefit from the same travel advantages which exist between Halifax and Montreal and will be considered Canadians the same as everyone else in this country.

I should also like to ask that the freight service be improved, because our manufacturers and those engaged in private enterprise should not be the ones who always have to take the blow. It is time that we began to think of our manufacturers, so that in relating the taxes they pay to the profits they make they will be able to contribute to social benefits without increased taxation.

I should like also to request that the express service, which we had for 35 years and which now has been removed, be reinstated. Twenty five or 30 years ago we had a 24-hour express service from Montreal. Today it is 48 hours. When an industry is located away from the supply centres and has to wait an additional 24 hours for products I am sure it suffers from increased costs, and a decrease in the end result, which is the profit. For all these reasons I hope the government will consider seriously the problems which exist in all the outer or remote regions of Canada, and give to these areas the same transportation facilities enjoyed by others, so that they will have a system whereby their cost of transportation will compare favourably with that of others who live in the more concentrated areas. In this way these people might at least begin to believe that they belong to this great land of ours.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I think it is a matter of regret that the minister has seen fit to take an unorthodox approach in the drafting of this bill, or in incorporating in the bill a statement that really amounts to a judgment of its value. The wording of clause 1 of bill C-231 is not the kind which one normally would expect to find in the body proper of a piece of legislation. Clearly it is in the nature of a preamble, containing within itself all sorts of value judgments and premises which are highly questionable, and which have the effect of making the debate on clause 1 of this bill virtually open-ended.

Clause 1 refers to competition as the most salutary or most effective basis for a national transportation policy. That kind of assumption certainly is the kind which I for one challenge, and which a good many members on this side of the house, not only in this group but also in the group to my right, challenge. At least some of them have led me to that impression. I know that some hon. members have taken the opportunity to tell the minister that they agree philosophically with the premise that competition ought to be the basis for a national transportation policy, but other members have taken the position, much as I have, that the national economic needs are such that we ought to regard transportation services as more in the nature of a public utility. If one proceeds from that starting point, then he is led logically to the conclusion that we must continue to put considerable emphasis on regulation.

We really do not know what evidence the minister has which prompts him to postulate in the bill that competition shall be the effective basis of a new transportation policy. I certainly do not believe the minister would wish to get up and say he is convinced that today there is a possibility of sufficient price competition within the various transportation modes, such as would serve to protect the interests of the users of the transportation services. On an earlier occasion, before the Christmas recess, I took the time of the house to put my views on record, and I do not wish to abuse my privileges and rights here by repeating many of them. I do wish however to make some reference to the amendment to clause 1 which the minister offered this evening, copies of which were circulated to members on this side. In some respects I believe it can be said that the amending version is an improvement, but this is only in minor respects. In major respects there is a restating of the preambular wording or premise which I said was objectionable—that is, that an economic, efficient and adequate transportation system is most likely to be achieved when all modes of transport are able to compete under conditions ensuring certain things. And then the minister added the qualifier, "having due regard to national policy and to legal and constitutional requirements".

Were I in the position of the person drafting this legislation I would prefer, rather than use the words "able to compete", to rely on the words "co-ordination of transportation services" as being the most likely way in which to protect the interests of the users of transportation and the national interest. I really do not see why the minister should object to this suggested wording, because in clause 14 of the bill, which appears on page 6, the commission is charged with the responsibilities and functions of "co-ordinating and harmonizing the operations of all carriers engaged in transport by railways, water, aircraft, extra-provincial motor vehicle transport and commodity pipe lines". If the commission is to be so charged with the duty to co-ordinate and harmonize the various modes of transportation, then this would seem to show that we should postulate as the basis for a most desirable transportation policy that it should be based on the objective of having it co-ordinated and harmonized, rather than allow it to compete. We may not have been provided with sufficient evidence.

Let me say that the minister is being imprudent in relying upon competition as a basis for a good national transportation service in this country. His arguments in this regard are more of a barrage than based on reality. What are the realities in respect of competition in transportation systems in this country today? In large part I would say they are non-existent.

The amendment proposed by the minister to some extent accommodates the suggestion of the hon. member for Peace River who earlier today said that clause 1 should make provision for equalization of rates. The minister has been able to accommodate him on this point by the provisions of his amendment to clause 1 in paragraph (d) subparagraphs (i) and (ii). If one reads the wording of this amendment carefully he will find it contains not one but two or three loopholes which could very well have the effect of voiding the amendment.

Paragraph (d) states:

> each mode of transport so far as practicable carries traffic to or from any point in Canada under tolls and conditions that do not constitute—

Subparagraph (i) refers to an unfair disadvantage. That is one loophole. One finds in the last line of the first paragraph of the amendment to clause 1 the following phrase "having due regard to national policy and to legal and constitutional requirements". The amendment then states in paragraph (d);

> each mode of transport so far as practicable carries traffic to or from any point in Canada under tolls and conditions that do not constitute
> (i) an unfair disadvantage—

When one takes all these things into consideration he finds there are provisions, stipulations, conditions and exceptions to any equalization of rates. The first is that there shall be equalization of rates, provided there are no legal requirements to the contrary. The second is there shall be equalization, provided there are no constitutional requirements to the contrary. The third is there shall be equalization, provided the tolls and conditions are such as not to constitute an unfair disadvantage.

[Mr. Schreyer.]

I am wondering what actually will be accomplished by the insertion of paragraph (d) as worded in this amending version, because the way I read clauses 16 and 68 the same kind of provisions are contained. Perhaps it can be argued that no harm is done by repeating a provision two or three times, but if nothing is added or changed is it desirable to clutter up the wording or language of this proposed legislation? I hope the minister will take this into consideration.

Clause 1 makes reference to competition. Certain changes are proposed to make it clear that competition is being relied upon as an ancillary means of protecting the public interest and the national interest. It is true, as the hon. member for Mackenzie said earlier this evening, that the effect of this legislation will probably be felt for generations. It may well be that in time this will have an adverse effect on those regions of the country which are now being developed and which primarily depend on primary production and resources development. No matter how I read this bill I am forced to conclude that its effect will be detrimental to the production of natural resources and primary products in certain regions of the country.

It is my hope that the minister will consider removing from clause 1 what in my opinion is an unnecessary and ill-founded reference to competition which does not in reality exist. Before taking my place let me ask one question: Will the minister give favourable consideration to the request of the Manitoba Branch Lines Association that all applications for branch line abandonment be held in abeyance until the new legislation before us comes into effect, in order that all such applications will be dealt with under the provisions of clause 168? I know the minister is somewhat embarrassed by the assurances he gave which did not materialize, but no one is blaming him for what happened following those assurances. I understand that applications for abandonment are still being received and considered. Is it beyond the minister's ability to undertake that applications for abandonment now before the board will be held in abeyance and dealt with under the provisions of this new legislation? A straight yes or no answer in this connection would serve to clarify this situation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I could say a word about this at once. I may be misinformed but I understand that no new applications have been received from the prairies by the Board of Transport Commissioners. The board has received applications which, at the request of the government, have been frozen for years. The railways have agreed to withdraw all applications in respect of so-called protected lines as soon as this bill is passed. The Board of Transport Commissioners has also given me an undertaking that there will be no hearing in respect of any of these applications while this legislation is before parliament. I would prefer to wait until we reach the appropriate clauses of the bill before dealing with the question of procedure. At that time I may have one or two suggestions to make to the committee in this respect.

It is not possible to answer yes or no, because the hon. gentleman's question was not, I think, phrased in a way that would make such an answer possible. I would again emphasize that to the best of my knowledge no application has been made for years for any abandonment. All that has been done is that some steps have been taken, which I think might better not have been taken—and it may be partly my fault that they were taken—to activate some of these applications that have been pending for years. In fact, no hearings will be held while this legislation is before either house of parliament. When we come to the appropriate clause I would like, as I say, to deal further with the matter.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, just before we pass clause 1, and I am in full agreement with going ahead with it, would the minister say how he envisages the working of this clause with regard to the integration or the co-ordination of our modes of transportation? Does clause 1, paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) suggest that there be an integrating of the modes of transportation? The minister's remarks this afternoon led me to believe that this was not envisaged. Perhaps the minister could clear my mind on this particular point. With regard to air policy, I suggested this afternoon that I might move a further amendment. The minister spoke on that suggestion and convinced me that perhaps it would be rather difficult for him to accept my amendment at this time. Rather than put him in a difficult position, I decided not to move the amendment. However, Mr. Chairman, I should like clarification on the impression the minister left me with regard to our air policy.

This afternoon the minister said that some time ago when the previous government was in office they gave greater leeway to certain airlines to bring about a greater degree of competition in the air business generally. The minister said that he was not going to rescind that policy. I was led to believe that he was in favour of it, and was in favour of going one step further in the very near future, and giving perhaps, C.P.A. more landing rights across Canada. I do not know whether that is what the minister had in mind, but that is what I gathered from his remarks. If that is so, I see the fault in his announced policy. In other words, this bill will set up a national transportation policy and a Canadian Transport Commission, but it will not be a national transportation policy with regard to air services, whether it be concerned with the movement of passengers or freight.

I mentioned this afternoon that air freight will boom in the next 10 years, as Mr. Crump, the president of the C.P.R. said. The minister said this afternoon that he will announce from time to time further policy changes with regard to air transportation. Therefore, in a sense this bill may well be setting up a transportation policy but it will not go all the way, The minister is placing himself in the position wherein he will announce a piecemeal air policy. He led me to believe that he will go a step further in the very near future with regard to C.P.A. But what about the other airlines in Canada? What is their position? What about Trans-Air, which many people in Canada used during the air strike and found very helpful? What about Ward Air? What about Mallard Air, Nordair and others? What about the other transportation companies that are in the air business? Where do they stand in the competitive field? Are they big enough to bring political or economic pressure on this minister or succeeding ministers and say, "All right. You have to advance one step further in your air policy and also give us landing rights at X number of cities across Canada".

This bill does not change the Aeronautics Act; it is just a continuance of a piecemeal policy with regard to air transportation. It will not create more competition in the air transportation field or fulfil the hopes and dreams of those people who want to expand in that field. This bill leaves those people with a depressed feeling. They do not know whether they will be able to convince the Minister of Transport at this or any other time that they are big enough to warrant further expansion. They cannot apply to the Air Transport Board. They will be able to apply under this bill for a licence to land in such-and-such a place, but this does not mean they will be granted such a licence. Therefore they will not be able to expand their air freight business.

This bill does nothing to change the present air policy with regard to the expansion of freight movement. It is nothing more than a piecemeal, political policy and the Minister of Transport still has on his shoulders the responsibility of expanding this movement from time to time as he sees fit. That is the impression the minister has given me, and I would like to be corrected if I am wrong. I had hoped that in setting up a national transportation policy and a Canadian Transport Commission to cover all modes of transportation, the commission would be the ruling body with regard to modes of transportation. However, the minister stated this afternoon that he hopes to be able to announce in the very near future further steps in connection with such a movement. I envisage this to be the granting to C.P.A. of further landing rights. Would the minister comment on what he envisages with regard to the integrating and co-ordinating of our modes of transportation? I should like him to correct me if I am wrong, but I believe this is a piecemeal air policy and this bill will do nothing to expand our nationwide transportation policy, which takes in the whole scope of air movement.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think that perhaps in two minutes I can deal with this question, not in a full but a summary manner. In the middle of 1964, I think it was, after I had been minister for several months, I announced three general principles that were to be applied to air policy; one relating to services outside Canada, one relating to regional carriers, and one relating to what I might call main line, transcontinental transportation. Since that time I have laid down the general guide lines for the services outside Canada, the worldwide services, the international services of the two air lines after agreement had been reached between the two of them on the division of those worldwide services. It is under that policy that the Air Transport Board is now operating, as far as international services are concerned, and it seems to be operating very satisfactorily both from the point of view of the airlines and the public.

Last October I announced a regional carrier policy just before I went out to Vancouver to the meeting of the Air Transport Association. I must say that I was deeply gratified to find that the regional carriers seemed to feel that this policy would enable them to develop in a way in which they have not been able to develop until now. Up to now I have had nothing but expressions of satisfaction from the regional carriers and from the regions in which the regional carriers operate. All I did was to lay down the guide lines which the Air Transport Board will follow and which the commission, if this bill passes, will also follow.

It is true that I have not yet completed the third phase, that is to lay down guide lines for the Air Transport Board with respect to the main line transcontinental service. The main reason that I have not done so—I confess it quite frankly—is that I have been trying very hard to get this legislation through. This is another important subject which I have to discuss with my colleagues and it is just not possible to do everything at once. However, I hope that quite soon after this legislation is completed in the house I will be able to do that and to announce it in the house. We will then have laid down the national air policy in all these three fields, along the lines of the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, and the commission will be expected to operate within the limits of that national policy. I think it will be found that the two aspects with which we have already dealt have given real satisfaction, and I hope the third one will also.

As to integration I think, the main reason for having one commission to deal with all forms of transport is to see that in those areas where competition itself is not an effective regulator we will not be spending money subsidizing two kinds of service when one would do the job, that when it is a question of providing a service of the kind suggested by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, such as developmental services or services in areas where there is a monopoly or a quasi-monopoly, that we will provide, whether or not it requires public funds to help to provide the best kind of service, one that will meet the needs of the community best at the lowest cost.

It seems to me that the hon. gentleman's suggestion that the service must be adequate—which I have included in this amendment—does complete the three descriptions. Economic, efficient and adequate is much better than just economic and efficient, because the latter did perhaps suggest a rather scrimping attitude before the hon. member made his suggestion. I think that where you can get competition and where it does work effectively it is not desirable to have a whole lot of regulations. Here I cannot be expected to agree entirely with the hon. member for Springfield because I think we start from a different ideological base. However, I do think that where there is no competition and services are essential it is important to have a body which can regulate efficiently to ensure an adequate service, to see that it is economic and, as far as possible, efficient. In that sense both integration and co-ordination are the objectives of the bill in which clause 1, as it is proposed now to be amended will give guidance to the commission. I hope, therefore, that the committee will see fit to accept the amendment and the amended clause.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I should like to call it ten o'clock, so that I may study what the minister really means by integration. I leave this question with him: Will we not then be putting the transport commission into the same trouble the Interstate Commerce Commission in the United States got, as outlined so clearly by Dr. Bandeen when he appeared before the committee?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am going to make the suggestion to the committee that we carry clause 1 because there are clauses related to the commission, and this subject can be thoroughly threshed out and would be quite relevant to those clauses. This would give the impression that we were making a little progress with the bill. If it would be agreeable to the hon. gentleman, he could reserve what he has to say about that until we come to the clauses setting up the commission and his remarks would then be relevant at that stage.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I have only one comment to make. The minister is suggesting that we pass clause 1 and that we debate this particular subject on another clause. In previous speeches I have made I have limited my remarks on integration and co-ordination to clause 1, because I think that is the only clause on which we can discuss the subject. If the minister is suggesting that I deal with the matter on some other clause, then I warn him that he is suggesting we have a wide open debate on some other clause. I would rather deal with the matter on clause 1. I may be only three minutes tomorrow, after studying his remarks, or I may accept his statements. If the minister so desires, I will agree to passing clause 1 because he has promised I may deal with these questions of integration and co-ordination under another clause. I have suggested the subject falls under clause 1.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would agree to that. I think the remarks would be particularly appropriate under the clause setting up the commission.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): We have two or three speakers who have remarks to make on clause 1. I do not believe they will be lengthy. We want to be co-operative because there has been flexibility and co-operation.

Having said that, I think we should recognize that many of these matters come under different parts of the bill, and some of them have been discussed on the first clause. For example the subject of abandonment has been discussed. Some members have said they want to speak on that, but without opening up all aspects of this big subject. I think when we get to the abandonment section—I believe it is section 314—a debate should be permitted.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that would be well within the rules. We all know there is a tendency at ten o'clock for someone to say he will only talk for three minutes. If we start another day, we very often find the debate takes the whole day. We have had quite a number of days of debate on clause 1. If hon. gentlemen opposite would agree to deal with these subjects later, I do not believe any hon. member would be unduly restricted. I would crave the indulgence of the committee in this matter.

Mr. Knowles: Could we not agree that clause 1 stand and then clause 2, since it is the title, would have to stand as well? We could then deal with clause 3 tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely the hon. gentleman is giving a remarkable interpretation of the rules when he suggests that we should have two more general debates at the end of the committee's proceedings. I do not believe clause 2 should stand if clause 1 stands.

Mr. Knowles: I did not draft the bill and put two general clauses into it. I would be willing that clause 2 should carry, since it is only the title. There are one or two members of this group who would like to say something on clause 1, but we would be quite happy to have those remarks made at a later stage.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think this would not be disagreeable to me, because there are one or two hon. members of the official opposition who took a great part in the work of the committee and who are not here today. I would not like to think they were deprived of a chance of making some general observations if they felt they desired to do so. If the committee would agree to pass the amendment so that we have before us the clause as amended, I would then ask that clause 1 stand until we have dealt with all the other clauses of the bill, and then if anyone has anything to say at the end he would be given the chance to do so.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Starr: Agreed.

Mr. Clancy: May I ask the minister what he means by guide lines, Mr. Chairman? Would he define that phrase? It has a familiar ring; I think I heard it used by the United States 18 months ago.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I would define guide lines as lines for the guidance of the commission, in this case. I do not think I can do better than that.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the proposed amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Clause stands.

Clause 2 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: I should like to ask the government house leader whether it is the intention of the government to carry on with the debate on this bill tomorrow, and whether he can tell us what are the plans of the government for Wednesday.

Mr. McIlraith: Tomorrow we will continue the discussion of the legislation which has been before the house today. On Wednesday I propose to indicate a series of other bills or motions for discussion. On Thursday we will return to the transport bill if it is not completed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN PACIFIC—DISCONTINUANCE OF MONTREAL-QUEBEC NIGHT TRAIN SERVICE

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, I asked the Minister of Transport whether he would agree to lend his good offices to the population of the heartland of Quebec and more particularly to the population of the riding I represent, to prevail upon the Canadian Pacific Railway to restore the night service which was in existence a few years ago when a train for Quebec left Montreal at midnight and when another train also departed from Quebec at midnight for Montreal.

A few years ago, the Canadian Pacific discontinued that service, claiming it was unprofitable. We do not admit this, because we say—and we are ready to prove it—that if the service was unprofitable, it is because the Canadian Pacific arranged for a few years to give such deficient service that it could not be profitable and passengers were kept away. First, the train was cumbersome and very slow; leaving Montreal at midnight, arrival was at three, half past three and sometimes four o'clock. That is surely prohibitive.

We believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Pacific is obligated to serve the population, even if it is not profitable. But we deny that it is unprofitable and we are ready to prove it. Within the next few days, the municipal councils in my region, the Chambers of Commerce and all intermediate organizations interested in the economy of the Trois-Rivières and the St. Maurice regions and the heartland of Quebec will redouble their efforts with the Board of Transport Commissioners and that is why we ask for the support of the Minister of Transport, in order that the Canadian Pacific may grant us this essential service once and for all.

The people in my riding are 85 miles away from Montreal and 85 miles away from Quebec city. It must be realized that we have to deal with Montreal and Quebec city firms. One also likes to remain in Montreal once in a while, to watch some sports event, a play, a recital or simply to spend the evening with friends or relatives, and the midnight train is very convenient for the return trip. It is the same thing for Quebec city.

Mr. Speaker, there is also one particular reason for making the request this year, and this is because of Expo, which will make for a very large increase in the number of travellers. If the Canadian Pacific Railways say they are operating at a loss, we will show them that they themselves have already found a formula enabling them to make a profit. In fact, over the past few years, namely since this service has been discontinued, we have what we call a little train. In English, it is called "Rail Diesel train", and I believe its trademark is Budd. In French, it is called "le train autorail". This little train gets us home from Montreal in two hours. The personnel on board being very limited, it is quite economical. It could very easily be put into night operation to accommodate travellers from our area wishing to spend the evening in Montreal or Quebec city and those living in Montreal or Quebec city wishing to come and spend the evening in our area.

I repeat that we, our chambers of commerce and our municipal councils, are in a position to prove to the Canadian Pacific Railways that if they improved their service along these lines, they would make a profit. At any rate, even if it did operate at a loss, we feel this service should be restored for the duration of Expo.

Moreover, I repeat that our chambers of commerce and municipal councils have been making this request for years.

The hon. minister of trade and labour in the present Quebec provincial government, the Hon. Maurice Bellemare, made such a request himself, on numerous occasions, and so have a number of other public personalities in the area.

I ask the hon. minister, not only on my behalf, but on behalf of the municipal councils in my riding and my area, the chambers of commerce, the workers associations, on behalf of all the intermediate bodies concerned with the economy of the area, to support the request which will be made in a few weeks, and to make use of the considerable influence and persuasive powers which he usually displays when he decides to support a cause to be won.

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The hon. member for Trois-Rivières is always too flattering to me. I cannot help thinking that if he is as persuasive when he talks to the Canadian Pacific as he is when he talks to me that he will have more effect, with his representations, than I could have with mine.

Before Christmas I drew to the attention of the railway company the question the hon. gentleman had put down for discussion tonight. I regret to say that I was not in this part of Canada very much during the recess of parliament. After a few days of refreshment at Antigua—I can assure the hon. gentleman I was not with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre—I then went to Newfoundland—perhaps I should say, to the province of Newfoundland and Labrador. I came back only on Saturday evening and I have not yet had word from the Canadian Pacific. I am glad I have not because they will now have the advantage of reading what the hon. gentleman said this evening.

If the company had not been convinced before, I am sure that they will be wavering, after reading what the hon. gentleman has said. I can assure him that I shall add my blandishments, whatever they may be worth, to his.

IMMIGRATION—ADMISSION OF DEPUTY LEADER OF GERMAN NEO-NAZI PARTY

Mr. Milton L. Klein (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked whether admission to Adolf Von Thadden, deputy leader of the neo-nazi National Democratic party of West Germany in his announced visit to Canada, would be refused on the same grounds that his American counterpart, Rockwell, is excluded from Canada.

• (10:20 p.m.)

I wish to make a distinction between nazis and Germans. I use the cliché that there are good and bad in every nationality and race. But there is no such thing as a good nazi. The National Democratic party of Germany is a neo-nazi party and in my opinion a neo-nazi is far worse than a nazi. The person who joined the nazi party in 1933 had no means of foreseeing the extremity of cruelty which that party would represent, but the neo-nazi, the nazi of today, knows precisely what extremity of cruelty was reached. Thus a man who joins the neo-nazi party today is, I say, far worse than the man who joined the nazi party in 1933.

Some people may say we cannot exclude Von Thadden because he is the deputy leader of a party, the National Democratic party. Well, the National Democratic party is not a political party; it is a criminal conspiracy. I am not speaking now about anti-semitism; there are simply not enough Jews left in Germany against whom anti-semitism could be practised. I have in mind one of the sadder aspects of the aftermath of the second world war—the fact that we speak always of the six million Jews who were executed. Mr.

Speaker, there were six million Catholics and Protestants who were also executed by the nazis in the crematoria—Poles, Czechoslovaks, Hungarians. I think we should keep in mind that those who died in Belsen and Auschwitz were people of other than one national group.

We do not allow people who are affiliated with Murder Incorporated to come to this country; yet compared with naziism Murder Incorporated is in a minor league. By allowing neo-nazis to come here we are giving stature to a party, to an ideology, against which the whole free world fought only 20 years ago. We did not admit Rockwell. It has been said we cannot refuse entry to Von Thadden because West Germany is a member of the O.E.C.D. and because Von Thadden is a citizen of a friendly country. Well, Rockwell is a citizen of the United States, a very friendly country which is also a member of the O.E.C.D.

The minister of the interior of West Germany—his name is Dr. Paul Luecke—has stated that the National Democratic party of West Germany is neo-nazi. I do not know what steps the security officers take in Canada to determine whether a person is acceptable here or not, but it would seem to me that one of the logical steps would be to get in touch with Dr. Luecke and find out more about the neo-nazi party and its background. There are more then one million Germans and people of German descent in Canada today, and there are also the survivors of some of these infamous concentration camps, and I would say that the overwhelming majority of these million Germans in Canada, and of these survivors, would be desperately opposed to the admission of Adolf Von Thadden into Canada. They ran away from the very thing this man is trying to reimpose in Germany.

In conclusion, I would say that the most vital area in the world today, the area which is virtually an armed camp, is the area where East Germany and West Germany meet, and that the ultra nationalism of this National Democratic party might very well set the stage for a third world war, possibly by storming the wall which separates east Berlin from west Berlin, or by a similar act of that kind. I believe Canada should go on record as being opposed to any neo-nazi movement and make it clear that a person who belongs to a neo-nazi movement is not welcome here.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): In the unavoidable absence of my colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand), let me say that this afternoon I believe the hon. member was given the only answer the government could give at the moment to this question, namely that the most earnest consideration is being given to this problem. I really cannot add very much to that.

Of course, as the hon. gentleman knows there are very few members of this house who have much more reason than I, personally, to feel that we do not want any one who is a nazi in this country on any terms whatever.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—"GRANDE HERMINE"—PERMANENT BERTH FOR REPLICA

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, today in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development I addressed a question to the Prime Minister concerning a statement made in Quebec city on December 28 last before the Richelieu Club. The heading in Le Soleil of December 29 contains these words "La 'Grande Hermine' doit aller à Gaspé". This subject has been raised many times in this house on previous occasions. It has been raised because those of us who live in the Gaspé area take great pride in the fact that Canada was born in Gaspé on July 24, 1534 when Jacques Cartier planted there the cross in the name of the king of France. We are very proud of this and therefore do not like to see a distortion of history or historical fact. We are perturbed by the fact that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has stated there is a policy that the replica of Grande Hermine, which now rests at Expo '67, finally will have its berth at the Cartier Brebeuf park in Quebec city.

The controversy has been going on for many months. The two files which I have in front of me here contain extracts from newspapers. These files are voluminous, and the extracts all have regard to the same subject. I have yet to find an article which supports the suggestion that the Grande Hermine should go to the Cartier Brebeuf park in Quebec city. Mayor Jean Drapeau of Montreal mentioned that this is a national rather than municipal matter. He invited the mayor of Quebec city, Mr. Lamontagne, to come to Gaspé and tell the people of Gaspé that they could have the Grande Hermine because it is their right to have such a ship. The mayor of Montreal made an offer to the mayor of Quebec city that if they would give the Grande Hermine to Gaspé he would endeavour to see that another ship was given to Quebec. He said that he would ask the municipal government to offer some guarantee that another ship would go to Quebec.

It is important to note that the mayor of Quebec city found the statement made by Mayor Drapeau very interesting, said that it deserved some substantial study and that he had an open mind on the subject. When Mayor Drapeau spoke I consider he was representing a population of 2 million people. In order to put on record the number of people in the province of Quebec who favour Gaspé as the final berthing for the Grande Hermine, I should like to state the following. More than 500 municipalities in the province of Quebec have endorsed the petition of Gaspé in requesting that the Grande Hermine find its final berthing place at Gaspé—500 municipalities, plus the cities of Quebec, Asbestos, Chicoutimi, Charlesbourg, Granby, Hauterive, Joliette, Rimouski, Ville Saint-Michel, Verdun, Sept-Îles, Lachute, Rivière-du-Loup, Matane, Port Cartier, Saint-Georges-de-Beauce, and Sorel. In this area there is a population of over 1,300,000 people, whereas there is a population of 2,500,000 people in Montreal.

Among those who are in favour of berthing the Grande Hermine in Gaspé are the Lawrence Land Foundation for Historical Research at the University of McGill, many other historical societies and le chanoine, Lionel Groulx, and the curator of the Jacques Cartier Historical Museum at Saint-Malo in France. We have 15,000 signatures as well as many signatures of members of parliament who are in favour of Gaspé as the final resting place for this ship. There are 73 chambers of commerce in the province of Quebec also in favour of this site including the regional board of trade of Gaspé and the north shore, the board of trade of the Mauricie and the junior chamber of commerce of the city of Quebec. Among those also in favour of the Gaspé as the final resting site are the associations of hotel keepers of Gaspé and Bas-Saint-Laurent and the Press in the province of Quebec, notably Le Soleil, l'Action, La Presse, and the Montreal Star.

If the will of the majority is to be heard the government will have to reverse its decision in respect of the request of the people of Quebec for historical justice. By doing so it can help this economically depressed area to rebuild its tourist industry. I hope the final resting place of the Grande Hermine will be Gaspé.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the hon. member for Gaspé that the remarks he has just made will be brought to the minister's attention as soon as he returns to the house. At the same time I should like to emphasize that other members of this house including the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Béchard) and the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Sauvé) and others have expressed their interest in the historical importance of the Gaspé and the final berthing place of the Grande Hermine.

Let me direct the hon. members attention to the fact that it was not only the decision of the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Laing), but also a decision of the previous administration that the Grande Hermine should be a focal point of interest featured at Cartier-Brebeuf Park where Cartier wintered during his second voyage of 1535.

We fully realize the hon. member's position when faced with many requests from his constituents and others to suitably honour Cartier's association with Gaspé. But we are also aware of the expert opinion of historians as well as those who are serving our country on the Historic Sites and Monuments Board. In particular let me direct the hon. member's attention to an interesting article, by André Vachon of the University of Laval, which appeared in La Presse on November 23, 1966. This article states:

[Translation]

According to Cartier's writings, the Grande Hermine was unable to cast anchor at Gaspé.

[English]

• (10:35 p.m.)

Avoiding carefully to be carried away by passionate emotions and thought associations, he states in one of the paragraphs in this article as follows:

[Translation]

The conclusion is obvious: the Grande Hermine never went to Gaspé, Cartier did not return there after July 24, 1534. On the other hand, she spent the winter of 1535-36 at Quebec city.

[English]

However, Mr. Speaker, we continue to ask ourselves what should be Canada's contribution to the continuing memory of Gaspé's place in our history. May I assure the hon. member that the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada, a body established to give expert and independent advice on Canada's historical events, their importance and commemoration, should be in a position at its next meeting to make a further study of Gaspé's historical potential. After the board produces its report the minister will be able to consider its recommendations.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.38 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, January 10, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

COAL

CAPE BRETON—TABLING OF POLICY STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table in English and in French a press release dated December 29, 1966, containing the policy statement by the Prime Minister on Cape Breton coal.

Mr. Speaker: Has the parliamentary secretary leave to table this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF SUCCESSOR TO PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether the government has yet come to a decision regarding the person to succeed Mr. Ouimet as head of the C.B.C.? Are press references correct that the Secretary of State recommended Patrick Watson, former producer of "This Hour Has Seven Days", for this position but her recommendation was not acceptable?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no decision has been reached on the first part of the question; therefore the second part does not arise.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This matter cannot be dealt with as quickly as that. Whether or not a decision has been made—

Mr. Pickersgill: Question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —did Patrick Watson receive the accolade of the Secretary of State?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman will be the first to appreciate that it is quite improper to deal with questions of cabinet consultation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How did it get in the press?

WOMEN

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF STATUS BY ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether the government has received a brief from the committee for equality for women asking that a royal commission be set up to look into the question of equal rights and opportunities for women, particularly with reference to employment, education, property rights, domicile, etc. I would also ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the fact that the United Nations has designated 1968 as the international year for human rights, it would not seem advisable to appoint such a royal commission this year in order that Canada in 1968 might bring the status of women into line with that which is prevalent in some other western countries.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the government has received such a brief, and I may say I have received a good many communications arising out of the brief. The question was considered this morning by the government in cabinet in the absence of the Secretary of State, and it is to be considered again when the Secretary of State returns later this week.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I am pleased with the answer of the right hon. Prime Minister today because he refused to give me the same information yesterday. I am also pleased to see that members of the cabinet have not got their backs up.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Douglas: On a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister when we might expect some decision on this question by the government?

Mr. Pearson: Very shortly, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

HULL, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO BY-ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the principle of no taxation without representation, is the right hon. Prime Minister considering whether to call a by-election in the constituency of Hull immediately or to exempt from any federal tax the citizens of that constituency who have now been far too long without a representative?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): That is a pretty far reaching question, and one which needs to be looked into.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

EXTENSION OF DISABILITY PENSION INCREASE TO DEPENDANTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs and ask him whether during this session of parliament he intends to apply the 15 per cent raise, which at present is given only to disability pensioners, as an over-all increase which would include the veterans wives and children or orphans.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): It is very difficult to give a direct answer to that question. I have no idea how long the present session may last. I will not be able to give a specific answer until I receive the report on this matter which I indicated previously I was awaiting.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have a supplementary question. The minister indicated that the 15 per cent basic increase would be granted by way of estimates. Is it to be understood that any increase to dependants would also be granted by way of estimates?

Mr. Teillet: I am not sure that I understood the purport of that question. If the hon. member is inquiring as to the manner in which this increase will be presented to the house my answer would be that this will have to be determined by the circumstances at that time. Under certain circumstances it can be done by way of estimates; however, if legislation is involved perhaps a bill might have to be brought in. I am afraid I cannot be specific in giving an answer to this question.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Starr: I have a further supplementary. Can the Minister of Veterans Affairs say whether a decision has been reached to make this 15 per cent increase apply over all, that is to wives and children or orphans?

Mr. Teillet: This was considered very seriously at the time the increase was decided upon. However since, as I have indicated, any decision at that time would have had to be arbitrary we decided that the 15 per cent would be a temporary adjustment until we could come up with something a little more specific and basic.

FINANCE

TAX REFUNDS TO PRIVATE COMPANIES OPERATING PUBLIC UTILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister give us the date for the tax refunds to privately owned companies operating public utilities? Of course the moneys would be returned to the customers of those companies.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take notice of that question.

BANKRUPTCY

NORTH AMERICAN GENERAL INSURANCE CO.—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speak-Speaker, yesterday a question was put to the right hon. Prime Minister as to whether the government would consider a joint judicial inquiry into the collapse of Prudential Finance, and he expressed the view that that was not desirable. Then I asked the Prime Minister whether the government would consider a federal judicial inquiry covering North American General Insurance which would, of course, involve Prudential Finance. The right hon. gentleman said he would be glad to discuss this matter with the Minister of Finance. May I now ask the Minister of Finance whether he is considering the setting up of such a judicial inquiry, and if so how soon?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government is not considering establishing any judicial inquiry for this purpose. So far as North American General Insurance Company is concerned, on a number of occasions I have given the facts and the reasons for the failure of this insurance company. Discussions are now proceeding between the federal government and the governments of Ontario and Quebec as to what charges should be laid and under what jurisdictions.

I am proposing also to meet with the provincial governments to discuss the action that each of us should take in our own jurisdictions to provide greater protection for the investor in finance companies. I do not think any purpose would be served by a judicial inquiry into the failure of North American General Insurance. The facts are very well known. This is a case of what I would describe as theft; I think that is the best way of describing the situation.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the minister why a judicial investigation into this matter should not be granted? Does the minister not feel such a judicial investigation would reassure those who believe in the integrity of Canadian insurance companies, who believe that inspection would protect them against being defrauded of their investments? Does he not think a royal commission would be helpful in protecting Canada's international face, from a financial standpoint, and enabling our reputation for integrity to be maintained in the future? In addition, is the minister still of the opinion that there should be no compensation to those poor people who have lost all because they depended upon the department to carry out an investigation?

Mr. Sharp: The answer to the first question put by the right hon. gentleman is no, I do not think a judicial inquiry would be the best way of protecting the good name of our financial institutions. Second, I think the right hon. gentleman is creating quite a wrong impression about the effect of the failure of North American General Insurance Company. I should like to say here, because I think this misunderstanding is widespread, that this is not a life insurance company. It writes general insurance and the amount of loss involved, I hope, will be quite small.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have one other question. What is the estimated amount of loss? If the minister is able to say it will be small he must have some idea of the amount.

Mr. Sharp: I would be able to answer this question after all the facts are fully known. I hesitate to make a guess.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So it is just guess work.

Mr. Lewis: I was going to ask the minister a two part supplementary question. Does he not think there would be value in an inquiry to find out the breakdown in communication between the federal and provincial governments since the beginning of last year? Second, does he not think the federal government has some responsibility to the policy-holders of North American General Insurance for the losses they have sustained as a result of that failure in communication?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I deny there was a failure in communication. When this question of information allegedly given by Mr. Gruber was mentioned in the house before, I indicated that I would have no objection to having Mr. Gruber brought before any committee to tell of the representations he made. This might be a useful thing to do. I certainly would have no objection to that course of action.

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government should undertake to compensate the policyholders of North American General. Once again I want to make it quite clear that these are not life insurance policies. These are fire, theft and so on; general insurance policies. I intend on the 18th of this month to meet with the insurance companies to ascertain whether it would be possible to improve our laws to give greater protection to policyholders in such companies.

This is quite a separate question. This was a case of fraud, and it is extremely difficult to protect the general public against the consequences.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. While he is giving consideration to softening the loss of those who invested in these companies, would he also give consideration to the question I asked the Prime Minister yesterday in the absence of the Minister of Finance about making up the loss suffered by the holders of the 3 per cent perpetual bonds, which—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a supplementary question.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, this question does deserve an answer, and it is urgent because the bonds—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rose under the guise of asking a supplementary question and this is not a supplementary question. He may have an opportunity later on to ask the question in the usual way.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I asked the Prime Minister this question yesterday, and in reply he said he would discuss the matter with the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Kamloops.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance but it is not supplementary. My question is whether the minister's attention has been drawn to the fact that during the month of December the cost of living index rose again and is now at a record high. If so, has the minister any legislative or other measures to propose to the house to relieve all sections of society, the producer as well as the consumer, from this constant upward pressure of prices?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hope I shall have the support of the hon. gentleman and of members of his party in the measures we have been taking to try to reduce inflationary pressures in the economy. By way of answer to the first part of his question may I say that the increase in prices is just about what I had predicted at the time of my budget in March.

Mr. Fulton: A supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister whether we are to take it from his answer that he thinks he has solved the problem, or has he any further effective measure to propose to relieve the economy from this constant daily upward pressure of prices? Does he really believe, as he is reported to have said yesterday, that he has in fact brought the economy into equilibrium when we now have the cost of living moving to an all-time high?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think it is most important for an understanding of the situation we are in today to recognize that as a result of the increases in costs that have already taken place there is likely to be a continuation of some increase in prices. I hope it will be much more moderate than it has been in the past. I am very happy to say that we live in a country with a rate of increase in the cost of living which is among the lowest of all civilized countries.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. I asked this question of the Prime Minister yesterday in the absence of the Minister of Finance, but now he is here may I put it to him. What events have transpired in the last four months to change his attitude with respect to the increase in the price of steel, which in September he asked be deferred but to which he has now acquiesced.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, before the Steel Company of Canada made their recent increase they consulted with me. I expressed appreciation of the action the company had taken in September when I asked them to defer any price increase. This made a very useful contribution to stability during this period. I did not feel that the government would be justified now in asking for any further deferment.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. Do I take it that the minister's policy will now be to ask companies which would increase their prices to defer any increase for four months, and then the minister will allow the increase to take place?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

We learned recently, through the newspapers, how concerned the Prime Minister was about the future of Canadians who accept, through dedication and generosity, the position of governor general.

Perhaps the right hon. Prime Minister might give us his impressions on the fate of all the other older Canadian citizens who have never earned more than $2,500 a year and who will have to manage on a monthly pension of $105?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not believe—

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I only have a few words to add. Since—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question of the hon. member is out of order.

NATIONAL ANTHEM

SUGGESTED DIVISION OF RESOLUTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

In order to enable the hon. members to express their views more freely on the resolution concerning the national anthem, would the government consider dividing the resolution and allowing separate votes on the national anthem and on other distinct proposals contained in the resolution?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it would be quite improper for me to express an opinion on how a vote should be taken in respect of a resolution which has not yet been submitted to a committee and on which no report has yet been made.

FINANCE

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING CORPORATION LEGISLATION, SECURITIES COMMISSION, ETC.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): My question is addressed to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister outline to the house the progress he is making, in conjunction with the provincial authorities concerned, in moving toward the setting up of a Canadian exchange and securities commission?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this question should be addressed to me. This is not in my ministerial responsibility. The question, I think, should be addressed to the Acting Registrar General.

Hon. John N. Turner (Member of the Administration): At an official level there have been discussions between federal officials and officials of the ten provinces toward bringing in uniform legislation affecting the Corporations Act, and affecting the issuance of securities. In due course legislation will be announced. The establishment of a federal securities commission is still a long way off. To establish it we shall need unanimous consent under the constitution.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I have a supplementary question to address to the Acting Registrar General. In the negotiations with the provinces for the unanimous acceptance of conditions under which the federal government can set up a national securities exchange commission, has the government in its thinking gone farther and accepted the recommendations of the royal commission to the effect that there should be relationships between our commission and the securities exchange commission of the United States?

Mr. Turner: We have accepted the position that the federal government will need the support and consent of the provinces, particularly of Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia, where the majority of securities are issued. At the moment we are proceeding toward uniformity in legislation, better co-ordination in securing information, and policing of potential security violations. That is the current stage of negotiations.

Mr. Hamilton: May I ask a supplementary question. Do I understand that no thought has been given to following the recommendations of the Porter commission respecting the establishment of relationships on securities regulations, with the securities exchange commission of the United States?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the question as asked is argumentative.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO NEW LOCATION OF CANADIAN FORCES IN FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): My question is addressed to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister tell us the new location for the Canadian forces now at Marville, in France?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I hope to be able to make an announcement fairly shortly, Mr. Speaker. We have been negotiating for some time. I sincerely hope that it will not be many days before I can make an official announcement.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO PREPARATION OF REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister tell the house whether the regulations under the Canada Assistance Plan have as yet been drawn up? If they have, have they been submitted to the provinces for discussion and approval?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, a preliminary draft of the regulations has been drawn as the result of consultations with provinces. This draft has been submitted to provinces for comment which we are now receiving.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR NET-FREE CORRIDOR ALONG SHORE LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria (B.C.)): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries which is of urgency, considering that the recommendations of the international Pacific salmon commission for the coming fishing season are due within a matter of days. May I ask the minister whether he has received an appeal from sports fishing and conservation groups on lower Vancouver island asking that a two mile wide net-free corridor be left along the Canadian Juan de Fuca shore line as is done along the United States shore line. If so, would the hon. gentleman care to comment on this very reasonable request?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): I did receive representations last week from the organizations referred to by my hon. friend, and their request is now under consideration.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): As a supplementary question may I ask the Minister of Fisheries, or possibly his colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs, whether they will move with as much speed with respect to the all-important geographic co-ordinates to the straight base lines, a matter which has been hanging fire for three years now. Make it a centennial project.

Mr. Robichaud: I wish to inform the hon. member that the government is moving as fast as possible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Robichaud: The hon. member seems to forget the commitment which was made to members of this house that the co-ordinates would be established after negotiation with the countries involved.

Mr. Howard: A further supplementary question. Would the minister mind getting his movement out of neutral and into some sort of gear so that progress can be made?

INDUSTRY

SAFETY FEATURES ON CANADIAN CARS EXPORTED TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I have a question for the Minister of Industry. Is it a fact that cars built in Canada for export to the United States will incorporate the built-in safety features which are prescribed by the United States government?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Upon their importation into the United States cars are required to conform with the safety requirements of the United States government. It is therefore reasonable to assume that cars built in Canada for the purpose of export to the United States would incorporate these features.

Mr. Hales: Will those same cars, or similar cars, be made available to the Canadian public?

Mr. Drury: To the best of my knowledge they will be.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Are we to understand from the minister's answer that the cars built in Canada will meet the safety standards set by the United States government, although the United States manufacturers themselves are not doing so? How can we do it in Canada?

Mr. Drury: I do not accept the premise that United States car manufacturers are not meeting the requirements of the United States government.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Can the minister deny that the United States car manufacturers have informed the United States government that they cannot meet these requirements which have been established?

An hon. Member: What has this to do with Canada?

Mr. Starr: Because many cars are being produced in the United States now, and we are getting them.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): The minister used the words "reasonable to assume" in the course of his answer. I would ask him whether he has taken up this important question with his opposite number in the United States.

Mr. Drury: I am not sure what the important question is.

Mr. Pugh: The question I asked was a supplementary question. The important question had to do with safety requirements incorporated into cars produced in Canada, or in the United States for use in Canada.

Mr. Drury: I said that cars manufactured in Canada for export to the United States will be required by United States regulations to conform with the standards set by law.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

SUGGESTED CENTENNIAL STAMP HONOURING SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): My question is addressed to the Postmaster General whose department today released a pamphlet describing the commemorative postage stamp to be used during the centenary year. The significant date is January 11, and since this day coincides with the birthday of our first Canadian prime minister, Sir John A. Macdonald, many Canadians will deplore the lack of reference to Sir John on the commemorative stamp. Has the department any plan to issue a stamp during the centennial year in honour of this distinguished Canadian?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): I cannot say there is no reference to Sir John A. Macdonald on this stamp; there is a lot of blue on it. As to the second part of the question, I will take it as notice.

FINANCE

PERPETUAL BONDS—INQUIRY AS TO REPLACEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I address my question to the Minister of Finance, and I hope it is in order this time. Will the minister give consideration to making replacement bonds available for the 1936 $100 Dominion of Canada bonds which are today worth $54, and which were callable or replaceable on September 15, 1966?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): It is my understanding that those replacement bonds are already being issued; I have been checking with my department to find out exactly where the process stands. I know that I authorized the issue of replacements some time ago.

Mr. Crouse: I assume the minister has already made plans for the insurance of replacement bonds. Would he notify the banks, because I think the banks do not have this information?

Mr. Sharp: I am sure the banks are well aware of the announcement I made when these bonds became callable, that we did not intend to retire them and that they would be replaced by bonds with suitable coupons on them. They are well aware of that. I will have to inquire as to when the bonds will be in the hands of the banks.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

CURTAILMENT OF PROJECTS RESULTING FROM STAFF SHORTAGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. It relates to the written answer given yesterday to my hon. friend from Kings with regard to staff shortages affecting the Atlantic Development Board and the resulting curtailment of projects. Can the minister tell us which specific projects are being curtailed as a result of the staff shortages?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I do not think I could be expected to give detailed information of this kind without referring to the Atlantic Development Board. I will be very glad to make such a reference.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ACCIDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): May I take this opportunity to reply to a question asked me before Christmas by the hon. member for Skeena, who was unkind enough to remind me of it yesterday when I did not have my answers ready. I have the answers today.

With respect to the vessel Ontario Power, the report of the investigation into this shipping accident should be ready for release in a few days and I will be glad to send the hon. gentleman a copy.

With respect to the very regrettable accident to the motor ship Cabot, Mr. Justice Chevalier of Hull, Quebec, a member of the Quebec Superior Court, will preside over a formal investigation at Montreal into the circumstances surrounding the capsizing of this vessel. I had intended to make this announcement in the ordinary course of today or tomorrow but I am happy to make it here in the house in response to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Would the minister be good enough to make available the terms of reference furnished to Mr. Justice Chevalier as the commissioner, and the questions to which answers are sought?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be glad to send the relevant documents to the hon. gentleman.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

LETTER OF INTENT RESPECTING PAYMENT OF MUNICIPAL TAXES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Ballard (Calgary South): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. In the light of the indication given by the minister on December 20 I wish to ask him whether he has been in touch with the C.P.R. with respect to its letter of intent concerning payment of municipal taxes by the C.P.R. commencing January 1. Is the company willing to forgive this house for carrying the transport bill over into the present year for a short period, and can we take it for granted that the C.P.R. is prepared to pay some municipal taxation this year?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): It would be humiliating for me and somewhat contemptuous of parliament to make any request of a formal character to the C.P.R. until the legislation has been disposed of. As soon as parliament has seen fit to deal with the legislation I shall be very happy indeed to make an approach to the C.P.R.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): As a supplementary question on that very point, the minister stated on December 20 last that he would be in contact with the C.P.R. to see whether they would be in an agreeable mood to recognize the letter they had written him with regard to tax payments. I would like to ask, has he been in contact with the C.P.R. and are they in a forgiveable mood for carrying this bill three weeks past the deadline they set out in their letter?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has phrased his question more elegantly than the hon. member for Calgary South, but it is exactly the same question and the same answer applies.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Then can I assume the minister has not carried out what he told the house he would do on Tuesday, December 20? On that date he said he would be in contact with the C.P.R. This is a simple question. Has he been in touch with the C.P.R. in regard to this matter?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, if I might give a simple answer to a simple question, I shall be in contact with the C.P.R. as soon as the legislation has been dealt with by the house.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): But you have not been in contact with them since December 20?

Mr. Pickersgill: Not on this particular subject.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): As a further supplementary question, in view of the fact that the minister made this in the nature of a threat before Christmas, does he not feel that in the interests of getting the bill through the house as soon as possible he should now, or later today, give some indication of the attitude of the railway on this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the impression that this type of discussion might best take place when the house is in committee discussing the bill to which reference has just been made.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—CONSIDERATION OF PENSIONS BY JOINT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works in his capacity as house leader. Will the house leader arrange for the motion referring the question of the pensions of retired civil servants to the joint committee on the public service, notice of which has been given by the President of the Treasury Board and which is most welcome, to be called at the earliest possible date?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I hope to have it on the list of business for the house to consider tomorrow.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

REPORT OF YOUTH COUNCIL ON PROPOSED YOUTH SEMINAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he now tell us whether the cabinet has received, considered, dealt with and, if so, in what manner, a preliminary report or a further report from the Canadian Youth Council on plans for a centennial youth seminar some time during 1967?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall having received another report on this matter. Perhaps the Secretary of State has, and I shall consult her on her return, but the matter has not yet come before the cabinet in any amended form.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTED INCREASES IN VARIOUS PENSION PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Has the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare recently met with provincial health ministers, with a view to increasing old age assistance allowances, blind persons allowances and disabled persons allowances, so as to bring them to the same level as the minimum guaranteed income provided by the old age security pension.

[English]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, no consultations have been held since our consultations with respect to the Canada Assistance Plan, which will make it possible for provinces on a shared basis to make any increase they wish in allowances to the groups mentioned.

AGRICULTURE

BUTTER—REQUEST FOR ENCOURAGEMENT OF PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Following the recent announcement that 2.5 million pounds of butter will be imported from New Zealand, does the minister intend to set up a program to encourage the Canadian farmers to produce enought butter to meet our domestic needs?

[English]

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the government's dairy program will be announced in the normal course prior to the commencement of the next dairy year.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Is the minister implying that no policy has been established to date?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN ATTITUDE TOWARD ADMISSION OF MAINLAND CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the grave troubles now occurring in continental China is it the intention of the government to withhold their support for communist China membership in the United Nations until the situation has improved within that country?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have answered yesterday a similar question put to me by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

I should like to know whether the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs intends to withdraw his official support or whether he will withdraw his support for the recognition of communist China in the United Nations?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DRAFTING OF CANADIAN CITIZENS INTO U.S. ARMY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister give the house any information as to whether a Canadian citizen who entered the United States last year could be forcibly drafted into the United States army, and what steps could be taken to get him back into Canada again?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether the question is appropriate at this time.

Mr. Rapp: This is a very urgent question, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this question, which I am sure involves the terms and conditions under which Canadian citizens enter the United States, could be more properly dealt with by my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we await elucidation from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will he say whether representations have been made to the United States against the injustice of calling up Canadians who are in the United States for but a short period, putting them into the armed forces and denying them their rights as Canadian citizens?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend has a great and enviable capacity of asking questions that are not necessarily based on facts—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We get that from reading the statements of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The question he asks me now is just of that nature, and no reply that one could give to him would satisfy a question that is so falsely based. I can only say that if those are the facts then there might be occasion to make some kind of representations, but my examination of the law of the United States does not warrant the conclusion that my right hon. friend has made with regard to such hypothetical, non-existent situations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised at the answer given by the hon. gentleman. There are none so blind as those who will not see, and the hon. gentleman has company in the Minister of Transport in that connection. I ask the minister this: Is it a fact that Canadians who are temporarily in the United States for a short period of time are being called up and placed in the United States armed forces? Has the minister received no such complaints, or was he away while the complaints were directed to his notice?

[Mr. Rapp.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe any Canadian who is temporarily in the United States on a visit, a short stay, would be covered by the military service act in the United States. There is no doubt that under the laws of the United States Canadians who are in that country for a specified period of time and who are engaged in gainful employment in certain categories are liable to call up. That is the law of the United States. If there is any situation such as would be embraced by my right hon. friend's question, I shall certainly examine it, but I can say I have had no such complaints whatsoever, and I must repeat that I do not think it is fair to put questions in the house unless one is reasonably certain that there is ground for putting them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have a right to reply to that insinuation. Let me say that every suggestion in every question I have asked this government has turned out to be correct even though the government has brushed them aside. Let me give the minister an example of what I mean.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am speaking to a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the right hon. leader of the opposition is speaking to a question of privilege.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Some weeks ago I asked the minister a question regarding 1,500 gallons of gas allegedly delivered to Rhodesia. The minister said that was quite ridiculous and that no such thing had taken place. His department had notice of that fact three weeks before the minister denied it in this house. Finally, about three weeks ago, he had to admit that the suggestion was in fact correct.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend has placed before the house a good example of the kind of thing about which I registered a complaint a few moments ago. He has set up a straw man and has said the minister denied that the delivery took place. I never denied it. What I said was that I would make an examination, and I have made an examination.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You said it did not happen.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The gasoline did not come from Canada, as I think my right hon. friend knows; it came from South Africa.

Mr. Fulton: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should remind hon. members that we have gone three or four minutes beyond the time allotted for questions. Orders of the day.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed, from Monday, January 9, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose yesterday clause 3 was about to be discussed.

On clause 3—Definitions. "Commission." "Commodity pipeline".

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I am not sure this is the clause in respect of which I should talk about the commission, but this clause does define and set up the commission.

The Chairman: Order, please. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member but there is far too much noise in the chamber. It is difficult for the chair to hear what is being said by the hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I should like to say a word or two in respect of two specific subjects before we proceed further with this bill. Let me deal first with the subject of the question asked a short while ago by the hon. member for Calgary South, regarding the letter of intent sent to the minister some time last fall. This letter was tabled in the house and made an appendix to Hansard of September 8.

The C.P.R. stated in that letter of intent that it was prepared to pay municipal taxes to cities and municipalities in which it held property. It outlined the implementation of this intent in terms which stated that one third would be effective in the year commencing January 1 after the legislation was enacted modernizing and rationalizing existing legislation and taking into account certain other things. If the wording of that letter is strictly interpreted, then the first one third will be implemented January 1, 1968, providing this legislation is passed this year. In other words it does not matter whether we debate this legislation for the rest of this year so far as the tax commitments are concerned. I should like that point cleared up before we proceed.

In all fairness to members of this committee the minister should indicate whether he has been in touch with officials of the C.P.R. to determine whether they are prepared to ignore the exact wording of that letter of intent. This legislation was not passed before the end of last December through no fault of the members of this house or the municipalities concerned. If anyone is at fault it is perhaps the government. Before we proceed further the minister should consult with officials of the C.P.R. in an effort to determine whether they will ignore the exact wording of that letter and comply with the obvious original intent of the tax commitment.

Let me refer to what the minister said in this regard as recorded at page 11374 of Hansard for December 30. At the top of that page the minister is recorded as having said:

> This is a voluntary undertaking and while I could ask the company to overlook the fact that we have not found it possible to act by the end of December—and I would naturally be glad to do this—we must remember that this offer was made in anticipation of the freedom which would be granted under this new legislation. This freedom would enable the railways to compete for revenue in a way in which they are not able to compete at present.

The minister left us with the impression before Christmas that he would be glad to ask the officials of the railway companies, particularly of the C.P.R., whether they would overlook the exact wording of the letter which states that the tax commitment would commence January 1 after this legislation was passed. The hon. member for Calgary South posed a very appropriate question this afternoon when he asked the minister whether he had contacted the officials of the C.P.R. to determine whether they were prepared to overlook the exact wording of that letter.

I have never regarded the Minister of Transport as one who could be accused of not being a hard-working minister. He has always impressed me as one who considered every piece of legislation he presented to the house, and one who would leave no stone unturned in honouring commitments he made to the house. He has shown another side of his character which has not been obvious, in that he has not been in touch with the C.P.R. regarding the wording of this letter.

The minister should make it clear that he in fact did make a commitment on December 20 to contact officials of the C.P.R. regarding this tax commitment. The C.P.R. is a big company, and this tax commitment while generous represents only a small item in relation to its vast expenses. I firmly believe the C.P.R. does wish to become recognized as a good corporate citizen, to use the minister's own words. I am not suggesting the C.P.R. has not in the past been a good corporate citizen, but this letter of intent would prove that to anyone who had any doubt regarding the C.P.R. management.

Surely the C.P.R. will forgive this parliament for taking some three weeks of this month to discuss and pass this legislation and will recognize the original intent and honour the tax commitment as of January 1, 1967, at least on a prorated basis. In other words, if we take one month of this year and 11 months are left, maybe they could pay to the various cities all across western Canada eleven twelfths of the tax they would have paid if parliament had been permitted to pass this legislation by January 1, 1967. I think the least the minister could do would be to ascertain from the C.P.R. whether they are prepared to honour the commitment made in this letter and pay their taxes as if this legislation had been passed by January 1. If not, are they prepared to pay their taxes on a prorated basis when the legislation is passed? That is the first point I want to make, Mr. Chairman. I sincerely hope the minister will deal with it before we proceed much further with this legislation.

Last night I stated to the minister that I was prepared to allow clause 1 to pass if he would clarify the position with regard to the integration and co-ordination of our modes of transportation. Because clause 1 has been stood I should be glad not to deal further with this question at the moment, if the minister is prepared to answer my first question, and I see that he is.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, dealing with the second point first, if the hon. gentleman would raise his point about integration and co-ordination when we reach clause 6, dealing with the constitution of the commission, I think that would be the most appropriate place in the bill to raise it. With respect to the question the hon. gentleman has raised, which if of course not strictly related to the bill, I am very anxious to clear it up—

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It is not strictly related to the bill but we would like to know what the position is.

Mr. Pickersgill: —in a way that it is very difficult to do when answering questions on the orders of the day. I should like to read, if you will permit me to do so, sir, and comment briefly on exactly what I said on December 20. I was asked a question by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, which, together with my answer, will be found at page 11359 of Hansard for December 20.

Mr. Olson: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Transport could not give some indication to these municipalities, because they will need it in their budgeting for 1967. We do not have the bill before us and if this information is not supplied the municipalities would still need some indication before the end of the year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, it would be useful to answer this question, if you will permit me, and to say that, as hon. members are already aware, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has agreed voluntarily to give up an immunity which this parliament could not take away from it without introducing a constitutional amendment. The most that I could do would be to pass on the representations of the hon. gentleman, my own and anyone else's about this matter. However, apart from that, it seems to me that it would be better to discuss this matter when we can have some give and take across the floor of the house and I hope that this will not be delayed long.

Then at page 11374, as the hon. gentleman read, I said with respect to the letter of the C.P.R.:

This is a voluntary undertaking and while I could ask the company to overlook the fact that we have not found it possible to act by the end of December —and I would naturally be glad to do this—we must remember that this offer was made in anticipation of the freedom which would be granted under this new legislation. This freedom would enable the railways to compete for revenue in a way in which they are not able to compete at present.

Since the company is paying money out of its own treasury on the assumption that it will get this extra revenue, it would be rather humiliating for the government to have to say: notwithstanding the fact that we could not do what we had hoped and expected to do to enable you to earn these additional sums, we would nevertheless like you to pay these taxes. I hope that if we do not take too long in our consideration of this legislation in the new year the C.P.R. might, from the point of view of public relations, be disposed to listen to some such prayer. But there is no——way of compelling the company to do so.

It says "now" here, but that is an obvious misprint.

I think I probably misled hon. members by an utterly truthful answer that I gave. I did not personally draw these things to the attention of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company but immediately afterwards I had them drawn to their attention by a member of my staff. I was quite well aware that they knew what had been said by other hon. members and by me about this matter. I also said, of course, that I would be glad to make a request to them, and I stand by that. But I do not see how I can make a very reasonable request to the company until we have some notion about the length of time that is going to be taken to pass this legislation. I would hope that if this bill passes relatively quickly—I express this hope without any consultation with the company, and I prefer it to be that way—in the next week or so, the C.P.R. would overlook the delay altogether.

I would also hope that the C.P.R. would be disposed, if there is a rather prolonged delay, to accept the not unreasonable suggestion made a few moments ago by the hon. member for Acadia, namely, that there should be some prorating in this regard. I would hope they would do that. But we must remember that they have taken the initiative, which has been relatively rare on the part of taxpayers of this country, of voluntarily giving up an immunity from taxation, or of agreeing to do so if we do certain things in return.

I was not joking at all when I said I thought before the bill was passed it would be rather humiliating for me to make such a request and also contemptuous. Perhaps I should not say "contemptuous" but what I mean in using that word is that I should not take for granted and neither should any other hon. member, especially a member of the government, that parliament is going to act by a certain date. When parliament has acted I feel that, the action having been taken, I could go to the Canadian Pacific Railway and make urgent representations to them. But I would feel rather humiliated in doing so on a contingent basis.

However, Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. gentleman that everything that is being said here today will be conveyed, not by me personally but by members of my staff, to the company and the senior officers of the company will be well aware of the disposition of the house. I do not think there is anything more I can reasonably say about the matter.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the minister a question in this regard? This matter has been discussed and there may be other opportunities to discuss it, but what has been running through my mind ever since I first heard of this letter—and I strongly approve of what the railway is offering in this regard—is this point. So long as there remains, as the minister realizes there is, a constitutional barrier to taxation of the railway company, while they may voluntarily submit themselves to taxation they can equally remove themselves from their voluntary submission, if I can put it that way.

Will the minister, in the long-range view of this matter, give some thought to discussing with the railway company the position that they might be able to take in due course by removing the constitutional impediment? In other words, will this be a long-range proposal whereby the railway will be subject to taxation without the constitutional barrier or will it always be left on the basis that they can pay these taxes or otherwise as they see fit?

Mr. Pickersgill: The letter from the C.P.R. went on to say that they would not regard this as a giving up of their immunity and if at the end of the three year period parliament, or parliament plus the provinces concerned, were to pray the Queen to ask the government of the United Kingdom to make the necessary amendments to our constitution they would not regard that as any breach of contract. That is the utmost they could possibly do. The rest is part of that unfortunate situation in which we find ourselves of having to go to the parliament of another country to make even simple amendments to our constitution when they affect the constitutions or the rights of provinces as well as the federal parliament. I am quite sure that the governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta would not object to joining us in such a prayer, but I think there is a certain disposition in this house to feel that we should try to solve the problem of amending our constitution ourselves instead of going for these relatively minor amendments to the parliament of another country.

However, so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned I think they have given an undertaking, which is certainly morally irrevocable, to go on paying grants in lieu of these taxes until such time as we put our constitution and the constitutions of the three prairie provinces in such a state that the taxes can be levied on them like they are levied on the C.N.R. and other railways.

Mr. Baldwin: The new government, which might be here three years from now, might be able to do this with the other constitutional changes.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I gather from what the minister has said that he accepts entirely the proposals of the Canadian Pacific Railway that they are to grant us, out of their great generosity and despite their tremendous poverty, the privilege of collecting, one third of the taxes due the first year, two thirds the second year and the full taxes only in the third year. I also gather that the minister accepts what to me is an odious proposition of the Canadian Pacific Railway that it will time the decision, which should be made by the government, as to when the constitutional and legislative amendments relating to their taxation are to be made. When I first read the letter of the C.P.R. to which the minister referred it struck me that it was written with characteristic C.P.R. arrogance. The following statement appeared in that letter:

> At any time after the expiry of the period indicated above—

That is the three year period.

> —the Canadian Pacific would have no objection to action being taken to amend the constitution and the legislation to terminate the perpetual exemption from local taxation referred to.

I think this is an arrogant statement by a huge corporation of which the minister seems to be in awe. What other citizen in Canada, either individual or corporate, can take it upon himself or itself to say to the government of Canada "I will have no objection if you take action to tax me"? I think this is an outrageous way of going about this matter.

The minister has said more than once during the debate on this bill that times have changed, that regulation of the type we had before is no longer necessary or desirable and that this is why he has produced a completely new bill. I do not entirely agree with him when he says that this is a completely new concept. I suggest that times have changed with regard to the taxation of the C.P.R. as well. If the exemption was ever justified—and my study of the matter has never persuaded me that it was even justified originally—it certainly has not been so for many years.

The Canadian Pacific Railway has been able out of its earnings from its rail operations over the years to build itself a huge commercial and industrial enterprise, indeed, a huge commercial and industrial empire. In my opinion the time is overdue to say to the Canadian Pacific that it can no longer be exempted from municipal taxation. I would like to hear from the minister what moral or social justification there may be for accepting this crumb from the C.P.R., or accepting their proposition of taking three years before paying all the taxes which they should be paying to the municipalities concerned and also accepting from them a timetable for action by this parliament and, if necessary, by the legislatures of the three provinces concerned to amend our constitution and our legislation. Who is the C.P.R. to dictate to this parliament and to this country as to when that should be done? Why is it not perfectly correct in social and moral terms for this parliament and the legislatures concerned to say today that we will now amend the constitution and the existing legislation to make the C.P.R. taxable, in the same way that every other corporation in Canada is, by the municipalities concerned as of January 1, 1967?

I do not have to remind the minister of the fact that the C.P.R., which is a great institution, was built with a great deal of money provided to the original owners of that railway by the people of Canada. How much longer are they to enjoy this privilege which they have enjoyed since 1881, if I remember correctly? That is a long time. If my calculation is correct, for 85 years now the C.P.R. has enjoyed this exemption from municipal taxation.

As I said before, during this period it has built not only across this country but throughout the world a tremendous industrial and commercial empire of great power and economic wealth. I suggest to the minister that the time is long overdue for action to be taken to make the C.P.R. immediately taxable for 100 per cent of the relevant assessment as of January 1 of this year. I say to the minister that were it not for the constitutional difficulties he would have had from our party a proposal to amend the legislation which stands in the way. Obviously that would not be sufficient without the necessary constitutional amendments which the minister himself should initiate.

May I also suggest to the minister, without intending any offence, that the dragging in at this particular point of the locus of the amending authority, the question of whether the constitution should be amended in the United Kingdom or by the Canadian parliament, is really dragging a red herring across the trail. There was no difficulty in making other amendments to our constitution pending the resolution of the problem of repatriating the amending authority to Canada, and this matter is one of great importance to the municipalities concerned. I am as convinced a nationalist as anyone in this house. My national sensitivities would not be violated if we had to go to Westminster to obtain an amendment to the constitution in order to do justice to the municipalities of the prairie provinces, and not three years hence but immediately.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think that it rather ill becomes the hon. gentleman to talk about dragging in red herrings when he must realize as well as anyone else that this whole discussion is totally irrelevant not merely to clause 3 but to the whole bill.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Oh, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, it is because there is nothing in the bill dealing with this matter, but I have taken no exception to that. Since the hon. gentleman was allowed to make what I would describe as one of the most demagogic speeches I have ever heard in this house—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: —I hope he will listen to my free expression of my views with the same politeness as I listened to his, instead of interrupting.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister a question? Did I accuse him of demagoguery or anything else of that sort when I spoke? I was no more demagogic than I have heard the minister being in this house, and it ill behooves him to use that word toward me.

Mr. Pickersgill: The other day I said there was one thing about the N.D.P. and that was that they handed it out but usually they would take it when you replied. I am afraid I will have to make an exception of the hon. member for York South. He accused me of truckling to the C.P.R. He accused me of being overawed by this great corporation. If that is not demagoguery, then I do not know what demagoguery is. I will explain to the hon. gentleman that I am old fashioned enough to believe that when a contract is made by the government of my country, even if it is with a big corporation it has the same sanctity as contracts made under the Canada Pension Plan with ordinary citizens and should be observed in exactly the same way.

With all the wisdom that I have now, if I had been Sir John Macdonald I do not believe I would have made this particular type of contract with the Canadian Pacific in 1880. The fact is, however, that it was made and it was ratified by a statute of this parliament. What is more, when the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were established in 1905 the contract was written into their constitutions. The hon. gentleman who is sitting beside the hon. member for York South is a former premier of Saskatchewan, but he took no steps of which I am aware during the long period he was premier of that province to do anything about this immunity. The difference between myself and the present government and everyone else is that we did discuss this problem with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. We did make representations to them that this kind of immunity, which had been given in perpetuity, was not really the kind of thing that was very desirable in the twentieth century. The company did say that if they were allowed the kind of scope the government had said they were going to propose to parliament to enable the company to increase railway revenues, then the company would be glad to give up this immunity. The company had a contractual right to this immunity, just as anyone else who makes a contract with a government of this country has a right to expect the contract to be honoured.

The Canadian Pacific said they would voluntarily give up this immunity over a three year period. It is easy to understand why they chose the three year period. It is going to take some time before the freedom permitted under this bill will, in fact, have any great effect upon the revenues of the railways of this country, and that is why we have the graduated reductions in the subsidies in this bill. The company said also that, notwithstanding the fact that they had a contract, if we could get the constitution amended or if we desired to do so, they would not offer any objection on the ground that they did have a contract ratified by a statute of parliament.

Even if it is the C.P.R., and even if it is possible to get votes by making attacks upon the C.P.R. because it is a large corporation, I do not think that is proper procedure. Nobody is more ready to attack the C.P.R. or anybody else when I think they are doing something wrong. However, when they are doing something that is right, reasonable and in the public interest, it is rather ungracious, rather unfair to suggest that instead of allowing the company to do this in a voluntary way so that there is no breach of contract we should get up in the house and say that if we only had the power to do it we would break the contract unilaterally, which is what the hon. member for York South said.

There is a certain amount of evidence that governments that break contracts with one person are apt to get the habit and break them with others. It certainly is not a good way to gain confidence. I suggest that perhaps it is utterances like that we have just heard from the hon. member for York South which explain why, in all the years since his party under whatever name it has been known has been seeking the suffrages of the people of this country, it has never succeeded in electing more than 28 members to this house. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that most Canadians believe that even if they make bad contracts they are bound by them. They believe that even if their government makes bad contracts it is bound by them also. This doctrine of unilateral repudiation of the pledged word of a country is the kind of doctrine against which I thought most of us objected in two world wars.

So far as I am concerned, if I thought the C.P.R. was doing something contrary to public interest I would be just as ready to say so as the hon. member for York South, and perhaps more ready. However, when the company is acting in a socially responsible manner I do not believe there is any reason why we should not be honest enough or generous enough to say so, even if by creating the impression that someone is serving as a lackey of the big interests we may be able to fool a few people in a few places into voting in a different way than they would otherwise.

That is my whole reply to the hon. gentleman. I do not expect it will satisfy him. However, I do believe it is apt to commend itself to the majority of the members of this house and to the majority of the people of this country.

The Chairman: Order. I think I should interrupt the proceedings of the committee now and point out to hon. members that as a result of a misunderstanding as to the way clause 1 was stood last evening I allowed the hon. member for Acadia, the hon. member for York South and the minister to make statements. However, I should point out to the committee that we are considering clause 3. The discussion that we have been having for the last few minutes has very little relationship to clause 3.

Mr. Douglas: On your point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I say that the minister has been arguing that the concession which the Canadian Pacific Railway is now prepared to make are part of a quid pro quo for the additional revenues they will get as a result of this legislation, and therefore the two questions are irretrievably bound together. It seems to me quite in order to discuss this matter. However, if Your Honour says we cannot pursue it further we will, of course, abide by your ruling.

If that is the case, I would raise a question of privilege and reply to one of several inaccurate statements made by the Minister of Transport. He said that during the time I was premier of Saskatchewan we made no move whatever to bring about any change in the legislation which exempted the Canadian Pacific Railway from municipal taxes on its main line. As a matter of fact, we did. First of all, we amended the Saskatchewan legislation to make the C.P.R. subject to municipal taxation on its branch lines, from which it had been exempted for years. The provincial government and the municipalities of the province petitioned the federal government, of which I believe the Minister of Transport was a member, for legislation which would either remove the exemption or require Canadian Pacific to pay sums of money in lieu of taxation.

There can be no doubt about the fact that irrespective of any commitment which may have been made in 1881 the people who have borne the burden of that exemption have not been the federal government or the provincial government but the municipalities. The situation has changed to such an extent that in my opinion the railway has been morally bound and is morally bound now not to continue to impose this burden upon those municipalities which happen to be on the main line of the C.P.R. but should pay them this revenue which they require if they are to maintain their ordinary municipal services.

If the question is not be to be discussed further I have at least risen to say that the minister's statement is quite incorrect. The government of Saskatchewan between 1944 and 1964 made repeated representations for changes which would have made the Canadian Pacific Railway subject to taxation by the municipal authorities.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry if I misstated the facts. I knew that the hon. gentleman's successor had made representations, because he made them to the Prime Minister in my presence. All I can say is that I was unaware of the earlier representations and I regret very much any misstatement of fact I may have made.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I listened with a good deal of interest to the exchange which took place between the hon. member for York South and the Minister of Transport. I do not think I have to defend the hon. member for York South or the minister; they can both look after themselves. However, for the record I wonder whether the minister would take a few minutes to deal with this point.

In his remarks the minister said that he was not surprised at people attacking the C.P.R., that it was popular among certain people to attack big corporations. During the hearings of the transportation committee I was amazed at the large number of very responsible citizens and organizations which were very hostile to and critical of the C.P.R., organizations such as farmers' unions which called for the taking over of the C.P.R. and its operations by a public corporation. The minister said that if it was necessary and justified he would be prepared to criticize the C.P.R. and its actions. For the record, can the minister tell us when, if ever, he has criticized publicly the actions of the C.P.R.?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I find it very hard indeed to obey your ruling and relate this to clause 3.

The Chairman: Order. I must point out to the committee once more that the clause now before the committee is clause 3, which is an interpretation clause dealing with the definition of "commission", "commodity pipeline" and so on. Perhaps the members of the committee in their comments from now on would confine themselves to the clause before the committee.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I was one of those who thought that clause 1 would be continued today. I had an amendment to move later but I intended to present it today—

Mr. Pickersgill: Clause 1 was stood.

The Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member for Halifax is not aware that clause 1 has not been passed.

Mr. McCleave: I have not yet reached my point of order, Mr. Chairman. This is quite a complicated bill and I am wondering whether we can agree on some procedure whereby at the end of the day members may present amendments they intend to move later, which could then be studied by the minister and his officials, instead of presenting them during the debate and having to make up our minds very quickly whether to accept them or reject them.

Mr. Pickersgill: I really do not think that is a point of order but if the hon. gentleman or any other member has an amendment he is proposing to move to any clause and would like to let me have a copy so that I can have the officials look at it in the meantime in a private way, that would be quite a convenience, I think. I would be very glad to do that and it would probably be easier to answer such amendments when the appropriate clause came up.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): So that we can have this in mind, Mr. Chairman, is it the minister's intention to stand clause 16 or does he plan to move forward in consecutive order?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think we should try to anticipate clauses until we reach them, Mr. Chairman. If there is good reason for standing some clause, either because an hon. member has an amendment he would like to have considered or because it is not possible to reach a decision on it quickly and therefore the work of the committee would be impeded, let me say right now that as far as I am concerned I would be glad to ask the committee to stand any clause. We want to get the bill into the best possible shape. I hope that this will not arise in the case of most of the clauses and that we can make fairly quick progress, but clause 16 may very well be one we would wish to stand if there are some proposals for its amendment.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The minister indicated that he is going to move an amendment on the port parity matter which comes up in one of the later sections of the bill. I know that the hon. member for Halifax also has this in mind because he was one of the first to mention it in committee. Are we going to be confronted right off the bat with amendments when the clause comes up, or can they be made available so that we will have the chance to look at them? We have to consider the complexity of these amendments and the difficulty of ascertaining each of the little points they make.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am in the hands of the committee, Mr. Chairman. I will do anything it is possible to do to facilitate matters.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before we hurriedly pass clause 3 would the minister explain for the benefit of the committee what is meant by the phrase "solely of oil and gas, or either" in subclause (b) which deals with commodity pipe lines? For example, suppose an established oil line company is given permission by the National Energy Board to move oil through its line to the west coast, say from Alberta. If it then becomes feasible with some modification to move a commodity like sulphur through that same pipe line, would I be correct in assuming that that pipe line would no longer be under the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board but rather under the jurisdiction of this new transport commission?

Mr. Pickersgill: It would be a commodity pipe line within the terms of this bill, but it would not cease to be under the National Energy Board in so far as it carried oil and gas. In so far as it carried another commodity it would come under the jurisdiction of the transport commission. There is a provision in a subsequent clause to prevent duplicate hearings so that there would not have to be two sets of hearings held in that kind of case. What this clause says is that a pipe line that carries only oil or only gas, or only oil and gas, does not come under the bill at all.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The point I am trying to understand is this. What do the words "or either" mean at the end of (b)? According to the minister they mean very little.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the line carries gas alone it does not come under this bill. If it carries oil alone it does not come under this bill. If it carries both it does not come under this bill. It would only come under this bill if it carries something else.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Now I am more confused than ever.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Why did this legislation not redefine oil and gas? It looks rather sloppy with those terms not redefined.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it was thought that the ordinary dictionary definitions of oil and gas would be adequate to guide the judges and lawyers who would be dealing with any litigation in the matter. Perhaps the only reason that there is any need for any definition of a commodity pipe line is that we are not using the dictionary definition of those words; we are excluding certain things from the dictionary definition. The courts would say that if it was a pipe line just carrying oil or just carrying gas or just carrying gas and oil, the commission would have no jurisdiction at all over it.

Mr. Lewis: If the minister will look at paragraph (e) of clause 3 he will note that he is not relying, and I am not saying this critically, on the dictionary only.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman has scored off me. It would be a good idea if ministers would always read their bills.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Am I to assume from the minister's statement that anybody building a pipe line to carry commodities such as oil and sulphur to the west coast would have to get permission to cross provincial boundaries? Would they have to appear before the National Energy Board? Suppose one starts from scratch and wants to move sulphur and oil by way of a pipe line. Before whom would one appear? Would it be the National Energy Board or the Canadian Transport Commission?

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman would not mind waiting for an answer until we get to part II on page 13 dealing with commodity pipe lines—all this is doing is defining—we could have a duplication of discussion. I shall be able to answer then.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is fine. I shall be taking another look at page 13. Perhaps the minister would agree with me that we ought to go slowly with this legislation. This is an important matter and, to use his words, this bill will bring about a revolutionary change in the whole field of transportation. Bearing in mind that the oil and gas industry has become a prominent basic industry in the economy of the province of Alberta, one must pay close attention to excessive bureaucratic control that may develop with the establishment of two boards which would regulate and control an industry that has meant so much to the province of Alberta in the past number of years. I do not apologize for examining clause 3 closely. In view of the importance of the oil and gas industry to Canada and considering the balance of payments problem and like matters, certainly one should go slowly with this type of legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think we should deal with this question, if the hon. gentleman would agree, when we come to the appropriate clause.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—Application.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before clause 4 carries could the minister comment on whether there have been preliminary conversations with the provinces about paragraph (e) of clause 4, "transport for hire"? Basically, what is meant? Have there been consultations with the provinces in view of the remarks made in the Alberta government brief to the committee. Has there been consultation with the provinces about this whole subject of transportation?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, there has been. As a matter of fact, when the bill was introduced or just before—I do not have the dates at hand—the Prime Minister wrote to the premiers of all the provinces saying that we intended introducing legislation which would make it possible for a new federal commission to exercise the federal jurisdiction, that we had felt it advisable for some time for that to be done and assuring them all, because the provincial governments had been good enough to allow the provincial agencies to act as agencies of the federal government, that we would not take precipitate action under the legislation and that we should like to have full consultation with them. That has been done. Replies have been received from most of the provinces. A conference is being organized on this particular subject and will take place, I hope, not long after the legislation is passed. I might say again that there is no intention of taking any action under this provision until it becomes necessary in the public interest.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Chairman, in December last the Quebec minister of transport expressed reservations about the bill now under consideration, and the minister has just told us that there have been consultations with the authorities of all the provinces when that bill was being drafted.

Since the remarks made by the Quebec minister of transport, have there been other communications with the province of Quebec to give further information to the provincial authorities and have the province's objections been rejected or studied?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: There is correspondence going on between the Prime Minister and the premier of Quebec on this matter. We have made it clear in that correspondence that the government is grateful for what the government of Quebec has done over the years in allowing the provincial agency to act as a federal agency but that, of course, so far as exercising the legislative jurisdiction of parliament is concerned that is a matter for us here in parliament, and so far as co-operation under the legislation is concerned we desire co-operation with the provinces and are seeking it.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Clause agreed to.

Clause 5 agreed to.

On clause 6—Commission established.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Can the minister give us any information not contained in the legislation about the new commission? For example, will the present members of boards automatically become members of the commission? Is there some guarantee that on the 17-man board there will be some non-experts? The commission being set up is revolutionary and massive and the minister should take a minute to repeat some of the things he said in the committee on transport and communications. He should let us know his thoughts and reassure us in regard to the bureaucratic nature of this commission.

Mr. Pickersgill: In the first place, it will be one bureaucracy instead of three. In the second place—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It will be larger and more unwieldy.

Mr. Pickersgill: It will unquestionably be larger, but the hon. gentleman is not the smallest member of the house and I would never describe him as unwieldy. Size does not necessarily mean clumsiness or difficulty of movement, as anybody watching the hon. gentleman knows.

The commission would have been unwieldly if the whole commission had been expected to be present at all cases. It is intended that there shall be a number of committees of the commission, each with its own chairman, and that they shall proceed in their normal operations in much the same way as the Air Transport Board or the Board of Transport Commissioners proceeds at the present time so far as their formal proceedings are concerned. There will also be a committee dealing with matters that affect at once different modes of transport. That is why we think it is desirable to have one, over-all commission. Since all the members of the Air Transport Board, the Board of Transport Commissioners and probably the chairman of the Canadian Maritime Commission as well, because he is the only permanent member of that commission, have a tenure of office set by parliament, it is provided that they shall continue to be members of the commission for the period of tenure they now have. Certain additional members would also be appointed and as existing members retire they will be replaced.

The commission is to have a president and two vice presidents. A good deal of misgiving was expressed in committee about the possibility of conflict between what might be called the research, planning and developmental functions of the commission and its regulatory functions.

In order to minimize any such possibilities there will be two vice presidents, one of whom will have to be a barrister. He will have nothing to do with the research side of the activities of the commission. Any of these subcommittees will, of course, be able to call on the research functions of the commission and make use of their facilities in the same way as they can make use of any other facilities. But there will be another vice president who will have nothing whatever to do, in a formal sense, with the regulatory functions. He will be the head of the planning and research staff. That is the general structure.

I was brought up on a farm and I was taught when very young not to count chickens before they were hatched. I have offered no jobs on this commission to anybody, nor do I think it would be proper for me to do so until parliament has acted and until there is a commission to which people can be appointed.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I hope the minister himself is not coveting a position in which he would engage in any new-found activity once this bill becomes law.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is, in fact, very smug about being Minister of Transport. Perhaps he should not be.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): In any case I want to thank the minister for his reply and ask him whether I understand his explanation correctly, that any persons with particular tenures now holding appointments on existing boards, would be given similar appointments on the new commission.

Mr. Pickersgill: The appointments would just continue.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have no one in particular in mind. I was just anxious to know.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not only that, but the chairman of the Board of Transport Commissioners has the right when he retires to become a judge of the Exchequer Court, and that right is also safeguarded. All the rights which the members of the various boards now have are safeguarded in the bill.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I have very few words to say on this clause but I hope they will be acceptable bearing in mind the importance of the manner in which this commission is constituted and the regional responsibilities and problems which must be taken into consideration.

I am thinking in particular of the province of Ontario. Although the province of Ontario is certainly a prosperous one within our fair dominion, nevertheless it contains areas whose interests need to be guarded when we are considering the appointment of commissioners. I have in mind especially those areas which have been classified by the government as designated areas for whose assistance and development special measures are needed. It is important that when making appointments to the commission the minister should consider the needs of such areas within the framework of the country as a whole.

It has been said that the two provinces which will pay and pay heavily, in consequence of certain freedom which is to be granted to the railways, are Ontario and Quebec. The idea is that the development and progress of these two provinces now warrants consideration being given to increases in railway rates. This is what I understand, though I do not subscribe to that view, believing that it is important to support the development of outlying centres in these two provinces.

Consider, for example, the closing of stations in areas whose development is supposed to be the key to the government's program of designation. This becomes a matter of great importance, particularly at a time when the government is offering assistance to such areas and when even provincial governments have seen fit to grant special concessions to them. Surely the maintenance of connecting links with adjoining areas which may also require development must be borne in mind at all times. In circumstances such as these I believe the government might well be sympathetic and see to it that the railways do not simply impose their views, despite the protection afforded by the Board of Transport

Commissioners, and endeavour to close facilities which are so important to the population and to the possibility of future progress in these smaller communities.

It is true, from the point of view of the railway companies, that merely by looking at the figures it might not seem reasonable to keep certain stations open. Nevertheless, in my opinion the interests of the people and of industry in such areas are well worth protecting, and the exercise of this protective function, the success with which it is carried out, will depend to a large extent on the kind of commissioners who are chosen.

That is all I have to say on this particular subject. I shall have more to say at a later stage in this discussion.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Does the minister visualize the members of this board sitting as members of dual committees? With all due respect to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, my concern is that it will be the captive regions of Canada, particularly the northern areas, which will be required to pay increased rail rates.

I do not wish to get ahead of the committee by discussing clause 89, but I do hope some balance will be preserved between various parts of the country in the decisions which will have to be made. I say this bearing in mind the fact that there are to be only 17 members of the board and that several of the eastern members will be sitting in a dual capacity on different committees of the board.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not sure I understood the purport of the hon. gentleman's question. I thought he was about to argue that in making appointments to the board we should give due consideration to the main geographical divisions of Canada.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): That is what I was trying to say.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no doubt about the importance of that factor. The hon. gentleman and I are old enough to remember that when Mr. Bracken formed his first government in Manitoba in 1922 it was discovered that every member of that government was a Presbyterian.

An hon. Member: Very sensible.

Mr. Pickersgill: We shall try not to make that mistake.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: Not more than half of them, anyway. Speaking seriously, I do not think the geographical location from which a member comes should necessarily be the prime requisite. If all the members were appointed from Ontario, Quebec or British Columbia, this would not satisfy very well what we have in mind. On the regulatory side it will be possible for members of the commission to be moved from one committee to another, when there is greater pressure of work in one place rather than in another, at the direction of the president or, in some cases, of the vice president.

Normally when hearings are dealing purely with aviation matters the committee will be formed of those commissioners who are particularly competent in that field, and the same will apply with respect to railway matters. But when there is a question about the most appropriate mode of transport to meet a particular situation it might be useful to have a committee with commissioners who would have some detailed knowledge of more than one mode of transport. The main desire is to keep the commission as flexible as possible and not to have it unwieldy.

Mr. Baldwin: Under this clause the establishment of salaries and remuneration is to be fixed by the Governor in Council which, of course, is a departure from the practice under the Railway Act as it applies to the Board of Transport Commissioners. I hope the minister will give us some general idea of what he may have in mind. I believe the whole heart of this bill lies in the personnel of the commission. I have no objection to people being appointed who will do the best possible job they can being paid an amount commensurate with the work they are doing, their value, their intelligence, and their expert knowledge.

In this connection I hope the government will give regard to the appointment of some people who are not experts. In fact I think one qualification should be that some members of the commission will be non-experts in transportation. The minister probably has had the unfortunate experience of trying to draft documents with six or seven lawyers helping him to do so. Undoubtedly there will be some experts on the commission, but I would hope there will be some appointments made of people whose only experience in transportation is driving a car, going up or down in an elevator, or coming downhill on a pair of skis, and who know absolutely nothing about railway transportation, aeronautics or maritime transportation. In his search for personnel to constitute the commission I suggest that the minister seek some people of that character who have certain qualities of energy, a general knowledge of economics and a desire to be of use to their country.

Mr. Pickersgill: Like the hon. gentleman I am a great believer in having a certain number of what old fashioned people would call amateurs. Lawyers, as the hon. member knows, are not hired, they are retained, but apart from lawyers other experts can be hired, if we have to have experts.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister said that under this clause I could deal with the question of integration and co-ordination of modes of transportation. I was disturbed by what the minister said earlier this afternoon in reply to the hon. member for Saint John-Albert that this 17 man commission will take it upon itself to co-ordinate the various means of transportation. From his remarks last night I fear that the new commission, in combining the various means of transportation, will bring about the long-range result of limiting competition rather than promoting it, because we are told competition is the answer to our transportation problems.

The minister tried to suggest to the committee that I was at odds with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle who spoke yesterday afternoon. I have no objection whatsoever to a rationalization program for some railway lines, but rationalization of railway lines is an altogether different question from integrating modes of transportation, which is the point I raised last evening. This is the problem which the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States encountered when it attempted to co-ordinate a complete transportation system, because it found that the shipper of goods was the eventual loser.

As recorded at page 1770 of volume 24 of the proceedings of the standing committee on transport and communications, the new president of the C.N.R., Mr. MacMillan, had this to say:

> May I just add one thought which is inherent in everything that has been said and which has not been said. It is this; this looking over the shoulder at the competing form of transportation as the result of the public being denied rate reductions—it is all directed to rate reductions—everytime it has arisen in the Interstate Commerce Commission it is where truck, railway or barge has tried to reduce a rate to the public. The competing form of transportation has taken the position that it ought not to be permitted because the competitor could not live under this reduced rate. The result has been that the public has suffered and they have not received the rate. That is what we are warning against.

In effect the Interstate Commerce Commission in such a case says to a mode of transportation, "You cannot enter into that particular area because your competitor is already there and is carrying on a successful business. We feel that if you enter that area then two modes of transportation will be losing money and both may eventually have to be subsidized by the taxpayers." This is the warning given by the C.N.R.

As recorded at page 1769 of the committee proceedings Dr. Bandeen also said that this is the problem which the Interstate Commerce Commission is having, and he gave an example in the following words:

> The case I have in mind is a grain movement in the southern United States where the railway put in effective rates; it was ruled compensatory; it was above variable cost; and they still were not allowed initially to put that rate into effect because a barge operator was going to suffer financially because of this. The Interstate Commerce Commission decided that the barge operator should not suffer.

It therefore ruled that the rates could not be put into effect, but in that particular case the commission was overruled by the Supreme Court of the United States and the lower rates went into effect. Dr. Bandeen added:

> This is the kind of thing we would like to warn against on any new commission coming in.

I had thought that the new commission would not be the sole judge and adjudicator of where a certain mode of transportation could operate and what it could carry, but following the minister's remarks of last night and this afternoon my fears have been aroused. Certainly this commission will have jurisdiction over certain areas, but it should not be allowed to sit as sole judge to adjudicate on whether or not free enterprise should be allowed to operate as between different modes of transportation. If competition is to provide any answer at all one cannot expect that all modes of transportation will naturally be able to support themselves in all areas of the country. It is true in all phases of enterprise across this country, whether farming, ranching or the legal profession, that if one cannot cut the mustard one must get out. This should also be true in respect of all modes of transportation other than in those places where, because of necessity, the public must be served even though the transportation company involved operates at a loss. In these cases the government should step in and provide a subsidy in the public interest. In any case there should be no limitation placed on competition or free enterprise in those areas which can support it.

With regard to integration and co-ordination, there should be no attempt made in this direction until a full opportunity has been given for free enterprise in a spirit of competition to operate in certain areas. We have all observed across this country the full impact of competition and generally speaking the larger and most economical survive to the benefit of the consumer or, as in this case, the shipper. I would hesitate to allow the passage of this bill if I thought this commission was going to make prejudgements and follow a course of integration before free enterprise had been given a complete opportunity. I hope the minister can straighten out any misunderstanding I may have in this regard. We should learn from legislation of the past and reap knowledge from others who have tried similar types of legislation. Certainly the efforts of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the United States in this regard have failed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think the hon. gentleman could have explained the real object of this bill better than he has just done had he been the sponsor of it. There is one thing this commission cannot do which the Interstate Commerce Commission does all the time and that is to set rates. All this commission can do is set maximum rates and make sure they are compensatory so there is not unfair competition. The third thing it can do under clause 16 is disallow a rate if it is unfair, having regard to the conditions set out in the amendment to clause 1 and the conditions set out in clause 16. In other words, the kind of situation to which Mr. Bandeen referred cannot arise because it would be illegal. This commission is directed by clause 1 to permit competition wherever it is possible.

Integration will take place in precisely those areas referred to by the hon. gentleman, where there is not enough business for anyone to make a living through the operation of any mode of transportation but where transportation is essential. That is where the word "adequate" comes in. These are the areas where the taxpayers will be asked to step in to provide a subsidy in order to provide a necessary service in the national interest.

I am saying almost exactly what the hon. gentleman said. The commission should look at these areas on behalf of the public to determine whether X number of dollars should be provided to operate a good air service or a poor railway service. The commission must determine how the taxpayers' money should be used to provide a good service rather than a poor one and rather than two, both of which would be losers. That is the kind of integration and co-ordination that is meant.

In those areas where there is enough business and enough traffic for carriers to earn a living the government wants them to earn a living and does not want to interfere. We want to obtain the maximum amount of freedom where there is enough traffic to permit competition. We want also to provide for those areas of the country where there would be no transportation without help from the public or without protection for one carrier which could perhaps make a go of things if it could operate alone. These marginal situations exist all over Canada and this is where the commission will carry out integration and co-ordination. It will not interfere in those areas where there is plenty of traffic.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am prompted to ask the minister a question because of his use of the phrase "air service". My interpretation of that part of the bill in respect of integration and co-ordination of services is that it would only apply to railways and not air services. If an air line could prove that there was enough traffic to operate a second national air service in competition, would this commission be in a position to grant a licence to that air line? Such an operation in competition might bring about a reduction in air passenger or freight rates. One gets into this kind of difficulty if one interprets the bill to mean that integration may apply to all modes of transportation. Will the minister comment in this regard?

Mr. Pickersgill: This bill does not purport to amend the Aeronautics Act. However, within the scope of the Aeronautics Act and the policies enunciated by the government the Air Transport Board does permit competition now. The new commission to be set up will continue to do this to the extent that policy permits competition. This bill does not purport to amend the Aeronautics Act, and I wish to make that clear.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, during the committee consideration of this bill I was in agreement with the hon. member for Acadia in regard to many aspects of this legislation, but I must say that I disagree with him vehemently with regard to the remarks he just made. He seems to be saying to the minister that this legislation should be so construed that the commission would be prevented from carrying out its function in such a way as to co-ordinate, harmonize and integrate the various modes of transportation services in this country. Yet when one looks at clause 14—I realize we are on clause 6 but clause 14 refers to clause 6 in this respect—one sees that it is mentioned specifically that the prime object of the commission shall be to co-ordinate and harmonize the operations of all carriers engaged in transport, and so on.

I agree completely with the announced objective contained in clause 14 of the bill because I feel that only in this way can the objectives outlined in clause 1 be realized. If transportation costs are to be reducd to the lowest possible level, it will be by means of a policy that will seek to co-ordinate and harmonize the various modes of transportation. I do not want to revert to the discussion on clause 1 since it has been allowed to stand, but I believe clause 14 is one of the saving graces of the bill and can, if properly administered and implemented, go some way toward salvaging some of the intentions of this legislation.

With specific reference to clause 6 I would say to the minister that, as far as I can recall, during the committee stage when submissions were being made by various organizations this clause was generally favourably received. I do not recall any opposition to the concept embodied in clause 6. But I feel there is really nothing substantive in clause 6, that it is really a matter of administrative change. Rather than having three commissions operating in close liaison one with the other, we are apparently setting up one omnibus commission which will, in order to carry out its functions, then break down into two or three subcommittees. When it comes down to it, what is the big difference between three commissions in close liaison one with the other and one commission doing its work by way of subcommittees?

I have one specific question to direct to the minister in connection with clause 6. I see nowhere in this bill, though I may have overlooked it and it may be very obviously stated somewhere, any reference to the matter of the quorum required for the commission to operate. I assume that there should be some reference to the quorum but I fail to see it here. Can the minister offer some explanation in this connection?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I would not have thought that the reference to a quorum, if one is necessary, would have been in clause 6 anyway. It would more likely have been in clause 7 which sets out the powers and duties of the commission. I would imagine it would be within the powers of the commission itself to establish a quorum under its regulations, but perhaps before I give a final answer on that matter I should seek legal advice.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, before another hon. member rises to speak on clause 6 I would ask the minister or any other hon. member for some guidance in this respect. It seems to me it would be a more desirable course of action if the matter of the quorum were dealt with by means of statutory provision here in parliament rather than leaving it to the discretion of a creature of parliament. I would have thought it would also be desirable to include such a provision with respect to the sittings and hearings of the subcommittees of the commission.

From the minister's explanation, as I recall it, during the committee stage and again earlier this afternoon I gained the impression that the commission would resolve itself into two or three subcommittees for the purpose of dealing with matters coming under the Aeronautics Act, the Transport Act and the Railway Act. Should this matter of the quorum not be specified with regard to any work carried out by subcommittees of the commission?

Before I resume my seat I should like to support the request made by the hon. member for Peace River that care be taken by the Governor in Council when appointing the members of this commission to see that a number of the commissioners represent the non-legal, non-transportation industry aspects of our economy. In my opinion this is particularly necessary because of the fact, and I think it is a fact, that the minister did not accede to the request made by some organizations that an advisory body be established relative to this legislation. I believe this request was made. Obviously, the minister did not think it was particularly necessary or he would have made some provision in this regard. Since we are not to have an advisory body, this is all the more reason to have laymen, representatives of other economic sectors of our country, sitting on the commission.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman will recall that we had some discussion in committee about whether we should prescribe the occupation or calling of even one member, and some objection was taken by the laymen in the committee to the provision that one of the vice-presidents should be a barrister. That is the only limitation there is upon the freedom of the Governor in Council to exercise his best discretion to obtain the best men from the generality of the citizens of this country. And I mean the citizens of both sexes, having regard to a question asked earlier in the day.

I certainly agree that when all is said and done, the people who have the greatest interest in transportation in this country are the shippers and the consumers of transport. It is not desired to set up a commission that will be the private preserve of carriers. I think we have to be very careful not to have on the commission too many people who have had previous association with carriers and have acquired habits of mind that make it difficult for them to look objectively at these problems.

With respect to the question of quorum, I am advised that it is dealt with in a very ingenious but very obscure manner in clause 5. Although that clause has already been carried perhaps, Mr. Chairman, you would let me explain this matter. The quorum for the Board of Transport Commissioners is prescribed under section 12 of the Railway Act, and it is carried over by clause 5 (2) of this bill to apply to the Canadian Transport Commission, so there is provision for a quorum.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: And what is it?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is just the kind of question the hon. gentleman would ask. Unfortunately I do not have the necessary information with me.

Mr. Schreyer: I know that clause 5 (2) to which the minister just referred states that section 12 and other listed sections of the Railway Act will apply mutatis mutandis, but is this a sufficient provision to cover this point? It seems to me that the Board of Transport Commissioners is composed of a different number of members than the proposed commission. This being the case, how will the quorum provision of the Board of Transport Commissioners apply in this case even if it does apply, as the clause reads, mutatis mutandis? Does this wording imply a proportionate application?

Mr. Pickersgill: Since clause 5 has been passed I might as well be out of order on this point as on another and perhaps the hon. gentleman would agree that when I get my information I could also get it with respect to exactly how this clause operates.

Mr. Baldwin: When we come to clause 19, which is quite wide, we will have to consider the question of the quorum for committees. There is also the question of the power to be given to the commission to make rules and regulations. I believe that its powers concerning its own procedures are quite wide. I mention this because section 12 of the Railway Act, according to the copy I have which may have been amended since, refers to a quorum of two. Of course one might say that if the House of Commons, having 265 members, can sit with a quorum of 20, then the transport commission having a membership of 17, can sit with a quorum of 2. However, it is possible that when we get to clause 19, which is quite wide, we might be free not only to deal with the question of the quorum of the main committees but also the quorum of the commission.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman's suggestion is a very helpful one. By the time we reach clause 17 I should have all the information I need. It does occur to me that there might be some kinds of inquiries at which it would really be superfluous to have more than one person, but I had better see what the law is.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I think the minister's reassurance about striking a balance between the different types of appointments is about all we can hope for. This matter has been mentioned in many of the briefs and no one expects us to legislate certain types of appointments. However, it is important that we take action in view of what has been said.

I would also hope that what the minister said about striking a balance between the different types of interests in transportation would include appointments from different regions of the country. Although I would not object to it, I do not think we would want to end up with 17 Newfoundlanders on the new commission.

Mr. Pickersgill: I doubt that we could find 17 Newfoundlanders who would be willing to leave Newfoundland.

Mr. Cowan: I would like to ask the minister a question bearing on clause 6. In subclause (2) of clause 6 it is said that the commission is a court of record. Is this wording taken from the old act or has it been changed? The reason

I ask my question is that I was provoked in discussion a year or two ago in connection with the Bell Telephone matter when statements were made in argument on behalf of the company that such and such a court decision had been made. I checked into the matter and found that the court decisions to which reference had been made were actually only rulings of the Board of Transport Commissioners.

Furthermore, about a week ago I had occasion to go over to the building in which the Board of Transport Commissioners is located and as I walked by the new hearing room, as I prefer to call it, I noticed an inscription in gold letters saying "court room". I knew I was not in the Supreme Court building nor was I in Osgoode Hall or a magistrate's court. On the other side of the door the French inscription read "salle d'audience". I think "hearing room" is a lot better, since in my opinion the Board of Transport Commissioners is not a court. Can the minister inform me whether "court of record" is the wording used in the old act?

Mr. Pickersgill: To the best of my knowledge and belief the Board of Railway Commissioners, which was established by this parliament on the initiative of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1903 and over which Mr. Justice Mabee from Port Rowan presided, was a court of record. It was succeeded by the Board of Transport Commissioners which continued to be a court of record and has been so to this day.

I think it is not necessarily essential to use the word "court" but the word "record" is pertinent in the sense that the decisions of that body are recorded and the records have a certain legal validity because they can be challenged in higher courts. At any rate, there is nothing new about it.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Transport remarked a moment ago that he did not think he could find 17 Newfoundlanders willing to leave Newfoundland. That was a happy reference to the latter years of his life. I noticed the way he emphasized that Mr. Justice Mabee came from Port Rowan. It was not really necessary for the minister to say that Mr. Justice Mabee came from the area in which the minister was born. We are willing to accept that Mr. Justice Mabee was the original chairman.

Clause agreed to.

[Mr. Cowan.]

On clause 7—President and vice presidents.

Mr. Baldwin: There is one small point which I should like to draw to the attention of the minister. I may be borrowing trouble here but the minister seems to flourish on trouble, or at least he has done very well on it so far.

Subclause (3) is taken to some extent from the section in the Railway Act which deals with the situation that prevails in the case of the inability of the chief commissioner to act. There has been a change in that wording. Subclause 3 reads:

> The vice president who qualifies under subsection (2) has all the powers of the president, but those powers shall not be exercised by him except in the absence or disability of the president—

We have heard of the well known case in the United States regarding the question of the disability of the president. Who determines this disability? I do not wish to borrow too much trouble or to be too technical but it would seem to me to be appropriate to insert after the words "in the absence or disability of the president" the words "as certified by the president or minister". We would hope that with 17 members on the commission there would not be any personal troubles or problems, but this could happen. What kind of disability is required for the vice president to take over the functions of the president? This may be a small point but I am looking ahead so as to try to meet difficulties which might arise.

Mr. Pickersgill: Answering as a layman I would say that it is quite awkward in the case of ministers. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, the Minister without Portfolio, is the Acting Minister of Transport when I am absent from Ottawa, but if I happen to have a bad headache and wish to stay at home he cannot act for me. I wish the law allowed him to do so. It is quite clear that when the president is absent from Ottawa the vice president can act in his place. However, in the case of ministers, if, for example there are too many submissions on my desk to be signed by me and I want to go away for the day and leave all the books to the Minister without Portfolio I can do so by being absent from Ottawa but I cannot stay home and rest for a day because I am too tired. I think this is all it means, that his absence or disability would be determined by the fact that he was not in the office.

Mr. McQuaid: Would the minister give consideration to a requirement for more than one lawyer on the commission? At almost every hearing there is bound to arise some question of law which according to the act must be decided by the vice president who must be a lawyer. What is the situation going to be if the only lawyer on the commission, one of the vice-presidents, happens to be sick or unable to attend the meeting? If the commission is going to be a court of record, I believe there should be a requirement that the president or at least two members of the commission should be lawyers. I believe we will find that if the vice president is not able to attend the meetings questions of law will not be decided because they cannot be decided by anybody else. The work of the commission is going to be held up.

There is another point that is rather important. I presume this commission will act in a similar manner to the Board of Transport Commissioners which breaks up into sections for hearings in different parts of Canada. There may be a hearing in the eastern part of Canada and one in the western part of Canada at the same time. This 17-man commission could break up into two sections, and one section could operate in the west while the other was operating in the east. I presume the commission might operate in this way. If there is only one man qualified to decide questions of law, that man cannot be in two places at the same time. If a question of law arose when the lawyer was not available, the commission would have to adjourn. Since this is going to be a court of record, I think the president should be a lawyer so there would be at least two members of the commission who were lawyers.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the Governor in Council will be duly impressed by the problem suggested by the hon. gentleman. This problem was discussed by hon. members in the committee. There were a number of the members of the committee who thought it was a mistake to even have one lawyer. I did not agree with that philosophy. I defended warmly the right of the legal profession to one-seventeenth of the membership of the commission, and if they could secure more throught merit, all the better.

Mr. McQuaid: I am not making this suggestion on behalf of the legal profession. I am looking at the problem which arises as a result of what the bill says. The bill says that questions of law must be decided by the vice-president who is a lawyer. My point is, if that vice president is not there how are questions of law going to be decided?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman will realize that in any hearing where there are abstruse questions of law arising rather than mere questions of fact, it would not be necessary in every case for the judgment to be written on the spot. I believe it is likely there will be more than one lawyer member of this commission. However, it was our view in submitting the bill, and the committee did not disagree with us, that we should prescribe that there should be one lawyer. Of course, there is no prohibition on having more.

Mr. McQuaid: What would be the objection to prescribing that there must be two?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it is undesirable to be unduly restrictive in these matters. You know the old story about the man who did not invite his father to his wedding. Someone said that was rather surprising and he said, "You have to draw the line somewhere".

Clause agreed to.

On clause 8—Prohibited interests.

Mr. Baldwin: In clause 8 there is a prohibition, a necessary one I think, against any member of the commission being engaged in or having any interest in any undertaking in which there may be a conflict of interest. Is there any penalty which flows from a breach of this prohibition? Does this entail dismissal of a member of the commission? I know the term of appointment is for ten years of good behaviour, but does a breach of this provision constitute a breach of good behaviour. While agreeing entirely with the principle, I think there should be some indication of a penalty.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not a lawyer, and the hon. gentleman is an eminent lawyer, but I had always understood that where there was a prohibition or offence created in any bill and no specific penalty provided, the ordinary common law penalties would apply, whatever they may be.

Mr. Baldwin: There is a provision in the Criminal Code.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that would be very adequate. It is unlikely any government would appoint any person who would be in breach of this provision, but if he were he would obviously not be a suitable person to remain.

On clause 13—Paid monthly.

Mr. McQuaid: There is a small point in clause 13. Apparently the members of the commission and the employees of the commission are to be paid monthly. I am wondering whether the word "monthly" is necessary. Presumably the secretarial staff and others will only get their cheques once a month. Could the word "monthly" not be left out so there may be some provision for payment bi-monthly?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think it would matter very much. If the hon. gentleman would care to move that the word "monthly" be struck out, I would be quite willing to agree to the amendment.

Mr. McQuaid: I would so move, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: While the amendment is being written out, perhaps we could carry the amendment and the clause as amended.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

On clause 15—Duties of the commission.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. member for York-Humber would permit me to say a word first on clause 15? It is my intention to have my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, if he will be agreeable to doing so, move an amendment to this clause. If that were done now, we could have the amendment circulated so hon. members may look at it while it is being discussed.

The amendment would read as follows:

(6) Where a person who transports goods by a mode of transport other than rail charges a toll, expressed as a single sum for the carriage of traffic partly by one mode of transport and partly by a different mode of transport, the commission, for the purpose of determining whether a toll charged is contrary to any act of the parliament of Canada, may require such person to declare forthwith to the commission, or may determine, what portion of such single sum is charged in respect of the carriage of traffic by the mode of transport by which such person transports goods.

When there is a single charge for carrying goods partly by truck and partly by rail or partly by ship and partly by rail and the sum has to be divided so the shipper may know how much is for the carriage of goods by one form of transport and how much by another, this amendment enables that determination to be made. I have some French copies as well; I had better keep one or two for myself.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Hellyer: Based on the abiding trust I have in my colleague, Mr. Chairman, I so move.

Mr. Baldwin: I hope the Minister of National Defence will be equally flexible when we are dealing with another piece of legislation later.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Would the minister help us in our understanding here? Is this one of the amendments that were put forward by the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce? They felt there should be a requirement that the national transportation policy should make certain that the users of transportation services obtain the benefit of the advantages that are inherent in each mode of transport. Is this what prompted the amendment, or where did it come from? How did the minister happen to come upon this? This question is asked merely to help us understand why all of a sudden this amendment appears in view of the fact that we did quite extensive research in committee on most aspects of this clause.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think this was one of the amendments suggested during the committee hearings in regard to which I was not able to have a suitable draft prepared in time. It is pretty obvious that if you are to determine whether tolls meet the conditions laid down in clause 16, and which have now been put into clause 1 by the amendment which is based on the one suggested by the hon. member for Peace River, you have to know what part of a toll relates to rail, what part relates to trucking, and so on, before you can determine, for example, what compensation is involved or make any of the other determinations which are required under the act. It is simply for that purpose.

Mr. Ballard: Mr. Chairman, during the time this bill was under review by the committee a brief was submitted to the committee by the research council of Alberta which I thought was quite a reasonable presentation. It dealt specifically with clause 15 (1) (b) which gives the commission power to undertake studies and research into the economic aspects of all modes of transport within, into or from Canada. Incidentally, this clause was amended only slightly in the revised version that was brought down; it was amended by the addition of the word "within".

I think the concept which was put forward by the research council of Alberta has been entirely missed by the minister. Perhaps one of the reasons it has been missed is the fact that the brief was submitted by mail and no one appeared on behalf of the research council. The argument put forward by the research council appears to be that the commission itself should not be given the full responsibility for initiating research and economic studies but that there are other government organizations and private enterprise organizations that are interested, well qualified and quite capable of doing research in this field. The brief submitted by the research council of Alberta suggested that there should be comprehensive research and development to promote new ideas in physical transport, and that this was particularly important in Canada because of the differing terrain in such as our mountainous regions, the prairies and the Arctic regions. I expect they envision moving goods by methods that have not yet been developed. For example, I know that the research council of Alberta is very actively engaged in experimental work in connection with commodity pipe lines. At the present time they are experimenting with the possibility of moving goods by pipe line where oil is the carrier, in other words, moving goods in capsules inside presently constructed oil pipe lines.

Experiments have been taking place in this regard for years. I think that what they are asking in this brief is that the act make provision so that the commission can make funds available to private and other government organizations to enable them to carry out such research. In fact, they suggested that instead of the wording as it now stands the following wording be used, and hon. members will see that it is not too much different yet different enough to make this possible.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not catch the particular subclause to which the hon. gentleman is referring. Could he give me the reference again?

Mr. Ballard: I am referring to clause 15 (1) (b) on page 7 of the bill. The wording that the research council of Alberta has suggested reads as follows:

> —undertake, encourage, co-ordinate and support creative physical research projects and economic research studies into present and future modes of transport in Canada;

As I say, Mr. Chairman, this wording was suggested primarily to give the commission funds for the carrying out of such research. As a matter of fact, in one part of the council's brief they suggested that a base of approximately $10 million be set aside for research and economic studies.

This matter was brought to my attention in a letter I received from the head of the petroleum research branch of the research council of Alberta, Mr. Hodgson, and I should like to quote the concluding paragraph:

> Our whole objective in suggesting this amendment was to draw attention to the vital need for creative physical research and development in transport in Canada. One of the major ways of doing so-called research in transport in Canada has been to use the economic projection approach. In the economic projection approach very little emphasis is placed on the vast opportunities that lie for revising, redesigning and reinventing physical transport plants. We feel that the future of transport in Canada seriously depends on doing just this.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that there may be other organizations in Canada besides the Alberta research council which are doing and have been doing a tremendous amount of research in the field of transport, so I think it behooves the minister to consider giving financial support to these organizations. I wish the minister would consider or at least comment upon the possibility of amending this clause.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I feel that the objective that the Alberta research council has in mind is a very good one but it is one that we think is pretty fully covered by subclause (4) of clause 15. The hon. gentleman might object that the provision is not broad enough to enable the commission to pay moneys out for any other purpose. It will be noted that all activities of the commission will have to be financed out of appropriations voted by parliament. In such appropriations it is intended specifically, as I made clear in my speech on second reading and several times in committee, not that the commission should try to do all research itself but that the greater part of research should be research fostered, encouraged and to some degree financed by funds provided by parliament annually for the commission. With the power the commission would have under clause 15(4) and with the appropriations made by parliament, I think there would be no question that the objectives the Alberta research council has in mind would be fully covered. It is for that reason that no specific additional change was made in the bill.

Mr. Baldwin: I wish to speak to the amendment the Minister of National Defence introduced. I think it is very sensible and essential if we are to extract the utmost value from clause 15 and clause 1. No other clause would seem to provide for this kind of study and for information to be produced where rail and other modes of transport are jointly involved, but I wonder if a close and detailed study of the amendment does not reveal that its effect is to exclude rail from one of the joint modes of transport involved. The wording of the amendment is:

> Where a person who transports goods by a mode of transport other than rail—

I think this could be construed to mean that one of the joint modes being eliminated is rail. If that is so I think the minister ought to give serious thought to changing this part to read something like, "Where a person who transports goods by a mode or modes of transport other than or in addition to rail". If that change were made there would be no question that rail plus shipping or rail plus aircraft would be included. I may be too cautious, but the use of words "a mode of transport other than rail" suggests to me that in determining charges for respective modes of transportation rail will be completely excluded if the amendment carries.

Mr. Pickersgill: In view of the point the hon. gentleman has made, which I frankly confess I am unable to pass judgment on, if we have concluded the over-all discussion on clause 15 I wonder whether the clause could be stood merely for the purpose of settling this point and nothing else? We should then not start a new debate.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I do not see why the minister does not bring his officials down to deal with a point like this, because it could be that the point is dealt with in the existing Railway Act by a provision covering rail and other modes of transport.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that is not quite the point. What the hon. member for Peace River means is that this amendment would not provide for every kind of combination, and perhaps it excludes rail. I am told that clause 47 provides for combinations including rail, and that this part we are now discussing deals with all combinations except rail. Perhaps that underlines the point made by the hon. member. It did not take me long to get the information by Eskimo telegraph.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): This clause, Mr. Chairman, if I may deal with the legislation generally rather than with the amendment for a minute, authorizes research studies into various modes of transport in Canada. The clause gives me the opportunity to make a brief point that I have made before to the minister. He will recall that I have criticized various studies undertaken by his department into certain aspects of transportation. For example, there is the coastal commission study.

Mr. Pickersgill: Do you mean pilotage?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The pilotage commission yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, the hon. gentleman's friends appointed that commission.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I know, and we have been over that. I say that there is a responsibility on the existing minister with regard to aspects of research having to do with air transport, and certainly there is a need to act there. There is also a responsibility—and I have some knowledge of and interest in this matter—with regard to a merchant fleet for Canada. I express the hope that this clause will mean greater co-ordination of research studies and some action by the government. This matter goes back for many years. Particularly with respect to the merchant marine I am one who feels that a nation like Canada with a coast line second only to Russia's must do forward thinking about how we are to deal with this matter as well as the question of our navy. The Minister of National Defence is sitting there studiously signing more papers that will finally wipe out our navy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The Minister of Transport is from Newfoundland, which has a rocky coast line, and the province's chief means of transportation and communication with the outside world is still by water. I think it is a disgrace that we have not in this nation of landlubbers at least a few people like the Minister of Transport, to think more of the sea and where we are going on the sea. We shall end up with a few people going—

Mr. Starr: On the rocks.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): —on the rocks, as the house leader on this side has said. We shall end up with fellows in gold braid running ferries, and we shall count on other nations to perform our daily tasks, let alone defend us in time of war. Let us hope that this new clause in this new bill will move some people forward in the right direction so far as transportation by sea is concerned.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, do you wish us to discuss the subclauses in consecutive order or may I refer to subclause 2 of clause 15?

Mr. Pickersgill: Go ahead.

Mr. Cowan: There are two matters I wish to bring up under clause 15. The first matter I wish to refer to concerns subclause 2 of clause 15 which reads:

> The Commission may examine into, ascertain and keep records of, and make appropriate reports to the Minister on (b) the type, size, speed and other requirements of the vessels that are and in the opinion of the Commission should be employed in such services;

I happen to know, from talking to ships' captains and ships' owners from abroad arriving in Toronto harbour and frequently staying there for a few days loading and unloading, about the speed regulations imposed on ships in the St. Lawrence river coming upstream and going down. These people have discussed this matter, which I believe comes under the International Joint Commission, more than once with officials in Toronto.

Dropping to paragraph (d), the wording reads:

> The commission may examine into, ascertain and keep records of—
> (d) the water transportation industry and undertakings and services related thereto;

This would include the St. Lawrence Seaway. Then we come to paragraph (f), the one to which I now invite the attention of the committee. The commission may examine into—

> (f) the work of international and intergovernmental organizations and agencies which concern themselves with the transportation of goods and passengers by water;

Does this mean that the new Canadian Transport Commission is to be superior to the International Joint Commission? How can a commission appointed by this parliament be given authority ostensibly to examine into, ascertain and keep records of the work of international organizations? International organizations come under authority greater than that of boards of transport commissioners appointed by this parliament. I am raising this point because I have confidence in the International Joint Commission and I would not like to think that the wording in this bill could be interpreted as placing the I.J.C. under the authority of the Canadian Transport Commission. I mention the seaway only because it is specific to the argument.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure that the International Joint Commission is not envisaged at all. While it is beyond question that some of the work of the International Joint Commission is concerned indirectly with the transport of goods and passengers by water into and from Canada, this is certainly not its primary concern. I do not think there will be any conflict at all. There are a number of international agencies to which Canada belongs and to which we send delegates, agencies which concern themselves with water transport, and it is intended that the commission shall keep track of what they do, keep records and make appropriate reports to the minister on these matters. This is the kind of power which I imagine the Canadian Maritime Commission already has. It is certainly not intended that because the commission may examine into, ascertain and keep records it will have any control over anyone else. It is just a matter of the records which concern the commission in relation to activities in which the government of Canada would be interested as carried on by these international and intergovernmental bodies.

Mr. Cowan: That is an interesting explanation, but the words still state that the commission may "examine into" the work of international organizations. However, it is on record in Hansard if nowhere else, that the International Joint Commission is not envisaged by this wording. I still think it is not as clear as it might be.

The second point I wish to raise arises, again, from clause 16. I believe members of this house are fully aware of the fact that I think the contract which exists for the transportation of passengers arriving at air terminals in Canada and proceeding to downtown points, stinks, and I use that word "stinks" advisedly. The contract in the city of Toronto in connection with the Toronto-Hamilton airport was negotiated by that great Liberal, Hon. Leon Balcer, at one time minister of transport, who awarded a monopoly concession for ten years a few years ago without tender. When one examines the way in which these people got the contracts it is interesting to note that the Department of Transport maintains the contract was negotiable by the minister because its value was less than $5,000.

Well, I am from Toronto and we are very proud of that city; it is a boom-boom town and a go-go place, as hon. members can understand when I tell them that a controlling interest in the contract was sold a few years ago for $1 million. I understand that the contract itself, as entered into by Hon. Leon Balcer, that Liberal, was worth less than $5,000, and how a half interest in it could be worth a million dollars in cold cash is beyond my comprehension unless Toronto has boomed so much under this Liberal administration that what was worth less than $5,000 under Balcer in the days of the other government is worth more than a million dollars under the present one.

But the point I wish to raise on clause 15 is this. Subclause (1) reads:

> In addition to its powers, duties and functions under the Railway Act, the Aeronautics Act and the Transport Act, the Commission shall—
> (c) inquire into and report to the Minister on the relationship between the various modes of transport in Canada and upon the measures that should be adopted in order to achieve co-ordination in development, regulation and control of the various modes of transport;

I take the phrase "various modes of transport" as meaning motor vehicle service between airports and the major cities.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I may raise a point with the hon. gentleman. I am afraid this parliament would not have the power to exercise any jurisdiction over that particular mode of transport, because it is motor transport and it is exclusively within one province. It is therefore entirely under the jurisdiction of the legislature.

Mr. Cowan: I accept the explanation. But if one goes further into clause 18 of this bill one finds these words:

> (1) An applicant, or an intervener on an application to the Commission, for—
> (b) a licence under this Act to operate a motor vehicle undertaking—

Mr. Pickersgill: A motor vehicle undertaking in that instance is defined in the definition clause; it is a motor vehicle undertaking which crosses a provincial boundary from one province to another.

[Mr. Cowan.]

Mr. Cowan: And in subclause (2) of the same clause it is stated:

> Where pursuant to any power vested in the Commission by this or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada the Commission suspends, cancels or amends any licence to operate any transportation service or any certificate of public convenience and necessity in respect of a transportation service—

If this matter of motor vehicle service inside a province concerns only the province, how is it that the hon. Leon Balcer, that Liberal, that former minister of transport, was able to give the contract?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is possible for the Department of Transport or any other federal agency to hire a motor car. The motor car still remains entirely within provincial jurisdiction as long as it stays within a province and bears a provincial licence. Yet the contract to hire it is a contract entered into by an agency of the federal government. The hiring does not bring the operation under the jurisdiction of this parliament.

Mr. Cowan: Hon. Vincent Massey wrote a book recently in which he said, "All that has gone before is prologue." I have been preparing all along to ask this question of the minister. In future when these monopoly contracts are being let without tender, will they be allocated by the minister himself, as in the case of Balcer, or will they be under the control of the Canadian Transport Commission? That is what I have been leading up to.

Mr. Pickersgill: This commission will have nothing whatever to do with contracts of that sort. They will remain the responsibility of the Minister of Transport and of the Governor in Council.

Mr. McCleave: May I preface my question by saying I am glad that the hon. member for York-Humber is carrying on his centennial project of being himself. I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether it is proposed that the commission should have vast research facilities to engage in all the inquiries and studies which it is empowered to undertake under this particular clause.

Mr. Pickersgill: That would have to depend upon the extent to which each government which was in office was willing, in the first place, to recommend the expenditure to parliament and, second, whether parliament would then authorize that expenditure. This is one good reason why this commission should be under fairly close scrutiny by a parliamentary committee from time to time. We cannot determine in this bill the exact extent to which it would engage in research.

I believe we need a lot more research in transport than we have at present. I hope most of it will not be done directly by this commission but by other agencies which will be retained by the commission, along the lines suggested a few moments ago by the hon. member for Calgary South. We need a lot more research and more co-ordination of research, and I hope there will be lot of co-ordination of research in the work of the commission.

Mr. McCleave: I gather there are two areas in which fact finding could be carried out. One is where complaints are made to the commission that under other clauses of the bill freight rates are not being properly applied to the customers. The customers can then bring their complaints to the commission and in this way effect an inquiry.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I might interpose for a moment, that is not what I mean by research. That would come under the regulatory side of the committee, the side that is determining whether the law is being carried out or not. In order to find the facts they might ask somebody to do a bit of research, but that is not at all the kind of research I envisage as the main function of this commission.

Mr. McCleave: If the minister had allowed me to finish my remarks he would not have needed to make that interjection. There are two areas for searching into problems and facts. One arises from a complaint from the outside. I take it that in such instances witnesses can be compelled to give evidence so that the facts can be established. The second area is the one the minister has mentioned, the question of research into long-range transportation problems not brought about at the behest of injured individuals or those who think they are injured but rather by government itself or a department of government. I wanted an assurance from the minister that the commission's powers would be broad enough so that it could ask the railway companies and other carriers for information that would be relevant to the inquiries.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think there is no doubt that this would be so.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Subclause (1)(g) says that the commission shall:

—establish general economic standards and criteria to be used in the determination of federal investment in equipment and facilities—

Could the minister define what type of equipment and facilities are covered in this paragraph?

Mr. Pickersgill: I presume this would be an inquiry into what the relative cost would be, for example, if a new mining development was being started, whether it would be cheaper to provide a railway than to provide air service in order to meet the needs of the community. This would enable establishment of certain criteria for determining that kind of thing. I may say that that is just one random example.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): It indicates that there will be federal investment in equipment and facilities. Would the federal government enter into this program or would it have a crown corporation do so, or is the government going to set up another department?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. All this does is enable the commission to establish certain standards which could be applied to measure the relevant costs of one means and another.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): But it says "the determination of federal investment in equipment and facilities—"

Mr. Pickersgill: But it is standards for determination. It does not empower any kind of investment at all. It is just an inquiry.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): It indicates that there might be federal investment.

Mr. Pickersgill: There might be by Canadian National by Air Canada, by a subsidy to some private air line, or by a grant to assist in the development of a road or something of that sort, but none of these things could be done by the commission. All the commission would be doing would be to determine standards to measure the possible investment.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I have already directed the committee's attention to subclause (2) (d) which provides that the commission may examine into, ascertain and keep records of, and make appropriate reports to the minister on the water transportation industry and undertakings and services directly related thereto. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is reported as having said during the last few days that if there had been any change in government economic policy the government had not bothered to notify him. I have nothing to say on that score. I am only a member of the Liberal party in the House of Commons, but nobody bothered to notify me that some time during the last few months responsibility for the Navigable Waters Protection Act had been transferred from the Department of Public Works to the Department of Transport. I accidentally, which is probably the way it was intended, learned this from a letter that was shown to me by a resident of Etobicoke who had received it from Ottawa.

I have received no official notice of this transfer outside of the letter which I saw, and other hon. members whom I told about it were also surprised, but that is par for the course. The north shore of Lake Ontario between the Humber River and Etobicoke Creek, a distance of about four miles, is still being filled in, something to which I intend to make further reference in the near future. But since the supervision of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, which I am happy to say has been taken from the Department of Public Works, is now with the minister's department, will the supervision be directly under the Board of Transport Commissioners, or under the minister himself? If it will be under the Board of Transport Commissioners, then I want to speak at length.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was going to say that I regret it is under the minister himself, but I really do not regret it. If the hon. gentleman would reserve the matter for some other time, he could then have a good crack at the minister. In the meantime I will try to do something.

Mr. Cowan: I have heard that promise made by other ministers previously. I only hope more reliance can be placed on this last statement, in the hope of speedy action, than we were ever able to place on the previous ones.

The Chairman: Do I understand that the clause is to stand?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I think we have resolved our differences.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 16—Definition of "carrier".

Mr. Pickersgill: If hon. gentlemen will permit me I wish to offer an amendment which is consequent upon the amendment made to clause 1 and upon a suggestion made by the hon. member for Peace River. It reads:

That Bill C-231, an act to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions, be amended by striking out paragraph (a) of subclause (3) of clause 16 on pages 9 and 10 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"(a) whether the tolls or conditions specified for the carriage of traffic under the rate so established are such as to create

(i) an unfair disadvantage beyond any disadvantage that may be deemed to be inherent in the location or volume of the traffic, the scale of operation connected therewith or the type of traffic or service involved, or

(ii) an undue obstacle to the interchange of commodities between points in Canada or an unreasonable discouragement of the development of primary or secondary industries or of export trade in or from any region of Canada; or"

• (6:00 p.m.)

I think that does encompass the points made by the hon. gentleman, and I hope the Minister of National Defence is willing to move the amendment.

Mr. Hellyer: I so move, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Baldwin: I may say that the progress being made by the minister in respect of this bill has inspired him to provide what I think is a very reasonable amendment which meets very substantially some of the points I raised during the discussion on clause 1 and at the resolution stage. This is a very important part of this bill, as indicated by the minister. It is through this provision that the commission will have an opportunity of examining and deciding to what extent there are inequities or disadvantages as a result of the rate setting function established by this legislation.

One problem has occurred to me which is not dealt with by the amendment. I did not have it in mind when we were discussing the bill earlier but we had not reached the clause by clause discussion then I could not have raised the point at that time.

Clause 16 states in part:

(1) In this section, "carrier" means any person engaged for hire or reward in transport—

Subclause (2) states:

Where a person has reason to believe

(a) that any act or omission of a carrier or of any two or more carriers, or

(b) that the effect of any rate established by a carrier or carriers persuant to this Act or the Railway Act after the commencement of this Act,

I should like to ask the minister to direct his attention to what will become subclause

(3) of clause 16, which is the clause by which a captive shipper shall be determined and the clause by which the maximum rate shall be fixed. This is probably one of the most important clauses so far as regulatory control and rate-fixing provisions are concerned.

Is it not a fact that under new section 336 the rate referred to is not one fixed by a carrier but by the commission?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right.

Mr. Baldwin: That being the case, how would it be possible for the commission under clause 16 to review a rate so established? The only two bases on which this can be done are covered in paragraphs (a) and (b) of subclause (2), where there is an act or omission on the part of a carrier or two or more carriers. I do not think an act or omission under clause 16 can be related to what a carrier does pursuant to an agreement made under new section 336. If the rate is one to be established by the carrier that is all right, but if it is established by the commission am I not correct in assuming that clause 16 could not be applied to what will be new section 336? Would the minister comment in that regard?

Mr. Pickersgill: I should think that would be correct. If the commission itself established a maximum rate under section 336, that being an act of the commission perhaps it could not very well be reviewed by the commission and could be subject to an appeal to the Governor in Council. If it was felt the commission had erred in law in fixing the rate an appeal to the courts would be involved. That would be the recourse once the commission itself had acted. Here we are talking about rates that are not maximum in the technical sense but rates that might be considered to be prejudicial to the public interest as defined in the general terms of clause 1 and as redefined here in almost identical language. The commission can interfere with what the carrier has done but I do not see how it could interfere with what it had done itself.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): To follow that up, I think the minister has said at various times that clause 16 would be a balance in respect of many evils that might occur as a result of new section 336.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not quite the way I would put it. The position I take is that new section 336 provides that there will be a maximum rate which can be established in respect of captive shippers. As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle pointed out very well last night in his argument, many bulk shippers will never be protected by this kind of a maximum rate. What they need is an assurance that there will be no unfairness in respect of the rate established under similar conditions. We have sought to give this assurance by accepting the spirit of the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Peace River and supported by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. That is what is fundamentally provided here.

Mr. Baldwin: I was not present during the committee hearings and I must rely on the transcript of the discussion which took place between the minister and Mr. Frawley who was appearing for the province of Alberta. Mr. Frawley expressed very serious concern about the effect of new section 336, particularly as it has the effect of narrowing section 336 of the present Railway Act which does provide some measure of protection in respect of equalization. That, of course, has been taken care of to a limited extent in clause 1. But, quite frankly, from that exchange and from what has been said since, I was under the impression until a short time ago that clause 16 was also to include the right of review with respect to the establishment of maximum rate control under section 336.

In those circumstances I will have to review my position in the matter. For example, the amendment moved by the minister provides, by new paragraph (a) of subclause (3) of clause 16:

> "whether the tolls or conditions specified for the carriage of traffic under the rate so established are such as to create
> (i) an unfair disadvantage beyond any disadvantage that may be deemed to be inherent in the location or volume of the traffic, the scale of operation connected therewith or the type of traffic or service involved, or
> (ii) an undue obstacle to the interchange of commodities between points in Canada or an unreasonable discouragement of the development of primary or secondary industries or of export trade in or from any region of Canada;"

This provision will not apply to any arrangement or agreement establishing a rate under new section 336. I do not know whether the minister has received any information from his officials in this connection and whether any estimate has ever been made as to the extent of traffic which may be covered by section 336. It is my understanding that a very substantial amount of the traffic is likely to be included under this particular method of establishing tolls.

If there is to be no opportunity for review by the commission in this respect, save the opportunity to go to the cabinet or the supreme court on questions of law, I think there is a very substantial limitation in this legislation. I know that other hon. members wish to speak on this matter and I shall not say any more at the moment except to ask the minister for his views in this regard. Before the matter is concluded I may have more to say. It seems to me that under those conditions we are placing beyond the power of people who will be affected by new section 336 much of the benefit which I thought would have flowed to them under clause 16 dealing with appeals.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would direct his attention, as mine has just been directed, to subclause (4) of clause 16. It is to be found on page 10 of the bill and reads as follows:

> If the Commission, after a hearing, finds that the act, omission or rate in respect of which the appeal is made is prejudicial to the public interest, the Commission may, notwithstanding the fixing of any rate pursuant to section 336 of the Railway Act but having regard to section 334 of that act, make an order requiring the carrier to remove the prejudicial feature in the relevant tolls or conditions specified for the carriage of traffic or such other order as in the circumstances it may consider proper, or it may report thereon to the Governor in Council for any action that is considered appropriate.

So it would appear, notwithstanding my rather quick answer, that the hon. gentleman's first impression is the correct one.

Mr. Baldwin: That is what I thought. That is why I wondered whether this does not mean that there is a conflict between subclause (2) which says, "that the effect of any rate established by a carrier or carriers pursuant to this act", and so on, and subclause (4). Perhaps we could leave this matter for the time being and the minister could arrive at some wording that would reconcile the difference. I was quite satisfied with subclause (4) but when I read subclause (2) I wondered how a person could get before the commission when the rate was not established by the carrier but by the commission. This has been puzzling me and that is why I raised the matter. I shall not pursue it any further, Mr. Chairman. The minister has reassured me in what he said, because it now appears that there is some means by which it could be done. This conflict, which might lead to difficulty later, might be easily resolved now by some explanation. I will leave the matter, but I hope the minister will be able to resolve my quandary at a later stage of this discussion before the clause is passed.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make further reference to clause 16 along the lines on which the hon. member for Peace River has spoken. As I recall it, the inclusion of clause 16 in the bill was welcomed by most members of the committee and interested parties who appeared before the committee. It seems to me to have the effect of giving to the shipper a greater degree of protection from unfair or prejudicial rate-setting by the different modes of transportation. The amendment put before us a few minutes ago by the minister does not really, I take it, change the substance of clause 16. It does not detract from it but if anything adds to the benefits of clause 16. There is, however, one amendment which I should like to suggest to the minister. It relates to subclause (4) of clause 16. I would explain my amendment in this way. Clause 16 (2) reads as follows:

> Where a person has reason to believe
> (a) that any act or omission of a carrier ... may prejudicially affect the public interest in respect of tolls for or conditions of the carriage of traffic within, into or from Canada, such person may apply to the Commission for leave to appeal—

Then the commission may make an investigation into the allegation of rate-setting that prejudicially affects the public interest. This is fine. Then we come to subclause (3) which reads as follows:

> In conducting an investigation under this section, the commission shall have regard to all considerations that appear to it to be relevant, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, (a) whether the tolls or conditions specified for the carriage of traffic under the rate so established are such as to create an unfair disadvantage—

I emphasize the words "whether the tolls or conditions specified...are such as to create an unfair disadvantage", presumably to one shipper as opposed to another shipper of a like commodity or goods. I think this is a good provision, and because it is a good provision the very same wording should have been inserted in subclause (4). In my submission subclause (4) should read as follows:

> If the commission, after a hearing, finds that the act, omission or rate in respect of which the appeal is made is prejudicial to the public interest or unduly preferential of one shipper as against another—

There is another alternative:

> —or such as to cause unfair disadvantage, the commission may—

Then the clause should continue with the present wording. I do not want to make it awkward for the committee and the minister to deal with my suggestion, but I think it is a very important one. It could be crucial. I move:

• (6:20 p.m.)

That clause 16 (4) be amended by adding after the words "public interest" in line 12 thereof the following words "or unduly preferential of one shipper as against another".

I move this amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt. If the minister does not quite understand the gist of the amendment—

The Chairman: Order, please. Perhaps I should point out to the hon. member for Springfield that there is already before the committee an amendment to clause 16. After that amendment has been dealt with it will be possible to receive the amendment moved by the hon. member for Springfield.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, I thought that the amendment moved by the minister had been accepted unanimously. However, if his amendment is still before us I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to hold my amendment in abeyance until the minister's amendment is dealt with conclusively.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be quite happy to have my amendment accepted if it is agreeable to the committee. Then we could have the hon. member's amendment properly before us.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak on the minister's amendment. However, if the hon. member for Springfield has more to add I will defer to him at the present time.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I have no more to say at the present time.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): In saying a word or two on clause 16 and dealing with the minister's amendment I would like to point out first of all that clause 16 is one of the most important clauses in the bill and I hope that the house will give it proper consideration because in a sense it is a clause which cancels out or circumvents section 317 of the old Railway Act which states that there shall be no discriminatory increases or reductions in tolls in favour of or against any user. That same clause, which is circumvented in a sense by this clause, says that tolls should not be unjustifiably discriminatory as between different localities and that tolls shall always be charged equally to all persons in circumstances and conditions which are substantially similar. In other words, this clause does not spell out in so many words what is contained in the old Railway Act, namely, that there shall be no discrimination.

Under clause 16 as it now stands—I have not really considered fully the amendment moved by the minister—there is nothing to prohibit discrimination by the railways. Clause 16 does not prohibit the railways from discriminatory action if they desire to take it. In other words, there may be two industries not necessarily in the same location producing a similar commodity. The railway could set preferred rates for one industry because that industry might be a subsidiary of a parent company which did much business with a railway. What would happen then? The subsidiary company might receive a preferred rate while the other company would be left out in the cold because, whether we like it or not, it is a fact of life that transportation contributes up to 50 per cent of the ultimate cost of goods in the case of some commodities. The association of mines appeared before the committee which dealt with the bill and one of its representatives said that in some cases transportation represented up to 70 per cent of the ultimate cost of the product moved by railroads. I say that it represents up to 50 per cent of the cost of many goods.

Clause 16 attempts to set out whether or not there shall be discriminatory rates. It says "may prejudicially affect the public interest" but the words "public interest" are not defined. I have an amendment to move with regard to this clause and I will suggest it to the minister. I know that the minister heard this point made several times in the committee. Since I consider that "public interest" is not defined in the clause I am prepared to move an amendment before the clause is passed. The amendment is as follows:

That after the words "may prejudicially affect" in line 32 of clause 16 (b) the following words be inserted "the business of the complainant or"

It could also read "may prejudicially affect his business or the public interest", or one could say "the shipper affected". There are many words one could use to convey the same message with regard to this particular clause. As it now stands the shipper who feels an unjust rate has been applied to him may appeal to the board but he must prove that the public interest is affected.

This is not good enough because how can a shipper who feels that an unjustifiable rate has been set prove that it also affects the public interest unless the community in which he is living is solely dependent on his business? I know there are many places in which this situation may arise. The hon. member for Lotbinière laughs but there are many small towns in Quebec which are dependent solely on one industry. There are also many small towns in western Canada and in Ontario which depend solely on one industry. If such an industry were subjected to rates which it considered unjustifiable or discriminatory under this clause it could appeal but it would have to prove that the public interest was affected. If it was the sole industry in that town I suppose it could prove conclusively that the public interest was affected, but if it was a small budding industry just starting out how could it prove that the public interest and the livelihood of the community were affected? This is my interpretation of the words "public interest" and I hope that some amendment can be made in line 32 of that clause.

I have no objection to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Springfield in line 12 of page 10 of the bill. The minister's amendment deals to some degree with this particular part when it suggests that there shall be no unfair disadvantage beyond the disadvantage which may be inherent in the location. To some degree this offsets the discriminatory aspects which could prevail under clause 16 but it does not go quite far enough. I have in mind now a particular plant which has made an application to the Board of Transport Commissioners with regard to a discriminatory rate which was set in Lethbridge, Alberta. This is a substantial firm producing vegetable oil which has become a much desired commodity in many households across Canada. They feel that the rate which the railways have set is discriminatory. How could they prove under this particular clause that because the rate is discriminatory to their business it will also affect the public interest to any real extent? How large is the public interest? Is the public interest affected when 10 people are affected by receiving employment in that particular factory or does it mean 100 people, a small village, half a province, a whole province or half of Canada? There is no definition of the public interest in this particular clause.

The minister's amendment does not go far enough. It refers to unfair disadvantage beyond any disadvantage which may be deemed inherent in the location or volume of traffic. Let us say a shipper is moving a small volume of traffic and feels that the rate is discriminatory. Clause 16 places the railroads in a position where they may judge which industry or manufacturer making a similar product will survive. I am getting right down to the nub of the problem, as I see it. The railways may be in a position to give one industry a preferred rate in comparison to another industry. This may be done for umpteen reasons. The railways may give that industry a preferred rate because that industry may have a parent company which gives the railways a tremendous volume of business from some other location.

I throw this out as an example of a situation that may arise. There may be other situations which may arise. It may be that over the years this company has given the railway a great volume of business and the railway is appreciative. Last fall I heard of a livestock shipper who became so antagonized against one of our major railways that he would not ship one head of livestock on that railway. He would move livestock a couple of hundred of miles by truck to a point where he could use another railroad. He thought he had been discriminated against by some action the railroad had taken. Such conditions may well arise as a result of the discontinuation of the old section 316 of the Railway Act and the substitution of clause 16 of the bill for it.

I was in my office for a few minutes making some long distance telephone calls so I may have been out of the house when the minister defined what he means by "public interest". If that is the situation, I apologize for taking up so much of the time of the committee. If the minister has not made such a statement, then I hope he will give some definition of what he regards as the public interest. I quite well remember the definition he gave to the representatives of the Alberta government when they appeared before the transport committee. He said it may well be—I am paraphrasing what he said—that the provincial government will defend its citizens in large matters affecting the public interest. In other words, the minister is saying that the public interest would have to be affected to such a degree that it would arouse the interest of the provincial government before that matter could be considered under clause 16. In my opinion, that definition is too broad.

Surely if I am concerned about my business, my family's livelihood, I should have some right to some protection or some right of appeal against a discriminatory rate under the provisions of this bill. It should not matter whether many other people are affected. I should be able to appeal to this commission and say that this is a discriminatory rate which the railroads are forcing me to use. I should be able to ask the commission to consider whether or not it is discriminatory and to rule on what the rate should be. I do not believe this is asking too much. I do not believe it is asking too much to have such words added to this clause as, "his business or the public interest." The minister may word the amendment any way he likes. I find that my suggestions are more readily accepted if I allow the minister to work out the details.

Surely a shipper should have the right of appeal if he feels rates are discriminatory. A shipper did have this right under the old act and that is all we are asking for under this bill. I mentioned a small vegetable oil plant in Lethbridge which is now in the grip of what the people concerned feel to be a discriminatory rate. In other words, unless they receive some relief from the transportation problem connected with their commodity they will practically be forced out of business. This is the sort of thing with which industries have been faced in this country from time immemorial. If you are starting up a plant, you must first of all consider the location and the transportation rate on the finished product.

The mining association said that in some cases something like 70 per cent of the cost of their finished product is transportation. They said that on the average 50 per cent of the cost of putting their goods on the market was transportation. I do not believe the percentage is quite that high for manufactured goods. However, I do feel this is a major consideration for any manufacturer who is starting in business. He has to locate that business at a point where he can obtain raw materials at a low transportation rate and also send his finished product into the market at a low transportation rate which will enable him to compete. This clause does not give him enough protection.

This is where I come to the crux of my problem. I say this clause does not give him enough protection from discriminatory action by the railroads. Many people feel that the railroads are in a position, through their regulations, to rule out unjustly a plant, a manufacturer or an industry. This gives the railroads a power to which I do not feel they are entitled. I do not think this house feels they are entitled to it and I do not think the people of Canada feel the railroads are entitled to that power.

We must bear in mind the fact that the railroads have to some extent been built with funds from the public treasury. The minister well knows this is true, and this aspect of my remarks has been discussed by many members. One must bear in mind that basically the whole transportation industry in this country has been subsidized and maintained by the taxpayers. It is for this reason the taxpayer says, "I want protection; you have spent my tax dollars." He says, "you have spent my tax dollars on the St. Lawrence Seaway, which is a means of transportation, you have spent my tax dollars on the Canadian National, which is a means of transportation, and I want protection. You have subsidized many aspects of the Canadian Pacific, and I want protection."

The citizen says he wants protection from discriminatory action by each one of these modes of transportation. As I say, clause 16 really does not give that protection. The minister's amendment does not go quite far enough although it goes farther than clause 16 and I commend the minister for suggesting it. The minister's amendment may be acceptable to the committee, and I have no objection to it. However, I wanted to speak on it before it was passed. I wanted to point out that it did not go far enough. There should be some words added either before or after "public interest" or there should be a definition of public interest in this bill. What does public interest mean?

I am sure I have gone into that sufficiently to enlighten the minister as to my views in that regard. I invite the minister to comment on the meaning of public interest if he has not done so.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman did not miss anything by being out making his telephone calls because I did not deal with this particular problem. I am very glad to deal with it now. When the Fathers of Confederation put the peace, order and good government phrase into section 91 and then said "notwithstanding the generality of the foregoing", they found out that "the foregoing" did not mean very much. I would be loath to restrict the capacity of the commission—after all its judgments can be be appealed to the courts if it makes a mistake—and circumscribe its ability to define what is the public interest.

This is a real problem and was the main reason I proposed the amendment last night to clause 1, which really was suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite, that the conditions set out in clause 1 were by clear definition part of the public interest. Therefore, because of the fact that clause 1 makes reference to unfair disadvantage beyond any disadvantage that may be deemed to be inherent in the location or volume of the traffic, which expression we are including again in clause 16, it seems to me that any commission would have to reach the conclusion that there was unfair discrimination between shippers in anything like like circumstances; in fact it would be contrary to the public interest because the bill so provides in clause 1, where it states the purposes.

I am not a lawyer, of course, but I have been toying with the idea of meeting the point made by the hon. gentleman and at the same time probably meeting the point made by the hon. member for Springfield as well by putting after the words "public interest" the words "as defined in clause 1, or otherwise", so that this does not limit it.

For example, there might be other aspects of the public interest involved. The hon. gentleman put the case of one industry in a town and a rate being applied which would put it and the whole community out of business. This might be something that the commission would consider not in the public interest to do. I would not want to place any limitation upon it if I could avoid it, but that would ensure that if there was any unfair disadvantage it might come within the term "public interest" in the amended clause 1. That might meet a little more neatly the point the hon. member for Acadia has in mind.

I think there is an objection to saying that a rate might prejudice or affect someone's business. Every freight rate, even if it is a fair one, affects one's business. I think that might open the way to too many frivolous appeals and would congest the commission with all sorts of cases which should not require to be heard at all because there would be nothing in them. That is one thing we want to get away from. The hon. gentleman indicated that he did not want too much bureaucracy, and neither do I. I do not think that even the hon. member for Springfield wants wasteful bureaucracy; he just wants bureaucracy.

I should not like just off the cuff to say that the words I have suggested would be satisfactory without first speaking to the draftsman, but I think they would really nail down the point raised earlier by the hon. member for Peace River. They make it quite clear that any rate which was established and which created an unfair disadvantage between one shipper and another under the conditions set out in this amendment would create a prima facie case which you would not have to prove.

That is what the hearing woud be about; all you would have to do would be to allege unfair disadvantage and give enough evidence to justify the hearing being held. I think that might meet the whole problem pretty well.

There is one point that perhaps hon. members have not fully appreciated and it is this. There is no such thing as a secret rate. Several references have been made to the possibility of a railway giving better rates to its subsidiaries or its favoured customers than to others. Under the law every railway rate has to be published, so that any other shipper can ascertain the rate that his competitor is paying. Therefore, once we have inserted these words into the bill there should not be much difficulty in one shipper getting prima facie evidence that his rate is manifestly unfair as compared to another, that is, enough evidence to make the charge and to demand a hearing.

Provided the draftsman does not find some hidden disadvantage in these words which I cannot find, and which I do not think the hon. member for Peace River found, this might really do the trick and do it in a way that would relate it directly to one of the matters that might later on have to be proven. Therefore I put forward this suggestion. I understand that we are not sitting between seven and eight so I will have a little opportunity between then to discuss this point. At the same time I will discuss the suggestion made by the hon. member for Springfield, even though his amendment cannot be moved until this amendment is accepted.

No one seems to object to the amendment that my hon. friend the Minister of National Defence moved a little while ago, and perhaps it would simplify the procedure a bit if we could accept that amendment anyway, if it is agreeable.

Mr. Baldwin: I have no objection, Mr. Chairman, but with regard to the matter the minister raised I am inclined to go along with him only to this extent. I think it is most difficult to define with precision, as I said before, the words "public interest". For the protection of the shippers of Canada and of the people of Canada who use transportation facilities I hope that when the commission gets its teeth into this question and starts work on it it will develop a jurisprudence with regard to the words "public interest" which will become wider and wider and wider.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what I hope too.

Mr. Baldwin: But I should like to see a minimum safeguard. Having in mind what the hon. member for Acadia said and what the minister suggested with regard to it, if there can be some linkage between clause 1 and clause 16 so that we know that the words "public interest" will not mean anything less than certain specified conditions and can, we hope, come to be interpreted by a broad, small "l" liberal commission in a very wide and free sense, then I think we will probably get the best advantage we can from it. But in view of the way it was left the hon. member for Acadia and other hon. members on this side as well as myself felt we were leaving too much to chance. Perhaps between now and eight o'clock the minister may come to some determination on this question and see whether it can be done.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, when the minister is considering the words "public interest" may I also ask him whether he will consider under subclause (2) of clause 16 the definition of the word "person". Does the definition mean that a shipper or a corporation or an individual may, if he has a grievance, and perhaps being neither a shipper nor a carrier, bring a problem to the attention of the commission? Perhaps we could have a reasonable definition for the word "person" as well as "public interest".

Mr. Pickersgill: Never having practised in the courts I should like to get legal advice on this point. I know that a person includes a corporation. A person need not be an individual. It means any legal person and the courts, I think, under our system of jurisprudence have always taken the view that you cannot start an action unless you have some interest—and that does not mean curiosity. That means that you must be affected in some way.

Perhaps the hon. member for Peace River will correct me if I am wrong, but think someone coming in off Sparks street could not say, "I have reason to believe that mine X in Quebec is being charged more than mine Y in northern Ontario for shipment of the same goods", when he was not a shareholder in either company. I think this would be regarded as frivolous and vexatious.

Mr. Baldwin: There is the matter of remoteness, too.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. A person would have to have some legitimate or reasonable interest in the matter, or you would make a mockery of any tribunal. "Person" certainly means a corporation. It can also mean a municipality, which is a corporation too, if the interests of that corporation were affected.

Mr. Schreyer: Hearing the minister's suggested change in wording, I thought at first it had merit. I wonder whether it has enough merit to allay the misgivings expressed by the hon. member for Acadia, the hon. member for Peace River and myself. Until we have a sufficient body of case law to elaborate clearly the definition or concept of public interest we ought to take pains to spell out more explicitly in this legislation what the words "public interest" may involve. That way we might give a greater measure of protection to individual shippers from being charged unfair rates and being put at an unfair disadvantage. I hope that between now and eight o'clock the minister will be able to accept the wording I have put forward. I hope I shall not have to move the amendment, because much time would be lost. I should like to see an extension of the wording of subclause 3. I should like to see it extended to subclause 4 in such a way that the commission shall be empowered under subclause 4 to take into account not just whether a matter is prejudicial to the public interest but to say that any rate may give an unfair disadvantage to one party or an undue preference to it.

After all, why is it that in subclause 3 the commission is authorized to make an investigation to see whether a rate charged may create an unfair disadvantage? If the commission is authorized to make such an investigation why can it not be authorized to make an order under the provisions of subclause 4 such as I have indicated? You would have to carry forward similar wording from one subclause to another of clause 16. If that were done I think it would rectify what I conceive to be a problem, and it would also satisfy other hon. members.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest to the hon. gentleman, since the words in the amended subclause 1 are precisely the same as those in subclause 4, that if we put after the words "public interest" in both places, in subclause 4 and subclause 1, the words "as defined in clause 1 or otherwise", which would be section 1 when this becomes an act, it would be perfectly clear that the whole definition in clause 1 of the bill is part of the definition of "public interest" but that it is not the whole definition of "public interest". That is the problem I have in my mind. I do not want to seem to restrict the public interest merely to this unfair disadvantage. I certainly think that, without change, the commission would have no choice but to regard that as meaning "contrary to the public interest". I think this is one of the clauses that, defines interest. But if we have it, as defined in clause 1, we are nailing it down, it seems to me, beyond peradventure.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, my fear is somewhat different. I will only take a minute. So far as the definition of "public interest" is concerned I agree that there should be as much qualification as possible. Surely there is considerable definition and interpretation of "public interest" already in the decisions of the transport boards and in the common law relating to railway matters and the like. What bothers me are words in the new subclause 2 that the minister proposes such as "unreasonable". This is an honest effort to deal with some of the regional geographic problems about which we talked on clause 1. While this does not go as far as bringing in a real equalization formula, this part does have a regional aspect. I worry about words such as I have mentioned, which have been untested. What do the words "unreasonable discouragement of the development of primary or secondary industries" mean? I mention to the minister that my fears extend also to the new part. I know that the minister will come in with a revised amendment at eight o'clock. It might be better if we accepted this amendment and then stood the clause as we have stood clause 1, because of the full implication of what I have said. In fact, the minister has stated that this is the heart of the bill. I have certain reservations. I think it might be better not to pass clause 16 tonight.

Mr. Pickersgill: We should perhaps wait until eight o'clock to decide whether to accept the hon. gentleman's suggestion, which has a certain amount of appeal for me. I should like to see the amendment carried. This amendment is in exactly the same wording that satisfied the committee last night on clause 1.

I hope we shall not have to open the language of the amendment again. I would like to see whether this other suggestion of mine is acceptable—I can put it forward formally at eight o'clock. I would also like to have a chance at eight o'clock to say a word or two about the proposal made by the hon. member for Springfield. After that is done, if hon. members think greater progress might be made by standing clause 16 as amended, I should like to move on to some of the less contentious clauses of the bill.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Knowles: Seven o'clock.

The Chairman: I understand there was some agreement that the sitting should be suspended between the hours of seven and eight. Shall I rise and report progress?

Mr. Pickersgill: Would it not be possible to abbreviate matters by simply suspending the sitting of the committee?

The Chairman: The time saved would probably be not more than half a minute and it is the opinion of the Chair that to do as the hon. gentleman suggests would be highly irregular.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39(A) to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), historic monuments—restoration of the manor of Sir Etienne Pascal Taché in Montmagny, Quebec; the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie), Sir John A. Macdonald—inquiry as to plans for honouring birthday; the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan), Royal Canadian Mounted Police—Edmonton, Alberta—compassionate payment to widow on death of constable.

