CHAPTER V.

Life went on much the same at Lynwood. In place of the gray-haired old lord, a young and handsome one reigned. A gentle, high-bred lady ruled the house, and every one was pleased to obey her. The sisters were very happy, for they loved Mrs. Lynne, who was so kind a mother to them; and, as yet, there was no cloud in the sky.

But destiny was drawing nearer, for Philip was beginning to love Agatha very dearly. There was something in the calm, sweet face that charmed him. He liked the repose, the gentleness, the shy timidity of her manner. She had not any very brilliant accomplishments; she could not sing as Inez did, with a fire and passion that found its way into the depths of every heart. The one dazed and carried by storm; the other stole gently into your heart. When once known, it was impossible not to love Agatha Lynne. She was simply a fair, modest, thoughtful English girl, fresh and blooming as a rose; innocent and guileless as a child; open, frank, candid, full of high principle, sweet-tempered, and gay; not capable, perhaps, of either the deepest joy or the most tragical sorrow; a girl who had thorough command of her thoughts and words; one who would never be led away from what she knew and believed to be her duty. There was not the making either of a heroine of romance or of a tragedy queen in Agatha Lynne. She would be a good wife, a devoted mother, a kindly neighbor, and a steadfast friend. But it was not in her to love "not wisely, but too well." Genius and passion had not marked her as their own. Her life ran, and always would run, in commonplace grooves and channels.

It was this good and gentle girl who attracted the young heir of Lynne. When in her presence, he felt as one who, in the scorching noon-day heat, finds rest and shade. He was a better and truer man when he had talked to her. She never made his heart thrill—she never awoke in him that deep, passionate love he could give, but she calmed and cheered him; she did not fire his ambition, but she taught him more of his every-day duty than Philip had ever known before. So he grew to love her and intended, when the days of her mourning were over, to ask her to be his wife.

Lord Wyverne told Florence that their late guest, now Lord Lynne, had asked to be most kindly remembered to her. But that he found himself too busy to pay his promised visit. If he had observed his daughter attentively, he would have seen her lips quiver and her violet eyes grow dim; but his lordship was just then too busy with a Perigord pie to attend to any one but himself.

And if there were quiet tears shed over a bright hope faded, none knew of it; if a fair young head tossed wearily through the long night, unable to find rest on a pillow that seemed strewn with thorns, no one was any the wiser. Florence Wyverne knew how to keep her own secret.

The year of mourning expired at last, and then Lynwood resumed its usual hospitalities. The terms of the strange will had not been made public. It was the wish of all who were interested in it that it should be so. Lord Lynne was consequently considered as one of the most eligible men in the country. The ladies were pressing in their invitations, and it was very seldom that one refused to

Mrs. Lynne was much attached to Agatha. She stood rather in awe of the brilliant and beautiful Inez, who was so different from the general run of young ladies, so intolerant of little conventionalities, so fatally dowered with the gifts of genius and song, so proud, so haughty, yet at times loving and tender—Inez, whose childhood and girlhood had been spent in that far-distant land, and was an unknown story to them; whose beautiful face paled, whose bright, dark eyes grew dim, when she spoke to her of her Spanish home—she who professed utter indifference and scorn of all love and lovers, while she sang such music as would have charmed a heart of stone. Fiftal, faulty, grand, generous, and hoble, capable of any extreme of good or bad, requiring the training and guidance of a master hand, gifted with the rarest and most wondrous beauty, capable of giving her life for one she loved, she was an enigma to the quiet English lady who ruled at Lynwood. Mrs. Lynne, through her very love for the girl, slightly tyrannised over Agatha, but it was very rarely that she interfered with Inez.

Had the proud, passionate heart spoken yet? Ah, yes. She scoffed at love, but she would have laid down her life at Lord Lynne's feet, content to die if but once he would look upon her as he did upon her sister.

"I never feel as though Inez were one of our own," said Mrs. Lynne to her son one day; "that strange foreign life has made her so different to Agatha. I cannot understand a girl having no stories of her girlhood to relate. She seems to dislike the very name of Spain."

"I quite disagree with you, mother," was the reply. "I believe she loved her early home so much that she cannot endure to hear it mentioned."

Lord Lynne was away from home very frequently during the first few months after his uncle's death. He did not return to Sovernock Castle. Some one there watched, waited, and hoped, but all in vain. He wrote a note to Lord Wyverne, and told him how constantly he was engaged, but that he hoped to see him after Christmas. Lord Wyverne knew exactly what that meant, and he inwardly raged against the poor old lord for his inopportune death.

"It was all going on so charmingly," he said, to himself. "If he had remained here another week, he would have made an offer before he left. He went away too soon."

Lord Wyverne told Florence that their late guest, now Lord Lynne, had asked to be most kindly remembered to her. But that he found himself too busy to pay his promised visit. If he had observed his daughter attentively, he would have seen her lips quiver and her violet eyes grow dim; but his lordship was just then too busy with a Perigord pie to attend to any one but himself.

And if there were quiet tears shed over a bright hope faded, none knew of it; if a fair young head tossed wearily through the long night, unable to find rest on a pillow that seemed strewn with thorns, no one was any the wiser. Florence Wyverne knew how to keep her own secret.

The year of mourning expired at last, and then Lynwood resumed its usual hospitalities. The terms of the strange will had not been made public. It was the wish of all who were interested in it that it should be so. Lord Lynne was consequently considered as one of the most eligible men in the country. The ladies were pressing in their invitations, and it was very seldom that one refused to visit Lynwood, whether for picnic, dinner, or evening party. Mrs. Lynne did the honors of the house gracefully, and no one was more popular than the young lord and his half-bred, gentle mother.

None of the family had been to London during the season. The time of mourning had been spent in the strictest seclusion; but next year Mrs. Lynne was to present the young ladies, and under her auspices they were to make their debut in the world of fashion.

That summer, the one after the death of the late lord, was an unusually fine one—it was also unusually warm; and the sisters spent but little time in-doors. Reading, walking, and sketching in the shady dells of the park—listening to the reading of the world's greatest poems in which Lord Lynne took the keenest delight.

He had not spoken yet. He had grown to love Agatha Lynne, calmly, deeply, and intensely. He thought of her as the one woman whom he should like to have near him through life. He did not know if his love was returned. Agatha was not of the demonstrative kind; but he intended, before he left Lynwood again, to ask her to become his wife.

Some one else had learned to love besides Lord Lynne. With all the passion and warmth of her Southern nature, with all the force of her genius, with that fatal, concentrated fidelity that knows no change, that counts no risk, Inez Lynne loved the handsome debonaire cousin who devoted himself to her sister.

One bright morning in August, the two sisters, with Mrs. Lynne, sat under the great cedar tree. It was too warm to work, to read, or to sketch. Inez declared that the only life endurable on such a morning was that of a bee, who could rest himself at his ease in the very heart of a rose. Agatha, by way of soothing her conscience, held some delicate piece of work in her hand. She was talking to Mrs. Lynne, and Inez was watching the shadow of the trees on the grass.

"There are two gentlemen!" cried Agatha, suddenly. "One is Lord Lynne; but who is that with him?"

"Some one who seems to know you," said Inez, more by way of hiding the crimson flush upon her face than from any need of speech.

"Oh, Inez," cried Agatha, "it is Allan Leigh! How long has he been home, I wonder? How altered he is!"

The two gentlemen walked slowly over the grass.

"I have brought you an old friend," said Lord Lynne, with a smile, to Agatha, "and you, Miss Lynne, a new one."

There was little doubt that poor Allan was an old friend, for he had loved Agatha Lynne for so many years back as he could remember. He had loved her without hope. He knew she would be a great help, while he—although some day he might be comparatively poor. He loved her, but he never told her so. He was too diffident, too-conscious of what he thought his own inferiority, to dream of asking her to be his wife. So he worshipped her at a distance, longing with an unutterable desire for something which should place him in a better position; but the something never came.

"To Err is Human!"

DON'T BE AFRAID OF MAKING MISTAKES; INSTEAD LEARN TO PROFIT BY THEM

It has been said that the man who never makes a mistake never makes anything else—and certainly, the cock-sure type always does seem to come a cropper sooner or later.

If she, or he, has insisted a good deal on her, or his, own perfection, there is very little sympathy showered on them when they are "out of luck."

A man who is so strictly honorable and exact that his precision is framed in the whole town has been made honorary treasurer of a big public fund. He finds that his accounts will not balance by eight pounds odd.

He is so absolutely positive about the correctness of his figures that he is unpleasant to the secretary and offensive to the members of the committee when they suggest possibilities of error. When an independent audit reveals that the error is more in the nature of a foolish mistake—a foolish mistake—a silly slip that a sixteen year old clerk ought not to make—the great "I am" goes down like a pricked balloon.

It is not only mere bounce, it is self-confidence that vanishes under the conviction of a first real blunder. Or take the case of the typist who is loudly contemptuous of every girl in the office because they make mistakes in spelling, and—well, she doesn't.

"There is no excuse for bad spelling," she informs the office at large, "if you have had even a County School education and are not ridiculously careless."

Then one day she types a letter to the chief's most particular client, a learned lord, asking "weather" he could see him that week.

