The Romance of a Marriage.

CHAPTER XX.

"What a pretty locket!" says Paula, holding it between her finger and thumb.

"Yes," he says, and a sudden faint flush comes into his face; "it is not bad."

"Bad! I think it is sweetly pretty," she says, rebukingly; and she turns it over. There is a monogram on this side formed of the letters F. H. and H. P., but so jumbled after the approved fashion that no one but the initiated could decipher them. "And this is your monogram?" she says. "What a confusion it is," and she laughs. "I suppose, like all the Powells, you have a dozen Christian names. Some day you shall tell them to me."

"I will," he says, and he laughs; but there is a touch of anxiety in the laugh, and his hand goes down to the locket as if he would take it out of her hand.

"Good-night, little locket," she says, and, with a girlish, innocent gesture, she touches it with her lips before she slips it into the pocket.

A spasm seems to pass through him, and his lips twitch, and it seems as if he meant to snatch the locket from the chain and fling it behind him; but instead he puts his arm round her.

"Good-night, my darling," he says, hoarsely, as if moved by some intense emotion. "Good-night. Heaven—" Then he breaks off with a sudden laugh. "My uncle's little tricks are catching," he says. "I was just going to say, 'Heaven bless you!' like an old man—"

But she does not echo his laugh; indeed she looks up at him, holding her head back and her hands pressed against his breast.

"Heaven has blessed me," she says, very quietly; "has it not given me our love?"

CHAPTER XXI.

Who was Flossie Hamilton? A great number of persons asked that question, and there were numerous answers to it.

Some said that her mother was a green-grocer, and that her father was a small coalman; others that she had spent the early years of her childhood selling oranges and pipe-lights, and others again, that she was the daughter of a nobleman, left at the Foundling Hospital in Gower Street.

But, however much the accounts of her origin differed, there was no dispute as to what she is.

Flossie Hamilton is the principal actress and attraction at the Frivolity Theatre, where she draws crowds nightly; crowds that go to see and enjoy her dancing and singing in the successful burlesque of "Old King Cole."

Report says that Flossie Hamilton was one of the chorus singers or supernumeraries at the Frivolity, and that one of the minor actresses having fallen ill, Flossie was picked out by a discerning stage-manager to fill her place, and that from taking third-class parts, Flossie achieved first-rate ones, and so became the leading attraction at the theatre in London at which the sacred lamp of burlesque is always kept burning.

Be that as it may, Flossie was an important member of London society. Her name was on every man's lips—every man, that is, who moved in fashionable society—her photograph could be seen and admired in fifty different attitudes in every fancy shop in the fashionable thoroughfares.

Flossie had the best-appointed brougham in London; she had—and wore also—the best suite of diamonds of any professional on the boards.

GIRLS! DRAW A MOIST CLOTH THROUGH HAIR

Let "Danderine" save your hair and double its beauty.

Oh, girls, such an abundance of thick, heavy, invigorated hair; a perfect mass of wavy, silky hair, gloriously fluffy, bright and so easy to manage.

Just moisten a cloth with a little "Danderine" and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; this magically removes all dirt, excess oil and grease, but your hair is not left brittle, dry, stringy or faded, but charmingly soft, with glossy, golden gleams and tender lights. The youthful glints, tints and color are again in your hair.

"Danderine" is a tonic-beautifier. Besides doubling the beauty of the hair at once, it checks dandruff and stops falling hair. Get delightful Danderine for a few cents at any drug or toilet counter and use it as a dressing and invigorator as told on bottle.

She had a lady's-maid who attended her at the theatre, dressed her, and accompanied her home, in the store-said brougham to Raglan Street, Chelsea, where Flossie resided.

Flossie was, in a word, the rage. The crutch and tooth-pick brigade, the young gentlemen with nothing to do and plenty of money to do it on, filled the stalls of the Frivolity nightly with the sole object of seeing and hearing Flossie.

Her quick, smart sayings, the "gag" in which leading actresses of her type indulge, became the fashionable slang of London; when she appeared in the park, which she did pretty frequently, ladies—ladies born and bred—copied her costume and imitated her sunshade.

Her songs, trilled by Flossie in the most beautiful of stage costumes, were sung by immaculate ladies in the drawing-rooms of May Fair. To know Flossie, to be on bowing terms with her, was an honour which men valued above rank and learning. To be seen in her neatly appointed victoria, bestowed a rank and position which the noblest of our gilded youth coveted and ran after.

In a word, Flossie was one of the artificial hot-house products of our age, and we write of her here because it is simply impossible to ignore her; because she and her kind exert so much influence in the world that it is impossible to write a story of fashionable life that does not contain her.

If it had been possible, believe me, I would have kept Flossie Hamilton in the background and out of sight; but she is so much mixed up with the life of dear, pure Paula, down in Woldshire, that it is simply impossible to ignore her.

Besides, why should I ignore her when royal princes sat in their box at the Frivolity and applauded her, when ladies of rank copied her costumes, and cabinet ministers laughed at her jokes. Flossie was a power in the land, a household word, a proverb, and much too conspicuous a person to be ignored or passed over with a word or two.

Let us go to Flossie's house in Raglan Street.

Everybody knows Raglan Street; a quiet street in quiet, historic Chelsea, a street celebrated for its respectability and its high rents.

The merest box in Raglan Street fetches a couple of hundred a year; and Flossie's well-kept house was the merest of boxes.

But it was a beautiful little box. Nosotti had decorated, Gilroy had furnished it. The dining-room, a tiny apartment, eighteen by eighteen, was a model of what such a room should be. A small, old oak sideboard, old oak chairs, a Turkey carpet, half a dozen good pictures, and a cello set always well stocked with the choicest brands of champagne and Madeira.

"If you want a decent glass of Madeira," Lord Fozzie went to say, "you must go to Flossie."

It was in the dining-room that Flossie gave those exquisite little suppers at which she used to entertain, say half a dozen picked guests, a duke or an earl, sometimes a scion of royalty itself, one or two newspaper men—they are always so useful, you see. Flossie would explain—and a fellow-actress or two.

She had a good cook, and, in addition to the select cellar of wine, had such choice animal spirits of her own—spirits that expressed themselves in song and laughter, fresh and unforced as a child's—that these little suppers were much sought after; and if a man could stroll down to his club in the morning, and, while calling for a brandy-and-soda, remarked casually, "I had a bit of supper at Flossie's last night," he was regarded with admiration and envy.

Was she beautiful? Some said there was nothing in her; others raved about her, and talked in poetic frenzy of the spirit of Greek comedy and Greuze's celebrated picture of the "Dancing Girl."

She was very small—quite petite, with the daintiest, nattiest of figures, supple by nature, and rendered still more supple by the dancing-master's art. She had light blue eyes, that she had learnt to open or shut, to stare or twinkle with, as no other woman could stare or twinkle. Her nose was very small, and slightly turned up, and round her small, shapely head ran a crop of half-curly, yellow, and not dyed—let Flossie's enemies say what they will.

Of course she was beautifully dressed. There was no lady in the land whom Worth or Redfern were more anxious to please than Flossie; and she had, what many of the titled costumers of these gentlemen have not—exquisite taste.

Where she got it from, seeing that her early days were spent in an alley—but taste is born in us, says philosopher, and it must have been born in Flossie.

Then her voice—it was a wonderful voice, soft and "pretty," when she liked to make it so, and capable of changing from soft and pretty to shrill and crisp like a street-boy's.

There was no doubt about her being clever. The manager of the Frivolity was not the sort of man to pay a young lady forty guineas a week for nothing, and Flossie drew that amount from the Frivolity treasury every Saturday.

Yes, Flossie was one of the artificial productions of this artificial age, and she ought to have been very very happy, if the possession of most of the good things of this life confers happiness.

But there was one thing which a great many, even of Flossie's most devout and staunch admirers, declared she lacked. They said that Flossie, pretty little Flossie, with her blue eyes, and golden curls, and dainty, supple little figure, wanted just one thing to make her perfect, and that one thing was—a heart.

