Mr. WATSON. To hear hon. gentlemen opposite speak you would imagine there was no duty on lumber coming into this country. There is an export duty of $2 per thousand on lumber coming into this country, which hon. gentlemen do not appear to realise. I come from a section of country where we feel seriously that duty on lumber. Now, to put an export duty on logs might lead to a higher duty being placed on logs coming into our country. At present logs are brought into Manitoba where they are manufactured into lumber, and they come in free of duty. I believe two-thirds of the lumber consumed in the North-West today comes in in the shape of logs from Minnesota. In the present unsettled state of affairs between Canada and the United States, I fear if you place a higher duty on these logs it may lead to retaliation on the part of the United States Government, who may place a duty on logs coming into our country. There appears to be a difference of opinion as to which would benefit most by placing an export duty on logs, but it appears to me that the freest trade relations that can possibly exist between the two countries should prevail in respect to lumber, and we ought to avoid legislation that might lead to retaliation on the part of the Americans by placing a duty on logs coming into Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. We had better look out for ourselves, and let them do the same.

Mr. WELDON. I am sorry we are not able to ascertain what the duty was last year. My impression was that when we discussed the question on a previous occasion, the export duty amounted only to $10,000 or $11,000, showing that the duty did not afford much protection, or that the quantity exported was very small. As one of the members from New Brunswick, I want to speak more particularly about the present duty upon cedar logs. We all know that on the river forming the boundary between the United States and Canada, there are a number of shingle mills on the Maine side of the river, and the farmers on the New Brunswick side cut a great many cedar logs, which are of no value on this side, but when they take them across the river they can sell them at a good profit. This duty will certainly take away a profitable industry from a large number of poor people in the counties of Victoria and Madawaska. It seems to me the whole thing is indefensible in placing an export duty on logs. It is simply putting the manufacturer against the farmer. You might as well put an export duty upon wheat, to enable the millers to buy it cheaper from the farmers. The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson), ridicules the idea that it costs the farmers nothing to cut the logs. I tell him that if he goes into the lumber business he will find that it costs a great deal of money to cut logs and bring them to market. Large numbers of men are employed in this business, and large amounts of money are expended in it. But I object to this whole notion of an export duty. For instance, we see an immense number of hop poles along the line of the Canada Atlantic Railway, which are sent to the United States. You might as well put a duty on them. You might as well put a duty on the deals and square timber that we send to England, so as to compel them to be manufactured here. The principle is the same, and it is simply sacrificing the interests of the laboring population of this country for the purpose of building up new manufactures.

Mr. CASEY. I should be glad to hear the views of the Finance Minister on this question. If he is prepared to state his opinion on this matter, I will sit down and give him a chance.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that the Government have had this subject under their consideration, but they did not arrive at a determination to place an export duty on elm logs. But I may say that, after listening to the very important discussions that have taken place in the House to-night, I shall feel it my duty to put before my colleagues the views which have been propounded, and bring the matter under their consideration.

Mr. CASEY. As the Minister has not made up his mind, I will simply say this: that the demand for an export duty on elm, ash and oak logs, staves and bolts, and all that sort of thing, manufactured by a certain ring of mill owners in Western Ontario, is the most impudent of all the demands that have been made by any class for legislative assistance at the expense of the general community. I was charmed, from a party point of view, to see so many gentlemen from the other side of the House giving in their adhesion to this impudent proposal, which I suppose they did without fully realising how shameful it was. And I should be charmed, from the same point of view, to see the Finance Minister take up the question and give them what they ask. It would be the surest method of getting rid of a number of those gentlemen in Ontario, that I can possibly imagine. I hope it will be the means of disposing of a few of those who have spoken so strongly in the interests of the stave manufacturer, and so on. The old proverb says very truly: "Whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad." Now, if there ever was a case of protection run into the ground, as the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) neatly put it, it is this case. Those people are not content with asking for protection against imports, they are not content with preventing the Canadian farmer from buying where he can get things the cheapest, after paying a reasonable duty, but they actually wish to impose such a duty as will prevent him from selling what he has at the ordinary price. The object of this export duty on elm and other such logs is simply to enable the local mill owner to buy them so much cheaper. The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) speaks because there is a large manufacturer in his county; I believe there is a mill belonging to the local member.

Mr. HESSON. I did not speak in the interest of any individual.

