victims from the wreckage.

When the cellar had been cleared it was found that scores were hurt, their injuries consisting of bruises and cuts the injuries were due to the panic that followed the crash, many being trampled on in the wild rush to escape, Rabbi Askinsky was one of those victims. He was trampled by the excited crowd and sustained severe injuries, but though suffering intense-ly, continued the services after order had been restored. The fact that there were no fatalities is a marvel, as the platform when it broke closed up like a jackknife, throwing the people in a struggling mass into the cellar. A rumor gained credence that several children were buried in the ruins and considerable force had to be used to prevent another panic being precip-itated by frenzied fathers and mothers.

Sir Henry Morgan, a notorious buccaneer, who has been made vice-gov-ernor of Jamaica was deposed by King James and ordered with arrest. Morgan, however, with the help of Benjamin Harnigold, is once more able to hoist the black flag. Harnigold aids them with the hope of getting Morgan in his power and exacting revenge for his brother whom the old buccaneer had hanged. On the Mary Rose, Morgan sails south and attacks two Span-ish frigates conveying a heavily loaded galleon. The convoys were destroyed and also the Mary Rose. Morgan, however, sails south in the galleon where he is wrecked off the coast of NE hundred yards or so beyond the place of the ambush the road dropped sharply over the last cliff to the narrow strand which led to the west wall of La Guay-Caracas. Captain Dominique Alvarado, commandant of the port of La Guayra, loves the daughter of the Governor of the Spanish colony of Venezuela, and his love is secretly returned. The governor, however, chooses De Tobar as Donna Mercedes' future husband. The governor has sent Alvarado in charge of a party to convey Mercedes to La Guayra and they set out. On the way Donna Mercedes poured out her love story to Alvarado. He holds to duty and she attempts to jump her horse the same voice whose commanding tones had caused his life to be spared over a cliff. He seizes her from the srddle as the horse goes down and acknowledges her love has conquered.

Morgan and his band reach the shore in safety and bury their treasure. They decide to march against La Guayra and Cavacas, ravage these places and seize the first ships that come into

Morgan's plan was an excellent one, the best that could be suggested in the

they then were, and it received the hearty assent of all the men. It took them all day to land the treasure several rude sealing ladders, pieces of timber with crosspieces nailed upon them, which could be used in surmounting the walls of the town. In the evening the order of march was ar-ranged and their departure set for the morrow. They had saved their treasre, they had food in plenty now, and ith dry clothes and much rum they began to take a more cheerful view of They were fairly content once

The next day, in the afternoon-for desired to approach the town at nightfall-Morgan gave the order to advance. He was as much of a soldier as a sailor and sent ahead a party of choice spirits under Teach, while the main body followed some distance be-hind. As the shades of evening descended a messenger from the advance guard came back with the news that a party of travelers had been seen coming down the mountain; that they comprised a half dozen troopers, a number of slaves, a heavily laden pack train

Teach had stationed his men under the trees at a bend of the road around which the travelers had to pass, and he awaited Morgan's orders. Taking a detachment of the most reliable men, with Velsers and Hornigold, and bid-ding the other officers and men to stand where they were until he sent word, Morgan and those with him ran rapidly forward until they came to the ambuscade which young Teach had artfully prepared. He and his had scarcely time to dispose themselves for concealment before a soldier came riding carelessly down the road. Waiting until the man had passed him a short distance and until the other un cious travelers were fairly abreast the liers in wait, whom he had charged on ne account to move until he gave the word, Morgan stepped out into the open and called. The buccaneers instantly followed him. As the soldier saw these fierce look ing men spring before him out of the darkness he cried aloud. The next moment he was shot dead by Morgan himself. At the same instant a volley rang out at contact range, and every man in the party fell to the ground. Some were killed, others only wounded. All of them except Alvarado were injured in some way. He struck spurs into his horse when he heard the cry of Fadrique and the shot. The surprised barb plunged forward, was hit by half a dozen bullets, fell to the ground in a heap and threw his rider over his head. The Spaniard scrambled to his feet, whipped out his sword, lunged forward and drove his blade into the breast of old Velsers. The next instant a dozen weapons flashed over his head. One rang upon his steel casque; another crashed against the polished again in the darkness and once more fieshed his weapon. Women's screams rose above the tumult. Beating back the swords which menaced him, although he was reeling from the blows which he had received, Alvarado strove to make his way toward Donna Mercedes when he was seized in the darkness from behind. "Kill him!" cried a voice in English, which Alvarado and Mercedes both understood perfectly. "He's the only one

"Strike," cried Mercedes bravely,
"and let my blood wash out the insult that you have put upon my cheek!" She raised her whip once more, but this time young Teach, coming on the other side, caught her hand, wrested the jeweled toy from her and broke it in the struggle.