She lacked all sensibility. In the very midst of the laughter which her saucy, fishy face had raised at the Frivolity, she could suddenly and without warning strike into some little, pathetic song, and make the laughter glide swiftly into tears; she could bring the tears to her own eyes, indeed, and stand looking at the gallery with quivering lips until one's heart ached to see her. But it was, so they declared, all acting, all outward show, and, like sounding brass and tinkling cymbal, quite unsatisfactory.

Sir Herrick asked his admirable uncle, the Honourable Francis, if he had ever been in love, and the major had replied with pious horror in the negative; and Flossie would have made the same reply; but no, she would not. She would have said that she had, a thousand times—meaning not at all—and boxed your ears for asking her.

But perhaps the world wronged her, and those young gentlemen, budding earls and marquises whom she had ruined; but the word is too harsh and hard a one to be used in connection with such a soft, bewitching, little thing as Flossie; let us pass on.

On the night of the day upon which the major had given his consent to Sir Herrick's engagement, and had bestowed his blessing on Paula, Flossie had a little supper at the box in Raglan Street.

She was more "select" even than usual. There were Lord Fozzie and Colonel Everleigh, two of the acres-ees from the Frivolity, and a prince of the blood, an enthusiastic admirer of Flossie's.

She came home from the theatre in her brougham with her maid. She was comfortably clad in fine satins worth a king's ransom; the applause, almost deafening, which had rewarded her last song, still rang in her ears; a prince was to honour her miniature dining-room, but notwithstanding all this, there was a slight cloud in Flossie's blue eyes which Weston, the faithful maid, who knew all her mistress's moods as well as a Eton boy knows the Latin grammar, noticed at once, and she bent forward and drew the fur wrap round her mistress's throat.

"Don't do that," said Flossie, rather irritably. "I'm burning already, and yet I feel cold. I'm out of sorts."

"It's the draught, miss," said Weston, respectfully. "There's an awful draught in that last set scene; and the costume is really trying. I do hope you haven't caught cold."

"Oh, Lor', no, I hope not!" responded Flossie, with alarm; then she sighed. "I wish you'd speak to the stage-manager about it to-morrow, will you?"

Flossie was far too grand a lady to mention the matter herself.

"Yes, miss, I will," said the faithful Weston. "I'm sure you ought to get to bed to-night."

"I can't, can I?" asked Flossie. "Aren't there some people coming?"

"Yes, miss," and Weston went over the names.

Twenty teams, or eighty players, competed for the E. W. Hayward prizes (4) yesterday afternoon and night, the contest being most interesting and close throughout. The winning team was A. Munn, D. McFarlane, A. Robertson, D. P. Duff (sk.) with a score of 14 points. The Duff quartette was warmly congratulated on their victory by the many curlers present. To-night there will be a points game for the Jubilee Medal (open to all) which promises to be one of the most exciting contests for the season. It is understood that four of the curlers have donated prizes for a game similar to that of the last points game, viz.: the first sixteen making the highest number of points. On Wednesday at 9 p.m. a special match arranged through the result of the H. D. Reid and Taylor Medals contests will be played, the skips being D. P. Duff, A. H. Salter, W. F. Joyce and H. J. Duder. Wants a New Order.

Whatever the result of Thursday's bye-election in St. John's it is clear should be one determined intention in the outport districts that they should through their representatives put a stop to the high handed wastes and extravagances that have caused the people to be taxed beyond bearing; and to readjust the whole plan of Government so that St. John's will not be permitted to have the "cream" of everything and the remainder of the country the "skimmed milk." The outports look to Mr. Squires and the representatives of their districts to institute a new order of things and give St. John's its just due and no more.—Hr. Grace Standard.

S. A. Officers.

There will be a joint meeting of the three city corps of the Salvation Army at the Citadel, New Gower St. to-night, to bid farewell to Lieut.-Col. Martin has been appointed to look after the work here, and will arrive by the next steamer from England. Recently Newfoundland was made a sub-territory with full jurisdiction over its own affairs.

MINARD'S LINIMENT CURES DANDRUFF, TEMPER.

Along the Railway.

The incoming express which has been stalled at the Gaff Topsails since Thursday week last was at Notre Dame Junction last evening. There are about 25 passengers on board, who must be well disgusted with their journey, considering that the thermometer has been down to 30 below zero. The outgoing express which left here ten days ago was at Mary March's Station last night. A special snowplough is preceding her. Yesterday's outgoing train for Carbonear reached her destination at 4.15 in the evening and the incoming train from Carbonear reached the city about the same time.

All the branch lines excepting that to Carbonear are tied up, though the work of clearing the tracks is going on.

There is very little snow west from the Gaff Topsails and when the section at the end is cleared, it is hoped to have the cross country service running its regular schedule.

A big gang of men are working on the Placentia branch and it is hoped to have the line open for service to-morrow.

C.P.R. Train Smash

Fifteen People Killed -- Earthquake Shocks on Northern Pacific Coast--Indian Strike Assumes Serious Proportions--Reply of Holland Under Discussion -- Cold Wave on Atlantic Seaboard.

BAD ACCIDENT ON C.P.R.
NORTH BAY, Ont., Jan. 26. Fifteen are dead and a number injured as a result of the worst train wreck in the history of this division of the Canadian Pacific Railway which occurred at Cobell, ten miles east of here, to-day. Number one Canadian Pacific express for Vancouver, due here at ten o'clock, was running in two sections. No. 1 section became stalled owing to failure of engine to make steam under conditions of severe frost obtaining, and number two section came around a curve on it, the locomotive of number two section telescoping the sleeper of No. 1 section. It is stated that torpedoes had been placed and other precautions taken by the crew of the stalled train but there is too much confusion existing to be certain on this point. The two sections, it is stated, were running close together. Eight passengers on the stalled train were killed outright and seven others died after their removal on their way to the hospital here. It is reported none of the injured there are fatally hurt. So far as known all casualties are immigrants for Western Canada or residents of the west on the way home from Europe.

SEVERE EARTHQUAKE SHOCK IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.
VANCOUVER, B.C., Jan. 24. One of the most severe earthquake shocks that ever has visited this vicinity, shook the city shortly after 11 o'clock last night. Excited people rushed out of buildings, but up to the present no damage has been reported, beyond some telephones being out of commission. Victoria reported feeling the same shock almost at the moment it occurred here, and a little later reports came from Nanaimo that shocks had been felt there. Some Vancouver people thought there had been an explosion in the Nanaimo coal mines. The quake commenced approximately at eleven-fifteen o'clock and lasted about five seconds. The motion was lateral. Several distant side to side vibrations occurred, apparently in an east and west direction.

DISCUSSING REPLY TO HOLLAND.
PARIS, Jan. 26. A reply to the refusal of the Dutch Government to comply with the demand of the allies for the surrender of former Emperor William of Germany, was the first subject to be taken up at the initial meeting this morning of the Council of Ambassadors created to carry on the unfinished routine work of the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference which disbanded last week. It was decided that the French legal experts available should go into the aspects of the case and prepare a reply which probably will be submitted for the approval of the Council at the beginning of next week. The discussion in Council did not disclose the trend of opinion among the members further than that it appeared to be the view that the legal phase of the question had become the chief one. The council was presided over by Premier Millerand.

PARIS, Jan. 24. Conferences between the Premiers of Great Britain, France and Italy will be held before the next move in the proceedings to extradite former Emperor William from Holland is decided upon, according to information given the Associated Press by the French Foreign Office. The next meeting of Premiers will be held in London, but as no date for this meeting has been fixed, and the matter cannot be left pending a long time, the Foreign Office expresses the opinion that the question will be settled through diplomatic channels between Rome, Paris and London.

Archaeological Discoveries.

Invaluable relics were recently brought to light by excavations made in Greek Macedonia for military reasons by the allied armies in the East. The collection includes neolithic instruments, vases of all forms known in Ancient Greece, as well as jewels, silver and gold—of great historical value. Tombs dating from the fifth and sixth centuries before Christ were also discovered. The objects unearthed establish the identity of the ancient civilization of Macedonia with that of the rest of ancient Greece. They have been taken over by the Greek Curator of Antiquities—The Masonic Sun.