Mr. CASEY. Each of those hon. gentlemen spoke for some constituents. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) was evidently well instructed by a brief, either from some constituents or some friend. He read from a carefully prepared paper which appeared to be a letter from somebody, and to be written in the first person. If it was not such he can lay it on the Table. But it was evidently a carefully prepared brief from some saw mill owner.

Mr. BROWN. It was not written by a constituent of mine.

Mr. CASEY. Then the hon. gentleman has less excuse than the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson). I do not suppose there are any stave factories in Hamilton interested in the matter. But I say this is simply a demand to enable the saw-mill owner to buy his logs and stuff much cheaper than he otherwise would. The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) and some other hon. member on that side of the House said the Americans paid the export duty, and the hon. member for Algoma said it was in consequence of the export duty that a number of new mills had been built in that district, although the Americans paid the duty. How could that occur, unless it enabled the saw-mill owners to obtain their logs cheaper? The hon. gentleman contradicted himself and showed his hand too freely. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has said that when he was along the north shore of Lake Huron he had found that the export duty had driven the mills out, that several mills were shut up and the people had left and gone to the States.

Mr. SPROULE. I desire to make an explanation, as do not want to be misrepresented.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman can explain afterwards. He said at any rate that the mills had been shut down when the duty was in force. A large number of people in western Ontario, especially in the counties along lake Erie, bought lands timbered with elm, ash and other soft woods, in the hope of being able to pay for them by using the timber. This impost, while it will act for the benefit of mill owners, will operate to the injury of these settlers and will take from them their means of living. It would prove very hard for some members of the saw-mills "rings" if they found themselves in some of the back settlements of the western counties after such a duty had been carried through this House. The feeling would take a personal turn, and I could not blame those settlers for having a personal feeling, because it would mean ruin to many of them. I understand the Minister of Finance has promised to consider the question, and I hope he will consider it from the point of view of the settler.

Mr. HESSON. I have not been communicated with by any American, although we have a large number in my county. I am simply acting in the interest of the country. The case is different in the part of the country from which the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) comes, in this respect: There the farmer controls the sale of the timber on his land; but in the districts where the forests are being denuded of millions of feet of timber this is being done by American capitalists who bought under the Government conditions. A farmer can put a value on every tree he desires to sell to Americans or other parties; but these men whom we propose to regulate are those who have taken up large limits on the Government terms.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) made an enquiry with respect to the amount collected from these duties on logs during the past year. On pine and spruce the duty amounted to $20,454; on shingle bolts to only $271.50. I suppose the latter amount is accounted for by the fact that the provisions of the law were evaded. There is one point which must have been amusing to hon. members who are acquainted with this subject. The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) stated that the imposition of $2 duty upon the exportation of logs enabled them to obtain them cheaper. I am under the impression that all those timber logs were cut from within limits obtained from the Ontario Government, and that that Government has raised the stumpage duties very largely.

Mr. MILLS. Not on elm logs.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman was not speaking of elm logs. There are no elm logs in question, and therefore he could not have referred to them.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The duty which formerly amounted to $11,000 has nearly doubled since, showing that it has not checked export.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to correct the statement of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), which, I think, should not go uncorrected, viz., that, on account of the export duty, mills were built on the American side. I made no such statement. I said it was in order to evade the duty imposed by this Government that mills were transferred to the American side, and that they were erected there because there was no duty on logs on the other side of the line.

Mr. FISHER. Living as I do in a border constituency from which a good many logs go across the border, I can say that it is a fact that the people on this side have to pay the export duty and not those who buy the logs. The result is that poor men who are trying to make farms out of woodlands are hindered in consequence of the export duty on logs. It is true that hon. gentlemen opposite, who advocate this duty in the interest of lumbermen and mill owners, forget those settlers who are trying to establish homes in this country and to clear their lands. I trust when the Minister of Finance takes up this question he will not fail to consider this side of it. I cannot quite understand whether this duty is intended to include hard wood timber or not. I trust there will be no export duty on hard woods, such as maple or birch, which have to be sent across the line to market, because there is no market on this side of the line. I am not particularly interested in the question of elm logs, but I am interested in that respecting hard wood and spruce, in respect of which I trust the duty will not be increased.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose now with the consent of the House to go back to item 118, which I have allowed to stand; and having considered the proposal of the hon. member for Hamilton, I cannot consent to make the increase he desires, and I ask the House to pass the item as it stands.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to call the attention of the hon. the Finance Minister to a telegram I have received from Montreal in relation to one of these items, and that is wall paper. I will read it to the hon. gentleman.