Does the house agree to suspend the sitting until eight o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: And to resume the work of the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-231 to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: I do now leave the chair.

SITTING SUSPENDED

SITTING RESUMED

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose at seven o'clock it was considering clause 16 and a proposed amendment by the Minister of National Defence. Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before we adjourned at seven o'clock I promised that together with my advisers I would give consideration to the possibility of defining the term "public interest" in clause 16 without circumscribing it, so as to meet the points raised by the hon. member for Acadia and the hon. member for Springfield. I have an amendment here which I think will accomplish what both of them have in mind, and in a fashion which I hope will not limit the commission from taking a broad, or as the hon. member for Peace River said, a liberal view of the term "public interest." It is not quite as simple as it appeared to my simple lay mind, but it is still pretty simple. The amendment reads as follows:

"That Bill C-231, an act to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions, be amended by striking out lines 20 to 24 inclusive, at page 9 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

Definition of "carrier", "public interest".

"(1) In this section,

(a) the expression "carrier" means any person engaged for hire or reward in transport, to which the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends, by railway, water, aircraft, motor vehicle undertaking or commodity pipe line; and

(b) the expression "public interest" includes, without limiting the generality thereof, the public interest as described in section 1."

I think that meets the situation. It means that the same words would be applied to the term "public interest" as the commission has to take account after a prima facie case is made. I think it is very desirable that instead of having one set of words to establish a prima facie case and another set of words to prove it, we should have the same set of words to meet both circumstances.

I believe this amendment meets the situation neatly, a situation which I confess troubled me since before Christmas when the hon. member for Peace River first mentioned it. There could be no doubt, with this language in the bill, that anyone who could provide prima facie evidence that there was an unfair disadvantage as described in clause 1, and as described again in clause 16 as we have just amended it, would have established his right to have a hearing. I gather from the expression on hon. gentlemen's faces that this would meet with general approval and so I ask my colleague, the Minister of Public Works, to move the amendment.

Mr. McIlraith: I so move, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. Baldwin: The minister has been so flexible that I think I should try to find out how flexible he really is, and where the iron hand shows beneath the velvet glove.

I remind the minister of what I said about subclause (2) and my fear, which apparently is not shared by his legal advisers, that in order for a person, as defined under the subclause, to get to the commission he must first show that he has reason to believe the effective rate established by a carrier does such and such things.

When one relates this to new section 336 the rate established would not be a rate established by a carrier but a rate established by the commission and subsequently incorporated by statutory agreement. The minister has indicated that is the advice given him by his legal advisers. We could very easily have made this clear by adding after the word "act" as it appears in line 30 the words "fixed under section 336". However, if the minister and his advisers are satisfied that the words "any rate established by a carrier or carriers pursuant to this act" in fact include a rate established under new section 336 I will go along with it, but I do so dubitant. I would not be doing my duty if I did not express some doubt and ask the minister for his views.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is my advice and I must say, although I am not as learned as my hon. friend, I agree with it. The rates determined by the commission must still be established by publication. Therefore the law is sufficient, and by following the hon. members suggestion we would just be adding unnecessary verbiage. The bill is becoming quite lengthy and I would prefer not to complicate it further.

Mr. Baldwin: We shall test the determination of the minister on some other aspect of the bill.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I left this committee about ten minutes after six and returned at twenty minutes to seven. I should like to ask the minister whether I heard him correctly when he said in respect of clause 16 that decisions of the Board of Transport Commissioners could be appealed to the courts. I ask this question because I do not like the use of the phrase "court of record". I checked into the legal and judicial use of that phrase. The hon. member for Elgin informed me tonight, when I asked him about appeals, that the only appeal from a decision of the Board of Transport Commissioners is to the minister.

At page 11 of this bill under clause 18 it is stated that an applicant or an intervener on an application may appeal to the minister from a final decision. At page 12 there is a further reference to an appeal to the minister I am told, and verily believe, that one cannot appeal to the courts from a decision of the Board of Transport Commissioners. I should not like Hansard to contain a statement which is not legally correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: An appeal to the courts is already provided under the law as it stands. This is not being disturbed by the new legislation. There is provision for an appeal on questions of law from every decision of the Board of Transport Commissioners, and there is also provision for an appeal on questions of fact to the governor in council. There are certain provisions for other kinds of additional, but rather more limited, appeals to the minister under the Aeronautics Act. By this bill we are providing for certain appeals on matters of fact to the minister, but these are in addition to the existing appeals being retained in the bill.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): There seems to be a fairly good compromise here, but I feel the request I made before supper should be accepted. I do not like to fall back on the excuse that a couple of members who wish to speak on this clause are absent, but if the minister is in a good mood, in view of the fact it is an important part of this legislation and, as someone has said, is a palliative to new section 336, it might be a good idea to allow it to stand. I have had the opportunity of glancing at the transcript of what Mr. Frawley had to say about this new section. It is true that he did not have full knowledge of the import of the new clause 16, but he attacked the section very strongly and pointed out that we are losing certain things by way of unjust discrimination in common law, without much being substituted. If the minister is agreeable I think this clause should be stood in order that hon. members may consider it further.

Mr. Pickersgill: The amendments have carried but if the committee feels it would be desirable to let clause 16 as amended twice stand, while we consider the remaining clauses of the bill, I am agreeable. I agree with hon. gentlemen that this is perhaps the most important clause of the bill. Therefore I do not wish to deprive any hon. member of the opportunity of saying something about it. I do hope we will not have another general debate.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 16 as amended stand?

On clause 17—Committees.

Mr. Schreyer: I believe under clause 17 we can revert to a discussion of the quorum of the commission. The minister did say that whatever reference there may be to the quorum of the commission in this legislation may be found in clause 5 of the bill. After reading clause 5 and clause 17 it is very difficult, or perhaps impossible, to come to any clear understanding as to what a quorum shall be. Section 12 of the Railway Act presumably will apply, mutatis mutandis.

Let me point out to the committee that section 12 of the Railway Act, which states that the quorum shall be two, applies to the 17 man transport commission. Is that an accurate interpretation or does it mean that the same proportion of members shall apply to the new commission. The Board of Transport Commissioners is a seven man body and its quorum is two. Will the minister clarify this?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not expected that the new commission will ever sit as a whole. In fact we are quite certain that all the members will never sit together, because the vice president in charge of research and one or two other commissioners will mainly be associated with research and will at no time sit on hearings. We expect that normally there will not be sittings of even a majority of the members during any one hearing, though there may be some very important questions being decided at which time it may be desirable to have a very large bench.

One of the reasons I asked for an amendment to the Aeronautics Act to increase the size of the Air Transport Board was that the number of hearings was so great that cases had to be heard by committees. It is our hope there will be relatively fewer applications to be heard by the new commission, but for the same reason we felt that a quorum of two would apply to the new commission as a whole. Since in the normal course the hearings of the committees will in fact be the final hearings, unless there is some reason for review, if there is to be real flexibility and there are not to be delays this seems to be a reasonable provision.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I wish to dispute the minister's contention that it is a reasonable provision that the committees of the commission shall function with the stipulation that two members are necessary for a quorum, and then to have that quorum as the quorum for the entire 17-man commission. After all, there is provision in clause 17 for the entire commission to act as a board of review to review cases and orders that have been made by the various committees of the commission. It does not seem very logical that a case or order be reviewed by the commission when conceivably at least the actual review hearing is conducted before as few as two people. If it is a 17-man commission, it seems to me that a quorum should be set which would be at least twice the number of the quorum of the various committees of the commission. I am saying, in effect, that if the quorum for the subcommittees is to be two, it would seem reasonable to have the quorum for the commission, when sitting as a board of review of committee decisions, of at least four or five people. I am wondering whether the minister would not agree that this is a reasonable proposition.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would say at once that I feel quite sure that would be the practice, and probably in a review the number of commissioners who would sit would in most cases be greater than that. We know something about quorums in this house. A quorum is a minimum. This provision means that one commissioner cannot act for the commission. It means that in no circumstances can a decision be taken by one commissioner alone in the name of the commission. After all, we trust that no matter what government may be in office it will see that responsible adults are appointed to this commission. We would expect the commissioners to act in a responsible way. I do not feel it is necessary to prescribe a higher quorum for these other occasions, because I believe that the ordinary good sense and judgment of the people who will constitute the officers of this commission will be such that the public will never be scandalized by the kind of situation that the hon. gentleman suggests might be theoretically possible.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word more in regard to clause 17. I refer to the establishment of a commission and the setting up of the various committees laid down in the clause. My concern is with regard to the appeal section of the bill. I was led to believe that with regard to a ruling made by the commission, one could appeal to the commission and another group of the commission would hear the appeal. I may be wrong in my understanding, and if I am I would expect the minister to correct me.

My understanding of this clause is that five committees at least will be set up consisting of not less than three commissioners, exclusive of the president who is to be an ex officio member of every such committee. What real benefit will be afforded under the appeal section of this bill if we are to have a railway transport committee that will rule on and deal with railway matters, and will become very knowledgeable in regard to such matters, and the appeal to the commission is heard by members of the commission who may not have any adequate knowledge of a situation or the ruling made in regard to that situation?

Is it really necessary for this bill to set up committees? In other words, if I were a member of the commission, could I not—after, of course, a great deal of study—act very capably with regard to a railway problem one month, and several months later act very capably with regard to a problem under the Aeronautics Act in conjunction with the air transport committee or a temporary air transport committee? I do not like to see the commission broken down into committees as rigidly as is set out in this clause. I do not think we will accomplish anything by doing this.

If we carry into effect what is set out in this clause, how will this be different from the present situation? Under the present situation we have various commissions studying various problems. Under this bill we will set up an over-all commission and break it down into committees. If we break the commission up into committees, I think we will get away from any advantage that may be acquired by bringing these people together. I believe the commission could serve a much more useful purpose if it were not broken up. I agree that in a sense what will eventually evolve as the practice will be the hearing of a problem by a group of commissioners, or a quorum of the transportation commission as was suggested by the hon. member for Springfield, but I do not think it is necessary to lay down definitely that there shall be a committee on railway transport problems and that committee shall hear nothing but railway transport problems.

If we really want the commission to become fluent and knowledgeable in regard to all modes of transportation, I believe it could better serve that purpose if we did not divide it up as this clause suggests. The members of the commission serving on the commodity pipe line transport committee or the motor vehicle transport committee may well have nothing to do for a couple of years because, as I said earlier, there is at the present time no such animal as a commodity pipe line. There is no commodity pipe line established in Canada. There is no real work for a motor vehicle transport committee.

Therefore why lay down that certain members of the commission shall serve on these committees? Why is it necessary to give a breakdown into committees as this clause of the bill purports to do? I would rather see the bill without subclause 1 of clause 17. I do not see what this subclause accomplishes other than the establishment of a quorum, and I think this could be done better in some other clause of the bill. The minister referred to the quorun when we were discussing clause 5, which says that the following provisions of the Railway Act—and a number of sections are listed—will be included in this bill. However, section 12 of the Railway Act says that only two members shall constitute a quorum. I do not think that two or three members is a sufficient number.

In summary, may I ask the minister to comment on the necessity for giving a breakdown of the commission into committees, other than the setting up of a quorum. Surely a quorum could be established in some way which would allow for greater flexibility and versatility so that members could fluctuate from one committee to another. This would ensure some continuity with regard to regulation of the various modes of transportation. Surely the only real advantage of setting up an all encompassing transport commission is to ensure continuity in the regulations concerning the various competitors in the transport field. I fail to see what the breaking down into committees may accomplish.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure that each one of us would have devised a bill which would be different and no matter how it had been done it would have been quite possible to suggest a different method to be followed. The legislation does not require that all these committees be set up before they are needed. I would not expect the motor vehicles committee to be set up in the immediate future, and the commodity pipe lines committee would certainly not be set up until it had something to deal with. Also there is nothing in the bill which says that the members, having been assigned to one of these committees cannot be reassigned from time to time to other committees, and in fact I think that this would be a very desirable thing. It is quite obvious that, in the case of the reviews that are provided, commissioners who have not sat on the original hearing will have to sit on the review, otherwise the review would mean nothing. I do think there is plenty of flexibility here. At the same time we have to remember that it is quite important, if we are to deal with these matters expeditiously, to ensure that a certain number of commissioners who are accustomed to dealing with these matters are appointed. I believe that on balance we will get a fairly good mixture.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Basically my question was whether this was necessary. The minister said that there must be some members who are acquainted with the subject matter with which they are dealing. I believe that this will come of itself without having to be spelled out in the bill. What will happen is that the railways committee will deal with railways and will become knowledgeable on this subject. However, if there is a review of railway rates it will be given to some other group which has not previously dealt with the matter and which is inexperienced on this particular subject. For example if I were a shipper or a manufacturer in a given industry, and were to ask for a review of a ruling on a certain discriminatory freight rate, a group which might not be fully acquainted with that subject might have to deal with it and to overrule the decision of another group which possessed full knowledge of that subject. This is the danger that I see in the setting up of committees.

In such case what chance would a shipper, a manufacturer or the consumer of transported goods have in receiving a fair hearing from the committee members.

His chances would be very dim because, as I said, an inexperienced group would be overruling the decision of a more experienced and knowledgeable group. It might very well be that over a number of years two or three members of the commission might be particularly knowledgeable about problems involving air or railway transportation, and may naturally prefer to serve on the committees dealing with the matters in which they are interested. However, I do not think we have to nail it down in the bill and enumerate the specific committees. I think that if the commission were to operate in a flexible manner this would allow members to choose among the committees on which they would prefer to serve so that the shipper, manufacturer or consumer of the shipped goods may be able to have his case reviewed in a more knowledgeable manner and thereby receive a far more just hearing than if the case were put before a group set up in a mandatory fashion in the bill. I ask the minister what harm he sees in deleting the establishment of committees. Does he not feel that the review section would get a fairer and more just hearing if the committees were not so outlined?

Mr. Pugh: Before the minister answers the hon. member for Acadia, may I say that we might run into a good deal of difficulty because of the way in which this clause is drafted simply because it states specifically that the committees will be composed of three members, not counting the president, who ex officio is a member of each and every committee. I can see further danger in the points which have been brought up by the hon. member for Acadia because I take it that a decision of the committee is reached by all its members, which includes the president who is ex officio a member of that committee and who, in the case of an appeal might be named to sit on the appeal committee. Who will constitute the appeal committee which will rule on the previous decision? The minister says that a president or vice president will be a member of that committee; but it seems to me that it is asking for trouble to say that the president of a committee might have to sit on the appeal committee. In all fairness, I cannot see how you could have a just decision. We must remember this is the final appeal on a decision against another carrier. So many words have been used in this clause that it would seem almost impossible to put the president, as an ex officio member, in a position where he will not be sitting in judgment on a case which he has previously decided.

Suppose, for some reason such as ill health, the president was not a member of any committee. According to this provision, he would still be a member of the committee, and this is the danger I see. I believe it is something which should be corrected before the clause is finally passed. I agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for Acadia to the effect that the reason the government has put forward this provision, for setting up committees is the tremendous number of things covered by this clause, the number of modes of transport which the commission will have to handle. This means there must be specialization. If the appeal is from specialists to non-specialists, then to whom are the non-specialists to turn? They must go by the record and by the decisions handed down previously. They may decide it would be difficult to upset these specialists.

I believe, therefore, that the point raised by the hon. member for Acadia is a good one, and that the government should consider, not only eliminating the setting up of these committees of specialists, but should also consider the appeal procedure under which the president and vice president must be members of the appeal committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: The point raised by the hon. gentleman is taken care of completely by subclause (6) which is to the effect that the president and vice president may never both sit on the committee. The purpose of this provision is to ensure that neither one of them sits on a review, if a review is requested, on a matter on which either one originally sat.

Mr. Pugh: If I may interrupt the minister, it is quite obvious that the president is named ex officio to each and every committee set up. If this is a committee on appeal, then obviously he is a member of that. The main point is that, since he is ex officio a member of every committee, then it is just so much verbiage to say that he or the vice president shall sit on appeal. He is a member of every committee, so how can he sit on an appeal from a ruling of a committee? If a committee hands down a decision on an original rate hearing, there is no doubt they hand that decision down with the concurrence of the president, whether or not he is there, because the bill states he is a member of each committee. This provision, therefore, should be removed. You may say the vice president is a member of the committee, but it is impossible to have the president as a member if the vice president is not available.

Mr. Lewis: Before the minister answers, may I make two very brief points? I do not personally share the view some hon. members have expressed about the set-up of the committee. I imagine it would be rather difficult for the commission to function without some specialists as envisaged in the clause. I want to make one point which is not very important, and I want to ask the minister to reconsider an answer he gave.

I believe some of the fears have arisen as a result of what I am about to refer to in subclause 4. Provision is made for the committee to sit in review, but then follow these words, "otherwise than by that committee of the commission". I wonder whether that language is necessary? I wonder if it would not be sufficient if the subclause provided that the commission may sit in review and that those persons making the review shall be other than those who sat on the original hearing? The bill provides for a committee of three, but of course it may be a committee of three, or of five persons, all of whom will have had some experience in the particular field with which the particular case is concerned.

I cannot see any reason why the members of that committee who did not, in fact, sit on the original hearing should not be able to sit in review in the same way as other members of the commission may. I believe if that provision were made you would possibly answer the fears of hon. members who have referred to the fact that the president is now an ex officio member of each committee. If he does not sit on the original hearing, I do not see any reason why he should not be able to sit in review.

The other point I want to make is to ask the minister to reconsider his rejection of the suggestion made by the hon. member for Springfield concerning a larger quorum. I urge a larger quorum for a slightly different reason than the hon. member for Springfield gave, and not merely because the commission is a large body. I do not imagine that the number of members of the commission who will sit in review will be the entire commission. Obviously certain members of the commission not concerned with regulatory work will not sit. Then the members of the committee or the committee as a whole, as the clause is presently worded, who were concerned with the original hearing will not sit on the committee.

I suggest a larger quorum is required for a different reason. My suggestion derives from ordinary experience in ordinary courts and other forums in which there are appeals. A single judge may sit on the original hearing, but if the case goes to the court of appeal there are usually at least three judges sitting. The reason is an obvious one and I almost apologize for putting it forward since it is so obvious. If we are going to consider changing or perhaps rejecting the decision of a tribunal, then we provide for more minds to grapple with the problem than the number of minds that grappled with it in the first place. I believe that is a quite simple and very logical principle for appeal tribunals. There should be on an appeal tribunal more people, more minds, concerned with the problem than the number of minds that studied the problem and made the decision in the first instance. Therefore, since we have a quorum of two for the first hearing, it seems to me that the member for Springfield is very much in the right in suggesting to the minister a quorum of three or four, when the commission sits in review of a decision made originally. It does not have to be an unwieldy quorum. I wonder whether the minister could not give a second look at that suggestion of my colleague?

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Before the minister answers, I should like to widen the scope of this discussion a little bit. I am concerned about the powers we are giving this superboard. In subclause (3) of clause 17, reference is made to the fact that a committee of the commission may, in accordance with the rules and regulations of the commission, exercise all the powers and duties of the commission.

Subclause (6) of the same clause refers to the fact that the president and vice president shall not both sit on any hearing before a committee of the commission. The explanatory note for subclause (6) reads as follows:

> The purpose of the amendment is to make sure that the president or the vice president shall not be placed in the position of having to sit upon a review of his own decision.

I am concerned because I think it boils down to the fact that the commission will be sitting in judgment on its own decisions. I think that this is too much power to give to any commission without some check or balance being provided. The commission should be made subject to review by some body other than the commission itself. I do not like the idea of setting up a commission which is going to make the rules, see that they are carried out, and rule on whether or not its own rules have been broken. This should be subject to review by the elected representatives of the people.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I should deal first of all with the point made by the hon. member for Lisgar which arises from the fact that we are attempting to create here something which does not exist as far as any of the other boards are concerned. This is a capacity for review within the organization itself before there can be anything that is properly an appeal.

The Board of Transport Commissioners can with a quorum of two make a decision now, the only recourse following that decision being to the courts or to the governor in council. We thought it would be desirable to have an intermediate stage and to have this review, and I think that is desirable. The fact that we have sought to make this provision has created certain technical problems; there is no doubt about that. I think that if the hon. member for York South—I say this with my usual hesitation before an eminent counsel —construed that part of subclause (4) that he read to mean that no member of that committee could sit in review, whether or not he sat on the original case, then that is not what is intended. It is quite clear that one or other of the ex-officio members, either the president or vice president, should always sit in review.

Mr. Lewis: Would the minister inquire about this from his advisers? I cannot see any other possible interpretation.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member is probably right. All I am saying is that that was not the intention. It is perfectly clear from the explanatory note to subclause (6) that that could not be the correct interpretation of the draftsman's intention. For that reason, once I have listened to the various views I will ask to have the clause stand, so that the lawyers can look at it overnight and satisfy themselves on these points.

With respect to the president or vice president sitting in review, my view would be that only in quite unusual circumstances would the president preside over one of the committees, and then the vice president preside over the review, because this would tend to create certain problems concerning personalities and good relations that might be undesirable.

What I think will happen in most cases is that neither the president nor the vice president will sit on the original hearing, but where there are really quite important hearings and it is felt that there is need for a larger bench to start with, then the vice president will probably sit. In that case the president would be available to preside over the review. So that if it is not clear that only those who have sat on the original hearing are excluded from sitting on the review and the bill does not mean this, then I will see it is redrafted to mean that, because that is what is intended.

This goes a long way, of course, to meeting the problem mentioned by the hon. member for Acadia. However, I would also point out that we were warned by certain eminent members of the bar, here, that we should have some laymen on this board. I think that particularly in the case of reviews it would be very desirable not to have too much expertise and perhaps have a little more common sense. But I do not think that this will create any very great difficulty.

I agree with the hon. member for Acadia that it is not necessary to prescribe specially designated committees. I happen to be the sponsor of this bill, and I happen to think that this is advisable. I know the hon. gentleman does not think it is advisable. Though we are agreed on a lot of things and we cannot agree on everything. I happen to think it preferable to do it in this way.

I would not think it was preferable, Mr. Chairman, if there were not power in the commission to alter the composition of these committees from time to time, because I think that is very desirable. For example, you will get someone who is stale on one of these committees and wants to move to another, and as far as I can see there is nothing in the legislation to stop that happening at any time. If there is, then we will make sure by looking at the language carefully that this is changed, because that is not what is intended. Just because the commission is large I do not want it to be unwieldy; I want it to be wieldy—whatever that means.

I am quite prepared to take another look at this matter of the quorum. I must say that I have already revealed today that in many respects I am old-fashioned. I like to think that people are going to act responsibly and that it is not necessary to make a lot of detailed rules to make sure that they will.

I cannot conceive of a situation arising where, on one of these reviews, only two members would be sitting, and I say that for this reason. I think the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary was wrong in thinking that this commission would be bound by the rules of solidarity that so obviously bind cabinets. The commissioners do not have to agree or do not have to pretend to agree. Therefore I think that in a review it would be very inexpedient and silly to have an even number of members sitting; surely it is desirable to have an odd number so you can get a majority decision.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I will look at this point about whether a special quorum should be prescribed, but I really do not think this is necessary. I do not think it would do any harm to make the quorum three in number, though I would not want to make it any larger because there might be circumstances where it could cause undue delays if it were larger than three. But for review purposes I do not see any objection to that; and if we have to make some other amendments in order to make the position technically exact I would be prepared to consider this too.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, dealing with section 17 of Bill No. C-231, I really feel that consideration of the membership of these committees could go on for days and days because there are probably many different opinions on the matter. I believe we can nevertheless say that the membership suggested in the bill is satisfactory and deserves a trial.

On the other hand, something else is of concern to me. In the previous speakers' remarks, I detected a tendency to avoid giving authority to the president and the vice president lest they abuse it. As far as I am concerned, I feel this bill seeks to put some order in a confused situation, namely, that of transport. We should give this commission and its leaders, the president and vice president who will be the kingpins of the commission, sufficient authority to enable them to operate efficiently. But if all powers are delegated in such a way as to neutralize their influence and give control to each and everyone, we will find ourselves in the position described in the old saying: Too many cooks spoil the broth. It is to be expected that those who will be appointed to those functions will have sufficient experience of men and things to be able to judge objectively.

Should it happen that in the course of ordinary or extraordinary affairs, applicants are not satisfied with the rulings even after having appealed and having been heard by the colleagues of the commission members, they can always go before the courts or even call on the government in council.

Mr. Chairman, I have three questions to put to the minister. In fact, what I have to ask is related to matters of much greater concern to me than the membership of this commission, which I find acceptable and satisfactory although it may not be perfect. But, who will find this a perfect formula? And, perhaps, the three questions I intend to ask should have been asked during consideration of clause 16, or perhaps I should wait till later on during consideration of clause 17, but, with your permission, I shall raise them now, because I feel they are important.

I am of the opinion, Mr. Chairman, that this commission will constantly face conflicts of jurisdiction between the provinces and the federal government. For my own satisfaction, and probably for the satisfaction of my colleagues, I should like to direct the following question to the minister; it is divided into three parts.

First, were the provinces consulted before this bill was drafted, in order to avoid, encroachment and conflicts of jurisdiction as much as possible? When this bill is passed and, in the normal course of events, in the exercise of its functions, when this transport commission comes into conflict with the provincial departments of transport, what provision has been made for regular consultations, so that these conflicts, these differences of opinion or this duplication of authority may not get too serious and take regrettable proportions? And if after these consultations, this dialogue between the Canadian Transport Commission and the provincial bodies, no agreement is reached, the matter can then be taken to the courts of law. But has the hon. minister considered a superior court of arbitration to solve conflicts of jurisdiction between the provinces and the commission?

Mr. Chairman, let us not delude ourselves; there will be conflicts. Indeed, the bill has yet to be passed and echoes of conflicting opinions reach us from certain provinces. Considering the sweet disposition of the hon. minister, I know he is not looking for difficulties, for conflicts; on the contrary, he wishes to lessen them.

I shall repeat my question, then. Has there been any consultation with the provinces before the bill was drafted? Have regular meetings been provided for, in the discharge of this commission's duties, in order precisely to remove and prevent difficulties? If agreement is impossible, has provision been made for a higher arbitration board which would settle the disputes between the federal government and the provinces?

I should like to have the minister's opinion on these three points.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I think, first of all, there has been misunderstanding about one aspect of this bill, and that is that aspect relating to motor transport. I do not think anyone has questioned the over-all jurisdiction of this parliament over railways that have been incorporated by parliament. Certainly over steamships and all forms of navigation parliament's jurisdiction is supreme. A canoe, even, cannot be regulated by a provincial government. Parliament's jurisdiction over aviation has been clearly settled by the highest courts. The only area it seems to me in which any conflict can arise is in the question of the limits of jurisdiction of this parliament over motor transport. We thought until 1954, when the Privy Council made its decision—one of the last decisions applying to Canada—that the jurisdiction over road traffic was exclusively provincial. The courts decided—and this does not apply to those driving private motorcars of course—that when a commercial carrier operating a bus or a truck crosses the provincial boundary and serves more than one province, or when he leaves Canada to go to a foreign country, he is under the jurisdiction, and the exclusive jurisdiction, of this parliament.

At that time we had no machinery for carrying out that jurisdiction. The provinces had been accustomed to carrying it out. This parliament passed the Motor Vehicle Transport Act, as I think it was called, which enabled the government of Canada to confer upon provincial agencies—not upon the provinces, because we cannot do that, and the courts have decided that we cannot delegate anything to a province—certain authority. We made these provincial agencies into federal agencies for purposes over which parliament has jurisdiction. On the whole this has worked pretty well. A year or two ago decisions were made in the courts of Manitoba and of another province—at the moment I do not have that at my fingertips—which called into question the capacity of these agencies effectively to carry out this jurisdiction. These cases have not yet gone to the final court. I do not think any one of them has got to the Supreme Court. It may that the Supreme Court in its wisdom may take a different view from that of the courts below, and that the problem will not arise.

We felt when we were legislating for all forms of transport coming under the exclusive jurisdiction of this parliament, that we should have a provision so that we would not be caught a second time with no way of dealing with a problem. It could be chaotic if there were no legal way of dealing with it. We informed the provincial governments that we proposed introducing such a provision. We did not feel we should consult them about this because this is within the exclusive jurisdiction of parliament.

If I were the premier of Manitoba or Quebec—and I am not likely to be either—

Mr. Ricard: That is the wisest thing you have said.

Mr. Pickersgill: —but if I were, and if someone in the legislature said to me, "Did you first consult Ottawa before introducing this legislation that is exclusively within provincial legislation?" I would say, "Of course not. It is our business; it is not theirs". I feel the same way about legislation exclusively within the jurisdiction of parliament, as this is.

Though we are grateful to the provinces for allowing these agencies over the years to act as agencies of the federal government, for its purposes, we also expressed satisfaction, and said we did not want to disturb this arrangement if it did not need to be disturbed. We pointed out that all we are seeking to do in this bill is to have reserve power in case it became necessary to use it, so that there would be law and not anarchy in this field, in certain circumstances. This is all we are asking parliament to do.

We also intend to have a conference with the provinces. All of them I think have now shown their willingness to come to such a conference to discuss not only this matter but a number of other matters affecting motor transport, primarily of provincial concern, in which we seek to be helpful. This is on the administrative side. We want the maximum co-operation in that field, and I think most provincial governments want that also.

So far as our strictly legislative function is concerned, the courts have decided that that is exclusively federal. I think, therefore, that we discharged every obligation properly ours in informing the provinces in advance of what we were doing, and that we were doing this, not because of dissatisfaction with the provinces but only as a precaution in case of need.

Mr. Hamilton: I have two questions I should like to ask the minister for the purpose of clarification. The first concerns clause 17 (5). If the minister has the bill in front of him he will see that it says:

> At any hearing of the commission for the purpose of making an order or giving any direction, leave, sanction or approval in respect of any matter under the jurisdiction of the commission, the commission may...permit the representative or agent of any provincial or municipal government or any association or other body representing the interests of shippers or consignees in Canada to appear and be heard—

On the other hand, when we go back to subclause (4) we find it reads as follows:

> Where an order, rule or direction made by a committee of the commission in respect of a matter related to a particular mode of transport, not being a matter of a specific rate, licence or certificate, is objected to by an operator...the commission shall, otherwise than by that committee of the commission, review the order, rule or direction—

It is obvious here on a layman's reading that when an operator objects to a ruling of the commission a review shall be made, but when a provincial government or a municipal government or any group of shippers feels aggrieved, all they are allowed to do is to make representations. Is there any reason why this latter group of people should not have the same rights of review, if a decision goes against them?

Mr. Pickersgill: All that is intended in this review in subsclause 4 is a review in cases where one kind of carrier considers he has been unfairly treated as compared with another kind of carrier. It is not intended that the full commission shall review the decision of a committee when the dispute is between, say, a shipper and a carrier. In such cases the ordinary rules will apply and the parties will have access to the courts, to the minister or to the governor in council as the case may be, depending upon the existing legislation, which is not disturbed.

Because we are bringing all the modes of transport under one commission and because these committees are being set up it was thought that the railway committee, for example, might make a decision which some carrier who had not even been present at the hearing believed was unfair to his interests. In such cases he would be able to ask for a full review by the commission. That is the purpose of this provision.

Mr. Hamilton: I am satisfied with that answer. I think it clarifies what was in the minds of those who drafted the bill.

My second question arises from clause 17(3) which states:

> Notwithstanding anything in the Railway Act or the National Energy Board Act governing matters before the commission, a committee of the commission may, in accordance with the rules and regulations of the commission, exercise all the powers and duties of the commission—

My question has to do with the National Energy Board Act about whose background and purpose I happen to know something. Can the minister give an example of a provision in that act which could be ignored by the commission in the exercise of this power under 17(3)?

Mr. Pickersgill: When we come to a later clause dealing with commodity pipe lines the hon. member will find there is special provision in respect of combined pipe lines carrying oil and or gas, and some other commodities. Those carrying only oil and or gas would remain exclusively within the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board. There is a special provision to avoid duplicate hearings. The intention is that, notwithstanding anything contained in the National Energy Board Act, combined hearings would be legal. I think that when we come to the particular clause I have mentioned the hon. gentleman will understand what is involved.

Mr. Nugent: I could not altogether understand what the minister was saying with regard to the commission reviewing decisions of committees. I believe he said that members of the committee which had made the decision would be present on the commission. If that is not correct, I should like the hon. gentleman to say so. If that was his meaning, can he explain why he thinks it would be desirable for members of the committee who had heard an application to be present as members of the commission reviewing the decision?

Mr. Pickersgill: I must have made my point badly, because it is the exact opposite which was meant. In the case of a review it is intended that the people who were at the original hearing should not take part; the review would be made by other members of the commission.

Mr. Nugent: Another point arises. Does not the minister consider that a member who is normally, say, a member of the transport committee but who had not been a member of the committee hearing the application might sit on the commission as a member in order to give the specialized viewpoints of the committee to the commission? I would point out that the wording of this clause does not make it clear that this would be permitted. The wording contains the expression "otherwise than of that committee". Has the minister given consideration to the desirability of having a member of a particular committee, one who had not taken part in a hearing, making his services available as a member of the commission reviewing a case?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is exactly what should happen, in my opinion. I have now been given a little advice on the point raised by the hon. member for York South. I am told that in the opinion of the draftsmen, what is barred is a review by the same committee. But a member of a committee can be on the review board in his capacity as a commissioner, provided he is not prohibited by the procedures described in clause 19.

However, a member of a committee could be on the review in his capacity as a commissioner, if not prohibited by the procedures prescribed under clause 19. The commission would have the flexibility regarding a quorum under clause 19 which would enable them to set minima higher than the Railway Act, where needed, but which would not be tied down in law. It was intended to provide a review that would be representative of the modes of transport under the jurisdiction of the board.

The hon. member for York South shakes his head, and possibly the hon. member for Peace River did so also. I would not like to ask the committee to pass this clause tonight, but if we have covered all the points that hon. members wish to raise I would like the committee to stand the clause so that I can examine these points and see if further clarification of the language is necessary.

Mr. Pugh: It is a good idea that the minister review this clause. A review will take place where another mode of transport feels that it has not got a square deal, in licensing or some other matter, and it would seem that the point put forward by the hon. member for York South and the hon. member for Springfield is a good one, namely that all the members of the commission serve on the review board because the more brains on it the better would be the review.

In each case there would probably be two competing modes of transportation, if not more, and having all the brains of the commission acting on the review board would be the best approach. The larger the quorum the more in line would the review board be with our courts of appeal, and with our final court of appeal in Canada, which is served by quite a number of judges.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): What happens the order when it is under review? For example the commission will make a ruling or an order. When that order comes under review in accordance with the circumstances outlined in clause 17, is the order allowed to stand or is it frozen while under review?

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman does not mind I would like him to let that question stand with the clause, so that I may answer it after further advice.

Mr. Nugent: Under subclause (4) a review of an order, rule or direction may be asked for by certain specific people, whereas under subclause (5) those who may be heard at a hearing are a much broader class, including municipalities, provincial governments, etc.; but the provision for review does not give this latter group the right to ask for a review. I notice that under clause 18 an intervener can ask for an appeal, but I wish to ask the minister is there any specific purpose why this review procedure is available only to certain people who may ask for it?

Mr. Pickersgill: The purpose is not to review decisions between shippers and carriers. It is only to review decisions made with respect to one carrier that another carrier thinks are unfair. It is a very limited kind of thing. The important cases are not going to be disputes between carriers. They are going to be the disputes between shippers and carriers, and it is in that kind of dispute that municipalities and provincial governments, as is historically the case, would be most interested. In the case of that kind of dispute the ordinary rules of appeal that now exist will continue to prevail.

It was thought desirable that instead of having disputes between carriers brought in the first instance to the governor in council, and to the courts, it would be better for the commission itself to review them in order to save a certain amount of unnecessary difficulty.

Mr. Nugent: I can understand the purpose of the review procedure as explained by the minister, but I feel that this procedure could be put to better purpose if used more broadly. I have in mind certain problems that have arisen from time to time. I am thinking particularly of the Air Transport Board and its dealing with northern transportation areas. Its duty to provide good air transport service for Canada was sometimes lost sight of because of the vehicle that it chose as the best insurance that good transport service should be available, and in certain cases that board decided to restrict competition in order to make sure that there should be a good economic return for the operator chosen, from which he could provide good equipment and service.

On occasions when I was struggling with the Air Transport Board, trying to get an improvement in service, or especially an innovation in the service, I found that the board had taken the interests of the operator so much to heart, and was so intent on making sure that competition should be restricted, that sometimes it forgot that providing air service was really its number 1 purpose, and that restricting competition, thus making the existing service profitable for the operator, was only secondary to that first aim.

It seems to me that if the decisions are going to be made by a committee of the commission which operates in the same manner as committees of the Air Transport Board have operated, the committee will become air oriented and may put the public interest and imaginative air expansion in a position secondary to the well-being of the country. The government has missed an opportunity by not giving municipalities, provinces and interested groups of citizens in certain areas being served the opportunity of asking for a review by the commission, in the hope that the whole commission, not being air or railway orientated, would think in terms of providing a little more imaginative service to the country. In this way the commission could look at the situation from a point of view concerned less with the financial well-being or health of an air carrier operating in an area. The commission would therefore realize the needs of a community or a district to be served, and make things a little more tough in respect of the type of services that should be provided if a carrier is to continue to operate.

If my proposal was accepted I think the public interest would be put first and the well-being of the carrier would be considered second. This might give an impetus to the provision or innovation of better service. It is my submission that a committee which deals exclusively with a specific type of carrier, as committees of the Air Transport Board have done, would become over-solicitous about the welfare of a carrier, to the extent that it would be slow to allow any new ideas or any new competition which might provide the service needed to meet new demands. We must have imaginative services which will help open up new areas and create new business. This would not only permit competition but would help the country become financially healthy.

When the government is reconsidering the drafting of this clause, I hope it will seriously consider what happened in the past and make provision for a general review procedure under clause 5 on the application of those who are permitted to intervene. The public point of view could then be considered as a last step before an order became official, without the necessity of an appeal to the minister.

If that suggestion has been considered and rejected, I hope the minister will explain why it has been rejected. Perhaps it is cumbersome but I believe that bodies such as the Air Transport Board tend to look after their own affairs rather than take into consideration the changing needs of this country for a more viable transportation system.

Mr. Pickersgill: If we can agree to stand the clause I should like to give the suggestion some consideration before making a reply. Perhaps hon. members would agree to stand clause 17 and go on to a consideration of clause 18.

The Chairman: Does the committee agree to stand clause 17.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 17 stands.

On clause 18—Appeal.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, my remarks in respect of this particular clause are directed to the minister. In reading subclauses 1 and 2 it is apparent that any applicant who is refused a licence by the board under the Aeronautics Act, a motor vehicle undertaking or a certificate of public convenience and necessity can appeal to the minister.

This clause states that after an appeal to the minister he shall thereupon certify his opinion to the commission, and the commission shall comply therewith. In this regard

I place emphasis on the word "shall". When one looks at sub-clause 2 he will see that if a licence or certificate of public convenience and necessity is revoked the matter can be appealed to the minister and the minister shall certify his opinion to the commission. The commission is compelled to obey explicitly the minister's direction.

For the sake of efficiency we are turning great sections of our economy, represented by the spectrum of transportation, over to a board. For the sake of efficiency in handling matters in respect of granting or revoking licences, we are removing the provisions which allow a review by the governor in council, and placing that in the hands of the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is precisely what is now contained in the Aeronautics Act.

Mr. Hamilton: That fact does not destroy my argument. In fact, it supports the general argument I want to make in respect of the amendment which will be moved by the hon. member for Peace River to clause 20 of the bill. We must have some form of parliamentary control. There must be some machinery to provide control over the board and over the ministers.

It was my intention to give the minister a preview of the argument I intend to make when we consider clause 20. I have pointed out the word "shall". If that compulsion is contained in the Aeronautics Act, that supports my argument that parliament should not be put into a limbo in this regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am one of those old-fashioned individuals who believes in responsible government. A minister is responsible to parliament and is answerable to parliament for everything he does. The reason the appeal was made applicable to the minister rather than the governor in council, in these matters was that advisers to Her Majesty and the governor have many things to do, as the hon. gentleman knows, having been one of Her Majesty's advisers—although his advice is temporarily not being sought.

If one provides for too many appeals to the governor in council one of two things will happen; they will either be dealt with in a very cursory manner or will be delayed inordinately. In respect of matters of licences and things of that sort people want promptitude, even though the answer is sometimes no. The worst thing that can happen is to keep an application in suspense for an indefinite period.

Perhaps this will place a burden on the minister, but I think it would be a much greater burden if it were placed on the governor in council. As hon. members know, there is always an opportunity during the consideration of the minister's estimates and motions to go into supply, to call the minister to account and answer questions. Certainly if we set up a committee with a better and more expert staff to deal with these transport problems there would be more careful scrutiny of these matters. I am all for it, as the hon. gentleman knows. I do not mean to prejudge what will happen when we reach clause 20, but I am all for the principle of having a committee of this house with expert assistance to keep these matters under scrutiny.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to delay the committee too long, but in reading the explanation of this clause I notice that it says:

To provide for appeals to the minister in lieu of appeals to the governor in council—

So even if this can be done under the Aeronautics Act, that explanation led me astray. I say unequivocally that even if this is a change, I support what the minister just said. It takes so long to get a technical matter through cabinet, with 18 or 20 members, that it is not worth the time it takes in trying to improve the efficiency of a complicated operation such as the transportation business. I support the principle that we should have this type of efficiency, but at the same time I warn the minister in respect of the general principle contained in clause 20. I have been trying to persuade the minister to look favourably on our suggestions when we reach clause 20.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, what the hon. gentleman is saying is that it is much easier to behead one man than 20.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I thought there was a difference of opinion between the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the minister, but apparently there is not. As far as I see it, it is much easier to get the head of one minister on a platter than it is to get the heads of 20. However, I rose on another point which concerns me with respect to clause 18. I refer to the distinction drawn between the rights of an intervener under subclause 1 and subclause 2. As I read this clause, under subclause 1 an applicant or an intervener on an application to the commission for a licence may make an appeal to the minister for a final decision; but under subclause 2, which has to do with the power of the commission to act in the matter of suspending, cancelling or amending licences, as I read the subclause there is no provision for an appeal by an intervener.

I appreciate that it may be unlikely that in the case of a licence being suspended or cancelled there will be a desire by an intervener to appeal; but when it comes to the matter of amending a licence—and I make this remark because of some observations that I had occasion earlier to bring to the attention of the Minister of Transport with respect to the operation of the Air Transport Board—in some cases this almost amounts to the granting of a new licence. There may be occasions in such cases when an intervener may be desirous of making an appeal to the minister on a decision of the commission. As I recall it, not too long ago the Aeronautics Act provided for an appeal to the minister by an applicant but not by an intervener.

Mr. Pickersgill: That was a change parliament already made in this session, I think.

Mr. Barnett: That matter was in my view rectified. I raise this question now because I have some concern that we may be faced in the future with a situation similar to that which has prevailed in the past, where an intervener who may have a perfectly legitimate reason for wanting to object to the action of the commission in respect to amending a licence may not, as I read this subclause, be able to do so.

I am wondering whether the minister has any particular reason to offer why this distinction is drawn between the power of appeal of an intervener in subclause 1 and the right of appeal to the minister in subclause 2. Could the minister enlighten the committee on this point?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, it was a departure to permit an intervener to appeal in the case of an original applicant. In most cases where there is an application for some kind of service, it is by somebody who has never been giving the service. The interveners are nearly always people who are already in the business and who, generally speaking, are contending that the existing operators are giving all the service that is required and the result of having another person in the operation would be, instead of making it possible for somebody to make a living, to make two or three losers out of the situation rather than having someone able to conduct a viable operation.

There have been a number of cases where the board has granted licences and interveners have felt they were really being done out of their livelihood. For that reason I recommended to parliament, and parliament saw fit to accept the suggestion, that in those circumstances an intervener should be allowed to appeal. The other case, of course, could only happen with respect to somebody who was already in the operation. It was thought that the intervener would almost invariably be an operator already in the business and that in these circumstances the only person who would be seriously aggrieved would be likely to be the applicant. We took this view for that reason. The alternative might have been provided. However, within reason I think we want to provide for appeals, but no one in his senses wants to turn any minister of the crown into a court of appeal.

It is not at all desirable to set up independent agencies to deal with these matters and then encourage appeals from them to politicians. It seems to me that for the time being we should wait a little while and see how this provision operates. If a number of cases arise wherein there seems to be a need for this other kind of intervention, a change might be made. But in my experience and the experience of the deputy minister, who was one of those who advised me with regard to the suggestion that parliament accepted recently, it was only in the case of original applications that there seemed to be any real need for an appeal.

Mr. Barnett: I certainly agree with the minister that it is not desirable that it should be common practice to launch frequent appeals to the minister, and in effect this should be the court of last resort only to be used in extreme cases.

In recognition of the right of parliament to whom the minister, as he has been saying, is responsible, to review matters and ensure that in the long run at least, and in general practice, the action of a commission of this kind is in accordance with the public interest, consideration should be given to the suggestion made. I could cite an example of the kind of situation that I foresee. I know that in the coastal area where more than one air line has been allowed to operate, an application was made by an air line for an amendment to an existing licence which, as I recall it, was described as an area licence. This would in effect have given that particular air line—at least in the view of its competitors—a position of a virtual monopoly, which would put the competitors out of business. In this particular case the Air Transport Board did not see fit to agree to the entire application for an amended licence but, in my view, if they had, then the interveners in the case would have very legitimate grounds for making an appeal. In the light of a possibility of that kind, I fail to understand the minister's logic in suggesting that in his view appeals would be more frequent if an intervener had in effect the same rights under subclause 2 as it is proposed that they should have under subclause 1. This seemed to be the only argument that he advanced as to why this distinction was made, namely that he did not want to see appeals become too frequent.

However, I fail to see that that argument really holds in respect of the distinction between the original and the amended application which, certainly in my experience, is the same as the application for a new licence. I wonder whether the minister could take another look at this particular aspect of the bill because it seems to me that we should seek to avoid the situation to which he referred earlier, which eventually resulted in an amendment to the Aeronautics Act. In my view at least, certain parties had a very legitimate reason to feel aggrieved over the fact that under the law they did not have the same right of appeal as another party.

In view of past experience with respect to the Aeronautics Act it does not seem a good thing that, in effect, we will be allowing inequity to be perpetuated under the bill which is now before us.

Mr. Pickersgill: I really do not think that the problem is sufficiently grave, and one has to draw the line in these matters somewhere. If such a situation does arise at some time in the future, then parliament of course will be able to remedy it.

Mr. Barnett: What the minister said is perfectly true, that parliament will be able to remedy it; but sometimes these grievances and injustices exist for quite a long time before parliament is able to persuade His Excellency's advisers to take the necessary initiative so as to make it possible for parliament to act on some of these matters. I cannot do any more than urge the minister to take this initiative at this time. He may well be correct in saying that the situation may not arise during his tenure of office and that it may not turn out to be his individual headache. However it seems to me that he is leaving the way open for some sort of headache to arise for his successor, or possibly for the future member for Comox-Alberni, who may have to wrestle with it. In view of the fact that he has agreed to reconsider the preceding clause, it seems to me that a very minor drafting amendment could cover this point.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I have been quite flexible and reasonable. I feel that in this particular case I am not disposed at the present time to go beyond what is in the bill.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I accept the views of the minister regarding the desirability of this appeal being made to the minister. As a matter of fact I think that the provisions in the Railway Act under which appeals are made to the governor in council are not worth the paper on which they are written. When you go back over the past 20 years, I wonder how many appeals were made under that section? I suppose that in some instances they did result in the establishment of royal commissions from which some reasonably good results flowed, but I think that while the minister has a certain judicial function he is also acting administratively and it is nice to know that the fact that he is in front of us makes it possible for us to take pot shots at him if we disagree with the way in which he is exercising his administrative functions.

With this in mind, may I ask the minister whether there is not a possibility that he has only gone far enough to make this an alternative remedy? Under the previous subclauses and subsequent clauses of the bill the transport commission is given the same powers as the Board of Transport Commissioners, which include the right of appeal to the governor in council. The wording in subclause 1 of clause 18 is "may appeal to the minister". Unless there is something of which I am not aware it seems to me that this means that an appellant might exercise the right—which he would have in view of the fact that there is an appeal from the Board of Transport Commissioners which is automatically given to the transport commission—to appeal to the governor in council in most matters, and this is just an additional means of appeal. The drafting may have covered this.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think there is any possibility of the duplication of appeals. The appeals to the minister are in respect of licensing, and there is no appeal to the governor in council left in these particular clauses. The appeals to the governor in council are under the Railway Act, and in so far as the railways are concerned they have to come to parliament because they do not require a licence but an act of parliament. So this kind of situation does not arise with railways. The appeals are in respect of disputes between shippers and carriers and they are still made to the governor in council.

Mr. Baldwin: What I meant was that under the bill the transport commission is put in the same position as the Board of Transport Commissioners. There are appeals on questions of law to the Supreme Court and appeals on other questions to the governor in council. If clause 18 was not here there would be no question but that any appeal could be taken from the transport commission. However, in view of the fact that the people concerned who appeared before the transport commission are given the right to appeal to either body, this is an additional remedy and I wonder whether it is cumulative.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think so. I think the hon. gentleman will find that the appeals are under the Railway Act and that the only appeals to the governor in council are those provided for under the Railway Act. They are not being disturbed, but they would not apply to other aspects of the work of the transport commission.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to say something about this, especially in connection with clause 16 which has been allowed to stand, and my remarks are made on the alternative rather than the appeals. Perhaps we should call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether we have not exhausted the discussion on clause 18. If so perhaps we could pass it. If the hon. gentleman wishes to make a speech on clause 17 he will not be stopped from doing that by our passage of clause 18.

Mr. Nugent: The point I am making is that if we broaden clause 17 so as to make better use of the review procedure it could entail a curtailment of the appeal procedure, or some necessary change in it. Therefore I think that so long as clause 17 is undecided in its final form, clause 18 should stand with it. Since it is ten o'clock and I would like to make some remarks on the appeal procedure in clause 18, I think we should stop now. Perhaps tomorrow the minister would have some better ideas concerning clause 17.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, I was just going to make an appeal to the committee to continue a little longer this evening and try to get a little more done. There are still many clauses in this bill. As hon. members know, this is not the only piece of legislation we are going to have before us before this session can be concluded.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I know the minister has found me very co-operative with regard to this legislation. I would be the first to say the minister, himself, has been very co-operative in accepting suggestions for changes in the bill. However, I believe we have made real progress today. Perhaps we should agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona with regard to broadening the review provisions, so that less use would have to be made of the appeal procedure.

In the light of these remarks, and in the light of the fact that clause 17 is being allowed to stand, perhaps it is a good suggestion to at least hear more argument with regard to clause 18. If the minister is not agreeable to allowing clause 18 to stand with clause 17, then I think we should call it ten o'clock in the hope that we can make equally good progress tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: We cannot make any progress tomorrow because the house is going to take other business. I would be quite prepared to stand clause 18 if we could deal with clause 19 and reach clause 20 by ten o'clock. I am not suggesting we should pass clause 20.

If I might add one word, I may say that I know one hon. member wishes to move an amendment to clause 20. I think it would be desirable to have that amendment before the committee for consideration over the two-day period. If there were any disposition to deal with clause 19 and call clause 20, I would not ask to have clause 20 passed. We could just have it called so this amendment could be before the committee. It would be quite a convenience to me and, I believe, to the committee.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Ten o'clock has been called.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I think what the minister has proposed meets with some approval here. We would like to see this amendment to clause 20 so that we can consider it tomorrow. This proposal looks all right so far as I am concerned.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could we agree to stand clause 18, pass clause 19 and call clause 20?

The Chairman: Is it agreed to stand clause 18?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 18 stands.

The Chairman: Clause 19?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Ten o'clock has been called. I can see the clock and it appears to be six or seven minutes after ten. I think, in order to proceed, you have to have unanimous consent. Other members have called ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will be submitting to the house for its consideration item No. 121, the resolution preceding the bill to establish the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. We will then submit, if time permits, item 117, the bill to amend the Judges Act, and depending on the time available item 86, the bill respecting the pension plans for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works. Then we will deal with the resolution preceding the bill to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act. We would also like to consider item 104, the reference to a committee, which I believe will not likely require any debate, as well as the motion on today's notice paper under government notices of motion to refer to a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons the authority to inquire into the matter of pensions paid to retired civil servants or their dependants.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps we could pass that right now.

Mr. McIlraith: I would be very glad to. We would also wish to take the motion referring the subject matter of the national anthem to the special standing committee; and if there is further time the motion creating the committee to deal with the temporary rules.

It will be noticed, Mr. Speaker, that I have indicated quite a list of items, but I did so bearing in mind that certain of the motions are rather simple and might be called out of the order I indicated, depending on the time available.

In view of the interjection just made I am quite happy to—

Mr. Churchill: Oh no.

RESEARCH

PROVISION FOR GRANTS TO CORPORATIONS FOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

On the order: Government orders.

December 20—House in committee of the whole on Bill C-252, an act to provide general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and development in Canada and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act.—The Minister of Industry.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): I should indicate one other item of business which I believe does have the concurrence of the house, and that is the motion to withdraw from the committee of the whole house the bill providing for general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and referring it to the standing committee on industry, research and energy development. That request was made some days ago when the measure was last before the house, both by members of the official opposition and members of the N.D.P. group, and I should like to make that reference at some time. In view of the way the request was made to do that tonight, it might be agreeable, in order to get the committee organized to deal with the matter, to move the motion now.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIlraith: Then if I have unanimous consent I move, seconded by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill):

That Order No. 100 being the house in committee of the whole on Bill C-252, an act to provide general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and development in Canada and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act, be discharged and that the said bill be referred to the standing committee on industry, research and energy development.

Motion agreed to.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL—MEASURE TO ENSURE CONTINUATION OF SERVICES

On the order: Government Orders.

December 16—House in committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:—

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the continuation of air traffic control services; to provide also for an increase in the remuneration of air traffic controllers.—The President of the Treasury Board.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, fortunately this item,

No. 118 on today's order paper, concerns legislation that is no longer required. Therefore I would ask the permission of the house to drop it from the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: Could we not do another one, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. McIlraith: That would be agreeable.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC SERVICE

JOINT COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER PENSIONS TO RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (for the Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Public Service of Canada be empowered to inquire into and report upon the matter of the pensions paid to retired civil servants or their dependants under the provisions of the Public Service Superannuation Act: and

That a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours of this resolution and requesting that house, if it concurs, to authorize the committee to inquire into and report upon this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

HISTORIC SITES—REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF MANOIR SIR ÉTIENNE TACHÉ

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) has a very definite pet subject and has of late become the sponsor of Sir John A. Macdonald.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

For my part, I should like to be the sponsor of a man quite as valorous, who served his country with quite as much enthusiasm, ability and intelligence, who was, at a certain time in our history, the partner of Sir John Macdonald and under whom the latter himself served, and I mean Sir Étienne Pascal Taché, a fine man.

I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that if I take up the cudgels for Sir Étienne Pascal Taché, I do it most objectively, because I must recognize that between him, who happens to be my ancestor and me, the descendant, there is very little in common.

First, Sir Étienne Pascal Taché was a Conservative which is clearly not in line with the views I hold. Then, he was a Royalist, to which I bear no resemblance. Finally, it has been said of him that he was a conciliator. My impression is that his descendant is more a provocateur.

Some hon. Members: Ah, ah.

Mr. Choquette: That is why, Mr. Speaker, having nothing in common with him whose cause I wish to plead tonight, I feel quite free to speak on his behalf and I ask the support of the government to pay a very special homage, in this centennial year, to the memory of this former prime minister of Canada, of this Father of Confederation who, in October 1864, presided over one of the first Quebec conferences which led, as we all know, to the pact of confederation the value of which it is the intention to underline in 1967.

Sir Étienne Pascal Taché was member for l'Islet in the House of Commons. He was later appointed to the legislative council. Queen Victoria knighted him—a title which I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, I will ever be given by Queen Elizabeth.

Sir Étienne Pascal Taché was also a great servant of the state and practiced his profession with great magnanimity, for he was a highly respected physician in his locality. He was a Canadian in the true sense. He took part in the war of 1812. He was obviously anti-annexionist. He wanted Canada to be truly Canadian. I am convinced that if he were living to-day, he would certainly be one of those great Canadians who endeavour to fight those who want to tear the country apart.

That is why we are proud to pay tribute to those who want to keep Canada in its integrity and we of the government are ardent supporters of that theory. That is why I should like the government to make a special effort to pay tribute to the memory of Sir Étienne Pascal Taché by granting the request of the Montmagny Junior Chamber of Commerce and restoring the Taché manor. If it is impossible to reach an agreement with the interested parties, let a monument be erected to his memory, or in any event, let the government do something to honour him.

Mr. Speaker, before bringing my remarks to a close, I should like to say that to celebrate the Centennial, the federal government should not hesitate to take initiatives on its own if, in certain cases, it cannot obtain the co-operation of other authorities. It was disgraceful to note absences, in 1967, which absences must be deplored. Provided the government ceases to rely on other authorities and assumes its responsibilities in the Centennial festivities, we will celebrate it in unison without banking on others to do it.

I feel this is a wonderful opportunity for the government to take the lead, without asking the co-operation of others who might be reticent about granting it, to pay tribute to the memory of Sir Étienne Pascal Taché.

Hon. John N. Turner (Member of the Administration): Mr. Speaker, tonight I have the honour to represent the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Laing). I listened with great interest to the historical account concerning Sir Étienne Pascal Taché, a patriot who took part in the war of 1812 and a physician by profession. He was the member for l'Islet in 1841 and minister of public works in 1848, under the Lafontaine-Baldwin government; prime minister, in 1856, in the so-called Taché-Macdonald administration; after that, he became legislative councillor and once again prime minister in 1864, under the Taché-Macdonald administration.

He presided over the Quebec conference in 1864, but this is not the only thing I am interested in, Mr. Speaker. I am also interested in the genealogy of this famous man.

Sir Étienne-Pascal Taché had several children, among which a daughter, Marie-Sophie-Malthilde Taché, who married François-Jacques-Albert Bender, a Montmagny lawyer, on September 10, 1844.

Several children were born of the Bender-Taché marriage, among which we note Marie-Éléonore-Eulalie-Henriette Bender, who became the wife of Mr. Phillippe-Auguste Choquette, lawyer, on August 29, 1883. Mr. Choquette sat in the House of Commons as a member for Montmagny in 1887, 1891 and 1896; a friend of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, he was appointed senator and then made a judge.

And of the Choquette-Bender marriage, Mr. Speaker, were issued several children, including Hon. Fernand Choquette, now a judge of the Quebec court of appeal and father of the august Choquette, the member for Lotbinière.

Now, not only because of the renown of his ancestor Étienne Pascal Taché, but also because of the drive, the energy, the intellectual powers of his descendant, the present member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), I shall personally recommend to the minister that this request be accepted.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD—INQUIRY AS TO PLANS FOR HONOURING BIRTHDAY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, it is a happy coincidence that I should be discussing one of the Fathers of Confederation after such an eloquent appeal by the lineal descendant of another Father of Confederation. I am not, of course, a lineal descendant of Sir Etienne Taché but I am a political and spiritual descendant of that great man, great Conservative and great Canadian, and I would like to say a word about his friend, Sir John A. Macdonald.

I was very pleased over the recess to read press releases to the effect that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) was considering taking steps that would bring about a national holiday in recognition of the birthday of our first prime minister. But I was sorry to discover when I came back to Ottawa that my expectations, and the expectations of a great number of Canadian people, were not being borne out in the actuality.

I am disappointed that the Prime Minister did not take the opportunity of giving a lead in this matter. It would have been very fitting indeed had the leader of a Liberal party taken the step which would have brought about in Canada a Sir John A. Macdonald day. I think the information contained in the press release is an inadequate recognition of a man so great as was Sir John A. I think we have reached a stage where we should have a full-fledged national holiday to honour this great Father of Confederation. It should be a full holiday and should not be for this year only, but imbedded permanently, so that we can set aside one day from the work-a-day routine and foster, if we can, greater pride in the achievements of so great a man.

I believe that it should have been done long ago, but Canadians are very remiss in honouring the men who have made our country great. In this field we have failed to follow the advice of one of our greatest, Joseph Howe, who said:

> A wise nation preserves its records, gathers up its muniments, decorates the tombs of its illustrious dead, repairs its great public structures and fosters national pride and love of country by perpetual reference to the sacrifices and glories of the past.

This is not a small and trifling matter. A nation, to be great, must emphasize those values which transcend the material and the mundane; and our centennial celebrations, Mr. Speaker, no matter how colourful or how jubilant, will be a wasted effort if they do not stimulate a deeper appreciation in all of us and a wider knowledge of the greatness of our past and of the men whose labour and wisdom have made us great.

We need not be reluctant to honour Sir John A. Macdonald. His work and worth entitle him to a high place among the nation builders of history. At the time of his death another great man, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, said of him:

> I think it can be asserted that for the supreme art of governing men, Sir John Macdonald was gifted as few men in any land or in any age were gifted; gifted with the most high of all qualities, qualities which would have made him famous wherever exercised and which would have shone all the more conspicuously the larger the theatre.

Magnificent words from a great man about a great man.

I am not satisfied, and I hope we in this parliament will not be satisfied with the small step that has been taken, although we must be gracious enough to recognize that at least a step has been taken. We find far too little recognition of the worth of the man who may be properly called, with all due respect to the great man referred to a moment ago, our greatest founding father.

Let us not be satisfied to leave it to the provinces and to the school children. May I here congratulate the education ministers in Nova Scotia, Ontario and Prince Edward Island who have given a holiday in this connection. Tomorrow the children in those provinces will get a half holiday or whole holiday, but will also get a little direction and some appreciation of the men who have made this country what it is. I think we can say that without the wisdom, the patience, the tolerance and the common sense of men like Sir John A. Macdonald, Étienne Taché and others, there might have been no Canadian nation.

Let those of us in this parliament of this nation, to which he gave so much, honour the name of Macdonald, acclaim his fame and contribute to the healthy and vigorous spirit of Canadianism which, heaven knows, we must all nurture and nourish as we prepare for our second century.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, anything I might say tonight after the oratory which has gone before must be by way of anticlimax. Suffice it to say that we have been raising noble ghosts tonight. Tomorrow we will celebrate that day in the manner indicated with some enthusiasm.

As to the question of adding to the list of national holidays, this has been studied, and the government intends to keep this matter under careful review. Meanwhile, with reference to this centennial year, the government has passed an order in council which establishes January 11, 1967, the anniversary of the birth of Canada's first prime minister, Sir John A. Macdonald, as a day of commemoration.

Many other steps have been and will be taken to honour Sir John. Festivities are to take place in Kingston on January 11, and I cannot think of any more appropriate place. On that occasion the Prime Minister will be present with other dignitaries. Bellevue House in Kingston, where Sir John lived, for a short period of time, is currently being restored as a national historic site. I am happy that I was among the first to be interested in this project and to recommend it to the government.

Another matter which I feel deserves national attention is the official resting place of Sir John A. at Cataraqui cemetery. It is a delicate matter as to how we should improve a cemetery memorial, but I think in due course this should be given careful and reverent consideration.

Bellevue House is being restored by this government as a national historic site at considerable expense. Two rooms are being furnished as they were during Sir John's residence, with other mementoes being added. The centennial commission has commissioned a special commemorative play relating to the centennial. This play will have its première in Ottawa on January 11. It is hoped that the play will be performed by amateur theatrical groups across the country. In addition, various other projects for the centennial, such as the confederation train and the caravans, will include appropriate tributes to our first prime minister.

As my hon. friend knows, the establishment of a national holiday is a much more complicated matter than may appear on the surface. This is not something that can be effected by order in council. It does in fact require a statute. When one realizes that education comes under the provisions of section 93 of the B.N.A. Act, and property and civil rights come under section 92 subsection 13, it is clear that in order to do what my friend now suggests would call for concurrent legislation by the federal as well as all the provincial governments. There are many important matters which must be taken into account in the establishment of a national holiday. It is not something that can be done lightly or easily.

The contribution of Sir John A. to our history is well known and it is not disputed by anyone in this house. Indeed, I think we all feel in a sense that we are his heirs and aspire to be worthy of what he and the other fathers of confederation have commenced.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—EDMONTON, ALTA.—COMPASSIONATE PAYMENT TO WIDOW ON DEATH OF CONSTABLE

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, December 16, I rose and asked a question of the hon. Solicitor General as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to address to the Solicitor General in connection with the death of the 23 year old R.C.M.P. constable in Edmonton who was shot, and who had been married less than 90 days. Is the cabinet going to make any compassionate payment to his young widow in view of the very short service of this officer, the fact that he had only been married about 90 days, and because he died as a result of a criminal act?

The Solicitor General replied:

> Mr. Speaker, we shall follow the policy laid down within the department in a matter of this kind.

I appreciate the opportunity of speaking for a few moments on this matter because it is one close to my heart. I have the greatest sympathy for the young widow, but primarily I am interested in this case because it is a perfect example of why the state should make payments to the innocent victims of criminal acts. This is a case where a young widow is left as a result of the death of an R.C.M.P. officer who we might say gave his life in the performance of his duties.

On June 8 in this house we discussed at some length a resolution which I had put on the order paper on January 20, 1966, almost a year ago now. No action, of course, has been taken; there was just some discussion on one day, June 8. The resolution was:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the expediency of introducing legislation for the creation of a criminal injuries compensation board to hear the pleas of persons who have suffered permanent injury or disability as the victims of crime and award compensation to such persons or their dependants as would seem fair in the circumstances, and wherever possible to do so, to impose payment of compensation by criminals to those they have injured.

In the course of the discussion of that resolution on June 8 I referred specifically to the case of the two widows with children of the two policemen who were shot down in cold blood by the Santa Claus murderer, Marcotte, in Montreal. I pointed out that they, being the widows of policemen, were eligible for some compensation from the policemen's benefit fund of the district in which their husbands performed their duties. I even made some reference to an event of 20 years ago in west Toronto where a Toronto policeman by the name of McQuillan was shot dead and his family, of course, benefited from the policemen's compensation fund of the city of Toronto. On June 8 I asked the question, what about those people who are not policemen and are killed? What about their families?

In the case of the young widow in Edmonton, I understand she will be eligible for some kind of a pension setup, might I say rather automatically, in the pension department of the R.C.M.P. But I would ask the cabinet, when they are establishing a pension or payment of some kind for this fine young woman, to bear in mind that there are many other families throughout Canada whose breadwinners were not policemen and to whom no compensation is now payable by the state. If we make a payment to this widow because her husband was a policeman, why cannot we make payment to other families injured or wronged because their breadwinners, or other members of their families were killed or injured as a result of criminal violence?

Compensation for the victims of criminal violence has been introduced in New Zealand; it became effective January 1, 1964. In March, 1964, Great Britain enacted compensatory legislation for the victims of crimes of violence. In July, 1965, California added a new section to its welfare and institution code to compensate the innocent victims of violent crimes. In July last the state of New York brought in a compensation fund for the innocent victims of violent crimes. In the case of New Zealand, payment is made in stated amounts over a period of time to those people who are being compensated by the state. In Great Britain they are paid one lump sum. In New York state it was ordered that they be paid one lump sum not exceeding $15,000, as it was felt that some people might commit crimes in order to benefit their family if the payments are going to be spread over a long number of years.

Here in Canada if a man is killed by a motor vehicle and the car owner does not have insurance or any estate the victim's family gets paid from the unsatisfied judgment fund. If he is killed by a motorcar the victim's family can collect money, but if he is killed by murder they get nothing unless he happens to be a policeman, in which case the R.C.M.P. or local police funds will compensate his family or his widow.

I sincerely hope that the cabinet will bear in mind the fact that this policeman gave his life for his country. The cabinet established a pension of $6,624 for chief superintendent René John Bélec who was compulsorily retired by the cabinet some time ago, and a pension of $1,562.80 per year for sub-inspector Joseph Hosanna Maurice Poitras of Montreal who was compulsorily retired. I would ask the cabinet to bear those figures in mind when they are establishing the pension for this young widow in Edmonton.

I hope it will be in the nature of $6,000 which we are now paying to former chief superintendent Bélec because such a pension would establish a precedent for the families of all the innocent victims of criminal acts in this country. We must in short order have legislation of that type on the nation's books.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member will acquit me of disrespect but I must point out that the matter of compensation to victims of crime does not come within the ministerial responsibility of the Solicitor General. However, I will be pleased to bring this question to the attention of my colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin).

So far as the widow of the member of the R.C.M.P. who was killed in Edmonton is concerned, I should like to advise the house that a claim is being made on her behalf to the Canadian Pension Commission under section 27(1) of the R.C.M.P. Superannuation Act. Under that act a pension is payable to the widow of a member whose death arose out of or was connected directly with his service in the force.

Before a pension becomes payable it must be ruled by the Canadian Pension Commission that death arose out of or was directly connected with the services of the R.C.M.P. constable while in the force. The matter is now before the Canadian Pension Commission and we expect a favourable ruling very shortly. The amount of the pension that will be paid will be determined by a schedule which is attached to the Pension Act, and I am not in a position to give that figure at this moment.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, January 11, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD

BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST CANADIAN PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, today we celebrate the birthday of one of our greatest statesmen, Sir John A. Macdonald, the first Prime Minister of Canada.

That Canada exists today is probably the result of the effort and determination of Sir John A. Macdonald more than any other man. It is therefore fitting that in this year, the one hundredth anniversary of confederation, we should pay a very special tribute to this man and what he accomplished. It is equally fitting that such a tribute should be made on this day, the anniversary of his birth; and in this house, where the destiny of the country he helped create was debated.

Like so many great Canadians, Macdonald was not born in this country. He came to Canada as a boy when his father and mother emigrated from Scotland. It was in a rough, new country that he grew up and gained an education, and it was in the building of a new country that he won the fame that goes with great and lasting achievement.

We remember Macdonald chiefly as the principal architect of our confederation. Credit for bringing about confederation is shared by many men and is not Macdonald's alone, but it was he who provided the most determined leadership and who went on, after the political framework of federation was accomplished, to endow Canada with the economic sinews of nationhood through building the transcontinental railway, the opening of the west and the encouragement of industry. Under Macdonald the federation established in 1867 was extended from the Atlantic to the Pacific to embrace most of what is Canada today.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, 76 years ago, the house was informed of the passing of Sir John A. Macdonald. Another prominent Canadian, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Leader of the Opposition at the time, rose to pay tribute to his friend and political opponent. The words he uttered on that occasion will live on. Here is what the then Leader of the Opposition said:

> It is not an exaggeration to say that from the day he entered Parliament, the life of Sir John A. Macdonald became the history of Canada. He was associated with every event, every fact, every development which brought Canada from the position it then held—that of two small provinces with nothing in common save their allegiance, united only on paper—to the present state of progress it has achieved.

After mentioning the issues on which he failed to agree with Macdonald, Laurier went on:

> I am happy to erase such differences and to remember only the great services he rendered to our country—to recall that his actions always showed impartial views, a great fund of resources, the highest level of intellectual concepts and, above all, a prophetic vision far above the events of the day and over all that, a patriotic devotion to the prosperity of Canada, to the progress of Canada, to the glory of Canada.

[English]

Macdonald invariably recognized that the touchstone of government policy in Canada had to be understanding and co-operation between the two founding peoples. His close working association with Sir Georges-Étienne Cartier was an illustration of his devotion to this principle.

We contemporary Canadians are not given to the worship of heroes, and we have not endowed Macdonald with those superhuman attributes whic hare the property of heroes. Macdonald's achievements are perhaps enhanced by the fact that we know him as a warmly human personality who made mistakes and knew adversity, yet lived a rich and full life and realized the satisfaction that comes with the fulfilment of a great ambition.

What is the relevance of Macdonald's character and achievements for Canadians today? Many of the problems with which he dealt are still with us—how to ensure unity while preserving the diversity which enriches Canadian life; how to achieve genuine and worth while national development. But we are faced, as we well know, with many new problems undreamed of in his time, problems brought about by rapid technological change, by the emergence of revolutionary new forces in the world around us and by the urgent need to find ways of preserving world peace, with which Canada's destiny is inextricably bound.

As we face these problems, Mr. Speaker, we would do well to remember that Macdonald and the men associated with him built Canada not by force of conquest but by the exercise of political skill, a talent for finding common ground among opposing points of view and a willingness to share these points of view and to be flexible in the search for solutions to seemingly insoluble problems.

This as much as the physical reality of Canada is a vital part of Macdonald's legacy to Canadians of our generation. During his lifetime Macdonald's stature grew as Canada grew. Today it is growing still. The example of Macdonald and his fellow Fathers of Confederation is a real and living part of our tradition. As we pay tribute to him today let us recall with gratitude his great contribution to the building of Canada. Let us honour him as a statesman of outstanding ability, and let us draw inspiration from his life and his achievements in facing the challenges of Canada's second century.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my first words must be to congratulate the hon. gentleman for the eloquent manner in which he has paid a tribute to the architect of Canadian confederation. He has dealt with the various features of the life of Macdonald, his service to his country, his powers of parliamentary acumen, his attitude toward the peoples of both the English and the French races and the other races of men who were here.

Macdonald lived in the era of great uniters of nations; the era of Lincoln, Cavour, Bismarck. These three in their respective countries brought about unity by bloodshed or force. He was able, with the assistance of Cartier, Brown, Tupper, with the eloquence of D'Arcy McGee and all the galaxy of other greats of that era, to bring about Canadian confederation, not through the means of the three leaders I have mentioned but by consultation, co-operation, compassion and common sense.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has mentioned that Macdonald came from the Scottish highlands. In 1812, at the time of the Scottish clearances, the Duchess of Sutherland cleared out the county of Sutherlandshire. Macdonald's mother and father lived 15 miles from where my maternal great grandmother and father lived, and both families were driven out at the time of the clearances. Macdonald's father and mother migrated to Glasgow. Mine took the longer route to the Red river, by way of Churchill. It is a magnificent history that Canada has. Too often we have failed as Canadians to express our prideful joy in being Canadians. I had hoped that we would set aside the natal day of Sir John, the founder of this country, as a national holiday. Washington was the father of his country. Lincoln preserved the United States, torn apart by civil war. Their birthdays are remembered. Too often we forget the dramatic greatness of Canada. A question was asked in a certain university, "Why should I be interested in history? What about the past?" The professor answered, saying "Have you ever noticed what happens to a person who loses his memory?" Macdonald, the great parliamentarian though never one of the great orators, possessed an unusual sense of humour. I can imagine him being here today, were he able to be with us, looking at this government without a majority. At one time, in his day, he faced a government with a majority of two. "Why," he said, "it is not even a drinking majority."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Secretary of State for External Affairs has mentioned Macdonald's achievements of confederation and of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I add to them, his principle for Canada, that it must be an independent nation on the north half of the North American continent willing to co-operate in freedom but insisting on the right that policies for Canada be made by Canadians. That was his contribution.

I think of him as the founder of the Northwest Mounted Police. I think of him as the man who dreamed of the commonwealth and expressed the idea that the time would come when Australia, Canada, and other nations beyond the seas would join with the mother country on behalf of freedom. Incidentally he referred to Queen Victoria, not as queen of the empire—when he received the honour, the first that any colonial statesman had ever received, of being made a member of Her Majesty's Imperial Privy Council—but as Queen of Canada.

His was an amazing life. The hon. gentleman has referred to Laurier's words, eloquent, dramatic, powerful. Yet a few short days before Macdonald and Laurier had been in stern, unremitting—partisan, if you will —conflict in the house, but Laurier's speech in the House of Commons on June 8 will live for all time.

When I was 15 years of age I decided to make a public speech on Sir John Macdonald. I rose to heights of eloquence which I thought were worthy of the highest commendation. I memorized my speech. Unfortunately I forgot the last few lines. I was not successful in that oratory contest. The culminating feature of his life was the honour of membership in the Privy Council, knighthood and, after his death, the placing of his bust in St. Paul's Cathedral not far removed from where rest the last remains of Nelson and the victor of Waterloo.

To quote words which are as true today as when they were uttered, or written, on June 20, 1891: Punch's tribute to "Old Tomorrow" as he was known. Sir John never did today what he believed could be achieved tomorrow with co-operation following consultation. Indeed when he was asked what his title would be if he ever received a peerage he said "I suppose I shall be known under the title of 'Lord Tomorrow' ".

Here in part is what Punch said:

Hail to "the Chieftain!" He lies mute today,
But Fame still speaks for him, and shall for aye,
"Tomorrow—and tomorrow!" Shakespeare sighs,
So runs the round of time! Man lives and dies.
But death comes not with mere surcease of breath
To such as him. "The road to dusty death"
Not "all his yesterdays" have lighted. Nay!
Canada's "Old Tomorrow" lives today
In unforgetting hearts, and nothing fears
The long tomorrow of the coming years.

These words I used, Mr. Speaker, in that oratory contest many years ago.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party are most happy to associate themselves with the two previous speakers in paying tribute to the work and memory of Sir John A. Macdonald who was born in Glasgow, Scotland, 152 years ago today.

It is sometimes forgotten that Macdonald was a Scottish immigrant who made good, and who made Canada in the process. For while it is undoubtedly true that men like Cartier, Brown, Tupper, Tilley and McGee made outstanding contributions to the realization of confederation, it was Macdonald's genius which produced the framework.

Even more important were his patience and perseverance which built upon that framework what is now Canada. I think when the history of that period is fully appreciated we shall recognize not only that Macdonald was a great architect in framing the British North America Act, but that his capacity for administration and negotiation made it possible, after 1867, to purchase northwestern Canada from the Hudson's Bay Company, to form the province of Manitoba in 1870, to bring in British Columbia in 1871 and Prince Edward Island in 1873, and finally to bind these various regions together with bands of steel.

For some strange reason we Canadians have never really paid our full due to the memory of Macdonald. He was the father of our country in the same sense that George Washington was the father of the United States of America, but we have never made as much fuss over Macdonald as the Americans made over Washington. I hope we will even now rectify that neglect.

But in some ways it is not monuments, the naming of large cities or highways that really matter. The lasting monument to Sir John A. Macdonald is Canada, what it is and what it has become. It is reported that during the latter part of his life at one of his great rallies an admirer called out "John A., you will never die"; and in a sense, Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is true. That so long as this country continues to grow and to expand, to promote justice for all men under responsible parliamentary government, the spirit of Sir John A. Macdonald will live on.

Yet it seems to me that if he were here in this house today he would ask us to think not merely of the past but of the future. He would remind us that the only value in looking into the past is to grapple with the problems of the present and to enable us better to plan for the future.

Two great problems that obsessed Macdonald's entire public career are still with us. One is how to prevent disintegration from within, the other is how to prevent absorption and assimilation from without. While these two problems have changed in degree and in manner they are the same in substance. One of the great problems that face this country and this Parliament is the problem of how we can live together, two founding races with different languages, different cultures, different outlooks. The essence of this problem is how we can have diversity yet unity, how we can live together, two founding races with mutual understanding and good will.

Macdonald understood, probably better than any other English speaking statesman of his day, the sense of injustice which the French Canadian people felt. He understood better than most of his race that French Canadians wanted not concessions but rights, and to be treated as equals in an equal partnership between the two founding races. It seems to me that we in this Parliament could do more than we are doing to promote that kind of understanding and good will in Canada today.

Sir John A. Macdonald also recognized the problem of retaining a Canadian identity, living as we are alongside the richest and most powerful nation in the world, not by being anti-American but by being pro-Canadian. This same problem is still with us, not in terms of the fear of military invasion but in terms of economic and cultural assimilation. I believe it is possible for us in our day and generation to meet this problem, and to meet it successfully just as did the men of 1867.

But, Mr. Speaker, we have other problems that Sir John A. Macdonald did not have. We are living in a period of social upheaval arising out of a great scientific revolution. We live in a period of rising expectations. We live in a time when men and women in our own country and in all parts of the earth want to benefit from the products of modern technology, and want to use modern science not only to improve their standard of living but to improve the quality of life. I would only hope that on this anniversary of the birth of Canada's first Prime Minister we in this parliament, and all Canadians, will use this occasion to look to the past with pride, to the present with determination, and to the future with unbounded confidence in what Canada can be and, by God's grace, will be.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, paying tribute to Sir John A. Macdonald is a pleasant duty in the circumstances and we fully endorse the statements made earlier by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), as well as by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas).

Sir John A. Macdonald, born in 1815, was actually elected prime minister of Canada from the foundation of confederation over which he presided and which he designed, along with other Canadian patriots of the two main ethnic groups, the French speaking and the English speaking Canadians.

• (3:10 p.m.)

As far back as 1867, when the Canadian confederation was created, Sir John A. Macdonald recognized the existence of two different and separate segments of our nation: the English segment and the French segment.

That is why he associated himself at that time with Sir Georges-Étienne Cartier to draft the Canadian constitution which is now called the British North America Act.

Then Mr. Speaker, like all those around him, Sir John A. Macdonald saw the importance of drafting a constitution acceptable to both the English speaking and French speaking groups. The ultimate goal of Sir John A. Macdonald was to achieve out of disunity, out of misunderstanding, the unity of Canada. For instance, although Upper Canada and Lower Canada were at each other's throat, Sir John A. Macdonald was advocating the union of those two segments, those two groups to build a united nation, a strong nation, a nation which could see to the development of Canada's natural resources not only in 1867 but in the future.

Mr. Speaker, if since 1867 misunderstandings have occurred, Sir John A. Macdonald is not responsible, the constitution or the confederation is not to blame as much as certain elements, certain individuals who have put their own personal views above everything else instead of following faithfully the spirit of confederation and of the Canadian constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, this brings me to say that in 1967, on the day we are celebrating Sir John A. Macdonald's 152nd birthday, we find people, particularly in the province of Quebec—the province where 75 federal Members of Parliament come from—who seek to spread discord, misunderstanding, error and lies by trying to affix on the back of cars small plates that say that confederation was and is one hundred years of injustice for the province of Quebec.

Now, when Sir John A. Macdonald and the others who were with him founded this confederation in 1867, their idea was not to create injustice for Quebec, for Ontario, for the other provinces, but they set their hearts upon giving and insuring the most complete justice to all provinces which then united into confederation.

Mr. Speaker, there have undoubtedly been cases of injustice since the beginning of confederation, but it cannot be said that we have suffered from injustice for a hundred years. French Canadians in Quebec have continued the struggle for a hundred years, and there have been some memorable battles. It is true that in our province, like in others, there have been battles for the recognition of our rights. But this does not mean that we have suffered from injustice for a hundred years; that is not true.

Mr. Speaker, the main idea behind the confederation over which Sir John A. Macdonald presided was unity in mutual respect of the elements constituting this confederation. To those who maintain today, in 1967, that the province of Quebec suffered injustices, I say this: those who, in the province of Quebec, maintain that Quebec had to contribute toward confederation without receiving anything in return are trouble makers and liars. True, like the other provinces, the province of Quebec had to contribute her share, to enter confederation, just as anybody has to pay his dues to belong to an organization. But if we had to pay our share to belong to confederation, we also benefited from confederation during the hundred years of its existence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, as we celebrate the birthday of Sir John A. Macdonald, I feel reluctant to mention what is going on in certain areas of the province of Quebec, particularly in Montreal, where bombs go off, where abusive language is used toward everybody, where even self respect is gone. I am against such goings on on the part of young people, most of whom are under the spell of some educators or professors who came here from Marxist or other countries of Europe, Asia, from Algeria or from African countries, and who are teaching revolution to our young people.

And we see what is going on in 1967. Injustices are not committed by those we might suspect. In fact, in the heart of Montreal, they are committed by some young Montrealers. And they are the ones who will pay for this tomorrow. What will the price be, I do not know, but they will be held responsible.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up too much of the time of this house, but I am happy to say on behalf of my colleagues and myself, that we join with all those who, with dignity, respect and grateful remembrance, celebrate today this anniversary not as blind persons, but as reasonable and logical people, who can understand each other even if they do not share the same political views. We are happy to associate with all these people who are human beings, above political parties.

Sir John A. Macdonald was, first of all, a human being. Second, he was a great Canadian, responsible for a confederation which, despite its defects, has been useful to the population as a whole.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for all of us to join in the tributes which have already been paid to the memory of Sir John A. Macdonald. Certainly, speaking personally and on behalf of the members of our party, I regard it as an honour. I believe that as a master politician and a wise statesman, Sir John A. Macdonald was the instrument which led the people of Canada, and those who held elective office at that time one hundred years ago, into confederation. For this we today owe a great debt to Sir John A. Macdonald.

In Canada we may not worship heroes, but I believe it would be for our own good were we to pay just a little more attention to those who legitimately are the heroes of our heritage. Yes; we owe it to the past and to the future that to those who not only served their country well but who also in the destiny of their time and this nation served to forge and weld our country into the great dominion and nation which it has become, be properly and adequately recorded in the annals of our history.

There were other great men in Macdonald's day—Georges-Étienne Cartier, George Brown and others—but it was Sir John A. Macdonald who brought them together and led them. It was largely due to his efforts that political differences were put aside in favour of standing together on the fundamentals on which they agreed. There is a great lesson for us in this very fact. As I have read the records in the early Hansards of this Parliament, the records concerning the Charlottetown and Quebec conferences and the records of the legislatures of the early provinces, including those of Upper and Lower Canada, I find that Sir John A. Macdonald led those who served with him on the public scene one hundred years ago into three general areas of agreement which were basic to confederation and which are necessary and essential today.

The first of these was a determination that there should be a nation called Canada, separate and independent from all other nations. They held this determination in a mutual conviction. They were dedicated to it; they believed there was a destiny for this nation which at that time was only a subject of their own vision.

Second, Mr. Speaker, they believed that under a system of majority parliamentary rule, which was to be the basis for government in this country, the majority could be strong only when the rights of the minorities were protected and safeguarded. In those days they had all of the minorities we have today—the religious minorities, political minorities, language minorities and economic minorities —but, most important of all, these men were dedicated to the fact that the basic minority was the individual. They believed that government neither had the right to give nor take away these rights; it had instead the responsibility to protect and perpetuate them.

It was on this basis that they found themselves able to come together to draft the first constitution. But even more important than either of those things, these men believed that Canada could only achieve these purposes, provide this way of life and remain united if she continued as a nation under God. In fact they gave Canada a motto, one which many of us have forgotten if ever we really knew it. It was simply "He shall have dominion from sea to sea", a quotation from Psalms. I suggest that any of us who want to remind ourselves of this fact could do no better than go up into the Memorial Room and see these words engraved in the glass of the beautiful windows of that room. We have only to read what is inscribed over the archway as we enter this building or see it written in abbreviated form on our coat of arms. These men believed that only in this way could Canada accomplish what was their objective and vision for this country.

Sir John A. Macdonald was dedicated to these principles, and he led the men of his day on this basis.

Rather than a new constitution today, more urgent is the need for us to rededicate ourselves to the spirit of our present constitution and the details of that tremendous constitutional document which I believe in the future will be regarded for its great worth even more reverently than it has been in the past or is at the present time. If we could live up to the spirit of that constitution many of the differences that divide us today could be put aside in favour of the great areas of agreement which I am sure we all have.

Today it is difficult for us even to come to agreement on an amending formula for the constitution of 1867. How much greater was the feat, then, of these men one hundred years ago in bringing together the entire document and standing in agreement upon it. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we owe a great debt to Sir John A. Macdonald. We have many lessons to learn from the confederating fathers. There is no better way of doing that today than recalling, remembering and respecting the life of this great man. It is our nation, Canada, which today stands as his living memorial.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I would not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is it the wish of the house to suspend the provisions of provisional standing order 15 (2) (a) to allow hon. members to make additional contributions to these comments.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, I would not be doing my duty as the representative of Prince Edward-Lennox if I did not rise at this time to support the many eloquent tributes that have been paid to the Lennox boy, the man whom we revere and recognize today, Sir John A. Macdonald, first Prime Minister of our country and at one time the representative in this house of the electoral district of Lennox.

I also would not be doing my duty to my constituents if I did not rise at this time to pay tribute to him, because in our part of Canada, the land of Macdonald, the land of the Loyalists, his memory is ever green and the principles for which he stood are still a force, and a strong one, in our principles of nationhood. This Lennox boy who roamed the fields of Adolphustown, which is one of the smaller rural municipalities of the province of Ontario, left his indelible mark upon the life of our area.

I recall and remind this house that on the south shore of Hay bay, in a rural setting close to the waters of that beautiful bay where the land was settled and developed by the Loyalists in 1785, there is a stone cairn marking the nearby spot where his father operated a farm in the early days of the life of the Macdonald family in Lennox. On that cairn there is a fitting tribute to this great man, which says:

> It was from these fields that he drew the inspiration that enabled him to weld the scattered provinces into a nation from sea to sea.

I am very impressed today with the tributes paid by all hon. members to our first Prime Minister. I was reminded of another inscription when the hon. member for Red Deer mentioned the inscription on the front of the peace tower which is a fulfilment of the principles for which Macdonald and all the Fathers of Confederation worked, laboured and stood for. There is another inscription on the west side of the peace tower that describes those principles just as well. It is high above eye level and very few people notice it. It reads:

Where there is no vision, the people perish.

That is why I rise today in tribute to this great man of vision, who as a boy trod the fertile fields of Lennox and later the streets of Napanee and Picton as a young and newly articled lawyer in the service of George MacKenzie and who in later years came to this capital to labour as the main architect in the building of a great nation, for which we are thankful today. Macdonald was the immortal, first Prime Minister of this country, greatest among the great, who served Canada and the everlasting principles for which she stands today, a product of his genius, a free and independent nation respected throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) rising on the same subject?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria (B.C.)): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It might come as a surprise to you, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to remind hon. members of this house that in the years 1878 until 1882 Sir John A. Macdonald was the representative of the constituency which I now have the honour to represent, Victoria, British Columbia. I would like to associate myself with the remarks that have been made today in this house.

Mr. Speaker: By way of conclusion may I say that hon. members are invited to foregather later this afternoon at six o'clock in room 16 to fraternize in the spirit of Sir John A. Macdonald day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all of us, I should think no one would appreciate that gesture more than Sir John A. Macdonald himself.

On behalf of the Prime Minister, who as everyone in this house knows, is in Kingston today participating in commemorative events in honour of Sir John A. Macdonald, I should like to table a copy of a minute of a meeting of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General on January 4, 1967.

This minute of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, advises that a proclamation be issued fixing Wednesday, the 11th day of January, 1967 for the commemoration of the birthday of Sir John A. Macdonald, the first prime minister of Canada, in this year of observance of the centennial of the confederation of Canada.

The house will be interested to know that the Prime Minister is today making an announcement that is, in my judgment, in every way consistent with the principles Sir John A. Macdonald held dear. He has announced that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to approve his recommendation that the premiers of all the provinces of Canada be appointed members of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada. The membership of the premiers in the privy council in this centennial year symbolizes in a most fitting way the unity in diversity that is so basic a feature of the history of this country. It was to the achievement and preservation of that unity, while respecting the diversity that the provinces embody, that Sir John A. Macdonald devoted his life.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a release of the Prime Minister's office announcing that His Excellency the Governor General has approved the Prime Minister's recommendation that the premiers of the provinces be appointed members of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

NATIONAL ANTHEM

CONSIDERATION BY JOINT COMMITTEE OF SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS

On the order: Government notices of motion:

January 9—the Prime Minister—

That a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to consider and from time to time to report upon the subject matter of the following proposed resolution: "That the government be authorized to take such steps as may be necessary to provide that 'O Canada' shall the the National Anthem of Canada while 'God Save the Queen' shall be the Royal Anthem in Canada";

That 12 members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, be members of the joint committee; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed joint committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21, this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders later this day.

Questions

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER RULE CHANGES

On the order: Government notices of motion:

January 9—The Minister of Public Works—

That a special committee of 11 members, to be designated at a later date, be appointed to consider and from time to time to report upon the advisability of making permanent, with or without amendment, any or all the several changes in the procedure of this house adopted for the first session of the twenty seventh parliament on January 21, 1966, and such other changes as the committee may deem suitable to promote the more expeditious dispatch of the business of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders later this day.

QUESTIONS

SCHOOL BOARDS ON INDIAN RESERVES

Question No. 1,962—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. How many school boards have been established on Indian reserves since the policy was announced in 1964?

2. On what reserves are they located?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1 and 2. Although statements may have been made at the federal-provincial conference on Indian affairs in 1964 on the desirability of delegating to the band more responsibility in the operation of schools on the reserve by organizing school boards under provincial legislation, no definite policy was announced at that time, as this is a subject for continuing consultation with provincial governments. The term "school board" in relation to Indian education can refer only to a school board established under provincial legislation. Although section 113 of the Indian Act authorizes the minister to enter into agreement with the provinces for the establishment of school boards on reserves, there is only one example of such action being taken at Moose Factory in northern Ontario. This action was made possible because Ontario had enabling legislation for the establishment of a rural school section and the appointment of the Moose Factory Island school board with Indian representation organized to administer funds approved by the department; it has no power to raise money for education through local taxation. Almost 50 per cent of Indian children in schools are now in provincial systems, with excellent arrangements for local liaison and administration. Local participation in administration of federal Indian schooling will be expanded as quickly as applicable legislation and local circumstances permit.

[Mr. Speaker.]

STAFF TURNOVER, INDIAN AGENCIES, NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Question No. 2,043—Mr. Reid:

1. What has been the rate of staff turnover among the Indian agencies in the electoral districts of Port Arthur, Fort William and Kenora-Rainy River in the last five years?

2. What are the reasons given by transferring staff and what action has the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development taken to stop or slow down this turnover?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1.

PROTOTYPE HYDROFOIL ANTI-SUBMARINE VESSEL

Question No. 2,166—Mr. MacEwan:

1. What was the approximate amount of damages by fire to the prototype hydrofoil anti-submarine vessel at Marine Industries Limited, Sorel, Quebec?

2. When is it now expected that this vessel will be delivered to the Canadian Navy at Halifax?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. The Department of Defence Production, the Department of National Defence and the ship's prime contractor, have undertaken a joint assessment of the extent of fire damage as well as technological and supply problems and costs associated with the carrying out of repairs to the hydrofoil ship. It is anticipated that this review will be completed within the next two months and will provide reliable cost and schedule data for both rectification of damage and completion of ship construction at Sorel, P.Q. Pending completion of the joint review, initial estimates place costs directly attributable to the fire at between $3.5 million and $4 million. Consequential effects of the fire may be in excess of $1 million.

2. Until completion of the assessment, the delivery date cannot be forecast with any degree of accuracy.

*DESERTIONS OF GREEK SEAMEN IN CANADIAN PORTS

Question No. 2,217—Mr. Haidasz:

1. How many Greek nationals deserted ships in Canadian ports and requested immigrant status in Canada from 1960 to 1966, inclusive?

2. How many of these Greek seamen were granted permission to remain in Canada?

3. How many of these Greek seamen (a) were deported (b) are awaiting deportation order?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. From January 1, 1960 to November 30, 1966, 2,629 seamen of Greek citizenship were reported as having deserted their vessels at Canadian ports. In the same period, 1,549 Greek ship deserters were either apprehended or surrendered voluntarily to immigration authorities and indicated a desire to remain permanently in Canada.

2. 455.

3. (a) 1,072; (b) 22 are awaiting decisions on the final disposition of their cases.

*DESERTIONS OF YUGOSLAV NATIONALS IN CANADIAN PORTS

Question No. 2,218—Mr. Haidasz:

1. How many Yugoslav nationals deserted ships in Canadian ports and requested immigrant status in Canada from 1960 to 1966, inclusive?

2. How many of these Yugoslav seamen were granted permission to remain in Canada?

3. How many of these Yugoslav seamen (a) were deported (b) are awaiting deportation order?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. From January 1, 1960, to November 30, 1966, 66 ship deserters of Yugoslav citizenship were either apprehended or surrendered voluntarily to immigration authorities and indicated a desire to remain permanently in Canada.

2. 31 were allowed to remain in Canada.

3. (a) 31 were deported. (b) Four are awaiting decisions on the final disposition of their cases.

REVENUE FROM PERCENTAGE OF INCOME TAX

Question No. 2,245—Mr. Bower:

1. What is the total revenue derived from one percentage point of personal income tax for each the years 1960 to 1966 inclusive?

2. What revenue is derived from one percentage point of personal income tax, broken down by provinces, for each of the years 1960 to 1966 inclusive?

3. What is the total revenue derived from one percentage point of corporate income tax for each of the years 1960 to 1966?

4. What revenue is derived from one percentage point of corporate income tax, broken down by provinces, for each of the years 1960 to 1966 inclusive?

5. On what basis do the federal government and provincial governments share the revenue derived from succession duties and is the federal government considering any proposals for change in the present basis of this distribution?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1. See table I.

2. See table I.

Questions

3. See table II.

4. See table II.

5. The governments of the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia impose succession duties. The government of Canada imposes an estate tax and pays to any province which does not impose succession duties, 75 per cent of the estate tax attributable to the province. The federal estate tax is abated by 75 per cent in British Columbia. When the government of Canada in 1963 offered to increase the abatement to 75 per cent, Quebec and Ontario chose to continue to receive an abatement of 50 per cent, but in addition to receive 25 per cent of the federal estate tax attributable to each. The proposed fiscal arrangements between Canada and the provinces outlined in the house by the Minister of Finance on October 31 last do not provide for any change in the basis for sharing the revenues from this source of taxation.

SECOND NATIONAL PARK, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 2,260—Mr. Southam:

1. On the basis of its announced policy, when will the government commence the development of the second national park in Saskatchewan?

2. Where will this second national park in Saskatchewan be located?

3. What is the estimated cost of this national park development?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. A requirement for the establishment of a national park is that the area be turned over to the federal government by the provincial government, free of all encumbrances. Studies concerning the various aspects are proceeding at the present time. The final decision as to where and when the new park will be established is one which requires joint agreement between the federal and provincial governments.

2. See answer No. 1.

3. Any estimates would be premature at this time.

CANADIAN CONSULATE IN U.S.S.R.

Question No. 2,283—Mr. Mandziuk:

1. Where in the U.S.S.R. will the Canadian consulate be established?

2. If established in Kiev, would this lead to diplomatic exchanges with the Ukrainian Socialist Soviet Republic?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. There are no immediate plans to open a Canadian consular office in the U.S.S.R., although as part of the understanding between the Canadian and Soviet governments concerning the establishment of a Soviet consulate general in Montreal the Soviet government has agreed that Canada may establish such an office in a mutually agreed Soviet city whenever it wishes to do so. The eventual location chosen will naturally reflect the best judgment of the place most appropriate for looking after Canadian interests at the time.

2. Kiev would be one of the logical and natural choices for the location of a Canadian consular office. Establishment of such an office there would be by agreement with the government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

WINTER WORKS REQUESTS, KAMOURASKA AND L'ISLET COUNTIES, QUE.

Question No. 2,331—Mr. Dionne:

1. How many requests were made by municipalities of the counties of Kamouraska and L'Islet under the winter works incentive program in 1965 and 1966?

2. How many of these requests were granted and how much money was allocated to each of these municipalities?

[Translation]

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. County of Kamouraska, 1964-65—30; 1965-66—27. County of L'Islet, 1964-65—5; 1965-66—8.

2. County of Kamouraska, 1964-65—30; 1965-66—27. County of L'Islet, 1964-65—5; 1965-66—8.

RETRAINING PROGRAM NO. 5

Question No. 2,337—Mr. Hales:

1. How many people were enrolled in program 5 in Canada during the month of November, 1966?

2. How many people have graduated in the program 5 course since its inception?

3. Are those people enrolled in program 5 included in the unemployment figures for Canada?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Figures for enrolment of trainees in program 5 in Canada during the month of November, 1966 will not be available until the latter part of January, 1967.

2. There were 96,152 persons reported as having graduated from program 5 courses from April 1, 1961 to March 31, 1966.

3. Persons enrolled in program 5 courses are included in the unemployment figures for Canada.

EXPENDITURES ON MANPOWER

Question No. 2,343—Mr. Allard:

1. Is a sum of $100 million, or less, available for the manpower re-training program in Canada?

2. If so, is this sum available only to technical workers or is it also available to clerical and auxiliary workers?

3. Through what channels are these funds distributed, the provincial Departments of Education, directly to profesional organizations and unions, or otherwise?

4. What sums have been spent so far in each province for the fiscal year 1966-67?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Less than $100,000,000 is available specifically for manpower re-training programs.

Approved federal estimates for all programs under the Technical and Vocational Training Agreement for the fiscal year 1966-67, total $224,335,000. This amount includes provision for the following expenditure items: (a) The cost of buildings and equipment for all programs, $142,475,000. (b) The operational cost of adult re-training programs, $58,095,400. (c) The operational cost of other programs, including in-school technical and vocational programs, $23,764,600.

2. The money is available for all occupational groups below the professionel level.

3. The funds are distributed principally through the provincial Departments of Education but also through provincial Departments of Labour.

4. The amount spent by each province during the current year is not as yet recorded in the form requested. During the period April 1 to November 30, 1966, the amounts paid to each province, against claims for Training in Co-operation with Industry (Program 4), Training of the Unemployed (Program 5), and Training of Disabled Persons (Program 6) were as follows: Newfoundland, $96,603; Prince Edward Island, $68,218; Nova Scotia, $863,765; New Brunswick, $121,713; Quebec, $2,334,605; Ontario, $9,-417,379; Manitoba, $824,622; Saskatchewan, $362,578; Alberta, $617,464; British Columbia, $468,901; Yukon Territory, $90,765; Northwest Territories, nil: Total, $15,266,613. In addition to the above claims, all provinces have claimed a total of $73,687,588 for capital expenditures and $13,159,967 for the operational costs of other programs.

Motions for Papers

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister concerned, through you, when I might have an answer to question No. 1,675 which has been on the order paper since June 13 of last year.

Furthermore, I have not yet received an answer to starred question No. 2,086 which has been on the order paper since October 25 of last year. There is some information which I am desirous of obtaining, and I do not think it is a very difficult question to answer. I understand that starred questions are supposed to receive some semblance of priority.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to speak on a point of order and call the attention of the appropriate member of the government, who I believe in this case is the Minister of National Revenue, who is not here, to question No. 2,185 on the order paper which deals with a case before the tax appeal board and which was placed on the order paper by me on November 18 of last year. I see no reason for any particular delay in answering this question.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 194 is acceptable to the government. Would you please call motion No. 191. I ask that the remainder be allowed to stand.

C.B.C.—APPLICATION OF LABOUR CODE

Motion No. 191—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, or any official thereof and any other person, group or organization, excepting any other department or agency of the government, relating to the application of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code or the deferment or suspension of any part thereof.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State may I deal with this motion. I wish to inform the hon. member that there have been no correspondence, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation or any official thereof and any other person, group or organization relating to the application of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code or the deferment or suspension of any part thereof. Therefore I suggest to the hon. member that he might wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the C.B.C. has not written to anybody about this obviously I should withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

EDWARD ELROY HUNT—POST MORTEM REPORT

Motion No. 194—Mr. Howard:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the report of the pathologist who performed the autopsy or post mortem into the causes of the death of Edward Elroy Hunt, an inmate of the B.C. Penitentiary who died on June 26, 1966.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I raise a point with regard to notice of motion for the production of papers No. 72, appearing on page 34 of today's order paper. I noticed that it was not called today. In view of the fact that this notice of motion bears a January date, I ask that the order paper be amended to show that it is January 1966, unless of course the Minister of Finance is able to indicate that the motion may be passed soon. If the motion is to stand for another two or three months I should like it to be clear that this is now a hardy perennial.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): May I inform the hon. member who has this notice on the order paper, and other members of the house, that I do not expect it will be possible to present the report before January 31. Perhaps it will be possible to do so by the middle of February, so perhaps for the sake of clarification the order paper should show that it is January 31, 1966.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motion stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL ANTHEM

METHOD OF DEALING WITH RESOLUTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to raise a point of order having to do with item No. 14 on page 5 of today's order paper. I have been seeking to find what I believe to be an appropriate citation with regard to this order, ever since the government notice of motion standing in the name of the Prime Minister on page 3 of the order paper has already been dealt with. Your Honour will observe that that notice of motion deals with the same subject matter as the proposed resolution appearing on page 5. It is clear in my mind that there is a provision in the standing orders or the precedents of the house that you cannot have two motions on the order paper dealing with the same subject —especially two government orders. I am sorry I have not been able to find the appropriate citation, but I suggest with respect that the matter be taken under consideration. I am raising it now because I believe the correct procedure would be for some member of the cabinet to ask for leave to withdraw motion No. 14. I think it would be most inappropriate to have a motion stand on the order paper, to be dealt with in the house when the same matter is being dealt with by the committee. I think the motion should be withdrawn and the order discharged.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): It is a matter of the method the house chooses to use in dealing with the resolution. The method proposed, as will be seen from a reading of the motion on page 3, is to have the committee deal with the subject matter concerned. Having dealt with the subject matter, as is the practice with bills in almost all cases, they would then deal with the resolution before the house. If the hon. member will read the motion carefully he will see that it refers in precise terms to the motion on the order paper, and outlines the method of dealing with the motion on the order paper.

Mr. Fulton: I agree with what the house leader has said. Indeed, my point is that the two motions do deal with precisely the same thing. My recollection, although I cannot put my finger on the incident, is that rulings have been made in the past in such cases to the effect that the proper course is for the order previously appearing for the attention of the house to be discharged. Then when the committee reports, of course, the motion is returned to the order paper and taken under consideration.

I believe, as a matter of fact, this course was followed last night with regard to the bill regarding research which was referred to a standing committee of the house. I believe we passed an order discharging the order for consideration in committee of the whole until the standing committee reports to the house. I believe the same course should be followed here.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. gentleman is ignoring one point throughout this discussion, and that is the motion on page 3 is a procedural motion relating to a measure before the house. Item No. 14 on the order paper is a substantive motion relating to a substantive matter to be passed by the house. This is the difference between the two.

Mr. Speaker: Both hon. members have spoken twice on the same subject, so each has been out of order once. I will take the matter under advisement and make a ruling in due course.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAILWAY DISPUTE—GOVERNMENT ACTION FOLLOWING REJECTION OF OFFER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour, now that there has been a rejection by the shop and crafts union of the railway of the 24 per cent increase proposed by the federal mediator, what is the government's intention as to its future course of action in connection with this matter?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, a request has been received by me from the shop crafts for the appointment of a board of arbitration. Since the Maintenance of Railway Operation Act provides that a set of regulations is to be drafted, and since perhaps more than 60 per cent of the railway employees involved have not yet voted on the mediator's proposals but their vote is expected within the next 14 or 15 days, I do not think it would be fitting to draft more than one set of regulations. We are waiting until all the votes are in before taking further action.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—SUPPORT FOR POSITION TAKEN BY SECRETARY GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity of Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the statement made by Secretary General U Thant of the United Nations to the effect he is convinced that a cessation of the bombing of north Viet Nam is an essential prelude to any negotiations, are any representations being made by the government of Canada to Washington in support of the position taken by the Secretary General of the UN?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have had an opportunity of reading the statement of the Secretary General. I can say that I have had discussions with the government of the United States during the past six weeks. The Canadian government is actively engaged in trying to bring about negotiations for a settlement of the conflict in Viet Nam. We regard the cessation of the bombing as one of the necessary steps. I feel, in view of the negotiations that are under way between Canada and other countries, that it would not be in the interests of the solution we have in mind for me to go any further.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if through the International Control Commission or through any other channels, the government has any information regarding the alleged feelers being put out by the diplomats in Hanoi as to the possibility of negotiations in the immediate future? Is the government optimistic that these feelers are, in fact, being put forth and that there is some hope of negotiations being conducted?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I cannot profess to be aware of all the attempts that are being made toward preliminary negotiations. I can say that the government is aware of particular negotiations, apart from those in which Canada may be interested. We have been in communication with the government or governments concerned in these negotiations and we are giving them every encouragement we can.

ISRAEL-SYRIA—STEPS TO DEAL WITH THREATENED OUTBREAK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I should like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has he any statement to make to the house regarding the critical situation which is developing between Israel and Syria, particularly as it relates to Canadian personnel, their safety and their peace keeping duties under the UN?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): During the last few weeks, as my hon. friend knows, there have been a number of incidents of increasing gravity on the Israel-Syrian frontier. We are concerned about these developments, and I have often so indicated to the parties involved. We hope that both sides will adhere strictly to their obligations under the armistice agreement and allow calm to be restored on that frontier.

The UN observers stationed on the Israel-Syria border have negotiated cease fires during several of the exchanges which have taken place. We trust that both sides will make full use of the UN peace keeping machinery in the area in order to settle their immediate differences.

GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE

QUEBEC—POSSIBLE SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

I should like to ask him whether he has made himself acquainted with the brief submitted to his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Pepin) by the northwestern Quebec chambers of commerce with regard to the gold mining problem. Can he tell the house whether he has any solution to that gold mining problem in northwestern Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to tell the hon. member that, in my opinion, this question is much too general to be put at this time.

RESEARCH

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF FIRST VOLUME ON SPACE ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Acting Prime Minister. Is it the government's intention to table the first volume of the report on Canada's space research activities dealing primarily with the project known as HARP, and will he comment on the government's rather equivocal position with regard to this project.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): May I take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

REPORTED ESTABLISHMENT OF PROCESSING PLANTS ON FRENCH ISLANDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs. It was announced in Le Devoir on January 5, 1967 that American interests plan to build two fish processing plants on the French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. The French islands could therefore serve as landing bases for the American fishing fleet, and I would ask the minister whether this proposal was put forth by officials of his department in an effort to secure an agreement on the 1964 legislation calling for a 12-mile fishing limit off Canada's coast?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, sir.

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary question. Would the minister tell the house what progress is being made toward establishing the geographical co-ordinates from which base lines can be drawn and the 12-mile limit established, as called for in the legislation passed in 1964?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking a very general question which is asking for a general statement of policy. I do not think that can be permitted at this time.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

AMENDMENT TO LAND ACT WITH RESPECT TO PURCHASE OF PROPERTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs; I apologize for not giving him written notice. Is the minister giving consideration to introducing amendments to the Veterans Land Act, or possibly to the regulations, to provide for changing circumstances in the purchase of properties for veterans, and also to changing the regulations with respect to the administration's relationship with the real estate fraternity?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are no proposals to amend the act. Constant reviews of the regulations are being made. From time to time we do amend them and some of them are under current study. I think that if the hon. member would let me know the specific area in which he is interested I could make inquiries and reply to him more directly, if that is satisfactory.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO POSITION OF DEPUTY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is there a deputy minister of agriculture at the present time? If so, what is his name?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for statistical information, which should not be asked for at this time.

Mr. Harkness: With all respect, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of some importance and urgency not only to members but to agricultural organizations and the entire farming community. They would like to know whether there is a deputy minister and, in particular, who he is. If there is no deputy minister of agriculture at the present time, they would like to know who is the acting minister so that they will know whom to contact with respect to a number of matters.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps it would be easier if I allowed the minister to answer the question.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, Dr. Barry is still acting deputy minister of agriculture, as well as acting as chairman of the Canadian Dairy Commission until such time as his successor is appointed.

Mr. Harkness: Then, Mr. Speaker, I must protest against the minister having misinformed the house the day before yesterday. On January 9 I asked him this question, as reported at page 11537 of Hansard:

> Is Dr. S. C. Barry still the deputy minister of agriculture and, if not, when did he cease to occupy that position?

The minister's answer was:

> Dr. Barry is now the chairman of the new dairy commission.

Quite evidently the minister gave us the impression, and I think gave the country the impression, that Dr. Barry was no longer the deputy minister of agriculture. I think the minister owes the house an apology.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, the statement found in Hansard is perfectly correct; he is chairman of the Canadian Dairy Commission.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ORDER EXTENDING MARITIME UNIONS TRUSTEESHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is he tabling today, or if not today when will he table, the order in council extending the application of the Maritime Transportation Unions Trustees Act, and also the annual report of the board of trustees.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it would be difficult for me to table the annual report because it has not come into my hands. With regard to the proclamation, pursuant to the statute I must table the proclamation within a limited number of days, and I can assure the hon. member and the house that it will be tabled within the next few days.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister would take the opportunity on motions to explain to the house the reasons for passing that order in council?

Mr. Nicholson: I would be very pleased to, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether there have recently been, or are now, negotiations with the government of British Columbia regarding federal assistance with respect to the cost of the bridge across the first narrows in Vancouver? If so what is the present position?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the premier of British Columbia has made representations on this subject; I do not know that they can be termed negotiations.

Mr. Fulton: A supplementary question. Is the minister in a position to confirm a report in a Vancouver paper that the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister made a statement, or gave information to the mayor of Vancouver, that the federal government would be willing to advance part of the cost of this bridge on a repayment basis, which might be handled by the imposition of tolls.

[Mr. Greene.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. gentleman realizes that he cannot ask a question about the accuracy or otherwise of a press statement.

Mr. Fulton: I was asking the finance minister whether he was in a position to confirm that that is the position of the federal government?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm the statement in those terms.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF FURTHER LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, during the recess many of us in this house became more aware of the critical housing shortage which is facing Canadians, especially those in the lower income brackets.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask a question. Questions cannot be prefaced by statements.

Mr. Grafftey: In view of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures published Wednesday showing a rise in the cost of living due to increased housing costs and rents, may I ask the Minister of Labour, who is responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, whether the government is seriously considering housing legislation which will regard housing policy as a social welfare necessity and not a fiscal instrument.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, that is rather a general question or statement involving several questions of policy. The government is aware of the seriousness of the housing situation, and when the government decides to make any change in its policy same will be announced to the house.

Mr. Grafftey: In view of the fact that the crisis is here now, and many Canadians in the low income groups want housing now—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is now submitting an argument. He should ask a question.

Mr. Grafftey: May I ask a supplementary question. Will this announcement be made very, very soon so that this situation can be relieved very, very soon?

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. On December 7 I addressed a question to the Minister of Labour in connection with the housing problem. I asked him at that time whether he was in a position to tell the house what response private lenders had made to meet the housing problem, and he took the question as notice. I am wondering whether he is now in a position to give the house a report on this situation.

Mr. Nicholson: In answering this question, which I am very glad to do, Mr. Speaker, may I say that most of the investment or lending institutions—and when I use that term I am referring to the mortgage and insurance companies—have been giving some thought to this problem, as I hope have the banking institutions in view of the amendments to the Bank Act which have been before this house. We know from discussions that the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing have had with some of these institutions, that the lending programs are under consideration and I hope to have a report on the situation within the next 10 or 12 days. I will be making a statement on the subject toward the end of the month; I think it would be premature to do so in advance of that date.

IMMIGRATION

INVESTIGATION OF PROSPECTIVE EMIGRANTS BY MOUNTED POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is it true that the R.C.M.P. makes investigations regarding all French citizens who wish to leave their country to settle in Canada? Can the minister tell the house whether the R.C.M.P. makes such investigations regarding prospective emigrants from other countries?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, generally, the R.C.M.P. makes investigations regarding people who want to come to Canada. There are a few exceptions, for instance Great Britain and Ireland. Instructions have been given so that from now on the procedure applicable to Great Britain and Ireland will also apply to France.

TELEVISION

ALBERTA—PROVISION OF EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister may I address my question to the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State. Can he advise the house whether a decision has been reached by the government with respect to the installation and provision of transmission facilities owned by the federal government for the purposes of educational television. If that decision has been reached, when is it proposed that the facilities will be functioning? There are concurrent facilities that would be available to educational networks in the province of Alberta if it were not for the federal government's intention to enter this field.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will see that this question is brought to the attention of the Secretary of State.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the extensive publicity given to the maturing of the Canada Pension Plan this month, would the minister consider presenting the first monthly cheque of $1.25 in front of the centennial flame?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Churchill.

Mr. Aiken: While the minister is considering his answer, may I ask him if he would allow the former minister, the present Secretary of State, to present the largest cheque, which will be for $10.42.

An hon. Member: Not bad.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. As neither the minister nor his assistant is present at the moment perhaps Your Honour will permit me to ask my question tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Enns: Mr. Speaker, I have a question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understood that the hon. member for Greenwood proposed to ask a question tomorrow?

Mr. Brewin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but the parliamentary secretary has returned. Nevertheless I shall ask my question tomorrow.

Inquiries of the Ministry

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is addressed to the Minister of Public Works and it concerns the notice of motion which appears under his name on today's order paper. In view of the fact that debating procedural matters in the House of Commons can become an occupational disease, may we on the back benches have the assurance of the minister that no one who has served for more than five years in the house will be appointed to this committee?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, my question concerning confederation is addressed to the Minister of Finance who has now held that portfolio for a year.

Would the minister now be in a position to state how many centuries it will take the Canadian government to pay off the debts it has accumulated since 1867?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question does not appear to be too urgent. The hon. member has referred to the number of centuries, and I think it would be better to put the question on the order paper.

OLD AGE SECURITY

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO INDIANS AND ESKIMOS IN FILING APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the extensive advertising campaign being carried on to inform the recipients of old age pensions of the procedure they should follow in making application for supplementary payments, can the minister tell the house what procedures will be followed to assure that all old age recipients among our Indian and Eskimo peoples eligible for the supplementary payments will be assisted in filing the necessary applications.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this will be done.

[Mr. Brewin.]

[Later:]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

A moment ago, someone asked him whether old age security pensioners will receive application forms. Will forms be sent to all old age pensioners across Canada, not only when they reach 68 or 69 years of age but from the moment they receive their pension? Will forms be sent to these people, so that they may apply for the $30 monthly supplement?

[English]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, application forms will be sent to all recipients of old age security who will then be in a position to apply, if they wish, for the supplement.

Mr. Caouette: A supplementary question. Do I take it that age does not matter, that from 65 years of age on, everyone will receive an application form. Is that it?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. Only persons in receipt of old age security will receive application forms. As my hon. friend knows, old age security is not payable at age 65 at the present time, although it will, on a reducing basis, be paid at that age in a few years.

Mr. Caouette: I have another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are provinces such as, say, Quebec, where under some kind of allocation the people receive a pension at age 65, entitled to receive help from the federal government, so that the $30 is applicable to those people over 65 years of age?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the recipients of old age assistance, the category to which my hon. friend refers, would be eligible for increased assistance on a shared basis under the Canada Assistance Plan.

LABOUR GAZETTE

DELAY IN DELIVERY OF FRENCH EDITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Labour. Considering that for the last 12 months I have several times pointed out to the minister that the French edition of the Labour Gazette is issued three or four months late, and the minister understandably seems to be embarrassed by this situation, would he be ready to consider the suggestion that a special committee be set up to investigate the matter, to find solutions and report to the minister as soon as possible?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is, no. We have a very effective committee of this house, as demonstrated by the work that it has done during this session of parliament in dealing with matters relating to manpower and labour. Only under very special circumstances ought such a matter be referred to a standing committee, and in this instance I question whether it is necessary at all to refer the matter to a committee.

Earlier this session I reported considerable improvement in our efforts to arrange for simultaneous publication of the English and French editions of the Labour Gazette. I then expressed the hope that by the end of the year simultaneous editions might be possible. That that could not be achieved will be evident, for two reasons: In the first place the chief of the section was taken ill when trying to meet the difficult objective he himself had set. He was away from work for several weeks but is now back, in good health, and progress is being made toward the desired objective. There is another reason. For several months the department has been pressing the bureau of classsification for additional appointments to the staff.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nicholson: Those have not yet been made.

Mr. Speaker: As we are limited to a 30 minute question period perhaps the minister might use the shorter answer.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): My question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will he implement the recommendations of the standing committee on health and welfare, involving certain amendments to the Criminal Code. I would add that no fiscal expenditure is involved in implementing this recommendation.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the recommendations of the committee are under consideration at the present time.

EDUCATION

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STUDENT SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, on December 2 last the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) addressed a question to the Acting Prime Minister about the student scholarship program. In his answer the Acting Prime Minister, who is again today the Acting Prime Minister, said he would refer the matter to the Minister of Finance. Could the Minister of Finance inform the house when we might expect action by the government on the continuously delayed student scholarship program?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when a decision is made it will be announced.

Mr. Knowles: What year?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—ALLEGED DELAY IN DEALING WITH CARROTHERS REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question to address to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I wonder if the minister would say whether he plans making an early statement about the reported criticisms of his department made by the former commissioner of the Northwest Territories with respect to the alleged lack of decision by the department in dealing with the Carrothers report. Will he, in his reply, include a statement about the problems of the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity last evening of speaking with Mr. Sivertz. During the conversation I complimented him on concluding a long term of good service to the people of Canada. I also had the opportunity of telling him that I was disturbed and concerned over the statements he had made. After our discussion last night he told me he was greatly reassured and intended writing to the members of the council to that effect.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD

DECISION AS TO CREATION OF NATIONAL HOLIDAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in the absence of the Prime Minister. Has the government reached a decision not to have January 11 as a national holiday? On the other hand has it already decided to create a new national holiday, as presumably announced by the Secretary of State last night at Edmonton?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not know what the Secretary of State is purported to have said but I would direct the attention of the hon. gentleman to the reply to this kind of question which was made by the Prime Minister on Monday last in answer to one put to him by the Leader of the Opposition.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, I wish to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

When does the government hope to receive the report of the Laurendeau-Dunton commission on bilingualism and biculturalism? This question has been addressed to the Prime Minister by members several times, and he answered that the report would be available early in 1967. I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has some information for the house on that subject.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): One thing is certain, sir. I may say that we will not have the report this week. However, I shall inquire further.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION, MAKING OF LOANS, ETC.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation with an authorized capital of ten million dollars to be subscribed for by the Minister of Finance and paid out of the consolidated revenue fund at such time as the corporation may require; to authorize the minister to make loans to the said corporation the aggregate outstanding amounts of which shall not at any time exceed five hundred million dollars; and to provide further for the employment of staff and for other matters consequential upon or incidental to any of the foregoing.

[Mr. Lambert.]

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

Mr. Sharp: The purpose of this resolution is to authorize the introduction of the bill to establish the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. At this stage I intend to deal only with the general approach of the government to the matter of deposit insurance and with the major features of the proposed legislation.

On July 5 of this year when I introduced the bill to revise the Bank Act, I said it was the government's intention to introduce legislation in the present session of parliament to establish a system of deposit insurance for federally incorporated institutions which accept deposits, and to make it available to certain provincially incorporated institutions if such institutions and the provincial government concerned wished to take advantage of the opportunity.

During the past few months in the course of preparing legislation to establish deposit insurance, we have studied the system of deposit insurance which has operated very successfully in the United States for more than 30 years and have given provincial authorities an opportunity to express any views they might have, in particular as to how they thought the proposal might affect institutions operating under provincial supervision.

The government realizes that deposit insurance is not the answer to all the problems involving the supervision of financial institutions in this country. Discussions are going ahead in other fields which are closely related to the objectives of deposit insurance. In this connection I might mention securities regulations which were recently the subject of a conference between federal and provincial representatives. Finance companies are in another category, partly in the field of securities regulations, but to some extent also posing problems of a distinctive institutional character. It seems clear that action on a number of fronts will be necessary in the public interest. As I have already mentioned in the house, I have asked my departmental officials to look at the more general questions surrounding the adequacy of the control that now exists in the general field of finance companies, and I have indicated that we are willing to confer with the provinces on this matter if they so wish. I might add that I believe that improvements designed to protect the public interest are not only a responsibility of governments; there is a useful role to play for those in the business, with a view to achieving higher standards.

In the meantime it seems desirable to get ahead with deposit insurance which is a major step in itself. One of the reasons for wanting to proceed now with this measure is that it is of interest in relation to the banking legislation being considered by the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

It is expected that the proposed system of deposit insurance will achieve three important objectives: (1) The primary objective, of course, is to ensure the safety of those depositors who are usually not in a position to judge for themselves the financial soundness of the institutions to which they entrust their savings. (2) The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will also have power to function as a lender of last resort for deposit-accepting institutions, providing needed liquidity at times of crisis when such institutions may not have access to their normal sources of liquidity. (3) Member institutions will be subject to inspection. It will be an objective to bring about a gradual improvement in the minimum financial standards of deposit-accepting institutions across the country. There will be a sympathetic and helpful attitude toward institutions which wish to co-operate in this objective.

Membership in the deposit insurance plan will be obligatory for chartered banks, Quebec savings banks and those federal trust and loan companies which accept deposits from the public. Provincially incorporated trust and loan companies which accept deposits from the public will be eligible to apply for membership if they have the consent of the province concerned.

It is not proposed that deposit insurance be available to credit unions and caisses populaires, which are co-operative institutions dealing with their members rather than public deposit-accepting institutions. To a considerable extent mutual insurance schemes have already been established for the local credit unions. At the federal level there is the Co-operative Credit Associations Act which provides for the incorporation by special act of the parliament of Canada of co-operative credit societies. Amendments to the Co-operative Credit Associations Act are presently under consideration. Among the matters which will be reviewed is whether or not a lender of last resort facility is needed in connection with the operation of these societies.

Deposits of the public will be insured up to a maximum amount of $20,000 per deposit account, an amount which seems enough to cover the type of depositor needing this kind of protection. It has been thought best to leave room for flexibility in the definition of insurable deposits.

It is quite likely that new instruments will appear from time to time, and it seems very desirable to be able to rule whether or not they should be regarded as insurable deposits. It is proposed, therefore, to define the kinds of deposits eligible for insurance under by-laws of the corporation which will require the approval of the governor in council, but they will, of course, include all the usual forms of savings and deposit accounts.

It is expected that the greatest need for the lender of last resort function of the Deposit Insurance Corporation is likely to arise in relation to the demand for quite short-term deposits of insured institutions. To the extent to which the liabilities of financial institutions are of a long-term character, given good management they should be able to protect themselves by holding an appropriate distribution of assets. However, in the case of institutions with very short-term liabilities, it is difficult for them both to make any profit on their operations and to keep enough short-term assets to protect themselves against all emergencies. Even if they maintain high standards of financial management, events taking place elsewhere in the financial system, perhaps outside Canada, can have repercussions that produce serious liquidity problems for them.

Turning now to specific measures involved in the proposal to establish the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, I shall mention the major features.

1. It is proposed to establish a new crown corporation to be called the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. It will be under the management of a board of five directors, including a chairman of proven financial experience from outside the public service to be appointed by the governor in council. The other four directors will be the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Deputy Minister of Finance, the Superintendent of Insurance and the Inspector General of Banks.

2. Parliament is asked to provide the $10 million share capital of the corporation and a deposit insurance fund will be built up out of premiums of 1/30th of one per cent per annum on the insured deposits of member institutions. When the fund has reached adequate proportions it is provided that the rate of premiums may be reduced under certain circumstances.

3. The corporation will invest its share capital and the deposit insurance fund in securities of the government of Canada. Earnings on these investments will be available to meet operating expenses and, if there is sufficient net income, to pay dividends on its share capital.

4. To enable the corporation to act as lender of last resort to its members in case of need, either by lending on the security of members' assets or purchasing such assets when that is appropriate, the government will be authorized to make advances to the corporation up to a total of $500 million. Any such advances would be expected to be repaid by the corporation from recoveries of the assistance provided to its members or from the deposit insurance fund.

The government realizes that it may not be possible in the present session of parliament to complete consideration of the bill, although I hope we can do so. It will be useful in any case to make known the intentions of the government and, if the bill has to be introduced again in the next session of parliament, there will have been an opportunity to benefit from public discussion of the measure.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, this has indeed been a long awaited day, and without trying to be petty about the criticisms that might be offered by members of the committee I would just convey to the minister once more the various criticisms that have been levelled against the government both by members of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, and by witnesses who appeared before that committee, on the delay in bringing forward this legislation.

The standing committee has been studying the Bank Act since October. An integral part of revision of the Bank Act included not only the so-called extension of the competitive element for banking but also control of those engaged in banking and banking practices. These could not be separated one from the other. We got the government's proposals with regard to the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Bank Act, and now at this late date we get its proposals with regard to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The minister did not state whether it is the intention merely to proceed to first reading of the bill. If I remember correctly, in reply to a question which I put to him on an earlier occasion the minister said it was the intention just to disclose the bill in this session and then leave it for study and comment upon it by the financial community, following which the bill could be dealt with in a subsequent session of parliament. Does the minister wish to confirm that?

Mr. Sharp: This is a perfectly legitimate question in the light of what I have said. The government realizes now that there is perhaps even greater urgency for the early passage of this measure than there was when it was referred to by me at the time of the introduction of the revisions to the Bank Act, and the government would be prepared to proceed with all stages of the measure during this session of parliament. Nevertheless it would be desirable for an opportunity to be given to the general public, and to those institutions who might wish to take advantage of this facility, to study the bill.

This is a new venture in Canada. It raises issues of quite a different character from anything we have seen previously. But if in fact it is clear that the facility will be used generally, and will be a useful addition to our financial mechanism, the government would be prepared to give the measure greater priority than it had originally intended, and to try to get it through during the present session. But I think we should leave it over until we see whether there is a fairly broad degree of acceptance of the idea. I might add that the government is quite prepared to consider amending this legislation if, upon examination, there appears to be need for major changes.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, the minister has given a very careful half answer. The government has certain options it may exercise with regard to this measure. The first, and least desirable, is to proceed with all stages through the house. The second is to give the bill first reading and then let it stand for a time, proceeding at a later date with the rest of the stages. There are plenty of precedents for that course. The third option is that we should proceed with a certain amount of celerity, certainly not later than next week, to refer the bill to the finance, trade and economic affairs committee. This is absolutely the least that we in the opposition would accept.

The minister must agree with me that this measure is so inherently bound up with the consideration of the Bank Act that we must consider its provisions to see whether it will fill the lacunae which we feel exist within the Bank Act. The officials of the Canadian

Bankers Association, and other witnesses who withheld comments about deposit insurance, would then have an opportunity of commenting upon it, in addition to which the minister must appear before the committee and be questioned. He has a case to make for this measure and I think he should make it before the standing committee.

If the government intends to proceed with the bill this session, then it should be referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs at the earliest possible opportunity. The minister should consult with the government house leader so that arrangements can be made for this to be done without any delay.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I say that the government wants to do only what will facilitate very careful consideration and passage of this legislation. If reference of the subject matter of the bill, to the committee, would help in this regard, we would have no particular objection; on the other hand, I would want to be sure that in fact this would help facilitate the passage of the Bank Act itself, which is the first order of priority. I do not agree altogether with what the hon. member said to the effect that this is vital to the passage of the Bank Act. I do believe the committee is quite right in wishing to have a look at the bill to see what the government has in mind, but I am quite sure the Bank Act could be approved without approval of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation legislation.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I could not disagree more with the minister in his view that the Bank Act meets the requirements. The Bank Act is only half a loaf so far as the control and examination of the people engaged in banking practices is concerned. From a historical examination we know that the government's position changed in respect of Bill C-102 and Bill C-222 because of the Atlantic Finance fiasco. Now the minister has revised his position because of the Prudential Finance fiasco. Will another fiasco be required next week in order to get the government to agree that the committee might consider this matter in relation to the Bank Act. I do not think the minister really can be serious in proposing that type of thinking.

Now, in respect of the question of deposit insurance, I may say that personally I have grave objections to it. I think this is the wrong way in which to go about this matter. I think it has resulted in a confusion of two sets of difficulties, and that this has been caused by some emotional panic on the part of the government. First, the government has refused to face up to the fact that—and I have a lot of legal references to this effect—the government has all the authority it wants under the constitution to control banks and banking practices. One has to look only at the B.N.A. Act to see that there is control over banking, control over currency, control over interest, and over many other related matters. These are strictly within the jurisdiction of the Crown of Canada. There is no shared jurisdiction with anybody else. In fact I would say that if there now are some near-banks which are engaged in banking practices, this is because they have moved into a vacuum by default. If the provincial governments say that they now have the right of control over near-banks within their jurisdictions merely because they have incorporated these organizations and merely because they have been present at the engendering of these corporations, then I think they merely are shouting from the position of squatters' rights; that is all there is to it.

Under the constitution it is clear that the federal government has exclusive jurisdiction over banking. Let any provincial authority shout all it wants: The constitution is clearly set forth. If one wants legal authority, the minister could refer to the case of the Attorney General of Canada v. the Attorney General of Alberta which is a Privy Council case concerning this matter. This is a clear indication that banking is not limited to that as practised in 1867. Banking is a matter of continuing evolution. The government might have amended the Bank Act to provide for a definition of banking—a more flexible definition of banking—so that any corporate entity carrying on banking or banking practices, regardless of its incorporation, must come in under the umbrella of the Bank Act and be subject to the control of the Bank Act and the inspections of the Inspector General of Banks.

To me the matter is very simple; but the government has not faced up to this. The government has said that it now recognizes, for some political reason—and it can be attributed only to political reasons and not to legal or financial control reasons—that the provinces now will be allowed to have something to say with regard to banking and banking practices. The provincially incorporated institutions carrying on banking practices will have the right to adhere voluntarily to this scheme of deposit insurance, provided the provinces consent. Well, this is giving a legal right to the provinces in a field in which the constitution says they have no jurisdiction, let alone joint jurisdiction. It must be remembered that he who would assert provincial jurisdiction in this matter must show more than provincial jurisdiction. He must show that there is joint jurisdiction or that there is no exclusive jurisdiction on the part of the federal government.

With all respect for those who may assert this for their own reasons, and perhaps as a bargaining position, I cannot agree with them in view of my reading of the B.N.A. Act. Therefore I submit that I object to the scheme of deposit insurance as a cure for the ills that are presently existent in, shall we say, the financial institutions picture in this country. There is the ancillary problem of proper supervision of finance companies. That is a horse of an entirely different colour. Also there is the question of the control of securities operations. This is another matter, and it is not cured by the deposit insurance because finance companies who do not take deposits do not come in under deposit insurance, and therefore can go broke at the rate of one a week, and there will be no help for anyone under the type of insurance program that is proposed by the government. Therefore, and for a third reason, I say that I object to the program of deposit insurance because it is not needed by those people who are going to be compulsorily involved.

The chartered banks will be the milch cows of this scheme. They certainly have by far the greatest volume of deposits and they will be required by law to submit to the inspections to which they already are subject. They will have to pay the premium and this will be passed on of course to their customers. It is the poor old public which is paying for nothing in this particular instance. Why? To create a scheme to which other people will adhere.

Mr. Fulton: It is hoped.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: Yes; as the hon. member for Kamloops said it is hoped that the public might be more receptive to dealing with near-banks if their deposits are guaranteed. On the one hand the government in its amendments to the Bank Act says it wants the banks to be more competitive, and on the other hand, with this deposit insurance scheme the government is bolstering up the banks' competitors; therefore it is not making the banks more competitive.

[Mr. Lambert.]

Mr. Sharp: No; it is making the whole system more competitive.

Mr. Lambert: The minister says it is making the whole system more competitive. In my province, for instance—and I am sure the minister has received this answer from the treasury of the province of Alberta—it is deemed that the treasury branches of that province will not fit into this scheme because they are mere emanations of the treasury of the province and are therefore not near-banks, incorporated trust companies or what have you. In so far as the banks of the province of Alberta are concerned, it is the treasury branches, with some of their operations—and I wish we could get them into the daylight where they could be examined—that are the biggest competition to the chartered banks.

The government has proposed this scheme. I wanted it to come before the committee so we could examine it. We want to know the reaction of the junior trust companies, the reaction of the bankers, to this type of scheme. I am pleased to see that included in this scheme is a provision for lender of last resort. A scheme of deposit insurance that did not have such a provision would, I think, be quite meaningless if we are going to improve the security of our financial system.

We would like to know the details in this respect, because lender of last resort provisions will present a real difficulty. There should be some penalty provided in this connection. In my estimation there should be provisions with regard to the right of take-over of an operation, the right of merging or of sale of an operation, as is available under the F.D.I.C. in the United States. I would have thought the minister could have told us a little more about the inspection provisions and the standards that the near-banks will have to meet. The minister is asking us to accept something in principle. I think that in so far as the standards of inspection that must be met is concerned, they must be those of the Inspector General of Banks and we should apply nothing less than the standards for investments under the Trust Companies Act required by the Inspector of Insurance. These are the minimum standards that we could accept.

I do not think we should ask that any near-bank applying for participation in the deposit insurance scheme should be already up to those inspection standards. After all, if they are to maintain their position of liquidity we cannot insist that they shall engage in a fire sale of their investments. Therefore, I would think that on the basis of a certain minimum performance a near-bank could apply, be granted an initerim certificate and be allowed a period of maybe three to five years in the initial instance to bring itself up to the standards that will be set for investment levels.

I would give this example to the minister as a clear indication of what I mean. Under the Alberta Trust Companies Act it is only the first million dollars of a provincially incorporated trust company that is subject to examination by a special officer in the department of the attorney general. That is the position now; prior to that the examination was carried out by an officer in the Department of the Superintendent of Insurance. A trust company could have investments of $5 million. The legislation does not specify which is the first million dollars subject to examination, but $1 million is subject to examination and $4 million could be the most absolute garbage. Let us say that a number of these trust companies have investments, that some of them meet the requirements and others do not. Give them the chance under an interim certificate and continuing inspection to bring themselves up to the standards laid down. Then possibly a great many more of these institutions will be brought into the fold.

The last point I should like to make at this time, since I feel we should see the bill at the first opportunity, is that even the smallest trust companies should have available the opportunities of a deposit insurance scheme. It should not be left merely to the big fellows or the bigger fellows in the field. After all, a person who has $10,000 of deposits in "X" company—a small trust company—is just as worthy of protection as the person who has $10,000 of deposits in "Y" trust company—a much larger corporation.

I have one more point, Mr. Chairman. The minister has not indicated in his remarks the relationship of this scheme to provincial schemes. We have read in the press that a scheme may be proposed by the province of Quebec. Has the province of Quebec agreed that it will allow its institutions to participate in this particular scheme? After all, it must be remembered that such major trust companies as the Montreal Trust Company and the Royal Trust Company are Quebec incorporated. They are among the biggest operators in the field. They are not federally incorporated trust companies. What will be the relationship of this scheme to companies of that nature? Will it be within the ambit of a proposed Quebec scheme to apply only to the deposits of those companies within the borders of that province, and the remaining operations all across Canada of those two companies will come under the federal scheme?

These are questions to which answers must be furnished by the minister. From what we have read in the press, I think we will get into a ludicrous situation, one that furnishes me with one more objection to the general proposal. If one province asserts and is given the right to set up its own deposit insurance scheme, surely it has no greater right than any other province to do the same thing. The net result would be that theoretically we could have 10 deposit insurance corporations in the country.

An hon. Member: Eleven.

Mr. Lambert: Yes, 11; we could initiate one in Yellowknife and the Yukon.

Mr. Sharp: All the federal trust companies, all the banks.

Mr. Lambert: Yes; it would be a terrible mix-up. Therefore I come back to my original premise, namely that the government should have the courage of its convictions in this regard. I am sure that if the minister had been allowed by the government to which he belongs to really be courageous enough to define banking as it should be defined in the Bank Act, everybody would be brought in and it would not cause any great confusion. In that event, there might be a lawsuit brought by a trust company in some province, but that would not invalidate all the provisions of the Bank Act. If someone had the determination to take the matter to the top legal authority, we would get a legal definition. I am sure, on the basis of my own research in this regard and the advice I have received, that the federal government has complete and exclusive authority over banking and banking practices in this country. I hope the minister is able to answer the questions I have raised. We will certainly be interested in seeing this bill.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I want to say at the outset that we are not opposed to the principle of the insuring of deposits, the principle that presumably is embodied in this bill. We think that the legislation as outlined by the minister is seriously inadequate in several particulars. In our view the deposit insurance has shown to be valuable where it has been adopted, that is, as far as I know, chiefly in the United States of America. It is a form of protection to the small depositors, and it is a worth-while step to take not only to protect the small depositors but to give confidence to those who are dealing with our financial institutions. However, two things are essential in such legislation: first, that the deposit insurance must be accompanied by adequate regulation and inspection. Without it deposit insurance would be little more than an invitation to people to exploit the insurance fund, to carelessness and to abuse. I did hear the minister saying in his opening remarks that those who are under the act would be subject to inspection. If this is so we want to make sure that the inspection staff is adequate and that there is not only inspection but the laying down of standards and regulations so that the inspection may be worth while.

The second essential in addition to regulation and inspection—and this is clearly deficient in the proposed legislation—is that the legislation should be compulsory in respect of all banking institutions whether or not provincially incorporated.

Mr. Sharp: It will be.

Mr. Brewin: I heard the minister say, and I presume I did not mishear him, that this legislation was to be compulsory for banks and federally incorporated trust and loan companies, but that it was to be voluntary for provincially incorporated companies. Not only was it to be voluntary for them, the legislation was not to be applied to them; they could not even come in without the consent of various provincial governments. As the hon. member for Edmonton West said, a veto of the provincial governments has no constitutional validity whatever and is totally wrong in principle and, as I am trying to point out, is wrong in practice.

The matter was very well put in an editorial—which I presume the minister has read—in this morning's Globe and Mail under the title "The Insurance Essentials". I want to put this on the record because I cannot put it any better. It reads:

> So deposit insurance there is to be. But will it be available to any trust or loan company that is prepared to pay the premiums? Or will a condition of coverage be that the company agrees to meet federal standards, file reports as required by the federal authority, and submit to federal inspection?
> Mr. Sharp has not said. Yet without these conditions deposit insurance could be worse than useless. Worse, because it would not ensure that trust and loan companies conducted their business in an honest and competent fashion, but only that if they did not their fellow premium payers and the government—that is to say, the people of Canada—would replace any losses suffered by their depositors. It would be an invitation to crooks and incompetents to play fast and loose with the funds entrusted to them, in the knowledge that if things went awry somebody else would pick up the bill.

The editorial goes on to refer to what was said by the minister's predecessor in his book "A choice for Canada"— > —that the institutions in question subject themselves to federal inspection and meet all the requirements of the federal regulatory authorities.

The editorial then points out that in the United States deposit insurance works, not because it covers losses but because constant inspection has prevented losses. It goes on to say:

> On five recent occasions U.S. federal inspectors have been able to move so early and so swiftly to control dangerous situations that no loss has been suffered.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? I also read that editorial this morning. Does he not agree that it would have been improper for me to have indicated the nature of the inspection outside the house before I did so in the house?

Mr. Brewin: Yes, I dare say, but I do not believe the minister has yet indicated in this house, certainly not in any detail, the measures of inspection proposed. I heard him say that those who came under the fund would be subject to inspection but I did not hear him say that they would be subject to federal regulation, and I do not know the extent of the inspection. I hope he will answer that question later in this debate with a good deal more clarity than he has to date.

I now wish to come to the main point, which is that the government has constitutional authority and, I suggest, constitutional responsibility to deal with the protection of investors in companies that are carrying on banking operations. Is there any doubt in the world that provincial trust and loan corporations are in fact carrying on banking operations? I think it is perfectly obvious that in fact any company which receives deposits, and undertakes the obligation of paying those deposits to a depositor is in fact carrying on a banking operation. If those people who are undertaking this banking operation can do so on a voluntary basis so that they may come in if they choose, or if the province in which they have to be incorporated permits them to come in, the very people who ought to be controlled will be exempted from the control and the deposit insurance which is essential for the protection of depositors.

This principle was clearly and well enunciated in the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance of 1964, known as the Porter Commission. This commission set out its proposal which was that the so-called near-banks—I do not like this expression —those who were undertaking banking operations, should fall within federal regulations. I think this was the basis of the commission's recommendation and report. At page 363 the commission said the following:

> However, our view is that it should be less arbitrary than the present legislation, which applies only to 10 named institutions, and should encompass all financial institutions issuing demand liabilities, transferable and short-term deposits, and other short-term banking claims (subject to limited exceptions to be specified later). It would thus include the present chartered and savings banks, many trust and loan companies, some other deposit-taking institutions and such sales finance companies as issue banking claims not exempted by the legislation.

Farther down the page it goes on to say:

> An alternative approach would be to make federal regulation voluntary while offering inducements to institutions to submit themselves. Unfortunately, however, those few institutions which are now virtually unregulated are precisely the ones which are likely to remain outside the regulatory framework. In fact, the inducements of coming under good regulation and of using the name "bank"—

—this last clause does not apply to what we are discussing—

> —are probably not strong enough to lead all banking institutions to accept federal charters or licences. Many such institutions are already free to undertake most phases of banking business, in addition to some business from which the banks are excluded. They do not feel the need of central bank borrowing privileges because the chartered banks have served them effectively as lenders of last resort; they are unlikely to be attracted by the offer of a federal deposit insurance scheme because most of them believe they do not need it, while those for whom it might in fact be desirable are quite likely to have their own reasons for refusing it and the regulation it would entail; improved or cheaper clearing arrangements for their deposit accounts might tempt some institutions, but most would no doubt continue to be able to come to terms with chartered banks for this service. Thus while there is some attraction in a voluntary approach it is not likely to improve the present unsatisfactory state of affairs.

This dealt with banking, but as the passage indicates, it applies directly to the legislation on deposit insurance. If you are making it voluntary, the people who do not use it may be the people whose deposits ought to be insured and who ought to be regulated. They may be the ones who will step away from it. I say to the minister he has the power to regulate all those who carry on these banking operations.

Now, the hon. member for Edmonton West has expressed his views on the constitutional issue, and I venture to do the same thing. Although the question of what is included in the word "banking" under head 15, section 91, of the British North America Act is a very large question which I could not attempt to answer, because the courts have not yet given any final answer to that question, I say there is little doubt that an institution that has deposits which can be insured under this legislation, these loan and trust corporations, whether incorporated in a province or by the federal authority, are quite clearly carrying on banking operations. I feel that the federal responsibility for dealing with them is clearly set out in the British North America Act. If the provinces claim jurisdiction and say they have the right to incorporate these companies, they have the right to give them certain functions, then I say the moment they carry on banking arrangements, honouring cheques and so on, they bring themselves within federal jurisdiction. The moment they do that, then I suggest that in the interest of depositors, in the interests of the protection of our financial institutions, this parliament should not shelter behind constitutional arguments.

Supposing the minister is advised by less forthright and more timid lawyers that the law is not clear, then I suggest it would be quite easy to draft this bill in two parts. One part would apply clearly to banks and financial institutions incorporated federally and the other would apply to those trust and loan companies provincially incorporated. If anybody had any doubt about the validity of the second part, then that part could be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, which exists for this very purpose, for an opinion as to its constitutional validity. The court would have the obligation of saying whether or not this legislation was intra vires. I would have very little doubt that the legislation would be ruled to be intra vires. If I turned out to be wrong, then the only recourse would be to go to the provinces and say: We want you to join with us in making regulations and insurance of these deposit institutions obligatory. Let us not take refuge in half-hearted legislation in that it is compulsory for some and voluntary for others. In my submission, this is no way to deal with something that is supposed to be for the protection and benefit of the ordinary investors of this country.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I urge the minister to reconsider whether or not it is possible to boldly proceed to make the terms of this measure compulsory with regard to all institutions which are banking institutions, in the sense that they accept deposits and undertake to honour those deposits. I know there is a need for speed in this matter and one does not want constitutional trouble to overtake the legislation, but if the minister receives advice different from the advice given by the hon. member for Edmonton West and myself, then I suggest that the legislation be so drafted that any part, the constitutionality of which is in doubt, could be promptly referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for an opinion.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, we would be doing less than our duty to those whom we are bound constitutionally to protect, if we were to shelter behind some—I was going to say phony but perhaps that is the wrong word in this context—false or imagined constitutional limitation. If this sort of change is made, I think it should meet the situation and I have no doubt that the legislation will receive the support of all the members of my party.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Following the remarks of the two previous speakers, Mr. Chairman, I wish to add a few remarks of my own and perhaps a few criticisms which I hope the minister will consider. At the outset, I should like to tell the minister that so far as the principle of deposit insurance is concerned, I believe it is rather difficult to speak against it. However, we have talked about this scheme and we do not know what the reactions are of the people directly involved in the financial field. I believe the minister has indicated his willingness to refer the bill to the standing committee on finance and economic affairs. If this is the situation, then a lot of the problems or questions in the minds of members might be clarified at that time. I think it would be a wise move. Since we are discussing finance, whether it be insurance on deposits or whether it be banking, I think the matter should be discussed thoroughly by members at their leisure and to the satisfaction of those who are to be regulated. Those engaged in the financial field could give their views and make their criticisms of the proposed measure.

At the outset, I may say that I believe our group is in favour of the principle of this measure. I may remind the minister, however, that we have already adopted the principle of deposit insurance so far as the chartered banks are concerned. This insurance is the federal government itself. The federal government should have entire control in the financial field. If the federal government has given away this control, it would be quite interesting to know who has it and when it was given away. In so far as deposits are concerned, we must remember that the chartered banks have 70 per cent to 80 per cent of the deposits in their financial institutions. They are controlled by reserves in the Bank of Canada, and the Bank of Canada belongs to the Canadian people; it is under the jurisdiction of the federal government. If the federal government does not follow through with its control through the Bank of Canada, then it is not doing its job for Canadian depositors. If there is any failure on the part of the Minister of Finance or the federal government in office, then the financial institutions across the country will collapse because they rely on the over-all economy. I do not give a hoot what kind of insurance we are talking about; if this scheme is to be effective we will have to follow it through.

I do not want to shoot any arrows at anybody, but we have had some collapses in the financial field which, if we look far enough, may be due to some lack of responsibility on the part of the government, especially in the recent case of Prudential Finance. Perhaps the government did not move fast enough there, we do not know. But I still maintain that the Bank of Canada is the controller of the deposits in all the chartered banks, which amount to about 80 per cent of the total deposits in Canada. That is the backbone of our financial institutions.

Doubts have been expressed about federal jurisdiction over the so-called near-banks. I for one firmly believe that any body or corporation, such as credit unions, trust companies or whatever you like to call them, which conducts financial transactions should be controlled and guided by the financial policies of the federal government.

There also seems to be some controversy as to what the British North America Act stipulates in this regard. I think one of the first steps the minister should take is to get a ruling on this from the Supreme Court of Canada. This wold prevent any hiding behind smokescreens, one person saying it is the responsibility of the provincial government and another saying no, it is the responsibility of the federal government. While we are arguing about who has responsibility somebody else is being cleaned out of his savings and deposits. This happened not too long ago and bankruptcies are taking place all the time.

If the provinces were given jurisdiction under the B.N.A. Act over some aspects of finance, then I believe it would be the responsibility of the federal government to make sure that that jurisdiction was maintained. Otherwise we would run into trouble in many respects. But as I say, I for one believe that any body which conducts financial transactions on the scale of the big corporations across the country should be regulated and inspected under federal law.

The hon. member for Edmonton West and the other hon. member who preceded me indicated that some of these corporations will be free to enter into this scheme and will be made subject to federal regulations and sanctions, if there are any, or to any other restrictions that might be deemed necessary. I firmly believe that regulations should be imposed across the board. All bodies in the financial field should be made to follow the same laws and be made subject to the same inspections. If a man has an automobile he must comply with the licensing laws and have a plate at the back of his car. There must be some sort of regulation in matters of this kind.

Financial institutions which do not want to come under federal jurisdiction and regulations may have very specific reasons. We do not know what they may be. They may be good and they may not; we are not in a position to know. Had there been some control in the case of the last bankruptcy which occurred, perhaps it could have been prevented and the shareholders or depositors would not have lost everything they invested.

The implementation of this scheme may involve some extra cost to the banks, depending on how it is operated and how this insurance is applied. As far as I am concerned, every service one receives should be paid for. I believe the scheme should include both large and small corporations. I firmly believe, as does the hon. member for Edmonton West, that the man with $100 to invest should be treated in the same way as a man with $10,000. The Canadian public in the long run will probably pay anyway.

If after examination the scheme is found to be unfeasible, the government can always discard it. If amendments require to be brought in after the minister presents the bill, this can be done. The minister did not give us too much elaboration today, although he did give some guide lines, if I may call them that. But we do not know the over-all effects of this scheme.

I submit that the government or the minister will have to decide at some time or other who is who in the financial field, what comes under the federal government and what should be left to the provinces. The hon. member for Edmonton West indicated that two of the biggest trust companies in Canada today, the Montreal Trust and the Royal Trust, are both provincially incorporated. I did not verify this myself, but I think that is so. But any federally chartered company is made subject to federal regulations before it is permitted to operate. They are told what they can and cannot do.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, we must be given some clear-cut statement from the court as to responsibility in this matter. I think this would prevent a lot of speculating and upsetting of the apple cart now and then in financial circles. I only hope in its over-all effects this scheme is not going to permit the bigger companies to become bigger and keep the smaller companies smaller, instead of protecting those who have a right to come within the scheme. After all, it is the shareholders or depositors we are worried about. If the government intends to take steps to protect depositors, it should protect all depositors. I am sure what is good for one corporation is good for another, otherwise there would be something strange about this depositors insurance measure.

The only way to get a clear picture in this matter, I think, would be to submit this bill after first reading to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. The members of the committee might clear the air in certain respects and obtain opinions from those engaged in the financial field. I am sure the minister would attend such a committee, where he might be asked for and have to give more detailed explanations than he has given in the house, on the over-all effect of the bill. That way we might obtain a bill which would protect all the depositors of this country.

The first concern of governments is to safeguard their economies and financial institutions. If the financial institutions or financial policies of this country collapse, then everything collapses, because finance is the blood of our economy. It is up to us to ensure that we protect all sections of financial fields, depositors as well as others, to foster confidence, for the over-all benefit of the Canadian economy.

Canada Deposit Insurance Corp.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, on the basis that this resolution introduces a bill to give insurance covering deposits in trust and loan companies, I believe it is good. What concerns me is this: The banks and larger trust companies, which are probably less in need than anybody of this insurance, will be the ones basically to participate in this measure. Many of the smaller companies, particularly provincial companies outside the legislation, will not be able to provide for their depositors—and in some cases will not want to—the coverage this legislation provides.

In principle the legislation is sound. In the United States, where similar legislation has been in effect for many years, it has worked soundly and has protected depositors of smaller banks and near-bank institutions.

The satisfactory functioning of the banking system to a great degree depends on public confidence. That this legislation will further strengthen public confidence is good. Let not this house and let not the government forget its responsibility to the public in providing proper controls on the one hand and adequate policies on the other, with respect to the deposits presently held in banking institutions and savings accounts in Canada.

It might be well to look at the most recent statistical summary of the Bank of Canada, issued for December, 1966. On page 120 of this statistical summary we are told that the personal savings of Canadians, in savings accounts in Canada at the present time, total $10,187 million, the highest rate of savings per capita of any nation in the world.

