

GRAND REVIEW AT THE HEIGHTS FOR FAMOUS GENERAL HAMILTON AND THE MINISTER OF MILITIA

Twenty-Five Hundred Troops in Camp Massed at Top of Hill in Honor of Distinguished Officer—Make Impressive and Inspiring Appearance—Visitors Speak in High Praise of Camp Boys.

It was an inspiring sight on Carling's Heights this morning, when nearly 2,500 soldiers, a number of them mounted, massed on the open parade grounds east of the staff headquarters and passed in review before General Sir Ian S. M. Hamilton, G.C.B., D.S.O., and inspector of the overseas force of Great Britain, Col. the Hon. Sam. Hughes, minister of militia of Canada; Col. Hodgins, D.O.C.; Lieut.-Col. Macdonell, Major Gordon Hall, and officers accompanying General Hamilton and Col. Hughes. Every band in the camp was also massed, and to stirring martial airs, the First Hussars and the Greys Horse paraded back and forth in companies, platoons and line formation before the review stand in the centre of the grounds.

A Fine Showing. Although the majority of the horses in these two units are "green," and apparently of a nervous disposition, there was scarcely a false move in the marches put on by both the Hussars and the Greys Horse.

The infantry clad in khaki, red, black and blue uniforms were then sent to the front. They marched and counter-marched past the stand, and although the men have been in camp less than a week they made an excellent showing, and the feeling of nervousness which one would likely expect when such an inspection was going on, was conspicuous by its absence.

General Hamilton and Col. Hughes accompanied by staff officers arrived in the city this morning at 7:30 on a special train. Immediately on their arrival they proceeded to the camp grounds and before anyone knew they were about they were going through the lines of infantry making an inspection.

After inspecting the infantry lines a visit was paid to the "green" quarters. Two hours after the general's arrival the men became cognizant of the fact that he was in camp, but he had passed through the lines by that time.

Gen. Sir Ian S. M. Hamilton, G. C. B., D. S. O., and inspector of the overseas force of Great Britain, does not favor compulsory military training in Canada. Rather does he think that the cadet movement should be encouraged in all the schools of the country, and that it should be made one of the teaching courses.

Without infringing at all on that great controversy of compulsory training in schools, I think that greater results could be achieved by cadet training in the schools," said Gen. Hamilton. "Attendance at school is compulsory. Why should compulsory drill training be compulsory to the boys in a school and would teach them the principles of militarism. The cadet movement is the fundamental principle in military training, and if the young minds are taught drills in school the efficiency of the militia in Canada would increase 50 per cent."

Asked how he found things in the camp at London, Gen. Hamilton replied that he was surprised at the proficiency. "There are a fine lot of men, and the horses are of a better class than I have seen elsewhere," said he. "I was much surprised when I learned that a majority of the men are in camp this year for the first time, think they are going fine. The camp is in fine condition, but the men are cramped for room."

time. After his inspection of the hospital and supplies tent, accompanied by the staff officers, the general went to the Chadwick farm, where the Greys' Horse and the Hussars were manoeuvring. There he stayed for an hour and a half watching the riding and inspecting the horses, after which the party proceeded to Wolsely Barracks, and inspected the different quarters.

Massed on the Hill. At 11 o'clock the order for assembling was sent out, and the massing of the troops on the top of the hill commenced.

General Hamilton and Col. Hughes afterwards expressed themselves as being well pleased with the appearance of the camp, the men and the horses.

At 12 o'clock the party left for the special train and started on the journey to Winnipeg. The general will go through to the coast, inspecting all the barracks and permanent troops between here and there.

Lieut.-Col. Biggar Inspects. Lieut.-Col. J. Lyons Biggar, of Ottawa, inspector of transports and postal services, arrived in the city Friday night, and early this morning paid a visit to the camp. While there he inspected the Army and Service Corps, the kitchens, mess tents and horses of that unit, and the postal department.

He found everything in excellent condition, particularly the lines of No. 16 Company of the Army Service Corps, in charge of Major W. G. Coles, of this city, who accompanied the colonel.

The postal department, in charge of Lieut. Sharnon, was also found to be in fine order, the headquarters tent presenting an unusually neat appearance.

Everything is going smoothly on this sixth day, the men all rounding into form and the horses losing considerable of the nervousness that characterized their movements during the first two or three days.

No. 16 Company of the Army Service Corps left early this morning for the west, and on their return to camp another inspection was made.

GERMANS WIN SUIT AGAINST STANDARD OIL

Released by Courts From Contract Which Would Entail Heavy Loss.

Big Oil Trust Must Contend in Open Market for Business.

[Canadian Press.] Berlin, June 21.—The decision of the imperial supreme court, upholding the German Petroleum Sales Company in its refusal to carry out a contract made with the German-American Petroleum Company, the German subsidiary of the Standard Oil Company, is not only a material victory for the Sales Company, but also an important victory on the question of the principle involved.

The verdict of the highest court releases the Germans from the performance of a contract which they found highly disadvantageous, protects them from the heavy money loss which would have fallen upon them for a year's disregard of the contract had the decision been against them, and compels the Standard Company to contend for business in an open market.

A Strong Rival. It must be noted, however, against a company which has learned American business campaign methods by association with the Standard, and it must conduct its business in a manner that shall not furnish more ammunition to the supporters of the Government monopoly project, which will come up for consideration shortly for consideration. The Sales Company has been strengthening its organization in the last year, and all these factors, together with the firmness of the petroleum market and the comparative scarcity of the supply, make it unlikely, in the opinion of experts, that the Standard Company will find itself in a position to carry out a successful campaign for the acquisition of the entire German oil business.

Expired in 1917. The contract of which the Germans complained was to have expired in 1917. It appertained to the German territory between the Sales Company and the Standard, giving the latter about four-fifths of the total. It regulated the method of selling by the Standard provided that the Standard should have the naming of the Sales Company's managers, and gave the Standard the power to direct certain policies of the Sales Company in certain contingencies. The Germans, finding that they had made a bad bargain, refused after a trial of the new arrangement to carry out the contract. They alleged that they entered into it under duress at a time when they had lost a fierce trade battle with the Americans, and were helpless to do otherwise than accept the terms of surrender offered, and that the contract was against public policy in its encouragement of monopoly and hence void.

Reversed Decision. The trial court of Hamburg, in which the Standard brought its action to compel specific performance of the contract, upheld the Sales Company, but the Hamburg superior court, to which the Standard Company appealed, reversed the trial court's decision, although it held null and void the provisions giving the Standard Company power to name and dismiss managers of the other company, and certain other clauses of the contract. The imperial supreme court has now reversed the superior court and upheld the court of first instance. The Standard must pay the costs of all three hearings.

INDUSTRIES PROVIDE FOR BREAKS IN HYDRO LINES; WHY SHOULD NOT CITY?

Auxiliary Plant the Only Thing That Assures London a Water Supply When Power Goes Off—City as Whole Has No Protection From Tie-Ups.

Mr. Phillip Pocock thinks that the idea of an auxiliary plant to run for the benefit of citizens in case a break occurs on the hydro power system, is not to be considered. At the same time, Mr. Pocock must realize, as is pointed out by those who believe an auxiliary plant to be necessary, that if the city did not have an auxiliary plant at its waterworks there would be no water for drinking or commercial purposes; there would be a complete tie-up in many of the city's largest industries if these industries did not have the means of replacing hydro-electric power with some other power; that thousands of men would lose their wages for a certain time.

Blind to Defects. Mr. Pocock would sooner have the city plunged in darkness and the municipal machinery thrown out of gear in general than to suggest that such a thing as hydro's breaking down could occur again.

Suppose, for instance, the Western Fair was in progress. The hydro commission has arranged so that no other power may be used in the grounds. The Ferrari Shows claim to have dropped between London and Niagara Falls will cause the power to go off in London. Almost every other city on the line—Toronto, Hamilton, Woodstock, has other means of securing power. London, altogether unprotected.

It will be remembered that The Advertiser repeatedly advised the city to buy the plant of the London Electric Company when it could have been had for half its physical value. The plant of this private company would have been available for many purposes, and would have protected the city from the inevitable breakdowns that have occurred wherever power is transmitted long distances.

Ready for a Fight. The present situation is that the London Electric is girding its loins to enter into active competition with the municipal power. Within a short time, before the summer is over, there will be a campaign of price-cutting that will likely astonish those who have no use for or no fear of the plant when it was placed within the easy reach of the municipality.

In the meantime, Toronto is making ready to protect itself against power breakdowns. It is served by two lines securing power from the falls. Both of them have fallen down, one last summer and the other within the present week. Toronto feels that it must have both of these power lines in order to guard itself against the breakdowns that have occurred. Even then, there is the possibility of trouble. London has no protection whatever.

There have been three serious breaks in the line during the present week. There is little possibility that these will be the last.

Hamilton may have a steam auxiliary adjunct to hydro. Constant interruptions start clamor for a plant to insure continuity of power and light to the citizens of ambitious city.

Victoria avenue station is now to the Dominion Power and Transmission Company, was discussed with Mayor Allan yesterday. Of course, the hydro will first have to show that it is on a paying basis, and if it is, the commission is on sound financial basis. Should breakdowns like those of the last few days continue, the city is going to be in a bad position, especially in regard to the waterworks, now dependent on the hydro juice for operation. The advantage of the city using whatever surplus revenue there may be in the municipal power department to erect a special sub-station as an auxiliary plant, somewhat like the WARD THREE HAS PROSPERITY SIGNS. With an increase in population of 441, and a total increase in assessment of $216,731, ward three is showing every sign of prosperity, according to the city assessment department, which has just finished compiling the 1914 assessment for that ward. The increase in ward three has swollen the increased population already reported for 1914, to 868. This increase represents but two wards, three and four, these being the only ones yet completed by the assessment department.

Assessment's Big Jump. While the population has increased nearly 900, the total assessment of the wards has jumped well over half a million dollars—$695,106, to be exact. The only section of the assessment report shows a decrease in the income tax, which has been raised the untaxable maximum of a married man's income from $1,200 to $1,500, is responsible for a dropping off of $25,629 in the two wards. The change in 1914, to 868. This increase represents but two wards, three and four, these being the only ones yet completed by the assessment department.

Ward Three Figures. A tabulated statement of the ward three assessment follows: Population 1914, 1913, Increase. Land 294,362, 294,362, 0. Buildings 99,178, 60,835, 38,343. Total 393,540, 235,200, 158,340. Business 1,237, 12,588, 13,825. Income 6,502, 19,157, 12,655. Total 388,375, 216,731, 171,644. *Decrease.

NERVE ATTEMPT TO TAME BIG LION OF FERRARI SHOW. "Prince" Has Been in Captivity Twenty Years, and Has Killed Three Trainers. Terrific Struggle When Chain Was Placed Around the Old Fellow's Neck.

The trainers with the Ferrari shows have been having a slight diversion from the usual order of things since their arrival in the city. The diversion has been Prince, an old lion, which has been in captivity for 20 years, and has yet never submitted to kindness or severe methods to the extent of entering an arena to perform with other animals.

The big male lion came into the hands of the Ferrari trainers only recently. He has been kept in a small cage and has repulsed every attempt of the trainers to subdue him. An Advertiser man witnessed an attempt to put the big fellow through his paces one day this week. Ropes were first fastened about the animal while he was in the small cage and there were six men on the ropes, and others sought to place a chain on his neck so that he could be chained to the floor of the arena.

Has Killed Three. Leo did not like this and he struggled for 20 minutes before anyone could get close enough to fasten the chain. Finally he was worn down and the chain was put around his tawny mane and fastened. It required some time to accomplish this. So far, he will have achieved a record in the world of animal trainers. Two of the trainers, a man and a woman, were anxious to have one lion loose in the arena. They said they could handle him, but Mrs. Ferrari, who was present, would not hear of it.

"That lion would be out of the arena in two minutes," she said. "We have had to pay too much money in the past for animals getting loose." Proving that in wild animal circles it is not human life that is considered so much as the commercial side of the proposition. The trainers risk their lives every day and understand the risks they face.

EUROPE FEARS MORE TROUBLE IN THE BALKANS

Absolute Deadlock in Peace Negotiations Is Causing Much Anxiety.

Uncompromising Attitude of Servia and Bulgaria Is Causing Delay.

[Canadian Press.] Sofia, Bulgaria, June 21.—The Servian minister here today handed to the Bulgarian Government the reply of Servia to the Bulgarian note rejecting the proposals for demobilization.

FEAR NEW WAR. New York, June 21.—A London cable to the Tribune says: "Unless Bulgaria and Servia can be induced to take up a less uncompromising attitude in the dispute over the division of their territorial spoils, on the powers put prompt and effective pressure on them, a renewal of war in the Balkans still seems probable."

A state of absolute deadlock prevails and all Europe is anxiously awaiting the next move. Vienna thinks war is almost certain, and Bulgaria is undoubtedly in a much stronger military position now than before.

HAVE LITTLE HOPE. [Canadian Press.] New York, June 21.—A cable dispatched from Athens says: "Despite Russia's efforts for peace, little hope is entertained in political circles here for a friendly understanding among the allies regarding the new frontiers owing to Bulgaria's irrevocable attitude."

Bulgaria has almost completed her concentration of troops in Macedonia, 70,000 facing the Greeks between Pravitsa and Angista and between Doiran and Kilkis, with the object of cutting the communications between the Greek and Servian armies by seizing the Uskub and Saloniki Railway at Gevgheli. The main Bulgarian army, concentrated against the Servians between Ishtip and Kochane, has ten divisions of 25,000 men each, being spread along the Serbo-Bulgarian boundary between Kustendil and Slinivitsa and Vidin, in order to defend Sofia.

BIG FIGHT AGAINST CANCER STARTED BY MEDICAL ASSN. National Movement on Part of Doctors Aims To Wipe Out Disease—Each Society Has Endorsed the Action.

[Special to The Advertiser.] Minneapolis, June 21.—The Medical Association's convention, which closed yesterday, was marked by a discussion of plans for a nation-wide organization and movement to combat cancer.

Dr. J. Bloodgood, of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, O., outlined the movement, which was recently started in New York. Dr. Bloodgood explained the nature of the American society for the prevention of cancer, which will be launched formally in New York Monday night.

The organization was endorsed in addresses by several surgeons. The house of delegates had previously adopted a resolution, pledging the support of the American Medical Association to the movement. "This movement found its inception in New York a short time ago, when a committee of laymen and women undertook what is to be a nation-wide propaganda of education and research with regard to the question of cancer," said Dr. Bloodgood before the surgery section. "This society is to deal with the question of cancer on a broader basis than in the past. Each medical society in the country has been approached on the matter and has endorsed it."

ALL ARRANGEMENTS COMPLETE FOR MEDICAL CONVENTION. Next Week's Gathering Promises To Be Most Notable in Years.

The local medical profession have now completed all the arrangements for the association meeting next week and from responses far and near, the indications are that London will be honored with the largest medical convention that has ever assembled in this country. Some of the most distinguished physicians and surgeons on this continent will contribute to the program and the occasion will be a red-letter week in the progress of medical science in Canada. The Forest City, with its spacious lawns and luxuriant foliage, will furnish guests and visitors with attractive and commodious surroundings during their stay, while the hospitality of her citizens will not fail to welcome and entertain in her guests with becoming cordiality.

HURRICANE IN SOUTH ELGIN. Heavy Damage Was Caused by Big Wind in Vienna District.

BARN WAS DESTROYED. St. Thomas, Ont., June 21.—A hurricane which swept across the southern part of Elgin County late Friday afternoon, cut a swath twenty rods wide and a quarter of a mile long, leveling everything in its path. In the vicinity of Vienna houses were partially wrecked and many trees uprooted. A large barn was struck by lightning and destroyed. No one was injured.

FARMERS TAKING KEEN INTEREST IN O. A. C. WORK

Figures Show That 95 Per Cent of Students Go Back To Farms.

Splendid Work Is Being Done to Help Farmers of Canada.

Toronto, June 21.—Following is some of the information contained in the annual report of Hon. James S. Lyon, Ontario minister of agriculture, which has just been issued:

Of the 492 boys taking the general course at the college, 459 went from Ontario, 30 from other provinces of the Dominion, 66 from 17 other countries, including 22 from England, and 17 from the United States.

At least 95 per cent of the O. A. C. students return to the farm.

An area of 150 acres has been added to the Ontario Agricultural College lands.

Ninety-five orchards entered the orchard competition conducted by the department.

A new dairy barn and a field husbandry building are being added to the college equipment.

Ontario's share of the federal grant to the provinces in aid of agriculture last year was $15,000.

Dairy Improvements. With a view to gathering up-to-date and useful information on dairy matters, the department is having a survey made of two townships in Eastern Ontario and two in Western, to show modern tendencies and to indicate present needs.

Experiments by the poultry department of the O.A.C. with Buff Orpingtons, Rhode Island Reds and White Leghorns showed that buttermilk produced the most and cheapest eggs.

While no animal food in all instances gave the best eggs for hatching.

O. A. C. No. 21 barley, developed at the college from Manchester, is now being practically all the prizes in competition, and O. A. C. No. 72 oats, which is now being further experimented with, promises to duplicate the success of O. A. C. No. 21 barley.

In treatments for loose smut in oats and stinking smut in wheat, it was found the greatest yield per acre was produced from grain which was immersed in a solution made by adding one pint of formalin to 42 gallons of water for a period of twenty minutes.

Nursery in Norfolk. From the provincial nursery in Norfolk 350,000 plants were sent out for experimental purposes in 1912, and the nursery now includes 10,000 plants and about 500,000 seedlings.

Dawson's Golden Chaff, the most extensive variety of winter wheat grown in Ontario, has given the highest yield per acre of the four varieties grown at the college in the last seventeen years.

Membership in the Ontario Plowmen's Association, which organization is aided by the Ontario department of agriculture, has increased from 80 to 1,200, and eleven branches held plowing matches last year.

Through the fruit branch the department is teaching orchard owners how to prune their trees properly, and showing the farmer that the apple orchard is a valuable part of the farm if properly cared for. Thirty-four demonstration orchards were conducted.

Important results have been secured by members of the Ontario Agricultural College staff with alfalfa, showing that it is essential to grow a fairly strain in Ontario, and one of the best in the Ontario varieties, alfalfa, which originated in Haldimand County.

Field Competitions. Under the direction of the agricultural societies branch of the Ontario department of agriculture, 153 societies held field crop competitions, 3,000 individual farmers entering, and a total of 20,000 acres was seeded, as compared with 200 acres in 1907, when the competitions began.

To check the spread of bovine tuberculosis the system which adopted the TBAG system, by which calves at birth are taken from the mother, fed on milk either pasteurized or from healthy cows, and reared in a separate building, and it is well known that tuberculosis is contagious, but not hereditary.

In New Ontario live stock improvement associations have been formed under the auspices of the department, whereby twelve residents could form an association on payment of one dollar per head, and thus the association would be entitled to the choice of one bull, five rams or two boars of any breed suitable to the district.

Women's Institutes. There are 72 branches of the Women's Institutes, with more than 22,000 members.

Through the women's institutes the department has instructed giving demonstrations in cooking, sewing, and nursing.

District representatives conducted agricultural courses in 19 high schools, with a total of 377 young men in attendance.

HEADACHES AND HEART TROUBLE

Nervous Prostration of Three Years' Standing Cured a Year Ago by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Anyone who knows the discouragement and despair which accompanies the helplessness of nervous prostration will appreciate the gratitude felt by the writer of this letter.

Mrs. H. C. Jones, Scotch Lake, C. B., writes: "I suffered from nervous prostration for nearly three years. I had frequent headaches, had no appetite and was troubled with my heart. After consulting two doctors, without obtaining satisfactory results, I began the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and was completely cured by this treatment. It is nearly a year since I was cured and I want others to know of this splendid medicine. I now attend to my household work with pleasure and comfort, and am glad to have the opportunity of recommending Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

At least some benefit is bound to be derived from each dose of this great food cure, as day by day it forms new blood and builds up the system.

50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmondson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

of the department last year totalled 16,147.

Twenty-five rural school fairs were held last year in twelve different counties each embracing eight to twelve schools.

Farmers' Clubs in various counties, with the assistance of the local representative of the department, have secured, among other things, the establishment of a continuation school, the opening of a produce store where butter and eggs are purchased according to quality, municipal telephones and co-operative purchasing of supplies.

Fruit Is in Demand. Ontario fruit is in great demand in Western Canada, and the department is sending out demonstrators among shippers to insure proper packing.

Entries at poultry shows receiving grants from the department totalled 24,242, and the amount of prize money paid to exhibitors was over $10,000.

Horticultural societies, which are aided by grants from the Ontario Department of Agriculture, now total 73, with a membership of over 12,000.

Sheep-raising demonstrations carried on by the department showed substantial profits, which should lead to a revival of this important industry.

Experiments show the best crop rotation to be as follows: First year, grain; second year, cultivated crops; third year, grain; fourth year, pasture.

Samples of well water forwarded to the Ontario Agricultural College for analysis continue to indicate a large percentage of waters unfit for domestic use.

Resented Demands Made by Militants

Serious Trouble Was Barely Averted at Women's Suffrage Meeting.

Budapest, June 20.—Militant suffragettes nearly caused a serious row at today's session of the International Woman's Suffrage Alliance, Mrs. Anne Cobden-Sanderson and Mrs. Charlotte Despard, two English women, and the latter president of the Women's Freedom League, delivered fiery harangues advocating militant tactics and protesting against their exclusion as fraternal delegates from all participation in the proceedings of the alliance.

They claimed as fraternal delegates they were entitled to the same rights as the official delegates.

The non-militant delegates resented the tone of the speeches as an abuse of the courtesy extended by the congress in permitting Mrs. Cobden-Sanderson and Mrs. Despard to speak at the meeting, and displayed by Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, of New York, president of the alliance, prevented a rupture.

The British and French delegates who opposed to militant tactics, and there were few militant sympathizers in the German and Swedish delegations, while the Americans were divided on the subject.

MEN AND THE CHURCH.

A Scottish paper, discussing the growing abstention of men from church, suggests that ministers are engaged in too many "side-shows" today.

They "have to run all sorts of agencies, such as baby-clubs and rescue societies. It would be interesting to know what would happen if ministers were to keep a little more closely, to their prime vocation."