PEOPLE EXPECT TOO MUCH.

The few sarcastic remarks on carelessness made by the chief ranks so deeply that the office atmosphere develops a purple storm-aura, from which the angry tylist emerges minus her job.

It is decidedly apt to make a little human mistake now and again in place of getting upon a pedestal of perfection, which gives one such nasty bruises when the "tipple-over" comes.

Perhaps it is in the long run just as bad to be too perfect as too full of errors. People do not expect such a wonderful lot from the person who never makes any mistakes.

The generalists of adminals who have nothing to learn from their staff, the teachers or scientists who throw aside all text-books because they have reached to perfect knowledge, the businessman or housewives who run their affairs as they did five years ago because they are "not given to making mistakes," and their way is the only right way—all these people are liable to get a nasty shock some day.

A little study of that Book, which never gets out of date, wherein a man is advised to "walk humbly all the days of his life" might be rather useful.

As the old West Country wife said to her man: "Thee be a bigger fool nor me, Tom, for I be in the right of it most times, but thee makes out to be right all the time."—Answers.

Among the Wild Men of Australia.

The generally accepted idea of the physique of the Australian aboriginal is that he is a small, undersized man, with thin legs and under-nourished body.

The early settlers and pioneers who came in contact with the aborigines of the southeastern section of Australia found such men, but then again we find a great contrast in the build of the natives who inhabit the northern and particularly the north-west sections of the continent, writes M. F. Adams, who recently accompanied an expedition into the north-west of Australia.

For instance, the Nor' West scientific expedition "Culwilla" to make an investigation of the Nor' West coast under the leadership of E. J. Stuart of Perth, secured four blacks at Sunday Island, through the courtesy of Sydney Hedley, and these men proved a most useful addition to the party. How unlike the blacks of the southeast—now practically extinct. One member of this fine quartette stood six feet six inches and weighed nearly two hundred pounds.

On the adjacent island to Montgomery Island, a tribe of blacks live whose tribal markings and body ornamentations are said to be the most unique in Australia.

By opening up the skin and by rubbing mud into the incisions, some remarkable electricities are brought about. They closely resemble layers of sausages on the back and shoulders of the native. The mud used is usually obtained from around the roots of the mangrove scrub, which grows in the salt water. When fully developed these raise markings quite soft to the touch.

At long Island there is a wild and most unprepossessing tribe, of tall, scraggy men and women. They are all absolutely nude, the men having long hair and chin whiskers.

President Cosgrave, in Dublin, in correspondence, conducted with De Valera by Senators Douglas and Cosgrave, acting as intermediaries, showed that De Valera insisted upon an election by universal suffrage and an assignment of barracks where their arms would be stored under Republican control. He also claimed the right of the Republicans to sit in the State Parliament without taking the oath prescribed by the Treaty. President Cosgrave refused these terms and declined to enter into further communication with De Valera.

RUINATION OF RUSSIA LAID TO BOLSHEVISM BY FORMER PREMIER.

Paris.—The renewed interest of Western Europe in the Russian problem is evidenced by an article contributed to the magazine Revue des Deux Mondes by Count Witkovskoff, who was Russian minister of finance in 1914 in succession to Count Witte, and who filled the post of premier under the Czar from 1911 to 1914.

Kokovtsoff takes up the present Russian economic situation from every standpoint and endeavors to prove that Bolshevism has, by steady and inevitable stages, brought about the economic ruin of Russia. For the reconstruction of Russia the writer believes that the right of private property must be re-established and that the Bolsheviks must renounce the system of monopolies and capitalism conducted by the Soviet state which, he insists, strangles the economic development of the country. External and internal commerce must become the exclusive prerogative of private initiative; nationalized industry and transportation must be denationalized and, above all, elementary justice must reign in Russia and every Russian must be allowed to breathe freely on his native soil.

To win these and other reforms Kokovtsoff is convinced that the total liquidation of the Soviet regime is essential. He therefore is less conciliatory toward Bolshevism than Basil Maklakoff, Russian ambassador to France, who, in a recent interview with The Associated Press, foresaw the possibility of a unified Russian effort to reconstruct Russia before the total annihilation of the Soviet regime. Further developing his ideas in this respect Ambassador Maklakoff told the correspondent that when essential reforms, the recognition of private property, have been effected and a general rallying to Russia is possible by all Russians of whatever class, he thought the Soviet system would be likely to continue for some time. Even after a radical change in the Russian administration, Russian life and activities would naturally concentrate in the provinces and be more or less outside the control of the central government.

To my mind, the ambassador said, the central government will necessarily be poor and feeble, with a small budget and a limited authority. Russia will organize from the bottom upward, the development of local life and authority will precede that of the central government. When the moderate elements in the Bolshevik party become its leaders the reform will become possible, and then the entire Russian world can co-operate for the reconstruction of their country.

Basil Maklakoff was appointed ambassador to Paris by Kerensky, but before he arrived in France to present his letters of credence the Bolshevik upheaval started the world. He has, however, continued to serve as unofficial ambassador in something of the same sense as Boris Bakmatieff at Washington. He possesses the confidence of the French government and people, to whom he has interpreted

Canadian Trade With U.S. Decreased in 1922.

OTTAWA, Ont.—Canada's foreign trade for 1922 amounted to $1,647,701,892, or an increase of more than $45,000,000 over 1921, according to the report of the federal department of trade and commerce.

Total imports for the year amounted to $762,239,309, the report shows. Total exports reached $884,362,583. The year closed with a favorable trade balance of $122,123,274.

Great Britain was Canada's best customer during 1922 and the United States was second, according to the report. England purchased Canadian products to the extent of $374,751,894, an increase of more than $65,000,000 over 1921, while the United States purchased $340,156,247 worth of goods, an increase of about $14,000,000 over 1921.

A surprising feature of the report is the fact that Canada's purchases from the United States during 1922 showed a decline as compared with 1921, amounting to $506,823,790, as against $555,091,000, a falling off of $48,267,240. Canada's purchases from Great Britain showed an increase in value of more than $13,000,000, jumping from $123,149,776 in 1921, to $136,866,285, last year.

"Columbia" Ready for the Water.

Gloucester's latest addition to the fishing fleet, the Columbia, will be launched about April, or as soon as the ice is out of the Essex River, and will engage in the salt fishery out of that port.

The new schooner, hailed as a contender for honors in the annual international fishermen's race, has been built for fishing rather than for racing, and no fishing trip will be abandoned in order that she may take part in the elimination races to choose the representative of the American fishing fleet, her owners, the Columbia Associates announced recently.

Whether the Columbia will ever gain racing honors or not, however, she will have a racing captain. The owners of the schooner, have signed as skipper Captain Aiden Geale of Yarmouth, N.S., part owner of the schooner Elsie when she lost to the Canadian Bluenose two years ago. Capt. Geale arrived in Gloucester recently to take charge of the Columbia as soon as conditions permit. He states that a great many Nova Scotian fishermen are looking for sites to go in American vessels, and that he expects to have the best crew of salt fishermen for the Columbia that ever sailed on a trip. As soon as the vessel is ready, Capt. Geale will go to Shelburne, N.S., and the Columbia will sail from there to the banks.

If the Columbia ever races the present champion of the fleets, the Bluenose, the schooner would be meeting on an even footing for the first time in the history of the international competition, Gloucester men say. Controversies of the past in connection with the races have had as their basis largely the fact that the majority of the American fishermen were built for gathering their catch and speeding to market with the fish still fresh, while Canadian fishermen catch and salt their fish in leisurely manner and carry larger cargoes back to port.

The Columbia is still on the stocks at the yards in Essex where the Henry Ford, unsuccessful in last year's international race, was built. She was designed by Arthur D. Story, designer of the Ford. The new schooner's masts will not be so high as the Ford's, and according to the owners, she will come within every requirement laid down by the international race committee.

While a fruit stain is still moist cover it with powdered starch. When dry rinse in cold water and wash in the ordinary way.

Some Remarks on Soap.

ITS ORIGIN.
The Origin of Soap—in old times, "Sope"—is enshrouded in mystery. Reasoning, however, from cause to effect, we find that Soap must have derived its origin from an awakened consciousness that cleanliness is desirable; and desirable not merely to him who practices that virtue, but also to those with whom he may come into contact. In any case, the Age of Soap must have preceded by the Age of Dirt, a persevering regime which has pursued us even to the present day, when we still number in our midst the "Great Unwashed," a fading assembly, however, hugely diminished from the great army of the Soapless of former days.

Some suppose that the origin of Soap partook somewhat of the origin of roast pork, arising, according to the late Charles Lamb, from a domestic mishap which resulted in the burning down of a house which contained a number of immature swine. Such a theory is extremely plausible. Some fortuitous mixture of fat at the cooking place, mingled accidentally with potash, in the shape of wood-ashes, resulted in a compound which aroused surprise and pleasure by its cleansing and millifying properties.