On the basis that these deposits are deposit liabilities on the part of institutions holding the deposits, and according to the evidence of the various governors of the Bank of Canada—and I think basically of what Mr. Graham Towers said a few years ago, that this bank cannot lend its depositors' money—I find it very interesting on turning to page 814 of this document to find that the total assets, including notes in circulation at the present time, of the Bank of Canada total $3,974.5 million. This means that should the depositors of those institutions accepting deposits from the public together at any one time go to the institutions and demand their deposits, those institutions would find it impossible to give them their money.

While we talk of insurance to protect the depositor, particularly the small depositor, and while we recognize that this type of insurance principle is sound, let us understand clearly how our financial system works. It is impossible to provide the total insurance necessary to protect all depositors in Canada, should any emergency arise when all demand their deposits back.

In this regard it is imperative that the federal government formulate financial policies which will retain the confidence of the Canadian people in their financial institutions, to make sure that the financial system, particularly that centred around the Bank of Canada, functions adequately, and to give Canada the kind of monetary policy which will enable the monetary system to do what it was intended to do in the first place, distribute the goods and services the economy is able to produce.

I do not follow all questions raised by previous speakers who dealt with the constitutional validity of the proposed legislation. Some alleged that this legislation is non constitutional as it relates to financial institutions with federal charters. I cannot accept that. It seems to me that any company having a federal charter comes under the direct responsibility of the federal government. We realize what may happen to provincial institutions—and some of them are very large institutions already—which are provincially incorporated.

I suggest that not only must this legislation be referred to the standing committee, but it must also be referred to the provincial governments, and to those companies in the financial field, so that there may be full consultation and advice. I can see one thing happening, Mr. Chairman. Many of the provincial companies which are sound and reliable, with good reputations, wanting to assure the public of their stable operations, will as the result of this legislation, should it come into effect, seek federal incorporation. This will be good.

During the past week, and certainly since the deposit insurance legislation has been rumoured, several respectable and reliable provincial trust companies have said that they will seek federal incorporation to come under this legislation. I trust the minister is prepared to encourage and facilitate that type of action. This is the kind of reaction I hope would come from this legislation.

The legislation does not necessarily give adequate protection to companies who feel they do not need, or do not want, the protection which it will provide; and unless the government is able to extend protection to all types of institutions it seems to me that the entire picture as it is related to near-banks, in particular, will become confused. It is imperative that the fullest possible consultation should take place with the provincial governments, who at this time are responsible for the incorporation of many of the institutions operating within the provinces in the field of deposit-acceptance, and that there must also be consultation with the institutions themselves.

At this stage, as far as the resolution is concerned, I feel we can give our support to the legislation while reserving the right to comment in detail on those aspects which I, and others, have raised. We shall await the bill with anticipation. But as we formulate laws designed to control financial institutions, and as the government formulates policy designed not only to direct those institutions but to direct the whole economy, it is imperative that we should understand the basis upon which the banking system operates and appreciate our responsibility for ensuring that the laws we pass and the policy we lay down are such as to enable the system to operate for the good of the Canadian people.

Production has no other purpose than distribution, and it is the responsibility of our federal banking system to facilitate this process of distribution while at the same time affording the necessary opportunity for saving, and making provision for the security of those who make funds available to be held in trust.

Mr. Fulton: I realize it is probably the desire to pass this resolution tonight, and therefore I shall speak only briefly.

In addition to supporting most strongly what has been said by my hon. friend from Edmonton West, the hon. member for Greenwood and others, I wish to raise one other matter for the consideration of the minister. To deal briefly with what hon. members preceding me have said, I wish to add my objection to the idea that in this legislation not only is there a question as to whether it is right to suggest that the federal government does not have jurisdiction, but I think it is extremely wrong in principle, if we are to proceed in this way and make this scheme voluntary as though we were not certain we had jurisdiction, to say that adherence to it on the part of the trust and loan companies can only become effective if the provinces consent—that is to say, in the case of corporations or financial institutions which are incorporated provincially.

Surely this is a very wrong thing to do in principle, because not only does it raise the question of whether we have the right to legislate directly and, as it were, compulsorily in this field but it seems to me to go further and say we have not the right even to enter into the field unless the provinces consent. This is entirely unacceptable. I suggest to the minister that he should consider seriously amending this legislation. If he does not think he can go further than a voluntary scheme, leave it voluntary, but remove the provision which would require provincial consent in the case of provincially incorporated companies.

The other point with which I should like to deal particularly concerns the interesting statement which the minister made that the Deposit Insurance Corporation will also act as a lender of last resort. I think this is a valuable part of the scheme and I urge the minister strongly to carry the idea one step further. By way of background to my suggestion I should like to say that this whole discussion arises out of the recognition that there is insufficient control and inspection of large numbers of institutions operating in the financial field and this bill, whether it is an adequate device or not, is, nevertheless, a device for attracting, as it were, under the umbrella of federal control and inspection financial institutions in the deposit-taking field which are not under that control and inspection at the moment.

The minister has reservations about his power to compel them to come in, so he is trying to attract them in. Leaving aside my criticism that he is challenging the authority of the federal government by saying they can only come in if the province consents, the idea is a sound one and I am sure it has support in all parts of the house. We recognize that control is desirable and, indeed, essential in the financial field, and certainly the events of the past twelve months or so have demonstrated beyond doubt the need for a greater degree of inspection and control over these institutions. Nevertheless the deposit insurance scheme will not in fact cover one very important segment of these institutions, that is, the finance and loan companies which are not in the business of taking deposits. These unfortunately, are the type of company with respect to which the failures have occurred in the last 12 months, failures which have caused such great concern, not just because of the amount of the losses or of the defalcations involved in two particular instances—although, of course, concern is felt in respect of the loss by the noteholders—but also a very real concern as to how many more of these failures the financial system of Canada can stand without a real crisis being engendered. I venture to suggest that if one were to ask the majority of those in financial circles that question, they would answer: we cannot stand any more.

It is with this background that I come to my suggestion that we should extend this principle of a lender of last resort into the field of finance companies, thus holding out another device, another carrot as it were, to attract a further segment of the financial field beneath the unbrella of federal regulation and control.

As a result of discussions with representatives of this type of company, I understand that even well established and reputable companies, with conservative type business administration, can find themselves in serious difficulties in times of tight money because they rely to a great extent upon lines of credit established with the chartered banks. They of course must have a balance of long and short-term obligations on their own part. In other words on their credit side their obligations are of medium or longer term nature, but they themselves raise their funds by issuing short-term paper. Even those that are conservatively administered have this problem of business management not to let the two get too far out of balance. They rely to a great extent, in the event of an emergency, on being able to go to a bank and call on the line of credit they have established, and they always carry on their financial operations within that limit.

However, I am informed that in times of tight money they have had the experience of going to their banks, hoping to draw on their line of credit, only to be told, "I am sorry. Haven't you heard? Money is tight and the full line is not available." In such a case they naturally find themselves in serious difficulties. Therefore I think it would be a prudent assistance to extend to these institutions some such device as a lender of last resort, so that if they found themselves in this kind of difficulty they would have an organization to which they could turn, although at some expense. It is not something they would do every day without regard to the consequences, but it would tide them over the period of difficulty.

I suggest that this lender of last resort should be a federal government agency, and as a condition of having access to this lender of last resort once again a regulatory and control scheme could be set up. On the basis of conversations I have had with reputable organizations in this finance and lending business, I am satisfied that they would be quite prepared to accept, as a price of having access to a lender of last resort, the obligation to submit to federal control and regulation.

I also suggest that if this were done we would have made a very important start on, if you like, resolidifying under federal control and jurisdiction the important segments of those institutions which are in the business of money and banking, taking deposits and lending on credit, all of which I submit are interrelated parts of the money and credit system, control of which by the federal government is an indispensable prerequisite to a sound finance system in Canada.

By the review now being undertaken of the Bank Act and the important amendments being made, and by this device of deposit insurance which we are now considering, one aspect of which is a lender of last resort available to deposit taking institutions, and by extending the principle of lender of last resort to loan and finance companies, we would take an important and essential step in this field, a step which is essential because of the disturbing developments that have taken place within the past 12 months.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish to support the request made by the hon. member for Edmonton West that the bill be referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. If that committee is to do a thorough job it must have the opportunity to study this bill, not only its implications with respect to the Bank Act but with respect to the whole field of the federal control of money and credit. The relationship between the two is intricate and inescapable, and the committee should have the opportunity to study the bill and get the opinion of representatives of the bankers association, and of others in the finance field.

Such a step would not in the slightest delay our consideration of the Bank Act amendments. Indeed, without the committee having access to this bill, studying it and hearing evidence upon it, I suggest our consideration of the Bank Act itself would be delayed because we would be operating in a vacuum. We have to ask about this thing anyway. The bill is now ready and I am satisfied that sending it to the committee would accelerate our consideration in that committee, and certainly make it more meaningful.

In the standing committee we would also have an opportunity for further consideration of the proposal I have made with regard to a lender of last resort available to finance and loan companies. Only by sending the bill to that committee could we enable the committee to do the job which parliament is so interested in seeing done, namely to restore firmly to the unbrella of federal control and inspection all aspects of monetary and fiscal policies.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks on the resolution before us this afternoon.

That resolution includes three proposals. First:

—to establish the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation with an authorized capital of ten million dollars to be subscribed for by the Minister of Finance and paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund at such time as the corporation may require—

Second:

—to authorize the minister to make loans to the said corporation the aggregate outstanding amounts of which shall not at any time exceed five hundred million dollars—

Third:

—and to provide further for the employment of staff and for other matters consequential upon or incidental to any of the foregoing.

In his statement, the hon. minister was not too generous with his explanations or with his projections. On the whole, he said it was a bill to ensure the security of the small depositors' savings, to increase the powers of the lending institutions and to bring the member institutions under inspection.

It should be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that the subject matter of this resolution does not involve only financial consequences; also involved are economic and social implications. Some financial institutions located in certain provinces, such as the trust companies, for instance, accumulate sums of money, reserves and deposits and such sums are used in the economic and social development of the province, in accordance with its particular and regional character.

That is why, to date, having heard some hon. members discuss the question the hon. minister realizes that his bill is the cause of grave concern and raises tremendous questions.

I believe that the field of deposit insurance is a provincial field, according to the letter and the spirit of the Canadian constitution and the introduction of such a bill, to my mind, is another instance of interference by the central government in the field of insurance and trust companies. It is another way of repeating what has been going on in the field of insurance since 1930.

I was listening a few moments ago to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) who said that provincial companies may, if they wish, come under this federal legislation and that is precisely the point: they would have to submit to an unacceptable inspection, as the Minister of Finance mentioned, by the way, in his very brief statement.

The hon. member for Red Deer also pointed out that the provincially chartered companies could, of course, extend their powers and their field of operation by applying for federal charters.

Well, that is exactly what happened in the insurance field, and the creation of deposit insurance by the federal government under the present circumstances—as pointed out by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) without consulting explicitly and directly the provincial governments about it—represents in the insurance and deposit insurance field an attraction which is harmful to the provincial governments and the trust companies which operate under a provincial charter.

From time to time, the matter of uniformity will be brought up. That argument is used here rightly and wrongly, so that it no longer means anything, or if it means all that everyone wants it to mean, Canadian federalism and the Canadian constitution no longer mean anything nor the sharing of responsibilities and powers. If, under the pretext of uniformity, the central government must interfere in all fields, set up standards and compulsory audits in a financial field such as this one, prejudices will result.

A wonderful degree of co-ordination can be achieved without bringing up, throughout Canada, that argument of uniformity. It happened in other fields and I will give you only one example: the pension plan that the federal government set up under national legislation and that the province of Quebec, in turn, adopted but by drafting its own legislation in such a way as to ensure some co-ordination and uniformity in the federative sense and not in the unilateral sense, something which this parliament has been trying so hard to apply in the last few years.

Mr. Chairman, hon. members and parliament are aware that the province of Quebec is now considering the advisability of introducing legislation to set up a deposit insurance scheme. A committee under the chairmanship of Mr. Jacques Pariseau, the talented economist, has been studying financial institutions since December, 1965.

The provincial inquiry deals with legislation governing trust companies, savings and credit unions, mortgage, personal and industrial loan companies, and other similar institutions.

I am referring here to financial institutions or near-banks which are to be found in all provinces. Certain organizations in Canada are deeply worried about bills like the one introduced this afternoon by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp).

I wish to point out briefly that the National Trust Corporation objects to the establishment by the federal government of a deposit insurance scheme because the corporation believes this is an exclusively provincial field of jurisdiction.

The Canadian Trust Companies Association, of which Mr. Marcel Faribault is president, says that this type of precedure in the field of deposit insurance constitutes, for the federal government, a perpetuation, a repetition and a continuation of what has been going on in the insurance field since 1930.

The president of the Provincial Bank of Canada, Mr. Ubald Boyer, claims that a financial enterprise under provincial charter would not accept, or would be reluctant to accept, a federal inspection.

I conclude, Mr. Chairman, by asking the Minister of Finance this: In order to avoid further tensions, further difficulties between the central government and the provinces of Canada, will he delay the preparation and introduction of his proposed bill until such time as a working committee in the province of Quebec, and possibly in other provinces, has studied the matter, informally and officially. Let him wait for the results of that report which is to be published within the next few months. I would also ask him to consult the provincial ministers of finance and meet them in a true spirit of federalism, and not to always proceed unilaterally and then confront them with a fait accompli. I ask him to bring into being a truly co-operative federalism between the various levels of government which exercise the authority in our country.

Obviously, the co-operation of the provinces is essential and advantageous to all depositors, to all Canadians, to all provincial and federal governments.

[Mr. Allard.]

Some hon. members spoke a while ago of submitting the matter to the Supreme Court, but it is not really the appropriate court to rule on the allocation of authority and responsibilities in Canada.

Before 1949, the privy council in London had that authority under our constitution, but since then, our federative political system has been deprived of an adequate and acceptable constitutional court to which the constituent parts of this country, of this political system —both the provincial and the central governments—could appoint members and expect fair and balanced judgments. We are still in a vicious circle.

The present government is postponing constitutional reforms. It is delaying the establishment of basic organizations which could precisely settle the disputes and problems and urge on Canada toward real progress. In my opinion, the government should lose no time in preparing the way for discussions, in this house and with provincial representatives, about the establishment of a constitutional court where such a problem could precisely be settled in all fairness and equity.

[English]

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister could give us some answer as to whether or not the government has decided that this bill, or the subject matter of it, will be referred to the committee. If the answer is in the affirmative, that the subject matter will be referred to the committee or that it should have to await second reading, then we of the opposition are quite prepared to adopt the resolution at this time so that we can see the bill.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I should like to do whatever will do most to promote consideration of the legislation, which I consider very important. I should have preferred to let this bill be published and examined by the public at large before any debate or any consideration anywhere, either in committee or in the house. Therefore I would like to have the bill published.

I can say at least that when the bill is given second reading it will be referred to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. I should like to reserve the question of whether or not the subject matter should be referred. I say this, not because I want to deny the committee any opportunity to discuss the subject but because I believe it would be valuable to look at the bill before it is considered either in committee or in the house.

Mr. Lambert: In that regard I think we can assure the minister, because of the people who are to appear before the committee at least within the next week or 10 days, that this likely would not be discussed there. We would wait. The only possibility in this regard would be in respect of the representatives from C.U.N.A. They, however, do not appear to be covered by this legislation, so I would think that discussion with them would be academic. I would urge the minister to get his to the committee as soon as possible, because that will help expedite consideration of the Bank Act.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I hope hon. members opposite do realize I am trying to facilitate consideration of this legislation. Some very important principles are involved here. It had been my original intention to proceed no further than first reading. I now believe however that it would be valuable to go further if we can. Therefore I should much prefer to reserve now the question of whether we will refer the subject matter of the bill to the committee. I think it may be better, if we can, to approve the bill in principle and refer it to the committee. I can assure the committee that the government would be prepared to consider amendments; this may not be the final form of the legislation. This is one of the reasons why I have some uncertainty as to what is the best way of proceeding. I hope the committee will give the public the opportunity of seeing the bill. I can assure the opposition that I will very seriously consider both requests. If we do approve the bill in principle, it will be referred to the finance committee; that undertaking I can give. Also I will consider whether the subject matter might be referred to the committee in due course.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, as a question to the government house leader, could he indicate if it is the government's intention to proceed to second reading, when the matter would be brought on for debate? I would not want this question to be deferred indefinitely, as we say in French, aux calendes grecques, and left hanging, because we have an objective as well as the government. I think we share the initial objective in this respect. If the bill is going to come to second reading I should like to hear from the government house leader that we would consider this matter within a week. I have some commitments after next week, and I want to be here for this bill.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I do not feel justified in giving a commitment in that absolute form, bearing in mind that I have made such horrible errors on occasion in the past as to the length of time a particular measure before the house might take. However, I will give the undertaking that we will bring it forward very quickly and that I will consult with hon. members opposite as to what day we can bring it forward.

Mr. Lambert: That is fine.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Sharp thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-261, to establish the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will be returning to consideration of the transport bill in committee of the whole house.

It being six minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, January 12, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD

PROVISION OF REPRINTS OF "HANSARD" CONTAINING BIRTHDAY TRIBUTES

Mr. Speaker: A suggestion has been made that special reprints be ordered of yesterday's Hansard containing speeches made by hon. members relating to the birthday anniversary of Canada's first Prime Minister. If the house agrees, I will be pleased to order reprints for the convenience of hon. members.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD—SUGGESTED INCORRECT INFORMATION RESPECTING MOTION FOR PAPERS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to raise a question of privilege touching some information which was given to the house yesterday in relation to my notice of motion for the production of papers No. 191 which related to correspondence between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and any other person, group or organization, excepting any other department or agency of government.

In dealing with this motion the Associate Minister of National Defence said, as reported on page 11664 of Hansard:

> I wish to inform the hon. member that there have been no correspondence, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation or any official thereof and any other person, group or organization relating to the application of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code or the deferment or suspension of any part thereof. Therefore I suggest to the hon. member that he might wish to withdraw his motion.

This I did. Subsequent to that, this morning, it came to my attention that there is certain correspondence, to which I should like to refer briefly. I have here a copy of a memorandum dated July 6, 1965, signed by one Guy Coderre. The address at the top of the memo is "Vice president, administration, Ottawa", of the C.B.C. and it is addressed to all the staff. The first paragraph reads as follows:

> With the introduction of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code effective July 1st, 1965, it is important that you be made aware of its implications on your conditions of employment with the C.B.C.

I have also a letter signed by one Clive B. McKee, director of industrial and talent relations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, dated August 24, 1965 and addressed Mr. H. W. Sedgwick, Canadian vice president of I.A.T.S.E. While specific reference is not made in this letter to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code in those words, the second paragraph in the letter states that the corporation has applied to the Department of Labour for deferment of the act, and the implication is that that is the Canada Labour (Standards) Code.

I have another letter dated October 13, 1965 signed by Mr. C. T. Kelley, assistant director of industrial and talent relations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, addressed to the same Mr. Sedgwick of I.A.T.S.E. In this letter specific reference is made to the code in the following words:

> I am now able to confirm that, effective July 1, 1965, contract employees who work on a statutory holiday will be granted another day off in lieu, in accordance with section 31 of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code.

Finally, Mr. Speaker. I have a memorandum from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation signed by Mr. D. J. van Bommel dated December 17, 1965 referring to a legal opinion they had received stating that certain people were not employees under the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, and under the circumstances were not covered by the code.

Based upon that, Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is that there was erroneous information given to the house yesterday. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That the question of the refusal to produce the documents referred to in notice of motion for production of papers No. 191 be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections.

Mr. Speaker: Before considering the motion proposed by the hon. member for Skeena a decision would have to be made by the Chair as to whether there is here a prima facie case of privilege. I would think it might be advisable to give the minister responsible, who is not in the house this afternoon, an opportunity to study these representations and comments which have just been made by the hon. member for Skeena, and that the matter be allowed to stand in the meantime.

VACANCIES

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I hereby give notice, pursuant to section 10 of the House of Commons Act, that a vacancy has occurred in the representation of the House of Commons for the electoral district of Hull, in the province of Quebec, by reason of the death of Mr. Alexis Caron, the member therefor.

[English]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I hereby give notice pursuant to section 10 of the House of Commons Act that a vacancy has occurred in the representation of the House of Commons for the electoral district of Sudbury, in the province of Ontario, by reason of the death of Mr. David Rodger Mitchell, the member therefor.

THE MINISTRY

REPORTED STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether in a reported statement of the Secretary of State—certain matters were averred by her regarding the return, as it were, of the prodigal son, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon)—she was speaking government policy when she said:

> I always thought he was the glue who made us a team...
> We were just a collection of individuals before he came back into the cabinet.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I shall let the Secretary of State deal with the matter herself on her return.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a sticky question. I hope the minister will be able to deal with it.

COAL

CAPE BRETON—LEGISLATION RESPECTING ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question about the announcement he made on December 29 concerning the program for assisting the coal industry in Cape Breton. Is it the government's intention to bring down legislation dealing with the matter at the present session, or is that being left until the new session later in 1967?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we hope the negotiations will have been concluded in time to bring down legislation dealing with that part of the agreement which requires legislation. We hope that will be during this session.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister if, prior to that, there will be any opportunity for the government to report on the program, or if there will be any discussion of the various proposals contained in the Prime Minister's statement of December 29.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure now whether there would be that opportunity, but I shall look into that point.

NATURAL GAS

ACTION OF U.S. COMMISSION RESPECTING PROPOSED PIPE LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has he any word regarding the outcome of the federal power commission hearings and the application of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines that the commission has been considering in recent weeks?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The case is progressing interestingly. The examiner will receive written arguments—I think it is on the 17th of this month—and will then hear oral presentation on the 24th if my memory is correct. We hope this means that he will then be in a position to make a decision with respect to the future of this application.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker, I did not elaborate sufficiently in my answer to the hon. member for Red Deer a moment ago, and with your permission I will add to what I said.

The federal power commission by an order of December 23 remanded the proceedings to the presiding examiner, with the direction that there be incorporated in the record the documents tabled in this house with regard to the Great Lakes matter, and subsequently provided to the commission by Great Lakes.

The examiner, in keeping with the commission's order, has given all parties until January 17 to file any motions, requests, etc. as a preliminary to a conference on January 24 which it is hoped may result in the establishment of a timetable for whatever proceedings the examiner may, in the circumstances, find to be appropriate. My hope remains the same.

EXPO '67

REPORTED DISCRIMINATION IN HIRING PRACTICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce as he is the minister reporting to parliament for Expo '67. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a letter in today's Montreal Gazette alleging discrimination, in the hiring practices at Expo '67, against English speaking Canadians? What action has the minister taken to investigate this matter?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my attention has just been drawn to this by the hon. member. I thank him for doing so. This is the first I have known of it. I shall take his question as notice and look into the matter.

INDUSTRY

PROVISION OF ANTI-POLLUTION EQUIPMENT ON CANADIAN CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry and relates to the serious problem of air pollution. Sir, once again representatives of the motor vehicle industry in Canada have stated that if there are no regulations in Canada, as in the United States, relating to clear air passages in cars, this feature will only be offered to Canadians as an extra cost option. Will the minister make representations to the motor vehicle industry and report back to the house as soon as possible on this state of affairs?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to discuss this problem with the motor vehicle manufacturers.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET TRADE DEFICIT WITH UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the report from the United States commerce department in Washington that a Canadian economic slowdown is anticipated, but that "United States exports to Canada, which rose at a phenomenal 20 per cent in the first nine months of 1966, should make further gains in 1967", will the minister advise what he intends to do to meet this ever rising trade deficit between Canada and the United States?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the course of the Canadian economy is not determined by any report written in the United States. It is determined by significant economic factors in Canada, which point to a good year in 1967.

SPORTS

SKIING—WINNING OF CHAMPIONSHIP BY NANCY GREENE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the right hon. Prime Minister would wish to comment on the achievements of Canada's national ski team, particularly the magnificent performance of Canada's Nancy Greene, who hails from Rossland in Kootenay West and who has outclassed the world's skiing elite to win her third international ski championship in Europe during the past week. I must say, before the Prime Minister answers or comments, that I was particularly touched when they remembered their ancient backwoods member of parliament by sending him a Christmas card signed by all members of the team.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am glad to deal with the question asked by the ancient, backwoods member. I am sure all members of the house have read with great pleasure of the skiing triumphs of Miss Nancy Greene.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: She is not only a great skier and a constituent of the hon. member for Kootenay West, but a fine young lady. I hope she will continue these triumphs, and that at the end of the season she will be the international champion.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NOVA SCOTIA—TRANSFER OF COAL OPERATIONS TO CROWN CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): My question is for the Prime Minister. Is the right hon. gentleman in a position today to reply to questions I posed to him on Monday last with regard to the large scale lay-off of workers at the DOSCO steel plant, and a communication sent to the Prime Minister subsequently by the president of St. Francis Xavier University, Dr. Malcolm MacLellan?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I did get the telegram and I replied to it. I am sorry I do not have the reply at hand. I will have it with me tomorrow, and perhaps I shall be able to deal with the hon. member's question then.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In connection with the same matter, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he received any communication from Mr. Frank MacInnis, president of the federation of farmers and businessmen of Inverness county. Whether he has or not, will he give consideration to their request that having regard to the hardships and poverty endured for years by displaced miners and their families in Inverness county, where no other opportunity for employment of any kind exists, the government, in the appointment of members of the crown corporation, will see to it that a resident of the county of Inverness is appointed as one of the directors of that corporation in order that the views of Inverness county may receive full consideration?

Mr. Pearson: I am not certain whether I have received the telegram in question. I will be glad to look into the matter and reply tomorrow. Meanwhile, as the right hon. gentleman knows, a very wide ranging program of economic and industrial development in the area is contemplated, and I am sure all the inhabitants of the area will benefit from it. As to representation on the board of the corporation as requested in the telegram, I will be glad to look into this aspect.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): My supplementary question is related to the question asked by my hon. friend from Cape Breton North and Victoria. I would ask the Prime Minister whether the negotiations about which he spoke, involving the take over of the Dominion Coal Company for a fixed price or in accordance with whatever other arrangements might be made, could not be extended so as to take over DOSCO itself, since the Hawker-Siddeley group paid such a small price for the complex in the beginning. By taking over DOSCO and establishing a crown corporation the transfer by DOSCO of the steel operation from its present location to Quebec might be avoided. The company is using the situation as a springboard for transferring the whole operation—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the right hon. gentleman consider the purchase of DOSCO as a unit in order to maintain the steel operation where it now is, rather than provide a springboard for the transfer to Quebec?

Mr. Pearson: This is a far reaching question involving government intervention in industry, and one which I certainly do not wish to answer on the orders of the day. It is too important to deal with in this way. There will be an opportunity to discuss this whole matter before long in connection with legislation, or even earlier. This will be one of the aspects of the question that will be considered.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Supplementary to the answer given by the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, he stated that there will be an opportunity for discussion in regard to negotiations, decisions, far reaching programs and so on. Am I to understand this also includes what is to be done for the Sydney steel workers at DOSCO? I assume that when he previously mentioned taking over private industry, that pertained to the coal industry. Does he mean this is going to have an effect on the steel industry also?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, any program of industrial development will include the whole area and all industry, and any discussion of this matter would naturally include discussion of economic and industrial development generally.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): As a supplementary question, last Monday I asked the Prime Minister if in setting up the crown corporation to deal with the coal industry he would give some thought to the steel industry, particularly if there is any continued phasing out of the steel industry in Cape Breton? He stated that this was to apply solely to the coal industry. Could we have some assurance now that the government will give consideration to the question of the steel industry at the same time legislation is brought down to deal with the coal industry?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the program that I have been talking about deals primarily with the coal industry and industrial development and economic development in the area, and all factors that concern economic and industrial development will be under consideration.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The negotiations that the government is going to enter into will be with Dominion Coal, but will the Prime Minister keep in mind that this also concerns DOSCO and the assets of Dominion Coal? Would he review the matter to see if it would be legal for the government to take over DOSCO instead of just Dominion Coal?

Mr. Pearson: I am quite aware of the relationship between the two, Mr. Speaker.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Could the minister advise the house what progress is being made by the National Energy Board in negotiations with its opposite numbers in the United States government regarding the setting of progressively increasing targets for the sale of gas and oil to the United States market year by year?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Great progress, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, could the minister give us a little more information than just the bland general answer "great progress?"

Mr. Pepin: This is a fairly general question to be dealt with on orders of the day but I might say, as the hon. member knows very well, that this is an annual rite. Each year the Canadian government presents its case in Washington; we are preparing that case now and we will be presenting it to the Americans soon.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EDUCATION

TORONTO—POSSIBLE CLOSING OF SCHOOLS FOR IMMIGRANT CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has the minister received a communication from the chairman of the Toronto board of education in relation to the possible early closing of English language schools for immigrant children? If so, has the government considered or will it consider financial assistance to prevent this closing of schools which are so important for these youngsters who have come to Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not remember having received such a communication from the chairman of the school board. I shall check into this and possibly may be able to give an answer tomorrow.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON CARROTHERS REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can the minister elaborate on press reports that he will be making a statement on the Carrothers commission report some time in mid-February? If so, will this statement be made by the minister in the Territories, possibly through the medium of the C.B.C. northern service?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can do anything at this time other than reiterate what I have already said. I hope to make an announcement with respect to the adoption of those portions of the Carrothers report which we can embrace at once, and with respect to the appointment of a new commissioner for the Northwest Territories, within a month's time. It is my hope that I will make that announcement within the Territories.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Could the minister tell us whether at that time he will also designate the new capital of the Northwest Territories. This is a question I asked quite some time ago.

Mr. Laing: That decision will be announced at that time also.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LOUIS SICOTTE—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF TRIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, and since his parliamentary assistant does not yet seem to have been appointed, I shall direct my question to the right. hon. Prime Minister, to whom I gave notice of my question yesterday.

Are the justice department and the government in receipt of a petition signed by a certain Louis Sicotte who is seeking a review of his two trials for allegedly having been forced under duress to plead guilty and to sign a false affidavit.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It would seem that this question is of a very special nature and I believe it should more properly be entered on the order paper.

Mr. Allard: I shall bring it up at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR CLEMENCY FOR JAILED UNION LEADERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Is he considering granting additional clemency to Mr. Paddy Neal and Tom Clark, the two trade unionists who went back to jail following the Christmas period? I do not know whether you would call it a recess, but these two persons were released for the Christmas period. Would the minister consider granting additional clemency and releasing them from jail immediately?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): The case involving the two gentlemen mentioned by the hon. member is under active consideration.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

GOLD CENTENNIAL COINS—REQUEST FOR INDIVIDUAL SALES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I had intended addressing to the Minister of Finance. In his absence, because of the nature of the question perhaps I might direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister. Would the government reconsider its decision to permitting the sale of the $20 gold centennial pieces only in the expensive sets at a price of $40 each, and permit people to purchase them individually? I ask the question because a great many members have had requests that they be permitted to purchase them at their face value.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to take the matter into consideration and discuss it with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF CANADA-U.S. INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I think I should direct either to the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder if I could be informed whether there is an approximate date for the next meeting of the Canada-United States interparliamentary committee, and if so where that committee meeting will take place.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My understanding is that this is a question which should be directed to the Speaker. Perhaps the hon. member would wish to do so in writing. As I understand it the question concerns the Canada-United States interparliamentary group. If the hon. member will get in touch with Mr. Speaker that information will be given.

BUTTER—IDENTIFICATION OF IMPORTS FROM NEW ZEALAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Now that the government has made arrangements to purchase and import 2½ million pounds of New Zealand butter, would the minister assure the house that when this butter is sold to the Canadian housewife it will be labelled in such a way as to state the country of origin? Will he also assure the house that it will in no way jeopardize the high quality of Canadian butter?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this butter will be up to Canadian standards. I think it will be sold entirely on the west coast. The amount of butter being imported is in fact sufficient only for two days' normal consumption in Canada. In respect of the matter of labelling, I will be glad to take that portion of my hon. friend's question as notice.

Mr. Hales: Will this butter be sold at stabilized Canadian prices?

Mr. Greene: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he can give us an indication of how much more butter will be imported this year.

Mr. Greene: At the present time this is the only plan for immediate importation. If more is needed in order to protect the stability of prices and supply of the product quality for the benefit of both the consumers and the farmers, more will be imported later. To the best of my knowledge, however, this is the only plan for importation at the present time.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—PAYMENT OF SUBSIDY ON BOAT CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Kings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. Would the minister inform us how soon we may expect the government to honour its commitment and pay to the fishermen of the Atlantic provinces the subsidy promised for the construction of boats in the 35 to 45 foot class?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, all applications for subsidies in respect of either the 35 or 45 foot class are being looked into and are being paid as soon as it is determined that they meet the requirements for the subsidy payment.

LABOUR RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question has to do with the urgent matter of strikes under federal jurisdiction. I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether the task force set up to make recommendations in respect of improving government-management-labour relations legislation has been given a specific date by which it is to report its findings.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the task force was set up by the Prime Minister, but I think I can answer the question. No specific date has been set for the task force to report. The urgency of the matters referred to them has been drawn to their attention, however, with the request that they report as quickly as possible. As I said previously, I doubt whether we will have a comprehensive report for at least a year, but it may be, and I would so hope, that we will have an interim report in the meantime.

TRADE

COMMUNIST CHINA—ASSURANCE OF PAYMENT FOR WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the political unrest in China at the present time has the government received a satisfactory assurance which guarantees payment for the wheat being sold to that country.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will remember that this question was asked on Monday last. I do not think there is anything I can add to it.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO RESPONSIBILITIES OF MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement he made on Monday may I ask whether he is ready to indicate to the house the duties which are to be assigned to the new Minister without Portfolio? In particular, can he say whether the new minister will have any responsibility relating to consumer affairs?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am not in a position to add anything to what I said last Monday, which I believe was nothing.

PUBLIC WORKS

PORT CREDIT, ONT.—EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES INTO LAKE ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I should like to address to the Minister of Transport. Inasmuch as the Ontario Municipal Board has ruled that the town of Port Credit can extend its municipal boundary one mile into lake Ontario, and since that town has announced that it wishes to oversee the installation of water pipe lines, is the Department of Transport abdicating its authority under the Navigable Waters Protection Act in this matter, as the Department of Public Works did?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I would have to seek legal advice before I attempted to answer this question. I will be glad to do so.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MARITIME PROVINCES—REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING CARE OF INDIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. May I ask whether the minister is aware of the statement which emanated from a session of the regional advisory committee on Indian affairs in the maritimes to the effect that more concern is being shown toward animals to see that they are properly fed and sheltered than to the Indians of Canada. Would he cause an investigation to be carried out to ascertain the reason for the aforementioned statement?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Well, Mr. Speaker, words are easy; I do not know where these words originated. A very great number of things are being done at the present time to improve the situation of the Indians. A very large sum of money has been voted by the house for this purpose. I think we are making some very good progress indeed.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): In view of what the minister has said would he have an investigation carried out in the maritime provinces to ascertain the reason such a statement would come from a regional commission of this type?

Mr. Laing: Yes; I certainly will be interested in finding out who made the statement and to what he was referring.

POLLUTION

REQUEST FOR SHOWING OF FILM TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises from an invitation I received from the secretary of the Canadian council of resource ministers to attend in Montreal the reshowing of the National Film Board's film which was shown at the pollution conference last fall.

I should like to ask the minister whether he could arrange to have this film shown on Parliament Hill so members of parliament would have an opportunity of seeing for themselves this dramatic presentation of pollution conditions and their consequences in Canada.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will make inquiries in this regard, but let me correct the hon. member's impression. The film was not made by the National Film Board, which is a great institution; it was made by Crawley Films.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ALLEGED TAMPERING WITH MAIL BY HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether he can make a report to the house regarding the progress of the investigation by the R.C.M. Police into the activities of the Hudson's Bay Company in tampering with the mail.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the R.C.M.P. have interviewed some people and reports have been made and turned over to the Postmaster General. I believe he will be taking appropriate action as a result of those reports.

Mr. Howard: I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether he cares to relate to the house what is taking place.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): We have not as yet received the report from the R.C.M.P., Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: It is a long way from there to there.

Mr. Howard: May I ask another supplementary question, though I do not know to whom I should direct it. Would the Prime Minister care to receive some documentary evidence I have which proves that the Hudson's Bay Company has conducted itself in a criminal way by tampering with the mail and by altering cheques?

LABOUR RELATIONS

C.N.T.U.—INQUIRY RESPECTING REPORT OF MINISTERIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Following the report handed to the cabinet concerning grievances raised by the C.N.T.U. ten months ago with regard to the Canada Labour Relations Board, is the right hon. Prime Minister now in a position to make the statement he promised in the house last December 21, as recorded on page 11460 of Hansard. I quote:

> I sincerely hope when we reassemble I will be able to make a more definitive statement.

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter was heard by the Canada Labour Relations Board on Monday. The decision by the chairman of that board has been reserved, and I do not think it would be proper for me to make any statement while the matter is still under consideration by that board.

CANADIAN FLAG

SUGGESTED PUBLIC HOLIDAY TO HONOUR ADOPTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and relates to his remarks to the house during the question period on Monday regarding the possibility of special commemoration of the new flag by a new public holiday. Is the Prime Minister giving consideration to the adoption of Gordon Sinclair's suggestion that February 15 be named as a new public holiday?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the matters I have on the agenda for discussion with the Secretary of State as soon as she returns.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to add to the agenda for that discussion, but I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Now that he and his staff have successfully delivered all the Christmas and New Year's mail, would it be possible for them to arrange to deliver the subject matter of notice of motion for production of papers No. 182, which was passed by this house on November 16 of last year?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): I will look into that, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, January 10, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose on Tuesday, January 10, 1967, clause 19 of the bill was about to be discussed, clauses 1, 16, 17 and 18 having been stood.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I understand that clause 17 was stood so I could give some consideration to various points which had been raised. I have now had an opportunity to give that consideration and to consult with my officials. If we could revert to clause 17 I would be very happy to communicate to the committee what I have learned.

The Chairman: Does the committee agree now to revert to clause 17?

On clause 17—Committees.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should deal first with the point raised by the member for Edmonton-Strathcona. In doing so I must confess to the committee that I was perhaps not as familiar as I really should have been—though I am not learned in the law and have never practiced before the Board of Transport Commissioners—with the details of the procedure before that board.

It is within the powers of the board as it now exists, and will therefore be within the powers of the new commission, to review and even to rehear any case before or after it renders a decision. I understand it is also within the powers of the governor in council on appeal to ask to have a rehearing or a review. Therefore the very laudable object the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona had in mind is met by the law as it exists. Perhaps I should have known that, but the fact is I did not. Apparently that deals with the first point.

The main discussion we had on clause 17 related to the question of whether there should be a larger quorum for the new kind of review, which is and will be of a somewhat more formal character than is provided in clause 17 subclause 4, because this is a new kind of subject matter which would come before this commission. It could not have come before the Board of Transport Commissioners which does not now have jurisdiction over many modes of transportation.

The hon. member for Springfield suggested that there should be a larger quorum for these hearings than would be required for the hearings of one of the committees, and the hon. member for York South raised a question which I confess quite frankly—I do not apologize for this, I just confess it—I did not understand because I am not a lawyer. However, I think I have now been sufficiently instructed to understand it. The hon. member for York South seemed to imply that because it was provided in this case that a review could not be conducted by the committee which had heard the case originally no member of that committee could sit on the review. I have had the best legal advice I could obtain on the subject and was informed that all that the provision means in law is that the particular committee could not conduct the review but that any members of the committee, even those who were at the original hearing, are not prohibited from participating in the review. They would do so not as members of the committee but as members of the commission. I was also told that it had been a long-standing practice of the Board of Transport Commissioners in its hearings and reviews and it has frequently happened that some of those who have participated in an original hearing have also participated in a review.

The hon. member for Acadia raised a point, which was also raised by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the hon. member for Peace River, that it might be difficult to constitute an appropriate review without having some of the members of the original committee participate in the review because they would have some expertise or at any rate greater knowledge of the particular mode of transport about which the review was to be conducted. I had thought that it would not be appropriate for those persons who had heard the case in the first instance to take part in such a review. I was told that there is a distinction in law between a review and an appeal, that these reviews are not appeals and that there is not only no reason why someone who took part in the original hearing should not sit in review but that in many cases it is highly desirable that they should do so, and that this would be found to have been the practice of the board over the years. When one reflects on it I think it becomes quite apparent why this would seem to be appropriate.

I believe that this disposes of all the points except the one raised by the hon. member for Springfield. I would agree at once that in the case of a review under clause 17 subclause (4) it would certainly be necessary to have a larger number of commissioners sitting than would have sat on the original hearing. This would almost be essential, particularly as it would be desirable to have taking part in the review members of some of the other committees and particularly of the one related to the other mode of transport which was asking for the review. Therefore the only question that seems to be left of those that were raised is whether parliament should prescribe a higher quorum for such reviews than is done for the Board of Transport Commissioners at the present time.

I am told that on balance, in such reviews as have been conducted by the Board of Transport Commissioners over the years, it has always been the case that a large number of commissioners have sat than at the original hearing. In the new legislation and in the law as it now stands it is provided that the commission will have authority to set a larger quorum for any particular purpose if it wishes to do so and also that the Governor in Council can prescribe such larger quorum if he feels that the commission has not made adequate provision for such a review.

I find that this point was very carefully considered by the legal advisers of the Board of Transport Commissioners, of the Air Transport Board and the law officers of the Department of Justice, and that after they had weighed the pros and cons it was their view that the provisions in this regard, which had all been very carefully thought out, were adequate to meet all these needs. It was felt that an attempt to prescribe, in some particular circumstance, another quorum was not really necessary and that in view of the law and the practice in jurisprudence there would be no real doubt as to what would happen in fact.

In view of the desire which I think practically all hon. members have expressed to keep the commission as flexible as possible, and in view of the point that I think I made earlier, in reply to the initial observations of the hon. member for Springfield, I am sure it would be the intention of any government, even of the government of which his friends might form a part some day, to appoint responsible adults to such a commission. In view of this it was not considered really necessary, though it would not be harmful perhaps, to attempt to make more detailed prescriptions. On balance I think I am satisfied with these arguments, which I can assure hon. members are not at all political considerations as I demonstrated amply the other evening by the very considerable lack of knowledge that I displayed on that occasion. However, in view of the advice that I have been given by the draftsmen it would not appear to me and I would not feel disposed in all the circumstances, because I think I have met every one of the considerations which were raised in quite a reasonable way on the advice that I have received from quite responsible officers, to recommend that we make any further changes to clause 17.

Mr. Schreyer: I do not rise to press my suggestion further that the quorum should be increased. However, I should like the minister to clarify one small point in this connection. The bill provides that the quorum shall be as is provided in section 12 of the Railway Act. In that section the quorum is stipulated to be two, but that relates to a seven-man board. The provision now before us relates to that section of the Railway Act and applies it mutatis mutandis. Does this mean that the quorum of the 17-man commission shall be two or that it shall be in the ratio two-seventeenths to 17? I should like this point clarified. I thank the minister for his veiled offer to participate in a coalition government some day.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, the offer has seven veils. I believe that the complicated and ingenious arithmetic the hon. member has suggested is the kind he and I as laymen might suggest but it would shock the learned members of the house. I believe the minimum quorum for any purpose is two. Of course, this does not alter the power of the commission to set a higher quorum for any particular purpose at any particular time it wishes to do so.

Mr. McQuaid: Do I understand the minister to mean that the Governor in Council will make a regulation requiring that the majority membership of the board of review shall consist of members who did not sit on the original hearing? If this is not the case, there is not much purpose in having a review. There should be a guarantee that the majority of members of the board of review shall be members who did not sit on the original hearing. Otherwise the board would really be reviewing its own decision. Have we the assurance there will be an order in council passed to that effect?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not believe I said I would, but I said we could. I hope it would not be necessary. I hope the commission itself, and I think this is very much more desirable, will take care of the matter. If the Governor in Council has to do this, then I think it should be done here. I do not believe it will be necessary at all. If in any circumstances the Governor in Council comes to the conclusion that the commission is not adequately meeting the situation or is not following the practice which I am told has always been followed, then it would be competent for the Governor in Council to repair the situation.

Mr. McQuaid: Does the minister not think it would be a safeguard to write the provision into the legislation? I know we have every confidence in the men who will be appointed, but experience has shown that unless these things are written into the regulations there is a tendency to ignore them.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have already expressed the view, which is not primarily mine but which I accept, that in view of the experience in this particular situation over a long period of years it is not necessary. There might be a situation arise in which prescribed, specific rules might cause vexatious delays. In some cases the review might be of such a simple character that it could be accomplished quickly, perhaps by the addition of one person to the original two. I do not imagine that situation would likely arise, but my advice is that it would be preferable not to include any further statutory restrictions but to allow the commission to deal with situations as they arise. If it appears that the commission is not dealing adequately with such situations, there is always an appeal to the Governor in Council and the Governor in Council may, of his own motion, take the necessary remedial action. It seems to me the situation is quite thoroughly safeguarded.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): While we try to unravel what the minister said, may I ask if he has any information about the question to which I referred concerning an order? What happens to an order between the time it has been made and the time the appeal or review is under way? I ask this because during the committee hearings, as I recall, someone complained of hardship. I should like to know what the law is now and if there has been any change in this regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is nothing in the law now that sets aside the effect of an order while a review is being undertaken. The board has the power, if a review is required and some injury would be done by a continuation of the order, to issue a stop order. The commission would have this power too. It is felt, however, that if this were a requirement there might be vexatious demands for reviews merely to gum up the works. Experience shows that the present provision does allow the situation to be dealt with adequately. I apologize to the hon. gentleman because I had a notation on this matter but I overlooked it.

Clause agreed to.

The Chairman: Clause 19?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think we could go on with clause 18. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona asked that it be allowed to stand because clause 17 had been allowed to stand.

On clause 18—Appeal.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): There is a reference in this clause to a licence to operate a motor vehicle. Would it be necessary for anyone applying for one of these licences to have a provincial licence?

Mr. Pickersgill: I believe you cannot operate a motor vehicle in any province in Canada without having a licence on it. There is nothing this parliament can do to change that requirement and we are not trying to change it. The reference is not to a licence to drive the vehicle but to a licence to carry on business between two provinces or between a province and a foreign country. The issuance of licences to operate vehicles is entirely a matter within provincial jurisdiction. We are not in any way purporting to deal with that. We would be dealing with a licence to permit this motor vehicle undertaking to cross provincial boundaries.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Would it not be better to spell that out in the bill, that a person applying for a federal licence must have a provincial licence before he applies?

Mr. Pickersgill: His vehicle must be licensed or the provincial police will stop him from going along the roads.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): We know that when commercial vehicles go from one province to another they have to have a licence in each province. Will this rule still apply?

Mr. Pickersgill: I imagine there is nothing we can do about that. This would be a matter entirely within provincial jurisdiction. If the provinces require it, of course it would be up to them.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): If a commercial vehicle were travelling from Halifax to Vancouver, would it have to have nine provincial licences and a federal licence?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman will appreciate that is none of our business in this house. If two provinces agree they will respect each other's licence plates, as they do for pleasure cars, that is up to them. I have only an Ontario licence on my car but if I had the time I would be able to drive it in any province. I believe the provinces require some commercial vehicles to be licensed in each province, but that is entirely a provincial matter and is not dealt with in this bill.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 19—Regulations.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Can I get verification of my thinking from the minister? I mention this point because the minister referred to the Governor in Council with regard to clauses 17 and 18. Do I now understand that under clause 19 and clause 35, which also has to do with regulations, the commission can set its own regulations and that it is not necessary to get the approval of the Governor in Council? Am I also correct that should the Governor in Council desire to intervene and become involved as the minister suggests, the commission probably would not take this action even if it wanted to?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, Mr. Chairman, the commission does have the power to make its own rules. If I am wrong in this I will get legal advice and make an abject apology to the hon. member, but I think my interpretation is correct, that if these rules seem to be unjust, vexatious or anything like that the Governor in Council could then direct the commission to change any specific rule.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 20—Annual report to Governor in Council.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Chairman, at this stage of the bill I shall suggest an amendment, the effect of which will be to introduce a new clause 20 and the subsequent clauses will require to be renumbered. I hope that my explanation for this action will commend the amendment to hon. members and will receive their support.

The bill before the house defines a national transportation policy. Inherent in that policy and essential to its success is the application of the principle that each mode of transport is to compete in order that there be an economic, adequate and efficient transportation system making the best use of all available transport modes in the country.

Many representations have been made about Bill No. C-231 and I think that the standing committee on transport and communications has done an excellent job. The committee certainly heard many submissions and it has approved many amendments in order to make the bill a more effective piece of legislation. But there is one very important development in the field of transportation which I personally should like to see the bill cover more fully, and I refer to the power of one form of transport to enter another transportation field and, as it were, to buy up and control the competition.

One of the more important principles in Bill No. C-231 is that whenever competition exists in transportation that competition should work to the advantage of the people of Canada. The interplay of competition certainly produces new and better ways of moving freight. It suggests new ways of reducing costs and is a strong restraining force on freight rates. We are dealing with a bill which will establish a new pattern of growth and development for all modes of transport under federal jurisdiction, and it seems to me that to fail to include in that bill a provision which will give some safeguard to the continuance of competition would undermine the bill's objective of competition in the transportation field

I acknowledge that there are situations in which common ownership of competing modes of transport may be in the public interest. For example, I can see certain situations in which the use of trucks by railways, not just in urban areas for pick-up and delivery but on intercity routes, may definitely establish a desirable integration of services. However, I also believe that we should empower the new Canadian Transport Commission to take a look at the ability of one mode of transport to gain control of a competing mode. I believe that the commission should have the authority in the public interest to restrain any policy or action by one mode of transport which would permit it to use its economic power to gain monopolistic control and to manipulate, as it were, competitive transport media.

In the Atlantic provinces and in western Canada the issue of control of one mode of transport by another is probably of greater public import than in central Canada. The extensive network of inland waterways and transportation services such as there is in central Canada does not exist in the Atlantic provinces or in the west. In the Atlantic provinces and in the west there are not as many trucking firms to compete with the railways.

I do not think that the entry of one form of transport into another can be dealt with by attempting to turn back the clock. I would be against disrupting the present pattern of services by suggesting that any form of transport be forced to divest itself of control of facilities which to date were legitimately acquired. I think we should perhaps accept the status quo as we find it at this time, but I also believe we have to look into the future and plan for the future. In particular, we should ensure that no sudden move can be made outside the authority of the Canadian Transport Commission to change radically the composition of the Canadian transportation industry by one mode deciding on its own how much of a competing mode it will acquire. I think that one form of transport should perhaps be able to experiment and to develop services in another mode, but I do not think that the public interest of this country will be served if moves are permitted in the transportation field which will seriously affect the amount of competition between the modes.

Accordingly, with that in mind I move:

That Bill C-231 be amended

(a) by inserting immediately after clause 19 on page 12 of the bill, as reprinted, the following: Notice of proposed Acquisition.

"20. (1) A railway company, commodity pipeline company, company engaged in water transportation, or person operating a motor vehicle undertaking or an air carrier, to which the legislative jurisdiction of parliament of Canada extends, that proposes to acquire, directly or indirectly, an interest, by purchase, lease, merger, consolidation or otherwise, in the business or undertaking of any person whose principal business is transportation, whether or not such business or undertaking is subject to the jurisdiction of parliament, shall give notice of the proposed acquisition to the commission.

Publication.

(2) The commission shall give or cause to be given such public or other notice of any proposed acquisition referred to in subsection (1) as to it appears to be reasonable in the circumstances.

Objection.

(3) Any person affected by a proposed acquisition referred to in subsection (1) or any association or other body representing carriers or transportation undertakings affected by such acquisition may, within such time as may be prescribed by the commission, object to the commission against such acquisition on the grounds that it will unduly restrict competition or otherwise be prejudicial to the public interest.

Investigation and Approval by Commission.

(4) Where objection is made pursuant to subsection (3) the commission

(a) shall make such investigation, including the holding of public hearings, as in its opinion is necessary or desirable in the public interest; and

(b) may approve such acquisition unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the commission that such acquisition will unduly restrict competition or otherwise be prejudicial to the public interest; and any such acquisition, to which objection is made within the time limited therefor by the commission, is void unless approved by the commission.

Construction.

(5) Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize any acquisition of an interest in any other company that is prohibited by any act of the parliament of Canada."

(b) by renumbering clause 20 on page 12 of the bill, as reprinted, as clause 21; and

(c) by striking out clause 21 and the heading thereto on page 13 of the bill, as reprinted.

I have copies of the amendment in French and in English.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before you put the amendment may I say that, as must be quite apparent from the fact that I have copies of the amendment, the hon. gentleman was good enough not only to take the advice I offered the other day, as did several other hon. members, and let me know in advance that he was going to move the amendment but he also discussed its content with me. The amendment is quite acceptable to me and to the government. It is an amendment which in substance was suggested by the Canadian Trucking Association, and I think it meets with the general philosophical attitude that parliament has expressed over and over again, that we should be very chary indeed of allowing monopolies to develop if that can reasonably be avoided.

When the amendment is put, therefore, if hon. members are disposed to accept it I can assure them as sponsor of the bill that I shall be quite happy. I might suggest—and I make this point now to the hon. member—with reference to part (c), that part of the amendment striking out clause 21, that if the amendment is accepted I shall be moving an amendment to clause 94, where it seems appropriate to re-insert this same provision. The reason for doing it in this apparently roundabout way is that it saves renumbering the rest of the clauses in the bill. The present clause 20 would be clause 21 and we should not have to go through the action of renumbering the rest of the clauses. I thought I ought to give that explanation; otherwise hon. members would be puzzled by part (c).

Mr. Baldwin: Might I address a question to the minister and to the hon. member proposing the amendment? Has this matter been checked to see if there is any conflict with the restrictive trade practices legislation or the Criminal Code? Is there a conflict anywhere? Is the amendment consistent with the wishes of parliament, with the carrying out of the purposes of parliament as embodied in the restrictive trade practices legislation or the various sections of acts covering restrictive trade practices? That is the point occurring to me. Looking at this matter at first blush it seems that we are moving in the right direction. It would be a great pity if this legislation were amended by a clause which subsequently is found to create conflict. Has the minister considered this matter or have his advisers considered it?

Mr. Pickersgill: I did. Because of the words of this amendment, which will be recognized as quite an important one, and because the hon. gentleman gave me notice of his desire to do this when we were in committee before the Christmas recess, I asked the opinion of the draftsmen and of the law officers of the Department of Justice. I am assured that not only in their opinion is there no conflict but that the amendment is within the spirit of other legislative enactments.

The Chairman: Before the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond speaks may I put the motion as moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur?

Mr. Pickersgill: Dispense, sir.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, a couple of questions come to mind in this connection. Having had no advance notice, we have not had time to study this amendment. The first question which comes to my mind, speaking as an individual, is this. Is the intent altogether good? This amendment brings up the whole subject of bigness of corporations and how we control it. It seems to me that often we concern ourselves with bigness and try to prevent it simply because we do not control it adequately through some public agency. In many instances I can see that more efficient production, if you like, in the transport field might be brought about by major companies controlling more than one mode of transport. We could accept bigness if there were adequate public control. That is one aspect of this matter that comes to mind.

I know it is late in the day to raise it but there is also the point that the two major railway companies already own many trucking firms. In my province, and I am thinking of the area between the Okanagan valley and the Pacific coast, the major trucking lines moving fruit in that area at the present time are owned by the railway companies. Have the minister and the hon. member for Port Arthur done any research into the point I have raised? What percentage of the major trucking firms in the country is owned by railway companies? I wish to pose those two points to the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I immediately say a word in this regard. I think there are those in the trucking industry who would suggest that we should go much farther than this amendment goes and order the railway companies to divest themselves of all their trucking operations except those—representations of this kind have been made to me by some truckers—strictly ancillary to railway operations, such as delivery trucks in a town. I do not feel that in a bill like this we would want to embark upon such a fundamental change of practice as that would involve. I do not feel I should be willing to accept an amendment that would forbid future acquisitions. There is something in what the hon. gentleman says. Sometimes it may be more efficient to have one mode of transport owned by another. The public may be able to get better service that way.

What this amendment does, and I think very effectively, is to say that whenever anyone wants a hearing, when there is notice of acquisition of one mode of transport by another, a hearing shall be held to determine whether that acquisition is in the public interest and whether that amalgamation should take place. If the commission reaches the conclusion that on balance it would be in the public interest to have that common ownership, it would be agreeable to the amalgamation. If the commission felt that amalgamation would create a monopoly apt to be injurious, it would not be agreeable to it.

I congratulate the hon. gentleman for having produced this amendment. It will give us not the best of both worlds but the better, one might say, of both worlds.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I take it this is the amendment the minister referred to on Tuesday night?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): It was not the minister's fault that we did not get it on Tuesday night.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nor was it the hon. gentleman's.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): This amendment is far-reaching in two respects. Through it, uniquely in this bill, we give the commission directions to do certain things. This cannot be wrong and we ought to consider whether other types of activity should also be controlled in this way. Frankly, I have not fully considered the matter.

The hon. member for Peace River has alluded to something that I think brings in an entirely new principle. Here a new board is being set up and we are asking it to shadow, if you like some activities now coming under other acts administered under the authority of the Department of Justice. This point ought to be considered carefully.

With these two reservations I think the amendment moves toward desirable objectives. The hon. member for Port Arthur has recognized that certain aspects of this matter cannot be retroactive. We really need more time to consider this amendment.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I should like to say a word about the proposed amendment which, as my hon. friend from Saint John-Albert has said, has far-reaching implications. We already have a Restrictive Trade Practices Commission which concerns itself with questions of monopoly and whether or not a company is destroying competition unduly to the detriment of consumers. It is assumed in the amendment that any inroad by one mode of transportation into another field of transportation might well prove harmful to the public interest. If such an amendment is seriously contemplated now, it is too bad it was not enacted before the railways became involved in the trucking business to the extent which has now become evident. I am not sure whether it is harmful to the public interest for railway companies to become involved in the pipe line industry. But they are becoming interested in it, and perhaps it is right that they should do so.

In any case, this amendment does represent a departure from the normal and I suggest we should stand it for the time being. We shall be discussing this bill for another day, I would expect, and perhaps we can deal with the matter tomorrow or on Monday. In the interval we could consider whether this proposal conflicts with any provision of the Combines Investigation Act and whether it is likely to give rise to other complications.

Mr. Baldwin: If this is going to be done the minister might give some reflection to another aspect. Subclause (3) of the new proposed clause 20 provides that any person affected by a proposed acquisition referred to in subclause (1) may object. This would appear to restrict the people who can participate in proceedings before the commission to those who are within the wording "any person affected", and I think this is probably right. One would not wish to have a multiplicity of interests before the commission at this stage. The point I should like to make is: Does the decision of the commission in this respect then become, as I suspect it will, subject to the provisions of clause 16(2)(a), which refers to a review of any act of a carrier and entitles any person to appear where that person has reason to believe there is a prejudicial effect?

The minister may see what I am trying to say in my awkward way. Let us assume this amendment is adopted and let us assume that there have been proceedings under the new clause 20 where the commission has acted and which involve a carrier enlarging his activities by absorbing another business. Does that then become an act of the carrier which is subject to review under clause 16? Does it mean that a person, meaning a much wider group of people, may challenge that this particular act is not in the public interest and thereby necessitate a further review? The minister probably sees what I am getting at. He might give some thought to it and consider it.

Mr. Pickersgill: My thought would be that it would not be necessary to go to clause 16 because any person affected would not necessarily be the other carrier. It could be a provincial government in the province in which any such amalgamation was taking place. If a truck line in the Okanagan were being taken over by the C.P.R., I do not think the government of Nova Scotia would be a person affected. But the government of British Columbia or the municipalities in the area might be. I do not think it is necessary to rely on the public interest in clause 16 at all. They would have the right to intervene in the first instance.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister has not grasped what I have in mind. If I am correct and if this may happen, there would then be two reviews, first, the hearing by the board under clause 20 and, second, the right of review under clause 16. "Person" under 16 comprises in my view a far wider multitude of people than the persons covered in clause 20. This is the point I am making and which I am asking the minister to consider. Would he give some thought to it?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure my legal advisers have been listening to the hon. gentleman, perhaps with more comprehension than I have. The suggestion that we should stand the proposed amendment is agreeable to me. Perhaps in doing so we should deal with the proposed clause 20 and pass it subject to its being amended in an automatic way if we accept this other amendment later.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): That is agreeable, but would the minister clarify the matter of the new numbers? We have an amendment here and are finding it difficult to fit it in. We shall have to bring it in before clause 94.

Mr. Pickersgill: If it is a new amendment which would involve another clause I suggest tentatively, at any rate, because I can always introduce yet another amendment to do something about the numbering, that the hon. member might move any such amendment as clause 20A. This would avoid complications for the time being. If it were accepted and if it were felt that the numbering was becoming untidy, I am sure it would not be beyond the wit of the lawyers when we get to the end of the bill to move an amendment which would renumber all the clauses and get over the difficulty.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Chairman, on behalf of Quebec truckers, I am pleased to speak on the amendment to clause 20. Hon. members will not be surprised, of course, by my intervention on behalf of the trucking industry, because since I was first elected to the house, that is on February 10, 1964, I have shown here on several occasions my interest for that industry.

As early as May 27, 1964, I put on the Votes and Proceedings of the house a notice of motion which appeared at page 25 of the order paper on June 3, 1964 and read as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should not implement the recommendations of the royal commission on transportation, better known as the MacPherson commission, which suggests, among other things, that the railway companies be free to set up a trucking system.

That motion did not come up for discussion, because the time allocated to the house for consideration of notices of motion was exhausted before it could be called by the Speaker.

On April 26, 1966, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) a question about the depreciation rate on trucks. On May 10, 1966, on the adjournment motion, I made brief representations to the Minister of Finance, asking him to reconsider maintaining the depreciation rate on trucks at 30 per cent instead of 20 per cent, as proposed in his budget speech. I can say that this intervention was successful, because the Minister of Finance revised his position on the depreciation rate on trucks and kept it at 30 per cent.

The amendment proposed by the honourable member for Port Arthur (Mr. Andras) reads as follows:

That Bill No. C-231, entitled an act to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions be amended

(a) by inserting immediately after clause 19 on page 12 of the bill, as reprinted, the following: Notice of proposed Acquisition.

"20. (1) A railway company, commodity pipeline company, company engaged in water transportation, or person operating a motor vehicle undertaking or an air carrier, to which the legislative jurisdiction of parliament of Canada extends, that proposes to acquire, directly or indirectly, an interest, by purchase, lease, merger, consolidation or otherwise, in the business or undertaking of any person whose principal business is transportation, whether or not such business or undertaking is subject to the jurisdiction of parliament, shall give notice of the proposed acquisition to the commission.

I am glad to support this amendment for, to my mind, the trucking industry is of the highest importance to the economy of the country as a whole. It represents investments of over a billion dollars and, at the present time, in the province of Quebec alone, 55,000 employees depend on it for their livelihood.

One Canadian out of 20 works for the trucking industry. One dollar out of 13, whether in wages, in salaries or in other revenues in the field of Canadian labour, comes from transport.

It is strange to note that former federal governments, since the advent of trucking, failed to take that industry into consideration in the various laws affecting the trucking interests in the field of competition.

However, a Liberal government has finally decided to review the whole national policy on transportation, taking into account all modes of transport including the trucking industry. They should be commended for creating such a precedent and I am convinced that the trucking industry will know how to show its appreciation for this significant and important step.

The various trucking associations in the country had been requesting a new national policy on transportation for a long time. As reported in the Canadian Trucking Association Review, dated April 23, 1965, the association will ask the federal government to introduce a new federal legislation authorizing provincial control boards, controlling extra-provincial trucking, to work together as a single unit. Such a legislation would therefore maintain provincial control boards as control agencies authorized to meet legally as a joint control board to deal with requests for extra-provincial trucking.

The July 14, 1965 issue of this association's review refers to the fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) is carrying on his series of speeches advocating the establishment of a national transportation authority, and it says that his appeal for such authority is the first logical statement of a truly positive federal approach to national transportation problems in many years.

It seems to me it is urgent to establish a national transportation policy in Canada. Even though the province of Quebec has set the example by passing adequate legislation, the fact remains that truck transportation has developed into a coast-to-coast operation and that all that legislation must be coordinated by a federal act.

The C.T.A., or Canadian Trucking Association, is satisfied with the bill under study and the amendment under discussion, since it made representations in that direction, that is for the following reasons:

First, to put an end to the multiplicity of hearings by many provincial boards.

Second, to remove the conflicts from one province to another because of the permits granted for the same extra-provincial company.

Third, to set forth regulations governing extra-provincial rates throughout Canada.

Fourth, to establish adequate legal control over the property transfers of extra-provincial companies.

Fifth, to put an end to the continued failure to apply the extra-provincial regulations, under the Motor Vehicle Transport Act.

In the province of Quebec particularly, the Transport Control Board supervises and controls a large number of owners of freight and passenger public transport companies.

Since the organization has already been set up, it is contemplated in the amendment to use the good offices of the boards now in existence in all provinces, for they have the experience and the qualifications to settle the problems of the trucking industry. They are the best existing organizations, and they are ready to co-operate with the federal government in the application of this transport legislation.

I am happy to point out that within Canada, Quebec now has, according to numerous public statements, the best legislation to protect the interests of both truckers and shippers. With only 11 per cent of the railroads in Canada, and with 30 per cent of the Canadian population, Quebec had to rely more heavily on highway transport. This explains the extraordinary development of this industry in that province.

The truckers associations have energetically and frequently protested against government paternalism in the shape of subsidies given to the railways. They maintain that the government should rather give subsidies to the shippers, who could then choose their own method of transport. The proposed amendment also aims to prevent intervention by the railways in the trucking industry. In a country where we extol freedom of speech, religion, movement, enterprise, the individual, private property, the press and freedom of choice with regard to political parties, we should also advocate free enterprise with regard to trucking companies and allow the various enterprises to compete freely.

Any user should be free to choose freely the method of transport he prefers. It is important that the income and expenditures of each method of transport should balance, each method of transport assuming the responsibility of its financial equilibrium. The words "freedom of choice of the user" are calling, of course, for competition, the only factor able to guarantee the user the lowest transportation rate, the conditions of a healthy competition and the financial balance of all the businesses.

That definition of free enterprise with regard to the trucking industry is supported by the "Union internationale des transports routiers" of Geneva, in its brief published in July 1962. As reported on page 13 of that document, it states:

> On the other hand, the I.R.U. maintains as absolute prerequisites the two propositions hereunder which are liable to be accepted in all the economic systems, whether they are competitive or not.
> Prerequisite No. 1—Freedom of choice of the user.
> The user must be able, in all freedom and taking into account the utilization factor which he defines for his own needs, to choose his method of transport and his transportation firm, or to decide that he will attend to the transportation himself.
> Prerequisite No. 2—Financial balance.
> The income and expenditures of each method of transport and each transportation firm must balance, each firm assuming the responsibility of its financial balance.

As a matter of fact, the role of the state is not to supplement private enterprise but rather to co-operate with it so as to improve the economy of the whole country. On April 20, 1966, when I commented on the budget, I made a statement of principle concerning the success of free enterprise in Canada and the need for continuation of this system in the country by adapting it to modern needs.

Here, in this country, we have the following statement made by the Newfoundland royal commission:

> The C.N.R. and C.N. Transportation Limited should not be allowed to buy private trucking firms and they should not be permitted to have direct control over private trucking companies.

And, further on:

> Their operations should be limited to freight transportation from one station to another and they should not be allowed to compete directly with private trucking.

Moreover, the brief submitted by the government of the province of Quebec to the royal commission on transportation in Canada, in December 1960, contains the following statement:

> Section 302.
> We believe that the railways should increase the efficiency of their service, trucking being for them simply a limited extension of their rail operations. But we object to the railways having control or a near monopoly of the trucking industry at the expense of the independent truckers and to the detriment of the general public interest. As far as the province of Quebec is concerned, we already use for that purpose the provisions of the Transport Board Act (13 George VI, chapter 21, as amended, the General Regulations and amendments thereto).

Section 303.

We remind the railways that their main responsibility to the Canadian people, historically, economically and socially, is to organize an efficient and economical system of railway transportation, and not to engage in the trucking industry. Consequently, we do not want them to touch the trucking industry in the province, except in certain exceptional cases, when required to fulfil efficiently their functions as railways.

Section 304.

We note the assurances given by the railways that their involvement in the trucking industry is not intended to drive out the independent truckers but rather to ensure an extension that would enable them to supply the Canadian public with a better, more adaptable and economical transport service than in the past.

Section 305.

Trucking, as a restricted complement to railway operations must not go beyond pick-up and delivery by railway-owned trucks in metropolitan centers and the principal cities.

In the United States, the railways are barred from trucking and the Financial Times of June 24, 1963 mentions, among other things:

[English]

The Interstate Commerce Commission has told the C.N.R. competition, U.S. or Canadian, that no matter how short the route, it will not permit the railway to take over a truck line operating in the United States...all motor carriers in this country should be protected against rail controlled trucks.

• (4:20 p.m.)

In great Britain, the 1962 Transportation Act also bars railway companies from entering the trucking field. Other countries have taken the same position: Germany, Holland, Italy, France and Mexico, among others. These countries have brought down legislation in this regard, leaving the shipping public free to choose their own method of transportation by land, thus providing true competition in the public interest. For the good of the country, it is essential that Canada should have a completely independent system of transportation by land, not only for the reasons which I have just advocated but also for labour considerations. Just imagine, Mr. Chairman, that all means of transportation in Canada—the railways, the bus and truck companies—would be controlled by the same interests, and a strike would occur. It would be a national disaster.

In concluding my comments, Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the house to the brief submitted in November, 1966, by the Canadian Trucking Association, Inc., to the standing committee on transport and communications with respect to Bill No. C-231. On page 14, paragraph 41, the brief mentions, among other things, under the heading "Access of railways to the trucking field", and I quote:

The independence and the competitive character of the trucking industry are gradually disappearing. The purchase of trucking companies by the railways and the increasing importance of their trucking operations surely raises the question of future governmental policy in transportation legislation such as Bill No. C-231.

The following lines are found in paragraph 42:

This intrusion of the railways has been going on since 1946, with fluctuations by the C.P.R. between 1946 and 1948, and also in 1957-1958; in the case of the C.N.R. this dates back mostly to 1959.

In paragraph 43, we read the following:

The national transportation policy for Canada outlined in Bill No. C-231 inexorably brings the committee to study the extent to which the railways have entered the competitive trucking field and their position with respect to achieving control of the industry. We respectfully submit it is time that parliament—in view of the importance of the intrusion by the railways and the vast number of services controlled by the railway companies on the highways—went beyond high-sounding explanations concerning "co-ordinated trucking" or "integration of services".

Finally, paragraph 44 reads as follows:

The railway companies can achieve control in a given sector of the trucking industry simply by purchasing any one of six independent trucking companies, say, operating on a given line—

Mr. Chairman, I would have many other things to say but, unfortunately, I have to cut short; however, before I sit down, I would like to add that Canadian and Quebec transport companies are in favour of the new legislation, particularly with respect to the amendment presented by the member for Port Arthur and seconded by myself, and I hope that it will be supported by the house.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether it might be agreed that the amendment be allowed to stand and that we consider clause 20 now, subject to coming back to the amendment.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur now stand and that clauses 20 and 21 as renumbered in the reprinted version remain as 20 and 21 for the time being?

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, before we reach a decision on that, may I ask a question of the minister? There is something which is not very clear in my mind and perhaps is not clear in the mind of the hon. member who moved the amendment. I see here the words "to which the legislative jurisdiction of parliament of Canada extends, that proposes to acquire, directly or indirectly, an interest, by purchase, lease, merger, consolidation or otherwise". Suppose they do not want to acquire, lease or purchase but want to establish something that does not exist. In that case, would the amendment block this loophole? I should like to have the reaction of the mover of the amendment or the minister in this regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would imagine that if a railway company, for example, wanted to establish a new truck line where none existed it would have to follow the procedures which are prescribed for the purpose of establishing such new line. Whatever the law requires at the present time would be as prescribed under the motor vehicles act—I never can remember the name of the act—which now gives the provincial agencies jurisdiction on our behalf over this field. After this bill passes and after our consultations with the provinces, if at some stage in the future we propose to exercise this jurisdiction, then it would be according to whatever rules are laid down for the establishment of a new line. In the case of a pipe line which a railway wished to build, of course it would have to follow the procedures which would be laid down in this bill for a commodity pipe line. If it wished to start a new steamship line, it would have to follow whatever the law may be at the present time.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly agreeable to the idea of having this amendment stand, but I would insist on suggesting to the minister that he study the possibility of adding after the words "that proposes" the words "to establish" and then carry on with the words "to acquire, directly or indirectly".

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be very glad to have my legal advisers look at that suggestion. I think it would be better if I do not express any view until they have done so.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment stands.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I might ask for direction at this time. I intend to move an amendment which will be new clause 20A. I am agreeable to carrying clause 20 if it is understood that this does not prohibit the introduction of my amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

Mr. Baldwin: After clause 20 has been carried I intend to move the introduction of a new clause 20A as an amendment.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 21—Amendments and repeals.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the hon. member speaks in respect of his amendment may I ask to have clause 21 stand. Until the amendment is disposed of I would not wish to deal with clause 21.

Clause 21 stands.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, while I am still confused about the numbering of these clauses, there is an amendment which I wish to move. I think I will move it here as clause 20A subject to the understanding the minister has indicated and which the committee seems to have approved. It may have to be renumbered if accepted in view of certain other changes which result consequentially from the amendment moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur. Some time ago I gave an indication of the nature of this amendment. I wish to move the amendment primarily because of the extraordinary powers being given to the Canadian Transport Commission. I do not object to these powers. As I indicated previously, probably we are getting into the stage of being sucked into a vortex in our industrial, economic and social life wherein we have to do these things. I feel, however, that we should provide as many safeguards as possible for ourselves and those whom we represent when these powers are being given.

I suggest to hon. members, most of whom I know have given a great deal of care and study to this bill, that they look at some of the clauses which indicate the powers of the commission. They will note clauses 5, 14, 15 and 88, the schedule to the act, and a number of bills and other acts which will have to be amended by virtue of this particular bill. By clause 15, subclause (5), we even give to the commission the right to delegate powers and authority.

Clause 28 gives this commission the power to exempt from the operation of the act certain features and aspects of responsibility. Not only will this commission have the right to regulate on the basis of the powers it is taking over from the Board of Transport Commissioners and other boards and associations which it will replace, but by two clauses, 35 (o) and 35 (r), it will have additional powers to make regulations of a very substantial nature. Clause 35 (r) gives the commission power to make such regulations as may be necessary for carrying out the purposes of the bill. Clause 35 (o) also gives the board the power to impose sanctions and penalties not to exceed $1,000. In other words, it has the power to impose a penalty on anyone who disobeys or is in breach of sections of the act or the regulations. In addition the commission has the power to deal with and make recommendations involving the expenditure over eight years of some $480 million, being the amount required for what we may call phasing out subsidies.

In addition to those powers the commission has the right to recommend to the governor in council or the Minister of Finance—I am not sure which and there may be a distinction—the payment of such sums as in its opinion are required because of losses which are or may be sustained in connection with non-economic passenger services and branch line services. The commission will have tremendous power in respect of the recommendation and allocation of hundreds of millions of dollars. Never before have so few non-elected people been given so much power in relation to the economic characteristics of this country and the right to deal with all aspects of transportation.

At an earlier stage I gave particulars of an amendment which I intend to move. I have copies in English and French. I may trespass on the time of the committee by reading it but I intend to do so because some members may not have heard it or read it before. My amendment is:

That clause 20 be amended by adding the following subclause:

(1) As soon as practical after the commencement of the first session of each parliament, in any event not more than 15 days after the commencement of the said session, a committee of 12 members of the House of Commons (to be known as The National Transport Act Committee) shall be appointed for the duration of such parliament according to the practice of this house with reference to the appointment of members to serve on standing committees.

(2) There shall be a chairman and a vice-chairman of the committee who shall be elected by the members from time to time provided however that the chairman shall be a member of the opposition.

(3) Save where otherwise provided herein the general practice as established by the Standing Orders shall prevail with regard to the meetings and acts of the said committee.

(4) The powers and duties of the committee are:

(a) to examine the annual report made to the Governor in Council by the commission and to report to the house with such comments as it thinks fit any items or matters referred to in this report; and

(b) to enquire into any question which is referred to it by the House of Commons and to report to the house upon that question.

(5) The committee may, and at the request of the witness giving evidence shall, take in private evidence whether oral or documentary which in the opinion of the committee relates to a secret or confidential matter.

(6) Where at the request of a witness evidence is taken by the committee in private the committee or member shall not, without the consent in writing of the witness, disclose or publish the whole or part of the evidence.

(7) Every person competent to give evidence touching any matter under discussion in the committee shall be a compellable witness.

(8) A person who gives evidence before the committee shall not without just cause (proof whereof shall lie upon him) refuse

(a) to be sworn or make a statement;

(b) to answer a question put to him by the committee or member thereof; or

(c) to produce any document which he is required by the committee to produce.

I brought this matter to the attention of the committee before because in my opinion there is far too much apathy and indifference on the part of the government, members of this house, parliament, the press and the public regarding the extent to which parliament from time to time gives various commissions, boards and crown corporations almost uncontrolled power to regulate and deal with various aspects of our social and economic life. History shows that one of the saddest things about the loss of liberties is the fact that people who had the right and opportunity to do something failed to do so. Step by step, stage by stage and area by area we find that various rights which at one time fell within the control of the elected legislative body of this country have been filched away, eroded and whittled down.

As a result of the immense growth of governmental activity, obviously one can ask whether expert public servants are becoming the masters of the people they are employed to serve. Several other questions arise at the same time. Are not many administrators vested with authority to act as legislator and judge? Is this not a violation of the principles of separation of powers and natural justice? Perhaps the main question is that which involves the fundamental principle of democracy. Does not the growing pattern of administrative regulation undermine the ideal of representative government expressed through a popularly elected legislature?

As I said before, I recognize that in the kind of society and world in which we live it would be impossible for governments to operate without boards and tribunals vested with a certain amount of authority including the authority to make regulations and provide punishment for infractions of them. It would be utterly impossible for this or any parliament to deal completely with all the problems which arise and necessitate our attention. However, when we find that someone says, as often happens in companies or groups, I have been directed by this board or association to make a certain return, file certain documents and give some statistical information, we must conclude that this is not good when these directions are made under terms of regulations and enactments which are not part of the statutes. It is fantastic how often we as individuals are now told by appointed officials what we can or cannot do. This is not good because these people do not have a supernatural ability. There has been no laying on of hands. This happens because we as a legislative body have given this right to these people, and it is our responsibility in doing so to ascertain to what extent we can hedge this authority by safeguards in a way which will not interfere with the effective operation and function of these boards. We must make certain that the impact and result of the exercise of these functions do not harm those people who have sent us here.

Perhaps it is a good thing to have this conflict between elected representatives and civil servants. As a matter of fact I think there is far more conflict, as I think there should be, between us who sit in this chamber and those who are appointed. Only in that way can we have good government. However, the weapons and the conditions must be equal. This has been my complaint with regard to so many of the duties which we as members are asked to exercise by those we represent. We simply have not got the equipment, the knowledge and the assistance to do it. I am moving this amendment in that sense.

As I said before, if the rules had permitted me to do so I would have included a clause by which expert assistance would have been made available to the statutory committee which I proposed. However, because this involved the expenditure of funds and private members are prohibited from so proposing I have not done so, but I would hope that if any such committee is to be established the government would consider the provision of expert assistance. In a matter as complicated as this, where there are so few people who have adequate and expert knowledge, to set up a committee to do the things which I envisage as the work of this committee would be a completely fruitless exercise unless expert and knowledgeable people who would be in full and constant touch with the members of this committee were available.

I conclude by suggesting that this matter is one of which the government is well aware. When this house was dealing some time ago with the new proposed rules, which are now the interim rules under which the house is operating, I asked the Prime Minister about the possibility of setting up a committee on delegated authority. The answer which the right hon. gentleman gave me at that time indicated that he was well aware of the problem. He referred to Lord Hewart's book, "The New Despotism". He said he understood well the difficulty which faced the government. At that time he indicated that something might be done about the problem, but nothing has been done. I think the government realizes that the problem exists, but naturally the initiative must come from someone outside the government.

For this reason I propose in my amendment the establishment of a statutory committee, which is a novel concept in this country. This committee will sit from parliament to parliament thereby, I hope, building up for the duration of a parliament a body of men who will acquire an expertise and knowledge of this very complicated subject matter which will permit them not to sit as a court of appeal—of course this is absolutely unthinkable vis-à-vis the transport commission—not to obstruct the transport commission, but simply as a window through which we can peer at the operations of this commission. In this way we would be able to see to what extent their acts were having an impact on the social and economic lives of the people of Canada and to see what could be done if, in the opinion of this committee, things were happening which were not contemplated.

I am sure the minister will be the last one to disagree with me when I suggest that there are aspects and features in this bill of which he is not too sure. Where we will be three, four or five years from now is a question which I do not think he or anyone else in this country can answer. The future problems which may face us in transportation can hardly be envisaged at this time in view of the departures which this bill is making. For this reason I urge the government, the minister and all hon. members, irrespective of their political views, to give what support they can to this proposal which I am moving in the form of an amendment.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the hon. member a couple of questions? First, I want to ask him whether he would have any objection to having his amendment stand in the same way as other clauses and amendments have been stood. Second, I would like to know from the hon. member, without at the moment expressing any very strong opinion, how he can justify the provision in his amendment whereby evidence can be taken in private which will make it the property of the 12 members of the committee only. As a result neither the committee nor any of its members would be permitted to bring the subject matter of the evidence to the attention of this house. What possible purpose would that serve? Perhaps the hon. member could explain that to me. If it is intended that the committee be a window through which we can peer into the activities of the commission, it can hardly be a window if it is frosted and one cannot see anything through it. If evidence is taken in private, then obviously this house and the country will not know what has been done by the commission as far as that evidence is concerned. If such is the case, what is the purpose of obtaining any evidence in private in this way?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Before the hon. member for Peace River rises I think the Chair should read the amendment. It is moved by the hon. member for Peace River that Bill C-231 be amended by adding the following clause—shall I dispense?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could say a word or two? I have indicated that I am in great sympathy with the general objectives that the hon. gentleman has in mind and that were expressed also by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I think it would be desirable to have such a committee although I am not sure that I see why the standing committee on transport and communications of this house is not just as good as some other committee which might be created.

I am in sympathy with the idea which the hon. gentleman quite rightly put forward when he said that he could not include in the amendment the provision of expert assistance because it would involve the expenditure of money. I think I demonstrated my sympathy in this respect by facilitating the work of the standing committee when this bill was before it and by encouraging the commissioners of internal economy who paid for the expert assistance. It may turn out that it is my department which is paying for the expert assistance which the committee received and which was very good. I quite agree with those objectives.

I must say that I share fully the misgivings of the hon. member for York South about secret testimony. Because I am a Privy Councillor and he is not I have another misgiving about how secret the testimony would really be. However, I have a more fundamental objection to the amendment and I think I should indicate it right away because I do not think it is fair to give hon. members the impression that I would be able to support this amendment. I would not be able to support it for the reason that I am a member of the House of Commons and therefore could not support a measure which would permit members of the other place and the Crown to tell us what our rules in this house would be. When in the seventeenth century King Charles I went down to the Commons House of the parliament of that day to direct their activities the Speaker made the famous statement that he had no eyes to see nor ears to hear, and all of us know the rest of the story. I think it is just as objectionable for us to put in a statute which requires the assent, and therefore the dissent if they wish to disagree, of the hon. gentlemen for whom I have great regard but who are not us. They are not part of this house and I do not think it is any of their business to tell us what our rules should be. I believe it would be a terrible mistake to admit, even in a good cause, that they had any right whatever to tell us how we should conduct our affairs.

I think the hon. gentleman said he wanted to keep these things under the scrutiny of the elected representatives of the people. That is right, and we are the elected representatives of the people. Those other hon. ladies and gentlemen at the other end of this building are not the elected representatives of the people, nor is the representative of the Crown. It just seems to me that, in principle, it would be an abdication of our historic rights to attempt to import into legislation which required the assent of the other place an amendment to the rules of this house. If we decided later, or if another house decided later, it was desirable to change that, then it could not be changed without the consent of these other bodies.

The leader of the house has on the order paper a motion, either in his name or is it in the name of the Prime Minister, to set up a committee to look into the rules. I have every sympathy for, and I would give my undertaking to support in principle, the setting up of a committee. I do not see why the present committee on transport and communications could not be given this function if it were given the extra assistance which I would be happy to see it given. We do have some very complicated matters coming before us. This is one of the most complicated measures we have ever had during my time here. I think we should provide for having someone with expertise to assist during any review which from time to time we might make.

I do not want the hon. gentleman to think I am not sympathetic to his objectives. I think they are sound and good. However, I believe the manner in which he would like to accomplish them, by a statutory provision which deals with the rules of this elected body, would be an abdication to others of that one small corner at least of that independence which is the foundation of self-government. For that reason, sir, I thought I should not waste any time in indicating why I could not vote for this amendment. I agree also with the point made by the hon. member for York South about taking secret testimony. I do not think it would work and I doubt that it would be desirable even if it would.

Mr. Hamilton: I do not intend to deal with the secrecy issue. I think the hon. member for Peace River will be dealing with that. I wish the minister had not spoken before I had an opportunity to make a few remarks on this matter because I was going to deal with the reasons for his objection to this amendment. I was hoping to advance my arguments before he had committed himself. I am going to put my arguments before this committee as sincerely and as frankly as I can.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River, which concerns the freedom of the people to run their own business, probably ranks in man's fight for freedom with all the other great steps that have been taken in the past. I include Magna Carta and all the rest. I will give my reasons for that statement, Mr. Chairman. If anyone tries to study seriously how a modern government can reconcile itself to the modern type of economic system we have in the western world, he will find that the question boils down to how much control we can give to the people through their elected representatives. The answer given by the minister just now repudiates all the good work that he has done in the last two and a half years. In the last 48 hours I have made the statement to my colleagues and to people in the press gallery that in my judgment, with only ten years' experience in the house and a quarter of a century in the public life of this country, I have never seen a minister learn a complicated bill so quickly, express his ideas on it so clearly and be so flexible to the wishes of the committee, as the present minister.

We have had a demonstration here of virtuosity in mastering a complicated bill affecting the economic and social future of our country, while giving to the elected representatives in the committee and in the house a chance to work together in drafting a bill that is moving into a field about which very few of us know very much. This bill moves into the dark areas of the future. No one in this house could have surpassed the minister's penetrating mind in mastering this bill. I speak with personal knowledge because I worked on this matter for two years when I was a minister. I have not followed it as closely since, but I have had a long-time interest in the economics of transportation, particularly as they relate to railways. The compliment I have paid the minister, therefore, is one I think is owing to him without any qualification or modification.

However, I wish he had not made that last statement. I hope that we can maintain the attitude that has prevailed a while longer. If one studies the problems facing the governments of West Germany, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, one will find that the problem of trying to make a parliamentary system work which grew out of the social and economic systems of the last seven centuries is not very easy. We in Canada are going through this same type of adjustment. If we tie ourselves down to the precedent of Charles I, then there is no solution to our problem. This is what the minister has done. If the men of our generation cannot recognize that adjustments have to be made in the traditional forms of democratic government to deal with the modern type of corporate structure, then our efforts in this house and in every other democratic government are a failure. This is the issue which the hon. member for Peace River put on the record today in a speech which ranks, in its logic, with the best I have read over the last several hundred years of western history. Hon. members should re-read that speech.

We have in this house over the last two and a half years agreed, I suspect amongst all parties, to turn over tremendous powers of this parliament to a small group who have not in the past had a good record of protecting the interests of the people. We have agreed to turn over these tremendous powers because we do not see any other way of making the whole transportation system work efficiently. As the committee could gather from some of the speeches I made on the rationalization aspect of the bill, we want to even increase the powers we are turning over to this board.

Let us examine all the other crown corporations, the other agencies and boards which this parliament in its wisdom over the years has set up to carry out parliament's business. Let us look at the whole question of the delegation of powers by parliament. We will find one salient weakness and that salient weakness is, how do we touch base with them. We do not want parliament to interfere with their daily functions of administration. As the hon. member for Peace River made quite clear, we do not want to act as a grandstand quarterback in connection with the judicial part of their functions. However, if we are going to continue with the modern capitalistic system of the western world and democratic institutions, then we in this house have to examine our institutional procedures frankly.

To put forward the argument that just because this bill has to be passed in this chamber, has to be passed in the other place and signed by the Governor General, this takes away our power over our rules, can only be described by one word—farcical. All we ask in this amendment is that we let the people know that we have delegated these tremendous powers to a super board but that we are also preserving the right periodically to keep pace with them and to know what they are doing.

We have accepted the fact that individually as laymen we are not competent to handle this question and have to have expert advice. From the past record we know what to expect in this parliament. Sometimes committees do not swing into operation for weeks or months after the commencement of the parliamentary session. Here is a perfect opportunity to show whether a democratic group can meet the challenge of our day and in a responsible, restrained way make some adjustment in our system to keep it moving a little faster and to keep it a little closer to the realities of today.

I do not think any member of this house who believes in the parliamentary system wants to see its power reduced by one iota. The proposal that we are making will preserve something of the power of the people through its elected representatives. This petty, picayune argument that because the Senators have to pass on our bill we lose our right to control our rules does not make sense to me.

We are trying to do something in this amendment with which the minister said he agreed and with which I am sure the government house leader agrees. I have also read remarks by the Prime Minister in which in effect he said he agreed with institutional changes. I believe that men of experience and good will want to see this institution remain sovereign but at the same time they want to make sure that the economic system of the country operates properly. We have to face the fact that our economic system is so complicated that we in parliament cannot deal with it efficiently. We must therefore agree to turn over this power to a super board and even give it more power. However, we do want the chance to preserve the sovereign right of parliament to control on behalf of the people their own affairs.

The setting up of a small committee to provide expert help would provide, as the hon. member for Peace River suggested, a window. But surely it would not be frosted over, because the 12 members of that committee representative of all parties would have some responsibility to the house. For example, if they thought something was wrong they would be able to come back here and take proper steps to right it, or if they wanted to make a proposal they could take the proper action. This would mean that the 17 members of this super board would know they were being watched by a group of people with competent advisers to see that everything possible was being done to bring about harmony with the guidelines we are trying to set down in this bill. We have the machinery through this committee, which will be responsible under the statute, to watch the operations of this board.

I suggest, and I hope the minister will reconsider, that in making adjustments to modern conditions Canada must not fall behind. We have seen what the French have done with their council of state in controlling the great bureaucracy of that country. We have seen what the Swedes and New Zealanders have done through their ombudsmen. These are small efforts to try to bring about some connection between the right of the individual to justice and protection against the bureaucracy that runs his country.

We are putting one complete sector of the economy of this country into the hands of a super board. Therefore in this day and age we must begin to think about institutional changes and of ways of maintaining and preserving in this house some sort of control over the board without interfering with its efficiency.

Therefore I hold to my statement that the argument presented that the amendment will bring forth the ghost of Charles I to haunt us in 1967 is nothing more nor less than specious. I realize that the minister came to the house from the civil service, that the civil servants who run the country are able, sincere, usually dedicated and know so much more about each facet of government than do we as laymen, and that we have to have these people. But surely this group accepts the principle that a little bit of power must be left in the hands of the representatives of the people, and this is all we are asking for.

I realize that the statement of the minister was a reflection of his background, his long years in the civil service, but the fight that is going on all over the world today concerns whether men shall control the people they appoint. This question is being asked not only in western Germany, Switzerland, Sweden, the United Kingdom, France and the United States but also in Canada.

If we look at the situation in that great country in the Far East, China, what essentially are its people fighting about today? It is the same thing that we are debating this afternoon, Mr. Chairman. In China, which has a monstrous, huge civil service guiding the daily course of every factory and every farm, naturally there are going to be protests. There must be some way for the people to express their dissatisfaction. They even had to resort to the device of giving high school children free railway passes, free food and money to spend so they would watch factories and government offices and ask bureaucrats to explain why they did certain things. But what a crude technique to let the people express themselves and control their civil servants.

The great Prime Minister of China, Chou En-lai, tries to protect his bureaucrats because he knows they are essential to his country. On the other hand, he sees the desire of the ordinary Joe to express his criticism of those civil servants from whom he takes orders in the schools, the universities, the streets, the factories and the farms. We cannot laugh at the red guards because we have used the same technique in the past. The Puritan movement in Great Britain in the 17th century was essentially the same sort of thing, it tried to change the character of man's nature by a social pressure that was open and forceful. This is never successful, of course, but nevertheless one sees the basic issue. If at times we in Canada think our civil service is slow and cumbersome, tied up with red tape, then I say go to China and see how bad it can be.

As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, we are not just debating the question of transportation. We are putting forward an amendment to try to improve the quality of democratic government in a day of great efficiency. If we cannot improve this institution in a practical way it is no good for people to go up and down the country pounding their chests and declaring that we have to reform parliament. The hon. member in his amendment is suggesting a reform of parliament. He also said that this same technique might work with the C.B.C. and with other crown corporations. No government likes to be told by the head of a crown corporation: Get out of our way; we have complete power to act.

I do not hold it against anyone who sincerely believes that these crown corporations should not be criticized, because in many cases we have clearly delegated power to them under the act in question. As the hon. member for Peace River said, freedom is not usually lost in a revolution or war but through daily erosion. This erosion of power in connection with transportation will mean that a big chunk of our power will be delegated to a super board. We should maintain some sort of contact with the board. It would be a big help, not only to parliament but in improving the feeling across the country, if we could show that parliament is not myth-ridden, that it does not worship old fetishes. People think our attitude is that we do not let the Senate pass on anything that interferes with our rules.

Transportation by way of air, rail, pipe line, water, bus and truck affects the lifeblood of this nation. My request is made not as a Conservative member but as a member of this house who has consulted with his colleagues. I hope there is support from all sides of the house. We hope that the Liberals in the house will agree with the principles we raise. We are trying to preserve the rights of parliament in some small measure. We accept the principle that efficiency must predominate, but the right of the individual to express himself in our system must be preserved.

This amendment may not be very good. We do not know whether it will work but it is the best we can do. Some of us have laboured over the transportation problem for a long time. We have other amendments to move but none of them is more important in principle than this one. I think the hon. member for Peace River, when he introduced this matter on December 20 and again today, has made his mark in the history of parliament. That mark will long endure. I pay my respects to him and I pay my respects to members in all parties who sat on the railway committee, who listened to a great deal of evidence and who showed such flexibility and willingness to produce a good bill. Many amendments were accepted in that comiittee.

I pay my regards to the staff. They must have worked extremely hard trying to find legal and statutory answers to the problems raised. There was an example where we all worked together. I hope the minister does not out of hand, as he sometimes does, produce an argument turning down the suggestion we are making. I think the hon. member for Peace River can meet the arguments of the hon. member for York North—

An hon. Member: York South.

Mr. Hamilton: I beg your pardon, York South. I think the arguments can be met. Essentially we are trying to introduce into this house an institutional change, one that may set a precedent for other boards. The problem we have in this country is a problem faced all over the world. I do not want to quote authors and studies. Many articles and monographs by exceptionally able people who are worrying about this problem have been produced. In his last speech on this subject in this country, the high commissioner for Great Britain pleaded with the senior civil servants of this country to please give the elected representatives a little power. That plea came from a man who had held five portfolios in the United Kingdom and who had spent several years in Canada. I think he respected us. For him to make that type of plea to our civil servants shows that he feels our problems are the same as those of the United Kingdom.

The United States is worse off than we are and the French, of all, are the worst off. The problem must be met. I hope the minister will not rush in too quickly to express his views. We have considered this matter with great humility. It does not affect our freedom in this house but I think it does show to the people of Canada that we are trying to preserve parliament's rights. In the interest of efficiency we are not trying to stop any board from having complete power. We are trying to be responsible and we are trying to be constructive.

I hope this amendment is given serious consideration by the minister. We want to express our views on it strongly. I will not deal with the matter I raised last night having to do with the minister's progress on the bill, because that matter is not as important as this amendment. I appeal to the minister to maintain the reputation he has established during the last two and a half years. He has a reputation for having mastered the principles of the bill. He explained it fully to us in committee. In his dealings with the bill he has been willing to adjust, and this adjustment has been met by all sides. As a result of the minister's attitude we have reduced to a minimum the heat that might be generated by many matters. Parochial and regional interests have been reduced to a minimum in trying to get a good bill. We know we are moving into a new field.

We hope that as the years go on this bill will prove to be a good one and that the board will obtain the necessary personnel, who must be hard to find. We hope that the board's decisions will set good precedents for future boards. To keep in touch with the people, to get viewpoints, we hope that a responsible pattern of communication will be organized. I hope that along the channels of communication positive ideas may flow. I will not press that matter at this time.

The essential point is: will parliament accept the challenge? Can we mend our ways and break even a little with tradition? Can we let the committee operate under a statute and give it permanent employees loyal not to the government but to the committee so that those employees can keep in touch with the workings of the commission? They ought to be competent to funnel ideas either way in language which makes sense to the layman. We hope that the 12 members on the committee will develop over a period of years the same sort of working spirit that we have developed in this committee so that it will be a matter of pride to be a member of that permanent committee of the house and so that men will fight to be the representatives of their party on the committee. If they develop that pride we shall not be juggling hon. members around to fill in slots.

I think this committee deserves to have members from all parties in the house and from all over Canada. I confess that the ideas in this resolution are borrowed partially from Australia, from where we get the statutory concept, and partially from the United States where there is a full-time staff. Even if the ideas are borrowed, these problems still exist in Canada. They exist not only in Canada but all over the world and it is our responsibility to do what we can toward solving them. This amendment is only a small step in meeting these problems, especially the problem of control of people exercising delegated authority. I think this amendment is a worth-while first step.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a brief word. It would be most ungracious of me not to express appreciation for what I think is probably the greatest compliment paid to me since I have been in public life. It comes from the other side of the house but that does not make me less appreciative of it. The fact that it was paid by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle who, like me, is not ashamed to be partisan, makes it all the more touching.

Notwithstanding what the hon. member said and notwithstanding my genuine appreciation of his remarks, he has not altered the view I have expressed. I should not like the hon. gentleman to have the wrong impression. That is why I rose at once. I would not want him to think that I had made a hasty or snap judgment. After all, the hon. member for Peace River very considerately gave us a preview before Christmas of what he proposed to do. I have had, therefore, as we all have had, a good deal of time to reflect on the matter.

I thoroughly agree with the objective. I think that we should have a committee. We on this side of the house, since coming to office, have given evidence of our disposition. The Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence instituted the kind of defence committee of this house that we have never had before. Under the new temporary rules we have had a considerable overhauling of the standing committees of the house.

I think there has been more good work done by committees of this house in the last year or two than at any time in the nearly 30 years during which I have been observing parliament or sitting in it. The time is long past when we should get expert and independent assistance in committee work when committees are dealing with complicated matters and the members themselves cannot be expected to have at their fingertips the necessary expertise. With all this I completely agree. What I cannot agree with is the view that we are so undisciplined in this house, which is elected by the people, that it is necessary to have people appointed in another place participating in making rules for us and that those rules should be embodied in a statute. Incidentally, if we really mean what we say when we declare that this house is an independent house and master of its own affairs, such a statute could not be enforced anyway. Who is the policeman who will come in here and enforce the statute on this independent assembly? This is why, when I talk about Charles I and the independence of parliament, I am not talking about some old fusty thing in the seventeenth century.

It is this aspect of the matter which I believe the mover of the amendment and the hon. gentleman have got wrong. I cannot see how these provisions would have any more sanctity if they were established by statute than if they were established by a standing order of this house alone. We discipline ourselves, though sometimes not as effectively as we should. But if our discipline in this house is not effective I do not think it would become more effective if we called in outsiders to discipline us, or purport to discipline us, or make rules for us as though we were children.

It may be that the composition of the present committee is too large. It may be that the composition of all the standing committees is too large for effective work to be done. If all committees were composed of a dozen members instead of 24 members we should not have to wait so long for quorums and it would be possible to concentrate more on getting the work done and on getting it done more expeditiously. With all this I agree. But I say, do not let us abandon the most fundamental of all the rights of the elected representatives of the people, that is, our own corporate independence in this house.

The hon. gentleman said I had been flexible and tried to meet suggestions from whatever quarter of the house they had come. I have done that just as much in this case and I intend to continue doing so. This does not mean that if I am unable to see eye to eye with hon. gentlemen opposite on all of their suggestions I have suddenly changed my character. It simply means that I too have to exercise my own judgment on these matters.

It seems to me we have two principles here, both fundamental principles, but that in this amendment they are in conflict with each other. One is the principle that this house should scrutinize the administration. That is what we are primarily elected to do. With that part of the amendment I completely agree. I do not think we are doing it as effectively as we should and I agree with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle that we should do a better job in controlling, checking and auditing the administration of this country—and I do not use the word "auditing" in a narrow sense. After all, though I went there as a stranger I represent one province in this country which just before it became a province had no elected representatives at all for 13 years—the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo nods—during one of the saddest interludes in the history of free institutions in the British Commonwealth.

They had an efficient government. They had devoted public servants who carried out their jobs according to their lights. But there was no audit, no check on the part of the public. It was a bad system, a wrong system, and we are here to see that it never happens again in this country. But this is our job as the elected representatives of the people and we should do it ourselves by our own activities. We can amend our own rules and if they do not work we can change them again without praying some appointed people elsewhere to change them. Here we have a conflict with the good principle that it is our duty to audit, check and control the administration. But it is our duty to do this ourselves independently, and we do not need to have anyone outside this chamber to do this.

Mr. Baldwin: I intend to reply on the merits after other hon. members have spoken, but some questions have been asked by the hon. member for York South and by the minister and I think I should reply to them briefly. The hon. member for York South asked whether I would have any objection, as mover of the amendment, to allowing it to stand in certain circumstances. I have no objection to such a course provided it meets the wishes of the committee.

Second, the hon. member asked me to explain why I thought evidence before the committee should be taken in secret from time to time. If hon. members will examine the subclause they will see that this provision would apply only in cases when in the opinion of the committee the evidence was of a secret and confidential nature. As to the reason for this, all hon. members know that time and time again requests are made in committees that certain types of information should not be required because, if divulged, there would be a detrimental effect upon the ability of a witness' business to compete effectively. Such requests have been acceded to time and time again. If a committee says in its wisdom that no matter should be regarded as confidential, I am perfectly prepared to agree. It seems to me the suggestion I have put forward makes possible a compromise which would allow the committee access to the best possible information upon which to base its judgments and recommendations to the house. The C.N.R. has on many occasions requested permission to withhold information.

That request has been acceded to time after time. In connection with the operation of this or any committee under this bill I can visualize carriers, individuals and corporations whose goods are being carried coming to the committee with a complaint but hesitant to make public certain facts and information. There is nothing in the world to stop the parliamentary committee from having that information, considering it and reporting to the house, not on the details but a report based upon the information they have derived. That is why I included this provision in drafting the amendment. If this committee sees fit to eliminate it, I have no objection at all.

With regard to the reason for this provision being in the form of a statute, I would say this. Some mention has been made of Charles I. Today the spirit of Charles I hangs over the collective cabinet of any democratic country. The crown sits over yonder in this chamber. Charles I has been supplanted today by the Privy Council and the cabinet. Your Honour may recall that during the deliberations of the committee on procedure it was pointed out that a committee appointed under our standing orders during a session expires at the end of the session; in other words, we are back in the same place we were before if this is not done by way of statute. A committee is only appointed at the whim of the government when the government wants to introduce a motion to appoint it. Not only this government but any government is in that position. I say this is not good enough.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does he not think that since we have complete power over our own rules we could change that provision, if we wished to do so, to the life of a whole parliament?

Mr. Baldwin: I should tell the minister that I am speaking on the basis of the information I derived during the considerations of the procedure committee. I was a member of that committee. It was pointed out to the committee—this is one of the things we considered doing—that constitutionally as a body the House of Commons could not do this. There were grave doubts whether it had the right to set up a committee which would sit from the beginning of one parliament to the end of that parliament, with the committee expiring at the end of each parliament.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. member another question?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

Mr. Gray: Would it not flow from what he has said that we should have all our rules incorporated by statute which would have to be approved by the Senate?

Mr. Baldwin: No, of course not, with regard to committees on estimates. However, a committee as important as this and others which I can envisage should not be in a position where they come into existence only at the whim of the government. This committee should sit when it wants to sit. It should not have to wait two or three months after the beginning of a session. It should sit because by statute it has the right to sit and has definite, peremptory terms of reference. I submit this is something that cannot be done in any way other than by statute.

If the minister is able to convince the committee that it is possible constitutionally for this house by itself to pass a standing order, and will indicate that it is intended to do so, to establish a committee which can sit from the beginning to the end of a parliament, I would be perfectly happy. But because I have some apprehension that this is not possible and believe that the terms of reference must be provided by statute and the committee established by statute, I have raised this point. We are the most backward of all the older countries of the Commonwealth, and I include also the United States, in our dealing with matters of this kind and giving to the members of this house the right to do things which they not only have the right but the duty to perform.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I think, as the minister has said, that there is no question that all members of this house agree with the principle that the operations of the transportation commission should be under the continuing surveillance of the elected representatives of the people.

Mr. Lambert: Of parliament.

Mr. Gray: The House of Commons.

Mr. Lambert: I say parliament.

Mr. Gray: The hon. member says parliament. I have more confidence in the people's elected representatives than my hon. friend seems to have, since I do not think it is necessary for appointed individuals, not accountable to the public, to have something to say about what this house does or, for that matter, about what a particular commission as important as this one has to do.

If an effective surveillance of the work of this commission is required, I submit that the way to do it is not by appointing another special committee but by strengthening the over-all system of standing committees of this house so that we develop a proper system of specialist committees composed of members who have developed an expertise over the years in the subject matter of the committee, backed up by an appropriate professional and permanent staff.

The example of other countries has been brought forward—France, Germany, the United Kingdom, the United States. Their trend is not to set up, piling one on top of the other, further special and joint committees. Instead, what they have done is to create a permanent system of standing specialist committees. The appropriate committee is given the job of looking after all matters coming under the jurisdiction of the legislature pertaining to the subject matter in question, including the operation of their equivalents of this transportation commission.

There is no question that what this House of Commons needs to have at this time is a greater degree of what political scientists call legislative oversight. This is the great lack, the great gap in our present system. The elected representatives of the people clearly must have a greater degree of control and a greater ability to look into and supervise the operations of the bureaucracy which has so much to do with the way the government of this country is carried out. Again I submit that this cannot be done by having a series of special committees and joint committees dealing with limited subject matters, the members of which have to divide their attention between them and standing committees.

We have already had some experience in the past year and a half under the provisional rule changes of how a surveillance of this type could be effectively carried out by permanent standing committees. The broadcasting committee has already had before it the Board of Broadcast Governors; it has already had before it the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Yet it also covers a broad subject matter in the field of broadcasting and the arts. Surely it could continue to do this. Surely the transport committee of this house could do the same thing as it has already begun to do with respect to Canadian National Railways.

To give a further example, the finance committee has looked into the workings of the Expo Corporation. This again, I submit, is the appropriate way to carry out this objective, this aim with which I think we are all in agreement. The thing to do is change the rules of this house, not just to permit a special committee to look into the workings of this commission but to make sure that permanent committees are set up and in operation within a certain period after the opening of a new parliament, that they are given the right to have a permanent staff, not only by special resolution of this house with respect to a particular subject matter referred to it, that they are given the right to set up subcommittees so that a more careful examination may be made of special subjects. In fact, I see no reason why the transport committee of this house could not, under the rule changes I am suggesting, have a subcommittee to pay special attention to the workings of this transportation commission.

It seems to me to be contradictory to talk about giving greater authority to the elected representatives of the people to look after and oversee the workings of the federal bureaucracy, and at the same time make the coming into effect and the changing of the method of carrying out an examination by a special committee subject to the approval or disapproval of a group of people who are appointed to age 75 and are not accountable in any way to the people of this country. I say this is a definite contradiction in terms.

Mr. Chairman, to show that my opposition to the amendment in the particular form in which it is put forward is not merely what might be called by some a partisan approach, I also should like to say to the minister that when do get to the study of the provisional rule changes, with a view to bringing about permanent changes, I hope he will not stress, as he did today, the concept that committee membership is too large. It seems to me that the problem arises not as a result of the size of the membership of the committees but rather as a result of an unrealistic rule requiring quorums when we are merely taking evidence and not making decisions. The present size of the membership of the committees is admirably suited to carrying out the type of function which the hon. member for Peace River wishes to have, because it will make it easier to set up within permanent standing committees, covering a broad area such as transportation, subcommittees on particular subject matters such as the transport commission or other particular aspects such as trucking, railways, air transportation, and so on.

I think the proper approach to this matter would be to have the members of this house agree that we will turn as soon as possible to a further review of our rules in the light of our experience under the provisional rule changes and that there will be no question at that time but that we will conclude this study of the rule changes with a proper system of permanent special standing committees with the proper staff and members who over the years will have developed a certain expertise. In this way we would be able, on behalf of the people of this country, to establish the legislative oversight required to watch over not only the workings of this particular commission but also over federal bureaucracy in general.

We have been talking about centennial presents for the people of Canada. I think one of the finest centennial presents we could give the Canadian people is a modern effective parliamentary system which is truly relevant to the needs of governing a modern technological state such as Canada is today. This should be our aim. This aim will not be reached by going off on a sidetrack such as we would be doing were we to attempt, with every good motive in the world, to set up the type of committee suggested by the hon. member for Peace River in his amendment. This is a sidetrack. This is not what we should be looking for. We should be looking for an approach to a parliamentary system which permits the elected representatives of the people to carry out their duties in a way which is truly relevant to the needs of our society.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I came into the house when the Minister of Transport was speaking. I must confess I found a great deal of his argument to be most specious. I for one find it exceedingly strange to hear from the lips of the minister a suggestion that the matter of the statutory requirement for a committee composed of members of this house should not be referred to the other house. To me that is rather strange, because in essence the whole bill will be passed by the other house. It is not the House of Commons alone which is supreme; it is parliament. Until the Minister of Transport is able to change the constitution of this country, the other house has its official place as a part of parliament. The sooner the minister recognizes that, the better off we will be.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course it has as a legislature, but not as a body to make rules for our house.

Mr. Lambert: This is not making rules for our house. The amendment proposed would set up by statute a body which would be away from the domination of people like the Minister of Transport who as a member of cabinet can block nominations to and the functioning of any committee. We know, notwithstanding all the pious words of my good friend the hon. member for Essex West, that as the rules now stand it is strictly up to the initiative of the government. I come to the suggestion of the hon. member for Essex West. I certainly support much of what he has said concerning the ideal to be achieved but we must also be practical. He will not stand up in this house and say this, but I can tell him that members of the cabinet in this government, which includes persons such as the Minister of Transport, turned down the proposals of members of the procedure committee who wanted to strengthen the committee system of this house along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Essex West.

The hon. member for Essex West and I work closely together on one of the principal committees of this house. I think we have common objectives in this regard. I find his reasoning, however, in supporting the opposition to this amendment somewhat difficult to follow. As a matter of fact, I think what he is doing is rallying to the party flag on behalf of his party this afternoon. I think he must recognize that in so far as this clause is concerned, which has to do with the examination of the report of this omnibus transport board, it could be delayed indefinitely by the government because any special or standing committee must have referred to it by way of resolution advanced under the sole initiative of the government any matter which is to be considered. Therefore, under the present rules it is simple for the government merely to postpone indefinitely the consideration of any particular item. As a matter of fact, on the question of integration and unification of the armed forces a good number in this house and outside it want to get at that particular subject but the government refuses to do it and therefore effectively blocks consideration of the matter. I know that time and time again in the past there have been occasions when months have elapsed before any committees were set up.

I would have suggested to my colleague from Peace River that the membership of the committee should be from both houses, because this involves a report to parliament.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Lambert: It involves a report to parliament. If the Liberals want a unicameral parliament, that is one thing. Let them stand up in their place and advocate the abolition of the Senate when the time comes. Under our constitution our parliament today is composed of both the House of Commons and the Senate. I recognize and accept that. Therefore I say that if parliament is to function properly representatives of parliament shall sit on such a committee. After all, our friends opposite today certainly are following the practice of having a good many joint committees this year. Regardless of the views of the hon. member for Hamilton West and perhaps some of his colleagues in respect of the other place, I say that the amendment calls for members from this house and therefore he cannot raise his objection. I would have gone further and said "representatives from parliament".

I do know that it is the Australian practice in this regard and so it is not repugnant to a federal system. There the authority comes from a statute passed by parliament which provides that a committee can sit to examine certain matters and is not restricted by the whims of a minister or the whims of a cabinet. If hon. members feel they should reassert their rights as private members in this house they should support this type of amendment. Some government backbenchers have already objected to the ever-increasing power of the cabinet. It has taken a great deal of time for the film to fall from their eyes in order that they could see that the sole initiative at the present time lies within the cabinet which dominates this house. The cabinet asks backbenchers to rubberstamp its wants at any and all times. This amendment strikes at that situation because it would establish a statutory committee which would independently deal with certain specified matters as well as other matters referred to it by the house.

This amendment incorporates many of the features the hon. member for Essex West would like to see in respect of our standing committees in relation to staffing and a mandatory commencement date for the functioning of committees. The hon. member for Essex West must convince me and my colleagues on this side that he is able to influence the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Public Works and others who do not share his views before we can accept his suggestion.

Mr. Gray: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lambert: Yes.

Mr. Gray: Does the hon. member not agree that if he and his colleagues along with members of the other opposition parties would agree with me and others on this side there would be no question that rule changes could be introduced without difficulty to make sure that committees met forthwith following the opening of a parliament and throughout the year? Would he not agree also that any subject matter we wanted could be referred to the committee without the approval of the government?

Mr. Lambert: I agree that might be the ideal situation, but the hon. member has not convinced me that he is able to persuade the cabinet to accept that principle. I would be the most surprised man in the world if he could do that. I could almost go through the list of cabinet members and indicate those who favour this principle and those who do not. I might make the odd mistake but I would not be far wrong.

This amendment is a thoroughly justified attempt by the hon. member for Peace River, with the support of almost all opposition members, to authorize private members of parliament to oversee the workings of a very powerful board. I am sure this principle has the tacit or implied support of many members of the government backbench. Alternatively, perhaps the hon. member for Essex West would go along with me in persuading the cabinet members to agree to the creation of a standing committee on delegated powers. If he can guarantee to me that such a committee will be established, I am prepared to go along with him, but unless he can do so I think we should accept this amendment in order that parliament may have some control over at least one body with delegated authority.

As a result of the adoption of this bill all sorts of powers will be given to this commission to make regulations, but what chance have the members of this house to review those regulations? The only opportunity we as members of this house could have to make such a review would be through the establishment of a statutory committee or through a standing committee with independent powers. By adopting this amendment we would reassert control by members of parliament over many things in this country. For that reason I fully subscribe to the amendment. I cannot accept any of the arguments advanced by the Minister of Transport against the amendment.

Mr. Schreyer: One could easily infer from the remarks of the Minister of Transport and his colleague, the hon. member for Essex West, that the liberal party is giving subtle notice it is coming around to the view that the Senate should be abolished. With that bit of banter aside, I wish to say that the minister in my opinion was most persuasive and sincere in the point of view he put forward.

Earlier in the debate I indicated I was very much in favour of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River. I was in favour of it because of my experience as a member of the standing committee on transportation during its consideration of submissions relating to this bill.

The minister will recall an occasion during the committee hearings in respect of this bill when I objected very strenuously to the suggestion that the committee did not have the authority to ask the railway companies for certain statistical information which the railway companies contended fell within the realm of proprietary rights. The officials felt they need not and ought not give this information to that committee. Upon reconsideration I have come to the conclusion that it really would not have mattered in that particular case whether the committee was a standing or statutory committee because it was within the powers of the committee at that time to ask for the particular cost accounting information, but the committee decided by vote not to require the railway companies to surrender that information. Presumably if a committee were established by statute to oversee the actions and regulatory functions of this new transportation commission it would in its own judgment decide whether or not to ask any transportation company to give certain information which may or may not be proprietary.

Because of the practices of committees of this house in this regard I have come to the conclusion it would be sufficient to have a committee of this house act as the overseer of the actions of the new transport commission. I know that there are a number of good reasons why we simply must have an efficiently functioning committee of this house to look into the actions, regulations, decisions and orders that will emanate from the transportation commission, and it is my fervent hope that this is precisely what will be done in the future.

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock and in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business I do now leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty pursuant to standing order 39A to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain), Labour Gazette —delay in delivery of French edition; the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), gold mining assistance—northwestern Quebec mining problem; the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), Post Office Department —alleged tampering with mail by Hudson's Bay Company.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I believe I can report to you that there have been some discussions, that it is agreeable that we should continue now in committee of the whole on the item that has been under discussion, and that between seven and eight o'clock the committee should rise for a supper break.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree that the private members' hour be dispensed with today and that the sitting of the house be suspended from 7 to 8 p.m.?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-231 to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I was about to say that while until just a few minutes ago I was in support of the subject matter of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River, I must now say to him with some regret that I find it really does not make that much difference whether the transportation committee which he envisages is set up on a statutory basis or on the basis of the ordinary rules of this house. What does make a difference—this is a conclusion I have reached on the basis of my limited experience in the last few months—is the membership of the committee and the degree to which the members of the committee wish to exercise the authority vested in the committee by this house.

I believe that during the course of the committee's meetings it was suggested, recommended and submitted on several occasions and from several sources, one of which was the leader of the opposition in Manitoba, the party colleague of the Minister of Transport, that since there was not to be an advisory body to the transportation commission the reason was that much stronger why there should be an effective parliamentary committee to look into all major aspects of the work of the transportation commission and transportation matters generally. If the leader of the opposition in Manitoba had realized the fact that the committee before which he was appearing at the time was the very committee which had voted nine to eight to refuse to require the railway companies to provide certain crucial cost accounting data and information, I am sure he would have been very much disappointed. In any case I stress the fact that in my estimation it is not too important whether the committee is based on a statute or whether it derives its authority from the ordinary rules of the house. What is important is the body of precedent and practice built up over the years by committees which show a willingness and a determination to exercise the authority given them by parliament to the fullest extent possible.

The purpose of the exercise of this authority is to evaluate properly bills having to do with transportation and to evaluate properly whether or not the transportation commission is fulfilling its functions in an adequate and proper manner. Of course to do that the committee will have to have outside experts. One would hope that with a little bit of encouragement and prodding from this side the government of the day will see fit to provide sufficient funds so that a permanent staff could be provided to carry out the necessary research and economic analysis for this committee.

I believe that the remarks I have just made indicate what my position is with respect to this amendment. I have come around to the point of view that it is not really necessary to follow the particular course of action proposed in the amendment, but it is important that this house and governments which will follow give the transportation committee sufficient encouragement to exercise its authority to the full.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, before the amendment is dealt with I want to make a few remarks. I think it should be observed that the establishment of a statutory committee would, first of all, establish a new class of committees in the House of Commons. While I am most fully in accord with the objectives of the hon. member for Peace River in his desire to achieve the best possible oversight of the work of the new transportation commission by parliament, I am not satisfied that the way to achieve this is through the establishment of a new statutory committee and a whole new class of committees in the House of Commons because if we establish one statutory committee then this will simply be an invitation to establish other such committees. Certainly a committee would immediately be demanded for oversight of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and other agencies of the federal government.

What would happen to us in this house if we established this committee? The moment it was established all the standing committees, including the present standing committee on transport and communications, would become, in respect of their powers and their terms of office, junior committees and secondary to this new statutory committee. This would be the prestige committee, the top committee of them all. No other committee would have its peculiar powers or term of office. Indeed, even the public accounts committee, which by custom is always chaired by a member of the opposition and which is charged with examining the accounts of the government of Canada as submitted to it by the Auditor General, would not have the powers of office or be surrounded by the statutory protection which would be given to a transport committee such as the hon. member for Peace River envisages. The public accounts committee, which historically investigates the whole of the accounts of the Canadian government and from which we hope nothing could be concealed because all is open to the eyes of the Auditor General, the servant of that committee, is the senior committee of oversight in the House of Commons. However, suddenly, by the establishment of a statutory committee, the position of that committee would certainly be displaced. It would be a junior committee in so far as function is concerned to the committee which the hon. member envisages.

What would happen to the standing committee on transport and communications which we now have once this committee was established? The existing standing committee would be a junior committee, a less desirable committee than the one which the hon. member for Peace River would establish. What would become, sir, of our good friend the hon. member for Hamilton West, who worked so hard for the passage of this bill?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Send him to the Senate.

Mr. Deachman: We would send him to the Senate. I do not see him in the house at the moment, but I will convey your thoughts to him. Who would be members of the new committee? Would the members of the present transport committee also be members of this new committee? If that were so, would this committee consisting of 12 members be named by 12 members of the transport committee and would the standing committee on transport really become a subcommittee of the new statutory committee? All these questions would have to be resolved if we were to establish in the House of Commons a new class of committee, a statutory committee, such as the hon. member asks the house to establish.

If this course were followed we would have statutory committees, we would have the standing committees which we established last session, we would have special committees of the house which are formed from time to time and we would have joint committees of the house and Senate which are formed from time to time.

Mr. Schreyer: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deachman: Yes, I would be glad to permit a question.

Mr. Schreyer: The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra has stated that this committee would have a peculiar term of office, a peculiar manner of establishment, and I think everyone agrees. However, I believe he said it would have a peculiar set of powers. Would the hon. member elaborate on that particular point because it seems to me there is nothing special or peculiar about the powers which this committee would have? The powers, in effect, would be no different from the powers other committees have at the present time.

Mr. Deachman: If I understood hon. members who spoke from the opposition side in favour of the bill, particularly the hon. member for Edmonton West, mention was made of giving this committee a special staff and even setting up a permanent secretariat. In this way the committee would be different from other committees of the house. I concur in the remarks of the hon. member for Springfield who says he sees no reason why existing standing committees of the house cannot be brought up to the point where they can do precisely what the hon. member for Peace River wants to do. I concur in that suggestion. I believe, as do a number of people who have spoken on the subject today, that the standing committees should be the senior committees of this house. So far as we are able we should not depart from the procedure of referring matters to standing committees. We should not have so many special committees or joint committees, which we seem to be forever forming. We should send the business of the house to the standing committees.

I believe these committees should have a secretariat. I believe they should have experts to assist them. I do not believe these experts necessarily should be permanent staff members. From time to time chartered accountants, lawyers, engineers and economists should be retained by these committees to assist them with the special matters that are referred to them. In this way the committees would have a capability which they do not have now or have only on rare occasions, to examine the business of government. I believe that the problem of oversight of a government as big as the Canadian government, which is now spending between $6 billion and $7 billion a year, is enormous. I believe the only way by which members of parliament can determine whether or not the proliferation of government services, the increase in government expenditures, is valid and in the public interest is through the committee system.

I do not share the belief of the hon. member for Peace River that it is necessary to establish a new and peculiar class of committee to accomplish this purpose. I believe the committee system that we began to establish last year when we set up committees roughly parallel to each department of government was a proper and valid direction in which to proceed. If we begin now to establish a new class of committee with greater seniority than any of the established committees, we will destroy the very good work we started last year. I believe we must make some amendment to our committee procedures. We must experiment with such matters as quorums, the size of committees, committee staffing, timetables and schedules. However, let us not destroy the useful committee system which we have in this house and which serves us all. I ask opposition members and backbenchers on the government side to put their faith in the establishment and perfection of a system of standing committees. Herein lies the opportunity for members of parliament to move into the future with new powers of oversight over the greater powers of government.

Mr. Herridge: My remarks will be quite brief, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to repeat the arguments of previous speakers. As a matter of fact, I support the arguments put forward by the hon. member for Springfield. I have listened with a great deal of interest to this debate. I must say I have a great deal of respect for the member for Peace River, the member for Qu'Appelle, the member for Edmonton West and the point of view they have advanced. I am sure they have excellent intentions and it is obvious to anyone who has read the proposed amendment that they spent a great deal of time in drafting it in order to meet all the situations they feel should be met in this manner. However, after listening to the debate I must say that the Minister of Transport is on sounder ground.

This is the first time in my experience in this house, which now extends over 22 years, that I have not noticed the heart of a member of the Conservative party being warmed by reference to precedents established in the reign of Charles I. It is amazing on this occasion to find that it is the old, radical socialists at this end of the house who are responding to this argument while the Progressive Conservative members seem quite cold to it. It has been an interesting experience in listening to debates over a period of 22 years to hear them respond to that argument repeatedly. Times have changed. One hardly knows what will happen in the future.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could interrupt the hon. gentleman to ask for an interpretation of his remarks. Did he think that I had taken over from the Leader of the Opposition as the bearer of King Charles' head?

Mr. Herridge: No, I did not think that. I would answer by saying that the atmosphere of debate is so constructive and amiable that I will do nothing to destroy it. However, I think the minister was on sound ground when he referred to the precedents established in the mother of parliaments where, whatever our opinions may be with respect to other matters, we must realize that freedom was established and that throughout the centuries we have enjoyed the benefits of it, even though some people refer to the mother of parliaments as the haughty mother of parliaments.

This amendment is an attempt to change the constitution by the side door by providing for the establishment of committees on a statutory basis. I think this is very unsound indeed, and this is why I want to express my point of view. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, what we need to do is to change the rules. The rules were changed two years ago and there has been a rearrangement of our committees. We know we have to reconsider the provisional rules. Some of the rules are not functioning very well and require amendment and possibly there will be amendments with respect to the committee system. But I am confident that if we review our experience over the past year or so with the rules of this house and the committees as they are established, we can devise rules which will meet satisfactorily the changing circumstances of our times and the future. I am sure of that.

I suggest that this is where we must make provision for committees that function to the satisfaction of parliament as a whole, to the satisfaction of members on the government side as well as members of the opposition. Committees should be appointed on the basis of drawing on the best of our experience in the past two years and the provision of competent staff to deal with the particular circumstances that any committee is appointed to study. This is what we should do, and in conversation with the hon. member for Edmonton West I think he agreed that one of the essentials was to change the rules so that they suit the times in which we are operating. But let us do nothing on this occasion to destroy the independence of this house by, shall I say, a very well-intentioned attempt to appoint committees on a statutory basis.

Mr. Brand: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks on the amendment now before the committee because I believe it is of the utmost importance. The principle suggested in the amendment has implications which have already been indicated and extend far beyond the most important bill now before us.

In my short tenure in this house I have been made increasingly aware of the frustrations and restrictions which are placed on the members of this house. More and more we see a complex bureaucratic machine running the affairs of this country. More and more we as members experience difficulty in obtaining information from certain government corporations, commissions and boards. This is why I think the proposal to establish a statutory committee which will be more effective than the present committee system is of the utmost importance.

I believe that the hon. member for Essex West made reference, for example, to the C.B.C. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra went so far as to suggest that if this statutory committee were created requests would be made for such a committee to deal with the C.B.C. and its difficulties. I think that this is exactly the problem. I sat through 31 or 32 meetings of the broadcasting committee which dealt with that circus that became known as the "Seven Days" affair, and where are we so far as that corporation is concerned? We are back where we started. We have looked at the estimates of the C.B.C. and the B.B.G. has been discussed, but we have still been unable to do anything at all about the problems of the C.B.C.

Is this what is going to happen to the new transportation commission, Mr. Chairman? I sincerely hope not. Certainly I have never heard in this house so much agreement on a proposal before the house and such disagreement as to the method of implementing the proposal.

On reading the minutes of the proceedings of the committee on transport and communications at the time it was studying the bill now before this committee I found some comments which are very apropos. They were made by Mr. Charles W. Gibbings, president of the Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers. I do not think there is any argument that this particular group uses more transportation, particularly in rail form, than any other group in Canada in view of the number of bushels of wheat that are sent to the seaboard from the prairies. This group felt very strongly about a particular question posed, which is to be found at page 1886 of the proceedings of that committee. Mr. Gibbings was asked whether there was any concern about the will of the people not being effectively heard by the transport commission, and I should like to quote his reply:

> This is our concern, that if the commission is almost totally isolated from the views of the general public it is possible for them to become overgrown with the tangle of technical preconceptions to the point where they do not see the broader picture.

Mr. Gibbings was there expressing concern such as I have heard expressed on both sides of this house tonight. When he was asked whether he would like to put some other board or committee between the communications source and the people and the transportation commission, he made this reply. In his answer he is also referring to a method used in the legislature of Saskatchewan which has proven to be effective:

> Once each year, as you have indicated, the operations of the crown corporations are examined in considerable detail and reported to the press, and, therefore, to the public and to the members of the legislature; and as a consequence I believe the management of the corporations are more sensitive to the views and requirements of the public than would otherwise be the case.

It seems that there are many instances and that many people are concerned. I am sure that the minister who was present at that meeting of the committee is aware of this organization's concern about this matter. It is afraid that the public, through their members of parliament, may not have the degree of say in the running of the transportation industry that they would like to have and by right ought to have.

This matter, as has been suggested, goes beyond the bill. It involves the sovereign rights of parliament, the right of members of parliament to get information and express views to numerous boards, crown corporations and the like. Under the present committee system when members attempt to get information they just do not get it. There is always a reason. The matter is an internal one that should not be discussed or there is the question of competition. Organizations say, "We do not like to give this information out because of competition." It is for this reason that the hon. member for Peace River in his amendment refers to secrecy and the taking of evidence in private. He has a valid point. If a person is asked for information which can be used to the disadvantage of his concern, that information should be given in private.

We have run into the problem in committees of the house of getting information from crown corporations. The classic example is where one asks for artists' fees. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation says that as a matter of policy this information is not to be given out. Surely we, representing the people of Canada, should know how the money supplied from the taxes of the people is spent. I believe that the concept of a statutory committee is entirely new. It is also a worth-while concept. Whether new or not, such a committee appointed by act of parliament would, I hope, probe into matters affecting crown corporations, boards, and what have you.

It has been suggested that the committee would be a prestige committee. I do not think members of the house worry about that aspect and in my view such criticism is not valid. I should not, for example, wish to sit on the committee as I do not pretend to know much about transportation problems. But there are others who are experts. We already have a selection committee which chooses committee members. There could be agreement, among the members of the selection committee, and the members of the committee in question could be appointed in the manner that members of the standing committees are now appointed.

I do not feel competent to comment on the minister's statement that by having a committee established by statute we should be giving up some of our rights to the other place. I have not done any research on this point but I hazard a guess that I could probably find one or two instances where the other place has passed upon matters of real concern to the House of Commons.

In closing I wish to quote the eloquent words of the hon. member for Peace River on December 20, as reported on page 11392 of Hansard. He said:

> The scope of the act is enormous, and equally vast will be the overriding supervisory authority of the transport commission. Let there be no doubt that if this bill is passed without any material change we shall have surrendered to those men who will compose the commission almost complete authority over a variety of subject matters in the field of transportation which so deeply affects every Canadian and every part of Canada.

Those words eloquently sum up the problem before the committee at the moment. At page 11394 the hon. member went on to say:

> I feel a small committee of this kind, established under statute and its powers given under statute, will be able to exercise the type of watchdog function which is going to be essential if this parliament, composed of the representatives of the people, is going to retain some measure, not of control, not, I suggest, as an appellate tribunal, but simply the power to see what is happening; the power to see the impact and the effect of the regulations and functions which this transport commission is going to exercise.

He went on to say:

> I suggest, therefore, the establishment of this committee is the most effective means presented to the House of Commons whereby we can continue in a proper way our right to evaluate, to examine, to criticize, and to suggest.

I suggest, from my experience on standing committees of the house during my brief tenure here, that if the new commission appears before the kind of committees operating now the value of that appearance will be open to serious doubt. Citing the example I used a few moments ago of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, I suggest that in many ways we may be abrogating our responsibility to the people of Canada by giving it up to the multiplicity of boards and corporations being set up. I urge the minister to reconsider the matter and to look carefully into this sensible and timely amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Several members not present wish to speak on this amendment. To give them an opportunity to speak and to make a little progress, I wonder whether we could not agree to let this amendment stand. Could we also let the commodity pipe line part stand and go to clause 29.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, there is a matter that I wish to bring up under this clause.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am aware of the hon. gentleman's desire, but if the clause was stood he would not forgo his right. He would have the same privilege of speaking on it when it comes up as he has now. In any event he cannot put his matter before the committee now as we have another amendment.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is it agreeable that the amendment stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment stands.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Clauses 22 to 29 are to stand?

Mr. Pickersgill: Clauses 22 to 28. Could we go on with clause 29.

Clauses 22 to 28 inclusive stand.

Clauses 29 to 32 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 33—Tolls and tariffs.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I am not sure whether this is the right clause—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is this on clause 33?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): No. Without getting into a constitutional problem I wish to raise something the minister mentioned the other day. Does any obligation rest on a person who applies for a federal licence or permit to produce a provincial licence first?

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not altogether familiar with the actual operations of the provincial boards under the Motor Vehicles Transport Act—I have found the name of it and remember it this time. What this parliament did was to clothe these provincial bodies with federal powers. As I understand it they can issue licences for carrying on a transportation business within a province and beyond a province—within a province under provincial jurisdiction and beyond it under the jurisdiction given by this parliament. But I confess I am not familiar with the details of the mechanics of the process because I am in no way responsible for it. It is not intended to disturb these arrangements unless decisions of the courts or other situations which arise make it necessary to do so.

If this clause should come into operation it is my understanding that a motor vehicle undertaking which was solely engaged in interprovincial transport would go to the federal commission to get its licence but not the licences to run its vehicles; those would still have to come from the provincial authority. But the licence or the charter for interprovincial business would have to come from the federal authority. This would give no authority to do business solely within a province. The situation would be exactly that of the railways at the present time. This parliament has no jurisdiction at all over railways running solely within a province and chartered by a province.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): In other words, the federal authority has no right to require any applicant for a federal licence to produce a provincial permit? The federal authority has no right to inquire whether a particular applicant has a provincial permit of another nature?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, but I would think they would find out whether it was a provincially incorporated company. The company would probably do federal business, though I do not know about that, and they would find out before they gave it a licence to do business for them, I hope, that it had some capital, that it had some machines to carry out the business and that those machines were properly licenced to travel on the roads, and so on. But in no way whatever could this infringe upon anything which was under the jurisdiction of any provincial legislature.

Mr. McCleave: Could the minister elaborate further and advise us whether there is anything under clause 32 or clause 33 which involves the collection of money for such licences?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sorry. I did not hear the hon. member.

Mr. McCleave: I was wondering whether anything in clause 32 or clause 33 would authorize the collection of moneys from such licensing.

Mr. Pickersgill: It certainly is not expressly included. I do not think that is envisaged.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 34 agreed to.

On clause 35—Regulations.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Perhaps I should have asked this question on clause 31, but it has to do with regulations. Why did the hon. member for Port Arthur not move his amendment to a clause in this part of the bill rather than to a clause in the previous part? Does the minister know?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is because the amendment moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur applies not just to trucking and one other mode but to any of the modes of transport. If a railway wishes to buy a pipe line, or if a steamship company wants to buy an air line, it would apply equally. It applies to all modes of transport under the jurisdiction of parliament and therefore it seemed appropriate to make it to the clause dealing with the commission. Though we all know it was brought about mainly because of the trucking situation and that it is mainly desired by those in the trucking business, it was thought preferable to make it of general application.

Mr. Schreyer: Before we leave part III I should like to ask the minister whether the provisions of this part of the bill are intended simply as a standby or whether there is any part which is to be proclaimed soon as having the force of law?

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister has given an assurance to all the provincial premiers that we have no intention of putting this into effect at the present time or at any early date. We wish to have a conference with the provinces on the meshing of the provincial and the federal functions in this field.

These undertakings will be carried on over roads belonging to the provinces and I do not think the proposals will work at all without a reasonable measure of administrative co-operation. We do not want to disturb the present arrangements without cause but there have been one or two decisions in the courts which suggest it may be impossible for these provincial agencies to exercise the jurisdiction of this parliament effectively in certain contingencies. Because these decisions have been reached, because these cases have arisen and because the present legislation is before us, it was thought wise to ensure that we should not find ourselves suddenly in a state of legal anarchy such as we found ourselves in after the Privy Council decision of 1954.

Mr. Schreyer: I realize there is little that can be gained from asking hypothetical questions, but I assume the minister is involved in some long-range planning and prognostication where transportation is concerned. Can he tell us whether it is the long-range intention to repeal the present legislation with respect to interprovincial motor vehicle transport or to implement part III, or would the minister not care to answer?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not mind answering though I am afraid the answer will have to be negative. It has not been possible for me to address my mind to a problem so far ahead; it is the short term I have been trying to deal with. But I do feel we ought to take precautions where we can in this situation. It may well be that the time will come when this will seem a reasonable thing to do, but there is no plan for taking action of this kind at the present time.

On clause 37—Changes or alterations.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Mr. Herridge: I realize that this refers to companies. We know that companies are formed to own and operate bridges. Could the minister explain how this clause would be implemented? Some bridges are owned by provincial governments, some by companies formed for that purpose and then there are some companies that own a bridge and lease the operating rights to another company. Can the minister tell us how this clause will operate when the bill comes into effect?

Mr. Pickersgill: To tell you the honest truth, Mr. Chairman, I cannot. One of the reasons this part is in the bill is that the Minister of Transport is charged with the administration of these functions, and this Minister of Transport does not even know when they arise or how. This is a straight buck-passing proposition. All the bill is doing is transferring this responsibility to the Minister of Public Works so the Minister of Transport in future will not have to do it. This provision is not making any new law; it is just transferring the present law from one minister to another.

Most bridges, of course, it will not affect at all. There are only certain bridges that will be affected. I presume they must be interprovincial or international bridges, because I would not think a bridge wholly within a province, even if it was owned by the government of Canada, would be affected unless it was declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. I am looking at the hon. member for Carleton. It looks to me as though he is just dying to put us straight on this matter. If he is, I would be very glad to be rescued.

It seems to me that a bridge which goes from one province to another is clearly an undertaking beyond the jurisdiction of a provincial legislature, because they have no extraterritorial jurisdiction. The same would be true of an international bridge. There is a provision in the British North America Act that a work can be declared a work for the general advantage of Canada. If it is, it is under the jurisdiction of this parliament. I cannot envisage any other bridges that would be. Even if they happened to be owned by us, I would imagine they would in the normal course comply with the ordinary laws.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I would not undertake such a difficult task as to put the minister straight on all things, as he suggested, but I would ask him whether the government has any plans for general international bridge legislation. I raised this matter earlier in connection with a private bill advanced during this session. Some years ago a considerable amount of work had been done on general international bridge legislation of a standard character. It seemed to me that we should come to such a bill. I do not mean this particular bill, but I believe we should have a standardization of the conditions under which international bridges are built and operated. The present assistant deputy minister of energy, mines and resources, who was then assistant secretary to the treasury board, Mr. John MacDonald, was I thought the greatest expert on bridges I had ever known. I hoped he would be given the opportunity to advance this idea and present legislation which I believe is long overdue.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think there is such a bill, as the hon. gentleman says. I think it is in the works somewhere.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It has been in the works for at least four years.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, this matter goes away back to the time of the Rainbow bridge or the Honeymoon bridge, whatever it was called, over the Niagara river which collapsed in 1937 or the beginning of 1938. It was just about the time I first came to Ottawa. In those days there was supposed to be a Liberal government in Toronto as well as in Ottawa. The relations between them were sometimes not diplomatic, and some question arose about whether they needed any permission to build the bridge. There was a real shemozzle over it. I think it was at the time that Max Wershof and I were in external affairs, or I was in the prime minister's office and he was in external affairs. We took a great interest in this question. That is how it really got started. It has been making progress ever since.

The hon. member for Carleton was in government, as was the hon. member for Ontario, though for a little longer than the hon. member for Carleton. I think they both know there are a certain number of legislative projects that are raised every year, and then you sit in the cabinet—I am revealing cabinet secrets but they are not very secret secrets—and you say: This has to go through now and that has to go through, now. This good old bridge deal will be saved for some Friday afternoon when there is nothing else to do. And the Friday afternoon never comes. A great deal of good, useful legislation that in the long run would save a great deal of the time of both houses of parliament and the government is not passed for this reason. I agree heartily with the hon. member for Carleton.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might suggest that we rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again later this day.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Pursuant to agreement made earlier this day I do now leave the chair. The committee will resume its proceedings at eight o'clock.

SITTING SUSPENDED

SITTING RESUMED

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order.

On clause 38—Tolls on international bridges.

The Chairman: The committee will resume consideration of Bill C-231. We are on part V, clause 38. Shall the clause carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 39—Directors may make traffic agreements.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, I may be a little ahead of myself—

Mr. Pickersgill: I think perhaps the hon. gentleman is. If we might carry clause 39, he could then move his amendment.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I should like to suggest. I believe it would be numbered as new clause 39A, copy of which has been handed in at the table. Originally we intended to move it as an amendment to clause 20 and number it 20A. It was considered wiser, however, to bring it in at this stage of our consideration of the bill. The amendment seeks to provide the commission with power to lay down the conditions under which abandonment can take place.

During previous sessions private members bills have been introduced to this effect. Invariably time did not permit a decision to be reached in respect of any of these attempts to establish this principle in our railway legislation. It is a principle which should be established, because where abandonment is carried out in an unplanned and unregulated manner some very unfortunate experiences occur in various parts of the country. I might state again the experience we had in my part of Ontario when the New York Central Railway abandoned their Courtright line which extended across the counties of Lambton, Middlesex and part of Essex. The business on the line had diminished until there was very little operation of the railway. The company was granted permission by the Board of Transport Commissioners to abandon this line.

For a number of years before abandonment took place the company had neglected to keep the fences and other equipment along the line in repair. When they were granted permission to abandon the line they tore out the rails, the ties, and any usable culverts. The fences were wrecked by the power machinery used to demolish the structures along the line. The line when abandoned was left in terrible shape. It became an eyesore and a nuisance to the whole area it crossed. Whether or not they have had farming experience, I am sure hon. members will realize that when a railway line crosses a rural area it separates the farms into two parts part being on one side of the railway line and part on the other side. So long as the railway line is in operation the Railway Act provides that the railway company at its own expense shall maintain the fences along the right of way and shall provide drainage from one part of the farm to the other; that is, the railway line is not permitted to impede drainage of any kind. Each farm must be provided with a properly maintained crossing across the railway line.

The Board of Transport Commissioners has ruled that once a line is abandoned they have no further jurisdiction over the right of way. In this case it reverts to the status of any other property held in the province or in the municipality. Any rights, privileges, and protection which persons along the railway previously had enjoyed under the Railway Act disappear. The farmers cannot cross these rights of way, fenced or unfenced, without trespassing. The fences fall down; they are allowed to deteriorate; livestock can wander at will, and the right of way grows up in brush and weeds. No one can do anything about this, and that is the point I wish to stress here.

Questions have been raised concerning the competence of the parliament of Canada to deal with this matter, on the ground that once a right of way ceases to be used as a railway it then reverts to the status of private property, and comes under provincial jurisdiction. I submit there still remains a question concerning jurisdiction over these abandoned lines. I am not learned in the law and therefore I am not in a position to argue the case. However, from a common sense point of view, and speaking as one who has seen and experienced what happened in southwestern Ontario when this Courtright line of the New York Central Railway was abandoned, I say there is a gap in our railway legislation, if this parliament does not have the jurisdiction to legislate in this regard.

If the parliament of Canada does not have jurisdiction in this regard, who does? Can we say that provincial governments can enter the field of legislation concerning railways? I do not think that would be admitted. This parliament should go as far as it can to see that this gap is properly filled. We have authorities in this country to tell us when we get out of line and when we in this parliament exceed our authority, and I refer particularly to the Supreme Court of Canada. We should not stop short of the Supreme Court of Canada in our attempt to make sure that this parliament carries out its full responsibilities to fill this gap which is apparent in our railway legislation.

For that reason I should like to move this amendment:

That Bill C-231 be amended by inserting immediately after clause 39 on page 23 of the bill the following as clause 39A:

That section 168 of the Railway Act be repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

Section 168. The company may abandon the operation of any line of railway with the approval of the commission and upon such terms and conditions subsequent as the commission from time to time may by order provide, and no company shall abandon the operation of any line of railway without such approval or do, cause or permit to be done any matter, act or thing contrary to, or omit to do any matter, or act or thing required by, the terms and conditions so provided.

Section 168 of the Railway Act is a very short and simple section which reads as follows:

The company may abandon the operation of any line of railway with the approval of the board, and no company shall abandon the operation of any line of railway without such approval.

Let me point out that when this act was passed many years ago there was no problem as to the abandonment of railway lines. The present program of abandonment, including several abandonments which have taken place, is a clear indication that we are entering into a new era of railway regulation. The very fact that we are setting up a new transport commission and overhauling pertinent acts is an indication that a new era of transportation has arrived. The time to give consideration to the filling of the gap in our legislation is now, while we are setting up this new act, which leaves open the matter of abandonment. I submit that the new commission should have the power to lay down the conditions under which abandonment may take place.

In this connection I suggest to the minister that one of the conditions for abandonment should be the appointment of an abandonment planning board for each line to be abandoned. This board should be representative of the various interests which will be affected. Such a board should have on it representatives of the railway company, the municipalities and others concerned. This abandonment board for each abandoned line should have the responsibility of recommending to the transport board, or in this case the new commission, the conditions under which abandonment could be permitted. The recommendations should concern the best disposition of the right of way in the public interest and in the other matters of vital public concern.

Where the right of way separates farm lands, that right of way should be restored wherever practicable to the farm lot from which the land was originally taken. This would eliminate the nuisance of having parts of farms separated from each other, and would permit the farmer in each case to reincorporate the right of way to the best possible advantage of his farm, and to control drainage and weed menace.

Larger areas of property such as those in townsites should be disposed of in the best public interest, after consultation with the municipalities concerned. It is proposed that whenever an application for abandonment is granted by the transport board, or the new commission, a waiting period should be allowed during which such a representative abandonment planning board as suggested could prepare a plan for abandonment. The services of municipal and provincial planning boards should be used where available. Conservation authorities at various levels of government should also be consulted. There is no sound reason why we should now abandon these railway lines in such a way as to leave ghost towns and unsightly scars across the face of our country.

Let me read one paragraph of a letter from the vice-president of the Canadian National Railways dated July 9, 1963. I wrote to the Canadian National in respect of a bill which I had on the order paper at that time, asking for comments. The paragraph reads as follows:

> I thought I should tell you that it is the policy of the company that where a line has been abandoned, endeavours are made to dispose of the excess right of way by either transferring it to some public authority which may desire it, such as a provincial highway department or a municipality, or else offer it to the adjoining landowners at a reasonable price. There may, of course, be other occasions where the land is retained in the company's name because of possible future industrial development. While it remains in the railway's possession we endeavour, of course, to comply with the applicable provincial laws and also cooperate with the farmers in the area to prevent cattle wandering, by extending fences, and so on.

That letter is signed by Mr. R. T. Vaughan, vice-president of the Canadian National at that time.

This would indicate that the railways are cognizant of a deficiency in our abandonment procedure.

I urge the minister, the government and members of this committee once again to give this matter serious consideration because this means a great deal to those areas where these abandoned lines may create great nuisance to the many people concerned.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member has said, on several occasions he desired to have this house and this parliament enact, as a separate amendment to the Railway Act, this particular proposed amendment to the bill. I have the greatest sympathy with the objective which he has in mind. It is bad enough to have a railway line crossing a farm and cutting it in two, but when it ceases to be a railway line and is just a nuisance I can understand how the farmers feel about it.

I would be very sympathetic indeed with the objective of the amendment, but the best advice I have been able to get is that the probability of the courts deciding that once the railway line is abandoned and is no longer used for railway purposes, although it was owned by a railway company, that it would be under the jurisdiction of parliament, seems very doubtful indeed. It would seem to be almost certain that any legislative provisions with respect to the disposition of such property would be matters of property and civil rights and therefore come within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures.

We would be very loath to purport to enact legislation which perhaps would arouse hopes when we ourselves did not really have much confidence that it would be the law, and knew that it would merely be an expression of a pious feeling. For that reason I would hope that the hon. gentleman would not feel inclined to press the amendment.

to press it unduly, but I would like this principle to be given the fullest possible consideration and possibly be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for a ruling. Hon. Mr. Justice Rand, on page 290 of the Canada Supreme Court Reports for 1958, in speaking of section 198 of the Railway Act, wrote the following:

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, I do not want

> An extraordinary power itself created by parliament which, being its creator, can modify it to whatever extent or in whatever manner may be considered advisable.

It is difficult to convince these farmers that when the House of Commons can pass legislation permitting a railway company to come to their farm and forcibly take a strip across it, and lay down the conditions under which this railway company must protect the rights of the individual land owner as long as that railway is in operation, it cannot compel abandonment in an orderly manner.

I would like to see this matter referred to the Supreme Court of Canada in order to confirm once and for all that the parliament of Canada has the responsibility to lay down railway legislation covering interprovincial railway lines. Before that railway line is abandoned, certainly it is under the jurisdiction of parliament, and while that jurisdiction remains with parliament why can not parliament, through the commission which it sets up, lay down the conditions under which abandonment may take place? If the railway company cannot see their way clear to abide by these conditions for abandonment as laid down, they do not get permission for abandonment. Therefore it seems to me that the responsibility to lay down the conditions under which abandonment should take place lies with the parliament of Canada, and it can be done after full consultation with the provinces and municipalities. I would assume that the provinces and municipalities would be only too glad to confer to this end with the parliament of Canada to see that these abandonments are properly planned and carried out, so as not to create a nuisance to the property owners along these rights of way.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say a word or two in support of this amendment. I agree completely with the last few remarks made by the hon. member for Middlesex West. We must realize that the granting of the right of way was given by the parliament of Canada, and I see no real reason why it could not be written into this bill that this be one of the conditions of abandonment. I see no reason why the commission should not lay down regulations regarding the use of the right of way, because when one looks at this problem he sees that the adjoining farmlands—and I wish to deal with the question of farmlands first—have a caveat against the railway's right of way, because the railway has no right to disturb the drainage of the adjoining farmlands. Therefore the railway has a moral obligation to recognize this unwritten caveat, and as long as it uses that right of way it has to observe the conditions under which it can use it, namely that the drainage of the land must not be disturbed and that access across the right of way is given. If railroad is abandoned, then that piece of land is either abandoned, remains the property of the railroad or else is sold to a real estate company or sold back to the farmer.

However, if, for example, it is sold to a real estate company in an industrial area or a suburban area of a city, then immediately the problem of drainage of adjoining land will arise, or else the access or right of way to the farmland will be disturbed. This is what happens in areas adjacent to cities.

This amendment suggests that the commission shall set up returns on which an abandonment can take place. I wholeheartedly support it because land should not be granted by parliament and then, after the use for which parliament granted it has expired, turned over to somebody else without some recognition of the conditions upon which the grant was given. Surely this is what the hon. member is requesting in this amendment. I do not believe it is too great a demand. The commission should study this problem and, in cases where it is important, lay down some conditions for the abandonment which would have regard to the adjacent lands through which the right of way runs. I do not believe this point has to be ruled upon by the Supreme Court. I believe parliament could enact a provision asking the commission to shoulder the responsibility of making sure that all parties operating land adjacent to a railway right of way which is abandoned are treated fairly and that some recognition is given, in a sense, to the caveat which was placed against the right of way in the beginning.

Mr. Korchinski: This clause in the bill is going to be one of the most difficult for those affected by abandonments to understand. Up until the time the railway—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might raise a point of order, sir? We have not reached, as yet, the clauses in the bill dealing with rail line abandonment. I hope we will wait until we get to those clauses before embarking on any general discussion of rail line abandonment.

Mr. Korchinski: I am sure that I will be allowed to comment on the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Middlesex West. People who have had a railway line going through their property will find it difficult to understand how a government which, in the first instance, allowed the railway to trespass upon the land, if you want to use that term, would pass legislation allowing abandonment of the right of way without making some determination as to the ownership of that property. The railway does not really own it, in the sense that if anybody trespasses upon it they can say: You will be subject to a $25 fine.

How long is this situation going to exist? Is it going to exist forever? Is this situation going to exist for five years or 20 years? This bill does not provide any solution to the problem. Obviously, we will allow the railways to pull out their tracks, but we will not allow them to go there to cut the grass or get rid of the weeds. However, we will allow the railways to say they have the right, whenever somebody trespasses, to stop that person and this situation could continue for 20 or 25 years. This is not a situation we should allow to exist. Somewhere along the line the commission must be permitted to make a judgment within a limited time or we must insert in the bill the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Middlesex West. Then, the railway right of way could revert to the adjacent property owners or to a municipality. Some provision must be made to allocate this property to someone. We must not allow this property to be left in the hands of the railways, who no longer really want it. This is the point I want to raise at this particular time. The railways must either make use of the land or wash their hands of it. We must make provision in the legislation for the disposition of the land, and this is all we are asking of the minister at this time.

Mr. Douglas: I think there is a great deal of merit in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Middlesex West. The minister has raised the question of whether or not this parliament has jurisdiction to deal with the land which constitutes the right of way after it has ceased to be a railway. As I understand the intent of the amendment, what the hon. member is suggesting is that while this is still a railway, as a prior condition to the railway being allowed to abandon the right of way, conditions shall be laid down as to the disposition of that land in order that it might not be an eyesore, in order that it might not cause bad feeling, and particularly that it might not cause inconvenience to the persons who have land adjacent to that right of way.

It seems to me this is a logical position to take. I believe that this parliament would have no jurisdiction over this right of way after it has been abandoned, but surely this parliament has the authority to give to the commission the power to set down terms and conditions under which an abandonment will be granted. I am not a lawyer and neither is the minister. It may be that he has sought legal advice on this point. I should like to urge him that he might want to let this matter stand until we have gone into the whole question of railway abandonment.

I agree with the minister that we should not get into a debate on railway abandonment at the moment. I am sure the minister must appreciate the fact, because he has given a great deal of thought to this question, that where there is railway abandonment there will have to be some machinery set up for disposing of the land. Almost endless controversies could begin. The railway might say, for instance, that they will give the land to persons adjacent to it at a certain price. Who is going to adjudicate that price? If someone else not adjacent offers a higher price, will the railway grant it to him? If that is done, there will be a wedge of land separating a farmer's property which is owned by someone else. There will be endless litigation, as well as problems about municipal roads and provincial highways.

Surely some authorized body will have to have power to make these decisions. It seems to me a sensible thing to say that the commission which is going to grant approval for abandonment should lay down these conditions. It may be that the minister has some other machinery in mind. I hope now, or when we deal with railway abandonment, the minister will tell the house how he proposes to deal with this problem. I recognize it is complicated but I can assure the minister it is one of the things about which the areas affected are now, and will be even more concerned when railway abandonment begins.