What the "prime vocation" is does not very clearly appear, but we may suppose the meaning to be either: (1) saving souls, or (2) preaching attractive sermons. Which ever meaning was intended, the contention will not bear examination.

Ministers will save probably as many souls by pastoral visitation and social work as by convicting of sin in a half-hour's talk a week from the pulpit. They are not neglecting their "prime vocation" in ministering to the poor and weak and fallen. As for the attractive sermon, it is not true that the quality of sermons has fallen off because of social work or sociological study. Almost no men at all would go to church if the kind of sermon were preached there that was quasi-popular 100 years ago.

Then the sermon at its best was mainly chologetic and stylism. At its worst it dealt in vulgar terrors. Today it is human, vital and more truly Christian.

In the great nineteenth century it was not only science that grew. The humanity of man, despite some setbacks, grew also. It was the age of revived missions, of the abolition of slavery, of Livingstone, Dickens, Shaftesbury and Gladstone. It saw not only the amazing development of modern surgery and medicine to save the body, but of a humane, merciful and spiritual ministry to save the soul. It was the age of Spurgeon, Booth and Phillips quite as much as of Lister and Pasteur.

It is unfair to blame the preachers of the gospel for the decline in men's attendance at church, if there has been really a decline. There never was better preaching than today, never a more enlightened, hard-working and fraternal ministry. The "side-shows" of which the Scottish newspaper speaks are important chapels in the cathedral of the spiritual life.

It is in spite of the fact that the ministry is superior, whether in oratory or in work, that church attendance declines, if it does. Perhaps men want more sensation than old, Hell-fire is played out, and no return to that will help. The other day an announcement in London, England, that the well-known comedian, James Welch, at present engaged in a popular comedy, "Oh, I Say!" at the Criterion Theatre, would preach on Sunday at All Saints' Church, Battersea, drew a good congregation of both sexes. He did not appear, however, and it was stated that nothing was known to the rector of a date being fixed for Mr. Welch to deliver an address.

The Bishop of London, England, says that the Church of England is too much confined to "Dearly Beloved Brethren" and about six hymns. He calls for greater flexibility in bringing religion to the "heathen."

Like most other social phenomena, the matter of church attendance, especially in the case of men, whose interests are more mixed than women's, is a complex question.

ANOTHER INTERNATIONAL BRIDGE.

A few days ago the people at Fort Erie, across the river from Buffalo, had a meeting for the purpose of promoting a scheme that has been suggested as one of the monuments to the century of peace between England and the United States—that is a free international bridge across the Niagara River. The meeting is said to have been enthusiastic. Citizens from over the river were on hand in goodly numbers, and Mr. W. German, M. P., made an eloquent speech. We would not like to throw any cold water on any proposition to celebrate a centenary of peace. We like peace. We should like to see it continue indefinitely. But there is one serious feature about this proposition which should not be overlooked. A free bridge over the river that divides Ontario from New York is only another means of facilitating intercourse between the people of the two countries. Herein we think we smell disloyalty to the empire. We do not want any truck with these people across the border. At least, that is what the professional flag-wavers said in the campaign of 1911. We must keep as clear as possible from these undesirable neighbors of ours. They will corrupt our political morals; the kind we have at home is of the innocent childlike type, and should be preserved. They might give us better prices for some things we sell, and sell us some things cheaper than we can buy them now. That would be very bad, because it might injure our loyalty. The kind we have now has a very strong voice, but a weak backbone, and it would be seriously damaged if we found we could make money by dealing with an alien people. This international bridge business must be looked into carefully. It may be only a device of the disloyal Grits, backed up by the seductive Yankees.

MODESTY AND SENSE.

Members of a number of religious conventions have been taking a shot at women's dress. Women try to keep cool in hot weather and perspiring men rise up and call them immodest. Most of the women who offend these delicate sensibilities are undoubtedly innocent of any immodesty in thought. It surprises or amuses them to hear this outcry of men.

When a man enters an athletic event he can wear about what he likes; but the dual code of modesty of untutored men prescribes quite otherwise for women. In a dance men have to wear enough clothes to half choke them, while they raise no objection to the women wearing a minimum. But let the girl that a man danced or promenade with last night come to the office this morning with a trifle more on, and he inveighs against feminine immodesty.

Is the contour of Eve an evil or an ugly thing? Some mediaeval thinkers said that woman's nature was evil and that she existed as much to snare as to slay for the lordly man. The still cross-grained and interfering critics of the present time less boldly proclaim the evil of her physical form. It is significant of the good nature and patient endurance of women that they put up with all this lecturing and give it for reply only a shrug and a smile. It is mainly their own business what they wear and they can be trusted to do what is best for themselves. Certainly, in any event, they are going to do just as they please, and men may as well say nothing about it.

By the way, the male swimming costume is commonly no work of art, to put it mildly. What atrocities have not been seen on the Port Stanley beaches, both the more general resorts and the exclusive sands of Orchard Beach or Erie Rest? But the women keep a modest silence about such things.

So the German peril has materialized at last in the hydro insulators. The American article is praised—but no truck or trade with the Americans, of course. A hard dilemma!

Importing German rifles into Ulster is regarded in England as a bluff. No pains were taken to keep the thing secret from the authorities. The rifles were intended to be seized, as a Unionist campaign advertisement.

If Mr. Thomas Hardy is made poet laureate and accepts, which is very doubtful, his song will be a "Lay of the Last Minstrel." He survives from the earlier age of Tennyson, Browning and Swinburne. "The minstrel is infirm and old."

A member of the Synod who intended to vote for women's rights had his mind unsettled by a hiss. Philip Snowden remarked recently that a number of British M. P.s change their mind on woman's suffrage every time they change their clothes. Wits so delicately organized that a breath will turn them!

Visitors to England this summer will find a change in Westminster Abbey. It has been furnished with 250 electric lamps. The dim religious light may be at any moment turned off. What a cry of panic would have gone up from a mediæval congregation at the twinkling change that a button can make.

It was not the Marconi scandal, but the Marconi slander. The British Government was attacked with poisoned arrows. It was violently and offensively accused of striking a corrupt bargain with the British Marconi Company. As the London News and Leader says, "the charge of corruption shrank to quibbles about discretion and delicacy."

Caterpillars have been troubling the Eastern States, Montreal and Ottawa. A minister in Montreal blamed it on the sins of that city, but the answer was that the suburbs had been suffering more than Montreal itself. The people of Naples, Italy, have a saying about the eruption of Vesuvius that Naples commits the sins and the Tower (a suburb near the volcano), pays for them.

The Synod of Huron did not do itself proud in refusing the vestry vote to women. Other dioceses have already taken the forward step. As often the case in the actions of religious bodies, the clergy showed themselves more liberal-minded than the laymen. That does not mean, of course, that the clergy as a class are more intelligent than the laymen as a whole; the lay representatives are often not representative.

THE REASON.

[Baltimore American.] "That boat embraces many points in its stops."

"That's why, then, it is always hugging the shore."

HE USED TO.

[Judge.] Mrs. Gramercy—"You can't judge a man by what he was before you married him."

Mrs. Park—"Indeed, you can't. My husband used to spend the evenings with me."

THE NEW CURATE.

[The Sphere.] The Lady—"What's the new curate like, John?"

John—"The queerest figure of a little man you ever saw. They tell me as how the only wearin' apparel 'e can buy reason-made is his umbrell."

COURTING DAYS.

[Louisville Courier-Journal.] "Would you mind resting your head on my left shoulder, dearest?"

"To be nearer your heart?" murmured the beautiful girl.

"Yes, and to be further away from the cigars I have in my right pocket."

MR. CIGARETTE AND SHORT HOURS.

[Victoria Colonist.] It is said that Englishmen smoke 12,000,000,000 cigarettes annually. The largest department of the tobacco trade all over the world is now cigarettes, and the habit seems to be growing more widespread every year. The explanation advanced is that this is an industrial age. Working persons have often a short interval of rest during which they have not time to smoke a pipe and so instead take a few whiffs of a cigarette. By the way, cigarettes are generally recognized to be enervating. Does this account for the world-wide agitation for shorter hours?

A SERIOUS MISTAKE.

[Kingston Whig.] Volunteering will not be made popular by the arrest of a young fellow who could not see his way clear to leave his work and go to camp. The arrest will act as a deterrent to camp service, and will not make volunteering popular.

TOM IS A REAL FISHERMAN.

[Harrison Review.] The Review's thanks are hereby tendered to Mr. Tom Jackson for a dinner of delicious speckled trout. Mr. Jackson is a practical fisherman and produces the goods, and, moreover, he catches real big ones with a hook and line from a creek and gives them to the editor to eat, and the "big one" don't always get away so long.

While the other artists catch imaginary fish in their minds and regale the editor with fish line purely hypothetical and hyperbolic, Mr. Jackson's biggest fish was 14 inches long from tip to tip, and built in proportion, and the smaller fry were far above the limit size.

MAYBE HE IS SICK OF THE JOB.

[Montreal Herald.] "And the best reform in this young growing, democratic nation is to have the Senate completely ended at the earliest possible date," says the Halifax Herald. And the editor of the Herald was made a Senator only one short year ago. Only a newspaperman could thus have imitated Brutus of old. Rooting for the abolition of your job is only one degree less heroic than ordering the execution of your off-spring.

THEIR TWO AMBITIONS.

[Puck.] First Commuter—"It's a perfect little gem. It has the ambition of my life to buy a nice little place in the country." Second Commuter—"Well, I once felt that way myself. At present it's the ambition of my life to sell a nice little place in the country."

FREEDOM TO BE FOOLISH.

[Pittsburg Dispatch.] It is observed that one or two tasteless advocates of emancipation in the male dress are writing to the paper declaring that men should be allowed by custom to wear not only bracelets, but earrings, too, if they wish. Well, who prevents them? They can wear both if they wish. They can also go better and wear nose rings.

It would be a more truly American adornment, inherited from the real natives of this country.

MEDICINE HATS MISTAKE.

[Reading Leader.] Sir Max Aitken says that financially Alberta has been anything, but wise. The greatest lack of wisdom displayed in Alberta was when Medicine Hat gave away its street railway franchise to Sir Max and his capitalistic associates. Medicine Hat citizens were certainly shortsighted in indorsing that transaction, and they will live to regret it.

THANKFUL.

[Lippincott's Magazine.] Giles met an acquaintance on the street the other day, although he artfully tried to avoid him.

"Hello, Giles, dear boy!" exclaimed the other. "So glad to see you! I'm going to London next week. Can I do anything for you?"

"No, going's enough, thanks," replied Giles, moving on.

SIMPLE ENOUGH.

[Judge.] Dorcas—"Won't your meeting be very late if all the members are going to take part in the debate?"

Mrs. Dorcas—"Why, no, dear. We'll all speak at once."

Man Is At His Best While In the Forties

[Canadian Press.] London, June 21.—The Liberal Government has decided that a man does his best work when he is in the forties. At least that is the inference drawn from the appointment of James Richard Atkin, King's counsel, as an additional judge of the King's bench division of the high courts.

Mr. Atkin is 46 years of age, and the preference of a man of those years just after England has been in the throes of a discussion as to whether a man does his best work in middle or old age, is taken as an indication that the Government has decided in favor of the younger man. The new judge was called to the bar 22 years ago, and has devoted almost his entire time to practice in commercial cases before the King's bench division, over which he is now to preside.

By a system of close calculation it is estimated that eleven tons of mud have been carried into the front halls of London on male feet during the recent rainstorms.

NO ESCAPE POSSIBLE.

Now that the doctors are coming to London for their annual talkfest, we can spring this one:

"People have more pains and aches in their imagination than elsewhere."

And with the picnic season on in full force, it might be said that the small boy's imagination must be under his belt.

We were condemning the English suffragettes unreservedly until we heard there were some men in England who wear egrets in their hats.

4,000 Invitations to King's Party Withheld

Many Disappointed at Not Being Able to Attend Big Gathering.

[Canadian Press.] London, June 21.—The King and Queen reduced by almost half the number of invitations issued for the annual garden party at Windsor Castle, which is being held today. A year ago 10,000 invitations were issued. This year the number is only 6,000, so several thousand people are disappointed in their hopes of receiving the "royal command." The explanation is that last year there was too great a crush, and those who did attend were inconvenienced.

While the garden party is more democratic than the usual court affairs, all the members of Parliament, for example, receiving invitations, the cards of admission are greatly sought after. It was inaugurated by the late King Edward to enable him to get into closer touch with his subjects. Of recent years many foreigners and colonialists have attended the function, but as the number of tickets allotted to the embassies likewise has been reduced this year, many Americans and other visitors are among those doomed to disappointment.

Special trains take the guests to Windsor, and there royal carriages await the more distinguished. For the rest, all sorts of conveniences are requisitioned. The party is held on the great lawn at the foot of the East Terrace. Gaily decorated marquees dot the grass, the two royal tents occupying prominent positions. Of these the Indian Shamiara, rich in beaten silver and gold and crimson hangings, is used for reception purposes, while the other is reserved for the serving of their majesties' tea. Here the Queen entertains the royals present, a few personal friends and prominent personages.

The Prince of Wales, now approaching his nineteenth birthday, is beginning to take his part in occasions of this kind, and this year he invited a number of his school friends from Oxford to be present.

LONDON ENGINEERS GIVEN HIGH RATING AT TRAINING CAMP

Seventh Field Company Back From Practical Work at Petawawa.

Many Difficult Engineering Feats Were Successfully Carried Out.

London's military engineers, the Seventh Field Company, Canadian Engineers, returned from Petawawa this morning after two weeks' practical military engineering work under conditions that were designed to be the exact replica of active service. Bridge building, under adverse circumstances, road construction, telegraph building, and other engineering feats, were attempted and successfully carried out.

Londons Stood High. The London men stood high at the Petawawa manoeuvres, and Major Farncomb, officer commanding, and the company were complimented on the splendid appearance made. The company was given the highest rating for physical appearance, equipment, drill and for the appearance of its horses.

Part of the tactical work was the construction of towers. These towers were 90 feet in height and were built of masts, with a platform across the top for observation work. Raft bridges were thrown across the Petawawa River, logs being cut from the standing timber along the banks to make the rafts.

In the telegraph section, overhead wires were strung at the gallon, cables were laid, underground work was put through as well as overhead

JUMPED FROM BRIDGE

John Bruns Says He Is Ready to Take the Leap Again.

[Canadian Press.] New York, June 21.—If friends of John Bruns, an architect, still have any doubt as to his "nerve," he says he is willing to duplicate the feat he performed yesterday when he leaped from the high-arched Washington bridge into the Harlem River, 170 feet below.

A few persons who saw him thought he was deliberately jumping to his death, and when he struck on his side with a great splash it seemed as though he must have been killed. While a policeman was hurriedly making off in a boat to recover the body Bruns bobbed to the surface and started with strong strokes to make his way ashore. The policeman dragged him into the boat, and placed him under arrest on a charge of attempted suicide.

"Oh, I was not trying to kill myself," he protested. "A lot of my friends had been annoying me by saying I didn't have any nerve. I just jumped off the bridge to show them."

New York, June 21.—Announcement was made from the offices of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad here last night that the Boston and Maine Railroad had been obliged to give up the operation of the Hampden Railroad and the institution of the through service between New York and Boston by that route, because of the inability of the Boston and Maine to secure the approval of its lease of the Hampden Railroad by the railroad commissioners of Massachusetts.

RAIN PREVENTED ALL GAMES FOR SECOND TIME THIS YEAR

Canadian League Teams Had a Day of Rest Yesterday—President Fitzgerald Will Visit London on Dominion Day—McConnell Will Report on Monday.

For the second time since the Canadian League season opened, rain caused the postponement of all games. There was nothing doing at any of the Fitzgerald circuit ball parks yesterday, and it is probable that double-headers will be played in a couple of the cities today. For a time it was thought that a double-header would be pulled off between London and Brantford at Tecumseh Park this afternoon, but the local club decided to play the postponed game on the Brantford club's next trip. The condition of the diamond at Tecumseh Park this morning was such that Manager Deneau and the groundskeeper spent a busy hour or two balling the water off and putting the infield in shape. For this afternoon, if it rains before the time the game starts it will again be necessary to postpone the contest. The diamond will not be in very good shape for today's game as it is.

YANKS WON TWO FROM WASHINGTON

Grabbed Both Games From Clark Griffith's Men by Same Scores.

ATHLETICS DROP ONE

Chicago White Sox, With Eddie Cicotte, in the Box, Blanked the Cleveland Naps.

Washington, June 20.—Frank Chance played a scurry trick on his old pal, Clark Griffith, today by winning both ends of the double-header in the Florida Avenue Park. Identical scores, 9 to 3, marked the wind-up of each game, and all is far from quiet on the Potomac tonight. The New Yorks in both games simply clubbed their way to the top, rolling up during the 18 innings 31 hits for a total of 38 bases. Griffith used five pitchers, and they were all badly runned up.

The question of holding an athletic meet in Queen's Park was brought up, but no decision was reached as to the date of the meeting. Several plans for the event were discussed, but before the matter is finally settled, each of the manufacturing concerns will be asked to guarantee the sale of a certain number of tickets. Last year the meet was a success as far as the entries and the running off the events was concerned, but the attendance was not large. It is likely some special attractions will be added to this year's meet. A meeting will be held next Wednesday evening at the Y. M. C. A. at 8 o'clock for the purpose of deciding the matter. All local manufacturing concerns who are not represented at these meetings are invited to send a representative.

Historic Brooklyn Handicap Will Be Run at Belmont Today

First Revival of American Classic Since 1910—Eight Starters Will Face Wire—Whisk Broom II. Is Favorite Over Rest of Field.

New York, June 21.—Eight horses are carded to start today at Belmont Park in the first running of the historic Brooklyn Handicap since 1910, when the anti-betting laws caused a temporary suspension of racing in New York State. Time was when all roads led to the Gravesend track for the running of this classic. The best horses in the 3-year-old and upward class always faced the barrier to strive for the honor of winning the event and the big purse that came with victory. The crowds that cheered the thoroughbreds as they raced over the 1 1/4 miles were numbered in tens of thousands. In the race of today, reckoning on past performances, there are no favorites.

UNCERTAIN WEATHER FOR POUGHKEEPSIE REGATTA

Poughkeepsie, June 21.—Uncertain weather conditions for the annual regatta of the intercollegiate races to be held over the Poughkeepsie course on the Hudson this afternoon faced the oarsmen of the seventeen crews representing Cornell, Pennsylvania, Columbia, Wisconsin, Washington and Syracuse when they arose this morning, but there are hopes of brightening skies by late afternoon. What little betting was done this morning did not change the odds of last night, Cornell still ruling favorite in the big race by 8 to 10, and even money against the crews of Columbia, Washington and Pennsylvania. Slight odds are given on Cornell against Syracuse and Wisconsin.

FRANK SHAUGHNESSY HAS GREAT RECORD AS PLAYER

Ottawa Leader Is at Present One of Canadian League's Heavy Hitters—Was Up in Big Leagues Twice—Interesting Sketch of His Career in Baseball

When you pass through the turnstiles at the Charlton avenue ball grounds this afternoon or tomorrow, when that big, husky bunch from Ottawa make their 1913 debut before the local patrons, says Addie R. Richardson, in the Hamilton Spectator, skin your orbs across the ball yard and take a peep at the behemoth who is coveting in the middle pasture for the handsomely-uniformed aggregation from the capital. This human giraffe is a slinger pure and simple, and he doesn't tip his Stetson to anybody who makes a business of lambasting the padding out of the merry little globe. When big Frank Combs is pitching the little white pill is generally picked up in the next county. He has been steadily forging to the front among the batters of the Canadian League. Any time he starts out to wrap his Amboy thews around the top spot in the batting roster he'll make 'em all step lively to avoid being injured in the rush. Frank Shaughnessy started his professional career in 1904, at Cairo, Ill., and when the Canadian League season of 1913 goes into history Labor Day evening, the giant from the Prairie State will have completed ten long years in professional baseball. His record is as follows: 1904—Opened his professional career with the Cairo, Ill., Club of the City League, batting and fielding finely. Cairo finished in second place, winning 71, and losing 59, for 587. His batting average was .481 for the season. 1905—Opened with Connie Mack's American Leaguers, and finished with Monthelet, Vt., an outlaw organization, clubbing for .380 in 80 games, and fielding for .982 in the same number of contests. 1906—Was with the South Bend, Ind., team of the Central League, and was in second place as a swatsmith with 333 and fielded for .967. South Bend finished in seventh position, with 62 wins and 88 reverses, for 413 average. 1907—Shaughnessy was a member of the San Francisco, California, Club, participating in 77 championship games. Was at bat 295 times, and poked out 70 hits for .237, and fielded for .938. This gave Frank 30th position among the sluggers of the Pacific Coast League, a double A Class organization. 1908—Opened with Jake Stahl's Washington American League Club, etc., but went to Reading, Pa., of the Tri-State League, playing in 67 games. Was at bat 233 times, and poked out 68 hits for .293, placing him in 35th position out of 125 given batting recognition. As an outfielder Shag ranked up among the leaders with .979. 1909—Shaughnessy opened the season as manager and outfielder for the Roanoke Club of the Virginia League. Batted for 286, and fielded for .942 in 125 arguments. With 73 wins and 45 losses for 598. The Roanoke Club carried off the championship. 1910—Shag took part in 111 controversies in the Virginia League as a member of the Roanoke Club. Made 289 visits to the plate, and hit safely 73 times for .253. The Roanoke Club finished in second place, winning 68 and losing 62 for .527. 1911—For the third consecutive season Shaughnessy was at Roanoke, Va. He participated in 123 games, was at bat 489 times and pelted the pill for .327, giving him twelfth position among 130 players. With 57 stolen bases, Frank was the Virginia League premier purveyor of sacks. The Roanoke Club won 63 and lost 56, closing the season in third place with a percentage of .529. 1912—Managed the Fort Wayne Club of the Central League, a twelve-club, Class B organization, and capped the championship, winning 77 and losing 52 games, for .597. Out of 210 players given batting recognition, Shaughnessy stood in 30th position, with 304 in 121 games. Crossed the platter 77 times, fished 34 hocks, and closed the season with a fielding percentage of .963. 1913—Big Shag purchased his release for $750, from the Fort Wayne, Ind., Club of the Central League, and at present holds one-third interest in the Capital City aggregation. The other two-thirds are held by sporting editors, Thomas Gorman, of the Citizen, and Malcolm T. Brice, of the Free Press. Shaughnessy as a manager and as a player since joining the Capital City aggregation has been a success. He was left practically without any pitchers, his club of 1912, under Louis Cook, being literally torn to pieces through drafts. He is plugging up the holes as well as can be expected, and with all and Renfer he has a couple of very clever mound artists. As a batter, Frank Shaughnessy shines like a glittering star. In 38 games played by the Ottawa Club to date, including Wednesday's game at Guelph, he has hammered the shoats of the opposition for .437, and from the manner the big fellow is pounding the pitchers, it looks as if he will cop the honors among the swatsmiths when the Canadian League season comes to a close. The membrane of the face very tender.