"Duty on wall paper is altered from 30 ad valorem to specific, amongst which are brown blanks, 2 cents per roll. This for the lower grades, costing one penny per roll, and 3 cents per roll on white blanks costing, for low grades, one halfpenny, is equal to 100 per cent., and is used chiefly by the poor in the Lower Provinces. The makers in Canada are coining money at the 30 per cent. duty; why change? Move that the duty in no case exceed 40 per cent. of the value, or try and get it to remain at 30; important to me.

"SAMUEL WOODS."

I will hand it to the Finance Minister for consideration, and I hope he will consider it.

Mr. ELLIS. I have a telegram of a similar character upon the same subject, though, perhaps, a little stronger. It is as follows:

"Protest against such an enormous duty on low grades of wall paper. It will ruin our business.

"GEO. NIXON,
"HOLMAN & BURTON."

It was contended the other night that the duties were increased 100 per cent., and that was denied; but I will put in the hon. gentleman's hands a paper which shows that upon the lower grades the duty is really increased 100 per cent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that I admit that the duty will be somewhat increased in the first item, but on the other it was simply a change from ad valorem to specific. I would also say that I think I would be consulting the wishes of the House if I asked them to-morrow to go on with these resolutions, so as to complete them before the adjournment, and for that purpose I would like them to be the first Order of the Day. I move, therefore, that the further consideration of these resolutions be adjourned till to-day at 3 o'clock, and that they be made the first Order of the Day.

Motion agreed to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Before that motion is put I would ask whether the Government propose to-morrow to sit after 6 o'clock, and what business besides these resolutions they propose to take up?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN: We think we would be consulting the desire of the House by not sitting after 6 o'clock, as a large number of members wish to leave by afternoon and evening trains. We will take up these resolutions to-morrow and I suppose we may expect that the speeches upon them will take up the afternoon.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope they will not take very long.

Mr. MITCHELL. If we are not going to sit after 6, of course, it is all right, but if we were, I would like my motion on Manhood Suffrage to stand over, because I shall leave at six o'clock.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12:40 a. m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 18th May, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

REPORTS ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. HALL moved:

That as the time for the reception of Reports of Committees on Private Bills will expire on Wednesday next, the 25th instant, the same be extended to Friday, the 24th day of June next, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This motion, I think, is quite contrary to the policy that was agreed upon some time ago between both sides of the House. There would be practically no restriction whatever upon the introduction of private Bills if a motion of that sort were adopted. If we intend to allow private Bills to be introduced up to the last day of the Session, we will practically do away with any limitation of time for their introduction. If that is thought to be in the public interest, we should so change our rules as to enable promoters of private Bills to introduce them without restraint as long as the Session continues. But if we intend to attach any value to the rule, it does seem to me that we shall have to adopt a different policy from that indicated by this motion.

Mr. HALL. I am only making the motion to carry out the recommendation of the Committee on Banking and Commerce. Of course, there is no desire on the part of the committee to protract the Session of the House, but there will be an adjournment for a week, and it was thought that the 24th of June was the shortest time within which it would be proper to limit the reception of reports on private Bills. However, the matter is in the discretion of the House.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The motion is not to extend the time for the introduction of private Bills, but only for the reception of reports from committees, and I do not see any objection to that.

Mr. WELSH. I understood the hon. gentleman to move for an extension of the time for the reception of private Bills as well as for the reports of committees. I thought it was a long time for such an extension. If we are going to have holidays, I think an extension for a week after them would be sufficient. But I did think we would be home before the 24th of June.

Mr. WELDON. The time for receiving petitions for private Bills and for presenting private Bills has been already extended, the former to the 30th of May and the latter to the 6th of June.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House resumed consideration of resolutions reported from Committee of Ways and Means.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to ask the House to adopt resolution 110 as it stands:

Hardware, viz: builders', cabinet makers', and carriage hardware, and locks, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would suggest to add to that the following:—

Hardware: builders', cabinet makers', upholsterers', harness saddlery, including curry combs, machine screws, carpenters tools, cabinet makers', blacksmiths' and all other mechanics' tools, and tools of every description not otherwise provided for.