I think the suggestion contained here has real merit, although there may be some change necesssary in the wording. If, for example, we were to take out the words "from time to time", the conditions may have to be laid down once and for all at the time approval for abandonment is granted. Or, as was suggested by the hon. member for Mackenzie, some body may be set up which would lay down these conditions and then supervise the process of abandonment in order to see that those conditions are complied with. But there has to be some machinery for dealing with this question.

I have had a little experience of this matter because in the constituency I formerly represented in a provincial legislature there has already been some abandonment, and I can tell the minister that the situation is a sorry mess.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question solely for information. In any of the abandonments which took place while the hon. member was in the government of the province, did the province ever seek to assert jurisdiction over that property and to legislate with respect to it, or make any disposition of it?

Mr. Douglas: We were not faced with that immediate problem because all that happened at that time was that the railway services had been discontinued and application had been made for abandonment; so the actual problem was not before us. But certainly a good deal of study had been given to the question by the Department of Municipal Affairs, the Department of Highways, and the Association of Rural and Urban Municipalities.

Since that time I know there has been no clear-cut, well defined policy for dealing with some of the lines which have been abandoned. I hope that either now or when dealing with railway abandonment the minister will tell us what he has in mind, because it cannot just be left up in the air.

Before the minister rejects the amendment moved by the hon. member for Middlesex West I hope he will agree to let the matter stand until we have some satisfactory alternative to put in its place.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about this matter. It appears to me that without the amendment at all it would be quite competent for the commission to get the voluntary agreement of the railway to dispose of the land in a certain fashion. Such legal advice as I have been able to get has not been conclusive, of course. As the hon. gentleman knows, the courts sometimes differ with law officers of both federal and provincial governments. and sometimes legislation is enacted which turns out to be ultra vires.

However, Mr. Chairman, when one has the gravest doubts in his mind, as is the case at the present time, I think that any legislation we would enact which would purport to lay down conditions for the disposition of this property after it had ceased to be a railway would very probably have to be decided by the courts. If someone tried to enforce these conditions on somebody who did not want to carry them out, then it might very well turn out that they were beyond the competence of this parliament to enact. If we did this, then all we would have done might have been to mislead a lot of people and involve them in useless litigation.

For example, if the Canadian Pacific Railway applied to abandon a certain line, and the commission said "Before we are prepared to do this we would like to know what you are going to do with this property afterwards", and the company quite voluntarily agreed to a certain disposition, and then the commission delayed the hearing because it felt it was not in the public interest to act until it knew what was going to happen, then I have no doubt in my mind that it would be perfectly feasible to reach an arrangement, and this would not require any legislation at all. But whether we could enact legislation which would be compellable upon the railways after they ceased to operate a railway on the property is a matter which does seem to be in doubt.

I cannot argue for one moment that this amendment is out of order or beyond the scope of the bill because the bill deals with rail line abandonment. If the amendment is intra vires it is not beyond the scope of the subject matter of the bill. However, this is a matter which we did not recommend or feel should be included in the bill. It was not brought to the attention of the standing committee, and I know that the hon. member for Middlesex West will not feel that I am reflecting on him when I say that. I do not blame him in any way, but this is the fact and we are now at a rather late stage.

What I would be very happy to undertake to do is this. I find it a little difficult to try to decide between now and the time I hope to see the bill disposed of, whether we ought to enact this provision. However, I would be prepared to ask the commission as soon as it has been set up to consider this problem, to discuss it, and if it can find some method by which this parliament can deal with it, to make a recommendation so that we could legislate. If this cannot be done, the provincial governments should then be consulted to see whether they could legislate in this regard, so that when a rail line had been abandoned there would be some orderly means of disposing of the property, particularly in rural areas where it can quite obviously be a serious nuisance. That might be the most appropriate way to deal with the problem, and I would be happy to give an undertaking right now that as soon as the commission is set up this is one of the matters I would refer to the research side of the commission as an urgent matter to be dealt with.

Mr. Kindt: May I just ask a question, Mr. Chairman. The explanation the minister has given connotes, at least to me, that he would take this move, but that it would be something like closing the barn door after the horse is stolen. I wonder whether be could not be more specific, and come at this in another way which would be more acceptable.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not know about the hon. gentleman's figure of speech, but an abandoned right of way is a pretty difficult thing to steal whether the barn door is open or closed. One would not mind so much if it were stolen and made good use of; the real problem seems to be that it lies there and is just a nuisance. Weeds grow and the farmer cannot protect himself properly. This is a very real problem, exactly the kind of problem to which it would be useful to give some proper consideration.

I am very regretful that we did not consider this question at an earlier stage. In view of the fact that the hon. gentleman has brought it to our attention two or three times, perhaps we should have. But facts are facts. We are going to have a commission that ought to be considering proplems of the kind, and I believe we would be more apt to get something done which we are sure would work by following the suggestion I have made than by enacting legislation which I have reason to feel would turn out to be unenforceable. In so far as making voluntary arrangements that will be voluntarily carried out, there will be no need for the legislation in any case.

Mr. Korchinski: I hope I did not leave the impression with the committee that everyone is rushing to obtain this property. I happen to have some land through which a railway runs. As far as I am concerned, I wish it did not run through there, but the point is that it does. If the railway ever abandoned the property I do not know what I should do with my property. First of all, the topsoil has been scraped off. They have left nothing but clay or weedy soil. They have left a hump in the middle, and the place is a mess.

There must be some form of responsibility for a property such as this. I do not think the railway should be allowed just to abandon. I am sure the municipalities involved do not want to see the railways just moving away. Perhaps some people are interested in the property to which I have referred, or perhaps they may be interested in the future. Perhaps some enterprising businessman will need this property. In any event it might be good for the country if the commission could deal with the problem.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the commission could, I agree. But if the commission could not legally deal with it, then the provincial legislature could. It is obvious that this is a matter that somebody could legislate about—either the legislature or parliament. If parliament cannot effectively legislate about the disposition of the property, particularly if this is worthless property—

Mr. Korchinski: That is why I raised it.

Mr. Pickersgill: What the hon. member wants is a law that says that these properties cannot be left there to produce weeds and make a nuisance of themselves, and that the railway, if it abandons that property, must see to it that this nuisance does not exist. If it turns out that we really have the power in parliament, to legislate about this, then we shall take steps to legislate. If it turns out we have no power, we shall bring the matter to the attention of the provincial legislatures so that they can deal with it. There must be jurisdiction somewhere to do this.

The happiest situation is usually where an abandoned railway line is turned into a provincial highway. In one case we unfroze part of a line between Winnipeg and Portage la Prairie so that the provincial department of highways could have the property. But a lot of these lines are in places where there is no use for a highway, where, as the hon. member for Mackenzie has said, such a mess has been made of the land it is not rehabilitable—if that is a word—for farm purposes, and it is just a nuisance.

I am conscious of the problem. I am anxious to do anything that can constructively be done to deal with it. But I would rather not ask the committee to do something in a bill that I do not believe will be really effective. If I believed that it would be effective I should have no objection to doing something.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): In an example a few moments ago the minister talked of Portage la Prairie. Does he have the details of how the province got authority to deal with the abandoned line?

Mr. Pickersgill: In that case a deal was made between the Canadian National and the provincial department of highways.

Mr. Pascoe: Could I ask a question. The minister talked about a line which was unfrozen. Could he tell the committee whether the railway paid anything toward the cost of the highway, or did the government pay anything toward the cost of constructing the highway?

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand that the Manitoba government very much wanted the land. It represented an economy to them. The Manitoba minister of highways wrote to me about it, to see if the general freeze on this line could be lifted. There are two lines on the Canadian National on the south side of the Assiniboine river between Winnipeg and Portage la Prairie. It was not too many years ago when you could see trains on both lines only 100 yards apart. I gather that does not happen often now. The provincial department of highways wanted nothing but the land. They were anxious to get it because it would represent an economy for the province.

Mr. Schreyer: The minister's reasoning in rejecting the amendment is difficult to follow. Ostensibly he doubts whether the federal government has jurisdictional competence to regulate what should happen on a right of way after a railway has abandoned it. Hon. members who have taken part in the debate on the amendment have made it abundantly clear that a condition prior to allowing railways to abandon lines ought to be that the railways shall comply with regulations and conditions to be laid down. That course would seem to satisfy constitutional requirements.

Yesterday the minister lectured this committee about the sanctity of contracts. What is suggested here has an element of contractural obligation, because when the commission grants or approves an application to abandon, obviously it shall do so in return for an undertaking on the part of the railway company to meet certain conditions. This matter is within the competence of the federal authority. The minister doubts whether this amendment would be intra vires. We should not proceed in this house on the basis of prejudging what a high court is likely to find. So long as there is a reasonable likelihood that legislation we enact is constitutional, we ought to enact it. The minister is aware I am sure that provincial legislation controlling property constituting railway rights of way is very limited.

Mr. Pickersgill: This would be an abandoned right of way. That is the precise problem.

Mr. Schreyer: The provincial noxious weeds control acts would exercise some element of control, would give some measure of protection to adjacent property owners. That is the only provincial legislation I can think of that would have any application. Other than that, it seems that the public would have no protection from either level of government, unless legislation such as embodied in this amendment is enacted.

Judging by the minister's remarks, he refuses to consider the proposition I put to him, I think for the third time, that when a railway company applies to abandon a line the commission should hold hearings, and if willing to grant the application it should set down conditions which the railway company would have to observe in maintaining abandoned property. Unless the railway companies are prepared to accept these conditions their applications should not be approved.

This kind of quid pro quo arrangement is logical and reasonable and I submit that it would leave the matter within the control of parliament and of the federal authorities. If the minister insists on opposing this amendment I wish he would deal with this specific argument which has been put to him two or three times in the last hour.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): I appreciate the minister's interest in this matter. I know he has had his advisers do some work on this question, and I recognize that his contentions must be treated with great respect because I believe they are well founded. Even though I cannot agree with them, I would have to say that I am no more of an authority on the law than he is, that there may be some question about the matter, and that there may be something in what he says. The minister has agreed to use his influence with the new commission to ensure a thorough study of these problems. The commission will be asked to recommend to the government any remedies which it feels may be practical and within the government's power. I feel we should accept this proposition, let this matter stand, and trust that the hon. gentleman may be able to get good results along the lines he has proposed.

With this in mind I would be prepared to withdraw the amendment, if I have the consent of the committee to do so.

Mr. Douglas: Before the committee gives consent to the withdrawal of the amendment, may I express the hope that we can get some undertaking from the minister with respect to this whole matter when we discuss the general question of abandonment. The minister has suggested that it might be possible to reach voluntary arrangements. I think this would be most unsatisfactory. There would be cases in which this would work and others where I am sure it would not. It seems to me there must be something much more uniform than dependence on a variety of individual arrangements on a voluntary basis.

The minister says he is prepared to ask the commission to consider this problem. What I should like the minister to consider is this: What power would the commission have to deal with this matter, if it did decide to interest itself in it? That is what worries me. The commission may look into this matter; it may decide that this is an aspect about which something should be done. But it might respond to the minister by saying it had no statutory authority to lay down terms and conditions with which the railways must comply.

It may be that between now and the time when the general discussion takes place on the subject the minister can find some general phrase to cover the situation—for example "the commission shall have power to lay down terms and conditions under which approval would be granted for the abandonment of railway lines". This could be left in general terms so that the commission by regulation could determine the conditions which would apply. It might even be necessary to say that when a line has been abandoned the land would no longer be under federal jurisdiction, since the railway had ceased to exist.

Somehow there must be specific power given to the commission to deal with this question. I have some confidence in the minister's ingenuity and perhaps he will be able to find a way of dealing with it between now and the time we are considering rail abandonment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think the hon. gentleman could have understood completely what I said in reply to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Middlesex West. I did not simply say that I would ask the commission to see whether they could do something about this question. I intend to ask the commission to look into the problem of jurisdiction, to consider the appropriate way of dealing with this matter and to recommend to us some way of dealing with it, if it does fall within the legislative competence of parliament or, if it does not, to tell us so and to make some suggestion to pass on to the provincial governments, which would give them a lead as to how they might best deal with it if provincial legislation is required. This is much more than asking the commission whether they can do something on their own. We shall be asking them to do something which, I expect, we shall be asking this commission to do with regard to a large number of problems concerning transportation—to tell us the answers about what can be done by the Department of Transport, or by parliament, or by someone else.

This will be a research project. It should not take very long, though there are a number of aspects to be considered. One of these never occurred to me until the hon. member for Mackenzie spoke, about no one wanting the right of way because it had been made worthless. Wherever the right of way has value, it is probable that not much of a problem will arise, because somebody will be willing to take it over. It is a question of who will have the power to end a nuisance. If we could find some general phraseology, supposing there is nothing already in this bill—if it is within the jurisdiction of parliament to lay down that the commission may attach some conditions to these abandonments—it might be helpful.

I am sure we shall not finish this bill this evening, and if the committee is willing to allow the hon. gentleman to withdraw his amendment we may be able to find some general phraseology before we come to the abandonment clause—and I hope my legal advisers are listening—which would go in the direction the hon. member has indicated.

Mr. Korchinski: I wish the minister could get all this down in more definitive terms. I appreciate what he says about referring this question to the commission. The commission might decide to study it or not; it would depend upon the attitude taken by its members. We are trying to get along with this legislation as best we can. The minister is trying to co-operate and we are anxious to accept his suggestions as far as possible. But the fact that the minister has said something as recorded at a particular page in Hansard is hardly conclusive as a basis for positive action. I think the committee is entitled to expect something more definite.

Mr. Kindt: I should like to add a footnote to that proposition. I realize the minister is up against a problem. Pinning this down is like trying to pin down an eel with a blunt fork. I believe it would be better for the minister to get his legal answers and try to nail this down a little better before we allow this clause to go through. I appreciate the minister saying he intends to bring this to the attention of the commission and ask them to do something about it. But there may be a new minister before very long. The present minister may be in the Senate before anything can be done.

We are supposed to be debating legislation which is to become the law of the land, and although I am willing to co-operate with the minister I think we should nail this aspect down more firmly before we pass on to other considerations. Perhaps this clause could be left over until tomorrow or another day. At that time it might pass and nothing further need be said about this matter; but at the present time it is rather up in the air. I suggest that the minister take this suggestion into consideration.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I want to be reasonable in this connection and I have tried to be helpful. However, I must appeal to the hon. gentleman to allow the hon. member for Middlesex West, who moved the amendment and is satisfied that I will keep my word and do what I said I will do, to withdraw his amendment and not force the committee to divide on it. The hon. member for Middlesex West no longer wants to press his amendment. I think we would make more progress if we could agree to do this.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Does the committee grant leave to the hon. member to withdraw his amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Thomas, Middlesex West) withdrawn.

Clauses 40 and 41 agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): The committee will now proceed to clause 42.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your co-operation but I think there was an understanding that we would revert to Part II and would not go on with clause 42 and rail line abandonment until we had dealt with Part II of the bill. Perhaps hon. members opposite would confirm that I am right about this.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): That is true, Mr. Chairman, and the minister was co-operative when we discussed this matter. However, I have checked with one or two members of this party who are prepared to speak on the question of rail line abandonment, and in view of the fact that a great deal has already been said that borders on this matter, if the minister agrees I think it might be as well to continue with this clause and work toward the question of rail line abandonment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, if that is the wish of the committee, I am quite happy that we should continue in that way. We stood Part II because I knew that one or two hon. members who were interested in this question did not seem to be in the committee at that moment, and I did not think it would be fair to go ahead with this question without their being here. But if it is the wish of the committee to go ahead with clause 42 now and come back to Part II, that is perfectly acceptable to me.

On clause 42.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words in respect of this clause. First of all I would issue the warning to the minister that before the clause passes I think we should have a statement from him with regard to clause 89 and its effects. In other words, with respect to the applications now before the Board of Transport Commissioners we would like to know whether the abandonments will be judged or ruled on under the section with which we are now dealing, section 314, or will they be judged to be matters pending and dealt with under clause 89?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be very glad to make a statement about that matter right away. I have been pondering this question, which I knew would be raised, since this matter came before the committee. I have found it quite difficult to arrive at what I thought was an equitable way of dealing with this matter. I have a suggestion to offer to the committee which I think would meet the situation. I think we all agree that there are in western Canada some of these unprotected lines. I am not saying all of them should be abandoned by any means, but everybody agrees that some of them should be abandoned and might well be abandoned as quickly as possible because all they are doing is costing the taxpayers of Canada money for a very, very inadequate return.

Therefore, I did not like to say categorically, and I refrained from saying it at an earlier stage, that all these abandonments would be dealt with under the new procedure. At the same time I recognize how difficult it would be to have them dealt with under the old procedure, once this bill is passed. Of course we have an undertaking that no hearings will be held until this bill has been disposed of by parliament one way or the other.

I suggest that if this bill is passed, under the legislation the governor in council will have the power to require all the hearings to be held in accordance with the new criteria and the new standards. But I think it would be rather unfair, since most of these applications have been in for years, to say that the railways must start all over again with the applications, in view of all the delays that this would entail. I do not think they should have to make these applications again.

The compromise which I am suggesting, and which I think would meet the wishes of everyone that I have heard express views in western Canada, is that I should give an undertaking that as soon as this legislation is passed an order in council will be passed directing the Board of Transport Commissioners to follow the new criteria and standards with respect to the abandonment, and not the standards in the present law. This would not require the railways to start again in respect of applications that have already been made and have been frozen for this long period. They would not have to apply again and go through all the procedural delays, from which nobody would gain anything. If this meets the wishes of the committee, I would give a categorical undertaking on behalf of the government that this is the way we would proceed.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I should like to comment briefly on the minister's remarks. On consideration of the minister's undertaking, I see at first glance no real objection to it, but I would like to know what is involved in this regard. In other words, something like 1,800 miles of track are up for abandonment on the prairies. With regard to this trackage, in respect of how much have hearings been held already? Before accepting the minister's suggestion we should like to know the answer to this question. Will further hearings be held in connection with applications previously made?

Mr. Pickersgill: No abandonments whatever could be made without a hearing. All I am saying is that the railways may have made application already and hearings would still have to be held. They would have to be held under the procedures laid down in the new rules. But the railways would not have to withdraw their present application, put in another application, send out notices, and so on, since they have already sent notices out and people know about the proposed abandonment. We are just trying to avoid the statutory delays that will be involved. There would be no abandonment without a hearing—none whatever.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I think one would have to weigh the minister's remarks before passing judgment on this matter. For example, where hearings have already been held in respect of some lines, and in some cases abandonment has been granted and the line is still there, or a decision has not been made, after this bill passes will a new hearing be held, or would the old hearing and the evidence presented at it be accepted?

Mr. Pickersgill: There would have to be a new hearing. I think there would have to be an advertisement of a hearing in any case, and if nobody turned up to oppose it, I suppose there would be no hearing. But none of the applications would be delayed under the undertaking I am giving. In other words, all we would be exempting the railways from would be withdrawing their present applications and applying again under the new procedure. A hearing would have to be held, or at least advertised. If anybody turned up, the hearing would be conducted before any abandonment could take place in those areas where applications have been made and have been frozen.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I think perhaps I have a little understanding of what the minister meant. Perhaps it will meet with general agreement from other members in the house. I would like to deal at some length, however, with the whole matter of abandonment and the rationalization program which the minister has in mind with regard to clause 42, and the whole group of sections under that clause dealing with line abandonment.

First of all I should like to say that during the committee proceedings I attempted to obtain from the minister some formula by which some lines would be declared to be protected until 1975, and some lines would be declared eligible for abandonment between now and whatever time the applications would be heard. Before we can really judge the atmosphere under which this legislation is being introduced, and before we can judge under what atmosphere a line from point A to point B will be protected and a line running from point C to point D will be eligible for abandonment, I think we need to know the entire formula under which one line is protected and another is up for abandonment.

During the committee sittings I had a hard time nailing down such a formula. In one case it was suggested it would depend upon the number of bushels hauled; but when I asked whether this was a formula, I think the minister said that perhaps it would be a guide but that it was not a definite formula which could be used. Some time during this debate I should like the minister to attempt to outline how he arrived at the 1,800 miles which could be eligible for abandonment, and the others that could be protected until 1975. Certainly the Manitoba Branch Line Association, or any municipality which will be presenting a brief to the public hearings which are to be called by the new transport commission would like to know by what formula they must gauge their own position in order to know whether or not their line may be saved. Surely the minister is well aware of the fact that in recent years many of these branch lines have experienced a tremendous upswing in the movement of grain. Perhaps some of them would qualify now whereas a few years ago they may not have. The future looks bright in respect of huge grain shipments. In this regard it may be that some of these lines should be protected until 1975.

Another question which comes to mind with regard to rail line abandonments is the way in which the C.N.R. and C.P.R. do their cost analyses. They take the total cost of moving the grain from the end of the line which will be abandoned to the point at which the line reaches the main line. They call that the off-line cost. Then they take the movement of grain from the point at which the branch line joins the main line, take it from there to the lakehead or to Vancouver, and call this the on-line cost. Then the total of the two is the total cost of moving the grain. They compute the figures in respect of revenue and come up with a loss figure. If one were to project the thinking of the railways in respect of costs alone, he could prove that every branch line in western Canada should be abandoned, if it could be shown that they were losing money on the Crowsnest pass rates.

When talking about branch lines one must consider the effect of the branch lines on the Crowsnest pass rates, because if all branch lines were abandoned the Crowsnest pass rates in effect would be destroyed. One thing I should like to make clear is that western Canada will not allow total abandonment of all branch lines. No matter how insignificant a branch line may be, the method which the railways use is a method by which they cannot prove that every branch line should be abandoned, unless somebody can get the exact figures from the railways or from the Board of Transport Commissioners in respect of the number of load-ton-miles the grain is hauled, and the exact cost of maintaining the track.

There are lines in my constituency which may be 60 miles in length and on which there may be only 24 trains a year. It is logical to assume that the cost to maintain that track is less than it would be to maintain track over which a train runs three times a day. But does the C.N.R. use an average figure in computing the cost of maintaining that track? No, they do not. These are things somebody should be made aware of, so that when interested parties appear before the new board they will be able to compute in an accurate way the revenue of a branch line and the cost of maintaining it and operating the number of trains which run over it.

Some time ago the former president of the C.N.R.'s Mr. Donald Gordon, made the "grain on the move" speech in Winnipeg. He said that 1,000 carloads of grain moved 60 or 70 miles on the railroad in one year could be moved more easily and at less cost by truck. This brings us into a very interesting situation. I did not accept that figure a few years ago and I still do not accept it. I am not computing the costs of the C.P.R. and the C.N.R., but if they maintain that a truck can move that amount of grain that distance for half what it costs the railroad to move it, then it looks as if they are operating their trains inefficiently. I have no objection to this, however, if they want to do it in this way. If the C.N.R. and C.P.R. want to abandon a line because they think they can haul the grain out at less cost by their own trucks, then let them do it. Then our Crowsnest pass rates will be maintained.

The point here is that if the railways say they can haul the grain at less cost by truck, then I have no objection if the line along which the farmers are farming is going to be abandoned, because this would maintain the Crowsnest pass rate for all farmers. If branch lines are abandoned, farmers will have to bear the cost of moving their grain an extra 60 or 70 miles at a cost of, to use the former president's figure, five cents to fifteen cents per bushel, depending on how large the farmer's truck is or how much he must pay to the commercial trucking firm he must hire.

Many roads in western Canada are capable of carrying trucks loaded with a thousand bushels of wheat, but these roads are few and far between in the outlying areas. Most of the good roads run adjacent to main lines of the railroad. The poor roads are located in those areas close to branch lines which are to be abandoned. As a result, the greatest burden created by a branch line abandonment would fall on those farmers producing grain in the outlying areas. In most cases the main lines of the railways in western Canada run through the best agricultural land. As a result the farmer producing the best and most grain is close to the main line, whereas the farmer who will bear the greatest cost is producing the lower grades in the outlying areas.

A former president of the C.N.R. said that grain could be moved cheaper by trucks in many instances. In at least one case of which I am aware, the company has done just that. Let the trucking companies haul this grain, just as they are doing in one area in my constituency. The railway company has established a precedent in this regard. This is a very important aspect in respect of which the new commission must rule, when considering rail line abandonments.

In one area the Wheat Board instructed the railway company to move the grain from certain licensed elevators. The railway company had not kept the track in repair for many years and said they did not want to run a train on that line because of its state of disrepair. It indicated that the cost of repairing one bridge would be in the neigbourhood of over $60,000. I do not suppose the company has driven one spike along that line since it was originally put in. The company did not want to spend that kind of money on this line, which was up for abandonment. In this particular case the grain had to be hauled by truck for some 50 miles and the C.N.R. paid the cost of that haulage. The cost was not paid by the grain company which purchased the wheat for the Wheat Board, nor by the farmer who grew the grain.

Surely the company has established a precedent that we should recognize. Any grain elevator which is necessary, whether it is located near a line that is up for abandonment or adjacent to a main line, should remain licensed as an agent of the Wheat Board to receive grain from the farmers. The railway companies should move that grain from those elevators by truck if they can do so more cheaply.

Surely when a railway company makes application for a branch line abandonment it should be obliged to prove that it can move grain more cheaply by truck than by rail. That is the test which should be applied in these cases. I am not suggesting this should apply to those areas located within 10 or 15 miles of a main line, because the farmers I am sure would gladly haul the grain that distance. But in those areas where farmers will have to move their grain 50 miles or more from an abandoned line to a terminal point, if the railway companies suggest they can move the grain more cheaply by truck, a fleet of trucks should be brought in to move that grain. The railway companies have been allowed to move into the trucking business. Surely this is the only way the Crowsnest pass rates can be maintained in western Canada.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

Let us consider the movement of grain. Mr. Gordon dealt with this subject in a speech he delivered in Winnipeg. He referred to the modernization of grain handling and movement, and talked about speeding up this process in order to save money. If Mr. Gordon feels that the railways can save money by moving grain by truck, then we should permit the railways to do so whenever branch lines are abandoned.

This parliament should never pass an act so rigid it cannot be adjusted with changing times. Let us allow rail line abandonment on the prairies, provided the railway companies haul the grain at Crowsnest pass rates. If the railway companies say they can haul the grain more cheaply by truck, let us allow them to do so.

The railway companies have suggested they can move up to 1000 box cars of grain per year by truck for approximately 4 cents to 5 cents per ton mile cheaper, which represents a saving of about one third. I suggest in any rail line abandonment application the railway companies should be obliged to indicate how much can be saved by moving the grain by truck, and compare that to the inconvenience caused by total abandonment of a railway service. If the abandonment of a branch line creates an excessive hardship or social upheaval in a production area the commission should rule that the elevators concerned remain licensed agents of the Wheat Board, and that the grain be moved by truck. We must adjust to the times. We must make our legislation sufficiently flexible to allow these changes to take place, in order to speed up grain movement, resulting in greater efficiency of grain handling.

The speech of the former president, to which I referred, was devoted almost entirely to the movement of grain. He suggested that in many instances grain could be moved more efficiently and economically by truck. We should keep this in mind when discussing clause 42. We should know precisely what the minister had in mind when he said that 1,800 miles of proposed line for abandonment would be protected until 1975. What I mean by that is that two tracks, two ribbons of steel running down that branch line, will remain there until 1975 and will not provide any service at all. Will the railroads continue to run along that branch line until 1975 or will they be able to discontinue service? They will be able to drive off the customers as a result of the poor service which they will provide until that time, and in 1975 they will be able to prove effectively that that branch line is uneconomic and should be abandoned. This is the way in which many people see this question, particularly in western Canada. Whether or not this is true is hard to say but the opinion is that the railways will discontinue their services by turning aside business and in this way will be able to prove effectively that the service should be discontinued.

I think that under this particular section the minister should try to outline to the house what services if any will be protected. He stated that all but 1,800 miles will be protected until 1975. Surely when 1975 comes we would not want to see a sudden spurt of applications for abandonment filed. There are around 9,600 miles of track of the C.N.R. and C.P.R. in the prairie provinces. A few years ago a little over 4,000 miles of track were up for abandonment, nearly half of the total trackage in the three provinces. Now the minister has nailed down all but 1,800 miles of that track until 1975. What can we expect after 1975? Can we expect the filing of applications for abandonment for the remaining 2,200 miles in 1976, for example, or can we have some assurance that these ribbons of steel which we will have protected until 1975 will guarantee services to the areas through which they run? Surely if we are really going to protect these lines we must guarantee services which are now provided on these lines.

I should like to say a word or two with regard to the remarks made by the minister concerning clause 89. Can he tell me what would happen if we deleted clause 89 altogether? How many hearings would result from such a deletion—which I may wish to propose as an amendment?

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may, I should like to answer this question immediately. I think that if this clause were deleted—and I say this quickly, without giving it very careful consideration—it would not then be easy for the governor in council to direct that the matters which are pending should be considered under the new procedure. This clause relates not only to the Board of Transport Commissioners but to the Air Transport Board and the Maritime Commission. It would upset a lot of things that are under way. I think that for that reason it is required.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I thank the minister for that explanation. Perhaps I will withhold the amendment which I suggested I might move later on.

Now I would like to deal with the method of costing used by the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. At the meeting of the transport and communications committee held on October 13 Dr. Bandeen presented diagrams on the costing analysis of the two railway companies. He outlined the manner in which the cost analysis of the movement of a given amount of goods from point A to point B was prepared, but he gave general figures only. He stated that the cost of one car moving one mile was .024 cents. After the committee meeting I questioned him to try to ascertain whether I could compute the movement of that car loaded with grain over a number of miles. He told me that the figures which he presented were average figures which were given with the sole purpose of demonstrating the component parts which went into the final figure but that these were not even accurate figures with respect to any given commodity.

Such a vague presentation can only place at a disadvantage those people who live alongside these railway lines which may be up for abandonment, because they cannot even study the exact costing methods used by the C.N.R. or the C.P.R. in computing whether or not their costs are greater than their revenues. There is no question in my mind that if I were presenting figures to prove the necessity for the abandonment of a service, these figures would serve to prove my case. I do not expect the C.N.R. or the C.P.R. to use figures which would not prove their case. However, I think that in all fairness the people affected should be given a chance to examine the exact manner in which those two figures have been computed.

I hope that the new transport commission will be as objective as possible in examining these figures. I myself accept the component parts of the costing of the railway companies. In looking at them I could see no fault with them, but I do not accept the exact accurary of these figures because, for example, we have seen many instances in which the cost of box cars being used was substantially different. How do we know whether the railway companies used average or exact figures? Some box cars they use cost $7,000 while others cost $30,000, I am told. The depreciation of the initial cost has to be calculated, and so has the interest. A car can cost between $7,000 and $30,000.

I should like to receive a further explanation of those figures and I hope that the research staff which will be provided on the establishment of the commission will study the whole aspect of costing. Having in mind the way in which the cost analysis was arrived at, I would like to think that the municipalities, the reeves, the mayors and the interested branch line associations all across western Canada, will be able to take a look at far more accurate figures than we were able to see in the committee because, as Dr. Bandeen said to me after the meeting, these figures were given just as an example and were not exact.

Surely, this is not good enough. When a branch line is up for abandonment and the major commodity hauled over that branch line is grain, then the figures presented should be the accurate figures and both sides should be given those accurate figures. It is all well and good to say the commission will have these accurate figures. However, the opponent should also be given these accurate figures so that they could be examined, and so arguments could be presented. This is the point. I should not like to see a continuation of the practice of allowing the railroads to bury their costs and keep them from the eyes of those who are opposed to the applications for abandonment.

The Chairman: Order. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I shall only take two or three minutes to deal with clause 42 of Bill No. C-231.

To my mind, the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) has brought up important points, on which additional comments could be made.

The title of the clause is as follows:

Abandonment and rationalization of lines or operations—uneconomic branch lines.

Mr. Chairman, the whole clause is ambiguous if it is intended to set the standards, the criteria for establishing whether or not a line is to be abandoned. In my opinion, it boils down simply to profit or loss. I believe the whole matter is unfair to the Canadian public and that the agreements reached with the railroad companies, at the time they were granted what we know, was trickery of sorts. Basically the standards or criteria should be: does the economy of the region concerned still need railroad services? Whether or not the services are profitable becomes secondary, because we must go back to the basic principle.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

Mr. Chairman, the railroad companies entered into a contract with Canada, as we know. They were granted the equivalent of gold mines, rights to untold natural resources. Then, with their profits in those fields, they launched out in other fields of endeavour such as maritime transport, hotels, air transport, mines and other related businesses.

Today, now that all the frosting has been eaten off the cake, operating profitable lines, I believe it would be unfair for them to abandon the unprofitable lines. I feel this would not be respecting the agreement entered into in earlier days, giving railways the advantages we know, at the price we had to pay. We need only remember, for instance, how many governments were defeated because of these concessions made to the railway companies.

I do not know whether this idea can be added as an amendment, but I say to the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), that the future commission should at least be given detailed instructions, to the effect that the criteria, the norms or the standards determining whether or not a particular line may be abandoned, must not necessarily stem from profitable or unprofitable operation. In my opinion, we should ask ourselves: does the economy of our country and the economy of this area depend upon railway service? Could another means of transportation serve that area as efficiently as the railway? If the answer is no, then railway service must be maintained—whether profitable or not—because it would be unreasonable for the country to have given the railways the advantages they have been granted—which have enabled them to pile up an extraordinary amount of money—and today, because certain lines are operating at a loss, to say to them: "Well, get out of there with your little gold mine and let the people living in that unprofitable area tighten their belts." Besides, some lines are profitable, and to be logical right to the end, if the unprofitable lines were abandoned, then the railway companies would have to disgorge and pay the government the profits made by operating the truly profitable lines.

I therefore submit to the hon. minister that a specific clause might be added, establishing that the economic interest of the country and the area concerned must receive first consideration or, at least, set out in one form or another, specific directives for the members of the commission, so that when they are called upon, their ruling will not be based solely upon cold statistics showing whether or not the line is profitable.

[English]

Mr. Korchinski: I could not help thinking it would have been a wonderful thing if the minister had gone to the other place to serve as chairman of a joint committee on railways, and the hon. member for Acadia with all his knowledge had been appointed president of the Canadian National. Of course, it is a great asset to have them in this house.

Mr. Knowles: Send them both to the other place.

Mr. Korchinski: However, there is one point the minister made about which I agree with the hon. member for Acadia. He suggested that perhaps some of the old applications might be accepted holus-bolus and that no further inquiries should be held. Of course some of these old applications are based on old figures. I am sure the minister would not want to suggest that these rail lines be abandoned on the basis of old figures.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, it is clearly understood that although an application has been made, all the figures have to be brought up to date. There has to be a hearing as well, before there can be any abandonment.

Mr. Korchinski: Since parliament is dealing with railway legislation, I am sure many people must be under the impression that everything is in a suspended state, and therefore their line is not to be abandoned. They have heard a lot about certain lines being frozen, but people have lost track of what is really happening. In the interests of all concerned, there should be proper notification to rural municipalities, the secretaries of towns and villages that may be affected, to the effect that no further applications will be heard. It should not be taken for granted that all the due processes of law have been complied with, and that we no longer have to follow the old procedures.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think perhaps the hon. member came into the chamber after I made my statement on this particular point. However, perhaps I might repeat it now, although I thought I made it abundantly clear. Although the railways would not be required to make new applications, there will be no hearings held on any of these applications until after this legislation is passed. There will be notice to all parties concerned, and there would have to be a hearing. As I just added now, of course all the figures would have to be brought up to date. Now, all these things would have to be done and when hearings are held they will be held under the new criteria in this bill, and not the old criteria under the present law.

Mr. Rapp: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Korchinski: I have one question. If these figures have to be brought up to date, who in the world is supposed to contest them?

Mr. Pickersgill: The old hearings have no validity whatever.

Mr. Korchinski: In other words, there has to be a new hearing?

Mr. Pickersgill: They have to have a new hearing. The old applications do not have to be renewed, that is all. There has to be a new hearing, even if there was an old hearing.

Mr. Korchinski: Do notices of abandonment have to be sent out?

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, yes, notices of a desire to abandon.

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Kindt: I should like to ask the minister whether there are any criteria as to where the commission will hold these meetings. Will it be in towns adjacent to areas to be abandoned, or in some city close by which will be convenient to the commission but less convenient to the public? There has to be some rhyme or reason for holding these hearings, and it is not enough for the minister to say they will just be held. They must be accessible for the public.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think we would have a very difficult time if we were to attempt to prescribe in legislation where hearings should be held. The simplest thing would be to prescribe that they be held at every railway station in western Canada. If you did not, any place that was left out would complain. I think we must assume that the public servants appointed to this commission will take their responsibilities seriously and will not inconvenience the public.

Mr. Kindt: A supplementary question.

Mr. Rapp: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Kindt: Would it be possible for the minister to insert something like "at the most convenient place for the people concerned"?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will look into that.

Mr. Kindt: I wish you would. May I call it eight o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish you would. I should like to have another couple of hours and have some progress made.

Mr. Kindt: I mean ten o'clock.

The Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Rapp: What will be the business for tomorrow, a short day?

Mr. McIlraith: Tomorrow, I am told, is the day of great progress with this legislation. We will continue with the transport legislation in committee of the whole.

If that is finished and there is any time available for other legislation, we might consider item 117 on today's order paper, the provision with regard to the Judges Act; item 104 regarding the Elections Act going to committee; item 110, the bill to amend the Canada Corporations Act; item 79, house in committee on the C.N.R. financing bill; item 124, the creation of a committee to deal with the subject matter of the "O Canada" resolution; and item 125 dealing with the setting up of a committee to consider the rules.

I should add for the information of hon. members that after five o'clock the Minister of Transport will not be available in any circumstances.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I make the earnest plea to hon. members to finish my bill by five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

"LABOUR GAZETTE"—DELAY IN DELIVERY OF FRENCH EDITION

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I posed a question to the Minister of Labour, for the seventh or eighth time in the last 12 months, asking why the French edition of the Labour Gazette is always three or four months late. Up until two or three months ago the minister answered that things were supposed to be improving, and on one occasion he even mentioned that by September or October both issues would be published simultaneously. Yesterday the minister answered my request, after I had suggested that a special committee should be appointed to take care of this matter, by saying that he was opposed to appointing such a special committee. He said that we had an effective committee of the house and that we do not need another. Then he added that this matter has made good progress up to now, and the French edition has been delayed because the chief of the translations section was taken ill.

I am not satisfied with that answer. I hold the Minister of Labour in high regard; he has great responsibilities and I have much respect for him. But I must say I am disappointed, even shocked, with the answer he gave yesterday. His answer looks to me to be some kind of wishy-washy soporific excuse. He was trying to evade something, to camouflage something. I cannot go for that, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister should have said to me, "Somebody has forgotten to do what he was ordered to do". There is no reason for having the French edition coming out two or three months late. Two or three years ago both editions came out together. I understand that the section needs translators. Having made some inquiries, I can find half a dozen translators in 48 hours.

Somewhere I think there has been negligence. I do not blame the minister personally; probably he is badly informed by somebody. He should try to find solutions to the difficulty right away. Let me put it this way: I do not see why, in the next two months, both editions cannot come out together. If this question offers such a great problem, then I offer to solve the problem for the minister, and I will not charge anything. I will do it for nothing. I shall find translators to do a good job.

Mind you, I am not begging for special favours; I hope the minister understands that. This is something to which we are rightfully entitled. Also, many complaints from my province have come from labour organizations which feel they ought to have the French edition simultaneously with the English. They do not understand why we do not get the French edition.

There is another reason why I bring this matter up. Not having the edition simultaneously with English gives ammunition to the separatists. It puts in an awkward spot those of us trying to tell our people that confederation is not so bad after all, that there is a future in confederation, I bring this to the attention of the minister and I urge him to give the necessary orders to those in charge of the translations bureau, to see to it that we may have the French edition as soon as possible. When I say as soon as possible I think of the next month, or perhaps of the next two months, at the latest.

If what I ask is not done I must tell the minister that every month I shall be standing up and posing the same questions, and that I might lose my patience. I have tried always to be courteous to the minister, but I might be mean at times because I feel somewhat annoyed. I know the minister is used to all kinds of threats, but this, I think, has lasted long enough and it is high time it were settled. I might go to the parliamentary committee mentioned by the minister, if the minister cannot solve the problem, and bring this matter to their attention.

I beseech the minister, for goodness sake, to find a solution, so that we shall not have to hear what we have listened to in my province month after month. This matter really gives wicked ammunition to the separatists.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): I listened to the hon. member for Trois-Rivières with a great deal of interest. Despite his indignation I cannot visualize any situation in which his patience would be strained to the point at which he would become discourteous. I do not think that is a characteristic which he will ever display in the house.

I share his feeling, as one closely attuned to the problems of confederation, that the greatest defence we have against the spread of separatism in the province of Quebec is the intelligence and integrity of the labour movement. There are a number of young men and women joining organized labour in the province who will be exposed to the sensible arguments of the leading labour figures who endorse the idea of a united Canada, and the fact that the Labour Gazette is not made available all the time in both official languages of this country, simultaneously, can become a very serious bone of contention and can, indeed, lead to a degree of justifiable resentment. I do not think we want this to happen.

I realize that the hon. member has brought up this question on several occasions. I think the time has come to cease making excuses. I think we must find a solution to the question of producing documents and periodicals as important as the Labour Gazette simultaneously in the two languages. I repeat that labour is of paramount importance at this moment, and I believe that all who belong to the organized labour movement in Quebec should have equal opportunity to read the Labour Gazette in the other of the official languages, just as it is available in the English language.

I assure the hon. member that I will take up this question with the minister and at the same time draw the minister's attention to the kind remarks which the hon. member made about him personally. The minister, too, has been very sensitive in this area. He has introduced many reforms within the department and done everything he could to make French speaking Canadians feel at home. I know that the hon. member for Trois-Rivières has his full co-operation.

GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE—QUEBEC—POSSIBLE SOLUTION OF PROBLEMS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, on January 11 that is, yesterday, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) whether he had been informed of the brief submitted to certain government members including the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Pepin), by the northwestern Quebec chambers of commerce with regard to the gold mining problem. The Val d'Or-Bourlamaque and Malartic city councils have endorsed that brief submitted in March 1966.

At the end of November last, the northwestern Quebec regional economic council and the muncipalities directly affected by the gold mining problem also submitted their own brief calling for increased assistance to gold mining.

Now I believe, Mr. Speaker that the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act expires in 1967. It must be not only renewed, but improved by increasing subsidies to the gold mines. We know that the price of gold has remained steady since 1935 at $35 an ounce, American funds, which is equivalent now to $37.75 an ounce. We also know that the cost of living index has increased from 1 to 240 since 1935. We know that the wages paid the miners working in the gold mines are 25 percent less than wages paid in other mines and 15 per cent less than those paid in other industries. It is important to know at the earliest moment what the government's intentions are concerning its gold mining policy.

The public bodies which last year presented briefs to the government on gold mining represent more than 110,000 people dependent in one way or another upon the mining activity in northwestern Quebec and the whole economy of the area feels the rise and fall of mining operations.

The Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act should provide for the maintenance and development of active mines and the opening of new mines, which would boost the economy of this area.

The chambers of commerce, the municipal councils and the regional council of northwestern Quebec ask nothing else but a better standard of living for miners and their families. In that connection, the brief says:

> After considering the present situation, we came to the conclusion that a revision of the act passed in 1948 and amended a few times until 1958, when a 25 per cent increase in subsidies was granted, is imperative, and our request is not for the purpose of enabling this industry to pay greater dividends. It wants first of all to take into consideration that we must now face a shortage of competent labour in gold mines because of salaries which are not competitive with other fields of industry.
> We can say, as proved by figures, that the money received under the Gold Mining Assistance Act, far from being used to pay dividends to shareholders, has been used to give a better deal to workers; furthermore, only salary increases given to workers represent more than 2.2 times the sums received under gold mining assistance.
> We must consider that this year, the workers, like their fellow-workers in Ontario, will demand the 40-hour week, and our mines will have to grant the same treatment as given elsewhere; this burden alone, especially for marginal mines, could force them to close their doors; that is the economic reality.
> Considering this new need, new obligations which must be assumed in a changing society, which requires more for public services, especially education, we consider that the time is favourable for adjustment of subsidies to gold mines so as to enable them first of all, and this is the main motive of our pressure, to give their employees the salary increases which will enable them to compare their case with what is done in other areas of industry.

The government should therefore inform us, as soon as possible, of the policy it intends to follow concerning gold mines.

[English]

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset that the government shares the concern of the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) concerning the communities in this country, and more particularly those in northwestern Quebec, which are dependant upon the gold mining industry. To this extent the government is considering the continuation beyond December 31, 1967, of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. The Department of Industry of course is concerned with the development of other industries in those areas, and the new manpower centres are operating in such a way as to retrain and redirect labour to new occupations as they develop in the gold mining regions.

The Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act was passed in 1948. As the name indicates, the problems then confronting the gold mining industry were thought to be transitional in nature; this was an emergency measure. It has continued over the intervening years and the amount of assistance has increased. For example, the amount of assistance increased from $580 per miner per annum in the mid-1950's to a figure in the order of $1,400 per miner per annum in 1966. The total extent of federal tax assistance to the gold mining industry this year will be in the order of $15 million. The industry is declining in output. Faced with a fixed price for its products and rising costs, particularly rising wage rates, it has been in a squeeze. It has done a remarkable job in respect of improving productivity. In general the number of mines in this country has dropped roughly in half since 1948. The problem in northwestern Quebec is not unique. It is a problem which is being encountered in Ontario, British Columbia and in other parts of the country. I know there are other mining opportunities in that general area. The other mining industries are able today to pay something in the order of $20 a week more, and they are drawing off mining labour from the gold mines. Pulp and paper and other industries are in that area.

Nevertheless, the government is prepared to continue the emergency gold mining assistance in some form. It is also energetically exploring the possibility of other opportunities for employment in adjoining areas to support these communities in the future.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, January 13, 1967

The house met at 11 a.m.

VACANCIES

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the house that consequent upon the notification of vacancies in the representation made in this house on Thursday, January 12, 1967, by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) and the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), and pursuant to section 10 of the House of Commons Act, I have addressed my warrants to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of new writs for the election of members in the electoral districts of Hull and Sudbury.

GRAIN

WHEAT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF FINAL PAYMENT

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement respecting the final payment on wheat. Producers delivered a total of 559,790,073 bushels of wheat to the Canadian Wheat Board in the 1965-66 crop year, which included 18,932,369 bushels of Durum wheat. The amount of the final payment to be distributed to producers is $270,028,575, which is $70 million higher than last year's payment and is exceeded only slightly by the record payment of $272 million made on the 1963-64 pool account, when a larger volume of wheat was marketed. Of this amount, $9,948,861 will be distributed to producers who delivered Durum wheat.

These sums are not a final payment by the government of Canada, but represent the net returns of the Canadian Wheat Board in the marketing of western Canadian wheat for the 1965-66 crop year.

The average final payment for wheat other than Durum is 48.087 cents per bushel. The average final payment for Durum wheat is 52.594 cents per bushel. The over-all average of 48.237 cents a bushel is the largest average final payment in the history of the Canadian Wheat Board.

The board will commence issuing final payment cheques to producers on January 17, 1967. This is the earliest date on which final payments have been made in the last 14 years.

I wish to inform the house of the total prices realized by producers, prior to the deduction of the 1 per cent Prairie Farm Assistance Act levy, on their deliveries of some of the more important grades of wheat. The farmers will receive a total—basis in store at the lakehead of Vancouver—of $1.99699 for No. 1 Northern; $1.96645 for No. 2 Northern; $1.88269 for No. 3 Northern; $1.82731 for No. 4 Northern and $1.75100 for No. 5 wheat. The prices realized on the Amber Durum grades total $2.03725 for No. 1 C.W. Amber Durum; $2.00833 for No. 2 and $1.94476 for No. 1.

The accounting for the oats and barley pools for the 1965-66 crop year is under way, and distribution of the cheques will follow the distribution of the wheat payments. It is expected that the total of the payments for wheat, oats and barley will be at a record level.

Congratulations are due to all concerned in the growing, handling, grading, transporting and selling of wheat for their contribution to a most successful marketing year. I would like to pay particular tribute to the remarkable achievements of the Canadian Wheat Board. The efforts of the board on behalf of the western producer have benefited not only the grain producer but all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table the statement issued today in Winnipeg by the Canadian Wheat Board regarding the final payment. I ask, if hon. members so wish, that it be included as an appendix to today's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table the document to which he refers, and is it the pleasure of the house that it be appended to Hansard of today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of document referred to above see appendix.]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is one time when we can all express pleasure, especially those of us on this side of the house; because during our period of office against strong criticism we made available to the wheat board the necessary credits for guaranteeing sales to communist China. If it had not been for that we should have been back in the days of 1954 to 1957, when tremendous gluts of wheat piled up in all parts of western Canada.

Second, the tremendous sales this year bear out the prophecies we made that increasing amounts of wheat would be required for the world, and that the western farmer should expand his production and increase his acreage. When we expressed that view that too was criticized. Both these stands have been entirely vindicated by events.

The time has come for a material increase in price. I believe that $2.25 per bushel should be considered a normal price today. There is a growing world demand. One and a half years ago wheat prices in Canada were cut by some 17 cents a bushel. If that cut had not taken place the amount the western farmer would receive today would be approximately $130 million more than will be distributed on this occasion. I know the minister is most favourably disposed to action to increase wheat prices. That should be done. World demand is expanding by leaps and bounds.

While the western farmer will naturally be pleased with this distribution and the amounts realized, he is up against something that all farmers in all parts of our country are up against, rising costs of production.

This means that while these returns will be favourably accepted, the farmer is not yet receiving his just due, and it is necessary that action be taken in those fields in which the farmer has to make expenditures and in particular in the field of farm implements where prices have risen to untoward heights. While the commission sits, prices increase.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will want to congratulate the Canadian Wheat Board on the early distribution of the final payment to wheat producers. This has been a very prompt action, and it indicates the high degree of efficiency with which the Canadian Wheat Board conducts its operations. I am sure congratulations will be in order.

The final payment of some 48 cents on all grades of wheat except Durum, and 52½ cents on Durum wheat, will of course be welcomed by the wheat producers of western Canada. The minister was wise, I think to point out once again to the general public the fact that this is not a payment by the government of Canada. This payment underlines the value of the orderly marketing of wheat under a government agency, something for which many of us fought for a long period of years, and it is gratifying to see the degree of stability which this has provided for the wheat producers of Canada.

However, one thing which is sometimes lost sight of is that while wheat prices remain within a stabilised area, the cost of production borne by those who produce wheat has been rising steadily. I notice that in the publication "Canadian Farm Economics" issued by the Department of Agriculture last October the figure is given for the index of prices paid by farmers, excluding their living costs, and this is reported to have gone up from 282.2 in 1962 to 346.8 in April, 1966, the last date for which a figure is available. This represents an increase in the cost of production to wheat producers amounting to 64.6 points, a very substantial increase indeed. The same table shows that the prices paid to the farmers for field products, which includes products other than cereal grain though cereal grain is among them, went down from 191.7 in 1961 to 179.1 in June, 1966, a drop of 12.6 points. It is not necessary to tell this house that any industry in which the cost of production goes up by more than 64 points while the price received for that production goes down by 12.6 points is not in a very healthy position.

The producers of grain have been blessed with large crops. Nevertheless they face the problem of a cost-price squeeze. Certainly the time has come for Canada to press for an increased price in the negotiations for the renewal of the international wheat agreement.

I might also remind the minister and the house that almost four years ago, in March, 1963 in the city of Saskatoon, the Prime Minister pledged that the Liberal party if it came to office, would establish a two price system for wheat with a guaranteed minimum price of at least $2 a bushel; that there would be a price set for the domestic wheat which would have some relationship to prices generally, and that this would enable the government to give the farmers a guaranteed minimum price. No action has ever been taken on this promise. I suggest to the minister that the time is long overdue for the government to carry out the pledge which was made by the Prime Minister almost four years ago.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the members of my party, I wish to join with the hon. members who spoke previously, and share in the joy of western farmers, following the announcement which the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) has just made.

We, of the Ralliement Créditiste, as well as all the hon. members of the province of Quebec, wish to pay special tribute to the Canadian Wheat Board, to which we owe this tremendous accomplishment, and this group which brought pressure to bear upon the various governments, with a view to finding a market for their wheat.

We, of the province of Quebec, simply hope that the farmers in our areas will imitate the western efforts which were made a few years ago, in order to have such an organization, and thus force the governments into granting the farmers what they want because, in the province of Quebec, the problem is not so much one of production but rather of ability and opportunity to market their production at a profitable price.

I see that the western farmers, through the Canadian Wheat Board, have succeeded in performing that feat of calling on governments to help them, and I wish heartily that we may some day, in the province of Quebec, have such an organization that would be called the Canadian Eastern Products Board, in order that the Minister of Trade and Commerce might also announce payments for the province of Quebec and that the good news we hear might not always concern western Canada but also the farmers of the province of Quebec.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, we wish to join the others who have spoken in expressing satisfaction that this final wheat payment is being made at this early date and in substantial amount. It will prove beneficial not only to the farmers of western Canada but to the entire economy of Canada.

There are only two brief points which I should like to make. In view of the political situation which is developing at present in red China I think there is concern in this country about markets for our wheat this year and next year, and whether shipments of wheat already agreed to will continue. This points up the necessity of expanding our markets in other areas of the world where food is just as necessary as it is in China.

It also brings out a second point, namely that the surplus of wheat and other food in the world today is decreasing, and the crisis of food for starving people in many parts of the world becomes more critical than ever.

It points up again the necessity of our own surplus supplies of food reaching areas of the world where we are not reaching today and where the needs are critical and urgent. It again comes back to the responsibility of the minister in respect of the necessity to not only develop our own production to greater heights, but also to develop new markets in the other parts of the world. This is something which is urgently facing us today.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROPOSED APPEARANCE OF GERMAN NATIONAL ON "SUNDAY" PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has she been in touch with the C.B.C. regarding the prospective appearance on the program "Sunday" of a neo-nazi by the name of von Thadden? I should like to ask whether she has received communications, as have other members, from Canadians who deeply resent the use of moneys which are given the C.B.C. on a program such as this, which can only exacerbate the feelings of those who served in the last war, their dependants and those families who sacrificed.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had any communication with the C.B.C. since my return.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister bring this matter to the attention of the C.B.C. and in particular, among other things, a telegram from the Saint John Ministerial Association protesting against this irresponsible programming and inexcusable disregard for Canadian sensibilities?

Miss LaMarsh: Perhaps the right hon. gentleman would send me a copy of that telegram. I do not think I received it.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): The minister says she has not communicated with the C.B.C. about the question raised by the Leader of the Opposition. Is the government not considering some action in this regard so far as its own responsibility to the C.B.C. and the Canadian people is concerned? Certainly she should understand, without having to consult with the C.B.C., that the presence of such a man will only open old wounds and arouse bitterness and resentment in this country. If a sick person were coming here who would endanger the health of the country, would she not take some action?

Miss LaMarsh: Unhappily I cannot be every place at once. I just returned yesterday, and there has been no opportunity to deal with many things on my desk.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that it is now almost four years since the government was first elected on the pledge to set up the Canada Development Corporation, may I ask the minister what legislative action along this line is being taken to promote this program, since we have now lost at least three precious years?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I am not quite certain whether it will be possible to get the bill introduced this session, but that is my hope.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the Prime Minister whether the newly appointed Minister without Portfolio, as part of his responsibility, is to be given the task of looking into the matter of the setting up of the Canada Development Corporation.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am very grateful for the advice of the hon. gentleman as to how to organize government business.

AGRICULTURE

BUTTER—STEPS TO ENCOURAGE CANADIAN PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Agriculture arising from the news issued by the Department of Agriculture, to the effect that Canada will import in February over a million pounds of butter.

Would the minister tell us whether the government considers taking steps in order to encourage Canadian producers to provide, as in the past, all the butter necessary to Canadian consumers.

[Mr. Thompson.]

[English]

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the government's policy is an incentive to production, in as much as prices today are something in the neighbourhood of 50 per cent higher than they were when we came to office. With this kind of policy I am sure future production will be encouraged.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT IN LIVING CONDITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of his answer to the Ontario Indian leader's request yesterday for government assistance to stop the deterioration in living standards of our Indian people to the effect and I quote from the Globe and Mail of this morning—"I too will be a failure", will the minister not adopt something of the attitude of a famous car rental firm and try harder so that our Indian population may have a living standard more comparable to that enjoyed by their fellow Canadians?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this is more of a general representation than a question.

WOMEN

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF STATUS BY ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. I should like to ask whether on her return she can report to the house any progress regarding her request for a royal commission to study the status of women, or does she find her cabinet colleagues in the same condition as when she left, with their backs up?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I find my colleagues in their usual fine condition.

Mr. Starr: Glued together.

Miss LaMarsh: Yes, Mr. Speaker, happily glued together; not in the condition of my hon. friends opposite, in a state of flux.

I have not had the opportunity to discuss any matters with my colleagues as a cabinet since my return.

FINANCE

TAX REFUNDS TO PRIVATE COMPANIES OPERATING PUBLIC UTILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is now in a position to answer the question I asked on Tuesday regarding tax rebates to privately owned public utilities.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I understand the hon. member was asking about the refund of taxes under the Public Utilities Act which was passed by the house I think this session or last session. That legislation referred to refunds of taxes in respect of 1966. It is not expected that those refunds can be made, as I indicated at that time, in respect of 1966 until 1968 because of problems of assessment and so on.

In any event the refunds are not made to the public utilities but to the provinces.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, as this is a matter of concern to the customers of these companies, particularly those in Alberta, can the minister hold out no hope that these refunds can be expedited rather than making these people wait for two years?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we will certainly do the best we can but it was understood by the provinces when the legislation was passed that it would take about that length of time to make these refunds. I hope we can shorten that time by administrative action, but I do not expect there can be an improvement of more than a few months.

SHIPPING

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO TUG SINKINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a most important question to the Minister of Transport. Can he indicate whether an immediate investigation and survey of the sea-worthiness, safety of operation and adequacy of personnel on tugs operating off the B.C. coast will now be undertaken in view of the fact that three tugs have gone down in the last three months with the loss of lives. Two of these tugs were under inspection, while the one which sank in recent days was under inspection but possibly undermanned and involved the loss of all five on board.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, without necessarily accepting all the allegations of the hon. gentleman, which may very well be correct, I can assure him that the whole matter is being looked into urgently.

Mr. Winch: May I ask a supplementary question? What is meant by "urgently"?

Mr. Pickersgill: It would be the usual dictionary definition.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—REPORTED UNJUST TREATMENT OF CANADIAN ENGINEER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the case of a Canadian citizen who, in my view, is the victim of gross injustice by the government of India. I should like to briefly lay the framework for this question which concerns a Canadian engineer who served for two years in India under the external aid program. At the conclusion of his services there his assets were turned over to the government of India, that is the state trading corporation of India. He was to be paid at the original rate of the rupee; however, due to a delay which occurred through no fault of this citizen—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should put his question.

Mr. MacRae: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE TO STUDY CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. During the present session of parliament a number of members, I and the hon. member for New Westminster particularly, have made requests for a study by a parliamentary committee into the various aspects of cruelty to animals. The Prime Minister indicated on various occasions, the last time on November 4, that he would look into the matter at once. He also indicated that he might refer this matter to the committee on agriculture. I am now wondering whether the Prime Minister is in a position to indicate if the government has made any final decision as to which committee of this house will be given the task of looking into this matter and making an appropriate report.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to my hon. friend for not having replied to his earlier question before now. I think I said I would look into the matter, and I can promise him now that I will look into it as a matter of urgency.

TELEVISION

ALBERTA—PROVISION OF EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. On Wednesday last during her absence I asked the following question which appears at page 11669 of Hansard:

> Can he advise the house whether a decision has been reached by the government with respect to the installation and provision of transmission facilities owned by the federal government for the purposes of educational television. If that decision has been reached, when is it proposed that the facilities will be functioning?

As the minister knows, there is at this time a great deal of interest in Alberta in this regard, and the Alberta Government Telephones is in a position to provide facilities in time for next September if the federal government is not able to carry on by that time.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the federal authorities are dealing almost daily with Alberta authorities in respect of this matter. As a result of the latest information I received a few weeks ago it would appear that facilities will be available for programming in Alberta within this year. I should like to say that I was in the hon. member's constituency on Wednesday handing out $80,000 from the Canadian government, and the hon. member not being there was missed.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Secretary of State whether she will agree that the hon. member had a great deal to do with getting that money?

Miss LaMarsh: No, not that I am aware of.

FINANCE

APPLICATIONS UNDER FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Finance. It relates to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Can a farmer apply for a loan to a bank or credit union with which he is not doing business and, if so, will he likely be refused because he is not a client of that bank or credit union?

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member is asking for a clarification or an interpretation of regulations or a statute. That type of question cannot be asked in that form.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

CONSIDERATION BY COMMITTEE DURING CENTENNIAL YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the right hon. Prime Minister, and it relates to constitutional reform and the answer given to the house earlier this week by the Prime Minister to the effect that the government did not intend to set up a parliamentary committee immediately to study this question. In view of the fact that B and B, and other government officials, are studying questions regarding constitutional reform, has the government determined any role that elected representatives of the people may play in this important matter during the centennial year?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker; and their role will be decisive when this matter comes before parliament. The position I took was that it would be desirable for the government to complete its own study of the matter before referring the matter to the committee in order that the government would be able to put that position to the committee. I hope that can be done before too long.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, is it the opinion of the government that this can be done during centennial year and the government's findings can be made clear, so the elected representatives of the people can also get on with the job?

Mr. Pearson: I would hope this matter could come before the committee before the end of our centennial year.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

TRAIL, B.C.—REQUEST FOR STOP BY CENTENNIAL TRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State based on a letter I received from a very prominent Liberal in my constituency, who is a most progressively minded person.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nesbitt: That is an anachronism.

Mr. Herridge: He and many others in my riding—let me say my approach to this question is completely non-partisan—are very concerned about the fact that the centennial train will stop at Castlegar but not go to Trail, though there is a railroad for 20 miles connecting with Castlegar. This means that 8,000 school children alone will have to be provided with transportation to visit this train. Can the minister do something about this?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This representation should be made directly to the minister by the hon. member. I do not think it is a question that should be asked at this time.

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF BOYS TO ATTEND SEMINARY AT ST. JOVITE, QUE.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the minister of manpower. To make the question intelligible I would preface it by saying that it relates to a program of immigration of young boys from Belgium and other countries to attend a seminary at St. Jovite. I would ask the minister to look into this situation and see whether these boys are actually coming here for the purpose of attending school or whether some other activity is envisaged for them. Also, is this program being operated by a group seeking to form a new religion?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we will look into this matter.

EDUCATION

TORONTO—POSSIBLE CLOSING OF SCHOOLS FOR IMMIGRANT CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a question put to me yesterday by the hon. member for Greenwood, who asked whether I had received a communication from the chairman of the Toronto board of education in relation to the possible early closing of English language schools for immigrant children. I have not received a communication from the chairman, but I have from the director of education of that board.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, if the minister has received a communication from the director, will he tell the house whether the government proposes to do anything about the financial assistance requested for these young immigrants in their schooling in English?

Mr. Marchand: As you know, Mr. Speaker, boards of education fall under the jurisdiction of provincial governments. It is not appropriate for me to deal directly with school boards. I think all negotiations should be carried on through the provincial authorities. To clarify the matter a little further, I think there is no federal responsibility in the field of language training in schools, even for immigrants. As far as adult immigrants are concerned, if they need language training in order to obtain employment opportunities I think we can help financially.

Mr. Brewin: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If funds are made available to train adults to enter the productive field, can the minister explain why young immigrants should not also receive assistance from this government in connection with training which will enable them also to get into the productive field?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have only 40 minutes for questions this morning.

[Translation]

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

REPORTED VARIATION IN AMOUNT OF GRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration about the federal-provincial agreement on vocational training and adult education. Can he tell the house why in some areas of the province of Quebec those who attend those classes get only 60 per cent of what is paid elsewhere?

Mr. Speaker: That question can be put on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

WATER RESOURCES

RESPONSIBILITY FOR DEVELOPMENT OF CONSERVATION PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister the urgency of which is based on the fact that a number of water and land conservation projects have been held up because the responsibility for development has not yet been designated. Can the Prime Minister indicate which department is responsible for the very essential programs of this nature, and particularly has the responsibility been allocated as among the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, ARDA or P.F.R.A.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to look into this important question.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SYDNEY, N.S.—LAY-OFFS AT STEEL PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I really regret the necessity of having to disturb him for the third time this week. Is the Prime Minister yet in a position to advise the house as to the reply of the government to the communication received from Malcolm MacLellan regarding the massive lay-off of workers at the Sydney steel plant? What is the government doing, or what is it going to do, to assist these men who are without jobs?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government's position in this matter is that what can be done has already been stated in the house by the minister responsible. I believe I have already replied to the telegram to which my hon. friend refers. If I have not, I am very sorry and I will see it is done Monday. I think in looking up this matter yesterday it was found it had already appeared in Hansard; but I will check on that.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have been trying all morning to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. I would ask the minister whether he has received a wire from Mr. Martin Merner of local 1064 of the United Steelworkers of America protesting the delay and asking for a speedy processing of the unemployment insurance claims of the steel workers who have been laid off. If the minister has received such a wire, what answer has he provided?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, having had no notice of this question I cannot recall whether I have received such a wire. I might say, however, that I have been in touch with the Unemployment Insurance Commission with regard to the lay-offs of employees in the Sydney area. My latest information is that some three or four claims have not yet been processed, but that all other claims have been processed. In the case of one claim not processed, the wrong social security number was given, and in the case of the other three or four there have been delays in getting the contribution records from the employers.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question. I would ask the minister what notice he requires for a question that asks whether he has received a wire—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nicholson: I cannot recall all the names of persons from whom I receive wires.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I am still on my feet, Mr. Speaker, and I would like hon. members on the opposite side of the house to give me the opportunity to ask the question. If the Grits cannot be quiet I will find other ways of getting it across. I want again to ask the minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): —if I can make myself heard, what notice he requires to answer a question as to whether he received a communication from the president of the local of the United Steelworkers of America. What notice does the minister need to answer such a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member asked his question the first time. He may not be satisfied with the reply given by the minister, but fortunately according to the rules he can ask the question only once.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it clear that no answer was given to the question I asked.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I would ask the Minister of Labour whether he would advise his colleague the Minister of Industry that there actually have been massive lay-offs at the Sydney steel plant, because the minister sloughed it off here one day and said very complacently that he did not believe there were massive lay-offs.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

GOVERNMENT CONSIDERATION OF BILL TO ABOLISH CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. On September 8 I asked whether the minister would tell the house what consideration the government may have given to bringing in its own bill for the abolition of capital punishment. The minister said he was not in a position to answer the question at that time. Could he now tell us whether such a bill will be brought in during this session?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of government policy, and I presume the Prime Minister will make the announcement if and when the occasion arises.

Mr. Knowles: Then may I address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister tell the house the position of the government with respect to this matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to answer that question now. As my hon. friend knows, there is a great deal of urgent legislation before the house. I cannot deal with this matter at the present time.

TRANSPORT

DORION, QUE.—VERDICT OF INQUEST RESPECTING LEVEL CROSSING ACCIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is he aware of the verdict rendered by the jury at the coroner's inquest into the Dorion tragedy and what steps is he contemplating in view of that decision?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Board of Transport Commissioners have advised me that their general counsel attended the inquest. He will be reporting to the board on Monday. As soon as the board has had an opportunity of considering his report and the verdict resulting from the inquest itself, the board will take the necessary action to get the inquiry by the board launched as quickly as possible.

Mr. Choquette: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I apologize for not having given notice thereof to the minister, but I know that, with his ability, he has an answer to all questions.

In view of the many complaints from various quarters about the slowness of decisions, would the minister not deem it appropriate to amend the procedure for getting adequate protection at grade crossings, in order to accelerate the implementation of those projects?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I fear, sir, that is a question I could not answer adequately on the orders of the day. If the hon. gentleman wants to stay around until later in the day there might be an opportunity to provide an answer.

Mr. Choquette: Ten o'clock.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Is the Minister of Transport not considering a conference with municipalities in the near future with a view to setting up a policy for improved protection at grade crossings which have become so dangerous for the Canadian people as a whole?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I would hesitate, as a member of the federal government, to attempt to arrange a conference with the municipalities. I fear I would hear from the premier of the hon. gentleman's province, and perhaps from a number of other premiers as well. I do believe there will be an opportunity later, I hope this morning, when we reach the appropriate point in my bill to give consideration to the general objectives the hon. gentleman has in mind.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the Minister of Transport avail himself of the opportunity when the mayors of the municipalities present their annual brief to the federal government to discuss this very important matter?

Mr. Pickersgill: I did that the last time they were here, which was quite recently. I gave them the assurance at that time that we had this measure which is now before the house, and which I hope we will soon reach, which provided for the replenishment of the fund and made certain other changes. I hope that the new commission, if and when it is set up, will give very urgent consideration to every possible measure that can be taken to expedite the installation of these protective devices.

Mr. Starr: Did the minister at that time urge upon the mayors and reeves of the municipalities that they should proceed with the installation of safety devices at these crossings at the earliest opportunity?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is the custom for the provincial and municipal governments to tell the federal government how to operate its affairs, but we have always taken the view we should not tell the provincial or municipal governments how to conduct their affairs.

Mr. Starr: You can make suggestions to them.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Finance, notice of which I gave him last month, having been unable to put the question at the opportune moment.

I should like to ask the minister whether it might not be possible to find additional funds for the Railway Grade Crossing Fund, since all the members agree this problem should be solved as soon as possible, and only a lack of funds prevents it from being solved as it should—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is now making representations. He is not asking a question.

[English]

HALIFAX AND SAINT JOHN—REASON FOR LACK OF WINTER TRAFFIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): My question is also directed to the Minister of Transport and has to do with what now must be almost a plea on the part of the people in the ports of Halifax and Saint John. I ask the Minister of Transport what this government is doing to offset the very serious plight of these ports brought about by the lack of winter traffic. If the government has taken some steps or has looked into this matter, will he advise the house, the longshoremen and other interests in those two ports what those steps have been?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I would have to make such an extended speech to deal adequately with this subject that I fear Your Honour would not permit me to proceed. I am sure an occasion can be found when that can be done.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask a supplementary question on this serious matter that has almost devastated the economic life of these two communities. Will the minister obtain full information from the National Harbours Board or other agencies as to the cause, whether it is lack of grain shipments, winter navigation or a depression in world shipping, and report to the house either on the railway bill or at some other time?

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope I will not be asked to report on so extensive an inquiry as that while the railway bill is before us, but I will be very glad to look into all aspects of that matter. Later this morning I hope to have an amendment to propose to my bill which will have a further good effect in this very field.

Mr. Howard: May I ask the Minister of Transport why he insists on referring to the bill which he is piloting through the house as the "railway bill".

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not in order.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROFESSIONAL CIVIL SERVANTS—EXCLUSION FROM COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): My question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue and has to do with the hundreds, possibly thousands, of professional civil servants who will lose the protection provided by the Civil Service Act of 1962, and will find at the same time that their staff association, the professional institute, is not formally recognized as legally constituted machinery to protect their interests. There has been correspondence in this connection. I ask the minister whether, in view of the fact that these highly trained civil servants will be denied collective bargaining under the legislation, the government is considering setting up a standing advisory committee on the pay of higher civil servants similar to that in effect in the United Kingdom.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to point out that the question of those civil servants who will not be in collective bargaining because of being deemed to be management personnel has not been decided at this point. This will have to be decided later when the three bills have passed through the house. With regard to the other matter, the setting up of an advisory committee such as they have in Great Britain, I may say that is being considered by the government but no decision has been made at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it not a fact that the professional institute take the view that their members will be excluded under the new legislation, and that the minister has refused to give their representative the assurance that the necessary amendments will be made to the bills to meet their apparently justifiable request?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I do believe the great majority of the members of the professional institute will not be excluded from collective bargaining. The numbers who will be excluded have not been determined at this point and cannot be determined until after the legislation is passed by this house.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I ask a supplementary question. I appreciate that only some professional employees will be excluded. Will the minister consider an amendment to the present proposed Bill No. C-170 which would give some kind of consultative possibility to the excluded personnel?

Mr. Benson: This bill is before a committee, Mr. Speaker, and my hon. friend is a member of that committee. He can bring forward any suggestion he likes in the committee.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BRANTFORD, ONT.—DECIDING VOTE CAST BY RETURNING OFFICER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I should like to ask the minister whether he has been made aware of the unhappiness and concern that have arisen over the situation of an Indian agency superintendent acting as returning officer, having to cast a deciding ballot in the Brantford reserve elections. If so, can he inform the house what steps he has in mind to avoid a recurrence of this unfortunate incident?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question should be placed on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SUBMISSION RESPECTING HUNTING AND FISHING RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister any statement to make with regard to the submission made to him yesterday by the union of Ontario Indians with respect to the curtailment of their traditional hunting and fishing rights as a result of the migratory birds convention which was passed?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I made a rather detailed statement on the occasion of the presentation of this brief which has been published. I would be very glad to send my hon. friend a copy.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question. I did hear this submission, but may I ask the minister whether officials of his department have checked, or are checking, with their United States counterparts to find out whether it is true that the United States government agencies permit Indians to hunt on their own reservations.

Mr. Laing: I made this inquiry yesterday, Mr. Speaker, but this is not capable of confirmation at this date. We are trying to find out.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

REPORTED STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE RESPECTING HOLIDAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State. During her recent tour she made reference to the fact that a new national holiday will be established to commemorate centennial year. May I ask the hon. lady whether this holiday will replace an existing national holiday. If not, can she tell the house in what month the holiday will occur?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I understand that press representatives in the east have indicated that I announced that there would be such a holiday, whereas in fact what happened was that I discussed with a number of representatives of the communications media the lack of a holiday on January 11 to honour Canada's first prime minister. I pointed out that most parents and almost all school authorities felt that this was far too soon after the Christmas and New Year's holidays, and I said it might very well be that there will be another holiday some time during the centennial year to be announced. I could not, of course, give any further information.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that as icing to the cake there has been some additional speculation here firming up this statement, which actually was never made.

Mr. Winkler: A supplementary question. Do I take it that there has been no decision taken in this regard, or is such a proposition under discussion by the hon. lady and her colleagues in the cabinet?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that the Prime Minister of Canada makes announcements with respect to such major matters. If any such announcement is to be made no doubt he will make it in due course.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE REHABILITATION OF CHILDREN IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Earlier this week the minister said in reply to a question of mine that the government was still interested in doing something with regard to the rehabilitation of children in Viet Nam. Recent developments reported today show that in Washington a program is now being started to bring Viet Namese children to the United States for rehabilitation. Would the minister and his department be willing to consider a similar program for Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the scheme that we discussed the other day was a proposal that had been considered by Dr. Gingras of Montreal for a rehabilitation centre in Viet Nam. The proposal that is implicit in this question is one which has probably been aroused as a result of the action which was announced in Washington. This action was proposed by private voluntary organizations in the United States which seek to use funds contributed voluntarily for such a purpose.

I would certainly be strongly in favour of a similar voluntary effort being made in Canada. As to whether the Department of External Affairs, or the external aid office, is giving consideration to this subject, I may say that it is now being studied.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

TELEVISION

MANITOBA—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL COVERAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. On November 14 last, in reply to a question I asked relating to the extension of C.B.C. television services in northern Manitoba, the Secretary of State replied, as reported at page 9847 of Hansard, in these words:

> This week I should have the information before me, which may form the basis for announcing a definite date for service in northern Manitoba.

May I ask the Secretary of State whether she is now in possession of that information or can advise the house how negotiations are progressing.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I had a very pleasant interview while I was in the hon. member's province this week, but I have not yet had an opportunity to obtain the C.B.C.'s reaction. I think very shortly I will have some happy news for the hon. member's constituents; and I should also like to thank them for the thousand-odd Christmas cards they were good enough to send me.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROVISION FOR SHORT SUSPENSION OF TODAY'S SITTING

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair for the house to go into committee I wonder whether the house would be agreeable to reaching an understanding that the committee will suspend its sittings from 1.15 to 1.45, so that we may have a little humane treatment of the members of the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why not extend the humanity another 15 minutes?

Mr. Pickersgill: Because I think we would make more progress if it were not extended too much. If that is agreeable to the house perhaps it could be understood.

Mr. Speaker: Is it ordered by the house that the committee of the whole studying bill No. C-231 will suspend its sittings from 1.15 to 1.45?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed, from Thursday, January 12, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose yesterday, clause 42 of the bill was under discussion.

[English]

On clause 42.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could make a suggestion to the committee for dealing with clause 42 which is, I think, by all odds the longest clause in the bill. If it is agreeable to the committee I suggest that we take each paragraph which inserts a new section into the Railway Act and deal with it separately. I have gone over this quite carefully this morning and by doing this I think I could answer much more effectively the points that were raised by the hon. member for Acadia and by one or two other members last night. In this way I think we would really come to grips with the detail of the bill instead of having a long and probably repetitive debate on the subject generally.

As nearly as I can determine from a quick survey, the specific answers to each of the questions that have already been asked are found in each of the clauses. I think we would make much better progress in this way, if this suggestion is agreeable to the committee.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed?

Mr. Baldwin: May I just understand what the minister has in mind. He suggests we treat each one of these section 314 clauses as a subclause for the purpose of our discussions?

• (12:10 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. I think it would help us make orderly progress if that could be agreed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Chairman, the constituency I represent is troubled by certain proposed rail line abandonments. The minister has said that we ought to take each clause separately, but so concerned am I and so concerned is my constituency about rail line abandonment, and so wide an area will my remarks cover, that it may be difficult for me to stay within one clause. I have a number of questions to ask the minister. Though through the years commissions have been appointed, we all know what has happened. We know that often the people did not get the hearing they ought to have had.

On the question of rail line abandonment I have a story to tell, a story about the mistreatment of the vast area I represent, a story of the treatment the people in my area received from the railway companies which fought at one time to get charters for the area. They fought for those charters and then, for many years, did nothing about them. My area has been unfairly treated.

Many people of my district, the veterans, the pioneers, have left. They waited for 40 or 50 years for the promised rail line; then being fed up with waiting, many left. Now in our centennial year we are threatened with abandonment of the line which really never was completed. We are threatened with the destruction of what we had hoped for. I am deeply concerned about this, and I wish to know the formula this commission will follow in considering what lines to abandon.

I have a story to tell; not many hon. members may have stories like this. I well remember the sod turning ceremony at Shellbrook, Saskatchewan, in 1928 for the building of the line that the company tries now to call a branch line. The project was never completed. If the line had been completed it would not have been a branch line but part of the main line on the north side of North Saskatchewan river serving the cities of North Battleford and Prince Albert, going through northern Saskatchewan on to northern Alberta and ultimately serving the entire territory north of the North Saskatchewan river. This line was never completed. Now the company applies to abandon this portion of line from Spruce Lake to Frenchman Butte so that it never will be completed.

This is unjust. We have a right to know the formula the commission will follow. To make clear what line I refer to, I am speaking of the Bolney subdivision, from Spruce Lake to Frenchman Butte running for a distance of 28-odd miles. As I say, I remember the sod turning ceremony. There were veterans there, people who had emigrated to Canada, who hoped for a new life. This crowd had already waited for 10 or 15 years for the promised line. That ceremony took place almost 40 years ago, and today it is proposed that the branch line be abandoned. I do not call it a branch line; to my mind it is part of the main line. This request for abandonment is one of the first to be made.

I can well remember how the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National struggled to get the charter for this line, this great line, to be built on the north side of the North Saskatchewan river. This area has great mineral resources, and the line would link northeastern Alberta, with its great salt mines at Heinsburg, with the rest of the province. I can remember the enthusiasm of the settlers. I remember the colonization boards the railways had working for them. I remember how the people were told to go into the area, to settle the land, to build. They did that. They settled the land and they built fine homes and raised fine families, and they made it one of the best mixed farming countries, one we can be proud of. Now, in our centennial year we find we are to lose the railway we have waited 50 years for.

Let us take a good look at this, before we pass this clause, before we put these people at the mercy of a commission which may not give them a chance to be heard. We deserve to have another look at this matter and at the blundering of the railway companies. When I first came to Ottawa, for quite a long time I was on the railway committee. I was not too successful in bringing our case before that committee and I did not get much of a hearing. The committee was not concerned. The railway company knows it will haul the area's produce, no matter how far around it must take it. If some mining company had been involved it would have been different. Only 38 miles are left of this main line on the north side of the Saskatchewan river joining up two good northern cities in the great mixed farming country, full of natural resources.

Since attending the railway committee I have seen how the Canadian National, for instance, has blundered with some of its hotels. It tried to create accommodation for the rich, to make their travelling more convenient. The losses in our year alone would have linked the 38-mile gap and given this line an opportunity to prove whether it would be a paying or losing proposition. That this has not happened is unfair. I wish to know the formula this Commission will follow in deciding what shall give a company the right to say "We shall pull up 20 miles here, or apply to pull up another 40 miles in the next year".

[Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake).]

Questions like this our people are interested in. I think of another branch line, a good spur serving another vast area north from St. Walburg. Here the railroad grade was built all the way from St. Walburg to Grand Centre, Alberta, but they forgot to put the steel on it. The people were encouraged to build up the country, and it became a great country. The people kept their part of the bargain. But the Canadian National, which got the charter for the route from St. Walburg to Grand Centre, Alberta, did not keep its part.

I think of the people who came to the area, of the German population and many others who came to that part of the country; to Loon Lake, Beacon Hill, Goodsoil and Pierceland. I should love to show the minister through the country, to show him the homes they built and the good faith they kept. Now they have to haul their grain for 50 to 65 miles.

Is this fair and just? All this right of way still belongs to the various railway companies. I notice this question was raised in the debate last night. This is why I want to know something about the formula which is to be used. If justice were done the line from Bolney to Frenchman Butte would not be abandoned: the C.N.R. would be compelled to build the line from Frenchman Butte as far as Heinsburg, Alberta.

I remember so well back in 1929 when the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. each wanted a charter to get to Meadow Lake. They knew the wealth of the country. They knew that Meadow Lake was one of the great producing areas in the three prairie provinces. Unfortunately, in my opinion, the C.P.R. was successful. I have nothing against the C.P.R. or its operations but I think in all fairness the Canadian National should have had this charter because it was this company which pioneered the area of northwestern Saskatchewan about which I am speaking.

The C.P.R. wanted to get this vast wealth. It sounds unscrupulous when one begins to think about it; all they had to do was to get running rights for 65 miles over Canadian National lines. This has been the position since 1929. They ran for 65 miles from Prince Albert over Canadian National lines and had only to go 90 miles to reap all the wealth of the Meadow Lake country, without accepting any obligation to extend the line to serve people beyond the terminal point. The company realized that those men had to haul their grain to Meadow Lake. It did not care that those farmers had to haul grain 65 or 70 miles. This has been the situation for years. The company had a joint line down to North Battleford and had built a branch line across to hook up with the C.P.R. Now application has been made to abandon some 31.6 miles of line, thus cutting the city of North Battleford off from Meadow Lake which is approximately 100 miles to the south. The company knows it has this business. It does not want to keep up this line connecting the two cities. I say the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. should be forced to lay their books on the table and either give this country the fair service it deserves or face the consequences. I would make that plain.

One company should operate in this part of the country. Why the need for these running rights? Why run trains 65 miles during which distance they are not allowed to pick up anything? Why was the company not compelled to link up with Grand Centre so as to meet the needs of the settlers who went in there and broke up this land in good faith? Those men kept their part of the bargain. What are we doing today? We are talking about applications for the abandonment of lines which should not properly be considered as branch lines; they are main lines, 36 miles long in one case and 28 in the other. No doubt the company will be able to show they are not profitable. They never were and they never will be unless the links about which I have spoken are connected up. I cannot understand why the companies have been allowed to go on all these years without being compelled to keep their part of the bargain.

I have seen the petitions which have come from the Alberta side, from the area represented by the hon. member for Athabasca—petitions with two or three hundred names on them. These people have got tired. They are resigned to hauling their grain 65 or 70 miles. Have hon. members ever stopped to realize what it costs a farmer to do this nowadays? The applications which the railway companies now have in mind are only a start. There will be others, and what is left will be even less likely to prove a paying proposition.

The bill before us is one which concerns me deeply. I regret that so far we have allowed the railway companies to get away with discrimination of this kind. Consider some of the losses incurred in railway hotel ventures. I think of the Chateau Laurier. The loss in one or two years would be enough to build this 38 miles of line to close the gap about which I have complained and give these people a chance. They have lived up to their part of the bargain. Are we going to let them down? This is their centennial year, but what have they to celebrate? We talk about building a new train which will run at 160 miles an hour between Montreal and Toronto. How do we know that this is will be profitable? The minister is encouraging these people to go to Saskatoon and see the wonderful centennial train. They know they will never see it in their area, where even their livelihood is now threatened.

I had the pleasure this summer of visiting Pine Point in the Northwest Territories. I saw at first hand what this development meant to the people there who had waited for so many years for it to happen. Do not think we lack mineral resources in northern Saskatchewan rich enouch to warrant railway construction. We have fine timber areas, we have wheat, we have iron ore north of Buffalo Narrows. Had the proper company been given the charter I think we would have reached the stage by now at which we would be asking for a northern link extending to these great national resources.

I am afraid of some of these committees. I know what can easily happen. I know that the representation of each party may be cut down to one or two members, and I am worried lest these people whom I represent will be denied a proper hearing. This is a matter we must consider very carefully before we leave this part of the bill. I have travelled through this area and attended some of the meetings. The community halls were packed because the people were concerned about losing this transportation which had attracted them to that country in the first place.

These people, many of them veterans of the first world war who have retired, and many of them immigrants whom we have encouraged into this country, will find now that after spending all these years fulfilling their part of the bargain, they will be faced with the abandonment of 38 miles of that line. If 40 years ago we had compelled the railway company to build this line perhaps today this might be one of the best paying railway lines in that part of Canada.

These are some of the things that concern me very greatly. I do not believe for one minute that today this line should be considered solely on the basis of its losses, because it has never had a chance to make profits. How could any line manage, to pay dividends if it was never finished? There is a 38 mile gap there and it goes through one of the finest mixed farming areas in Canada. This is the way the people who live there have been treated. I am not blaming any particular government for this but am putting the blame on all of us for allowing the railway companies to do what they have done.

I think one of the railway companies could have given this country a better service if it were given the chance to do so, instead of allowing another company to get in and take advantage of the running rights over that company's tracks. I think this is a shame, and I hope before this bill is passed we will have a definite understanding of the formula upon which this commission will work.

Mr. Pickersgill: Like the hon. member for Meadow Lake I was brought up in one of these northern communities. I understand very well what he means when he talks about the kind of situation he has described to us because, according to the map which the Manitoba government used to publish, that railway line was to go to Hudson Bay but never got beyond Gypsumville. However, I believe that on examining each of the clauses of the bill the hon. member will find that they represent a great improvement over the present law and provide greater safeguards for the interests of the communities than are contained in the law we have at present.

As the MacPherson commission pointed out, if these lines are essential to the community, even if they are losing money, they cannot be abandoned. This bill incorporates real safeguards. I think the hon. member will find, on examination of each of the clauses, that they contain far greater safeguards for the interests of communities, particularly communities in the northern part of the country where there is still a prospect of further development, than they ever had before.

I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman because he is one of the members who very rarely take up the time of the house, and I knew he had something to say which was very important to him I believe he will come to realize that all we are laying down in this bill are procedures and safeguards. I do hope it will not be considered by all hon. members that it is relevant to discuss the particular situation of particular railway lines, because that is not what we are trying to achieve at the present time. What we are trying to do is to make sure that no branch line will be abandoned if it is important to the economy of the community to preserve it. In this bill we are asking parliament to vote a certain amount of money to authorize the Minister of Finance to pay the losses and keep the railways in operation in areas where they are really essential to the economy of the community.

[Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake).]

I think it is very important that we should pass this legislation so we will have these safeguards instead of operating under the present system which everybody agrees is quite unsatisfactory. I think the hon. gentleman will be particularly interested in section 314C. Perhaps he would run over it quickly while other hon. members are speaking. When we get to it I will try to answer several of the questions he raised and a number of questions which have been raised by other hon. members.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder we could go ahead now and deal with each of the subclauses separately as we agreed to do at the beginning of today's sitting.

Mr. Noble: May I ask the minister a short question at this time. How does the minister propose to deal with cases where municipalities gave the railways liberal grants in return for a guarantee from the railways of service for a period of years, and now the railways have decided to abandon this service although the contract has not reached the expiry date?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman has asked me for a legal opinion which I am not competent to give and which, under our rules, I am not allowed to give. While we are adjourned between 1.15 p.m. and 1.45 p.m. I will try to get some kind of an answer from someone who understands the legal situation in this case. If the hon. gentleman could inform me privately at 1.15 of the particular circumstances he has in mind I might be able to give him a more intelligent answer.

Mr. Noble: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that it is the Department of Transport which will make the final decision in this matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: If a valid contract exists between a railway and a municipality this will come within the purview of the courts, and if the railway is breaking a contract—I am saying this offhand—the municipality could take the railway to court. I doubt if we could legislate to change that because I would guess—and here I am transgressing the rules—that this matter of the enforcement of a contract would fall under provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Noble: Could the municipalities expect any support from the Department of Transport?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would have to know the particular circumstances of the case before giving an answer. I do not think it would come within the purview of this particular legislation.

Mr. Herridge: Would the minister answer another question. Surely he would not object to hon. members rising to criticize deficiencies in the section as a whole and giving illustrations of experiences in their own districts in this connection.

Mr. Pickersgill: We did make an agreement at the beginning of the committee's sitting today that we would take each subclause separately, and the committee having undertaken to do that I would hope we would not revert to a general debate at this time. Unless a bill of this length is approached in a systematic way it will be very difficult to reach any conclusion at all.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I think we are in general agreement that we should move systematically in the way proposed by the minister, but I would point out that, as has been mentioned, some members expressed thoughts two or three times in the debate which may not have been directly related to the legal problems of administration that are implicit in some of these sections. Would it not be better if, subject to any other questions, we moved on to section 314C which deals with the likelihood of an interpretation of whether a line is uneconomic?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think if we could dispose of section 314A, which is a definition section, and 314B which deals with purely procedural matters, we could then proceed to consideration of section 314C subsection by subsection. I doubt whether there is anything in section 314A which anyone would wish to discuss in particular. Perhaps we could agree to pass it.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Before we leave section 314A I should like to know just whose accounting the board is going to accept. We ran into the situation previously.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: One of the subclauses deals specifically with accounting and we will come to that in the regular way. When he examines this clause I think the hon. gentleman will be completely satisfied. Perhaps he might not mind reserving his question until we reach that subclause.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Could the minister give me the number of the subclause?

Mr. Pickersgill: I read it this morning and I should have made a note of it. I think it appears after new section 314D. If the hon. member would run quickly through these items himself and look at the marginal notes I think he would find what he is looking for.

Mr. Schreyer: With reference to new section 314A, subsection (b), the definition of a branch line, I should like to ask the minister whether he has given further consideration to suggestions which were made in committee to the effect that perhaps it might be better to leave the matter of the definition of a branch line to the commission rather than attempt to give a definition in the bill.

I believe the reason for this suggestion was that lines which are other than main lines may still, in many aspects of their use, be regarded as other than branch lines. In that regard they have a peculiar status. Just because a particular line of railway is not considered in the fullest sense of the word to be a main line does not necessarily mean it is a branch line. Does the minister recall the suggestion that perhaps this should be left to the discretion of the commission when specific cases are brought before it?

Mr. Pickersgill: A good deal of consideration was given to that point. I suggested that we just leave it out altogether. It was suggested to me, however, that if we did that we would be going too far and might be implying that the railways could apply to get rid of some part of their main lines. Obviously the commission never would agree to applications of that sort, but on balance I came to the conclusion that if we were to take it out it might create fears and misapprehensions which would cause a longer debate than would be the case were we to leave it in.

The definition is so loose that I think it in fact does what the hon. member for Springfield suggests. By leaving it in we are emphasizing the fact that we are talking about branch lines and are not seeking to empower the commission or any person to get rid of the fundamental structure of the railways in this country. On balance, after a lot of consideration "comme-ci comme-ça" I have come to the conclusion that we ought to leave it in.

Mr. Fane: While we are on this item, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister why, while this bill is before the house, during the last week I received notice that the Canadian National Railways have applied for permission to abandon two 24 mile stretches of their line, one between the city of Camrose and the town of Tofield—which is more or less a main line on the C.N.R. between Edmonton and Calgary—and the other between Vegreville and the city of Camrose, which is a branch line. Why do I receive notice now that the C.N.R. has applied to abandon those lines?

While I am on my feet I should like to take this opportunity to commend most strongly my friend the hon. member for Meadow Lake for his wonderful presentation in respect of the situation in his constituency. His presentation affects my constituency considerably because of the extension of 39.1 miles from Frenchman Butte to Heinsburg which was never completed. When that line was put in, I believe in 1926 or thereabouts, it would have cost approximately $3 million to finish that 39.1 miles. That was never done, and God only knows how much it would cost to finish it today. That line never was completed but still should be completed, because it goes through a very prosperous farming area. The people there have to ship their grain back around through Edmonton a distance of about 200 miles at least. As I said this is a very prosperous area and this matter should be attended to. There is also the chemical plant at Heinsburg. Any production from that plant has to be sent back through Edmonton. They cannot get it out for shipment to the east in any other way.

It is beyond me why in the world there is talk of abandoning these lines and rolling up the lines which my friend from Meadow Lake has told us about. These lines are feeders for that country. I think it is time we looked at this realistically. If the Canadian National Railways do run some lines which are not profitable, why in the name of heaven, when they are subsidized by the Canadian people, can they not provide a service?

Also, of course, there is the matter of the passenger runs which are being abandoned. I expect this is a matter which is not to be brought up at this time. There are, however, plenty of applications to abandon passenger runs which the former president of the Canadian National Railways personally told me were not paying. They may not be paying, but they provide a service to that part of the country which the people have paid for. These people should be able to have that service.

This is not the time, especially during Canada's centennial year, to deprive the people who opened up this country of the service which they have had through all these years. I think I will reserve the remainder of my remarks until we reach the relevant clauses. I do, however, wish to bring these matters before the minister. I should like to know particularly why the Canadian National Railways are allowed at this time, while this bill is before us, to notify me that they want to abandon two 24 mile stretches of line in my constituency.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think I might very briefly answer that particular point. If the hon. gentleman would read what I said in response to a question from the hon. member for Acadia last night I think it would be apparent that the C.N.R. has made no new applications. These are applications which have been frozen for years and presumably are not on the map of protected routes. Therefore once this bill is passed they would be eligible for hearings.

All this does is give notice of that fact. It does not enable the commissioners to do anything until this bill has been completed, and I repeat the assurance I gave last night that when the hearings are held—and they will have to be held—they will be under the new procedures with all the additional safeguards provided by this bill when it is passed.

Mr. Fane: I hope I will be notified of those meetings in order that I may be present to hear the evidence and the formal application.

Mr. Pickersgill: The meetings will not be held in secret and I am sure the hon. gentleman will have every opportunity to be present, as will every other interested individual. That is one of the features we are providing by this new legislation, as the hon. gentleman will see.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I take it that we are dealing with new sections 314A and 314B. I should like to ask some questions in respect of new section 314B.

The Deputy Chairman: May I ask the committee whether we have concluded our consideration of new section 314A?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: We will now consider new section 314B.

Mr. Pascoe: I wish to speak on new section 314C.

The Deputy Chairman: May I ask then whether we have concluded our consideration of 314B?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, with the consent of hon. members I suggest that when we consider 314C, which is the section of perhaps the greatest interest, we should take each paragraph separately in order that we may deal with them thoroughly. This is a very important part.

Mr. Baldwin: That is agreeable providing some flexibility is allowed.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is understood. There will be no rigidity in this regard.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, in respect of new section 314C does the minister see any reason for the inclusion of those words which seem to imply that the commission may or may not hold a meeting in respect of a proposed abandonment?

Mr. Pickersgill: There may be an unlikely case, and I am not sure this has ever happened, where absolutely no one would object following the notice and so on. In that event it would seem rather silly to go to the expense of having a hearing. That is a very unlikely contingency and I will consider that point. I am sure we will not conclude our consideration of this new section before we recess. I will consider whether it can be struck out. I do not object to that, but there is a remote chance that in respect of a small abandonment no one would object. These words have been included to meet that possibility.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Perhaps those words could be substituted by words to the effect that if no objection is advanced to the commission a hearing shall not be required.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would hesitate to substitute my drafting ability for the ability of those people who are skilled in these matters. Perhaps I should consult with the draftsmen during the adjournment.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated, I wish to refer to new section 341C which states in underlined words that the commission shall—> —having regard to all matters that to it appear relevant, determine whether the branch line is uneconomic and is likely to continue to be uneconomic—

Let me join with others in commending the hon. member for Meadow Lake for his very forceful presentation in respect of a local situation. I was happy to note that the minister listened carefully to him. My remarks will be more general, but they do have a bearing on this point as to whether a branch line will continue to be uneconomic.

Part V is probably the most important part of this bill so far as the prairie regions are concerned, and particularly Saskatchewan. In saying that I do not discount the importance of other segments of transportation policy, concerning trucking, airways, waterways and potential development of commodity pipe lines. However, railways are the economic life lines of Saskatchewan. I am sure the minister is aware of that fact, having prepared this map which shows the nunber of rail lines which exist in that province. No other province has a network of rail lines comparable to those in Saskatchewan, and no other part of Canada will be affected more by this part of the bill.

The yellow lines on this map indicate those lines which will be frozen until 1975, and most of them are yellow in Saskatchewan. There are some black lines, with which we will probably deal in respect of specific cases.

Hon. members from the prairies want to be reasonable in regard to railway problems and do not intend to delay passage of this bill, but we make no apology for trying to make sure the final bill is the best one possible.

Let me now refer to the essentiality of railway lines in Saskatchewan. I wish to read a few remarks of the Minister without Portfolio to bolster my argument regarding the need to seriously consider this whole matter of abandonment of branch lines. On June 28 of last year the Minister without Portfolio made a speech in Montreal concerning some aspects of a national transportation policy. He said:

> Transportation is a vital factor in Canadian economic life. It affects the price of everything that moves for sale or purchase. It determines where factories will be located. It determines accessibility to markets. It determines which regions of the country will prosper and develop.

The determination of which regions of the country will prosper and develop is extremely important to the province of Saskatchewan. Later the minister said:

> The railway monopolies remain only in a few geographical areas.

In some respects one of the areas where railway monopolies exist is in Saskatchewan, particularly in regard to the movement of bulk commodities such as wheat and potash. Later the minister said in reference to a single transport board, which will be the Canadian Transport Commission, that such a board would have total responsibility for all aspects of transportation. One of these aspects was stated to be:

The protection of the public interest by a continuing analysis of the obsolescence or superfluity of various modes of transport, while ensuring that the abandonment by any one transport facility would not leave inadequate or inefficient services available to any particular locality.

I think that reinforces the argument I am trying to make in regard to looking at the whole situation before abandonment of any branch line is allowed. The minister has assured us in this regard. We have heard his statement on this matter. I am sure the commission will read that statement and I hope the railways will also see it. If I might, Mr. Chairman, I would now refer to the minister himself.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a pretty dangerous thing to do.

Mr. Pascoe: He made a speech in Winnipeg to the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce on April 27, 1966, when this bill was in process. The minister said:

The seaway, modern highway transport and air transport have ended the railway monopoly, except in a few geographical areas—

I contend again that some parts of the prairies are included in those areas.

—and, more important, except for a relatively few, but economically very important, bulk commodities—

I emphasize, as I said before, that wheat and possibly potash and lumber are included in those bulk commodities. Then the minister said:

Even where transport services are technically uneconomic, many existing services are essential to the national unity of Canada or to the economic development of certain regions.

I know the minister believes that statement and I think he is trying very hard to achieve this end in the bill. The complete abandonment of any branch line is a final step that cannot be remedied without great delay and difficulty should unforeseen developments occur in areas not now able to make full use of such lines. I refer here to the minister's words:

Even where transport services are technically uneconomic—

I refer particularly to areas adjacent to the South Saskatchewan dam, which is now nearing completion. Major development will occur as a result of this great dam. There will be agricultural and industrial development. Some branch lines in that area are unprotected on this map; they have already been listed for possible abandonment. In this connection I would refer to the letters I have received in line with those received by the hon. member for Vegreville expressing the concern of these areas that the railway lines are listed for abandonment.

In this regard I wish to put on the record some figures quoted in a press report dealing with proposed abandonments by the railway, namely, Central Butte to Grainland, 13.10 miles, Central Butte to Riverhurst, 18.02 miles. And there are others with which I am sure the hon. member for Assiniboia is concerned. The two areas I have mentioned are in the region I have been talking about near the new South Saskatchewan dam. No one knows right now what developments will result from this dam.

To bolster my argument I should also like to put on the record very briefly an editorial which appeared in the Moose Jaw Times-Herald of Saturday, August 27, 1966. The headline is, "West Vitally Involved In Railways' Dispute". The article reads in part as follows:

If the railroads are to be given a free hand to set rates and to lop off allegedly uneconomic limbs, it is certain that prairie Canada is the one area of the nation that stands to lose most heavily.

In terms of rates, the primary industries of the west are captives of the two rail giants. The farmer can ship his grain to export markets only by rail. The potash companies, the mining and woods industries of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba are almost wholly dependent on rail. On the other side, all the heavy equipment that comes into the west moves largely by rail.

Undue freight rate increases or, conversely, lowering of service, could hamstring the western economy and would lower the standard of living in the west.

I think that pinpoints fairly well the argument I am making that the commission should take a very close look at the situation before agreeing to the abandonment of any line, even though the railway costing system shows that there is an operating loss. I will probably have more to say later in regard to this question. The explanation of new section 314C is follows:

This amendment would enable any person who wishes to do so, to appear and be heard on any proposed abandonment.

In this connection I am arguing that it should be possible for anyone appearing before the commission to have expert advice in regard to the costing techniques of the railway and their presentation for abandonment. This may be beside the point, but just today the Minister of Trade and Commerce made an announcement in respect of the final payment for wheat. The final payment, amounting to some $270 million, emphasizes the importance of wheat to the economy of the whole of Canada. I am saying that the commission should take a very careful look at these black lines on the map when considering the abandonment of any rail line. Very careful consideration should be given to this question in those areas which require transportation to bring their wheat into marketing position. I emphasize, that the final payment of $270 million, is the farmers' own money; it does not come from the government. Our farmers are the best spenders in the world and this money will be spread right across the whole economy of Canada.

Perhaps this point does not come directly under the section being discussed, and if it does not I apologize to the committee. I thank the minister for stating that this question will be very carefully considered, and I hope a decision is reached on the basis of current figures on the movement of wheat. I recall one committee meeting at which figures were given indicating how much more grain was being produced in Saskatchewan now and how much greater the grain movement was. We will take the minister's word that he will make certain the commission receives the latest figures with regard to the movement of wheat and the revenues the railways receive from it. I believe that is all I need to say at the present time. I will not promise that I will not speak later, but I wanted to lay this background now.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the proposed section 314C is the nub of the whole question of railway abandonment. I think the committee should have clearly in mind that the onus for making a case for railway abandonment must be laid squarely upon the railways. I feel that should be the basic assumption upon which all of this legislation is framed. The railways built these railways with public assistance in the form of financial grants, tracts of land with the mineral rights, and certain tax exemptions by both federal and provincial governments. These railways were built to give service to the people of the prairie provinces. The railways have done quite well financially. People have built their communities, their homes and their social activities around the railway centres.

There is going to be tremendous economic and social disruption if these lines are abandoned. I am not saying that no line should ever be abandoned. It seems to me that in this committee we have to tighten this legislation as much as possible so that the onus is on the railways to prove to the satisfaction of the commission that the abandonment will not have adverse economic and social consequences upon the communities affected. It is not enough for the railway to be able to say that it is not making money on a particular line. It may be making money on other lines and often the branch line contributes to the profits which are being made on the main line.

It seems to me we cannot assume that mere proof by the railway it is losing money on a particular branch line should be adequate ground for permitting abandonment. It seems to me we have to be sure there is clearly written into this proposed section 314C the understanding that the railway must show that the community is not going to suffer adversely. Since we are about to rise for lunch, I will just ask the minister to give his views when we reassemble on subsection (1), lines 44, 45 and 46. These lines read in part as follows:

> —determine whether the branch line is uneconomic and is likely to continue to be uneconomic and whether the line should be abandoned—

Are those to be the major criteria? I recognize that in subsection (2) other criteria are set out. However, I greatly fear that the restrictive criteria set out in subsection (1) may be interpreted to mean that the sole consideration will be whether the branch line is uneconomic and likely to continue to be uneconomic.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may turn the tables at this point, I should like to ask the hon. member a question. Does the hon. gentleman not think it must be a necessary condition because the bill, as it is drafted, will specifically prohibit the railways from abandoning a line that is economic? Therefore, even to be heard the railways have to prove in the first place that the line is uneconomic and likely to continue to be uneconomic. It is very unlikely they would apply to abandon it otherwise.

We may save a great deal of time if I just remind all members of the committee of one simple fact, and it is this. The fact that a line is a loser or that it is uneconomic does not mean that it is going to be abandoned. This legislation provides that the Minister of Finance may pay to keep these uneconomic lines in operation if they are necessary to the economy of the region or if they provide an essential service to the region. We are not putting the burden on the other lines of the railway. We are accepting that as a burden on the treasury. That is the whole scheme in the bill and there is no such provision in the law as it stands now. I believe that is the great defence of this part of the legislation.

The Chairman: Order. Pursuant to an order of the house made earlier this day this sitting stands suspended until 1.45 p.m.

SITTING SUSPENDED

SITTING RESUMED

The committee resumed at 1.45 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-231. When the committee rose at 1.15 it was considering new section 314C (1) of clause 42.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Chairman, having just celebrated the birthday of Sir John A. Macdonald who was so instrumental in building confederation, shortly after which the railways to hold and bind Canada together were also built, it seems odd that we are now discussing this bill which seeks to do away with a good many of the lines which were planned and constructed in the early days of confederation.

Like many other members from western Canada I am very much concerned about this particular section of the bill pertaining to rail line abandonment because I happen to have in my riding approximately 250 miles of unprotected lines. I have also received up to the present time copies of three applications, two by Canadian National Railways and one by the Canadian Pacific Railway, for abandonment of some of these lines. This question falls into three categories which are dealt with in the proposed section 314C. I should like to make one or two comments on what the minister said last night about clause 89, I believe it was, when answering the hon. member for Acadia. The minister said, as found on page 11739 of Hansard:

> —but everybody agrees that some of them should be abandoned and might well be abandoned as quickly as possible because all they are doing is costing the taxpayers of Canada money for a very, very inadequate return.

Later I shall produce figures that may clarify the picture. The minister went on to say:

> Of course we have an undertaking that no hearings will be held until this bill has been disposed of by parliament one way or the other.
> I suggest that if this bill is passed, under the legislation the governor in council will have the power to require all the hearings to be held in accordance with the new criteria and the new standards. But I think it would be rather unfair, since most of these applications have been in for years, to say that the railways must start all over again—

With regard to the applications made in the early 1960's, most of the figures go back to 1959, but between 1959 and 1965 the farming picture has changed and I have figures to show that. If we look at the volume of shipments in 1966 we will see that 1966 was one of the best shipping years on record. For these reasons there must be new applications in most instances because the figures now are different from those in 1959.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can reassure the hon. gentleman on that point. All that is meant by people not having to apply again is that the applications would be there, but they would have to bring their figures up to date before hearings were held or there would not be hearings. That is clearly provided in the bill.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Thank you. As I understand it, the applications are there and the railways will not have to make new applications but must bring their figures up to date.

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): To make my point I wish to refer to a specific line running from Radville to Goodwater, a distance of 26.8 miles, in the Goodwater subdivision. I mention this line because it falls into a different category from others with regard to which I have received notice of applications to abandon. This line has operated on what is called a required services basis for the last number of years. The figures are interesting. According to the 1959 figures, 187 carloads of material were shipped on this line. In 1965 463 cars carried outward bound loads. There has been an increase in the traffic from Goodwater and Colgate on this line. Traffic out of Colgate has risen by 222 per cent and out of Goodwater by 70 per cent since 1959. These figures are significant and must be brought up to date. We must look again at the situation. I do not for a minute suggest that the service should be other than on a required basis as at present.

In the Canadian National brief to the Board of Transport Commissioners the railway shows gross revenues of $110,349 in 1965. It shows the total cost of operation and other expenses as $177,426, with an annual long term financial betterment for the railway through abandonment of $67,077 which represents what might be classed as "other expenses". The actual on-line and off-line expenses for these 26 miles amounted to $110,670. The line showed a net loss of only $321 in 1965.

I wish to refer to another sheet of this brief containing an analysis of the variable expenses for 1965. On this line, known as the Goodwater subdivision and extending for 26.84 miles, the actual on-line cost of the 25 trips made during 1965 was $5,800 and off-line expenses were $104,870, or a total of $110,670 for expenses charged to the line. As long as figures of this type are used I maintain that the railway can prove that any branch line in Canada is uneconomical.

On another line running from Radville to Willow Bunch and Avonlea it is interesting to find these items of expenses. For instance, the on-line expenses of a locomotive total $320 and the off-line expenses for the same line are $13,680. Another significant figure concerns the wages for the train crew on this line. The figures quoted are $2,880 for on-line charges compared with off-line charges of $14,960. The same sort of figuring holds true throughout the accounting for this line. For instance, fuel for this line is given at $300 and the off-line expenses total $7,410. I know this breakdown is not of much interest to the committee but these figures prove that lines such as these are basically not uneconomical.

I wish to refer to what the chairman of the Canadian National Railways said in a speech in Winnipeg.

Today on a thin-density railway branch line—that is to say, a line that carries almost entirely grain and where the total volume originated is about 1,000 cars for a 60 to 70-mile line over the course of a year—it can cost the railway ten to fifteen cents or more per ton mile to carry grain to the main line, whereas truck costs for the same movement are in the range of four to eight cents per ton mile—or only half the cost. Most farmers today, because of the greater mobility provided by the truck, can deliver as much grain to an elevator in one day as they could in one week when they used team and wagon and they often now voluntarily haul their grain longer distances.

What he says is possibly true. But I suggest that if the Board of Transport Commissioners feels that such lines are uneconomic and must be abandoned, and if what the chairman of the C.N.R. says is correct, then the railway companies have an obligation to move the grain out of these areas. The onus should be placed on them if they feel they can do it as economically as they say they can. On the other hand, if we assume that individual farmers can haul grain cheaper it only means that the direct cost will fall on individual farmers hauling to various points instead of the cost being borne by farmers in general. If the railways abandon lines such as these in the southern part of Saskatchewan along the Montana border, grain will have to be taken to Moose Jaw which is on the main line, across to Regina and then to Saskatoon in order to get it to the main line to be transported to the lakehead or to the west coast. The grain would have to be back hauled 250 miles before moving east or west.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member has probably looked at the map of the protected lines. Could it not be moved from Regina on the Marysfield line of the C.N.R. without it having to go to Saskatoon?

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): The minister is possibly right. Possibly that is the way some of it will go. In this area we are on the dividing line with regard to whether the grain goes to the east coast or the west coast. At one time most of our grain did go east and it probably went on the line the minister mentioned. I thank him for bringing this to my attention.

I want to speak about another line concerning which I have just received statistics. I shall not go into great detail since it is very similar to the ones I have already mentioned. But I still think the committee should know the formula which it is intended shall apply and also the amount of traffic needed to protect these lines. I am thinking now of the Bengough subdivision where an application has been made to abandon a distance of 50.46 miles. I shall not give many figures on this application but I wish to point out that in the first 22 miles from Avonlea three brand new elevators have been built during the past ten years. The most modern of these was built in 1966, 22 miles down the line at a cost of $82,000. Another new elevator was built in 1964 with a capacity of 80,000 bushels, at a cost of $82,000. A third was built in 1956 at Dummer. It has a capacity of 70,000 bushels and cost $70,000.

I point out that in 1965 more than one million bushels of wheat were moved from these three points alone on this portion of the line. I wish to emphasize most strongly my belief that in no circumstances should this portion of the line be abandoned. I do not think the residents of the communities concerned would have any objection to the removal of the regular freight trains which go through on Tuesdays and Thursdays and make return trips. Basically these trains are not necessary. We admit that most of the local shipments of groceries and so on are carried by truck.

The railway company states in its brief that the farmers can haul their grain to two or three alternate points. However, these points are on lines which will be up for abandonment when the protection is withdrawn in 1975. The elevators there are in much poorer condition while the line from Bengough Junction happens to be in good shape. I believe these are lines which must be protected. The minister can look into their condition himself.

With reference to the other statistics I mentioned previously I would point out that Avonlea is the junction. From there the line, which is not protected, runs to Mossbank and onward to another area. The line runs from east to west and if it were abandoned a real hardship would be inflicted on farmers in the area who would have to truck their grain out.

In its brief the railway company points out that there are a few highways which run east and west or north and south. I feel that the highways in these areas are not adequate and are of no benefit to the farmers in hauling grain to local stations. When these lines were laid down in the early days the farmers had no say in the choice of land on which tracks were laid by the railway company. As a result of the abandonment of these lines the over-all cost of hauling grain to the alternate designated elevators has proved to be a direct burden on these farmers. I believe that until such time as a definite program is established with regard to the abandonment of railway lines we should be told what to expect in the way of better roads because this is closely tied in with the cost of hauling grain. The number of trucks available at present is certainly not adequate to move the millions of bushels of grain that now move over the lines which have been slated for abandonment.

I believe also that we must take a look at the position of the elevators which were built on these lines. What compensation will the elevator companies receive, many of which are owned by the farmers in the province while others are owned by private grain companies? We should consider the over-all cost which will have to be carried by the individual farmers.

[Mr. Watson (Assiniboia).]

I do not wish to take any more of the committee's time but I do want to mention another line about which I do not have any statistics. I am referring to the line from Rockglen to Killdeer, Saskatchewan, which services an area of some 20 miles on the southern border of which lies the United States. There are no adjoining lines to the north of it. I believe that such a line has a service to perform in the community. The reason for building this line still exists today. When this bill is passed I hope to be in a position to present a brief requesting that the assessment of the present situation be brought up to date before any consideration is given to further abandonment of lines.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Chairman, I feel we have now reached a most important part of Bill No. C-231. The section now before us is the one which most concerns the population. That is why, without wanting to delay the work of the committee, I should like certain provisions of section 314C to be defined. I would ask the minister to give us, if possible, some absolutely essential information before we proceed any further with the study of this bill.

Of course, the province of Quebec has never been spoiled by the railway companies as far as extending their railway system is concerned. I do not have any statistics here, but a careful study of the mileage of railway lines built in the province of Quebec will show that the economy and development of our natural resources have been delayed in many cases due to the failure of the railway companies to take the necessary steps at the proper time to build the branch lines which could have been used for the development of our natural resources.

The chambers of commerce in my riding, as well as those of the north shore, have asked the C.N.R. to consider the advisability of extending the line from La Malbaie to Seven Islands in order to take advantage of the iron ore operations in Seven Islands and secure such advantages not only to the railway companies, but also to private companies and all taxpayers. But since the railway companies have failed to take, at the proper time, the required steps to make surveys, they must now face the competition of the trucking firms.

This competition is very strong in Quebec at the present time, because the provincial government has built highways reaching the most remote corners of our province, and this has benefited the trucking industry. But, if the railways had taken appropriate measures when the time was ripe, extending their lines to the far-away places, they would surely be making enormous profits today.

Mr. Chairman, section 314C stipulates that the commission, which will regulate the abandonment of railway lines, shall take all relevant factors into account.

I should like to ask the hon. minister what are the most relevant factors which could be brought before the commission, in order to show that operation of a line is profitable or unprofitable. Railway companies will appear before the commission and request permission to abandon a particular line, or passenger or freight service. Here is an example: A railway line connects La Malbaie—which is in my riding—with Quebec city.

This railway company—the C.N.R. obviously—operates passenger and freight trains, and I am informed that the railway company intends to file an application to abandon the passenger service between La Malbaie and Quebec. I would like the minister to give us information on the relevant factors which I feel are essential to understand the meaning of section 314(c), that is the application by railway companies to abandon certain branch lines.

As I was saying, if a company seeks to eliminate its passenger service operations between La Malbaie and Quebec, will the commission responsible for consideration of such a request also be empowered to demand that such railway company submit all the figures to the commission, those covering the passenger service operations as well as those covering the freight operations?

I know very well, and I am obviously not here to present the case of the Canadian National Railway company which is about to apply for abandonment of passenger train operations between La Malbaie and Quebec, that this line is not profitable for the company, in my view, but I know, on the other hand, that the company is making enormous profits from its freight operations between Quebec and Clermont. If the company appears before the commission to ask for abandonment of the passenger service operations, I wonder if the commission will be allowed to demand the tabling of all figures covering the company's freight operations because, according to my understanding of the bill, its purpose is also to protect public interest and not only to salvage the finances of the C.N.R. or of the other railway companies.

I feel that the legislator must be guided by public interest. Now, it happens that, as is the case in my area, passenger service operates at a loss while freight transport nets the C.N.R. considerable profits. Naturally, it would be up to the commission to decide what should be done. But I would like to know whether the commission will be authorized to demand from the railroad companies, in specific cases such as the one I mentioned to the house, that they reveal all financial operations and figures on lines similar to that running between Quebec city and La Malbaie.

Should the commission decide, in spite of operating losses on passenger traffic, that public interest warrants maintaining that service between La Malbaie and Quebec city, I feel it would be justified in so doing, in view of the profits made by the freight service.

That is the information I would like the minister to give us before we proceed with section 314C. I repeat my question: would the Canadian Transport Commission which is to be set up have the power to demand of the C.N.R. that they produce before the commission all operating figures and profits on both freight service and passenger service on a particular line, in order that the commission might be able to reach a well-informed decision?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: If the railway were to apply to abandon the line, figures would have to be given to show that it was losing money; otherwise it would not be allowed to abandon in any case. If, however, the intention was to continue the line but to apply for abandonment of the passenger service, this would come under sections 314I and 314J. I would prefer to wait until we reach these sections before I answer the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have a few words I would like to say in respect to subsection 1(c) of new section 314J. The words used here are " 'uneconomic service' means a passenger-train service", and so on. I think this is the core of the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is an understanding that we would take these items section by section. If it is in respect of passenger service that the hon. gentleman wishes to speak, perhaps he would wait until we reach new sections 314I and 314J.

Mr. Herridge: I have been sitting here all day awaiting an opportunity to speak. I believe what I have to say comes under this section.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman referring to the total abandonment of lines or is he referring just to passenger service?

Mr. Herridge: Passenger service.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are on section 314C which has nothing to do with passenger service. At the beginning it was agreed that we would take these sections one at a time. I am sure the hon. gentleman would wish to abide by that agreement.

Mr. Herridge: Very well, if I am able to retain my place at that time.

The Deputy Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, perhaps this is the time to refer again to my question in respect of accounting. I understand we are on section 314E, subsection (7). Is that right?

Mr. Pickersgill: We are on section 314C, subsection (1).

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I am sorry.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are at page 25 of the bill. I think the hon. member for Springfield wishes to speak on this section.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, before we rose at 1.15 I believe the minister said that during the recess he would take some of the representations under advisement. Is he now in a position to indicate what if any accommodation he will make in respect of the recommendation that the words "if any" which appear in subsection (1) of section 314C should not be allowed to remain and whether he will agree to the deletion of them?

Mr. Pickersgill: It appears that I can rely on my instincts. Perhaps I should even go so far as to praise myself by saying that my explanation in this regard was perfectly correct. The reason the words "if any" are in this section is it is felt that sometimes no one will wish that there be a hearing. In this event it is felt that we should not waste the time of the commissioners in going to some place in Canada where they would have to acquire hotel rooms and a hall when no one would turn up at the hearing. Therefore I am advised that it would be desirable to leave these words in.

Mr. Schreyer: I should have thought that a correction could be made here which would serve to clarify the intention the drafters had when drafting this paragraph. I suppose, however, that it is sufficient so long as it is clear on the record that if any residents of a given area or any interested parties or citizens wish that a hearing be held pursuant to an application for abandonment the hearing shall be held.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that it is more than understood. It is an express provision of the proposed law. I am so advised.

Mr. Schreyer: That being so, I should like to make some comment in respect of another aspect of subsection (1). It has to do with the use of the term "uneconomic" wherever it appears in subsection (1) and in all subsequent subsections of section 314C. My reason for doing so is that I believe the term "uneconomic" is not very precise. I think we would all agree that in drafting legislation the object is to be as precise as possible.

If I remember correctly the intent of this provision, it is that an application for abandonment shall not be taken into consideration unless the particular line of railway actually is incurring a loss to the railway. Is there any good reason why the words "actual loss incurred" were not used here rather than the word "uneconomic". To me the word "uneconomic" implies that it may very well be that there is no loss incurred but that perhaps there is a very, very small margin of profit which could be construed as being uneconomic. I believe what we want to embody in this legislation is the idea that applications shall be considered only if the railways can prove that they actually are incurring a loss.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might save some time if I were to point out that they do have to prove that there has been an actual loss. This will be seen in the earlier part of the clause. I think originally we used the words "actual loss" but changed them to "likely to continue to be uneconomic" on a suggestion from the Manitoba Branch Lines Association. This was done in order to give the commission greater scope in saying that lines should not be abandoned. This would give greater scope than the words "actual loss" because it is conceivable that the railway might be incurring an actual loss on the line and yet it might be considered to be economic in the general interests of the community. In that event the commission has much more scope to say that the line must not be abandoned.

I was rather impressed by the arguments put forward by the Manitoba Branch Lines Association. It was suggested that this phrase would give the commission more scope and more justification for refusing to allow an abandonment and it was included for that purpose. I think it will be found that in no case is this phrase used to assist the railways. It is used in all cases to assist the commission in coming to the conclusion that, notwithstanding the fact that there may be a loss, it is still in the interests of the whole community to have a line retained.

Mr. Schreyer: The minister's argument in respect of subsection 1 is quite convincing and one is almost immediately ready to concede the point he makes. However, when one reads the subsequent subsections he finds that the word "uneconomic" is used without reference to proof of actual loss. I wish to stay within the bounds of what we should discuss but for purposes of illustration let me refer to subsection (3) of new section 314C, which reads as follows:

In determining whether an uneconomic branch line or any segment thereof should be abandoned—

There is no reference there to the concept of actual loss incurred.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would read paragraphs (a) and (b). Perhaps we should look at this phrase each time it occurs to determine the sense. I am sure the hon. gentleman is satisfied so far as subsection 1 is concerned.

Mr. Schreyer: I think the minister's suggestion is a good one.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks in respect of the abandonment or rationalization of a specific branch line. It has been rumoured that the line from Cardston through Hill Springs to Glenwoodville, is to be abandoned. There is nothing certain about this but it is marked on the map issued by the minister's office, which was published in almost every western newspaper. This map has caused the people of this area some concern, as the result of which they have formed a citizens' organization to protest.

This organization has written to the Board of Transport Commissioners, the minister and myself, and I was invited to attend a meeting at Glenwoodville about a year ago. The meeting was well attended; in fact the hall was full. Even the Hutterites who farm in that area attended the meeting, and took part in the discussions. I mention this fact to indicate the tremendous interest the people of this area have in respect of this rumoured abandonment.

The line from Cardston to Glenwoodville is 21.5 miles in length. The Canadian Pacific Railway is faced with no other competitive railway in that area. If the line is abandoned the farmers will be forced to haul their grain approximately 20 miles to Fort Macleod, Cardston or Pincher Creek. Under the Crowsnest Pass agreement the C.P.R. now receives 23 cents per bushel for hauling the grain from these various areas to the Lakehead or Vancouver. Although it has not been publicly stated it is generally understood that should the line be abandoned the C.P.R. would still receive 23 cents per bushel for hauling grain regardless of where the grain is loaded.

Obviously the officials of the C.P.R. are not concerned about the farmers' cost of hauling. This is a high production area so far as wheat, oats, barley and livestock are concerned. The obvious reason for abandonment is an economic one so far as the C.P.R. is concerned because the railroad will receive the same revenue without having to move box cars into Hill Spring and Glenwoodville. The C.P.R. is attempting to force the farmer to haul his produce to Fort Macleod, thereby shifting the cost of hauling to the farmer. The C.P.R. is in the position that it can take this attitude without fear of competition. It is in a position to play the economic game. It wants to abandon the line and force the farmers to haul their grain to Fort Macleod, Cardston or Pincher Creek because it will save that expense without any reduction of the 23 cents per bushel rate paid under the Crowsnest Pass agreement.

Let me now refer to a point which probably has not been brought to the attention of the minister previously. I have in mind the criteria in relation to rationalization and abandonment. The new board will have to take an entirely new situation into consideration. I am pleading with the minister to realize how important it is to have some touchstone in connection with costing matters before lines are abandoned. Let me deal with the question of costing. When arriving at the costs of operating the branch line from Cardston to Glenwoodville, what costs will be taken into account? I venture to suggest that this great image, this commission we are setting up in this bill—and God bless them—will never be able to arrive at proper costs. With respect to the question of income tax, there is no doubt that the C.P.R. has written off over the years depreciation for a large proportion of the box cars that roll into this area. Is the depreciated value the one that will be used for rolling stock in computing costs and costing? In arriving at costing figures you have to assume an interest rate. What interest rate will be assumed? There is no mention in the bill of the criteria that will be used in deciding whether a line should be abandoned, except the costs and revenue comparison, and I am questioning the methods to be used to arrive at C.P.R. costs and revenues.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, could I interrupt the hon. member to make the point I have made twice before? We did agree to deal with each of these paragraphs separately. There are two or three paragraphs that deal precisely with costing. I wonder whether, in order to carry out the spirit of that undertaking, the hon. gentleman would wait until we reach the paragraph on costing and relate his observations to what is in it instead of dealing with the matter under this paragraph which does not relate to costing?

Mr. Kindt: I shall be glad to conform to the suggestion of the minister. However, in justification of what I am saying, I do not think one can take a particular problem, chop it up into a number of chunks and deal with each one separately when the minister or somebody else gets around to discussing it, because by then one's line of thought has become completely interrupted.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, would the minister be a little more explicit and tell us what section does deal with costing, if not section 314C, with regard to which the side note reads, "Action on application after verification of costs and revenues by commission"?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. gentleman was out of the chamber when we agreed, in relation to new clause 314C, to deal with it paragraph by paragraph. This section does not deal with costs. That is all I meant. I suggested that we should wait until we reach the clause that does deal with costs, because we made an agreement to that effect.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to seem to override any decisions which have already been made. Under clause 42 all I am dealing with is the question of rail line abandonment and the rationalization of lines and operations. I am trying to put before the minister the problem as presented to me. As I understand it, the people who live in the area from Cardston to Glenwoodville are vitally concerned about the possible abandonment of this line.

There is the question of where the hearings of this commission will be held. If they are to be held in Lethbridge, where there are hotels, fine restaurants and every convenience for the commission, that is one thing. But you will not get all the farmers there. You may get a few but that is all. On the other hand, if the meeting to consider the abandonment of this line is held by the commission at Glenwoodville or Hill Spring, good halls are available but perhaps the commissioners and their staff would have to take lunches along with them. There is a small restaurant in the town. If the meeting were held in either of those places the people would turn out by the hundreds. I am raising those matters which will present difficulty in connection with the hearings. You cannot convince these bureaucrats that they should schedule meetings to meet the convenience of the farmers and people affected; the bureaucrats will meet their own desires in this connection. They will advertise in the local newspaper the place in which the meeting will be held, but the venue will satisfy their own convenience.

I raised this point with the minister this morning and he said he would consider it. I feel very strongly about this matter. I hope I do not have to send the commission a wire when they announce that they are going to hold the meeting in Lethbridge or another town where the farmers will have to travel 40, 50 or more miles in order to attend the hearing. I believe it would be far better to hold the hearing where the people are rather than to make the people go to some central point in a big city where the convenience of the commissions is the first consideration in scheduling the meeting there.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I may say that I agree with the hon. gentleman on that point.

Mr. Kindt: I thank the minister for that remark. I hope that when the time comes the meeting will be held where the farmers are, and where the best attendance can be obtained. In that way all concerned can arrive at a better understanding of the facts. If the farmers are able to turn out and listen to the briefs and arguments presented at the hearing, they will better understand the situation, perhaps support it or at least be more tolerant in accepting the decision of the commission. This will be the case if they are given the opportunity of participating in the hearing and understanding the different points of view put forward by the interested parties. In my opinion, to do this would be just good government. I believe it should be specified in the bill that the meetings should be held at places which afford the greatest convenience to the people concerned in order that they may readily attend.

In accordance with the request of the minister, I shall reserve what I have to say about costing. At a later time I shall have something to say in this regard. The people of this area understand that the reason the C.P.R. intends to abandon this line is largely that they receive only 23 cents per bushel for the grain whether it is picked up at Glenwoodville, Cardston, Pincher Creek or Fort Macleod. Therefore the railway reasons: We might as well pull the rails up on that 21.5 miles of line and force the farmers to haul their grain to main line centres 20 or more miles away.

This matter has been given a great deal of thought in that region. The idea seems to be prevalent throughout the area that it is a foregone conclusion that the C.P.R. wants to abandon this line. I want to again call attention to what the minister has said, that there can be no abandonment until after this bill has been passed and a public hearing is held. All you have to do is look at a map to see that there is no competition with the C.P.R. It has no competition south of Calgary and therefore has a complete monopoly. I made economic and costing studies in that area in connection with the establishment of a big steel plant. We were unable to get financing in New York because there was no competing railway line. That is the situation there. I am trying to show the minister that this is one more example of the fact this railroad company is trying to put the people of various areas in a difficult position because it has a monopoly on the railroad business in the particular area.

Mr. Hamilton: Following the remarks of the hon. member for Macleod I want to discuss this proposed section in what I hope will be a constructive way. I hope I shall be helping the hon. member for Macleod, several other members and the minister out of what I think could be quite a lot of trouble. One of the key thoughts in the proposed section 314C is that the commission shall, after such hearings, if any, do so and so. The proposal I wanted to make was that a good deal of the heat could be taken out of these various applications for abandonment if it were understood that there would be hearings in every case. In addition, criteria or guide lines should be set up covering the reasons for the abandonment of railway lines.

In an earlier speech I adopted the belief that one should not examine the revenue position of a line from line A to B in deciding on whether or not it should be abandoned. As has been suggested here by several members, we have had too much experience with the loading of costs on any line that is up for abandonment. This has left a bad taste in our mouths. When the 1964 bill was being considered I suggested one other criterion. I felt we should divide the prairies into a series of regions. If within a region the railways had losses, then those losses should be met by way of subsidy or whatever might be in mind. At one time I even considered the possibility of lumping the whole grain gathering area of the prairies together. If it were properly rationalized for efficiency and there were losses within this area, then this would be the criterion for paying subsidies.

I think the minister and I both agree that these guide lines are obsolete as a result of the new knowledge we have now. This knowledge comes primarily from the work done by the western grain companies, the three pools. They have collected statistics to show the amount of grain generated on every mile of track in western Canada. I am sure the minister has the same tables I have. When the government announced, for example, at our request that certain lines would not be abandoned I am sure they used this new user concept. If the farmers are not using a line to deliver grain, there is no income for the railway. If a major amount of grain is generated along a line, then that line should not be abandoned. If that were the criterion, then I think it would save a lot of trouble for members who represent these western ridings. I think the minister, at least once, put a figure on the record. If we knew what that round figure was which was used as the dividing line between those branch lines we are not going to abandon and the ones that are up for consideration, it would be easier for us to face our constituents.

This is my first question, and it really goes back to the overall proposal I should like to make to the minister dealing with this whole proposed section. If I had my way, I would have put 314G in as 314A because section 314G is the one that does give the power of strong directives to the governor in council. It is under that provision in this bill that the government directs that certain lines will not be abandoned until 1975. This list of lines should have been included as an appendix to the bill. In the following six or seven clauses we could then have dealt with the procedure to be followed in connection with the abandonment of lines. Here we would be talking about only a small percentage of the total lines in western Canada. However, this is a detail and does not affect the final working out of the whole operation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman is quite right, but he knows that there was a certain time sequence. The bill was introduced before completion of the work on the map and there is a chronological reason why this was not done.

Mr. Hamilton: I am not suggesting that it be done at this later stage.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, we cannot do it now.

Mr. Hamilton: I am simply saying that this is the way I would have done it. I should have liked to see a provision in this bill establishing the user principle as the major criterion for abandonments. All the other things mentioned in these clauses are part and parcel of the considerations in arriving at a decision. If a prairie audience could be presented with this principle when a line was up for abandonment, and at the same time if one could indicate the amount of grain generated on that line in the period from 1943 to 1953 and the period from 1953 to 1963, as well as in the last two or three years, the people would know whether or not the line was being used. If the farmers were not using the line and if they desired that the line be kept, there would have to be other reasons such as social, lack of alternative modes of transportation or something else in order that a subsidy would be provided to keep the line open. The basic principle to be adopted in considering the abandonment of a line should be the user principle.

I think this is a dramatic step forward. I do not have to tell the minister about my own particular constituency to illustrate how ridiculous the situation can be. The Canadian National applied to abandon the line running from Maryfield in Saskatchewan to Lloydminster on the border of Alberta, a distance of 488 miles. The company claimed they had figures to show the line was running at a loss. When the traffic figures came to light they indicated that this line generated in the year 1962-63, which was not our best year, 49.9 thousand bushels per mile. The company then dropped any pretence of abandoning this line. This is the dilemma facing members who represent people in the prairie areas in which abandonments will take place. If they knew that the user principle would be the major criterion and if they could be provided with these traffic figures, they could go back to their constituents and say, this is the cut-off point. I do not know whether the minister is prepared to say what the cut-off point is, but it would be a big help if we could go back to our constituents and say we have agreed that no line will be abandoned if it is being used. If the line is not being used, then there must be other reasons for keeping it.

People are fairly reasonable if they know what is happening. What is bothering hon. members is that they know the region, they know the geography and yet they read that these lines are going to be abandoned. One cannot expect the railway, purely as an economic corporation, to be concerned about the social problems of the area. One cannot blame the railway as an economic corporation for looking at the matter on a dollars and cents basis.

It would do a good deal to take the heat off if the minister would say that in the case of the few applications which are coming forward, and they are relatively few compared with the original number, hearings will be held in each case. The applicants will be told where the cut-off line on generation of traffic is so that this matter can be debated. But the fact that they are going to be given a hearing will relieve the pressure quite a bit.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, since the hon. gentleman is obviously trying to be helpful might I be allowed to deal with the points he made.

I have already said twice—I am not saying it is the hon. member's fault this has been raised again but he just did not happen to be here at the time—that there will have to be hearings in every case unless by some remote possibility nobody wants one. In all of the cases I know anything about there are interveners who want hearings, and there will be hearings.

I have said this two or three times, and I am very happy to repeat it. There must be a hearing under the provisions of this bill, and it is the criteria in this bill that are going to apply to all of these hearings. I indicated that last night. The moment the act is passed we will pass an order in council directing the board—obviously the commission will not be set up right away—to use the criteria in this bill, and not the old criteria, when considering these applications.

It was also my intention to ask my colleagues as soon as the bill received royal assent to pass an order in council to which this plan will be annexed. We have the power to do this under new section 314G, so it is just not a statement of intent by the government but will be a regulation made under this law with the same force and effect as though it were an appendix to the bill. It would have been appended to the bill had it been ready when the bill was ready, but its legal effect will be precisely the same.

The one thing I am not able to do is to give the notional figure to which the hon. member made reference, because it does not exist. A rough measure of the usage of these lines was one of the half dozen considerations that the government took into account in determining the protected lines. Geography was another. There are some protected lines where the traffic is relatively light but they are situated in areas with no adequate road system and the lines are essential to provide adequate transport. Even though they may not be very productive of a great deal of traffic, it would be an intolerable inconvenience for the people living there if those lines were closed.

There are also a number of other considerations. I think the hon. member for Assiniboia pointed out that in some cases lines were in good shape and modern equipment was in use, whereas in other cases they had rather gone to seed; yet there might not be too much difference between them as far as the amount of traffic was concerned. There was not what one could call a purely quantitative measure but in the main, other things being equal, in the case of lines which are adjacent to one another the one which was used more heavily was selected rather than the one used more lightly, regardless of the financial results to the railway.

Another point—it may help hon. members if I make this point again—is this. I think several hon. members implied that because a line was not protected this meant that the government had decided it should be abandoned and that we were asking this house to say it should be abandoned. All we are saying is this. The railways are not allowed to abandon any of the coloured lines but they may apply for abandonment, or pursue the applications they have already made, as the case may be, for abandonment, of the black lines, and that is all.

However, they still have to satisfy the commission (a) that there is an actual loss on the line and (b) that the line is unlikely to become economic in the future. The commission then has to decide whether abandonment is going to create so much economic disturbance or disruption or loss to the whole economy that the railway should not be allowed to abandon the line anyway. We are saying that if the railway can prove an actual loss and prove that the line is unlikely shortly to become profitable to it, then we as a parliament are asking the treasury to pay that actual ascertained loss and the railway will stay.

This also applies to the protected lines. We are changing the law so that these cannot be abandoned. If the railways can show that these lines are incurring an actual loss, that loss will be repaid.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Who would decide that?

Mr. Pickersgill: The commission. I know I am transgressing the ruling we have established for ourselves, Mr. Chairman, but the hon. member for Lisgar, who does not do a lot of talking in the house but who I have noticed is a good listener, came over to me and said "I think you are trying to be too narrow and restrictive in this matter". I have taken his advice, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who also is a good listener but perhaps talks a little more than the hon. member for Lisgar, gave me the same advice and I am following it too.

I know hon. members are very worried about the railways controlling the commission in the matter of their losses, but I do not think I can make the point too often that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance will have to make up a large amount of such losses and that he will have to tax the Canadian people to do so. This commission will not have to rely just upon the farmers, the municipalities, the provincial governments and the grain companies; the Minister of Finance will be represented too all of the time so as to make sure that the railways do not get away with anything. He will ensure that they do not get paid unless they have had a really genuine, provable loss. I am sure that that in itself will be a very powerful reassurance once this rather novel idea produced by the MacPherson commission is put into operation.

It is, of course, the basis of this whole guarantee. We would not have found it possible to make this kind of provision without that guarantee. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, taking all these factors into account it seems to me that many of the apprehensions that hon. members feel are apprehensions which in fact will not be realized.

I also agree with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle when he says that most people are reasonable. But, as I say, it has to be shown that there is very little traffic on a line and that its operation is costing a great deal. The bill also provides that one of the criteria that have to be taken into account before a line is abandoned is that of the possibility of alternative modes of transport. It will be within the power of the commission to recommend to the government that in certain circumstances assistance be given.

The commission will also be able to recommend that interconnections between the railways shall be made. They will have the power to recommend that the line for which there has been an application for abandonment not be abandoned but perhaps some other piece of line be abandoned instead as being of less importance than the former which ought to be maintained. There is a requirement, where there are a number of lines in an area and there is an application for abandonment, for the commission to look, not just at the losses on the lines being sought to be abandoned but to look also, as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has suggested, at the results in the over-all area.

In the case of an application for abandonment the railway must produce and publish all its figures with respect to the line being sought to be abandoned so they may be examined. The railway, when the commission wishes it to produce figures, must produce figures of other lines, and not just of those being sought to be abandoned, so that they may be looked at in this process of rationalization. The figures for the area need not be published, naturally, if there is no application for abandonment, though the commission has power to compel them to be published. When we realize that these powers exist it will be seen that there is a degree of protection in this bill far greater than anything contemplated in the bill I had previously introduced.

I know we have not gone quite as far as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle believes we should go. Under the legislation we do not permit the commission to direct the railways to use each other's facilities and that sort of thing. We do, however, permit the commission to publish its opinion that this would be a sensible thing to do. It may make recommendations and it may recommend that payments be withheld if the recommendations are not followed. It seems that there are powerful weapons here.

There are arguments on both sides about this point, and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and I do not see quite eye to eye. In most respects, I think, we are in almost complete agreement.

Mr. Hamilton: I wish to follow up the remarks made by the minister. He stated that at hearings the railways would have to put forward their figures. If I am correct, these figures pertain purely to the cost of running a section of line, the revenues and so on.

Mr. Pickersgill: And the traffic. They must publish all their traffic figures.

Mr. Hamilton: That is the point. If they are to publish the number of bushels generated per mile for example, on a particular line—

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly.

Mr. Hamilton: —it would be helpful to us, as members. We could explain to our people that if a line is not used that line is in danger of being abandoned. If what the minister suggests is done, if the railways are not allowed to publish just dollar and cents figures but must show the traffic generated, the number of bushels, or what have you, carried, the grain generated per mile compared with other lines, then the people would have some way of knowing that the abandonment procedure is fair.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman would look at the top of page 30 he would see the heading "Publishing relevant traffic figures". That means that the commission can make the railway publish figures for lines not being abandoned. That is not to be done lightly when lines are not being abandoned, but it may be required if there is some good reason. But in every case where the railways want to abandon they have to publish the traffic figures.

Mr. Hamilton: I am grateful for this information because it is helpful. To show how serious the situation is, I wish to quote part of a letter from the secretary-treasurer of a municipality, the village of Golden Prairie. This man writes:

> We are at a loss to understand, the reasoning of the commission, as to why this particular branch line has not been guaranteed to remain in operation until January 1, 1975. We believe the government set a policy that if 25,000 bushels per mile is transported over a branch line, during the past ten year period, that it would be placed on the protection list and guaranteed against abandonment until January 1, 1975.
> The branch line from Hatton to Golden Prairie, and based over the past ten year period ending in the year 1964-65, we find that there has been 38,519 bushels per mile transported over this said branch line.

One can see the importance these people attach to the number of bushels carried. If the railways and the commission want to do educational work and formulate some rough rule of thumb of the number of bushels generated per mile that they consider adequate for a line, that would be a big help to our people. Knowing that would relieve a lot of pressure. The minister has said that on page 30 there is a provision for the railways to publish their figures. That is good.

Mr. Pickersgill: Where a railway asks to abandon it has to publish all data. If the commission wants to say, Perhaps we ought to compare this line with another line in the same area, to rationalize the matter, in determining the losses, those figures need not, unless there is good reason, be published because they are not asked for purposes of abandonment. I say that in certain circumstances the commission is allowed to use these figures and have them published if it deems it advisable. But where there is an application for abandonment everyone at the hearing will know what traffic the railways have carried on that line. That will be public knowledge. I agree with the hon. gentleman. The traffic is far more important from an economic and social standpoint than the amount of loss. The average farmer does not really care whether the railway loses money but he will be reasonable if there is no traffic.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I thank the minister for his courtesy in widening the discussion, that we may talk about new section 314D as a whole. I accept his assurance that the commission will have a criterion for saying whether a line will be abandoned. In other words, the commission will not accept the railway's figures. This is well and good, and I am glad the minister told us about this.

Looking at the sections in the bill, and I have looked through the bill carefully. I see that we have given to this group of 17 men tremendous power without their being, as I mentioned the other day, corresponding checks or balances exercised by the elected representatives of the people. Would the minister not think it a good idea to have these men, to be appointed for ten years, report to a committee of the house such as the public accounts committee so that the elected representatives of the people might see if the commission was doing a good job? In that way we shall not set up a group of czars, controlling all manner of transportation and not accountable to anyone. The minister probably does not listen to me too often, as he says—

Mr. Pickersgill: I always listen to the hon. gentleman when he speaks.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Let the minister listen carefully to me today. I think we are making a grave mistake if we do not set up a committee to examine the work the commission does.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: On that point might I say a word? I have been looking at what Hon. A. G. Blair, minister of railways and canals, had to say in 1903 about this very point in reply to Mr. Robert Borden, as he then was, the member for Halifax. I think it is very relevant to the point the hon. gentleman has just made. In all these decisions with regard to rail line abandonment, rates and so on, the commission is acting as a court. Since the Act of Settlement, since Queen Anne's day, we have taken the view that the courts must be independent of the executive and independent of politicians. We take great pains to make them independent in order that they shall reach objective decisions. If I may read these words by the late Mr. Blair, I think the hon. member will find that he makes the point neatly, perhaps better than I could do it. He said:

> I now come to an important feature of the bill, the importance of which you will have recognized in view of what I said a moment ago as to the unsatisfactory experience in the United States by reason of the facilities for litigation on all sorts of questions under their system. We propose that the commission shall be the absolute judges of both law and fact, subject to two exceptions. The commission will be absolute judges as to the facts, only subject to appeal to the Governor General in Council. They will be absolute judges of the law, except when a question of jurisdiction arises, which of course it would be quite impossible to restrict in any way, but they may state a case to the Supreme Court in the event of any question of legal importance arising.

This has been broadened now so that there is provision for appeal to the Supreme Court on any point of law. But there is also provision for appeal from decisions of the Board of Transport Commissioners to the governor in council, which really means the cabinet which is responsible to this parliament. The real reason this board was set up back in 1903 was that previously all these things had been settled by a committee of the cabinet and it was thought desirable to get away from the evil of having a lot of political pressure brought to bear on these matters.

I think it is right that the courts should operate in the open and that we should be able to criticize their decisions once made. But it is foreign to our way of doing things to tolerate a system whereby political pressures would be brought to bear before decisions were reached. I would think the means I have outlined are the most effective way of controlling the activities of the commission in its judicial aspect. As for a scrutiny of the commission's other activities by a committee, I have already expressed my views and they are not very different from those held by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Korchinski: I wish to underline briefly what my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle has said. There should be some independent body having responsibility for compiling statistics in relation to these applications. My hon. friend illustrated his case by mentioning what had happened in connection with the line to Lloydminster. After it had been shown that a certain amount of grain originated at each point, the railway dropped its application. To my mind this is a good example of what could be done if there were a body independent of the commission charged with the responsibility of compiling relevant information. I feel some form of additional supervision would be beneficial.

In considering these applications for abandonment the board must take account of whether the line has shown a loss in the year previous to the application. I must say I cannot imagine any railway company appearing before the board to make an application unless they could prove that a loss had been incurred. I suggest we might consider using as a criterion an average figure over a period of years. I can visualize a situation in which a railway company could spend a lot of money improving its line, installing culverts, new ties, heavier steel, and so on—expenses which might not be necessary for the next 25 years. Then there might be a series of short crops which would result in an over-all loss of revenue as a result of which the railway might be able to prove to the commission that it had lost money on this part of the operation. But if the results of the entire operation were averaged out, the picture would probably look much better than it had at first seemed. My suggestion is that an average figure should be taken over a number of years so that the board could determine whether or not a loss had really been sustained.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. member would look at the criteria set out on pages 26 and 27 of the bill he would see that, although it is not put in precisely his words, the idea he expressed is there. Proof of financial loss is an essential pre-condition of an application. The board will not even hear an application if there has not been a loss. As the hon. member says, unless there had been a loss the application would probably not be made.

Even when a loss has been shown the companies are not entitled to abandon a branch line by virtue of that loss. The commission has a right to look at the operation over a period, to take into account the effect that abandonment would have on surrounding territory, the alternative facilities, and all those other considerations. Certainly the one suggested by the hon. member is among them. The board would look at the operation for two or three years back and for two or three years ahead. For one thing, the bill says, "the existing and potential resources of the area". A couple of short crops do not remove the resources.

Anyone who has lived in Canada in the last 30 years knows that there was a period in the thirties when there was quite a number of short crops in areas which have produced tremendous quantities of wheat ever since. Nobody, after having had that experience, will say that because there is a short crop in one year there are not enough resources there to grow wheat.

The Chairman: Does this complete discussion on paragraph (1)?

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Chairman, I think I would be remiss in my duty to my constituents if I failed to say a few words on the question of the abandonment and rationalization of railroads. This has been a problem in our area for many years and one that still exists because some municipalities have advanced and developed much faster than others. When municipalities find that there is a threat to their railroad services, or the possibility of abandonment or reduction, they have misgivings about the possible future development of their areas.

When this bill was first introduced there was much concern in that particular area north of Guelph and extending to Kincardine, Southampton and Owen Sound because the history of railroad development in that area has been not too good during the last few years. As I indicated, most of those areas were originally developed as a result of the establishment of railway lines, the setting up of centres and the provision of stations and of facilities which would enable people to ship their products and to receive their supplies. When a few years ago the railroad reduced its service by cancelling the l.c.l. and the express service, and began to talk about removing stations, people began to wonder how long it would be before the railroad would cancel its services altogether. The situation was not improved by a statement which was made quite recently by the president of the C.N.R. in his year-end review, when he said:

> While the legislation is not likely to provide any immediate financial benefits to the railways, it will when enacted remove outmoded restrictions and regulations which have hampered them in the past and place upon them the responsibility of paying their way in a highly competitive situation.

Such a statement does not allay the misgivings that a lot of the people have had with regard to railroad reductions and abandonments. Of course we know that for many years the C.N.R. has been talking about the necessity for more freedom in their operations, freedom in their costing and freedom in their ability to assist their own freight rates. However I think they are forgetting that freedom is something which is not easy to acquire these days. We have to live together in the world of today, and if one area develops faster than another then there must be some reason for it and assistance must be given to the underdeveloped areas to ensure uniform development. The railways started this. If they reduce many of their services they will automatically curtail development in many areas. As I said, this situation has created misgivings in many areas because the railroads in their operations over the years have not always considered the welfare of the area to be as important as those people who inhabit it thought it was.

We were very happy to hear the minister say today that every effort will be made to ensure that decisions will not be based solely on the word of the railway companies with regard to operational costs and revenues, but that the commission will have available independent expert opinion. Many of the municipalities will be relieved to hear this news. Some of us have attended meetings and have heard the railway companies presenting the costing figures, but we have had no way of examining them. We did not know exactly how they were arrived at and what part of the total figure was charged to the small municipalities. Without expert assistance it was very difficult to arrive at a proper conclusion and to present a proper case before the Board of Transport Commissioners in support of the retention of many of these facilities. In many cases the municipalities were not able to present their case adequately. However, the assurance which we received from the minister, that every effort will be made to make it possible for the municipalities to obtain satisfaction when applications for reductions or abandonments of lines are made, is welcome news to everyone.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, before we proceed much further with our discussion of rail line abandonments I should like to say a word or two. Is my understanding correct that we are now discussing 314E?

Mr. Pickersgill: We are now on 314C.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I suppose we are dealing still with the verification of costs. Am I right in this?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that subclause 2 does deal with that to some degree. I see no reason why the hon. gentleman should not discuss it anyway.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I think the question of costing is quite important because if my understanding of the whole clause 42 is correct a railway must set out to prove that the cost of operating the branch lines is greater than the revenues obtained from running that service. As I have pointed out previously, the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. in presenting their cost figures on these branch lines attempted to prove that the situation is deteriorating and that the total revenue obtained from moving the grain on a branch line is not great enough to cover the costs of that operation. I think this point is very important and we should analyze each branch line separately.

I believe there is no reason why the revenue should be credited only to the branch line. It seems to me that part of that revenue could be credited to a portion of the branch line and the rest to the main line. There is no doubt in my mind that as a result of the abandonment of some of these lines the farmers might find themselves closer to the other railway. For example if a C.N.R. line is abandoned, one which was normally used by farmers for hauling grain, they might find themselves closer to the C.P.R. line and therefore the C.N.R. might well lose the revenue. I believe therefore that an appraisal should be made of the original point at which the grain is shipped and of the line on which it travels. We cannot lose sight of the fact that the railways may consider that they might be better off without the grain.

In looking at their figures I noticed that in 1960 their revenues and expenditures balanced. That is not the case today. In fact since our grain trade has picked up in the last three or four years it is interesting to note that the revenues of the railways have also increased sharply. In presenting briefs with regard to rail line abandonment the railways have attempted to prove that they were losing money on the branch line. If that is the case, then it is logical to suppose that they are also losing money on the main line. If this is the case and the amount of grain hauled has increased, why have their revenues diminished?

If we go back about seven or eight years, for example, to the year 1957, we will find that the total export of wheat was something in the order of 256 million bushels, whereas last year it was 500 million bushels. It is logical to assume, if the railways are losing money on that grain trade, that their total revenue would be down rather than up. This is not the case. I have seen the figures which they have produced in respect of a branch line when they have attempted to prove that the cost of moving the grain from the point of origination on the branch line to the main line is greater than the cost of moving it on the main line to Vancouver or the lakehead. I think this method of proving the point is wrong. To my mind the railroads are making a profit in handling the grain through the main lines. I do not think the railroads would deny that, if there were no branch lines at all and just a main line running through the west, under the Crowsnest Pass rates they could operate and make a handsome profit. If they can make a handsome profit under the main line alone, then one would think they could operate a number of branch lines and still make a profit. The figures of the railways in a sense attempt to prove that they are making a loss on the main line.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

There is another thing I should like to say in respect of grain movement and line abandonment. This has to do with the quota system. On many occasions the quota system works toward reducing the general efficiency in the movement of grain. I say this with the knowledge that the quota system is designed to allow farmers an equal opportunity to deliver their product to market and receive cash for it. One must consider, however, that in setting up a quota system one is influencing the cost of moving the grain to the lakehead. If in the opinion of the transport commission, when studying this branch line problem, it is necessary, economically and for the good of the community, that the branch line remain there, then I would suggest that they try to work out with the Canadian Wheat Board a better quota allotment for that branch line area. I realize that this would be a departure from the norm, but I believe it could be worked out. If the Canadian Wheat Board should find that in a particular branch line area there was the quality and quantity of wheat which was needed at the lakehead or Vancouver, I would suggest that instead of increasing the quota at one point on the branch line while other points remained at the unit quota they should advance the quota relatively equally on the whole line at the same time.

If there should be seven elevator points on a branch line and the railways are having difficulty moving grain out of that area through this branch line, because they are moving only six box cars at one time, which is uneconomical, then perhaps they could go in there with 26 or 36 empty box cars and go back a week later and move 26 or 36 full box cars out of that area. This could be done if the quota was moved up at all points on that branch line. I am bringing this up as one suggestion. If it were found that the railway was operating at a loss—and I am not for one moment accepting the railway's figures in this regard—and if the railway appealed to the commission that either a subsidy be paid or the branch line be abandoned, I would suggest that the commission should examine the possibility of working out with the Canadian Wheat Board quota allotments which would enable the railways to move that grain through the branch line in greater quantities. This would bring about greater efficiency in the overall movement of the grain.