JACKSON IS STILL AHEAD OF COBB

Detroit Star Is Back In .300 Class, While Joe Is Still Above .400.

Chicago, June 21.—C. McDonald, the Boston infielder, is leading the National League batters, and his consistent hitting shows his leadership is not a fluke.

They're All Braves, But They're the "Underdogs"

Nothing much is expected of the Boston Braves these days, although with a man like George Stallings at the helm, no one is surprised at anything.

Stallings is a bench manager, a southerner and a gentleman of the finest instincts. He is one of the men lifting baseball out of the muck of rough-neckism.

Among the Braves the most sensational performer is Maranville, the shortstop, whose work has been on a par with that of any man in the league.

Otto Hess, the veteran southpaw, has been showing flashes of rare form, and Tyler, another left-hander, has been pitching good ball.

SIDELIGHTS ON SPORT

By Jinx NEVER MIND. There, little Rube, don't cry! They stole that game, I know. It was downright thievery!

Baseball may be a healthy game for the back players, but the fact that Toronto and Jersey City called off a game because of the small attendance in the latter city, demonstrates that the club players do not play for their health.

The New York Yankees won two games yesterday from Washington. We intended to make a joke about this, but when one considers that the Yanks won two games in a row, it's joke enough.

The local hockey management presented one of the local hockey players with a stick pin, then he was charged $2 for it. Our local hockey management is most generous. They intend to give a banquet to the rest of the players when free lunches are established in this city.

Tennis may be a nice game and all that, but so far we have not had to miss our dinner answering telephone inquiries about the Davis Cup matches.

IT HURTS THE POCKETBOOK. The baseball manager stood and gazed upon the pouring rain. And as he gazed, his features wore an expression of deepest pain.

52 RAILROADS PLAN INCREASE IN FREIGHT RATES

Interstate Commerce Commission Will Probe Applications Now In.

Long Arguments Expected, as Railways Will Urge Heavy Expenditures Proposed.

Washington, June 21.—On its own initiative, the interstate commerce commission today began an inquiry into the application of the fifty-two eastern railroads for increased railroad freight rates.

Announcement of the commission's purpose was made today in the form of two orders, based upon the petition of the railroads five weeks ago seeking permission to advance freight rates, both class and commodity, 5 per cent.

In an effort to meet the necessity for new tariffs, which would have cost the roads at least $250,000, the officials requested the commission to reopen the old advance rate case.

As the proposition stands it is a question to be determined by testimony and argument. The roads petition that they are prepared to show many millions of dollars for many purposes.

Will Be Argued. The proposition stands it is a question to be determined by testimony and argument. The roads petition that they are prepared to show many millions of dollars for many purposes.

Mexico City, June 21.—The news of the arrival of General Tellez, commander of the federal army, at Nuevo Laredo, has caused great satisfaction among government supporters.

The report has been unofficially circulated that the opening of the line would mean recognition of the present Mexican administration by the United States.

Gen. Joaquin Tellez reports today that he had seven fights with the rebels between Villahermosa, in the State of Yucatan, and San Juan, in the State of Tamaulipas.

Three boatsloads of troops are expected to leave Tampico and Vera Cruz tomorrow for Izard, the river port on the Rio Grande, where they are to disembark and start a campaign against the town of Matamoros.

Further Reductions Made in the Tariff

Free List Greatly Enlarged—Chemical Schedule But Little Affected.

Washington, June 21.—Senate Democrats resumed consideration of the tariff bill in caucus today as revised by the majority of the finance committee, further reducing duties and enlarging the free list.

Chairman Simmons, of the finance committee, said he anticipated few, if any, changes in the chemical schedule rate much discussion over the earthenware and glassware schedule which follows, though there was a disposition on the part of some members to urge certain increases in the rates.

Republican Senate leaders today were studying the changes and adjusting their plan of attack. Senator Penrose, ranking Republican member of the finance committee, called by Senators Smoot and Burton, of Michigan, Borah and others, is preparing data to submit with the minority report.

In the summary of the Senate changes announced yesterday all savings of cedar and cabinet woods appeared to have been transferred from the House free list to the dutiable list. The reverse was the case, the 10 per cent duty of the House bill having been stricken off entirely by the Senate committee.

Lively scenes marked the summer graduation ceremony at Glasgow University yesterday. Principal Sir Donald MacAllister, who presided, was accompanied by Lord Provost Stevenson, whose recent attitude toward Lord Roberts' campaign has been causing some feeling among the students.

Several professors left the platform and mixed among the undergraduates to restore order, but the students armed themselves with seltzer water siphons and easily succeeded in routing the professors.

Business Students Cast Off Studies

Rah! Rah! Who are we? We are the pupils of the W. B. C. Are we in it? I should say. Are we in it all the day? Are we in it all the night? Are we in it all the while? Are we in it? I should speak! We are in it all the week!

Such was the chorus that filled the air as the students of the Western Business College wended their way through the showers to Springfield Park, for their graduation exercises. In such high spirits they failed to see overhanging clouds.

Shorthand, typewriting and rapid business methods were forgotten for the time being, and all went in for a jolly time. The principal, Miss N. M. McCoy, saw that everyone had a good time. After spending the evening in games and pleasures, a tired but happy crowd returned to the city.

WESTERN CANADA IS THIRSTING FOR RAIN

Crops in Danger of Frost If the Grain Does Not Ripen in Time.

Winnipeg, June 21.—According to reports from three hundred points received today and yesterday, Western Canada's grain crop needs rain and needs it badly. Not a single point has reported wheat in short blade, and 10 per cent of the country reports that unless rain comes immediately there will be no crop in the districts.

About 50 per cent of the country reports having had sufficient moisture. Reports from the entire country indicate that while conditions are not discouraging they are far from satisfactory. The height of the wheat shows that only a small percentage of it can be in short blade by the end of June.

It takes fifteen days' favorable weather after the second cutting before the head is fully formed, and at least five weeks must be allowed after the appearance of the head before the grain is ready to cut. This would bring the harvest at the end of August, which means that Canada's crop is in danger of frost before it ripens.

Straw in any case would be short, which, however, is not a serious disadvantage, as some of Western Canada's most profitable crops have been reaped from short straw. But if the weather is sufficiently hot to mature the crop before frost comes, the heads are apt to be short, making the yield low.

When a company is willing to give a purchaser a cast-iron, nickle-plated, copper-riveted, steel-lined, air-tight, water-tight and law-tight guarantee that the article which they are selling will give satisfaction, they must have perfect confidence in their product. Yes, they must know that it will "deliver the goods" or they could not do business on this basis. Now, that is exactly what we do. We give you an absolute guarantee that PIRO will stop falling hair, prevent baldness and cure dandruff, or we refund your money. That is a pretty big statement, but that is exactly what we say and it is exactly what we mean. How can we do this? Because we know that PIRO will do just what we claim for it.

With every bottle of PIRO you receive a written guarantee signed by this company, and if PIRO does not "deliver the goods" you have your money refunded. That is as fair an offer as we could possibly make you.

Many so-called hair tonics are practically worthless, but there are exceptions to every rule, and PIRO is the exception to this one. Remember, we take all the risks.

This wonderful European remedy has astonished the scientists of the old land by its marvellous results. A positive preventative for falling hair, baldness and dandruff. Will not discolor gray hair. Makes the hair soft and glossy.

Storm Scene at British Golf Final

Ladies Distressed in Stampede For Shelter—How Mr. Hilton Won His Fourth Championship.

[Correspondence of London Daily News and Leader.]
To the bitter disappointment of an immense gallery, today final of the amateur golf championship over 36 holes on the old links was very one-sided, for Harold Hilton defeated Robert Harris by 6 up and 5 to play. At lunch time the whole of the work in the ancient city was suspended in order that the second round might be witnessed, and in the afternoon there were fully six thousand people behind the players and around the tees.
It was a drab second round so far as the golf was concerned, for after finishing the morning round with five holes in hand, Hilton, by winning the first two holes in the afternoon, became 7 up, and interest in the match thus early evaporated. Hilton at his worst against the best opponent one could find, could not very well lose, given a lead of seven holes, with only sixteen to play. It so happened, however, that Hilton was at his best, playing better golf than on any previous day of the week, whereas Harris, who had been so brilliant all along since Monday, broke down ingloriously. Harris had been light-hearted up to this morning, but now his face appeared to be drawn with nervous anxiety, but the real explanation was that he was taken ill last evening, having to consult a doctor.
The indisposition had not disappeared this morning, and with Hilton to face, with so unfortunate a handicap to carry, it is not surprising that Harris's nerves went all awry. So deadly was Hilton with his game that it looked for all the world as if he had been holding himself in reserve early in the championship for this great effort in the final. The better diagnosis is that Hilton, after experiencing luck here and there against earlier opponents, had at length played himself into form. For years he has improved his golf each round, he played in the championship. His well-known accuracy of approach and putting came back to him today, and he was irresistible.

A Storm and a Stampede.
The result of the match came as a bitter blow to the huge crowd, in which there was a mere sprinkling of English enthusiasts. Ladies, by the way, formed quite half of the "gallery," and at the moment when, about four o'clock in the afternoon the match stood at six up at the eleventh in Hilton's favor, an extraordinary change in the weather led to a most astonishing scene. After a glorious week of sunshine, without a moment's warning, the sky became overcast, and a thunderstorm broke out. Rain came down in torrents, and in a few minutes the hardened links, incapable of absorbing water, were flooded in every locality.
Many spectators, including the whole of the ladies, rushed from the match, but the eleventh green, which is known as Eden, and reposes upon the edge of the seashore, happens to be a mile and a half from the club house, and en route there are only two shelters, each capable of holding not more than a few dozen people. Few umbrellas, coats, or cloaks had been taken out, and in no time the thousands of people were drenched to the skin.
Ladies in Pitiable Plight.
The stampede towards shelter made a strange picture. A number of ladies fell on the wet, slippery turf and many incidents were witnessed. By the time they reached "civilization" the ladies, in their light summer costumes, were exhausted, and generally in a pitiable condition. Hundreds of them were not staying in St. Andrews, having to travel long distances by rail, motor, and horse-driven vehicles, and they were faced with the fear of contracting serious illnesses.
Rich were as badly off as poor, as the whole of the shops in the town were closed by order of the magistrates, who had given a general holiday, and there were numerous appeals to householders for the loan of complete change of clothing. The storm abated in three-quarters of an hour, but it was responsible for incidents unprecedented in the history of championship golf.

Fortunately for Hilton and Harris, practically the whole of the Green Committee were with the match, and members of it held an impromptu meeting and decided that play should be suspended until the storm was over. A delay of half an hour was necessary, and then the twelfth and thirteenth greens were so flooded that hole cutters had to be sent for from the club house and new holes were made on drier patches.
A Dramatic Ending.
Standing six up on the resumption, Hilton lost the twelfth in six to five, after both had picked out of casual water, but after playing two more on to the thirteenth green Harris dramatically snatched up his ball, wheeled round upon Hilton, and shook him warmly by the hand in the way of congratulation. The match was virtually over before the storm came on, and up to that point Hilton had shown superb match play golf. From the moment he holed first for three to four in the morning he never looked back, and out in 37 to 41, and four up at the turn, he picked up another hole coming home, taking matters easily in 42, which was also Harris's home score.
Hilton's only bad hole of the day was the fourteenth, in the morning, where, after playing in the water bunker, he picked up. The only holes Harris won were the fourth in the morning and the fifth, seventh, eighth, and twelfth in the afternoon. He was dead out of luck, health, and spirit.
Hilton was favored with some luck during the week, as every champion must be, but his display today brought him back to where he stood two years ago, when he won the amateur championship, and was but one stroke behind Vardon and Massy for the open championship at Sandwich.

Patriotism of Irish Girls

[S. L. Hughes in London News and Leader.]
An Irish correspondent writes to remind me that one of the most common jeers aimed at the Nationalist cause was inspired by the fact that some of the funds were contributed by Irish servant girls in America. The scorn and contempt of the Irish Unionists for the help obtained from such a source were deep and fierce. But now that the Irish Tories are preparing for war they naturally have to look about for what are known as the sinews of war, and they do not dis-touch me to the quick of mill girls coming in with small sums that they have saved either to amuse themselves or buy themselves something that they wanted. No man can listen to that without being moved to the very depths. I should like these humble girls to know that I appreciate from the bottom of my heart the smallest contribution, because it comes from their great and affectionate love of the cause, as I do the largest subscription which would be given by the richest man.

There are many charms in that passage, and it is not easy to decide which is the greatest—but perhaps the almost monarchical condescension of Sir Edward's intimation that he appreciates the contributions sent in by the "humble girls" deserves the palm.
There is no doubt, merit, too, in the eminent barrister explaining that he is moved to the very depths, and in his allusions to the bottom of his heart. It is suggested that the mill girls have handed over to the war fund money they had saved up for amusement, and they may find that they have invested their earnings in something that is far more diverting than anything to be seen in a music-hall or a picture palace. But, apart from that view of the case, on which my correspondent enlarges in a sadly irrelevant vein, there is the question which he raises—why is it despicable for Irish servant girls to contribute from their savings to a Home Rule Fund, and so heroic in Irish mill girls to contribute to an experienced King's Counsel is almost choked with emotion when he talks about it?

The answer cannot be that the servant girls were deceived into helping a cause which was hopeless. There used to be many people—some of them probably honest—who said that Home Rule was impossible. They declared that the Irish Nationalist leaders knew this perfectly well, and that the funds consisted of money obtained by false pretences. We no longer hear these confident tales. The cause to which the Irish servant girls sent their offerings is a winning cause, and people are already arranging for their seats at the opening ceremony in the restored Irish Parliament. But what guarantee have the Ulster mill girls that they will get any return for their subscriptions? I have admitted that Sir Edward Carson's references to his deepest feelings are some return—something on account—but the mill girl who has denied herself the luxury of a new hat in order to help peers, eminent King's counsel, and Privy Counsellors to wage war against the Crown has a right to expect something more than an indication of Sir Edward's appreciation.
Teas grown at high altitudes on the mountain slopes of Ceylon, where the growth is slower and cultivation more careful than in the warm, humid climate of the valleys, are used in "Salada" Tea. High-grown tea, like "Salada" is not only of a finer quality, but contains more of the essential oil in the leaf than valley-grown tea. This is easily proved by comparing a drawing of "Salada" Tea with any other.

MANY REDUCTIONS IN FIRST DRAFT OF TARIFF BILL

Important Reductions Made on Iron, Steel and Ore Metal Products.

Retaliatory Duty Ten Per Cent Is Imposed on Potatoes.

[Canadian Press.] Washington, June 20.—Important reductions in the Underwood tariff bill rates on iron, steel, ore metal products, the addition of cattle, wheat, pig iron, angora wool, and many other articles to the free list, and an increase of rates on many classes of cotton goods, and some silk products, were the chief features of the revised tariff bill which is laid before the Senate Democrats today by Chairman Simmons, of the finance committee.

After weeks of work, in which every item of the bill had undergone close scrutiny by sub-committees of the majority membership of the finance committee, the redrafted measure was brought into the Democratic caucus today. For two hours the important changes were explained to the Democrats, and the bill was then made public.

Many Changes. Experts of the committee at once began work on a comprehensive summary of the changes.

Wheat Is Free. Wheat fell 10 1/2 bushel in the Underwood bill was added to the free list, but the senate committee retained a retaliatory provision for a duty of ten cents a bushel on wheat, 45 cents a barrel on flour, and ten per cent ad valorem on flour from a country that imposes a duty on American wheat or wheat products.

A retaliatory duty of ten per cent upon potatoes imported from countries imposing duties against the United States also was inserted. Potatoes were unreservedly on the free list in the Underwood bill.

Farm Products. Other principal changes were as follows: The new Senate rate being stated first in each instance: Agricultural products—Oats, 6 cents a bushel; house, 30 cents; oatmeal and rolled oats, 35 cents; wheat, 45 cents; corn, 25 cents; flour, 10 cents; butter, 24 cents; butter substitutes, 22 cents per pound; house, 3 cents; beefs, 5 per cent; house, 10 per cent; eggs, fresh, or otherwise prepared, 2 cents a pound; house, 24 cents; frozen or liquid egg albumen, 1 cent per pound; house, free list; peas, green or dried, 10 cents a bushel; house, 15 cents; flax seed, linseed and other oil seeds, 15 cents a bushel; house, 20 cents; all other seeds, 10 cents a bushel; fish, 1 cent per cent ad valorem; sante currants, senate, 1 cent per pound; house, 2 cents.

Archdeacon Stuck Sends Message That He Made Ascent of 20,000 Feet.

Seattle, June 20.—The peak of Mount McKinley, the highest point in America, has been scaled by Archdeacon Hudson Stuck, according to the following message received from him today: "Expedition successful. Accomplished first complete ascent of Mount McKinley, June 7, H. P. Karstens, R. G. Tatum, Walter Harper and I reached the highest of all peaks on a clear day, when it was possible to read all the angles of the mountains and make certain that the peak we had conquered was the highest of all.

Up Twenty-Thousand Feet. "We successfully carried a mercurial barometer to the top and made complete readings and observations which, with simultaneous readings at Gibbon, should permit close approximation of the true altitude when proper corrections are applied. Water boiled at 174.9 degrees. The present estimate of the summit's height is upwards of 20,500 feet.

"We were able to read angles on all prominent points. With field glasses we clearly saw the deeps of the Gulf of Alaska, the Thomas Lloyd expedition on the north peak (the lower of the two main peaks).

"After completing observations on the summit we hoisted the flag on the upper basin.

Only One Approach. "The northwest ridge is the only possible approach to the summit. Due to the violent earthquakes of last July the higher ridges were completely shattered, and this added largely to the danger, difficulty and labor of the ascent.

"I spent three weeks in continuous bad weather, hewing a passage three miles long through this side. This was the chief cause of delay, as we made rapid progress at all other stages of the ascent.

"The chief credit for our success is due to Karstens' good judgment, resourcefulness and caution. We did not have a single mishap."

ALLAN STUDHOLME WAS A GOOD BOXER

Labor Member From Hamilton Achieved Some Renown as an Amateur Pugilist.

HE DARED HECKLERS

Knocked Out His Son, Who Returned From University a Trained Boxer.

MR. ALLAN STUDHOLME, the Labor member of the Ontario Legislature from Hamilton, in his youthful days achieved fair renown as an amateur pugilist. The diminutive Laborite's youth is now in the hazy past and with it his ringside fame, but many a too persistent heckler has learned to his sorrow of Mr. Studholme's fists prowess.

During the election campaign of 1911, Mr. Studholme, while addressing an audience of pedestrians on a Hamilton street corner from the top of a torch-illuminated lorry (his usual rostrum and his favorite method of reaching his constituents), was continually interrupted by a husky, uncouth laborer, who kept up a running series of disconcerting remarks. After a really splendid exhibition of self-control, the fervid little orator's patience gave out.

"Look here," he shouted, pointing at his tormentor with a clenched fist that shook with tension, "look here, you big bully, you're a foot taller than I am and weigh thirty pounds more, but you're not going to bully me any more. If you have any more remarks to pass come on up on the lorry platform with me and in about two minutes I'll show the crowd what you're worth." As the laborer had little if anything to gain by accepting the challenge and everything to lose should he elect to pursue the better part of valor and slunk away. The crowd accorded the victor-by-default an ovation.

But the best story regarding Mr. Studholme's pugilistic proclivities is recounted by one of his sons, Foster, a druggist of Olean, N. Y. For reasons that will presently appear it is only fair to repeat it in his own words.

Allan Studholme, M.P.P.

"When we were youngsters together at home," he said, "dad used to occasionally put on the gloves and rough-house with us—teaching us some of the rudiments of the manly art. At the old homestead the third story was one room, unpartitioned and bounded by the four walls of the house. It constituted a dormitory for us boys at night, and a commodious, so take the conceit and surmounter. Here, later used to repair with us when we became too boisterous to take the conceit and surplus energy out by punching us out, gently, for the count. This was very effective, and lacked the humiliating aftermath that most corrective methods entail.

Beat the Big Son

UP till the time I left home to pursue my studies at the University of Toronto, dad was still the wearer of our household boxing belt. I cherished at that time a secret determination that it should be mine by the time I completed my college course. To further that end I clandestinely took boxing lessons in Toronto, with the result that I was undisputed champion of my year when I graduated.

"After the formalities of commencement were over, I returned home, and, feeling full of pep and energy, grabbed dad under the arms and swung him off his feet, spinning on my heels. I was a head taller than he and weighed considerably more. When I set him down again he laughed and said: 'Because you're bigger and a college grad, you seem to assume that you can put it all over the old man.'

"Why, I could lick you with my eyes closed," I replied, laughingly. "Come on up stairs," he challenged, by way of reply, and I'll take the presumption out of you. I tried to dissuade him, but there was nothing for it. He was insistent. As I faced my gloves, I determined to box very circumspectly. My father was getting up in years, and while hale and hearty, was none the less hoary. I did not want to do him bodily harm, nor yet to hurt his feelings, for he was secretly proud of his ability as a boxer.

"So we started in, I sparring and doing everything I could to preclude 'mixing it up' but dad's spunk was up. Somehow he got in under my guard with a left to the jaw that stretched me on the boards. I got up quickly enough, but my preconceived notions of being gentle had been given their knock-out. I sailed into dad. I'd show him where his antiquated methods got off at. I'd show him what scientific handling of dukes, bandages, and footwork meant. Well, the next thing I knew dad was bending over me with a self-accusing and anxious look in his eyes. I wiped the water he had shed from his forehead and clenched sheepishly.