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

OURSELVES PLUS.

Isn't it interesting to notice how contact with different personalities brings out different traits and different states of mind in us. No man or woman is ever wholly himself except when he is alone, and not always then. He is himself—plus the effect upon the persons he is with.

The Contagion of Nerves.

Have a dear old aunt who sometimes has come to the house to work for a woman who is intensely nervous. The minute I go into the room I can tell by my aunt's manner whether that woman is there or not. For if she has, she is in a highly nervous state, and uses the word that is the exact opposite of what she means, she frowns, she repeats, she flinches at any noise, she makes furtive nervous movements. It takes hours for nervous contagion to subside. I know all people who depress their atmosphere is the atmosphere of the east wind. We go into the presence with light hearts and come out with heavy ones. Sometimes this is the direct effect of their repressed outlook on life, again it is only a general effect of their aura.

Person Who Makes Life Seem Worth While.

On the other hand, there is the person who always makes life seem interesting and worth while. I find myself with more to say when I am with such a person, and go away from him or her with a lighter step and a mind stimulated to new activity. The opposite of the person with ill-ordered nerves who makes us nervous too, is the well-poised person who emanates an aura of poise and peace. With such a person we find ourselves sitting in more relaxed positions, speaking in better modulations, and generally living in the atmosphere of her beautiful atmosphere.

They Affect Us Even in Absence.

When I said one was only wholly oneself when alone, I added a reservation "and not always then." I was thinking of the effect other personalities can have even in absence. We all know how people take on different tones at the telephone according to the people whom they are addressing. And when one is writing a letter I think one often falls into the mood which the recipient's presence would induce. I find I can write a much better letter to a person of a stimulating personality than I can to one who has the opposite effect upon me. Which proves it is not only what I have to say that I'm putting on paper, but my personality—plus my correspondents'.

Progress of Masonry.

The rapid growth of the English Craft during the last three years is evidenced in the fact that Lodge No. 4000 has just been consecrated. The last Lodge warranted in 1916 was numbered 3789; at the end of 1917 the number was 3828; and at the end of 1918 it had risen to No. 3913. Now we are well on the way with the fourth thousand. The increase in 1917 was thirty-nine in 1918 eighty-five, thus far in 1919 at least eighty-seven, so that it is fair to anticipate a hundred new Lodges in the current year, if not more.—The Freemason's Chronicle.

OLD MISTER LAUGHTER.

Old Mister Laughter Comes a-grinnin' down the way, Singin' "Never mind, your troubles, For they'll surely pass away." Singin' "Now the sun is shinin' An' there's roses everywhere, To-morrow will be soon enough To fret about your care."

Old Mister Laughter Comes a-grinnin' at the door, Singin' "Don't go after money When you've got enough an' more." Singin' "Laugh with me this mornin' An' be happy while you may, What's the use of riches If they never let you play?"

Old Mister Laughter Comes a-grinnin' all the time, Singin' happy songs of gladness In a good old-fashioned rhyme, Singin' "Keep the smiles a-goin', Till they write your epitaph, And don't let fame or fortune Ever steal away your laugh."

Mainly About People.

Earl Grey, recently British ambassador to the United States, is as famous a fisherman as he is a statesman and diplomat. No matter how important a matter he may have on hand his interest can be diverted by anyone with ideas on fly fishing, trout, sea trout and salmon fishing, and stocking streams.

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson has been forced to assume tremendous burdens because of the president's illness. The Cabinet may decide questions, but it is Mrs. Wilson who takes them to the president's bedside and returns with the president's decision. Mrs. Wilson has become the chief assistant and is now the custodian of important state secrets.

Dr. Karl Muck, who was forced to leave America and the Boston Symphony, is now being made a great deal of in Berlin. He declares to his German admirers that he "was hounded down to Busreh by sea, 6,700 miles; ground that his innocent musical scores contained a code of communication." He is toasted and cheered on all public occasions.

Winfred Molenaar, a grandson of one of General Washington's veterans, claims large tracts of New York land worth $500,000,000. He left a job of cow punching in Colorado to come to New York to fight for his grandfather's estate. His claim embraces 71 acres occupied to-day by mansions, theatres and skyscraping business blocks and apartment houses.

Important!

Every man starting out in business will have to go over a hard road and find out its turnings for himself. But he need not go over his road in the dark if he can take with him the light of other men's experience.

CHEAP SPORTS.

Deprived of beer and bitters, by laws they don't admire, some peevish, sorehead critters kick like a house afire. They say with prohibition our country's bound to reach the depths of dark demeriton, where brinded bow-wows screech. They should forget the bit- ters; 'twould be more safe and sane to hallow with cheerful twitters the water wagon's reign. Their thirst they're merely nursing when they denounce the luck, and spend the dry days cursing the drouth that's run amuck. "I like a frequent toddy," I heard one sport remark; "I used to look quite gaudy, when lit up after dark; but since that graft is ended, I think of other things, and I am feeling splendid, and happy as two kings." Vox Populi has spoken, and though it makes you sore, old Boose's sceptre's broken for ever, evermore. We see the good sport reading the writing on the wall, behold him blithely speeding to some cool water-fall. The cheap sport, grouchy beggar, says all his rights are gone, and hunts some punk bootlegger who has a demijohn.

The Marking of Linen.

Have you ever noticed the curious hieroglyphics with which your linen is marked by the laundries? Strange and wonderful are the methods adopted by foreigners too, for identifying the contents of the wash-tub. In some parts of France linen is defaced with the name and address of the laundry, and an additional geometrical design to indicate the owner. In Bavaria every patron of the wash-tub has a number stamped in large characters on his linen. In other parts of Germany a small cotton label is attached by a hot-water-proof adhesive. In Bulgaria each laundry has a large number of stamps engraved with designs, and in Russia before the war, the laundries marked linen with threads worked in arrow shapes. In some Russian towns the police periodically issued regulations for laundries. In Odessa books of marks were furnished annually to the laundry proprietors, and these and no other marks, could be used. By this system criminals and revolutionary agitators were often traced.

AN OLD-FASHIONED WINTER.

The cold wave which has gripped Newfoundland is not confined to this Dominion alone. From all quarters come reports of intensely severe weather, with a frequency of blizzards and a low temperature. In the New England States on Sunday and Monday, the mercury dropped to zero and continued rapidly on the down grade until it reached to from thirty to forty below. In the grip of such cold it is very difficult to perform the ordinary every day routine, and consequently the most that can be accomplished is to keep warm, and even that, at times, becomes a strenuous task, especially among the poor, who invariably suffer under such circumstances.

Newfoundland has not known such an old-fashioned winter for a period of over thirty years. As a matter of fact, those who remember say that there has been nothing like present conditions, since 1884, the winter when the warship Tenedos was stationed at Harbor Grace. Blizzards and frost made the first three months of that year memorable, in so far as cold went. But it is believed that so far the Dominion has beaten the record. From all parts of the island come readings of unprecedentedly low thermometers especially along the railway line, where the altitude is greatest. On the elevations about mid way across country the cold has been so intense as to bring everything to a standstill, and telegraphed bulletins so far do not show that there is any reduction in the temperature. How long ere a break in the frigid band which engirdles us, may be expected is problematical.

The cold wave, which swept over Newfoundland over a week ago, is still with us, though apparently it is also moving southward, its course being indicated by late cable despatches from American North Atlantic States, which, too, are in the embrace of the frost king. With the Harbor of St. John's frozen solidly, so that shipping can neither get in nor out, and with all the railway avenues of transport practically closed up, the outlook is none too pleasant, should the snap not lessen its hold. Supplies of both food and fuel have to be yet brought in to bring stocks up to the size necessary to meet the demand, and this is a matter of such vital importance that neither St. John's nor the rest of the country can neglect. Sitting down and folding the hands in the lap with patient resignation will not avail. Only vigorous application can help straighten out the tangle, into which Newfoundland has gotten.