Naturally I should also like the commission to take a look at the suggestion I made last evening with regard to truck transport. With the modern facilities which we have today there is no reason, if they can move the grain more cheaply by truck, that the railways should not be permitted to do this. One other thing I whould like the commission to consider carefully in respect of the branch line abandonment is the question of storage. If the elevators along branch lines which are to be abandoned are not allowed to become line agents of the Canadian Wheat Board, then the prairie provinces will lose storage facilities for millions and millions of bushels. The elevator companies receive revenue from the storage of the grain and the grain is taken off the farmers' fields at a much faster rate than it would be with the loss of this storage. I do not doubt that in many areas of the prairie provinces at the present time one would find many farmers who have grain which is stored in temporary bins, or even outside where it is subject to weather and moisture conditions. This lowers the quality of the grain and does not help the farmer.

One has only to go back to the Bracken report in respect of box car allotment to recall what the elevator companies said at that time. At that time there was only one elevator company in the three prairie provinces which felt there was sufficient built-up storage in the prairies. All the others, although they may have said there was ample storage, said that they did not want to see the storage picture diminished to any extent, or something to that effect.

This whole matter should be looked into very carefully. I would hope that, rather than accept the straight dollars and cents calculation in respect of whether or not a branch line could be abandoned the commission would take an over-all look at the whole picture to see whether somethiing could be done to improve the efficiency in respect of the handling of the grain.

There is no denying the fact that the effects of the Crowsnest pass rates have been beneficial to the three prairie provinces, but when one sets up statutory rates certain conditions are not adjusted to meet future situations. Perhaps to some degree the elevator and railway companies have not been concerned about adopting up-to-date methods of handling grain.

Let me give an example. We were told by individuals who appeared before the committee that the C.N.R. tried to implement the use of huge hopper box cars. Only two elevator companies in Western Canada have elevators of sufficient capacity to fill those hopper cars, and there are only one or two terminals on the west coast which can handle grain delivered by the railway companies which use or did use these new cars for grain transportation.

While the Crowsnest pass rates have been beneficial to the prairie provinces—and let me hasten to add that they should be maintained at all costs—there is a growing fear that the railway companies and terminal operators have become stagnant so far as adopting better handling methods is concerned.

It is my hope that before the new commission accepts a flat dollars and cent cost in respect of the operation of branch lines it will attempt to persuade the elevator and railway companies to economize in other ways so that branch lines can be maintained for the social benefit of the community, and in order that their maintenance does not become a subsidized expense to the general taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman will look at the criteria set out on pages 26 and 27 of the bill, and particularly in paragraph (e) on page 27, I am sure he will be satisfied that the railway and terminal companies will be required to do all of those things he has suggested.

The Chairman: Have we now concluded our consideration of new section 314C?

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, it was my understanding that we would proceed with new section 314C subsection by subsection. Up to this point we have been discussing subsections 1 and 2 of this new section.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thought we had abandoned that procedure after the hon. member for Qu'Appelle came into the committee. If it is understood that we are now discussing detailed points in respect of individual subsections we might proceed on that basis.

Mr. Schreyer: That is exactly what I intended to do. I should like to refer to a detailed matter in respect of subsection 3 in reference to the use of the word "uneconomic". There is reference to branch lines which ought or ought not to be abandoned on the basis of economy. When I raised this point earlier in respect of subsection 1 the minister said that while the commission may hold hearings on applications for abandonment of allegedly uneconomic lines, the commission could not grant such an application unless there was proof of actual loss. That is all very well, but having regard to subsection 3, reference is made to uneconomic branch lines, without any relation to proof of actual loss. Perhaps this involves poor craftsmanship, and I do not want to be unfair because the draftsmen working on this bill have had to cope with a great deal of detail and numerous changes. It is not surprising that one or two points of this kind have been overlooked.

What possible justification is there for wording this particular subsection in such a way that apparently the commission will be permitted to make determinations in respect of applications for abandonment of uneconomic lines, when the precise intention was to have meetings held to determine whether or not lines should be abandoned on the basis of an actual loss? I intend to move an amendment, but before doing so I should like to ask the minister whether he will accept informally the proposition that where the word "uneconomic" appears in this and following subsections it should be substituted by the words "actual loss incurred". There would then be no mistake or misunderstanding and the commission would be confronted with fewer problems.

Mr. Pickersgill: While I am not a lawer I spent a lot of time in Winnipeg reading and criticizing students' essays. I did so for approximately eight years. In this bill we say an actual loss must be demonstrated before the matter can be considered. We then accept the view that the commission should determine whether or not a branch line is uneconomic. I do not think it makes much difference, but if we are going to change this wording we should also take into consideration subsection 1.

The railway must prove that a branch line is uneconomic, and is likely to continue to be uneconomic, before the line can be abandoned. This is what the commission must determine. Since that is so, why should we then say that in determining that the commission should do certain other things? From the point of view of the railway company it might be better to use the words "actual loss" in every case, but from the point of view of the public I think the commission has a little more scope in reaching the conclusion that, although there may be an actual loss, the line should not be abandoned. I think that was the view expressed by the Manitoba Branch Lines Association. This whole matter may involve a question of emphasis or motive, but from the point of view of the average citizen the use of the word "uneconomic" gives the commission more scope to suggest that a line should not be abandoned, though there is an actual loss. That is why I concluded we should use that expression instead of the other.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I intended to speak on this point, and I am very pleased that the hon. member for Springfield raised it. It was touched upon indirectly by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam before the recess. I take the same exception, but I want to point out that under new section 314C (3) great powers are granted to this commission in respect of determinations. That is as it should be. The commission is directed to take into account various things set out in subsection 3.

As I read new section 314B, as a condition the commission must, before making an investigation, decide that there has been a loss in prescribed years. Having done that, they are then seized of jurisdiction and inquire into the question of whether actual loss has been incurred. If actual loss has been incurred under section 314C (1), they determine whether the branch line is uneconomic and is likely to continue to be uneconomic, and whether the line should be abandonned. These are two different things. First you decide whether it is uneconomic which, in the very loose wording of this section—and here I agree with the hon. member for Springfield—must have as its foundation the sustaining of loss. This having been established, you look at the other things, which is as it should be. It probably would have been better if it had been phrased in this way, that the railway company must first establish that actual loss has been sustained. This is the first obstacle the railway company must overcome. Having overcome that obstacle and established loss in one of the prescribed years, the commission then looks at all the other things.

The proof that loss has been sustained, of course, cannot, should not and must not be the sole criterion. The bill takes this into account by directing the commission to look at paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d) and so on. I am particularly happy to see paragraph (h) in this section dealing with the economic effects of the abandonment. I should like to have seen included in this section a provision covering the economic and social effects, because sometimes the social effects must be regarded just as much as the economic effects.

With some doubts, I think the commission has all the powers that are necessary. I would like to have seen these powers more precisely expressed so that they would arrive at a determination on the basis that, first having established that there was an actual loss for one of the prescribed years, they would direct their attention to the other things involved in this question. I appreciate the point made by the hon. member for Springfield in this regard. I should like to have seen this matter tidied up. My opinion is that this provision gives the commission ample power and lays down that it must direct its attention to these things.

When the commission is appointed I hope the minister will direct their attention to the fact that it is the opinion of this house, as expressed today, that actual loss having been established, as it must be, we believe the commission must look very seriously at all these other things. While they are not directed by this bill to give effect to them, they must find that they exist.

I hope the commission will not make any order for the abandonment of a line if it finds at any time under section 314C (3) and the various paragraphs thereof that the existing or potential resources of the area served by the branch line, and so on, are of such a nature as to warrant the continuance of the line. I hope this is the feeling the commission will have, and that the minister will direct their attention to his matter.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I should like to join the hon. member for Springfield and the hon. member for Peace River in expressing some concern about the wording of this section. I am not questioning the good intentions of the minister. I think there is a great deal of agreement, perhaps more than we usually see in the house, with regard to the importance of this section of the bill. I think it is the heart of the bill. It has a great deal of importance to the people concerned who question its effectiveness.

We have had a great deal of experience as to how commissions and boards interpret at some future time legislation which has been enacted, despite what may have been said in discussion in this house. I think section 182 of the old Railway Act caused railway workers to believe that they had a great deal of protection if branch lines were abandoned, service was discontinued, and so on. But they found later, through the interpretations of the courts, that this section simply did not give them any protection. Therefore it seems to me it is very important that the commission appointed know what the Parliament of Canada had in mind. I am surprised and puzzled that the minister would follow the advice of the Manitoba Branch Lines Association in this regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I might say, for the hon. gentleman's benefit, that the government of Saskatchewan and the counsel for the government of Manitoba made exactly the same suggestion, and for precisely the reason that they wanted to make sure that the commission would look at more factors than just the actual loss. It was felt that using the words "uneconomic and likely to continue to be uneconomic" gave the commission more scope to refuse the railway's application.

The government originally started with the idea in the old legislation of dealing with an actual loss. In order to meet the sentiment expressed by the representatives of very large bodies of people in western Canada, we accepted the view that we should use this broader language which suggested the idea to the commission that they should not just act because the railway was having a loss, but should look at the question in its proper economic context. Therefore I cannot help expressing a little surprise at the suggestion that we now go back to the old provision, and if there is any choice between the two, use the phrase that is more favourable to the railway.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to argue with the minister about facts that are on record because, despite many differences I have had with him, I know he keeps on top of his job. There may be a more recent statement on the part of the province of Manitoba than the one I am going to quote, but this is precisely the point I want to make. The minister said earlier that in dropping the use of the words "actual loss" in favour of the word "uneconomic", he was adopting the words of the Manitoba Branch Lines Association. I have before me the submission made by the province of Manitoba on November 17, 1966. I quote from the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, pages 2648 and 2649. I will read the whole paragraph because this is the specific submission of the Manitoba government with reference to this section:

> In section 314C (1), page 22, we would delete the term "uneconomic" in line 13 since this term is nowhere defined in the section and insert the term "actual loss" so that lines 12 and 13 would now read: "...determine whether the branch line is likely to continue to incur an actual loss..." etc. Similarly in the case of section 314C (3), page 23, delete the word "uneconomic" in line 15 so that line of railway which incurs an actual loss, the period (i)...etc. On page 27 thereof should be abandoned..." etc. In section 314C (4)—

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. gentleman has quite convinced me. He has apparently made me look very foolish; but the advice I was given was that two years ago on Bill No. C-120 the representatives of the government of Manitoba and the government of Saskatchewan asked us to take out "actual loss" and put in "uneconomic". I think it all really boils down to the fact that whatever you do, someone will suggest, and maybe the same person, that you do the opposite again. I would not care a great deal which we adopted, because I do not believe there is any difference in the fundamental meaning. Certainly, if the railway is not having an actual loss the line cannot be abandoned; that is clear right at the start. If uneconomic means anything, therefore, it must mean that other economic conditions should be taken into account. This was what we understood to be the original reason for the desire, expressed a couple of years ago, that we should use this phrase. Since it seemed to us not to make any fundamental difference to the legislation, and to be more agreeable to those who would be affected, we tried to do it that way.

I had forgotten about the submission of the government of Manitoba, and the hon. gentleman quite properly put me in my place about that. I acknowledge it quite readily, but I still do not think there would be any benefit in changing the wording again.

Mr. Orlikow: Perhaps the minister will believe me when I say I was not trying to put him in his place.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would not hold it against the hon. gentleman if he did.

Mr. Orlikow: There have been many occasions in the past when I have tried to do so, and I am sure there will be many more in the future. I must say that I have not succeeded very often.

However, Mr. Chairman, for a few moments I should like to raise one other matter. I am a little concerned, and for another reason, about the continual use of the word "economic". It seems to me that when we use the word "economic" we almost automatically restrict the ability of the reviewing agency to make a judgment. There are consequences of rail line abandonments which are not exclusively economic but are, in fact, social. These consequences were referred to in a resolution passed in 1963 by the Saskatchewan conference of local railway retention committees. They went over the principles which they thought should be the governing factors when branch line abandonment was being considered. I should like to quote those principles from this resolution:

1. The cost of extra distance farmers will have to haul grain.
2. The cost of reorganization of the market grid road system and provincial highways.
3. The reduction of municipal taxation and the financial position of municipalities.
4. Capital losses which may be suffered by businesses in towns, villages and hamlets as a consequence of a branch line being abandoned.
5. Depreciation of land values.
6. The necessity of compensation for municipal services such as relocation of grid roads which are directly consequent on abandonment.
7. The impact of abandonment of schools, hospitals, old people's homes, and other social services or institutions.
8. Whether or not mineral rights or other advantages held by railway companies as a result of land grants given to build rail lines should revert to the crown if the branch lines are abandoned and used for compensation.

Earlier today the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and other members, talked about the tremendous consequence of branch line abandonment for the towns. Towns have been built because the railway was there or a country elevator was there. This led to the establishment of schools, hospitals and stores. All of these things are affected. I am sure the minister will remember the situation when Canadian National announced the run-through program and the effect of that upon Nakina. A large school had been established there, with the co-operation of the provincial government, to look after the children who were there because their fathers were working for the railway. Once this town ceased to be a turnaround point and the people moved away, the school would be largely superfluous. Here was a large investment of the province of Ontario which would become worthless. The same thing would be true of hospitals and private businesses. It seems to me somehow—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if we could perhaps abbreviate this discussion by having the hon. gentleman read the sentence at the top of page 27? Perhaps I could read it:

—the period of time reasonably required for the purpose of adjusting any facilities, wholly or in part dependant on the services provided by the branch line, with the least disruption to the economy of the area served by the line;

It seems to me that, apart from the question of the reversion of mineral rights which is entirely a separate question, that is just about as precise a definition of the criteria, about which the hon. gentleman was talking in that very good memorandum from which he read, as we could readily devise. I suppose one might have put in the word "social", but then what does "social" mean? It is a very difficult thing for the court to determine. I feel this language is much more precise and more directly related to the very kind of thing the hon. gentleman was mentioning.

Mr. Orlikow: I hesitate to argue with the minister about this. All of us are aware of the fact that parliament can propose, but very often at some future date lawyers and courts dispose; and they often dispose in ways which parliaments and governments had not foreseen. It is for this reason I think members on both sides of the house are expressing their serious concern about these questions.

I looked at the sentence to which the minister referred, and I looked at it again as he read it to me. However, I feel, as the resolution from which I quoted pointed out and as the hon. member for Peace River pointed out, that we ought to look at every possibility in a spirit of good will so that the bill, as it is finally passed, will go as far as it is humanly possible to go in accomplishing the things we all want accomplished.

The minister assures me that the proposed section does all the things which I have pointed out need doing. I do not believe the insertion of one word in one place or in another place will make that much difference. I appeal to the minister to have another look at the relevant merits of the words "actual loss" as compared with "uneconomic". I am not insisting, and I am not even suggesting he hold the clause over because I know we have been standing many clauses.

Mr. Pickersgill: Frankly, on balance, I think I like the words "uneconomic or likely to be uneconomic". So far as I am concerned, I believe I will stick with them. Since we have decided to consider these specific paragraphs, I wonder if we could go on to the next one now?

Mr. Schreyer: In this particular case, I am afraid I must move an amendment so we can obtain the sense of the members of the committee. The minister is quite incorrect when he tries to leave the impression that there is not much difference between the term "uneconomic" and the term "actual loss incurred". "Uneconomic" could apply to a branch line that might be bringing the railway an actual net profit, but of such small amount or magnitude that it might be deemed uneconomic.

The opinion of economists or anybody with some understanding and judgment in the field is likely to be such that the term "uneconomic" could be applied to any rate of return that is in the order of one half of one per cent, 1 per cent, 2 per cent or even 2½ or 3 per cent. As I understand it, that is not really the intention of this section.

If the minister were to look at the wording of 314C (1) and compare it with the wording of 314C (3) and 314C (4) he would find, though I concede it might be inadvertent, a kind of subtle transitional change from one subsection to another. While we start out in subsection 1 by saying that the commission shall hold hearings to determine whether a line is uneconomic and that it shall not grant any application unless there is actual loss, we then find in subsection 3 that any reference to actual loss is omitted, and in subsection 4 this wording appears—and I would ask hon. members to listen to it very carefully:

> If the Commission determines that the operation of an uneconomic branch line...should be abandoned—

Therefore, it seems pretty clear from subsection 4 that the commission is given the discretionary power to grant abandonment of a branch line that is uneconomic, which may not necessarily mean that an actual loss is being incurred. That is the whole point. This kind of drafting in the legislation is bound to cause some doubt, uncertainty and confusion which may very well be eliminated by the substitution of two or three words. Is it really too much to ask of the minister, if he has some kind of obsessive opposition to the words "actual loss incurring", that he leave out the word "uneconomic" and not substitute anything in its place. This would make the clause clearer than it is at the present time.

Therefore I move:

> That section 314C (3) be amended by deleting the word "uneconomic" in line 40 thereof and substituting the words "actual loss incurring".

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on this amendment before it is put. I must say that it would not break my heart if it carried because I do not think it would have any real effect on the bill. It might injure my vanity a little, but that is not terribly important.

I should not like anyone to think that there was any soundness in the hon. gentleman's argument, because if he looks at 314E on page 30 of the bill he will see it makes it very clear—this is the same point I made earlier —that an uneconomic line is defined. In (c) it says:

"uneconomic line of railway" means a branch line that has been determined to be uneconomic by the commission under section 314C.

Presumably that governs throughout, but it certainly governs the whole of section 314C. Section 314C (1) says that the commission, having held hearings, shall determine whether a branch line is uneconomic, is likely to continue to be uneconomic and whether it should be abandoned. The rest of the wording goes on:

—but if the commission finds that in its opinion the company has incurred no actual loss in the operation of such line...it shall reject the application—

The line cannot be abandoned anyway if there is no actual loss. Therefore, it seems to me that it would not be a terribly useful exercise to put the Queen's Printer to the expense of making this further correction to the bill, which I do not think would add anything. If we were going to make this provision it would be neater to change the bill all the way through, but I do not think it would serve any great purpose. I hope the hon. gentleman will not press his amendment, in the circumstances.

Mr. Schreyer: I have one question I should like to address to the minister. I admit that subsection 1 reads satisfactorily as it is at present with regard to the use of the word "uneconomic" as opposed to "actual loss incurring"; but I submit that subsections 3 and 4 do not. There is nothing to indicate that subclause 1 supersedes subsections 3 and 4. I am not familiar with the interpretation of statutes but there is nothing in subsection 1 to the effect that "notwithstanding any other provisions, subsection 1 shall apply", and so on. Therefore, could the minister say whether subsection 1 is construed as superseding subsections 3 and 4?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think it supersedes; I think it governs. I believe that is the proper word. Subsection 1 says the commission shall determine whether a line is uneconomic or likely to continue to be uneconomic, and that in so determining the line must have suffered an actual loss. All of the following references are dependant upon that and governed by it. Subsection 1 gives the commission power to determine whether a branch line is uneconomic and should be abandoned; but in doing so it has to look at all these other considerations.

Subsection 3 does not give the commission power to determine whether a line is uneconomic; subsection 1 does that. In making the determination required in subsection 1 all of the factors mentioned in subsection 3 have to be taken into account by the commission. The same is true of subsection 4. If the commission determines that a line should be abandoned under subsection 1 then certain things will happen. The power to determine whether a branch line is uneconomic or likely to be uneconomic is that given by subsection 1. The other subsections are dependant on and subordinate to subsection 1.

I do not know whether the hon. member for Peace River is in favour of this amendment or not, but I think he will agree with my interpretation.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, the minister has asked me to withdraw the amendment, but I should like to hear the opinion of hon. members to my right in this respect. If the hon. member for Peace River or the hon. member for Acadia consider it to be of no substance, then I will certainly withdraw it.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, in rising to give an opinion without being paid a fee I would reinforce what I said before. I fully realize the difficulties the draftsman has had to undergo during the long-sustained period of gestation of this bill, before delivery.

Mr. Pickersgill: It has had real labour pains.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: I should like to have seen it made plain that, once loss had been sustained, and the railway having got over that obstacle, the commission should direct its attention to whether all these other things I have brought up do come in. I am satisfied, from reading section 314C, that there is a direction to the commission to do this. This direction is primarily the basis of section 314. I agree with the minister that that is the determining section. The minute it is established that there is no loss in the previous year the application must be rejected; the railway is tossed out of court on its neck, as it should be. Only when it has been established that there has been loss in the preceding year ought the commission to consider the other aspects of the matter.

I do not think we can get to section 314C (3) until we have got over the first obstacle, which must be considered under subsection 314C (1). This could have been set out a little more clearly, to be more readily observable. I do not think the amendment will change the effect of the measure, but the point I have raised has concerned me for some time, and only the complete study in the long lunch period we had today enabled me to come to the view that I hold.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I would ask for leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Schreyer) withdrawn.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very grateful to the hon. gentleman.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Shall section 314C carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): The committee will now consider section 314D, rationalization of line between systems.

Mr. Hamilton: I wish to make a few remarks about section 314D. Would the minister be kind enough to tell me why, in part I of the subsection, the language used is "the Commission may recommend to railway companies", whereas in other places in the bill the governor general in council has the power to order. Elsewhere there is the power to direct. That is in the case of the commodity pipe lines. On the tremendously important section on rationalization the commission may recommend. Can the minister tell me why the words "may recommend" are used, instead of the words "direct" or "order"?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think most of us on this side of the house would not hesitate to direct the Canadian National, owned by the people we represent, to do things. But so long as we have the concept of private ownership that we have in this country, unless we are to interfere with the actual ownership of something to which there is private title we should be hesitant to confer on a commission or other body the authority to order that body to change the use of something privately owned. It was probably a scruple like that that was the main consideration.

Mr. Hamilton: Jumping down to the third subsection, if the railways do not accept the recommendation of the commission, the commission must report its recommendation to the governor in council for such action as the governor in council may consider necessary in the public interest. Under subsection 314G, the governor in council may order. My question is this: Where in this bill is the clause that gives to the commission the power to reduce the subsidy if the railway does not accept the recommendation. This afternoon the minister said that the commission had this power.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is talking of circumstances where the commission's recommendation is not accepted. I would take it, then, that there would be no subsidy to be reduced. Would that not be so?

Mr. Hamilton: Replying to me earlier this afternoon the minister said that the commission, if its views were not followed, would react and not give the full subsidy to the railway.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do recollect having said something very like that. Probably I was moving ahead of myself. I imagine, in circumstances like this, that the commission would probably recommend to the governor in council that if certain things were done certain payments should be made, but the government itself would make the payments. I would think, therefore, that what I ought to have said would be "withheld" rather than "reduced", because there would not have been a subsidy to reduce. Nothing would be done in that particular situation where the railway does not comply with the recommendation. Some of these recommendations might not involve payments.

Mr. Hamilton: I am sure that the commission will act in such a way that the great majority of its recommendations will save the railways money and allow them to make more money. I know of examples where this could be done.

I am basing my remarks on the experience of the past. Thirty odd years ago, in this chamber, a group of members of parliament trying as sincerely as we are to produce good legislation, brought in legislation which gave the power to recommend. The history of the last 30 years has shown that rarely have the railways, the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific, accepted the recommendations of the Board of Transport Commissioners on the rational and efficient running of railway lines. In Canada we have had to put up with heave freight rates and with continuing requests that parliament provide more money for railways, all because the railways do not operate efficiently. We ought to learn from this experience.

This section would be strengthened if we gave the commission the right to recommend, and made it clear that where the railway refused to listen to a recommendation not causing loss, it would lose a certain proportion of the subsidy granted under statute. Once the railways find that reluctance to move means dollar losses they will move quickly to correct inefficiencies.

I do not want to move an amendment, because of the difficulty of correlating all these sections. We would have to be very careful with any amendment. The easiest way out would be to change the words "may recommend" to the words "may direct". Perhaps an additional clause could be put in saying that the authority to carry out recommendations could result in one of two things, loss of the subsidy, or having the matter taken before the governor in council.

On this side of the house we should feel happier to see the stronger language used in this section. I should be glad to hear the minister. Or, if he wishes to reply later, and think this over first, I shall accept that, too, because this involves a serious problem.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman knows that I have been aware of his views on this subject since he spoke on second reading, in September I believe.

So I have had a long time in which to reflect. I have discussed the point raised by the hon. gentleman not only with officials but with my colleagues and it is our considered view that we prefer not to confer upon the commission power to direct the rearrangement of property of persons who under our present system of operating are the holders of private property. If this is to be done, it should be done by parliament or by the governor in council under power given to him by parliament, not by some other body.

However, I am advised that under 314E (4) on page 31 of the bill the Minister of Finance is not committed to pay the whole amount of the subsidy. There is therefore in the bill a certain element of sanction of the kind the hon. gentleman seems to think might be helpful, and to this extent we have gone part way in the direction in which he would like to go. I feel this is one of the occasions when instead of being flexible and not knowing my own mind I shall have to be stubborn and arrogant.

Mr. Schreyer: I should like to support the argument put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. The assurance the minister gave to the hon. member and to this committee simply does not go far enough, I submit with respect. The commission is not given power to direct that the railways shall rationalize in any given way. All that is provided is that the commission may make recommendations. Why should the commission not be given authority in this legislation to make an order for rationalization? If there is cost involved to the railways, which in many instances is unlikely, provision could be made for compensation from the treasury.

I am tempted to move an amendment here, but I realize that it might involve a number of consequential amendments to other clauses and for that reason I hesitate to do so. A possible alternative would be to word this clause so as to give the commission authority to recommend to the governor in council that the governor in council use the subsidy arrangement with the railways in such a way as to induce them to carry out certain works of rationalization. It is hard to understand why the minister will not consider such an approach.

Experience shows us clearly that unless we adopt measures of this kind the railways will simply drag their heels when it comes to carrying out any logical rationalization plan. Unless we do provide an inducement by altering the payment of subsidies we shall see no substantial change with respect to railway rationalization. The minister should be aware of this, and if he is not, he is being made aware of it now.

Mr. Hamilton: I do not intend to hold the committee up on this point any longer. I think I have made my views known. I would just like to remind the minister and the committee that at the hearings on October 18 the Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers Limited, the three big pools, recommended—> —the provision of some form of persuasion to encourage the railway companies to act on commission recommendations which seek to improve railway operations in other ways than that of management.

Once again we hear the voice of the biggest customers of the railways, those who provide what profit there is to railway management, saying we should give this commission some power of persuasion. As far as I can see, the only power of persuasion acknowledged by the minister is the possibility of some penalty imposed by the Minister of Finance, who would keep a careful watch on these things. I cannot place any stronger emphasis on what I have said. I do not accept the minister's argument that it is possible to order the C.N.R. but not the C.P.R.—that air line and pipe line undertakings can be directed, but the C.P.R. cannot. In telling us the commission shall have no power to give direction in cases when it has devised ways in which the railways could operate in a better manner, I believe the minister is contradicting the whole concept which underlies the turning over of powers in transportation fields to this new board. The board is given all these duties in the various clauses of the act, but it is not given any punch. This is the same mistake as was made in 1935 in the legislation governing the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways. I hate to see parliament repeating the same mistake only a decade or so later.

I do not think it would cause the C.P.R. or the C.N.R. the least concern if the commission could show them means of doing a thing better, especially if they stood to gain a few dollars and cents by accepting the recommendation. Here we say that if a recommendation is not accepted the commission may at its discretion take the matter up with the cabinet. Surely this is weak legislation in a bill which is supposed to be doing so much. I do not like to be obstreperous in the committee; I am one of the few hon. members speaking on behalf of the power to direct. But I think this power is necessary if we are to learn from the experience of the past. I do not think there will be much consequential effect on other clauses if we alter the words "may recommend" to "may direct" and I have heard no argument from the minister which convinces me I am the least bit wrong. I will say no more unless there are others who wish to join me to try to get the minister to change his mind.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. member should not exaggerate.

I said that I felt a little reluctant to give to the commission the power to direct the railways on the use of their property. I think there is another aspect of it to which I would attach a little more importance. The hon. gentleman speaks about the directions given to pipe line companies, to air lines, and so on. He referred to the direction with respect to their relationship, not so much one to another as to the regulation of them in the public interest. However, here there is an attempt to intrude a commission into the actual management of the operations. I do not know that we can be sure that this commission will fulfil the functions of management better than the higher paid and conceivably more skilled people who will be engaged in the management of the railways. It is one thing to give full publicity to these recommendations and another thing to substitute oneself for management. Over the years our whole relationship with the C.N.R., which was first established at the end of the first world war, was to try to appoint competent managers and not to have someone else to do the second guessing for the management.

I know that here we are talking about the relation between the two railways, and perhaps sometimes they do not have the best public interest in view in pursuing their own competitive interests; but when the referee says that he thinks this would be the best way of doing things and says so publicly, this will be a pretty powerful sanction. At the same time the onus of making their own management decision will remain with them. I do not feel passionately about it but, as they say in "Oklahoma", this is "about as far as we could go" at this time.

Mr. Hamilton: The minister keeps opening new lines of argument for me because if ever there was a history of incompetence in managing their own affairs it is the history of the railways. This has been the history of our country, and we have had to bail out the railways time and time again. If the railways did not owe the public tens of millions of dollars every year there would not be much for us to say; but this bill plans to pay them $110 million subsidy which is to decline to nothing over eight years.

If a group of normal laymen applying their common sense can find ways and means of saving money for the railways, then I believe that that recommendation should be accepted by the railways if they wish to get a subsidy. For example, in 1934 the Duff royal commission recommended that two lines in Saskatchewan running a mile apart for 111 miles should be amalgamated and that both the railway companies should run the same line. This would not be an inconvenience to people in the towns because it did not interfere with their business. But in the evidence that was presented before the commission it was pointed out that these lines were costing the railways $1,000 per mile per year and that the people who paid the freight rates were paying for these losses year after year because the Board of Transport Commissioners, under the act in 1935, had the power only to recommend, and nothing more. The same mistake is being repeated here. We place all forms of transportation under the super commission and we allow it to direct the air lines and the pipe line companies, but not the railways.

Perhaps this is an exaggeration but it dramatizes the point that the one who puts up all this money should have the right to call the tune. I am not asking for the moon and the stars when I propose the insertion of the words "may direct", and if there are any losses as a result of our direction we will be paying for them. This is contained in the bill and the railways are protected if they incur any losses; but the ordinary citizen, the ratepayer and the user of the railway is not protected under this section against the high freight rates. If the commission can find ways to save money, to reduce the costs of the railway and to provide better service to the people at no expense to the railways, then I think they should have to accept that recommendation, even if we have to use the word "may direct", or else if they do not accept it they must expect to lose part of the subsidy. I think we have the right to ask for service in return for the money which we are providing to them.

I know the minister does not wish me to go over the whole map of the west and name the places where lines should be adjusted. It is a conglomeration which grew up, like Topsy, because 70 years ago people believed that this country would be populated by 100 million people and that lines would be built all over the place. Let us not blame too much the people of those days. We have a chance to correct some of these anomalies, and I think that if the Canadian Transport Commission were given the power to correct them I am sure they would not abuse the railways, and that the railways would be paid for any losses they might incur. It would not hurt the minister to trust the commission and to give them a little more power, and if we have a chance to check on the commission occasionally, that would make for a good bill.

The arguments which the minister presented do not carry the weight they should. I have a feeling that the minister is being dominated by a civil service mentality. Let him not worry about the past. He is an elected representative speaking for the people. He can be bold and assert some control over the establishment which runs the country. The test of the time is whether he can control it. The commission must be efficient and knowledgeable. Let us put down our feet occasionally and give them some guide lines. Therefore I would like to see the words "may direct" inserted. I have not yet heard any argument which would make me change that idea.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

Mr. Douglas: We have almost reached the time to rise, but I would first like to ask the minister to give some thought to the matter, between now and the time when we will be considering the bill again. The minister said he did not feel passionately about this but I am sure many hon. members do feel strongly about it. Therefore I hope that he would consider an amendment to this clause which would give the commission the power to order a rationalization when, after examining all the facts, they are convinced that rationalization would be to the best advantage of all concerned, and the power to make recommendations that some financial compensation be given if they feel it is warranted. It seems to me that the minister's argument to the effect that the commission should not intervene in the management does not really stand up, because we are not dealing with a single management but with two managements, one of which may be willing to rationalize while the other is not.

After all there is nothing infallible about the present railway management. One has only to look at a map and see the scores of instances of expensive and costly duplication which should have been rectified years ago. The railways have failed to do it for a variety of reasons, one of which may have been that they could not reach any agreement. I think the most recent example of this was when the two railways built a line to Esterhazy in Saskatchewan so as to get the potash business, when one line could have been used by both of them. I do not think that a mere recommendation to the railways to build a single line, or to close one line and both use another line, will always be accepted by both railways. It might be acceptable to one and not to the other. Surely if the commission is to try to find some order in the present chaotic situation it should be given some powers, and some teeth should be put into this act.

I am convinced that unless the minister does put some teeth in this legislation the commission will find itself making recommendations to which no attention will be given. I hope that between now and the time we resume discussion of this matter that the minister will give some thought to accepting an amendment, which I believe would be a very simple amendment, so that the commission may make an order requiring the railways to carry out certain provisions for rationalization, and which also would provide of course for recommendations to the government for whatever financial inducement the commission feels would be necessary so that the carrying out of the rationalization in question would be acceptable to the companies.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say in a good natured way, and I hope I will not be misunderstood in doing so, that I am beginning to wonder whether there ever will be a commission to establish any powers. I hope we are not going to do all the work again, after spending weeks and weeks studying this legislation in the special committee. Already we have spent four days of this week in dealing with half the clauses in this bill. I would hope, when we come back to this legislation on Monday, that I will be given credit for having considered some of these suggestions which were made as long ago as last September and that we will be able to determine some of them fairly speedily.

I think it was understood that at five o'clock I would not be able to be here any longer. I very much regret that, but this happens to be the situation. I thank all hon. members for their co-operation.

Mr. Douglas: I should like to assure the minister that we are not trying to hold up his legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think that.

Mr. Douglas: However, for two or three years since the MacPherson report was brought down we have waited for legislation to be introduced. I am sure it is the desire of the minister and all of us in this house that this legislation should be effective legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly.

Mr. Douglas: I think this is one instance where it could be made effective. I believe it is our desire to do this.

Progress reported.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether with unanimous consent we could deal with three relatively non-controversial matters under government orders. I refer first of all to item No. 117. This is a resolution to amend the Judges Act to provide for one additional county court judge in Ontario and one additional county court judge in British Columbia. Then, if that should be disposed of, I should like to ask the house to consider item No. 110, second reading of Bill S-51, to amend the Canada Corporations Act. If by some good stroke of fortune we should dispose of this item, I would then ask the house to consider item No. 79. At this moment I should like to ask for unanimous consent in this regard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Solicitor General of course recognizes that in order to proceed with the business he has outlined it will be necessary for the house to decide what is to be done in respect of the private members' hour.

Mr. Pennell: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I realize I am leaning heavily on the generosity of the house. I cannot take exception if the answer should be in the negative. However, I am putting forward this proposal.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, it was communicated to us that the government desired to proceed also with item No. 104 which is the resolution to refer the Canada Elections Act to the standing committee on privileges and elections, but wished to leave the important matter of election expenses somewhere in the nebulous land of the future. I am wondering what has happened to that proposal. The Secretary of State of Canada (Miss LaMarsh) shakes her head. Is she indicating that I am wrong?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): The two together.

Mr. Howard: The Secretary of State says that they are to be put together for reference to the committee. Would the Solicitor General combine in his request that item No. 104 and item No. 105 be dealt with, as well in the original proposal, as the second item of business?

Mr. Pennell: I do not wish to be difficult. I am, of course, in a rather embarrassing position, having asked the house to co-operate with me and then having had this suggestion put to me. I must say regretfully that at the moment I am not prepared to agree to the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

Mr. Howard: There is a misunderstanding. This is not a suggestion put forward by me. This is a suggestion which was put forward by the government and which now is excluded from the request made by the Solicitor General. I am merely putting it on the record so that I may ask what has happened since the government originally requested that we consider item No. 104. The Secretary of State indicated that items numbered 104 and 105 are companion pieces and would be referred. I just took her at her word and asked that it be done in that way.

Mr. Pennell: While I accept the word of the hon. member for Skeena when he says this is not a proposition put forward by him, but rather one which came from this side of the house, I have entered into this discussion rather late and the impression I had after talking to my colleagues was that we should adopt the order I have put forward. I am in the hands of the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps first of all the house would like to decide what course we will follow in respect of private members' hour. Is it the desire of the house that the private members' hour be suspended?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, there is not much point in suspending the private members' hour if we are not able to decide on what business will be taken up in its place. I think I would be agreeable to the initial suggestion of the Solicitor General, namely that we consider items No. 117, No. 110 and No. 79 in that order, and then ask for a commitment by the house that at the first convenient opportunity, perhaps the private members' hour on Thursday next, we might consider the Canada Elections Act and election expenses. I can assure the minister that we in this group will not present any difficulty in respect of the speedy passage of that legislation.

Mr. Pennell: The generosity of the hon. member embarrasses me because I am not in a position to say yes, although I will give the matter very careful consideration and take it up later with the government house leader.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree that we suspend the private members' hour for the day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Howard.]

JUDGES ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION FOR ADDITIONAL COUNTY COURT APPOINTMENTS

Hon. L. T. Pennell (for the Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to provide salaries for one additional Ontario county court judge and one additional British Columbia county court judge.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I need not detain the house for more than a very short time. This is a short but not unimportant resolution. Its purpose is to authorize the provision of salaries for one additional county court judge of Ontario and one additional county court judge of British Columbia.

Provision for an additional county court judge of Ontario was made by legislation of that province in July of this year through an amendment to the County Judges Act.

In respect of the additional county court judge of British Columbia it is proposed that the appointment be made for the county court of Westminster county. Westminster county at the present time has two county court judges. The appointment of this additional judge was requested by the Attorney General of the province of British Columbia and by both judges of the county court in Westminster county.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, would the Solicitor General indicate where the county court judge for Ontario will be located? Will he be assigned to a particular county or is he to be an additional county court judge at large?

Mr. Pennell: If the bill to follow this resolution is passed the judge will be what we call a roving judge. I know that term is familiar to the hon. member for Carleton. The judge will not be assigned to any particular country.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Has any request been made for the appointment of additional judges for Ontario? I understand there may be some need for additional judges in the county of York as a result of the proposal that the Mechanics Lien Act be transferred from the supreme court to the county court?

Mr. Pennell: No formal request has been received in this regard. I believe such a request may have been delayed, and I want to be careful in this regard, because of the fact that there is a lack of facilities. I do not wish to criticize the government of Ontario because it has recently opened one of the finest courthouses in the country, but at the present time I understand that if additional judges were appointed there would not be facilities to accommodate them.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say before this resolution is agreed to that I have known certain county court judges very well during my somewhat lengthy residence in the Kootenays. I refer particularly to Mr. Justice Dawson, Mr. Justice J. O. Wilson, who is now in the Supreme Court of British Columbia. His Honour Judge Nathan Nemetz, and His Honour Judge Gansner, who is our present county court judge. I might add that all these gentlemen are highly regarded for their interest in civil rights.

I could not allow this resolution to be accepted without mentioning the esteemed services of these gentlemen. They are men of experience and integrity and are held in high regard by the people of British Columbia, and the people of the Kootenay in particular. I am sure the hon. member for Kootenay East will agree with me. For once we are in agreement.

All the people of British Columbia have great respect for these gentlemen who have made such a tremendous contribution to the administration of justice in British Columbia. They have also contributed to a great extent to the operation of democracy there. I have had personal experience with two of them on arbitration boards and on other matters relating to labour disputes, and I have found them most fair in dealing with these questions.

I might add that none of these men are well off. They have never made a fortune from law. They are the kind of people who very often, when they were acting as legal counsel represented people without fee. That is one reason I hold them in such high regard. They have all rendered a great deal of service to the province of British Columbia and in many instances to the people of the Kootenays.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a passing comment on this resolution, particularly in respect of the method of appointing judges. I am not familiar with the circumstances of any appointment to the bench, but I think it is a well known fact that in many cases the individuals appointed have had backgrounds which indicate an affiliation with a political party. We find that when the Liberal party has been in office those who have received appointments to the bench have a history of attachment to that party, and when the Conservative party was in office those who were appointed to the bench had a history of attachment to the Conservative party. I am not suggesting that this fact means in any way that these men were not good judges. I think in the majority of cases judges in Canada have been exemplary in their behaviour, regardless of the fact they were chosen because of political affiliation rather than ability in the field of law. These two qualities may go hand in hand and may be considered when an appointment is being made, but it seems to me that this practice should stop. The political affiliation of a lawyer should not be considered in any way when an appointment is being made.

It is our belief that when an appointment to the bench is being made in Canada consideration should be given to an individual's ability and his concept of fairness and justice, rather than whether or not he supports a political party. The associations or legal fraternities in each province should be consulted when an appointment is to be made. The bar associations or other legal groups should be asked to make recommendations in respect of individuals to be appointed to the bench when vacancies exist. By following such a procedure a lesser degree of concern as to the political affiliation of an individual would be in the minds of those making the appointments than has been the case in the past. I would appreciate any response the Solicitor General might wish to make in this regard.

Miss LaMarsh: What would the response be of the deputy leader of the hon. gentleman's party?

Mr. Howard: If the hon. lady wants to ask a question I suggest she do so in a way that we can hear her.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Miss LaMarsh: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would advise us as to what the response would be of the deputy leader of his party.

Mr. Howard: The deputy leader of my party is such a competent, able and forthright gentleman I do not feel capable to give any indication of his feeling about this matter. As my hon. friend the Secretary of State knows, he is perfectly able to present those views himself.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Howard: I would be the most surprised person in this house if the hon. member disagreed with what I was saying. Apart from that, Mr. Chairman, at this juncture we would certainly appreciate some comment from the Solicitor General, who is asking parliament to expand the number of judges to be appointed, one in British Columbia and one in Ontario. I think it behooves him, as a member of the government, to give us some indication of the intentions in the future.

I know that the Solicitor General is a very kind and gentle person. Probably with all sincerity and conviction he would be able to say that the farthest thing from his mind would be the politics of the person who might be appointed to any of these positions or any future positions which become vacant on the bench of our country in whatever section of the courts. But the Solicitor General, however kind and personable he is, is not likely to hold that office forever. We are legislating now for the future and for the appointment of people to subsequent positions on the bench. I think therefore that now would be an excellent time to explore some other possibility of appointment than that which exists at the moment.

My colleague the hon. member for York South has whispered to me—this was news to me until now—that the Canadian Bar Association has made the self-same proposal that I am now making. I am pleased to know that the Canadian Bar Association and I think alike at least in this instance. I am sure the association would like to have the views of the Solicitor General at this time with regard to the proposal that they have put forward.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Their proposal was equivalent but not "the self-same".

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. member that if the political service of the appointee was the only consideration, the system ought to be changed. But I submit to the committee, and I can only speak from my limited experience of the past two years, that the prime consideration—the committee will note that I did not say the "sole consideration"—is the competency of the individual to discharge the duties of a judge.

I can also inform the committee that it is the practice to have unofficial consultations with the law societies in the provinces before appointments are made. I must also point out that it is this parliament that has the responsibility for the appointment, not any law association or law society. If the appointee fails to discharge his functions in a judicial manner, the responsibility can be brought back and placed at the door of the government of the day. I agree with the hon. member that political service should not be the overriding factor in the selection of men to the bench, but I still contend that the responsibility ought to be kept within the confines of parliament.

Mr. Lewis: On this point, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the Solicitor General that his answer really cannot be satisfactory. Of course I have known, as most members of the bar in Ontario and elsewhere have known, about the unofficial discussions that take place. But would it not be a great deal better for the administration of justice, and the regard which the Canadian has for the administration of justice, if these discussions were not merely unofficial? Would it not be better if it were known to the people of Canada that a piece of machinery had been set up to make appointments to the bench more likely unrelated to the political association or political activities of the appointee?

After all, what is suggested here—and it has been suggested by the Canadian Bar Association and, if I remember correctly, by the Law Society of Upper Canada, the law society of Ontario—is something that in Britain has been recognized. I cannot say that it is embodied in legislation; I do not for the moment remember whether that is the case.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question at this point? Would there not be a risk—I am putting this proposition to him because he has been a member of the Canadian Bar Association and the law society of Ontario and has practised a good deal longer than I have—

Miss LaMarsh: The Law Society of Upper Canada.

Mr. Lewis: That is the official title.

Mr. Turner: I should think that in many cases the benchers do not feel they are living in Upper Canada—

Mr. Lewis: I agree.

Mr. Turner: —but in any event, would there not be a risk that if the choice of judges were left purely to law societies or bar associations—

Mr. Lewis: That is not the suggestion, Mr. Speaker, if I may say that, before the Minister without Portfolio continues. It is not the suggestion of the hon. member for Skeena, it is not my suggestion, and as far as I can recall it is not the suggestion of the Canadian Bar Association. I agree with the Solicitor General, and I imagine that what is implied in the aborted question of the Minister without Portfolio is that the responsibility for the appointment of judges must remain with the governor general in council and therefore answerable to this parliament. No one is arguing about that; no one is disagreeing with that.

What is being suggested, and I urge this on the government, is that it would be better for the administration of justice if some body were set up that was officially recognized for the purpose of consultation in this regard. I as one lawyer, am not at all sure that this consultative body should be limited to members of the bar. It is perhaps natural that a majority of the people on that body should be lawyers—perhaps not even a majority, but at all events there should be some lawyers on it who would be able to speak from their own association as to the legal abilities of a particular gentleman or number of gentlemen who were being considered for appointment. In my opinion there ought to be—I am not now speaking for any official lawyers body; I am not authorized, empowered or competent to do so because I am not a bencher or anything of that nature—a consultative body which has in its membership leading citizens of the community, people who are in a position to judge the character and attitudes of a panel of people being considered for appointment by the governor general in council.

I say to the Solicitor General that if this were the case, the kind of thing that is frequently heard across the country, the sort of feeling that men and women are appointed to the bench because of their political affiliation, would not be so prevalent. I am not for one moment suggesting that this has been in most cases the prime consideration, although every lawyer who has practised has had reason to wonder on some occasions whether it was not the prime consideration.

I am not for one moment suggesting that this has been the situation in a majority or even a substantial minority of cases. I am quite ready to accept, from my observations as a member of the bar, that the men and women appointed are people of ability and that ability was the primary concern in the minds of those responsible for the appointments. However, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that what the hon. member for Skeena has urged upon the Solicitor General is a sensible approach to this matter. In my opinion if the informal consultations were made more formal and there was a body to whom the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General, or whoever it may be, turned for advice, recommendations and comments, none of which ought in my opinion to be made public, the general attitude toward the appointment would be much better.

As far as I can see, there is no reason why such a body should not exist in this country. As I understand it, such a body now exists in the United Kingdom; that is the situation there, unless my memory has failed me, or I am misinformed. In the United Kingdom there is a body to which the government turns for advice and comments before the appointment of judges. Everybody knows that body exists, and the personnel of that body. In consequence of that, the feeling in Britain is, it seems to me, a much more ready acceptance of the fact that appointments are based on ability than I have, in my daily work with the people of Canada, found to be the case in this country. It would be very much worth while if we acted in such a way as to induce the belief in the people of Canada that, whatever the political affiliation may be, that is not the prime concern in appointments to the bench.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if I could follow with just a word or two about the expression by the Solicitor General that this parliament would be abdicating its responsibility by permitting someone else to make the appointment. I simply say that this is not my suggestion. My suggestion, if you recall, as was stated by the hon. member for York South, was for consultation. Certainly if there is consultation in an official way, and I do not know how you achieve that sort of thing, then why not have consultation in an official way? Then, it would be a recognized part of our procedure.

I have not suggested a new device. The unemployment insurance advisory committee comes to mind immediately as a group which the government appoints, but which is appointed officially only after consultation with representatives of the labour movement and of the management groups. In my own province of British Columbia, the members of the Labour Relations Board are appointed in that fashion. The trade union movement of British Columbia has been asked officially on a number of occasions to make recommendations when appointments had to be made. I think the rules were that three people were recommended and the government chose one, so that the labour body itself did not make the determination by recommending one person.

The bill with which we have been dealing in the last few days contains certain limiting provisions in connection with appointments. In one instance, the person appointed to the board to be set up under that bill must be a lawyer. This constitutes a restriction upon the prerogative of appointments. My suggestion is not a novel one and was not meant in the way the Solicitor General interpreted it.

May I ask the Solicitor General if he would be prepared to refer this bill to a committee in order that representative bodies, such as the Canadian Bar Association, could appear before the committee to present their case, and the Solicitor General could present his case, to ascertain whether or not a meeting of minds could be reached? The committee of the whole house is rather an unwieldy body in which to consider something of this nature. If the minister would be prepared to do that following second reading, we might make excellent progress with this bill.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Each resolution of this type provokes a discussion of the type we have just had. Unfortunately the inference is frequently left that there is some inadequacy in the bench as it exists in Canada today. I want to dispute that as vigorously as I can and say that in my opinion we are greatly favoured in Canada by the quality of the bench we have at all levels. I do not believe any country enjoys a higher standard of intellect or integrity than we have generally among our judges in Canada. This needs to be said and said on every occasion.

I want to say further that I have never been one to believe that because a man participated in public affairs or in the politics of any particular party, he ought thereby to be eliminated from further public service. I consider service on the bench to be one of the highest forms of public service, but the service in any political party, I care not which political party, is a very high service and is a qualification for future public service. I believe this needs to be said because one problem is that too few people in the legal profession do participate in the public affairs of their own community.

Mr. Peters: You cannot campaign for bencher here.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am long past campaigning for bencher. The only time I did, I was successful and I expect never to run again.

We should not have words spoken in this house which would discourage members of the legal profession from taking part in politics or feeling that by reason of taking part in politics they may possibly prejudice their chances in the future of achieving a position on the bench of this country. If that inference were to be left, I think it would be very bad for the bench of this country. I have had the privilege of knowing a great many ministers of justice in Canada. I believe that every one of them has taken his responsibilities very seriously. Indeed, they have spent agonizing hours considering appointments to the bench and considering the responsibility that goes with their recommendation to cabinet. I have sat in cabinet meetings and I have watched members of the administration take part in these discussions. I assure you these discussions were not related to politics but to the qualities of the individual and whether he had those qualities which would make a good judge.

There is no doubt it is wise to have discussions with members of the bar association. However, I do not believe that any minister of justice or any cabinet of this country could abdicate their responsibility to any provincial or any national bar association. There are cliques in the Canadian Bar Association; there are cliques in the Law Society of Upper Canada and the Law Society of British Columbia, just as there are in any other association. I do not believe any responsible cabinet in this country should delegate its authority to some body which has no responsibility to the people whatever and is responsible only to a small group. Consult as much as you wish. I believe ministers of justice in the past have, and will continue to do so. However, abdication to some other organization I say to you, sir, is simply not good enough. We should not permit anything of the sort.

I rose only to say, and I repeat, that I think we have in this country a first class bench and we should proclaim that fact on every occasion.

Mr. Howard: No one suggested anything but a consultative body. The eloquence of the hon. member for Carleton only moves me to say that was one of the finest red herring speeches I have heard for some time.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Pennell thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-262, to amend the Judges Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time? Now?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I think it should be read a second time on another day. I say that because one of my colleagues has a particular interest in it, and unfortunately is not here because he did not have notice of the desire to proceed with it. It would be much appreciated if the bill could be read a second time on another day.

Mr. Pennell: I appreciate the hon. member's point and I am prepared to accept his request.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Next sitting of the house.

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION FOR INCORPORATION THROUGH LETTERS PATENT

Hon. John N. Turner (for the Registrar General) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-51, to amend the Canada Corporations Act to facilitate the incorporation by letters patent of corporations without objects of pecuniary gain.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Is the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) going to make a statement on this bill?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I will make a short statement.

The purpose of the bill is to allow an alternative means of incorporating companies without objects of pecuniary gain. These are, as will be found in the explanatory notes, corporations having objects of a national, patriotic, religious, philanthropic, charitable, scientific, artistic, social, professional or sporting character, or the like objects.

At the moment, Mr. Speaker, these incorporations must be brought before the House of Commons and dealt with in private members' hour, unless their membership is drawn from or their business carried on in more than one province, within the meaning of the present section 144 of the Canada Corporations Act. So that what it does is to open up an alternative procedure for incorporation. It allows bodies of this nature to go before the Registrar General's department by way of letters patent under an ordinary incorporation proceeding. The alternative of coming before parliament will, of course, still be open to them.

The reason this cannot be done now is that the words of the present section, as I have said, maintain that the purposes must envisage that the objects are carried on in more than one province of Canada. New words are now substituted, and they are "to which the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends".

Before the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Saumur case, it used to be thought that the parliament of Canada had no jurisdiction over, say, religious bodies unless they did carry on business in more than one province, because it was felt that the property and civil rights clause under head 13 of section 92 of the British North America Act gave the provinces exclusive jurisdiction and authority over religious bodies. Since the Saumur case it is now clear that the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction, and these words are now changed to "to which the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends", replacing the more limiting words "carrying on in more than one province of Canada".

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) is pinch-hitting for the Registrar General and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Favreau) and I should like to take a moment to say how much I regret that the Registrar General has been compelled to surrender some of his responsibilities, and how much all of us are looking forward to his return to the house. We hope that his health will be fully restored and that he will be able to take up his duties with the full vigour and intellect for which he is noted.

The purposes of the bill have been stated by the Minister without Portfolio. It relieves the house of the need for dealing with private bills which relate only to matters within one province of Canada. My concern, sir, is that this bill may do much more than it was ever intended to do. I fear that in its draftsmanship something may have happened which perhaps will definitely restrict what has been the previous authority to issue letters patent for corporations of a national, patriotic, religious, philanthropic and charitable nature—what we normally call the Part II companies.

Canada Corporations Act Amendment

Legislative authority in respect of incorporation is, of course, divided between the dominion and the provinces. There are some kinds of corporations which can be incorporated by the dominion and cannot be incorporated by the provinces, and vice versa. Section 92 of the British North America Act, subsection 11, provides that the provinces have the right over——the incorporation of companies with provincial objects.

There is no mention whatever of incorporation in section 91 except in subsection (15), which deals with the incorporation of banks. However, it has been held by the Privy Council in the leading cases on corporation law—the John Deere Plough v. Wharton case, Bonanza Creek Goldmining v. The King and Great West Saddlery Co. v. The King—that there is within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada, and by delegation to the government of Canada, the power to issue letters patent covering corporations which I venture to suggest have authority in fields much beyond the legislative jurisdiction of this parliament.

In other words, I suggest that the position is that there is power in this parliament under its residual authority to invest in a corporation the status of a person, although the objects may be under the legislative jurisdiction of a province.

I should like to mention the type of corporation which has consistently been incorporated by letters patent under Part II, and which I think may well be now restricted by this particular legislation. I mention, for example, the Canadian Teachers Federation. All of the objects of the Canadian Teachers Federation are under the exclusive authority of the province; yet the Canadian Teachers Federation has been incorporated by letters patent issued by the Secretary of State of Canada.

I could also mention the Canadian Association of Universities and Colleges and the Canadian Guild of Dispensing Opticians. In no case are the objects of these corporations within the legislative jurisdiction of this parliament, but they are incorporated by the Secretary of State pursuant to legislative authority conferred by this parliament.

I might also mention the Canadian Bible Society, the Canadian Association of University Teachers, the Canadian Cancer Society, the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, the Canadian Construction Association, the Canadian Good Roads Association, the Canada Foundation, the Canadian Association of the Deaf, the Canadian Association of Fire Chiefs, the Canadian Association for Retarded Children, the Canadian Authors Association, the Canadian Historical Association, the Canadian Mental Health Association, the Canadian Political Science Association—and so, on and on one could go. In most of these cases the objects of these corporations created by letters patent issued by the Secretary of State are exclusively provincial in nature.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are we saying in this legislation? Let me ask you to put in contrast the provisions of the old section 144, which gave authority to the Registrar General by letters patent to create:

—a body corporate and politic, without share capital, for the purpose of carrying on in more than one province of Canada without pecuniary gain to its members, objects of a national patriotic, religious,— —and so on—

—character—

What are we saying now, Mr. Speaker? We are saying in the proposed amendment that this may be done in relation to:

—"objects, to which the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends."

• (5:50 p.m.)

I should like the minister to tell me how the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends to any of the objects of the Canadian Teachers Federation. How does the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extend to the objects of the Canadian Guild of Dispensing Opticians. How does it extend to the objects of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind? It has been consistently assumed that there was residual authority, both under the opening powers of section 91, and under the trade and commerce powers, which enabled this parliament to create a corporation and to give it the legal status of a person, but that the objects of such corporations might be objects to which the legislative authority of the provinces solely would extend.

If I am right about this, then we are doing more by this legislation than ever was intended. I am worried that we may possibly be restricting in future the power of incorporation by letters patent of national organizations which play an important part in our national life because it may be argued by some that the legislative authority of this parliament does not extend to the objects of such organizations, particularly those in the professions.

Earlier we talked of the Canadian Bar Association. It may well be that national professional organizations can no longer be incorporated, as a result of this measure. That concerns me. I hope the minister can relieve my fears. Otherwise I must oppose this bill to the limit.

Mr. Knowles: Could I ask the hon. member a question? Would he consider that a comma after the word "objects" might make a difference in his argument? Let me put it this way. If the legislative authority of parliament refers to objects only, it seems to me he has a point. But if, after the word "objects", there is a comma, then several different things are strung together by the word "or". Does that little comma not make a difference to his argument?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I think not, Mr. Speaker. The word "objects" is completely qualified by the words "to which the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends".

Mr. Knowles: What about the rest of the clause?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes, I appreciate the hon. member's words. The rest of the clause reads:

—of a national, patriotic, religious, philanthropic, charitable, scientific, artistic, social, professional or sporting character, or the like—

I cannot see how there can be any conflict, any confusion in the interpretation. The objects will be qualified by the words, "to which the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends". These are the only matters where it would be possible for the Registrar General to incorporate by letters patent.

I hope I am proved wrong. I do not want, under the pretext of relieving this house of responsibility to enact private bills in any way to confine what has been the clear authority of the Secretary of State and the Registrar General evidenced on previous occasions.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I wish to say a few words in answer to the argument of the hon. member for Carleton. I suggest that for some time we have done what he opposes. It matters not, in my opinion whether this is a private bill, a private act of parliament establishing the National Boys Scout Organization, or whether there are letters patent doing the same thing. The point is that we have cluttered up the order paper with things that should not be on it. We have asked Catholics to approve of the church of God, or of the Baptist church, and we have asked Baptists to approve Catholic churches, or the like. We have asked hon. members to endorse, for instance, the International Organization of Endocrinologists—one can hardly pronounce the word.

The hon. member for Carleton did not oppose those private bills. He opposes the setting up of a body, of an agency of parliament more competent to deal with these private bills than we, in the house are. Many of these matters must be carefully looked into.

Let me give an example. Not long ago an organization that in my opinion would control hundreds of millions of dollars sought incorporation. Neither the parliamentary agent responsible to the Speaker, nor the representatives of the organization, were able to present resolutions from the organization, provincial or national, to show that the four or five people appearing were not in fact alone in asking for the incorporation, which would give them control of the organization's assets.

I have had discussions with the hon. member for Carleton. He convinced me that some agencies, and I speak in the non-legal sense, could be handled in a better way than they are now being handled. The agencies included in this bill were not those against which he raised a legitimate argument. We ought to make a change so that these incorporations can be carried out in a better manner than they are at present carried out. If this bill is not passed I shall expect to see the hon. member for Carleton taking a much more active role in individual incorporations than he has taken up to now.

I think this measure is a forward step and one that members of parliament ought to support. A private bill ought to be handled by an agency perhaps, more competent to process it than we are. I have been referring to the incorporation of non-financial institutions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): On division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Richard in the chair.

Canada Corporations Act Amendment

On clause 1.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I expect a reply from the minister. I was not prepared to grant second reading, with the qualms I have, without an explanation from the minister.

Mr. Turner: May I reply briefly to the constitutional point raised by the hon. member for Carleton. I took the precaution of obtaining an opinion from the legal officers of the crown on the point the hon. member has raised. In the opinion of the legal officers the amendment contemplated to section 144 (1) extends the power, the current power, of the Registrar General's department in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court rendered in the Saumur case. In this way, under the present act, only a non-pecuniary corporation carrying on activities in more than one province would qualify for letters patent under the Registrar General's department. Otherwise the matter would go before parliament.

Any such organization drawn generally from the membership in Canada as a whole, not limited to any province but not necessarily bound to carry on its activities in more than one province, would now qualify for letters patent.

The question asked by the hon. member for Carleton was this: Would this mean parliament would be granting to the Registrar General's department authority to usurp provincial jurisdiction in that it would allow national associations of professional people normally under provincial jurisdiction to incorporate it under federal charter.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It is really the reverse. My point was the fear that the Registrar General would not have that authority.

Mr. Turner: It adds up to the same thing. I am advised that despite the fact that the professions or associations involved would, if it is a matter of disciplinary action, be governed by a provincial legislature, there is nothing to prevent doctors, teachers or dentists or members of the bar uniting in a national body and thereby coming under federal jurisdiction, because the action contemplated is not the activity of teaching or of being a doctor but of associating with fellow professionals or fellow students, and this is clearly within the authority of parliament.

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

If there were any object of the association seeking incorporation which included licensing, or qualification of members, or discipline, which come under provincial jurisdiction, those objects would have to be stricken out before letters patent were granted or before parliament could give its consent.

In conclusion, I am advised that the proposed amendment enlarges the powers under section 144 of the Canada Corporations Act and would not prevent the incorporation of corporations whose objects, being of the character described or a like character, involved the bringing together in an association, without shares and without pecuniary gain to members, of persons of a like profession, occupation or interest within Canada, as distinct from being within one province.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It will, of course, be obvious that I have discussed this matter with members of the government who shared my fears. I just want to have an unqualified undertaking from the Acting Registrar General that the inclusion in this legislation of the words "to which the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends" would not in any way prevent the incorporation by letters patent of such bodies as have previously been incorporated—the Canadian Teachers Federation, the Canadian Guild of Dispensing Opticians, the Bible Society, the Cancer Society and similar organizations?

Mr. Turner: Within the limits of the hon. gentleman's remarks and of my understand- I can give that undertaking.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles: Now, by leave.

Mr. Turner moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Rapp: May I ask the acting leader of the house to inform us what the business of the house will be on Monday next?

Mr. Turner: Acting for the acting house leader I should like to inform hon. members that the order of business on Monday will be, first, item 92, the transport bill. If somehow we complete our discussion of that measure we will call item 79, the C.N.R. financing bill, and in the third instance item 84, the Interpretation Act.

It being eight minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

WHEAT BOARD STATEMENT RESPECTING FINAL PAYMENTS

The Canadian Wheat Board today announced the final payment on wheat delivered to the board during the crop year 1965-66.

Producers delivered a total of 559,790,073 bushels of wheat to the board in the 1965-66 crop year which included 18,369 bushels of Durum wheat. The amount of the final payment to be distributed to producers is $270,-028,575 of which $9,948,861 will be distributed to producers who delivered Durum wheat. This is not a payment by the government of Canada, but represents the net returns of the Canadian Wheat Board in the marketing of western Canadian wheat for the 1965-66 crop year.

The average final payment for wheat other than Durum is 48.087 cents per bushel. The average final payment for Durum wheat is 52.549 cents per bushel.

The board will commence issuing final payment cheques to producers on January 17, 1967.

The final payment is being made on a grade basis as prescribed in the Canadian Wheat Board Act. The rates of final payment for the principal grades of wheat are as follows:

Red Spring Wheat grades:	Final Payment (cents per bushel)
No. 1 Manitoba Northern	49.202
No. 2 Manitoba Northern	50.138
No. 3 Manitoba Northern	45.806
No. 4 Manitoba Northern	47.253
No. 5 Wheat	53.559
No. 6 Wheat	56.034
Feed Wheat	57.148

Amber Durum grades:	Final Payment (cents per bushel)
No. 1 C.W. Amber Durum	53.188
No. 2 C.W. Amber Durum	54.284
No. 3 C.W. Amber Durum	51.952
Extra No. 4 C.W. Amber Durum	53.407
No. 4 C.W. Amber Durum	51.723
No. 5 C.W. Amber Durum	51.045
No. 6 C.W. Amber Durum	53.390

Monday, January 16, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

MARITIME TRANSPORTATION UNIONS TRUSTEES ACT

EXTENSION OF PROVISIONS TO DECEMBER 31, 1967

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies in English and French of the proclamation extending to December 31 next the Maritime Transportation Unions Trustees Act under which a board of trustees was set up with respect to certain maritime unions. I ask the consent of the house that this be made an appendix to Hansard. I do so because the act provides that this proclamation shall be laid before parliament within a limited number of days.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of document referred to above, see appendix.]

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last I informed the house that at an early date I would make a statement, on motions, concerning this proclamation, and I think it appropriate to make such a statement at this time. When my predecessor, now the Minister of National Health and Welfare, introduced the legislation establishing the trusteeship, a serious situation had developed which affected not only the unions and their members, but the whole shipping industry of the vital international waterways of the St. Lawrence seaway and the great lakes.

In this connection hon. members will recall vividly the disruption that occurred in 1962 and 1963, the investigation by Mr. Justice Norris, and its aftermath. The legislation was passed in October, 1963. As I recall, only four members opposed the motion for second reading, and on third reading there was unanimous consent to passage. In its preamble the legislation draws attention to the emergency situation, to the consequent threat to the economy of Canada and to our international relations, and to the necessity for peace, order and good government on the seaway, in the ports, and on the seacoast of Canada.

It was further stated in the preamble that the democratic processes within a certain maritime transportation union had been undermined, and it was recommended that a trusteeship be established to enable the seamen to assume control of their organizations.

From the outset in October, 1963, the trustees have assiduously pursued this and other objectives in the interests of the seamen and the industry, and their annual reports tabled in parliament record the tasks and projects that they established and the progress made.

Their ultimate objective has been and will continue to be the settlement of the basic causes of the unrest which disrupted shipping, and not merely to deal with the symptoms of such unrest which occur from time to time.

In their reports to parliament the board of trustees characterized the fundamental causes of the disruption of shipping as (1) rivalry among the unions and their inability to co-operate or agree on a method of settlement of their problems; (2) an obvious lack of cohesion or co-operation among the employers; (3) the hiring hall arrangements in the maritime transportation industry.

Associated with this latter problem are questions arising out of the manning of ships, the education, training and certification of seamen, and labour turnover. Although limited in effect, these questions still pose serious difficulties for the industry and must be resolved, preferably during the current year 1967.

I am happy to say that progress has been made toward co-operation among the unions, unity among the employers and toward communication among the unions with each other and with the association of employers. The trustees have proved to be a unifying influence. They notified me, however, during the last week of the year just past that several of their objectives have not been fully realized. In my opinion it would be most unfortunate if, for want of time, the work now well advanced were not completed and was ultimately undone, with resulting further disturbances in the industry.

The question of whether the act should be extended was considered by the government on December 29, and the decision was then reached that it was desirable that the trustees be given a further limited period—and I stress the word "limited"—in which to complete the objectives they have established as beneficial for the unions and for the maritime industry generally. The additional time will afford the trustees an opportunity to phase out their operations in an orderly way. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that hon. members and the public generally will be interested and gratified to know that from a high of 32 the staff of the trustees is now only nine, so it will be seen that during the past months the trustees have made real progress in their efforts to wind up their activities.

I am happy to say that the chairman of the board of trustees, Judge Rene Lippe, and the other two members, Messrs. Charles Millard and Joseph Mackenzie, have agreed to continue to serve during the extended term. As results indicate, so far they have done a good job in the national interest, and I would like to extend to them the thanks of the government and, I am sure, of parliament for their work. I might say in closing that this limited extension of time cannot, as has been feared by some, operate to interfere with the collective bargaining due to take place in the industry later this year.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): The minister has today repeated an announcement which was made in the newspapers a few weeks ago, namely that the period of the maritime trusteeship is to be extended for a further term of one year.

It is difficult to avoid the conclusion that there must have been misunderstanding, laxity and divergence of opinion among the trustees if, after three years, a further period of one year is required during which the unions are to be held under trusteeship. In my opinion, and in the opinion of those who have followed this situation closely, no reforms of any significance have been effected by the trustees with respect to the unions. If this had been the case there would have been no need to extend the trusteeship for a further year.

As a matter of fact there have been marked differences of opinion among the trustees themselves. Parliament has found it very difficult to obtain any information from them; the standing committee on industrial relations endeavoured to do so a year or two ago, but without success.

We were unable to elicit any information from the members of the trustee board as to the conduct of elections and other vital important matters which we felt we had a right to know, and that the Canadian public had a right to know. If they had made any reforms during the three years they have been in existence they would have been glad to give this information to members of parliament in the standing committee on industrial relations.

One of the first things the maritime trustees allowed and gave sanction to was the violation of the constitution in respect to elections. The executive of the S.I.U. is exactly the same now as it was prior to the establishment of the board of trustees, except that Mr. Hal Banks is not there any longer and nothing is being done about him.

There has been no guarantee at all of a reformed union so far as the S.I.U. is concerned. This is borne out by the fact that even the Canadian Labour Congress has not made any move toward further affiliation of the S.I.U. within its membership. Now we shall have another year of trusteeship, and if that year is not any more productive than the past three years then I think it will have been a waste of money, because after that period we shall be back to where we were in 1963.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, it is some two and a half weeks since the proclamation was issued, and a week since parliament resumed its session. I think the time lapse between those two events and the statement today explains perfectly the background for the action being taken by the government, because it has obviously taken that length of time to draft this statement to attempt to explain the inexplicable.

I believe the minister said the main reason for the extension of the trusteeship was that it would be a unifying influence, and the trustees had notified him that several of their objectives had not been met. Therefore I think the responsibility rests on the shoulders of the minister to explain to the house in detail what these objectives are that have not been met. He did not take the opportunity to do that today; I hope he will at some future time.

In passing I might say that the extension of the trusteeship, which is certainly not acceptable to me, probably could have been prevented had the Canadian Labour Congress, instead of dragging its feet, acted favourably on the application which one of the unions under trusteeship made for reaffiliation with that central labour body. Also in passing, if I could make reference to a brief submitted to the Minister of Labour on November 22, 1966, by the Dominion Marine Association, a body of companies in the shipping industry, we might get some insight into the real reason for the imposition of another year of trusteeship. At page 3 of their brief the Dominion Marine Association said:

> The member companies of D.M.A. consider it would be futile to enter into collective bargaining negotiations with the S.I.U. until the problems arising out of implementation of the code—

That is the Canada Labour (Standards) Code.

> —are disposed of.

This was a declaration by the Dominion Marine Association that it was not too interested in entering into the collective bargaining processes, regardless of what the law says. I think this truly indicates the reason for the extension of the trusteeship, namely that the government desires that there be some sort of tranquilizing imposition upon the negotiations coming up later this year in the hope that the results of those negotiations will more nearly meet the desires of the D.M.A. and the government, and consequently will mean less to the employees working in the industry.

It is interesting to note that the minister said there were certain matters relating to safety, the manning of ships and the like which were also reasons for the extension of the trusteeship. So far as I am concerned this is a bit of an insult to the Minister of Transport from the Minister of Labour, because there rests within the hands of the Minister of Transport the responsibility by law of dealing with matters of manning and safety at sea, things which he has pushed to one side or dragged his feet on for some months. It is a sad state of affairs when one minister has to drag himself up with the help of another to justify the imposition of the trusteeship.

There is perhaps one good feature now that the damage has been done; that is the same gentlemen who were on the board of trustees will continue in that position. I say this because it would be absolutely chaotic if a new group of trustees had to come along in the midst of everything and start all over again. It is for this reason that there might be something good in the announcement made today.

I should like to ask the minister whether he would be willing to table the correspondence between himself and the members of the board of trustees relating to the extension. I should like him to table both his letter and their response. May I sum up by saying that in listening to the minister's statement I was reminded quite a bit of the material used in a kitchen called saran wrap; because certainly the statement was flimsy, obviously transparent and, like saran wrap, covers up that which is inside which has a malodorous air to it.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the continuation of the trusteeship for another year must be greeted with a certain disquiet considering the length of time which has gone by since the trusteeship first was set up. I am sure the Canadian public does not wish to see a return to the situation which originally produced the trusteeship. I feel they would hope that the extension is not something which is going to put the matter to sleep for another year, and that at the conclusion of that period the problem will rise again with all its difficulties. One would hope that this additional time will be used to finalize some of the problems which still exist regarding that group of unions and the transport industry on the great lakes and the seaway. We know the government has not yet made up its mind in respect of the extradition of Mr. Banks from the United States and the possible injection of that personality back into the whole issue in the coming year. This is a matter of considerable concern.

One would hope that without any legislation being passed, possibly the unions of this country would set terms which would limit the years in office of some of the persons who manage under the present set-up to gain control of the unions and remain in office too long, with neither the unions nor the government of Canada having any power over them. I trust that the year's extension will be used to the greatest possible benefit in settling this issue.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING USE OF SMALL TYPE IN CONTRACTS, ETC.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved the first reading of Bill No. C-263, to amend the Criminal Code (fine print clauses).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to eliminate the trouble which so often is caused by fine print or small type in contracts. The bill would amend the Criminal Code to make illegal publication of clauses in policies, contracts or deeds in small typographical characters with intent to delude the purchaser concerning the limitations in the benefits. "Fine print" in this context means type smaller than the main body of the print of the contracts. The entire aim of the bill is to protect the consumer.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CORPORATION AND PERSONAL INCOME TAX

Question No. 1,675—Mr. Irvine:

1. What was the amount of individual income tax collected by the federal government from each province in Canada in each year from 1955 to 1965 inclusive?

2. During that same period, what was the amount of corporation tax collected from each province in each year?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. Individual income tax collected by the federal government from each province in Canada, based on amounts collected in the district offices located in each province, are shown in the following publications as noted: Fiscal years 1955 and 1956: Taxation statistics 1960, page 18. Fiscal years 1957 to 1962 inclusive: Taxation statistics 1962, page 18. Fiscal years 1963 to 1965: Not available because payments and refunds processed by the taxation data centre in Ottawa relate to all provinces and district office collection figures, therefore, do not indicate correctly the amount collected in each province.

2. Corporation income tax collected by the federal government from each province, based on amounts collected in the district offices located in each province, are shown in taxation statistics for fiscal years 1955 to 1962. The references are the same as given above in answer to 1. Figures for fiscal years 1963 to 1965 are given below, including old age security tax and provincial income tax except as noted.

	Fiscal Year Ended March 31
	1963	1964	1965
		$ million
Newfoundland	12.5	14.2	22.5
P.E.I.	2.4	2.3	2.6
Nova Scotia	16.3	16.8	18.6
New Brunswick	12.3	13.1	15.4
*Quebec	402.5	432.1	498.1
*Ontario	654.4	700.6	867.3
Manitoba	49.1	47.1	72.0
Saskatchewan	13.2	15.0	18.1
Alberta	71.5	81.1	100.5
British Columbia	128.3	149.6	189.2

* Does not include taxes levied and collected by the province directly.

[Mr. Mather.]

* QUINIDINE SULPHATE—INCREASE IN PRICE OF DRUG

Question No. 1,845—Mr. Haidasz:

Regarding the answer to part 6 of starred question No. 1,647, does the government intend to take any steps to investigate and remedy the high increase in the price, during the past year, of a cardiac drug, quinidine sulphate, from $4 to $19 per 100 tablets?

Hon. John N. Turner (Member of the Administration): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is that the matter has been referred to the director of investigation and research under the Combines Investigation Act in order that he may consider whether formal inquiry under this act is warranted.

* POST OFFICE EMPLOYEES, LONDON, ONT.

Question No. 2,086—Mr. Irvine:

1. What is the total number of employees of the London post offices and London district office?

2. How many come under the Civil Service Commission?

3. How many are employed by the Post Office Department as opposed to the civil service?

4. What job security do each of these groups enjoy, in detail?

5. Are any grade clerks receiving pay at the rate of lesser grades than the one at which they are employed and, if so (a) how many (b) list in detail giving reasons?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is 514. An indeterminate number of persons working as casuals are in the London post office from time to time as needed. The answer to part 2 is 514. The answer to part 3 is that all are employed under the authority of the Civil Service Act. The answer to part 4 is, according to the terms and conditions of employment as provided under the Civil Service Act and the civil service regulations. The answer to part 5 is none.

INDIAN ARTICLES IN NATIONAL MUSEUM

Question No. 2,124—Mr. Howard:

1. What is the value of all articles, items, utensils, carvings, etc., of Canadian Indian origin in the possession of the National Museum of Canada?

2. What has been the increase in value of these possessions over the past ten years?

3. Is any assessment available of the deterioration of these possessions over the past ten years and, if so, what are the details of that assessment?

4. What steps, by way of humidifying apparatus or otherwise, are being taken to preserve or protect these possessions?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. It is not possible to set a monetary value on the varied items in the anthropological collections of the National Museum of Canada. Basically, value of any object is the price which it would fetch if it were sold in the market. For rare books, prints etc. booksellers and art dealers commonly accept as a standard price the money paid for an identical book or print at the last auction at which one changed hands. But the artifacts in the National Museum are mainly things that were individually made; as such, they have no identical twins by whose prices at auctions a value could be established; and so this method of valuing National Museum collections fails.

A number of the objects in our collections have, of course, been purchased at various dates. But the total of their purchase prices would not amount to the value of our collections, for various reasons, of which the chief is that a list of such prices would be very incomplete because it would contain no account of donations or objects collected in the field. A very large percentage of the museum's artifacts were either given by donors or collected in the field, so that no monetary price has ever been attached to them; and very many which were purchased were acquired at dates whose dollar values bear no relation to those of today.

2. It is impossible to determine the increase in value of the museum's possessions over the last 10 years.

3. No assessment is available of the deterioration of the specimens during the last 10 years.

4. Humidifying equipment has been placed in the ethnology storage areas where there are artifacts and specimens which would otherwise dry out. The equipment which we have is the best that can be provided. This equipment which was installed in July of 1961 consists of 6-4,000 watt immersion heaters blower type humidifiers.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—USE OF MAPLE LEAF DESIGN

Question No. 2,161—Mr. Webb:

What are the "more important places" referred to by the Postmaster General, November 1, page 9368 of Hansard, to which the maple leaf with P.C. or C.P. on it would be "acceptable" in place of the Canadian coat of arms?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Within the full context of the reference on page 9368 of Hansard November 1, the more important places would be mail boxes, mail trucks, mail bags and stationery.

COST OF REPAIRS TO C.N.R. BRIDGE, QUEBEC

Question No. 2,170—Mr. Godin:

1. What was the cost of the major repairs carried out in 1947-48 to the C.N.R. bridge at mile 93.5, Latuque subdivision, province of Quebec?

2. What is the name of the firm that carried out these repairs?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. Approximately $120,000.

2. Intrusion-Prepakt Ltd.

H. J. O'CONNELL LTD.—INCOME TAX APPEAL

Question No. 2,185—Mr. Brewin:

1. Was counsel for the Minister of National Revenue instructed in the appeal before the tax appeal board entitled between appellant, H. J. O'Connell Limited and Minister of National Revenue, respondent, to submit that the expenses in the amount of $300,824.90 which were deducted from the appellant's statement of surplus under the heading of "promotion" and described as having been incurred for solicited contributions made to both political parties either provincial or federal in order to obtain contracts were not deductible expenses?

2. Did the tax appeal board allow or disallow the said expenditures from the appellant's taxable income?

3. If the answer to the above question is that the deduction was allowed, does the Minister of National Revenue intend to appeal from the said decision?

4. What are the details of the "solicited contributions" referred to in the reasons for judgment of the tax appeal board and what are the details of the contracts granted to the appellant company by the government of Canada or any agency thereof, giving services provided and the amounts involved?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. No.

2. No. The right of the appellant to deduct expenses of the nature described in question 1 in computing income for tax purposes was not in issue before the tax appeal board. Such expenses were not, in fact, deducted for income tax purposes.

3. See answer to question 2.

4. The Minister of National Revenue does not have the details requested. Upon being satisfied that the expenses were not deducted in computing taxable income and were not paid to a person liable to pay tax, the details of the expenditures are of no concern to the Department of National Revenue (taxation).

TAX APPEAL BOARD

Question No. 2,223—Mr. Grégoire:

1. Do the persons appointed to hear appeals to the tax appeal board hold the office of a judge and (a) if so, what are the qualifications necessary for appointment to hear such appeals (b) if not, what official status do they hold?

2. How many members are on the tax appeal board?

3. For every member of the board (a) what official function does he hold as member of the board (b) before his appointment to the board, to what profession did he belong?

4. How many other employees or officers work for the board in each employment classification?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. No. (a) not applicable. (b) chairman, assistant chairman and members.

2. Six.

3. (a) chairman, assistant chairman and four members. (b) All six belonged to the legal profession.

4. Three registrars, 12 administrative support, one operational.

DISPOSITION OF APPEALS, TAX APPEAL BOARD

Question No. 2,224—Mr. Grégoire:

With reference to subsection (1) of section 92 of the Income Tax Act, how many times over the last five years has the tax appeal board disposed of an appeal (a) by dismissing it (b) by allowing it, and, if an appeal has been allowed (i) by disallowing the assessment (ii) by varying the assessment (iii) by referring the assessment back to the minister for reconsideration and reassessment?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): (a) 1,291, (b) 1,301 (i) 632 (ii) 9 (iii) 660.

INCOME TAX APPEAL BOARD

Question No. 2,226—Mr. Grégoire:

In connection with the internal operations of the Income Tax Appeal Board, in the last five years (a) how many times has the board met (b) who is required to attend these meetings (c) is the minister responsible supposed to receive a copy of the minutes of these meetings (d) what are the principal matters dealt with at these meetings?

[Mr. Benson.]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): (a) Four; (b) members and registrars; (c) no; (d) administrative policies and legal problems pertaining to sittings, hearings and judgments.

HEARING OFFICER, INCOME TAX APPEALS

Question No. 2,227—Mr. Grégoire:

1. Under section 86, subsection 10 of the Income Tax Act, what is the particular role of the hearing officer?

2. In what way does his role differ from that of the other members of the Income Tax Appeal Board?

3. In each of the last five years, how many hearing officers were appointed by the governor in council?

4. How long does a hearing officer remain in office?

5. Before being named hearing officer, must a person have been a member or officer of the board?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. There has never been a hearing officer appointed under this section.

2, 3, 4, and 5. Not applicable.

INCOME TAX APPEAL BOARD HEARINGS

Question No. 2,228—Mr. Grégoire:

1. In the last five years, in which cities has the Income Tax Appeal Board heard appeals?

2. Are the board's movements governed by a set schedule and (a) if so, what is it (b) if not, what are the factors which determine the various cities in which the board will sit?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. Belleville, Calgary, Charlottetown, Edmonton, Fort William-Port Arthur, Halifax, Hamilton, Kingston, Kitchener-Waterloo, London, Montreal, Ottawa, Penticton, Quebec, Regina, Rouyn, St. Catharines, Saint John, St. John's, Saskatoon, Sherbrooke, Sudbury, Sydney, Toronto, Trois-Rivières, Vancouver, Victoria, Windsor, Winnipeg.

2. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) The number of appeals to be heard in each centre.

EXPENSES OF WITNESSES, TAX APPEAL BOARD

Question No. 2,229—Mr. Grégoire:

With reference to section 91, subsection (3) of the Income Tax Act, who meets the travel expenses incurred by witnesses called to give evidence by the tax appeal board?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): The party calling the witness.

TAX APPEAL BOARD OFFICES

Question No. 2,230—Mr. Grégoire:

In what Canadian cities or towns does the tax appeal board have offices or permanent quarters?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Ottawa.

TAX APPEAL BOARD HEARINGS

Question No. 2,231—Mr. Grégoire:

1. How many cases have been heard each year by the tax appeal board since its creation?

2. During each of the past ten years (a) how many of its judgments were appealed before the Exchequer Court of Canada (i) by the Minister of National Revenue (ii) by the other party (b) how many judgments, appealed before the Exchequer Court of Canada, have (i) reversed the judgments by the board (ii) confirmed the judgments by the board?

3. Out of the total number of cases heard by the board over the past ten years (a) how many were appealed before the Supreme Court of Canada (b) how many judgments by the Supreme Court of Canada have (i) reversed the judgments by the board (ii) confirmed the judgments by the board?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. 1949, 37; 1950, 209; 1951, 289; 1952, 211; 1953, 278; 1954, 230; 1955, 239; 1956, 194; 1957, 261; 1958, 273; 1959, 295; 1960, 299; 1961, 260; 1962, 193; 1963, 240; 1964, 216; 1965, 268; 1966, 251 (to Nov. 30).

2. (a)(i): 1956-57, 17; 1957-58, 20; 1958-59, 41; 1959-60, 15; 1960-61, 28; 1961-62, 25; 1962-63, 14; 1963-64, 28; 1964-65, 33; 1965-66; 18. (ii): 1956-57, 16; 1957-58, 66; 1958-59, 32; 1959-60, 49; 1960-61, 47; 1961-62, 56; 1962-63, 59; 1963-64, 51; 1964-65, 72; 1965-66, 47.

(ii): 1956-57, 10; 1957-58, 17; 1958-59, 16; 1959-60, 16; 1960-61, 9; 1961-62, 20; 1962-63, 15; 1963-64, 24; 1964-65, 19; 1965-66, 10. These figures do not include 303 cases which were withdrawn or settled without a hearing.

3. (a) 101. (b)(i) 27. (ii) 35. These figures are as of November 30, 1966, and do not include 24 cases which were withdrawn or settled without a hearing.

RETROACTIVE PAY FOR TEMPORARY RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,251—Mr. Fawcett:

What is the present position, with respect to retroactive pay for temporary employees, of those temporary employees of the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways who resigned from the service prior to the national railway strike, and prior to implementation of Bill C-230, which provided for pay increases effective during a period when such employees were in the service of the railways?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: In accordance with past practice and the collective agreements, wage increases apply to those persons who had an employee relationship with the company, as established by the collective agreements, as of September 1, 1966.

In so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, the information requested is not available.

WAGES FOR UNSKILLED LABOUR, PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 2,268—Mr. Barnett:

What was the average rate of wages paid to employees in the public service of Canada, in the classification of "unskilled labour" in each of the years 1946, 1951, 1956, 1961 and 1966?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): The average rate of wages paid to employees in the public service of Canada in the classification of "unskilled labour" in each of the years 1946, 1951, 1956, 1961, 1966, is not known for the following reasons: 1. There is no classification "Unskilled labour" in the classified service; 2. Employees who could be categorized as unskilled are found in prevailing rate classes; 3. Prevailing rate employees are paid a variety of rates in relation to the locality in which they work; 4. The number of employees at the various locality rates for the five time periods is not available.

PURCHASES BY C.B.C. OF COLOUR TELEVISION SETS

Question No. 2,279—Mr. McIntosh:

1. What number of TV colour sets have been purchased or are planned to be purchased in 1966 and 1967 by the C.B.C. for the individual utilization of C.B.C. officials in their offices or residences?

Questions

2. What are the titles and locations of C.B.C. officials who received TV colour sets purchased by the C.B.C. in 1966?

3. What are the titles and locations of C.B.C. officials for whom the purchase of TV colour sets by the C.B.C. has been approved, but delivery has not yet taken place?

4. What has been the expenditure by the C.B.C. for TV colour sets which have already been delivered to C.B.C. officials in 1966?

5. What is the estimated expenditure in 1966 and 1967 by the C.B.C. for colour TV sets on order from manufacturers?

6. What are the names of the manufacturers of colour TV sets which have been purchased by the C.B.C. in 1966 and what quantity has been received from each in 1966?

7. Does the C.B.C. purchase colour TV sets from manufacturers at (a) retail prices (b) wholesale prices (c) discount prices?

8. From what vote are funds authorized for the purchase of colour TV sets by the C.B.C.?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1, 2 and 3. 107 TV colour receivers have been purchased by the corporation for monitoring of the English and French program services at 18 locations across Canada. Receivers are assigned to those officials whose duties require program viewing at home or in offices where production monitors are not available. Set assignments are made to management officials across the country plus selected department heads.

4. Approximately $80,250.

5. See 4 above. None on order in 1967.

6. Canadian Admiral Corporation, Canadian General Electric, Philips Electronics Limited, R.C.A. Victor Company of Canada Limited.

7. Discount prices.

8. These purchases were financed from the portion of the authorized capital budget of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for 1966/67, known as ordinary capital.

DUMPING DUTY ON TEXTILE IMPORTS

Question No. 2,284—Mr. Mandziuk:

1. Is dumping duty legally charged on imports to Canada if these are within the quota agreed upon by Canada and the exporting country?

2. Is dumping duty charged on worsted imported from mainland China if the quantity is within the quota agreed upon?

3. Is dumping duty charged against Schacter Woollens of Montreal, P.Q., and, if so, for what reason?

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. Yes, if applicable, within the provisions of the customs legislation.

2. Yes, if applicable, within the provisions of the customs legislation.

3. This type of information is regarded as being of a confidential nature involving the personal affairs of an individual business concern.

ARTICLES WRITTEN BY C.B.C. PERSONNEL

Question No. 2,287—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Have any officers, officials or employees of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation during the past six months been writing articles in periodicals or newspapers for which payment has been or is to be made?

2. If so, who, and how much has been received by such persons?

3. In each of such cases, was authorization given by the corporation prior to the acceptance of what is described as "outside" work?

4. On what date, and by what officer or official was each such authorization granted?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: No official record is kept of those officers or employees of the corporation who perform outside work. Those in some bargaining units are entitled, as a result of negotiated provisions in their contracts to perform outside work without permission from officials of the corporation provided that the nature of the work does not conflict with their C.B.C. responsibilities and the work is not performed for competitive broadcasting organizations. However, in instances where such employees may be in doubt as to whether they should accept outside work, it is customary for them to request permission from their supervisors.

LAY-OFFS OF AIR CANADA EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,297—Mr. Régimbal:

1. Were non-striking Air Canada employees laid off during the recent strike at Air Canada?

2. If so, what groups of employees not on strike were laid off?

3. How many of such employees were (a) union members (b) non-union members?

4. Has a protest been received by the Prime Minister from the Air Line Pilot's Association relating to the layoff of non-striking union members?

5. If so, what action will be taken to remedy the situation of which the association complains?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): In so far as parts 1, 2 and 3 are concerned the management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. Yes. Approximately 4,000 non-striking Air Canada employees were placed on "off duty status—without pay" during the recent strike.

2. Some employees who are members of unions or associations, whose services were made completely redundant. (Employees who are members of unions or associations for whom work was available were retained on the payroll.)

3. (a) Approximately 4,000. (b) None.

4. Yes.

5. This would be a matter for consideration of company management.

EXPENDITURES ON SALMON RUNS, EAST AND WEST COASTS

Question No. 2,301—Mr. Crouse:

1. How much money will be spent during 1966 by the Department of Fisheries in connection with maintaining the salmon population in the rivers of British Columbia?

2. What is the amount estimated for this work in 1967?

3. What amount of funds will be spent on maintaining the salmon runs in Nova Scotia during 1966?

4. What is the amount estimated for this type of fisheries development in Nova Scotia during 1967?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. $2,214,100.

2. Not available.

3. $605,700.

4. Not available.

EXPENDITURES ON INLAND FISH DEVELOPMENT, ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 2,303—Mr. Crouse:

How much money will be spent by the Department of Fisheries during 1966 and 1967 on inland fish development and oyster farms in (a) Nova Scotia (b) Newfoundland (c) New Brunswick, and (d) Prince Edward Island?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): During 1966-67 (a) $287,900 (b) $179,400, (c) $60,400 (d) $189,900. Figures are not available for 1967-68.

UNCLAIMED INCOME TAX DEDUCTIONS

Question No. 2,333—Mr. Dionne:

What was the amount of tax deducted at source under the Income Tax Act which was not claimed by Canadian taxpayers during the years 1964 and 1965?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Department of National Revenue, taxation, statement of unapplied tax deductions for the taxation years 1964 and 1965 as at 15th October, 1966.

1964 taxation year
Tax deduction revenue	2,428,466,886.56
Tax deductions applied	2,392,571,989.45
Unapplied tax deductions 1964	$ 35,894,897.11
1965 taxation year
Tax deduction revenue	2,601,056,650.95
Tax deductions applied	2,502,330,954.45
Unapplied tax deductions 1965	$ 98,725,696.50

During the period 16th October, 1965, to 15th October, 1966, an amount of $36,656,095.92 was applied in respect of the 1964 taxation year. The above statement for 1964 incorporates this adjustment.

Assuming that a comparable amount of 1965 tax deductions will be applied from 16th October, 1966, to 15th October, 1967, unapplied tax deductions 1965 will be reduced to approximately $60,000,000.

In many cases, the tax deducted at the source would be practically equal to the taxpayer's liability and under such circumstances, many persons would not file a tax return on an annual basis.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR "STUDENT SAFARI" PROGRAM

Question No. 2,342—Mr. Saltsman:

Will the government, through the centennial commission, give consideration to providing federal assistance to the "Student Safari" program as proposed by Elmvale Expeditions Limited and recognized by the Ontario department of education through continuing daily attendance grants to school boards participating?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the centennial commission that no suggestion or request has been made for financial assistance to the "Student Safari" program. Mr. E. F. Genge, general manager of the "Student Safari" program as proposed by Elmvale Expeditions Limited visited Ottawa in August, 1966 to acquaint the centennial commission with the project. On his visit he stressed that the project is not dependent on any federal grant or outside assistance but that it is dependent upon the enthusiasm of students and teachers of the various high schools.

PASSENGER TRAFFIC AT CERTAIN AIRPORTS

Question No. 2,346—Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski):

How many passengers disembarked or embarked an aircraft each year, from 1965 to 1966 inclusively, at the following airports: Inuvik, Fort Smith, Trois-Rivières, Drummondville, Rimouski, Baie-Comeau and Sept-Îles?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The number of passengers embarked on aircraft on reported commercial services during 1965 and from January to June 1966 at the airports listed is given in the table below. There is no record of passengers who have disembarked. However, to obtain an estimate of total commercial traffic, it is customary to double the figures shown. Traffic data covering passengers of private aircraft are not collected.

	No. of passengers embarked
	Year 1965 ('000)	Jan. to June 1966 ('000)
Inuvik	10.2	7.0
Fort Smith	13.5	4.0
Trois-Rivières	1.6	0.9
Drummondville	—	—
Rimouski	19.0	9.8
Baie Comeau	40.6	19.5
Sept-Îles	53.0	20.7

*TORONTO—SEIZURE OF SCHOOL DISTILLING APPARATUS

Question No. 2,352—Mr. Fulton:

1. In the light of the recent seizure from a school teacher in Toronto, by R.C.M. Police of a small distilling apparatus similar to that used in grade 7 science classrooms, is it now government policy to require all schools in Canada to obtain licences for the use of similar apparatus in science laboratories and classrooms?

2. If so, what is the basis of this policy?

3. If not, will the apparatus seized be returned to its owner without delay?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this question is in three parts. The answer to the first part is no. The answer to the second part is "Not applicable", and the answer to the third part is yes.

TELEPHONE RATES IN CANADA

Question No. 2,356—Mr. Harley:

1. To the knowledge of the government, what are the companies in Canada that provide telephone service and what areas do these companies cover?

2. What are the various rates charged by these companies in various parts of Canada, both local and long distance?

3. What factors influence these rates?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Board of Transport Commissioners advises as follows: 1. There are approximately 2,000 telephone companies in Canada, ranging in size from The Bell Telephone Company of Canada, (4.6 million telephones as at December 31, 1965), to small service systems with less than 25 telephones. Most of these companies are relatively small and are not within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, but are subject to provincial jurisdiction.

Companies subject to the jurisdiction of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada serve over 70 per cent of the total telephones in Canada and are listed below:

Company	Service area
(a) The Bell Telephone Company of Canada	Ontario, Quebec, Newfoundland, Labrador and North-West Territories
(b) British Columbia Telephone Co.	British Columbia.
(c) The Bonaventure and Gaspe Telephone Company Ltd.	Gaspe Peninsula (Quebec).
(d) Canadian National Telecommunications	Newfoundland, British Columbia, Yukon and North-West Territories.
(e) Quebec, North Shore and Labrador Railway Co. (Telephone Service)	Quebec and Labrador.

The major telephone system in each province or territory and the jurisdiction under which it falls is shown below:

Province	Major System	Jurisdiction
Newfoundland	Avalon Telephone Co. Ltd.	Provincial
Prince Edward Island	The Island Telephone Co. Ltd.	Provincial
Nova Scotia	Maritime Telegraph and Telephone Company	Provincial
New Brunswick	N.B. Telephone Company	Provincial
Quebec and Ontario	The Bell Telephone Company of Canada	Federal
Manitoba	Manitoba Telephone System	Provincial
Saskatchewan	Saskatchewan Telephone System	Provincial
Alberta	Alberta Telephone System	Provincial
British Columbia	B.C. Telephone Company	Federal
Yukon and Northwest Territories	Canadian National Telecommunications	Federal

2. The answer to this question would require the provision of many hundreds of telephone tariffs, the total volume of which would be very substantial. For example, the general tariff of The Bell Telephone Company of Canada is a loose leaf publication of some 200 pages and, in addition, there are several hundred other tariffs. Most tariff publications are issued by companies under provincial jurisdiction and thus are not on file with the board. Tariffs on file with the board may be inspected at the board's offices.

3. So far as companies subject to the jurisdiction of the Board of Transport Commissioners are concerned, such companies are free under the provisions of the governing statutes to initiate new rates, or to change existing rates, upon statutory notice, (three days for decreases and 30 days for increases) and such rates are subject to the approval of the board. Such rates must be reasonable and free from unjust discrimination or undue preference, and not otherwise contrary to the provisions of the statutes. The board has power to prescribe rates when it is determined that any particular rates are contrary to the provisions of the statutes. The philosophy of rate making used by The Bell Telephone Company of Canada is described in the board's judgment of November 15, 1950, (40 board's judgments, orders, regulations and rulings No. 17A) on pages 37 and following.

C.B.C. FARM NEWS DEPARTMENT

Question No. 2,373—Mr. Schreyer:

1. Is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's farm news department about to be changed?

2. If so (a) is this action being taken as a result of a very significant number of suggestions or complaints to the effect that the existing programming or format is unsatisfactory or inadequate (b) what is the nature of the proposed changes?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that no significant program or policy changes are being contemplated in the farm broadcasts department at this time and that there have been no complaints. However, the C.B.C. intends to review the organization of this department in Toronto in the near future as is done periodically with various departments.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROPOSED APPEARANCE OF GERMAN NATIONAL ON "SUNDAY" PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether she is in a position to state that she has been in touch with the C.B.C. regarding the prospective visit to Canada of Mr. von Thadden. Has her attention been drawn to the arrogant statement made by Mr. Duke to the effect that regardless of public opinion this man will be heard, and that a C.B.C. team will be going abroad to interview him?

[Mr. Laing.]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I undertook in the house to convey to Mr. Ouimet the representations which have been made to me of both opinions, one that free speech is paramount and the second the objection of certain groups and the objections which have been made in the house to Mr. von Thadden's appearance. I have done so.

The president told me he had already taken a decision, which was buttressed by the representations which I passed on to him respecting violence, to cancel plans to bring Mr. von Thadden to this country. I heard subsequently an announcement read over the radio which indicated that plans would probably be carried through to interview him in Germany. I have not had any further conversations with Mr. Ouimet since that time.

The right hon. gentleman will realize that there seems to be a very strong element of public opinion against such an interview being held. There is as well, as has been reflected in telephone calls and mail which I have received, a strong element of public opinion that it is the mandate of the C.B.C. to provide a forum in which the people of Canada may see and hear those individuals who are active in current public affairs. I have not had any further communication with the president of the C.B.C., as I consider this now to be an internal matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, did the minister—I am sure she did—bring to the attention of Mr. Duke and some of these other ducal Caesars, these petty Caesars in the C.B.C., that this is not a case of freedom of speech; this is deliberately flouting public opinion by having a neo-nazi tell Canadians why that particular philosophy should be acceptable to them?

Miss LaMarsh: I am informed that Mr. von Thadden appeared for a full 30 minutes on the program "The Public Eye" on November 22 last on the subject of right wing resurgence in West Germany. This program included an interview done in Germany with Mr. von Thadden by Charles Wasserman, a veteran broadcaster and acknowledged authority on German politics. There was no adverse reaction to that appearance made a couple of months ago.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister mentioned that there are some who are desirous of having this philosophy elucidated for their benefit, and she mentioned that there were arguments on both sides of this question. How many communications has the minister received in favour of having this person brought over here or our moneys expended in sending a team to Germany?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, usually I do not tote them up. I am sure the right hon. gentleman will understand that one does this by weighing the opinions of individuals. I am sure there is one group in which the right hon. gentleman is interested. I am informed that there was an editorial in this morning's Globe and Mail which is directly opposed to what he is now suggesting. The representations which I have received have been oral, in writing and by telephone on both sides of the question.

This is an extremely difficult point, since I suspect there is no one in Canada who has the slightest sympathy with nazi feelings either at present or for what they have done in the past. But there is the principle of respecting the right of the Canadian people to know what is current in the world and to be alerted to such changes as may occur, which is perhaps of overriding importance.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Many of us feel that all points of view should be expressed on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, whether we agree with those points of view or not, provided that those who hold opposing views are given an opportunity to express them. In view of this fact I would like to ask the minister whether she would consider making representations to the president of the C.B.C. asking if some responsible public man in Germany, and there are many, who opposes the views of the neo-nazi party could also be interviewed at the same time, so the Canadian people would have an opportunity of hearing the two points of view from Germany in this connection and not just the point of view of a small minority who hold the particular view represented by Herr von Thadden.

Miss LaMarsh: When interviewing representatives of the survivors of nazi prisoners of war on Friday I was informed by their spokesman that they had already been in communication with, I believe, the producers of the program, who had satisfied them that it would not be a one sided representation but that both sides would be presented. Their point was that they did not feel it would be in any way a slanted or one sided program.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Some person in Canada presenting a point of view of the Canadian people would, of course, be excellent; but may I ask the minister whether she does not think that some of the public men in Germany who oppose the neo-nazi party, the National Democratic Party, and who hold strong views on this matter ought to be given the opportunity to present their views so the people of Canada will not have a slanted view with respect to Germany and the political feelings of the German people.

Miss LaMarsh: I suppose it would be much the same position if my hon. friend were interviewed on German television. I might be put in the position of having to give my views on the things he said.

Mr. Douglas: There are a few people who would benefit from that.

Miss LaMarsh: However, Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to pass on this suggestion to the C.B.C.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister if she has elicited from the C.B.C. whether they have any plans to interview people in any other country with regard to their political philosophy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about Rhodesia?

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State.

The Secretary of State informs us that both sides of the question will be presented on the C.B.C., that is to say the nazi viewpoint and doubtless the anti-nazi side. Why is it, then, since there are all types of opinions in Canada, that the C.B.C., particularly in Quebec, allows only one group to be heard repeatedly on the airwaves? I am talking of certain separatists, such as Pierre Bourgault, for instance, whom we see every week on television—revolutionary elements. We have no need of people from Germany. And I should like to know from the minister whether steps are being taken so that the C.B.C. may be more fair, more impartial, and so that they may invite representatives of different viewpoints to be heard on the air, in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Miss LaMarsh: I would like to say to the hon. gentleman that I will accept any invitation from Radio Canada to appear.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—PEACE EFFORTS OF INTERNATIONAL CONTROL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns Viet Nam and the efforts of Canada and India, as joint members of the international control commission, toward some kind of a peace approach, and the report that this has been vetoed by Poland, the third member of the I.C.C. Does the minister have any statement to make to the house on this situation?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take it that my hon. friend has reference to the story of David Van Praagh in the Globe and Mail this morning from New Delhi. The story from New Delhi is substantially accurate, but the word "veto" I think is inappropriate in the circumstances. These matters have been under discussion for some time among India, Poland and Canada.

While there are reservations in some quarters as to the timing of any joint commission initiatives, it is the intention of the Canadian government to continue to explore possibilities in this regard with our commission partners, and in fact we are doing so at the present time.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the house the terms and conditions upon which Canada proposed initiating this peace move? What were the terms and conditions which Poland rejected, if they did reject the proposal advanced by Canada?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not think it is desirable to outline at this stage the terms and conditions which the Canadian government, or for that matter the Indian government or the Polish government, seek to have established before such a joint initiative could take place. The fact is that for some months now the three countries have been in consultation with one another on this question.

All are agreed that in the right circumstances there may be a role for the commission in trying to bring about preliminary negotiations. However one country, in spite of its good intentions and the collaboration it has given in this matter, does not feel that the appropriate time for such action is at the moment. Nevertheless, as I said a moment ago, we are continuing our discussions in hope of being able to reach some agreement in a matter of such vital importance.

Mr. Douglas: On a supplementary question, may I ask the minister whether the only difference of opinion related to the matter of the time element, or was it with respect to the terms and conditions?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The difference concerned largely the time element.

ITALY—EXPENDITURE OF ALLOCATION FOR FLOOD RELIEF

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is it correct that a major portion of the half a million dollars allocated for flood relief in Italy is being sent to that country in the form of live cattle? If so, is the minister selecting and purchasing this cattle? If not, to whom has he delegated this responsibility?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): This is as generous a tribute as I have ever received on an agricultural matter, and I thank the former minister of agriculture for recognizing a talent which he had not accepted at the time I was sitting in almost the same seat he is now occupying.

Mr. Harkness: I hope the minister will now answer the question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As my hon. friend knows, the government set aside the sum of $500,000 to be expended for the people of Italy because of the damage suffered as a result of recent storms, particularly in the Florence area. An interdepartmental committee has been advising the external aid office and it has been decided to use $400,000 of this sum for the purpose of purchasing cattle. It has not yet been decided how the remaining $100,000 will be spent.

Mr. Harkness: The minister has not yet said—in view of the fact, as I understand it, that he has not had the time to use his expert judgment in selecting these animals himself —to whom he has delegated this job.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As I said, there is an interdepartmental committee on which the Department of Agriculture is represented, of course, and the minister has exercised a supervisory control over the matter.

FINANCE

LETTER TO MINISTER FROM NATIONAL CITY BANK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): My question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. In view of current rumours in Ottawa last week that the First National City Bank of New York wrote a letter to the minister of finance, who was then Hon. Mr. Gordon, one month before the confrontation of Mr. Gordon with Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. McFadden, would the Minister of Finance inform the house whether such a letter was received. If so, would it be possible to table the letter before the Mercantile Bank officials present their case to the banking committee?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am a little puzzled by this question and I would like to take notice of it. I would like to read it very carefully, since I am not aware of any such correspondence but would hesitate to deny its existence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Read Mr. Gordon's book.

Mr. Hamilton: I wonder whether I could help the present Minister of Finance find this letter. I understand it was mentioned in the book published last year by the ex-minister of finance.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member would not be satisfied with the minister's answer, which was that he wishes to take the question as notice.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of Finance with respect to the Mercantile Bank of Canada.

Could the hon. minister tell us if he has received other representations from American banks, the Chase and Manhattan Bank in particular, headed by another member of the Rockefeller family?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, I have had representations about the Mercantile Bank from a great many people, some orally and some in writing. I will have to take this question as notice.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—INQUIRY AS TO INCREASED TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister advise the house whether discussions dealing with the possible increase of the St. Lawrence seaway tolls are still proceeding; and have any conclusions been reached in these discussions?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): As I told the house the other day, discussions are proceeding with the United States authorities but they have reached no conclusion.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister assure the house that this matter will be thoroughly discussed in parliament before any decisions are taken?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I indicated a month ago that the normal constitutional course will be taken in this matter.

SPORTS

SKIING—SHORTAGE OF FUNDS FOR NATIONAL TEAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the charming parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. My question is based on the very unexpected and distressing news that the national ski team of Canada is running out of funds and will have to return to Canada before the international ski competitions in Europe have been completed. I think this would be a tragedy, and I should also like to point out that Nancy Greene comes from Rossland, where the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) was born.

Since this has become known I have received telegrams from various places. One of them, coming, to me from Nova Scotia, sends $100 in aid of the ski team. I have also received telephone calls offering $500.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask his question.

Mr. Herridge: I have just come to that point. I have received telephone calls from five people, each of whom is offering $100. I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether, in view of the fact that Nancy Greene is one of Canada's great ambassadors, the necessary funds could be provided from the physical fitness and amateur sports fund for the purpose of maintaining the ski team in Europe. Failing that, I should like to suggest to the members of parliament that we should immediately go to a local bank and arrange for a loan so we can send funds overseas, and then have this sum taken as a payroll deduction from members' indemnities if necessary at the end of the month.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could suggest that the minister inquire whether the hon. member who has just spoken would be willing to underwrite this whole operation, inasmuch as the team is from his riding.

Mr. Herridge: I am willing to put up my $100. I would like to hear an answer from the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

[Later:]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question which is supplementary to the previous question I asked the parliamentary secretary. Is the government interested in keeping the national ski team over in Europe to finish these competitions.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): May I bring this question to the attention of the minister, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

MEETINGS OF STUDY GROUPS RESPECTING SHORTAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is based on the announcement by the Minister of Labour to the effect that study groups are being set up across the country to examine the housing shortage. Will the Minister of Labour assure the house today that these study groups will not take the place of immediate action which is required to alleviate the present situation?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if the action taken in arranging for the mayors and other heads of different municipalities, lending institutions and house building firms to meet and discuss housing matters jointly with the federal and provincial governments can be considered as study groups, then my answer to the hon. member's question would be yes, such meetings are to be held. These meetings are taking place not only for the purpose of reporting progress on what has happened during the last two years, but for getting the advice and the suggestions of all people concerned as to how house building may be stimulated. In the meantime the government has the matter constantly in mind, and I am hopeful that within the next three or four weeks a further announcement will be made.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Because of the present crisis situation have these study groups been given a date by which they must report their findings so that action can be taken forthwith?

Mr. Nicholson: I do not really consider these conferences to be study groups. I thought I had explained that they are conferences or symposia.

Mr. Grafftey: Whether they are conferences, symposiums or study groups—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The hon. member received an answer from the minister. I suggest we should proceed to another question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUALIFICATIONS FOR ADVANCEMENT IN ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In order to assist the minister in the solution of problems which he has created in national defence, what information may we give to ambitious officers in the services in order that they may "develop or increase their tri-service potential"? This phrase occurs in the departmental order. Is support for unification the main qualification?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member will recognize that the question in the form it is now put is argumentative, and I do not think it is acceptable.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I was asking for information that I thought the minister could give. If he cannot answer that question may I ask the minister this one. What is the unified force to which he refers in the order that has gone out to the services?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman's question is based on a wire story by the Canadian Press. On reading this wire story I checked it out with the defence staff and I was informed that the charge is not correct. The writer took excerpts from two separate documents and put them together to reach a false conclusion. At no time is an assessing officer asked to indicate the attitude of the person being assessed toward integration or unification.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister now prepared to answer the question I put to him in December with reference to the qualifications for advancement in the armed services?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I cannot at this particular moment recall the question, but I would be glad to look through my files and see whether I can find it.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The minister did not answer my question and may I repeat it. What is the unified force referred to in the order that went out from his department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think the question is in order.

Mr. Churchill: Is there a unified force in existence in Canada now about which we have not been informed? That is what I am asking the minister.

Mr. Hellyer: This is the force as a whole, Mr. Speaker, and there is a considerable amount of unified thinking in it at the present time. This has developed logically from the policies which have been evolved over the last two and a half years, and I hope that ultimately my hon. friend will be able to see the merit in them and give this particular concept his full and unqualified support.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should now like to repeat the question that I put to the minister some time ago to which he has difficulty in finding an answer. May I ask the minister whether prior to proceeding overseas servicemen were interviewed at Camp Gagetown and told that promotions were available providing that they met certain qualifications? Can the minister answer that? If he is an intelligent individual he should be able to.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

APPEARANCE BEFORE COMMITTEE OF RETIRING COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that the commissioner of the Northwest Territories, Mr. Sivertz, is retiring today following a distinguished public career, particularly in service to northern Canadians, would the minister extend an invitation to Mr. Sivertz to appear before the parliamentary committee so that members might have the advantage and benefit of his knowledge and viewpoint which have proven so popular in the north?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would think that is the responsibility of the committee; thereafter it would be a matter for Mr. Sivertz or any other Canadian who wished to appear. I would think he would appear, though I do not know what are his plans. He tells me he is taking an extended holiday.

FARM MACHINERY

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that a commission is investigating farm machinery prices, would the minister consider imposing a moratorium on these prices since they are going up all the time and the farmers will not be in a position to buy any more of this machinery?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not think we should delude the agricultural community by indicating that we have any constitutional authority—authority known to myself, at any rate—to freeze prices. I have interviewed various officials from the major farm machinery companies, and I hope I will have some information available shortly in this regard.

Mr. Rapp: A supplementary question. Would the government not have authority to stop the rise in farm machinery prices until the commission is able to present its report?

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the minister was successful on one occasion in holding prices in the steel industry, could he not intervene in the same way and under the same authority and ask the farm implement manufacturers to hold their prices in order to help the farmers?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister of Agriculture has been discussing this matter with the farm implements companies, and I have the utmost confidence in my colleague.

[Later:]

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. More than six weeks ago the minister said he would consider the advisability of tabling copies of correspondence between himself and the farm machinery companies relating to recent price increases. Has the minister had enough time to make that decision?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I saw the last of the presidents of the various companies recently, and the matter is still under consideration.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE BAHAMAS—SUGGESTED CLOSER ASSOCIATION WITH CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the statement by the premier designate of the Bahamas, Mr. Lynden Pindling, that that country would be interested in becoming more directly associated with the United Kingdom, the United States or Canada, will the government reciprocate this interest by discussing this question with representatives of the new government of the Bahamas?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Bahamas were represented at the Caribbean commonwealth conference which was held here last July. That conference decided on certain courses of assistance, which the Canadian government proposed, to endeavour to give help to the Caribbean countries. This covered external aid, assistance in transport and in education, etc. A meeting is to take place in Saint Lucia at the end of the month on certain aspects of the conclusions which were reached then. However, this meeting will not of course deal with the political implications which are involved in the question put by my hon. friend.

[Mr. Starr.]

[Translation]

TRADE

SHOES—EFFECT OF IMPORTS FROM ASIATIC AND COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Is the minister aware of the difficult situation in which the Canadian shoe manufacturers now find themselves due to excessive importation of these products from Asian and communist countries?

If so, will the hon. minister inform the house as to the steps he intends to take in this regard; also, will our representatives in Geneva be advised in time to avoid a catastrophe in this industry?

[English]

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been brought to my attention before and it is under consideration. It is a fact that imports of shoes have increased, but domestic production has substantially increased too. This is a matter of world competition and we are considering the position of Canadian industry as well as we can, having regard to all the circumstances.

GRAIN

FLAX—REQUEST FOR OPEN QUOTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is it the intention of the Canadian Wheat Board, or would the minister ask the Canadian Wheat Board to give favourable consideration to making a declaration that there shall be an open quota on flax, as was the case at about the same time last year?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to discuss this matter with the wheat board and give a reply at an early date.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORT ON CULTURE IN CORPORATION AND FILM BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the Gordon Sheppard report on culture vis-à-vis the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the film board has been examined at cabinet level and whether the report will be made available to parliament. May I also ask the Prime Minister whether Sept Jours magazine is correct in stating that this report says there are permanent employees of the C.B.C. for whom the corporation has not enough production work to keep them busy, and that they continue to be paid for doing nothing.

Under all these circumstances, and in view of the fact that this report was received some months ago, would the Prime Minister table the report, 200 copies of which were produced for the government?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this report has been considered on the ministerial level. It is the report of an official to his minister and normally such reports are privileged and not made public. I should be glad to look into the situation to see if there are circumstances to justify an exception in this case.

FINANCE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING DISCLOSURE OF CREDIT COST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I presume he has had drawn to his attention certain legislation, now proclaimed, of the province of Nova Scotia calling for the disclosure of the cost of credit. Does he know that the chartered banks have refused to register under this act on the grounds that it is ultra vires, beyond the jurisdiction of the province. Further, has the minister considered introducing similar legislation within the federal jurisdiction?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the house is aware, when I introduced the Bank Act I said on second reading, that that was my intention. I notified the minister from Nova Scotia of this when we met to discuss consumer credit in Ottawa some weeks ago. The government of the province of Nova Scotia is aware of the intention of this government and parliament to require the banks to reveal the true cost of their consumer loans.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORTED SPEECH BY HEALTH MINISTER RESPECTING REVIEW OF PROCEDURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare spoke for the government when he said in Halifax, as reported by the Canadian Press, that a centennial project for the government could be a general overhaul of parliament to salvage parliament's slipping image. If that is so, when may we expect the salvage operation to begin and of what might it consist?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the report I read referred to the overhaul of parliament. Naturally I should wish to discuss a statement of this importance with the minister when he returns. But there is no secret of the desire of the government, and I think of all members of the house, to improve the practices, procedures, rules and regulations of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The government should overhaul itself.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the modest changes which have already been made in the rules, changes which will expire unless action is taken by the government before the end of the session, how soon is it intended to introduce legislation setting up a committee to look into the present changes? Also, does the Prime Minister propose setting up a committee in the next session to recommend further changes in the procedures of the house?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that an all party committee for the purposes spoken of could be set up shortly. Pending receipt of a report from that committee I would hope also that the house would agree to the extension of the existing changes for another session.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

APPLICATIONS FOR DEFERMENT RESPECTING RAILWAY WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can he advise the house whether all applications for deferment, particularly in the field of railway yard and freight workers, have been dealt with under the Canada Labour (Standards) Code hours of work section?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): May I take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED EXPERIMENTS WITH PACKAGED MEALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Is the Department of National Defence experimenting with the idea of providing rations to personnel by such means as t.v. dinners or other similarly packaged meals?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that question should be asked at this time.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Minister of National Defence had an answer which he was apparently ready to give. Since the army used to travel on its stomach and sabotage has been going on since the minister took over, it is time we got an answer.

Mr. Speaker: That is hardly a point of order.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

REPORT OF YOUTH COUNCIL ON PROPOSED YOUTH SEMINAR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. On November 18 last the minister informed the house that recommendations by the Canadian political youth council with respect to a youth seminar in centennial year had been accepted in principle by the centennial commission. Has the minister received official recommendations from the commission? If so, when will members of the house be informed of them?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, such a proposal from the commission was received by the government some weeks ago. After careful consideration the government decided that it would not be possible to support such a plan or proposal of the youth council. Before this decision was announced I was asked by a representative of the council to withhold any announcement to this effect until they had submitted an alternative proposal. That communication took place shortly before Christmas and I have not yet received any detail of this alternative plan. I believe I was told I could expect it last Friday. As of today there is no proposal the government can support from any such council.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Apart from any alternative proposal from the Canadian political youth council, may I ask whether the government is doing anything on its own to foster or develop the idea of a political seminar or political youth parliament?

Miss LaMarsh: Time is so short now, Mr. Speaker. It was considered that this had to be done through an agency already established, with certain lines of communication, for it to have any hope of being effective. It was hoped that the youth council would have a proposal which would be acceptable. So far that has not come forward.

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand the hon. member has a further supplementary question?

Mr. Forrestall: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister or the government feel that there is any merit in reconvening the ad hoc committee for the purpose of resolving this matter, because of the lateness of the time?

Miss LaMarsh: I would be very happy to do that.

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF BOYS TO ATTEND SEMINARY AT ST. JOVITE, QUE.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. On Friday last I asked the Minister of Manpower and Immigration about the situation at a seminary or monastery at St. Jovite. The events over the week end have been extremely revealing. May I ask the Solicitor General whether members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are investigating this situation to try to find the boys who are lost or have been hidden?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that any members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are engaged in the operation referred to in the question by the hon. member. From my reading of the papers this seems to be a matter for the provincial authorities rather than the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. Howard: As the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is involved, some of the young lads having come to Canada by courtesy of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, does the minister not think that the federal authority should be interested in what has happened?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is an argument, not a question.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO LAID-OFF AUTOMOBILE WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Industry. Inasmuch as approximately 23,000 auto workers have been laid off owing to present and proposed shut-downs in the Canadian car manufacturing and associated industries, what plans has the minister or the government for the return to work of these people.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the lay-offs which have occurred in the automobile industry in Canada and in the United States result from a decline in the total demand for automobiles. It is hoped that the demand will rise again and that those currently laid off will be re-employed.

Mr. Hales: In view of the fact that a year ago this January Canada imported approximately $115 million worth of cars, trucks and parts, is the government proposing to take any steps to curtail these imports at a time when our own men stand idly by?

Mr. Drury: Bearing in mind that the ratio of exports to imports has improved materially over the past two years I do not think the hon. member's suggestion is really warranted.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): In view of what the minister has said about the decline in sales, could the hon. gentleman find out why it is that some people have to wait seven or eight weeks for delivery of cars? Is it because the manufacture of some of the popular makes has now been transferred to the United States?

Mr. Drury: I do not think that is the reason.

Mr. Starr: Would the minister find out?

Mr. Drury: If the hon. member would cite me an instance I would be glad to have it looked into.

Mr. Starr: There are hundreds.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Can the minister tell us how many models previously made in Canada are now being produced only in the United States?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is obviously a question requiring statistical information and it should not be asked now.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Would the minister suggest to the industry, in the light of the mail which hon. members have been receiving, that the buying public is waiting for safer cars before making purchases?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Grafftey: I think this is a very valid question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the minister has noted the question.

Mr. Grafftey: Could he answer it then and tell us whether he has made representations to the industry suggesting that the buying public in North America are waiting for safer cars, and that this is why they are not buying cars today?

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to be too difficult. I will not argue with the hon. member. I will allow the minister to answer the question.

Mr. Drury: No, I have not made such representations to the manufacturing industry.

SPORTS

REQUEST FOR TELEVISION COVERAGE OF WORLD HOCKEY TOURNAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister of which I have sent him notice. In order to soothe the injured feelings of the publisher of the Campbell River Courier and renew the faith he has in the Prime Minister as a hockey fan, will the right hon. gentleman take steps to ensure that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will give coverage to the forthcoming world hockey tournament including, if necessary, the making available of sufficient funds to the corporation to enable this to be done?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to look into the hon. member's question which I received shortly before coming into the house. I understand, however, that this tournament is taking place not under Canadian but under international auspices, and that it is the organizers who would be responsible for the allocation of broadcasting and television rights. I am informed that these rights for Canada have been allocated to C.T.V., in what manner I am not sure. I will be glad to look into the matter.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF LACROSSE AS NATIONAL GAME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister and it also relates to fitness and sport. I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, as the representative of that great lacrosse city of Cornwall, will be interested. I want to know whether the government will bring in a bill during this centennial year to establish lacrosse officially as Canada's national game, thus correcting an apparent oversight by the Fathers of Confederation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think we should have a national summer game and a national winter game.

[Translation]

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Secretary of State.

Since Mr. Yvon Groulx, former Conservative candidate, is against confederation, since Mr. Jean-Noël Tremblay, former Conservative member of parliament is against confederation, since Mr. Maurice Allard, former member of parliament—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member formulate his question?

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to prove that French Canadians who are members of the Conservative party are extremists.

Mr. Speaker, my question is the following: Does the Secretary of State consider publishing a realistic and objective study, in order to prove that confederation was profitable to all provinces of Canada including Quebec?

[Mr. Barnett.]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question to the hon. Secretary of State, Mr. Speaker.

In order that the study may be realistic and impartial, could the hon. Secretary of State conduct that study, without being asked in advance to prove such a thing, but to demonstrate only the realism of confederation?

[English]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Before the orders of the day are called, might I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would he get in touch with Canadian National Railways to establish whether that company's advertising and public relations arrangements are not somewhat premature? I make specific reference to a sign in the company's Sparks street office which wishes people a merry Christmas.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps this is one question today that I may be allowed to say is not urgent.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister indicate if and when he intends to move the establishment of a parliamentary committee on the national capital?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would anticipate that a proposal to set up such a committee would be made during the next session. I do not think it is realistic to expect such a committee to do the volume of work which will be required of it in the course of the present session.

SHIPPING

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO TUG SINKINGS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Transport whether he has received a communication from Robert Cook, national president of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild, drawing his attention to the sinking of the tug M. V. Gulf Master on January 11 with the apparent loss of five lives, this being the third tug of steel construction which has sunk during the last two months, involving loss of life, and the seventh or eighth in the last three years. Has consideration been given to holding an immediate public inquiry into the design, construction, manning and general seaworthiness of similar vessels inasmuch as this organization is naturally alarmed at the situation?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have received such a telegram and, as I pointed out in reply to a question asked, I believe by the hon. member for Vancouver East on the last sitting day, an immediate investigation into this matter was undertaken by my department and as soon as a report on that investigation has been made a decision will be reached as to whether a public inquiry should be held.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR CLEMENCY FOR JAILED UNION LEADERS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Solicitor General. In view of the minister's statement last week that the case involving Paddy Neal and Tom Clark is under active consideration, is he now in a position to inform the house if and when these Vancouver trade unionists, who incidentally are constituents of mine, will be released from jail?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have asked that the file be brought forward to a date early in February for further consideration.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Can such a statment be made before their prison term is up?

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE ON METHODS OF REVISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell the house whether his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Mount Royal, is chairing a committee on ways and means of revising the constitution of Canada and, if so, what is the composition of that committee?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is an interdepartmental committee at an official level and my hon. friend the member for Mount Royal is participating in it as an expert adviser.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed, from Friday, January 13, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on January 13, 1967, new section 314D of clause 42 was under discussion. It is to be found on page 29 of the bill.

On clause 42.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose on Friday I was urging the minister to give serious consideration to accepting an amendment to new section 314D. The remarks I made on Friday were along the line that we should not repeat the mistakes of previous legislation but should give the Canadian Transport Commission the power to direct.

I asked the minister why he had used the words "may recommend" in the new section in view of the representations which I had made earlier in the debate on second reading and on at least one occasion in the standing committee. His answer seemed to be that the board and the minister should not interfere with private enterprise, and I think he was referring to the Canadian Pacific Railway. His answer to my mind was not sufficient reason, and it aroused me to such a degree that even though I had made up my mind just to ask him to consider an amendment, relying on his good will in an effort to try to produce a good bill, I have in the interim, with the approval of the official opposition caucus committee, prepared an amendment which I hope the minister will accept.

Before I move the amendment I am going to give the minister a copy of it so that he can follow me more precisely as I speak. The words in my amendment are not as strong as I would like them to be. I would like to see the new section read "shall direct", without any "may" in it at all, but I recognize that this might defeat the very purpose for which I am battling. If you tell a board that they shall direct then, the human nature of board members being what it is, they would tend not to make any directions at all. Therefore in my amendment I am proposing in effect that the words "may recommend" be left in the new section and that additional words be added so as to give the new super board some feeling of the desire of this committee that they may, if they wish, make a direction.

The second reason why I have softened down my amendment from what I originally wanted is that I recognize there are consequential effects to using the word "shall," one of them being that it would affect the ways and means of the public treasury. If I used the words "shall direct" I could run into a situation where the Chair would have to rule my amendment out of order on good and legitimate grounds. Therefore I have worded my amendment in such a way as to achieve the most of what we on this side of the chamber would like to see in the new section without interfering in any way, so far as I can see, with the balance of ways and means of the public treasury, and in the hope of securing its acceptance by the minister, without that acceptance infringing upon the arguments he put forward even though his arguments, in the words of one of my colleagues, were specious. If I could get the minister's favourable consideration for this amendment we would feel that he would have gone quite a bit of the way toward meeting the ideas of the opposition without in any way tying his own hands or the hands of the commission.

My amendment is that in the second line of new section 314D (1) there be added after the phrase "may recommend" the words "or direct as it sees fit". I have copies of the amendment in French if anyone wishes them. I have talked about my amendment at some length in order to give the minister a chance to read it over before commenting on it, and possibly he would like one or two other official opposition members to comment on it before he makes a statement. This would also give his officials time to examine it.

The amendment would give the commission the option of making a recommendation or an order. If the railways accept such an order then we would have achieved our purpose. If the railways do not accept such an order, particularly if there would be any resultant loss to them, then of course they can follow the procedure laid down later under subclause (3).

I am thinking of situations in which the commission could be shown by its experts that there were various things it could direct the railways to do, for example, make one railway use another railway's lines for running rights, make one railway abandon one line and use a line of the other railway between the two, or issue directions related to interconnections, which the bill covers, thus making the railways operate more efficiently and thereby saving money for the directors and for the Canadian National organization. I would hope that all such directions would be made for the purpose of having the railways operate better and more economically.

Those of us who live in western areas that were over-built by the railways know of many examples to which my amendment would be applicable. We know that experts, in the form of royal commissions, have recommended that changes be made. We also know that changes have not been made. Therefore, when we are drafting new legislation can we not put our trust once again in a commission but this time give it a little more impetus in the form of direction from the House of Commons by saying it will have the power to recommend or direct as it sees fit? This would also give the governor in council an indication of what was or was not being done by the railways in carrying out the wishes of the commission.

There is a second argument which carries a great deal of weight. Railway management being what it is, I suspect that many times railway management would like to propose certain things that would improve the efficiency of its operations but if one railway first made a proposal then in dealing with the other railway or railways, as the case may be, it would in effect lose some of its bargaining power in the actual working out of the details. For that reason there may be a reluctance on the part of railway management to put forward proposals, hoping that somebody who is neutral will make those proposals so that management will not lose its bargaining power.

I can think of one or two examples where this has been so. I am referring now to experiences I had in the spring of 1961 when I was attempting to get grain moved through the west coast ports. There is no doubt that railway management experts, terminal operators, the people on the dockside and others involved in the movement of grain all advised the minister of the day that all that could be moved through the western ports was 15 million bushels per month. Yet after the railway officials sat down with each other, after the unions sat down with management and after the civil servants sat down with all these groups, they were able to come up with an answer which guaranteed that the capacity of those ports would not be 15 million bushels a month but rather 21 million bushels a month. The records will show that in one month the figure of 21 million bushels was exceeded and in fact 29 million bushels were handled.

Were I to tell the committee of all the examples of what was being done in the name of competition it would drive many members away from the concept of competition. What I am trying to say is that there is good competition and there is bad competition. If competition takes the form of one train crew on one railway hauling grain cars across the crossing to block the other railway's access to the port, this may be competition of the old-fashioned sort but is not the kind of competition which brings about the maximum movement of grain. When this situation was presented to the railways they readily agreed that they could change authority from day to day and thus keep the lines clear. In respect of the movement of grain on the west coast, once you get railway management to sit down with unions, with private business and with government groups you are able to clear away all these little practices which have grown up over the years in the name of competition with the idea of getting the best for one company.

I should like to remind hon. members that if the railways benefit, certainly the terminal operators benefit and the workers at the docks and at the terminals benefit. Certainly the business groups benefit and I know the people of Canada benefit. If with this amendment we can get around a difficulty in respect of railway management and have a board which will move with some dynamism in reducing obstacles in railway management in western Canada and if as a result of this progressive dynamism we can get a reduction in the cost, then we will not be constantly faced with higher freight rates and demands for greater subsidies.

That is the second reason I think it is advisable in the long run to use the words "may recommend or may direct" in respect of the commission. I know the word "may" is not as strong as some of us would like it to be. Possibly this is because we have had such a long experience of suffering under the type of emergency where so-called private enterprise fails to do the best thing in its own interest and then turns around, blames everybody but itself and asks for abolition of the Crowsnest Pass rates, higher freight rates and so on when the answer lies right within itself to a larger and larger degree.

The third point, which is minor but important, is that now that the tremendous movement of grain across the west has removed all the argument that there is any loss in respect of the Crowsnest Pass rates there is even greater reason to make absolutely sure the railways can take advantage of the tremendously increasing net return which they derive from the doubling of the amount of grain so that each year they will be able to make the necessary changes in management and run their railways. One thing that all private business tends to do, so long as there is a profit, is never to worry about the fact that there are still savings to be made.

In presenting these arguments I believe I express the hope of a good many people that we can run these railways in a more efficient manner, that we can keep freight rates down by good private enterprise management and represent the interests of the public by giving to this board not only the right to recommend to the railways but also the right to direct.

Finally, although I do not know what is going to happen when we vote on the amendment concerning the setting up of the stronger type of committee which we recommend, whether we set up this stronger type of committee or continue with the present standing committees which are so much under the control and direction of the government of the day, I am sure that with this particular amendment parliament will have a little better measuring stick by which to ask questions. Not only this, but under this type of amendment we will be able to ask what recommendations have been made to the railways. We will have the right to ask the transport commission what directions they have given and if they have not produced directions to meet obvious inefficiencies we will then have a right to reconsider what we have done under this bill. Whether we have the stronger committee which has been suggested or the present type of committee, the words "direct" or "may direct" give a little more leverage. I strongly recommend the acceptance of this simple and yet flexible type of amendment which will strengthen the bill and give the feeling to the people of Canada that they have a little more say over their own economic affairs.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before anyone else speaks I should like to raise one or two points. First, I believe the hon. gentleman made the point that instead of putting the word "shall" into his amendment he was going to use the word "direct" qualified by "may". He suggested that if he had put in the word "shall" it might have involved the kind of amendment that could be moved only after a message from the crown. I cannot help but think that if the hon. gentleman has doubt in the one case it would be just as great in the other case because the direction, no matter whether it be an obligation imposed by this parliament or permission given to this board, does not empower the commission to lay an extra charge upon the exchequer. I suggest it would be equally so with regard to the competence of a private member to amend.

If that is an objection to the amendment I do not think the hon. gentleman has improved the position by saying "may" instead of "shall". I would think, if there is a disposition to accept the amendment, that it would be less objectionable to have the word "may" than the word "shall". In the first place, I do not know how the commission would be able to know when it should. There would seem to be a logical difficulty there.

The second point I should like to raise is that I do not think I have much objection if the direction involved is a direction to the railways to provide running rights over each other's lines in certain cases where a contingent loss to one or the other of the railways might be involved. However, it certainly would not involve an order to them to divest themselves of their property. If the commission directs a railway company to lease something is the commission going to determine at what price it should lease it? If you direct someone to purchase something is that also a direction to sell and, if so, at what price? It does seem to me that, taking this kind of consideration into account, you would arrive at certain difficulties which I think would have to be met by more explicit legislation indicating how the direction shall be carried out and who shall determine the adequacy of the compensation.

I think it is clear from the next subsection that there would be additional costs of operating a line which could be recovered from the treasury and be treated as losses. That is true when it affects one branch line of a certain type, but what would be the situation in ordering a railway company to abandon a certain line when it did not feel there was any loss? That conceivably could be done under this arrangement, but how do you measure that?

It seems to me there would be a host of problems created by any kind of direction which would involve doing anything more than the bill already provides by the use of the word "recommend". The recommendations would be made not just to the railway companies but also, if they involved any kind of intervention by the government, to the Governor in Council, and if some expenditure was required to make compensation or do something of that kind, it would be open to the Governor in Council to ask parliament to provide the necessary money.

I think the suggestion that the commission is not being given adequate powers to accomplish anything that we really would wish to be accomplished is met by the bill as it is. I cannot help but think that a recommendation made public, as it would have to be, indicating quite clearly that there were advantages and what the advantages were, would be something which no railway company could possibly afford to disregard unless it was a patently foolish recommendation and one that could be demonstrated to be foolish.

In any event, if there was a recommendation which involved action by the government it would be perfectly competent on the part of the government, no matter what view the railway company might take, to accept the recommendation if in its wisdom it felt it should and if it was within its power. The powers given to the Governor in Council are a good deal wider than the powers we are asking to give to the commission, and I think for a very good reason. The advisers of the Governor in Council are here and can be called upon to account for their actions by the representatives of the people, whereas it would be of considerable significance if a body which of necessity was in the correct technical sense irresponsible, by which I mean independent, were given the power to say that a property shall be transferred from one person to another. Under those circumstances we would be saying that essentially arbitrary acts should be carried out. I am not going to reject the suggestion out of hand. I do want to obtain some advice from my officials before I finally make up my mind because I recognize that everyone taking part in the work of the committee here is trying to improve this bill.

I have had a rather strong predilection all my life for persuation and reason rather than for direction and coercion. That is one of the reasons I remained throughout the second world war an unrepentant anti-conscriptionist. There are occasions when people have to be directed but I do not like to have any more direction or arbitrary action than is really essential for the public good. I would certainly prefer to see how the law as we have now framed it will work rather than seek to import into this particular clause arbitrary powers given to a commission which is not and cannot be answerable directly to parliament for its judicial and quasi-judicial activities. You destroy at once its character as a court if you do that. I believe that if it issued a directive which was contrary to any established law that directive could be appealed to the courts. Unless it is demonstrably necessary to provide this kind of directing by arbitrary power, if indeed that would be effective, which of course is the other side of the coin, I should like to consider with my officials, before reaching any final conclusion, whether or not there is any kind of direction that is not already provided for in the clause which would be effective without having to add other words to provide what the consequences of that direction might be.

Certainly the commission could not direct the Canadian National Railways to lease a line to the Canadian Pacific Railway, or the Canadian Pacific Railway to lease a line to the Canadian National Railways, without giving power to someone somewhere to say what the terms of the lease should be. The directive would be ineffective and it would seem to me it would be necessary to enable the commission to say what the terms of the lease should be. The same would apply in respect of the purchase price of something if there was no agreement on the matter. It is quite a different thing to recommend that certain things be done. If the parties themselves do not come to an agreement there would be no need to nullify a direction or have what might appear to be a defiance of the law which would appear to me, without other words, to be unenforceable.

I put these considerations forward as some of the very real difficulties I see in respect of this matter. These are altogether apart from the question whether we really want any kind of incidental amendment to one part of the bill, taking the view that parliament would authorize the commission to direct the Canadian National Railways to divest itself of certain property that belongs either to it or to the Crown. That would present some difficulties too, because the Transcontinental, the Intercolonial, the Prince Edward Island Railway and the Newfoundland Railway are not the property of Canadian National Railways but are the property of the Crown. This direction would cut both ways. I do not know whether we really seriously want to direct the Canadian National Railways to divest themselves, contrary to the judgment of the management we have appointed to do these things. If they are going to do them willingly, there is no purpose in putting the word "direct" in this section. The only purpose of putting in the word "direct" is to make them do something, either one of them, that they do not want to do; otherwise it is redundant.

We would then be saying we want them to do this whether they want to or not. Whether in their business judgment it is a wise thing or not, they must divest themselves of this property and turn it over to the C.P.R., or vice versa. I am not making any more in this case of the question of taking so-called private property and forcibly having it sold. I recognize perfectly that we have the power to expropriate the C.P.R. or any part of the C.P.R. any time we want to do it. I would see nothing wrong in principle or in law in our doing that if reasonable compensation is provided. There is nothing wrong in that at all. I am not making that kind of objection. I am just wondering whether we really have considered all the implications of seeking to do these things in an incidental fashion, in a piecemeal way. It may be that some of the aspects of rationalization do not involve an actual change in the title of properties but simply direction as to the use of the property if the commission thought it desirable to make such a direction.

I am rather inclined to think that when we reach some of the clauses almost immediately following clause 42 we will find that the power to do that kind of thing is really fundamental in the law now and that we are proposing certain minor amendments which would make that continue to be possible. I would see no difficulty about having the commission determine, for example, what should be the maximum or minimum charge for the use by one railway of facilities owned by another, in the kind of circumstances envisaged here. But I believe one has to be very careful in this respect. I have tried very hard to understand this bill thoroughly, but on these points of detail I always like to go back to the experts before I express too categorical an opinion. I very much doubt that we would in fact accomplish very much that would be practical in accepting this amendment.

I also think that if the amendment is pressed Your Honour will have to consider the point raised by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle whether it does imply any contingent charge upon the crown. There may be one or two other hon. members who would like to say something about the amendment right now, and therefore I wonder whether we could let it stand so that my officers could consider it further. We could pass on to the next paragraph and try to make a little progress while the matter is under consideration.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I support the minister's suggestion that the section be allowed to stand while his officers consider the matter, because I think this is a very important section. I agree with the amendment moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. The minister has said that there are a number of difficulties raised by the amendment. What he does not seem to have faced up to is that it is only by meeting these difficulties that we can grapple with the much greater difficulty of how we are to achieve rationalization of the railway system and how we are to remove much of the westeful duplication that now obtains.

I do not recall the figures exactly—I looked them up some months ago—of an international survey which was carried out and which showed that Canada spends more money per capita on transportation than any other western country. Part of this is undoubtedly due to the great distances in this vast country and its relatively small population. But I am equally sure that part of our high per capita expenditure for transportation is due to the wasteful duplication in transportation which has been built up in this country over the past 100 years. There has been wasteful duplication in the building of lines, failure to have any kind of co-ordination or rationalization, and not only duplication within the same mode of transportation but wasteful duplication among different modes of transportation.

As I said when speaking on the resolution which preceded this bill, in my opinion we will never resolve the transportation problem in Canada until we set up a transportation authority with real power to bring about rationalization, remove duplication and bring costs down. We cannot leave it to individual companies voluntarily to bring about rationalization. In the first place, there is no great incentive for them to do so. They are not like manufacturers who may be operating in a free market and the incentive to reduce overhead so they may be competitive. Railways, like other transportation utilities, are quasi-monopolies and the wastefulness of duplication is not paid for by them. It is either paid for out of the public treasury in the way of subsidies or by shippers and passengers in the way of freight charges and fares. Consequently there is no real incentive, unless that incentive is supplied by parliament, to insist upon the removal of duplication and bring about a greater degree of rationalization.

I know the minister has made a very eloquent plea for persuasion rather than any element of compulsion. But the minister knows, because he has made a very exhaustive study of the whole question of transportation, that one could bring before this committee a host of recommendations of royal commissions of other years with respect to rationalization and the removal of wasteful duplication. The railway companies have ignored these recommendations. Representations have been made to the Board of Transport Commissioners and the railways have simply pretended that they did not hear. The duplication has continued. This parliament has been asked even in the last few years to give the railways permission to build lines into areas already served, because there has been no rationalization program. I do not think the minister is on sound ground when he says that if this body we are now setting up makes a recommendation and it is a sensible one, the power of public opinion will compel the railways to carry out the recommendation.

I have appeared before various federal cabinets under section 51 of the Railway Act and before the Board of Transport Commissioners on too many occasions not to know the extent to which the railways can stall, no matter how good a case you may have, and delay if they do not want to act. I think that if we are going to set up this transport commission it has to have the power to make recommendations, but if there is no indication that a recommendation will be carried out it must have the power to direct that certain rationalization will take place in the interests of saving money for the Canadian taxpayer and the Canadian shipper.

As the minister said, there are some difficulties. There is the matter of the terms under which these recommendations or directions will be carried out. It seems to me that this is not an insurmountable obstacle. The companies in question can try to negotiate terms under which they will lease facilities to each other or allow lines to be used by both companies, and if they cannot agree by negotiation on some mutually satisfactory figure the matter can be referred to the courts for decision. If this commission does not want to be a court of last appeal, the matter can be taken to the courts. This has been done repeatedly.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. gentleman would not contend that this could be done by divine law. Parliament must make some provision whereby this could be done if it were not done by this section.

Mr. Douglas: I agree with the minister wholeheartedly. I am not saying that these simple words will do that. If the minister accepts the principle of this amendment I would certainly think he is the one who has to work out the consequential amendments. As my colleague, the hon. member for Springfield, said the other night, we had prepared an amendment but we did not move it. There are just too many consequential amendments that have to be moved, and this is really something which the government draftsmen have to do. I suggest to the minister that the task of making the consequential amendments is relatively small compared to the benefits that can be derived from assuring the Canadian people that this commission will not be another recommending body or another referee whose decisions can be totally ignored.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would address himself to the clause under discussion. This clause deals exclusively with branch lines; it does not deal with any broad scheme of rationalization. It seems to me that if he could just get down to earth on the matter and see whether any directions could be made which would in fact accomplish what the recommendations would not we would be getting further along.

Mr. Douglas: The minister is aware of many instances in which there is duplication in this country, lines where both the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. are operating in the same district and where one line could be discontinued and the other used by both railways. This situation has been faced again and again and no action has been taken. Under subsection (1) of 314D I take it that if the commmission directed that there be some rationalization with respect to any two lines the company would be required to carry it out. I agree that the minister would have to make consequential amendments to provide for the manner in which the financial terms would be agreed upon, but that should not be very difficult. However, I think that the words which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is recommending should be inserted after the word "to" rather than after the word "companies", so that it would read:

> In the exercise of its duties under section 314C the commission may recommend to, or direct as it sees fit, railway companies the exchange of branch lines between companies by lease, purchase or otherwise—

Wherever it is dealing with rationalization, if the commission finds that the making of recommendations is not sufficient to get adequate action to remove wasteful duplication I think it should have the power to direct the companies in question to carry out the program of rationalization set forth by the commission. I do not think that the financial terms need to be an insurmounable obstacle. The minister could either provide that the two companies negotiate and try to agree on a figure or if that failed the commission itself could set down a figure which would always be subject to appeal. Another alternative would be for the legislation to provide that in the event of failure to reach a mutually satisfactory settlement the matter could be referred to the courts.

We are arguing for the principle and I would hope that when the minister discusses it with his officials he will give serious thought to this matter. I think the success of the commission, particularly with respect to the matter of rationalization, will depend on the extent to which it has some power and the extent to which the act has some teeth. The minister may be right that in many cases a recommenadtion will be sufficient. However, I think the knowledge that the commission has the power, in glaring instances, to issue a directive would have a very salutary effect on the co-operation which it would receive from the railroad companies.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, a couple of points were raised by the minister which I think should be nailed down at this stage. So far as the financial consequences of this amendment are concerned I would suggest that they are nil. Let me refresh the memory of the minister on the section under discussion. At the present time, under this bill as it is drafted the commission may recommend the leasing or exchanging of operating rights. However, subsection (3) provides that the commission may recommend certain steps in the operation of railways to improve their efficiency and, I suppose, to reduce their costs. If a company feels that it will have to bear a loss as a result of a recommendation the commission may, according to this section, report that to the cabinet. However, suppose that the commission makes a recommendation in a csae in which there is no loss to either railway, and this is what the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and I are fighting for. We come from an area where there are many cases of the railways being able to reduce their costs and make money by operating in a rational way.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman not think that this is precisely what the railways have been trying to do for quite a number of years and have been prevented from doing by two successive governments because every application they have made to abandon lines in order to reduce their costs has been frozen at the request, first, of the government to which he belonged and, second, of the government to which I belong? There does seem to be a rather odd contradiction in this debate. Until we reached this paragraph nearly everyone who spoke—

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, is the minister asking a question? May I remind him that I had the floor?

Mr. Pickersgill: I apologize to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Douglas: The railways are abandoning lines with the one hand and building duplicate lines with the other.

Mr. Hamilton: Let me finish my argument. I want to emphasize what I was saying previously, that the commission may recommend, and if that recommendation is acceptable to both companies and they can thereby save money nothing further happens under this bill. However, if it recommends something to the companies which would involve losses the railways are allowed the privilege of going to the cabinet to get a ruling on how to meet the cost if it is not met under section 314D.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I suggest that by this amendment we would correct a flaw in the bill; it would provide that the commission may recommend or direct, as they see fit. At the moment, if they are given the power to direct and this direction is not obeyed by the railways, provided there is no loss by either company and therefore no right to raid the public treasury there is no question of any consequential effect upon the balance of ways and means.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

One of the arguments raised by the minister was that he would have to ask the Chairman to rule whether the amendment did affect the right of the government to be the only body capable of effecting a payment out of the public treasury. I am suggesting that it does not. Subclauses (1), (2) and (3) make it very clear that the board is not required to raise any objection unless there is a loss to the railways. Where there is no loss, nothing is done.

As a digression, Mr. Chairman, I point out that if you read the bill carefully you will find that even where there is a loss the transportation commission does not have to take the matter to the cabinet. As I have already put on the record, if there is a loss the commission may in its discretion make a recommendation to the governor in council. What I am primarily dealing with in my amendment is a gap in the legislation. In effect it gives some indication to the national transportation commission that parliament wants them to make a direction if they find that the railways are not following their recommendations. This direction will be given in cases where mutual advantage to both railways will flow.

If there is any adjustment in charges to be made for operating on another company's line or for selling certain equipment in the case of a line to be abandoned, then this is a mundane matter that can be worked out by these people. They are skilled at costing. They have records going back years of how much write-off has taken place and so on, so I do not think that this would be a difficult problem to overcome. By this amendment we will give the commission a little more power to direct. If those directions relate to any loss of public money, then this circumstance is already covered in the bill. But my point is that I want them to have this power to direct.

The minister made two or three other points. He said that he did not like direction by commissions affecting public or private property.

Mr. Pickersgill: Unless it is really necessary.

Mr. Hamilton: Unless it is really necessary. All the way through the bill the power to direct is given. Although this might be an extreme statement I can be caught out on, I think that if I were to go through the bill I could find a dozen cases where the board is given the power to order and direct. In this instance what is the matter with giving them the power to make recommendations or to direct as they see fit on a matter which relates to the railways saving money and therefore saving money for the public purse?

I think the arguments raised by the minister can be described as begging the question. I hope he takes this matter to his officials. I am willing to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. If the amendment requires some further change to deal with a situation where the railways do not accept the direction, this is up to the drafters. We cannot do it here. This is not because it affects the balance of ways and means; it is because it is a matter of coherence and logic in drafting.

The principle for which we are battling here seeks to do more than was done in the act of 1935 and to give this additional impetus to the commission of the power to direct. We have not harnessed or restricted them in any way beyond the fact that we are trying to encourage them to stand up and be counted if they find that their recommendations are not obeyed.

I should now like to move my amendment so that something tangible is before the committee. Therefore, I move—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before the hon. member moves it I wonder whether he would consider a suggestion I should like to place before him. If he moves the amendment as it now stands I would have no option but to ask the Chair—and I do not want to waste a lot of time with procedural arguments—to consider very carefully whether it is an admissible amendment. In his amendment to subclause 1 the hon. member is proposing that we should give the power to direct, and he says that any financial implications of that direction do not matter because there is permissive power in clause 3 to refer a matter to the governor in council.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Chairman, the minister proposes to ask the Chair not to accept the member's amendment, which is not yet before the house. In my opinion, the minister should wait until the amendment is submitted to the house before making his request.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am not rising on a point of order at all. I am exercising my right to speak as a member of the committee in order to make a suggestion which I thought might help the hon. gentleman to get the sense of the committee, that is all. It seems to me that if the hon. gentleman seeks to put in an amendment which will give the power to direct in relation to purchases, leases and things of this sort, which might involve the railways in losses, then this would have one of two effects. It would either be confiscatory, or could be; alternatively, there would have to be some provision for compensation. There is no provision for compensation in subclause 3. There is the possibility that a recommendation can be made to the Governor in Council, who in his wisdom might see fit to ask parliament to provide compensation.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to sponsor or support any measure that is going to be confiscatory without compensation; I want to make that very clear. If the hon. gentleman wanted to change his wording to "or direct, as they see fit, in any case where there would be no monetary loss to either railway company", then that would mean that they could direct the exchange of running rights or anything else. I think I would still vote against the hon. member's amendment but I would not raise any point of order in connection with it.

If the hon. member feels that he would like to have the sense of the committee with respect to that change, then as I say I would not be disposed to raise any point of order; otherwise I might. I am not saying I am confident that I am right about whether or not it would or would not involve a charge, in which case in certain circumstances the situation might call for confiscation, but I would have to ask the Chair to look at that point. If some modification along the lines I have suggested could be made which permit a direction in a case where the railways would be losing money because they did not rationalize, then I would be happy to have the amendment voted on. That might be a way out of the difficulty.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Might I ask the minister a question? Is he not displaying a remarkable lack of confidence in this commission? Surely the commission is not going to make a direction that is not workable where there is provision for financial recovery under one of these later clauses from the Minister of Finance or governor in council.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I was in this house when it debated the Defence Production Act in 1955 at a time when hon. gentlemen immediately opposite were unwilling to trust far lesser powers than these given to a government and a minister, both of whom were answerable to this chamber. I find this volteface on the part of the official opposition rather extraordinary. It is one thing to give power to the governor in council; it is another for parliament to do things itself. It is not a case of giving somebody not answerable to parliament arbitrary powers. I am not so surprised in the case of hon. gentlemen in the N.D.P. but I am rather surprised, considering the history of the last ten years, to find that attitude immediately opposite.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: We had a parliamentary committee look at this matter.

Mr. Hamilton: If I may go back into history, I do say that there is a difference between the man who was minister of defence production and the Minister of Transport today. Those words hold true if I am right in assuming that the minister of defence production in 1955 was Right Hon. C. D. Howe. His attitude toward parliament was different from the minister's. That is the first point.

Second, the war has been over for some time and defence production does not play as great a part today. Parliament wants to control things differently now. The point is that parliament is being asked to give considerable power to a board. We are doing so reluctantly because we see no way out. That is strictly in harmony with our past positions. In this section we have tried to strengthen the hand of this board, and under clause 20 we shall ask that parliament control it to a greater extent than now envisaged.

The point raised by the minister does not change the picture much. We contend that if the amendment I propose carries it will involve no more or no less financial commitment than under the clause as it stands. Second, it was contended that this amendment might be understood to apply in cases where there was no monetary loss to either railway. I do not accept that.

One proposal I should like to see this commission make is that one railway abandon say 110 miles of line where there is a line of another railway beside the line to be abandoned. Obviously monetary loss would be involved in the case of one railway. That railway could use the other line to transport its goods. As I say, there will be monetary loss. At the same time, however, if as part of the deal another section of railway line, say 150 miles long, is transferred to the first railway, both railways will be better off and the public will be better off. The sum total of the deal is more profit to both railways and lower rates paid by the public.

I toss that in as a quick idea to be fed into the mill. I should like to see this amendment before the house. I should like to see the minister stand this section. Perhaps the minister's officials could look after the drafting consequences of this amendment. If they and the minister feel there is logic in the amendment, if it is worth while, if they think our amendment is responsible, perhaps they could advise us of that.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should be quite happy to stand the section for the time being to do what the hon. member suggests.

Mr. Hamilton: May I move the amendment, Mr. Chairman? I move:

> That clause 42 as it relates to the proposed new section 314D (1) be amended by adding after the word "to" where it appears on line six of page 29 the following: "or direct as it sees fit"

The Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee to stand the subsection?