"Dad, you scared me, boy. I thought I had hurt you," he said, tears welling in his eyes."

CHAFFING PARKER

SIR GILBERT PARKER, M.P., was delightfully chaffed by Punch in a recent issue. The vacant throne of Albania is the subject, and after reviewing the qualifications of several public men, Punch comes to Sir Gilbert and says: "Another formidable candidate, indeed in some ways the most formidable of all, is Sir Gilbert Parker. Interviewed last Saturday by a representative of the Friend Gazette, Sir Gilbert reported to have said that he would cheerfully accept the responsibilities of founding a Gilbertian dynasty provided he could count on the loyal co-operation of his varied subjects. He pointed out his curious presentment of the position he was destined to fill that he wrote 'The Seats of the Mighty' no fewer than fifteen years ago. As for his other qualifications, he laid stress on his early travels in the South Sea Islands, and his addition to golf, a game admirably suited to the climate and configuration of Albania. A photograph of Sir Gilbert Parker in the national costume, carrying a two-handed battle-axe in his teeth, is being extensively circulated in the Blue Albanian Highlands."

Caricature in its pages, Punch claims, makes a man famous, and doubtless this pleasant joke is intended as a compliment to the Canadian member of the House. For he is one of the most popular men at Westminster. Not a disciple of the spectacular, he is content with the solid work, and so keen a judge as Mr. Balfour ranked his gifts so highly, as to slate him for a seat in the next Unionist Cabinet. At their home in Carlton House Terrace Sir Gilbert and Lady Parker frequently entertain political and diplomatic circles in London.

A DISLOYAL PARROT

AN amusing story is being told of the visit of the King and Queen to Chester. As the Royal procession was passing down a narrow thoroughfare the lady of a certain house happened to be sitting at a window with a parrot perched on her hand. The window being raised, the bird heard the applause of the passing crowd, and when one of them shouted, "Three cheers for the King," the parrot promptly told him to "shut up." The Queen noticed the occurrence, and with a smile elbowed His Majesty, while "Polly" looked quite indifferent to the burst of merriment which greeted her remark.

POINCARÉ'S PETS

M. POINCARÉ, the French President, is a lover of animals. Any morning on the Champs Elysees a clean-shaven man may be seen walking slowly along under the trees in the avenue, followed by a magnificent collie and six other dogs of various breeds. The children all know him and run to pat the dogs as they pass. "There are the President's dogs!" they shout, as they stop their play and run towards them. The man is Joseph, the President's trusted servant, taking M. Poincaré's dogs for their morning constitutional. The President has no fewer than seven of them, to say nothing of his other numerous domestic pets.

THE KAISER'S CARDS

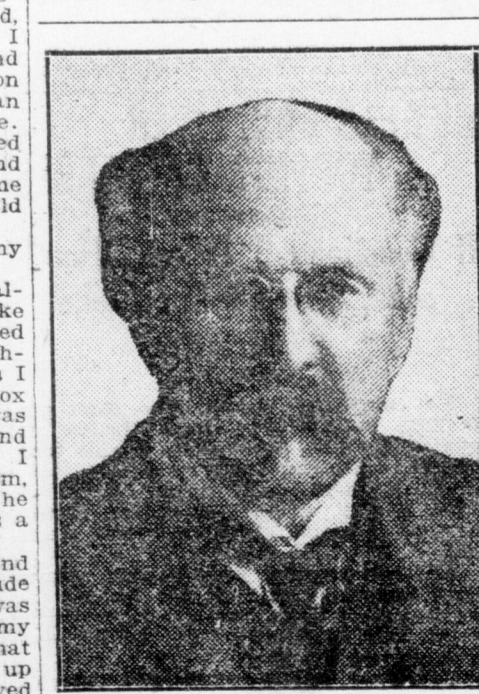

THE Kaiser—always an original monarch—has had one or two remarkable packs of cards made for the use of himself and his private friends. The four kings are King George, the Kaiser, the Czar, and the King of Italy. It has not transpired how they are arranged, but the Kaiser, at any rate, is King of Clubs. The queens are Queen Mary, the German Empress, the Czarina, and the Queen of Italy. The four aces are the four prettiest actresses in Europe—it wouldn't be fair to give their names. As to the four knaves the Kaiser—who never did like diplomacy, but preferred a good, honest, outspoken telegram—has replaced them by the photographs of four well-known European diplomats.

A TITLED REFORMER

THE Countess of Warwick sometimes finds that her title rather interferes with her powers as a reformer. "I suppose," she once observed at a public meeting, "that you have all come here to give your support to the resolution in favor of the medical inspection of school children?" "Oh no, we haven't," said a voice. "We've come to see you."

THE GOLDEN CALF

IT was after the insult offered by "the Chief" by Hon. Mr. Hazen. The Liberals were feeling both indignant and sore. Sir Edmund Oster rose and tried to explain that the Conservatives meant no insult, and in the course of a long but unconvincing speech, he reiterated that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was no idol to be held sacred—immune from all the conflict and the hard blows to be given and taken by either party. "We want no china doll here," continued Sir Edmund—but, ere he could proceed further, the stentorian tones of "Red Michael" rang out "not Golden calf!" Needless to say, such a unique title was not thrown away. Sir Edmund holds still—and is ever likely to retain it—among the Liberal ranks the name of "the golden calf."

Sir Edmund Oster.

INNER HISTORY OF LORD ALVERSTONE'S BOUNDARY AWARD AGAINST CANADA

His Health Has Been Poor of Late—He Was a Hopeless Politician.

STERLING HONESTY Characteristic of the Man—Kindliness Made Him a Great Favorite.

By W. A. M. GOODE. LONDON, June 21. LORD ALVERSTONE—the man whose decision gave a great part of Alaska to the United States—will probably be the first Lord Chief Justice in the history of England to resign his high office. Since the post was established, each holder has died in harness. In retiring voluntarily, owing to continued ill-health, Lord Alverstone will create another precedent. He has several to his credit.

As a young man at Cambridge he was one of the best mile runners that ever represented that university. He excelled in all forms of sport, but, unlike most athletes, his or other days, was intensely religious. He has ever since been prominently connected with philanthropic and religious institutions. Yet he was perhaps best known for a warm welcome at the Savage Club, that home of art and Bohemianism, of which he is an old member. He was a hopeless politician, yet by a stroke of good luck he became Attorney-General of England the first year he entered Parliament. In that position—he was then Sir Richard Webster—he was constantly being pitted against that brilliant lawyer, Sir Charles Russell, afterwards Lord Russell of Killowen. The result of these legal contests was generally dubbed "Sir Wretched" Webster.

Became a Baron

IN 1900, as a result of his long though not particularly distinguished services to the Conservative party, he was given the lucrative office of Master of the Rolls. In the same year his old opponent, Lord Russell, died. It was impossible to pass over the claims of Webster for that post, therefore, although he was a notoriously poor judge, he became a stroke of good luck. Lord Chief Justice of England with the title of Baron Alverstone and a salary of $40,000 a year. Now that he is to retire he will be much regretted in spite of his reputation for having decisions flatly reversed by the highest Courts of Appeal. Both the Bench and the Bar of England have grown to overlook Lord Alverstone's defects of mind on account of the sterling honesty and kindness that have characterized the man during his lucky career. He has always been sincere, and his monotonous voice, incapable of any rhetorical flights, has ever been heard in the cause of what he genuinely believed to be the right. His connection with the Behring Sea Arbitration and the famous Alaska Boundary Arbitration held in London in 1903.

Required Moral Courage

IT requires no little moral courage for a patriotic man, even though he be a Lord Chief Justice, to decide against his own country. Canada and the United States in the Alaska case were represented by an equal number of arbitrators, and the then Attorney-General of England, on behalf of his Government, argued against the American contention. After weeks of speeches, the American and Canadian arbitrators were more than ever convinced that their respective claims were just. It remained for Lord Alverstone to give the casting vote and to decide which flag should fly over a large portion of Alaska. After several days of strenuous and nerve-trying deliberation, Lord Alverstone came to the conclusion that the United States' claims had been established. At the end of a Saturday sitting, when the last arguments were delivered, he told the American arbitrators, or one of them, that he was

THE EARL AND THE TIP

LORD ROSEBERY has evidently retired from political warfare, though occasionally he scents the battle from afar. His personality has always appealed to the public for he is known to be the best of sportsmen. When he was taking an active interest in politics he one day visited a large business concern in the East end. The workmen were greatly interested in their noble visitor, and sent a spokesman to the head of the firm asking if Lord Rosebery would do them a favor. "What do you want—a speech?" they were asked. "Speech be hanged!" was the prompt reply. "We want a tip for the Liverpool Cup!"

ATHLETIC ADVICE

IN his undergraduate days Professor Ramsay was a notable athlete, and on one occasion, when distributing prizes in the gymnasium of the Glasgow University, took occasion to pass some scathing remarks on the softness of the present generation. He illuminated his criticisms from Roman history. "Gentlemen," cried the professor of humanity, "you should do as the ancient Romans. The youths of Rome used to gather on the banks of the Tiber every morning and swim three times across the river." Voice from his audience: "What did they do about their clothes?" "What did they do about their clothes?"

forced to acknowledge the justice of their case. Lord Alverstone would probably have also told the Canadian arbitrators, but they had hurried off to keep a week-end engagement in their country. There was no vital reason for secrecy, as all that remained was for Lord Alverstone himself to sum up. The news of the decision was cabled to the United States, and thence was telegraphed to Canada and cabled back to England.

Resentment in Canada.

A FEELING of intense resentment sprang up like wildfire in Canada. Many papers openly declared Lord Alverstone had sold the Dominion as a mess of pottage to gain the friendship of the United States. The Canadian arbitrators cabled back to Canada that Lord Alverstone had not told them of his momentous decision. The fact that the news came through the American News Agency and was published in the United States before the Canadian members of the court had heard of it was interpreted as damning evidence that Canada had "been betrayed." It was some years before the irritation caused by this incident died down, and for months the present Lord Chief Justice received shoals of abuse by mail and otherwise from Canada. Lord Alverstone was so upset at the premature publication of his decision that he adopted the futile expedient of forbidding the writer to be present when the Arbitration Court met on the following Monday. His lengthy summing up, carefully prepared to coat the bitter pill for Canada with sugar, naturally lost all effectiveness. The Lord Chief Justice on that occasion was the innocent victim of his own indiscretion and of the public's demand for "live" news. The suggestion that there was any secret understanding between himself and the American arbitrators is, of course, utterly groundless. To this day neither Lord Alverstone nor any of the American arbitrators know how the details of his decision came into my possession and thus reached the United States before being communicated to the Canadian members of the court.

ADMIRAL AND MIDDY

A GOOD story is told of Vice-Admiral Cecil Burney, who has been in command of the allied fleet of the powers during the demonstration against Montenegro. Vice-Admiral Burney is noted for his philosophic temperament, and is seldom put out by anything that occurs. But on one occasion he was completely at a loss for a reply. A youthful midshipman who had charge of a pinnace ran into Admiral Burney's flagship. The admiral gazed over the ship's side, and in sarcastic tones asked that they should not be run down. Whereupon, the cheeky young "middy" replied: "That's all right, sir. Don't be alarmed; we won't hurt you!"

USE OF EARGUARDS

THE ear-guards usually worn by Lieutenant Wedohouse, captain of the English rugby team, recall the story told in connection with the two young ladies who for the first time saw a footballer wearing them. "Whatever is he wearing those funny flaps over his ears for?" one of them wanted to know. "The other hadn't a ghost of an idea, but as she desired to convey the impression that she knew all about it, she replied at once, 'Oh, that's so that he won't hear what the others say when he kicks them.'"

SANG THE ANTHEM

THERE is an amusing story of an evening visit which the Emperor of Austria once paid to his friend, Frau Schrat. He had remained rather late, and, with his usual consideration, Francis Joseph, who did not wish to disturb the sleeping household, made as little noise as possible as he walked down a passage to the garden entrance; but, just as he reached it, a door opened, and Frau Schrat's new cook came out in her nightgown, carrying a lighted candle. The sound of footstep and candle lit her, and, naturally, when she saw the figure of a man, her first impulse was to scream. "Francis Joseph came forward quickly. 'Be quiet, you stupid woman; don't you know me?' 'Um the Emperor,' he said in a low voice. "The incredulous cook was taken aback, for in her wildest flights of imagination she had never pictured herself meeting the Emperor of Austria wandering about late at night. Still doubtful, she turned the light of the candle full on the stranger's face, and as she did so she recognized the well-known features of Francis Joseph. "The loyal woman instantly fell on her knees, and began to sing the National Anthem at the top of her voice. The Emperor made a hurried exit. My Past, by Countess Marie Larisch."

ONE OF TWO EVILS

THE REV. SYLVESTER HORNE, who is associated with the Whitefield's Tabernacle, London, England, is numbered amongst the most eloquent of Nonconformist ministers. As a publicist also his pronouncements invariably attract attention, and he has met with gratifying success in the House of Commons. When Mr. Horne was returned for Ipswich in 1910 he enjoyed the reputation of being the only active Congregational M.P., and in this connection he has been the subject of much comment. One of his canvassers when going the rounds came across a workman intently studying the portraits of the two candidates. "Well, what do you think of them?" asked the canvasser. "The workman merely shrugged his shoulders by way of reply. "What candidate do you intend to vote for?" persisted the canvasser. "Don't know anything about none of them," replied the elector. "But what I seen of 'em, I think 'Eaven as only one can get in."

HE IS NOW RETIRING

The First Man Ever to Step Down From the Chief Seat of Justice.

THE foremost authority on brain surgery in Great Britain to-day is undoubtedly Sir Victor Horsley, who, despite the claims made upon him by his profession, is known to cherish Parliamentary aspirations. As a medical man he takes very independent views and never hesitates to express his opinions. He is a fanatical teetotaler on scientific grounds, but fortunately he has a kind word for tea, which he declares to be comparatively harmless if taken when freshly made. But on alcohol he wages unceasing warfare, and in this matter has largely influenced his hospital brethren.

A MEDICAL TEETOTALER

Sir Victor Horsley received his knighthood as a coronation honor in 1902. He is entitled to write almost half the alphabet after his name, as the result of distinctions gained in medical science. He is a great believer in experimental research, for he has discovered several cures for various diseases, and he is firmly convinced of the necessity for vivisection.

THE LADY'S CHOICE

DR. MACNAMARA, who started life as a schoolmaster, has amused election experiences to relate. On one occasion when he was in the middle of a speech, an old lady excitedly asked, "Are you in favor of the repeal of the Blasphemy Laws?" "Madam," was the ready reply. "I am a golfer."

ONE ON THE DUKE

THE Duke of Argyll, at the opening of a recent exhibition in London, became much interested in a particular make of chimney pot, designed to stop smoking, and, turning to the attendant of the stall, asked him to send one or two of them to his house in Scotland. "Certainly, sir," said the man, not

THE KING OF SYRIA RESIDES IN PARIS

But He Rules Over Three Million Subjects Just the Same.

UNKNOWN, BUT BIG

Is King of Arabia Also, and Is Enormously Wealthy, But Is Retiring.

IT sounds strange to talk of an unknown but mighty King, to speak of a monarch who is wealthy and owns large possessions, but whose position is not recognized. Such a man is Alfred L. King of Syria and Arabia, who still is a citizen of France. The fact that he is a King might have remained unknown even in Paris, where he lives in the crowded artists' quarter of Montmartre, had he not had a dispute with one of his neighbors over some simians to which both laid claim. When the case was brought into court it was discovered that "Monsieur le Vicomte Alfred, German de Breuil," by the grace of God and by the election by the twelve emirs of Arabia and Syria, has ruled over a territory six times the size of France. In Paris King Alfred I. lives high up in one of the modest apartment houses crowded with artists and artisans. His favorite pastime is driving in the parks and boulevards and visiting the open-air theatres and restaurants. He dresses in faultless taste, and makes it a point to follow and often launch the styles in men's dress. He is a stocky man, not much more than five feet eight inches tall, but he looks much taller because he stands erect and is well proportioned. Despite his sixty years, his young friends have designated him the "young cavalry officer." "Though he has the right to be called King of Syria and Arabia, he is indifferent about his title.

His Kingdom

HIS kingdom is bounded on the north by the Ottoman Empire and on the east by the Gulf of Persia and the Indian Ocean, on the west by the Red Sea and a strip of land belonging to Turkey, while the Indian Ocean and British Somaliland are its southern boundaries. King Alfred explains that he was given his position and title because these people could not find among them a man who was able to rule all of them without rivalry and jealousy. He rules over three million men and women, who call themselves Nazarenes or primitive Christians, men who follow the doctrine of Christ as they were understood and accepted 2,900 years ago. That he is an able ruler is proved by the fact that when he was made King he induced a French company to build a railroad which runs from Port Said to Luwa, on the Gulf of Oman. He is now negotiating with the company for the erection of a branch line through the wonderful petroleum lakes discovered by Prince Wrede. It is not known how rich a man this strange and unknown ruler really is, but certainly he is worth many millions. For there are few riches that are not found in Arabia. His treasures include gold, silver, turquoise, pearls, horses, camels, sheep, goats, fruits, and zinc. Besides these possessions he is given a large salary every year, which is paid in the wealth of the country, 600,000 sheeps.

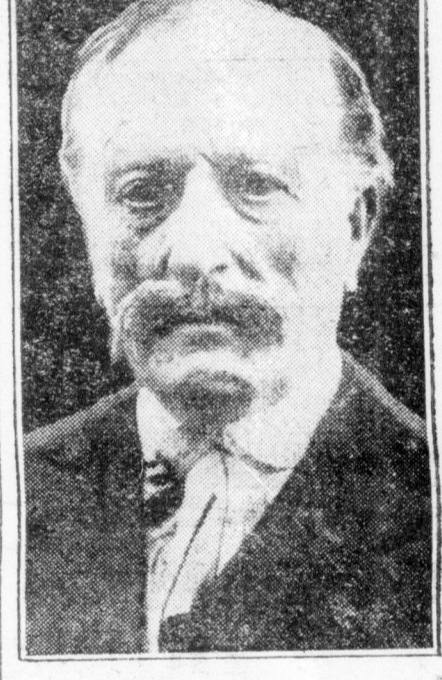

A GRAVES STORY

IT is interesting to note that Mr. George Graves has been selected to appear at the command performance at Knowsley Hall, Lancashire, on July 7 during the visit of the King and Queen to Lord Derby. Mr. Graves tells innumerable funny stories. One of them is about an enthusiastic wife who was boring a friend with tales of her husband's cleverness. "My husband is such a handy man about the house," she exclaimed. "He can do anything. Only the other day he took the cuckoo clock to pieces and cleaned it and put it together again. Now it runs as well as ever." "Really," said the bored friend. "It goes all right again?" "Yes, indeed," was the reply. "But we're a bit worried about the cuckoo; it will persist when it calls the hours, in putting the 'oo' before the cuckoo."

LEATHER MEDALS

MANY good stories are told by Mr. John N. Raphael, the well-known Paris correspondent. Here is one recently related of Tristan Bernard, the French dramatist. The incident took place in a restaurant. "Waiter," said Bernard, after glancing through the bill of fare. "Sir," said the expectant waiter. "Give me some spelling mistakes," Bernard ordered. "Some what?" gasped the waiter. "Some spelling mistakes," repeated Bernard firmly, "and be quick." The waiter went off to talk it over with the chef. By-and-bye he returned empty-handed. "I'm afraid we have not got any sir," he said. "Not got any?" exclaimed Bernard. "Then why do you always put them on the bill of fare?"

recognizing his dowdy-looking customer. "What name and address?" "The Duke of Argyll, Roseneath," said the Duke. "Yes, sir, what name?" asked the man again, whereupon his customer had to explain exactly who he was. As he went away, the vendor of chimney pots was heard to say: "Lord, I took him for a hotel-keeper and 'The Duke of Argyll' as the name of his 'pub.'"

Slipped on Pavement.—Slipping on the pavement while running for a Springfield car, Edward Shepherd, an employee of the Murray shoe factory, dislocated his shoulder shortly after 6 o'clock Friday night. Dr. Kingsmill and the police ambulance were summoned, and while awaiting their arrival P. C. Blade and an eye-witness of the accident did all in their power to relieve the man's sufferings. He was removed to St. Joseph's Hospital.

Last Pair of Shoes.—They were nice new tan shoes and they adorned the feet of a young Detroit man who was to have left on the early morning G. T. R. train for Toronto today. Through a miscalculation the said young man arrived at the station too early. He was tired. He lay down to sleep. The new shoes hurt, however, and after a vain attempt to get some repose he removed them. Then Morphew arrived. So did someone else. The someone-else removed the shoes. When the young man awoke, an old dilapidated pair of slippers was in their place.

Immediately there ensued a hurried rush down town. Shoe stores are not in the habit of opening at 6:30 a.m., however, and the shoeless gentleman was forced to remain over until the next train.

GOVT. RECOMMENDS CHANGES FOR THE KINDERGARTENS

Five Years Should Be Age of Admission for One Year Course.

Suggests That Services of Teachers Be Required for the Entire Day.

Inspector C. B. Edwards is sending out circulars containing report of the special committee on kindergarten regulations, and course of study appointed last year by the minister of education. The committee recommends that the age of admission to kindergartens be five years, where the course covers one year, but in towns and cities where the same environment is not good, a preliminary kindergarten course is recommended for children of from four to five years. Wherever possible kindergarten primary or transition classes are recommended at the age of six or six and a half years, in which the pupil's school time should be equally divided between hand occupations and the elements of reading, writing, and number work.

The committee favors an arrangement under which kindergarten teachers' services are required during the whole day, and declares, "It is in its opinion, important that an equality with other teachers as regards salary. This can never be done unless the hours of service are the same." The committee recommends three years' government aid for new kindergartens and the appointment of a provincial kindergarten director.

Afternoon work for kindergarten teachers is suggested, including assisting primary teachers with constructive work, in clay, raffia, and cardboard; assisting other teachers and working with supervising school gardens, and visiting homes of parents.