Man kind owes a heavy debt of gratitude to the first—unknown—Soap-maker, whose name, alas! must ever remain behind an impenetrable veil, far aloof from the researches of the historian or biographer. How true it is that—
"Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its fragrance on the desert air."
ANTIQUITY OF SOAP.
Soap is mentioned in terms of respect by many of the ancient classics, and at least two of the Biblical prophets. It has gradually so increased in public esteem as to be accepted at last as a measure of civilization itself, for it has been deemed by a number of competent minds, that the refinement of a people is largely dependent on the amount of its consumption of Soap. To advance the cause of civilization, is one of the proudest missions to which man can apply himself, and a sense of the dignity of their occupation is seen in the establishment of the "Corporation of Soap Boilers" in the reign of King Charles the First. It is presumable that the members of the Corporation had largely advanced their art beyond the basis on which Soap was manufactured in the fourteenth century, when it was compounded chiefly of goats' fat and beech ash. But progress is a law of industry.

SOAP AS AN INDUSTRIAL PRODUCT.
The simplicity of Soap as an article of domestic utility causes many to suppose that Soap is as simple in its composition as in its use. That is a great mistake. Soaps are as widely different in quality as in variety. Few manufacturers have so wide and (it may be said of some) so undesirable a field for their operations as the Soap-maker. Cheap chemicals, mineral Oils, resin, inferior grades of fat, fish oils—all lie ready to his hand; for, whatever the quality of the product may be, it is still "Soap." The nature of the ingredients may be disclosed in the tablet, but it is unerringly disclosed "in the wash." The purchaser's natural desire for economy—one of the most elusive of the virtues—combined with the Soap-maker's craft or craftiness, is too frequently rewarded by sore, red hands, chafed skin, a difficulty in obtaining a lather, or a lather too wasteful, discoloured clothes, etc. The domestic budget is often distinguished by one of two extremes—a price either extravagantly low or fantastically high. An ultra cheap soap generally entails the consequences mentioned.

Minds That Never Forget
A famous scientist recently declared that practically every great stage in the world's history has been rich in men with remarkable memories. The present time is certainly no exception to the rule.
At the top of the list may be placed Mr. Bonar Law; who has more than once amazed the House of Commons by his wonderful achievements of memory. Perhaps the greatest of these was the War Budget speech which he made six or seven years ago. Although the speech bristled with figures, involving millions of pounds, he held the attention of the House for nearly two hours, during which time he referred only once to his notes, which were pencilled on an envelope! King George has a marvellous memory for faces. His Majesty has only to meet a person once and that person's features are permanently registered in his mind.

His Majesty has said that the faculty is with him almost entirely a matter of training. Realizing, as a young man, that a good memory would one day prove of immense value to him, he made a point of noting the facial characteristics of everyone he met, recalling them at the end of the day.
Most of us are far to fond of talking about our bad memories, without trying to improve them.
In many cases the "jot it down" habit is responsible for a bad memory, simply because it denies the mind the exercise that is necessary if it is to be efficient.
One good memory training exercise consists of resolving to read a given passage of a book or an article at a certain date and hour.

You might say to yourself, for example, that you will read this article over again two days hence at seven o'clock in the evening.
The period that elapses between making the resolution and carrying it out is a matter for the individual to decide, but, generally speaking, the best course is to increase it gradually.
In an exercise like this the will, of course, plays an important part. Both the will and memory are, in fact, benefited by it. Weeks may pass before an improvement is noted, but if the exercise is persisted it is bound to follow.
That's Curious!

New Aeroplane Chassis Assures Safe Land
LONDON, March—An airplane chassis that is practically "crashable" is the remarkable product of a British inventor. The landing chassis locks to the ground like any ordinary landing gear, but it is fitted with ingenious system of pneumatic buffers which prevent accidents when the machine is being landed.
In a recent test of the new carriage Herbert Hicker, holding the non-stop flight record, demonstrated that it would not be smashed by the shock of a full speed into the ground. The height of 30 feet at an angle would have turned an ordinary plane over on its nose. The carriage absorbed the shock without even bouncing.
A butcher's wife is suing for divorce because he locked her in the cooler for two hours. "The only way I could stop her from doing that," he declared.

ITS BENEFICIAL EFFECTS.
The beneficial effects of Soap were experienced by both those who produced, and those who consumed, that commodity. Soap-making prospered to such a degree that, in the eighteenth century, it attracted the attention of the Exchequer, then extremely hungry for new sources to revenue. Historians and economists have been eloquent on the initiative of the Window tax, the Paper tax, and Tax on the Press, but comparatively little has been heard of a Tax on Cleanliness, which, enacted in 1712, was not removed until 1853. The amount of the tax extorted from the users of soap was actually more than the soap cost to make, and was patiently submitted by the inhabitants of these isles for 140 years. Who shall say that patience is always a virtue?

All Vienna Danced.

THE WORLD'S PRESS.

LESSON OF THE RUHR.

London Daily News.—If the French in the pursuit of achievement of their aims, fall to obliterate the impression which is now apparent to every open-minded visitor to Germany, they will have lighted "fires of hatred in every German heart" which in years to come only blood will quench. That is the warning which this "dreadful conquest of the Ruhr" contains alike for France and Europe.

TWAS BUT A STEP.

London Morning Post.—We are now beginning to see that the Washington Conference cannot stand by itself, and that it is to succeed and pave the way for a curtailment of armaments and for a durable peace it must be supplemented by a complete military agreement between the two Powers who can alone impose their authority on Europe.

PEOPLE AND MORE PEOPLE.

Johannesburg Times.—In South Africa to-day so much is piled upon the comparatively few, if only we could spread things out more, the whole of South Africa would benefit. So much is cramped to-day simply because the country is under-peopled.

DEEDS, NOT WORDS.

Natal Advertiser.—Saying pleasant or heroic things about the value of publicity and about Durban's title to advertise itself is all very well in its way. But "fine words butter no parsnips." What is wanted is that those who have faith in this town and in the various movements designed to promote the well-being of the town shall take their coats off and do some really hard work in seconding the utterances of half a hundred platforms.

FIGHTING DISEASE.

Washington Post.—The human frame has always been and will always be liable to disease, and the long history of mankind shows a continuous fight against the many ills which flesh is heir to. The contest is, indeed, an unequal one, for in the long run disease always gets the upper hand and brings on death. Theoretically, the elimination of all forms of disease would mean the indefinite prolongation of earthly existence, unless it were terminated by violence or accident, but while that is an ideal to be striven for though never attained, the discovery of means to prevent or cure certain specific maladies goes on apace.

MARTIAL LAW IN EGYPT.

London Times.—Those who are best acquainted with the complicated situation in Cairo know that martial law in some ways suits Egyptian Governments very well. It enables them to enjoy an authority which they might otherwise fail to exercise; it empowers them, for instance, to raise a levy on the foreign communities from which the Capitulations debar them in normal conditions.

JOHN BULL TO-DAY.

London Sunday Express.—We have endured such sorrows, and carried such burdens as have seldom been known to men. Yet we stand to-day honored among the peoples of the earth, still strong, but with the strength of the giant, and not the tyrant.

REAL PATRIOTISM.

Natal Advertiser.—What is greatly to be feared is that too many men talk of Empire because Empire serves their ends, and too few talk of it because they want to serve its ends. The touchstone of all loyalty is service. The surest test of a man's patriotism is his readiness to give up something in order to advance it further on the path of accomplishment.

THE MOTHER'S ATTITUDE.

London Morning Post.—It should be British policy to give Canada a strong interest in the maintenance of an Imperial trade system. We believe, for example, that there would have been none of this business of a Fisheries Treaty with the United States if the Mother Country had not abandoned the preferential system, and had not obstinately repulsed all the Canadian advances towards a renewal of the old and intimate trade relations.

Mental Tonics.

It should not be left solely to lawyers to work with a will. Promise is good; intention is better; performance is best. It is far easier to become a hero than to live up to it afterwards. The reason why you don't get on may be because you don't get up. The really conceited man is he who is so conceited as to think he isn't. "Every little helps" is a proverb, and not an excuse for meanness.

CHINESE BANDITS HOLD WHITE WOMEN.

PEKIN, May 10. It is believed that the two white women being held by the Suchow bandits in the hills back of Lincheng are Miss E. F. Fleming of England and Mrs. Sanderson of the United States. It is impossible yet to issue exact lists of those who have escaped or have been freed and those still held, owing to fragmentary information coming in. Several Americans reported missing are believed to have been amongst those captured. A message has been received from the Relief agent at Tsaochow saying that all foreign captives are being released except Mr. Misso, an Italian Attorney.

Try These Hearing Tests

Now You May Ward Off Deafness. How far can you hear a conversation carried on in ordinary tones? Normally you should be able to hear every word spoken at a distance from you of twenty-three yards.

If, however, you are one of the increasingly large number of men and women whose hearing, according to a noted ear specialist, is not so good as it should be, you will quite likely find yourself straining to catch words spoken farther away from you than twenty yards.

Deafness is undoubtedly increasing, a state of affairs for which modern life, with its incessant noise and racket, is largely to blame.

At the same time, there is no excuse for neglect. If you have the slightest suspicion that your hearing is losing its acuteness, see a doctor at once.

Meanwhile, here are one or two tests which you can try for yourself. Can you hear the ticking of a watch held five feet away in a quiet room? If so, you can take it that your hearing is normal.

Ears Are Always Clean.

How do you sit in church or chapel or in other meeting-places of the kind? If you notice that the men of the congregation are sitting back in their seats while you are leaning slightly forward, you may take it for granted your hearing is defective.