Mr. Baldwin: Before it is stood may I ask the minister a question? I have in mind the wording of subsection 3 of proposed new section 314D, which reads in part as follows:

> —the commission may, in its discretion, report its recommendation to the governor in council for such action as the governor in council may consider necessary—

Bearing in mind also section 24 of the Financial Administration Act, which says that subject to the British North America Act no payment shall be made out of the consolidated revenue fund without the authority of parliament, and bearing in mind the words of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I should like to hear the minister say something to the effect that the limitation placed on the governor in council by subsection 3 and by section 24 of the Financial Administration Act suggests that all the governor in council can do is to come to parliament and ask for an appropriation in the estimates to cover any amount which it wants to recommend. In other words, this bill does not give authority to the governor in council to make any payments. They must come back to parliament.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that would be true if you left paragraph 3—I do not know what you call these things—as it is. But if you look at subsection 2 it is clear that, if the effect of this direction were a loss of a monetary kind, that loss would be taken into account under the principles of this bill. This is mandatory. This is not like subsection 3. If a decision is made that there is a loss on a branch line, we are giving the commission the power to order that line to be kept in operation. Parliament is saying, when we pass this bill, that in that case the loss will be paid. There is no problem in that respect. This would be adding a new case in which there would be a charge if there were a loss as a result not of refusing to abandon but of a direction with respect to rationalization.

Probably I am being very tentative. I do not feel absolutely confident that, even if we read subsections 1 and 2 together, the amendment suggested by the hon. gentleman, which would necessarily involve a potential charge —I do not say it would be an actual charge but we know that if there is a potential charge it will be a liability—would meet the problem. It would not do that, even though there is no provision for compensation. Then the amendment would not be out of order but I should object to it strenuously on the ground that it would seek to take somebody's property, where loss had been caused, without a compensation provision.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, the minister gave an undertaking to the committee that the amendment will be taken under advisement and that the clause will be stood.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Schreyer: What will be allowed to stand? Is it all of new section 314D or subsections 1, 2 and 3? I wish to speak on subsections 3 and 4.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether it would make much sense to the hon. gentleman, before this question is resolved one way or the other, if we allowed the whole new section to stand. That does not in any way restrict his right to speak when we come back to it.

Mr. Douglas: We might as well let all of new section 314D stand.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: That would be my view. If we did not do it that way, we would get into a mess which we could not unscramble.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): It might be difficult for the minister when he does not have his officials here with him but could he not indicate some method, in relation to the financial provisions which are evidently the main worry here, of placing a claimant under this subsection in no worse a position than that of a person claiming under new section 314E dealing with abandonment?

Mr. Pickersgill: If we were to do that I am afraid we would be extending the scope of the measure. My officials could not help in such circumstances, it would be a matter for the Chair.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): How is it then that a person affected by this subsection is in a less advantageous position than a person to who 314E applies, where there is the possibility that the Minister of Finance may make a payment?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think that is the question which arises. The question is whether we would be imposing some kind of new charge on the Crown.

The Chairman: Does the committee agree to stand 314D?

Mr. Olson: I agree that it should stand but first I think there are one or two matters which the officials might consider. The minister rests his whole argument on the supposition that if there were any additional charge or cost to the railways because of a decision by the commission—

Mr. Pickersgill: A direction.

Mr. Olson: —under its authority to direct, he could not agree because it might be confiscatory—

Mr. Pickersgill: No. I wonder whether I could clear up that point? What I said was that were such a cost imposed, one of two things would happen. Either there would have to be compensation in respect of it, in which case it would be an additional charge on the Crown, or else it would conceivably be confiscatory.

Mr. Olson: I understand that perfectly. May I follow up the argument by saying that if there were provision for compensation it would be beyond the capacity of an ordinary member to move the kind of amendment—

Mr. Pickersgill: It might be.

Mr. Olson: That is the point which concerns me. If we are to accept the minister's argument in this case, he must convince us that boards such as the Board of Transport Commissioners have never been authorized to make decisions which imposed an additional charge or cost on a railway company unless there was a provision for compensation by parliament. Surely the minister does not expect us to believe that. Surely he does not wish to leave the impression that the board—

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to clear up that point. If some such provision as that had been in the bill to start with, there would be no problem. The situation now is that we have the bill before us and that there is a certain resolution connected with it. If an amendment introduces a charge which is beyond the scope of that resolution it is out of order and cannot be dealt with in the absence of a new resolution. It is not something which would be wrong under any circumstances.

Mr. Olson: I am not concerned now about whether power and authority should be vested in this board to impose a charge on the railways. I am not concerned at the moment about the minister's opinion on that point. I am saying that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is perfectly entitled to move that the cost resulting from a directive by the board be an additional charge on the railway.

There are many precedents for this. In dealing with the railways the Board of Transport Commissioners has handed down numerous decisions which have cost the railways money in circumstances where there is no provision for compensation by the parliament of Canada. We should be careful about raising technical questions regarding whether or not an additional charge on the railways as a result of a directive would be met by compensation by parliament or whether the railways would have to absorb that cost. As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has said, there are many provisions in this bill which authorize the commission to impose an additional cost on the railways. If the minister holds that every clause in this bill which gives the commission power to direct should also be accompanied by power to compensate, that is very different from saying that the hon. member is not allowed to move his amendment under our rules because there is a possibility that the board might make a directive which would cost the railways some money. If the law officers are to look at this clause in terms of whether or not there is a potential cost to either parliament or the railways, I should like them to clear up these points because they are bothering me.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have never contended that the amendment would be out of order if it simply sought to impose a charge on the railways. I think that in certain circumstances it would be contrary to good public policy to do so, but I would not argue that an amendment to that effect would be out of order. I am concerned only about the narrow and technical point that if this amendment does involve the possibility of payments out of the treasury, which and I am not convinced it does, of a kind for which no provision was made in the resolution preceding the bill, it would then, under our rules, be beyond the capacity of an hon. member to move or of this committee to decide. If, on the other hand, the amendment was simply to impose a charge on the railways, there might be those of us who would feel that it was not very sound public policy. But it is certainly possible for any hon. member to move such an amendment.

Mr. Olson: The minister has cleared up that point and I think he has dealt clearly with any point of order which may be raised on the subject. I am prepared to allow this section to stand until it has been examined.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Schreyer: The minister has been good enough to take the subject matter of the amendment under advisement and therefore is asking that the section be allowed to stand. However, I have some related comments to make and possibly the minister may agree to take my thoughts into consideration as well.

Mr. Pickersgill: That would be a good idea.

Mr. Schreyer: If in the minister's position it is simply not prudent to accept the subject matter of the amendment there is an alternative approach, something in the nature of a compromise. It is that the wording of subsection (3) be changed in such a way as to make all recommendations made by the commission reportable on a mandatory basis to the governor in council.

The minister earlier made a logical and forceful argument about the wisdom of avoiding mandatory legislation at times and relying more on the discretionary approach, but if the commission is going to make recommendations to the railways there is really nothing which smacks too much of compulsion in having the commission required to report all its recommendations and the subsequent actions, or lack of them, by the railways. If such a report were made to the governor in council, then the onus would be on the cabinet to take action to protect the public interest.

I understand that this is what the minister would prefer. He implied and may even have said that he would not like to see parliament delegate power to the commission which would give it the authority to require railways to dispose of property, purchase property, or enter into leases in certain places. I took it from his remarks that if such things were involved the power should be left with the governor in council and parliament.

If subsection (3) were amended in the way I suggest the governor in council would then be a kind of last authority in this respect and would be in a position to recommend action to parliament in the public interest. The public interest would be as well protected as the cabinet of the day wanted to protect it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman has made a very constructive suggestion. If I were a good lawyer and could make up my mind on these things without any help I would probably say his suggestion is one I would not have much trouble in accepting, but I am glad that we will have a little time to reflect on it.

I agree completely with the objective the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has in mind. We do not want these recommendations to be hole-in-the-corner recommendations. We want them to get all the publicity possible. Where the railways did not comply or showed reluctance to comply with the commission's recommendations, if it were mandatory on the commission to report to the governor in council that would ensure additional publicity and additional pressure upon the governor in council if there were some real public opinion behind the matter. I think this would improve the bill but I would like to examine it further.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I realize that I cannot move an amendment since there is already one before the committee, but with respect to subsection (3) I would suggest for the minister's consideration that all the words after "subsection (1)" in line 2 of the clause, actually line 28 on the page, be deleted up to the word "the" in line 31, and that the word "shall" be substituted for the phrase "may, in its discretion," so that the subclause would read:

> Where a recommendation is made by the commission under subsection (1) the commission shall report its recommendation to the governor in council for such action as the governor in council may consider necessary in the public interest.

If this course of action were followed there would be a mandatory requirement on the commission to report all of its recommendations to the cabinet. The cabinet would then see what was recommended, what action was taken by the railways or whether the railways ignored the recommendation, and would be in a position to act if it wished.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): With reference to what has been said by the last speaker, Mr. Chairman, this is what I had in mind but may have expressed clumsily. It may be necessary to make a claim of this nature on the consolidated revenue fund through the Minister of Finance, as is provided for in a later clause, but if it were done in this way it would be simpler. Now that the matter has been brought out in the open I believe some amendment will have to be made. Otherwise the commission may take this debate as indicating it should not go very far in making a recommendation, not to mention something stronger than a recommendation.

I do not want to be understood as being against the publication of figures but I do have a question with respect to subsection (5) on page 30 of the bill. Everyone has his own ideas about draftsmanship, and this seems to me to be a clumsy provision. I wonder why the phrase "so far as it is practicable to do so" appears in lines 9 and 10. Who is being protected? What is the idea of this? It is almost an invitation not to make the relative traffic figures available.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I can explain that simply. It is provided in an earlier part of the new section that the commission may require information about traffic, costs and so on, pertaining to a branch line that is to be abandoned, and that information has to be published. But for its own purposes the commission may ask for information about a line that the railway does not want to abandon. That information is not normally to be made public but there might be certain circumstances in which, in order to justify its decision, the commission would have to publish some of this information that would normally be kept confidential. So there is no absolute guarantee of confidentiality in the case of this other information.

If it is necessary, in order that the commission can make an intelligible decision, that the commission use information about some other line that is not to be abandoned, it is not forbidden to do so. However, it is directed not to make any more of this information public than is necessary in order to prove the point at issue. This applies just to the commission.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Then why put the phrase in at all?

Mr. Pickersgill: Otherwise the commission could be censured for giving out confidential information.

Mr. Prittie: I would like to make a brief comment with respect to our procedures in committee. I notice that a number of times during consideration of the bill we have had to stand clauses because the minister has to consult with his officials on very complex matters. It always seems strange to me that we allow a minister's officials to sit beside him when we are considering estimates but not when we are considering complex bills in committee of the whole. I suggest that when we establish a committee to examine rule changes this is something which should be considered because it would save time if a minister could get an instant opinion from his officials.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: There is nothing contrary to the practice of the house in doing that, but I do not think any official who would sit in front of me would want to give an instant opinion on this particular point and I would not want to receive it. This is a point in respect of which I should like to have a little time to reflect. We had very long sessions of the standing committee and I would have hoped that these points would be raised there. They are being raised now, and hon. members have a perfect right to do so. I think it is also quite important that I should have the necessary time to consider them. It is not a question of my being at all inhibited because of the fact that the officials happen to be sitting above the presiding officer rather than being here to advise me. I have never asked that anything be stood except when I wished time for reflection.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Does the minister not think that some of these matters of a semi-judicial nature could be dealt with right off the bat if his officials were here on the floor so that they could tell him whether or not something could be done?

Mr. Pickersgill: That may be so, but it is my experience that the more lawyers there are the more opinions there are and the result is that more time is taken in disposing of matters. I say that with respect for the hon. member for Saint John-Albert who is not that kind of lawyer.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I think the minister is trying to practise a little law himself.

The Chairman: Shall new section 314D stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

The Chairman: New section 314E.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I hope you will bear with me a little if I generalize to a certain extent in respect of this particular section. In my opinion this bill is one of the most important to come before the house. It affects not only the present and future of railroading but also air transport, road transport and even water transport. Therefore if one section or one clause impinges on another it becomes difficult to stick strictly to the subject matter of the one section.

I come from a pioneer district. An efficient system of railroad transportation is of the greatest importance and that is the reason I feel what I have to say is relevant to this section. To a certain extent we have become bogged down in semantics. The most important question is whether we are or are not going to streamline transportation across Canada so as to give to the pioneering people who need it most the attention they require and often have not had. When one speaks of rationalization this means, I understand, having a rational excuse to streamline our railroad system. I agree with this view 100 per cent. I believe there are a great many clauses in this bill which will help in that regard. I am afraid, however, that a commission such as we have here may become involved in so many duties that it may not be able to see the bush for the trees. In respect of the streamlining of our railroads it may forget that the main reason railroading was started in this country was to give efficient help to the pioneering people.

I had been in this House of Commons hardly a month when I took up this matter with the then president of Canadian National Railways, Mr. Donald Gordon. Of course Mr. Gordon's main responsibility was the profit and loss situation at the end of the year. This involves getting down to dollars and cents. Our main function is to see that the peoples' money is not wasted. I contend, however, that if we lose sight of the fact that service to the people is the main purpose of transportation it does not matter whether or not the books balance at the end of the year because in that event we have failed in our duty to supply the very vital link between producer and consumer. In this regard we have failed in northeastern Alberta. So, if you will excuse me, I will direct most of my attention to this particular problem.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have the greatest possible esteem for the hon. member but I should like to remind him that we did agree we would deal with clause 42 of the bill new section by new section and stick to each particular section. It is my understanding that general speeches concerning transportation, if they have not already been made, would be made when we revert to clause 1 which was stood earlier. I have just totalled up the statistics and find that we have been in committee on this particular bill for 31 hours. That was before today so the total now would be 32½ hours. We have passed 30 clauses. If we do not follow an orderly procedure in respect of this bill we will never complete our consideration of it. If the hon. gentleman has some general observations he wishes to make, I wonder whether he would consider holding them until we get back to clause 1.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I merely beg the permission of the committee to give a little background to what I have to say because if in our consideration of these sections we do not keep in mind the main purpose of the bill our efforts will be frustrated. Sooner or later before this bill is passed I am going to say what I have in mind in any event.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is not one who takes up much of the time of the committee and I hold him in the greatest esteem, but I would hope that we could proceed in an orderly manner. I merely point out that we did have agreement that general speeches would be made on clause 1. This new section merely deals with certain ways in which the compensation will be provided if a line is not profitable and the commission orders that it be maintained in operation. We might make a little progress by following the rules which we set down for ourselves.

Mr. Bigg: If the minister will exercise the same patience toward me that I have exercised toward him within the last few hours, I think we might get to the meat of the subject. Whether or not compensation should be paid is dependent on whether or not a profit or loss is sustained. Therefore I think the question of whether there is a profit or loss is very relevant to a discussion of this section because we should not pay compensation to a railway company if that company has not done its best to make sure that the profit or loss is proper. I am not satisfied with the bookkeeping system which is used in performing this particular function. Although I have mentioned Mr. Donald Gordon, I do not blame him for this. He did make clear, however, that their method of coming to a decision was a matter of bookkeeping. I cannot stress this main basis of my argument too strongly. I should like to refer to a specific point and I do so without attempting to delay the passage of this bill. If a railway does not operate efficiently on the ground, it cannot operate efficiently on paper.

Two railways exist in the area I represent and from time to time it has been indicated that they are operating at a loss. Neither of these railway lines has been completed. Therefore they have never had a chance to operate efficiently, whether at a profit or loss. If these lines were completed and still operated at a loss I would be the first to support subsidization or a change in the set-up. The government and parliament should provide some guide lines to this new commission so its members cannot come back five years from now and say they did not know what we wanted. We should make it abundantly clear what we want, and we do not require the services of a Philadelphia lawyer to point out our desires in this regard.

I am sure we all want our railways to operate in this country at the least possible cost. If two ends of a railway line do not meet, how can the railway operate efficiently? Anyone who knows anything about hauling freight on tracks, wheels or horseback knows it is cheaper to haul something 40 miles than 328 miles. This is particularly true when the cost is being paid by the small farmer, the homesteader or the small businessman.

It has taken nine years for me to get the opportunity to speak in this house on this subject. We have been told from time to time that the government intends to accept the recommendations of the MacPherson report. No later than yesterday the minister himself made such a statement. The MacPherson report is already out of date. It took six or seven years before we got around to discussing or implementing it, and today we are faced with an entirely different situation. If the railway lines to which I have referred were operating at a loss ten years ago that is now ancient history, and if they are operating at a loss today they are doing so because a gap in the lines has not been filled. I venture to suggest that if that gap were filled they would begin immediately to operate at a profit.

I should like to be sure that the minister and the government, as well as this parliament, will adopt a forward view in respect of the whole question of rationalization and abandonment. Let us look to the future to make sure that the pioneers still moving into certain areas today will have an efficient railway system at least until the end of the twenty first century. That is the kind of thinking which existed 100 years ago and I do not see why in 1967 we should not adopt the same kind of vision which existed in 1867. The people of those days did not get bogged down in semantics or make excuses for themselves because they did not have legal opinions or commissions to study the situation. A handful of brave men with visions, courage, imagination and energy built the great railway lines across this country which by and large have served us well. In a few notable areas these railway lines have not served the people well, and as an example I refer to the Athabasca area which has been served very badly.

Great steps were taken by the former administration under the present Leader of the Opposition. The Pine Point railway line was built under that administration and from the day the steel reached Hay River the line has made a magnificent profit. No company anywhere in Canada would suggest that that line be abandoned. It was built for a specific purpose. In northern Alberta today there exists the richest vein of salt in the world; yet there is only one small salt well in operation. Table salt for the world could be supplied by this area if there were an efficient transportation system between Saskatoon and Lindbergh. This would eliminate the necessity of hauling salt an extra 323 miles.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but he is now making general observations about transportation. I suggest he confine his remarks to new section 314E which refers to claims for abandonment by transportation companies.

Mr. Bigg: I have in my hand a letter dated January 6, 1967, in relation to the abandonment of the line to which I have referred. I use this as an example to prove the principle in respect of which I am discussing this new section. It is suggested that 28 miles of line between Spruce Lake Junction and Frenchman Butte be abandoned. As a result, instead of having a 40-mile gap in this line there would be a 68-mile gap. This line is owned by Canada so I have a double duty to discuss it.

The reason suggested for abandoning this line is that it does not make money. How could it be expected to make money when it is not an efficiently built line? New section 314E will give the commission the power to abandon this line on the basis of the figures to which I referred a few moments ago. It may be shown that this line has only carried so many tons of freight over this 28 miles. Perhaps no thought will be given to whether or not the very opposite result to that desired will occur following the abandonment of this line. If the gap in this line were filled in perhaps the line would show a profit of thousands of dollars. In addition, the people of this area have for years been promised an efficient railway system. If this commission decides that the line should be completed instead of abandoned, what power will it have to make sure this is done?

We have been talking for about two hours about whether or not an amendment might cause the government to impose a slight, additional burden on the taxpayers. I believe in orderly procedure in putting things through parliament, but I do not believe in withholding the right of certain people to earn a living for 40, 50 or 60 years. In this case I have not had the sense before to stand up and instruct the committee, if that is what I am doing, to tell the commission, the government, Treasury Board and the taxpayers to do something they promised to do but have failed to do to my knowledge for over 40 years.

This new section will give the power to abandon lines, but how in the world can a recommendation be made by the commission to abandon a line which has never been completed and never had the opportunity to operate efficiently and take its place in the orderly development of northeastern Alberta? If that is not relevant under new section 314E, I do not know how or when it will ever be relevant. I know I am not allowed to talk about anything which might result in an additional burden on the taspayer. I could suggest that a certain line is losing money and propose an amendment that would mean that the taxpayer would have to pay, and I would be ruled out of order. But surely it is not out of order to prevent this committee, and through it parliament, giving the commission power to stop the proper use of railroads in our part of the country. I could go on and no doubt would be ruled out of order, to mention the effect of this bill on the trucking industry, the air industry and the shipping industry of Canada. I shall not do that; I shall remain very specific in my remarks.

I hope that when the bill is finally passed the transportation commission will look at the debates and say: This is what the representatives from that part of the country intended. They intended an efficient railroad system and if the railroads are not able to provide it and make money they are willing to subsidize them, change their freight rate structure or encourage co-operation between them and the truckers.

What I want to do here, and I think this is the only opportunity I will have to do it, is make sure that no railway line is abandoned in northeastern Alberta until all sides of the question have been heard. This subject was raised by the hon. member for Meadow Lake. I think it is necessary to repeat what he said because this part of the country has been cynically neglected. The answer with regard to that part of the country is the same as that which applied to Pine Point, namely, that we wish to have provided the transportation facilities necessary for the development of this agricultural area. When they are, wealth will flow back to this country as it has in respect of other sections of our great land.

When I came to this house the first promise I made to the people of Athabasca was that I would find out why this railroad had not been completed. In this connection I should like to read to the committee a letter received from Mr. C. W. Rump, secretary of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada. It is dated January 6 and reads in part as follows:

> As a matter of information, the intention of the board is to await passage of Bill No. C-231 and such provisions respecting abandonment applications as may be in it when it is passed, and then consider the matter in the lights of such provisions.

Here we have a definite avowal that when they get the power to do it they will roll up these 28 miles of railway.

Mr. Pickersgill: The railway is just going to try. The hon. gentleman does not assume that it is going to succeed, does he?

Mr. Bigg: In view of the fact that in 40 years it has not completed the line it promised, I assume it is its avowed intention to roll it up unless this parliament does something now to prevent that happening. The same thing could be said about the line immediately to the north. Half of the great area of Saskatchewan and Alberta lies north of the North Saskatchewan river, and there is no completed railroad link running between these two great provinces. Therefore I do not think it takes very much stretching of the imagination or any great daring to suggest that we should give this experiment in orderly transportation a chance. I am not casting any recriminations in this speech on any government, municipality or vested interest. I merely beg them to make sure that when we are putting powers into the hands of these people the railways will not be able to use silence as an excuse for not doing that for which we have waited 40 years.

The Deputy Chairman: Does this conclude consideration of new section 314E?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: We shall now proceed to new section 314F on page 32. Shall new section 314F carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall new section 314G carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall new section 314H carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall new section 314I on page 33 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall new section 314J carry.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we should attempt to carry the whole of clause 42 because I promised to state my position on the amendment. Perhaps we could allow this clause to stand on the understanding that all the new sections have been dealt with except section 314D to which an amendment was moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I would like to be able to come back to that section as soon as possible after eight o'clock, if that is agreeable to the committee, because there may be a vote on it.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree that this clause be stood?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, before we reach clause 43 I should like to say a few words. I noticed that the minister a short while ago lamented the fact that we have spent, I think he said, 31 hours on 31 clauses. Looking back to the debate of last week I found that he lamented the fact that we had spent four days on the bill and had not got very far. It occurred to me that he was adopting the attitude of the Minister of National Health and Welfare who said similar things when he had a bill going through the house. With respect to a bill as important as this, I think the minister is making very good headway despite the obstacles he himself is putting in the way.

I checked to see what happened last week in this debate. On Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday 150 pages of Hansard were taken up in the discussion of this bill and on 90 of those pages you will find substantial comments by the minister himself. So if there is any suggestion that the bill is being delayed unnecessarily by the house I think the major portion of the blame must be borne by the minister. I hope that with this cautionary word he will do two things, one, be a better listener and cease to jump to his feet at every opportunity that seems to be offered to him and, two, cease to complain about any delay in getting the bill through the house. I hope that other ministers of the government will discontinue their complaints about delays in passing legislation. When the house is dealing with legislation of major importance we should take time to deal with it thoroughly. The less interference by the minister piloting a bill through the house, the better progress is made in the course of our discussions.

In this respect I speak from experience in the past. Hon. members may recall that the bill setting up the National Energy Board took up nine days in the house. I made no complaint. This is what the house is for. I simply caution this minister not to adopt the pleading attitude of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and not to attempt to persuade the public that the house is not doing its duty. This bill deals with transportation on a major scale and will set the course of transportation for a decade. In view of this I think we do well to examine every clause with the greatest care. I hope the minister will listen very carefully to the discussion and consult his officials whenever he has the opportunity. Instead of telling us that he is not a lawyer, which we know perfectly well, I hope he will consult his legal advisers with regard to changes suggested from this side of the house. This is the way in which this legislation will go through. I think that the house is doing a major and an effective job with this bill.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the hon. gentleman for his fatherly advice and I will do my best to follow it.

[Mr. Churchill.]

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we stand clause 42 with the understanding that we will come back later to consideration of section 314D?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: We shall now proceed to consideration of clause 43 on page 37 of the bill.

Clause 43 to 47 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 48—

Mr. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Chairman, I want to say a brief word about an aspect of this clause which is of great interest to southwestern Ontario. As the minister knows, for some years there has been concern in southwestern Ontario about the freight rates for shipping goods from our part of Canada to other parts of the country. Rates for shipments to eastern Canada have been based on a mileage basis and therefore lower rates were being paid from places like Toronto and Montreal to the maritimes than from Windsor. The rates for shipments to the west, however, are based on block rates and shippers from southwestern Ontario have not been able to get rates based on the shorter mileage through the United States to western Canada. The geographical situation, while reflected in rate-making to eastern Canada, has not in the past been equally reflected in rates to western Canada from southwestern Ontario.

This problem has been brought to the attention of various governments of different parties and to various royal commissions on transportation by the southwestern Ontario chambers of commerce and particularly the Windsor, Ontario, chamber of commerce on a number of occasions in the past. I myself have raised this matter in the house both when the previous Conservative government was in office and later after our own Liberal party formed the government. I think it is a departure from the usual practice to raise a matter of this type before knowing exactly what would be the attitude of one's own party. In these circumstances one often finds that members who raise such matters when they were in the opposition do not do so when their party is in government. However, I departed from this practice and brought this matter to the attention of my government in the house. Since that particular occasion I have remained in direct contact with the minister and his department on this important matter.

The freight traffic committee of the Windsor chamber of commerce decided to present a further brief on this problem to the transport committee of the house while it was studying Bill C-231. It suggested that the freight rate problem in southwestern Ontario could be at least partially solved by a certain amendment to the wording of section 325 which is covered by clause 48 of the bill. I might add that I met with the Windsor freight traffic committee in Windsor to discuss the proposed brief with them before they appeared before the transport committee and in fact assisted them in making arrangements for their appearance before this particular committee of the house.

When the bill was reported to the house the transport committee did not recommend the particular changes to clause 48 requested by the Windsor freight traffic group. Since 1963 the Windsor area and southwestern Ontario generally have benefited from an unparalleled period of economic growth and development. I think that the policies of the present government, particularly the designated area program and the auto pact, have had a lot to do with this. The need for certain changes in the legislation governing freight rates would have appeared more significant had these other government policies which I have mentioned not worked as well as they did. However, more equitable treatment for southwestern Ontario with regard to freight rates would certainly be helpful in assuring the continuing economic health of our area. It deserves some improvement in its presently existing freight rate situation.

As the government has apparently not accepted the specific form of amendment to this clause proposed by the Windsor chamber of commerce to the transportation committee, I ask the minister to indicate just how this bill can be of assistance to southwestern Ontario. It may be that the specific amendment sought by the Windsor chamber of commerce would have been better suited to the regulatory approach of the previously existing legislation which the bill before us is designed to replace and therefore does not fit in with the different philosophy of rate-making and transportation policy which underlies the proposed legislation. It may be that the minister and the department feel that the aim of the Windsor chamber of commerce to get more equitable treatment in freight rates for southwestern Ontario shippers is in fact being met in the present bill although in a different manner from that specifically sought by it. If that is so may I ask the minister to indicate specifically how this is being done.

It is proposed by means of this bill to bring about far-reaching changes in our transportation system to benefit Canadians generally. This bill lays down a transportation policy which will form the framework for this system for many years to come. Therefore it is important for this legislation to meet the aim of southwestern Ontario to get more equitable treatment in the freight rates that have to be paid to ship its goods across Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, without going into any detail I will say very briefly that the elimination of certain rigidities which exist at present in the law will be of benefit in the particular case of southwestern Ontario and certain aspects of the rate equalization requirements which have not been of benefit to that area which they were intended to benefit and have, perhaps to some degree, been discriminatory in another area, will not be in the bill if it is adopted in its present form. The maximum rate formula will be a substantial advantage in southwestern Ontario but I think the main advantage will be found in the new clause 16, particularly in the form in which it is now couched. It is my view that this will give the shippers of southwestern Ontario a bargaining power with the railways and ultimately recourse to the commission, if they want to have it, which will be more effective than anything in the present law.

Mr. Gray: I have one further question with respect to clause 16 which speaks of a person having the right to apply to the commission. Am I correct in my understanding that under this clause shippers will be able to get assistance from chambers of commerce and industrial commissions in putting forward their case for the removal of any inequities which they feel still exist when the bill goes into effect?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would think that there would be no difficulty.

Clauses agreed to.

Clause 49 agreed to.

On clause 50—

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, to move an amendment to clause 50. This is an amendment which is very simple in form. It will be recalled by those of us who were in the committee that we proposed an amendment in response to recommendations made to us in the committee to put flour to be shipped through eastern ports on an equal basis with wheat because it has always been considered to be in the public interest to export our wheat in the form of flour so as to provide the extra earning to the Canadian people.

In the bill which was reported by the committee in its newly printed form the amendment which we now propose was not complete, although we thought at the time that it was, because of some peculiarities in shipping into which I would just as soon not go as I believe that hon. members are not especially interested in those details. The fact was that it would not have established the full measure of equality that we had intended between wheat and flour shipped through eastern ports. It was felt that it would discriminate against mills in western Canada.

I am going to ask my colleague the Minister of Fisheries to move an amendment which, after reciting all the usual verbiage, would seek to strike out line 24 on page 43 of the bill and to substitute therefor the words "east of the 90th degree of west longitude". That is west of the head of the lakes. It means that in the case of flour shipped from the head of the lakes, which I am told quite often is moved by rail rather than by water, as is most of the wheat, the shipment will be governed by the same relative rates as from the Georgian Bay ports. This should have the effect of giving a more assured supply of flour for export through the Atlantic ports and at the same time be equitable to mills in western as well as eastern Canada.

Mr. Robichaud: I move:

That Bill C-231, an act to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions, be amended by striking out line 24 on page 43 thereof and by substituting therefor the following: "east of the 90th degree of west longitude;"

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I want to indicate our support for this amendment. As one who has been interested in flour shipments for obvious reasons, I am glad we now have the whole matter finally unravelled. I know that the milling and shipping of flour is a very complicated subject, even more complicated than the question of freight rates, but I cannot for the life of me find where we went astray in this new bill.

The minister pointed out the importance of this amendment. Like him I am in no position to go into details nor do I have the desire to do so. It is very important that the balance of cost be kept in line so that grain can be milled in Canada and shipped particularly through the eastern ports to the various countries which contract for supplies. I hope that flour shipments are now put in exactly the same position they were before so far as the question of economics is concerned. In fact, I hope this amendment betters it and that even more flour will be shipped. The railways are desirous of shipping all the flour they can. I am also sure that the mills in the west want this business and are probably inactive at the moment. Perhaps the port of Montreal is busy at the moment as a result of the work of icebreakers and does not need the business as much as Saint John, but I would point out we in Saint John are very desirous of this lucrative flour business which assists all aspects of our port activities.

As I understand it, this amendment will affect all flour going through Halifax and Saint John to Cuba and like countries. If the second amendment made to the bill is adopted by the committee, about 50 per cent of our flour shipments would be affected. The present amendment extends protection to the mills in western Canada which supply about half our production. The minister understands our position. As long as shipments of flour at least remain in the advantageous position which existed before, we will have to be satisfied.

Mr. Olson: I want to indicate very briefly our support of this amendment, Mr. Chairman. I commend the minister for making this change in response to the representations made to him not only by several members of the house but also by the representatives of the flour milling industry. As the minister pointed out, a lot can be said about the importance of the amendment in bettering the position of mills farther west. It also provides increased opportunities for the eastern ports. As an indication to the minister of how important this amendment is, I point out it has been calculated that 7 million hundredweight of flour which would have been excluded was in fact moved into the ports of St. John's and Halifax—

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Saint John.

Mr. Olson: Yes, Saint John.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish it had been St. John's.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I don't.

Mr. Olson:—during this past year. If this flour had not been moved and the railways had adjusted the rate, I suggest one of two things might have happened. The western flour mills would either have been prevented from shipping by rail all the way from the mills to these ports in wintertime, the seaway being closed, or another route would have had to be found through the ports on the west coast. In some cases this is not the most economic thing to do. It would also have resulted in reduced activity at ports in the maritimes which I do not think is desirable. In other cases it might have prevented mills in western Canada taking orders to ship to specific points which could be served more advantageously by the same route as used in the past. This is at least of advantage to some regions of the country and I am very pleased that the minister has moved the amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 50 as amended carry?

• (6:10 p.m.)

Mr. Churchill: No, Mr. Chairman. I was unavoidably absent from the house last Thursday and Friday because of the funeral of the former Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba. I do not want to enter into a discussion which will involve repetition or debate any subject already dealt with, and you will have to excuse me if I err on that side and advise me if this is the case.

Under clause 50 sections 328 and 329 are being altered. The minister has already made his statement about the Crowsnest Pass rates. I have not had a chance to review all that was said during last week's debate. Though I have advised the minister to listen and not talk, obviously we shall get him on his feet again, which is never difficult. With respect to new section 329, why has there been inserted in that section on page 41 provision for a review after a three-year period of the cost of moving grain and grain products? This will affect the Crowsnest rate and open it for discussion. What is the thinking behind this? Why is a review considered necessary? Why was the three-year period decided on, after considering that particular problem?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman was a member of the government which had a bill all but ready to be introduced based on the recommendations of the MacPherson Commission, on which bill, as I stated, I based a good deal of Bill C-120 introduced in 1964, and I think he will remember that the majority of the commissioners found that the railways were carrying grain under the Crowsnest Pass rates at a loss. They recommended that payments be made out of the treasury to the railways in respect of that loss. That loss was to be verified each year and the payments adjusted accordingly.

Considering that now, at the introduction of this bill, so many years have passed, that we have had so many good crops and that so much grain has been moved, I did not feel that the commission's recommendation would commend itself to parliament. We could not accept the assertion of the MacPherson Commission any longer. The railways maintain that in some circumstances in some years there is some loss in carrying grain.

We as the government were not prepared to make such an assumption. As we had to provide the transitional subsidies anyway for a few years it seemed that the best thing to do was to have the whole matter canvassed over three years which should be a good period to ascertain the facts. If in the opinion of the commission, not of the railways but of the commission, there was a loss, then the governor in council could in his wisdom recommend to parliament that the loss be made up in accordance with the recommendations of the MacPherson Commission. We were not prepared to assume there would be loss.

I think the hon. gentleman understands that this bill specifically reiterates the statutory guarantee of the Crowsnest rates. It goes even further than that. At the request of various witnesses before the special committee, including the government of Manitoba, we inserted subsection 3 of proposed new section 328 of the Railway Act on page 41, which would make the rates to Churchill statutory. Up to now they have been conventional. The rates to Churchill have been the same as the rates to Fort William or Armstrong. It was felt it would be a greater safeguard to the port of Churchill to have these rates made statutory. I thought tha was a reasonable representation and I was very glad to make such recommendation to the standing committee, which accepted it. It appears in that fashion in the bill. All the other rates are in the same statutory form they have assumed in previous legislation right up to the most recent date.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I wish to refer the minister to what I said previously with respect to the Crowsnest Pass rates and the action the commission ought to take. I also refer to part of subsection 1 of the proposed new section 329 which reads in part as follows:

—at such level of rates; and the governor in council shall take such action as he deems necessary or desirable on the basis of that report to provide assistance to such railway companies.

I was concerned that under section 24 of the Financial Administration Act no payment could be made under that provision unless parliament authorized it. This is a matter of great consequence. It has been referred to in many speeches in this house and in western Canada, and it is the Magna Carta of the grain farmers of western Canada.

This matter should not be dealt with by way of estimates. I do not think we can change the act. I emphasize to the minister that the government in power in three years' time may wish to reconsider this matter. It may decide to take action and to make recommendations affecting the subsidy to the railways. The losses sustained in hauling grain and the like might be of such a magnitude that the matter should not be dealt with purely on the basis of an estimate before this house. There should be legislation, with the usual provision to refer the matter to a committee for full discussion and the calling of witnesses. There should be a total and complete examination of the subject.

Let me make clear what I am saying. It is not adequate, it is not acceptable and it would not be satisfactory to have an item in the estimates and simply dispose of the matter in this way. The matter ought to be determined by legislation. While this may come up in three years' time, there ought to be some caveat on the part of those representing the western farmers that this matter ought to be proceeded with in the form of legislative enactment.

Mr. Schreyer: Very briefly I wish to comment on the last speaker's remarks. I ask the minister, since the Crowsnest rates are statutory, whether any action taken in future pursuant to new section 329 would necessarily require the government to bring in legislation. Providing financial assistance would in effect modify the existing statutory provisions regarding the Crowsnest rates.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. member for Peace River is saying that there are two ways to make statutory payments. One way is by having an item in an appropriation bill which comes in by way of an estimate. Such a bill goes through as many stages as any other bill but it is not customary to debate it extensively. Of course I am in no better position than anyone else to say what would be done in a hypothetical situation by some future parliament or at a future session of this parliament. I think it would be difficult for any government to try to put an item in the estimates to deal with the matter in the way which has been suggested unless it happened just before the expiry of parliament and it was done for one year only with an undertaking that the next year a specific bill would be brought in for the purpose. None of us, perhaps fortunately, can tell how those who come after us will behave. We have enough difficulty deciding our own conduct. But I am sure the views which have been expressed will not go unnoticed by any government which has to deal with this matter in the future.

• (6:20 p.m.)

Mr. Barnett: Might I ask the minister whether he learned from his experience while he was leader of the house with regard to dollar items in the estimates?

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope I shall never be too old to learn.

The Deputy Chairman: May I ask the indulgence of the committee in order to make an announcement concerning the proceedings on the adjournment motion?

It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), Post Office Department—alleged tampering with mail by Hudson's Bay Company; the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae), External Affairs—India—Reported unjust treatment of Canadian engineer; the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), Canadian Centennial—Trail, B.C.,—Request for stop by centennial train.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I think all hon. members from western Canada are pleased that once again the minister has placed on record the statement that there is no thought of changing the Crowsnest Pass rates. However, the following words appear in new section 329 (1):

Not later than three years after the coming into force of this section, the commission shall inquire into the revenues and costs of railway companies...attributable to the carriage of grain and grain products—

I should like to know what is meant by "inquire into the revenues". Is it likely that the commission will accept the figures of the railway companies or will it use a special costing technique to ensure that the figures cited do represent the actual cost and the actual revenue in connection with the movement of grain which, as the minister knows, is substantially more than it was even a few years ago?

Mr. Pickersgill: The commission will, of course, not accept the figures given by interested parties. It will pay attention to the figures put forward by the railways and listen to anyone else who may wish to make representations. But it will have an accounting staff of its own, using the best and most modern techniques. It will be required to reach its own decision.

Mr. Pascoe: Will the figures arrived at by the board be the ones upon which a decision is reached?

Mr. Pickersgill: Undoubtedly.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The minister knows that we in Halifax and Saint John are interested in flour and in port parity. Where can we anticipate that an amendment on port parity—

Mr. Pickersgill: Clause 59, I think.

Mr. Churchill: That is simply the repeal of an act.

Mr. Forrestall: One amendment will involve new section 329A where a description is set forth of eastern ports. Would the minister prefer it to come under clause 59?

Mr. Pickersgill: It seems to me that anything of that sort would come under clause 59; I think the expression "eastern port" is defined for the purpose of 329 which relates only to grain and flour.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): When the minister says clause 59 that is just an arbitrary number because it deals with the repeal of another piece of legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are trying to avoid renumbering all these clauses and there was room to put in another—

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): That is agreeable provided that if a debate ensues and it is necessary to make changes—

Mr. Pickersgill: I will make certain proposals and if the hon. member wishes to make a proposal to amend mine he is perfectly free to do so.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Suppose our amendment causes a change in another clause which has already been passed?

Mr. Pickersgill: I suppose we would have to deal with that problem when it arose. If the committee accepted it, it would be the will of the committee.

Mr. Forrestall: We are trying to accommodate the minister by co-operating. We have two amendments and we hope he will accept one of them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has it anything to do with grain and flour?

Mr. Forrestall: It has everything to do with the export and import of commodities.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think it would have any relevance to this clause at all. If it does, the hon. member can make a reservation to that effect.

Mr. Forrestall: We will make a reservation with regard to 329A and let it stand. The minister suggested 59 to avoid renumbering.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope we shall not have to keep this open. If it has to be re-opened as a consequence of something else, that is all right.

Mr. Nasserden: With regard to 329 did I understand the minister to say that if a government ever found it necessary to bring forward a measure of assistance to the railway companies because of losses on the Crowsnest rates, this matter could be brought before a committee of the house?

Mr. Pickersgill: I cannot possibly say. Three years from today it will be January 16, 1970. The election was in 1965. It would appear to me that this parliament would be ended. The hon. gentleman is almost certain not to be in the next one and even I may not be a member. So it would be foolish of us to try to predict the future.

Mr. Nasserden: I cannot help feeling a little more optimistic about being back than the hon. member is. I believe it would be a good thing if the minister, as the present Minister of Transport, would state for the record his anticipation that when a matter such as this is brought before the house there will be an opportunity for hon. members to discuss it in committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: It would be my anticipation, it would be my belief, approaching certainty, that unless there were some profound change in Canada any assistance offered to the railways by this parliament for the carriage of grain would be debated at length at every stage and in every possible form.

• (6:30 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 50 as amended carry?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I do not like to consume the time of the committee but I wish to save the situation for a member who is on his way here now, flying on wings. I am not sure that the minister answered my question as to why a three year period was selected as the interval before an investigation should be made of the rates on the transport of grain. Is there any particular reason why it should be three years rather than five years?

I do not think the controversy over Crowsnest pass rates should come up within such a short interval as three years because those rates were investigated by the MacPherson commission and I assume they were dealt with at some length when this bill was before the standing committee. We are now discussing the subject again. The bill provides that the rates shall come up for discussion at intervals of three years, which may perpetuate a state of controversy over a matter that should not be considered for a longer period of time.

Ten years ago this summer the problem of wheat, which was the biggest political problem at that time, rested in part on my shoulders. At that time we had a 730 million bushel surplus, with a 500 million bushel crop expected, and a surplus of soft wheat in the province of Ontario. Our exports for 1957-58 amounted to 320 million bushels. I had forecast that we would export 300 million bushels and I recall being laughed at across the country as an inexperienced, new minister who did not understand the grain trade. We all have such experiences. In fact our exports amounted to 320 million bushels. Those days are now long past.

I also recall when I was making an intensive study of the grain trade that I advanced the proposition that the practice of getting unduly alarmed over that trade each year was unsound, and that it should be looked at over a ten-year period. In my studies I noticed the rise and fall in the world demand for wheat, and that over a ten year period the problem tended to solve itself. That has been our experience from 1957 to 1967.

In 1957 nobody could see exports of wheat exceeding 300 million bushels, yet over the last few years we have talked gaily about exporting 500 million bushels. We have increased our acreage under wheat and our crops are larger. We are not concerned about exporting it in the way that we were concerned ten years ago. The reason I mention these facts is that we are incorporating a clause in this bill which says that within three years the Crowsnest pass rates will come up for review.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman is misinterpreting the bill. The rates are not going to be up for review. There is going to be no review of the rates. It is just a question of the remuneration to the railways at those rates.

Mr. Churchill: I have not expressed myself as well as the minister has. There is to be no review of the rates. They are to remain static as set in the statute, and assistance may be given to the railways if they prove the rates are uneconomic.

My point is that what has been a long and sustained attack on the Crowsnest pass rates will be revived much too frequently, if this issue is reviewed three years after the coming into force of this legislation. I only hope that the entire preceding ten-year period will be looked at, because it may be found that the railways have made a very substantial profit, due to the quantity of grain they have shipped over the last several years.

With respect to the years 1957, 1958 and 1959, when our exports hovered around the 300 million bushel mark, the railways possibly could have argued, and convinced the MacPherson commission, that the rates were uneconomic. But as I say, I hope the figures for the last several years will be taken into account because the export picture vastly improved during those years.

If the situation were reviewed once in ten years, starting with 1967 as the base year, I think this would be much more satisfactory. The railways might not look at it that way, but my point is that the grain trade should be looked at over a period such as ten years. This would prevent the railways simply picking out a bad year and saying, "This is uneconomic and we need to have financial assistance." If the railways have been making a pile of money in years when we are exporting 500 million bushels of wheat, then the alternative is that they should make some contribution to the treasury in compensation for any assistance they might get, due to a decision by the commission.

I am seeking reassurance that the Crowsnest pass rates will be sustained, but inevitably the whittling away at the Crowsnest pass rates will continue despite the reassurance of the minister. The statute says that, if there is an economic loss to the railways, that loss will be made up by grants from the government, and this means by taxation. When that happens people say, "Why should we be taxed in order to support a business that should be paying for itself?" The controversy will tend to continue, and this new section 329 rather suggests that there is some merit in the case which the railways have put up in the past, to the effect that the Crowsnest pass grain rates were uneconomic. I would urge the minister to consider changing the review period from three years to something like ten years.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I have been quite co-operative. I am sure the minister would be the first to agree that, while I wished to say something more on rail line abandonments, I stated I would wait until we reached this particular clause. I do not wish unnecessarily to hold up the bill. I know the minister has been very co-operative with the committee. Therefore, by containing myself until we reached this particular clause I thought we might be able to make some progress.

I listened very closely to what the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre had to say in respect of the Crowsnest pass grain trade, because I realize that when he was a minister of the crown for a number of years he was responsible for this movement and no doubt studied it very carefully. I think what he said about the ten-years provision is very pertinent. The grain trade does fluctuate, and the very fact that a rate has been in effect since 1898 and still is in effect should make it clear to anyone who is interested that it is a proper rate, and we should have the assurance from the minister of the crown that it will remain in effect for years to come.

This section gives me cause for fear, and that is really what prompted me to rise at this time to speak on this particular clause. Without too much ado, I should like to say that I wish the minister would reconsider this three-year period and even withdraw this complete clause. In the time permitted to me I should like to explain to the house my views in this regard. I would say to the minister, first of all, that many people believe this particular clause in the bill is the thin edge of the wedge. Time and time again it has been stated to western Canada that the Crowsnest pass rates are the Magna Carta of the west. This is an accepted view. But if many people in western Canada see what I see in this bill, they will readily conclude that this bill, and this clause in particular, is the thin edge of the wedge with regard to the eventual destruction or removal of the Crowsnest pass rates.

The minister has assured the house that so long as he is minister the Crowsnest pass rates will be in complete effect; but this is not good enough. I do not think the minister will live forever. Also, in the evolution of cabinet ministers one must accept the fact that eventually the parliamentary secretary to the minister aspires to the position of the minister. Then, as has been suggested before in this debate, the minister may aspire to go to the other place. I do not know; but I do know that so long as the minister is in the house we can feel assured that the Crowsnest pass rates will remain. But looking over his shoulder I see the parliamentary secretary. I know his aspirations and I know his views. I know, from a study of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee on transport and communications, that he has said in effect that the Crowsnest pass rates are outdated and are causing the railways to lose money. I do not wish to delay the house by quoting the parliamentary secretary; one has only to read proceedings No. 24 and 27 of the committee reports.

At the time when the officials of the C.P.R. appeared before this committee the hon. member for Kootenay East, who is parliamentary secretary to the minister, said in effect that the Crowsnest pass rates are outdated and that the railways are losing money on them. He said it is high time that the western farmers paid their fair share in moving their product to market. This in effect is what he said. So I hope hon. members will forgive me if I do not place too great an assurance on what the minister said when he stated that, so long as he is minister, these rates will remain in effect. Who knows how long he will be minister, especially when it has been suggested that he aspires to go to the other place?

Mr. Pickersgill: One has to do more than aspire in order to get there.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): One who has been a politician as long as the minister has, and one who is held in such high esteem by the Prime Minister as he is, I am sure can feel confident that his aspirations in that regard will be met.

This is my fear, and my reason for saying that the thin edge of the wedge is in this particular bill. I know the feeling of the railways is that they are losing money, although they have never proved it. How can they prove it? In 1957 the most grain we could move was 256 million bushels. The railways proclaim that under the Crowsnest pass rates they are losing money. Now we are moving 500 million bushels of wheat a year and the C.P.R. is making a bigger profit than it ever has made before, while the C.N.R. is making a larger profit in relation to revenue over cost than it ever has made before.

Lest one think that the railways could move this grain at a loss and still not have it affect their net income, let us see what the C.P.R. had to say with regard to the Crowsnest pass rates. During the committee hearings the officials of the C.P.R. said that the grain moved under the Crowsnest pass rates constituted a tremendous part of their total traffic. I should like to read from page 1966 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence No. 28 of the transport and communications committee—it is significant that they are up to date in this regard:

> This traffic represents the largest single segment of the work performed by the railways. Consequently the payments must provide not only for the shortfall of revenue on variable cost but also on amount in respect of constant cost that is proportionate to the work performed in moving this traffic. Failure to do this would leave the full burden of constant cost on other traffic.

What are they really saying in that quotation? They are saying that the grain trade constitutes the largest single segment of the work they perform. Then the natural question is, how can that segment of traffic double in size without causing a deficit to appear in their returns? Then they go on to say that if they were not allowed to increase these rates the burden of the constant cost would have to fall on some other traffic. Then even if they were losing money under the Crowsnest pass rates, they would have to place that loss against something else and their total loss would increase and move in a direction opposite to that which it has moved in the past number of years.

• (6:50 p.m.)

The losses of the C.N.R. have decreased and the profits of the C.P.R. have increased. I really do not care how the railways show their cost analyses. I would have to check step by step, from the beginning to the end, before being convinced that an operation which has doubled its volume of work is still losing money, even though it may have been losing money at the beginning. That suggestion does not add up in anyone's arithmetic. I am not convinced that the railway companies are losing money under the Crowsnest pass rates. Perhaps the Crowsnest pass rates are too high. It is all very well for someone to say that these rates have been in effect since 1898 and therefore should be increased, but the cost of many things has been in existence since 1898. Let us take for example the moving of earth. When I was a boy, and back in 1898, dirt was being moved by horses.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman was not a boy in 1898.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I said when I was a boy, and in 1898, earth was moved by horses for the construction of dams and for other purposes. There is no doubt in my mind that with the use of modern machinery today the yardage cost of moving earth has decreased from what it was in 1898. There is no logic in the suggestion that because these rates were set in 1898 they must be too low today. It would be just as good an argument to say that as a result of rationalization, such as envisaged by this bill, and a greater degree of efficiency, the rates are too high.

This bill purports to allow more competition. I am sure this would have a depressing effect on the rates set so many years ago. We have observed the advent of dieselization in our railways systems. We have observed the laying of heavier track and the adoption of heavier ballast across this country on our railway lines. One might naturally assume that longer trains can be pulled by bigger power units. At one time the ordinary track being laid weighed something in the neighbourhood of 85 pounds per yard, but this has been substituted by track which weighs in the neighbourhood of 185 pounds or more per yard. We have observed the doubling of ballast on rail lines across western Canada. Greater loads can be hauled over the same track and in many cases larger trains can be moved on those roadbeds built in 1898. For this reason it would be just as logical to argue that these rates are outdated and should be decreased instead of increased.

We from the west are not arguing that these rates should be decreased, even though we are now moving 500 million bushels of grain as compared to 256 million bushels for export in 1956-57. We made a bargain and we will stick by it. We observe that on the one hand the government is attempting to stick to its arrangement while on the other it is trying to slide the thin edge of the wedge into this contract which was made for the export of produce in 1898 and reinstated in 1927.

Mr. Pickersgill: 1925.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What is the purpose of a three-year study and what effect will it have? It will have the effect of creating a slowdown in the efficient movement of grain, in order that the commission will be convinced that the movement of grain is a handicap to the railway companies. If someone came along to me or someone else and said the government intended to make a three year study of my business, and if it found that the business was losing money and said it would pay a subsidy from then to eternity, what would I do during those three years? I would certainly attempt to show that I was losing money. I certainly would not adopt means to provide greater efficiency. I would try to slow down movement of grain, and lose or purport to lose money. Certainly I would show figures which would indicate that I had lost money during the three-year period.

It is my suggestion, Mr. Chairman, that any operation under the circumstances would be slowed down in order to incur a loss during the three years, thus ensuring the payment of a subsidy. That is why I do not like this clause. There is no doubt in my mind that the railway companies are making money by hauling grain under the Crowsnest pass rates. There is no doubt in my mind that following the large-scale abandonment this bill would allow the railway companies will make more money. It certainly will take more than three years to abandon the 1,800 miles of track which is not protected. It will take more than three years to bring about the abandonment of that 1,800 miles of line, from the time of the applications for abandonment which will be allowed following the passage of this bill.

One might assume that if all branch lines were abandoned there could be an efficient transportation system operated, so far as the railway companies are concerned. There would be one line through the prairies in the south and one through the prairies in the north, and the farmers would have to haul their grain distances of up to 100 miles to the main lines. The railways would then be required only to haul the grain to the lakehead or Vancouver.

Perhaps under those circumstances we would have the most efficient possible method of hauling grain. I am sure that if we asked officials of the railway companies whether they could make money under the Crowsnest pass rates following the abandonment of all branch lines, most of them would answer in the affirmative.

An hon. Member: I think that is right.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Someone said "I think that is right". If the officials would answer in the affirmative, would they not also agree that the abandonment of the 1,800 miles possible following the passage of this legislation would bring about a greater saving to the railway companies operating under the Crowsnest pass rates? I think they would answer in the affirmative in that regard as well. Why then do we need a three-year study before the abandonment of this 1,800 miles of track, and before we know what the benefits of that abandonment will be to the railway companies? Those are some of the doubts I have in mind.

Am I correct in assuming that we are to adjourn for a supper hour between seven o'clock and eight o'clock? If there has been that agreement, Mr. Chairman, I would call it seven o'clock.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would like to continue until he has used up his half hour, before we adjourn.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I would rather not. I would rather have some dinner and continue after eight o'clock, although it really does not matter to me.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then, Mr. Chairman, I think there was an understanding that we rise between seven o'clock and eight o'clock.

The Chairman: Order. Shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand there has been agreement among the parties that the house will suspend the sitting from seven o'clock to eight o'clock. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered. Does the house agree now to resume the business interrupted a few moments ago?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-231 to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 50—Crowsnest pass rates.

The Chairman: Pursuant to an order just passed, I do now leave the chair.

SITTING SUSPENDED

SITTING RESUMED

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think there was an understanding that we would go back to clause 42 at eight o'clock. However, I think it would be a little unfair to do that before a few more hon. members have come in to the committee. I would suggest that the hon. member for Acadia should conclude his speech first. Then we could suspend discussion on clause 50 and go back to clause 42.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, before the recess I gave some reasons for my doubts on the necessity for an inquiry by the transport commission into the revenues and costs of the railway companies with regard to the grain movement in general, and the effect of the Crowsnest pass rates upon the revenues of the major railways.

Back in 1957 we shipped 256 million bushels of grain in export trade. At that time the railways claimed that they were losing money on this operation. In the last few years we moved twice that amount of grain but the railways are still saying they are losing money. If that is so, then why do the C.N.R. annual reports show an increased revenue and why do the C.P.R. annual reports show increased profits? The MacPherson commission have completed an exhaustive study of the matter. Since the establishment of the commission, the grain trade has been doubled.

I believe quite sincerely that the establishment of an inquiry into the Crowsnest pass rates should be removed from this bill entirely. It might well be argued that as this rate was established in 1898 it is now outdated. The opposite argument could also be advanced, that because the rate was established in 1898, because of the dieselization, the establishment of the heavy track, the better balance on the track and the larger train movement, the rates should be reduced. This would be quite logical. One only has to look at the pamphlet called The Freight Equipment Catalogue, published by the C.N.R., to see the size of box cars for moving grain that were built at that time. Some of them are still in existence.

At that time the average box car could be loaded with 1300 bushels of grain. This has changed in the last 10 years. Instead of a steel frame box car the railway companies are using a complete steel car moving up to 2000 bushels of grain. Recently we have seen the introduction of a new hopper-type car which will load, carry and unload what is commonly called a continuous stream of grain.

I do not believe that the railways have been modernized to any appreciable degree, and I firmly believe that the recommendations based on the MacPherson commission's report will bring to a halt the process of modernization which has been started in the grain trade.

In this particular clause no reference is made to what should be considered as the total cost of the movement of grain. We considered this question in the committee, where we were told by the railway company that 70 per cent of their costs were variable and that 30 per cent were fixed. These are rough figures only. The bill states that all rates shall be compensatory. In the railway committee we were told that this meant that all rates should cover variable costs. In other words the railways are permitted to set a rate which would amount to 71 per cent of their total costs, and the commission would allow this.

How will the commission judge the costs and the revenues of the railway companies? Will it include all the fixed costs or will it include just the variable costs? Will the railway companies have to prove that the Crownest pass rates are only compensatory? In glancing at this clause it might seem logical to some people that the Crowsnest pass rates should cover the total costs, but it is a well established practice that the volume of trade of a given commodity in a given area shall determine the percentage of the fixed cost so that the greater the volume of a given commodity that is moved, the greater will be the reduction in the rate, regardless of the mode of transport.

This is why it is necessary to ensure that this clause does not in any way outline what shall be the criteria used by the board of inquiry to be set up by the commission. Will it cover all the costs or will it just set down whether or not the Crowsnest pass rates are compensatory?

The old bill, No. C-120, which the committee studied two years ago and which was not reintroduced under a different number at this session, purported to provide that the Crowsnest pass rates should be compensatory and that the government would allow the railway an extra $9 on the rates—the minister will correct me if I am wrong—to cover the fixed aspects of the cost of moving grain. This bill leads me to believe that 100 per cent of the cost will be provided, and before the bill passes we shall want a better understanding in this regard.

We firmly believe that, if anything, the rate is outdated and in excess of what it should be. We should like to know what costing was used and on what the criteria are based. We firmly believe that in view of the volume of their business with the grain trade the railways cannot be losing money at the present time.

This commission will do nothing but bring about a slowdown in efficiency in the movement of grain on the part of the railways. It will bring about a slowdown of the modernization process which is just beginning to take place in the matter of railway cars and equipment. A study of the C.N.R. freight catalogue indicates that during the last year many means were tried to speed up and effect economies in the handling of grain.

For example, there was the introduction of what is called the prairie schooner, which is a new type of railway car tried last year for the first time, I believe with some degree of success. There was also introduced the covered hopper car which brought about what is commonly known in the movement of grain as continuous flow loading and unloading of grain. These plant modernizations are a key factor in the movement of this commodity.

One fault which can be found with fixing a set rate on any given commodity is that the commodity tends to become isolated from the movement of other commodities. It also limits initiative on the part of the railways in the modernization or speeding up of the movement of that commodity. To a certain degree this is exactly what has happened with these Crowsnest pass rates. As a result of the demand for Canadian wheat in our export markets the railways have realized that they are 25 or 50 years behind the times in their port facilities and railway plant generally.

This proposed inquiry will not be looking into the provision of modern plant or port facilities, or what I might term modern railway tracks across the prairies. Some modernization will be effected as a result of this bill in permitting applications to be heard for the abandonment of branch lines which are uneconomical and out of date. But in my opinion this proposed inquiry comes at the wrong time and will be using outdated cost figures.

The trouble with the MacPherson commission is that it was initiated in 1959 and its report came out in 1961 and 1962. In those days the railways were losing money and it was felt that some scheme would have to be devised in order to put the railways in a better financial state. That is what has happened, and today we find the railways flourishing in this new atmosphere of total transportation. This inquiry will be looking into revenues and costs which are six years old, so certainly no benefit will accrue to the western farmers.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, this clause in the bill is the thin end of the wedge in the matter of the Crowsnest pass rates. Certainly the parliamentary secretary has shown in his questioning of the officials of the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. that he has no respect or love for the Crowsnest pass rates, and believes they should be increased. In effect, eventually this is what will happen under the bill; and I am sure that most farmers across the prairies will view it with a great deal of scepticism.

Clause stands.

On clause 42.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think it was understood that we would now revert to the clause I stood so that I could give the committee the results of my considerations, and I would be glad to do this now.

First of all, on reflection I do not feel I should press the question as to whether or not this amendment is in order. This does not mean that I do not have a little doubt about it, but I do not think it is worth arguing the point. I am quite prepared to have the amendment voted on, if we have to vote on it, at the appropriate time.

However, before we decide whether we do want to take a vote on it I should like to point out one or two things which might have some influence on whether hon. members wish to press the matter to a vote. May I point out that the amendment could affect the following matters. The proposed section 314D (1) at page 29 reads:

In the exercise of its duties under section 314C the commission may recommend to railway companies the exchange of branch lines between companies by lease, purchase or otherwise, the giving or exchanging between companies of operating rights or running rights over branch lines or other lines of railway, the connecting of branch lines thereof with other lines of the company or another company, and the abandonment of operation of branch lines in respect of which no applications for abandonment have been filed with the commission.

I think I indicated in a general way that I believed most of these directions could already be made by the Board of Transport Commissioners. I now find that I was right and that under section 196 of the Railway Act there is a provision for the exchange of running rights, subject to the direction of the board. There is no need to give the commission the power a second time to direct the exchange of running rights. Sections 315 and 316 provide for the interconnection of lines and the exchange of traffic, and permit the board right now to direct that these things be done. The only new things the commission can recommend to the railway companies under the new legislation are the exchange of branch lines—that is, the transfer of property from one railway to another by lease, by purchase and sale—and abandonment, when no application has been made.

If this amendment were accepted its net effect would be to enable the commission to direct that one railway lease a line from another railway, or sell a line to or purchase a line from another railway, or abandon a line the railway did not want to abandon. These are the only new things which could be directed.

It is obvious to every hon. member that a direction in any of these respects would have some monetary significance. It is also clear from the rest of the clause that the only respect in which that monetary significance could be compensated for by the crown would be under part III, where there was power merely to recommend certain things to the governor in council. He might or might not do something, as he saw fit, in the matter.

It seems to me it is better to leave subclause 1 as it is. I also want to say a word about the alternate suggestion made by the hon. member for Springfield, who has suggested a way—it is not dictatorial or directional, and I do not want to use language in any way offensive—to draw the greatest possible attention to this recommendation the commission might make, that one railway should lease its line to another or purchase a line from another, or abandon a line it did not want to abandon. The last of these three contingencies is not apt to happen often, but it might happen. I would be dubious about the enthusiasm there would be for having it happen.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

I am not prepared to accept the amendment in the precise wording moved by the hon. member for Springfield. I do not expect he believed I would accept it like that, because obviously he had not had much time to reflect on it. But I should be prepared, if it would make it easier for hon. gentleman opposite not to press the other amendment, or if the committee thought it was a good idea, as I do, to amend subclause 3 by striking out lines 27 to 35 inclusive and substituting the following:

Where a recommendation is made by the commission under subsection (1), the commission shall report its recommendation to the governor in council; and, if the recommendation involves one or more railway companies in cost or losses not recoverable under section 314E or is for that or any other reason not acceptable to one or more of such companies, the governor in council may take such legislative or other action as he considers necessary in the public interest.

That, I think, goes a long way. It says that if the commission recommends any of these drastic things affecting the property of one or other of the railways, and the railways do not accept that recommendation, the commission must send it to the governor in council for such action, legislative, or otherwise, as he considers necessary in the public interest. There will be a powerful sanction there, if the commission is the kind of commission which commends itself to hon. members, and I would think there would not be much doubt that its recommendations would be accepted. This would accomplish practically everything the hon. member for Qu'Appelle had in mind in his amendment, without being open to those objections that I, in all conscience, could not accept.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask a question? I understood that the request of the hon. gentleman from Springfield for this amendment was predicated on the wording in the amendment of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, that there be a direction to the board. The minister has said that this would be a financial involvement. What is the sense of moving this amendment if the minister will not accept the original amendment of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Springfield can speak for himself, but I shall also try to speak for him. He suggested his amendment, I think, as a compromise. The government was not willing to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I do not feel it would be proper, as a matter of public policy, to give this commission the power to direct the railways to lease or purchase each other's property, or to abandon lines they do not want to abandon. There is no objection to giving them the power to recommend, and there is no objection to imposing on them the duty of passing their recommendations on to the governor in council, and action being taken by parliament if the governor in council has no power to take action. That, I think, would accomplish substantially everything the hon. member for Qu'Appelle suggests would be desirable, without giving arbitrary powers over property to the commission which, by its nature, is to be independent and not responsible therefore to parliament.

Mr. Schreyer: The minister has not misstated the intention of my suggesion. I sensed that he was not disposed to accepting the amendment of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and I thought a change along the lines I suggested might go a long way toward meeting the objectives the hon. member for Qu'Appelle had in mind. I must say the amendment proposed just now by the minister goes a long way towards satisfying at least one requirement, that the commission shall report to the governor in council those recommendations made to the railways for rationalization and that, therefore, it is up to the governor in council or cabinet to take the proper and necessary steps to protect the public interest. This seems a welcome amendment.

Other things being equal I would have preferred the minister to accept the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, but since he has not done so I can only say that this proposal certainly gives us some chance to salvage as much as possible.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): We have the minister's explanation on record. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle evidently cannot be here this evening. Could we not stand over the vote on this until tomorrow? Perhaps I misunderstood his intent, but it seems to me that the whole point of my hon. friend's amendment centred upon this question of direction, and the amendment, to my mind, has nothing to do with direction at all—it is simply the recommendation which is being continued, plus some other provisions. If we could defer the vote, my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle would have the opportunity of deciding whether or not he wishes to press his amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: It would be preferable if the need to vote on this amendment did not arise. This is the difficulty in which I find myself: One hon. member after another has asked me to stand one clause after another for one reason or another, and I would very much like to reach a determination of some of these things at some stage. I do not want to be difficult, but if it is felt that all we are doing is waiting for the hon. member for Qu'Appelle to record one more vote in favour of his amendment, and that we are going to vote on it tomorrow, anyway, I would just as soon come to a vote tonight and have done with it. If on the other hand there is a reasonable chance that it will not be necessary to call a vote, and that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, in the light of suggestions I have made in strengthening clause 3 materially in the direction he wishes to go, will not be inclined to press his proposal, then I would be happy to accede to the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I do not want to place any restriction upon what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle may do. I repeat that I do not think this proposal by the minister achieves what he sought to do in his amendment, and this is why I ask that it stand over in order that he may have an opportunity to consider what has happened. I realize that it is not easy to consider all these amendments extensively, but they do deserve a lot of thought. The minister appreciates what is involved.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would have no objection if the committee is prepared to let this stand on the understanding that tomorrow, when we resume in committee, we will take up this clause first and reach a decision without, I hope, a prolonged debate. At least we have on record what I am prepared to do with respect to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Springfield.

Mr. Baldwin: Before we leave this subject, in order to offer the minister something as a quid pro quo, and show the hon. gentleman how co-operative we are, the committee might like to clear up at least one of the clauses which has been allowed to stand—the amendment to clause 20 and to clause 20A. I should like to speak briefly in answer to points the minister made. As far as I know, no one else has any intention of speaking at any length on the matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say it would be helpful if there were a general disposition to dispose quickly of clause 20 to which an amendment was moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur, and with regard to which I myself have a small amendment to offer in the light of the observations made by hon. members, in particular by the hon. member for Acadia. It would also be most convenient if we could dispose of the proposed clause 20A.

The Chairman: Before the committee proceeds to decide what it will do with clause 20, it might be wise to decide what it wishes to do with clause 42.

Mr. Pickersgill: I understood we had agreed to allow clause 42, with the amendment of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, to stand until the beginning of proceedings tomorrow. It was further agreed to revert now to the amendment of the hon. member for Port Arthur.

The Chairman: It is this agreement I should like to confirm. The suggestion is that clause 42 stand, with the understanding that when the committee resumes its work tomorrow clause 42 will be the first item to be discussed. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee to revert now to clause 20?

Mr. Pickersgill: To the amendment of the hon. member for Port Arthur. Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member for Port Arthur moved his amendment the other evening the hon. member for Acadia raised a point which concerned me. One or two other members spoke about it; I believe the hon. member for York South said something about it. The point was the relation of this amendment to the Combines Investigation Act. I felt that even though some thought had been given to this matter by my advisers, further consideration was desirable.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

I am able to advise the committee that the officials of the combines investigation branch are altogether in favour of the purpose and objective of this amendment, which they feel is precisely along the lines of their own legislation, but they believe it will be improved if in the second paragraph, where it says the commission shall give or cause to be given such public or other notice of any proposed acquisition referred to in subsection (1) as appears to be reasonable in the circumstances, the words were added "including the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act".

This would enable the director under that act to intervene in the hearings if he felt there was any reason for doing so. It was also thought it would be desirable, in order to make sure that there could not possibly be any interference with any action which might be taken under the Combines Investigation Act, that instead of the commission giving its approval in these cases it be given the power to disallow.

• (8:40 p.m.)

In other words, instead of giving a positive approval the commission could say "disallow", and so far as I can see in that way any possible conflict between the two would be totally removed. Instead of my asking one of my colleagues to move a subamendment to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur, I wonder whether the hon. member for Port Arthur, if the committee allowed him, would substitute this proposed amendment for the one originally offered?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Chairman, I am most agreeable to that suggestion.

The Chairman: Does the committee give its unanimous consent for the hon. member for Port Arthur to withdraw his amendment to clause 20?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: And to have substituted therefore the new amendment as read by the Minister of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I shall only take a minute on this because we have already expressed our interest in the desirability of the amendment. I would point out that it was the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Acadia who mentioned the possible conflict with combines investigations. I think it would be worth while to repeat some of the objections.

As admitted by the minister himself, the provision seemed to be directed to a certain extent against take-overs in the trucking field by the railways, and it was pointed out that it was a little late to move in this way. We do not have any data on the control which the railways have in the trucking industry, but I for one think it would be quite small in view of the general competition in that field. However this is what prompted the amendment. As the hon. member for Port Arthur said, it cannot be made retroactive, and so we are looking into the future.

This is the first place in the bill where we have given a specific direction to the new commission to start looking into things that are beyond its normal scope of activity. Second and this is a matter of principle, this is the only type of activity upon which we are attempting to restrict the diversification of railway operations. Under the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act all big companies are permitted to diversify their operations; as a matter of fact this is the trend nowadays. In some cases diversification strengthens the economy, but now we are saying that there should be a limit placed upon the ability of our two railway companies to diversify into some other type of activity. But even expressing those two reservations, I may say I am sure we in the opposition will support the amendment.

The Chairman: Mr. Andras moves:

That Bill C-231, an act to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions, be amended

(a) by inserting immediately after clause 19 on page 12 of the bill, as reprinted, the following:

Notice of proposed acquisition.

"20. (1) A railway company, commodity pipe line company, company engaged in water transportation, or person operating a motor vehicle undertaking or an air carrier, to which the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada extends, that proposes to acquire, directly or indirectly, an interest, by purchase, lease, merger, consolidation or otherwise, in the business or undertaking of any person whose principal business is transportation, whether or not such business or undertaking is subject to the jurisdiction of parliament, shall give notice of the proposed acquisition to the commission.

Publication.

(2) The commission shall give or cause to be given such public or other notice of any proposed acquisition referred to in subsection (1) as to it appears to be reasonable in the circumstances, including notice to the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act.

Objection.

(3) Any person affected by a proposed acquisition referred to in subsection (1) or any association or other body representing carriers or transportation undertakings affected by such acquisition may, within such time as may be prescribed by the commission, object to the commission against such acquisition on the grounds that it will unduly restrict competition or otherwise be prejudicial to the public interest.

Investigation by commission.

(4) Where objection is made pursuant to subsection (3) the commission

(a) shall make such investigation, including the holding of public hearings, as in its opinion is necessary or desirable in the public interest; and

(b) may disallow any such acquisition if in the opinion of the commission such acquisition will unduly restrict competition or otherwise be prejudicial to the public interest;

and any such acquisition, to which objection is made within the time limited therefor by the commission that is disallowed by the commission, is void.

Construction.

(5) Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize any acquisition of an interest in any other company that is prohibited by any act of the Parliament of Canada.

(b) by renumbering clause 20 on page 12 of the bill, as reprinted, as clause 21; and

(c) by striking out clause 21 and the heading thereto on page 13 of the bill, as reprinted.

Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Baldwin: Obviously this brings us now to the amendment I moved to clause 20, and I would just like to reply for a few minutes to the objections raised by the minister and by hon. members to my left. The reasons which prompted me to present my amendment, with the support of my colleagues, have not been properly appreciated by the minister and by government supporters.

This is an attempt to place a limitation on the extent to which the government can procrastinate on the appointment of committees. There is no doubt that only through the medium of a statute is it possible to set such limitation on the government.

On today's order paper there appears a proposal to set up a committee to deal with the provisional rule changes which the house passed a year and a half or two years ago, and which will expire at the end of this session. Before that time we must decide whether some of those important rule changes will be continued, but it is only at this late date that this notice appears on the order paper. The personnel of the committee has not been established and there is no indication when the committee will sit. We may well find ourselves in a position where the committee will have only a month to deal with the important question of rule changes.

This example points up better than anything else the attitude of government, be it this or any other, toward the establishment of committees of any kind; and because of the tremendous importance of this legislation, and the fantastic powers it will give to the new transport commission, it should not be left to the government to say when a committee is going to be established, what terms of reference it is going to have, and when it is to commence its duties.

It is not good enough for members of the opposition to have to come hat in hand to the government and ask, "Will you please set up this committee"? Then, when the committee is set up, it is not good enough that they should have to come hat in hand to the government and ask, "Will you please establish the personnel of the committee?" and "Will you please give its terms of reference so that the committee can start operating?"

This is a procedure which will have to be changed, and my amendment is an attempt to change it in connection with this bill. An objection has been raised with respect to the Senate and its role. But that objection is not tenable, Mr. Chairman. In my amendment I make it quite plain that the members of the committee will be appointed "according to the practice of this house" and that the standing orders of the house "shall prevail with regard to the meetings and acts of the said committee." All that the Senate is called upon to do, as a constituent part of the parliament of Canada, is agree to the fact that there is going to be a committee, which then makes it mandatory on the government to see the committee is established, and with respect to the provision as to secrecy it is the committee, and only the committee, which decides that that is essential.

Under those circumstances how can it be said that there is an inclusion of the other place or a change in the standing orders of this house in this regard when it has been spelled out specifically that this is not the case. I submit that this is not a real argument. Some suggestion has been made by the minister that the government has initiated very valuable and useful recommendations in respect of committees. Reference was made to the defence committee. I am glad to see that the Minister of National Defence is here. If one looks back through the record he will realize that this was a very unfortunate choice. It was the Minister of National Defence who stood up in his place and said consistently that a minister of the crown had the right, if he saw fit, to say that certain witnesses should not be called before a commitee, save with his permission. He also said that the evidence of a certain type of witness must be subject to review by the minister. I think I am paraphrasing fairly accurately what the minister said in respect of these specific points. This was supported by the Prime Minister. I asked the Prime Minister about this, and as I understand it he and the members of the government supported this position. Surely this points up the absolute necessity for placing some curb on the powers of the government with regard to committees and their operations.

Reference was made, I think by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, to the public accounts committee as being a prestigious committee which should not be subject to this sort of operation. It is in respect of the public accounts committee that the parliament of Australia has seen fit to provide for statutory terms of reference. For some years I have been in touch with members of the public accounts committee of Australia. From time to time they have courteously sent me copies of their deliberations. This committee, operating under a statute, performs a most valuable function. One of the main reasons for this is the fact that there is no right on the part of the government to curb the establishment of the committee or alter its terms of reference.

In view of this I suggest that what has been said by the minister and other hon. members does not constitute any real valid objection to the points I have raised. In my opinion the government takes the position it does for the same reason any government would; that is, it is a question of power. A government naturally seeks power and has a reluctance to give up any of that power. If this amendment should be passed it would have the effect of taking from the government some of the powers it now holds with regard to the appointment of committees.

Quite frankly in my opinion the government should have the power to establish committees, commissions, and tribunals. I have no objection to that, provided however that this house is left with the opportunity to scrutinize what these committees are doing in a way which is in no sense inhibited by the government. If this is to be provided, then I have no objection to giving powers to committees, tribunals or commissions. Because this power is not being given in this instance, I have moved this amendment and I suggest that it merits the support of all members who do not sit on the treasury benches, irrespective of their party affiliation. This provides an opportunity for members of this house and this committee to exercise the type of scrutiny over a committee which is essential if the democratic processes are to be maintained.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, personally I have the greatest possible sympathy for the objectives of the hon. member for Peace River in moving this amendment, but I find two difficulties which I should like to draw to his attention and to the attention of members of the committee. I am not so much worried, as was the minister the other day, about the fact that if reference to the committee is included in the statute this will mean that the Senate will have something to do with either assenting to it or dissenting from it. That may or may not be an important constitutional question. What does concern me is that when this is enshrined in a statute dealing with a particular subject in a particular way there is a rigidity about it which in my opinion should not exist in respect of parliamentary committees. If it were the desire to change the number of members of the committee, say from 12 to 13 for some valid reason, this could not be done in the same way it could be done in respect of other committees. It would be necessary to introduce a bill to amend the act which set out the actual number of members on the committee. It seems to be this is not desirable.

I believe it should be possible to amend our standing orders in such a way that the standing and special committees could be given more powers than they now may have, if the hon. member for Peace River was accurate in his statement—and I am sure he was, because I always have found him to be accurate—which he made a few minutes ago. But, it seems to me that the solution is not to provide, by a statute dealing with a public body, that a committee be established with a certain number of members on it, because this is where the logic dissolves. There are a good many crown corporations, regulatory, judicial and quasi-judicial bodies which are set up. It seems to me that if this kind of thing is to be done in this case, then the obvious logic is that it must be done in every statute where a body is set up with the kind of power and area of influence which the body set up under this bill has. That does not seem to me to be a logical or sensible way to achieve the purpose the hon. member has in mind, one with which I am sure every member in the house has sympathy.

I would be more in favour of a bill which would set up some machinery to deal with all such bodies. Had the hon. member produced a bill proposing a framework for direction and financial parliamentary supervision over the activities and decisions of all such bodies, that would have made sense to me. However, provision for one committee in one statute, with the rigidity that this involves, is not something which appeals to me.

Mr. Chairman, I have a second and equally serious difficulty with regard to the hon. member's amendment. I think it is undesirable in the extreme to give any committee of parliament power to hear evidence in secret or require, as is proposed by subclauses 5 and 6 of the amendment, that a committee may, and at the request of the witness giving evidence, shall take evidence in private. What this means, Mr. Chairman, is that if I were to appear before the committee, not only may the committee take evidence in private, but if I appear in private and request that my evidence be given in private, the committee must hear my evidence in private.

• (9:00 p.m.)

The subclause goes on to say that the committee—

> —shall take in private evidence whether oral or documentary which in the opinion of the committee relates to a secret or confidential matter.

The next subsection states:

> Where at the request of a witness evidence is taken by the committee in private the committee or member shall not, without the consent in writing of the witness, disclose or publish the whole or part of the evidence.

The other day I asked the value of that evidence. I respectfully suggest to you the likelihood is that evidence taken in private will be the most important evidence, because the kind of evidence that the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian National, the Canadian Pacific Airlines, or some bus company is likely to insist upon being taken in private is precisely the kind of evidence about which this parliament should know or, if hon. members do not agree with me that parliament should know about that evidence, is precisely the kind of evidence that would affect the conclusion which hon. members might reach.

I personally have no use whatever for the proposition that when parliament or a parliamentary committee is interested in an important issue of public interest, and I say this in broad terms, there is any transaction on the part of a private or public company which should be kept from the members of parliament and the public when that information or transaction is necessary to a proper understanding of the purposes and to a proper appreciation of the public interest involved.

In any case, as other hon. members have experienced, it usually falls within the power of a parliamentary committee to say whether or not evidence which has been asked for should be given. I understand there was a motion before the committee which considered this bill that the Canadian Pacific should produce certain information. There was a vote on that motion and the majority voted that it should not be made to produce that information. If we carry that one step further, by putting this amendment into effect, what we would then have is a situation in which evidence was being produced to 25 members, or whatever the number might be, in camera and in secret, and if every member of that committee carried out the statutory injunction no one else would know about it. If evidence were given under those circumstances the members could not use it and their reports would not refer to it. Parliament would not know about that information and the press would not know about it or should not get a hold of it. That does not mean the press would not get it, but it should not. In heaven's name, what is the purpose of taking that kind of evidence, except to make everyone outside the charmed circle feel that something decisive and important was being kept from them? That is all it would accomplish. It would serve the purpose of arousing suspicions and wonderment instead of giving information and guidance, as should be the result of any evidence taken.

For those two reasons I find it very difficult to support the hon. member's amendment. On the first point I think it is appropriate for us as members of parliament to continue to demand the setting up, of committees where they are required, and to needle the government to that end. When the committee considers changing the rules it should give much more attention in the future to the question of the powers of parliamentary committees, whether they are standing or special committee, particularly along the lines of the objectives intended by the hon. member for Peace River.

In any case, Mr. Chairman, I could not possibly support this amendment which proposes the taking of evidence in private and in secret and prohibits any members of the committee who hear the evidence from disclosing any part of that evidence outside the committee.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question? Is the hon. member aware that the transportation committee sat in camera day after day in consideration of this bill.

Mr. Lewis: I was not aware of that fact. If the hon. member means that the committee held in camera sittings, taking evidence, that is one thing.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Lewis: It occurred to me that there may be a catch in that suggestion. All committees sit in camera to consider clauses of bills. I would hope that we do not ever take evidence in camera, because all evidence ought to be taken in public so that information and guidance can be given not only to members of parliament but to the public at large.

Mr. Baldwin: I do not attempt to change the hon. members mind. He has presented a very reasonable objection and I respect it, but I think I must point out on the point he raises that it was his last point which separates his approach and mine. Other hon. members of this party agree to an amendment under which a committee would have the power, in the same way the transport commission would have, to change its membership and number of members. I have no objection in that regard. I think the parliamentary committee, rather than the government, should have the right to alter and change its members as it sees fit.

My hon. friend, the learned member for Saint John-Albert, has put the case very well. There have been and always will be committees of this house which will be compelled to take evidence in camera and in secret. What bothers me is that we are being asked to give the transport commission the right to hear evidence in secret, a privilege which the government is not prepared to give to a committee of this house. Why should we have any less powers than the Canadian Transport Commission, which will have the right to sit in camera to hear evidence secretly and not divulge that evidence?

Surely when a committee has received information of that kind, that information will play a determining part in forming recommendations to be presented to the house, without divulging the information it receives in hearing evidence in private. Surely evidence given by a shipper in respect of conditions under which he is a captive shipper would be very pertinent and useful, but should be withheld because a competitive disadvantage might occur if it were made public. That is the purpose behind this amendment. I wanted to explain my position in this regard, while at the same time giving full credit to the hon. member for the position he has taken.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the vote is taken perhaps I should just say that for the reason I gave the other day I do not feel I could possibly support the hon. gentleman's amendment. I am sure this house is competent to adopt a standing order which would have exactly the same validity as any statute in preventing the government from frustrating the desire of the house. I believe we must always preserve the position that this house is the master of its own rules.

I am not one of those who want to abolish the Senate, but I do not like that body making our rules. Having made them we would have to seek its consent to change them. What I would find even more objectionable, in view of our long history, would be to require the consent of the crown to change our rules. That is something absolutely contrary to everything that happened in England during the seventeenth century and to the whole struggle for responsible government in this country. For that reason I just could not possibly support the amendment, though I reiterate my support of the objectives set out by the hon. member for Peace River. I also agree in the main with the hon. member for York South about the hearing of testimony in secret.

• (9:10 p.m.)

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Baldwin) negatived: Yeas, 30; nays, 62.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Pickersgill: I assume, sir, that we will now go back to clause 50.

The Chairman: The committee will now resume discussion of clause 50.

On clause 50—Crowsnest pass rates.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it was quite a while ago that we were discussing this clause, and perhaps to place in proper context what we are discussing I should read part of the clause:

> Not later than three years after the coming into force of this section, the commission shall inquire into the revenues and costs of railway companies subject to the jurisdiction of parliament—

And so on. That passage is to be found on page 41 of the bill. A question I asked earlier today and the answer I received from the minister confirmed my fears that this section proposes a greater problem to the welfare of western Canada than the minister will have us believe by his light-hearted reference to the discussion that would take place in the House of Commons in any subsequent parliament that might be considering this whole matter. As I look at this section of the proposed act, I cannot help but feel that it should be removed, because it is unnecessary. I shall try to place on the record the reasons for my feeling this to be the case. If we go back in the past to the time when the Crowsnest pass rates were initiated and guarantees were made to the western provinces and those who produced grain in those provinces, we cannot but realize that at that time the volume of grain being handled, and even the prospect of grain that would be handled by the railways, was indeed a much smaller percentage than it is today. The volume, in terms of hundreds of thousands of bushels, was much less at that time than it is today and much less than it will be in the foreseeable future.

If we consider our railways systems in Canada today, those of us who come from the grain growing areas do not have to consider them very long to realize that the railways have been very, very slow in bringing in changes in the equipment that they use for the handling of grain, and the whole area in which they assemble their carloads at the various points. We realize that there could be a great improvement in this respect.

One of the reasons for the difficulty in this regard has been the fact that we still have relatively small grain elevators across western Canada. Nevertheless, there has not been that change in the composition of a grain handling car that there should have been in the period we have under review at this time. In considering the history of grain handling in western Canada, another matter we should take into consideration is the automation that has taken place in regard to locomotives, locomotive power and the load that a locomotive will now pull.

Also in this connection I think of the elimination of the many stations that has taken place in western Canada, and the encroachment that will take place in the years ahead. If we consider all these things we cannot come to any conclusion but that the cost of carrying a bushel of grain today is much less than it was at the time these rights were given to those who handled grain in western Canada. While at that time they were considered to be guarantees to the farmers and communities of western Canada, today they have to be considered in the context of this bill, which talks so much about competition. Realizing that this particular section of the bill looks only one way, namely to rising costs, we cannot help but feel that it is unjustified in so far as concerns the conditions that have prevailed in the handling and transportation of grain by the railways over the past several years.

In this connection we must consider what the railways have failed to do in regard to those areas in which lines could have operated profitably over the last 20 years in the communities of western and northern Canada. We must also realize the other factors that enter into the cost, not only in regard to the shipment of grain but in regard to the shipment of other commodities, and the effect this has on the slowing down of the development of certain parts of our nation. To introduce a special section in this bill that would have no effect other than to discourage further the search for and utilization of modern handling facilities in the movement of grain seems to be one of those impossibilities that in the year 1967 in the parliament of Canada should not be considered at all.

As I have said, this section uses the words, "not later than three years after the coming into force of this section." The period is not stated. As I read the section, I gather that one could refer back to any period of time to figure out what the costs have been. The new section continues:

> —the commission shall inquire into the revenues and costs of railway companies subject to the jurisdiction of parliament ... and shall report such revenues and costs to the governor in council and the amount of payments necessary, in the opinion of the commission, to assist such railway companies to meet the costs of operations in respect of the carriage of grain and grain products after the 31st day of December, 1969, at such level of rates;—

When we take a look at the cost accounting which was part of the various submissions from the railways in the years gone by, the failure on their part to substantiate their claims that they have incurred losses in the movement of grain under the Crowsnest pass rates, and the failure of this bill to provide what I believe to be the necessary machinery for parliament to study this matter effectively, we must come to the conclusion once again that this is an open door for the railways to make profits which will affect the welfare of western Canada.

We who come from western Canada do not wish to see a review undertaken every three or five years which would raise the same old divisions which have been raised so many times in the past. I think that it ill-becomes a minister of the government representing one of the historic political parties in this country, which has given lip service to the fact that the Crowsnest pass rates were part of the Magna Carta of western Canada. We do not want to be presented with a clause which would have no other effect than periodically to question the validity of those rates and raise in the minds of people in other parts of this nation the question as to whether the government is indeed subsidizing one section of the country for a particular reason.

I know the minister would like to pass over this matter quickly. He can do so by withdrawing this particular clause because I do not believe it serves any useful purpose. It attacks the very fundamentals of the principle which has been referred to over the years by countless Liberals as the Magna Carta of western Canada. Surely the minister, great Liberal that he is, would not want to attack that principle, coming, as he so often likes to remind us, from the great city of Winnipeg, the gateway to the west. Surely the minister does not wish to be the one to obliterate all the good resolutions of the Liberals before him.

Let us take a look at the advances that have been made not only in transportation but in every other field of endeavour. The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport shakes his head. We all know he is opposed to the Crowsnest pass rates. He is against the unity which they have given to this country. This used to be one of the arguments which the Liberal party supported but which they do not support any longer, as is evidenced by this clause and by the stand taken by the parliamentary secretary.

We can see that he is a little concerned about this. It will jeopardize his chances of following in the footsteps of the present Minister of Transport when he goes to other pastures. We can understand his concern in that regard but we cannot understand the Minister of Transport, who apparently thinks that the Crowsnest pass rates will jeopardize the rest of Canada. It was those rates which brought Canadians together and which caused the development of the grain-growing industries in western Canada which has been one of the mainstays of our economy. Hon. gentlemen opposite should know better than anyone else the value to this economy of the grain shipments as reflected in the returns during the last two years while they have been in office. Had it not been for that grain trade the financial position of this government and our trading position in the world at large would have been different from what it is at present.

I plead with the minister to withdraw this clause. I do not think it serves any useful purpose. If the railways really think that they will sustain losses at any particular time, they will still have an opportunity to come forward and make that claim. Surely we should not write into the bill a clause setting down that three years from now the whole question should be reopened, and asking the railways to pattern their affairs in the next three years in such a way as to enable them to make a claim on the government of Canada with regard to the handling of grain, and then enabling them to set rates in accordance with the decisions that are made in that regard.

I am surprised that the minister should allow such a clause in the bill at a time when the railways are showing such large profits. No one in this country can seriously suggest that the railway companies are losing money on the movement of grain. If they were to modernize their facilities to a larger extent they could make even greater economies and therefore reap larger profits than at present. If this clause is left in the bill there will be no incentives for the railways to modernize their grain handling facilities and to try to bring about greater economics in that regard. I hope the minister will say that he is willing to have this clause removed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I will not speak at any length but I do think that the hon. member for Rosthern and the hon. member for Acadia have made statements to which I must make a brief reply. I wish to reply in particular to the statement of the hon. member for Rosthern when he suggested that by putting something into this bill the government called into question the Crowsnest pass rates. If anybody called the Crowsnest pass rates into question it was the MacPherson commission and Mr. MacPherson was not a notorious supporter of the Liberal party. In fact he narrowly escaped being the leader of the hon. gentleman's party. He was also from Saskatchewan. Mr. MacPherson, who was appointed the head of a commission by the right hon. gentleman who now leads the opposition, said categorically—and all but one of the commissioners supported him—that the Crowsnest pass rates were not compensatory. He made a recommendation that there should be an annual payment made to the railways because these rates were not compensatory.

This was done by a commission appointed by the last Conservative government. Not only that, but the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the Leader of the Opposition have both told us that they had prepared a bill to carry out the recommendations of the MacPherson commission; and I know that, of course, because I inherited the bill. I brought in a bill to carry out those recommendations, but then I changed my mind. I decided that I was not going to call the Crowsnest pass rates into question, that instead of saying that they were not compensatory and asking parliament on the basis of the royal commission's report to give compensation to the railways, I would ask parliament to authorize a three-year review to see whether or not they are compensatory, and in that way remove them from the field of doubt.

All hon. members on the other side of the house who have spoken so far, particularly the hon. member for Acadia, the hon. member for Rosthern, and I thought, with slightly less conviction, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, have said that they were confident the Crowsnest pass rates were compensatory. If they are, then why all this worry about an inquiry? Why this worry about having the facts established if hon. members know what the facts are?

I suggest there are three ways in which the railways can be compensated for the carrying of grain. The first is by the rates paid for carrying the grain. If an investigation shows the railways are being adequately compensated, then that disposes of the matter and makes it perfectly clear that the hon. gentleman is as right as he professes to believe he is. In this case there will be no question about their getting anything, except what they receive by way of freights.

The second way to compensate the railways is to say to them that they will get the Crowsnest rates and that there will be no inquiry. If necessary in that case the railways would have to raise out of the freights they charge for carrying other commodities enough extra to carry the grain. Mr. MacPherson in his report put one proposition that I think was very sound and fair. He said that, as far as possible, freight rates should be compensatory, in other words, that the shippers should pay enough to compensate the railways for the carriage of their goods. Similarly, so should passengers pay enough to cover their carriage. He also said that if, as a national obligation, the railways were required to do these things at less than cost, they should be compensated out of the treasury and that other freight shippers should not be forced to compensate them.

I think that is a perfectly reasonable proposition, Mr. Chairman. I do not believe, notwithstanding the rather snide observations, if I may use that term, which have been made about my distinguished parliamentary secretary, that anyone in this country really believes that we will ever have inarticulate members from the prairie provinces, or that in the foreseeable future any government, even one headed by the hon. member for Rosthern, would be able to repeal the Crowsnest rates. The Meighen government did it and look what happened to them. The rates were put back, and no one has ever touched them since 1925 except to increase their effectiveness and to apply them to other ports.

The only thing we are doing with the Crowsnest rates in this bill is to write in a guarantee of the rates to Churchill. I think that is a good thing. When I was young I belonged to an association called the "On-To-The-Bay Association" and I have always been rather pro-Churchill—all of the Churchills in fact.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, perhaps I exaggerate just a little bit, but at any rate I am not anti-any Churchill.

The plain fact is that I do not think any member of their house, if he were to stop to reflect, would be doing the cause of the western farmer any good by suggesting that other freight shippers should have to pay higher freights in order to lower the rates on wheat.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Does the minister really believe that statement?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not believe any western farmer would be done any service by any member advocating that other shippers should pay higher rates in order to keep the rates on wheat low. I did not say that that was happening.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister is implying that that is happening.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not; the hon. gentleman should not rush into implications. It is always wiser to listen to the whole of someone's proposition before trying to refute it. What I am saying is that if, as most hon. members who have spoken seem to believe, the Crowsnest pass rates are compensatory, then that will be proven and no payment will be made of any kind.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the minister permit a question. On what figures and based on what rates will it be proven? Will it be proven based on railway conditions existing three years ago, existing today or as they will be seven or eight years from now, after complete modernization of plant and port facilities takes place?

Mr. Pickersgill: The bill prescribes very clearly that for the three years following the coming into force of this act the matter is to be considered by the commission, which will establish its own figures. The commission will not accept the figures of the railways. It will determine whether or not these rates are compensatory.

I was not very much impressed by the argument that the railways will deliberately attempt to be inefficient for the sake of losing money. There is no guarantee whatever in this bill that if perchance it should be shown that the rates were not compensatory the railways would get anything. All the bill prescribes is that a report shall be made to the governor in council, who will take whatever action he chooses.

I quite frankly believe that if, as a result of this study it is shown that the rates are not compensatory, that whatever government may be in office at the time will act within the spirit of the MacPherson report and compensate the railways out of the treasury so that they do not have to be compensated out of freights collected from other Canadians. I believe that is what will happen but that will be a matter for the government of the day to decide.

However, one thing I do know is that no minister of finance worth his salt would ever agree to pay money to the railways if they were demonstrably inefficient. We must remember that every one of these payments to the railways recommended in this bill is to come out of the treasury of the government of the day, which will have to raise taxes in order to make the payments, just in the same way as we now have to raise taxes to pay these huge subsidies. Therefore the government and the minister of finance will have the strongest reasons for seeing that these payments are made only if they have to be made.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle told the committee this afternoon about how much he had done to get the railways and others engaged in moving wheat to move it more efficiently. In the same way, all the time we are putting pressure on the railways, the elevator companies and the ports and everybody else. Today we are moving quantities of grain, as every hon. member knows, which two years ago we would not have believed possible to move through our ports. We are trying to modernize them in every possible way. That will not be stopped. No government will allow that to be stopped, and the members from western Canada would not allow any government to allow it to be stopped. I am not impressed by the idea that the railways will be allowed to be sloppy, to drag their heels to prove they are losing money. That will not happen.

I do not think any one of us knows for sure what the result of this study will be. That is why it seemed right and proper, in the light of the MacPherson recommendation, to make the study. It would have been wrong—that is why I changed my mind—to accept the position of the MacPherson commission, that there is loss. That is why I would not recommend such a bill to parliament this year. That is the position of the government. It is not reasonable to say that just because we believe the rates are compensatory we should not find out the facts.

Mr. Korchinski: After listening to the Minister of Transport for the last week or so, honestly believing he wanted to do some good with his transport bill, I find his conclusions hard to accept. He says that the MacPherson commission said that compensation might be necessary. In his conclusion he says, "We do not really think that such a thing will follow, as a result of this section."

What is this section for? Let us face it, Mr. Chairman: It is for the advantage of the railways, and nobody else. It is not for the benefit of the farm organizations. Nobody presenting a brief to the transport commission has ever suggested that the Crowsnest pass rate should be tampered with. That rate is statutory and should not be tampered with. What are statutes for? The British North America Act is not to be tampered with lightly. You may touch it, yes, but you cannot do much.

You are not saying that suddenly, as a result of a study, the Crowsnest pass agreement must be thrown out, that the original agreement, the original intent is not valid, is not useful, does not accomplish what it set out to do? Does any section of this act say that there must be other compensation for what the railways have been given? There is nothing like that in the bill. This is a one-sided agreement, an agreement benefiting the railways. I might say, even, that it is for the benefit of the Canadian Pacific, although I believe phases of it are solely and wholly for the benefit of the Canadian National. I think the president must have said to the minister, "Look here, we have a situation that needs looking after."

I do not suppose the Canadian Pacific was even considered. They would not think for a moment of reopening the whole question, going back a hundred years, or as long as is necessary, on the question of what they have got in the past, and the revenues they get today from the crown property they received. Will they let you determine the amount of money they are getting for moving grain?

What money are they getting for grain movements? After reading the section, nobody will know whether the rates are compensatory, whether the rates to be paid to the railways will take into account the operation of the railways, the capitalization of a particular branch, the over-all operation of the entire system, or whether the rates apply to certain portions of operations.

Nobody argues that certain portions of railway operations will not pay for themselves. That is what we have discussed for the last two weeks—for the last two years for that matter. Nobody denies that certain railway operations do not pay for themselves.

I remind the minister that the Crowsnest pass agreement was the Magna Carta that built up the west and built up Canada. It tied to us that part of Canada which might have gone to the United States. The railway bound us together, and let us not forget this. Let not the parliamentary secretary grin, as though he knows it all. Sooner or later all this will have to sink in.

Until the last couple of years the railways have continuously been harping, as had the newspapers in all Canada—other than the western newspapers, of course—that grain movement does not pay. Surely the parliamentary secretary must have read that at one time. Today one does not hear that, because grain movement is a paying proposition.

We are suddenly told, "Do not fear, nothing will happen; this is merely an accounting process." It is an accounting process for whom? This is an opening for the railways, who keep harping about the Crowsnest agreement. If they say that the 22 cents or 23 cents they get is not compensating them for grain movement, they forget the other aspects; they forget what was given to them under the original agreement.

Nothing in this bill deals with the original agreement. The minister can stand there and talk until he is blue in the face: He will not convince me or any other farmer that he is doing justice to the western farmer. I do not care if he condemns the hon. member for Rosthern, the hon. member for Acadia, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, or any other hon. member for suggesting that this is not the right approach. The minister knows full well that he has opened the whole question.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): He has opened the whole bill.

Mr. Korchinski: The minister can stand there and say that it is perfectly all right to charge the farmers more, but that it is not perfectly all right to see what he can get out of the Canadian Pacific, for example. He does not mention that. While I might be one of those who might defend the Canadian Pacific, I am not prepared to accept the notion that we should expect our farmers to move their grain for 50, 60 or 70 miles to the elevator, to prove that the railways can make money.

• (9:50 p.m.)

You could bring grain to Winnipeg from every point 400 miles or 450 miles away. The farmers, having paid the additional cost, might well move it to the lakehead. But what have you done to the Crowsnest pass agreement? There are several ways of destroying that agreement. One of them is the way the minister is using tonight. He has opened it up. He wants it to be proven to the public—and public opinion can bring a lot of pressure to bear. I know there are more people in eastern Canada than in the west. But if the minister remembers his words, what he said tonight was that the bulk of the payment for any freight would have to come from the west, anyway, so why would we complain. That is what he said, exactly. It does not matter whether you pay it one way or another: You will have to pay it. That is what he said.

Are we to allow any legislation to erode the Crowsnest pass agreement, or are we not? I cannot stand here and accept what the minister tells us. I cannot for one minute think that the Crowsnest pass must make the grain pay for everything in the west, and then move in other freight over and above—minerals, or lumber or anything else.

I cannot accept the fact that the minister tells us this is nothing, that this is merely an investigation. It is an investigation into what? It is opening a way for the railways to try to prove something to the commission. Whether they postpone this thing for two or three years or whether they start immediately after this bill is passed, it does not matter. The fact is that the reporters will continually harp on this one subject, as they did at the time when there was a suggestion that a transport bill would be passed. Nobody in Canada will convince me otherwise, and I think I follow the press as closely as does any other hon. member, including the minister.

I have not seen much reference to the Crowsnest pass agreement in the last couple of years. One of the reasons is the movement of grain, perhaps a realization that the movement of grain is compensatory. The second is that newspapermen are not going to harp on something which they know they can harp on later, knowing that this legislation exists. Why should any manufacturer in the east have a charge against his final products, when the revenue can be obtained in another way, —through the Crowsnest pass agreement?

Prove to the world that the Crowsnest pass agreement is wrong. Prove to the world that the British North America Act is all wrong, and let us destroy the whole thing. How silly that argument is. Surely there must be some value in the whole thing. I cannot accept the premise that it is all wrong, though there may be weaknesses in it. I cannot accept the premise that we should give the railway companies these gifts, and when the railway companies are given these gifts, that we should not reveal what has happened to the gifts—what revenues they have derived.

The fact is, one must preserve the Crowsnest pass agreement for the benefit of those farmers who have survived because of it. I am not far removed from a municipality whose potential is not yet fully utilized. There is land there which is still being broken up, land which will produce more grain. Yet no account will be taken of this. We do not realize what fertilizer will do for that country. We do not know what another freight rate will do. Will it stunt the growth of that country? We opened up the best land. We went where we thought the best grain could be produced. From that point on, we had to move into other areas. As the fertilizer became available, new areas were brought under cultivation.

After the war, when machines became available, they broke up that land, and as we were able to absorb the cost, we did it. But if you alter the Crowsnest pass agreement, if we have to pay the full freight rate and on top of that if everything we ship in must travel at the higher rate and everything we ship out must go at the higher rate, I believe we know where to go. I have heard this before under a Liberal government: Join the United States side. Do not think for one moment that this idea cannot be circulated again, and it might be, unless we are prepared to see that this transport is for east and west, for all Canada. This must be a bill for Canada rather than a bill for certain sections, rather than a bill for certain companies.

It is easy for us to ship some of our finished products into the United States, and we may have a ready market. In the past I have asked the president of Massey-Ferguson why they did not set up a plant right in the middle of the west. That is another subject. The point is this: The minister must realize that if this is allowed to happen certain things will come to Canada which I am sure he will not be interested in.

There is a different type of disunity in Canada. There is a certain group which would like to disunite for a different reason. We should not give them that opportunity.

Mr. Rapp: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether there would be any disposition to complete this clause tonight.

An hon. Member: If you remove the clause.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course that is quite impossible.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, am I safe in predicting that tomorrow we will continue with the study of Bill C-231?

Mr. Knowles: Tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Yes, Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue with the study of that bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—ALLEGED TAMPERING WITH MAIL BY HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the other day by way of a question I raised the matter of the activities of the Hudson's Bay Company in handling or mishandling the mail in a certain instance, and subsequently sent photostat copies of the documents I had in my possession to both the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell). The contents of them were also widely publicized because of the intense interest that exists in the matter.

I realize that the Postmaster General may not yet have had an opportunity to inquire fully into that and other matters which were the subject of R.C.M.P. investigation, and thus may not be in a position this evening to indicate fully what course the government is taking. However, following my question in the house the Hudson's Bay Company issued a statement, presumably in Winnipeg.

Although I inquired, I have not been able to obtain a copy of that statement, but I do have with me the references to it which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of Friday, January 13. One of the sentences published by the newspaper relating to the statement was as follows:

> The H. B. C. statement said Mr. Howard appears to have based his charges on a single incident at Fort Chippewyan, Alta., in November, 1965, which has long since been resolved to the satisfaction of both the post office and the complainant.

The interesting aspect of that is that at the outset the Hudson's Bay Company admits its culpability. At the outset it admits there was such an instance and passes it off as being of no consequence because it happened some time ago. It also passes it off as being of no consequence because, as the statement says, the matter had been resolved to the satisfaction of both the post office and the complainant.

Section 55 of the Post Office Act is singularly clear about holding up the mail or unlawfully opening mail. It states that such a practice is an indictable offence, carrying a penalty of $3,000 or three years imprisonment, or both, if the person involved is found guilty. It seems a strange sort of reasoning for the company to say that because the dispute over the payment of an account that Mr. Martin owed the Hudson's Bay Company had been resolved, this wiped out the responsibility of the company, or its liability to a charge under the Post Office Act for having unlawfully opened his mail. No other two people in society can agree, if one commits a criminal offence, that because they resolve their differences there is no longer an offence. I submit it is fairly clear (1) that there was an offence and the company admitted it and, (2) that it tries to get around the fact that it is guilty, because the matter has been resolved so far as the store account is concerned.

The statement, as it appeared in the Ottawa Citizen, mentions that this is an isolated instance. Mr. Speaker, it is not an isolated instance. I put to you the proposition that some few years ago at La Ronge, Saskatchewan, where there is a Hudson's Bay store, although the post office was not contained in the store, nevertheless there was an arrangement between whoever was the postmaster and the Hudson's Bay Company, whereby people who were recipients of family allowance cheques and other similar government cheques picked up their mail at the Hudson's Bay store, and not in the post office. In this way the Hudson's Bay store could engage in the same sort of practice with the people there, by having them turn over their cheques to the company and in this way interfere in the normal activities of the mail.

In this instance in Cando, Saskatchewan, while it is not a Hudson's Bay Company store which is involved, nevertheless the situation existed that persons had to deposit their post office box keys with the store manager so that he could open the box, take out the mail containing the cheques, and wait for the person receiving them to open the envelope and sign the cheque over to him in payment for a bill. While I say that in this instance it is not a Hudson's Bay store, it is indicative of the fact that this practice is more widespread than the Hudson's Bay Company people would have us believe.

While I am not at liberty to disclose the names of the individuals involved, I had the opportunity to listen to a tape recording of an interview in which a woman claimed that the Hudson's Bay Company store manager interfered with her mail. At the present time statutory declarations are being obtained in this regard. It is alleged that when the store manager found out about this he went to this woman in the middle of the night and attempted to obtain a statement from her to the effect that he had not opened her mail.

The people who find these things happening to them are very quiet about them. There may be an element of the responsibility in respect of paying the store bill which is involved, and also the fact that the person concerned will have to go back to that same store and have to deal with this particular manager. They do not wish to jeopardize their credit at the store or their opportunity to obtain food and supplies. This may be the reason that over the years people have remained silent about these practices. At this juncture I think we should urge that these persons make a full disclosure of this sort of practice to the Postmaster General, the Solicitor General, the attorney general in the province or to myself, if they so desire. In this way the type of practice which has been widespread in the north to the detriment of the individuals who have to deal with these stores can be brought to light. While the Hudson's Bay Company is the one company which has been singled out, this practice is not confined to them. Also it is not confined to the one isolated instance in Fort Chipewyan in Alberta as the company would have us believe.

I understand that some time this week at Fort Chipewyan there will be a resumption of the court case involving the store manager. The assault charge in this regard was postponed from last fall. It may be that there will be some extremely revealing information disclosed at this court hearing about this type of practice.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to become involved in a dispute between the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and the Hudson's Bay Company. All I can say at the moment is that there are about 71 post offices up north in these Hudson's Bay Company stores. In many cases these are the only places where we could locate a post office because there is no other place which could be used as a post office.

I must say that, in respect of any post office, we sometimes have complaints. When complaints are made we conduct the fullest possible investigation. There are some specific points which have been raised in the question of the hon. member for Skeena. This week I intend to give a full answer to the charges concerning Eaton's and Simpson's catalogues, and the matter of the letters and cheques addressed to a person by the name of Martin. I shall try in my answer to be as fair as possible to all parties and indicate exactly what the position of the post office is in this matter.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—INDIA—REPORTED UNJUST TREATMENT OF CANADIAN ENGINEER

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the provision in our procedure which permits me to raise a matter in which I am deeply interested and which I raised on Friday last. It concerns litigation involving a Canadian citizen, who is a professional engineer, Geoffrey P. Webb, and The Government of India. Their circumstances of this particular case are as follows, and I want to put them on the record for the first time. I have no doubt they will be raised on many occasions in the future until the situation is resolved.

Mr. Webb served in India for two years as a professional engineer on the Kundah hydro electric project, which is financed through the external aid office under the Colombo plan. Plants three and four of the project, the equipment and engineering services, were gifts from Canada to the people of India. At the end of Mr. Webb's service there in September 1965—some 16 months ago—he followed the normal procedure in such cases and turned his automobile over to the State Trading Corporation of India. I assume he turned over other assets as well.

The State Trading Corporation agreed to pay Mr. Webb 14,508 rupees which were to be converted into dollars at the rate existing at that time. This would amount in Canadian dollars to approximately $3,300. In January of 1966, a year ago, a cheque was issued to Mr. Webb for the agreed amount, and then the trouble began. From that point on it seems to me there began a period of stalling tactics on the part of the government of India. Mr. Webb had a cheque but he could not negotiate it as a result of difficulties put in his way, and could not arrange for a dollar draft to be issued for the 14,000 rupees.

Finally in June of 1966 the rupee, as we all know, was devalued from 4.76 to 7.5 in relation to the United States dollar. At that particular point or within a few weeks the government of India was prepared to pay Mr. Webb for his car at the devalued rate. Because he was not paid in the six month period between the issuance of the cheque and the devaluation he stands to lose some $1,200. So far as I am able to determine this occurred through no fault whatsoever of Mr. Webb. He has been advised on several occasions, directly and through the Department of External Affairs, that he will be paid at the devalued rate. Mr. Webb is not willing to accept less than the agreed price for his car.

The whole transaction could have been completed long before this devaluation, and I feel that Mr. Webb is receiving completely unfair treatment from the government of India. I have not had much experience in matters of this kind, but presumably those members here who belong to the legal profession encounter a good deal more of this kind of thing. It seems to me that if relations between our two nations were not as good as they are, and if India was not a nation to which Canada had given generous help on many occasions, this situation might be understood. We often hear of situations in which people run into difficulties, particularly in matters of immigration, with countries behind the iron curtain. Recently this country sent a very large shipment of wheat to help feed millions of people in India who faced starvation. Canadians are serving in India under the World Health Organization, and in many other ways, to assist them with problems of health and in other fields.

I understand many representations have been made in respect of this case through the offices of our high commissioner to India, but to no avail. I am asking our Secretary of State for External Affairs immediately to bring to bear the full weight of the Canadian government in this matter. I ask that minister, through his parliamentary secretary here this evening, to make the strongest possible representations to the government of India to see that this clear case of injustice is righted.

The facts that I have were not only obtained from this man, but I have here everything documented by our consular division. It confirms everything that has been said by myself this evening and what was said by Mr.

Webb in the first place. This man gave dedicated service in the two years he was in India. During that time he contracted a tropical disease and was very ill, but he stayed in India, met his obligations and complied with the regulations with one very minor exception, namely that he was asked to surrender his passport and declined to do so. I do not blame him at all for this; in my opinion he was quite right.

Our high commission in New Delhi say that they do not believe there is anything more they can do. I could quote a very long paragraph in a letter from the head of the consular division in which they suggest reasons why they cannot do anything more. I am not personally prepared to accept those reasons and I know that Mr. Webb is not prepared to do so. I feel we have to see that the shabby treatment of this Canadian citizen is rectified, and what I am asking now is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs deal with this matter personally and at the highest level to see that justice is done.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my first words, after the account given by the hon. member, would be to confirm what he has said. I could tell by listening to the facts recounted by the hon. member that they are the facts as I understand them, and I think I can confirm them. The second observation is a personal reaction of sympathy with this case and the loss that this man has suffered. Mixed with that personal feeling of sympathy is one of disappointment, that after the hundreds of millions of dollars of assistance made available to the government of India by Canada since the Colombo plan started, that country should have failed to make amends to a Canadian ensnared in a maze of petty officialdom. That seems to have been an act of folly on their part. Actions of this kind toward Canadians make the role of the friends of India in this country, and I consider myself to be one, all the more difficult, particularly when a grievance is brought forward by an hon. member like the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae), who in my experience has been noteworthy in this house for his balance and fairness in debate.

• (10:20 p.m.)

All that being said in a personal vein, perhaps the only further answer I can make at this point in an official capacity is that the government of India has now made its decision. On behalf of the officials of the Department of External Affairs I think I can say with some justification that they have exercised all possible efforts on behalf of this man. At an advanced stage in the transactions referred to by the hon. member the high commission in New Delhi was consulted by Mr. Webb and the high commission immediately contacted the State Bank of India, the entity involved in this transaction, on Mr. Webb's behalf. As a result of the request by the high commission and, we can presume, representations made by them, the State Bank did treat this as a special case, waived the normal requirements of Indian law and authorized payment to Mr. Webb. Unfortunately, by the time this took place the axe of devaluation had fallen or was on the point of falling. The high commission then intervened further on Mr. Webb's behalf, specifically pointing out that the cheque should be paid at the pre-devaluation rate and that the delay was not Mr. Webb's fault. A negative decision by the State Bank was then appealed to the Indian ministry of finance, which ultimately refused the relief on the ground that it was force of circumstances rather than bureaucratic neglect which was the reason for loss.

In summary, from April to October in the year just completed the high commission intervened on Mr. Webb's behalf at different levels on every occasion when the opportunity presented itself, but received a final negative decision.

Perhaps I might point out that in dealing with foreign sovereign states the government of Canada can ask but it cannot demand. In the circumstances it must be the decision of the government of India whether or not it will make an ex gratia payment. However perhaps the representations made by the hon. member this evening may ultimately reach the attention of the government of India, which may possibly have a change of heart. I can assure the hon. member that his particular words will be drawn by me to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

APPENDIX

PROCLAMATION RESPECTING EXTENSION OF MARITIME TRANSPORTATION UNIONS TRUSTEES ACT

[Translation]

CANADA

ELIZABETH THE SECOND, by Grace of God of the United Kingdom, Canada and Her other Realms and Territories QUEEN, Head of the Commonwealth, Defender of the Faith.
E. A. Driedger

Deputy Attorney General

TO ALL TO WHOM these Presents shall come or whom the same may be in anywise concern,

GREETING:

A PROCLAMATION

WHEREAS in and by subsection (1) of section 24 of the Maritime Transportation Unions Trustees Act, being chapter 17 of the statutes of 1963, it is provided that the said Act expires on the thirty-first day of December, 1966, unless before that date it is extended to a later date which may be fixed by proclamation of Our Governor in Council.

AND WHEREAS it is expedient that the date on which the said Act expires be extended to the thirty-first day of December, 1967.

NOW KNOW YE that We, by and with the advice of Our Privy Council for Canada, do by this Our Proclamation declare and direct that the date on which the said Act expires be extended to the thirty-first day of December, 1967.

ALL OF WHICH Our Loving Subjects and all others whom these Presents may concern are hereby required to take notice and to govern themselves accordingly.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF We have caused these Our Letters to be made Patent and the Great Seal of Canada to be hereunto affixed.

WITNESS: Our right Trusty and Well-beloved Counsellor, General Georges P. Vanier, a member of Our Most Honourable Privy Council, Companion of Our Distinguished Service Order upon whom We have conferred Our Military Cross and Our Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

AT OUR GOVERNMENT HOUSE, in Our City of Ottawa, this thirtieth day of December in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and sixty-six and in the fifteenth year of Our Reign.

By Command,

Jean Miquelon
Deputy Registrar General of Canada

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, January 17, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

FINANCE

BANK OF WESTERN CANADA—SUSPENSION OF SHARE LIMITATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of National Revenue whether it is a fact that the Treasury Board ruled in favour of suspending the 10 per cent limit on the amount of bank shares which may be held under one ownership as far as the Bank of Western Canada is concerned. Are the directors of this company Sinclair Stevens, Coyne and others? What is the reason behind this unilateral concession, and under what authority was the ruling made to suspend the provision until July 1, 1967?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Since this is a very involved question, I should like to take it as notice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister will take it as notice. Will he take a further question as notice and tell us what is the proportion of shares presently owned by British International Finance of Toronto. Is the Globe and Mail correct in its assumption that this company, having given certain undertakings at the time of its incorporation, now will have in excess of 50 per cent of the shares of a bank which was supposed to be one with the interests of western Canada at heart?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take this question as notice but I want to say I am not responsible for what the Globe and Mail says.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That sentence should end with the word "responsible".

MEETING IN BRITAIN OF FINANCE MINISTERS RESPECTING INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance concerning a meeting which is to be held next week end in London at the invitation of Prime Minister Wilson, at which the United States, Germany, Italy and France will confer with the British government regarding escalation of interest rates and explore ways and means of achieving a rational and timely easing of monetary conditions.

In view of Canada's great interest in this connection and the repercussions which the meeting may have upon the Canadian economy, is Canada to be represented at this conference and has she been invited?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as reported from Washington yesterday, the finance ministers of the United States, Britain, Germany, France and Italy have been invited by the British government to meet in Britain next week end to discuss, among other things, the level of interest rates in the United States and Europe. In Europe and North America interest rates have risen to very high levels in recent years, reflecting the heavy dependence placed by these countries on the use of monetary policy to restrain inflationary pressures. I am happy that in recent weeks there has been some decline in interest rates.

The meeting is at the initiative of the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, who has presumably invited those countries whose domestic interest rates have the greatest international influence. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Callaghan, sent a personal note to me so there would be no misunderstanding about the purpose of the meeting. The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States telephoned me to advise me along the same lines. It is desirable that countries should co-operate closely to harmonize their economic policies, and we in Canada will naturally keep in close touch with these developments.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question, in view of the effect this will have on the Canadian economy may I ask the minister will Canada at least have an observer at the conference, or is any machinery set up by which we will be kept fully informed as to any decisions which may arise from the conference?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have been kept very fully informed both by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Secretary of the Treasury in the United States. Mr. Debré spoke to me about the conference when he was here the other day, and both the chancellor and the secretary of the treasury have said that as soon as the meetings are over they will keep me fully informed about the outcome and upon what, we hope, will be a good result.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if this is another case where the United States will speak for Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Red Deer wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In replying to the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States did the Minister of Finance indicate that it would be well if Canada were represented also; or does he imply that the interest rate problem in North America, to which the minister referred, is strictly the responsibility of the United States?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I said in my answer to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, the principal factor affecting the international level of interest rates, which of course become reflected in Canada, are interest rates in Europe and the United States, and we do hope these countries will co-operate in such a way that interest rates generally will come down because this will have a very good effect in Canada.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROPOSED BONUS FOR BILINGUAL CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

The government has accepted the principle of the bonus for bilingualism and has decided to grant a 7 per cent bonus to bilingual civil servants. Could the Prime Minister tell us when the government intends to pay this bonus to bilingual employees, and will there be any retroactivity in this regard?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the regulations have been laid down to deal with the matter of compensation for employees where a knowledge of both languages is important. I will have to look into the latter part of the question concerning where these regulations do or will apply.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: I might inform the hon. member that I have learned now that the bilingual bonus, in those cases in which it is effective, has been made retroactive to October 1, 1966.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OMBUDSMAN—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION CONCERNING APPOINTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. the Prime Minister. A few weeks ago the Prime Minister mentioned that before long he would be announcing a policy relating to the establishment of the office of ombudsman. In view of the fact that a majority of the provinces have indicated that in their current legislative sessions they will be providing for such an office, does the Prime Minister have any statement to make in this regard at this time?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not today, Mr. Speaker. I hope in a day or two to be able to make a short statement. I do not believe the majority of the provinces have decided to appoint an ombudsman, although some provinces have. This is a very important question in its relationship to the provincial and federal governments. This is one aspect of the matter which we are considering.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

APPLICATIONS FOR DEFERMENT RESPECTING RAILWAY WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister of Labour whether all applications for deferment, particularly in the field of railway running trades workers have been dealt with under the Canada Labour (Standards) Code hours of work section. The minister said he might be in a position to give an answer today.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that this matter has been under discussion for some time.

My departmental officials have had discussions with the railway companies and unions in order to try to work out an accommodation of hours which would conform to the code and which at the same time would not bring about any substantial variations in take home pay. It is very difficult to reach a definite conclusion at this time.

The discussions I think have been constructive up to this time, but a vote by some unions is now being taken on the question of the recent wage negotiations. I can assure the house that the matter is being treated as one of urgency.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—PEACE EFFORTS OF INTERNATIONAL CONTROL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This arises from some answers he gave yesterday and from a television interview I think last night. At that time the minister stated that the international control commission had been discussing the possibility of the commission being used to promote negotiations for peace in Viet Nam, but that at the present time this discussion had ended or had resulted in failure. May I ask the minister whether the refusal or failure on the part of the United States to end the bombing in North Viet Nam is one of the reasons or the major reason that Poland could not agree that the present is the appropriate time to take such steps?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is not the only reason for the position that country has taken with regard to the usefulness of the commission, which it feels ultimately may be useful. It is a fact, however, that Poland is among those countries which feel there should be an unconditional cessation of the bombing prior to action being taken by the north.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister whether Canada has taken the position that there should be an unconditional cessation of the bombing of North Viet Nam as a prelude to the possibility of negotiations for peace, or has Canada's position been the opposite?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The position we take in this matter, of course, has nothing to do with the fact that up until now there has not been full agreement concerning when the commission might be used to meet the objectives we have in mind.

Mr. Starr: What is the position?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend asks what is our position. In a matter of this great importance I should have thought the hon. gentleman would have recognized that this commission, on which Canada has served now for 12 years, is one of the channels which might be thought to be most capable of serving the purpose that Canada, India and Poland believe ultimately must be served.

Mr. Starr: What is the position?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The position Canada takes with regard to this matter is that we have supported the statement made by Mr. Goldberg of the United States, which advances the position very considerably.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that Victor Moore, Canada's representative on the I.C.C., is returning to Canada shortly, and in view of the uncertainty in the minds of many about the continuing usefulness of the I.C.C., I wonder whether the minister would recommend that Mr. Moore be called before, the external affairs committee, even in camera, so we might have a much better understanding of this problem.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think my hon. friend would be in error in concluding that the international commission even now does not enjoy the opportunity of playing a constructive role in this difficult situation. If there had been no commission I am sure we would not have been able to maintain the contacts on both sides which we have been able to maintain.

Mr. Moore was in Hanoi, going there on January 6. He left Hanoi yesterday and will shortly be returning to Canada. After he has made a report one will be in a better position to deal with the question just asked.

However, Mr. Speaker, I should doubt very much that it would be in the interests of ending this war for us to have public disclosure of all these matters. I think the time has come when it should be recognized that in this kind of situation more might be gained by quiet diplomacy than by other methods which have been pursued by certain other people.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs request Canada's representative on the commission to look into the reported murder of prisoners of war, including women and children, by the Viet Cong and by the North Vietnamese, so that we may have a report on the matter?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, sir.

INDUSTRY

PROVISION OF ANTI-POLLUTION EQUIPMENT ON CANADIAN CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Before I pose my question I should like to tell him how happy are his friends on this side of the house that he escaped what could have been a very serious accident and is safe today. It is safer in the air than on the road.

Before the recess the minister said he would examine United States regulations relating to pollution of the air in cities as they pertain to the clean air package which is to be mandated into cars to be built and imported into the United States. In view of the pollution problem in our own cities, can we in Canada expect similar regulations to protect Canadian cities this year?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his good wishes, which I noticed were not unanimously shared even by members on this side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: I do intend to have a word with the Minister of Industry on this point, and I will answer the hon. member's question at a very early date.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I should now like to pose a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the fact that the industry has stated that in Canada these features would be extra cost optionals only —that is, these clean air package features—and in view of the fact that the Minister of Industry has said he would make representations to the industry, may I ask him whether he has done so and can now assure the house and the Canadian people that these clean air package features will be standard equipment in cars in Canada in the future, as they will be in the United States?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had the opportunity of carrying out my undertaking to have discussions with the industry.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Mr. Grafftey: Then I can only ask both ministers to see that these considerations and discussions are carried out with dispatch before it is too late—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Grafftey:—and the population in the cities of Canada are faced with a fait accompli.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MARITIME UNIONS TRUSTEES—APPEARANCE BEFORE HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the recent extension of the authority of the maritime transportation unions trustees for a year, and in view of the interest of many members of this house, members of trade unions and other people in the activities of the trustees, will the trustees be asked to appear before the House of Commons committee on labour and employment in the near future?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. Unfortunately I got it just as I was coming into the house and have not had a chance to consider it fully. I think there is merit in the suggestion. I understand the trustees are now working on their annual report for the year 1966; in fact I have received a letter to this effect within the last two weeks. While I cannot make a definite commitment because the board of trustees have to be consulted as well as the chairman of the house committee, I think there is merit in the suggestion made by the hon. member. When the annual report is available, as I hope it will be at a relatively early date, it will be tabled and distributed. Since the board of trustees are responsible to this house I would hope that some arrangement could be worked out along the lines of the suggestion made by my hon. friend.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. If the report does not contain anything more than the last one it will not take very long to complete it. Would the minister also prevail upon them to be frank in their disclosures and answers to questions of committee members when they are here next time?

FISHERIES

REPORTED DISTORTIONS IN TELEVISION PROGRAM "HARVEST OF THE SEA"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister received a letter from the Fisheries Council of Canada protesting gross inaccuracies in a C.B.C. documentary entitled "Harvest of the Sea"? If so, what steps is he taking to protect the fishing industry from further distortions of this kind?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as I happen to have seen this program on television on the evening of January 3 I must admit that it had many serious inaccuracies and distorted facts regarding the position of the Canadian fisheries in the centennial year. I did receive representations from the Fisheries Council of Canada and from some of its agencies raising very strong objection to this particular program.

I understand that a tape and transcript of this program have now been secured by officials of the department, who are reviewing the text and will make known their comments to the proper authorities.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker I would ask the Minister of Fisheries whether "the proper authorities" include the Secretary of State in her responsibility.

Mr. Robichaud: This will be decided later, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

MONTREAL—USE OF FRENCH IN RAILWAY SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Transport.

Since the Canadian National Railways are not governed by any specific regulation with respect to bilingualism, and in view of the fact that several regrettable incidents have occurred lately on Canadian Pacific Railways in the Montreal area, would the hon. minister advise the railway companies—including the C.P.R.—to finally recognize the bilingual character of Canada in our centennial year, and to set down effective regulations in this regard for the benefit of passengers?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. I feel this is a very broad question and the hon. member will probably want to bring it up at ten o'clock.

Mr. Allard: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker I have a question I would like to ask the Minister of Finance. Can the minister say whether a decision has been reached on the long standing proposal to increase the pensions of superannuated civil servants; and if so, will this increase be added to the pension or made by way of a cost of living bonus?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that this question has been referred to a committee of this house.

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF PENSIONS OF RETIRED EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Can he tell us when the meetings of the joint committee on the public service of Canada will be resumed so we can conclude our work on the collective bargaining legislation and proceed to our discussion of the pensions of retired civil servants?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, of course it is the responsibility of the chairman of the committee to decide when the meetings will be held. I hope they will be held in the very near future so the three particular bills may be completed, and the committee may proceed to consideration of the matter to which the hon. member referred.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the hon. member for Ottawa East, in his capacity as chairman of the committee, whether he knows when our meetings will be resumed?

Mr. J. T. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the hon. member asked me that question. I thought he was aware that I expect we will resume our meetings next Tuesday.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

LETTER TO MINISTER FROM NATIONAL CITY BANK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer the question put to me yesterday by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who asked whether there was in existence a letter written a month before the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Gordon), who was then minister of finance, met with Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. McFadden. I have examined the files and spoken to my colleague the Minister without Portfolio.

Mr. Starr: Which one, the one on the front benches or the one further back?

Mr. Sharp: The only letter on file from the First National City Bank to the minister of finance is dated two days before the meeting that took place on July 18, and it simply confirms that an appointment had been made.

[Later:]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like a clarification of some points in the answer by the Minister of Finance concerning the alleged letter written by the First National City Bank of New York. Did I understand the minister correctly when he said he had only searched his records for one month back, or did he search them a little further back than one month.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have my doubts regarding the propriety of this question. The hon. member is now engaging in argument with the minister. I do not wish to stand in the way of the hon. member obtaining information, but perhaps this question should not be pursued too far.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, there is an urgency about this particular question because this group of people are bringing a brief before the standing committee next week. In view of the rumours which are flying around in financial circles that there is evidence on their side which has not been made available to us we would like to know what we will have to face. My question requires a simple yes or no answer. I am not trying to cause trouble to the minister, but did he simply search his files for the last month or did he search them further back?

Mr. Sharp: We searched diligently through the files, and the only letter we could find addressed to the Minister of Finance by the First National City Bank was the letter to which I have just referred.

May I add also that I was a little puzzled by the reference to the existence of such a letter in Mr. Gordon's book. This gave me the pleasure of reading the book again, and I found no such reference.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): That is the first time the minister has had any pleasure in reading anything by the former minister of finance. If I did nothing but that I would have made a wonderful contribution.

I should like to ask the Minister without Portfolio, who has been blushing here unseen and unheard, whether he was correctly reported in the statement that strong pressure was brought against him when he was minister of finance to bring about an alteration in the decision of the Canadian government regarding the rules which would be applicable to the Mercantile Bank.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the question is in order. I do not see how this question can be asked of the minister in his present administrative capacity.

An hon. Member: He does not have any.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sure the minister has an all-comprehensive capacity as a member of the cabinet. I believe he was ready to answer my question.

Mr. Speaker: This is what I was afraid of. Is the Minister without Portfolio rising on a question of privilege?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister without Portfolio): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say how pleased I am to know that the right hon. gentleman has been spending so much time reading my book. I thank him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to learn that my inference yesterday was well founded.

Mr. Hamilton: May I ask one more question of the Minister of Finance. The letter from the National City Bank to which the minister referred indicated that it confirmed an appointment, so there must have been some sort of contact between the National City Bank and the Minister of Finance in order for this appointment to be made. Did the letter originate with the National City Bank or the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Speaker: Obviously this is argument. I do not see how the hon. member can suggest this is a question. Again, perhaps I could allow the minister to answer this question and then we could go on to another one.

Mr. Sharp: I think it is quite clear from the file and also from the text that this appointment had been made orally. This letter to the former minister of finance begins:

> This will just reconfirm an appointment with you for twelve o'clock noon on Thursday, July 18, as arranged by Mr. Rasminsky.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance and Receiver General if he would reply to the question I put to him yesterday as to whether he has received representations concerning the Mercantile Bank from the Chase Manhattan Bank which is also presided over by a member of the Rockefeller family?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am very anxious that I should answer these questions accurately, and the search of the file has not been completed.

[Later:]

Mr. Hamilton: May I ask one short question of the Minister of Finance. Now that he has read a part of that letter, would he table it?

Mr. Sharp: I will be happy to do so.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. I would like to ask the minister whether he has any announcement to make to the house in regard to amendments to the National Housing Act to alleviate the shortage that exists. Has he any new approach or announcement to make now, or will such an announcement be made before the conclusion of this session?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I think I stated the other day that this matter was being studied and that, if and when the government had any change of policy to announce, it would be announced.

Mr. Winkler: On a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell us whether the announcement will be made in the very near future, before the conclusion of the current session?

Mr. Nicholson: I am hopeful that certain changes in the act will be introduced if not during the present session then early in the next session.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Yesterday in answer to a similar question he announced that symposiums and conferences were to be set up across the country. Have these symposiums and conferences been given a date before which they must report their findings to the minister and to the government.

Mr. Nicholson: Public conferences do not have to report to anyone. The provincial governments concerned and the federal government are inviting the mayors and reeves of municipalities, the heads of housing authorities, representatives of investment firms and others interested to gather in provincial capitals—although in one or two cases the meetings will take place elsewhere than in the capital cities—to discuss problems related to housing. The provincial and federal governments wish to have their views. We hope that some constructive suggestions will emerge from the nine or ten conferences that have been planned. The dates have been fixed for all of them, although the date for the meeting that is to be held in Manitoba has not been confirmed as yet. The meetings are jointly sponsored by the federal and provincial governments concerned.

IMMIGRATION

ADOLF VON THADDEN—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING ENTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the announcement made early this week that the University of British Columbia student association has invited Adolf von Thadden to speak in Vancouver later this month and in the light of the uproar which has arisen as a result of the purported invitation to von Thadden by the C.B.C., I should like to ask the minister whether he received any representations asking him to intercede in that matter and to prevent the appearance of von Thadden in this country.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I received representations at the time the C.B.C.

invited von Thadden. Since that time I have not received any further representations. I heard the rumour that the student organization wishes to invite von Thadden. I am checking at present whether in fact this invitation has been extended.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I take it from the minister's answer that von Thadden is not yet in Canada?

Mr. Marchand: Just before coming to the house I heard an interview over the radio during which it was said that von Thadden was somewhere in the Canary islands. Therefore I presume he is not in Canada, unless he made an unregistered arrival.

SPORTS

SKIING—SHORTAGE OF FUNDS FOR NATIONAL TEAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Kootenay West addressed a question to my parliamentary secretary based on what he described as the very unexpected and distressing news that the national ski team of Canada is running out of funds and will have to return to Canada before the international ski competitions in Europe have been completed.

In view of this news report I asked that a review be made of the fitness grants given to the Canadian Amateur Ski Association this year. I was assured that the association received the financial assistance it had requested from the federal government for the European competitions. Yesterday the director of the fitness and amateur sports directorate telephoned Mr. Pierre Alain, the president of the Canadian Amateur Ski Association to verify the situation. Mr. Alain confirmed that there was no financial problem and that the team could complete its tour as originally planned.

While I am on my feet I should like to support the statement made by the hon. member for Kootenay West with respect to the magnificent performance of Miss Nancy Greene, who will be returning to Canada and to whom we will have an opportunity to pay an appropriate tribute in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Marchand.]

CANADA PENSION PLAN

REPORTED DIFFICULTY RESPECTING DEDUCTIONS FOR PART TIME FARM HELP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the difficulty experienced by farmers during 1966 in calculating and reporting contributions under the Canada Pension Plan for part time help, is the department seeking to find some simpler way of doing this so the problem will not be experienced again in 1967?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): In order that contributors to the Canada Pension Plan may receive credit for their contributions, no matter where they work during the year, some record of course is necessary. There is a limited exemption with respect to farmers, and the department will be looking at the experience of this year. Of course the government will be considering what alterations are necessary to the Canada Pension Plan as it presently exists.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue if he has found any system yet whereby employers' over-contributions will be repaid to them.

Mr. Benson: I have indicated several times previously that what we are going to do is look at the results of the reports put in by employers, which are due I believe by February 28 of this year, under the Canada Pension Plan. When we have received those, we will look at this general problem knowing its true nature and extent.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

FAMILY PLANNING AND BIRTH CONTROL—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he can inform the house when we can expect legislation arising from the report of the committee looking into family planning and birth control.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to indicate when any legislation will be forthcoming. The subject matter of the committee report is now under consideration by the department.

TRANSPORT

DORION, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON LEVEL CROSSING ACCIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Transport, whom I wish to congratulate for his splendid performance in piloting his bill.

Here is my question: has the minister received a report from Mr. Fortier or a member of the Board of Transport Commissioners concerning the Dorion tragedy, and is he in a position to give the reference order for the federal inquiry to be instituted, which reference order might cover the whole problem of grade crossings?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I was so busily engaged in my magnificent effort yesterday that I was not able to personally examine Mr. Fortier's report. I am afraid I cannot answer the rest of the hon. gentleman's question.

BANKRUPTCY

PRUDENTIAL FINANCE CORPORATION—EFFECT ON SUBSIDIARY INSURANCE COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

In view of the financial disaster of the Prudential Finance Corporation and its subsidiaries, are Canadian citizens who have insured their properties through that institution entitled to full compensation in case of fire?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think this question is in order.

TRADE

TEXTILES—EFFECT OF POSSIBLE IMPORTS FROM AUSTRALIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Further to the recent statement by Australian manufacturers about glutting the Canadian market with textile products, is it the intention of the minister to get in touch with the government authorities of that country to prevent such grievous harm to the Canadian textile industry?

[English]

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am not familiar with the background of this question, so I shall have to take it as notice and give an answer at a later date.

GRAIN

FLAX—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR OPEN QUOTA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Perhaps I could answer the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Medicine Hat concerning quotas for flaxseed. I discussed this question with the wheat board, and they informed me the present quota for flaxseed is eight bushels per seeded acre, and is the same as the quota in effect at this time last year. The wheat board has informed me also that the present quota on flaxseed of eight bushels per seeded acre is, in their opinion, at the appropriate level in relation to existing market demand.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Can he assure the house that the new political party which calls itself the Bulldog party will be given full opportunity to express its views on the C.B.C. network, and especially on the French network?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Is the right hon. Prime Minister aware that a new political party has been formed within the federal civil service, going by the name of Canadian Bulldog party, where we find people who are greater advocates of separatism, I am told, than those we have in Quebec?

Now then—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe the question has been put previously and the question—

Mr. Caouette: No, Mr. Speaker. The question raised a while ago was aimed at finding out whether Canadian Bulldog party members would be admitted to the French network of the C.B.C. This is not at all what I want to ask the right hon. Prime Minister. Here is what I want to know: will the civil service tolerate, within its organization, such a political faction which definitely wants to promote disunity in Canada and to break with the French-Canadian element?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think it would be quite inappropriate to form a Bulldog party inside the civil service, or indeed any other kind of political party.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed, from Monday, January 16, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last evening clause 50 of the bill was being discussed. There was an understanding that when the committee resumed today clause 42, together with the amendment by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, would be the first item considered.

• (3:20 p.m.)

On clause 42.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, my amendment has been discussed considerably. I do not think anything either side can add would do anything, and I suggest that we take a vote to see where the committee stands.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. member's suggestion is very good.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest we proceed at once to determine the feeling of the committee with respect to the amendment, for which I regret I cannot vote.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Order, please. When subclause or section 314D of clause 42 was discussed the hon. member moved the following amendment—

Mr. Starr: Order, please.

[Mr. Caouette.]

The Chairman: The hon. member for Qu'Appelle moved to amend clause 42 as it relates to proposed new section 314D subparagraph 1 by adding after the word "to" which appears in line 6 of page 29 the following "or direct as it sees fit".

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 64; nays, 79.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could now ask if it is agreeable to the hon. member for Springfield that I ask my colleague the Minister of Justice to move the amendment, based on the suggestion the hon. gentleman made, to paragraph 3 of clause 314D of the Railway Act. The amendment would strike out lines 27 to 35 inclusive on page 29 of the bill as reprinted and substitute the following words. I do not know if hon. members want me to read it; if not, perhaps the Minister of Justice might move it.

Mr. Cardin: I move:

That Bill C-231, an act to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions be amended by striking out lines 27 to 35, inclusive, on page 29 of the bill, as reprinted, and by substituting therefor the following:

(3) Where a recommendation is made by the commission under subsection (1), the commission shall report its recommendation to the governor in council; and, if the recommendation involves one or more railway companies in cost or losses not recoverable under section 314E or is for that or any other reason not acceptable to one or more of such companies, the governor in council may take such legislative or other action as he considers necessary in the public interest.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Hamilton: On division.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Hamilton: On division.

Amendment agreed to on division.

The Chairman: Shall clause 42 as amended carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. member for Nickel Belt wishes to speak.

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to section 314D. I furnished the minister with a copy. Before I formally move it I wish to explain to the committee its purpose. The amendment would form subclause 6 of section 314D. I have a limited number of copies in English and French which could be passed around to hon. members.

It has been brought to my attention that there is a deficiency in this bill with respect to dislocation costs for employees when branch lines have been abandoned. Looking over this bill it seems that only as subclause 6, an additional subclause to section 314D, can this amendment be included.

The amendment deals with section 182 of the Railway Act, which reads as follows:

The company shall not, at any time, make any change, alteration or deviation in the railway, or any portion thereof, until the provisions of section 181 are fully complied with, nor remove, close, or abandon any station, or divisional point nor create a new divisional point that would involve the removal of employees, without leave of the board; and where any such change is made the company shall compensate its employees as the board deems proper for any financial loss caused to them by change of residence necessitated thereby.

It has been ruled that this section of the Railway Act does not apply in cases of branch line abandonment, and this was recognized in the drafting of Bill C-120. It is possible that not many members of the committee have a copy of the old bill handy. But I will read to them what appears on page 5 of Bill C-120. Clause 6(3) states as follows:

Where the operation of any line of railway is to be abandoned pursuant to an approval under subsection (1) of this section or paragraph (b) of subsection (3) of section 314B, the company shall compensate its employees as the board deems proper for any financial loss caused to them by change of residence necessitated by such abandonment.

On the opposite page of the bill there is an explanation of the new subsection (3) as follows:

Section 182 of the Act at present provides, inter alia, for the compensation of railway employees for financial loss incurred by them through changes of residence necessitated by a deviation or alteration in a line of railway or by the abandonment of a station or divisional point.

It has been held that this provision does not extend to the abandonment of a branch line. The proposed subsection (3) would apply the requirements of section 182 with respect to such compensation to the case where the abandonment of a branch line necessitates the change of residence.

I should like to put a little more on the record in connection with this subject. In course of doing so I would refer to Bill C-48 which is in my own name—an act to amend the Railway Act (Responsibility for Dislocation Costs). Hon. members will understand that this measure reinstituted a previous bill, and Bill C-48 is in language identical to that of previous bills on the subject. I should like to read from the report of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, dated December 20, 1963, on this particular private member's bill. It reads as follows:

Complying with an order of the house of June 27, 1963, your committee has given consideration to the subject matter of Bill C-15 (later, Bill C-48), An Act to Amend the Railway Act (Responsibility for Dislocation Costs), and has heard evidence from representatives of the railways, from officials of various brotherhoods of railway employees, and from Mr. Howard Chase, a former member of the Board of Transport Commissioners.

The committee was favourable to the subject-matter of Bill C-15 and commends it to the house and the government; and to further clarify our views on the situation relating to the subject-matter, the committee recommends that:

The government give consideration to amending section 182 of the Railway Act to ensure the rights of railway employees in those cases where abandonment, merger or co-ordination between railways, or the closing or near-closing of terminals and shops or the introduction of "run-throughs" is undertaken by the management.

The committee would prefer that such matters as adjustment, compensation, re-training arrangements, and other ameliorations of the dislocation be a matter of negotiation between management and the employees legitimate bargaining agencies but it recognizes that a strong encouragement to such means of settlement will ensue when section 182 is read in such a legal way as to offer firm protection to the employees.

This is evidence that a former standing committee of the house, a committee comparable with the present transport committee, supported this action and unanimously agreed that it should be incorporated in railway legislation.

This does not involve as much as might appear on the surface. I do contend, however, that even if there is only one man affected by this question of compensation to employees whose interests are harmed by the abandonment of railway lines and so forth, some provision should be made for his compensation. I would refer briefly to the recommendation of Mr. Justice Freedman who agreed that some method of compensation should be worked out in the case of people whose affairs were dislocated because of technological change. The abandonment of branch lines is, in a sense, the result of technological change.

As I say, the number of employees affected would not be great. Not long ago I questioned Mr. Gordon before our standing committee. I asked him how much maintenance of rail work was carried on in connection with these branch lines at the present time, and how many employees were involved. I recall that Mr. MacMillan answered me. At this point I can only paraphrase what he said. He agreed with me that there were very few permanent employees involved in the maintenance of way on these lines. The great proportion of this work was carried out by floating gangs which work for one or two days a week on one branch line and for a day or two on another.

As a result there are not many permanent employees working along these lines but, as I have said, if there is only one he should be entitled to compensation. We must take account of the fact that if a section crew or a section foreman is established at some point where a branch line is abandoned, the value of their property, if they have property, would be considerably reduced. They will have to sell at a loss and then incur a much higher cost in establishing themselves in new homes. This is one of the reasons for the recommendation of the former standing committee that some compensation should be paid to employees affected in such circumstances.

I do not intend to drag this out any longer. My proposed amendment, moved by myself and seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, reads as follows:

That Bill C-231 be amended by adding in clause 314D after sub-clause (5) thereof, the following as sub-clause (6):

(6) Notwithstanding anything in section 182 of the said Act, where a company makes any change, alteration or deviation in its railway or any portion thereof or abandons any portion or branch line thereof which results in loss of employment by any of its employees either directly or through the exercise of seniority, the company shall compensate such employees as the commission deems proper for any financial loss caused to them by change of residence or loss of employment necessitated thereby.

My arguments in favour of having this provision included in the bill are substantiated by the fact that it was included in the old bill, No. C-120 It was recognized that provision should be made for employees dislocated as a result of branch line abandonment. This position was supported by the former standing committee, and I would appreciate it if hon. members would now give full consideration to it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before you put the amendment, Mr. Chairman, I would ask you to consider whether it is one which it is competent to a private member to move on this particular bill. The hon. gentleman was quite correct in saying a similar clause was included in the bill which I introduced in 1964, but that bill in many respects was dissimilar to the present one. My reason for not including a provision of this sort in the present bill should be apparent to all hon. members. Certain developments have taken place since that time. My colleague, the Minister of Labour, indicated that he was considering other measures of a similar character and therefore it was decided that this bill should not include any provisions with respect to labour relations.

For that reason I submit that the amendment is beyond the scope of the bill and seeks to extend the scope of the bill. I also maintain that in seeking to extend the scope of the bill, if it were to be at all effective there would be expenditures which certainly are not contemplated in the bill and would constitute a charge on the treasury without there being a message from the crown in that connection. For those two reasons I ask Your Honour to consider whether the amendment is appropriate.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, not having anticipated that this point of order would be raised I do not have before me the terms of the resolution that preceded the bill. The minister is making the broad assertion that the amendment exceeds those provisions, and I think at some point we should have a chance to look at the wording of the resolution. I know that we dealt with the resolution a long time ago, last August or September.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was August 29.

Mr. Knowles: As to the point that the amendment involves an expenditure of money and therefore is beyond the power of a private member to propose, I would point out that the amendment requires the company, not the government, to compensate employees for any loss that may be sustained. Therefore, the minister cannot argue that this is a matter involving expenditure out of the treasury.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the simplest thing would be to read the resolution which is to be found at page 787 of Votes and Proceedings for August 29. It reads:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to define a national transportation policy for Canada suited to modern transportation requirements and to establish a national transportation authority to effect the objectives of the national transportation policy; to provide for new methods of fixing freight rates and for the rationalization of branch lines of railway and passenger train services; to authorize the payment from the Consolidated Revenue Fund by way of assistance to permit of orderly adjustment to the new freight rate structures and the removal of other forms of assistance to railways; to authorize the payment of assistance from the Consolidated Revenue Fund to railway companies where they are required to maintain uneconomic branch lines or passenger train services in operation for the public good; to authorize payments to maintain the prevailing level of At and East freight rates on grain; to permit certain grants to be made from the Railway Grade Crossing Fund for a further period of three years beyond January 31, 1967; to authorize agreements relating to the carriage by rail of Her Majesty's mail and members of the Canadian Forces and police travelling on Her Majesty's service; to provide for the administration of commodity pipe lines, extra-provincial motor vehicle transport and water transport within the context of the national transportation policy. and to provide further for other matters consequential upon or related or incidental to any of the foregoing.

It will be seen from the terms of the resolution that it is quite comprehensive but also quite specific, and it would seem to me, sir, that it would not include this particular kind of amendment under any of the heads contained in it. For that reason I think Your Honour should consider whether or not the amendment is in order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for reading the entire resolution into the record. Meantime I too have found it in Hansard for the same date at page 7743, and I would like to direct Your Honour's special attention to the last phrase in the resolution:

—and to provide further for other matters consequential upon or related or incidental to any of the foregoing.

I realize that when the government drafted the resolution it put those words in there to protect itself in case something was wanted in the bill that was not specifically spelled out in the earlier parts of the resolution, but surely that protection works both ways. If that protection for something that is "consequential upon or related or incidental to any of the foregoing" is available to the government, it is also available to private members of the house. One of the things covered in the resolution is the rationalization of railway services and I do not think it can be denied that the amendment moved by my colleague from Nickel Belt deals with something that is consequential upon rationalization of railway services.

The minister raised two points. One was that the proposition in the amendment goes beyond the scope of the resolution. I argue that it does not go beyond it by any stretch of the imagination. The words are clear that there can be in the bill "matters consequential upon or related or incidental to any of the foregoing." The proposition advanced by the hon. member for Nickel Belt is not something de novo; it is something that is consequential upon changes of policy by the railway companies.

The other point that the minister tried to make was that the amendment would involve the expenditure of government moneys and therefore was not open to a private member to move. I point out that the amendment calls for the companies to compensate employees. I remind the minister that it has been quite possible to have such things as labour code legislation and so on presented to the house without a prior resolution because where legislation requires companies to make payments, even the Canadian National Railways, that is not regarded as money out of the public treasury.

I submit, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that neither point raised by the minister is a valid objection to the proposition that is before us. Apart from all this, I am a little dumbfounded, after all that has been said about the virtues of the Freedman report and all the praise which has been heaped on it, that the minister would raise any objection to this amendment. This is something which ought to be debated and I hope we will have that debate no matter what happens. I submit that in any case you should have no difficulty, Mr. Chairman, in finding that this amendment is neither beyond the scope of the resolution nor does it call for the expenditure of government money. I suggest, therefore, that it is clearly in order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Although I do not attach as much importance to this as I do to the question of the scope of the bill, I might remind the hon. member, in respect of the second point that when the present Speaker was Deputy Speaker I sought to make the same argument the hon. gentleman has made in respect of an amendment having to do with the Expo Corporation. At that time, notwithstanding what I thought was a very eloquent and logical argument on my part, Mr. Speaker, who was the then Deputy Speaker, decided against me. He decided that it would be a charge upon the Expo Corporation. He ruled the proposed amendment out of order notwithstanding the fact that the government itself was seeking at that time to make the amendment.

If that was a good decision, then surely a charge of this kind in its ultimate effect would be against the treasury so long as the Canadian National Railways do not make a profit. I do not regard that argument as being as strong as the argument about the scope of the bill. I should like to direct the hon. gentleman's attention to the wording of the amendment itself where it says:

Where a company makes any change, alteration or deviation in its railway or any portion thereof—

That does not deal simply with branch line abandonment or rationalization; it deals with every aspect of the railway system. It seems to me that, ipso facto, that is beyond the scope of the bill. Certainly it is not as a consequence of any of these other specific matters which are referred to in the bill.

The main reason I did not include the rather limited amendment which I proposed in respect of Bill C-120 is that after that bill was introduced the situation did seem to be altered by the report of the Freedman commission. Also because of the experience at that time it seems to me that this is not an appropriate matter to be dealt with incidentally under transport policy. It seemed to me that the whole question of labour relations and its consequences upon employees would be dealt with more appropriately by the Minister of Labour. For that reason I decided I would not attempt to deal in this bill with one very small part of the field but would leave the matter to the Department of Labour which department we know at the present time is giving consideration to it.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, may I make just one point in respect of the continuing argument of the minister that this amendment would cost money. The point I should like to draw to Your Honour's attention is that when the government's labour code was before the house in 1964 I, as a private member, moved an amendment to the effect that the number of statutory holidays be increased by one. The addition of that holiday cost the Canadian National Railways money.

An hon. Member: And the C.B.C.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, the C.B.C. and a number of other emanations of the crown as well. Nevertheless it was accepted as being in order, voted upon and passed. Even some of the powerful corporations affected did not appeal to the courts on the ground that it was invalid because a private member moved it.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman knows there could not be an appeal to the courts.

Mr. Knowles: I suggest that this argument is much more valid here than in respect of the Expo Corporation which was operating on direct grants.

Mr. Pickersgill: Grants from the provincial government and the city of Montreal.

Mr. Knowles: Certainly there have been many cases where labour legislation has required companies, including the C.N.R., to do things which might cost money. Amendments of this nature have been made to bills by private members. I think the point in this regard is quite clear.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment is out of order but even if it is I suggest the minister might make a gesture in this regard by arranging for the amendment to be moved by one of his colleagues. He has been doing this continually in respect of this bill. This would get around his argument, if there is any validity to it. I am sure that if the officials were on the floor they would tell us that there would be very few persons involved. If the minister would accept this amendment it would be a gesture on behalf of these few employees who might be dislocated. The minister uses strange methods to dismiss these amendments. Sometimes he tells us there are financial implications; other times he tells us that it is not within our competence to deal with them. Once or twice he even dragged the poor old senators into it. He cannot have it both ways, Mr. Chairman.

When there have been financial implications involved the minister has accepted some of these amendments by arranging for his colleagues to move them. I suggest that if he would do that in this instance it would be a nice gesture. The hon. member for Nickel Belt has a very great interest in the employees because he himself is a former railway employee. He has brought this matter forward very sincerely. The minister is receiving credit for being flexible in his views. Why does he not accept this amendment by having it moved by one of his colleagues? If he did so, we would be happy and I am sure our intentions would be appreciated by the employees across the country.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I rise first of all to suggest to you that as I read the resolution which has been submitted by the government it gives this committee ample scope to deal with the amendment moved by my colleague the hon. member for Nickel Belt. What does the resolution say? I should like to read part of it:

> To provide for new methods of fixing freight rates and for the rationalization of branch lines of railway and passenger train services; to authorize the payment from the consolidated revenue fund by way of assistance to permit of orderly adjustment to the new freight rate structures and the removal of other forms of assistance to railways; to authorize the payment of assistance from the consolidated revenue fund to railway companies where they are required to maintain uneconomic branch lines or passenger train services in operation for the public good;

We are going through this bill clause by clause. We have been discussing this very detailed bill at great length. Time and again hon. members on both sides of the house have made suggestions and offered amendments, the purpose of which is simply to ensure that where the railway companies have to do something which may not be economically feasible the people of Canada will make up the losses. I suggest that in the year 1967 it is poor policy to bring in a bill to protect the Railways against all losses they may have to incur in carrying out the transportation policy of this country. However, to say at the same time to workers who will be affected by rationalization, workers who as a result of the abandonment of branch lines will have to move to another town with their families, that their rights are second class compared with the rights of the railway company is an injustice. Yet essentially, Mr. Chairman, that is what the minister is saying.

The scope of this amendment makes clear that we are dealing with rationalization, which I suggest to the minister will mean dislocation of the lives of the railway workers. I do not know whether they will be few in number, as suggested by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, or many, as suggested by the hon. member for Nickel Belt. Indeed, I do not think that consideration is important. The important principle involved here is that railway workers should not be required to carry the whole burden of this kind of dislocation and drastic change.