MAIDEN TRIP OF GIANT SHIP

The "Seandee" Is the Finest Sidewheeler in the World.

"QUEEN OF GREAT LAKES"

The maiden trip of the new great lakes liner, the Seandee, of the Cleveland and Buffalo Navigation Company, from Detroit to Cleveland, on Thursday morning, was an auspicious occasion. The first passenger list included a large party of Cleveland people, who had come over the night before from Detroit to Cleveland. The Seandee, which is the largest sidewheeler in the world, left her dock at 8 a.m., and from that time until she reached Cleveland in the afternoon it was a succession of salutes and cheers from passing craft.

The Seandee, the latest addition to the C. & B. line of boats, which ply between Cleveland and Buffalo, marks the last word in marine architecture and magnificence of interior appointments. She is beyond all exception the most splendid sidewheeler steamer ever built.

A Monster Craft.
The dimensions of this gigantic steamer are: Length, 500 feet; breadth, 88 feet 6 inches; draught, 20 feet 6 inches. She has 110 staterooms and 24 parlors, accommodating 1,500 passengers, and has a Government permit for carrying 6,000 passengers. Her draught capacity on deck is 1,000 tons. There are six decks in all, and her furnishings and movable equipment would cover a field of 40 acres. Her guaranteed speed is 22 miles per hour, and to make it she has been given 12,000-horsepower engines, which is 4,000-horsepower more than any other sidewheeler steamer.

The keelote of the interior decoration scheme is rich simplicity. The grand saloon, over 400 feet, is in Ionic order of architecture having a valancing of polished mahogany, the upper part finished in fine enamel. The ceilings, as well as the stair landings, are decorated with beautiful mural paintings by celebrated American artists.

Boering the grand saloon are a number of parlors de luxe, each in different rich design, paneled in silk brocades, with private baths and several with private walking lockers looking out on the lakes. The Seandee was built by the Detroit Shipbuilding Company and is the largest and most costly steamer on inland waters of the world.

Montreal, June 21.—City felices may howl by night in perfect peace hereafter. The response of the senior pupils is most gratifying. Already those who expressed the desire to enter the Industrial and Art School next term is several times the number of the school. The circulars which were distributed to the parents gives some very interesting information regarding the objects and course of study of this up-to-date educational institution. Every parent would do well to carefully look it over. The opinions of such celebrated educationalists as Principal Elliot, of Harvard University, of the great educational value of a school course combining a strong academic course with practical training, is worthy of the serious consideration of all thoughtful parents.

The end of the primary school period is one of the most critical times in a boy's or girl's career. It is extremely difficult for the parent to decide on what the next step should be. The Industrial and Art School course solves this problem for many boys and girls. It is just what will make useful men and women out of them.

Board of Education Discusses Alexandra and Industrial School Matters.

The board of education on Friday referred back to No. 1 committee the recommendation of that committee, that Mr. George Copeland be appointed principal of Alexandra school. Discussion arose regarding the relations between that public school and the London Industrial School. Dr. Shaw thought that a good system would be which held that the principalship for the two schools was very much opposed by the other public school principals and teachers. Dr. Teasdale thought that the industrial school and Alexandra school should be separated as far as possible.

On the recommendation of the industrial advisory committee, several rooms in the old Colborne school will be fitted up for industrial school purposes. An extra teacher will be engaged, together with a full-time secretary, the latter to receive not more than $400 a year.

BOWELS BAD, LIVER TORPID? CASCARETS

If Constipated, Bilious, Head-achy, Stomach Sour, take a Cascaret.

You men and women who can't get feeling right—who have headache, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath, dizziness, can't sleep, are bilious, nervous and upset, bothered with a sick, gassy, disordered stomach, or have backache and feel worn out.

Are you keeping your bowels clean with Cascarets, or merely forcing a passageway every few days with salts, cathartic pills or castor oil? This is important.

Cascarets work while you sleep; cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the constipated waste matter and poison in the intestines and bowels.

A Cascaret tonight will straighten you out by morning—a 10-cent box from any drug store will keep your stomach sweet; liver and bowels regular and head clear for months. Don't forget the children. They love Cascarets because they taste good—do good—never gripe or sicken.

Brickdust Row

Illustrated Especially For The Advertiser by Dan Sayre Groesbeck

Blinker was displeased. A man of less culture and poise and wealth would have sworn. But Blinker remembered that he was a gentleman—a thing that no gentleman should do. So he merely looked bored while he rode in a hansom to the centre of disturbance, which was the Broadway office of Lawyer Oldport, agent for the Blinker estate.

He stood on a camp-stool, ripped off the slats above his head, and pulled down a number of life preservers. He began to buckle one around Florence.

"It depends," said the girl, "on how nicely you behave. I'll consider your application until we get there."

These almost unsurmountable obstacles which Capt. Scott had to overcome, are to be shown throughout the United States. A part of the receipts are to be donated to the widows and orphans of Scott and the four men who perished with him.

English Suffragette and Her Father

Strange Action Dismissed.

In the King's Bench Division last month Mr. Justice Bankes and a jury concluded the hearing of the action brought by Miss Annie Elizabeth Bell against her father, Captain George Fullerton Bell, a retired naval officer, and Mr. Edward Cubison, his solicitor, claiming damages for alleged false imprisonment. The defendants denied the allegation. The plaintiff, who is a militant suffragette and has been in prison, declared that she was locked in her father's house at Jeffrey's Road, Clapham, for several days after all the furniture, save her bed, had been removed, and was left there without food and water.

Miss Catherine Emma Nash, living at 31, Jeffrey's Road (next door to Captain Bell's house), said she learned that plaintiff had been locked in the house, and she took a rope, and the plaintiff took it through a window. The witness also brought the plaintiff food. With the witness' permission, people went to the house by means of her garden. Cross-examined by Mr. Rawlinson, K.C. (for the defence): The plaintiff could have come away just as her friends did, and you would not have objected?—I should not have objected.

Re-examined: The witness said she believed the plaintiff's eyesight was defective, and she did not think Miss Bell could have climbed over the garden wall without detriment to herself.

Visits by Climbing. Miss Bell re-entered the witness-box for further cross-examination. She said that her friends got in by climbing through the window of a room called the study, which was at the back of the house, and was six feet high. The witness was shut up in the top of the house, and to get to her friends would have to pass through several locked doors.

Counsel: If you had wished to get out you could have done so, just as your friends did?—I might have injured myself. I wanted to go in and out of the house in the ordinary way, and I did not wish to be imprisoned in it. The witness added that she would have risked breaking her leg if she had tried to get through the window.

Do you suggest as a militant suffragette, that you were frightened to get out of a window?—I was not. I wanted to stay in the house till I had made proper arrangements for going away.

His Lordship: They were anxious to get you out?—Mr. Cubison tried to bully me out, and when he could not bully me out he tried to starve me out. The next witness was Miss Winnifred Duval, a student living at Waverley. She said she visited Miss Bell at the house. The gate of the house was chained and padlocked. She climbed a wall with the aid of a neighbor. Then she climbed a shed and saw the plaintiff through a window. Miss Bell let a chair down, and she got in. "I found it very risky, and not being a monkey I did not appreciate it."—(Loud laughter.)

Later, the witness continued she tried the doors and found them locked. She rattled at the door in the hall, and could not get it open.

Counsel: Are you a militant suffragette? The witness (with emphasis): Yes, I am. Miss Violet Wood, residing at Clapham Park, was next called. "Are you a suffragette?" asked counsel. "Yes, I am respectable," was a reply that made the court laugh.

The witness said she had known the Bell family for years. She heard that the plaintiff was locked in the house, and she visited her through a window in the hall. She got through by climbing a wall and entering by the neighboring house. One of the things the plaintiff asked her to do was to look down in the cellar to see if there were any men there.

The Defence. Mr. Rawlinson, K.C., said he would submit there was nothing to be proved. Mr. Justice Bankes said it seemed to him that if the front door was locked that would amount to imprisonment in law, but he was not sure.

Mr. Rawlinson then addressed the jury for the defence. He said the action ought never to have been brought. The father disapproved of the plaintiff's suffragist work, and he had determined when she came out of prison to let her husband and go to the north of England. He gave her the choice of giving up militancy and continuing to live with him, or leaving and having an allowance. She declined the offer. Eventually she asked for £200 down, and that was refused.

The first witness for the defence was a locksmith named Frederick Alley, who said he took a night latch out and put a Yale latch on it, so that he could get in from the outside.

Counsel: Could anybody inside get out just by turning it?—Yes. The Solicitor's Story. Mr. A. E. Cubison said that his wife and himself had known the plaintiff and members of her family for many years. In accordance with the instructions of Captain Bell, who was over 80, the witness tried to get possession of the house, acting under power of attorney. He eventually told the plaintiff he had decided to give her the three weeks she asked for, but then she shifted her ground and refused to go unless £200 were paid down to her, as she said she had a moral right to the house and the furniture.

The witness went with his wife to superintend the removal of the furniture. They both visited the plaintiff, who was upstairs in her bedroom, and tried to persuade her to accompany them home. "We were all on very friendly terms, and called her by her Christian name," the witness added. Miss Bell said she was going to stay till her money was paid.

Counsel: Did you ever say that unless she left the house you would lock her in?—I never said anything of the sort to her. The witness, recounting subsequent happenings, said he merely pulled the door back after him. Trying to enter later, he found Miss Bell had bolted up various parts of the house. The gate was padlocked to prevent anyone from coming in.

His Lordship: What for? Mr. Cubison: I made up my mind that I must leave someone in the house to get the plaintiff out, and I wished to prevent more people coming in.

His Lordship: You did not wish a garrison.—(Laughter.) Mr. T. H. Healy, K.C. (cross-examining): Did you ask what her moral right was founded on?—She said there was a letter written by her mother. The witness said he put no locks on the door that the plaintiff could not have opened. He took no steps to drain off the water. He turned off the gas taps and removed the pipe between the main and the meter. He told the men standing in the bathroom to put the lady out of the house without any violence.—(Laughter.)

Mr. Healy: There is a leading case of Dogberry on the subject.—(Laughter.) Supposing the men said, "But what if she will not come?"—I don't remember that they asked that. She was not to be allowed to go upstairs again.

The witness denied that he told the plaintiff she must abandon her views on the suffrage question as a condition of her receiving the allowance.

Mr. Rawlinson (re-examining): Had you the slightest desire to detain or imprison her in the house?—Not at all. I was anxious to get rid of her.—(Laughter.)

Mr. Arthur Stuart Bell, fleet surgeon in the navy, a son of Captain Bell, stated that he had an interview with the plaintiff, in which he suggested that she should continue her "suffragette work" but give up acts of violence, in which case she should continue to live with her father. In the alternative, she was to have an allowance of £2 a week and live elsewhere.

What did she say to these proposals?—She said she liked my impertinence.—(Laughter.) The jury at first disagreed, but retired again, and eventually found that the plaintiff was not locked in the house.

This was held to be a verdict for the defendants. Judgment was given accordingly.

TALKING ABOUT SPOOKS.

"Why do they say that the ghost walks on the lawn?"

"Because that's the day our spirits rise."

TOMPKINS' NERVE.

Mr. Wilkins was near the exploding point when his neighbor met him on the street.

"That man Tompkins," he burst out, "has more nerve than anyone I ever met."

"Why?" asked his neighbor curiously. "He came over to my house last evening and borrowed my gun to kill a dog that kept him awake nights."

"Well, what of that?" "Why," shouted Mr. Wilkins, "it was my dog he killed!"

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

"It says, waiter," whispered the man in the downtown restaurant, "do you charge extra here for the water?"

"Yes, sir," replied the waiter. "Well, I suppose I will have to stand by the way, waiter, take table napkins for about fifteen minutes."

PAVLOVA, "QUEEN OF THE DANCE" VOLUNTARY EXILE FROM RUSSIA

Premiere Danseuse Etoile of the Czar's Imperial Ballet Renounces Her Native Country in Favor of England—Surrenders Pay and Pension.

Anna Pavlova, native of St. Petersburg, Russia, in which country she holds the title of premiere danseuse etoile of the Imperial Ballet, dropped into a chair in a house near London, England, put down her umbrella, removed her gloves (they are supposed always to have umbrella and gloves in London, aren't they?) and sighed, "My gracious me, but it's good to be at home again!" or words to that effect. This was a few weeks ago. She has finished engagements in Paris, Berlin and St. Petersburg, and was back in her country by adoption and her house by purchase, for the famous dancer is a voluntary exile from Russia, and will live in England. She has bought the historic "Ivy House" on Hampstead Heath, only half an hour by motor from the centre of London, and there she has established herself in a luxurious contentment if not in peace, which she never knows. She is too active to be peaceful.

Pavlova's renunciation of Russia in favor of England, only recently made known, means a financial loss in a way. That is, the dancer surrenders the pay and pension she would have received from the Czar. Members of the Imperial Russian Ballet get an income from the State and after they are retired they are pensioned for life, which makes ballet dancing for the Autocrat of all Russia some job. Still, Pavlova can manage to pull through without the pension. Her pay for dancing outside of Russia is an income for a queen, which she is—queen of the dance, and by grace of the Czar she retains the title as the "it" of all his dancers.

The Czar first learned of Pavlova's intention to quit Russia when she was in St. Petersburg a short time ago. Her position as premiere danseuse etoile of the Imperial Ballet carried the obligation to dance in St. Petersburg and Moscow each season, and she returned to fulfill it. She danced seven times in St. Petersburg, and the Czar attended nearly every performance. Twice he sent for her to come to the royal box. Both times he complimented her highly. The second time he asked why she had chosen to live outside his realm.

Pavlova described her London home, its gardens with roses and lilacs, its valley and orchids, her lake with swans, her parrots, doves, thoroughbred dogs, and told of her fondness for the English, of the charming people who visited her at Ivy House and wound up her list of reasons by saying "And besides, it always rains or snows in St. Petersburg."

The Czar replied that he had understood that the sun seldom shone in London. Pavlova assured him it pelted out there oftener than in St. Petersburg. So the Czar graciously surrendered further argument, but told Pavlova he would still expect her to return to Russia to dance and that she would retain her title as premiere danseuse etoile of the Imperial Ballet. He said he would expect her next January. Then Pavlova told her plan to come to this country next season and afterward to tour the world. Accordingly it was arranged that she go back there next September before she comes to America, when by command of the Czar she is to dance in St. Petersburg and Moscow.

Those will be her last appearances in Russia for two years, for after her American visit Pavlova will circulate the globe, a tour that will occupy about two years.

Pavlova's fondness for England is quite natural in view of the position she holds there. Professionally she is idolized. She has awakened a tremendous interest in dancing and all society has gone in for the ballet. Women of title have taken up fancy dancing and a few lucky ones have had Pavlova instruct them. Apart from her professional success Pavlova has been taken up socially and she is received everywhere, while the ultra fashionable set goes to Ivy House.

Her English home, which is practically in London, being in a nearby suburb, is a picturesque old house, ivy covered and surrounded with oaks with ample grounds. Pavlova denies that she has fads, yet her place shows that she has certain pronounced tastes. One is for pets. She is fond of dogs and is hardly ever separated from one, a spaniel which she takes to the theatre at every performance. She has parrots that greet visitors with a confusion of Russian, French and English tongues; she has swans that eat out of her hand and she has doves cots all over the grounds. One of her greatest passions is flowers and she employs ten gardeners at Ivy House attending to flower beds and greenhouses. She is a collector of antiques and is said to have the most extensive private collection in existence of books, paintings and engravings descriptive of dancing and its history. She enjoys watching out-of-door sports, but does not go in for any of them, it wouldn't be safe. She might strain a muscle that would interfere with her dancing. But she gets exercise enough practicing two hours every morning and dancing at the theatre. However, she is a motor boat enthusiast and has grown quite English generally except in two respects, language and cooking. She confesses that the English language comes hard, while as for the cooking much of it is impossible. She sticks to a Russian bill of fare and has Russian cooks in her home.

Pavlova is now at the palace in London, where she is filling her fourth annual engagement. She comes to America next fall, opening in New York, October 17.

HER VERY BEST.

When the new girl from the employment agency had duly presented her references and the mistress had read them over, she regarded the girl with a stern eye.

"I am not satisfied with those references," she finally said. "But they're the best I could get, mum."

OF COURSE, HE KNEW!

THE NORMAN FACE

Originally Not Dark, But Fair

[By A. E. Crawley in the London News and Leader.]

"Ivanhoe" at the Lyceum is the fiftieth dramatic avatar of Scott's great novel, the writing of which it was thought he would not survive. The characters of the immortal book, materialized on the stage, revive the dreams of boyhood. We see in the flesh the ruddy-faced, flaxen-haired Saxon and the dark, aquiline-featured Norman knight with his trim black moustache.

But it is just here that "much learning" has made us skeptical. We should like to know what manner of men those old Normans really were; but there is every reason for distrusting the Scott tradition of the dark face and black hair. Those of us whose names are Norman or Danish, or who have been led to investigate Domesday by reason of landed interests or the modern problem of the land, may feel the lure of the question. What were our forefathers? But all Englishmen should be interested since it is a fact that the Saxons of England were an easy-going, almost effete people until Danish and Norman blood was infused into their veins. Danish to the extent of one-fifth, is the calculated proportion. The Conquest gave more than it took.

Describing as he was, in exaggerated terms, the feud between Saxon and Norman, Scott naturally worked out a racial contrast, forgetting that both peoples were members of the same Nordic or North Teutonic race. He represents Sir Brian de Bois Guilbert as very dark, aquiline, and haughty of look, and the black moustache completes the "villain" of the drama. Now the knight was certainly not moustache-facéd. Soon after they settled in Normandy the "Northmen" adopted the fashion of clean-shaving, and the Bayeux Tapestry proves that they retained it in the Conqueror's time. The Vikings had two types—the blue-eyed, yellow-haired Norse and the blue-eyed but darker-haired Danes.

Mixing with the native Celts for 150 years, the Normans of the Duchy, says Beddoe, were "a mixed breed," but as a rule their leaders were of pure Scandinavian blood, those among the Seine, the men of Rolf, being still Norwegian; those from the Cotentin, Harald Blue Tooth's men, being Danes. The leaders of the conqueror's army we quote Beddoe again, were "physically among the purest specimens of that restless, roving, adventurous type of man, blond or rufous, with straight profile and elliptical head which evermore crops up among the people of the west of Europe whenever deeds of adventure have to be done." The type still crops up in Normandy, though Celtic brunetness has nearly swamped it. It is still frequent in England. In Scotland there is an extraordinary coincidence. The strains of blood which produced the Norman average type were exactly the same as those which produced the Lowland Scots, namely, Norse, Swede, Danish, Saxon, Frisian, and Celtic, the Scandinavian predominating. Thus, by a curious conveyance, Scotland has possessed a Normandy of her own, and appropriately enough has always sent its children south. The Scottification of England is the second Conquest. The Normans were all but the German troops of Pope Leo IX., when brought face to face with the Norman army in South Italy, are said to have jeered at their diminutive stature. There is a simple explanation of the error. The leaders only were Normans, and they were mounted. But their infantry was composed of the native Calabrians, who, under the rule of the Norman, were a tall, ruddy, and Guisard, assumed the name and character of Normans." Now it is a well-known fact that the Calabrians are absolutely the shortest members of the shortest race in Europe, the so-called "Mediterranean race."

Mr. Maurice Hewlett describes Sir Gilles de Gardun as "a square-shouldered, thick set youth of the black Norman sort, ruddy, strong-jawed, small-eyed, with a broad brow, and a bearded." The description is correct, but misleading to those who have not Mr. Hewlett's knowledge of ethnical (let alone dramatic) types. We have seen that plenty of Normans were Celtic, and the truth is, in describing a case of Mendelian segregation of Celtic characters, the very antipodes of the Scandinavian Ngrman. It is worth nothing how blackness accompanied shortness and short-headedness. Ruddy, of course, does not mean blond. Similar segregation was common, as is proved by the interesting fact (which shows the Norman regard for their original fairness) that a blond son was so often called Rufus, a name connoting not red-headedness, but Norwegian or Scotch blondness. The Conqueror's second son was a case in point. His name was Rufus, and his face (here this character refers to blondness) fair-haired (not red-haired). His eyes were "vair," that is, "mixed" gray. Like his father, he was, even at an early age, inclined to corpulence. We may be sure that his elder brother, Robert Curthose, was dark, possibly an exact counterpart of "Sir Gilles de Gardun."

The extraordinary thing about this description and the description following, of William himself, is that we seem to be viewing a physique almost purely Celtic. In other words, our first two Norman kings were, perhaps, completely innocent alike of "simple faith" and of Norman blood. William of Malmesbury thus describes the Conqueror: "He was of average height; of extraordinary corpulence; of stern, fierce looks. The front part of his head was bald. His arms were enormously powerful no man could bend his bow. Both seated and standing, his appearance was dignified, though his kingly carriage was spoiled by abdominal obesity." It may be remembered that at the time William was 60.

Aquiline Profile. Can we infer from the "stern, fierce looks" the aquiline profile, the high, thin nose, and straight nose, of simple pure Danish or Norwegian Norman? Rufus, an exceptional case, had Norse blondness with everything else Celtic. If we exclude the possibility of aquiline features, Perhaps we should give both father and son the benefit of the doubt. So far as it goes, the Bayeux tapestry insists on the aquiline face as typical of the leaders. We may guess, however, that William was not fair, else would not his name have been Rufus? His mother, of course, was the daughter of a tanner of Falaise. No doubt she inherited her physical type, and Celtic probably, of the so-called "Alpine Race" of Central Europe.

A peculiarity of the Bayeux type is the abnormally straight optic. This hardly agrees with the long-headed character of the pure Norman head, but neither is it a character of Celtic. It may, no doubt, be merely a fashion of the royal artist's style.

The Normans, say the historians, have disappeared. But in nature there is no disappearance. If we accept Mendelism for man; then specimens of the pure Norman type must continually recur. And we see them daily in the streets.

"IT'S A WISE FATHER." A certain well-known scientist in Washington was left in charge of his family of small children, as his wife expected to be absent some hours. Upon her return in the early evening she found the house unusually quiet, and wished to know what had become of the children.