The moment you detect yourself straining to catch ordinary sounds you should consult an ear specialist. The first symptoms of approaching deafness are often evidenced in this way. Some people have symptoms of ear trouble without being aware of the fact. Failing eyesight is quickly discovered, but not so failing hearing powers.

A common saying among doctors is, "Never stick anything smaller than your elbow in your ear"—advice which continues to be ignored by most people.

Each of the deafness which often inflicts us later in life is the result of senseless "boring" of the ears by mothers, nurses, and others, among whom the use of the hairpin or match-stick is still a popular means of cleaning the ears.

It is worth while noting that the inside of the ears of those engaged in the dirtiest work is invariably perfectly clean, a provision of Nature which is too often overlooked.—Pearson's Weekly.

Young Swedish Prince.

MAKES DEBUT AS CRITIC.

STOCKHOLM.—A royal prince as a paid dramatic critic is the latest sensation in the literary world of Stockholm. Prince Wilhelm, second son of King Gustaf, has been appointed staff writer of Idun, the leading Swedish weekly for women. His debut as critic was hailed as a success, and he has covered several first performances of new plays in the Stockholm and Gothenburg theatres.

The prince has already made his mark as one of the notable young authors of Sweden. He has published several volumes of poetry and some of his verse has gained considerable popularity by being chosen for public recitals. He has also written a number of short stories, two of which have been published in leading American magazines. The best known of these, entitled "The Pearls," is decidedly dramatic in quality and has been filmed by a Swedish company. One of the prince's latest works, "Among Dwarves and Goblins in Africa," is a colorful and lively description of his recent hunting and exploring trip in Africa. A translation of this work is about to appear in England, and it is reported that negotiations are being carried on for an American edition.

The prince is exceedingly democratic and strongly objects to any special consideration as a writer because of his royal status.

Viceroy Warns India Against Disorders

CALCUTTA.—England will use all her resources to oppose possible disorder in India. Lord Reading, the Viceroy, told his audience during an address here recently before the Associated Chambers of Commerce of India. He was referring specifically to the resolutions adopted by the Indian National Congress at Gaya, one of which was to the effect that the boycott of the legislative councils should be continued. The Viceroy held that these resolutions did not voice the real sentiment of India, and said that the Government was prepared to put down any disorder which might arise.

"Those who have India's interests at heart," he continued, "cannot but deeply deplore the unfortunate resolutions recorded at Gaya. I shall not dwell on them for I do not believe that in these resolutions I hear even a faint echo of the real voice of India or of those who serve her truly. I will not attach too great importance to these threats. A vigilant watch will, however, be kept on these preparations, and I can give you my assurance that my government will use all its resources to combat and quell the forces of disorder should they become manifest. I know that, if there should be need, I can look with confidence to the support of all responsible opinion in this task."

Referring to industrial conditions the speaker said: "The general economic condition of India at this moment is hopeful. Crops are good. Unlike last year, the balance of trade is now in India's favor. Export trade is better, and offers promise; tea has had a remarkable revival; the outlook for the jute mills is more promising.

"The interests of India in particular demand that there should be confidence in the internal situation; within and without India there should be an atmosphere of trust that all is well with India. India is marching steadily, constitutionally and peacefully to a more complete expression of herself, to more assured prosperity, to a higher civilization, to her ultimate goal of self-government, and to a great place in the Empire and the world."

The members of the Holy Name Society, St. Patrick's Parish, will meet in the old school immediately after prayers tonight. By order C. E. JARDINE, Secretary.—may10.11

The Fogo Election.

The returns in the Fogo election which came in from that district last evening show that although he was not elected, Mr. Joseph Long has achieved a victory against Coakerism no less brilliant and gratifying than that accomplished by Mr. Monroe and his colleagues in Bonavista Bay. A turn over of 134 votes would have elected him, as his opponents majority was only 266. In 1919 Mr. Hibbs, the Coaker candidate, defeated Mr. Oake by a majority of 1256. A consideration of these figures will give an idea of the splendid work in the cause of freedom and clean Government accomplished by Mr. Long. The total number of votes polled in Fogo in 1919 was 1760, of which 1598 were in favor of Mr. Hibbs and only 252 were recorded for Mr. Oake. When a majority is changed from 1256 to 266 it is a plain indication that the people of the North are beginning to think and one can readily conclude what would happen the Coaker candidate had the election not been held till next November. The edifice of Coakerism built up on principles diametrically opposed to individual liberty and freedom of conscience and the true ethics of Responsible Government is surely crumbling. It has been battered, sapped and ruined by the onslaught of logic and truth hurled at it by Mr. Long, Mr. Monroe and the other Bennett candidates in the North and the next attack will see it falling in ruins and never again to have power to exercise its baneful and withering influence over the political destinies of Newfoundland.

"A Glorious Victory."

Yes! Outerbridge was defeated, and defeated badly by Warren in Fortune Bay district, but to judge from the crowing of the Advocate and the Mail one would naturally be led to infer that it was indeed a glorious Government victory. Of course it was nothing of the kind. Private messages from Coomb's Cove and Belleoram state that while the poll for the Opposition was ghastly, still they feel that it should be publicly pointed out that the 339 votes which Mr. Outerbridge received represented over fifty per cent of the votes polled in the very few places he was enabled to visit after being jammed off Sagona Island for over a fortnight on the Kyle. On nomination day Mr. Outerbridge walked four miles over the rough ice to Western Head, and in the short time left before Polling Day it was only possible for him to visit the half dozen small settlements which lie in the over-road section between Harbour Breton and Belleoram. Viewing the above, therefore it is at once apparent that it was a one-sided campaign all through, due principally to the fact that Mr. Warren was already the standing member for the district and also to the fact that both Fortune and Hermitage Bays had no mails since the middle of January. But to ascribe it (as the Government press have done) the victory of the Government over the Bennett Party on the question of policy or merit is the veriest piffle if, as stated, the Opposition candidate secured over fifty per cent. of the votes of the very few people whom he had the opportunity and pleasure of meeting.

Writs Issued.

DR. CRON SUES PRIME MINISTER. Yesterday a writ was issued against the Prime Minister, Sir R. A. Squires, by Mr. A. B. Morin, K.C., acting on behalf of Dr. Charles Cron of Harbor Grace. Dr. Cron claims that his reputation and professional standing have been damaged to the extent of $20,000 because of statements which the Prime Minister is alleged to have made at a political meeting.

WRET AGAINST DAILY NEWS.

Yesterday a writ was served on the publishers of the Daily News at the suit of Mr. Harry Winter, who claims $5,000 damages for an alleged libel contained in a telephone message from Clarke's Beach and published during the election.

Fogo Count Finished.

COAKER CANDIDATE RETURNED. The result of the ballot taken in Fogo District shows that Coakerism is decaying in this Union stronghold even faster than in either Bonavista or Trinity. The count began at 5 p.m. yesterday, and the first bulletin showed Grimes (Gov.) 690; Long (Opp.) 403. The final count at 8 p.m. was Grimes 1121; Long 855. In the 1919 election the Coaker candidate had a majority of 1,256 whereas it is now only 266. Mr. Long, like the other Opposition candidates, has achieved remarkable results, when the forces against which he fought are considered. Mr. Long's vote can be considered a victory. He deserves the gratitude of the country on his plucky fight.

IN CHARGE OF BALLOT BOXES.

Constable P. Devine, of Harbor Main, arrived in the city yesterday in charge of the ballot boxes used in the district in the recent election.

Mr. Sinnott Addresses Loyal Constituents.

Flacencia, May 9.—With the count finished, Flacencia and St. Mary's District, emphatically shows the country that her people do not want Coakerism and the Government of mismanagement. The glorious victory of the Bennett candidates shows that the voters of Flacencia and St. Mary's cannot be bought.

Mr. Sinnott, who was present at the count, in a few well-spoken words very sincerely thanked the people for their kind support to him and his colleagues on returning them to power for another term. He emphatically told them that no stone would be left unturned for the betterment of the district.

He said that he felt sorry for the defeat of their leader, Mr. John R. Bennett, and that the country, especially Harbor Grace, had lost one whom he considered to be one of the best men who could be had to bring old Newfoundland back to prosperity. The country, he said, should be very proud of the glorious victory won by Sir M. P. Cashin against such odds. Considering the noble stand Sir Michael took at the start of the campaign, he was well worthy of such a victory.

Stern Post for Capto.

HEAVY CASTING ARRIVES BY ROSALIND. A new stern post for S. S. Capto, weighing about eight tons, arrived by S. S. Rosalind. The heavy piece of casting was landed from the steamer shortly after her arrival and placed aboard a lighter for conveyance to the dock premises. The Capto's repairs, which were somewhat delayed awaiting the arrival of the stern post, will be completed in about a week.

Work and not Feasting.