From the inland settlements and paper towns, advices have been received that a serious shortage of food stuffs exists, brought about by the stoppage of the railway service, because of the recent snow storms, which have blocked the transinsular line. At Grand Falls, Bishop Falls, Botwood and other places along the line, many necessary articles of food have been out of stock for some considerable time, the people who are without them, suffering severe privations. Relief for these people is an absolute, may an imperative necessity, the situation becoming so grave that were it not for the good will of the Anglo Development Company, many would probably have starved. But even with the proverbial liberality of the A.N.D. Company, it cannot be expected that they can meet the present wants of the up-country population indefinitely, therefore a big effort should be made to get the railway line cleared from St. John's to the points named, in order that the much needed supplies be sent forward without incurring any further delay by which a great calamity may be precipitated.

Frosty Spurt Strikes City.

Seven Below Saturday Night and Water Street Deserted—16 Below on Signal Hill—38 Below at Bishop's Falls—From 30 to 40 Below in Northern Maine, U.S.A.—Coldest in City for 36 Years. According to Diarist—Churches Nearly Empty Sunday.

Beginning on Saturday afternoon and lasting until last evening, the coldest weather to strike the city in 36 years (according to a diary compiled by Mr. H. W. LeMessurier) kept the thermometer away below zero, and on Saturday evening the register was 7 on Water St. and 16 at Signal Hill. At two o'clock yesterday it was 4 below and at 5 o'clock 6 below. Church attendances on Sunday were the smallest for years. Not only in the city was the cold wave in evidence. Straight across the country the thermometer registered from zero down to 38. On Sunday morning it was 27 below at Gaff Topsails; 26 at Bishop's Falls (it was 38 below at the latter place early Sunday morning); 20 at Lewisporte and 10 at Whitebourne.

At Bishop's Falls it was so cold that the trainmen could not stand the few minutes necessary to oiling their engines. In Northern Maine, U.S.A., the frost was even more intense than in this country, and since Saturday last the mercury dropped to from 30 to 40 below zero.

Mariner's Superstitions.

STRANGE BELIEFS HELD BY SAILORS.

Mariners of all nationalities cherish very much the same superstitions. Their joys and fears are the same in all waters and have found similar expression from Nova Scotia to China. It has been pointed out that since the days of the Phoenicians, the greatest of sailors in ancient times, seamen have ever been a "temperamental lot," whose belief in omens and signs has been more or less incomprehensible to the landman.

The ancient mariners held the wildest superstitions, but their belief in the existence of enchanted spots, such as the siren island of Calypso or of those islands that Sinbad likened to the Gardens of Paradise, was much more picturesque and romantic than the superstitions of the modern seaman.

The latter is filled with foreboding by the sight of a hatch cover upside down or by the falling overboard of a shrapnel. He stands aghast at the accidental tearing of a flag, and he is certain that if sails be sewed or mended on the quarterdeck ill luck will ensue. Events are always viewed by him in the light of what has gone before. Everything that is inconvenient or vexatious he ascribes to some malign influence.

The sailor is a firm believer in the efficacy of odd numbers, as naval salutes testify—minute-guns excepted. Women at sea, to say nothing of preachers, he regards with distaste, and certain officers will bear a bad reputation for the weather they bring. Certain days, the seaman is convinced, are unlucky. One old chronicler puts the number of days upon which it is undesirable to put to sea at fifty-three, but the number has been considerably reduced since his time. Among these days were the anniversaries of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah and the suicide of Judas.

The fact that Columbus began his first voyage on a Friday and that he discovered land on the fifth day of the week have no weight with the sailor—the day remains unlucky.

Everybody is familiar with the old superstitions of sailors that, to bring a favorable breeze, they must whistle during the calm.

THE LUCK OF THE BROOM.

From the remotest times there seems to have prevailed a belief that libation or sacrifice would placate the storm spirits and induce them to permit the vessel to proceed unimpeded on its course. Rudest sailors have been known to pour oil and water over a rocky promontory in order to obtain a wind favorable to their designs.

French sailors believe that certain of their shipmates are able to control the winds by virtue of a ring worn on the fourth finger of the right hand. This power, however, carries with it distinct disadvantages, since if the possessor remains ashore for more than three days, or if any single voyage of his extends beyond a period of three months, his life is forfeit.

A broom is thought to exert considerable influence upon the wind. There is a Dutch tradition that, if wind-bound, a vessel is passed by another craft, and a broom is thrown in the latter's course the luck of the first vessel will change. It has been pointed out that in this relation the broom which Van Tromp lashed to his mast as a symbol of his power to sweep the seas of the British possessed a very different significance in the eyes of his men. They probably regarded it as capable of bringing winds favorable to their admiral's design to get at Charles II's ships.

A star-dogged moon was thought to portend a storm; while if the moon rose in a storm she would soon "eat up the clouds." Many an anxious mariner found comfort in this belief.

The ghostly lights at St. Elmo, which appear at the masthead or in the rigging immediately preceding a storm, date back to the voyage of the Argonauts. If these marine will-o'-the-wisps remain stationary or ascend, Dana tells us, they are good omens, but if they descend then foul weather will surely follow. How they came by the name of "St. Elmo's Lights" is not known, although conjecture has it that St. Elmo was St. Erasmus, who in early art is always shown as carrying a candle.

JONAH'S AND CATS.

Among the very curious superstitions of modern sailors may be mentioned the following:

Captain, cook or cabin boy considers it unlucky to ship with a man who has neglected to pay his laundry bill. A sailor, nearing port after a lengthy voyage, will gather up old clothes and shoes unfit for further use and ceremoniously commit them to the sea, in order to insure himself luck on his next voyage.

Sailors like to ship on a craft that displays a shark's tail firmly nailed to the bowsprit or jibboom.

Jack Tar places great faith in the merits of a pig as a weather prophet. During very rough weather it is difficult to convince any old-timer that there is not a Jonah on board. Many captains of the old school, who ought to know better, are so superstitious in this regard that it is not uncommon for them to evince an intense dislike for officers who have happened apparently to be the harbingers of bad weather, especially fog. It is quite usual on board ship to find members of the crew nicknamed "Foggy Jones," "Heavy Weather Bill" or "Squally Jack."

Cats on board ship are held to be lucky, and many a stray feline finds a comfortable home and careful attention with Jack for its friend, although, on the other hand, our domestic friend has at times been held responsible for the continuance of very bad weather and forced to accept the role of Jonah to the fullest extent.

ANCIENT MARINERS.

One of the most curious of the superstitions of the sea is that pertaining to the capture of a shark. The natural dread and antipathy with which these monsters of the deep are viewed cause a capture to be hailed with much rejoicing. All hands, from the captain down to the cabin boy, take a keen interest in the proceedings, and, having successfully landed the shark on deck—an operation involving no little excitement—it is killed and its tail cut off. This trophy is then nailed either on the end of the bowsprit or the jibboom and is considered an infallible charm, capable of bringing the craft the fairest of winds and weather. It is not uncommon to observe sailing ships lying in port with this peculiar emblem of the sailor's superstition, but the custom is fast dying out, since, in the case of steamers, a shark capture at sea is a very rare occurrence.

Another remarkable and weird superstition is that pertaining to the albatross. These huge birds, measuring from fourteen to eighteen feet tip to tip of their wings, are to be seen only in the stormy regions of the capes of Good Hope and Horn and the surrounding latitudes. The peculiar belief of old sailors credits these birds with possessing the souls of ancient mariners, who, for their sins, must have been doomed to scour these stormy seas for all eternity.

During calm weather these birds are easily captured by a contrivance of the sailors' own invention. This, being baited, attaches itself to the hook bill of the albatross when the bird attempts to swallow the bait; and the creature is then hauled on board. Few captains will permit crews to kill these birds, since they hold out the killing is certain to entail disaster to the ship.

PORCINE BAROMETERS.