This item is specially enumerated in classes 237 and 406, which have been prepared so that they are not now included in the general list. These are all manufactured in the country, and ought to be included. By the sections that have been repealed, these items are dropped, and this will lead to endless confusion in the Customs.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not able to accede to the proposal of my hon. friend. I have given it a good deal of consideration, and I cannot see my way clear to embrace the articles he has mentioned. I do not think confusion will arise in the Customs, as these articles, like all others not specially enumerated, will fall under the unenumerated list. To accede to the hon. gentleman's proposition would lead to a great deal of difficulty, because he proposes to increase the tariff on articles that enter into the construction of a number of other things, which would require to be proportionately increased, if that were done. I must ask the House not to agree in the proposal of the hon. gentleman to adopt the resolution.

Mr. TAYLOR. I feel that an injustice is going to be done to the industry, particularly in my own town, that is engaged in the manufacture of saddlery and carriage hardware. They have, perhaps, a hundred hands employed, mostly in making carriage hardware, composed partly of wood and metal, not altogether forgings. These have to come into competition with goods made exclusively—with the goods made in the prisons of the United States, at Auburn, which are sold to brokers, and through them to the trade, a certificate being furnished to our Customs officials that they are not prison made goods.

Mr. McKAY. I agree with what has been said by the hon. gentleman. There are important industries largely engaged in the manufacture of saddlery and hardware, and the duties on cast iron will make a material difference to them. I would suggest that the Minister take this into consideration.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentlemen are making their proposals too late. They ought to have made them when we were in committee. There is another thing which must have impressed this House, and that is, that almost every kind of goods spoken of here, almost everything in the list, is said to come into competition with the products of prison labor in the United States. One would suppose the whole manufacturing industries in the United States were carried on in the penitentiaries. These penitentiaries must be controlled by men of marvellous mechanical skill, if such be the case. Certainly, if these hon. gentlemen wish to press these matters on our attention, they should have done so at the other stage.

Mr. CASEY. They ought to have brought these matters to the attention of the Government, not only before this stage, but before the elections.

Mr. BROWN. We have in Hamilton men of energy and enterprise, who have invested a large amount of capital in this industry, and who have assured my colleague and myself that they cannot make it successful unless it is protected by a duty of 35 per cent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to ask the House to concur in item 114 as it stands:

Out tacks, brads or sprigs, not exceeding 16 ounces to the thousand, two cents per thousand.

Exceeding sixteen ounces to the thousand, two cents per pound.

Mr. MILLS. What are they now?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I cannot say. I propose to ask the House to go into committee for the purpose of considering the postponed items Nos. 23, 24, 109, 111, 112, 113, 115. I will take opportunity then, not only of considering these postponed items, but of asking the consideration of the House to a few additional items which I will more fully explain.

Mr. MITCHELL. While the Government is on the subject of the tariff and the trade of the country, I would like to call the attention of the Finance Minister to an industry which I think is unfairly dealt with. I speak of foreign petroleum oil. Under the Act, while local manufactured oils are permitted to be moved in tanks from one point in the country to another, for the purpose of getting barrelled, foreign oil cannot be brought in, except in barrels of under 50 gallons capacity. This is felt to be a great hardship. It deteriorates the character of the oil and increases the cost of the freight, inasmuch as the barrel weighs about 69 pounds, while the whole thing, barrel and oil, weighs only 400 pounds. The oil is also injured in transit, and the foreign manufacturer placed at great disadvantage in conducting his business. It is a fact, no matter what protection may be put on—and I believe there is 100 per cent. protection on the native oil—the foreign oil is demanded by the people who require a higher, a safer grade, a better quality than is alleged to be produced from our own oil wells. Whether that is a fact or not I do not know, but it is alleged that it is a hardship to make a distinction in transporting foreign oils through the country, by giving facilities to native oils which are refused to the foreign. The foreign oil traders ask that, inasmuch as a sure and desirable way to transport oil to distances is in iron tanks, that the foreign oil be permitted to come in in tanks, in place of in barrels under 50 gallons capacity. I will not take up the time of the House by referring further to this matter, except to say to the Minister that I have prepared a statement showing what is required, and what is complained of, which I will hand to him, and I trust he will give it his consideration.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. McKAY.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to reconsider resolution No. 20 in which an error was made while the subject was under discussion. That resolution is "floor oil cloth." I propose to restore that to 20 per cent. It was reduced to 15 per cent. by mistake.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the hon. gentleman propose to retain the specific duty of five cents a square yard?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, the only change is to bring it from 15 to 20 per cent. as originally printed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the five cents a square yard when reduced to ad valorem?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. About 35 per cent. Then I propose to make a corresponding change the other way in the next item, "Oil cloth in the piece, cut or shaped, &c.," by reducing it from 20 per cent. to 15 per cent.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What does that taxation amount to?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. About the same percentage. I propose to amend the next item, "paper hangings or wall paper in rolls," so that it will read:

Paper hangings or wall paper in rolls, the following specific duties on each roll of eight yards and under of the following descriptions.