The Government are feasting while the people are looking for bread. The middle of May is at hand and the country is as dead as if it were the middle of winter. What is going to be the end? In former years the 15th of May the city would be alive with business bustle and the outport men would be here in their thousands taking supplies for the Fishery. What a contrast to-day! Most of the men who have come here this week are seeking passages by the steamers to get out of the country. As for spring fishing business Water firms are closed up and others are just waiting and don't know what to do. It is well understood that the fisherman cannot produce cured codfish this season at existing costs and charges for outfit in view of the probable foreign market price. Something will have to be done. The Prime Minister and his lieutenants are living on the fat of the land, while hundreds of poor creatures are standing at the corners without food and without work. Nero fiddled while Rome was burning. Nero elected rich families in the city which defied the Prime Minister to look out for their wants are hungry. We again advise the Government that the situation is very serious and they should get down to work and find labor for the people.

Barque "Alice A. Leigh."

A REMARKABLE MARINE PICTURE. During the past two weeks hundreds of people have admired a painting entitled "Barque Alice A. Leigh" which is on exhibition at S. E. Garland's Bookstore. The work, which is done on velvet, is remarkable for its wonderful light and shadow effects. It is a night scene with a partly obscured moon, showing the Barque Alice A. Leigh under full sail and a large steamer with all her lights aglow. The work shows high technical skill and is a credit to the artist, who we learn, is a native of the city—Capt. W. W. Green. It may be interesting to learn that for some time he was chief officer on the vessel which is the subject of the painting. Capt. Green has spent his lifetime on the sea and studied navigation under Mr. Frank Doyle.

Here and There.

$1,000 for 10c. is a pretty good investment, you'll admit. Buy a few tickets in the C. L. A. Election Sweepstake and try your luck.—may10.31

SATURDAY'S HUGBY.—The City line-up on Saturday will be minus the well-known players, Burns, the Scottish forward, and Moore, the Marlborough half-back. The City aggregation will be greatly strengthened by Capt. Goodfellow, J. Paterson, M. Job Taylor and A. C. Bruce.

West Coast Fishery.

A message to the Assistant Collector of Customs from Gaultois yesterday, states the schooner K. C. Gordon had arrived there hauling for fifty quintals of codfish. Owing to the ice conditions on the coast this season the winter fishery has been almost a blank.

CHANGE OF OFFICERS.

Field of the Prospero goes in charge of the Fortia, which leaves for the Northwest Saturday morning. Capt. Connors and his officers are remaining ashore for the trip.

The 1923 Election Reviewed.

The Price of Victory.

The conduct of the present Government since polling day makes it apparent that there is something about their victory which in the main portends a suspicion that the victory longed for is far different from the one recorded. To look at it in a broad sense one would reasonably designate the Prime Minister and his elected members as poor losers, this is correctly recalled by their arrogant, cowardly, and much to be avoided conduct particularly since the various counts were declared. Whatever the future may hold for the elected members of the Coaker-Squires combination, let it be what it might it must be honestly and truthfully admitted they are not over sanguine and rightly so for many reasons chiefly amongst them is the fact that an election was held at a time when it was improper and illegal and that hundreds of voters were deprived of the franchise. That in order to retain power a snap election with all the inconvenience attending it, prompted those who had the most to gain to deprive thousands from learning the issues at stake. Whilst the country has spoken, yet the constitution adopted to a British Dominion by right of self government has been grossly violated and that by the Government itself. Notwithstanding all these and other facts the Prime Minister has suffered severe defeats in his' and other districts. To view the outcome of the first, the Prime Minister despite a scandalous manipulation of public monies to secure his personal election was thrown from the head of the poll to the last, and a humiliating last at that. In 1919 Sir Richard Squires was elected first on the ticket in St. John's West. In 1923 he and his colleagues were opposed by two men who contested St. John's West for the first time. Mr. Hunt who entered the field two months ago and Sir Michael Cashin, who for 31 years held the safe constituency of Ferryland, relinquished it to challenge the Prime Minister. The scandalous expenditures of the Premier and Dr. Campbell to purchase power are only too well known for comment at present. (Details of which will be learned during the next session of the Legislature.) This added to the many unfair and unwarranted insinuations and the conduct of the well paid supporters of the Government failed ignominiously to serve the purpose intended, with the result, that not only was Sir Richard Anderson Squires displaced from head of the poll and that two new men in his district defeated him, but he barely secured his own election by the small margin of four votes and his two colleagues were utterly defeated. The story of Conception Bay and the contemptible propaganda circulated in certain sections in two of the districts is now accepted as the trick that the Government "had up their sleeve," which was to be sprung at the last moment in order to defeat Mr. W. A. MacKay, Mr. J. R. Bennett and his colleagues. That the so-called stunt succeeded in deluding a certain class of people in these districts originated by well known sectarian treachery in St. John's who, for years, has thrived on such methods was approved of by any Prime Minister is hardly creditable. The scandals which followed the 1919 elections are but myths to the many which have already come to light and which will in time be revealed ere many months have passed. The new historic Woodford Affidavit and other exposures, great as they were, are only passing incidents compared with the methods of the tricksters who tried every possible means to hoodwink the electorate and appealed to the base minds of a very small section which was sufficient to serve their miserable purpose. That men who for years enjoyed the respect and goodwill of their fellow countrymen, would stoop to such degrading depths as to use their own religious emblems as instruments to buy their place and power proves conclusively the unseemly and despicable methods employed to save the face of the Government. If this is the victory that the Squires-Coaker Government is satisfied to claim and their organs boast off, then it is one which any fair minded, honest, sane, clean and independent British subject will have reason to welcome and regret. The price of such victory is too great for commendation and if congratulations are in order they must be offered to the leader and party that did not or would not countenance such sordid conduct and deeds.

Its better to lose with a conscience clean. Than to win by a trick unfair. It's better to fail, and to know you have been beaten. Fighting the fight on the square. Than to claim the glory of a far off goal. And the cheers he had met defeat. And to know deep in your inmost soul, A cheat you must live and die.

Who wins by trick may take the prize, And at first may think it sweet; But many a day in the future lies, Then he'll regret he had met defeat. For the man who lost shall be glad at heart. And will wish with his head on high, While his conqueror knows he must play the part. Of a cheat and a living lie.

The prize seems fair when the fight is on. But save it is truly won. You will wish to change when the crowds have gone. For it stands for a false deed done. And it's better you never should reach the goal. Than ever success to buy. At the price of knowing down in your soul, That your glory is all a lie.

Col. Knox-Niven Dies in London.

Lady Reid received a cable this morning from London containing the sad news that Col. Knox-Niven had passed away last night. Col. Knox-Niven is well known in St. John's, as he had spent a considerable time here as A.D.C. to our former Governor, Sir Alexander Harris. He has since been residing in London, but paid a visit to Newfoundland a little over a year ago. In 1918 Col. Knox-Niven married Miss Lois Reid, only daughter of Sir William and Lady Reid. To the bereaved the Telegram offers its sincerest sympathy.

Spencer College Exhibition.

VICE-REGAL PARTY IN ATTENDANCE. An exhibition of work done by the pupils of Spencer College was held last evening at 8 o'clock. Lady Allardrye, accompanied by Miss Allardrye and attended by Captain Goodfellow, M.C. were present and Captain H. and Mrs. Outerbridge as well as a number of the directorate. A concert programme was also held which included an exhibition of athletics under the instruction, Miss Ely Nash, dancing, skipping and other events. Lady Allardrye presented Captain Marion Wood, of the Basketball team, with a silver cup as her team had won the most points. The guests inspected the Kindergarten rooms under Miss Paris as well as the art work under the direction of Miss K. O'D. Kelly. The Needlework Department, under Miss Brommer's instruction, also came in for a share of merited approval. The balance of the musical programme was then carried out. A difficult piano solo by Miss Shirley Green was heartily applauded and the execution reflected credit on the College. A part song, "Friendship," was pleasingly rendered by the pupils and was also warmly applauded. Several other items made the affair enjoyable to all and the programme concluded with a flag song called the "Union Jack" and the National Anthem.

Ascension Thursday.

It is the Feast of the Ascension of our Blessed Lord. Tradition states that forty days after Easter Our Lord ascended to the last time to his disciples in Jerusalem. The eleven apostles and about 500 Disciples were present. It was noonday when He appeared to them and He led them to the Mount of Olives. Here lifting up His hands He blessed them and as He spoke He rose and a bright light shined upon Him out of their sight. He received the Ascension is the last of the wonderful of those miracles which Jesus Christ deluged to confer upon faith and to render us abiding certain of the divine nature of the Christian religion.

Fogs Increase Crime.
Unless you wear a wrist watch, don't be too ready to tell a man the time in a fog; you may lose your watch.

To the petty criminal the fog is a good friend; he has only to snatch your watch and bolt. Before he has time to raise the alarm he has vanished, swallowed up in the fog that will baffle his pursuers.

A burglar, too, can carry his bag of house-breaking tools in comparative safety in a fog. On a clear night, he would instantly arouse the suspicions of any policeman he might pass, but the fog hides him from everyone.

Window-smashing increases a hundred per cent on a foggy night. It is so simple for the thief to dash a stone through the window, grab all the jewellery he can, and bolt with his ill-gotten gains with little fear of capture.

To insure himself further against subsequent detection, the thief can pass the stone straight on to an accomplice, and then, if overtaken, protest his apparent innocence.

A thick fog will enable several roughs to attack and rob a man in a comparatively crowded street.