The killing of a pig at sea is always an occasion of great moment, not only for the reason that fresh meat is to be enjoyed—a great luxury on a sailing vessel after perhaps months of salt provisions—but also because what is termed a "pig breeze," for a certainty. Pigs when kept on sailing ships are allowed very frequently to leave their pens, and their movements on such occasions, which are held to foretell the wind to be expected, are watched with the keenest interest. Should a pig evince any signs of lassitude, lying down or wandering aimlessly about the decks, then this is a sign that calm weather will come, with little or no wind in prospect. Should, however, the pig show a frisky mood, with much squealing, then it is a sure sign of "big winds," a very necessary factor in the navigation of a sailing ship.

Of the many superstitions and legends having to do with phantom ships, none is more widely told than that of the "Flying Dutchman," or phantom ship of Vanderdecken. How the legend originated no one knows, but it has been ascertained that there was a seaman of repute who many years ago sailed from Holland to the east via the Cape of Good Hope, but was never heard of again.

A Modern Solomon.

All the Solomons are not dead. He was a magistrate who was used to dealing with negro boys. Two boys were brought up for stealing. Evidently one was guilty, but it was hard to tell which in separate cells, gave each one a leather string of equal length. "Now, boys, the string in the hands of the thief will grow," he said.

In two hours the boys were brought out. One showed his string; it had not been touched. The other had cut two inches off his string. "You are the thief," said the judge, and he was.

Roumania is Now a Power.

The war has humbled some great nations and exalted several small ones. Chief among the latter is Roumania. Only to those who have studied the peace terms carefully have the facts with reference to this Balkan power been apparent. Roumania has benefited largely, as Frank H. Simonds points out in the Review of Reviews.

The truth is, of course, that Roumania is neither a little state nor is she acting off her own bat. As a consequence of the changes in her frontiers, incident to Austro-Hungarian defeat and Russian collapse, Roumania has become a nation with an area as great as Italy, with a population to-day of 16,000,000, living on a territory capable of sustaining a much larger population than Italy, and her population is increasing with great rapidity. In less than half a century, therefore, Roumania will, in all human probability, be a great power. Moreover she must be reckoned with henceforth as a very potent factor in all combinations that may be made.

She has an excellent army, organized by the French General Staff, battle-trained, an army which despite opening disasters due to Russian treachery and later surrender due to Russian collapse, displayed admirable courage and skill and remains one of the considerable military forces in Europe, actually taking rank after the armies of the five great powers.

In addition, by her position Roumania controls the Lower Danube, and, as recent events have shown, Hungary is completely at her mercy. What I am trying to make clear is that Roumania is herself henceforth a nation whose military and economic resources, whose army, whose grain, whose oil, whose minerals, give her a position quite unlike that which she occupied when she was only the largest of the minor Balkan states. Actually she is greater to-day and infinitely more powerful than were all the Balkan states together at the outbreak of war.

Bluenose Sailormen True to Form.

Unless reports from New England are exaggerated, descendants of the enterprising Nova Scotia sailormen who proved so skilful as blockade runners for the South during the American Civil War, are emulating the courses of their fathers. From Bath, Maine, comes the story of a Canadian schooner which crept up the local river on December evening, and whose most valuable freight consisted of a sugar hoghead containing many bottles of whiskey. At three points along shore it stopped, and at each the contents of the barrel were considerably lightened, by persons expecting the visit. One unfortunate consignee had the bad luck to attract the attention of the local sheriff; but prior to the discovery the schooner had embarked again on the waters of the broad Atlantic and was lying off the coast beyond the three-mile limit, where her crew could laugh at pursuit.

The history of the Atlantic seaboard shows that breaking through embargoes of any kind is meat and drink to the Bluenose sailorman. Whether it was Jefferson's non-intercourse laws, or the closing of Southern ports to trade in the 'sixties, or the modern liquor enactments of the United States, running the blockade is second nature with him. In the Napoleonic wars he was a privateer; Napoleon was his main; and his earliest forebears gave the pirates of the tropic waters many a taste. Smuggling arouse no reprobaton in his mind. It was supposed that the romance of seafaring was dead for him; but Federal prohibition in the United States has revived the zest of life for him. From the Carribean to the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, beating the rales has been the poetry

Why Do They Call Them Wisdom Teeth?

The wisdom teeth are the two last molar teeth to grow. They come one on each side of the jaw and arrive somewhere between the ages of twenty and twenty-five years. The name is given them because it is supposed that when a person has developed physically and mentally to the point where he has secured these last two teeth, he has also arrived at the age of discretion. It does not necessarily mean that one who has cut his wisdom teeth is wise, but that having lived long enough to grow teeth, the person has passed sufficient actual years that, if he has done what he should to fit himself for life, he should have come by that time at the age of discretion or wisdom. As a matter of fact these teeth grow at about the same age in people whether they are wise or not.

MORALITY IN HIGH LIFE. THE PRESS.

We do not deny that in the choice of our subject this week we are influenced by local events. Our article is coloured by our immediate environment. As we scanned our paper yesterday, on the front page of one of them, in the centre-top of the front page, the most conspicuous place, appeared the following:—

"MONEY TALKS."

The Star has been handed the sum of Five Thousand Dollars by a number of city supporters of the Government, to bet that Squires and Brownrigg will be elected.

$2,500 that Squires will be elected.
$2,500 that Brownrigg will be elected.

The bets are contingent on both being taken.

These bets will be withdrawn if not covered by noon, Wednesday, Jan. 21st.

Now then Tory Crafters, what's your money like?"

We have laid emphasis on the words "Bet" and "Bets."

Another city newspaper, "The Daily News," reprints the challenge and intimates that certain gentlemen (?) (Excuse the mark, it is our own), had been in that office and had accepted the challenge, had covered the bet on condition that the money be spent among the poor of St. John's West.

IS THIS GAMBLING?

It is Gambling, if we know the meaning of the word:—"Bet" and we fell a-thinking. As the ashes gathered black in the grate, as the night shades covered in their tender embrace, the world about us, we pondered and wondered, while others slept, and even as we tried to secure a few hours sleep, we dreamed a dream. We dreamt that the Chief of Police rang up the Department of Justice, calling attention to the open gambling which was going on in "The Press." The Department of Justice was asleep, but the Chief of Police was not. He at last succeeded in waking up the Deputy Minister of Justice. (The Minister being a politician was afraid to move lest he and his party lose a few votes thereby). However the Deputy got after those papers. The police rounded up the gamblers, charging them with common gambling, publicly laying a bet, which is contrary to the law of the land—The public aroused to seek the cover of the Press for a matter which he ought to settle face to face with the person concerned. When the Press becomes the tool of cowards, it lowers its standing considerably. Let men who have personal grievances, go and fight their battles as men should do; but let the Press be free to deal independently with all men and all things.

4. Party, Politics. Perhaps this should have come first. It is very important. How loud and insistent would be the cry of condemnation be if the pulpit were to be used deliberately for party political purposes. The ideal world would not know party politics, but we have not reached that world, and we sometimes seem to be a long way off, and consequently newspapers are bought, sold, controlled, and deliberately managed, in the interests of one party or another. Sometimes one, sometimes the other. Now party politics may be a necessary evil due to the degraded state of society, but even if its existence is a necessity, surely it is not necessary that it should stoop to the low, debasing levels to which some sections of our Press have sunk during the last election campaign. Horatio Bottomley, of England, may be a fanatic, he may challenge long established and cherished institutions, he may be offensive even to some, but his independence, his fearless utterances, his general principles by which "John Bull" is governed, give him a lead, pointing out which way the Press should go. Some sections of the Press regard little or nothing as sacred; bound hand and foot by bosses who are forefront politicians, controlled by the conditions which draw the most public morals and sentiment to their own level. They use their power to destroy, instead of building up. The Press should be independent and free to deal fearlessly with all men and all things. We do not contend that the Press should be "Goody Goody," even the religious press need not be so; but civic, political, national and personal righteousness should be and is, the objective of literature which is born of intelligent and lawful wedlock. As for me, the Press must say, despite what public men might do, as for me, I will serve the Lord.