The husband explained that as they had been rather noisy he himself had put them to bed without waiting for her return.

"I hope they gave you no trouble," she said. "No," replied the scientist, "with the exception of the one in the cot there. His objection was good, but in addressing him and putting him to bed."

Young Charlton, After Great Three-Year Legal Battle, Must Now Face Trial For Murder--And All Because He Killed "The Woman Who Did Not Care"

THE STORY OF THIS SADDEST OF ALL MODERN LOVE-CRIMES--THE TALE OF DISILLUSIONED LAD WHO BEAT TO DEATH HIS WORLDLY-WISE, MIDDLE-AGED BRIDE WITH A STATUE CALLED "LOVE."

A fool there was, and he made his prayer (Even as you and I), To a girl who was a hank of hair. (We called her the woman who did not care) But the fool he called her his lady fair (Even as you and I) —Rudyard Kipling.

New York, June 20.—"Yes, I killed her. She was the best woman in the world to me."

For these words, uttered as he was dropping down the gangplank at Hoboken pier three years ago, will young Porter Charlton have now to face an Italian jury, to which will fall the task of deciding whether or not he must spend the rest of his many days among the dampish stones of an alien dungeon—to live in solitary confinement because with a statue called "Love" he crashed out the brains of his wife, the lovely Mary Scott Castle Charlton, while they were still on that strange honeymoon they began in a villa over the blue, blue waters of Lake Como.

Young Charlton's father, Paul Charlton, a rich lawyer of New York, has put up a great three-year-long legal battle to keep his son in the United States, but it has just been decided by the United States supreme court that he should be surrendered to Italian officials for deportation to Italy for trial. The word has been passed to the murderer in his cell in the Jersey City prison, and he wishes to put up one last fight to stay here. But it is not likely his wishes will be carried out.

The story of the curious interview, which was the starting point of the legal battle, is told in the following paragraphs. The story of the curious interview, which was the starting point of the legal battle, is told in the following paragraphs. The story of the curious interview, which was the starting point of the legal battle, is told in the following paragraphs.

Then, when she was 24, Mary Scott, daughter of the rich H. H. Scott, of San Francisco, was the belle of the Golden Gate city and its gay society. At that time in the city of Omaha a little boy of 10 years, son of Paul Charlton, a leading attorney, was romping with the "kids" of his neighborhood. His name was Porter; his mother was dead.

Within ten years a blind fate drew the boy of 10 and the society belle of 24 from their homes in different corners of the continent and placed them as chief figures in one of the most remarkable murder cases that ever stirred the capitals of America and Europe.

How the Italian Government Proceeds Against a Murderer

If Porter Charlton is surrendered to the Italian Government the case will first go to a special court, whose judges have much the same function as a grand jury in this country. Their indictment of Charlton will be followed by his trial before a jury.

The jury, in its verdict, may report extenuating circumstances, but the sentence is left entirely to the judge. The maximum penalty for murder such as Charlton committed is solitary confinement for life, Italy having abolished the death penalty some years ago.

In the life term the first ten years is spent in solitary confinement, in a dark cell, with only bread and water. It is a medieval punishment, and prisoners rarely survive the 10-year ordeal, many of them considering death by suicide far preferable. Charlton, in addition, is said to have tuberculosis.

Those who know declare that "emotional insanity" will be Charlton's plea, when he is brought to trial. Insanity, as a defence in murder cases is as common in Italy as in America. If Charlton is adjudged insane Italian officials declare that, in their opinion, he will not be returned to the United States, but will be confined in an asylum in Italy.

Mrs. Mary Scott Castle Charlton, the Murdered Wife.

came one of the most promising clerks in the bank. He was spirited, ambitious and wrote verses.

The next August Mary Scott came to New York. Her love for Wm. B. Craig, a lawyer, had turned to hate, and murder was in her heart. Now fate had brought them into the same city—Mary Scott and Porter Charlton. On the afternoon of Aug. 3, in the wonderfully beautiful "peacock alley" of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, Mary Scott met Walter Craig.

"You will go back on me," she shouted, drawing a pitifully small, silver-plated revolver from her gown. She fired the weapon at the man; the bullet struck his fountain pen and caused only a slight injury. She was arrested, but the case was dropped.

She established herself in a small but exclusive hotel. One night in January of 1910 Porter Charlton was taken by a friend to her apartments. Their paths had met at last—he a boy just looking out on life; she a woman who had seen so much of it that the eyes of her mind and soul were tired.

He loved her from the very first night, and she loved him. To her he seemed to bring back the youth that had gone, with all its passions and its dreams.

Porter Charlton, the Self-Confessed Murderer, and the Spot (Marked With a Cross), Where the Trunk Containing Her Body Was Found.

struck her on the head. After three blows she was senseless. He thrust her body into a trunk and dragged the trunk outdoors and down to the shore of the world-famous lake. He threw it from the pier into the water.

Within three days he had taken a steamer back to the United States, full of terror, but thinking that the murder was a secret. On the very same steamer on which he rode were photographs of the scene of the murder being rushed to American newspapers, for fishermen had discovered the trunk. When Porter Charlton alighted in Hoboken, across the river from New York, detectives were waiting for him.

He was blindly faithful to his vampire. And all he could say was:

"Yes, I killed her. She was the best woman in the world to me."

VERY INDIGNANT. Mr. Brown (dictating a letter of indignation): "Sir, my stenographer, being a lady, cannot take down what I think of you as being a pure specimen of the best of men. I think it, but you, being neither, can easily guess my thought."

FISH STORIES

Fish Stories are back of the reason why many men of estimable character are as popular in a crowd as a goose-egg in the seventh inning.

Some men are born to Fish Stories. The rest have Fish Stories thrust upon them.

A fish story is like a miser's gold; the owner never gets weary recounting it.

A man may forget his early moral teachings, the important dates in history and the size of his hat, but he will never lose memory of the "musky" that got away at Lake Oochmacooch in the summer of '97.

If he does, then it is because an iron safe has dropped on his head from the third story.

Once upon a time no course in artistic Fish Story spinning was complete without a few primary lessons in practical bait casting. This idea has been abandoned as a waste of time which might better be devoted to developing the biceps of the imagination.

Mere FISHING is now left to practical, prosaic fishermen. The art of narrating a ten-round rattle with a heavyweight pike so that it listens like a Homeric epic is not in any way allied to the vulgar trade of affixing weak-kneed worms to hooks!

The professional or champion-amateur Fish Story fiend is not lacking in trophies of prowess, by which he can prove that his veracity is all-well, 28 inches in breadth and hand-stitched down the seams! Visit his charming home and you will think you are in a dry aquarium!

The first thing that lams your lamps as you enter the hall is the figure of a portly bass, reaching four feet from nose to tail, and a life-like fish against an oak board. A card beneath the fish states the date and place of capture, but Mr. Bass is undoubtedly winking the other eye—the glass ginned toward the wall paper!

Every summer, after a brief absence from his usual haunts, the Fish Story fiend returns to town with a soft-boiled complexion and a brand-new fish tale of the northern lakes. He will tell you about spinning for blue-finned salmon that roost in trees with all the sincerity of Jonah after he had given up his room-and-bath in the whale.

The Fish Story is an innocent hobby. It is cornet solo playing, but both should be harnessed to Maxim silencers and banished north of 53!

Lloyd George Vindicates The Insurance Act

A "MARVELLOUS RECORD"

"Nagging and Scowling and Scolding Critics."

Although the speech which Mr. Lloyd George addressed May 25, in St. John's Church, Cricklethorpe, was primarily in support of the King Edward Welsh Memorial for the extinction of consumption, it was essentially a considered and forcible vindication of the Insurance Act in general. The ravages of consumption were described with a picturesque vividness which must have impressed his hearers with the Memorial Association's claims to united national support from Wales, but the broader interest of the address lay in the case it presented for a scheme of national insurance against sickness, and in the evidence it offered of the successful working of the Government Act.

Starting from the principle that State and individual co-operation was essential in any attempt to deal with national health, Mr. Lloyd George pointed out the enormous labor entailed in setting the organization of the Insurance Act in motion, and emphasized the duty laid upon insurance committees of dispelling the prevailing ignorance about conditions of health and investigating the social and industrial conditions which fostered disease. While it was better to prevent than to cure disease, some attempt, he said, must be made to treat existing cases, and here he was able to present a convincing record of work already done. "They said," he remarked, referring to the critics of the Act, "that we should have no doctors, we have an army of 15,000 guarding the sick beds of our industrial homes. They said we should have no sanatoria; we have already 6,000 workmen in excellent institutions receiving the best treatment. We have scores of thousands receiving sick pay who but

HANDS SO SORE COULD NOT SLEEP

Chapped and Cracked, Could Not Put Them in Water. Skin Red and All Swollen. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured in Two Days.

Emerald, P. E. I.—"I got my hands chapped and they cracked. If I would close my hands the cracks would bleed. I could not put them in water or do hardly any work. The skin was red and my hands all swollen. They were so sore I could not sleep. I tried everything I could get in the drug store, and all kinds of ointment, and they did me no good till I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. They cured my trouble in two days. Cuticura Soap and Ointment are the best that can be made." (Signed) C. W. Murphy, Dec. 23, 1911.

ERUPTIONS COVERED FACE

415 Huntley St., Montreal, Quebec.—"My one year old son was troubled with eczema in the face. It started with redness and irritation, then it was like a pimple. Afterwards it was an open sore with water oozing out, causing itching and keeping him from sleeping at night. His face was covered with eruptions. After unsuccessful attempts with different remedies, I tried Cuticura Ointment, which I used on week and he was completely cured of eczema." (Signed) Mrs. J. N. Rawson, Nov. 15, 1911. and carrying them up the scaffolding to help the structure along, they are flinging them at the heads of the bricklayers who are engaged in the work.—(Cheers.)

Work Done in Wales.

In Wales the King Edward Memorial Fund has already supplemented the Government's grant. Sites have been purchased. There are certain buildings ready, and in two years' time provision will be complete not merely for insured persons, but for their dependents as well. (Cheers.) Meanwhile provisional arrangements have been made, and hundreds have been treated in institutions.—(Hear, hear.) But how are these institutions to be maintained, and how are the consumptives who are not sent to the institutions to be attended to? There are sufferers whom the medical officers do not recommend to be sent to institutions, but who are to be treated under the dispensary system in their own homes. There, again, the Insurance Act provides a million a year for the purpose, which makes the further provision that if the million is inadequate to provide treatment for insured persons and their dependents, then the Treasury shall pay the additional cost provided the localities bear the other half. I am delighted to be able to tell you that Welsh county has already voted out of the rates the sum which, with the amount already provided out of the Insurance fund and the Treasury grant, will be sufficient to meet the whole expense of treating those who are suffering from tuberculosis in the Principality—men, women, and children who are insured or uninsured.—(Cheers.)

If the Whigs of the United Kingdom voted money on the same basis as the Welsh counties have done, it would mean that a sufficient number of sanatoria would be built and adequate treatment would be provided for all those suffering from consumption throughout the land.—(Cheers.) It would be equivalent to an annual expenditure of over two millions for that purpose.—(Cheers.)

I am delighted to find that some of the great municipalities and councils in England are showing the same patriotic resolve to extirpate the disease within the areas under their control—Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, the West Riding of Yorkshire, and many other great councils. The same observation applies to Scotland and Ireland. There are still some lagging behind, but I am sure the admirable example set by the more enlightened councils will be followed by all.—(Hear, hear.)

"Nagging, Scowling, and Scolding."

When you consider the gigantic character of the task we had in hand, it is marvellous to me that so much has been accomplished in so short a time. Before the Insurance Act we had barely 5,000,000 of the industrial population of this country insured against sickness. You have now 14,000,000.—(Cheers.) The old societies have increased their numbers by 2½ millions. New societies have sprung up with an aggregate of 5,000,000 members. To realize what the difficulties of administration must be arising out of these facts will put in your minds do what a few violent persons would like to do in deed—abolish the Insurance Act out of existence and imagine what would happen if suddenly the population of this country had voluntarily thronged in these numbers to the offices of friendly societies and the insurance companies and had asked to be insured against sickness. You can imagine the disturbance, delays and confusion which would necessarily arise in all those offices.

I will perhaps appeal to you more in Wales if I say that supposing there had been a great religious revival in this country and suddenly three million of new members, a few of them old backsliders, who had never entered the gates of any tabernacle, had been added to the existing churches, and suppose that whilst you were engaged in reducing this great eruption into order you had hundreds of newspapers nagging and scowling and scolding and hundreds of preachers criticizing and attacking you, you could then realize the kind of undertaking we have had to go through, and henceforth when you talk of patience you need not mention Job but just say "As patient as an Insurance Commissioner."—(Laughter and cheers.)

Getting on All Right.

But in spite of all we are getting on all right with our work.—(Cheers.) We are teaching the people of this country through the medium of an Act of Parliament the great Scriptural lesson "Bear ye one another's burdens." You will find that text on every insurance card in practice, the employers helping the employed, the hale working man helping the sick, the strong man helping the feeble, and those who are neither employers nor employed helping as ratepayers and taxpayers. Despite all difficulties it is working out all right.—(Cheers.)

They say we should have no doctors. We have an army of 15,000 guarding the sick beds of our industrial homes.—(Cheers.) They said we should have no sanatoria. We have already 6,000 workmen in excellent institutions, receiving the best treatment, and judging from letters I received from them they thank God for the Insurance Act.—(Cheers.) We have scores of thousands receiving sick pay who but for the Insurance Act would be at this moment without a spare penny in the sick home. I am not in the least daunted by the difficulties nor by the opposition.—(Cheers.) Right through life I have fought both. Like their master, resist them, and they will flee from you.—(Cheers.) I never expected an Act which effected such an enormous change in the ways and methods of thousands of society officials and millions of employers and workmen to be popular at once. In Germany it took years to overcome prejudices. I believe there are in this country people who still regard tuberculosis as an old-established national institution that ought not to be attacked wantonly.—(Laughter.) In Germany those prejudices have vanished, and the beneficial effect of national insurance is acknowledged by all classes.—(Hear, hear.) Here it is gradually but surely winning its way.—(Cheers.)

I feel the weather is improving in spite of some disconcerting symptoms. We have recently been suffering from a very wet and tempestuous winter and cold spring, but when I walked out through the fair in this town the other day I noticed the farmers were not in the least dismayed by this fact. The prices were exceptionally high. They depended on the experience of the past, and they knew that in due course all would be well. They could see the grass growing in spite of the east wind and the corn sprouting. The Insurance Act had tough winter after we sowed the seed, but that is over.—(Hear, hear.) We have had even a cold spring. There was a biting blast the other day from the Eastern count, but that fact I can feel the weather has got a great deal more genial.—(Cheers.) The crop is growing. There will soon be an outburst of splendid harvest, and even those who now attempt to destroy it will then be only too glad to see that their efforts have been in vain.—(Loud cheers.)

Box His Ears

Good Advice to a Girl Prisoner

"You must not think that life is all amusement and pleasure, with no pain and no trouble. It is full of it. Go away and don't be so foolish again."

Thus said Mr. Plowden, aged 19, a housemaid, who was charged with attempting to commit suicide.

The girl, who was very distressed, and cried hysterically, was said to belong to a very respectable family. She had made the acquaintance of a young man some time previously, who had borrowed money from her, left her penniless, and then disappeared.

Mr. Plowden—"Well, that is a good job.

The girl, being without means, had been unable to dress as well as her fellow-servants, and this had finally upset her.

Could begged Mr. Plowden not to do anything to help her.

Mr. Plowden—"I haven't got him. I wish I had. To kill yourself on account of him would be absurd. You should thank your lucky stars that he was gone away, and I hope you will never see him again.

"Don't do anything to him," sobbed the girl again.

Mr. Plowden laughed and suggested that if she saw the young man again she should box his ears.

She was given into the care of her sister.

A HIGH DIVER.

Strickland Gillian, the lecturer and the man who pole vaulted into fame by his "Off Ag'in, on Ag'in, Finagin'" verses, was asked to give a lecture in a small Missouri town. He asked the chairman of the committee whether he might have a small pitcher of ice water on the platform.

"To drink?" queried the committee. "No," he answered Gillian. "I do a high diving act."

A ROUGH ROAD.

The latest joke on a western railroad, according to a traveling man, is that a passenger in the dining car had ordered ham and fried eggs for breakfast.

"Can't give 'ya eggs, fessor," the negro waiter informed him.

"Why, how's that?" said the passenger.

"Well, said the waiter, "de cook sez de road is so ruddy shabby time he tries to fry de eggs dey scramble."

WOMAN'S WORK.

"Here," began a woman known to a writer, "here's an article in the evening paper of 'Women's Work for the Feeble-minded.'"

Her husband grunted—being in a reactionary mood, and like to know," he said, "what women have ever done for the feeble-minded."

"The women carry them, dear," replied his wife, sweetly.

thrown herself into the Serpentine after a quarrel with her brother. There was much nearer the sea. Why she so-called attempts to commit suicide, he said, were nothing of the sort. The "suicide" waited until somebody was close by and then walked into the Serpentine. This woman came all the way from Liverpool to commit suicide in the Serpentine, but she could have done that in the Mersey, which was much nearer the sea. Why she should come up to London to go in this little pond in Hyde Park it was difficult to imagine.

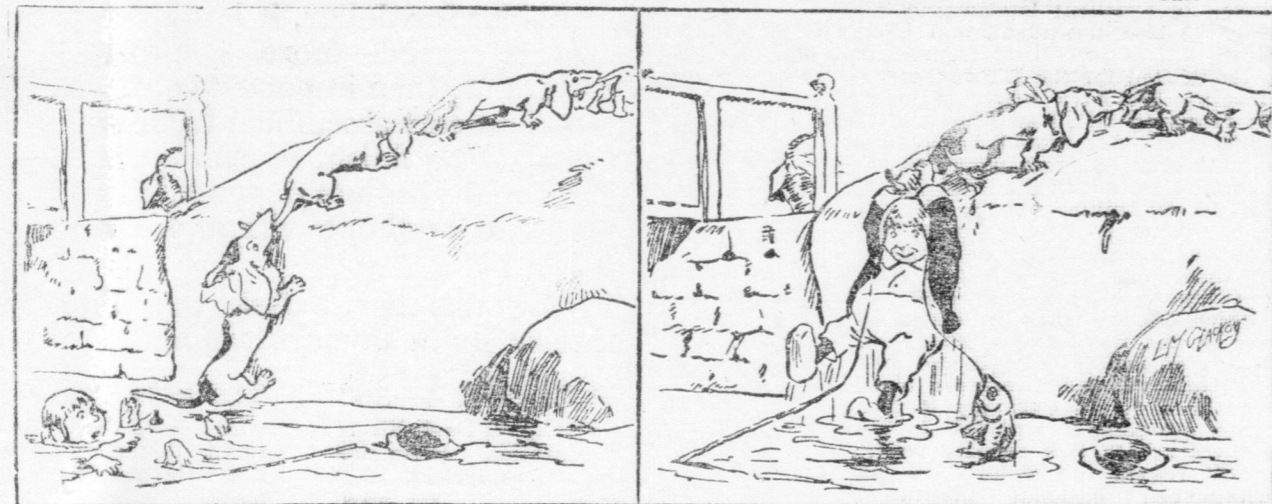

She would be bound over in the sum of £5 to come up for judgment if called upon within the next twelve months.

ADVENTURES OF HANS AND HIS CHUMS

Said Hans, "The tide is running right; Ere long, my chums, we'll get a bite."

And next he cried: "You see, Ah! But, laughing, Hans leaned back for far."

"Bow, wow! Oh, woe!" a shout came from the two old friends, bent on their accustomed visit, could discern beyond a yellow light that had suddenly shone out into the hushed gloom from an attic window the vast, accumulated thunder-clouds towering into the darkening zenith.

But Hans, a nimble-witted lad, Well understood the chance he had. And safe he said with quip and quirk: "The life line is your line of work."

THE THREE FRIENDS

[By Walter de la Mare, in the Westminster Gazette.]

The street was narrow, yet looking up, the two old friends, bent on their accustomed visit, could discern beyond a yellow light that had suddenly shone out into the hushed gloom from an attic window the vast, accumulated thunder-clouds towering into the darkening zenith.

practical—he paused with the little water jug hovering an inch or two above his friend's glass—supposing you were a practical, unromantic, creature that came along; and that's why I'm going to tell it to you, my dear."

that; oh, no. And poor innocent babes too! Mr. Sully looked over his shoulder at Mr. Eaves. "Oh, that," said his old friend, "was only Sully's fun. He says it's hell, I didn't. My dream was only after the state after death, as they call it."

Mr. Sully eyed him stonily. "Don't worry, then," he said. "Why worry? There's worry enough about without dreaming it."

When the faint but cumulative rumble of thunder that followed had subsided Miss Lacey seemed to have withdrawn her attention. Mr. Sully's aged, slightly wrinkled face and faded eyes, and his feet and fingers, which he was fidgeting with, seemed to be the only things that interested her.

"But if it's the same," said Miss Lacey, with a little frown of confusion, "what's different?" "Mark me, Eaves, my boy," said Mr. Sully softly at the door: "It's the ladies for brains, after all. That's what they call a poser. 'What's different, eh?' Mr. Eaves pondered in a profound internal silence in the bar. But beyond the windows the rain streamed steadily in a long-drawn gush of coolness and peace. What's different, eh? I might fall ill; come into some money; marry again, God bless me, I might die! But, there, that's all over; end-ness, no escape; nothing; I can't even die! I'm just myself, Miss Lacey; Sully, old friend; just myself, for ever, and ever. Nothing but me looking on at it all, if you take me—just what I've made of it. It's my—his large pale eyes roved aimlessly—'It's just what Sully says, I suppose. It's my sentence, Eh, Sully? Wasn't that it? My sentence.' He smiled courageously. 'Sentence, oh no! Sentence? you?' cried Miss Lacey incredulously. 'How could you, Mr. Sully? Sentence! Whatever for, sir?'"

Could Not Sleep Well For Four Years.

HEART AND NERVES WERE BAD.

To the thousands of people who toss on a sleepless pillow night after night, or who pace the bedroom floor with nerves unbinged, heart action wrong, and to whose eye sleep will not come, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills offer the blessing of sound, refreshing slumber.