A dense pea-souper always makes one slightly bewildered, and the sudden attack by three men, handy with a gas, will take the unfortunate pedestrian off his guard. Then, without sound or cry from him, his pockets will be rifled and his assailants gone into the fog, though there may be people within ten yards at the time.

A fog, too, is the school of pick-pockets, and many a young snatcher has learnt his art in a thick blanket of mist. It is the amateur's chance, for even if he is detected he can make good his escape.—Ez.

In Memoriam.

THOMAS COLBOURNE.

Another "landmark" is removed by the passing of Thomas Colbourne on the night of April 4th, at Wild Eight, N.D.E., a well known and highly respected resident of that place. Mr. Colbourne was born in Trillivillage in 1840 and removed with his family to Wild Eight, in the early 70's and set to work to clear up a home in the Virgin forest, he being among the early settlers of that place, and for some years followed the codfishery, as master and owner of a fishing schooner, and was one of the successful fishermen farmers. He didn't believe in having all his eggs in one basket. When the mine started here at Little Bay, in the 70's, Mr. Colbourne's uncle, the late Robert Colbourne, being the original discoverer of Little Bay Mine, this, and the other considerations, induced Mr. Thomas Colbourne to give up the uncertain codfishery business, and betake himself to carpentering at the mine, and working his land, vegetables of course, being in good demand at the mine, and later becoming interested in prospecting for the Little Bay Mining Company and others, he was prospecting with a Mr. Wilson from Nova Scotia, when they discovered what is now known as the "Lady Pond mine, a few miles from here, and from which several thousand tons of very high grade copper ore was shipped. The deceased was a real old round son of Terra Nova, built his own schooner and sailed her farmed his own land, observing prospector, and last, but not least, a good home neighbour, and a kind husband and father. The writer was intimately acquainted with Mr. Colbourne since 1883, and has travelled a good many miles with him in search of that which we believed "The Great Creator of the Universe" put in the earth for man's use, and for man to find and take out.

Now the labourers task is o'er, Now the battle day is past, Now upon the farther shore Laid the voyager at last, Father in thy gracious keeping Leave me now thy servant sleeping.

CARD PARTY AND DANCE AN UNQUALIFIED SUCCESS.

Upwards of 200 people attended the card party and dance under the auspices of the Gaelic League in the T. A. Armoury last night. The prizes for the card tournament were won by Miss May Ryan and Mrs. R. Sullivan (1st) and Mrs. J. Hand and Miss Margaret Connors (2nd). After the card party had finished the gathering was treated to a delicious supper, which was prepared by the lady friends of the League. The dance followed and was interspersed with songs by Messrs. Sullivan, Duder and Dillon which were heartily encored, while a recitation by Miss L. Shortall was cleverly executed. An added attraction to the general enjoyment of the evening's entertainment was the exhibition of typical Irish dancing by the members of the League. The G.C.C. Band was in attendance and rendered excellent music for the dances. The League are to be congratulated on last night's success, and it is hoped that further amusements of this nature will follow in the near future.

King of the Cherokees.

The Englishman, Sir Alexander Leitch, was induced in 1779 by the wife of his wife, to sail to America and had little thought that within a year he would become famous as the King of the Cherokees. In this honor was conferred upon him within a short time of his arrival among the Cherokees. As he had attended a meeting of the Cherokees at Nequisee. When he returned to England he brought six medals with him. They appear to be King George II. The "King of the Cherokees" laid his crown at King George's feet, the Indians also doing homage, and presenting to his majesty four scalps signifying their prowess in warfare and four eagles' tails, an emblem of victory. They were objects of great interest to the English people and Sir Alexander was much feted. After the departure of the Indians for their native land, the one time king dropped out of public notice.

Unjust Accusation.

Mrs. Miller had just engaged a new maid. She was Irish, and not particularly well-trained. She always did the wrong thing at the wrong time, and if by any chance she ever did the right thing she did it in such a way as to make it appear wrong. Gladys Miller was just 19 years old, and she often had her hands around for the evening. On one of these occasions Gladys and her beau were whispering sweet nothings to each other in the drawing room, when Bridget walked into the room without giving the least warning of her approach. "Bridget," said Gladys, severely, the next day, "your manners are very bad. You should not come into the room so suddenly when Mr. Parkins is passing the evening with me." "Sudden!" exclaimed Bridget, with disgust, "and is it sudden you call it, an' me wid me ear to the blessed keyhole a full three-quarters of an hour before"—Answers, London.

English Teachers to Study America.

London, March—That school children of England may be given a better understanding of America, a fund is being raised here to provide annual vacation trips to the United States for teachers in the elementary schools. The idea was proposed by Mrs. Alfred Lyttleton, who accompanied Lady Astor on her tour of the States last year. It is hoped that by next summer the fund will be large enough to send at least one teacher. As the foundation grows, the number will be increased. Teachers will be selected by vote from the various counties.

The impressions they bring home will not be confined to those of superficial sight-seers, who are lucky to get a contact with American life closer than is provided by hotel rooms, street crowds, theatres, rubberneck buses, excursion steamers and the bill-boarded landscapes from a train window. Through the English Speaking Union, Mrs. Lyttleton is arranging for the teachers to be invited into American homes in various cities, and, unlike many other tourists who go to the States, they won't hurry home after a rather hasty inspection of New York, Boston and Washington, with the idea that they have seen America.

Similar intimate glimpses into the homes of the English is offered Americans visiting this country through the work of Mrs. Lyttleton's committee.

If one goes to the trouble to get in touch with the committee, he will probably be asked into a home, shown into the garden, invited to stay for tea—another national institution of which he has often read—and perhaps meet a few friends who have come to the home of his host for this afternoon rite.

Cannibal Plants.

Just as man is plagued by noxious insects, so trees and plants are subject to many parasites, both vegetable and animal.

One of the commonest causes of disease in plants is the fungus, which is one of the lowest of a great group of plants, and includes the well-known forms of the mushroom and toad stool.

They are spread by spores somewhat like microbes and like these, they seem to prefer living tissue or decaying animal matter, though many thrive on dead vegetable matter.

It is these kind of fungi which feed on living plants that are so important to man, for their power of destroying plants is enormous. Thus a form of fungus known as rust on wheat in the prairie region of Canada, in the year 1917, caused an estimate loss of one hundred million bushels, worth from twenty-five to fifty million pounds sterling.

Rubber alone is affected by fifty different kinds of harmful fungi of which, all together some fifty thousand species are known.

It is only fair, however, to remember that many fungi are useful to man, such as the yeasts, which give us beer, wine, vinegar and so on, and that other class, which plays so important a part in the ripening of cheese and fruits, and in curdling of butter. Even the distinguishing qualities of the best wines are due largely to the fungus which collects on the grape berries and is known as "bloom."

Just Folks.

By EDGAR A. GUEST.

BROTHERHOOD.
Is it not queer, oh, brother of mine,
Some drink water and some drink wine,
And all are born with a spark divine.

Some must sweat at the heavy work,
One be the priest and one the clerk,
One adventure where dangers lurk.

This man stands at a lathe all day,
That man toils in a cleaner way,
But both are serving the world for pay.

What if the priest should quit his beads,
And tell us that useless things are creeds?
Lost were much that this old world needs.

And what if the sailor should quit the sea,
Or the singer stence his melody,
Where would our pride and our glory be?

What if the man at the lathe should say,
"Never again will I stand all day
Fashioning things of steel for pay?"

Oh, brother of mine, you would find
The humblest work that a man can do
Is does to make lighter the load for you.

The sound of the hammer, the hiss of the beam,
The rattle of stitching a garment's seam,
Are vital things in the greater scheme.

Vain are the glorious deeds we boast
Save that the commoner keeps his post.
For the lowliest man would be missed
If he were the most.

Reading by Sound.

BY MEANS OF THE OPTOPHONE
THE BLIND MAY READ ORDINARY BOOKS AND PAPERS.

Modern science has succeeded in opening up for the blind the whole field of literature by means of the optophone, or type-reader, a British invention depending for its action on a characteristic property of the chemical element selenium.

The optophone combines the principles of the camera and the telephone, producing in the receiver of the latter a series of musical sounds, representing the different letters and punctuation marks, as they are passed over by the instrument. The receiver is of the ordinary headpiece type such as is used in wireless telephony.

Although great proficiency is attained by blind people in reading the well-known Braille type, consisting of raised dots, this and similar systems have many drawbacks. People who have become sightless only in later life find considerable difficulty in deciphering the raised type, and in many cases their hands have to be specially softened before they can read at all.

Moreover, the special books are very bulky, and rarely less than twenty times as heavy as books printed in ordinary type. Consequently they are expensive to produce, and of all books published only about one in two thousand is ever put into raised type for the blind to read by touch.

All the foregoing difficulties will be swept away by the optophone, an instrument which translates ordinary printed letters into characteristic sounds, each letter of the alphabet being denoted by a different sound.

The page to be read is placed face downwards on a glass slab arranged above the instrument. Beneath the slab, and close to it, is a small piece of porcelain, through a hole in which passes a tiny beam of light, focused by letters from an electric lamp below.

The top surface of the piece of porcelain next to the glass is covered with selenium, which receives only light reflected by the printed page typewriter.