5. Corporation Control. A Corporation has no soul. A body of men and women banded together to make money, does not profess to have religious scruples. Take for instance the Combines which exist in Newfoundland: Reid Nfd. Co., F.P.U., N.L.W.A., Longshoremen's Union, etc., and so on. What do these Corporations know beyond the needs personal of those who are within the charmed circle in each case. Nor do we expect them to be anything else, for have they not combined in self-interest and protection. Let them combine if they will. Honey is made by bees, and flowers attract the bees. Men will draw men of like mind. But no man can serve two masters. He must serve one combine only if he serves any. A newspaper belongs to the people, and falls to reach them when it permits any one section of the public to control it. A corporation is a curse when it endeavors and succeeds in cornering any commodity. The paper is cursed which is cornered and controlled by any corporation. That newspaper is blessed and becomes a blessing which knows no control but righteousness. An editor sits upon a throne and the state of his mind is reflected in the State of the Kingdom over which he rules. Happy is that King; happy that kingdom, which is again governed by the King of Kings.

THE REPUTATION OF THE PRESS.
The Press is potentially the handmaid of the pulpit. They should be sisters in the advocacy of great moral issues. The first press was used in a holy task, and he divorces her from the divine purpose of her creation, who allows her pages to be sullied by questionable or wicked statements. The Modern Newspaper is a means by which the public conscience may be educated, or by which it may also be debased and misled. The Press is becoming the daily judgment of Society. A glaring light of publicity is shed by it over all things human. On the whole the effect of this light of publicity is good. Things evil love the darkness. But the Press at times seems also to be a social impertinence. Some papers become like the plague of the frogs in Egypt, over-running all the houses and entering into every chamber. Yet the Daily Press offers a Bread and Honourable field for Christian talent. Conscience in Journalism may become a mighty power. Through the incessant influence of an intelligent and honourable Journalism, all good causes may be helped rapidly forward in their way to conquest. Heine wrote, "In these times we fight for ideas, and newspapers are our fortresses."

WHAT HAS BEEN SAID OF THE PRESS!
Napoleon: "Four hostile newspapers are more to be feared than a thousand bayonets."
La Bruyere: "The highest reach of a news-writer is an empty reasoning on policy, and vain conjectures on the public management."
Longfellow: "The present time is not priest-ridden, but press-ridden."
Fuller: "The Press begins to be an oppression of the land."
Bryant: "The Press is a mill which grinds all that goes into its hopper."
Emerson: "It makes a great difference to the force of any sentence whether there be a man behind it or no. In the learned Journal, in the financial newspaper, I discern no form; only some irresponsible shadow; or some dangler, who hopes, in the mask and robes of his paragraph to pass for somebody."

These are just a few selections. It is very evident that in the days long gone, they too had their troubles with the Press, and the only question which we would raise in this connection, is: Are we, in our modern newspaper, far removed from the standard which prevailed when those of allowance for hot-blood and all the incidents which provoke an editor during an election campaign in which he may be personally interested; even assuming that a man, a mere man, an editor, is naturally prone to err and stray like a lost sheep; are we really far removed from the lower levels of two hundred years ago?

WHAT IS THE TROUBLE!
The most kindly disposed and sanguine will have to confess that the modern newspaper has not progressed in relation to its moral conscience, pro rata with its opportunities. It occupies a lower place in the public or national life than its history and possible development. We draw our bow at a venture. We would make certain and sturdy suggestions.

1. It is too often used as a medium for the expression of personal animosity. Our sympathies lie with the editor in this case. We have, however, a big complaint against the man who is weak enough

Dartmouth Man Gains 15 Pounds in Short Time

Five Years Trouble Removed and He works Every Day Since Taking Tanlac.

"I have gained fifteen pounds in weight since taking Tanlac, and if I had known about this medicine three years ago I would have saved many a dollar to say nothing of the sufferings I went through," said Joseph E. Clattenburg, Bronson street, Dartmouth, a carpenter, while in Kinley's drug store in Halifax, Canada, recently. Continuing, Mr. Clattenburg said: "My trouble started five years ago with occasional attacks of indigestion, which kept getting worse and more often until I got to where I could hardly eat anything at all. For the past three years now, that is, until I got Tanlac, I had no appetite, and the little I did manage to eat would bloat me up and keep me feeling miserable for hours. I had sharp, cramping pains all through my stomach which would nearly draw me down and I was constipated all the time, my liver was sluggish and I had no energy. My tongue was badly coated all the time, and my skin had a yellow, sallow appearance. I could get no little sleep and always felt bad in the mornings it was all I could do to get out of bed. I was so badly run down that some days I just had to quit work and go home, and I have often had to lay off from work seven or eight days at a time. Added to my other troubles, a short while ago I had an attack of jaundice and was unable to work for two weeks. I had lost considerable weight, and my strength was just about all gone. "I had tried many different treatments and medicines without being benefited and was very much discouraged, but when I heard so many people praising Tanlac I decided to try it. At the time I started taking it I had been off from work for over a week, but before I finished the first bottle I was back on the job, and haven't lost a day since. I have taken six bottles in all, and my appetite has improved until I eat as much as one meal now as I did all day before and am never troubled with pains, gas, sour or upset stomach or any other bad feeling. I am no longer constipated, and my liver is in fine shape again. My tongue is never coated and my skin has cleared up to a good healthy color. I sleep well at night and that tired, sluggish feeling is all gone. In fact, I haven't felt better in years than I do now; but I don't believe I would be able to work to-day if it hadn't been for Tanlac, and it is a genuine pleasure for me to make this statement."

Encourage Laying Hens

TO TAKE EXERCISE FREELY.
During the spring season fowls having free range get abundant exercise. Close confinement without exercise is not conducive to the best results, although the feed provided may be the best, for idle hens soon grow too fat to lay. It is almost impossible to give laying hens which are confined too much exercise. The fowls may be encouraged to exercise in various ways, such as feeding corn on the cob, suspending cabbage heads, beets, etc., so that the birds have to jump for them, and scattering grain in the litter. The litter should be from 4 to 8 inches deep, and may consist of straw (either cut or whole), hay, leaves, buckwheat hulls, shredded corn fodder, or any convenient material of this nature. The hens should be kept hungry enough so that they will work diligently all day for the grain scattered in this litter, which should be removed whenever it becomes damp or soiled.

With this equipment we can do work quickly and much more practical than heretofore.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

My Garage will be closed from March 10th until April 15th, as I am taking my entire Mechanical Staff on a visit to the Motor Factories with a view to giving first class service. Parties wishing to have their cars overhauled for the coming season would be wise to have them done immediately. For instance, parts may be found broken or worn and it may not be possible to replace them here, in which case I can get them while away, thereby saving a lot of inconvenience and disappointment when the car is wanted. One thing is sure, cars that are overhauled in the winter months are given better inspection than those done in the rush season; so just call us up and we will get your car in and have it done right away.

I have a supply of repair parts in stock. Room for about 50 more cars. Ford Trucks taken care of with despatch.

The End of The Drama.

(By IVAN NORENSKI)

In Spare Moments.
The scene is the private office of General Garashinin, the chief of the secret police of Petrograd.

The chief had just been questioning one of his spies, Peter Radovitch, a young student of twenty-four, who had given him information regarding a coterie of malcontents, he himself being one of the party.

"And what do you say your numbers are?" asked the general.

"Twenty-two, your excellency, myself included."

The general took the paper handed to him, and silently compared it with one in his desk.

"Bardin, Loubanoff, Sobotin—I was not aware of those last. You have done well, Radovitch, and you will find that the Government is not unkind of those who serve it well. Your recent action will atone for your past errors, and merit reward besides."

"My life will not be worth a day's purchase if it is known that it is I who have furnished this information."

"You should have thought of that before joining their society. I see you have something to suggest. What is it?"

"That when the arrest by the police takes place, no distinction be made between me and the others."

"Of course, you will be apprehended with them."

"And tried?"

"Yes, if you wish it, and condemned, too, for that matter. Anything further?"