They restore the equilibrium of the deranged nerve centres and correct the wrong action of the heart. Mrs. Wm. Douglas, Thessalon, Ont., writes:—"I am going to send you my testimonial for what your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills did for me. For four years I could not sleep well at night, as my heart and nerves were so bad. I tried all the doctors here, but none of them helped me. I read of your Heart and Nerve Pills, and tried only a few boxes, and I can certainly say they did me a great amount of good. I can now sleep as well as ever, and can advise anyone who suffers from heart trouble to try them."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 60 cents a box; 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Mr. Sully gazed roundly. "Did he though? But there you see," and he leaned in great confidence over the counter. Mr. Eaves' here doesn't shave! Mr. Eaves smiled vaguely, half-lifting his stick, as if in quietest acknowledgment of his friend's jest. "No, no, old friend," he said; "not that, I hope."

"Oh, fast; bless you," said Miss Lacey. "I always let him have it out." "He'll break his neck some day," remarked Mr. Sully tersely, "jerk!" "You see, my dear," said the old gentleman trustfully, "don't mind my old friend Sully making a good deal of fun at my expense. He always has, eh, Sully? But he doesn't see. You don't see, Sully. There the thing is; and truth all over it, Facts are facts, sir, the world over."

turned on him. He fixed his eyes on the clock. "I've never done no harm, Mr. Eaves," cried Miss Lacey, almost as if in entreaty. "You see," said the old gentleman, glancing over his shoulder, "it isn't what you do; so I seem to take it." Mr. Sully half-turned from the door, as if to listen. "It's what you are," said Mr. Eaves, as if to himself. "Why, according to you," said Miss Lacey, in generous indignation, "who's safe?"

A day of close, warm weather followed the storm. But it was on the evening of the next day after that, an evening of limpid sunshine and peace, with sparrows chirping shrilly in the narrow lights and shadows of the lane, that Mr. Sully came in to see Miss Lacey. She was alone, and singing a little quiet tune to herself, as she went about her business. He shook his head when she held up two glasses.

"He's dead," he said. "This morning Miss Lacey. He says it's hell, I didn't. My dream was only after the state after death, as they call it." "I see," said Miss Lacey lucidly, summoning all her intelligence into her face. Mr. Eaves leaned forward, and all but whispered his curious tidings into her ear. "It's—it's just the same," he said.

"The state after death," called Mr. Sully, still peering into the gloom—drawing back, and looking out of his long, grey, meaningless face at the little, plump, bright, satiny woman. "Hell!" breathed Miss Lacey. "How to Lay Out the Capital." "I have an introduction to a real estate man who has grown up with Victoria and knows the island from end to end. I tell him that I can buy a hundred acres of land for $250 an acre, and no more, and that my business is to supply the demand for food supply in the most promising locality in the island. Two acres of my own, I reserve for my shack and its concealing garden, my poultry and pig houses and cow-shed and runs. The remaining three acres I hire a man and team to break and put in shape for crops at $5 an acre; I sow a half-acre of potatoes, sow rhubarb, lettuce, cabbage, carrots, onions, parsley, etc. If I am a Swanley, Studley, or Arlesly student, I reserve for my acre, I persuade to help me in the fruit and vegetable line, and if I am an Arlesly student I shall know exactly how to market in a businesslike manner for ready cash. I shall make a desperate endeavor, never though I nearly break my back in digging deep the new-turned earth to grow sufficient potatoes to enable me to sow to two acres in my second year. Whether you start to make your $5,000 in five, or fifty, or a hundred acres, secure your immediate revenue with a cow, and build your sum of independence on the firm foundation of pigs and potatoes.

The Live Stock. "With $125 and I shall buy a cow, and, if possible, a mother sow with eight small pigs, and with the remaining dollars purchase hens. I shall have to feed the cow and the pig and chickens; but for my milk, without any labor but milking and a little stable cleaning, I shall get ten cents a quart, and with my experience of milch cows on the prairies she will yield me at least twelve quarts a day; that will mean a revenue of at least $7 a week, leaving me sufficient milk for my own use and my butter and milk food, so that I put aside $25 from my capital for the butcher's fee, and that may probably occur between that and my barley chop must be filled from revenue.

THE BIBLE SAYS:— HE HAD 'EM ON. A certain representative of Georgia says that when he was judge of his county court a fellow was before him charged with having stolen a pair of pantaloons in Georgia. There were several witnesses, but the evidence was rather meagre and the accused was acquitted. He was told that he could go, but he remained in his seat. His lawyer, to whose successful defence he owed his liberty, hinted to the judge that he was free to depart, but he didn't budge. "I don't want to go," said the fellow. "And why?" asked the lawyer. "Let the witnesses go first." "Why, sir, I've got on the 'britches' I stole."

I have $500 left for my buildings, plant and farm. My stock is to cost $100, my lumber and labor; to my buildings and plant, seed, tools I allot the other hundred, learning to work by doing, and to live by doing without, I supply myself with a bag of flour and tea and sugar, and for the rest I look to eggs and milk and their fair exchange. In the autumn I shall kill my six pigs, reserving two for spring pork, and I sell my six pigs to the butcher I shall expect to get eight or nine dollars a hundred dead weight, and I expect my pigs in November to weigh 150 pounds, so I shall draw from seventy to eighty dollars cash, but if I pay the local butcher a dollar a pig for killing and cutting up, and sell the meat fresh or pickled I shall make at least double the sum minus the butcher's fee of $8. But in any case, I shall arrive at the opening of my second year fully prepared to demonstrate my belief in pigs and potatoes, and out of the food of the prairie I shall produce the highest margin of net profit; and from the compass of commercial instinct I shall build up my $5,000 in twenty years.

Really, I believe they both think absolutely alike. "Charming people, charming people," said hubby. "But about the thinking, Gladys, if you will notice she generally thinks first." Turkish soldiers, says Mr. A. J. B. Wavell, an English traveller, play a curious game, in which the players squat in a circle facing towards the centre, while one of their number, armed with a "rope's end," leaves his place and walks around outside till, choosing a victim, he hits him as hard as he can across the back. He then throws down the rope and runs once around the entire circle, trying to reach his place before his comrade, who picks up the rope and follows hotfoot can catch him; if he is not caught, the victim seeks satisfaction elsewhere. The game proceeds great merriment.

CONDITION OF EGYPT

Lord Kitchener's Report—Signs of More Confidence in the Government.

[Manchester Guardian.] The reports of Lord Kitchener, the British Agent and Consul General on the finances and condition of Egypt were issued as a white paper last month. On the political situation he says: "There has been a marked diminution of party feeling and party strife, and I notice indications of greater confidence in the Government, particularly among the silent mass of the people. I do not see any reason to be optimistic in considering these to be signs that in the near future the population will be again closely united, and while placing personal interests aside, will endeavor to work loyally for the common good and further the real interests of their country. In the meantime, I trust it is fully realized that the Governments are doing all in their power to improve the condition of the people and help them forward on sound lines, both as regards their material and political progress. Commenting on the war in the near east, Lord Kitchener says that in consequence the year was one of considerable anxiety for Egypt. Speaking of the disastrous results for the Turkish Empire, he says: "Defective military arrangements appear to be responsible for this breakdown of one of the finest fighting armies that existed in the world. There is only a brief reference to what Lord Kitchener terms the "misguided action of a few fanatical persons, influenced by the example of Warden and imitating his methods joined in a conspiracy to assassinate prominent officials." He proceeds: "The plot which, if successful, could only have done great harm and thrown back the progress of Egypt for many years, was discovered in time." This plot was followed by the attempted

THE SECRET OF GOOD HEALTH

Keep the Blood Rich and Pure With Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

The condition of the blood makes all the difference between health and sickness. Impure blood makes healthy nerves and muscles never go together. If the blood is thin every part of the body becomes weak. The stomach fails in strength and the appetite becomes poor. The body to the not obtain enough nourishment from the food, and soon the nerves begin to complain and the person becomes irritable, despondent, worn out and nervous. For a time there may be no actual sickness, only a rundown, weak condition, but there is no defence against disease and from such a condition spring disorders such as anemia, rheumatism, indigestion, and even paralysis itself. People with impure, thin blood should take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Every dose helps to make new, rich blood, and new blood means health and strength. They stop the progress of disease, and red cheeks, good appetite, new strength, declare the general improvement in the health. Here is an example, Miss Helen Maude McQuade, Harris, Ont., says: "I feel it my duty to add my voice to the many now recommending Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. For years I was a sufferer from backaches, rheumatism and nervousness. I was so bad at times that I was confined to my bed. I felt sleepy and heavy after my meals, and had flashes of light before my eyes, and a difficulty in collecting my thoughts. After using several remedies without benefit, I began using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and used ten or twelve boxes in all. They gave me the best health I have enjoyed for years, and I have not since had the least return of the trouble. You can get these Pills from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

fellow by means of the Five Feddan law was rendered necessary by the action of the small foreign users throughout the country. The fellow, he hopes, will acquire habits of thrift, but it will no doubt take a long time to change the habits of centuries. Another reform which is referred to is the Cantonal Justice law, which establishes notables as unpaid magistrates in small areas of a few villages only.

Irrigation and Roads. Lord Kitchener deals at length with the steps taken to provide a proper scheme of irrigation and the distribution of an increased volume of storage water, which will in due course become available, and the general conclusions at which he has arrived are: (1) That the necessary supply of irrigation water for the present greatly extended area of cultivation is assured. (2) That sufficient water for all probable extension in the delta during the next fifteen years is also assured, except in the event of a low summer river. (3) That as it is advisable to allow some extension of irrigation in Upper Egypt, in order to meet the demands for water for extended cultivation in the delta in years of low supply, fresh works will be necessary to increase the quantity available for distribution.

Cotton Spinners' Visit. Dealing with cotton matters, Lord Kitchener says that the supply of water during the year was, with very careful distribution, only just sufficient for the summer crops. In some places the cotton may have suffered slightly from want of water, but generally the crop was a good one, and the amount of seed, 500,000 cantars, is a satisfactory yield, only equalled by the crop of 1910. Cotton-worm appeared freely in the early part of the season, but the activity of the Government in issuing circulars of advice and the energetic conduct of the campaign against the pest prevented it from causing any great damage to the crop. The people worked with very much more heartiness than in any previous year, with excellent results.

The visit of delegates of the International Federation of Cotton Spinners and Manufacturers' Association, under the leadership of Sir Charles Macara, had an excellent effect in calling the attention of cultivators and merchants to the importance of the article required by the supply, both as regards quality and quantity. The closest attention is being paid to the improvement of the variety of cotton seed, but it is a long process, requiring great care and patience. The advice of the expert spinners who form part of the delegation was of very great value in this respect.

In my last report I mentioned the introduction of seditions proclamations from abroad. The latter affair, in his opinion, acquired a perhaps undeserved notoriety from the fact that a prominent Nationalist, Sheikh Shawish, was accused of complicity in it, but acquitted. Dependence on Cotton. Proceeding to deal with the economic conditions of the country, Lord Kitchener says: Egypt, as an agricultural country with no industries of importance, depends on the export of one staple product, cotton, for her imports of manufactures, of fuel, and of a portion of her foodstuffs, as well as for the service of her foreign debt. Her banking system is linked up with foreign money markets, and her currency is furnished by the import or export of gold coin according to the variations in the demand for circulation. Equable conditions, a perennial water supply, and the extraordinary fertility of the soil combine to insure regular and abundant crops. A well-ordered Government and freedom from political disturbances enable the industrious population to pursue their vocation in peace and security, untrammelled by the burden of military and naval expenditure which weighs so heavily on the finances of other countries. While, however, this serves to bring out the exceptionally favorable position in which the country stands, it reveals, on analysis, certain defects which Lord Kitchener illustrates by a short retrospect of the economic phases through which Egypt has passed in the course of the last thirty years.

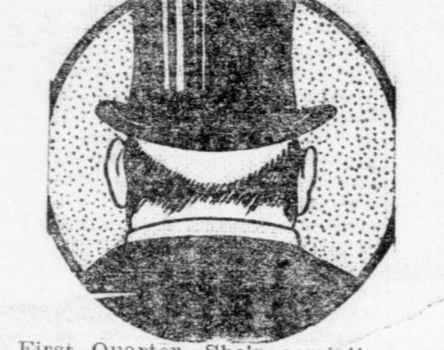

He points out that it was not until the close of the last century that prices relating to the cotton crop began to show the definite upward tendency, which in the course of some half a dozen years doubled the value of the exports, and thus enabled the country to reap in a short space of time the full benefit of the improvements that had been patiently carried out for so many previous years. "It was perhaps inevitable that the sudden accession of wealth, instead of being employed to reduce indebtedness or to strengthen local capital, should have stimulated expenditure, promoted speculation in land and stocks, and resulted in an increase of private indebtedness to foreign creditors." He emphasizes the fact that the level of prosperity which the country has now reached reposes in a very considerable measure on the maintenance of the price of cotton which has prevailed during the past few years. There is, happily, he says, little reason to fear that this price may fall in the near future to the level of fifteen years ago, but were it to show a heavy decline the consequent reaction intensified by the strain of the extra liabilities incurred on the strength of the temporary prosperity would be extremely severe.

Government's Reforms. If the Government be reproached with its failure to reduce the public debt in the course of the last 30 years, he adds, it may be replied that the economic regeneration of the country has been meanwhile secured by national expenditure of a capital nature, which, although it has not had that result, might well have justified an increase in the public debt. In this connection it is pointed out that some £30,000,000 have been spent on public works and railways out of the resources of the country without recourse to foreign capital. Whilst the Government is stated to be thoroughly alive to the expediency of developing the resources of the country in other directions, the traditional policy of agricultural development by necessary drainage works and the regulation of the Nile water supply is being continued. COFFEE

By the Author of Collections and Recollections, [G. W. E. Russell in Manchester Guardian.] Humanity may be divided into endless sections, according to the taste and fancy of the divider. The place where the line is drawn is always arbitrary and seldom accurate. Thus we may say, with Coleridge, that every man is a Platonist or an Aristotelian; or (with more modern critics) that he is a Wordworthian or a Byronian; a lover of Dickens or a lover of Thackeray. Or we may draw the line between critical and constructive minds; between the literary and the scientific temper; between the worshippers of freedom and the slaves of authority; or, again, more broadly, between the rich and the poor, the educated and the uneducated; even between the old and the young. But, after all these divisions, there are only two sorts of people—men and women—and that between other classes the dividing line is hazy and uncertain. Even George Grotz, the chief banker of Aristotelianism, could quote Plato when Plato served his purpose. Matthew Arnold had no sooner compiled his book of extracts from Wordsworth than he longed to perform the same duty for Byron.

With regard to Dickens and Thackeray, Andrew Lang invented a new beetle, "Happy are they who can divide the lessons in both churches." A division quite as valid as any of those which I have instanced, may be established between Tea-drinkers and Coffee-drinkers. In the main, I belong to the latter section, proud in the company of Johnson, and Cowper, and Gladstone; and yet I have enough sympathy with the second to recognize a friendly voice in the following letter:

"I and my friends have become habitual coffee-consumers, and from 1:30 to 2 p.m. daily drink it and talk it. To miss it now is a misery. On market day, within 200 yards of Exchange, I read the lessons in both churches. Manchester Athenaeum has 2,250 members, and nothing stronger than coffee is drunk. We have no alcoholic license, nor have we had since it was built in notes on coffee. A request of this kind always sends me back to my learned friend, Dr. Dryasdust, to whom the author of "Waverley" was so often indebted; and from him I learn that the use of coffee as a beverage may be traced to the Persians. From Arabia it passed into Egypt and Syria, and thence to Constantinople. Robert Burton says, in the "Anatomy of Melancholy," published in 1621: "The Turks have a drink called coffa, so named of a berry as black as soot, and as bitter, which they sup as warm as they can suffer. They spend much time in those coffahouses, which are somewhat like our alehouse or taverns, and there they sit chatting and drinking to drive away the time, and to be merry together, because they find by experience that kind of drink so used helpeth digestion and procureth alacrity." From Constantinople coffee made its way to France; and in 1641 was brought to England by "Mr. Nathaniel Wotton, an Englishman, who was in the coffee-house in London. The first coffee-house in London was opened in 1652, and before long similar establishments sprang up in all directions. The word "coffee-house" is encircled by a cloud of literary glory. It was at Button's coffee-house that a letter-box, shaped like a lion's head, received into its capacious mouth the essays which went to form the immortal "Spectator," Will's coffee-house, and Child's, and White's, the "Grosvenor," the "St. James," and the "Cocoa Tree"; were the social centres, where Addison and Steele and all their bright associates gathered the material which they used so well. And get the very quality which secured for the coffee-house its permanent place in literary history gave a handle to its detractors. The coffee-house was a place of idle gossip at which stern people looked askance. William Law draws in "Succus" the portrait of an idle and rather set

I have had all I'm same roof with two semi-nutty women and requiring a rake every morning to get the odd piece of ruff out of my clothes. I shall never again sit at my meal hearing the rattle and whirr of that lot of plated, ruffed, cut-bias, flounced. The day that woman comes I'll make your decision now. A Merry-Go-Round in Every Yard

It Is Easy to make, and Is Insurance Against the Kiddies Straying Out Onto the Streets.

There isn't anything like a merry-go-round to amuse the kiddies in the summer and the house that has one in its front lawn is the haven for all the youngsters in the neighborhood. Most merry-go-rounds are expensive affairs and the average citizen cannot afford to install one in his household. They are great things to keep the children off the streets and out of...

Mr. St. Loe Strachey

A Character Study, by A. G. G.

[London News and Leader.]

If you turn out of the Strand into Wellington street you can hardly fail to notice a certain house which is painted white, but the white of this house is more white than the whiteness of any other house. It is like a house dressed in a white suit. A house that stands in conscious rebuke of a naughty world, wearing the white point of a bimblee life. The impression will be deepened when you read the legend inscribed in modest characters across the front. "The Spectator" and realize that over this threshold Mr. St. Loe Strachey must pass daily, and the contemplation of the wickedness and folly of men.

That contemplation is lightened by one thought—the thought of his own rightness. That thought enables him to bear with fortitude the burden that destiny has cast upon him. The world is very evil. Radicals and Socialists and other strange breeds without the law encompass him on every side. The hosts of Midian howl and howl around. Providence in its inscrutable purposes has permitted these strange weeds to grow in the garden. He is puzzled by their presence. He cannot doubt the wisdom of Providence; but he shares the respectful perplexity of the little girl who, troubled by the depredations of wire-worms in the garden asked me the other day: "Why does God make wire-worms? I found it difficult to give a plain answer, but that plain answer. Even the Encyclopaedia Britannica evaded the point. And I doubt whether the same authority will explain to Mr. Strachey the purpose of Providence in making Radicals, Socialists and the like. Perhaps "Portia" would make him; let him pass for a man; "may help him; but it is not an explanation; it is only an excuse.

In this perplexity, however, Mr. Strachey is sustained by the sense of his own unflinching rightness. "Every right-thinking man" is the keynote of The Spectator, and when one speaks of The Spectator, one speaks of Mr. Strachey, for he is the right-thinking man in every line of that organ. He appeals to "the right-thinking man" with a firm assurance that the right-thinking man is with him. Indeed, he must be with him. How can he be right-thinking? And, "the right-thinking man" will have his reward in a blessing of pontifical solemnity. If he has written a letter to "The Spectator" charged with right-thinking his heart will leap with joy on finding appended to it one of those editorial footnotes which are an unending delight—footnotes which persuade with right-thinking footnotes which with portentous gravity, call the universe to witness the unity of the truths which the right-thinking man shares. He shares with the right-thinking editor. But if the correspondent, being perhaps a poor, uncertain wanderer in this quite intelligible world, writes a letter hinting doubts about things as they are, then terrible is the flaming sword that is turned upon his heresies. "No sensible person, we are sure, will agree..." "Or—"We are confident that we express the view of every right-thinking person..." And as the poor, uncertain wanderer turns away, one sees with the mind's eye the right-thinking reader of The Spectator raising his head in thankfulness that he is not as other men are, and that he has had the privilege of making Mr. Strachey his guide, philosopher and friend.

danger of the horses and automobiles, and for this reason, perhaps the investment would pay for itself. It is not necessary to spend a lot of money for a merry-go-round that is at once a safe thing for the children to play with and a safety device in that it keeps them at home. A piece of 6x6 lumber twelve feet long forms the centre post. Six or eight three-quarter inch in diameter in each end of this post so that about two inches of the bolt protrudes from each end. Short pieces of cables that are 3/8 foot long and two feet from the end that is to be the bottom. These are to form the hub for the spokes that are to hold the platform. The platform is made from twelve pieces of 2x4 material 12 feet long. The centre pole is set in a heavy block of wood that has been sunk in the ground and is bolted to the end of the iron bolt. A washer of iron the diameter of the pole should be placed on this block so that the wood of the pole will not bear on the wood block. On top of the pole there should be placed an iron wheel or another heavy washer of iron, and from this should be run at least six heavy guy-wires or cables that are 3/8 foot long and fastened securely to stout stakes driven in the ground. Twelve hooks are placed at equal distances above the centre pole about one foot from the top and heavy wires or cables are run from each of these hooks to each of the spokes and fastened to the spokes about two feet from the outer end. The platform should be placed on an iron wheel or another heavy washer of iron, and from this should be run at least six heavy guy-wires or cables that are 3/8 foot long and fastened securely to stout stakes driven in the ground.

editor to blast the reputation of any man he chose on authority which could not be disclosed and indeed which need not exist at all. It was not because he did not know the falsity of the position. He knew as Mr. Massie knew, as well as every editor knows, that you have no right to destroy a man on evidence which you cannot produce. But what was such a consideration worth? The platform afforded an opportunity to strike a blow at the Government? For the "moral waxworks" of Mr. Strachey only furnish a disguise for a very ordinary and a rather acrid politician. His moral force, however, coincides with his political purposes, and play the part of lackey to them. What those political purposes are needs little explanation. He is the arch-enemy of social reform legislation.