Let us think about the events which led to the appointment of Mr. Justice Freedman as a commissioner. The C.N.R. decided to extend the runs of certain of their employees and as a result of this thinking workers at Nakina would have had to move because it would no longer be a turn-around point. As a result of their fears, and despite the assurances given at the time to the then minister of transport by the president of the C.N.R. that nothing serious would eventuate, there was a work stoppage which tied up the C.N.R. virtually from one end of Canada to the other. That is how important the workers of the C.N.R. believed this issue to be.

In the result, Mr. Justice Freedman was appointed by this government to inquire into the matter. He made a report which was supported by all parties in the house. What Mr. Justice Freedman said essentially—I will not go into the details of his report or quote it—was that the railway workers have a right to protection when drastic changes are decided upon by the railway.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman is speaking to the point of order. Perhaps it would be more orderly if we were to decide whether the amendment is in order. If it is not in order, then it appears to me to be not debatable. We should not take up the time of the committee if it is not in order. If it is in order then the hon. gentleman's remarks will be thoroughly relevant.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I can only repeat what I said a few moments ago. This bill deals with the whole question of rationalization and of compensating the railways where the abandonment of branch lines leads to losses by the railways. In cases where the railways are required to continue services which lose money the government can also compensate the railways. Therefore it seems obvious to me that not only do we have the right to deal with the effects of this kind of rationalization and the changes which will be brought about for the workers by any drastic revisions made by the railways but that this is the correct time to discuss the matter. I suggest that the amendment is in order and should be considered now.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I rise to urge you to accept the amendment. Without repeating some of the arguments which have been made I should like to remind you, if I may, as an example of the scope of the bill, that the other day the hon. member for Port Arthur, with the support of the minister who told us he had taken an active part in designing the amendment, moved an amendment which has since been adopted by this committee and is now clause 20 of the bill.

There is not a word in this amendment which specifically refers to the matter with which that amendment dealt. You recall, Mr.

Chairman, that that amendment was concerned with the situation where one of the modes of transport involved in the bill wished to acquire, either directly or indirectly, an interest, by purchase, lease, merger, consolidation, or otherwise, in the business or undertaking of any person whose principal business is transportation, whether or not such business or undertaking was subject to the jurisdiction of parliament, and notice had to be given to the commission. Provision was also made in that amendment for how the commission should deal with the matter. According to the final words of that amendment the commission may, by the provisions of the amendment, disallow any acquisition sought by any company in the field of transportation. I respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman, that there is absolutely nothing in this resolution other than the last words—

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the very first words?

Mr. Lewis: The very first words referred to defining a national transportation policy for Canada. If it is wide enough to include legislation to deal with consolidation, merger and acquisition, then it is surely wide enough also to include protection for workers who are affected by any action taken by the commission.

For the life of me, Mr. Chairman, I do not see how it is possible to suggest that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur covers what this amendment seeks to do. There is not another clause or subclause in this bill dealing with the subject matter of the amendment which is now clause 20 of the bill. There is not a word in the resolution suggesting that this bill is intended to deal with what essentially is the monopolistic acquisition of other transportation property. The minister introduced the amendment and the committee was ready to deal with it because obviously it was something consequential upon or related to the national transportation policy referred to in this bill.

I respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment before the committee falls much more clearly within those words than did the amendment accepted by the Chair and voted on by the committee. Can anyone who is not trying to be frivolous or fractious suggest that the consequences to employees of the rationalization of rail services are not a result of that rationalization? Can anyone logically argue that the result of rationalization in regard to the employees is not a direct consequence of the rationalization which is provided in this bill, the entire machinery of which deals with and encourages rationalization of the railways?

The amendment to which I have referred and which was, as I said, passed by this committee was in my respectful opinion a proper amendment precisely because it too dealt with the rationalization of the transportation services in Canada. There is also the fact that the basis of the bill is competition and this competition would be ended if one mode of transport got a monopoly over other modes of transport or if one company in one mode of transport got a monopolistic hold over other modes. In precisely the same way is this amendment proper and within the scope of the resolution.

I also respectfully urge that it is entirely within the actual spirit and letter of the bill before us, if I may put it that way, and of the particular section before us, because what we are dealing with in clause 42 and more particularly in new section 314D is precisely the subject matter of (a) encouraging rationalization, (b) the consequences of rationalization on the railways and (c), how the consequences of that rationalization are to be dealt with. I urge upon you, Mr. Chairman, that what this amendment deals with is on all fours in principle with precisely what the section deals with, namely, the encouragement of rationalization, the consequences of that rationalization upon employees affected thereby, and the way in which those consequences are to be dealt with. The only difference is that the bill before you now provides that the consequences to the railways, if they are adverse, are to be met out of the public treasury, whereas this amendment says that the consequences to the employees, if they are adverse, are to be met by compensation determined by the commission, again tying it directly to the bill which deals with the commission. The amendment provides that in this event the company concerned shall compensate such employees.

May I make two more points, Mr. Chairman. They are intended to support the procedural argument even though they necessarily deal in part with the merits of this question. I would remind the minister and you, sir, if I may, of some of the things the minister said. Unless I have misread this clause of the bill, section 182 of the Railway Act is not deleted, so to the extent that section 182 of the Railway Act remains and provides compensation for employees it is still in the law. If you took the Railway Act and Bill C-231 together, you would still have a provision in the total transportation legislation for the limited kind of compensation which section 182 of the Railway Act now provides. All this amendment does is extend the principle and the application of the contents of section 182 of the Railway Act. In that way I respectfully submit it is again entirely in order because it relates to policy and other statute which this bill seeks to amend.

I think it would be nothing less, and I use these words deliberately, than heartless and thoughtless on the part of this parliament and the minister if we spent weeks adopting a bill that deals in large measure with rationalization, were careful in every instance where rationalization may affect the railways adversely to provide for compensation to them from the public treasury, and did nothing to compensate those workers affected by rationalization. We even provide in this bill, as was argued yesterday, that within the first three years of the coming into force of this law there is to be a study of the Crowsnest pass rates to ascertain whether they are compensatory, and if the commission feels they are not compensatory the governor in council may compensate the railways for the losses involved.

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

Mr. Lewis: That is the way I read it —"may" compensate them; I do not say "shall".

Mr. Pickersgill: The governor in council may make a recommendation to parliament but the Governor in Council cannot compensate the railways.

Mr. Lewis: The governor in council may make a recommendation to parliament to compensate the railways; that is fine. But we have provided here for compensation to the railways for any losses generally. I am not going into detail in this respect, Mr. Chairman, so forgive me for using a general phrase which necessarily is not entirely accurate but is accurate enough for the purpose of our discussion. We are providing that if there are losses in the application of the Crowsnest pass rates we shall after three years compensate the railways. But there is not a single, solitary word in this bill about compensating the workers of the railway who might have to move from one place to another as a result of the rationalization which this bill requires, or who might, without even being afforded the opportunity of moving, lose their jobs and suffer other losses as well.

If the minister insists on asking the Chair to rule this amendment out of order and if, as I hope is the case, the Chair holds that it is in order and the minister insists on opposing it, he will justify the worst fears of the workers of the railways and other modes of transportation in this country. These are fears that I may frankly say I have, namely, that this is a bill not really to deal with a transportation policy as a whole, because you cannot have an effective or adequate transportation policy without employees, but a bill primarily concernd with guaranteeing the railways that they will be compensated, without any consideration for the workers of the railways who may be affected by the policies laid out in the bill.

I urge the minister to accept this amendment despite his statement that it was not the intention to introduce industrial relations matters into the bill. This is not a question of industrial or labour relations. The actual implementation of the recommendations of the Freedman report will require other legislation. That will involve negotiation between the railway companies, the unions, and so on. This amendment is precisely in the spirit of the rest of the bill. When the railways are hurt they should be compensated, and we say that when the workers are hurt they should be compensated. I should like to understand how the minister morally and in social terms is able to make a distinction between the two forms of compensation.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I should just like to say a word on the amendment. The railway committee studied precisely this matter a number of years ago in respect of Bill C-15 introduced by the former member for Port Arthur. The committee studied that bill at length and reported favourably on it to the House of Commons. It said that steps should be taken along the lines of the bill. The minister of the day, the same Minister of Transport, agreed with this and informed the committee that legislation would be introduced somewhat along the lines of the bill.

I urge the minister to take a close look at this amendment. He may wish to ask that the clause be stood while his officials consider the amendment. I urge that even though he may prefer the amendment to be drawn in a narrower form, he should not disregard it completely. In fact, the minister could bring in an amendment which might well fall under subsection (3) of new section 314D more appropriately. This subsection could provide for the commission reporting to the governor in council its findings with regard to any alteration or deviation in respect of a branch line which would disrupt employment. Under subsection 3 the commission could report to the governor in council.

I am suggesting this so that we may get on with the legislation. We on this side of the house have been trying to co-operate and to make some progress every day. Here we have a very important technical point. An amendment has been suggested and I am sure the hon. member who moved it would not object to the consideration of this amendment by the minister who could give it to his draftsmen to examine and perhaps make some changes to it if considered necessary or even include it in a clause which would allow the commission to report to the governor in council that compensation should be paid in case of the alteration or deviation of any branch line resulting in direct hardship to the employees or by reason of the exercise of seniority in the company.

All I am asking of the minister is that he should agree to stand this clause. We will be considering the transportation bill again tomorrow and in the intervening time this point can be studied very carefully in consultation with the draftsmen of the bill and the mover of the amendment. Certainly the amendment deserves consideration and perhaps the minister could work out something which would be agreeable to him. In a sense this amendment falls within the scope of the rationalization of railway lines. It does not broaden the financial aspect of the bill, particularly if the commission were to hear briefs, study the abandonment of branch lines or their rationalization and report to the governor in council that such and such were the conditions.

The minister has been in a very co-operative mood throughout the consideration of this legislation. I know that he wants to proceed with it as quickly as possible, as we do on this side of the house. I ask him to agree to have the clause stood for consideration for another day of the suggestion put forward in this amendment and to proceed at the present time with other clauses of the bill. I urge the minister to do this in order that we may make some headway in the passage of this legislation.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, having listened to the debate I should like to support the proposed amendment. The value of debating clauses in the house is that it allows people to get information. Their attention is drawn to matters which they may have overlooked. Having listened to the debate I must say that I am impressed with the arguments which have been brought forward so far. Before the chairman rules on the validity of the amendment may I say that the suggestion which has been made recently that the amendment stand for study by the minister is a sensible one and is preferable to the more strict and formal method of ruling one way or another on the amendment. I do not know of any bill that has been brought before the house which has been subjected to so many amendments in the standing committee stage and now in committee of the whole. One more amendment will not delay the proceedings at all. In fact, if the minister is as wise as some people who do not know him as well as I do tend to think he is he would stand this amendment and perhaps modify it if he and his legal advisers think that it is drawn too broadly.

I was impressed with the argument that in the course of developing a national transportation policy our job is not solely to consider the economic strength or weakness of the railway corporations but also to consider the people who are employed by those corporations and without whose activities they would not be of much value. This amendment follows along the line of the suggestions made by Mr. Justice Freedman. Yesterday when we were talking about another section the minister was at pains to point out that a royal commission which had been appointed by the government of our party had made certain recommendations and that therefore we should be prepared to accept its findings. I myself have never taken that point of view with regard to royal commissions. However, here is the minister's chance to apply his own argument and accept the findings of the royal commission headed by Mr. Justice Freedman.

Undoubtedly this is a vital matter in so far as the employees of the railways are concerned. If automation or other changes throw them out of work unexpectedly, then every provision should be made to see that they will not suffer loss of employment. Their interests are of equal importance to us as the interests of the railways and the interests of the government in its responsibility for transportation.

I conclude by simply reinforcing the arguments that have already been made urging the minister to look at this amendment and to consult his advisers to see if it cannot be accepted. If it goes beyond the scope of the resolution and involves an expenditure of money, the minister may ask one of his colleagues to move an appropriate amendment. It is as simple as that. I think that the minister, after hearing the suggestions made from this side of the house, will decide that this matter deserves to be covered in the legislation.

The Chairman: The Chair is ready to make a ruling on the amendment if that is the wish of the committee. First of all I should like to thank hon. members who have taken part in the discussion on this point of order. I should point out also that there is no question in the mind of the Chair as to the importance of the problem. However, the responsibility of the Chair is not to decide on the importance of the problem as related to the railways and to the men concerned but to decide whether or not the amendment is procedurally correct.

I listened very carefully to the statement made by the hon. member for Nickel Belt and also to the statements made by the hon. members for Winnipeg North Centre, Winnipeg North, Winnipeg South Centre and Acadia. I have also taken into account the argument presented by the minister.

First of all I should say that I think there are three things to be considered here. Whether or not there are financial implications in this amendment is a matter of opinion. The Chair is not particularly impressed with that argument although I recognize there are conditions that might flow from this amendment which would indeed have financial implications. However, the Chair is of the opinion that this amendment does go beyond the scope of the bill. I believe that the question which has been raised by the hon. member for Nickel Belt more properly comes within the realm of labour relations as applied to the railways. I am of the opinion also that the amendment as moved by the hon. member for Nickel Belt is perhaps not particularly relevant to the proposed section 314D.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I might refer hon. members to page 549 of May's seventeenth edition where it is stated:

> An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the bill—

I have read the amendment very carefully, I have listened to the arguments presented by members, and it is the opinion of the Chair that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Nickel Belt is not relevant to the clause now before the committee and is outside the scope of the bill. I therefore rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, with great regret and without any loss of respect of Your Honour, I appeal your decision to the Speaker.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

> Mr. Speaker, the question is an appeal to Mr. Speaker from a decision of the chairman of the committee of the whole pursuant to section 4 of standing order 59. In committee of the whole when clause 42 subclause 314D of Bill C-231 was being considered the hon. member for Nickel Belt proposed an amendment as follows:
> "That Bill C-231 be amended by adding in clause 314D after subclause (5) thereof, the following as subclause (6):
> (6) Notwithstanding anything in section 182 of the said act, where a company makes any change, alteration or deviation in its railway or any portion thereof or abandons any portion or branchline thereof which results in loss of employment by any of its employees either directly or through the exercise of seniority, the company shall compensate such employees as the commission deems proper for any financial loss caused to them by change of residence or loss of employment necessitated thereby."
> Using paragraph 1, page 549 of May's seventeenth edition, I ruled the amendment out of order in that it was outside the scope of the bill and irrelevant to the clause then being considered by the committee, whereupon the hon. member for York South appealed the decision to Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, although this procedure is provided in our provisional standing orders we always regret employing it because it seems to suggest that we are setting two occupants of the chair against each other. Let me assure Your Honour and the chairman of the committee of the whole that this is not so. We feel the issue involved in this amendment is so important that it deserves the consideration of at least two judicial heads.

When the amendment was moved by the hon. member for Nickel Belt the Minister of Transport raised two points of objection. I mention these to fill Your Honour in about what has happened. One point the minister raised was not accepted by the chairman of the committee of the whole, the contention that this amendment would involve the expenditure of public moneys. We were able to show that the requirement of the amendment is that any compensation would have to be paid by the companies concerned and we were also able to cite certain precedents in support of an amendment of this kind.

The other point the Minister of Transport put forward was to the effect that this amendment was outside the scope of the resolution preceding the bill. During the procedural debate in committee of the whole the entire resolution preceding the bill was read into the record. The resolution is lengthy and appears on page 7743 of Hansard for August 29, 1966. The resolution spells out the many purposes the government had in mind in proposing Bill C-231 and its concluding words were as follows:

—and to provide further for other matters consequential upon or related or incidental to any of the foregoing.

It was our contention in committee of the whole and it is our contention now that that wording is extremely wide and that it makes possible amendments dealing, as the very words say, with any matters consequential upon or related or incidental to any of the foregoing matters covered in the bill.

The whole issue posed by the amendment of the hon. member for Nickel Belt is that consequences experienced by railway workers, as a result of railway rationalization or other steps taken, should be taken care of. It is quite clear that the bill provides for compensation when the consequences of rationalization affect the railway companies. Our contention is that when the consequences affect employees they should also be taken care of. It may seem as if I am getting to the substance, but the point is that if the consequences in the one instance are within the scope of the bill, surely the consequences in the other instance are also within the scope of the bill.

Perhaps in what I have just now said I am recognizing that the chairman of the committee of the whole house used slightly different language from that used by the Minister of Transport. The Minister of Transport talked about the amendment being beyond the scope of the resolution. I think it would be fair to say that on this point he made his whole case on that basis.

I note that the chairman of the committee of the whole did not use that language. In fact, he accepted our argument that the amendment of the hon. member for Nickel Belt is not beyond the scope of the resolution preceding the bill because, after all, it makes provision for other matters consequential upon or related or incidental to any of the foregoing, although he did say we had gone beyond the scope of the bill.

The chairman of the committee of the whole house relied on a citation in May's seventeenth edition, page 589, paragraph 1, which deals with the scope of a bill. I suggest that the scope of the bill before us is largely related to the question of compensation because of losses, adjustments, changes, rationalization and so on. So far as the scope of the bill is concerned, there is no question about that. What we are now talking about is that the consequences to employees of rationalization should be considered as part of the bill.

I would point out to Your Honour that this bill is in part a new piece of legislation and in part a bill amending certain acts which are already on our statute books. In section 182 of the Railway Act there is already provision for compensation to employees adversely affected as a result of changes of policy with respect to lines. But there has been a ruling that section 182 of the present act does not provide for compensation to employees when there is total abandonment. Therefore I am contending that this amendment is completely within the scope of the present legislation. It proposes that what is already in the law, namely, that there should be compensation to employees when there is an alteration in a line, should also apply when the consequences are those which flow from the complete abandonment of a line of railway or a divisional point.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if you study the whole thing as a piece, 314E which talks about compensation to the companies as a result of changes which take place and section 182 of the Railway Act which is part of this total package of legislation, I submit that included in this whole framework is the question of what is done as a consequence of railway policy changes which are injurious. If such changes are injurious to the companies, compensation is available. If they are injurious to employees, compensation is available but only in certain circumstances. The amendment proposes that in the case of total abandonment of a divisional point, branch line, or whatever it may be, compensation would be available.

Again I speak with a great deal of respect not only for Your Honour but for the chairman of the committee of the whole house when I express my earnest feeling that this is a case where Your Honour would, after careful consideration—you might even wish to reserve decision on the question—be justified in doing what has never yet been done, that is, make a ruling opposite to that made by the chairman of the committee of the whole. He did not accept the argument that the money provisions presented any problem. He said so in very plain language. I contend that by implication he did not accept the argument of the Minister of Transport that the amendment goes beyond the terms of the resolution which preceded the bill. I have spelled that out by quoting the concluding words of the resolution.

What he did use as a basis for ruling the amendment out of order was the contention, as he saw it, that the amendment was beyond the scope of the bill and that it was not relevant to the particular section we are considering at the present time, which is new section 314D. My argument is that this bill is seriously and widely concerned with compensation where injury is suffered because of changes, and that to talk about compensation to employees as a result of those changes is certainly within its scope. We also contend that 314D, which deals specifically with the machinery for providing some of these compensation payments, is the part of the bill in which this matter ought to be dealt with.

For these reasons I urge you, Mr. Speaker, to give this matter your earnest consideration. I think it is an important point. Other amendments have been accepted while we have been in committee. The other day we considered an amendment by the hon. member for Port Arthur dealing with situations where companies purchase each other's lines, something which was not mentioned in the resolution preceding the bill and something which in my view is hardly within the scope of the measure. Yet it was allowed, voted on and passed. It even included provision for information to be given to the combines investigation branch.

I might even mention an amendment which was moved the other day by the hon. member for Peace River. It was defeated after a vote but at least it was found to be in order. It sought to provide for the setting up of a special committee of the House of Commons by statutory arrangement, something to which there was no reference whatsoever in the resolution. There have been other such amendments put forward as we have proceeded in our consideration of this bill. To contend now that this particular proposal is beyond the scope of the bill is a contention which in my submission is hard to maintain. I submit that in a bill which is concerned with compensation as a result of changes this amendment is more of a piece with the legislation than some of the other amendments which have been dealt with. I therefore hope that Your Honour, either now or after considering the matter, will find that this amendment should be allowed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that Your Honour really needs my assistance in this matter, since I agree with the judgment of the chairman of the committee. But I should like very briefly to review the points which have been made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I know he did not deliberately misrepresent me, but my first words when I called the amendment into question—

Mr. Mongrain: I apologize for interrupting the minister while he is speaking but I should like to ask him a question. Does he not think this amendment is superfluous as a result of the introduction by the government of a bill which appears to cover this subject under the title, in French, "Recyclage de la Main-d'œuvre"?

Mr. Pickersgill: In order to avoid destroying the consecutiveness of what I have to say, perhaps I could reply to that question after I have dealt with the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

As I began to point out, the very first words I used in taking exception to the amendment were that it was beyond the scope of the bill. It is true that the second time I spoke I used the terms of the resolution because they comprise a handy table of contents of the bill. But my main argument was based on my first assertion that the subject matter was beyond the scope of the bill. So the Chair did not reach a decision on the basis of an argument which was not in fact placed before it. I should like to make that clear.

• (5:00 p.m.)

The only other point which could arise with respect to the resolution, beyond its being a handy table of contents, is that in certain contingencies there might be a charge on the treasury as a result of the amendment, but my main point was that the amendment was clearly beyond the scope of the bill. The hon. gentleman talks about the bill as though the principle of it was compensation. The principle of the bill is not compensation at all. The principle is to create a new situation where compensation will not be necessary.

The real purpose of the bill is clearly indicated in the resolution, namely, to set up a national transport policy and, in that context, to lay down certain general principles, one of which is competition. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur was for the purpose of making surer that there would be competition and that the provisions of clause 1 of the bill would operate. Therefore it came entirely within the scope of the bill.

What the proposed amendment is concerned with is the relationship between railway companies and their employees. It does not deal with any other kind of companies covered by the legislation. The railway companies are singled out in this connection. The hon. gentleman is quite correct when he says that the Railway Act does this, in some particulars, but the hon. gentleman is an old hand here and knows as well as I do that the scope of an act which is being amended is not what is before the house. It is the scope of the bill that is doing the amending. That is all that is before the Chair when a question of order is raised whether or not something is beyond the scope of the bill.

The Railway Act deals with all kinds of matters that we are not attempting to disturb by this bill in any way. To deal with a subject covered by the Railway Act which we are not amending in this bill is exactly the kind of situation envisaged in the citation read by the chairman of the committee, on which in part he based his judgment.

Also in support of the chairman's ruling I would point out that the amendment was not relevant to the clause itself. The clause deals primarily with the abandonment of branch lines and with certan very limited kinds of rationalization incidental to the abandonment or re-arrangement of branch lines. The amendment purports to deal with any change whatsoever made by a railway company, any change, alteration or deviation in its operation, on its main line, in its hotels, or in anything over which it exercises control, including abandonment of branch lines and certain things incidental thereto. Therefore it would be a very suitable subject for legislation on its own, and it has been indicated on a good many occasions that the broad subject matter will become the subject of legislation. But to suggest that an amendment or a purported amendment, under the guise of being incidental to one small aspect of railways should affect the whole railway structure, is not beyond the scope of a bill such as this seems to be arguing in the face of the obvious content of the purported amendment itself. It is for those reasons that I feel the Chair did not err in making the judgment.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: To answer the hon. gentleman's question, if Your Honour thinks it would be relevant for me to do so, I think certain aspects of the matter which this purported amendment seeks to cover are in fact covered by legislation which is administered by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, although I have some doubt that all aspects of it are so covered.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, having carefully read the amendment and the provisions of new section 314D in clause 42 I believe there is some validity to the argument that what is introduced in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Nickel Belt does go beyond the scope of what is contained in new section 314D. In fact, I suggest that the chairman of the committee made a proper ruling when he said that the amendment went beyond what is contained in that new section. However, I must disagree with his suggestion that what the amendment proposes goes beyond the scope of the whole bill. I find myself in a measure of agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and others in that the resolution preceding the bill suggested that the bill would deal with certain matters and with related and consequential matters. That must be broad enough to include the consequences to employees as the result of abandonment and other acts covered in the bill.

The minister argued that the amendment went beyond the scope of the resolution because the resolution did not provide for a charge on the treasury to deal with compensation to employees. I suggest that the amendment does not call for a charge on the public treasury to pay compensation to employees for the consequences of abandonment, such as a change of residence and other losses that they may suffer. What the amendment suggests is that authority be vested in the commission to order or direct a company to compensate employees for such loss.

There are many other clauses in the bill which give the commission authority to issue directives to railway companies that will cost the companies money. A directive made under the terms of the amendment would, I suggest, be no more out of order than others which would impose a cost on railway companies. Therefore I do not believe the amendment is out of order on those grounds.

• (5:10 p.m.)

For this resaon I am concerned about the ruling that the amendment is beyond the scope of the whole bill because there are other parts of the bill to which this amendment, or a modification of it, could more properly be moved. I suggest, for instance, new section 314E which deals with claims, the right to claim, the determination of claims, the payment of claims and so on. But even that new section I suggest deals with claims made for costs incurred in the the continuance of a branch line; it does not deal with claims which may arise as a result of the abandoning of a branch line. So perhaps this amendment would also be beyond the scope of what is contained in new section 314E. Therefore, while I am in some measure in agreement with the ruling that the amendment is beyond the scope of new section 314D, I take exception to that part of the ruling that it is beyond the scope of the whole bill and beyond the scope of the resolution preceding the bill. I do so because of the other argument I advanced a few moments ago.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that your ruling would be in line with the chairman's ruling to the effect that the amendment is beyond the scope of this clause but that you would rule it is not beyond the scope of the bill for this kind of subject matter to be introduced in an appropriate place.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to add to your difficulty, but I take it that the procedure at the moment is under provisional standing order 59(4). The chairman has ruled on this matter and has made his decision on another ground than the financial aspect. He has virtually said that the financial argument does not apply. I am wondering whether in hearing this appeal you have the right to go back into this matter. That is one subject you will have to consider. I should like to refer to the argument of the minister that the amendment is presented at the wrong place in the bill and has application to the wrong clause. I believe we have been moving here and there in the bill because of the difficulty of renumbering. Therefore I suggest that the argument concerning where the amendment is introduced in the bill is not applicable.

It appears to me that the main argument centres around the scope of the bill. Mention has been made of the resolution itself. I feel that our consideration of the bill has been very broad. Subjects have been introduced such as the Combines Investigation Act. New sections have been placed right in the middle of the bill. I suggest that the bill is very broad and comprehensive. Therefore so far as the scope is concerned I feel it would be very difficult to rule the amendment out on that ground.

Mr. Speaker: If there are no further arguments to be advanced for the guidance of the Chair, perhaps I might be permitted to give a ruling at this point. By way of introduction the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to the general reluctance of hon. members to appeal under the provisions of the provisional standing order which provides for an appeal from the chairman of the committee of the whole to the Speaker. Certainly this is a standing order which is difficult of application. Be that as it may, I believe it is the duty of the Chair to accept its responsibility in spite of the fact that the standing order may be difficult in respect of its application.

If I may refer first to the argument of the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, he questioned the possibility of the Chair ruling on the second aspect of the argument which was advanced in committee, that is, the financial provisions of the bill. I do not think it is necessary for me even to refer to this. As I understand the ruling, it is not actually based on that argument. The chairman said he had no doubt in respect of it and went on to base his ruling on other procedural aspects of the matter.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre based his argument mainly on the contention that the amendment comes within the scope of the bill itself. The Minister of Transport has argued against this and has suggested that in his view the essence of the proposed amendment does go beyond the terms of the clause itself and also beyond the terms of the bill.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat goes half way. He suggests that the amendment although it is beyond the terms of the clause, should not be ruled out of order because it does not go beyond the purport of the whole bill. Obviously there are arguments which could be advanced both ways in respect of the positions taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Medicine Hat as well as in respect of the argument advanced by the Minister of Transport.

It is my view that this is a matter of judgment. The chairman of the committee of the whole has weighed both arguments. He is familiar with the terms of the bill. He has had the bill before him in committee for many days. In his judgment, after hearing lengthy argument, he has ruled that the amendment proposed is beyond the purport of the clause and the bill. In view of the uncertainty in respect of the general question I do not think I should substitute my judgment for that of the chairman who has heard the argument. I have also heard the argument, which I understand was repeated in capsule form, and I must conclude that I have to support the decision of the chairman of the committee.

The committee will now resume its consideration of the bill.

And the house having resumed in committee.

On clause 42—

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, before we leave new section 314D I should like to make some remarks and observations in respect of subsection (4). Actually I had hoped to do so before the hon. member for Nickel Belt took the floor, but the Minister of Transport invited him to move his amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was seeking to preserve his right because he had spoken to me last evening.

Mr. Schreyer: Yes. I am not complaining; I am merely stating the reason I have not made these remarks earlier. I should like to appeal to members of the committee and the minister to look at subsection (4) of new section 314D in this way: I would hope we would be able to tighten up the wording of this provision so that it could be refined and made more brief. I do not think it is fair, as is the case here, to give the commission powers and terms of reference which read in such a very general and imprecise way. I hope that in this paragraph we can provide some specific terms of reference to complement, not to contradict, the general terms of reference given here.

As I understand the intent or purport of subsection (4) it is that the commission may, when considering applications for abandonment, take into consideration such matters as increased cost to the community, increased cost of road building to the municipalities and the provinces, and losses to people who hold investments that might be described as rail-tied. The commission may also take into consideration such matters as increased cost of production to farmers as a result of abandonment from having to haul their grain a considerable distance farther to the shipping point. I take it that all these things can be taken into account by the commission in considering applications for abandonment.

The ground on which the commission takes these matters into consideration is, I assume, to be found in the proposed section 314D (4). It is one thing, Mr. Chairman, for a member of the committee to assume this; it is quite another thing to have it clearly embodied in the statute. I therefore ask the minister whether he will consider giving consideration to an amendment which I should like to move at this time. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt:

> That clause 314D (4) be amended by adding to subparagraph (b) the following:
> "and in particular, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, in respect of any action causing or likely to cause increased expenditures by municipal or provincial authorities, or increased costs of production or sudden losses to holders of rail-tied investment".

If I may continue my argument in support of this amendment, I suggest to the minister that if he were to give some thought to the consideration which took place when the bill was before the standing committee he would recall some hon. members, myself included, raising the question of what might be done with respect to new problems which would crop up as a result of the passage of this bill. For example, the bill provides for abandonment of certain lines. It provides the procedure by which abandonment applications shall be heard and approved or rejected. In the event that abandonments are granted it is obvious that such action will have a great many ramifications of the kind to which I have already made brief reference.

When a farmer is required to move grain by truck an additional distance to some rail centre it is a fact the farmer's cost of production increases in a very substantial manner. It is estimated that the cost of truck haulage of grain runs in the order of a quarter to half a cent per bushel mile. Conceivably it could happen—I am sure it will as a result of the implementation of certain clauses of this bill over the years—that some farmers will simply have to haul their grain 15, 20 or 25 miles farther than they are at the moment because of some rail line abandonment. This means in a very rough and approximate way that a farmer operating a 500-acre farm will find that his cost of operation has increased in the order of $400, $500, $600 or $700 a year because of increased cost of haulage, etc.

The minister should also bear in mind that the Crowsnest rates admittedly are a very direct and great advantage and benefit to western grain producers. No one questions that for a moment. That is one of the reasons the hon. member for Acadia and others have been carrying on quite a running battle on the provisions of this bill having to do with the Crowsnest rates.

Let me relate this point to the provisions in this particular clause of the bill. If a branch line is abandoned and a farmer has to haul his grain a little farther, it really means two things. First of all, it means increased cost of haulage and increased production costs. Second, it means that the Crowsnest rates are to some degree being pulled away from him and denied him. Up to a given point in time that farmer will have had the advantage of the statutory grain haulage rates. If a local branch line is abandoned and he has to haul his grain by truck he loses a fraction of the advantage he receives from the Crowsnest statutory rates.

What we are doing in effect is this. By adopting this course of action and allowing abandonments to take place, which in certain cases may well be necessary, we are taking away from individual producers certain statutory advantages which others will continue to enjoy. It therefore follows that the commission should—at least, someone should and I presume the commission should in the first instance—take into consideration the fact that a farmer's cost of production is going to go up as a result of particular action taken under the provisions of this bill. Second, it should consider the fact that this farmer and others in the same district will be deprived of part of the statutory advantage derived from the Crowsnest rates.

In my view, Mr. Chairman, I am not really expanding the intent of the bill. The minister himself gave me the assurance in committee that the commission can very well take all these things I have enumerated into account. What I am seeking to do by this amendment is to give more clearcut terms of reference to the commission in this respect. It is merely a matter of spelling out specifically something which is generally implied in subsection (4). On that basis I hope that the minister will find no objection to it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to deal right away with the points made by the hon. gentleman. The only possible objection I could have to his amendment is that it makes the bill a little longer. It seems to me that it is really substantially redundant. If the hon. member will look at the bottom of page 26 of the bill he will see that section 314C(3) says:

> In determining whether an uneconomic branch line or any segment thereof should be abandoned, the commission shall consider all matters that in its opinion are relevant to the public interest including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing,—

Then let me read a few of the following paragraphs.

> (b) the alternative transportation facilities available or likely to be available to the area served by the branch line;
> (c) the period of time reasonably required for the purpose of adjusting any facilities, wholly or in part dependent on the services provided by the branch line, with the least disruption to the economy of the area served by the line;

I do not think (d) is very relevant.

> (e) the economic effects of the abandonment of the operation of the branch line on the communities and areas served by the branch line;

There is some doubt in my mind whether the illustrative expansion which the hon. gentleman would seek to put into new section 314D would in fact add anything more than is already comprehended in those three specific directions to the commission. But if he felt it did in any way add something that was not there I would see no objection whatever to including these words, except the original objection I gave—and perhaps, the committee should be inured to it by this time—that I am not too fond of repetition.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise one or two points respecting this amendment and the argument advanced by the hon. member who moved it. What the minister has said with reference to the provisions to be found on page 26 of the bill does not meet the situation entirely. These provisions say that the commission may take into account actual losses, alternative transportation and the economic effects of the abandonment or operation of a branch line. I would like the minister to be completely aware of the fact, if he is not aware of it already, that the commission does not have the authority to change any of the statutes of Canada.

The fact is that under the Canada Grain Act there is at the moment a restriction respecting the licensing of elevators. If the minister has given any undertaking during the course of the study of the bill here, in the standing committee or anywhere else that the government is going to bring in an amendment to the Canada Grain Act that will allow for the licensing of certain elevators in areas where it may be considered economic to abandon a line, I am pleased, but so far I have not heard of such an undertaking. The Canada Grain Act provides as follows:

"elevator" means any premises into which western grain may be received, or out of which it may be discharged—

Then we find these words:

—directly from or into railway cars or vessels—

There are many places in western Canada, and there happen to be some in my constituency, where an elevator in a community would be a real asset to the farmers in the surrounding area in the making of what we call local deliveries. In many cases large motor transport vehicles come to the elevator and haul most of the grain to mills that are not too far away. If lines were abandoned, under the Canada Grain Act those elevators could no longer be licensed.

In this connection I introduced a bill in the house on two separate occasions, I believe in 1962 and 1963. Of course the bill was talked out both times. I note that the hon. member for Acadia has a bill on the order paper that is almost an exact duplicate of the one I introduced. Farmers could suffer hardship in delivering their grain but the hardship could be eased to some extent if the Canada Grain Act were amended so that the Board of Grain Commissioners could license elevators in certain areas, where railway lines were abandoned. I feel confident that there are some railway lines which in the over-all picture and having regard to their length are uneconomic. However, in certain areas where a line runs parallel to another line the elevator would be a very useful utility if it remained.

As the minister knows, large motor transport vehicles take grain out of an elevator and haul it in this economical way either to a mill or to another elevator for loading into cars on a railway line that is in use. The minister has said that the amendment is redundant and superfluous to the bill. He said it would do very little except make the bill longer. I hope he will at least take into account this one point, namely, that the transport commission will not have the authority to amend any statute, including the Canada Grain Act. and also that at the moment the Board of Grain Commissioners is prohibited from continuing a licence if a railway line is removed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. gentleman has convinced me because I have been looking at the two clauses while he has been talking—that does not mean I was not paying attention to what he was saying—and it seems to me there is a difference I had not observed at first blush between new sections 314C and 314D. It is that new section 314C contains those factors which the commission could license it if it was no longer tied to whether there should be an abandonment but there is no express power to make any recommendations, whereas in subsection (4) of new section 314D there is expressly such power.

Certainly an elevator is a rail based investment. This would not mean that the commission could license it if it was no longer tied to a railway but it could mean they could make representations and recommendations about it. I think it would be beyond the scope of this bill to amend the pertinent section of the Canada Grain Act. I would not feel competent to form any judgment on whether an amendment would be desirable. Although I do not think I have said anything about it in the committee up to this time, I have suggested —I do not think I did it personally but I saw that it was done—to the Canadian Wheat Board and also I believe to the Board of Grain Commissioners, though I am not sure about that, that they should look at this provision in the light of the legislation we are now considering. I believe that is in the process of being done. This would certainly go some distance in meeting the suggestion of the hon. member.

In the circumstances, therefore, it does not appear to me that any change in the wording of the amendment is needed. I believe there is power in the draftsmen to tidy these things up if there is to be any change in punctuation, and so on. In those circumstances, if it was the general feeling of the committee that this amendment would be a useful guide to the commission I would be quite prepared to support it.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the minister for his openmindedness in this respect. I will take only one or two minutes to say that perhaps the only way in which the minister and I disagree in this connection is that the minister seems to think this amendment is perhaps of only middling importance. However, if I may be so bold as to say so, I consider it to be of major significance because somewhere in this legislation someone must be specifically charged with the responsibility of making certain recommendations for remedial action to the appropriate authority when producers are faced with an increased cost of production because of an action taken under the provisions of this bill. This may also happen when a person or persons lose a considerable amount of investment which is tied to a railway location. This may also apply to municipal or provincial governments. Surely it would be quite fair and logical to charge someone with the responsibility of bringing to the attention of the Governor in Council or another appropriate authority, as the case may be, that because of a rail line abandonment the cost of providing alternative transportation facilities, in this case roads, may be likely to increase very substantially.

What I have in mind is that the commission may be faced with an application from the railways to abandon a given stretch of line and the railways may be able to show that they are losing, for example, $500 or $1,000 per rail mile.

On that basis presumably the commission would be disposed to grant approval of the abandonment. However, when submissions are made and it is demonstrated that the cost to the municipality, or jointly to the municipality and the province, of building a road may be in the order of $25,000 or even $30,000 per mile, this should be taken into consideration by the commission which should have someone to turn to in making a recommendation in this regard The amendment would simply specify this direction to the commission for its particular attention.

May I say in closing that it is true that perhaps one could deduce this from the provisions of subsection 4 as now drafted but I see no harm in being more explicit. I should like to make one more point. The minister has a very disarming manner. He gives the members of this committee assurances upon assurances that this will really be done and that this was intended all along. But assurances from a kindhearted minister of the crown are not as binding, I understand, as statutory provisions.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): He may not be minister for very long.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am quite agreeable to accepting the amendment if that is the wish of the committee.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Mr. Schreyer: May I point out to you, sir, that the hon. member for Kootenay West expressed a desire to speak on clause 42?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have had a word with the hon. member for Kootenay West and he agreed to speak on clause 1 when we come back to it. It was agreed some time ago that all the new sections except 314D had been carried and that we would not reopen discussion on them.

On clause 50—

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, I was very pleased to hear the minister say that he wanted to shorten the bill. I will offer him the opportunity to do just that. We heard a rather impractical and unusual speech by the minister last night, particularly from a minister who has some ties with western Canada.

With reference to new section 329 of clause 50 he indicated that a review of the Crowsnest pass rates will be undertaken every three years and he implied that it was his opinion and that of the government that the Crowsnest pass rates were not compensatory. He went to a great deal of trouble to buttress his argument with the recommendations of the MacPherson commission. As I have done before in the house, I referred him immediately to the reservations expressed by a member of the commission, Mr. Gobeil. They are entirely relevant and should be put on the record at this time. He said, as appears in the MacPherson commission report:

> I cannot, however, accept the other commissioners' decision that a subsidy is required in order to compensate the railways for alleged deficits incurred on the carriage of grain and grain products to export positions. There are three reasons for my disagreement with this decision.
> First, I believe that the Canadian Pacific Railway, having obtained certain very real advantages when it undertook—in perpetuity—to accept a ceiling on these grain rates, became party to a contract which is still in effect and which must be abided by.

I should like to say at this point that we in western Canada feel that this is a contract by which the C.P.R. and the other railway must continue to abide. We believe, in view of the fact we have an inviolable contract with the railways, that this is a redundant clause and the whole matter cannot be questioned periodically without regard for compensation. Nobody knows what the total amount of the revenue of the C.P.R. was in 1897. We believe that this clause is redundant because we have an inviolable contract with the railways and therefore we cannot accept the government's proposal that it be reviewed in three years time.

Mr. Pickersgill: The contract was with the C.P.R. for carrying grain to Fort William. It has been applied by law to the C.P.R. to carry grain to Vancouver and to the C.N.R. to carry grain to Churchill. In none of these cases was there a contract. It is the law of this parliament which directs this, and this will not be reviewed. All that will be reviewed is the cost which this movement of grain will involve.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I was going to come to the position of the other railway under this contract because I believe that this has already been reviewed twice, early in the 1900's and again in 1925. At that time the rates were made to apply to the C.N.R. when it was formed and we gave up a part of our rights under the Crowsnest pass agreement but we said we would not give up the other rights under the Crowsnest pass agreement which gave us lower rates on goods coming into western Canada. Even in 1925 the railway companies said that if we gave that up they would continue to haul grain at the ceiling rate.

Mr. Gobeil then goes on to say:

> Second, I do not believe that the grain cost studies which have been brought before this commission have succeeded in their attempts to measure the extent of the loss which, it is alleged, the railways incur in the movement of grain under statutory rates.
>
> • (5:50 p.m.)
> I am not convinced, furthermore, that the studies in question have been able to establish that there is any loss whatsoever.

Last evening the hon. member for Rosthern dealt particularly with this point. We are not convinced that any loss whatever is incurred. I should like to refer the minister again to two minor railways that have been hauling grain under the Crowsnest pass rates for a number of years. One of these railways, the Hudson Bay Railway, has been run by his own department. I believe it was in 1956 or 1957 that the Canadian National took over the operation of the Hudson Bay Railway. I refer the minister to the annual report of the Department of Transport for 1957 which indicates that the Hudson Bay Railway moved a total of 600,000 tons of freight, 78 per cent of which consisted of wheat for export. The balance of traffic was made up of sundry freight and the carriage of passengers. We have been talking about compensatory charges, variable cost charges or, as Donald Gordon said, out of pocket expenses. This line, 78 per cent of whose traffic consisted of export grain, produced a surplus of $34,000 in 1957. This railway is operated by a department of government, and if there is anything in Canada more inefficient than a department of government I have not seen it.

We are talking about costs and I point out that Mr. Gobeil said that the railway had never brought forth a legitimate cost study. We agree with Mr. Gobeil 100 per cent. The figures are not realistic. As he points out in his report, losses on passenger traffic can vary anywhere from $75 million to $255 million, which is a substantial spread.

The other railway about which I want the minister to think for a moment is one that runs through my own constituency, the Northern Alberta Railway. It has been operating since 1927. The great majority of the freight carried by this line is grain under the Crowsnest pass rates. During the last several years the Northern Alberta Railway has never suffered a loss. There is something wrong when these two small railways can carry grain and make money on it while the two larger railways continue to maintain they are losing money hauling grain. We in western Canada do not believe that for a moment. We think that this new section is redundant. As I said earlier, it violates the contract and the cost figures are inaccurate.

The other point I want to make is that the railways have been talking about ton miles. Anyone who has travelled across western Canada by air will appreciate that it is a considerably different problem to haul a ton of grain a mile in western Canada from what it is to haul a ton of grain in some other areas of Canada. The ton-mile costs that the railways continue to use are absolutely irrelevant and are in error. The railways are doing themselves a disservice and almost insulting the intelligence of the people before whom they put these figures. This was Mr. Gobeil's second point and was one of the reasons he could not accept the MacPherson report with regard to subsidies on grain. It is one of the reasons we do not accept it and one of the reasons we say this section is completely redundant. We want it out of there.

I quote Mr. Gobeil again:

> Third, I believe that, if there is a loss associated with the carriage of grain it is due to the cost of maintaining light density lines rather than the cost of carrying grain.

We suggest to the government that the proposal to review these rates in three years is in error. I appreciate the fact the minister had to leave for a moment so I am directing my remarks to his parliamentary secretary. He comes from British Columbia and is able to appreciate the transportation costs with which we in the prairie provinces are stuck. He must appreciate how strongly we feel about this contract into which our forefathers entered. This contract was the reason people went to western Canada in the first place. They were told by the government of the day that they would be able to settle there. The government gave them the assurance they would be able to get machinery in and their products out to the export market. This was the essence of the Crowsnest pass agreement. We claim that this contract is inviolable. This provision in the bill concerns this contract and we want this provision removed.

If the government feels that this new commission should make studies, that is fine. The commission already has the power under clause 15 to inquire into and report to the minister on the relationship between the various modes of transport within, into and from Canada, and upon the measures that should be adopted in order to achieve coordination in development, regulation and control of the various modes of transport. The commission has the power also to undertake studies and research into the economic aspects of modes of transport within or from Canada. When the government singles out the rates on grain contained in our inviolable contract this means that the government feels it is subsidizing the western grain grower. We immediately and completely reject this idea. We want the government to have a look at this provision. We are not going to accept the government saying to us, we are not really taking away the Crowsnest pass rates; we are going to study them.

As has been pointed out earlier, upon what basis are these rates going to be studied? Are the railways going to present more nonsense about ton-mile costs? Are the railways going to use figures compiled three years ago? What figures are they going to use? We do not want to get involved in this study. The commission has the power to conduct studies in relation to any line or any particular product. Why does the government single out the Crowsnest pass rates? The only provision should be to the effect that these rates will be maintained. We do not want these rates to be studied three years from now, by whom we do not know. We do not want variable costs used about which we know nothing.

There have been innumerable royal commissions on transportation. If you look at the reports of those commissions you will find that all of them suffered from the same problem as that to which Mr. Gobeil referred, namely, the lack of accurate figures. In his report Mr. Gobeil refers to the fact that at the same time witnesses were giving figures on the cost of grain movement the staff of the railway were preparing changes in those cost figures. At the moment we are talking about the C.P.R., a private company. The best estimate this company could make was that it suffered a loss of $2 million on hauling grain under the Crowsnest pass rates.

I suggest to the government and to the parliamentary secretary that this is not too great a cost for the Canadian Pacific to bear considering the real estate it acquired under that agreement. I suggest that the return the company realizes from the real estate alone is far greater than $2 million a year. We feel very strongly that the Canadian Pacific particularly has had the better of the deal. We believe that this provision which enables the entire grain hauling operation to be considered within three years is totally wrong. We will not accept it.

The hon. member for Acadia referred to the problem of modernization and mechanization. We feel that the raliways have lagged behind. They have done so intentionally to put pressure on the government to change these rates. We believe that this section will allow them to continue applying that pressure. Notwithstanding what the minister argued last evening, I do not accept what he said because the railways have been applying pressure all along. They are past masters at applying pressure on the government to get more money. What did they do in their recent labour difficulties? They did nothing until the matter came to parliament. Then parliament had to pay them money in the form of a subsidy.

I suggest that this section asks the railways to continue behaving as they have been, when they ought to be modernizing and mechanizing, particularly in those areas involving the handling of grain. If we are to continue exporting grain on the scale we have been in the last couple of years we must have better railway facilities and the railways must improve their facilities.

I want to refer to what the minister said last night in regard to how the railways will get money for this. The minister suggested or implied—I do not know if he did so on behalf of the government—that the western grain shipper had been subsidized by the other shippers of Canada. I suggest to the minister and his parliamentary secretary that when they look into this matter they will see that westerners have paid a subsidy to the people of central Canada because of the agreed charges which have been in effect for a number of years. The railways had to agree to certain charges because they faced competition from trucks.

I will not argue about geography or discrimination, but the minister suggested that there is discrimination with regard to rates. I say again that this contract is inviolable. I do not believe there will be a review every three years. We have had these reviews before, the Turgeon Commission, the MacPherson Commission and the one before that, all looking into grain hauling. None of them came up with a unanimous answer about grain hauling costs. We want to see the contract maintained. Should the commission want to do its job well, under clause 15 of the bill it can instigate research and studies. It can tell the railways how to haul grain within the ceiling of the Crowsnest pass rates.

The government should provide leadership. It should provide the necessary studies and research so that the railways may know how to accomplish what I have suggested. We feel strongly about the allegations as to costs put forward in all these reports. The costs that the Canadian National put forward in its representations to the standing committee are so clouded and badly based that they are not an accurate yardstick at all.

Two small lines in western Canda, it has been shown, can haul grain at these rates and make compensatory returns. We feel that all railways can do the same. In the last couple of years grain hauling has increased and the income of the railways has been substantial. Their net income has risen because of this increase. We feel that if the railways had procured modern equipment they could have hauled more grain more quickly, we could have sold more grain, and the railways could have increased their own incomes as a result. We do not accept for a moment that the government needs to direct this commission to review these rates every three years.

[Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson).]

There are not enough specifics in the bill to show how the commission shall assess the Crowsnest pass rates. In any event, we do not accept the necessity for this review. If the minister wants to shorten this bill he should take out everything after line 29 of clause 50. As I have said, clause 15 gives the commission power to review costs at any time and to make recommendations to the governor in council with regard to them.

If the minister wants to shorten the debate and the bill he should agree to removing everything after subsection 4 of new section 328 in clause 50. We would be a lot farther ahead and we in western Canada would be a lot happier. I cannot impress to strongly on the minister the grave danger he is in by placing on us the stigma of a subsidy—that was the essence of his remarks last night—and the idea that other shippers of Canada are subsidizing western Canada in the movement of grain. We do not accept that.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think the hon. gentleman wants to be unfair, but I never suggested any such thing. I said that if there was loss I knew of only two ways in which it could be made good. One would be out of the treasury and the other would be out of freight rates paid by other shippers. I said that if there was loss I thought the loss should be made good out of the treasury. At no time did I suggest there was a loss. I refused to put that in the bill this time although I had put it in Bill C-120. I refused to put it in because I thought we ought to find out about it. It is not quite fair to misrepresent me by suggesting that I thought there was a loss just because Mr. MacPherson thought there was. I refuse to accept the view that there is a loss. I also do not regard it as an article of faith that there is no loss. I honestly admit I am ignorant; I do not know. I am entitled to find out what the facts are and the people of Canada, the taxpayers of Canada, are entitled to find out what the facts are. That is all that clause 329 does. It substitutes fact for faith. If the hon. gentleman's faith is justified he ought not to object to the facts.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): This is why I suggested to the minister that we in western Canada object to the stigma of a subsidy. By including this clause the government implies the stigma of a subsidy. Clause 15 gives the commission all the power that is required to study these matters. Let me refer him to paragraph (b) of clause 15 which reads as follows:

—undertake studies and research into the economic aspects of all modes of transport within, into or from Canada;

If that does not cover everything I do not know what it does cover. It covers studies. That part of clause 15 permits the commission to have its economists get their own figures on the cost of moving grain. If the railways can consistently show they are losing on this movement, once they have modernized their equipment and so on, we in western Canada will be willing to accept that. But we are not willing to accept it as things are, and clause 329 suggests by implication that the rest of the Canadian people pay a subsidy to us. We reject that entirely.

I hope the minister will take another look at new section 329 which is redundant because clause 15, paragraphs (b) and (c), provides for certain studies to be undertaken. Why does the minister object? Under clause 15 the commission has authority to make studies. Why does he single out the Crowsnest pass rates? Why does he try to break an inviolable contract.

Last night the hon. member for Mackenzie said that we feel strongly about this contract. The minister knows that. We would move more quickly if the minister would withdraw this part of the bill and go on with the rest of it. Why does he have this provision in the bill? It becomes were verbiage when one considers clause 15. The minister talked of faith. I suggest to the minister that he ought to have faith in his own bill and, if clause 15 means something, he ought to withdraw that part of clause 50 to which I object for the reasons I have outlined.

Before accepting the wording of the MacPherson commission report in its entirety the minister should read the divergent opinion expressed by Mr. Gobeil. This is important to us in western Canada. We are willing that individual studies should be carried out, preferably on the quiet so that the railways do not know about it and throw in a confusion of figures and talk about ton-miles when they do not mean anything. As to an economic study, fine and dandy; we are ready to stand up to that. But a public inquiry is another matter. None of them so far has produced an accurate assessment of the cost of moving grain. The Turgeon Commission did not do so. The MacPherson Commission certainly failed to do so, as the majority report admits. There were four different sets of figures. The minister would shorten this debate if he would remove clause 50 and have faith in clause 15 because clause 15 gives the board power to undertake all that he wants to do.

The Deputy Chairman: Before I hear from the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre may I ask the indulgence of the committee in order that I may make an announcement concerning the adjournment proceedings at ten o'clock tonight?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Chairman: It is my duty, pursuant to standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised on the adjournment motion tonight are as follows: the hon member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), Shipping—Winter navigation on the St. Lawrence; the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), Administration of Justice—Petition of Louis Sicotte for a review of his two trials; the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), Canadian Centennial—Trail, B.C.—Request for stop-over by centennial train.

[English]

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I was waiting to see whether the minister would rise, accept the suggestion made by the last speaker and withdraw this clause, in which case it would have been unnecessary for me to speak again in this debate and emphasize the necessity to preserve the Crowsnest pass rates intact.

I have spoken briefly on this subject on an earlier occasion. Last night I was in agreement with the minister to a certain extent when he indicated that the commission would use its own figures when deciding how much revenue was received from the transportation of grain for export. This evening I feel I am bound to add a few words to what I have said. As a western member I can do no less in defence of the complete maintenance of the statutory provisions governing the Crowsnest pass rates which were established in 1897. The minister must accept some responsibility for my speaking again on this subject because I got the impression from his remarks last night when he addressed the committee that he considered the revenue from hauling grain to be insufficient and that there would be need for a subsidy. We in the west feel that the payment of a subsidy would be the thin edge of the wedge leading to the removal in the end of the statutory grain rate.

Our position is that the revenue derived from hauling grain is compensatory, that it sufficiently repays the railways for hauling this freight. I will try to prove, to my own satisfaction at least, that the revenues in this respect are already sufficient. Indeed, the railways are earning money today by transporting grain at the statutory rate. The Canadian Pacific Railway is certainly being recompensed by returns from grants of land made when the transcontinental line was being completed. What I am trying to say is that the statutory agreement on rates was reached as part of a broader agreement whereby the C.P.R. received lands and money grants for building the line. In addition to the money it is earning by transporting grain the company should take into consideration the return it is getting from the crown lands which were granted and from the money which it received.

The minister has heard many arguments in this connection and I do not intend to repeat them all. What I wish to do is put on record opinions expressed in some of the briefs which support our arguments. As we can see from the maps which the minister was good enough to make available to the committee, the prairie west is the one area which stands to lose most if there are changes in the statutory rate. We have discussed this before in the house. I was very concerned about the proposal to remove the bridge subsidy which pays in part for the long haul around Lake Superior. This argument has no direct connection with the point we are now discussing but it does show the vulnerability of the prairie west unless it is given full protection in the sphere of freight rates.

The following comment is from the Country Guide in which Dr. J. C. Gilson of the University of Manitoba is quoted as saying:

> The railways must be permitted to operate on a sound economic basis. At the same time, however, nothing must be done which will unduly prejudice the competitive position of western Canadian farmers on the international markets of the future.

It is upon these lines that we are arguing today. We are taking account of the future prospects of the prairie west and we are seeking to bring about the best possible arrangements for railway operation. I know the minister is sympathetic to this argument. I give him that credit. However, there are others behind him who expressed opinions in the standing committee which did not appear to be very sympathetic toward maintenance of the Crowsnest pass rates. In this connection I read statements made by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, as recorded at page 2797 of volume No. 39 of the proceedings before the standing committee on transport and communications. The following appears on that page, after presentation of a brief by Mr. Lloyd, leader of the opposition in Saskatchewan:

> Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to refer to some remarks Mr. Lloyd made earlier about the grain movement being captive and the shipping of potash being captive. In the sense that grain moves under a statutory rate, certainly the grain trade is not captive to a rate set by the railway, is it?
>
> Mr. Lloyd: As long as those rates remain.
> Mr. Deachman: Yes. It is a statutory rate and it is an advantageous statutory rate set long ago by the federal government.
> Mr. Lloyd: Whether it is advantageous or not I would say has not really been fully satisfied.
> Mr. Deachman: Well, it is a statutory rate set by the federal government and one which we have not found people advocating the removal of before this committee.

I certainly agree with that.

> One might say that rather than the grain shipper himself being captive, the railway in this instance is the captive, is he not, Mr. Lloyd, because the rate is set for him by the public, or indeed by the very shipper himself?
> Mr. Lloyd: No. As I said earlier when I interrupted you, Mr. Deachman, I am not sure that that case has been proven and, as I say, in the bill I share the sentiments of many people—and we heard something of it from Mr. Frawley this morning—that these rates are not necessarily as disadvantageous to the railways as is frequently presumed.

I have read that part of the record because it is my personal opinion that at committee hearings some hon. members were not very sympathetic toward maintaining the Crowsnest pass rates.

At page 2785 of the same committee proceedings the Minister of Transport is recorded as saying:

> Regarding the Crowsnest votes—

I guess that means rates.

Mr. Pickersgill: I never had time to revise it.

Mr. Pascoe:

> —in such a study—

The reference is to re-examination of the rates within the next three years.

> —there should be the fullest opportunity for interested parties to present their views. And indeed, not merely to present their views, but also to contest the facts submitted in such a review.

I find no fault with that although I am going to argue later that we do not need a review, as has also been argued by the hon. member for Jasper-Edson.

The National Farmers' Union said in its brief:

> We recommend, therefore, that net revenues to the C.P.R. in the movement of export grain under the terms of the Crowsnest pass rates agreement be considered in the light of revenues annually accruing to the C.P.R. from related concessions and land grants and the movement of other commodities.

I believe that last phrase about other commodities was a correction to this brief, and it supports my argument about giving consideration to the very large grants made to the C.P.R.

The Saskatchewan government also presented a brief. It is a Liberal government. I have criticized its brief previously and I voice that criticism again. I believe it said that the federal government should go ahead with this bill and it raised no public objection to it. The Liberal party of Manitoba also submitted a brief, I believe some time in November, in which it said:

> If there were any suggestions that such a study—

Again referring to the study within the three years.

> —could lead to cancellation of Crowsnest rates then the Liberal party of Manitoba would oppose any such move with all the resources at its command.

I remember the discussion on that brief and that the people who presented it were just as concerned as most western members about possible damage to the statutory agreement.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture had this to say:

> First, it is unacceptable that there should be provision for subsidy attributable to the movement of grain under the statutory Crowsnest pass rates. We are convinced by careful study that these rates are compensatory, properly considered. In any case they form a basic plank of national economic policy in this country from which the railways and the country have profited and still profit, as well as the farmers. There is therefore no excuse, in our very strongly held opinion, for legislative provisions which run the risk of attributing an alleged transportation "subsidy" to the western grain grower. Such a procedure attaches a stigma of farm subsidy to the Crowsnest rates which is completely uncalled for.

That strongly backs up what was said a few moments ago by the hon. member for Jasper-Edson in answer to the suggestion that there is a need for a subsidy.

On October 18 last Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers Limited presented a brief to the standing committee in which it said:

> The Question of the Crowsnest Pass Statutory and Related Grain Rates
> The position of the wheat pools on this question is in no doubt among ourselves or among any members of the Canadian parliament. Our position is that we strongly support the principle of maintaining the Crowsnest pass statutory rates as an instrument of national policy under the control of parliament.

That was part of the argument in which we have been engaged regarding the control of parliament over any decision by the new commission with respect to these rates. These views that I have put on record have proved the point I am trying to make.

• (6:30 p.m.)

I referred previously to the proposal for an inquiry to be held within three years into the revenues and expenses connected with the transport of our western grain. I think that any commission which is set up should not be in too great a hurry with regard to making this revenue and expense inquiry because, as others have mentioned, the handling and transportation of grain is something which is changing very rapidly. Within the next few years there will be even greater changes. I certainly think that if this inquiry were postponed for more than three or four years, until the whole transportation system is worked out, there would then be available a better picture of what the operations will be in the years to come.

Supporting the argument concerning changes, I have here a picture from the Western Producer. The picture shows two very large diesel locomotives and the accompanying text states that—> —these two 3,000 horsepower diesel locomotives are among 32 the C.P.R. has ordered for delivery this year.

The reference is to the year 1966.

> In a mountain test, the two units hauled 90,000 bushels of Alberta wheat from Calgary to Revelstoke, showing a 60 per cent greater capacity than locomotives now in use. Previously, they had moved 63 cars from Medicine Hat to Calgary in three hours and 30 minutes, just nine minutes more than the schedule of the C.P.R.'s crack passenger train, The Canadian.

With these very much larger diesel locomotives hauling 90,000 bushels of wheat in one haul, I certainly think the expenses of the railway will be cut down. Another report here states that in 1966 the C.N.R. delivered a total of 138,500 cars carrying some 277 million bushels of grain to Fort William, Port Arthur, Churchill, Vancouver and Prince Rupert. It states further that these figures represent 22,531 cars more than were moved in 1965. It also reports that C.N.R. officials have said they expect that this greatly increased movement of grain will continue all winter. The report in the Western Producer goes on to say that the C.P.R. announced gains in profit. Both the net earnings of the C.P.R. and those of the C.N.R. showed a considerable increase for the 10 months reported in 1966.

I believe this strengthens the view I am attempting to express, that within the next few years the whole transportation system in respect of the movement of our grain will be greatly improved. It would seem under these new arrangements that the railways certainly will earn sufficient revenue from the movement of the grain to more than offset the expenses incurred under the Crowsnest pass rates.

I should like to repeat the plea made by the hon. member for Jasper-Edson, that this matter of an inquiry into the revenue and expenses of the railways under the Crowsnest pass rates be not pressed at this time or if it is pressed that there be a longer period before such an inquiry is held. If this section is not to be deleted, then I would suggest that it include some reference to the possibility of the railways using the same running rights, or something along that line. I think this also is something which should reduce the expenses and help the railways in respect of their costs.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, in listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, I was very interested in the quotations to which he referred from the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee on transport and communictaions, and in particular the quotation of the exchange between myself and Mr. Lloyd, the ex-premier of Saskatchewan, on the subject of the Crowsnest pass rates. It is on this subject that I wish to make a few remarks. I shall do so, not from the viewpoint of the people on the prairies, but rather from the viewpoint of the farmers in the Fraser valley when they look at the Crowsnest pass rates in relation to the matter of domestic grain. The farmers in the Fraser valley have a problem which they brought to Ottawa some time ago, and which still remains unsolved.

[Mr. Pascoe.]

I should like to refer to new section 328 at page 41 of the bill, where under subsection 1 the Crowsnest pass rates are described as—

—rates on grain and flour moving from any point on any line of railway west of Fort William to Fort William or Port Arthur—

Now, if you will turn to subsection 2 you will see that it refers to rates on grain and flour moving from any point on any line of railway west of Fort William to Vancouver or Prince Rupert, for export. The additional words here are "for export". Then it continues with the words "over any line of railway now or hereafter constructed", and so on. Subsection 3 reads as follows:

Rates on grain and flour moving for export—

Again the words "for export" are used here.

—from any point west of Fort William or Armstrong to Churchill over any line of railway—

That simply means that when grain moves from the prairies eastward to the head of the lakes it moves as grain, but when it moves from the prairies to Vancouver or the western seaboard it moves as export grain, or moves as domestic grain and under different rates.

Under the Crowsnest pass agreement there is one rate for shippers shipping grain eastward, whereas there are two rates in respect of grain being shipped westward to the coast or to Vancouver—an export rate and a domestic rate. When the committee on transport and communications held hearings in respect of this bill, Mr. L. A. Currie, chairman of the feed and grain committee of the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture, and Mr. B. H. Creelman, chairman of the British Columbia Feed Manufacturers Association, appeared. Between them, these two gentlemen and their associations represent virtually all the farmers of British Columbia and the feed grain producers of British Columbia. They presented a brief which deals with this problem, and the effect of it upon those who are users of domestic grain particularly for the feeding of livestock, poultry and so on in British Columbia.

They point out that the export rate from Calgary to Vancouver is 20 cents a hundredweight or $4 a ton. The domestic rate from Calgary to Vancouver is 65 cents a hundredweight or $13 a ton. So that if you want grain for domestic use or for feed in the Fraser valley you may get it from an elevator in Vancouver and it is the same grain that is poured into ships and sent overseas, in which case it is grain that is moved at $4 a ton.

However, if you take the grain from that elevator up to the farms in the Fraser valley, the freight rate now becomes $13 a ton. A federal subsidy applies to this, of course, and absorbs most of that charge. The subsidy amounts to $8.60 a ton between Calgary and Vancouver; with a domestic rate of $13 a ton, there is an abatement of freight charges by way of subsidy of $8.60.

Let us now consider the freight charges from Calgary to Fort William, a much longer rail distance. From Calgary to Fort William the rate is 26 cents a hundredweight or $5.20 a ton. That rate is an export rate as well as a domestic rate. Grain moves at exactly the same freight rate eastward from Calgary whether it is for export or for domestic use.

So if you happen to be feeding poultry or livestock in eastern Canada, Mr. Chairman, your feed carries the same freight rate as export grain. On the other hand, if you happen to be feeding poultry or livestock in the Fraser valley you are going to pay something in the neighbourhood of $8.60 to $9 a ton more for the carriage of your grain.

What the farmers and others interested in British Columbia say is this: Let the railways move this grain at the same rate that grain is moved eastward under the Crowsnest rates and give the farmers in British Columbia precisely the same treatment eastern Canada enjoys in the eastward movement of grain. It is not an amount of grain that is very significant. I understand the whole of the subsidy that is paid is in the neighbourhood of $2 million. The farmers of British Columbia ask that the subsidy be removed and that shipment of grain westward stand on its own feet under the Crowsnest rates. The farmers of British Columbia also ask for the same privileges and advantages when it comes to feeding livestock and poultry as are granted to anyone living east of the head of the lakes.

I suggest this is a reasonable appeal, Mr. Chairman. It is not one which would in any way distort the bill. They have made this appeal to this house and to the Canadian government time and again, and I think it is a very valid one. Therefore, I ask whether the minister would consider the matter at this time.

I realize that the appeal was rejected by the minister at the time these gentlemen appeared before the committee, in part, as he pointed out, because the province of British Columbia had made no particular appeal for the removal of this subsidy.

Mr. Pickersgill: The government of British Columbia said they did not want it removed.

Mr. Deachman: That is correct; and it is because the province of British Columbia are the operators of a railway. The operators of railroads are all in favour of keeping the rate up In moving feed grain into the Fraser valley the railway enjoys the umbrella created by the subsidy, and wild horses would not pull Mr. Bennett to Ottawa to ask that his railway forgo the protection the federal government affords it in the form of this subsidy. Mind you, Mr. Chairman, this subsidy goes into the pockets of the treasury of the Pacific Great Eastern, whereas the subsidy provided Canadian railways moving grain into the Fraser valley comes out of the treasury of Canada. So the most I can say is that in its recommendations the province of British Columbia simply reinforced the argument of the farmers for the removal of this subsidy.

There are a couple of ways this can be done, Mr. Chairman. By simply striking out the words "for export" in these proposed sections the government could bring about easy amendment of the bill. The freight rates would then stand on their own feet. Alternatively, if the government wanted to drag its feet on this—and God knows, governments have dragged their feet on this for half a century, in and out of every type of government—it could include in section 329 a provision that this question be examined when the Crowsnest rates come up for review three years from now.

At this time I am sure that an opportunity will present itself to review this question, along with other matters affecting the Crowsnest rates. So I would appeal to the government before the bill passes to reconsider what the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and others have said many times about this question, and to let the people of British Columbia enjoy the same privileges under the Crowsnest rates as the people of Ontario. We would be very happy if this were done, and would fall into the minister's arms in admiration of this bill.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deachman: Yes.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member now display his courage and move the appropriate amendment to enforce his sound argument? He might get quite a bit of support for it.

Mr. Deachman: The bill is in the hands of the government, Mr. Chairman. If the government moves an amendment to strike out the words "for export", which it is within its power to do, then I will support it.

I have had indications from the hon. member's side of the house that he and his colleagues are not too well disposed toward granting the people of British Columbia the same privileges they themselves enjoy on the prairies. I would not want to move an amendment which I know would only embarrass my hon. friends opposite. I just want to assure the people of British Columbia that justice will be done to farmers in the Fraser valley.

Mr. Churchill: No courage.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, I wish to support some of the preceding speakers from this side of the house, notably the hon. member for Acadia, the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre and the hon. member for Jasper-Edson in the position they have taken with respect to new sections 328 and 329 of this legislation, particularly in so far as the proposed review of the Crowsnest pass rates is concerned.

Section 329 contains a good many flaws. I think some of them were expertly outlined in detail by the province of Manitoba in its brief to the standing committee on transportation. For example the Manitoba brief pointed out that section 329 (1) and section 329A (3) lack a certain consistency in that section 329A (3), to which we will shortly be moving, deals with the movement of grain in bulk for export and the movement of flour for export, by railway to an eastern port from an inland point at levels of rates consistent with section 334, and provides that such rates shall be published in the Canada Gazette.

New section 334 states that rates shall be compensatory and defines what should be considered in determining variable costs for the movement of traffic. Sections 329 (1) and 329A (3) should be consistent, as the Manitoba brief points out. The Manitoba submission goes on to recommend that section 329 (1) be amended in order to supply this missing element of consistency. I am not going into that level of the argument at this point, Mr. Chairman, but I make reference to it to buttress my contention that section 329 of this legislation contains a great many flaws. Of all the flaws the greatest is the reference in the section to costs and to the attention that would be paid that subject in any review. As hon. members of the house are now well aware, section 329 (1) provides as follows:

> Not later than three years after the coming into force of this section, the commission shall inquire into the revenues and costs of railway companies subject to the jurisdiction of parliament that are attributable to the carriage of grain and grain products at the level of rates established or maintained pursuant to section 328—

This section further provides that the commission shall report such revenues and costs to the governor in council and the amount of payments necessary, in the opinion of the commission, to assist such railway companies to meet the costs of operations, etc. This reference to costs is a trap into which some members of the standing committee on transportation are not disposed to fall again. We heard a good deal about costs in the standing committee, particularly railway costs, and many of us have come to the conclusion that at this stage of the game a reference such as that made in section 329 (1) is little short of legalistic quicksand for us, because we have fallen again and again into this trap, where costs in the operation of the railway companies of this country are concerned. The warning signals being up, our personal radar is attuned to the danger this time and we are not disposed to fall into that trap again.

The committee heard a great deal about railway costs, how they would be arrived at and to what extent they would be available in our consideration of this legislation. With your indulgence, sir, I would refer to a specific dissertation on this subject by Professor George H. Borts who was one of the witnesses who appeared before the standing committee on behalf of the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and the Maritimes Transportation Commission. At this juncture I should like to quote from the submission of Professor Borts to the standing committee:

> Much has been made in the past of the need to protect the confidential nature of operating cost data of the railways. The railways have argued that public knowledge of such information would place them at a competitive disadvantage with respect to other modes, namely truckers. The competitive, position of the railways vis-à-vis the trucks is supposedly defended by a general ignorance of rail variable costs. The railways feel that if the trucks had such knowledge, they would know which areas of rail traffic are vulnerable to rate competition. Following this argument, the trucks would speedily act to cut rates on such traffic and drive the rail service out.

Professor Borts went on to say:

> I find this to be a ludicrous and coloured picture of competition in the marketplace. The rails over time have lost high-rated traffic to the trucks because of the constant pressure of competition pushing both shippers and truckers to find those commodities and services where truck can displace rail. It has not been necessary for these parties to know rail costs. All that is needed is a truck rate and truck service which is better than the rail rate and rail service. That a more perfect knowledge of rail costs would cause additional loss of traffic to the trucks is a hypothetical statement without empirical foundation.

I should like to continue quoting from this submission, Mr. Chairman, if you will allow me that freedom for one more moment. Professor Borts said:

It will not be possible to carry out the costing activities required in this act if rail costs are to be kept confidential. For the costing activities required in this act will necessitate the determination of system average cost scales for the railways, as well as the determination of long-run variable cost for particular items of traffic and branch lines. How can the commission make such information publicly available without revealing rail cost information? How can it carry out its mandate without making such information publicly available? Is the commission to operate in secret?

On the subject of costs that was the position taken by this witness when he appeared before the standing committee. It was echoed and re-echoed, lined and underlined, intensified and re-intensified a score of times as the standing committee met last autumn to consider this proposed legislation. Everywhere the nub of our questioning was for some information about the precise and actual costs data and costing procedures of the railroads, and at every turn we were frustrated in our search; so we were never able to bring any sort of costing or accounting expertise to our deliberations on this subject.

Therefore I suggest that when we consider section 329(1) and (2) and the fact that the commission in carrying out this suggested review will be dealing with revenues and costs in so far as they are available from the railway companies which are handling export grain, there is indeed a legalistic and semantical patch of quicksand contained in that language into which we do not intend to be led blindfold again.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Sherman: Yes, sir.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman suggesting for one moment that any of the costs of moving grain or any of the revenues which derive from moving grain given in this review would be in any way confidential, because certainly that is not the intent of the bill, nor will it be possible. This bill provides, not merely in this clause but in every other case where there is any possibility envisaged of any payment out of the treasury, that all the figures must be public and subject to examination by any person interested.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Sherman: I am grateful for that assurance and I am sure the minister speaks with all conscience and all responsibility when he makes that statement but the fact remains that time and time again we in the standing committee on transportation have run up against this problem of the lack of costing information. Frankly I would have to say that it will have to be demonstrated to us that precise and specific costing information will be available to the commission. If it is available to the commission I would ask why it cannot be made available to the standing committee on transportation?

Mr. Pickersgill: There would have been no difficulty in securing costing figures in the standing committee on the movement of grain by the railways. The cost figures that were in question in the standing committee regarded specific types of traffic on which no subsidy of any kind was proposed to be paid. But the moment the treasury comes into the picture it would be preposterous to suggest that the figures could be kept secret.

Mr. Sherman: I appreciate that, but there is considerable anxiety and mistrust in certain parts of the country, notably in western Canada, and in certain corners of this house, notably among some members of the standing committee on transportation, as far as the cost figures are concerned. It arises from the difficulty the committee has in that area of investigation.

There are some further remarks I should like to make on this clause, and I should like to continue my speech after the adjournment period. May I call it seven o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that there was an express understanding about an adjournment but perhaps there was an implied one. I am perfectly agreeable to having the sitting suspended until eight o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I understand there has been an agreement that the house will suspend the sitting between seven and eight o'clock. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is there agreement to resumption of the business interrupted a few moments ago?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-231 to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

On clause 50—Crowsnest pass rates.

The Chairman: Pursuant to an order just passed, I do now leave the chair.

SITTING SUSPENDED

SITTING RESUMED

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, when the committee recessed an hour ago I was in the process of outlining the anxieties of western Canada, and certain members of this committee as well as the standing committee on transportation, relating to the subject of railway costs. I was referring to proposed section 329(1) which contains provisions relating to the revenues and costs with respect to the railways' grain carrying operations, and the information that would be studied by the commission during the review proposed in this legislation. The minister made the point that there should be no cause for concern about the question of costs in this context because the information would be requested by the treasury, and certainly there would be no opportunity for any pertinent data to be withheld. This is encouraging assurance from the minister, and I accept it in good grace.

However, I emphasize what I said before the dinner recess, that a good many of us will have to be shown that this precise costing information that we feel is absolutely essential to the work of the commission will, in fact, be available. As I suggested, sir, we have experienced considerable frustration going down that path. The hon. member for Rosthern, in an eloquent dissertation in this house yesterday on this subject made this point, and I quote from his remarks as recorded on page 11866 of Hansard:

> When we take a look at the cost accounting which was part of the various submissions from the railways in the years gone by, the failure on their part to substantiate their claims that they have incurred losses in the movement of grain under the Crowsnest pass rates, and the failure of this bill to provide what I believe to be the necessary machinery for parliament to study this matter effectively, we must come to the conclusion once again that this is an open door for the railways to make profits which will affect the welfare of western Canada.

I believe the remarks of the hon. member for Rosthern, which I have just quoted, effectively and eloquently crystallize one of the concerns of a great segment of the population of this country, and particularly that concern relating to proposed sections 328 and 329 and their effect on the Crowsnest pass agreement. I have said that this proposed section 329, in my opinion, contains many serious flaws. I said the first and most obvious flaw was inconsistency. In my view a greater flaw is this rather unsubstantiated and unsupportable faith in the revenue and cost figures that are purportedly going to be made available to the commission for this proposed Crowsnest rates.

However, the greatest flaw in the proposed section 329 is the provision for a review within three years after the coming into force of this particular section. I submit, sir, that any attempt to carry out such a review no later than three years after the coming into force of this section will militate against the welfare of the agricultural industry and, in fact, the entire fabric of the economy of western Canada. There may be some sympathy on this side of the house for a suggestion that such a review be held, but it should not be held less than ten years after this legislation comes into force.

This provision would give the country, the railroads and the commission time to adjust to the sweeping and revolutionary changes that are proposed in this legislation, to adjust to the changes in technology that are required and that are imminent in our transportation milieu in this country. It would be a far more realistic bracket in which to operate than would the period of three years or less. The way this proposed section is worded, the period of time could be substantially less than three years. The suggestion is that this review be held not later than three years after the coming into force of this section. Under such a provision it is conceivable the review could be held within a very short period of time. With all the changes that are predicted and predictable under this revolutionary legislation, I submit this is an impractical framework of time within which the commission is to operate. As I say, there may possibly be some sympathy for a review within ten years, but certainly there is little sympathy in this party or amongst the members of the standing committee on transportation for a review to be undertaken within the period of time specified in the proposed section 329.

We, in the west, do not want the Crowsnest rates tampered with at all. This point has been made eloquently by other members of this assembly, but I emphasize and underline the position they took. I feel this is no waste of time for this committee or for the country at large because it is a position that cannot be stressed too strongly. The Crowsnest pass rates, Mr. Chairman, are pillars of industry and enterprise in western Canada and are as important to western Canada as is the question of port parity, for example, to the maritimes. The Crowsnest pass rates, and the whole arrangement surrounding them, were won by dint of great effort, not only spiritually but mentally, by the people of western Canada.

We do not want them tampered with. It is our concern for this pillar of our economy, in a mysterious type of future only half-revealed by this proposed legislation, which leads many of us, and leads me, to fight this defensive battle with respect to these rates. We do not want to buy a pig in a poke, Mr. Chairman. We know what we have with the Crowsnest agreement. It is a statutory matter. It is set down in perpetuity, or as far as the foreseeable future may be envisioned. We do not want to risk the stability and security of that institution, so vital to the welfare of the basic industry in western Canada; the industry that is in fact vital to the economy and welfare of this nation as a whole.

At some time we may favour a review, but we do not want that written into the legislation. We do not want to commit ourselves in black and white, in the printed word, to a review to be held within three years, as the legislation proposes. We do not want to say, either, in black and white, that we should never be interested in having such a review, or that we could never be persuaded that a review might be practical and necessary. A review of the agreement might well be necessary in short order. But we should prefer to have such an undertaking available to us in an informal way. We should prefer the legislation to be drafted in such a way that no specific reference, for or against the proposed review, is incorporated in it.

Subsections 1 and 2 of section 329 in my opinion threaten the security of the western agricultural industry. They do that, whether the minister admits it or not. Those subclauses threaten the security and the status of our western farm industry, because they provide for a review that in the final analysis will serve only to encourage and incite public opinion against the western farmer.

The freight rate battle has been fought and won, and is incorporated in a statutory way as a policy affecting our national industry and political life. To reopen the issue, to fight it again, to present an opportunity for all the conflicting arguments, vested interests, power groups and all attendant parties to argue their cases again, to introduce again their prejudices and particular attitudes, is, in my estimation an invitation to virtual destruction. At the least, it is an invitation to embarrass the western farmer and the western agricultural industry.

I appeal to the minister to consider complete elimination of section 329 from the proposed legislation. He has listened patiently and responsibly to many representations on this subject during the past few days. Counting his time with the standing committee, he has listened to representations with patience, interest and scholarly mien for four or five months. He has accepted recommendations and amendments in substantial numbers. He has accepted improvements to his legislation. I appeal to him not to spoil his record. I suggest that the ultimate outcome, the ultimate result of the section as it is incorporated in the proposed legislation—the ultimate resolution of the problem, if you like—would be the creation of a situation where the stigma of subsidy would again be imposed on the western farmer. This would do a great disservice to the farmer and to the west in general.

I appeal to the minister who, with admirable and exemplary attention to detail and the feelings of all hon. members of the house, has devoted himself to piloting this bill this far, to let this legislation be his monument, and to consider the request from this side of the house that section 329 be removed. By so doing he would incorporate into the bill a respect for the west and its agricultural industry that at present is missing as a result of the wording of the section in question.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): This is again one of the most important clauses of Bill No. C-231, as it pertains to agriculture and western Canada in general. I cannot help thinking of the time when Saskatchewan and Alberta became provinces, and of the fights that the farmers had prior to this time with the railway and grain companies, when they wanted to build a method of transporting and handling their grain.

The Crowsnest rate, set up in 1897 as a statute of Canada, protected the railway companies as well as the farmers who were to use the rails at that time. Over the past 60 years it has been instrumental building up the west, through the railways. We have now come to the point in our history where, through legislation, changes may affect the economy of Canada.

We do not say things should not be reviewed. It in only fair to review some things when we talk about railway abandonment. Some portions of line may be uneconomical to run, and they should be done away with.

Section 329 (1) says:

> Not later than three years after the coming into force of this section, the commission shall inquire into the revenues and costs of railway companies subject to the jurisdiction of parliament that are attributable to the carriage of grain and grain products at the level of rates established or maintained pursuant to section 328—

• (8:20 p.m.)

I said that the agreement was set up for the protection of the railways. It guaranteed them a steady flow of business at certain prices. The agreement gave the farmers of western Canada the only protection they had. When I look at this map of the railways in the prairie provinces it becomes apparent that this vast network is maintained today mainly out of the revenue derived from the haulage of grain. Basically there is nothing else. There is an odd line such as the Pine Point Railway to service mineral developments in the north; there is the occasional branch line to service potash developments. But these are isolated cases. The Crowsnest rates are the only means we have of guaranteeing protection to the farmers and producers who use these railways. When we begin to make provision for a review of revenue not later than three years from now, it is the thin end of the wedge—

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is repeating a phrase which two or three of his hon. friends have used. I have the impression that notwithstanding the fact that I have tried several times to correct it, my efforts have been completely without success. Let me repeat: There is no intention whatever, indeed it is forbidden in this bill, to review the Crowsnest rates. They are frozen as hard as any legislation could possibly freeze them, for all time to come. We have even improved the situation by freezing them specifically for Churchill.

The review has to do with the cost of moving this grain, and nothing else. The review will not endanger the Crowsnest rates in any way whatsoever; in fact, it will safeguard them, and if hon. gentlemen opposite are right in believing that the rates are compensatory, the sooner someone can establish that contention objectively, the better, because then nobody could attack the rates. This is what we are seeking to accomplish.

I am just a little resentful of the implication in the speeches from members opposite that I—and all I have ever done in this house has been to strengthen the Crowsnest rates—am trying in some insidious way to get rid of them. I am doing the exact opposite. But I think the Canadian people are entitled to know what the position really is, since a royal commission appointed by the Leader of the Opposition said that these rates are not compensatory. We do not accept that view, but we do not say the reverse. All we say is that within three years an objective commission must find out what the facts are. If they reach a certain conclusion, they can recommend that a certain payment be made to the railways so that we can safeguard the Crowsnest rates. That is what we are trying to do. When the Meighen government destroyed them after the first world war, the Liberal government brought them back.

I am getting tired of this situation which is developing in the committee. The only time in the history of this country when there was any attack on the Crowsnest rates was after the first world war, and the attack was made by a Conservative government. I think they learned their lesson. We are trying to embed these rates as firmly as we can in the constitution. But hon. members should bear in mind that these rates are the only rates which have guaranteed almost in perpetuity in the whole freight structure in this country in favour of western farmers. All we are saying is that if these rates are not compensatory the treasury should pay for the difference, and not the other freight shippers in the rest of Canada. Surely, this is a reasonable position to take. It is surely not fair for the eastern farmers or for the fishermen of the Atlantic provinces, or for the people of British Columbia to be expected to pay higher freight rates in order to maintain the Crowsnest rates for the benefit of western farmers. If the Crowsnest rates do not themselves pay the costs, then the treasury should make up the difference. That is all this bill says—absolutely all it says. It does not say they are not compensatory.

I think that if hon. gentlemen opposite had the faith they pretend to have, they would not be a bit afraid of this review. The only thing one can conclude from their desperate fear of this review is that they do not really believe what they themselves are saying. If they really believed that the railways are now making money moving grain, why are they worried about having the facts made known to the public? There should not be any concern on their part if the rates are compensatory. The only reason for them to be worried would be if they were not—and I do not understand what worry there would be, then, because the legislation practically says that if the rates are not compensatory the treasury should make up the difference. That is all there is to it, and I think it is about time we faced the facts as they are in the legislation. I have tried to be patient about this and I intend to continue being very patient, but it is hard to go on and on hearing members opposite say the direct opposite of what the plain English in this bill is saying.

That is my only reason for interrupting the hon. gentlemen who, I may say, is one of the least offensive members in the whole house, an hon. member for whom I have the greatest esteem; I only wish that in the kind of occupation in which I engage I could do as well as he has done for himself by raising wheat.

Mr. Sherman: The minister spoke of the faith which we on this side of the house may, or may not, have. Would the minister not agree that the frustration we have encountered with respect to some of our investigations in the standing committee would not be calculated to enhance our faith in the legislation?

Mr. Pickersgill: I certainly would not agree with that at all. I think it was the hon. member for Winnipeg South, when he was talking about an effort being made to find out certain information about the rates for the movement of commodities other than grain, and the cost with respect to other commodities, who lit the fuse, which blew about two hours later. I make no complaint about the inquiry in the committee; I think the hon. members concerned were entirely within their rights. But as to those other rates, there was no suggestion at all that there was to be any payment out of the treasury.

Before the evening is over I will go through the bill and draw attention to every case where costs have to be made public, so the hon. gentlemen will not have to take my word for it; it is right here in the bill. When it is a question of money going out of the public treasury I do not think hon. members should insinuate that we will not have the most thorough scrutiny of the figures. I think I am properly reluctant when I say I do not wish to force the railways to provide us with confidential information, since we are not going to force shipping companies and air lines that may be competing with them to provide the same information. I think it is the desire of hon. members to treat the railways fairly, but I can say that whoever will be sitting on these treasury benches three years hence, if the review should show that the rates are not compensatory, will have to ask parliament to vote money for the railways and ask the taxpayers of Canada to pay that money. Nobody is going to be as anxious as the government to prove that these rates are compensatory.

Surely it must be apparent to all hon. members that we do not want to have to pay anything to the railways, and that we want them to be in a position to earn their own money so that they do not have to come here asking for handouts. I fervently hope that these Crowsnest pass rates are proven to be compensatory. I fervently hope Mr. MacPherson was wrong and Mr. Gobeil was right. But after all, we paid a lot of the taxpayers' money to get this royal commission report and we cannot lightly disregard it. All we are saying is that we are not going to accept the word of the MacPherson commission, and since a doubt has been raised then over a three-year period we will resolve that doubt. If, as the result of a three-year review, it is shown that the rates are compensatory, then no government is going to pay on that basis for another year. The rates are going to be under constant scrutiny. The treasury will be constantly anxious to make the railways more efficient and to make then adopt modern methods of carrying grain so that nothing will have to be paid out of the treasury for the carriage of grain. This will be the real objective.

Hon. members will have to excuse me for speaking a little warmly about this but I think we ought to face the facts in this matter and not be afraid of them. You know, Mr. Chairman, this great wheat economy in western Canada is responsible for the fact that we have a country. If the Fathers of Confederation had been wrong, if this great area that a lot of people did not believe was worth anything had proven not to be worth anything, do you think British Columbia would have remained in confederation very long, with all that distance in between?

We had a poor period in the 1930's, and perhaps we had some doubts in the late 1950's and early 1960's. But let nobody make any mistake about it: With the way the population of the west is growing at the present time, and with the tremendous technological advances there have been in agriculture and in transport, the west will continue to progress.

I do not say that all years will be equally good. The hon. member for Assiniboia would tell me I was an utter fool if I said that. I too was brought up on a farm and I know you cannot get good crops every year. But we all know that wheat is going to continue to be grown in western Canada and that we are skilled enough to get it to the markets without it being a drag on the taxpayers. The world is going to need that wheat so much that, so far ahead as I can see, western Canada is going to be a pillar of this country.

Mr. Fane: "Going to be"? We are.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the minister for his comments. During the first minute or two that he was speaking I thought his speech was starting to make a little sense, but after listening to him for ten minutes I came to the conclusion that the same thing is wrong with the bill as was wrong with what we have just heard: There is so much in it that we really do not know what is in it.

This new section says that not later than three years after it comes into force the commission shall inquire into the revenues and costs of railway companies. That is just opening up another keg of worms.

Not only the farmers of Saskatchewan but the people of western Canada decided eight or ten years ago that they had no faith in the party forming this government, and this is just another item of business in which we have no faith. Just today I received three letters, not pertaining entirely to railway legislation, but all saying, "I am a Liberal," or this that and the other thing, "but I have lost faith in what the government has done within the last little while."

What the farmers and many other people want is good, plain, simple legislation that they can understand. If we agree that the Crowsnest pass rates are right, then there is no necessity for this new section. We do not need to examine them in three years, five years or ten years time. I only wish that the railways would produce sets of figures that an ordinary man, or a lawyer or accountant could understand. The railways have nothing to hide, but their figures should be put in terms that we can understand.

A day or two ago when I was speaking about rail line abandonment I gave figures with respect to a 26 mile stretch of railway. The actual cost for transporting grain in 25 trips on that stretch of line was $5,800. The revenues were $110,000. But after the railway got through with its figures, both off line and on line, they came up with a cost of $177,000. It is absolutely ridiculous to start talking in those terms. We need a formula that we can understand. Until we have a formula which says A plus B equals C we are not going to be able to trust any figures pertaining to rail line abandonment or to the Crowsnest pass rates.

I give the example of a regular way-freight operation running into my home town and down into the southern part of Saskatchewan. There are two trains a week, but last year the amount of grain shipped out averaged just a little better than 6 cars per train. A thing like that is the reason why it is costing the railways so much money. The whole method of operating is wrong. We need an efficient manner of operating. No farmer today could operate under the system we are maintaining for our railways and make a decent living. Automation and modern facilities are required.

We have our large modern diesel engines. Let us modernize the other grain handling facilities so that we can get down to a point where the grain is handled efficiently. Then there never should be any question about the Crowsnest pass rates. When we look at the farming situation in the west today we can see that the small farmers are having difficulties. The way to carry out this operation is on a bigger scale so that there is greater efficiency. The railways are big. They have no competition. There are only the two railways in Canada and they have the grain business entirely sewn up. There is no reason why they cannot carry on this business of moving grain efficiently.

I should like to suggest to the minister that if he wishes to clear up the doubt which exists in the minds of the railway users, he should remove this section from the bill. I can see no reason for it. He said that the purpose is to protect the Churchill rates. If this is so, then I would suggest that it should be stated in simple English that the intent is to protect the rates at Churchill, and that is it. Then everyone would be able to understand it.

Earlier I used a phrase which apparently irritated the minister a little. I am going to repeat myself and say again that I think it is the thin edge of the wedge to open the door so that this can be reviewed. It could go on for 10 or 20 years, but eventually this is the one part of the legislation which could open the door so that some time in the years ahead some railway will come along and say this is the loophole they are looking for.

I say that we should abolish this section. I know the minister is anxious to co-operate so that we can get along with this legislation, and we certainly wish to co-operate with him. I believe this is one instance in which there could be a little co-operation. I am a farmer and I believe I speak for the farmers when I say that there are two clauses in this bill which the farmers do understand and those are the clauses which pertain to rail line abandonments and the Crowsnest pass rates. These two clauses are vitally important to every farmer, producer and businessman in western Canada who has anything whatsoever to with the farm economy.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to conclude my remarks by repeating that I believe the minister, who apparently has a good deal of faith in this section, should cut this down and say "This is it", in plain and simple language, so that there can be no doubt between black and white. When one mixes up all the colours it becomes difficult to distinguish any colour. This is the reason I say there is something wrong with this section and this is why I say it should be completely deleted.

Mr. Fane: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that it would not be necessary for me to speak on the subject of the Crowsnest pass agreement. The minister, however, has not seen fit to withdraw new section 329 subsection 1 of clause 50, and, therefore I find it necessary for me to say a few words. I speak as a prairie farmer from the province of Alberta. It is amazing to me that the minister has not seen fit to withdraw this section. He holds the distinction of somehow being a quasi-westerner. He lived there for a little while and said that he was raised on a farm. One might wonder, however, what has happened to his perspective.

There are things involved in the Crowsnest pass agreement which I have not heard mentioned by any of the eloquent speakers who have preceded me. I thought the minister would have paid attention to such eloquent addresses as those delivered by the hon. members for Rosthern, Mackenzie, Acadia, Jasper-Edson, Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, Winnipeg South Assiniboia and other hon. members who have spoken but whose addresses my other duties did not permit me to hear. However, the minister is sticking to this new section which appears in this bill. Western farmers believe that the Crowsnest pass agreement was bought and paid for and was supposed to last forever. There was an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway which was supposed to continue in perpetuity. This agreement was bought and paid for when a large section of land in the three prairie provinces was turned over to the Canadian Pacific Railway, along with the mineral and petroleum rights in respect of it. That was supposed to be the payment for this concession to the farmers of western Canada. The Canadian Pacific Railway has made millions, millions and millions of dollars as a result of that payment. No one can tell me that they have not received adequate payment. I say they have received sufficient payment to have the Crowsnest pass agreement remain in effect in perpetuity.

There is one thing which seems to have been overlooked. I should like to quote from the statement the minister made last night. This statement appears at the bottom of the first column on page 11,868 of Hansard for January 16. He said:

> The plain fact is that I do not think any member of this house, if he were to stop to reflect, would be doing the cause of the western farmer any good by suggesting that other freight shippers should have to pay higher freight in order to lower the rates on wheat.

What in the name of heaven is the minister talking about? Has no one told him that the farmer, when he delivers the grain which he has grown, whether wheat, oats, barley, flax, rye, or what have you, pays—in the area where I live—a freight rate of 26 cents per 100 pounds in advance for this grain to be hauled either to Vancouver or Fort William? This is the rate he has to pay, regardless of whether it is being moved by the C.N.R. or the C.P.R. Both railways go through the town in which I live and the district I represent. That is the situation which exists there.

When it is suggested that the farmer in western Canada is being subsidized or wishes somebody else to pay the freight rates, I should like to ask what other industry in this country or in any country must pay the freight in order to have its products hauled away. I should like the minister to tell me what fairness he sees in this situation. When he speaks of other people paying the freight for the western farmer, he certainly is talking through his hat.

In my area trains consist of 100 to 135 loaded cars, and no one can tell me that the cost to the railway of hauling 100 loaded cars to Fort William or to Vancouver runs to more than 26 cents a hundred pounds. In my book 100 cars loaded with wheat and hauled to Vancouver or Fort William at 26 cents a hundred pounds brings in to the railway revenue in the vicinity of $35,000 to $40,000, and I am sure this service does not cost more than that to provide.

Anyone who tries to infer that the western farmer is being subsidized and that the railways are not making adequate revenues to pay for their services will certainly have to show me some evidence of this. The situation of the Canadian National Railways is exactly the same as the Canadian Pacific Railway, except that the C.N.R., being a child of the government, may not be run quite so efficiently as the C.P.R. and may be a little more expensive to operate.

Let us suppose, Mr. Chairman, that the government did have to subsidize that railway a little. We are familiar with subsidization by the various governments. I could cite the example of the subsidization of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to the extent of $105 million or more a year. And what do we get for this, Mr. Chairman? If the western farmers were given what they should be given, there would be no freight charges collected from them. The western farmers would not have to pay 26 cents a hundred pounds.

Let me tell you why. The price of wheat or grain is not as high as it was 25 years ago; that is a fact. Therefore anyone who talks of increasing the price of freight by having the rates investigated by a commission, and at the same time argues we should give the railways any money they feel they require from the public treasury, is not being realistic.

[Mr. Fane.]

As I have said, Mr. Chairman, where would industry be if it had to pay freight rates to transport its products? In that case industry would add the cost of the freight to the price the consumer or user of its goods would pay. This would not be just a charge on the producer any more than any other tax is a charge on the producer.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the minister consider very strongly taking the proposed section 329(1) of clause 50 out of the bill. It should certainly not be in the bill and the people in western Canada will look at it from a very jaundiced point of view. I may have more to say about this a little later. I am happy that the minister decided to lock horns with the member who preceded me and give him a lecture; but I am sure it would have done me as much good as it did him, had the minister been telling me what he thinks are the facts of life. We will have to take the minister back to the west again and show him what these facts are. Then will be the proper time for him to bring this bill forward in the house and expect to have it passed. He will know more about what he is trying to do and will be better acquainted with the views held in the area of the country that is the granary of Canada.

Mr. Deachman: Would the hon. member permit a question? He quoted a rate from his area in Alberta to Vancouver of 26 cents a hundred. Is he not speaking only of the export rate, and is the domestic rate to Vancouver not 72 cents a hundred or thereabouts?

Mr. Fane: As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, all of the grain I have shipped has been at 26 cents per hundredweight, whether shipped westward or eastward. I do not know this 72-cent rate at all. Anyway, if this 72-cent rate is for feed grain used in Canada, I am sure it should not be in existence.

Mr. Deachman: I appreciate that very much.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have not participated in this debate before but I do want briefly to support the proposal made by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra. He referred to paragraph (d) of the proposed section 329(2) which reads as follows:

> —on grain products other than flour moving for export from any point west of Fort William to Vancouver or Prince Rupert, over any line of railway of the company;

The hon. member proposed the deletion of the words "for export" in that paragraph, and as a city member I want to compliment him on being so considerate of the urgent need of the farmers and those in the interior of British Columbia particularly.

Before proceeding further, Mr. Chairman, I must say that it did my heart good to listen to that beloved old Tory member for Vegreville using the socialist argument in support of the Crowsnest pass rates, and condemning the philosophy of the C.P.R. in refusing to recognize the great privileges they received from the Dominion of Canada with respect to abandonment of lines, reduction of passenger services, and so on. I am sure that this is the result of his close association over a number of months with the group to his left.

I am very interested in this matter from personal experience. Some years ago we were quite interested in the poultry business, which is dependent upon cheap grain. As a matter of fact, as far as I have been able to discover we were the only people who ever had a travelling rooster in Canada, and it was very successful; but I will not go into that story now.

On Monday, October 17 last, the delegates of the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture and the B.C. Feed Manufacturers Association made representations before the standing committee on transport and communications which would give effect to the very proposal made by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra. They dealt at length with various sections of the orders under various dates of the Board of Transport Commissioners, and then went on to say, dealing with an order passed on August 25, 1927, —which based on the "unjust discrimination" clauses in the Railway Act found that such unjust discrimination had been created against Pacific ports when compared with freight rates on all grain moving east by the Crowsnest agreement.

They then righted this in part, but only in so far as grain for export was concerned. General Order 448, section 2 read as follows:

"That the rates on grain and flour from prairie points to Vancouver and Prince Rupert for export shall be on the same basis as the rates to Fort William, but in computing such rates, the distance from Calgary to Vancouver via the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be assumed to be the same as from Edmonton to Vancouver via the Canadian National Railway, namely 766 miles."

They went on to urge the same rates for grain going from the prairies into British Columbia as those on grain that is exported. Mr. Currie on page 1849 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the standing committee on transport and communications had this to say—and I am summarizing as much as possible so as not to take too long in presenting this argument:

The changes requested would remove from the government of Canada both the actual cost of the subsidy—

That is freight rate assistance.

—as well as the administrative expense caused by the application of a feed grain assistance policy to B.C. It would also eliminate the problem we have had in the past in operating under a system primarily geared to eastern Canada where alternative water and truck competition kept rate increases on a more realistic basis.

Two final points that must be emphasized are: First, that much of the grain that is fed in British Columbia is initially accepted by the railways at point of shipment as export grain at export rates. It is then drawn from Pacific coast terminal elevators to fill orders for domestic consumption—

That means for British Columbia consumption.

—and then an adjustment is made to the railways allowing them the increase between export and domestic rates.

The second point is that even the total of all domestic feed grain shipped into and within the province is such a minute percentage of the total grain shipped for export through B.C. that to follow our recommendation and now ship all grain at the export rate should have only a very minor effect on the revenue of the three railroads concerned.

In closing this presentation, we reiterate that section 50 of Bill C-231 should be amended so that the rates on the shipment of all grain, including millfeeds, going east to "Head of the Lakes" terminals shall be applied to all grains including millfeeds, moving west to Pacific terminals.

Later a letter written by Mr. Cunningham, secretary of the B.C. Feed Manufacturers Association, was read to the committee:

Mr. Creelman: I would like to read this letter from the B.C. Feed Manufacturers Association, which I am chairman of this year. The letter is from the secretary and it endorses the brief which we presented.

That is the brief of the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture. Mr. Creelman continued:

It reads:

"Dear Sir:

This association has directed me to advise you that we endorse the brief submitted by the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture. Our members supply almost all of the feed requirements of the livestock and poultry feeders of British Columbia. We are, therefore, responsible to the feeders in the province to exert all possible effort to equalize and stabilize the cost of grain and grain products in British Columbia. We therefore support this brief of the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture and any other submission directed towards this end.

Sincerely yours,
B.C. Feed Manufacturers Association
K. H. Cunningham,
Secretary."

As far as the interior of British Columbia is concerned, and I am speaking particularly from my personal experience in farming of various types in the southern interior of British Columbia, particularly in the Kootenays, the success of our dairymen, beef feeders and poultrymen depends almost entirely on the price they have to pay for grain. I can speak on this subject from personal experience. We have excellent land and an excellent climate, but all these producers require large volumes of feed grain for their livestock. Ours is high cost land; it is not the type of land that in most cases can be used economically for the growing of large quantities of grain. Therefore in the southeastern portion of British Columbia we have to import the greater part of our grain from the prairie provinces.

For this reason, Mr. Chairman, I was very pleased to hear the approach of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, because sometimes members from the urban centres are inclined to forget us poor old peasant farmers in the country. In this case, however, I thought the hon. member did a good job. There is a great opportunity for the expansion of production in the dairy industry and beef feeding industry in our part of the country. There are increasing opportunities for cattle to be raised there and for an increase in the poultry industry. As a matter of fact, in the southeastern interior of British Columbia we produce at the present time only about 10 per cent of the agricultural products that we consume. We have thousands of acres of excellent land and an excellent climate. All that is required to bring success to the producers engaged in agriculture is satisfactory legislation. In this respect the most satisfactory legislation would be obtained by the deletion of the word "export" as was urged by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture and supported by the B.C. Feed Manufacturers Association.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? In view of his support of the idea proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, would the hon. member for Kootenay West urge the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra to move an amendment in those terms, as I suggested to him before the supper adjournment? Then we could have a vote on it, and instead of just speaking about the matter the hon. member for Kootenay West could express his opinion by vote.

Mr. Herridge: I would be quite willing to do that, Mr. Chairman. In fact I can see the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra is almost rising to do so. I would suggest that he, being the first hon. member to mention this matter, and I give him full credit for it, should accept the honour of moving an amendment to that end.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, I have already urged upon the government that they do this. If the government would merely eliminate the words "for export" we would have in British Columbia a rate for domestic grain that is the same as that which exists for eastern Canada. That is all the people of British Columbia ask for, namely equality with the people of eastern Canada. We, like the province of Quebec, beg you here in Ottawa to give us equality.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I had not expected to intervene in the debate again, but tonight in debate on this bill we had a lecture from the Minister of Transport on transportation matters, and on how the members from western Canada should conduct themselves in the House of Commons. As I listened to that lecture I could not help but become convinced more than ever that the minister has forgotten a great deal of the history of this country much of which depicts the development of western Canada, which became the grain bin of the empire and gave this nation favourable trade levels. I say to the minister that he has disregarded the history of railroad building in this country and the effect that it has had on the different parts of this nation. When I say this I am thinking of the maritimes and of nothern Canada as well.

The minister has forgotten also that the railways of this country have practically monopolized rail transportation in so far as bulk shipments are concerned. Under this clause there is a requirement that figures be given with regard to the handling of a certain segment of the operations of the railways. If that is so, then I ask the minister, the government opposite and the country why the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. should not be required to publish figures, not only with regard to the Crowsnest pass rates but also with regard to agreed charges which have been put into effect? Why should we not ask the C.P.R.

what their charges are on commodities from Consolidated Mining and from other industries?

If such information were made available to us we in the opposition would then be satisfied that the information that will be placed before the commission will have some regard for the equity which should prevail in the setting of freight rates and the granting of subsidies required for maintenance of transportation in this country. Why should a concern which is a virtual monopoly always hide behind the veil of secrecy, and then come hat in hand to the government of Canada and to the people of this country asking for another subsidy, pleading that it does not have sufficient revenues to meet its expenses? And yet in the brochures that the railway company sends to its shareholders it paints a far different picture with regard to the progress that is being made by its organization.

I say to the minister that the public in this country do not know whether or not agreed charges are fair. In speaking about the Crowsnest pass rates the minister said that they are almost embedded in perpetuity in the constitution of this country. We in western Canada will never accept the word "almost". We believe that they form and integral part of our constitution. We must not forget the price that was paid by Canada to enable the C.P.R. to string a railway across western Canada. At that time there were members in the party opposite, which was then in the opposition in the parliament of this nation, who said that the price paid to link the west and east of Canada was far too great. Now the minister who represents the government once again takes up the cry of the railways who wish to hide behind the veil of secrecy. It is the government of Canada which created the railways which now seek assistance from the government. Why should not the affairs of the railways be made public? There can only be one interpretation of this clause, namely that the minister, regardless of what he said in this debate, has made a commitment to the railways that in three years' time there will be a reappraisal of the whole situation before the benefits accruing from the other sections of this act will be put into effect. Another straitjacket will be put on the people of this nation with regard to this public utility.

Although tonight I have not been able to search out the facts and figures with regard to the railways, I would suggest to the minister that within the period of next week I could trace the picture very easily and show that there is more to be taken under consideration than the cost and revenues of the railways in handling grain under the Crowsnest pass rates. We have to consider also what went into the forging of this nation when the railway was given its original charter, and what was given to it by the parliament of Canada as an incentive to link the various parts of this nation.

Last night I sketched the picture of the development which has taken place, the increase in the handling of grain in this country since the days when the Crowsnest pass rates first became effective. I mentioned, as did many other members of this house, some of the effects of automation and the improvements which have taken place in the handling of grain. Anyone in western Canada or in any other part of Canada looking at a box car today would realize that there has been no improvement of these facilities made by the railways over a long period of years.

I do not wish to delay the committee but I wish to refer to what has been said by the hon. member for Vegreville, namely that payments on grain are made in advance. There are few commodities in this country of which that can be said. I wish also to refer to something that was said by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra concerning the rates on grain used for domestic consumption. A year ago I purchased 800 pounds of seed grain from Lethbridge, Alberta at a cost of about $30 and shipped it to a place just north of Saskatoon at a cost of $39. I do not need to tell the minister that I could have got into my little truck, driven to Lethbridge, stayed over night in a hotel, had a steak dinner and driven back the next day to Saskatoon, all of it for less than $39.

The minister is trying to tell us that the railways are not making money on the rates they are charging on grain moved in western Canada. This is very difficult to understand for people who have had my experience. I can tell the minister that I was very reluctant to pay the $39, and if it were not for the fact that I was a member of parliament and that I bought the grain from another member of parliament I would not have paid the $39, but would rather have lost the $30 before paying $39 for a $30 shipment.

I hope the minister will take another look at this clause. If the minister cannot delete it entirely, surely he can extend the three-year period to something like 10 or 15 years. This would give the railways a chance to put into effect the economies they say they want to put into effect. The railways would have a chance to come to parliament, if they so desired, and prove their point. Do not let them try to put us in the same strait-jacket in which they have tried to keep us over a long period of years. They have come back to us time after time and asked for a subsidy, and pleading for a veil of secrecy over their operations when as everyone knows they enjoy a monopoly in this country.

Mr. Churchill: I am encouraged, Mr. Chairman, to say a few more words on this subject, and for two reasons. First, the minister said yesterday he did not believe I was speaking from conviction when I expressed certain ideas on the Crowsnest pass rates. I want to assure him tonight that I was then, and I intend to speak with conviction now. Second, I am encouraged to speak because earlier this evening the minister launched into an attack on members of the opposition, and rather inspired us to take an even keener interest in the subject matter that is under discussion. If the minister is going to contribute every hour on the hour to the debate, naturally we want to play our part, too. We would like to make our contribution to see if we can match in quantity—we exceed in quality—the amount the minister is placing on Hansard with regard to his bill.

I want to draw certain things to the attention of the minister tonight to indicate to him that we are not discussing the Crowsnest pass rates because we do not realize he has given assurance they will not be tampered with. He does not have to rise now and say that I am misconstruing his remarks, or putting a wrong interpretation on this proposed section. I know quite well what it means, and I know quite well that the minister has repeated over and over again that the Crowsnest pass rates are not to be altered.

Unfortunately, he has qualified his statements, and those qualifications are not going to do him any good. They are a clear indication of the lack of real representation in the Liberal party. It is not a national party at the present time. It happens to form the government, but it is not a national party. If it were a national party with representation from all areas of this country, the minister would not have introduced into his bill this reference to the Crowsnest rates. Our party is a national party. We have representation from all across this country. We appreciate and have sympathy for the various sectional problems that arise in Canada. We are within our rights in discussing this particular subject because the minister introduced it into the bill.

The minister had three choices before him. He indicated this in the course of his remarks during the last two days. He had the MacPherson report in front of him, to which he has referred. He had the option of adopting the subsidy proposals in the MacPherson report. He has told us he rejected that. He had the option of omitting from the bill any reference whatever to the Crowsnest rates. His third option was to introduce a provision such as the one in the bill, suggesting that these rates may be reviewed during the course of the next three years.

Obviously, this was a weak decision. The strongest decision of all would have been to omit this provision from the bill. The second one would have been to accept the MacPherson report and provide a subsidy. He chose the weak option; he made a weak decision. He is uncertain and he wobbles. He said: We will put something in the bill to give the railways an opportunity to state their case again, and we will have another discussion on the Crowsnest rates not later than three years after the proclamation of this bill. The minister opens the door to a review. He glosses this over by saying that if the rates are satisfactory, if we have faith in these rates, then we should not be alarmed if they are reviewed. The minister indicates we are showing our insecurity by saying we do not want them reviewed. This is the way he puts a gloss on it.

I would say this to him, that he has made a mistake in introducing this provision into the bill. He told us tonight, and this was a new argument he used, that far from changing the Crownsnest Pass rates he was putting in an additional safeguard. We have his assurance that the rates will not be touched, and his safeguard is to review them not later than three years after the passage of this bill to see whether or not they are all right or whether or not the railways require compensation. The best safeguard for the Crowsnest pass rates would have been to omit any reference to them from this bill. What the minister has done has been to draw attention to the Crowsnest pass rates.

I was going to quote the minister's words that the hon. member for Vegreville quoted, and I may as well put them on the record again. These words are found at page 11868 of Hansard:

> The plain fact is that I do not think any member of the house, if he were to stop to reflect, would be doing the cause of the western farmer any good by suggesting that other freight shippers should have to pay higher freights in order to lower the rates on wheat.

The minister goes on then to explain this away, but he has made that statement. There is a doubt in the minister's mind with regard to these rates, and whether or not the railways are breaking even or whether they are making money on them. He has raised a doubt. The minister has therefore introduced into Canada a doubt. He is asking for parliamentary approval of a doubt. If this bill passes in its present form, parliament will have expressed itself as entertaining a doubt about whether or not the Crowsnest pass rates are satisfactory. Parliament will have expressed itself in favour of having a review not later than three years after the passage of this bill. Parliament will be suggesting to the railways that they should raise this issue again.

I feel that this is a weakness in the bill. If there is in the minds of the railways some problem with regard to these rates, it should be left to them to present their case some time in the future. We should not open the door for them, and in fact rather encourage them.

This provision goes further than that; it is almost mandatory. The bill refers to the fact that not later than three years after the coming into force of this section the commission shall inquire into the revenues and costs of the railway companies with regard to the carriage of grain and grain products. This provision means that the commission will request the railways to make their case, so we will go through the circuit again. Public attention will be focused on these rates. People will make statements like the minister's statement, implying that other people are paying higher rates, that the public is being gouged, in order to make it cheaper for the farmer to ship his grain for export.

These are the suggestions and insinuations that will be made. That is why I think it is unsound to have this section in the bill, and that is why we are discussing it—not because we think at this moment that the Crowsnest pass rates are under attack and will be altered. We are looking ahead; we are taking a long view, and we say to the minister that introducing this into a statute means that these Crowsnest rates will be under observation and may be under attack. Plenty of people in the country throughout the years have attacked these rates, and here the government is inviting a constant observation and criticism of them. We think that is wrong.

Those of us coming from the prairies in the debate yesterday and today expressed the basic feelings of people living in that part of Canada. Merely by accident I ran across a statement made in 1925 here, in the House of Commons, as reported at page 1895 of Hansard for April 6 of that year. These were the observations of the then hon. member for Souris, Mr. James Steedsman, who was elected to this house in 1921 as a Progressive. This in part is what he said when freight rates were under discussion, and when the Crowsnest pass rates were being mentioned:

> All the people of western Canada stand solidly behind the Crowsnest pass agreement rates, and any attempt to interfere with those established rates on grain and grain products will be most strenuously opposed I think by all the people of the prairies.

That was the attitude of a pioneer farmer living in the town of Deloraine, Manitoba, as he expressed it in 1925 in the House of Commons when the subject of freight rates came before the house. The people of the prairies have not altered their convictions from that day to this, and that is why we rise to speak on this problem.

We know that the development of western Canada, and particularly the prairies, has been due to the building of the railways, the opening up of that agricultural land and the development of wheat for export. This has been the lifeblood of western Canada and of central Canada too, because all parts of Canada have benefited from that great development.

The Crowsnest rates which where important to make our grain competitive overseas must, we say, be maintained. They should not be tampered with and should not be under constant review, because if they are kept under constant review trouble might occur. After all, the minister said that in 1919 a change was made. I have not had a chance to look at the record clearly, but I think on that occasion the Senate saved the situation for Canada—certainly it did for western Canada. I have on one or two occasions in the past said that that action alone by the other house sufficiently proved the value of a second chamber.

You see, Mr. Chairman, in 1919 the rates were tampered with. It could happen again. Supposing a different government were in power; it might be a party that is neither Liberal nor Conservative. The rates might be tampered with, particularly when you incorporate in a statute of the land an invitation to review these rates because parliament doubts whether they are satisfactory. For these reasons this section should be eliminated completely. No harm will be done if it is eliminated.

The hon. member for Jasper-Edson earlier today said that clause 15 of the bill gives power to the commission to investigate any matter pertaining to transportation. But, to draw specific attention to one particular item I think is quite wrong. I wonder why the minister has included in here the words "not later than three years". What was the process of thought that encouraged him to put in—and I asked this question yesterday—the words "three years"? What process of thought encouraged him to say, "not later than three years"?

What is the urgency? When you are dealing with a subject of this magnitude, three years brings it forward rapidly. Would it not have been wiser to have waited until the other arrangements had been made with regard to transportation? It would have been wisest to leave the section out altogether. Here we are entering a new era, we hope, with regard to our transportation facilities in Canada. The railways are encouraged to modernize their lines and to become more efficient. Part of the encouragement is to permit them to reduce some of their trackage. Let us accomplish this rationalization process first, and then let us have a look at railway earnings and railway management across this country. Only after that has been done need we look into these other fields which have been contemplated.

I am surprised that instead of waiting for these changes to take place, changes which will take more than three years, the minister encourages the commission to undertake a review of the Crowsnest rates in relation to railway earnings and costs. I do not know how many years it will take before this commission is fully operative and how many years it will be before all problems are settled with regard to abandonment of railway lines and increased efficiency. I feel positive this will take three years, or longer. After the commission is fully operative there will be time enough to look at other aspects of this particular problem, the problem of transportation.

Yesterday and again today the minister referred to the MacPherson report. Our government, the Conservative government, appointed that commission to investigate a problem—a major problem at that time—in 1958 and 1959. Attempting to gain political advantage he mentioned the MacPherson report and said that our government was prepared to accept the findings of that report. That is not necessarily so. Our thinking on the subject had not been brought to completion. The minister seems to think that, the commission having been appointed, we are now committed in some way or other to the propositions set out in its report. But the MacPherson report is now out of date. Such tremendous changes in technology, transportation, payment for wheat, size of our crops and exports have taken place that the MacPherson report on the subject of grain is out of date.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Attention has been drawn to the fact that in this report there was a minority statement by Mr. Gobeil. This minority statement, Reservations on Grain, as he called it, expresses the opinion of a great many people. I would like to read his three points into the record because I think this is important; we may not be discussing freight rates or Crowsnest pass rates for several years. I think it is important that we should record some of these facts, particularly as the minister has drawn our attention to the MacPherson report. On page 77 of volume 1, the committee will find these reservations by Mr. Gobeil:

> First, I believe that the Canadian Pacific Railway, having obtained certain very real advantages when it undertook—in perpetuity—to accept a ceiling on these grain rates, became party to a contract which is still in effect and which must be abided by.
> Second, I do not believe that the grain cost studies which have been brought before this commission have succeeded in their attempts to measure the extent of the loss which, it is alleged, the railways incur in the movement of grain under statutory rates. I am not convinced, furthermore, that the studies in question have been able to establish that there is any loss whatsoever.
> Third, I believe that, if there is a loss associated with the carriage of grain it is due to the cost of maintaining light density lines rather than the cost of carrying grain.

In effect, he is saying: let us centre our attention on the railways, their trackage, the placements of their lines, their methods of carrying grain, to see whether or not there might be some improvement made, rather than direct our attention to the rates themselves. He concludes on page 90 with this warning:

> I oppose the conclusion and recommendation that a portion of the proposed subsidy should be attached to grain on the grounds that:
> (a) The railways have not established that grain is deficit traffic.
> (b) If a deficit does exist it is attributable to low density lines rather than to grain.
> (c) The contract of 1897 is still binding on both parties although in a varied form.

(d) Certain benefits from this agreement have accrued to the C.P.R. which must be balanced against the obligations.

(e) The western provinces were required to make certain concessions for which they are entitled to the benefits of the agreement as part of their historical and provincial rights.

I think this minority report requires most serious consideration. From what we have heard today from members who have been sitting on the special committee on transportation, it seems there is still dissatisfaction with regard to methods of reporting costs. Similar dissatisfaction was noted at the time the MacPherson commission was sitting. I could read from the report to show that the cost figures submitted were altered, I think on three different occasions by one of the railway companies, and there was uncertainty in the minds of the commission as to whether from the railway presentation it had really got to the root of the matter. The commission's own investigation, and provincial investigations, disclosed different figures. It was all very confused. The MacPherson commission was therefore not able to make a unanimous report and this is the situation in which we find ourselves at the present time.

These are some of the reasons which may be advanced to encourage the minister to take the proper action with regard to this clause. The proper action I suggest—and this would terminate the debate immediately—would be for him to strike out the clause and leave out the provision for a review of the Crowsnest pass rates. Let us get settled down and reorganize national transportation policy before we attempt in any way to create public opinion which would tend to upset rates which have been found to be effective over the years. I could give an instance where the Crowsnest rates were lowered by the C.P.R. during a period when they must have been making sufficient revenue not to worry about those rates. They took unilateral action and lowered them. It is only in recent years that we have found people getting troubled by those rates, and drawing attention to them, but failing in my opinion to prove their case.

I regret that the minister is perpetuating in a statute of Canada an investigation of rates which should be left undisturbed. From 1897 to the present time these rates have been in effect, except for one period in 1919 when they were saved by the Senate of this country.

Here we are in the centennial year suggesting to those people in this country who have some axe to grind in regard to these rates that they should raise this issue, that they will have full authority to do so, that parliament gives its approval to this being done. Then there will arise, again, the sectional differences in this country which constitute part of our trouble. The tampering with the Crowsnest pass rates in 1919, in addition to the rising cost of living and the problems brought about by the war, resulted in a movement which was most disturbing for a period of several years here in the House of Commons.

There are political repercussions which result from dealing with matters that should be left alone, and I am surprised at the failure of the minister, who used to be given credit for considerable political perspicacity, to see that by having this section in the act his party will not gain anything at all out in prairie country. I am surprised that this minister, of all ministers, should be so politically inept. That is not the reputation he enjoyed in days gone by.

The hon. gentleman has not interrupted me, so I intend to interrupt myself, and stop. I had hoped he would rise and say he proposed to take the section out, but he has not done so, and I heretofore move, seconded by my hon. friend from Acadia:

That clause 50 be amended by striking out section 329 on pages 41 and 42.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: It is with the greatest reluctance I rise, and disregard the excellent advice given me yesterday by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in which he said my failure to follow in the debate brought upon us the flood of eloquence to which we have just listened. I am quite prepared to have a vote immediately after I speak on this amendment, but I ought to point out that the effect of striking the whole of section 329 would be to destroy a part of the legal foundation of the Crowsnest pass rates, because it is in this section that there is a definition of grain, and without that definition the safeguard for those rates would disappear.

However, I do not think there is anything more I can possibly say about the matter in addition to what I said earlier this evening. So far as I am concerned I am quite prepared to have the question put at once.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before the question is put I wish to say a word about the amendment and about the Crowsnest pass rates. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre really touched the crux of the problem. We find ourselves in centennial year debating the very issue that brought Canada together, that brought the west into confederation, that brought in the province of British Columbia, that established the prairie provinces, namely the Crowsnest pass rates. Now the minister proudly stands up and asks for a speedy vote on this amendment. In effect he says: Let us get the Crowsnest pass rates out of the road, let us erase them. He is not sure that they may have been a mistake a hundred years ago, but he knows they are a mistake now. According to the minister, while they may have brought Canada together a hundred years ago, they are not fulfilling that purpose now, and so we can do away with them.

The Crowsnest pass rates were instituted to attract people to settle the west and guarantee them that their products would move to market over our transportation system at fair and equitable rates. They gave equal opportunity to all farmers to deliver their goods. Many experts have told me that these rates would make money for the railroads if the quota system were abolished if they could move all the grain out of one area in two or three loads. I am not arguing against the quota system. It is part and parcel of the Crowsnest pass rates and gives all farmers equal opportunity to deliver their goods to market.

These rates contributed to the establishment and development of agriculture in the prairie provinces. But now this section in effect is trying to develop public opinion against the Crowsnest pass rates. The section is not necessary. The railroads are now moving twice as much grain as they did ten years ago and are making far more money than they did ten years ago. There is conclusive proof that these rates have not been the cause of loss to the railroads.

In the years 1957 and 1958 operating expenses of the C.N.R. were between $765 million and $800 million. These figures were presented to the MacPherson royal commission. The figures were changed three or four times by the railroad itself, and finally it came to the astounding conclusion that the C.N.R. may have lost $4 million. That figure is astounding when compared to expenditures of between $765 million and $800 million.

At page 82 of volume 1 of the MacPherson commission report Mr. A. R. Gobeil had this to say:

> The commission received a number of studies which attempted to prove what the cost of moving grain was. Each time one of those cost studies was discussed before the commission, the parties admitted errors in their previous study and asked the commission to accept the new cost figures.

It has been said that the movement of grain accounts for 13.2 per cent of the total revenues derived by the C.N.R., but Mr. Donald Gordon told our standing committee that one cannot measure this by total revenue, and that it amounts to 38 per cent or 39 per cent of the ton-miles hauled. I repeat that on this percentage of ton-miles hauled, with total expenses between $765 million and $800 million for the years 1957 and 1958, and after the figures had been revised three times, the best the experts could say was that the C.N.R. may have lost $4 million. The only conclusion I can come to is that a further study within three years is not necessary.

I believe the reason for this new section is that an agreement has been drawn up by the Minister of Transport with the railroads, an agreement stating, in effect: We will give you this if you give us that. Someone suggests that it is a saw-off, but we in the west never like saw-offs unless we know what exchange it involves. What is the exchange in this regard? I suggest the exchange in question is the suggested review, and this review is going to build up public opinion against the Crowsnest pass rates.

The minister sits there and shakes his head. It is all very well for him to do that, but who is going to defend the west?

An hon. Member: You.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Some hon. member thinks I will. I would love to, but I cannot afford the $1½ million expenditure which the governments of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba had to make in order to present a brief to the MacPherson commission. Will we have to spend this amount three times as is suggested in volume I of the MacPherson report? Who is going to suggest that anyone will spend this amount three times? The railways will, because they have dollars and cents at stake. They have a combined effort to present figures to prove beyond a shadow of a doubt that they are losing money and therefore should be subsidized. They will build up public opinion in this three years so that they can cut down the prairie farmers again and again, these people who have proven that today they are the greatest and most efficient producers in the world of food products.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): May I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the committee might agree to avoid looking at the clock for a while, at least until the hon. gentleman has finished. He is making a very good speech and he should not be interrupted.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Is there unanimous agreement that the hon. member be permitted to continue his speech?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, although my mind is clear on this subject and I should like to continue, I would point out that I urged the minister earlier today to hold up a decision in respect of an earlier clause so that we might proceed with the bill. We spent something like one or two hours studying this clause and accomplished very little because the minister failed to take into consideration all the details with regard to that particular clause. Therefore, because I do not think anything can be gained by continuing now I will call it ten o'clock and continue my remarks tomorrow.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue with the consideration of the bill which is now before the committee. At the conclusion of that business we will take the two motions to refer matters to the committee on privileges and elections, then the bill to amend the Judges Act, and then the C.N.R. financing bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

SHIPPING—WINTER NAVIGATION ON ST. LAWRENCE

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, tonight I would like to deal with a question I had put to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) on December 20 last; I indicated my desire to have it discussed at ten o'clock some evening, and I have the opportunity to do so tonight.

At that time, I had asked the Minister of Transport if his department had investigated—and the question appears on page 11364 of Hansard—the cost of facilitating winter navigation on the St. Lawrence.

The previous evening, in answer to one of my questions the minister had said—and I quote from page 11352 of Hansard:

> It would cost many, many millions of dollars which would have to be collected from Canadians in every part of Canada to ensure regular and reliable navigation each winter in the port of Montreal.

The minister said that it would cost many millions of dollars. That is why the next day, December 20, I asked him if his department had investigated the matter in order to find out just how many millions would have to be spent, and I also asked the minister if he was ready to table the results of the inquiry. The minister simply answered: "The matter is under study continuously but I have no special report to make at this moment."

In view of the facts, Mr. Speaker, I must ask the minister if the matter is being considered. If he has no special report to make at this moment, why then does he mislead public opinion, stating that it would cost many millions of dollars? Does this statement to the effect that it would cost millions spring from his own imagination? Is this merely a figure he made up, or does he really have true and actual figures?

If he has, then let them be made known to us: let him not mislead us any longer, stating that it would cost many millions of dollars. What does that mean? And if he quotes millions, we want to know where he got those figures and what type of investigation was made. The next day, however, when he had his back to the wall, when he had to give an answer, he said:

> The matter is under study continuously but I have no special report to make at this moment.

So, if the minister has nothing special to announce, why does he tell us that it would cost several millions? That is something special in itself.

Mr. Speaker, I say to the minister that it would not cost even one million dollars more a year to keep a channel open the year-round for winter navigation on the river St. Lawrence—because there are icebreakers in sufficient numbers on the St. Lawrence to keep the channel open.

Harbours would not be involved, since the minister himself stated that last year, Montreal harbour was closed one day only. This year, I think it has not closed at all yet. The channel must be kept open and the icebreakers are available. The crews on these vessels are paid for the winter season; various supplies, the oil and fuel to operate these boats the mechanics in charge of maintenance have also been paid. The only thing required now is to order the icebreakers to do their job, instead of impeding them as is currently the case.

I say to the minister that if he is unable to give us exact figures, let him refrain from misleading public opinion by quoting figures at random. On the other hand, if he has exact figures, he should not keep on repeating that it would cost millions. Let him tell us exactly how much it would cost, and where his figures come from; whether a study has been made; whether engineers and competent investigators have inquired about the extra cost.

The minister might, at the same time, tell us how the additional cost is arrived at, since our icebreakers are already available in sufficient numbers, since the Russians are sending their own icebreakers to help us out; their icebreaking ships are being sent to do the work of the Department of Transport. The hon. Minister of Transport is perfectly aware that foreign ships are doing the work of his department on the St. Lawrence and on the seaway during the winter.

On December 19, 1966, as reported on page 11352 of Hansard, the minister said:

> —I believe the government is pursuing the right course in doing nothing at the present time to accelerate icebreaking activities, and in doing nothing to impede navigation. Those owners of ships who want to take the risks of plying these waters in winter are not impeded in any way.

Then they are the ones who do the work. Russian icebreakers, especially Russian freighters, are all equipped for such conditions. Therefore, let the minister tell us exactly how many millions it would cost. Not in millions of dollars, but the exact amount of additional costs. Where did the minister take those figures? Could he table in the house the report of the investigation he ordered, to state it would cost millions more? We want to know the facts, to obtain reports. We are no longer satisfied with the mere statement of the minister, because it is too vague. Millions of dollars, what does that mean? Nobody knows. Let him tell us exactly what is the situation and stop making vague statements. We shall then be satisfied with his answer.

• (10:10 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member could have chosen a happier day to raise this question, because my hon. friend the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) is making a speech on this subject this evening in Montreal and is announcing that a further stage in the study of the very difficult problems connected with the ship channel in the St. Lawrence is, as I said the other day, under way. While that study is progressing, most of us realize that he who gives an exact figure is a very courageous man. When you hire some experts to tell you how much money a project is going to cost, you are rather silly to try to give an exact figure before you receive the advice of the experts.

I can tell the hon. gentleman that 100 million will not be enough to assure an adequate channel for winter navigation. As the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) pointed out earlier this session, there is no problem about the channel of the river as far as Trois-Rivières. But it would be absolutely impossible, with the channel through Lac St. Pierre in the state it now is, to have winter navigation on the scale that exists in the summertime. Indeed the channel is no longer really adequate for the summer traffic, much less the winter traffic. That is why these studies are being carried on on the most urgent basis.

In my view the whole system of the St. Lawrence River and the lakes is the most precious natural asset we Canadians have, and we do not want to make a mess of that asset. It is very important that when we improve the channel between Montreal and Trois-Rivières we do it properly and do not put in works that will make the situation worse rather than better.

This is why we will have a full-scale model of the whole river from Montreal to the gulf, on which all kinds of tests with models of improvements can be carried out, so that when we do start spending at least 100 million, and probably a good deal more, we will have a result which will be satisfactory. I said the other day, and I repeat, that in respect of those vessels which want to take advantage of the icebreaking that has to be done in order to prevent flooding no one is putting any obstacle in their way. But if there was any attempt—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The time allotted to the minister has now expired.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—LOUIS SICOTTE —REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF TRIALS

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, I directed the following question to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson):

Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, and since his parliamentary assistant does not yet seem to have been appointed, I shall direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister, to whom I gave notice of my question yesterday.

Are the justice department and the government in receipt of a petition signed by a certain Louis Sicotte who is seeking a review of his two trials for allegedly having been forced under duress to plead guilty and to sign a false affidavit.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know if it will be possible to give a definite answer to the house tonight and if the R.C.M.P. will be instructed to investigate the matter. But, whatever the purport of the statement, I wish to appeal to the Canadian government and particularly to its legislators to pass efficient legislation protecting human dignity and the respect of the individual.

I do not know personally whether a certain Louis Sicotte is guilty or not, whether he speaks the truth or not. I am not concerned with this point. But if it were true that Canadian policemen brutalize prisoners in order to extort a confession from them, the laws of a civilized country would necessarily have to denounce such methods and the authors of such atrocities. Justice cannot be done where individuals are persecuted and their rights flouted.

The federal bill of rights lays down very worthy principles but, because of the complexity of our political system, the protection and exercise of civil rights and freedoms should more properly come under provincial authority.

It would therefore be urgent that provincial governments should legislate as soon as possible and ratify a provincial act on human rights, so that our citizens can enjoy a more obvious and efficient protection. The federal bill of rights has remained symbolic until now. It expresses the wish that the basic rights of the individuals shall be respected. I quote a part of section 2, chapter 44, assented to 10th August 1960, of the Revised Statutes of Canada:

Every law of Canada shall, unless it is expressly declared by an act of the parliament of Canada that it shall operate notwithstanding the Canadian Bill of Rights, be so construed and applied as not to abrogate, abridge or infringe or to authorize the abrogation, abridgment or infringement of any of the rights or freedoms herein recognized and declared, and in particular, no law of Canada shall be construed or applied so as to

(a) authorize or effect the arbitrary detention, imprisonment or exile of any person;

(b) impose or authorize the imposition of cruel and unusual treatment or punishment;

(c) deprive a person who has been arrested or detained

(i) of the right to be informed promptly of the reason for his arrest or detention,

(ii) of the right to retain and instruct counsel without delay, or

(iii) of the remedy by way of habeas corpus for the determination of the validity of his detention and for his release if the detention is not lawful;

(d) authorize a court, tribunal, commission, board or other authority to compel a person to give evidence if he is denied counsel, protection against self crimination or other constitutional safeguards;

(e) deprive a person of the right to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice for the determination of his rights and obligations;

It behoves more particularly to the provinces to establish standards for the protection of civil freedoms and rights.

It would therefore be important that the government should inquire into the facts and recommend to whom it may concern to act rapidly, because the whole field of individual liberties, democracy and justice is at stake.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it would be very difficult for anyone in this house to disagree with the very broad principles outlined by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard). In fact, he simply reiterated the responsibility we have here in Ottawa to protect and respect the rights of the individual and human dignity.

I do not agree with him when he says that human rights and our whole judicial system are purely symbolic. Over the years we have had the bill of rights and I think that we must be proud of our judicial system. That does not mean of course that isolated incidents cannot happen, that infractions cannot occur in public bodies, federal as well as provincial, but in general I feel that it is doing the people a disservice to imply that we only pay lip service to the protection of the rights of individuals.

As far as the Sicotte case is concerned, what needs to be established is the role of the federal government in that regard. In fact, an application for a new trial under section 596 of the criminal code has been received from Louis Sicotte's lawyers. It deals with two charges: setting a fire and conspiring to do so. Mr. Sicotte pleaded guilty to both charges on December 6, 1966, in Montreal and he was given a suspended sentence.

The reasons given to justify the application, particularly those of threats and brutal treatment toward Mr. Sicotte, seem to deal with criminal proceedings still pending against 15 people including 12 police officers. In my opinion, it would not be appropriate in the circumstances to grant that request for a new trial as long as those criminal proceedings are not over.

In any event, it is customary for ministers of justice not to use the extraordinary procedures of section 596 of the Criminal Code as long as the claimants have not exhausted the ordinary legal means at their disposal.

I have been informed that to date Mr. Sicotte has made no representations to have this matter reviewed by the Quebec court of appeal which, under its rules for criminal appeals, could grant him a further extension of the time limit for filing an appeal.

And, Mr. Speaker, I have advised Mr. Sicotte's counsel accordingly by a letter under today's date.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL—TRAIL, B.C.—REQUEST FOR STOP BY CENTENNIAL TRAIN

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): On January 13, Mr. Speaker, I addressed the following question to the Secretary of State, which was based on a letter I received from a prominent Liberal in my constituency, a most progressively minded person:

> He and many others in my riding—let me say my approach to this question is completely non-partisan—are very concerned about the fact that the centennial train will stop at Castlegar but not go to Trail, though there is a railroad for 20 miles connecting with Castlegar. This means that 8,000 school children alone will have to be provided with transportation to visit this train. Can the minister do something about this?

At that point, Mr. Speaker, you exercised the authority of your office to nip my curiosity in the bud. As I said, this question was based on this letter, as well as other complaints I have received from my constituency. This well known Liberal has written to the Prime Minister about the situation because he is concerned and interested.

According to the program of the train in British Columbia, Mr. Speaker, I note that it will be in Victoria January 9 to 16; Nanaimo, January 17 to 19; Vancouver, at the C.P.R. station, January 21 to 26; Vancouver, Canadian National station, January 27 to February 1; Chilliwack, February 2 to 3; Kamloops, February 4 to 6; Kelowna, February 7 to 8; Castlegar, February 10 to 11; Cranbrook, February 12 to 13; Prince Rupert, February 16 to 17; Prince George, February 18 to 21. Including the two stops in Vancouver, there are some ten stops in the province of British Columbia.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I know I have the full support of the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke. There is no stop at Revelstoke, although the last spike in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway was driven at Craigellachie a few miles west of Revelstoke. We both regret that this historic incident was overlooked and the train will not stop at Revelstoke. There is no stop at Nelson, the commercial metropolis of Kootenay West, and there is no stop at Trail. However the train is to stop at Castlegar, some 20 miles from Trail and there is a railway line connecting both points.

There is great interest in this train, particularly amongst the younger people of my constituency. I am very pleased to see that. This arrangement means that there will be quite a number of people in Kootenay West who will have to travel 150 miles to visit this train, in some cases over quite narrow and mountainous roads. The great majority of people in my constituency will have to travel anywhere from 25 to 30 miles. This is a great inconvenience to them. As I have said before, people have expressed their concern and have asked me to raise the question in the house to seek an explanation. I shall look forward to a reply from the parliamentary secretary concerning the circumstances surrounding this itinerary, so that I can forward it to my very interested constituents.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Let me begin by giving the hon. member something of an explanation, Mr. Speaker. I am told that in November, 1964, a representative of the commission endeavoured to locate a suitable site at Trail for a visit by the confederation train, but that no site was found in Trail which met all the requirements established by the commission, by the provincial government, and by the two railway companies. Consequently an alternative site at Castlegar was selected. I must tell the hon. member that I have not had a chance to ask what the various criteria were as laid down by the commission, the provincial government, and the two railway companies.

I do not want to desist, Mr. Speaker, without trying to give the hon. member some consolation.

Those of us who come from eastern Nova Scotia, from Antigonish, Guysborough, Pictou, Inverness, and Richmond counties, hoped fondly that the confederation train would pay us a visit. We hoped that the train would stop at centres such as New Glasgow, or Antigonish, or in the Strait of Canso area. I am not making a maiden speech, so I cannot regale the house with the historic qualifications of these places for such a visit. But when the train itinerary came out we learned that it would visit Truro, Sydney, Halifax, Yarmouth, Kentville, and Amherst. It will make six stops in Nova Scotia during 18 days in October, 1967. In the case of British Columbia I understand there will be 11 stops during 44 days. Of course the hon. member will admit that Nova Scotia's history is somewhat longer than British Columbia's.

Mr. Herridge: Oh?

Mr. Stewart: We shall see, it is true, a confederation caravan, but we should have liked to see the confederation train. In eastern Nova Scotia we assume that sound, objective considerations determined the itinerary that has been established. I have not seen an exposition of these considerations but I hope, Mr. Speaker, on the principle that misery loves company, that the hon. member is consoled to some small degree.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I am consoled by the hon. member's misery.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

FINANCE

TABLING OF LETTER FROM FIRST NATIONAL CITY BANK

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) asked if I would table a copy of a letter from the First National City Bank to the former minister of finance. With the permission of the house I do so now.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table this letter?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BANK OF WESTERN CANADA—SUSPENSION OF SHARE LIMITATION

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to a question regarding the Bank of Western Canada that the Leader of the Opposition addressed on Tuesday to the President of the Treasury Board.

The charter of that bank, granted by this parliament, contains provisions that in most respects are similar to clauses 52 to 57 of the bill to revise the Bank Act that is now being studied in the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. It provides for a limit of 10 per cent in the number of shares of the bank that a shareholder and his associates may own, subject to a provision that the bank may accept subscriptions for shares by residents without regard to this limit, but no such subscriptions may be accepted by the bank except in accordance with and subject to such terms and conditions as the Treasury Board may by order prescribe.

When the promoters of this bank appeared before the standing committee they disclosed the number of shares for which the associated group of shareholders proposed to subscribe and the relationship among the various corporations making up the group. This information appears in the minutes of the committee. The proposed shareholdings were again disclosed to the board in the request by the bank to accept subscriptions from this group in excess of the 10 per cent limit that would otherwise apply.

The terms and conditions contained in order 658,534 are, I consider, quite appropriate to deal with the situation in which the founding shareholders propose to have a majority interest during the early stages of the operations of the bank. These include a requirement that all shares of the bank in excess of the 10 per cent of the total outstanding that are held by the associated group must be disposed of before January 1, 1977, unless an extension is granted by the governor in council.

The proposed shareholdings of the associated group are listed in the treasury board order, the contents of which were made public by the Bank of Western Canada and which I would be very pleased to table if it is the wish of the house. I understand that because of a reorganization there have been some changes of ownership within the associated group but no increase in the total shares to be owned by all members of the group as stated in the order.

I have the treasury board minute and if the house so desires I would be very happy to table copies in both English and French.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreeable to the house that the minister table the treasury board minute to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the matter the minister has raised has given me some concern after reading about it in the newspapers and after being made aware of it as a result of the hearings before the committee to which the minister referred. I am somewhat disturbed by the implication in the minister's statement today that in the future this date of 1977 may possibly be extended still further. I am disturbed about it not only because it is in contravention of the act we now are in the process of passing through the committee but also because it lends further substance to the suspicions of the people of western Canada that this is not really a Bank of Western Canada because these institutions are based in the province of Ontario. I should like some assurance that the government would not permit this shareholding situation to continue beyond 1977, which seems to be generous in the extreme.

Mr. Sharp: I thank the hon. gentleman for his confidence that we will be in office in 1977.

LOANS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES—METHOD OF GRANTING

Question No. 2,221—Mr. Caouette:

In connection with question No. 2,220 relating to loans and interests (a) are such loans granted through chartered banks (b) if not, by whom are they granted?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): The loans referred to in question 2,220 were granted by the government of Canada.

C.N.R. EXPENDITURE ON TRAINING PERSONNEL

Question No. 2,247—Mr. Godin:

For the first nine months of 1966, did the Canadian National Railways incur expenditures for the training of 1,095 registered trainees and 37,123 workers employed in sales supervision, relations with customers, technical skills and trades and, if so, how much?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows: The company provides various types of training and retraining for employees, providing courses in apprenticeship, sales and customer relations, technical and skills, supervisory and management development, rules instruction, first aid, safety and fire prevention. Total cost: $1.7 million. 37,123 were given training and, of that number, 32,200 occupied non-supervisory positions.

B AND B COMMISSION EXPENDITURES ON RESEARCH

Question No. 2,360—Mr. Coates:

Of the $5,373,198.66 that was spent by the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism as of October 31, 1966, what proportion was spent on research?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): I am informed by the royal commission as follows: Of the $5,373,198.66 spent to October 31, 1966, approximately 75 per cent, or $4,030,000, has been spent on research.

PAYMENTS BY B AND B COMMISSION TO RESEARCH CONSULTANTS

Question No. 2,361—Mr. Coates:

1. As of this date, how much has been paid by the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism to L. Dion, D. Easton, J. Meisel, J. LaRiviere, A. Raynauld, W. Mackey and J. Ethier-Blais, since they assumed positions as research consultants?

2. Were any of these individuals involved with the royal commission in any other capacity prior to, during or since, assuming positions as research consultants and, if so, what were the amounts paid to each involved in other work for the commission?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): I am informed by the royal commission as follows: The individuals named commenced work with the commission at different times. Payments made from January 1, 1964 to October 31, 1966 are as follows:

	Date appointed	Payment for travel	Payment for honoraria	Total payments for travel and honoraria
L. Dion	Jan 1/64	$11,476.90	$44,925.45	$56,402.35
D. Easton	Aug 1/64	7,048.44	44,212.50	51,260.94
J. Meisel	May 1/64	3,410.94	11,175.00	14,585.94
J. LaRivière	Oct 29/64	4,986.00	11,790.00	16,776.00
A. Raynauld	Sep 11/64	940.03	26,850.00	27,790.03
W. Mackey	Jul 15/64	2,885.53	7,810.00	10,695.53
J. Ethier-Blais	Jan 5/65	1,357.70	8,541.57	9,899.27

2. The following three people hold research contracts with the commission, as well as being research consultants:

	Date contract approved	Contract payments to date
W. Mackey	Sep 11/64	$13,856.73
J. Meisel (held jointly with Professor V. Lemieux)	Jun 10/64	25,000.00
A. Raynauld	Nov 20/64	10,975.00

COMPLAINTS TO TRANSPORT BOARD OVER LEVEL CROSSINGS

Question No. 2,365—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many complaints have been received by the Board of Transport Commissioners from each province, in each of the past ten years, in respect to train stoppages at level crossings which bring about traffic tie-ups?

2. Did the Board of Transport Commissioners investigate these complaints, and if any complaint was verified, what action did the Board of Transport Commissioners take?

3. Were any of the complaints followed by prosecutions in the courts and, if so, when, where, and by whom were the prosecutions carried out, and what were the results of these prosecutions?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Board of Transport Commissioners advises as follows: 1. Section 314 of the Railway Act prescribes that no railway company, its officers, agents or employees shall wilfully permit any engine or car to occupy a public crossing for a longer period than five minutes at one time. The board does receive complaints from time to time involving breaches of this requirement. A statistical record of such complaints by provinces is however not maintained.

2. Complaints which reach the board involving the excessive blocking of public crossings are fully investigated and where corrective action is indicated the railway company concerned is directed to take such action.

3. The board has no record of any prosecutions in the courts during such period.

* SINKING OF M.S. "CABOT"

Question No. 2,370—Mr. Howard:

1. What was the name of, and rank held by each officer and engineer who was aboard the M.S. Cabot when she capsized in Montreal harbour on or about December 16, 1966, and by whom was each such person employed?

2. With respect to each such officer and engineer, by name, was he in possession of a certificate of competency and, if so, for what grade and rank in each case and what was the date of issuance thereof?

3. As of December 15, 1966, was the M.S. Cabot exempted from any of the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act and, if so, what was the nature of the exemptions, the provisions of the said act from which she was exempted and the date of each exemption?

4. As of December 15, 1966, had any of the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act, except as referred to in part 3 hereof, been waived or otherwise dispensed with either in so far as the M.S. Cabot was concerned or in so far as any of her officers or engineers were concerned and, if so, what was the nature of such dispensation, the provisions of the said act so dispensed with, the date of issuance of any such dispensation and, if related to a person, the name and occupation of each such person?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to questions 1 and 2 is as follows: J. A. Begin, master, certificate of competency as master coasting, No. 13577 issued February 24, 1934. J. L. Vigneault, first mate, certificate of competency master home trade, No. 22538, issued August 18, 1960. G. LeBlond, second mate, certificate of competency master home trade, No. 22081 issued April 27, 1959. Marcel Cote, third mate, certificate of competency first mate home trade, No. 24302 issued July 25, 1966. Paul Bouchard, chief engineer, certificate of competency second class combined steam and motor, certificate C. 809 issued January 11, 1965. J. P. Collin, second engineer, certificate of competency third class combined steam and motor, No. C. 885 issued January 21, 1966 (off duty at time of accident). L. Dube, third engineer, certificate of competency third class motor, No. 3074 issued March 5, 1959. J. Girard, fourth engineer certificate of competency third class motor with fourth class steam and motor, No. 4685 issued November 1, 1966. J. H. Lavoie, fifth engineer, certificate of competency second class combined steam and motor, No. C. 902 issued March 10, 1966.

Mr. Starr: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, considering the lengthy reply the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport is making I would ask that his answer be taken as read and printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: Just a moment. I do not see why the hon. member for Ontario should interfere with the rights of other people. He takes up enough time in this house.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, question No. 2,168 has been on the order paper since last November 10, that is for over two months. Therefore, I wonder when the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) intends to answer it.

[Mr. Howard.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Mr. Howard: I did not understand that the parliamentary secretary had finished answering the question before he was so rudely interrupted.

Mr. Speaker: If there is no agreement about the suggestion of the hon. member for Ontario the parliamentary secretary might be allowed to complete his answer.

Mr. Byrne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall continue. A. Roussel, maintenance engineer, no certificate of competency (off duty at time of accident). The foregoing officers and engineers were employed by Gulfport Steamship Company Limited, 1155 Dorchester Street West, Montreal.

3. As provided for in regulation 55(3)(a) of the fire detection and extinguishing equipment regulations, smothering gas for fire extinguishing purposes in the holds was waived by virtue of the provision of steel hatch covers and effective means of closing all ventilators and other openings leading to the holds. Exemption granted during construction of vessel and dated April 9, 1965.

RAIL RATES ON LUMBER AND PLYWOOD

Question No. 2,374—Mr. Reid:

1. What are the rail rates for lumber and plywood between the Canadian lakehead and Toronto?

2. What are the rail rates for lumber and plywood between British Columbia and Toronto?

3. What is the proposed increase in rail rates for lumber and plywood in each of the two above cases?

4. What, if any, protests has the Minister of Transport or the governor general in council received against this increase from persons or organizations in northwestern Ontario.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advises as follows:

1. Competitive commodity rates for account all shippers

Lumber from Fort William, Port Arthur and West Fort William, Ont. to Toronto, Ont.

60 cents per 100 lbs., min. weight 50,000 lbs.
56 " " " " " " 60,000 "
54 " " " " " " 70,000 "
53 " " " " " " 80,000 "

Plywood, no specific commodity rates in effect.

2. (a) Competitive commodity rates for account all shippers

Lumber

159 cents per 100 lbs., to min. wt. 50,000 lbs.

Plywood,

184 cents per 100 lbs., to min. wt. 40,000 lbs.

(b) Agreed charge rates for account 116 different shippers.

Lumber and Plywood

145	"	"	"	"	"	"	90,000 "
143	"	"	"	"	"	"	100,000 "

3. (a) An increase of 10 per cent was placed on the rates from the lakehead effective October 10, 1966, but this increase was removed on November 14, 1966. (b) No increase has been made in the rates from British Columbia since December 31, 1964. (c) No information as to any proposed increase in these rates.

4. The board received a letter dated December 29, 1966 from the Department of Economics and Development of Ontario, protesting what was alleged to be a proposed 10 per cent increase in the rate on lumber from the lakehead area to become effective January 1, 1967. No such increase has been filed with the board or put into effect.

HOUSING CONSTRUCTION—TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Question No. 2,375—Mr. Laprise:

1. For each year since 1960, what has been the percentage of housing construction as compared with the gross national product?

2. What have been the total returns from the tax on building materials for each year since its introduction?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Trade and Commerce and National Revenue as follows:

1. Comparison of housing construction with gross national product, 1960 to 1966*

	Gross national product (millions of dollars)	(A) Housing (new)	New Housing as a percentage of gross national product	(B) Housing (new and repair) (millions of dollars)	Housing (new and repair) as a percentage of gross national product
1960	36,287	1,456	4.0	1,913	5.3
1961	37,471	1,467	3.9	1,951	5.2
1962	40,575	1,587	3.9	2,100	5.2
1963	43,424	1,713	3.9	2,257	5.2
1964	47,403	2,028	4.3	2,605	5.5
1965	51,996	2,133	4.1	2,752	5.3
1966	57,740*	2,116	3.7*	2,772	4.8*

*Gross national product estimate for 1966 is based on the level of the seasonally adjusted 3rd quarter and therefore subject to revision.

2. Sales tax revenue is not separated as to products or categories. It is not possible therefore to furnish this information.

PRICES OF CHEESE AND POWDERED MILK

Question No. 2,389—Mr. Godin:

1. What criteria are used as a basis in this country to set the price of (a) cheese (b) powdered milk?

2. Is the price of such products higher in Ontario than in Quebec?

3. If so, for what reasons?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1. (a) and (b). Numerous factors influence cheese and powdered milk prices. These include supply, demand, stabilization and marketing programs and the prices of other dairy products competing for the milk supply.

2. The price of powdered milk is similar in the two provinces but, based on market quotations, cheese prices are at a slightly higher level in Ontario.

3. Supply, demand and other market factors.

Motions for Papers

SPRINGHILL, N.S. PENAL INSTITUTION—CHAPEL AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING BUILDING

Question No. 2,399—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the amount of the contract for the construction of a chapel and vocational training building at the young offender's penal institution at Springhill, Nova Scotia, and who was the successful tenderer?

2. How many additional tenders were submitted, by whom, and in what amounts?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. and 2. No contract has been awarded. Tenders are due on January 18, 1967 for construction of two chapels, an industrial building, a garage and a stores building.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 198 is acceptable to the government. Would Your Honour please call notices of motions number 192 and number 193. I ask that the remaining notice be allowed to stand.

LABOUR (STANDARDS) CODE—DEPARTMENTAL CORRESPONDENCE

Motion No. 192—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the minister or Department of Labour and any other person, group or organization, excepting any other department or agency of government, relating to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code or the deferment or suspension of any part thereof.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with regard to this motion I might say that the documents requested are very voluminous, representing the contents of several hundred files containing thousands of letters and memoranda going back to early 1965. Acceptance of this motion would also involve disclosure of the internal operations of many companies concerned including matters that are confidential and likely to affect their competitive positions in their industries. It would be contrary to normal practice to make public such information, and I hope that under the circumstances the hon. member is willing to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, before the Christmas recess the minister undertook to file, to table or otherwise to advise the house of the number of exemptions or applications for deferment that had been dealt with under various dispositions. If the minister is still of the opinion that he is going to do that, and on the understanding that he will, perhaps I could withdraw this motion.

Mr. Nicholson: I will be pleased to give that undertaking, Mr. Speaker, and will file the information covered by the statement made by the hon. member at the earliest possible date. Some of it could be filed very shortly but some may take a little time to compile.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

LABOUR (STANDARDS) CODE—CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN DEPARTMENT AND C.B.C.