"And pardoned along with the less guilty of the others, so as to avoid all suspicion?"

"I quite understand you. Rest assured, you will have no reason to fear in that respect."

The chief of the secret police smiled to himself as the spy took his departure.

That very evening the police raid took place. Taken as they were by surprise, and unconscious of any treachery on the part of one of their number, the little coterie of students, artists, and young doctors, found themselves bagged without a single exception. They indignantly denied the charge of conspiring against the Government. But General Garashinin's agents merely shrugged their shoulders deprecatingly, perhaps incredulously.

In a month the trial took place. Radovitch was not called to give evidence, but took his place among the accused.

At length the whole twenty-two were judged guilty. Twelve were sentenced to Siberia, but not to the mines, owing to the clemency of the authorities. It was with a thrill akin to horror that Radovitch heard himself sentenced to death, along with the other nine men, though conscious that it only formed part of the arrangement that he himself had suggested to the general.

"Sentence to Siberia would have served the purpose equally well," he muttered to himself and, turning to look at his companions, found himself wondering if his own face was as pale as each of theirs.

"To be shot at the glacis of the fortress at sunrise to-morrow morning," he kept repeating to himself, though assuring himself that the words could have no reference to him, for the Chief of Police must keep faith even with a traitor, or none would be found to serve him in future.

Bardin and the others calmly accepted their fate, and after a hurried farewell of their fortunate fellows, were conducted to their cells for the last time.

The long night passed all too quickly for Radovitch, who every minute expected a messenger from the chief of the secret police. He had seen General Garashinin in court from day to day, and once a gleam of intelligence, he persuaded himself, had passed between them.

At last a faint greyness began to manifest itself through the closed bars of his cell. It was light, the herald of a new day, the last for the condemned men. And now Radovitch began to explain, in husky tones, that his conviction was all a blunder. The two gaolers looked intelligently at each other, and pitying upon the wretched prisoner, but said not a word.

II.

In a few minutes all the ten were assembled in the courtyard of the prison, nine of them calm and collected, for the bitterness of death was already past, one a prey to fear and sickening terror, and evidencing it all too plainly in his trembling limbs and livid countenance. In the hurried adieu they exchanged with each other, Radovitch came in for more than his share of attention.

"It's all a mistake," mumbled the wretched man. "Where is General Garashinin?"

"He is never present at executions," replied the soldier he addressed. "He issued his final orders last night."

And then a melancholy procession began to move towards the glacis of the fortress prison. A priest led the way, holding aloft a large cross before the eyes of the doomed men, who followed in single file, their ordinary dress covered with a long robe of white linen, at once a covering for the living, and a shroud for the dead.

At last they reached the place appointed. Five stakes had been driven in the ground near the summit of the long even slope of the rampart. To these they were bound in couples, facing the east, now kindling with the warm flush of the sun, whose coming was to be the signal for their death.

Ranged in front of them, at a distance of fifteen yards, was a company of soldiers, with loaded rifles, whose captain, standing a little apart, held in his hand a white handkerchief, at whose fall sixty tongues of fire would leap forth and sixty bullets seek the heart of the unhappy men.

There was still time for the last scene but one in the tragedy before the sun should rise. The cross was held before the lips of each man for a final kiss in turn. Then a dagger was broken over the head of each captive by a soldier detailed from the thousands drawn up to witness the final scene. At that moment the sun seemed to bound into space, and every heart almost stopped.

But the officer had not let the signal handkerchief drop. Indeed, the retreat is sounded on a score of bugles, and the troops march off the ground. The prisoners are informed that the Government had been graciously pleased to grant them their lives.

They are unbound, and, as in a dream, try to realise all that has happened, and to congratulate one another ere the last couple has been reached.

One of these had fallen forward on his face as far as his bonds permitted. It was Radovitch.

"He has fainted," said the soldier. "Bring me some water quickly."

"No need to trouble," said the doctor, who had rapidly examined him. "He is dead. The fright has killed him."

It was too true. The chief of the secret police had carried out his promise only too literally. The spy had no longer any reason to fear his betrayed comrades' vengeance.

The day of the 27-a-week servant girl who would cook, sweep, mind the baby, wash dishes, run the laundry and do odd jobs of calculating in her spare time is coming again, according to Miss Elizabeth Moynihan, of the Travelers' Aid Society, New York.

Every boat from Europe is bringing hundreds of Scandinavian, Irish, English and Italian girls, eager to do housework. Miss Moynihan says. The Travelers' Aid Society is assisting scores en route West from New York.

Why Do I Get Cold in a Warm Room?

I suppose you mean the instance when you get cold while in a warm room even when you are perfectly well. This will happen often when all of the moisture in the room outside of what is in your body, is evaporated by the heat in the room. The remedy, is, of course, to keep a pan of water some place in the room as the air has become too dry.

While heat is necessary to evaporate water, the process of evaporation produces cold. The quicker the evaporation the sharper the cold feeling produced. Now your body is continually evaporating the water from your body which comes out in the form of perspiration through the pores of the skin. This is one of nature's ways of taking the impurities and waste out of the body. You know, of course, don't you, that more than one-half the waste material which the body expels from the system comes out through the pores of the skin rather than through the canals.

When the air in the room becomes too dry, the evaporation on the outside of the body proceeds faster and makes you cold. By keeping water in some vessel in the room you keep the air of the room from becoming too dry.

GRAVES OF THE GLORIOUS.
So imperative and solemn an obligation is laid upon those of us who have lived through the war to maintain in sacred reverence the graves of those who have given their lives in it, that one would like to have settled, once and for all, the question whether everything is being done which can be done in fulfillment of that obligation. There had been many diverse, conflicting statements on the matter, some of which we have published—the last, from a lady and her husband who had visited the graves of their sons, saying, "Anything more miserable and uncared for one cannot imagine." We now have a story of a different kind. "I wish to state," says a private of the 89th Labor Company in France, "that I have been in this country for two months, and I can say that during the short time I have been here we have completed 2,000 our dead heroes. Also that each time a cemetery is completed, our heroes are paid a final tribute by a firing party, and in the presence of an army chaplain the Last Post is sounded also." Perhaps it all comes to this; even in new peace cemeteries in England there is a sense of wilderness, and out there in France and Belgium it may well be that the wand of nature has not yet given an ordered beauty to the solemn scene. "There might, however, be a Tending Committee formed to beautify and keep beautiful the graves of our country's saviours. If anything is done in this direction, we should like to hear of it.—John Bull.

An Australian inventor has given a piano a slightly curved key board so that a player can reach all parts of it with equal effort.

Among the advertisements in a copy of the Danville (Va.) North Star, printed 103 years ago, is one inserted by Joseph Arey, Jr., of Cabot, who announces that he will sell women's shoes for from 60 cents to $1 and men's at from $2 to $3.

The practice adopted by Japanese men in America, of selecting their wives by photograph and having them sent out to this country, has been prohibited by the Japanese Government. There will be no more "picture brides," as the maidens who are thus chosen are called.

Supplying dance partners at sixpence each is one of the features of a big dancing hall in the West End of London. The large enclosures at this hall are reserved for girls without partners. The male dancer is permitted to take his choice for half an hour's dancing.

For a wager of 1,000 francs a French cabman, Chataignon, undertook to smoke 100 strong cigars in two days. In the first 24 hours he had disposed of 66; and, after a two hours' rest, continued his task with such vigor that by noon on the following day the stump of his last cigar was burning his lips.

Two years ago the 9-year-old son of J. R. Moore, a farmer living near Klondike, Tex., while eating blackberries in a tree, got one of the big berries in his ear. In a short time the seed sprouted and the lad began to have trouble with his ear. A specialist called, found that the sprout and the seed, while decayed, had ruined the hearing in that ear. The rotted part of the seed and the sprout were removed.

A Vienna despatch says: "Notwithstanding the city's many deprivations, Vienna celebrated New Year's eve tumultuously. The restaurants, the cabarets and the coffee houses were open until 2.30 o'clock in the morning, after having been crowded all night, while a gala performance was given at the opera. Boxes for this performance sold at 6000 crowns. In the restaurants champagne was served at 900 crowns ($150) a bottle.