FORD OWNERS!

JOB'S STORES, Limited

of the book or newspaper.

It is easy to understand that the white unprinted portions of the page, between and surrounding the letters, reflect more light than the letters themselves. Therefore, because the selenium is coupled to an electric battery, in circuit with the telephone receiver, sufficient sounds are produced as the various letters are passed over.

A small motor causes the light beam and selenium to move regularly along the lines of the page, and the speed of movement is controlled by a little lever operated by the reader. When the end of a line is reached a new line is started, or set, by an operation similar to that used on a typewriter.

It has not been possible yet to make the sounds correspond exactly with spoken words, but doubtless in course of time this will be achieved. In the meantime the blind user of an optophone has only to get used to the new sound alphabet, after which he can put any book or newspaper on the machine and hear what it has to say.

One of the first blind pupils, a woman, after a few hours' practice, was able to "read" twelve words a minute on the first instrument made. The machine was provided with a hand-wheel which moved the book along as it was being read.

With an improved instrument, in which the book remains stationary and the mechanism is arranged to move automatically, she soon attained a speed of twenty-five words a minute. Considerably higher speeds are possible.—Answers.

EFFICIENCY RUNNING AMUCK.

A Chicago efficiency maniac posted a notice in his works reading "DO IT NOW." Within twenty-four hours the cashier bolted with the contents of the office safe, his favorite stenographer ran off with his oldest son, the office boy threw the ink bottle into the electric fan, and the whole mechanical crew went on strike for more wages and a six hour day. He is thinking of getting a new office motto but he can't find a comfortable one.

ADVERTISE IN THE EVENING TELEGRAM.

Mussolini Urged to Rescue Europe.

VIENNA.—Fascism is coming to be regarded in Austria as a panacea for all the ills of Central Europe, in the opinion of some observers in the Austrian capital, and its leader, Benito Mussolini, as a second Garibaldi. A letter from Count Richard Coudenhove-Kalergi, founder of the Central European Cultural Society, addressed to Mussolini and published recently in a local newspaper, bears out this thought.

The count writes: "I appeal to you to save the youth of Europe. Germany and France have been at war for 1,000 years. Italy alone is qualified to end this war, to lay the foundation for the restoration of Europe. You love Italy, but no European nation can live and thrive if the others die. Look across the ocean. At a time when Europe, from the Rhine to Thrace, is tearing itself to pieces, an entire continent is preparing to assemble at Santiago, Chile, in a spirit of trust and hope and in the service of peace and progress.

"Proclaimed a century ago by Bolivar, the Pan-American idea has become to-day the keynote of the development of the world. United America is marching at its apex, while divided Europe is bleeding to death in internal warfare.
"Summon the first Pan-European conference in Rome; launch a new Europe.
"Both Great Britain and Russia have outgrown Europe and can survive her destruction, but the other peoples of Europe have the choice only between union or destruction.
"Europe is not threatened from the north. Economic dangers menace her from the west and political perils from the east. A divided Europe must fall a prey to American competition; a disunited Europe will become the victim of Russian leadership. Only an economic union, a court of arbitration, and a treaty can give Europe prosperity, peace and independence.

"Save Europe from her fate. Step into the European chaos courageously and lay the foundation stone of the United States of Europe."

Future for Austria Becoming Brighter.

VIENNA.—Austria presents a brighter picture to-day than at any time since the war. The crown is steadily appreciating in value, unemployment is lessening, the cost of living is falling, and the spirit of the population is improving. The allied loan apparently has ushered in a new era for a people which has suffered bitterly during the last 10 years.

The budget shows a remarkable improvement, the deficit since November having been reduced by nearly 3 billion crowns (about $4,500,000), representing a reduction of 55 per cent. Bank deposits have notably increased, which is regarded as an indication of increasing confidence in the general economic and financial situation of the country, especially in the national currency. During January the total deposits increased by nearly thirty-six billion paper crowns, a record figure. This recrudescence of thrift is all the more remarkable in view of the fact that a portion of the public savings was also absorbed in the subscription to the internal gold loan, which has reached nearly five million dollars.

The visit to Belgrade of Dr. Piepel, the prime minister, has brought about improvement in the relations between Austria and Jugo-Slavia. The many vexatious obstacles to travel between the two countries as well as passport difficulties, are now being removed;

the questions of the sequestration of Austrian property in Jugo-Slavia, and of industrial enterprise in the former Austrian provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina soon will be settled; and the beginning of a new commercial agreement on a large scale seems assured.

Stealing Secrets by Radio

The members of an important business circle which meets each week to discuss large transactions were mystified recently to find that the results of their deliberations were known to the outside world even during the process of meetings held behind closed doors.

For some time no solution of the mystery could be found, but one day a curious belt was seen to have slipped down below the waistcoat of one of their number. He insisted at first that it was a support recommended by his doctor, but eventually he admitted that it was a miniature wireless transmitting set.

The belt contained the necessary batteries arranged like cartridges in a bandolier; the aerial was a long coil of wire stitched into his waistcoat. In his jacket pocket was a tapping key which worked a muffled buzzer.

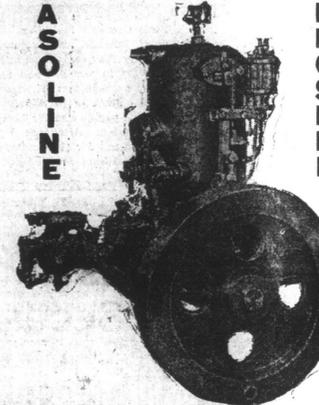

The signals sent out by this apparatus were, of course, very weak indeed, but they were easily picked up by a large and extremely sensitive valve receiver situated in an office over the road.

The leakage was explained at once. The offender was ejected minus his body belt—which was kept as a souvenir, and secrecy was at last obtained.—Pearson's Weekly.

Story of the English Pound.

The English pound sterling, the recent recovery of which has created much satisfaction in Great Britain and the Empire generally, has long been the world's predominant monetary unit.

The term 'pound' is now a purely conventional one and has no relation to any definite weight. In early times—and the term was used in England as early as 1188—the pound was an actual pound weight of silver, containing 225 parts of pure metal in 1,000.

This was originally made into 20 shillings, but various monarchs changed this number considerably. Edward II. made 30, while his various successors coined 48, 96, and even 288 shillings from the same amount of silver.

The sign £ is merely a contraction of the Latin word 'libra,' a pound in weight, and is, of course, really the same abbreviation as 'lb.'

The expression 'sterling' probably originated in the 13th century, when the Hansatic League, a commercial union of German cities, was trading in England.

These trade guilds were welcomed by the English and were allowed many privileges, including that of coining money. As they came to England from the East they were known as 'Easterlings,' and their money became known as 'sterling.'

The silver pound then, in its varying forms was England's standard of currency until 1516, when gold, which had hitherto occupied a secondary place, was adopted as the standard.

The new pound was a golden sovereign, weighing 123.274 grains, 11-12ths being pure metal, and this weight has not since been altered.

The English sovereign contains a higher proportion of pure gold than the coins of other countries, as the usual proportion is 9-10th only. Turkey, however, is an exception, and her coins, like England's, are 11-12th pure gold or 22 carat.

The English gold pound is practically an international coin and is accepted everywhere. In its time it has been put to strange uses. When the Germans extracted their indemnity from France in 1872 they placed £6,000,000 in gold as a special war reserve in the Julius-tower in Spandau. It was known that a large proportion of this consisted of British sovereigns, and in March, 1915, after the Germans had tapped their reserve the gold began to flow to us from Scandinavia. The sovereigns were new ones, dated 1872, and in many cases were still in the same bags as those in which they left the Bank of England, 43 years earlier.

The normal value of the pound sterling in other currencies is determined by the relative amounts of pure gold in the respective coins.

"Lords" are Cheap.

The high-class shipping companies report a great increase in the number of bogus "lords," "counts," etc., who are travelling across the Atlantic to exploit the Americans. The reason is that times are pretty hard in Europe and in London, and these "aristocratic" adventurers have an idea that the United States must be bursting with money. Several well-known members of the House of Lords are particularly pestered by "doubles" whose audacity is almost beyond belief. Apparently in America no investigations are made as to the claims of pushing and polished gentlemen who announce their titles with a flourish and then proceed to levy toll upon the credulous. There may be found at the moment two separate "Dukes of Westminster" operating across the water; the exploits of "Lord Gray"—close friend of the Prince of Wales, read like a fairy story; the Duke of Marlborough has a sort of permanent replica travelling America; the impersonation of the Earl of Roslyn on a line is a recent occurrence; while for many years Lady Henry Somerset was most audaciously "doubled" by an adventuress several times sent to prison for the offence.

As a preservative for food salt is well known. Perhaps it is not so well known that salt is an excellent weedkiller, and kills slugs and snails easily, while stonework and window ledges that have become green with damp can be made perfectly clean by scrubbing with salt, and they will remain clean if salt is used in the water for washing them afterwards.

Tip Top Tennis Tips.

LEARN THESE RULES AND START THE SEASON WELL.

There are many tricky points that need watching by the beginner if the rules of lawn tennis are to be properly observed. Perhaps the service is responsible for most of these unconscious errors. Quite often a player is to be seen taking two or three steps, to get up momentum, before pausing to deliver the service.

