ago, where my Father in the summer months employed himself in farming pursuits, and in the winter usually hauled saw-logs into the river Digdeguash. My Mother taught me to read in the New Testament, and to spell in Websters spelling book, and when I was eleven year s of age I went to echool to Mr. Paul Dougherty our district school master, where I learned to write, and to read in the English Reader, and Scotts Lessons: For several ful manner—so that he could not years past I have labored on the Farm in the summer, and drove Fathers team in the woods in the winter; but the timber having now become scarce and the husiness unprofitable, we have concluded to follow it no longer. Having therefore but litthe to do at this season of the year, I went on a rial almost impossible that any man sit to an uncle of mine, a greeer in this Town, with could have had strength to clamber the intention of spending the winter here-

Here, then. Sir, I intend to remain for a time, and if you will take the pains to correct my letters and print them in your newspaper, I will give gave him the strength of a dozen you a short account of all that I see and bear, I cannot write like those learned travellers who publish their observations in the "Dublin Mirror" and then get them printed in the " St. John's Weekly Chronicle," but I can see and hear as well as they can, and in comparison with their fine writings, what I want in learning may be made up in truth. On coming out of the woods on the top of a hill, subject of general regret. I eaw the great River Saint John covered with ice and snow, and the Town of Fredericton on a fine flat piece of land along side of it. The first thing that I noticed was the great number of church steeples—surely, thought I, the people there must all the very pious and righteous—I am told however, that some of them are just no better than commonly used when going before they should be's after all. After passing the beautiful residence of the late Surveyor-General, I came to Government House, which stands a few rods was from the North, and he would from the road side. It is a large stone house, shin gled with tin, and is surrounded with fine fences, and pretty clumps of spruce trees -it is a great deal larger than Seint Andrews Gaol, and has ever so many chimnies and windows in it.

t'redericton itself is a good deal larger than Saint Andrews—the streets are straight and cross each other at right angles—some of the houses are large and beautiful, others are small, shabby, and old fashiored; and upon the whole, the place in appearance is inferior to our County Town. The fround on which the Town stands is a dead level. which at some period has undoubtedly been a part of the bed of the river Saint John. The places o public worship are the Episcopal Church, the Presthe Baptists. The College, which stands on the side of a bill in the rear of the Town, is a most beautiful and substantial stone building, and adds greatly to the appearance of the Diace. There is a second College, cilied the Baptist seminary, also a second College, cilied the Baptist Seminary and the second cilied the Baptist Seminary and the second cilied the Baptist College, cilied the Baptist Seminary and the second cilied the Baptist College, cilied the Baptist College, cilied byterian Kirk, the Methodist Chapel the Catholic nothing about the appearance of the Barracks, the Market House, the Stores, Taverns, Groceries, and Grog Shops, but come at once to the Province This is a large old wooden house, shew ing a fair front on the side nest the River, but very irregular and ill-shaped in the rear. Here the two Houses of Legislation hold their sessions, and here ommodations for the sitting of the Supreme Court.

I attended the meeting of the Legislature here, and saw Sir John Harvey, and all the officers, and soldiers, and Law makers, and fine horses and currisges, and heard all the speeches and answers, but as this fatter now covers three pages, I shall say no more at present, but shall give some further account of these things in my next.