Crown Has Many Vicissitudes.

The Hungarian crown, which is reported to have been stolen lately by revolutionists, has suffered many vicissitudes. A King of Bohemia once stole it, but Otto of Bavaria subsequently recovered it. He, in sending it back to Hungary, packed it in a cask, but it was nearly lost on the journey, because the jolting of the wagon threw the cask into a ditch. At a later period Elizabeth, widow of King Albert, appears to have thought it rather a good thing to have with her when she fled to Germany, in case she should ever be financially embarrassed—a piece of forestall which stood her in good stead, since she eventually pawned it to the Emperor Frederick. During the revolution, 200 years later, the unfortunate crown was again in danger of being unlawfully appropriated, and so it was buried in a forest. After remaining in this dim security for fifty years it was subsequently removed to Budapest.

o-day's Messages.

EXCHANGE CRASHES AGAIN.

NEW YORK, Jan. 26. Another crash of international exchange caused British, French and other forms of foreign exchange to drop to new low levels of depreciation here to-day. Bankers and others in foreign bills expressed no surprise at this further demoralization, accepting the situation as a natural and logical outcome of conditions from which no immediate relief is promised.

RSHEVİK REPORT SUCCESSES.

LONDON, Jan. 26. We have occupied Elizabethgrad, Odessa, and continue to advance in a westerly direction," said a communication from the Bolshevik headquarters at Moscow, received to-night.

MUST PAY FINES.

LONDON, Jan. 26. An official statement from Delhi, British India, under date of January 25 says that in the Tochi district the tribal tribesmen continue to refuse bringing in rifles in payment of fines. Tribal tribesmen are incessantly using pickets, the statement says, and they have been informed there will be no cessation of hostilities until the fines assessed against them have been paid.

KILLED AND EATEN BY DOGS.

THE PAS., Mas., Jan. 26. J. F. Egan, trapper, who became lost in a blizzard, was killed by his dog, after he had been overcome by cold and exhaustion, according to the theory of Jack Ford, his partner, who brought the news of his tragic death to The Pas. Egan, according to Ford, had been missing from their shack at North Indian Lake for four days, when he started to search for him. He found the body 25 miles away with the carcass of a husky nearby. The head had been eaten from the body by the ravenous dog.

SUNK BURNING SHIP.

PANAMA, Jan. 26. The American Shipping Board steamer Marne, aboard which an explosion on Saturday afternoon caused a fire, which ignited the oil bunkers, was sunk to-day by shells fired into her by a submarine stationed at Cristobal at the time of the explosion. The Marne was on a voyage from New York to Melbourne with eight thousand tons cargo of general merchandise.

MUCH SHIPPING IN DISTRESS.

BOSTON, Jan. 26. The extent to which storms upset shipping during the past week, was further evidenced to-day in radio messages from distressed steamers scattered over the North Atlantic. The West Corem announced that she was disabled, but expected to reach Bermuda for repairs to-morrow, and the West Zula with her propeller stripped of blades sent word she was going to the Azores to be refitted. The Oskaloosa put in here, reporting in advance from the outer harbor that her steering apparatus was damaged and fuel oil almost gone. The West Isleta wirelessed that she would arrive here to-morrow for repairs. The Clairton, which is towing the disabled steamer Buffalo Bridge, said she was having heavy going with her tow, 390 miles off Halifax, and the Airline which has been in tow, disabled, several days, reported she was being buffeted by stiff gales.

POWHATTAN NEARING PORT.

HALIFAX, N.S., Jan. 26. The United States Army transport Powhattan, disabled at sea, and which for the past two days was adrift in the gale with fottilla of rescue craft standing by, is once more being towed to port. Two United States tugs are slowly but steadily hauling the big, helpless ship to Halifax, and it is now hoped that the Powhattan will be brought to port before night falls.

NEW LINER LAID DOWN.

NEW YORK, Jan. 26. The International Mercantile Marine Company announce that a new triple screw 15,500 ton steamer, for its White Star Dominion Line service between Montreal, Quebec and Liverpool has just been laid down at the yards of Harland and Wolff, Belfast, Ireland. The new vessel will bear the name, Calgary, and will carry 650 cabin passengers, in one class only, and about 2000 in third class.

THE POWHATTAN'S DIFFICULTIES.

BOSTON, Jan. 26. A wireless message intercepted here late yesterday from the army transport Powhattan, which has been disabled off the coast since last Sunday, said that the water was gaining slowly, and that it might be necessary to take off all the crew except a few volunteers. Relief was requested as soon as possible.

BERLIN FEARS TROUBLE.

BERLIN, Jan. 26. The Wilhelmstrasse, to-night, is barricaded and under guard of numerous troops. Patrols of eighteen armoured automobiles and half dozen huge motor trucks loaded with armed troops arrived early in the evening and immediately took up their positions in front of the Government building and shut off all traffic from the thoroughfare. The precautions taken by Minister of Defense Noske, were stimulated, in addition to an assault upon Mathias Erberger to-day, by rumors that the Monarchists would attempt an insurrection on the eve of the former Emperor's birthday, which occurs to-morrow and that the attack was to be primarily directed against the Independent Socialists and Radicals.

From Brigus.

Owing to the intense frost of the past few days the harbour and bay are frozen over.

Mr. Edward Sheehan, of the Anglo American Co.'s Cable Staff at Heart's Content, is home on a few days leave to see his father, who is unwell of late.

Some time ago Messrs. John Leary and Thomas Spracklin paid a visit to the deer-ground inside Brigus Junction and were rewarded by capturing a very large deer. Mr. Leary has made many trips to the deer ground in former years, sometimes he has met with success, at others failure, but his motto seems to be "Try Again."

The large snow falls with which we have been afflicted during the past white back, have made the procuring of firewood impossible. We are told that what was formerly "woods" is now, in reality, "snow-barrens." In consequence there is quite a run on coal here, and every day one sees numerous horse-loads being carted away. It sells for the huge sum of $18.00, to which must be added cartage.

On Saturday morning last, George, the eight-year old son of Mr. S. E. Chafe, Sub-Collector of Customs, met with a very serious and painful accident. He and some companions were sliding on a hill at the bottom of which was a "dump." George slid over the hill, but on approaching the dump, his slide capsized, throwing him on his hip. The occupant of the next slide, was similarly thrown and landed with force on George, with the result of a broken thigh for the latter. He goes out by this morning's train to enter the General Hospital, from which we wish him a speedy and safe return.

Our citizens, who are favoured by having in their possession, that useful—though much abused animal—the mischievous "Ibex" would confer a favour on the tree-owning and loving public, if they would confine those destructive beasts within the limits of their ownership. At present they are allowed to roam over the place "seeking whose" they may devour.

This Morning's Alarm.

At nine o'clock this morning an alarm of fire brought the Central fire apparatus to the home of Capt. Jacob Kean, McDougall Street. Its service was not required, however, as a few pails of water extinguished the fire, which was in a chimney.

Failed to Enter.

The harbor has been frozen solid during the past few days' frost and yesterday evening the S. S. Cape Breton, with a cargo of coal from Sydney, was unable to effect an entrance. This morning, however, she managed to get in to about Shea & Co.'s premises.

Another Body Recovered

Inspector General Hutchings received a message from Constable Quinlan, of Trepassey, stating that one more body from the wreck of the Anton von Driel, has been picked up and buried at St. Shott's. This makes 27 bodies out of 29 lost recovered to date.

Burned to Death at Grand Bank.

A message from Constable Hibbard, of Grand Bank, to the Inspector General states that Nellie Ashcroft, five years old, was burnt to death at that place. No further particulars have been received, but it is supposed that the child was playing near the stove when her clothing caught.

Just Cause for Complaint

The people of Alexander Street who have to get water from the hydrant there, are indignant at the neglect of the Council's employees in not clearing away the ice from the tank which supplies them. It is not good enough to have people bring axes with them when they want a bucket of water.