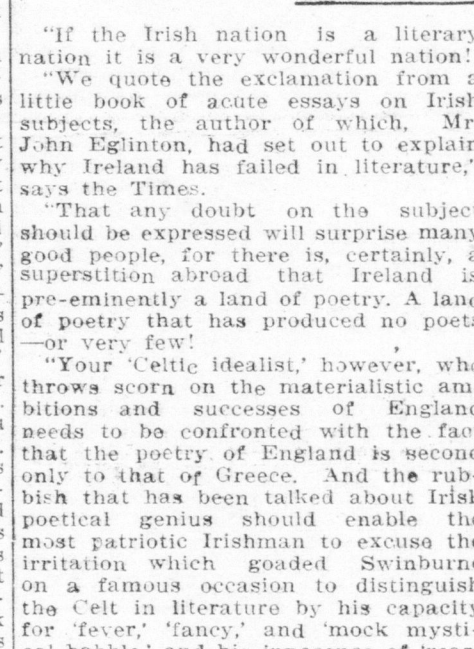

The Irish Literary Spirit

"If the Irish nation is a literary nation it is a literary nation," says the author of a little book of acute essays on Irish subjects, the author of which, Mr. John Eglington, had set out to explain why Ireland has failed in literature, says the Times. "That any doubt on the subject should be expressed will surprise many good people, for there is, certainly, a superstition abroad that Ireland is pre-eminently a land of poetry. A land of poetry that has produced no poets—or very few!" "Your 'Celtic idealist,' however, who throws scorn on the materialistic ambition of the poet, and who is in need to be confronted with the fact that the poetry of England is second only to that of Greece. And the rubbish that has been talked about Irish poetic genius and the balance of the most patriotic Irishman to excuse the irritation which goaded Swinburne on a famous occasion to distinguish the Celt in literature by his capacity for 'fancy,' 'fancy,' and 'mystical babble,' and his incapacity for 'reason,' 'imagination,' and 'serious workmanship.' Renan and Irish Literature. "Renan found in primitive Irish literature these Celtic characteristics: (Poetry of the Celtic Races)—a realistic naturalism, a love of nature for herself, a vivid feeling for her magic commingled with the melancholy of a man knows when he is face to face with her, and thinks he hears her and communing with him about his origin and his destiny." The decided leaning of the Celtic race towards the ideal, its sadness, its fidelity, its good faith caused it to be regarded by its neighbors as dull, foolish and superstitious. They could not understand its delicacy and refined manner of feeling. Poor Ireland with her ancient mythology, with her Fairyland of St. Patrick, and her fantastic travels of St. Brendan, was not destined to find grace in the eyes of English Puritanism. One ought to observe the disdain of English critics for these fables. Matthew Arnold and Celtic Literature. "Matthew Arnold's views on Celtic literature ('The Study of Celtic Literature') are equally familiar; the English critic agrees with Eglington that the history of the Celtic imagination is 'one long lament, it still recalls its exiles, its flights across the seas.' The Celtic passion for nature, he adds, is due more to a sense of her mystery than to her beauty. The Celtic is the famous phrase about Celtic imagination and melancholy being alike 'a passionate, turbulent, indomitable reaction against the despotism of fact.'

responsible journalists—it is clearly not and here we are sure we speak for all asking too much to expect cabinet ministers to adopt a similar way of looking at investments. And here, though perhaps it may open us to the accusation of unctuous recitivism, we wish to say a word in season about oil. "Unctuous recitivism." "A word in season about oil." How reminiscent it all seems, Mr. Strachey himself is conscious of the reminiscence, for with perfectly shattering naïveté he proceeds to anticipate that Mr. Strachey to unique a controversialist and abject Pecksniffian cant." But even that terror shall be faced, "We will indeed supply our critics," he says, "with a quotation from Mr. Pecksniff which will be equally apposite, but which they will probably miss if we do not recommend it to their notice. 'Do not repine my friends; do not weep for me, it is chronic.'"

Such candor disarms criticism. When a man proclaims in print that he reminds himself of nothing so much as Mr. Pecksniff, what is there to be said? It follows perhaps naturally that the thing that most annoys Mr. Strachey to indignation is hypocrisy. He cannot "abide" it, any more than the bear in "She Stoops to Conquer," which would only dance to "the gentlest of tunes," "abide" any music that was "not his." He always has the whip hand on you, for, like Johnson, if he fails to shoot you with his pistol, he knocks you down with the butt end. If, that is, he fails to prove that your intentions are wrong he falls back on his second line of attack and shows that your character and conduct are not what they ought to be and that you belong to an "organized hypocrisy." "When I have said 'Malaga,' said Planchet, 'I am no longer a man.' When Mr. Strachey has pronounced you to be an "organized hypocrite" your views no longer count. You are politically dead. It is a simple way of getting rid of opposition. With all this censoriousness, Mr. Strachey combines a carefully-studied air of moderation and sweet reasonableness. He can brand a whole party as "coating hypocrites" and still preserve a touching faith in his own freedom from extravagance of view or violence of statement. His self-respect is invulnerable, his eschatology without a stain. He can prove at inordinate length that everything he has done has been quite refined and gentlemanly. When the National Review and the rest were exploiting Mr. W. R. Lawson's romantic fancies about Marconi, Mr. Strachey gave the exposures a dignified welcome in his columns. When Mr. Lawson in the witness-box withdrew, practically every serious statement he had made, Mr. Strachey explained how careful he had been to take no responsibility for Mr. Lawson's statements. He had only printed them. One gathered that his behavior, in fact, had been as usual that of a perfect gentleman. And again when Mr. Massie, sheltering himself behind the plea of editorial confidence, refused to divulge the source of rumors, Mr. Strachey, in a few lines, eloquently and tactfully defended him. He justified a plea which, if admitted, would enable an

YOUR MOTHER AND GRANDMOTHER SWUNG IN ONE OF THESE OLD-FASHIONED BARREL STAVE HAMMOCKS.

How about the hammock for the lawn? Want to know how to make the most durable and safest hammock in the world that will give the service of the $5 sort and will cost not more than a few minutes' labor and a dime or two? Get a couple of old barrels that have stout staves. Sugar barrels are the best. Cut a notch on each side of each end of the stave, just where the groove in them comes. Then get some bale wire or good, strong, insulated wire. You'll want two perfect pieces for each side. Rope will do if you can't get the wire, and a common clothes line will serve the purpose. The objection to using rope is that if the hammock is exposed to rain very much it means that every season it will have to be remade. The materials all at hand, fasten your wire or rope together in two lengths so that each length will consist of two pieces. And this fastening wants to be done securely. Take your first barrel stave and slip it between the pieces of rope in each strand so that the rope will fit in the notches you have made at each end. Then give the rope a twist and put in another stave, the twist bringing the top rope on the bottom and the bot-

Old-age pensions, insurance, small holdings, minimum wage, housing—what has the state to do with these things? The business of the state is to leave all this to voluntary action and to concentrate on "A New Way of Life." Now the new way of life set forth in Mr. Strachey's book of that title is—conspiration, or, as he prefers to call it, National Service. In a word, all he asks of the state is that it shall teach every boy to use a gun and obey a drill sergeant. He has two ideas in this. On the one side he thinks of Germany. For years past, the "Spectator" has, next to the National Review, been the most persistent preacher of anti-German sentiment in the country. On the other hand, he shares, one feels, the common view of his type that the answer to democracy is militarism. It is a conspiracy which keeps the Russian despotism in being; it is a conspiracy which maintains the antiquated constitution of Germany; it is a conspiracy to which we must give our assent in order to suppress the insolence of the British workman. Mr. Strachey, in short, is of the school of Sir Frederick Banbury, with the exception that, having some economic knowledge, he happens to be a free trader.

But while his curiously unsympathetic and unimaginative mind makes him merely a geological curiosity of politics, he has a considerable influence in a certain section of society. He has got the measure of that comfortable and undisturbed and still in possession of a conscience—the sort of person, who, as Tolstol said, will do everything for the poor except get off their backs. These people are terrified at the idea of "land taxes," housing old age pensions and similar revolutionary measures. But they do want to feel that something is being done for the poor. It need not be anything that will be of any use; but it must be something that will be an anodyne to the troubled conscience. It must not be a minimum wage for the sweated worker, but it may be a consumers' league; it must not be a housing scheme financed by the state, but it may be a nice model exhibition, where land-owners can get hints that they don't want; it must not be old-age pensions from the benevolent; it must not be justice, but it may be charity. Of all this class Mr. Strachey is the prophet. He supplies their double need—a sense of duty against the perils of change and an easy conscience about their duty to society. I think there is deep significance in the decoration of a house-front. A. G. G.

The Celtic Renaissance

"We may now understand why the movement from which recent Anglo-Irish poetry has sprung is styled the Celtic Renaissance. And indeed, if there be anything in the argument from race, this movement has been confirmed in a remarkable way by the discovery of a remarkable group of Celtic races should have reappeared in the work of living Irishmen who write in English. It will also be allowed that there has been something deliberate in the attempt to recapture the Gaelic spirit. Mr. W. B. Yeats, writing many years ago ('The Celtic Element in Literature'), suggested that his fellow-workers and himself might get helpful guidance in the arguments of Renan and Arnold. But for his own part Mr. Yeats appears to find that a thirst for unbounded emotion and a wild melancholy, 'the revolt against the despotism of fact,' and those other things of which Renan and Arnold spoke are not merely characteristic of primitive Celtic literature, but characteristic of all folk literature and of all literature that keeps the folk traditions and all ancient peoples, he says, delight in tales that end in death and parting, as modern people delight in tales that end in marriage bells. Ireland's Folk-Imagination. "The Celtic movement, as Mr. Yeats then understood it, and perhaps still understands it, was but an opening of the fountain of Gaelic legend, a fountain not less abundant than that of Scandinavian tradition or of Arthurian romance. It would follow then that the note of revolt against fact in Gaelic literature, or in the modern 'Irish literary spirit' is not due to race, still less to the political misfortunes of Ireland, but lack of education, absence of the printed book, unsettled conditions have helped through the centuries to preserve in Ireland the folk-imagination and the old way of looking at things. The Bible. "To many this will seem to be a mere reaction, a philosophy of Irish literary history; and to react in it in its entirety is certainly not to convict oneself of an excess of English Puritanism. Did not Renan himself advise the Celtic race to 'harden

NO-RIM-CUT TIRES--10% OVERSIZE

Get strength as well as toughness by Curing under Air-pressure

WHEN a No-Rim-Cut Tire goes into service on a car it meets with no new strains. The air pressure and the weight of the car cannot find a weak spot in a Goodyear Tire. From first to last strength is built into the tire. And, finally, the curing process puts every inch of the tire to a harder test than it will ever meet in service.

Built to Avoid Ruin Built to Avoid Weak Spots The first step was to design a mile-age-saving tire. We invented the un-stretchable base of 126 braided wires and made the No-Rim-Cut Tire possible. This saved the ruin of Rim-cutting—a tremendous item. It also did away with overloading, because this tire was on the average 10 per cent. larger than Clincher tires of the same rated size—a saving that added 25 per cent. to mileage. Then we did away with the uncertainty of hand-building by inventing the Goodyear Tire-Building Machine. This machine gives every inch of the tire equal strength. Every layer of fabric is laid on under the same tension. No flaws, no weak spots, can possibly occur in the fabric foundation of Goodyear Tires.

Cured on an Air Bag

The final test and the final strengthening come from the Goodyear curing process, which, we believe, is exclusive with us. Goodyear tires are cured while inflated on a rim. Internal air pressure on the fabric casing stretches the fabric to the exact form it will take in actual use. Cotton wrappings allow for the natural expansion of the tire during the cure. Now note what happens. While the fabric is stretched to the limit the rubber sets and is cured at normal. This means that when you inflate a No-Rim-Cut Tire the rubber is not stretched. It is as full of life as tough normal rubber can be. Is it any wonder that Goodyear Tires have extra resiliency? And this process gives Goodyear Tires a known strength. You never heard of a Goodyear Tire "blowing out" except from external injury. This is because the expansion of the air bag during the cure tests the fabric and shapes the tire so as to distribute the strain equally over the whole tire. Curing under air pressure is an expensive process. But it makes doubly sure that our machine-made carcass will have uniform strength. It also assures the right toughness to the thick tread of the tire without overcuring the thin side walls.

itself to an entrance into the world, to subject its rich and profound nature to the conditions of modern thought? Literature in Ireland, says the critic quoted in the opening sentence of this article, never took the great questions of life and death into its own hands; the people, in the person of any great reformer or poet, never claimed the right to think. One must assuredly take account of Ireland's rejection of the Reformation. The literary qualities of the Bible have not moulded the Irish mind and Ireland's literature has never been 'serious' in the deepest sense, because it has never interested itself in religion, or been affected by the great movements of European thought. Irish Character and Irish Literature. "A Scotus Erigena, a Bishop Berkeley, are Ireland's notable contributions to philosophy; great names in a list that is lamentably short. There have arisen, again in Irish literary history, certain figures that stand out by sheer force of personality. A Swift, a John Mitchell, have very completely expressed themselves with results that must surprise those who attribute softness and sentimentality to the Irish character. The paradox of the warm-hearted, imaginative Englishman and the cold-blooded, fact-seeing Irishman has perhaps been done to death in recent years; but Larry Doyle in 'John Bull's Other Island,' is nearer the Irish type than one of Bouicault's romantic heroes. Mr. Bernard Shaw has illustrated the contrast between Irish and English by Moore and Mr. Kipling: 'The Englishman is wholly at the mercy of his imagination, having no sense of reality to check it; the Irishman, with a far subtler and more fastidious imagination, has one eye always on things as they are.' OFFER REFUSED. "Now," said the warden to the forger who had just arrived at the prison, "we'll set you to work. What can you do best?" "Well, if you'll give me a weak's practice on your signature I'll sign your official papers for you," said the prisoner. But there were reasons why the warden refused to do this. DON'T BE ALARMED. An old German farmer entered the office of a wholesale druggist at one morning and addressed the proprietor: "Mister Becker, I haf der schmall-pox—" "Merciful heavens, Mr. Jacobs!" exclaimed Becker, as the office force scrambled over each other in their hurry to get out, "don't come any nearer." "You're the madder mit you fellows, any-how," quietly replied Jacobs. "I said haf der schmall-pox of butter out in mine wagon, vot der Mrs. Becker ordered las week already."

A HINT. Mr. Spriggins (gently): "My dear, a man was shot at by a burglar, and his life was saved by a button which the burglar struck." Mr. Spriggins: "Well, what of it?" Mr. Spriggins: "Nothing only the button must have been on." A HER PATIENT. The nurse on duty in a hospital was giving the little ones their last meal for the day. All save one were patiently awaiting their turn to be served, the one in question being a rosy-cheeked, contented who was justly calling for her portion. The nurse was an English girl who had not yet become quite sure of her aspirations. "Haren't you a little hippinnet, Florence?" inquired the nurse, with just a tone of correction in her voice. "No, I'm not," returned Florence, promptly. "I'm a little her patient!" HAD TO THINK. People in a Missouri town are telling this little story on a lawyer there. It happened in Judge Tedford's court, and the witness was a negro woman, whose reply to every question was "I think so." Finally the opposing lawyer rose and pounded on the desk. "Now, look here," he roared, "you cut that thinking business and answer my questions, now, or I'll have you out of here." "Mr. Lawyer Man," said the witness, "I can't talk without thinkin'." THE NEW PUBLIC HEALTH

The Advertiser Bureau of Public Health Information. QUESTIONS. ANSWERS. COMMENTS.

Questions should be addressed "The New Public Health," care The Advertiser, London, Ont. Private questions accompanied by a stamped, self-addressed envelope will receive private answers. Medical treatment for individual cases cannot be prescribed.

Inclosed is a cutting taken from a discourse given by you, in The Advertiser, which to me is not very distinct, being a person always enjoying good health, all my life and am now seventy-two.

Grateful. It is not always convenient when away from home to boil the water for drinking. I would like you to tell me if there is any quicker way of killing the germs?

Answer.—Yes, what may be called the military method, since it has been used in emergency situations of large bodies of water such as would be necessary to troops on the march, who could not wait to have the water boiled and then cooled for them.

Kindly state what way one could detect a person having a contagious disease.

Answer.—I do not quite understand what you wish, so our misunderstanding seems to be mutual. The fact that you have enjoyed good health all your life to the age of seventy-two is a matter of congratulation; and if you mean that as a matter of fact you have never had an attack of any infectious disease, you are an exception.

As a matter of fact the recent Health Census made by the Institute of Public Health, shows that the average individual of twenty-one years old has suffered at least three attacks: consisting of any three of the following: Chickenpox, German measles, scarlet fever, whooping cough, measles, mumps, pneumonia or diphtheria.

There are several forms of this method, the essential part of which is to disinfect the water by adding to it some chemical which will kill the disease germs, and then disappear itself without harm to the consumer.

We seldom realize these things because we really do not think about them definitely. More than one parent, as the result of the Health Census, found that the children he or she would have said "had never been sick" really had had three, four, five or six of the infectious diseases; but these had been forgotten until the parents sat down and began to think up what the real facts were.

Finally some one (a German, of course) suggested an ozone solution obtained from ordinary bleaching powder, or chloride of lime. This is rapid, cheap, portable; its one disadvantage that being cheap and common, people in general think it cannot be any good, although as a matter of fact, chloride of lime is quite the cheapest, most powerful, most readily handled and most harmless disinfectant we have, not excepting even sunlight, when the whole truth is told.

I could not tell you in this column all that you would have to learn. Briefly, the chief subdivisions may be summarized thus: the "frank" cases, i. e., the well-developed cases, of tuberculosis, measles, scarlet fever, typhoid fever, etc., show very definite characteristics, many of which non-medical persons know. But unfortunately the bulk of the infectious diseases do not run this "frank," well-developed course.

Chemically, chloride of lime acts by producing ozone from the water in which it is dissolved. The ozone attacks and decomposes matter, literally "burning it up." It incidentally destroys germ life also, depending on the strength in which the ozone is present for its effectiveness.

Very little of this epidemiological work has yet been done in Canada and it is only beginning to be recognized as important here, although the ultimate abolition of infectious diseases rests upon it. Epidemiologists are now attached to the leading state and city boards of health in the United States, and in time will be considered an indispensable part of the staff of every board which pretends to

As compared with boiling water this method is cheaper (it uses up no fuel to boil the water, nor ice to cool it); it is quicker; it does not remove the oxygen from the water, as boiling does, leaving it flat and tasteless; if anything, it adds oxygen; finally it does not make the water a better food for the bacteria as boiling does; boiled water must be used up quickly, or accidental germs from the air will grow rapidly in it.

ing, could possibly hurt himself with it.

NEW THOUGHT. Is it necessary for the very mild cases of infectious diseases to be isolated as well as the very severe ones?

Answer.—This question is something like asking if weeds will spread from a stone ground any less than from good ground?

The severity or non-severity of a case has little to do (although at times it has something to do) with the severity or non-severity of the cases which may be derived from it.

There are some exceptions, however; at all events, it would appear that comparatively weak germs, transferred rapidly from patient to patient may increase in virulence; this is the explanation offered why epidemics are sometimes very mild when they begin but become more severe and fatal as they progress.

of a very mild germ is too uncertain and time consuming; but a much more important reason is that in preparing curative sera or vaccines, a non-virulent or slightly virulent culture does not produce sufficient reaction to secure the manufacture by the body of a strong antitoxin or antibody to the poison. Weak germs, like some other very things in this world, do harm from their very weakness!

JOHN BRIGHT

My life is in my speeches. John Bright used to say when consulted about his own biography, and perhaps that is the reason why, though there have been four or five monographs since his death, that no one has ever written an official in chief his life, until Mr. Trevelyan's Life, published last month, been an authorized record of his career.

Bright's political career was single of purpose, and his life simple and straightforward and unadorned. He had none of the vast dissipation of energy which makes the life, for instance, of Gladstone a record not only of politics but of activities in literature, religion, and patriotism.

The labor of my life, he wrote in the year 1875, "have taken me out of the way of service for our little Church and have to a large extent unfitted me for it. I feel that there is nothing above the humblest office—shall I say that of doorkeeper?—which I could properly undertake."

His family life was at once simple and intense. His first wife died shortly after their only child was born, six years later he married again, but in the interval political claims pressed hard upon him, and his income was insufficient to maintain two houses he was forced to separate from his family and live in lodgings in London while they remained at One Ash at Rochdale.

There are some exceptions, however; at all events, it would appear that comparatively weak germs, transferred rapidly from patient to patient may increase in virulence; this is the explanation offered why epidemics are sometimes very mild when they begin but become more severe and fatal as they progress.

Nietzshi In English

Levy's Complete Translation—Attack on Christianity.

Sir Ray Lankester, expounding the gospel according to Metchnikoff, will have nothing to do with the theory of the preacher that "the who increased their knowledge increased sorrow."

Our object and our expectation should be not to extend the term of human life beyond its present natural limit, which makes it regular and complete for everyone to reach that age, and to be healthy and useful (since the experience and wisdom of the old is valuable) until the last.

This consummation is not to be reached just yet. We, and our sons and grandsons, will doubtless continue to complete our respective centuries. But our great-great-grandsons will all be great-great-grandfathers ere they be dead, with a gentle rest, ere they are upon their scarce-defended wicket.

On the very face of Sir Ray Lankester's prophecy, the matter for reflection is not to feel that he lags superfluous on the stage, because "the wisdom of the old" is always valuable. But in the world of that day, as we are forced to conceive it, wisdom will be a drug in the market.

What finally differentiated Bright, whom men still think of as a man a little apart from the run of politics and politicians, from his contemporaries and successors? Mr. Trevelyan seems to us to give the clue. The essence of Bright's pre-eminence was that he enjoyed the trust of the people, not as a man victorious in Parliamentary arena and descending as it were from the popularity of the platform and select approval of the House of Commons, but as one who had begun as the hero and leader of his own town in a local fight for liberty, had gone on to be the hero of the masters and men of his industry, and at last of his fellow-countrymen at large.

There is a little trick to try on your friends. Ask one of them to close his eyes and cross his fingers. When he has done this take a pencil and touch the tips of the crossed fingers with it. Then ask him how many pencils he feels, and nine times out of ten he will insist that there are two pencils touching his fingers.

On this amusing inversion, M. Bergson ended, and a few grateful and appreciative words from Mr. Bergson brought the meeting to a close.