Motion No. 193—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence telegrams or other documents exchanged between the Minister or Department of Labour and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation relating to the application of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code or the deferment or suspension of any part thereof.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with regard to this motion, the correspondence between the Department of Labour and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation with respect to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code also extends back to 1965. Moreover, it contains matters related to the internal operations of the corporation, including matters dealt with both in correspondence and related discussions that are of a confidential nature and affect the corporation's competitive position. Perhaps I might add that the C.B.C. did make an application for deferment of hours of work. That application, after careful review, was rejected by me as Minister of Labour on December 29 last. In view of these considerations I would hope the hon. member would withdraw this motion.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether, in the light of the explanation, I might have time to read it in detail and consider what the minister has said and perhaps make a determination about it on another day. Could the motion stand?

Motion stands.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR BAN ON ARMS SHIPMENTS TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister give the house a report on his reaction to the unusual request made by some 360 university teaching staff, mostly of the University of Toronto, asking for a ban on arms shipments to the United States until the Americans withdraw from Viet Nam?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the discussion among the Secretary of State for External Affairs, myself and the delegation in question was confidential. The delegation left with me a letter to which I said I would be glad to reply in writing. Perhaps at that time, if they agree, we could table both their letter our reply.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not understand these confidential meetings; but the press reports as follows:

Professor Hughes—

He is apparently the sponsor or originator of the idea.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman knows, of course, that he can refer to press statements but they cannot be quoted as a preamble to a question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I will ask the question more directly. Did the Prime Minister, as stated by Professor Hughes, express sympathy for the arms ban suggestion?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. I expressed sympathy and understanding with the point of view taken by the delegation in respect of their desire to bring the war in Viet Nam to an end, but there was no special sympathy expressed for that demand. Indeed, in our discussion of that particular request I pointed out that the export of arms and defence equipment to the United States was covered by our defence sharing agreement with that country, and we did not intend to abrogate that agreement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, does not the Prime Minister feel it would be of assistance to groups such as this and to Canadians generally if once and for all this government would make a clear statement of policy setting out its views on the issue of Viet Nam, and giving a definition of the stand so uncertainly taken up to the present time by Canada?

Mr. Pearson: That has been done more than once inside and outside the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nobody understands it.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the 360 professors in their petition pointed out that Canada is now selling some $300 million of arms annually to the United States under the defence production sharing agreements, and in view of the fact that they have asked that Canada follow the example of Sweden and stop such shipments until the intervention in Viet Nam has ended, is the government giving favourable consideration to this proposal? Will the government be making a statement shortly to the house as to what decision they have reached?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is not our policy to stop the export of defence equipment to the United States or to other NATO allies in accordance with the agreements we have made with them. It was stated in one report that these shipments have increased by 82 per cent. The fact is that since 1965 they have only increased by 20 per cent whereas the imports of defence equipment from the United States into this country have increased by 120 per cent.

Mr. Starr: What are we getting ready for?

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister in this connection. Since our sales of arms to the United States seem to have increased by 82 per cent in 1966, is it not the government's intention to ask for some changes in the Canada-U.S. defence production sharing agreements, so that our claims for peace in Viet Nam would not be merely rhetorical and our participation in the International Control Commission would be more consistent and effective?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the hon. member is putting a question. It seems to me he is making a statement or rather making representations to the Prime Minister. In my opinion, the question, if it is one, is out of order.

[English]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Now that he has admitted that the sales of defence equipment by Canada to the United States have increased by 20 per cent and that our purchases of such equipment from the United States have increased by 120 per cent during the past year, would he indicate to the house whether this was the objective in mind when Canada signed the joint defence sharing agreement?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, that was not in our mind at the time.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Would the Prime Minister tell the house whether the government intends to confine its contribution to the Viet Nam war to the sale of armaments?

[English]

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—PROPOSED FURTHER DEVELOPMENT BY U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the proposed program for the further development of power at the Grand Coulee dam in the United States on the Columbia river as the result of water storage facilities provided by Canada under the Columbia river treaty and protocol, in view of the glowing statements about this achievement in the western United States press, and in view of the statements by Canadian hydro economists that Canada should have received greater benefits from the Columbia river treaty and protocol as a result of this unexpected development, is the parliamentary secretary prepared to admit that Canada was sold down the river to the United States when the Columbia river treaty and protocol were signed?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is certainly a rhetorical question.

[Translation]

PARLIAMENT HILL

INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING PARKING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house whether he has received representations or even a petition from the parliamentary staff and from certains members about parking facilities on parliament hill.

Is this parking situation on parliament hill being studied in order to solve this difficult problem which affects several members and a number of parliament employees?

[Mr. Nasserden.]

Is the Prime Minister in a position to tell us something about the parking situation?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have received communications of that kind and probably the Minister of Public Works has received more. However, I think the present arrangements should be given an opportunity to show their usefulness. I think they are an improvement.

FINANCE

DEPOSITORS MORTGAGE CORPORATION—REPORTED FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question concerning a mortgage or finance company which appears to be in very serious difficulties. Has the minister or the government any information with respect to the position of Depositors Mortgage Corporation which, according to today's La Presse, is involved in difficulties with respect to liabilities exceeding $25 million.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was informed the day before yesterday about the difficulties of this company. I got in touch immediately with the superintendent of insurance, who told me that this is a Quebec company which is not subject to the supervision of the federal government.

Mr. Fulton: I have a supplementary question for whoever is Acting Registrar General at the moment. Has the Acting Registrar General received any information with respect to a proposal said to have been made yesterday to the registrar of bankruptcy for the judicial district of Montreal by Depositors Mortgage Corporation, in which apparently the company has suggested an extension of time and accommodation to work its way out of these difficulties?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): In the absence of the Acting Registrar General may I be permitted to say I was advised that the Acting Registrar General learned of the matter on Monday night, immediately upon the filing of the proposal in the bankruptcy division of the Superior Court of the district of Montreal. He at once instructed the superintendent of bankruptcy to have his regional officer in Montreal inspect all documents and interview the trustee of the proposal with a view to examining the nature of the assets and liabilities to establish whether any irregularities may or may not have occurred.

The Acting Registrar General is now in Montreal and is meeting with officials of the bankruptcy division of the Registrar General's department.

REPORTED INCREASE IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that during the first eight months of this fiscal year government expenditures were $630 million in excess of those for the same period last year, does the minister consider that this is a satisfactory performance during a period when the government is urging other Canadians to cut back expenditures?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for an expression of opinion on the part of the minister and I do not think the question is acceptable.

Mr. Hees: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the expenditures made by the government during the first eight months of this fiscal year, does the government intend to start curtailing expenditures to try to keep government action in line with that urged upon other Canadians?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): All government expenditures are being made in accordance with estimates approved by this parliament. I have not heard from the other side the kind of support for economies that I think would be appropriate under these circumstances.

INDUSTRY

NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF INCENTIVE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have a question for the Minister of Industry. In view of the bleak and discouraging picture of New Brunswick shown on television last night, particularly with relation to the lack of jobs and industry, will the minister again look over the industrial incentive program for that province, and particularly the exclusion of Fredericton and Saint John from the plan?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I assume the bleakness to which the hon. member was referring was of a political character. I detected that myself. In respect of the industrial incentive program, I feel the hon. member will have gathered, especially from the reaction of the voters in Saint John, that the people are quite satisfied with the progress being made.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask a supplementary question. Since I am not responsible for the government of the whole province of New Brunswick, does the minister think this plan is working in New Brunswick?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PROVISION OF SAFETY DEVICES ON CANADIAN AUTOMOBILES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Now that the list of safety devices to be included on government purchased cars has been released it has been reported that the government has decided to consider legislation requiring the same devices on cars purchased by the general public. My question is to the Minister of Industry. Is the government now considering such legislation requiring safety devices on cars purchased by the general public?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the government has under active consideration a very comprehensive report made by a committee of persons well informed in matters of automobile safety and the practical steps that might be taken, given the solution of constitutional and other problems in Canada, with a view to improving automobile safety in Canada.

Mr. Grafftey: My supplementary question is, now that the government has published a list of government standards is legislation being considered by the government with regard to automobiles purchased by the public?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Grafftey: Is legislation being considered by the government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATURAL GAS

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—SUGGESTED TWINNING OF LINE IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I have a question for the Minister of Mines, Energy and Resources. The question arises out of a story in this morning's Globe and Mail entitled "Trans-Canada faces prolonged hearing". In view of the fact that this article outlines the strong possibility of at least a two year delay in any action on the present government approved pipe line, is the minister prepared to announce to the house that the government is going to insist that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines stop playing cat and mouse with their Canadian customers and start immediately on the twinning of their present line?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as asked is not acceptable.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I should like to have it debated at ten o'clock.

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice.

Could the hon. minister tell us whether his department intends to exercise its prerogative of absolute pardon in the case of a person who has committed only one offence during his life?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is out of order.

Mr. Simard: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF TOURIST INDUSTRY IN DESIGNATED AREA GRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I have a question for the Minister of Industry. Can the minister tell us when the studies currently being conducted by his department into the broadening of the scope of the designated area grants to include the tourist industry will be completed?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the analysis is presently under intensive preparation. I hope that within a month or so we might be able to produce some satisfactory basis for consideration of this question.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister if the revision will include the balance of Grey and Bruce counties.

[Mr. Martin (Timmins).]

Mr. Drury: I will take that under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

EDUCATION

REPORTED HOLIDAYS IN BERMUDA BY STUDENTS AT PUBLIC EXPENSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, and I apologize for giving him such short notice. It arises out of a report in the Halifax Herald this morning in which the manpower department has been charged with paying for students' holidays in Bermuda. I wonder if the minister could first of all tell us whether this has been drawn to his attention, and if so what steps his department would be prepared to take to assure Canadians that their tax dollars are not being misused in this fashion.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Marchand: I thank the hon. member for giving me notice. As he said, it was short notice and I did not have time to inquire into the case. I will do so as soon as I can, and perhaps tomorrow I can provide an answer.

Mr. Forrestall: May I ask a supplementary question. Would the minister explain what the applause was about? I did not think the question would attract that much attention.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I have a related question for the minister. I am sure the minister was engaged in activities which prevented him from dealing with the notice he received, and I ask whether as a result of those activities he knows whether he was appointed leader of the federal Quebec party or just leader of the Quebec wing of the Liberal caucus?

INCOME TAX

REPORTING OF EARNINGS OF PART TIME EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is it a fact that employers, when submitting T-4 returns this year must report the first dollar of earnings of all employees?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hales: Would the minister not consider the same exemption that applies under the Canada Pension Plan, that is that anyone who works less than 25 days and earns less than $250 does not have to be reported?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, this is a very difficult question to answer, but basically the problem involved is with respect to the Canada Pension Plan, where one employer might not be aware of how much an employee earned from another employer. We are very anxious that every employee of Canada should receive all the credit he deserves under the Canada Pension Plan.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question. Would the minister not let this exemption apply to transient and part time farm employees?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a representation to the minister instead of asking a question.

[Later:]

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. May I ask the minister whether his department will be sending out books of T-4 slips to all farmers in Canada immediately, so that every time they hire somebody on a casual basis for an hour or two they can get these forms filled in. May I also ask whether, if the information which is required is marked "Not Available", the department will get the necessary information from them?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I think my department is very reasonable in dealing with people, and it does not expect taxpayers to provide information that they cannot possibly provide. With respect to T-4 returns, these are available at all the district taxation offices in Canada. These are the T-4 supplementaries and the summaries.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEEL—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance and is based on a news item appearing in this morning's Globe and Mail which reports that the Steel Company of Canada has increased the price of galvanized sheet by 3 per cent. When this is taken in conjunction with an increase of 2½ per cent last week in the price of cold rolled sheet and the increase last week in hot rolled sheet by Dominion Foundries, I wonder whether the minister would reconsider his position with regard to asking these companies to review their price increases. Second, has the minister made inquiries and received from them any statement of justification for these increases in prices?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government would, of course, have to decide from time to time whether it wished to intervene to ask companies not to increase their prices. In this particular case it is not the intention of the government to do so.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether the government's decision has been based upon the receipt of any reliable information which would justify these price increases?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the government requested the Steel Company of Canada to defer their price increases for a period of six months and other steel companies followed suit. It did not seem to the government that it would be justified in asking this industry to defer any increase for a further period.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether during that six month period following the deferment the government had any study made of the production costs by the steel companies of Canada, and whether their decision not to ask them for a further deferment was based upon such a cost study.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the request to the Steel Company of Canada in the first instance was to defer their price increases in the interests of reducing the rate at which prices and wages were spiralling. They made that contribution, for which I think everyone should be grateful. While, as I say, the government might wish to intervene again at some time, that is not the intention at present.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question. At the time the minister asked the companies to defer their price increases, did he not make the statement that the increase in wages in the steel industry was more than offset by increased productivity in the steel industry?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is argumentative.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which relates to cost of living and prices. Yesterday the government received further representations from a group of ladies. Did the government say they could do anything about the situation, and what remedies did they suggest?

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance in connection with deferment of price increases by steel companies. Does this also apply to nickel companies, particularly the Inco company, which increased the price of its nickel recently?

Mr. Sharp: The Minister of Trade and Commerce and I met with the nickel company some time ago. As a result of our representations the increase in prices announced at that time was, I believe, less than it would otherwise have been.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A further supplementary question. Do I understand from the Minister of Finance that the only consideration the government has in mind in making a decision whether to ask certain enterprises to defer increases in prices is—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is not in order.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is still giving consideration to the establishment of a prices review board.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that matter has been under consideration from time to time, and we will be interested in reports from the parliamentary committee dealing with this matter before a final decision is taken.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING BASE LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that the Republic of Korea has indicated its intention to enter the high seas salmon and other fisheries of the international north Pacific fisheries convention area, which could thus impair or destroy the treaty, will the government take immediate steps to implement the 12-mile limit legislation, especially the establishment of base lines from geographical co-ordinates, for the protection of our salmon and other fisheries resources?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, while there are rumours to the effect that the Republic of Korea may engage in fishing operations on this side of the Pacific, there is nothing definite as yet. I want to assure the hon. member that every precaution will be taken so that no historic rights will be established by that country to fish off the west coast of Canada.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister how he can prevent the Republic of Korea or any other country from establishing historic fishing rights on the high seas when it is already a matter of right that they can fish there?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest this question is argumentative.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

REPORTED PROBLEMS RESPECTING SHORT TERM FARM LABOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. What action does the minister intend to take to meet the reported problem created by the Canada Pension Plan in so far as short term labour for farmers is concerned?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is of a general nature and cannot be asked at this time.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite an urgent matter. A number of farm organizations have been concerning themselves with the matter within the last day or two. Surely the minister has an answer to a problem which has arisen in many areas of this nation and is as pressing as that.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member feels there is urgency and he thinks I am wrong, he can always give notice to discuss the question at ten o'clock.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROVISION OF REPAIR FACILITIES FOR U.S. NUCLEAR SUBMARINES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether he has any plans for alterations at naval dockyards in Canada for the accommodation or repair of United States nuclear submarines.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. They have their own facilities for these repairs. It is not necessary for us to supply them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED RENEGOTIATION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS CONVENTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the conflict which is occurring as a result of the treaties signed by the government of Canada and our Indian people and the Migatory Birds Convention Act, could the Prime Minister say whether consideration is being given to the advisability of asking the United States to renegotiate the migratory birds convention?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I would like to look into this question.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO DUTIES OF MEMBER FOR DAVENPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wonder whether I could try to determine what duties and responsibilities, if any, have been given to the hon. member for Davenport, and so I ask him that question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not acceptable.

Mr. Howard: Then may I direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask the right hon. gentleman whether he recalls when he was on this side of the house complaining bitterly about his inability to direct questions to Newfoundland's Billy Brown.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not possess that kind of total recall.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR INCREASED PAYMENTS TO RURAL MAIL CARRIERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. It relates to the recently announced pay increases for postmasters and their assistants, and to earlier increases to postal clerks and letter carriers. In the light of these increases to post office officials, is the Postmaster General giving serious consideration to allowing commensurate increases to the many thousands of rural route mail carriers?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): These rural route contractors bid for their contracts; they themselves fix the price for the service they give.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Since many of these contracts were negotiated years ago, and having regard to the rise in the cost of living since then, will the Postmaster General give this matter his serious consideration?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): We do, Mr. Speaker. Every two years after the date a contract was issued, the contractor can ask for an increase, and usually we increase the amount paid. Usually contractors should be asked to bid every four years, but if they are doing good work we renew the contract.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, January 17, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last evening we were discussing new section 329 of clause 50 of the bill, with an amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. The amendment is as follows:

That clause 50 be amended by striking out section 329 on pages 41 and 42.

Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Last evening I was saying a few words in support of the amendment. I should like to continue by summarizing as briefly as I can my reasons for thinking it would be detrimental to the position of western farmers if these rates were once again aired.

It appears obvious to me that the minister has gone to great lengths to make a deal with the railways. He has made an arrangement with the railways in which he has offered to give them something and they have offered to give him something in return. They are giving him very little, but under this particular clause we stand to give the railways a great deal. I should like to read what the minister said on this point to show how I reached the conclusion that he has made a deal, particularly with the C.P.R. As reported at page 11601 of Hansard, about half way down the right hand column, the minister said this, talking about the tax immunity granted to the C.P.R.:

> We did make representations to them that this kind of immunity, which had been given in perpetuity, was not really the kind of thing that was very desirable in the twentieth century. The company did say that if they were allowed the kind of scope the government had said they were going to propose to parliament to enable the company to increase railway revenues, then the company would be glad to give up this immunity.

I should like to underline what was being said here. In essence the railway company pointed out that if they were allowed the kind of scope which the government had said it intended to propose to parliament, then the C.P.R. would be prepared to pay taxes on all their land across the prairies including, in particular, a number of cities in western Canada. This very paragraph outlines beyond a shadow of doubt that the hon. gentleman has been making arrangements with the C.P.R. in particular; and as Minister of Transport he would have included the C.N.R. in his arrangements.

I wish to read his words once more in order to make it clear that we have evidence that there was a deal, and that this particular clause was part of the deal. Under this clause we could lose more than is evident today, depending on the finding of the inquiry, and on the extent to which public opinion was aroused. The minister said—and I think this is worth reading again—

> The company did say that if they were allowed the kind of scope the government had said they were going to propose to parliament to enable the company to increase railways revenues—

This would allow the company to pay taxes on all their property, particularly property in some of the western cities. Let me point out that this would amount to something like a million dollars a year in respect of each city out there.

So here is evidence that there was an arrangement, or a deal, made. I like the word "deal" because it suggests to a westerner that deals are sometimes shady. This deal could well be shady if the results of this inquiry come out on the wrong side of the ledger as far as the Crowsnest pass rates are concerned. That is the shady part of it, and I do not like it. I believe it would be much better if this section were to come out.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman has left that subject, would he permit me to say a word about it?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I should like to continue. I want to see this transportation bill through as quickly as I can.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know the hon. gentleman does not wish to misrepresent anything. I would just like to say that the statement of mine which he quoted had reference to the public statements which had been made. It had no reference to anything privately said to any railway company but to the public statement to the effect that we intended to introduce legislation to free the railway rates and permit competition. It had no relation whatsoever, in any shape or form, to the Crowsnest pass rates.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It is all very well for the minister to say that. That is why I prefer to call it a shady deal, because we do not know. Let us strike out this clause.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman; the hon. gentleman and I have had amicable relations so far and I know he does not want to destroy them by questioning my word with regard to something I said myself. I am confident that the hon. member believes that the statement I have just made to the committee is a truthful statement.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am not doubting the minister's word. I am drawing attention to the provision which is included in this bill, the bill now before us. Whether he intended it to be in the bill does not matter. I do not think he did, because he says he did not. But it is in the bill now, and we do not like it. We do not like this section because it now becomes part and parcel of the arrangement the minister made, and it may be detrimental to the western farmer in the years ahead, particularly if public opinion can be aroused against these rates which were set so long ago.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Subsection 1 of the new section reads in part:

> —at the level of rates referred to in subsection (2) and shall report such revenues and costs to the governor in council and the amount of payments necessary, in the opinion of the commission, to assist such railway companies to meet the costs of operations—

Is this concerned with allowing the farmers to get their products to market and affording them equal opportunity to market their products? There is no mention of that, but that is what the Crowsnest Pass rates were intended to do in conjunction with the quota system.

This new section is concerned with the railway companies and that is why I think it was placed in the bill as part and parcel of the arrangement that was made. Some hon. members opposite may wonder why I get a little worked up over something like this, but the Crowsnest pass rates are the Magna Carta of western Canada. We see the thin edge of the wedge in this new section and this is why we are making a determined stand to try to convince the minister that it should be deleted.

I would be the first to say that the minister has really tried to be co-operative, and by this amendment we are urging him to be more co-operative. We will not mind if ten years from now the government and the minister, if he is still Minister of Transport, say: Let us have a review of the Crowsnest pass rates. By that time railway equipment may be modernized and there might be a possibility that the rates might be reduced.

The new section provides that a study of the rates must be completed within three years. What is the use of a three year study when we have just received the MacPherson commission report and that commission could not come to a conclusion on cost figures? As I mentioned in an earlier speech, a start has just been made on the modernization of the railways' grain movement plant. That modernization is only in the embryonic stage. Elevator companies are suddenly becoming concerned about the fact that they will have to build bigger elevators, and the railway companies are concerned about their outdated handling equipment.

As recorded at page 13 of the proceedings of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines of 1964-65, the former president of the C.N.R., Donald Gordon, said:

Yet, despite the fact that there have been many radical and fundamental changes in western Canada's economy since those explosive years, the system of grain handling established before the first world war—the collection, storage and transport of the prairie grain crop—has changed very little.

He went on to day:

Many of the existing country elevators are now well below the optimum size for the best economic costs of operation and also for the most economic cost of trans-shipment by railways.....The second factor involves the economies that can be obtained through a program of elevator consolidation that would eliminate those existing elevators that are operating well below the size required to ensure lowest cost operation.

The proposed three year study will not be able to take into account the fact that the railways' equipment is outdated.

Because the Crowsnest pass rates were first established in 1898 and reaffirmed in 1925 there is a good deal of feeling across the country that they are outdated and must be increased. But as I pointed out previously, the cost of moving a cubic yard of dirt has not gone up because of automation. New, huge equipment has made the moving of earth more economic than by the old horse and slip method. Slow progress has been made in modernizing grain transport equipment, and if it were modernized possibly the rates could be lowered. But such prejudice has been generated against the rates that I believe it would be difficult to place any group of men on the board of review who had not already formed an opinion about them. How could such a group judge the rates if they have already subconsciously prejudged them?

From private conversations with members of the government I know that many of them have said, "You know very well that the rates are outdated and must be raised." I say they have formed opinions without any real study of the problem, and the general feeling is that the rates must be raised.

The Minister of Transport has guaranteed that as long as he occupies that position the rates will not be touched in any way. But that is no real guarantee. His parliamentary secretary, who may have aspirations to become minister of transport, gave plenty of evidence at three or four committee meetings of his feeling that the rates are outdated and should be raised. How do we know he will not be the next minister of transport? Someone says that is doubtful. For myself I say I hope he is not.

My sixth point is that the Crowsnest pass rates could provide a sizeable profit for the railroads if it were not for the quota system, but that has become part and parcel of the rates and should be maintained. The rates and the quota system are essential to give farmers equal rights to market their products.

Let us look briefly at the question of whether or not the railways are losing money. Before the freeze was placed on railway freight rates, which situation will continue to apply until this bill is passed, if railways wanted to increase freight rates they had to apply to the Board of Transport Commissioners for permission. They had to prove that they were losing money, that they were not getting a proper return on their investment, and if they did that they could then apply a horizontal freight rate increase. I may have given an abbreviated description of the process, but that is what railways had to do when they wished to increase freight rates.

Let us look at the question and go back to the year 1957. The railways said they were losing money in the movement of grain. In 1958 a freeze on freight rates was imposed. In 1957 and 1958 the railways said that they were using the profits made in the movement of other goods to cover the losses sustained in the movement of grain. The freeze on freight rates has continued since that time and the railways have not been able to increase them. The movement of grain has doubled, freight rates have been frozen, but what has hapened? Railway profits have continued to rise. Even the C.N.R., which has a huge debt hanging over its head on which it has to pay interest, has been able to widen the difference between their operating costs and their total revenue. How can they come before parliament and say that this new section is necessary and that we should re-examine this aspect?

Another objection I have to this provision is that it states that the commission shall inquire into the revenues and costs. Then farther along in the subsection we see the words "and shall report such revenues and costs to the governor in council". There is no mention, as was the case in respect of Bill C-120, of what these costs are. Are these costs to be compensatory costs or the total cost which takes in all the fixed costs? There is no mention of this in the subsection.

In other words, if the commissioners saw fit to do so they could represent to the governor in council that the railways needed a marginal mark-up of another 30 per cent to cover the total of fixed and variable costs. Anyone who understands the principle of volume hauling understands that the greater the volume the less the charge for fixed costs. There is no mention of this in this section, but in the old bill there was mention of variable costs plus a $9 million expenditure toward fixed costs.

I have another point to make in respect of my request that this section be deleted. Who is going to speak? The railways will present their facts to the board of review and the board will have to judge whether or not their costs have been met and how much the subsidy should be. The board will have to decide how much it should allow for fixed costs and how much it should allow for variable costs. Who will present the other side of the argument? In any court case both sides of the argument are heard. Who is going to rise and speak for the prairie farmers? The minister might say that the pools, the provincial governments or any other interested party will. But is that enough? An interested party may not feel that it is his responsibility to spend $1½ million. This is the amount the Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan governments spent in respect of the MacPherson commission.

Are we going to expect the Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan governments to spend another $1½ million and again bring in from the United States experts such as Mr. Borts and Mr. Williams? These two experts have already presented a brief but I imagine they would be prepared to do a costing study again if the provincial governments wished to hire them. This government is putting the prairie provinces immediately on the defensive. That is the reason I urge the minister to reconsider the decision he made last night that this section shall remain and that we shall vote on it. I urge the minister to wipe it out. Already the minister has been successful in taking our suggestions and having them redrafted. Let us change this three-year period to ten years. Let us include in the bill a phrase to the effect that the Crowsnest pass rates will extend until 1975.

The Chairman: Order. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak at length because I am going to try to accept the excellent advice given me more than once by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. There are, however, a couple of specific questions raised by the hon. gentleman which I really ought to answer before a vote is taken, if it is the intention that there should be a vote on this clause. The first question the hon. gentleman asked concerned what guarantee there is that the Crowsnest pass rates will continue. He said he believed that as long as I was the Minister of Transport they were quite safe. I thank him for that expression of confidence. But these rates are in the law; they cannot be changed unless a majority of members of parliament are convinced that the law should be changed. That is the guarantee. Surely that is much better than a guarantee from me. I can also assure the hon. gentleman that my parliamentary secretary is more likely to go to the other place before I do, so I do not think he need worry about that particular problem.

In respect of the review I should like to say that the review is not of the rates. There is to be no review of the rates. If there should be a suggestion that there be a review of the rates I would vote against any such proposal. There is to be no review whatsoever of the rates; they are guaranteed in the present law and they are guaranteed in this bill. All that is to be reviewed is the cost in respect of carrying the grain. The reason this is in the bill, instead of the provision to pay the railways which was in Bill C-120, is that I am not convinced the railways should get anything. I am not convinced the railways are not making money from carrying grain. Therefore I would not put anything in this bill which in effect would ask parliament to pay them anything. All I have said is that we want to get the facts, that we should not pay them anything for three years. At the end of the three years, if the facts show that there is a loss then all this section says is that the commission should report to the governor in council and recommend that he take such action as he may see fit to take. It does not say that the loss shall be paid.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: In the review it would be difficult to determine the accuracy of fixed costs. You cannot ascertain properly whether grain is being carried at too low or too high a rate. Is not the weakness of the review the fact that you cannot really review anything. The railways—and I have appeared before boards—always say that fixed costs are allocated.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact the railways will not do that; the commission will do it. The commission will be appointed by the government. There is also the implication that the governor in council would ask parliament to make good the loss. Therefore the Minister of Finance will be a party on the other side. The farmers will not have to do this because the farmers rights are guaranteed in the bill. The person who will have an interest on the other side will be the Minister of Finance, and the commission will know that. They will know, if they find there are losses, that there will be an implication that these losses should be met out of the treasury.

Any government with any sense of responsibility will see to it that every submission made by the railways to this commission is subject to the utmost scrutiny. No minister of finance likes to pay subsidies to the railways or anybody else and then have to make himself and his government unpopular by imposing taxes. This, I think, is the real basis of the thing.

The hon. member asked who would speak on the other side. I say that it will be the Minister of Finance; it will also be the Minister of Transport. He is not the agent of the railways; he is the agent of the people of Canada. It is his duty and it is the duty of the Minister of Finance to protect the treasury. No government, with so many other ways of spending the taxpayers' money, will want to pay a nickel in subsidies to the railways unless they are thoroughly justified.

This bill gives a better guaranty to the farmers if section 329 is left in than if it is left out. With this section in the bill there is no reason for anybody to agitate to change the Crowsnest rates.

The railways will know that after three years the facts will be reviewed by somebody who is impartial, and if there is in fact a loss it would seem reasonable justice that it be made up. The railways therefore will have no motive to agitate to have the rates changed. If we have no provision for such a review, if we say we do not think it is necessary to have it, I suggest that the railway companies would, and probably quite justifiably, continue agitation. The fear that because this review will take place there will be agitation—and this is my opinion—is misplaced. If we had no review I think the railways would constantly agitate to have such a review. But if they know it will be held and if they know that this law safeguards these rights, as I have said a dozen times I do not think that any government I can foresee, not even—

An hon. Member: Be careful.

Mr. Pickersgill: —an N.D.P. government, in the unlikely event that we have one, would touch the Crowsnest rates.

An hon. Member: What about the hon. member for Lapointe?

Mr. Pickersgill: I agree completely with the view that these rates are there and they are there to stay. The whole philosophy of the bill is that if in the national interest we ask the railways to perform certain functions they are entitled to perform those at a compensatory level. If we say they must do so at a level that is not compensatory, but it is still in the public interest to have it done, the railways should receive reasonable compensation for it. This does not provide compulsory compensation. They can come back to parliament—

Mr. Schreyer: Would the hon. minister permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Schreyer: Does the minister not concede that even if this section were not in the bill the commission could make a study of the economic aspects of the Crowsnest rates under clause 15, which has already been passed?

Mr. Pickersgill: It would not be the same kind of review. If the hon. gentleman looks at clause 15 and the provisions set forth there, he will see it deals primarily with research.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This section singles out the farmer. The government is singling out the farmer.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I should say a word about that. It does single out the farmers. It says that the wheat farmer alone, or almost alone, of all the shippers in Canada shall have a fixed rate. In practically all other instances, though there are a few which have been temporarily frozen for one or two years, the railways may change rates so long as they have them high enough to be compensatory and below a certain maximum established to protect the public. We are saying that the grain farmers—and this includes more than wheat because all grains are specified here—alone are guaranteed a fixed rate that will not be changed. In that sense they are singled out.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister permit another question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps when I have finished. We are saying that if it is proven that because of that fixed rate there is a loss it will be competent to ask parliament to make up that loss. It is not as though we are leaving it up to the railways; the railways would have to earn the loss or make it good somewhere else. The view that Mr. MacPherson took, and I share it with him, is that other freight shippers should not be expected to bear the losses in carrying freight for just some shippers. We say that if there are losses—there probably will not be—and if parliament says, you must carry these goods at that rate even though there is a loss, those losses should be borne by the community and not by some other group of shippers. That is the whole purpose of this part and it seems to me that it represents essential justice.

Mr. Nasserden: Would the minister tell us whether he made a deal with the railways?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know how many times I need to say that I made no deal with the railways or anybody else. I made a statement to parliament that we intended to introduce legislation to enable the railways to compete, to allow them to charge freight rates within a certain maximum and minimum. They would set their rates as other businesses do. That was not a deal. That was a statement of public policy.

Mr. Nasserden: Would the minister tell us why he put this section in the bill?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. I shall be glad to say so again. I put it in the bill because in the previous bill and in the bill drawn up by the previous government it was proposed to pay to the railways certain sums set out in the MacPherson report for the losses on the Crowsnest rates. An expensive royal commission, with one dissenter, said there were losses. The previous government drew up a bill which was never introduced. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre was correct when he said that since it was never introduced I have no right to presume it would have been introduced. I accept that. But the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the former prime minister told us they had a bill ready to be introduced. That bill contained a provision that the railway would be paid for losses on the Crowsnest rates. I introduced a similar bill in 1964 and I am glad it did not pass. It would have been a great mistake to put in that provision. I do not think losses have been proven and that is why I changed it. That is why I took out the part dealing with payment to the railways and changed it to provide for an inquiry and review by an independent commission. That is why it is there. It is there for no other reason.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, the minister indicated that he thought there had been a change of circumstances in the intervening period. If he really believes that, why put this section in the bill?

Mr. Pickersgill: Because it seemed to me just simple justice to do that. It seemed to me that if a royal commission says there are losses and you refuse to accept their verdict while basing most of your legislation on their report, it is not unreasonable to say that instead of my believing something or someone else believing something we should find out the ascertainable facts. It would be quite wrong to accept the railways view of this matter; I quite agree with that. But I do not think the railways should be excluded from presenting their case any more than anyone else.

Mr. Woolliams: Let us vote on it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think we will not by further discussion change each other's views very much, and perhaps we should now settle the question since it has been put before us by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and other hon. members and eloquently supported. Let us have a vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Transport said, I hope facetiously, that if there was a New Democratic Party government even they would not dare change the Crowsnest pass rates.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think I said they would not dare; I said I did not think they would.

Mr. Douglas: Well, the minister says he does not think we would change those rates. I should like to point out to him that of course the New Democratic Party, and the C.C.F. before it, have been among the staunchest supporters of maintaining the Crowsnest pass rates because we have always believed that the shippers of grain, selling as they do in the world market and buying in a closed, protected market, are entitled to whatever assistance the Canadian people can give them to ship their goods to world markets at reasonable prices. We also believe that the railways, by virtue of the tremendous assistance given to them by way of tax exemptions, land grants and financial subsidies, can quite well afford to accept these rates as being fair and equitable for shipping grain.

This question has been the subject of discussion for decades. It was discussed before the Duff commission, the Turgeon commission and the MacPherson commission. Naturally the farmers of western Canada are very sensitive about anything which might affect the Crowsnest pass agreement.

I must say that this section does not in any way endanger the Crowsnest pass rates agreement, but I am not convinced by the minister's argument as to why he has placed section 329 in the bill. I do not understand why he has provided for an inquiry by the commission within three years, to look into the question of whether the railways are losing money because of the Crowsnest pass rates, and has required them to report to the governor general in council whether some compensation should be paid to the railways. I do not know why parliament should be asked to do this. If at any time the government made a study and decided that compensation was warranted, it could always bring this matter to parliament. Also, the commission itself may make a study any time it chooses or the railways I presume, could make application for a hearing in order to present a case for some type of compensation. But why this parliament should be asked to instruct the commission to carry on a study, the purpose of which is to compensate the railways if it can be proven that they are suffering loss as a result of these grain rates, really escapes me. All it can do is arouse the fears of the prairie farmers.

There are two points I wish to make to the minister. The first is that while this inquiry will not have to do with rates, nevertheless the farm organizations of the prairie provinces will naturally be concerned about the decision reached by the commission on this question. The railways will, of course, ask for the right to appear. They have probably the best experts on transportation and cost accountants in Canada. Who is going to present the other side of the case? To some extent the commission is the referee and acts for both sides.

I can tell the minister from experience in hiring people to appear before the Turgeon commission, and later the MacPherson commission, that the governments of the prairie provinces actually had to go outside of Canada to get top-flight cost accountants and economists in this field, because all the experts are either hired by the railroads or hold a brief for the railroads. It is a very expensive proposition. Who is going to present the case for the thesis which the minister has already expressed and with which I agree, namely, that the railroad are not losing money on the Crowsnest pass agreement? Who will do the cost accounting, who will do the analyses, which will be tremendous, in order to present that case?

The minister says that the government has a stake in this matter and will be very anxious, of course, not to have a recommendation calling for a subsidy because it will have to ask parliament to approve that recommendation. This is only partly true. The long-term result of parliament being asked year after year to pay substantial subsidies to the railways in order to compensate them for carrying grain for export at statutory rates will be public pressure for a change in those rates.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is exactly the point we raised.

Mr. Woolliams: That pits the farmers against the rest of the people of Canada.

Mr. Douglas: This will not only be a matter of the government asking parliament to vote money; it will be a matter of asking the taxpayers of Canada to fork over money for what will be interpreted in the public mind as a subsidy to the wheat growers of western Canada. This will be the beginning of tremendous pressure upon whatever government is in office to alter the rates so the taxpayers will not be required to make what may be a very large financial contribution to the railways.

This is what is worrying the farmers of western Canada. This is what will worry the governments of the prairie provinces. This is why someone would have to appear before the national transportation commission and do their best to prove that the railways do not require compensation and are in fact adequately paid under the statutory rates. But who is going to do this? As has already been said, the governments of the prairie provinces spent $1½ million preparing and presenting their case to the MacPherson commission over the period of time that commission was sitting. I know that very large sums of money were spent in respect of the Turgeon commission hearings. Second, I do not think that either the provincial governments or the prairie pools should be required to carry this burden.

I have been sitting here trying to give the minister every possible chance to convince me that there is some merit in keeping this section in the act. I have already conceded that it does not jeopardize the Crowsnest pass rates. Therefore I am completely at a loss to understand why parliament should order the commission within three years to make an inquiry into whether or not the railways are losing money and, if they are, to recommend to the government what payments should be made to them. If the government wants to accept its own responsibility for having an investigation and if, as a result of that investigation, it wishes to recommend to parliament that compensation be paid to the railways, that is their business, but I see no reason why the government should ask parliament to require the commission to make this study and this report which would enable it to say later that it was parliament which ordered the investigation and made it necessary for the government to require financial votes by the House of Commons in order to compensate the railways.

If the government wants to follow the course of action outlined by the minister it should do so on its own responsibility. It should not ask parliament to set out a course of action which it is not parliament's responsibility to lay down. That is the responsibility of the government.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to prolong the debate but I want to add one or two words to what my leader has just said. In answer to a question by the hon. member for Springfield the minister said that clause 15 does not give the commission authority to make an inquiry.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. member could not have heard me correctly. I said it did not give the commission authority to make the kind of inquiry that is envisaged in this section.

Mr. Lewis: I just wish to say that the section which is before us is composed of two parts; one is the inquiry and the other is the recommendation for payment. So far as the inquiry is concerned I respectfully suggest that if it should ever be considered necessary the power to set it up is already contained under clause 15(1) of the bill, paragraphs (a) and (e) which read as follows:

> (a) inquire into and report to the minister upon measures to assist in a sound economic development of the various modes of transport over which parliament has jurisdiction;
> (e) inquire into and report to the minister upon possible financial measures required for direct assistance to any mode of transport and the method of administration of any measures that may be approved;

It is also contained under other subclauses of clause 15. I suggest that the real reason why section 329 is in the bill is in order to have a provision in the bill carrying the implication which the minister admitted it carried, namely, that eventually there will be a charge on the treasury for any losses that may be proven.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is correct.

Mr. Lewis: It is that implication to which I object, even though I do not represent a western constituency. I do not know whether there have been any losses but I submit that even if the railways could prove losses it does not necessarily follow that they would be entitled to compensation. The statutory rates are there.

The other day the minister spoke about the sanctity of the contract when I said that the C.P.R. should be made to pay its municipal taxes. May I remind the minister that the same contract and the same total picture exist today wherein the Crowsnest pass rates were granted at the time of the building of the C.P.R.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was not the same contract.

Mr. Lewis: No, but it is part of the story that in return for financial grants and other concessions made by the people of Canada grain was to be carried at the statutory rate which was established in 1897 or 1898. The reason I object to section 329, in addition to the other arguments which have already been put forward, is that if the railways were to prove, by the kind of calculations I have known the railways to use in such cases, not before transport boards but before boards of conciliation and arbitration, that they suffered losses it would not necessarily follow that they would be entitled to any compensation.

Everybody is anxious to have the vote, and so am I. However, let me emphasize that under the bill the commission has the power to institute an inquiry if it wishes to do so, but I object to writing into the act an implication that we would pay the railways any additional subsidies.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Churchill) agreed to: Yeas, 59; nays, 58.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment carried.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before we proceed any further I will have to ask that clause 50 of the bill be stood because certain implications are contained in the amendment which hon. gentlemen opposite might not wish to see in the clause. I am afraid that, without further amendments to the bill, the Crowsnest pass rates would no longer be fully guaranteed, as I pointed out last night, although no one seemed to pay much attention to me when I did. The definition of grain is contained in new section 329 and hon. gentlemen have removed it by the amendment which they brought in. I do not imagine that this was their intention in moving this amendment. Perhaps we could allow clause 50 to stand and go on to some other clause. Then I could give consideration to what the effect of the amendment would be and perhaps have something drafted that would ensure that hon. gentlemen opposite, by their votes, have not destroyed the Crowsnest rates.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that clause 50 shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Forrestall: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but while we are still on clause 50 I wanted to ask the minister whether or not we could deal with the proposed section 329A which is not affected by the amendment. Will the minister agree to standing that part of clause 50 affected by the amendment and perhaps permit us to discuss the other proposed section?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the committee did agree not to go on with clause 50 and I would prefer to stick with that decision. The committee could go on with other clauses. I really believe I am entitled to some time to give consideration to this matter in the light of the vote.

Mr. Forrestall: I am referring to proposed section 329A. I asked the minister if it would not be in order to agree to stand that part of clause 50 affected by the amendment but allow us to deal with proposed section 329A.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sorry, I was interrupted and I did not hear the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. Forrestall: I am wondering whether the minister would agree to stand that part of the clause affected by the amendment, and does he agree it would be all right to raise certain matters related to proposed section 329A?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know whether there is something wrong with the system but I cannot make out what the hon. gentleman is saying. I cannot hear him.

Mr. Forrestall: Perhaps there is something wrong with the system. All I am asking is whether or not we cannot at this time deal with certain aspects of proposed section 329A which, while it is imbedded in clause 50, is in no way affected by the amendment just passed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had asked that clause 50 stand and the committee agreed. I think we would make more progress if we were to go on with the other clauses and come back to this one after I am able to consider the implications of the vote just taken by the committee.

Mr. Olson: Before we agree to standing clause 50, there are one or two things about it that are disturbing to me. I should like to make these comments now because the minister is going to reflect upon what has happened.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Clause 50 has either been allowed to stand or it has not.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would agree that the clause has been allowed to stand and we will come back to it later?

Mr. Olson: I am not too late to speak. I think it requires agreement in the committee to stand this clause.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It was agreed.

Mr. Olson: I have tried to get the floor for some time.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not believe there was agreement to stand clause 50 because the hon. member for Halifax rose to speak and now the hon. member for Medicine Hat desires to speak before the committee has adopted the order deferring the clause.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, there was agreement that the clause stand. The minister stood up and asked for agreement and agreement was given.

The Deputy Chairman: There was no agreement because the hon. member for Halifax made certain observations on clause 50.

Mr. Forrestall: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to speak but simply to ask the minister a question.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Sherman: When the hon. member for Halifax asked his question the minister replied that the clause had been stood.

The Deputy Chairman: With reference to the remarks of the hon. members, I do not believe the clause was allowed to stand. Having listened to the hon. member for Halifax, I think we should listen to the hon. member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Olson: I do not want to make it difficult for you, Mr. Chairman, and I am in favour of allowing the clause to stand after I have asked the minister a couple of questions.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): It will be wide open then if we go on with it. There are no special rules.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member for Saint John-Albert—

Mr. Sherman: If the clause has not been stood, then the hon. member for Halifax should have the floor.

The Deputy Chairman: If the hon. member for Halifax wishes to speak after the hon. member for Medicine Hat he will be able to do so.

Mr. Olson: As I was about to say, because of what has recently happened there are a couple of things that are disturbing with respect to what is going to happen to this bill. I refer the minister to the amendment that was made and to the fact that proposed section 329A deals with flour moving for export through eastern ports. It appears to me that this movement is dependent upon a part of proposed section 329. When one looks at the meaning of grain and grain products it appears that the definition of grain is carried over into clause 329A. Of course there is a definition of flour; it means flour milled from grain.

I wanted to ask the minister, since he is going to review what has taken place and substitute something for proposed section 329, to give consideration to how much relationship there is between proposed section 329A and all these subsequent proposed sections, and the deleted section 329. I can see that it is going to be a difficult task to tidy up all the legal wording in this part of the bill so that there will be some protection for the Crowsnest rates. Unless something is substituted for one portion of the deleted section 329, there is going to be difficulty. As I said, I am concerned about what can be done to make the language do what we all want it to do, provide a definition of flour, a definition of grain and maintain the protection under the Crowsnest rates.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it unanimously agreed that clause 50 be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

Clause 51 agreed to.

On clause 52—

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to get one of my colleagues to propose an amendment to clause 52. This amendment is made because of representations that were received at the time the standing committee was meeting and further representations that have been made since, particularly from the mining association and some other interests. Representations were made that ten days was an unreasonably short time to allow for consideration before the new rates came into force. I came to the conclusion that this argument was sound and that it would not impose any great hardship on the railways or seriously interfere with their competitive position if it was changed from 10 days to 30 days. In conformity with this view I would hope that my colleague the Postmaster General would be good enough to move the following amendment. I leave out all the verbiage; the relevant words are "least thirty days before its effective date", which I would ask to have substituted on line 7 of page 45 for the ten days, as now appears.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I so move.

The Deputy Chairman: It has been moved by the Postmaster General:

That Bill C-231, an act to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions, be amended by striking out line 7 on page 45 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"least thirty days before its effective date".

Mr. Ormiston: Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that the minister has seen fit to have this amendment moved. I think it is pretty obvious that the ten day period is far too short under almost any circumstances. I know that representations have been made by various organizations in this connection, and I am particularly concerned about the mining industry, especially the potash mining industry in Saskatchewan.

The minister appreciates the fact that 90 per cent of the products of this company is shipped overseas and that sometimes long-term contracts are entered into. Contracts for two to five years are not unusual. If tariffs change and only ten days' notice is provided, surely this is insufficient. The minister will also appreciate that in these situations even 30 days might not be long enough. Negotiations have to be entered into with Canadian shippers and 30 days might not be a sufficient period to make the required adjustments.

I appreciate that this amendment is an improvement on the ten days now in the bill, but let me point out that in addition to the potash industry the pulp industry of Saskatchewan is also affected. Both industries are sending their products overseas and the market is very sensitive to fluctuations. When prices change the companies are placed in a very tight position vis-à-vis competitors. To have to find alternative means of transportation in the cases I have mentioned is impossible. These companies should be given even more than 30 days to adjust their prices or find alternative means of shipment.

I would certainly appreciate it if the minister would give this matter some consideration. The potash industry in Saskatchewan is only in its infancy and can make a great impact on the economy. The pulp industry of Saskatchewan is in its inceptive stages and the contracts entered into by the company were for a given price over a given period at specified rates. Certainly it would seem only fair, if there is to be any adjustment in rates with a consequent adjustment in over-all price, that sufficient time should be given these companies to negotiate a fair rate so that the price to the customer will yield that profit to the producer which was anticipated when the contract was made.

I cannot say very much more about this topic. It is up to the minister to give it consideration in whatever manner he sees fit. He has been very co-operative in the past and I hope that he will see fit to extend the 30 day period to 90 days so that the companies concerned will be given every opportunity to make the necessary adjustments.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister whether the period of 30 days was in the original act?

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course, Mr. Chairman, the position is not quite the same. The whole situation has changed. There was a 30-day provision in the old act with respect to certain rates.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I do not have complete information but it strikes me that under this clause Canadian shippers are the ones who are being asked to bear the main brunt and will have to make the most serious adjustments. I am wondering whether even 30 days is enough.

Mr. Pickersgill: This would not, of course, have any relation to the maximum rate formula because an application could be made to apply the maximum rate formula at any time.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, my argument is this. A great deal has been made by the government about there being free negotiations on the part of Canadian shippers and the railways. I for one at first glance like this argument, but in view of the fact that the minister has been making quite a lot of this point about free negotiation and discussion and preserving the free enterprise nature of things, I for the life of me cannot understand why there is no agreement to give these people a longer period to adjust.

It could be that 30 days will satisfy the large bulk shippers who evidently are going to be affected by this clause. However, it is the same old case of the minister using an argument to support a particular amendment and reversing himself when another amendment comes along. In other words, if the principle that there should be free discussion and negotiation about these particular rates for the large bulk shippers is right, similarly there should be considerable time allowed for negotiation and ample opportunity given to adjust to these various tariff increases.

Mr. Pickersgill: This question would not relate to any discussions. The railways would be able to carry on any discussions with any shipper at any time. This is the rate that the railways set. The rates are set and we provide that they cannot come into effect for 30 days in order to give shippers adequate recourse under clause 16. That is really what the effect of it will be.

It was represented to me that the 10-day period prescribed was too short. After giving the matter careful consideration I came to the conclusion that it would not be unreasonable, and would not really seriously impair the competitive position of the railways, if this change was made, though I do not think the railways are going to like this one bit. This seemed to be a reasonable proposition, which is why I have brought the amendment forward.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I point out that I do not think the minister deserves a great deal of credit because this provision is the same as the original one. The minister has made no change from the original act which prescribed 30 days. The minister tried to reduce it to 10 days and got caught in the act so he is now going back to 30 days.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure I understand this very clearly. Let me say at the outset, however, that increasing the period from 10 days to 30 days is certainly an improvement. It will give shippers sufficient time to comprehend that they will be faced by an increase in the rate. The minister told us that a shipper could appeal to the commission under clause 16. I want to ask him this question. Will the commission have power to suspend or freeze a rate in cases where an application is made by a shipper under clause 16? Commonsense tells us it would not be possible for a shipper to present himself before the commission for a hearing within the 30 days and for the commission to consider all the circumstances involved. It seems to me that more time will be needed and that within the 30 days the shipper might be required only to inform the commission. Would the commission have authority to prevent an increase in rates until the shipper had been heard?

Mr. Pickersgill: It would have the authority to do so but it is not directed to do so. It could do so if it thought fit.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 53—

Mr. Pickersgill: Once more I have an amendment to offer. There were representations made, at the time the standing committee was holding its hearings, with respect to certain lumber rates. The lumber rates are extremely complicated and I did not have the opportunity to consider all the implications of the suggestions made at that time.

The amendment relates to the freezing of certain rates in the select territory—the Atlantic provinces and the Gaspé Peninsula. There are two kinds of lumber rates, it appears. There are competitive rates which have a relationship to rates in northern Ontario and there are certain non-competitive rates. It is not my intention to recommend that something which was not frozen under the old law should suddenly be frozen now, and I do not believe any hon. member would expect me to do so. But these non-competitive rates appear to have been overlooked in the drafting and the amendment I now offer would have the effect of freezing the non-competitive rates on lumber.

There will be no effect at all on the relationship with northern Ontario rates, something I would be loath to disturb because they are based on a competitive situation, and one does not want to be unjust to either region. This amendment would strike out line 44 on page 46 and and substitute the following:

Rates for lumber.

(3) A commodity rate (other than a competitive rate) that was in effect on the 12th day of December, 1966, for a movement of lumber between points in Canada one of which is, or both of which are, within the "select territory" as defined by sections 2, 7 and 12 of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, shall be the rate in effect therefor after the coming into force of this section and shall continue to be the rate therefor notwithstanding anything in this act or any other act.

(4) Subsections (1) to (3) shall be in—

This amendment does precisely what I said should be done and I will ask my colleague, the Postmaster General, to move it.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I so move.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Things are moving quickly and I must admit I cannot keep up. I take it that the two-year freeze the minister mentioned is part of the two-year freeze connected with particular groups of rates which we shall be considering when we come to a later clause. The minister wishes to make an exception, if I understood him correctly, because of competition in northern Ontario. If my impression is correct, this does not bother me. But what are the reasons for the additional amendment?

Mr. Schreyer: Does this amendment apply only to the area covered by the Maritime Freight Rates Act? I take it the amendment has nothing to do with any other area in the country?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is correct. As the hon. gentleman knows, these rates were frozen for two years because the MacPherson commission lacked time to deal with certain problems in the Atlantic area, particularly with regard to the Maritime Freight Rates Act. Subsequently, with the agreement of the governments of the four Atlantic provinces the federal government instituted a study of transport in the area, and we expect to receive a report soon. It was felt that when the report of that study was complete there might be a need for substantial legislation to deal with this problem and that in the meantime it was only fair and reasonable to maintain the freeze on those rates which have previously been frozen in the select territory.

Amendment agreed to.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I take it that the minister wishes to continue examination of the new sections contained in this clause in sequence. Many hon. members on this side have made a particular study of this clause and wish to speak on it. Would it not be advisable to stand the clause for the present? We were prepared to speak this afternoon on the port parity matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I have been very considerate of hon. gentlemen opposite at all stages. It is not unreasonable to proceed consecutively with these new sections, unless problems arise with respect to amendments such as the one that arose with respect to clause 50 on which, obviously, I shall have to seek some advice before being able to proceed. If a situation of that sort should arise with respect to clause 53 I would be in the hands of the committee. But since many of the subsequent clauses depend upon these new sections, these new sections were put in a certain order and I would appreciate very much if we could deal with them consecutively.

Mr. Olson: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, are we going to deal with new sections 334, 335 and 336 in sequence or will the debate range back and forth among them?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be quite agreeable to meet the general consensus of the committee. I would be agreeable if it were thought more orderly to take each new section, 334, 335, 336 and 337, in sequence as long as it was understood that after we had completed discussion of one we would not go back to it. There is a marked difference in the subject matters of the first three, and new section 337 is just a dependent section.

The Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent to proceed along the line suggested by the minister, namely, to consider each new section consecutively?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Forrestall: I would agree with that if the minister would include another provision, that in the event of subsequent amendments having a bearing on a section which had been discussed we could revert to the previous section.

Mr. Pickersgill: I cannot foresee anything of that sort arising but if an amendment were adopted by the committee that made nonsense of a previous portion of a clause that had been discussed, the minister would have to ask the indulgence of the committee to go back to remove the nonsense.

The Deputy Chairman: Does that complete consideration of new section 334?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now consider new section 335.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to move an amendment to this new section. I am sure the minister will be glad to hear that, but I do want to reiterate some remarks I made on second reading. The Maritime Freight Rates Act is of assistance to the maritimes but, as I stated previously, because of trucking competition and other factors that assistance has been somewhat reduced. New section 335 calls for a two-year freeze on various rates in the maritimes, but what happens after that period of time?

The minister has stated that as long as he is Minister of Transport no action will be taken which will discriminate against the maritimes. That is all well and good but, as I suggested earlier, I would like to see something written into the bill to guarantee that no action would be taken after the specified two-year period which would discriminate against the maritime area.

As has been pointed out by the maritime transportation commission and members of this house, if the Maritime Freight Rates Act is to continue in force it will have to be amended in order to assist our area. I would like to see a provision in the bill stating that after the two-year study is completed no action can be taken by the government of the day until it has referred the matter to parliament. This subject was well covered in an editorial in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of August 31 last year in these words:

> A national transport regulatory agency can be a good thing—if it doesn't set up a stifling red-tape bureaucracy .... A national transportation policy based solely on "compensatory" freight rates (i.e., keeping only profitable lines operating) could do immense harm to the maritimes. So far, Ottawa seems to be keeping this in mind. It will be up to the Atlantic provinces to be sure their interests are protected as parliament legislates in this crucial field.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

I should also like to quote a report which appeared in the Halifax Chronicle Herald of December 6 last year of an address by J. W. E. Mingo, chairman of the Halifax port commission, to an Atlantic ports day conference. Mr. Mingo suggested the establishment of a regional transportation board to protect ports and industries in the Atlantic provinces from the "sinister implications" of pending federal railway legislation. The report continued:

> Mr. Mingo said there were approximately 24 months left before the new legislation would affect the maritimes. He counselled his audience to "use this time wisely" in an effort to ensure that the final bill will contain statutory guarantees to protect "the captive shipper" from crippling freight rates.

He went on to point out, as I have already stated, that rates are governed at present by the Maritime Freight Rates Act and said that the assistance provided by it is designed to place eastern manufacturers and shippers on a price parity basis with their central Canadian competitors. He expressed the fear that the new law would allow the railways to ignore regional economic problems and set rates solely on the basis of costs and profits, as set out in new section 334 and in the bill generally. The Atlantic Development Board has been of great assistance to the maritime provinces but if the benefits which flow from it are nullified by freight rate increases the effect on the area will be tragic.

The subject of port parity will come up for discussion later and at this stage I simply wish to repeat that there should be provision in the bill stating that the maritimes will not be prejudiced after the two-year study is completed. I agree with the minister that we shall have to await the results of that study, and I agree with his amendment to new section 335 and the including of coal and coke within the commodities covered by the two-year freeze. As I said at the outset, I am moving no amendment but I do impress upon the minister the necessity for something to be written into the bill to provide that there will be no discrimination against the maritimes. I impress upon the minister the fact that there is a need for something to be written into the bill. Otherwise, in a few years we may look back and wish that we had included something in black and white rather than relying on something that is in the air, so to speak.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I think I now have my thoughts straightened out. I should like to express some views in respect of the two year freeze. At the beginning of the debate on the bill I recorded my thoughts in respect of clause 1 which deals with the objectives. I said I believed there should be a greater recognition of the statutory authority which exists to deal with transportation problems. In this regard some amendments were made by the minister which were not exactly of the type put forward by the Maritime Transportation Commission. It was, however, a step in the right direction and I felt that those in the maritimes who are concerned about such matters would be much happier.

At the same time, with regard to the two-year freeze I said that I belonged to the one group which felt that it might be better to allow these frozen rates to expire and thereby place the government of the day in the position of being forced to deal with the transportation study and recommendations. I still feel the same way, but there are some members of our group who believe it would be safer not to take a chance on that. They are prepared to include an amendment which in effect would continue the freeze longer than the two-year period. In other words, while I feel the expiry of the two-year freeze would put the government under greater pressure, others are of the opinion that it would be better not to take a chance on the vicissitudes of politics. They feel they should not take a chance on the government of the day acting. They would sooner have half a loaf. I suppose there is the same difficulty in this connection as there was in respect of the amendment we have just dealt with concerning the review of the Crowsnest pass rates, which was successfully resolved in favour of no review.

In connection with this subject I think it is worth while to place on the record some of the discussion which took place during the sessions of the standing committee on transport and communications with regard to these clauses. On Thursday, November 10, the executive manager of the Maritime Transportation Commission was on the witness stand. At that time the deputy minister of transport explained that the maritime freight rates themselves are statutory, and will continue until such time as they are revoked by the parliament of Canada, but that the two-year freeze would of course die a natural death at the end of that period. There would be a considerable period between the end of the freeze and the time when the transportation study would be produced and action taken.

The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings asked a question in this regard which I think has some significance here. He was dissatisfied with or could not understand the minister's statement. He asked Mr. Dickson to explain it. Mr. Dickson said:

> If I may try to explain, I think Mr. Nowlan's concern is that if you repeal any part of the Maritime Freight Rates Act you disrupt the competitive relationship of the maritime shippers with other shippers of Canada. It has been disrupted now, and no part of the act has ever been repealed. If no action were taken to improve the Maritime Freight Rates Act to make it more effective then, under the bill, our situation would just get worse and worse, at a steadily increasing pace. I think this is where the difference of understanding is.

This explains in better language than I can muster at the moment the fears that some persons have about the deterioration of the Maritime Freight Rates Act which is setting in. I am not particularly blaming the government at the moment but it is unfortunate that this study could not have been instituted some time ago so that the recommendations which would have resulted from that study could have been included in this legislation. If I may use the expression, we are really being asked to buy a pig in a poke. We are taking something sight unseen. We do not know the implications of what may come forward at a later time.

It may be that some benefit will accrue to the maritimes from this legislation but I for one have serious doubts. I believe freight rates are going to go up. It was implied even by the witnesses from the railways that freight rates are going to go up as a result of this measure. We know that freight rates are going to go up in the east and the west. While there is some protection in respect of certain rates under the provision we are now discussing, there will be a worsening of the situation for those who have anything to ship from the maritimes. There are not many people today who are in a competitive position in respect of shipping goods from the maritimes even to Canadian markets.

I think we should be very wary of some of the implications, even sinister, in this bill in respect of the position of those in the maritimes. Through the years I have tried to follow and sort out the competitive problems our manufacturers in the maritimes have had. I am certainly of the opinion that this bill will not assist us to any great degree. Having expressed these fears, I think others may have something more to say about the freeze.

Transportation

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, further to the remarks made by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, I should like to emphasize the fears he has expressed and say that I should like to see something in the bill which at least would preserve our position in the maritimes so that we will not find ourselves worse off after the special study under the Maritime Freight Rates Act has been concluded. I hope the minister can accommodate in this section the formal amendment that will be spelled out in detail. Its purpose is to ensure that the maritimes do not lose anything. As the minister said when speaking about the Crowsnest rates, no minister of the crown will take from the west or the maritimes the traditional positions they enjoy. As has already been stated, though we support the principle that the railways ought to be able to derive adequate revenues to make their operations compensatory, and while such a state of affairs presents a desirable and possibly achieveable goal, we must not lose sight of the overriding principle set forth in the proposition that the national transportation system must be used as a meaningful instrument for national development and the development of regions.

The intent of the amendment we wish to move since there is nothing in the general provisions of the freeze to ensure that we shall be better or worse off once the freeze period ends, is to include in the act in specific wording the assurance that after the freeze ends the maritimes will not find themselves at a competitive disadvantage with the rest of Canada. I know how fond the minister is of the maritimes, and I hope he embraces this principle. As we come to subsequent amendments we shall deal in depth with the principle I have enunciated and show how it will have practical application under the legislation once it is passed. I urge the minister, because of the peculiar position of the maritimes in the economy of Canada and in Confederation, to recognize by accepting the amendment the proposition that the people of the maritimes ought not to be left worse off once the freeze period ends.

Mr. Nowlan: I have not participated in the debate because so far our members on this side of the house have talked about matters that concern the west. Now that we are on clause 53 and wish to amend new section 335 we have reached a part of the bill that interests the east. The ending of the freeze as set out in subsection 3 of new section 335 has caused real concern in the east for two reasons. The first of these is unavoidable; it is because this is a new bill. Regardless of the assurances of the minister and everything he has said in the house, the real intent of the bill, the real interpretation to be given to it, will not be evident until decisions are made on different points as they arise. This bill will have to be interpreted in regard to those points on which debate has taken place in the past few days. There must be judicial interpretations with regard to any legislation as fundamental as this which seeks to revolutionalize a basic industry. There must be judicial interpretations to determine exactly what the position is.

Section 335, so far as it concerns a freeze, causes real concern because in the Atlantic provinces there are the beginnings of industrial development. It is embryonic compared with the massive development in other parts of Canada, and it has problems of geography and resources that industries in other areas of Canada blessed with more financial bounty do not have.

One of the most inportant areas of cost in any industry has to do with transportation, and we do not want to be smothered suddenly by transportation costs. We do not want a blanket suddenly put over the transportation cost item, so to speak. Anyone thinking of developing or expanding an industry in the east does not know in which direction he should head, and so far as costs are concerned there is a great deal of uncertainty. Those industries just starting and those which have been there for a long time and are expanding do not know what effect the transportation study will have. Instead of the problem being clarified now we have to wait for two years. At the end of that time our businessmen will still not know where they stand.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman is misinterpreting what the law is with respect to freeze rates being in effect for two years. That does not mean that there need be any delay or that one would inevitably occur. There is no reason, if the study is received in March, why the government should not propose legislative action by October of this year, and certainly by 1968. It would depend on how long it took to prepare the legislation.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister in his official position knows more about the problem than I do but I am concerned about this section.

Making my remarks as brief as possible I ask the minister if he will not consider an amendment to subsection 3 so that the historic position created by the Maritime Freight Rates Act will not be adversely affected regardless of the study. Frankly, at the moment I plan to move an amendment. The amendment I should like the minister to consider would delete subsection 3 of section 335 and substitute therefor the following words:

Subsection (1) shall be in force during the two years after the coming into force of subsection (1) and shall continue in force after the said two years unless, and until, the Maritime Freight Rates Act is amended to retain the historic intent and purpose of providing Atlantic provinces industry access to the markets of Canada without the handicap of distance.

Perhaps the minister can point out many errors in the wording of the amendment, but I should like him to consider it. Frankly, I cannot understand, unless I hear some elucidation from the minister, what harm this amendment will do. It will create some stability and put into the legislation the historic intent of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. I shall not make a longer speech and repeat what other hon. members have said.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would mind letting me look at his amendment and not move it until I have had a chance to discuss it.

Mr. Nowlan: That will be fine. I have only one copy; perhaps I ought to have it retyped. It would take only a moment. It is quite legible.

Mr. Pickersgill: I promise not to destroy it.

Mr. Nowlan: It is not so great a work of art that I could not rephrase it.

Mr. Knowles: It is on the record.

Mr. Nowlan: It is on the record, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said. I should like the minister to consider it and the remarks I have made pertaining to the Maritime Freight Rates Act. If we cannot do this in legislative fashion I should like to speak further on the matter. I know that the minister would like to make progress with the bill. He has been very patient. I think this whole debate has been a classic example of how legislation should be made and refined, even though it has perhaps taken a little longer than some hon. members feel necessary. Those are the remarks I wish to make, Mr. Chairman, subject to the qualification that the minister consider this matter and the reservation that I have the right to reply when he announces his decision. I may not use that right, depending upon what the minister says.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think I would have agreed pretty largely with the last observation of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, especially the complimentary reference to myself, if he had made it about two hours ago, but I doubt that I would be willing any longer to agree that the way this legislation has proceeded is a model of how legislation should proceed. However, I think I had better allow my wounds to smart quietly and deal with the suggestion, if I may call it that, of a possible amendment that has been put forward by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings.

In order to deal at all adequately with the subject matter of the amendment I think I should make two observations. In all the observations made so far with regard to proposed new section 335 I think there has perhaps been a confusion of two things. So far as the Maritime Freight Rates Act is concerned, this bill touches it in no way whatsoever. That act is in exactly the force and effect in which it has been since the amendments were made pursuant to the recommendations of Mr. Walter Harris in his budget in 1957.

What this clause does is carry on the freeze of the railway rates themselves, which freeze has been in force since 1959. That freeze is going to be lifted everywhere west of Lévis, but in the select territory this bill provides that it shall continue for two more years certain. Of course, parliament in its wisdom could extend that period or abridge it if it wanted to do so. If we decided to make some fundamental changes which made the freeze no longer appropraite, this could be done by a future parliament. In other words, we are saying that unless some express change is made so far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned, that is, in the select territory, there will be no change at all in the present situation as a result of this bill, with one relatively minor exception.

In other words, we are saying that because this study is going on, because it is nearly completed, and because in my view we want to stimulate the government, it is better to have this freeze for two years than to have the nagging stimulus that would prevail if the freeze were not in effect. I would be very much afraid, considering that the freeze was put on in 1959 and is still in effect in 1967, that if we did not have any limit on it there might be a disposition to leave the problem dormant and not get on with the job.

We could have done it either way. That is precisely the reason I decided to recommend to parliament that there should be this change. The only respect in which the rates in the maritime provinces in the select territory will be changed at all is that the freeze will not apply to less than carload lots. As hon. members know, the railways are amalgamating express and less than carload lot freight. After the most anxious consideration, the standing committee decided to recommend to the house that we remove the freeze on the freight part of that system. It seemed on balance that this was the best thing to do, and I admit that it was a fine balance. Some of the rates will go up, others will go down. Express rates will go down quite markedly and they will now, of course, come under the general regulatory powers of this legislation.

I came to the conclusion, after examining the best evidence I could obtain, that on balance we would get a better rate structure, more efficiency and more zeal on the part of the railways to handle this traffic well if they were freed than would otherwise be the case. I say this out of a rather long experience of spending my summers in Newfoundland waiting, waiting and waiting for things to arrive. If we can get a real express system for less than carload lots, it will be of far more use to the Atlantic region than freezing some rates that create a disincentive on the part of the railway to move the traffic fast. There are all kinds of people today who ship by air freight to the Atlantic provinces and pay three or four times as much because that is the one way to assure speedy delivery. I am dwelling on this point, Mr. Chairman, because I would not want any hon. member to say I had deceived the committee by leaving it out.

However, this provision for a freeze is there for two years unless parliament decides to do something different. I would hope we would just leave it that way. I do not think the hon. gentleman, in any event, would really want to move this amendment, because I do not think he would want to say that this freeze should be maintained until the Maritime Freight Rates Act is amended. I believe we will have to consider very carefully whether we want to amend the Maritime Freight Rates Act at all, even after the study. I would not want to put any language into this bill that implied some kind of obligation to amend that act. That is the only operative part of the hon. gentleman's amendment. The rest of the wording expresses an intent with which certainly all of us who were elected in constituencies in the select territory heartily agree. But as the hon. gentleman, who unlike me is a learned member of the house, knows, it would have no legislative effect. It simply expresses an intent.

I feel, therefore, that in the form in which it is the hon. member's suggestion might very well lead to a misunderstanding in the Atlantic provinces, namely, that we were trying to commit parliament to amending the Maritime Freight Rates Act. We do not want any pigs in pokes, as the hon. member for Saint John-Albert said a short while ago. I do not think we want to suggest, until we know exactly how it is proposed, any amendment to the Maritime Freight Rates Act. I should not like to put any wording in the bill that implied that there was a sort of tendency to think that the Maritime Freight Rates Act should be amended. Maybe it should be but let us be quite sure before we commit ourselves. For that reason, speaking for myself, I would really rather not amend it at all. An alternative would be simply to strike out subsection (4), as it is now because of the amendment which was already accepted by the committee this afternoon with respect to lumber. I would not like to do that because I would prefer to have it retained as an incentive to the government to get on with the job and deal with the transportation problems of the region. That is the reason it is in here. On balance I would prefer to leave the two-year period knowing full well that parliament will still be in existence at the end of that period and that if we think the freeze is justified we would continue it. I would not want to see any suggestion or implication that the Maritime Freight Rates Act was going to be changed.

Mr. MacEwan: May I ask the minister a question? Did he say that the current study is just about completed?

Mr. Pickersgill: I made inquiries and was told that it was hoped it would be ready by the end of March.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I appreciate the fact that the minister will take another look at this amendment in giving final consideration to the clauses which have been stood.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had not intended that at all. I have said what I intended to say and I hope we would dispose of it one way or another.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): It is up to the mover of the amendment. It may be that the minister's flattery will work better on the maritimers than it did on the western members. I do not know. However, I would like to mention one point which the minister referred to now and again. He said that this legislation has nothing to do with the Maritime Freight Rates Act and therefore we are supposed to sit back and forget about that legislation so far as the maritimes are concerned. I have already said it is unfortunate that we have to consider this legislation without the knowledge to be provided by the transportation study, but I would also point out that all the maritime members are united in believing that our situation must be reviewed every time new transportation legislation which affects the entire country is brought in. I say this because our competitive position with central Canada, the heartland of this country, can be affected drastically to the detriment of the maritimes.

I am sure that the minister is familiar with the traditional case, most of the details of which I have forgotten, to which objection has been voiced by the Maritime Transportation Commission and other bodies. As hon. members know, we ship a lot of potatoes from the maritimes to central Canada. They are good potatoes and we want the business. This operation was being carried out under the Maritime Freight Rates Act. I think the preference amounts to 30 per cent on shipments going outside the maritimes and 20 per cent within the maritimes. Therefore there would be a 30 per cent reduction on potatoes from the maritimes to the competitive central Canadian market. This was satisfactory until, through some method which I do not suggest was illegal, competition brought about a reduction in potato rates within Quebec and Ontario. It is possible that this was acheived through agreed charges or some other method; I do not know. The result was that the 30 per cent reduction became insignificant.

I am demonstrating by this simple, classic example that this legislation does affect the maritimes and that we have a very real responsibility to know where we are going. This is the thought which I should like to leave with the minister with regard to this section. Of course we shall have to consider the clause on port parity seriously when we reach it.

Mr. Nowlan: I certainly support some of the words of the hon. member for Saint John-Albert although I am not prepared to support all that he has said on this section. However, I find myself faced with the same problem with which he has been faced in the last few days, namely, that the minister's explanations are very beguiling. At times, as I listen to him, I am somewhat mesmerized and can understand the people of the east who, while listening to the sounds of a flute, are mesmerized by the movements of a snake in a basket. I am not suggesting there is a snake in the grass or a snake in the basket here but I can well understand the response of the reptile to the sweet music of the flute.

I think there is real concern about the Maritime Freight Rates Act among hon. members. The hon. member for Saint John-Albert pointed out the apparent holes in the minister's explanation because, unless the minister can educate me a little further, there will be an end to this legislation at the end of two years time and if no amendment is brought in to extend the Maritime Freight Rates Act the commission will have the power to set any rates it wishes and as long as there is a 30 per cent and 20 per cent preference in the select territory those rates can be moved up or down.

I was interested in the minister's statement about injecting a catalyst to stimulate further study of the Maritime Freight Rates Act because, according to my understanding of the evidence presented by Mr. Sinclair of the C.P.R. to the standing committee on transportation, and also I believe by officials of the C.N.R., they look with horror upon this two-year freeze. Mr. Sinclair went so far as to say that at the end of the two-year freeze rates will go up unless, as he said, economic measures are written into the legislation. Those rates can go up even under the Maritime Freight Rates Act. Mr. Sinclair agreed with me that the rates could go up regardless of the preferential rates within and outside the select territory.

I suggest that the matter is not as simple or transparent as the minister implied it was. Perhaps, as the minister said, he is not as fortunate as I am in being familiar with the law but he is certainly much more learned with regard to the procedures in the house and the history of this act. He has demonstrated this by his patience in the last few days.

The railways are much better organized than individual complainants in the maritimes. At the end of the two-year period the presidents of the C.N.R. and C.P.R. will certainly harass the Minister of Transport if nothing further is done and, the people of the maritimes will be subjected to hearing the members of the new commission say to them: Boys, you have been getting a real deal. The rates that are set within the select territory are really depressed compared with the horizontally increased rates which prevail in Hamilton, Toronto and other parts of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member will recognize that if this bill is passed there cannot be more increases.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister is right and I will take back what I said previously. These are compensatory rates and there is no doubt that the Maritime Freight Rates Act permits certain rates. According to the officials of the railways these rates are not compensatory.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may continue the process of education which the hon. member so flatteringly ascribed to me, may I point out to him that the rates are supposed to be compensatory but if they are reduced by 30 per cent their compensatory character will not be affected because the payment is made out of the treasury. Therefore the argument that the rates being reduced by 30 per cent will make them no longer compensatory does not make it illegal to have such rates.

Mr. Nowlan: I want to thank the minister. Perhaps this process of education can come to an end. I wish to ask the minister a few questions and depending on his answers I may be satisfied. According to my understanding of the Maritime Freight Rates Act and this legislation, once the freeze comes to an end after the two-year period the rates within the select territory can be increased.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: That is quite correct. The rates could go up. Once this bill is passed they can go up or down so far as that goes in other parts of Canada. This will be the régime when this bill goes through.

Mr. Nowlan: This is my point. These rates could go up without any parliament looking at the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is also correct. The rates could move up or down.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Nowlan: Without parliament looking at the Maritime Freight Rates Act?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is quite correct.

Mr. Nowlan: I have two affirmative answers to these questions. Without any parliament looking at the Maritime Freight Rates Act the new commission will have the power to set rates. It could move rates up within the select territory. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that the maritimes obviously does have a very real interest in this particular provision.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one element that the hon. gentleman is perhaps leaving out and that is the whole objective and purpose of the study which is now being carried out. The people who are doing this study have been asked to advise the government upon what measures should be taken to improve the whole of transportation within the Atlantic provinces. The reason for this freeze is to keep the present situation unchanged until there is time for the government to recommend to parliament positive steps to improve the situation in the Atlantic provinces. These positive steps might conceivably involve other things. I hope they will not be limited to the Maritime Freight Rates Act. I hope they will not be limited to the Maritime Freight Rates Act. Perhaps I should not detail my hopes because I might be sticking my neck out. I think all hon. members from that part of the country know that I feel it is not just in the field of railways that we need improvement in transportation in the Atlantic region. It may well be that there are other ways in which we can do far more effectively what in 1927 the Maritime Freight Rates Act seemed the best way of doing.

It seems to me that if there is a deadline here any government that is in office is not going to want to lose its support in that region, if I may put it at its lowest terms. If nothing has happened in two years the government is not going to let this freeze lapse. If it were continued indefinitely there might be a tendency to say, well, other pieces of legislation affecting other parts of the country are more urgent, there is more pressure, so we can roll this over for another year. Quite frankly, because I honestly believe that having this deadline here will oblige a government to take dynamic action before the two years are up, I would rather see the two-year limit maintained.

Mr. Nowlan: I certainly appreciate the minister's words. If we want to carry on a debate about all the other things that are necessary in transportation in the maritimes, the minister is familiar with the problem I have in my area of Digby in getting lobsters and other products shipped to Ottawa.

However, returning to the proposed section may I say that I feel there is not much difference between us. The minister has had a broader experience than I, but he must realize better than I that the fine words expressed in this chamber have induced the hope which has carried the maritimes to their present lofty position. However, the maritimes need to be carried further, and we need legislation. Frankly, as a maritimer I am in a somewhat exposed position. Whether the western members have more persuasive ability I do not know, but the fact of the matter is something has been done in regard to this bill in connection with the Crowsnest pass rates. When I go home and talk to our people they will say: Well, you have done a fine job; the two basic hallmarks of transportation legislation before the minister's bill came into force were the Crowsnest pass rates in the west and the Maritime Freight Rates Act in the east. The westerners have done something about their Crowsnest rates but what have you done?

Mr. Pickersgill: We really have not changed the Crowsnest rates in any way whatever. We have just preserved them in the legislation and we have preserved the Maritime Freight Rates Act. The two are on an absolute basis of equality. However, we are doing something in this bill for the Atlantic area that we are not doing for any other part of Canada, and that is continuing the freeze on rates for another two years. The hon. gentleman, therefore, can put an extra notch on his gun.

Mr. Nowlan: We certainly need all the notches we can get. I do not believe the minister and I are in that much disagreement. Admittedly I may not be using the best phraseology, but I cannot follow the minister's somewhat bland suggestion that this situation has been protected. The minister knows, as the Prime Minister has mentioned, that we tend to forget the important things because of the crisis of the moment. We know the government is pressed and pressed, and I have not forgotten that there are certain limitations on the government which make it difficult to solve some of the problems of my area. I have not forgotten either that all this takes time.

In my opinion the real catalyst for action is going to be the two railways which feel the present freeze is abhorrent. They are a much more unified force in getting to the minister than diffuse groups such as chambers of commerce and so on in the Atlantic provinces. We are not at cross-purposes. Obviously the minister wants something done and something is going to be done under the transport study envisaged in the new legislation. Perhaps the minister would agree that in that study there is certainly going to be some attention given to amending the Maritime Freight Rates Act. The only thing is that there might not be any legislative effect given to this study and that is why I should like to see the freeze continue until the government has acted.

I think I express the fears of many people when I speak in support of the freeze continuing after the two years. The government could be faced with other serious problems two years hence. Goodness knows what the major problem will be then. It is fundamental that a government is not going to consider a problem unless it is getting some pressure. The way political parties are situated these days, it is difficult for some members to press the Minister of Transport about these problems. I submit we are not going to have a real look at the Maritime Freight Rates Act under this provision, but we would have a real look at the Maritime Freight Rates Act if the presidents of the two major railways were on the minister's back.

The two railway presidents have already said publicly that they feel a two-year freeze is too long. They are responsible individuals but they are also businessmen. I feel duty bound to say that the suggested amendment is not going to harm the minister's intention. If the minister will reflect upon his experience here, he will appreciate the practical force of having two railway presidents on the minister's back after that two-year period if the government has not introduced legislation. If that is not the case, then the freeze ceases and the government goes about its business. I am afraid the minister may be lulling people into a false sense of security by saying that the Maritime Freight Rates Act is there and it has been there since 1927. The new transportation commission is going to be studying rates and making a whole new rates structure, so that the whole rate structure could go up relatively and still protect the 30 per cent and 20 per cent. To me this is a much more realistic danger and there would be less chance of government action. No government would want to move into this hornets' nest. We should have something in the bill to continue the existing situation. We would also have two very practical forces in the form of the two railway presidents who would be on the minister's doorstep every other day when the government failed to move.

How did this legislation get before this house over the last three weeks, Mr. Chairman? It was not because there was an outcry from the people in the east, the people in the west or those in Ontario. The legislation has appeared because it was thought about for many years. In fact, the Minister of Transport made several speeches about national transportation policy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member like me to answer that question?

Mr. Nowlan: I was going to answer it for the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman forgets that the reason this legislation is here is that the previous government, faced with a horizontal increase in freight rates, decided to disallow the decision of the Board of Transport Commissioners and appoint a royal commission. The government asked the royal commission to deal with this problem. It was not the railways who asked for it; all they asked for was to be allowed to raise their rates. Under the law they were denied the right to do this. The royal commission was appointed fundamentally to deal with this problem. Unfortunately the royal commission did not feel that they had the time to deal with the special regional problems of the Atlantic area.

I decided to do my best to repair that omission and over a year ago I instituted this Atlantic transportation study. Other studies have been going on on the part of the Atlantic Development Board and other bodies. The hon. gentleman knows that with respect to the Digby-Saint John ferry we are actually engaged in discussions at the present time with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Since I have been Minister of Transport there has been no neglect of this particular sector. However, we are not yet in a position, until we have more information, to take the kind of positive steps he suggests.

It seems to me that the only difference between me and the hon. member is that I think the government would be more likely to act if it knew that there would be one terrific outcry in the Atlantic provinces about the beginning of 1969 when this legislation was about to lapse, and therefore no government would dare let it lapse without taking some kind of constructive steps. On the other hand, if we continue this freeze indefinitely it will be a temptation to the government to roll it over for three or four more years.

Mr. Sherman: Would the minister permit a question? In his last reference to one terrific outcry which he suggests might be generated in the maritimes I am wondering whether he thinks this should be along the lines of the outcry raised in Manitoba in the Winnipeg area over the transfer of the Viscount overhaul base, and may I ask him whether he thinks the result might be the same?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman's analogy has a lot of manifest imperfections, but since it is totally irrelevant to the bill perhaps the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings and I had better get on with our debate.

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate the minister's remarks, but I must say that the interjection by the hon. member from Winnipeg diverted a question I was going to ask the minister. Granted, Mr. Chairman, that the royal commission started this thing, but during the recent railway strike the minister's own words, and perhaps his secret hope, were that in face of the pressure created by the railway strike and another increase in costs which the railways faced this might be a good time to look at the whole question of a national transportation policy. These two situations were sort of held hand in hand.

This is where I differ with the minister. When this bill passes we will have a national transportation policy. Perhaps this was stimulated in one form by the MacPherson royal commission, but it was always a practical desire of the railways, who for the first time in Canada will now have the chance to charge compensatory rates with a certain amount of freedom. They must not be hedged in by too much legislation, though there must be some legislation in the national interest. But the stimulus of a national transportation policy will be stunted if we are still faced with problems created by the Maritimes Freight Rates Act.

The minister made reference to a review in 1969, which I suppose could even be in 1970 depending on when we pass the bill. But the fact is that two years hence we will have to go through the whole performance again as a result of the Maritime Freight Rates Act provisions.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not pretend we will have to go through it until two years have passed, because I do want to see some improvement in this situation. I do not think that the Maritime Freight Rates Act by itself is good enough, but I do not want to do anything in the meantime to weaken the Maritime Freight Rates Act in any way. I am afraid that the language of the hon. gentleman's amendment would cast doubt upon the permanency of that legislation.

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate that, Mr. Chairman, and I am going to make a suggestion. The minister said that since he has been Minister of Transport, which is since 1963, negotiations have been going on with the C.P.R. regarding the Digby-Saint John ferry. I am sure that if the minister peruses his files he will see documents and correspondence indicating that in 1963, before a certain change of government took place, almost exactly the same negotiations were being conducted between the federal government and the C.P.R. as to the state of the railway ferry service between Saint John and Digby, which the minister has publicly stated has is an essential service.

I come back to this. How in God's kingdom, with all the green apples there are, can you call an essential service a ferry system which does not carry anything more than a half ton truck. This is a problem that the government and the C.P.R. have known for 30 or 40 years. Therefore I am not deluded or taken in by the very plausible explanation given by the minister that come 1969 this problem will be resolved by government initiative. Governments are funny things. It depends on which government is sitting where because they are motivated by crises of the moment. If we do not do anything in legislative form to perpetuate something which will in effect be an irritant to the railways, then I suggest that 1969 will come and go and that the situation in the east will become even more adverse than it is at the present time. Certainly the negotiations taking place with the C.P.R. on the Digby wharf is no analogy. I am sure the minister can think of better ones. An agreement was almost reached in 1963 between the government and the C.P.R. in this regard, but certainly the problem has been with us for 20 or 30 years.

I do not want to be difficult, Mr. Chairman, but I must have some assurance from the minister. I suggest to him that if he can assure me some action will be taken within the two-year period I might consider withdrawing my suggested amendment to section 335. I would take the minister's words at face value, and if action is taken on the transportation commission report before two years I do not think we need the two-year freeze. If action of this kind is taken and a report is made in March recommending that steps be taken which fit in with this national transportation bill, then perhaps we will not have to wait two years. During this two year period the plans of industry to develop will be stagnating. They will not know what is going to happen.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman look at the obverse of that last statement? We can take the freeze out altogether and have a new regime right now. The whole purpose of maintaining this freeze is to ensure shippers in the Atlantic provinces that they will have these rates for two years and so that the government is given time to deal fundamentally with the problem.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, there is a lot of talk in Canada today about a pill. If an analysis of the situation was made by the government and solid recommendations were brought in, the people in the east would be much healthier if the freeze were not in existence and something else were written into the act.

Mr. Pickersgill: I agree.

Mr. Nowlan: Then we are agreed. But to hold out a two-year freeze as some sort of salvation and as a solution to the transportation problems of the area is just a sugar-coated pill to delude people that this situation will continue ad infinitum. I should like the minister to consider writing in a provision which would enable the government to act. I should like to draft an amendment so that the government would have power to move within two years, though, knowing the delays which arise, I realize it might not be possible for the government to take the initiative within that period.

The only purpose of the minister's suggestion is to continue into the future a situation which has become a real irritant. I believe Mr. Crump or Mr. Sinclair said that two years was too long a period. The reason for this statement is that there is no doubt the rates will go up I believe the government should remove this sugar-coated pill and put something into the legislation so that if the report of this study becomes available before March they will be able to take action without the necessity of continuing this two year freeze.

I see that time is moving on, but I should like the minister to consider my remarks seriously because I do not think we are too far apart on this issue. As far as I am concerned I say: remove the two year freeze as long as there is a condition which allows for government action. At any rate we should know where we are going. At the present time we do not.

May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman not think we can resolve this issue and make a little progress?

Mr. Knowles: You could.

Mr. Nowlan: We could resolve it if the minister would agree with me.

Mr. Pickersgill: I agree with everything the hon. gentleman has said except one thing. I do not believe we should put any provision in the bill that something or other will last unless something which is hypothetical happens, when we do not know what the form of that legislation will be. What the hon. gentleman wants, and what I want, is to see something a whole lot better so that we do not need to keep this freeze in the select territory. If the government is able to bring something before parliament this fall, or in 1968, there is nothing to prevent parliament repealing the freeze at that time. But I would not want to put something in the bill which suggested that in a hypothetical situation this freeze would thaw, without specific action by parliament.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Nowlan: The only way in which this could be taken care of would be by the amendment I suggest.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Since it seems obvious that the minister has a great deal more to explain about this bill, would it be safe to assume that we shall be continuing our consideration of it tomorrow?

Mr. Pickersgill: The leader of the house asked me to say that he thought it was desirable to proceed with this bill in committee for whatever time it may take tomorrow and that after consideration of the bill in committee has been completed, as I fervently pray it may be, we should take the other items which my hon. friend suggested last night. I do not have the Hansard in my hand, but I think hon. members know what they are and I hope we shall deal with all of them.

It being eight minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, January 19, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE U.S. LEGISLATION RESPECTING OPERATIONS OF FOREIGN BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister with regard to the two notes received from the United States in connection with the Mercantile Bank. Is the report in the Toronto Star correct when it states in effect that the state department has sent two notes of protest and that in the absence of any reply the new 90th United States congress will have legislation introduced either at the suggestion of the administration or at the suggestion of banking interests to give Washington power to retaliate against foreign banks whose countries do not give equal treatment to United States banks?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have received no information regarding the legislative intention of the United States government in respect of this matter as indicated by my right hon. friend. The Minister of Finance might have a word to say concerning the first part of the question.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as soon as these reports were read in the newspaper inquiries were made in Washington. There is no indication of specific plans by the United States government for legislation to control foreign banking in the United States. As the house knows, congressional committees have been making studies of United States banking in general, and in due course there might be legislation arising from these studies.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, has the government changed its mind and does it now intend to retreat in connection with the stand it has already taken in respect of the Mercantile Bank?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to retreat on this matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question supplementary to the one I originally asked. In view of the definite statement of policy in connection with the Mercantile Bank, may I ask the Prime Minister when the government expects to reply to the note from the United States of December 7 or December 8 regarding this bank?

Mr. Pearson: We are working on the reply at the moment, Mr. Speaker, and I hope it will go forward very shortly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STEPS BY U.S. TO WITHHOLD SUPPLIES FROM NORTH VIET NAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has his attention been drawn to the threat which has been made to the Royal Bank of Canada by the United States treasury department foreign assets control office, regarding the refusal of the bank to discontinue the handling of cheques intended to finance medical aid from United States Quakers to North Viet Nam? If this information is correct I should like to ask the minister what action the government intends to take to protect the bank in carrying out its legitimate banking operations on behalf of highly respectable organizations, such as the Quakers, engaged in humanitarian undertakings?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has received no representations whatsoever from the United States government on this matter. I understand that when the Royal Bank of Canada receives a cheque drawn on a United States bank in favour of the Canadian Quakers, the cheque is taken on a collection basis and forwarded for payment to the bank on which it is drawn. It is the responsibility of the United States bank to decide whether under United States law the cheque should be paid. The practice being followed by the Royal Bank of Canada is in accordance with normal banking procedure under Canadian law.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a related question to the Minister of Transport, asking him whether his attention has been drawn to a statement by Mr. Ross Flannigan, head of the Quakers' committee, who claims that Air Canada has refused to transport medical supplies shipped by the Quakers to North Viet Nam via Montreal to Moscow, and that these supplies are being sent instead by the Soviet air line. If that information is correct will the minister indicate whether this action was taken by Air Canada at the request of United States authorities and, if so, what justification there is for acceding to such a request?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman has broken almost every rule in the rule book in asking his question but I have not seen the report and cannot give an answer anyway.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I will rely on Your Honour to keep me within the rules rather than the Minister of Transport who is not an authority on that subject.

Mr. Knowles: He is an authority on breaking them.

Mr. Douglas: I should like to ask the minister whether he will inquire into this matter and make a report to the house as soon as possible.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will inquire into the report if the hon. gentleman will be good enough to send it to me. I will do so by asking Air Canada whether there is any truth in it.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to the last question. Is the Prime Minister in a position to indicate whether he is investigating or will investigate an association in British Columbia which has received thousands of dollars allegedly for medical supplies for North Viet Nam. This money is not going to the Red Cross, and it is believed that it may be or has been used for other purposes in North Viet Nam.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to look into this if the hon. gentleman will give me more detailed evidence of what he has in mind.

Mr. Woolliams: Perhaps I may be allowed to follow this through. There was a report—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now making a statement. He has asked a question, and I do not think this is the time to make a statement in respect of the matter he has raised.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question arises from the Prime Minister's answer. Has the Prime Minister read the report of one of the Vancouver newspapers in reference to this money, which likely has been used for the purchase of war equipment by the communists in North Viet Nam?

Mr. Pearson: No, I have not, Mr. Speaker; but if my hon. friend will send me the report I will be glad to look into it.

Mr. Woolliams: Somebody groaned on my left. I wonder why.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question supplementary to the questions asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. I address this question perhaps to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I would like to ask the minister whether he has seen the report in today's Toronto Star that Mr. Somerfield, chief counsel of the treasury department, foreign assets control, of the United States has said that his department has forbidden Canadian subsidiaries of United States drug companies to sell drugs to Quakers for shipment to North Viet Nam. Has the minister's attention been drawn to this report? If so, has he taken any action on it, or what action does he intend taking on it?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have not seen the report, Mr. Speaker. When I do see it I will judge what action, if any, should be taken.

[Later:]

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister related to the one asked earlier by the hon. member for Bow River concerning a Vancouver based organization sending aid to Viet Nam. The question is in two parts. I ask the Prime Minister, first, is there any law preventing Canadian organizations from sending aid either to North or South Viet Nam? Second, why does the Prime Minister offer to investigate something, as requested by the hon. member for Bow River, when the hon. member's questions is based on speculation and rumour and may in fact be a smear?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is out of order.

Mr. Pearson: I will keep that in mind.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Speaker, I submit the first part of the question is in order. Is there any law preventing Canadian groups from giving aid either to North or South Viet Nam?

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of privilege. The hon. member who has just asked a question of the Prime Minister about a report that thousands of dollars were being raised and sent to the Viet Cong in North Viet Nam says that report might have been based on rumours or smears. I saw the report in question, and I am prepared to send it to the Prime Minister. The hon. member is the man who groaned when I dared mention North Viet Nam. We know where his affections are.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a question of privilege.

EXPO '67

REPORTED DISCRIMINATION IN HIRING PRACTICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, while I am at it I should like to reply to a question asked on January 12 by the hon. member for Cumberland in connection with the hiring policy of Expo '67. The hiring policy of the Canadian Corporation for the World Exhibition has always aimed and continues to aim at achieving a balance between English speaking and French speaking Canadians and at ensuring the greatest possible representation of Canadians from all parts of the country, having regard to the fact that Expo '67 is a national undertaking.

At the senior level, for example, the management of C.C.W.E. comprises four English speaking Canadians and five French speaking Canadians. There are 26 branch heads in the six departments of the corporation; 10 of these are English speaking Canadians and 16 are French speaking Canadians. It should be realized, however, that it is not always possible to achieve the balance throughout at more junior levels and in all individual units of staff. The labour market in the Montreal area is predominantly French Canadian, and while the C.C.W.E. has underwritten moving expenses for employees hired throughout Canada at senior levels, it did not seem appropriate to extend such practice to the junior levels. While the C.C.W.E. has recognized the need to achieve balance, it should be borne in mind that its hiring policies are based predominantly on qualifications. The C.C.W.E. is confident that it has brought together an effective group of qualified Canadians.

In the case of the youth pavilion—which was the particular unit to which the question applied—for which program staff is currently being hired, another factor is the short period of employment which makes it even less advisable to pay for moving expenditures and tends to limit the area from which certain classes of employees can be drawn. However, the production staff of the youth pavilion are bilingual and they continue to obtain guidance from the youth advisory committee made up of representatives of 32 organizations from all parts of the country. The youth program itself is to be fully bilingual and broadly international.

A few positions remain to be filled on the youth pavilion staff, and the C.C.W.E. will continue to aim at the best possible balance, all factors considered. If there are English speaking Canadians who feel themselves qualified and who wish to apply, they are invited by the C.C.W.E. to do so.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister satisfied that when 13 or 14 individuals employed on the executive staff of the pavilion are French speaking, Expo '67 is keeping faith with Canadians generally, who are being asked to contribute their tax dollars from all areas of Canada toward reducing whatever the deficit might be in the operation of this world exposition?

Mr. Winters: I spent some time yesterday in Montreal on this problem with Expo. I am satisfied that having regard to all the circumstances the employees retained for this particular unit are the only ones who could have been employed from the available pool of potential employees. But as I have said, there are still some vacancies on the staff and English speaking candidates are invited to apply. If there are any English speaking potential candidates who deem themselves to be qualified we would be glad to receive their applications.

Mr. Coates: On a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in agreement—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member for Medicine Hat wish to rise on a point of order?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that several minutes ago Your Honour recognized the hon. member for Chapleau. However, another hon. member attempted to gain priority on the pretence that he was asking a supplementary question. I think under the rules of the house a supplementary question must be asked immediately following the answer to which it pertains. Some of the supplementary questions which have been asked in the last few minutes have pertained to a question which had preceded the last question, and then other supplementary questions were asked based on a reply on a different subject. All this was done after Your Honour had recognized the hon. member for Chapleau.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member for Chapleau will be given an opportunity to rise very soon. The difficulty arose from the fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, while he was at it, referred to a question which had been asked yesterday. To a certain extent this confused the general order of questions and answers. I will allow the hon. member for Cumberland to ask a supplementary question; then will recognize the hon. member for Chapleau.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the minister whether he agrees with Mr. Shaw's statement as reported in yesterday's Montreal Gazette, to the effect that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The manner in which the hon. member has phrased his question makes it inadmissible. Would he kindly resume his seat? He cannot ask the minister whether he agrees with a statement made by Mr. Shaw or by an official of his department.

Mr. Coates: I will rephrase my question. Does the minister agree that the proportion of employees at Expo '67 should be 60 per cent French speaking and 40 per cent English speaking?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Chapleau.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR PRICE DISCOUNT TO MILK CONSUMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

The minister is undoubtedly aware that the Quebec government has decided to increase the price of class I milk starting on February 1, 1967. Therefore, would he study the possibility of granting consumers a compensated discount of 10c. per quart of milk to allow Canadian families to consume the milk they need for their health, especially that of their children?

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making representations of a very general nature and I do not think that the question as put is in order.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss the matter after ten o'clock.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—REPORTED WITHHOLDING OF MEDICAL INFORMATION AND SUPPLIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I sent him notice of it. In his absence I will put my question to the Prime Minister. Has the attention of the Prime Minister been drawn to statements reportedly made by Dr. Mark Webster, secretary of health in Rhodesia, stating that the World Health Organization has imposed sanctions against Rhodesia which have resulted in the withholding of vital medical information and the abandonment of health projects of direct benefit to the African population?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, within the last hour or two I have seen the report mentioned by my hon. friend. I have not yet had a chance to inquire into it but will certainly do so. However, I should say that in the Canadian regulations prohibiting exports to Rhodesia an exception is made in the case of medical supplies and other goods used for humanitarian purposes.

FINANCE

DEPOSITORS MORTGAGE CORPORATION—REPORTED FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Registrar General whether he is in a position to report to the house on his examination of the situation in Montreal concerning the Depositors Mortgage Corporation, with particular reference to the extent of the liabilities that are involved on which the company has made a proposal.

Hon. John N. Turner (Acting Registrar General): Yesterday afternoon while I was in Montreal I met with the regional officer of the bankruptcy branch and Mr. Peter Lawrence of the firm of chartered accountants of McDonald, Currie, the trustee under the proposals. At this stage the debtors, Messrs. S. L. and N. H. Caplan and their company, Depositors Mortgage Corporation, have made two proposals to their creditors under section 27 of the Brankruptcy Act. Both proposals contemplate a payment to the creditors of one hundred cents on the dollar over a period of years. The preliminary statement of assests and liabilities indicates that there is a surplus of assets over liabilities in the case of Depositors Mortgage Corporation in the amount of $647,000-odd, and in the case of the two Caplans personally in the amount of $343,000-odd.

The superintendent of bankruptcy, who reports to the Registrar General, has a duty which is a supervisory one over the administration of any bankruptcy or proposal. The administration of a bankruptcy or proposal is primarily the responsibility under the Bankruptcy Act of the trustee who is acting on behalf of the creditors.

The trustee undertook to report to the superintendent of bankruptcy through the regional officer in Montreal all relevant information regarding the nature of the business carried on by the debtors or relating to the causes of any insolvency. He has also undertaken to advise the superintendent whether in his opinion there were any irregularities within the meaning of the Brankruptcy Act leading up to the proposal. The trustee gave it to me as his preliminary opinion that on the basis of the facts as he now knows them, there does not appear to have been any irregularity on the part of the debtors. The primary cause of the current situation would appear to be one of liquidity caused by the pressure of short term money invested on long term against the security of real estate.

A meeting of creditors to decide upon the proposal has been scheduled for February 20. The superintendent of bankruptcy will be in close touch with events in Montreal.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance. In view of this situation, will the Minister of Finance proceed with urgency on his deposit insurance legislation? Will the minister give consideration to making that scheme compulsory and extending the lender of last resort privileges to cover finance companies, such as the one that has just been under discussion, so as to protect depositors who are not the victims of dishonesty but of monetary conditions for which the government is also responsible?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): It is not the intention of the government to make deposit insurance compulsory. The government's policy is to make it compulsory for all federal companies, but voluntary with the approval of provincial governments for provincially incorporated companies. I think the events that have taken place in this country in the last few weeks are going to encourage all provinces and all companies to take advantage of this facility.

In reply to the second question, the government will give consideration to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, whether in this legislation or otherwise I would hesitate to say at this moment. I do understand the seriousness of the matter, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that the federal government intends to give strong leadership to improve the financial safety of all companies, whether federally or provincially incorporated.

Mr. John Addison (York North): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance in connection with this matter. I noted a Canadian Press report in which it is stated that Attorney General Robert Bonner of British Columbia said his government will insist that all financial institutions taking deposits from the public participate in the proposed federal insurance plan. Now that British Columbia has indicated it will make the plan compulsory, has any other province indicated it is thinking of making the plan compulsory?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, we have not yet canvassed the other provinces to see what their reaction might be. I do hope the example of British Columbia is one that will be followed by many others.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): May I ask a question of the Acting Registrar General arising from the answer he gave a few minutes ago. In the event that any trustee or supervisor failed, either intentionally or unintentionally, to report to his superiors, has the government any means of controlling this situation?

Mr. Speaker: This question does not appear to be in order. It appears to be hypothetical and perhaps argumentative. It seems to be out of order on a number of counts.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): It might be, but if the answer clarified the situation the question might not be so hypothetical.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REPORTED SPEECH BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER RESPECTING GUIDE LINES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the new guide lines laid down yesterday in Vancouver by the Secretary of State for External Affairs are intended to replace those already announced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce some months ago. Also, do they represent a further rejection by the government of the contradictory principles advocated by the former minister of finance?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have seen only a press report of what my hon. friend has said. From that report it appears that the guide lines he mentioned were within the framework of those previously indicated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. However, he will be back later this afternoon and I will be glad to get confirmation of this.

Mr. Starr: May I ask a supplementary question based on what was said by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is it the intention of the government to reject the Washington guide lines, as suggested by the minister when he said that Canada has fought the assumption that the law to which a corporation is subject at its headquarters also applies throughout the area of its operations?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have not read that particular part of the report, but I will discuss it with the minister as soon as he gets back.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—PROPOSED FURTHER DEVELOPMENT BY U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. I apologize for giving notice only just prior to coming into the house, but I was delayed by a series of telephone calls and visits from ladies.

My question is based on a Washington report which appeared in the Globe and Mail on January 14 dealing with the proposed increase of power on the Columbia river, and which concludes as follows:

> Despite the U.S. contention, Canadian sources expected that officials in Ottawa would almost certainly scrutinize the complex formula laid down in the treaty with Washington to determine whether the addition of power-generating capacity would entitle Canada to claim increased compensation.

[Mr. Langlois (Mégantic).]

My question is this, Mr. Speaker. In view of this recent announcement in Washington of proposals for the increase in the power to be produced at Grand Coulee dam from two million kilowatts to 9.2 million kilowatts in the 1990's, which increase was not provided for at the time of the negotiations with Canada on the Columbia river treaty—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is an oration rather than a question. Would the hon. member put his question.

Mr. Herridge: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister this question. Is the Canadian government intending to make representations to the government of the United States that this increase in power generation should entitle Canada to further compensation under the treaty?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not, Mr. Speaker, until we have made a very careful examination of the matter. The minister concerned will be able to answer the question later, or perhaps he may be able to say something about it now.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, a rapid examination of this question by my officials leads me to make the following points, which you may allow me to put on record.

1. Additional installation at Grand Coulee will be installed to meet very short term peak loads on the United States system.

2. The limited amount of stored water required for such peaking operation will be, and in fact must be, provided from the reservoir of Grand Coulee itself. It is not practical to try to operate distant Canadian storages to provide this service and there is no treaty requirement for such operation. Canadian storages will be operated to provide a seasonal regulating service, not a daily or weekly peaking service.

3. The increasing demand for short duration peaking power from hydro plants would no doubt have dictated the added installation at Grand Coulee whether or not the Columbia treaty had been ratified.

4. The added installation at Grand Coulee will not result in any greater energy benefit from Canadian storage; therefore there will be no increase in the treaty benefits of either Canada or the United States.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that the treaty provides for releases from Arrow lakes storage, at the request of the United States authorities, to maintain certain elevations for the Grand Coulee reservoir, does this not mean that this storage in Canada actually produces the increased power which is being proposed?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This supplementary question is argumentative.

POLLUTION

REQUEST FOR FURTHER RESEARCH INTO DETERGENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that all major producers of household and commercial detergents in Canada have now completed the changeover to non sudsing or bio-degradable detergents, is the government supporting further research into this type of pollutant to further reduce the danger of pollution from this source?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that this question should be placed on the order paper.

IMMIGRATION

STATEMENT ON ENTRY OF BOYS TO ATTEND SEMINARY AT ST. JOVITE, QUE.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the hon. member for Skeena asked me a question about the admission to Canada of children coming to join a monastery at St. Jovite, Quebec, operated by a religious sect known as The Apostles of Infinite Love.

Immigration records indicate that a number of children have been admitted to Canada in past years to study at the monastery accompanied by, or with the consent of, their parents. In 1964, however, information was received indicating that educational and welfare authorities in the province of Quebec had some reservations about the monastery. Early in 1965, therefore, immigration officials directed their officers not to grant entry to any more students destined for this school until the doubts were resolved. This ban has remained in effect since that time, as immigration officials have not received any co-operation from the monastery in our attempts to clarify matters.

Most of the children who were admitted to Canada to attend this institution have now left this country. We have not been successful in determining the whereabouts of seven. As they are located and referred to my department by the welfare authorities, arrangements will be made to return them to their parents.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO PREPARATION OF REGULATIONS UNDER ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I was wondering whether the minister would give the house a report on how the regulations are progressing with respect to the Canada Assistance Act.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, final discussions are taking place with some of the provinces, including the province of Ontario. Some points have been raised by the department in that province which we are attempting to clarify before bringing the regulations to the governor in council.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question. Could the minister give us some indication as to how soon these regulations might be promulgated by the governor in council?

Mr. MacEachen: I would hope very soon, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question. Could the minister of national health tell us whether he has received any representations from the Minister of Agriculture with regard to the effect of the Canada Pension Plan on the labour market—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is out of order.

OLD AGE SECURITY

PROVISION OF SUPPLEMENT APPLICATIONS AND EXPLANATORY BOOKLETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister now tell the house whether the forms that old age security recipients will use to apply for the pension supplement and the government's explanatory booklets will be sent out with the pension cheques which go out this month?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the forms and the explanatory booklet are presently at the printer and it is not expected that it will be possible, because of the time required to complete the printing, to send out the forms and the booklets this month.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In that event will they be sent out early in February, or will they be delayed until the February cheques go out?

Mr. MacEachen: Every appropriate step will be taken to get out the forms and the booklets as early as possible.

EDUCATION

REPORTED HOLIDAYS IN BERMUDA BY STUDENTS AT PUBLIC EXPENSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister of manpower. I should like to ask him whether he can answer today the question directed to him yesterday with regard to students attending the vocational training program in Nova Scotia. May I also ask him whether, indeed, in his investigation of these incidents he has uncovered any repetition of the situation in other provinces or centres of Canada.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In reply, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that under program 5 of the technical and vocational training agreement and the training allowances agreement the federal government is committed to reimbursing the province for a part of their costs in training the unemployed. These agreements expire on March 31, 1967. New arrangements for the training of adults have been proposed to take effect on April 1, 1967.

Under the existing agreements with the provinces, persons under 20 years of age must have been out of the regular school system for at least one year, except in cases which have been referred to the director of manpower in the region for consideration. This ruling is included to keep high school students from dropping out of school in order to take more narrowly oriented occupational courses.

In August, 1966 the province of Nova Scotia requested that special consideration be given some individuals who had completed high school and who could not find suitable employment without specialized training. Since that date the manpower division, Atlantic region, has referred to the province of Nova Scotia for possible training a number of persons who have been less than one year out of school.

All the cases in question were of unemployed persons; all had little or no prospect of employment; all had completed Nova Scotia grade XI, high school completion, and all are enrolled in courses which will lead to employment in occupations where there is a demand for the skills being taught. No person in training receives an allowance greater than $35 weekly, unless that person is living away from home or his usual place—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this kind of answer is much too long for the type of question asked.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I asked a question previously; this is a very serious matter. I know what the program is because we discussed it earlier. I want to know whether such abuses were confined to Halifax or whether there have been similar abuses in other parts of the country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making representations.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, because it has been said that the federal government pays for part of this scheme. Can the minister tell the house if this is a general percentage across the country or if it varies from province to province; that is the percentage paid by the federal government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. gentleman is inviting debate, and I do not think this is the type of question that can be asked now.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): With all due respect, I am not looking for a debate; I am looking for information.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAILWAY DISPUTE—GOVERNMENT ACTION FOLLOWING REJECTION OF MEDIATION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him if the government has decided on the course it will follow in respect of the railway unions which did not accept the report of Mr. Goldenberg, the mediator?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I thought I had given this information to the house the other day, Mr. Speaker, but, at the risk of repeating myself, let me say that the resumption of work legislation passed last September provides for the appointment of an arbitrator and for the passing of regulations. Until we know what percentage of affected workers have accepted the proposals it is difficult to draft regulations. There is no provision for more than one arbitrator and we hope to have no more than one set of regulations, if arbitration prove to be necessary.

The vote of one of the two large groups of unions are due, I believe, on January 25 or 26. The vote of the other is due in early February. Since these union groups represents about 60 per cent of the total, until results of the votes are known it is difficult for the government to make an announcement about the two unions which so far have said they are not prepared to accept the mediator's proposals.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

OTTAWA—INQUIRY AS TO EFFECTIVENESS OF RABIES VACCINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can he inform the house whether his department has investigated the vaccine given to Donna Darlene Featherston. Was the vaccine ineffective, or did the child die because of other reasons? Has the department found anything in its investigation?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend refers to the vaccine in connection with the death from rabies, I have investigated the matter and have been advised that the vaccine is not fully effective in all cases. There are unusual instances, depending on the type of exposure, when the vaccine is not effective. As is normal, studies are under way to perfect this particular vaccine.

Mr. Rapp: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister say why the vaccine was not effective in this particular case?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): My question is for the Acting Registrar General. Let me say at the outset that from what I read in the Montreal Gazette about the speech the hon. gentleman made to the Dominion Marine Association, I think he should be commended for his remarks. Would he be prepared to table a copy or the text of his speech, that we might see it in detail?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR TARIFF PROTECTION AGAINST SHOE IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Has the minister read the last brief submitted by the Canadian Shoe Manufacturers Association, which contains a statement to the effect that there has been no expansion in this industry since 1962, and which shows that, for a given period, the importation of shoes has increased by 1084 per cent, as compared to a 42 per cent increase in the population of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. In its present form, the question is surely out of order.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, in view of this alarming situation, could the minister tell the house if he intends to terminate consideration of this matter as mentioned last Monday and take action through a review of customs tariffs?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member might wish to discuss the matter at ten o'clock.

Mr. Godin: I will do that, Mr. Speaker.

UNITED NATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO RATIFICATION OF INTERNATIONAL COVENANTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this being centennial year with every consideration being given to the preservation and maintenance of our fundamental freedoms, would the Prime Minister say whether the government intends placing before parliament for approval and ratification the international covenant on civil and political rights, and the international covenant on economic, social and cultural rights?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall be glad to look into that, Mr. Speaker. I am not as familiar as I perhaps should be with these particular international covenants. I take it they are covenants adopted by the United Nations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is right.

Mr. Pearson: My right hon. friend is suggesting that we confirm or ratify them in this parliament, and I shall be glad to look into that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I might say that these covenants were adopted by resolution in the United Nations on December 16, and they cover such matters as laws against genocide, political freedom, self determination and the like, all principles which we accept; and I th nk it would be a wonderful move if the Prime Minister would agree that this would be an ideal occasion for the representatives of this nation to reassert their belief in these principles.

Mr. Pearson: I shall be glad to look into that right away.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST THAT MUNICIPAL TAXES BE PAID FOR FULL YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I have risen about 20 times.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Has the right hon. gentleman received a request from the mayor and the city council—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. McCleave: I was, Mr. Speaker, and my question of privilege was that I had not been seen by Your Honour. Your Honour having recognized me I thought the question of privilege was settled and that I could go on to pose my question, which I have been trying to do for half an hour.

Mr. Speaker: It is a very novel way to catch the Speaker's eye, and I am sure I have no objection to recognizing the hon. member.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. McCleave: My question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a request from the mayor and city council of Halifax that the Canadian National Railways be ordered to pay grants to municipalities based on full tax rates for the whole of 1967, and what action will be taken on this request?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I received such a communication or not. If I have it must have come in earlier in the day, and I shall look into it at once.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If there is no further question of privilege I will call orders of the day.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed, from Wednesday, January 18, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last evening new section 335 in clause 53 of the bill was being considered.

On clause 53.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I have reconsidered some of the remarks that were exchanged between the minister and myself last night, but still find some difficulty in view of his answers where he said—

The Chairman: Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings but there appears to be a little more noise in the chamber than usual and it is difficult for the Chair to hear what the hon. member is saying.

Mr. Nowlan: I had better raise my voice, Mr. Chairman. For several days the committee has been discussing what was referred to as the Magna Carta of the west, the Crowsnest pass rates, and I find it difficult to reconcile some of the minister's statements on that subject with the lack of any protection in this new section against action which the commission might take with respect to the Maritime Freight Rates Act which, so far as transportation is concerned, is the Magna Carta of the east. It is rather an anomaly that the new transportation policy, which we all agree is proper and should be proceeded with, is being considered without regard to the interests of four of the ten provinces.

Undoubtedly the minister is aware from some reports he has received to date on the Atlantic transportation study that the Maritime Freight Rates Act will have to be examined very critically, and perhaps amended in terms of a more modern Canada; because even with the assistance of that act the position of the east has been eroded and is still being eroded. I go back to that act as the Magna Carta of the east and state that something should be said in legislative form about protection for the east under it. No doubt the minister is sincere in his expressed intent, but that intent is not the law of the land, and his expressions in that regard will not be read with too much interest two or three years from now when this bill is being enforced.

In 1927 the Duncan commission said the position of the east relative to the rest of the country had deteriorated from the time of the Intercolonial Railway. It stated that from 1876 to 1912 the position of the east had been easy and relatively constant with the rest of Canada, but since 1912 it had deteriorated. This was the reason for the introduction of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. We are now considering a brand new bill which is supposed to resolve all of Canada's transportation problems but there is no specific mention in it, particularly in new section 335, of protection for the rates structures in the east. I would like to know whether the minister has reconsidered the suggested amendment which I read into the record last night with respect to maintaining the rates freeze until the transportation commission's study has been completed and until the government moves to implement new legislation for the east.

Considering the way governments work I firmly believe that at the end of the two years freeze the government will be inclined to let the Maritime Freight Rates Act stand as it is. I believe there will not be the necessary catalyst and stimulus to bring it up to date.

I admit that the suggested amendment which I read into the record may not have been drafted in the best possible form, and lest there be any misunderstanding I wish to state I have no intention of doing away with the Maritime Freight Rates Act. But in view of the spirit of compromise which has existed and the constructive way in which consideration of this legislation has been proceeding, especially yesterday, I wonder if the minister would consider another suggestion with reference to new section 335 (3) I suggest that in new subsection 3 all the words after the word "thereof" be deleted and the following substituted for them:

—and thereafter shall be governed by the intent and purpose of the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

It would then read as follows:

(3) Subsections (1) and (2) shall be in force during the two years after the coming into force thereof and thereafter shall be governed by the intent and purpose of the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

The minister has intimated that at some stage, presumably after the maritime transportation study, the Maritime Freight Rates Act will have to be re-examined. I point out that the intent and purpose of that act remain the same today as they did following the Duncan commission report, namely to maintain the east in a relative position with the other parts of Canada. I wonder whether the minister will give consideration to my suggested amendment so that whatever rates are set at the end of two years will be set in accordance with the intent and purpose of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. If that cannot be considered, then I will have to decide whether or not I intend to move a formal amendment.

• (3:30 p.m.)

At the moment I am disposed to move a formal amendment in respect of the suggestion I put forward last night to the effect that the freeze be continued inasmuch as the government will be stimulated by the two railways to take action. Otherwise this would be left up to the initiative of the government and sometimes even when the government has had the best motives and principles it has been rather inert in this regard. There is no question in my mind concerning who will bring the greatest pressure to bear on the minister two or three years hence. I am sure the presidents of both railways will attempt to get the government to act. It has taken years to get this far. I do not think we should assume that after the freeze is over the government will on its own initiative take a critical look at the situation in the east. I think the danger is that it will drift along.

If the freeze continues for two years, I believe that after the two years the two railway presidents, who already have indicated that they do not like the freeze even for the two years, will be the catalyst which will cause the Minister of Transport to take some action.

I should like to know whether the minister has reconsidered his position in respect of what he said last night. I would hope that there might be a spirit of compromise so that the east would get something.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member send me over the paper to which he was referring?

Mr. Nowlan: It has become obvious to those in the maritimes that the whole national transportation picture is somewhat invidious unless something is done. The west has fought and won a good fight. It is now high time that something be written into this bill to give some protection to the east.

What the minister has in his hand now is a compromise, I think, of both positions. It is not a suggestion that the freeze continue indefinitely or in perpetuity but rather that whatever rates are set after the two years be set having in mind the intent and purpose of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. I say this with the knowledge that the Maritime Freight Rates Act is a special act and can be changed in the future. The minister has indicated that it may be changed. However, whatever the changes are they should be made in such a way that they retain the intent and purpose which parliament had in mind when the legislation was first introduced. That intent and purpose are to ensure that the position of the east is relative to the position of the rest of Canada. The act even in its present form, although it is not doing the best job, at least is better than nothing. I should like to know what the minister's position is so that I will be able to decide what my position should be.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, may I ask that I be associated with the amendment of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings. I think all of us are aware in varying degrees of the weaknesses in this section and the problems we shall have to deal with in the future as the result of the new study. In view of the success yesterday of the western members it now is evident that the maritimes also will have to make a stand. I should like to point out, as the minister knows, that the situation in respect of the Crowsnest pass rates is entirely different from the situation in respect of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. I hope that this is understood by all members of the committee. The western Crowsnest pass rates are statutory and are fixed at certain levels. There really is no comparison. We want to see the principle of the Maritime Freight Rates Act continued even though there may be some changes in the future.

In my opinion this amendment simply recognizes, as in clause 1, that the principle of the Maritime Freight Rates Act should be maintained. I appeal to the minister that he accept this amendment or one in similar words. I think this would settle the situation in respect of the maritimes. There are very just apprehensions in respect of this bill and the effect that it will have on the competitive position of the people of the maritimes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I would hate to think that any amendment I might accept would do to the Maritime Freight Rates Act, or any other protection which the Atlantic provinces have, what the amendment we accepted yesterday, if its effect is not corrected, will do in respect of the protection of western grain producers. The amendment for which hon. gentlemen voted yesterday removes the protected rates for barley screenings, barley meal, bran, buckwheat flour, chopped feed, crushed barley, crushed oats, feed grain, grits and groats, flaxseed screenings, linseed meal, linseed oil, cake meal and cake linseed oil.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, may I rise on a point of order. Frequently the minister tells us that he keeps to the rules, but now under the pretext of speaking to an amendment which has been moved today he is speaking on an amendment which was decided yesterday.

Mr. Pickersgill: At this advancing age that the hon. gentleman and I are approaching, he appears to have missed one or two points. In the first place, no amendment has been moved today. In the second place, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings and the hon. member for Saint John-Albert have said that they felt they must gain a victory similar to the one that western members achieved yesterday. Because this argument has been put in relation to the clauses before us and since it has been customary in this house to allow analogies, I was just indicating what the situation would be if the effect of the amendment they are suggesting is similar to that which took away the protection that the government was trying to give to nearly all grains with the exception of wheat and flour.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister is now attempting to prolong his own legislation by bringing about a lengthy argument which will not stand up in view of the fact that section 328 is still there and guarantees the Crowsnest pass rates. If the minister wishes to become involved in a legal battle in respect of the definition of grain, then we are prepared to accommodate him. We are prepared to move another amendment. But the minister should not try to convince the committee that any damage was done in safeguarding the Crowsnest pass rates. If the minister and the government attempt in any way to remove, destroy or erode the Crowsnest pass rates, they certainly will not be treated very generously in the west. They will have fewer members than ever before—

The Chairman: Order. This might be a good time for the committee to get back to the discussion of clause 53.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not in the least intend to prolong the discussion on this point because I am afraid the facts speak for themselves, but I hope to suggest a remedy to the house. In the meantime I will deal with the compromise suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings in place of the amendment which he suggested last night that he might be disposed to move. I confess to being a little puzzled as to what this phrase in effect will mean in law, because the hon. gentleman suggests that thereafter this shall be governed by the intent and purpose of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. If he means that the Maritime Freight Rates Act and its provisions shall apply, let me say they will apply all the time, not only for two years.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Forrestall: There is no guarantee.

Mr. Pickersgill: These provisions apply right now. I suggest to the hon. member that he try to speak into the microphone because it is very difficult to hear him.

Mr. Forrestall: All we are asking is that there be some form of guarantee. All we have now is the minister's word, and that is not enough. We would accept his word but not necessarily the word of his successor.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course my word is not enough and I have not suggested for one moment that it should be accepted as enough. If I were sitting on the other side of the house I would not accept it either.

Mr. Forrestall: Why not write it into the bill?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow me to finish my sentence, since I suspect in this particular instance I know a little bit more about what I am talking about than he appears to know. I hope the hon. gentleman, the junior member for Halifax, is doing what he is doing out of ignorance and not out of malice. I have said three or four times that this bill does not touch the Maritime Freight Rates Act. That act is in force; it is the law of Canada and it is not going to be changed by this bill. Therefore there is no need to accept my word. The act itself is on the statute books and it will be totally unchanged.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps I could interject at this point. I have worded my suggested amendment in this way because of what the minister said last night. I appreciate that the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Crowsnest pass rates agreement are separate from this transport bill. As the minister has stated, there is no doubt that the Maritime Freight Rates Act will be considered and likely changed at some time.

When the transportation study has been made I am sure this act could be revised radically, depending on the recommendations emanating from that study. I admit I had difficulty in framing my amendment but my intent was to have the principle involved remain in existence for perhaps 20 years rather than two, or at least until the government does something about it.

I am sorry that we do not seem to have the same spirit of compromise which existed yesterday. In any event, whether the principle of the Maritime Freight Rates Act is revised or amended or thrown out completely in two or three years time, or whenever the government proposes, that principle should be the governing factor in the establishment of any rate structure. There is nothing in the bill now before us which guarantees the continuation of that principle in spite of the fact the bill is supposed to settle all the transportation problems we have encountered since confederation.

I think this measure represents a sincere attempt on the part of the minister to group certain things together. We all know there are many problems in the transportation field, and it will be five or ten years after the adoption of this measure before we can appreciate its full implications. Many things will have to be defined. Keeping that fact in mind we must take steps to make sure that the principle of the Maritime Freight Rates Act is continued. I believe it will be some time before the principle to which I have referred is changed, but whatever changes take place as a result of the adoption of this new transportation measure, which is supposed to be a transportation Magna Carta, we wish to ensure that at least the intent and purpose of the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Crowsnest pass agreement are maintained.

One of the things which helped to advance the idea of confederation was the promise that there would be an intercolonial railway, and we need one in order to travel and transport our goods. It is even difficult today to travel and ship goods at the present rate structure, but the minister knows as well as I that the provisions of the Maritime Freight Rates Act helped to solve a great number of our problems. It can continue to do so today as it did when it was first adopted.

If there is no agreement to the suggestion I have made I am inclined to move the amendment which I suggested last night to continue this principle indefinitely. The premiers of the maritime provinces have made it clear that they cannot support a transportation policy without economic considerations written into it which take into account the size and geographic location of these provinces. We wish to go along with the suggestion regarding a national transportation policy in the interest of Canada, but we certainly must protect our own position. We all know from what we have heard at committee hearings and in this chamber that transportation costs represent the biggest cost of production in the east. No matter what course the government may follow in the future in respect of maintaining, changing or amending the Maritime Freight Rates Act, the original intent and purpose, to provide reasonable equity in transportation costs in the east and in the west, must be maintained, and that is in effect what we are suggesting here.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I hope I can show the same spirit of conciliation that hon. members have been kind enough to say I have shown hitherto. I would not claim, however, anything like the extravagant attributes given to this bill by hon. gentlemen. This bill will not solve all our transportation problems. It does not purport to do so. It purports to do two basic things. First, it will establish a single transportation agency which will deal with all forms of transportation under federal jurisdiction. I am sure that everyone agrees that generally this bill seems to improve the situation. Second, by this bill we are attempting to get away from the general structure of railway freight rates we have had in the past, under which all rates were set by the Board of Transport Commissioners, or had to be approved by that board which established maximum and minimum rates and allowed rates to fluctuate. In exchange for this greater freedom it is proposed that the huge subsidies now being paid to the railways will be phased out. I think one would say they are the two main objectives of the bill.

I said last night, and I repeat, that I think it is unfortunate that the MacPherson commission was not able to complete its study. As the commissioners said in their report, they did not have time to consider the effects of the Maritime Freight Rates Act and its adequacy at the present time. After consultation with the governments of the Atlantic provinces the present government set up the study that is now going on and is nearing completion, not just of the Maritime Freight Rates Act—that is one element of it—but of the whole problem of transportation within the Atlantic provinces and between the Atlantic provinces and the rest of Canada. What the government in office, whatever government it may be, may do when that study has been received and analysed is something that none of us here can predict at the moment.

Therefore in framing legislation I had really no option as Minister of Transport but to accept the facts as they are at the present time and to say that at the present time I was not prepared to advance my own policies to deal with this problem, because I thought we needed much more expertise to deal with it than I have or that my department has without outside help and without time to give he matter adequate consideration. I am sure every hon. member from the Atlantic provinces would agree with that view.

We then decided to do two novel things in this bill with respect to the Atlantic provinces. The so-called At and East grain rates would have expired and the grain rates to the ports of Halifax and Saint John would have gone up. They were simply kept down by a voluntary act on the part of the railways. A year ago I was able to persuade my colleagues that we should pay a subsidy to the railways to make sure that those rates did not go up, to make sure that they stayed at the level they were then in order to have rates that would encourage the flow of grain through the Atlantic ports. I have no apology to make for doing that. I think it was a good thing to do. I think it was a good use of the taxpayers' money and I would defend it anywhere. I put it in this bill; it is in new section 329A. We made a further improvement in this respect in the amendment the committee was good enough to accept when I moved it the other day. I hope no one will call me to order at this point, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Was that with regard to flour?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. In this bill we have really departed, so far as rates are concerned, from the status quo in two respects only. One is to underwrite the At and East grain rates and the other is to continue the freeze imposed in 1959, which is being abandoned in the rest of Canada, and to add coal and certain lumber rates to that freeze for two years. The reason that provision was put in the bill was that we were not able to deal with the particular problem of the Atlantic provinces in a constructive way at this time because we did not have the necessary suggestions, the necessary elements do deal with it.

Therefore I said we were not going to worsen the position of the Atlantic provinces but were going to see that it was safeguarded for a time long enough to give the government of the day, whatever government it may be, a chance to consider that study and propose legislation to parliament. We suggested in this bill that the freeze should be continued for two years. We could have suggested that it be continued indefinitely instead of for two years. It seems to me it is on this point, and on this point only, that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings and I disagree.

It is my considered judgment, since the presidents of the C.P.R. and C.N.R. do not have votes in this house and all the members from the Atlantic provinces do, that if at the end of that two-year period the government has not acted it will be much more terrified by the loss of votes in this house—I may say that I felt this keenly when the bill was drafted and I feel it even more keenly today—than they would be by the barking of the heads of the railways. I think a government faced with the prospect of having this freeze disappear, and having taken no action, would be in a terrible situation vis-à-vis public opinion in the Atlantic provinces.

One of my reasons for not leaving the freeze indefinite was that I thought it would be too great a temptation, if it was indefinite, for other problems that seemed more urgent in a year or two to be substituted and dealt with. There would be a tendency to say: "Oh, well, they are protected by the freeze, anyway, down there. We can forget about them for another year or two." On the other hand, if under the law this freeze comes to an end the government cannot forget the problem. I have had a rather long experience of the way governments behave. This experience was acquired partly as a public servant before coming into this house and has been added to by participating in government when sitting on this side of the house and observing it when sitting on the other side. Therefore I have the conviction—that is all it can be; nobody can know whether it is a fact—that a government faced with the prospect of some advantage disappearing for the Atlantic provinces would be more apt to act, and act urgently, to resolve the problem than a government that could say: Those fellows down there have the freeze; we can forget about them for two or three more years.

It is because I believe that the transportation problems of the Atlantic provinces are urgent and that the improvement of transportation in the Atlantic provinces can contribute more than anything else to the improvement of the economy of that region that I want every possible incentive to exist for government to act and deal with this problem. It is in consideration of that position that I have taken the view I have. On this one very narrow point of tactics, and not on anything else, I do not see eye to eye with the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings.

I now come to the suggested amendment of the hon. member. I would have to say that when faced with this amendment and the one he offered last night, I prefer the one he offered last night because it seems that one would have some legislative effect and I do not think this one would have any. I do not know how the transportation commission, the railways or the courts could apply the intent and purpose of the Maritime Freight Rates Act to freight rates that had been frozen for two years and were thereafter unfrozen. If, instead, the amendment said that the provisions of the Maritime Freight Rates Act should apply to these rates, that would of course make legislative sense. But it would not add one iota to the law because they apply right now and will apply during the freeze and when the freeze comes off unless parliament sees fit to change the Maritime Freight Rates Act. For that reason I would advise the hon. gentleman not to move this amendment. I do not think it would have any effect whatever except to create confusion in the mind of anyone who tried to obey the law.

Transportation

With respect to the other amendment which the hon. member suggested last night, I think it is also open to very grave objection on two grounds, one of which is legislative and the other of which is political. I will deal with the legislative reason first, and perhaps I should look at the exact wording of the hon. gentleman's amendment because although he was good enough to send me a copy I seem to have mislaid it. The hon. member's amendment reads:

(3) Subsection (1) shall be in force during the two years after the coming into force of subsection (1) and shall continue in force after the said two years unless, and until, the Maritime Freight Rates Act is amended to retain the historic intent and purpose of providing Atlantic provinces industry access to the markets of Canada without the handicap of distance.

The only part of that amendment that would have any legislative effect would be the following wording "unless, and until, the Maritime Freight Rates Act is amended". As the hon. gentleman knows, that would not bind any future parliament because notwithstanding the fact that these words were there the subsection could be repealed in the next session of parliament. However, this wording would indicate a certain purpose and intent at the present time.

Nevertheless I would not be willing to support this purpose and intent because while the amendment would indicate that this parliament in passing this law, if such will be the case, wanted this freeze to continue until the Maritime Freight Rates Act is amended, it would have a political effect with which I would not want to be associated. Knowing how one's words can be twisted, I would fear that if I were associated with an amendment of that sort somebody might say about me: Why, that fellow Pickersgill had the nerve to suggest that parliament should amend the Maritimes Freight Rates Act, the charter of our liberties, the Magna Carta of the maritimes. I could not say in defence that I had not said it would be amended because in a bill of which I am the sponsor it would appear that the whole of parliament had said this act should be amended. If one were skilled enough at doing this sort of thing, which I am glad to say I am not, a lot of people might say that I intended to take that right away from them. I would advise the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, who has only been elected once, not to jeopardize his chances of re-election by leaving himself open to that kind of misconstruction and imputation.

Therefore I do not think it would be a wise thing to do.

Although it would not make much difference legislatively, I do not think it would be a wise thing to do from the standpoint of a proper understanding in the Atlantic provinces of the intent of parliament. I think our intent is perfectly clear, that in freezing the rates in that area only as a temporary expedient, and associating that freeze with the facts which are known to everyone in the area, the problem is being dealt with urgently and there is a spur to get on with the job, whereas if the freeze was indefinite I fear that parliament would not have the same incentive. For that reason I really hope that the hon. gentleman will not press for the adoption of either of his suggested amendments.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I am not sure that the minister is taking an attitude which will be conducive toward reaching a compromise on the matter that was brought up yesterday. With reference to what happened yesterday, let me compliment the government members on their attendance this afternoon and their new-found interest in this bill. I see eight cabinet ministers present today and many backbenchers milling around at the rear of the house. It was a hard, humiliating lesson but we are glad to see that the government is showing some interest in this measure which is so important both to the east and to the west.

A minute ago the minister said that he felt that public opinion in the maritimes was going to be a great factor in inducing certain persons, including himself, to act on matters which affect maritime freight rates. I was glad to hear him say that. I am not particularly worried about that but when I look at the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Industry I wonder what kind of pressure is needed from the maritimes to get them to move.

The minister must surely recognize the fact that there is apprehension in the maritimes. If he wants to leave the house for a minute to have a talk with some of the members from the maritimes, we will bear his absence for a moment or two. I think they would tell him that there is apprehension in the maritimes regarding the matter of an indefinite freeze. I have expressed myself frankly but I fear nevertheless that the full story will not be understood in the maritimes when word of yesterday's and today's debate is carried to the people there by the press.

I suggest to the minister that he should include a phrase in the bill to deal with the problem of the freeze. It would be quite simple to make some kind of an amendment, perhaps enlarging on what the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has suggested, which would include certain statutory advantages embodied in the principle of the Maritime Freight Rates Act so that when changes are brought about we will all know that the principle is being recognized.

I give the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings credit for his persistence. He knows that it will be hard to explain the situation to the shippers in his constituency. If the minister is aware of public opinion in the maritimes, as he says he is, I think he should accept the challenge to him to come up with an appropriate phrase which will cover what he intends. I will not go into yesterday's debate until the matter is dealt with again in the correct way under our procedure, but I really think that the minister must have learned his lesson yesterday. However, if he wishes to provoke a horde of maritime members he will find out how angry maritimers can be. The noise which the western members of parliament made yesterday will be as nothing.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I look with envy at the long record of the minister in this chamber and I hope that his long record of service both outside and inside this chamber can be an example for all members on this side as far as tenure and length of service are concerned, though not necessarily an example of the way in which service is performed, but obviously the minister has had a much longer span of experience with which to look at this legislation and at my suggestions. I certainly defer to him. I appreciate fully his remarks about the legislative problems connected with preparing a suitable amendment. I agree with what he said about my suggested compromise. Of course, the trouble is that when one starts to compromise to find a solution one is liable to compromise in all areas and thus compromise the legislative force of the suggestion.

I fully appreciate the fact that the suggestion I put forward may be a little uncertain, but at least it is something. So far as deferring to the minister's political assessment of the situation in the maritimes is concerned, with respect, Mr. Chairman, I must part company with him there. There is some concern in the maritimes now about the uncertainty of the freeze for two years. At the end of the two years rates are obviously going to go up. The minister mentioned that there might be some new proposal on the basis of the Atlantic provinces transportation study, but that will be debated at another time. We are still going to have to debate the Maritime Freight Rates Act. If we could put something in the Maritime Freight Rates Act now, it might shorten that debate.

I fully appreciated the minister's remarks and for that reason I have restricted my remarks. If I were to move formally the amendment that the freeze continue for two years or until the Maritime Freight Rates Act is amended, then I would remove the uncertainty. This is the purpose I would hope to achieve. The people in the maritimes know that the freeze is going to end. The minister has said that the government is going to move. I find it difficult to reconcile the two views. How is the government going to be stimulated into action? The Maritime Freight Rates Act will continue but the new transportation commission will be able to adjust the rates and up the rates will go.

It was suggested by some witnesses before the transport committee that these rates would go up as much as 50 per cent. The president of the Canadian Pacific, Mr. Sinclair, admitted that in all probability the 20 per cent and 30 per cent preference within the select area would vanish if there were no restriction at all. Unless the minister is prepared to consider the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, to bring the matter to a head perhaps I should move the amendment.

I appreciate the minister's remarks concerning the legislative imperfections in both amendments. I certainly defer to the minister's political assessment; I know the minister is only too capable of handling political affairs. While my experience in elections is relatively slight, I feel fairly certain where I stand on this point. I know the minister will be able to take care of himself in a like fashion. Therefore, unless the minister is prepared to consider some change in the proposed section and perhaps give an example of how the government will take the initiative two or three years hence, I am afraid I am going to have to move formally the amendment which I suggested last night.

Mr. Stewart: I want to say a word or two, Mr. Chairman, about the proposition the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings put forward last night because he is now suggesting he may move it formally as an amendment to the bill. As all members of the committee know, we are not in a position now to go ahead and make some sort of new settlement in relation to transportation in the Atlantic provinces. The study has not been completed. Consequently, we have to leave this matter somewhat indefinite. We have to be indecisive at the moment. We have to leave a certain amount of uncertainty.

What the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings is trying to do, and I sympathize with his purpose, is to reduce that uncertainty. He is trying to build in a hedge against the possibility that at the end of the two year period when the freeze thaws the Maritime Freight Rates Act would simply continue. Now, the hon. gentleman has already admitted that the last part of his draft is legally meaningless.

Mr. Nowlan: I agree, but, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Stewart: Let me read his words again:

> Subsection (1) shall be in force during the two years after the coming into force of subsection (1) and shall continue in force after the said two years unless, and until, the Maritime Freight Rates Act is amended to retain the historic intent and purpose of providing Atlantic provinces industry access to the markets of Canada without the handicap of distance.

I suggest, and I think the hon. member has agreed already, that all the words beginning with "to retain the historic intent and purpose" are meaningless. In other words, sir, the freeze would continue until amendments were made to the Maritime Freight Rates Act. These amendments might be ones which would bring no joy whatever to the hearts of shippers or the general population in the Atlantic provinces.

It seems to me that the motion the hon. member is making has a second very sharp edge. It is true that the provision of this amendment might bring about improvement of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. It is equally true, because susceptible of judgment based on opinion, that it might trigger an amendment that would work precisely the opposite way.

As evidence that this could be the case, I adduce the hon. member's own amendment. His amendment refers to retaining the historic intent and purpose of providing industry in the Atlantic provinces with access to the markets of Canada without the handicap of distance. I argue that the historic intent and purpose of the Maritime Freight Rates Act long since has been so badly eroded that the act which the hon. gentleman is now seeking to retain no longer performs the original intention of the enacting parliament. I am not at all zealous to see the act retained if it is not improved in some way. I want to see an improvement. In other words, sir, I think that the purpose of the hon. gentleman is a good one. We all like to hedge in times of uncertainty. We like to put in a hedge that creates a presumption in our own favour.

But the amendment proposed here does not do that at all. In fact, it implies that the change could be a change against us. Any change in the terms of the Maritime Freight Rates Act could have the effect of thawing the freeze. We who come from the Atlantic provinces should recognize the actual situation. We should recognize that something is going to have to be done. But we do not now have the information upon which to base a scheme for the solution of our problem. Consequently, our best protection is to remain alert until the information is available. We must remain alert until we are ready to proceed to attempt the kind of solution to the problem of transportation in the Atlantic provinces that is desirable.

I urge the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings not to try to win the kind of superficial victory that throws out the baby with the bath water, the kind of victory his friends from the west won yesterday. We in the Atlantic provinces are much more sophisticated than to want that sort of victory, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, there may be a great deal of uncertainty in the mind of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough. He used that word a couple of times and it may be due to his environment, finding himself unfortunately located where he is. But I do not think there is uncertainty in the minds of the other maritime members in the house about what we hope to accomplish, which is to see that the rights that were given to us, by a much earlier parliament, admittedly, as the hon. member said, eroded away, are restored. Those rights include helping us to overcome the geographical disability under which the Atlantic provinces lie.

The suggestion of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has been under some criticism by the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough. The amendment of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings simply projects a two year freeze. At that time, if we have faith, hope, charity and other "Pickersgilliana" which may be lying around, we may expect that some other amendment will be brought in to incorporate the terms of the study that is now going on.

This legislation has been mooted for a long time. I am sure that in the past people have insisted that it should be brought in within a two-year period, but nothing like this has happened. The matter has been carried over from one parliament to another and now we are finally coming to grips with it.

The assurance that after the study is completed legislative action based on it will be brought before parliament is no certainty, sir. I will even join the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough, use the word "uncertainty" and say that probably this is a very great uncertainty. Once the two years have passed the freeze will be over and the rates on these important shipments will sprout unless parliament does an amending job and extends that particular provision on a year to year basis until legislative action is taken on that study. For this reason, Mr. Chairman, and based on the principle "better the evil you know than the evil you don't know". I am going to support the amendment which I anticipate the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings is now going to move.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I think that will bring matters to a head. I appreciate some of the remarks of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough, but if the purpose of the proposition is good I certainly think that outweighs the superficial aspect referred to by the hon. member. The purpose is good and sound but there is an honest difference of opinion between the minister and me as to how the government will move, when it does move, on the Maritime Freight Rates Act. In view of the known propensities of certain governments, and having regard to the delinquency of the government of the day in the matter of taking the initiative in this area, I at least feel that this amendment will clarify some of the uncertainty.

In view of what has been said both last night and today and in view of the stimulative action which will be taken by the railways, which are even against the two-year freeze the minister has proposed, as well as for other reasons, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax:

That section 335 (3) be amended by deleting all the words after the word "and" and substituting therefor the following:

"continue in force after the said two years unless and until the Maritime Freight Rates Act is amended to retain the historic intent and purpose of providing Atlantic provinces industry access to the markets of Canada without the handicap of distance".

I fully appreciate the comment about the drafting of the second half of the amendment but it is the first section which is the operative part here and should be embodied in the legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think there is a technical imperfection in the amendment. If it is taken literally it does not strike out anything, it merely appears to add these words to the words already in the section, which of course would make utter nonsense. I am sure we would be very happy to rephrase the amendment, and perhaps I can help the hon. gentleman a little by saying that the existing words of subsection (3) should be struck out and that the words he suggested should then be substituted therefor. I think that this would overcome the technical problem, which is not a serious one. All of us experience this when moving amendments in committee.

However, Mr. Chairman, much as I dislike having to do so, particularly with a new member who has made a very good impression in this house already and for whom I think all of us have for a number of reasons a good deal of esteem, especially in view of his ancestry and background, I am afraid I must reject the amendment. Incidentally, if I might be permitted to reminisce for one moment, when I came into this house for the first time his father was already a respected member and was one of the people on the other side of the house who first welcomed me. He even kindly wrote me a note at the end of my first session suggesting, though I really did not think I had done very well, that I had not done too badly and encouraging me to continue.

Therefore I know that the hon. gentleman will not think it is out of any lack of good will that I say I do not feel in a position to accept his amendment. I reject it on two grounds: first of all, on the ground that I do not think intrinsically it would be a good amendment to adopt; second, I think it would be open to grave misunderstanding and create grave confusion if we were to adopt it. For that reason I hope that my friends—

Mr. Churchill: —are in the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, with that instant perception we all admire so much, has anticipated my thoughts, Mr. Chairman. I hope that all my friends are in the house and I hope that all my friends, including those from the Atlantic provinces, will have no hesitation whatever in joining with me in rejecting, in a spirit of good will, the amendment offered by the hon. member.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, the minister talks about friends. I hope he realizes he is losing important friends by the way he is putting this bill through. At the beginning he brought the Senate into his remarks. He has lost the support of that place. Yesterday it was evident he would lose the support of the west. Now he is in serious danger of losing the support of the maritimes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): We do not say that the whole Maritime Freight Rates Act needs to be changed or reviewed. We gave the minister an opportunity to insert a few words to show his good intention with regard to the freeze. We explained in a straight-forward way what we wanted and the minister has refused to do so. I for one, coming from the maritimes, will not be accused of not standing up for the maritimes when an important measure such as this comes forward.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Nowlan) negatived; Yeas, 41; nays, 68.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Does this complete discussion of new section 335?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: The committee will consider new section 336. The hon. member for Winnipeg South.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to speak on section 335.

The Chairman: Order, please. The committee has passed section 335.

Mr. Kindt: I beg to differ. The chairman did not see me when I rose. He did not turn his head to see me.

The Chairman: Perhaps I should say to the hon. member that if the Chair does not see an hon. member standing when a clause or subsection is carried, it would help the Chair if the hon. member standing would indicate that he wishes to speak. I recognize the hon. member for Macleod on new section 335.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Kindt: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I shall be brief. This section has to do with the rate for coal and coke.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman realize that it deals only with rates in the select area? It has nothing to do with rates for coal outside the Atlantic area.

Mr. Kindt: Would the minister tell me on what subsection or section I could talk about the rates for coal going to Japan?

Mr. Pickersgill: On section 336 when we come to it. The hon. gentleman could speak about the matter then.

Mr. Kindt: That is the next section?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right.

Mr. Kindt: This whole bill is extremely confusing. I have read section 336 and I do not see that I can talk on the subject I wish to raise. But if the minsiter says I can speak on that section I shall sit down until section 336 is called and then hope that I will be given the first chance to speak.

The Chairman: On section 336 the Chair has recognized the hon. member for Winnipeg South.

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, new section 336 deals with a number of aspects to which some members on this side of the house have already made numerous references during consideration of clause 1 of the bill, particularly before the Christmas recess. I participated in that debate and devoted considerable time to the precise subject under examination specifically in clause 33. My feelings today with regard to the provisions in this section are well known to the minister and to other members of the committee. I beg your indulgence, Mr. Chairman, if for the next few minutes my comments seem a repetition of previous ones. It is necessary to repeat certain things and to press the arguments advanced particularly by my province of Manitoba in concert with the other prairie provinces in relation to the main considerations of section 336.

The two specific subjects covered in section 336 are the maximum rate formula and the machinery and procedure for its application, and the process whereby a captive shipper may be identified under the terms of the legislation. The west has been particularly unhappy with the maximum rate formula as prescribed in the new legislation, as you know, sir, and with the mechanics by which it will be applied. It is to that aspect of this section that I address myself for the next few moments this afternoon.

As has been said by other members of the house, including myself, without the costing data from the railways that the western provinces have repeatedly asked for it has been extremely difficult, in fact well nigh impossible, to assess the impact of the maximum rate formula correctly. The west was unhappy with section 329. The west is not unhappy with the way section 329 was amended. But the west is unhappy with much of section 336.

As I have said, in the past few years my province has been in the vanguard of the fight to develop in this country a comprehensive, efficient and progressive transportation policy and a national transportation approach. I think the minister will concede that point.

Some of the most reasoned and articulate arguments advanced with respect to transportation before this house and before the standing committee on transportation during the past five or six years were prepared by the province of Manitoba which worked in concert principally with the other western provinces. No one would disagree that Manitoba has played a signal role in the vanguard of the fight for a better transportation system and policy, and nowhere has its role been better demonstrated than in the major brief which it submitted to our standing committee last fall.

That brief was probably two to three years in preparation and represented some seven to eight years of application and study on the part of the Manitoba transportation people and members of the provincial administration at the research level. I think it would be presumptuous of me, and highly wasteful of the time of hon. members, if I were to try to express my own opinions and attitudes about this question to the exclusion of the specific formal arguments already advanced by my province. Therefore I beg the indulgence of the Chair and the committee to permit me to read into the record specific statements, recommendations and conclusions contained in the Manitoba brief. That brief contains so much expertise and so much sound and valid judgment that I do not think it should be pigeonholed at the standing committee level. I could not improve on it and therefore will refer to specific passages in it.

Two transportation consultants from the United States were retained by the province of Manitoba in the course of preparation of the brief. They were university professors, Professor D. H. Borts and Professor Ernest W. Williams Jr. Their expertise and experience were heavily relied upon during the course of the deliberations in which the Manitoba transportation people engaged and a good deal of their research and conclusions were imbedded in the arguments advanced in the Manitoba case.

There was complete compatibility among these two professors, the experts from the provincial administration, and the legal counsel retained by Manitoba who contributed to the drafting of the brief, in regard to the contention that new section 336 contains a great many flaws and weaknesses and is inequitable in its treatment of the maximum rate formula, the application of that formula, and its provisions relating to a captive shipper and the identification of a captive shipper.

On this point I would like to refer to the Manitoba brief:

> Two aspects of section 336 require attention. First, the applicability of the maximum rate formula which involves the definition of a captive shipper and the determinability of a captive shipper. Second, that dealing with the formula itself.
> The royal commission in dealing with this problem recommended that all shippers should have the right to declare themselves captive. At page 104 (page 52) volume II, the commission stated:
> "The decision to seek captive status must rest with the shipper. His reasons for initiating the action will be dissatisfaction with the rate he is forced to pay."
> The legislation, as presented, envisages that even shippers who are now manifestly captive must establish this fact by special application to the commission. It is difficult to understand why the legislation requires that those intended to benefit from the royal commission recommendation be subjected to this difficulty of establishing their right to a maximum rate. It should be remembered that the royal commission designed the formula as an alternative to the present class rate structure. All shippers in Canada have the right to a class rate on the movement of their own commodities and this right does not entail an obligation to ship a given portion of their goods.
> "...Our problem, as we see it, is to attempt to substitute a more realistic method of maximum rate control for the traditional class rate maximum, which will protect the captive shipper and not limit the operation of commercial principles in the growing competitive sector."
> The royal commission on a number of occasions referred to the Freight Rates Reduction Act. This act in itself was evidence of the parliament of Canada's determination that class and non-competitive commodity shippers were at least shippers to whom the term "captive" could apply because it was these shippers that the parliament of Canada determined should be relieved of the excessive burden caused by the last general freight rate increase in 1958. We are now advised in the provisions of Bill C-231 that the only captive shipper is one in respect of whose goods there is no alternative, effective and competitive service by a common carrier other than a rail carrier...

We are now faced with the situation where it is suggested that the only likely recipients of protection under the legislation are class rated shippers who represent 1 per cent of the tonnage carried by Canadian railways.

This was a point stressed in a telegram sent to the Prime Minister by the premier of Manitoba, the Hon. Duff Roblin, in concert with at least one and possibly both of the premiers of the other prairie provinces, at the time that the standing committee on transportation was considering the Manitoba brief last fall.

In the 1965 waybill analysis the class rated traffic represented 1.7 per cent of the tonnage and approximately 4.6 per cent of the total revenues of the railways. If we are to accept this position we must assume that the intent of the legislation is to leave, without any control mechanisms, approximately 98 per cent of the traffic. In addition, members of the committee must remember that the existing class rates are, in fact, the maximum which the railways are permitted to charge any shipper in Canada.

These are rates granted to the shippers not by the gratuitous act of the railways, not by contract, but by the regulatory authority. If the above definition of captivity is to be accepted, there would be introduced a most alarming concept into rate-making in this country. We would have a situation where the present class rates are done away with, where all rules and regulations relative to unjust discrimination and unreasonableness of rates are eliminated, where a new maximum rate formula is introduced, the impact of which is unknown since cost data has been denied.

Both United States experts to whom I have referred made similar comments with regard to the maximum rate formula and the difficulty a captive shipper has. They made submissions to both the province of Manitoba and the standing committee on transportation. I believe it is important that some of their arguments be read into the record now. The submission made by Professor Borts had this to say on the subject, under the heading "definition of captivity":

Under the section 336 of the Bill C-231, a shipper of goods may request the commission to determine the probable range within which a fixed rate would fall should the shipper choose to apply for captivity. After being informed by the commission of the probable rate, the shipper may apply to the commission for captivity and the commission, after investigation, may fix a rate which is determined by the rate formula. The weakness of this provision is that there is only a vague criterion specified by which the commission may decide whether a shipper is worthy of captive treatment. This vague definition is provided in the opening words of the section, where it is said that:

"a shipper of goods for which in respect to those goods there is no alternative, effective and competitive service by a common carrier other than a rail carrier or carriers or combination of rail carriers may, etc."

There is no specific pinpointing of the definition or criteria to be used in respect of a captive shipper under that terminology.

It is very difficult to specify what is meant by the absence of alternative, effective and competitive service. From one point of view, there is very little competitive service in Canada, where there are only two railway systems to begin with, and where truck lines are also owned by these very same railway systems. While there may be a wide range of services which are technologically effective they may not be economically competitive. On the other hand, we know that the rails have lost traffic to the trucks so we know there are shippers with alternatives. The difficulty is how to define the absence of such alternatives. This opening section 336 (1) is faulty in not indicating what constitutes the absence of alternative service.... The traffic which is truly captive in the economic sense consists of heavy loading commodities which find the railroads more advantageous than truck because of the present technology and cost of rail and truck operations. This represents such a broad category of traffic, however, that it is probably best not to tie up the time of a commission staff in deciding who is and who isn't economically captive. The best way to define captivity is through self-declaration by the shipper. Any shipper should be free to ask the commission to specify a rate which he would enjoy if he should declare himself captive.

Then the submission continues:

In determining the rate to be charged captive shippers, the commission is instructed to fix a rate equal to the variable cost of the carriage of the goods and an amount equal to 150 per cent of the variable cost.

I submit that this is a thoroughly charitable arrangement under which the railways are permitted to operate. It would be a fairly generous arrangement if any business or entrepreneur were in the position of being paid 150 per cent over and above his variable costs in a given competitive commercial situation. No satisfactory answer has been given to members of the standing committee or members of this house concerning the procedure that was followed in arriving at the figure of 150 per cent. No one has pinpointed the source of that figure, nor has anyone explained why it should be 150 per cent. Nevertheless, that happens to be the rate which now, presumably, is to be embedded in this legislation for all time to come.

Mr. Borts in his submission points out that the legislation sets out a very complicated cost formula, the effect of which is to provide a mark-up of 150 per cent over variable cost for shipments of 30,000 pounds. For shipments of larger than 30,000 pounds the peculiar provisions of this formula pile mark-up upon mark-up, because the economies of heavy loading traffic are not reflected in the artificial variable cost concept to be calculated. In an earlier submission to the Department of Transport by eight provinces, an analysis of the cost formula revealed that the mark-up over variable cost varied from 150 per cent of variable cost on a 30,000-pound load to a mark-up of 600 per cent of variable cost for a shipment of 140,000 pounds. The percentage mark-up over variable cost rose continually as carload weight rose because of the failure of the rate formula to take account of the economies of heavier loads.