This is clearly forbidden by the rules, which lay down that the server shall not run, walk, hop or jump before the service. Nor may he have both feet off the ground in the act of striking. He may raise one foot from the ground if he wishes, provided that by so doing he does not break the rule which always applies to serving, namely, that both feet are behind the base-line.

If you are striker-out (the player receiving the service) you can refuse to take a service sent over before you are quite ready. But be careful not to play at the ball and make the claim afterwards. Your play or attempted play makes the service good.

When playing up at the net two points should be remembered, as the breach of either loses the stroke. First, when returning a ball, or at any time whilst it is in play, no part of the player's person, nor his racket, must touch the net, posts, cord, strap or band. This can easily happen in a quick return, when the racket follows through and touches the net after the ball has been struck.

Strictly, too, the rule applies to anything that the player wears or carries, and the stroke might be claimed by the opponents if, for instance, a player's hat fell and touched the net whilst play was proceeding or a handkerchief fluttered over into the opponent's court. Needless to say, such strict play is not usual.

The second point is that volleying the ball before it passes the net incurs a penalty that should always be enforced. A player close up to the net when taking a hard return may pass his racket over the net to take it, and thereby—usually by mistake—gets an advantage of which the rules are careful to deprive him.

What is to happen when in a 'doubles' it is discovered that one of the partners is serving out of turn? The player who ought to have served begins to do so immediately, the score remaining as it is. The player who 'did not wish out' any score that may have been made, and start afresh.—Pearson's Weekly.

Wonderful Salt!

ITS MANY USES.

What humour is to life so is salt to an egg—and to many other things as well. Salt is so pure that it can pass through the most utter silt and yet remain pure and disinfected.

Besides flavouring food, it removes the worst part of most stains—at least preventing their becoming permanent. A handful of common salt thrown into a hot bath relieves fatigue, and often helps to break up or prevent a cold. Soda will do this as well, but salt is better.

If the feet are very tender and painful a mild solution of hot water and salt at night and a cold foot bath of the same in the morning—if persevered with for a week or two—will greatly strengthen the feet and ankles.

A bag of hot salt is excellent for toothache and the milder forms of neuralgia, also for relieving the pains that accompany a chill.

A teaspoonful of salt in a pint of water makes a most antiseptic and strengthening gargle. It is used by many singers.

Stained baths and domestic utensils (provided they are not made of aluminium) can be thoroughly cleaned by salt moistened with paraffin oil. Leave the salt on the stain for a little time after rubbing, and then wash with hot water and soap, and rinse. The stain, unless it has worked right into the enamel or metal, will have disappeared.

Sprinkle salt round drains and sinks, as it is disinfectant.

Salt and carbolic powder mixed and made into a solution with hot water are excellent for removing bad smells and flushing out drains.

As a preservative for food salt is well known. Perhaps it is not so well known that salt is an excellent weedkiller, and kills slugs and snails easily, while stonework and window ledges that have become green with damp can be made perfectly clean by scrubbing with salt, and they will remain clean if salt is used in the water for washing them afterwards.

MINNEAPOLIS.—In keeping with the rapid progress of the radio movement, it will soon be possible to "listen in" from rooms of a large hotel here, which has contracted for the connecting of each of several hundred rooms with radio plugs. ## Why Hens Cackle.

When a hen has laid an egg, and her mate has been called in to share the glory, they are familiarly supposed to cackle and crow with delight.

The expression, "Crowing like a rooster," is often applied to human beings who have achieved something that makes them temporarily proud of themselves.

When one comes to consider it however, the origin of the remark is probably erroneous. It is not likely that the hen's instinct would urge it to give vent to loud cries as a means of attracting attention to herself and her egg, which she would naturally wish to protect.

A more likely explanation of the crowing performance is that it has been handed down from ancestors who did not live in domestic hen-coops, but led a wild and wandering existence. When a hen wished to lay her eggs she retired from the community at large, and while performing her task got separated from her companions, who wandered on.

Thus, only by means of call and answer could the hen re-establish communication with her lord and master, who crowed in response to her cackle, and permitted the wandering one to rejoin her tribe.

Newspapers of Note.

The present day newspaper is not a very old institution. There were, of course, some kinds of papers in very ancient times, but they can hardly be called the fathers of the present day daily and weekly papers.

Julius Caesar issued a daily record of Roman events as early as A.D. 51.

Richard Bicker Whately's "Notes," which was first published on August 2nd, 1822, is however, the real parent of our papers, says Mr. Low Warren, in "Journalism."

The first regular daily paper was the Daily Courant, which sent out its first number on March 11th, 1703; the first evening paper was the Evening Post, first published on August 1st, 1796.

Among the veteran papers of today are the Morning Post, published for the first time in 1772, and the Times, then known as the London Daily Universal Register, which first came out on January 1st, 1785.

It was many years before the present halfpenny paper arrived in London, that was in 1868, when the Echo, an evening paper, was founded on the bookstalls.

Writing of freak newspapers, Mr. Warren mentions a Spanish newspaper, the Laminaria, published some years ago, which was printed with phosphorus in the ink so that it could be read in the dark.

The Monchoir was printed in Paris on rice paper, and could be used as a handkerchief, when it was read.

Similar to this was a paper, published in the Deccan, India, on soft, white cotton; this could also be used as a handkerchief, but it had the added advantage that it could be washed, returned to the publishers and used again.

Aid for Quebec Fisheries

A comprehensive scheme for the more active development of the Provincial sea fisheries is announced by the Quebec Government. Subsidies will be granted for the establishment of canning factories. The Province is giving aid also for providing cold

No Icebergs in Winter.

THEY BREAK AWAY FROM THE ICE FIELDS IN THE SPRING.

The greatest dread in a sailor's life is fog, but in many waters even thick weather is run very close by the fear of icebergs, not only for their own danger but because they generally bring fog with them.

This year there is every indication that ice will be much more troublesome in the North Atlantic passenger route than it has been for a long time past. Contrary to general belief, the ice season in the Atlantic is not in the winter, but in the spring and summer, when the big bergs break away from the fields formed during the winter and drift down into the trade lanes.

Up to now the ice this year has been confined to drifts through which a big ship can push her way without very much difficulty, but against which several small steamers have been disabled through the blades of their propellers snapping off.

How the Damage is Done. A well built model vessel can ram an iceberg and on a still come home to tell the tale. The great danger is when the ship does not hit the ice squarely but scrapes along its side. This happened in the case of the Titanic when it was estimated that the hole made by the collision was never more than an inch or so wide, but so long that it sank what was the biggest ship then afloat.

So great is the ice danger that all the maritime nations subscribe to the up-keep of an ice patrol by the United States coastguard cutters which are now fitting out in the Atlantic ports, not only to warn all passing shipping of the presence of icebergs by wireless, but to destroy the bergs with gun-fire and dynamite charges.

Making Matters Worse. This work has to be done very carefully indeed, for there is always a great danger that the shock of the explosion will merely capsize the berg so that instead of a glistering white peak which can be seen for a long distance the only thing showing above the water is a dirty grey flat surface which cannot be observed until the ship is right into it.

In clear weather icebergs can themselves be seen a very long way off, and often give warning of their presence for miles by the "iceblink" or lightening on the horizon both by day and night.

Bergs Hidden in Fog. Unfortunately they are all too often surrounded by fog, in which case it is very difficult indeed to detect their presence. The old theory that bergs can be detected by the cooling of the air and water is now entirely exploded.

A ship's officer on the look-out for icebergs, usually listens intently for an echo from his foghorn and for a sound of the sea breaking against the ice or of small pieces of ice beginning to melt. Another good sign is the presence of seals and certain birds at an unusual distance from land, but all these indications are uncertain. Ice makes it difficult to break Atlantic speed records in the summer when the conditions appear most favorable, for as a matter of precaution all the passenger companies send their steamers very much farther south than in the winter months in order to be clear of its presence.

RACING.

As I went chooing up the road, James Whiskers tried to pass; his silver seemed to feel the goad when he stepped on the gas, and through its ancient joints there flowed all sorts of fowls in a row of pep and sass. "Now by my halldom," I cried "I'll show this James some speed; the road is long, the road is wide, I'll have a race, indeed; just watch my good old tumbler slide like some gersaloon freed." There was no reason for the burst of speed that started thus, but I was full of wiewer-wurst and proud of my old bus; in every race I would be first, I'd beat the other cuss. There was no reason why this James should try to pass my boat; to higher, nobler ends and aims his life he should devote, and he should shun all giddy games that rob man of his goat. We both were chumps, I see it now; James Whiskers sees it, too; I have a poitice on my brow, and he has one or two we did not see the vagrant cow till 'twas too late to slow. And so we struck her, fore and aft, while hitting fifty miles; and how the High Pookiller laughed, how gaudy were his smiles! And now chirsurgens ply their graft with crescent saws and files. "Now, by St. Bride," I say with sighs, "that race will be my last; in days to come I'll be more wise than I've been in the past" and while I weep and moralize I'm in a plaster cast.

When mixing cakes try adding boiling water to the eggs instead of milk. The eggs must be well beaten before the water is added.
