Don't Stop It. Printer.

VOL. XLVI.

Don't stop my paper, printer; Don't strike my name off yet; You know the times are stringent And dodars hard to get; But tug a little hardet And scrape the dimes together.

Enough for me and you I can't afford to drop it; I-find it doesn't pa To do without a paper, However others may

I hate to ask my neighbors To give me theirs on loan; They don't just say, but mean it, Why don't you have your own !

You can't tell how we miss it, by any fate Should happen not to reach us, Or comes a little late.

Then all is in a hubbub, And things go all awry; And, printer, it you're married You know the reason why.

I cannot do without it; It is no use to try: For other people take it; And, printer, so must I. I, too, must keep me posted, And know what is going on, Or feel, and be accounted A logy simpleton.

Then take it kindly, printer, For cash is not so plenty, And wants not iew, you know! But I must have my paper, Cost what it may to me; And do without my tea.

So, printer, don't you stop it, Unless you want my frown, For here's the year's subscription And credit it right down ; And send the paper promptly, And let it bring us weekly

This, then, was one of the holy wells so numerous in Ireland, to which visits are made in some cases as works of ance, either voluntary or enjoined but generally for obtaining health, under the auspices of the saint, by drinking the waters of the well.

Of course the day of the patron saint of each well is the one chosen for these visits; and some years ago, and even now in many parts of the country, crowds were attracted not only for religious motives, but for love of gossip and meet ing with distant friends. These wells have kept their reputation for centuries, the fame of some being coeval with Christianity, while that of others probably preceded it, the early Christian teachers having merely changed the object of worship, leaving the altars of idolatry undisturbed.— Harper's Magazine.

But the fact is, that they are in both instances as fraudulent as he would be that exacted more than his due from his debtors, and paid less than their due to his creditors.

The Great French Caricaturist.

A thrill of sadness will run through the studios of the world upon the announcement, made from Paris, that "Cham," prince of the caricaturists of France, and one of the best fellows who ever breathed, will breathe no more; that "Cham" is dead.

Amadee, son of the Count de Noe, was born in Paris, January 26, 1819. He was intended by his parents for the Poly-technic school and heaven knows what else afterward; he was intended by nature for an artist in burlesque. He threw over the Polytechnic school for art; whereupon he was incontinently hrown over by his parents. He retaliated by discarding the family name. "The son of Noe (Noah), I will call myself Cham (Ham)," he declared, "and I will cover the nakedness of my father's title with the mantle of my fame!" And he was as good as his word. He studied under Delaroche and, later, under Charlet. Then having laid the foundation of good work by gaining a thorough knowledge of good methods, he studied under the guidance of his own genius. In a little while he burst forth in the burlesque prints, and the caricatures signed "Cham" electrified Paris—and bone of the Charivari—just as Leech was the backbone of Parch—and he illustrated "annuals" and "albums" and that sort of thing without end. And now, while yet but a young fellow of sixty, "Cham," dear old "Cham," is dead!—

The last ordinary passenger though the united strength of several strong men, using levers, to pry the horse's mouth open wide enough to get his foot out, and before they succeeded in doing it two of the horse's teeth were knocked out. The poor brute would soon have strangled to death had he not been promptly relieved, and it was nearly half an hour after he was relieved before he could rise to his feet. It is supposed that the horse threw his foot for ward to strike at the flies, and at the same time threw his head backward, biting at them, thus opening his mouth and "putting his foot in it." The entire hoof was in the horse's mouth, the teeth being sunk into the flesh above the hoof almost, if not altogether, to the bone. The teeth that were loosened by the accident were replaced and driven back into their socks. The woman sighed heavily.

"Let me give you this note, ma'am—it's from him—an' I'll trouble you no more. You'll read it, an' do all it asks, ma'am?" she added, quite plaintively, as she thrust a bit of crumbled paper into the lady's hand.

A "Biscuit Race" at Sea.

Among the countless forms of walking and running matches now in vogue, there is one which was a great favorite at sea in the days of long voyages, and is still frequently to be met with. Thirty pieces of ship-biscuit are laid along the deck a yard apart, and the man who can pick them up and bring them back to the starting-point, one by one, in the shortest time, wins the day. A very well-contested "biscuit-race" of this kind lately took place on board a South Atlantic steamer between two of the secondclass stewards. The first who started. class, stewards. The first who started, a slim, active young fellow, twenty-three years old, was the favorite with the majority, but some of the "knowing ones" shook their heads at his coming ones "shook their heads at his commencing with the nearest pieces. thus leaving the hardest work to the last. He made good time, however, though showing visible signs of exhaustion toward the end; but his wary opponent, knowing himself to be the ker man, flew at once to the far end of the line, thus making each successive journey shorter than the last. As the race neared its close the excitement be came intense. Many of the passengers shouted and gesticulated as eagerly as crowd swaying to and fro in the lantern- hands, it is capable of marvelous action light, night having already faller, the boat, is a wonderful contrivance, the reand of outspoken ridicule from the the timekeeper, and the flying figure of the runner in his striped shirt and jauny the runner in his striped shirt and jaunty white pantaloons, leaping, turning and darting backward and forward like a snake, made a very picturesque scene. The second man proved the conqueror, but only after a hard struggle, his time being nine minutes and fifteen seconds, to his antagonist's nine minutes and twenty-five seconds.

A Remarkable Centenarian.

There is at present living in a Skye bothy, says the Glasgow Herald, old Widow Macpherson, who entered upon her 166th year last Christmas. She was born there in the same year that Dr. Samuel Johnson and Boswell visited Skye and met with Flora Macdonald, the Jacobite heroine who befriended Prince Charlie when he fled to Skye after his disastrous defeat at Culloden in 1746, and the government reward of £30,000 offered for his surrender did not induce her to betray her trust and yield up this sole survivor of a fallen dynasty. A Word to Young Men.

Every young man should read and onder upon the following editorial from the Philadelphia Times:

How often the same old story is repeated, the story that we heard in our childhood and that every day we seen acted before us, with near figures and under new circumstances, it may be, but always with the same results. A young man, well born and carefully nurtured, enters upon life with every promise of a bright career. Good influences surround him and help him on rainy season, I could not perceive the distinction. In some instances the lagoons appeared to have a current, while the rivers had none, but I accepted their names.

A very pathetic suicide was that of right living? No, the lesson is for all of us. As surely as the miasma of the swamps breeds physical disease does evil living lead to sorrow and disgrace, and however fair a face a man may present to the world, however warming his friends esteem him and his fellow-citizens wish well for him, sooner or later his sin will find him out, and the evil that he has taken to himself will bear down self-respect and manly pride, honor and reputation, and lifetiself; for the wages of sin most surely must be and as she could get no help from her father she was unable to repay Shelton, who threatened her arrest.