"Thou shalt pay dearly for those stripes, lady!" roared Morgan, swerving closer to her. "And not now in henerable wedlock"-

"I will die first!" returned Mercedes. Alvarado meanwhile had been struggling desperately to free himself. By the exercise of superhuman strength, just as Morgan again menaced the woman he loved he succeeded in freeing himself from his loosely tied bonds. His guards for the moment had their attention distracted from him by the group on horsoback. He wrenched a sword from the hand of one, striking him a blow with his naked fift that sent him reeling as he did so, and then fung out his other arm so that the heavy pommel of the sword struck the second guard in the face, and the way was clear for the moment. He sprang forward instantly, seized Morgan's horse, forced him away from Mercedes by a wrench of his powerful arm and stood at bay in front of the woman he loved. He said no word, but stood with his sword up on guard, panting heavily from his fierce exertions. "Alvarado, you will be killed!"

stone's throw from the liveliest thoroughfare in the town, where upon a pleas-ant evening there would be a gay parade of young folk, with no dearth of wayfarers upon soberer errands, but the gleam of the lights and the hum of the voices seemed to be shut out of the side street by an invisible barrier. He who turned from the avenue plunged at once into gloom and silence under the high arch of elms. The houses stood aloof behind trees and shrubbery and were never prodigal of gas. Here and there a gate lamp of a frugal size bedecked the darkness with a yellow stripe just bright enough to prevent the advancing passenger from seeing anything beyond it except the shadowy trunk of some tall elm offering ideal ambush to a footpad.

A breath of east wind had chilled the May evening. Verandas were deserted, and between the bustling avenue and his own doorstep Mr. Lovering saw none of his neighbors and heard no sound of them. Highwaymen and house-breakers were the subjects of his thought, and in unconscious imitation of those unobtrusive people he made a very quiet entrance into his own home. Indeed, he was already in the parlor and in the act of depositing a great bundle upon the table when his presence became known. Then his sister, Margaret, who was sitting upon the piano stool, turned toward him with a little cry, and a tall young man stand-ing beside her halted suddenly in the midst of a pretty speech and acknowledged Mr. Lovering's wordless greeting with momentary embarrassr

Then Father Time, who had stood on one foot in order that Lovering might have leisure to appreciate these hor-rors, rushed nimbly on to overtake his schedule and dragged events along with him in a giddy whirl. The elder Woodbury appeared, his hands full of pistols. Joe, the burglar, was tied up as neat as an apothecary's package; the younger Woodbury and Margaret enchanted each other with congratula-tions far more warm than any previous expression of sentiment between them would have seemed to warrant. All this, for Lovering, passed in a flash. He heard a jumble of explanations how the Woodburys had decided to keep an eye upon the house and had discovered that something was amiss within, though they had not seen the actual entrance of the burglars; how Margaret had not retired, but had been sitting by her window in the dark, and a hundred other details. SEE OUR WINDOW DISPLAY OF HANDSOME NEW WAISTINGS. EVERY FETCHING NOVELTY.

ALREADY THE DEMAND FOR FALL WAISTINGS is quite beyond expectations, Our announcement of the first shipment a few days ago sent a steady flow of buyers and enquirers to our stores. Happy surprises were in store for all; the stock, though far from complete at that time, delighting even the most fastidious. Since that date many new goods have arrived as follows:-

SILK EMBROIDERED WAISTINGS, 55c Yd. A soft, pliable material in about all the staple and novelty shades and tints. Its particularly good feature is its Ringed and Spotted embroidered pattern, which is quite new. 29 inches wide.

PRETTY SATIN LAINES, 55c Yd. The lustrous finish of this make of goods gives it an especially desirable look. It also is embroidered in spots of seve al sizes. The color-range takes in the new shades and such standbys as Navy, Red, Black, White, etc. 29 inches wide.

GLACE WAISTINGS, 55c Yd. Resembling somewhat the Satin Laine, the Glace effect has a pleasing shimmer to it. It has the same patterns as the Laine also, with deft embroidering in spots This goods will be employed as a costume material as well. *29 inches wide.

NFW FRENCH FLANNELS. 50c Yd. Again the embroidered spot looms up, for it is truly the correct pattern for fall, but in the Flannels the color-grounds are all solid, no shaded effects. The usual-and a few unusual-colors. Beautiful fresh ALBATROSS, 48c and 50c Yd.

There are two distinct lines of Albatross this season, the Ombred, or shaded stripe effect being the new comer. It is going to be very much worn, too. Such tones as Greys and Greens, Browns, Rose, etc., are daintily commingled. 28 inches wide. PRINTED FRENCH FLANNELS, 42c Yd.

sizes. This is an especially large stock, selected from the prettiest lines of 1905-06. 28 inches wide. NEW FLANNELETTES, 15c to 34c Yd. In many new effects, including Satin Finish, Cashmere Finish and Embroidered. Here is a collection

For soft garments and bright new waists. Stripes for waists, children's dresses, etc., of every hue and tint. More patterns than we could tell in today's space. 29 to 32 inches wide. NOVELTY VELOURS, 15c to 50c Yd. A broad range of colors and qualities from which to make a selection for dressing jackets, bath robes, kimonos, etc. Printed and woven effects. In Stripes.

Spots and many Fancy Designs. Fresh Materials for Children's Dresses.