It is just to add the words "on each roll of eight yards and under." I also propose to correct a typographical error. "Single point bronzes" should be "single print bronzes."

Mr. CASEY. What would be the duty if the roll was over eight yards?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is charged in proportion to the length. A roll of sixteen yards would be charged double.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Does the Minister propose to reduce the duty upon the lower classes of these hangings, in accordance with the memorandum which was sent over to him the other night, showing that this was practically a tax of 100 per cent?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. I do not think it would be anything like that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I handed the Finance Minister a telegram which I had received from a paper manufacturer, who complains that, on the cheaper kind of wall paper, the duty was equal to 100 per cent. It seems very heavy on a class of paper which is used by the poorer classes, and especially in the Maritime Provinces. I think the Minister might consider that and make some modification. A tax of 100 per cent. on cheap common papers which are used by poor people, is certainly too high.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These papers will still be very cheap.

Mr. CASEY. Where are these papers manufactured in the country?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In a number of cities. This is one of the largest manufactures in the country. It is made chiefly in Toronto and Montreal.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are two very large factories in Montreal.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister says these articles will be cheap after all, but, when a mechanic wants to paper his house and has to buy a certain number of rolls, it is a question with him whether he must pay two or three cents more on each roll. I have no doubt the figures given by my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) are correct, and that this will be 100 per cent. on some of these articles, and it is no answer to say that they will be cheap after all. Suppose you taxed an article worth one cent, two cents apiece, that would be 200 per cent., still it would be only three cents for the article after all. Yet you would give the manufacturer the opportunity of charging three times what the article was worth, without fear of competition. The difficulty here is that the manufacturer can charge twice as much as the article is worth, and that is what we complain of. The cost may be small, but the tax is exorbitant, and is practically prohibitory.

Mr. ELLIS. The telegram I sent to the Minister was a very urgent one, and represented that on an article worth two and one-fifteenth cents the duty is two cents. It is a very heavy duty, and I am very sorry the Minister could not yield something to the wishes of those people in St. John.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman, no doubt, sent me a telegram, but if I were to accept telegrams from the parties whose interests are to prevent anything being manufactured in this country, I am afraid I would have to change our tariff very much. Our object is to encourage the manufacture in our own country of anything that can be manufactured here; and these paper factories are so extensive, there is so much capital invested in them, and they do their work so well, as to be able to produce paper at a very low cost that is quite good enough and cheap enough for any purpose. I do not think that any person will suffer from this added impost. The only one to which this change refers, I suppose, is the very cheapest description of paper, but we could not see our way clear to make the duty less than two cents on the roll of eight yards. I propose to modify item 23, by changing the duty on paper of all kinds from 22½ to 25 per cent. In order that the hon. gentleman may understand the whole case, I may state that I propose to strike out "tissue paper" and substitute the following for item 24:—

Manufactures of paper, including ruled and bordered papers, papeteries, boxed papers, envelopes and blank books, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MILLS. I am very sorry the hon. gentleman proposes to increase the duty on paper to 25 per cent. The tax heretofore has been a very heavy tax upon almost every publisher in the country. Everyone connected with the newspaper business knows that the newspapers of Canada are printed at a lower rate than any other papers on the continent—certainly far below the price of newspapers in England. I know, myself, that nine-tenths of the men who are engaged in the newspaper business find it anything but a profitable enterprise. The hon. gentleman proposes to tax the raw material of the newspaper man at a very high figure, and so with regard to other publishers. Now, even under the former tax, the paper used by publishers in this country is 35 to 40 per cent. higher than the same kind of paper used by publishers in the United States. The various paper manufacturers of Canada are already well remunerated under the existing tariff. I think I could satisfy the Minister of Finance, if I wished to enter into a discussion of the private affairs of a good many of the publishers of this country, that the manufacturers of paper have a very great advantage over those who are engaged in the publishing business; and when the hon. gentleman proposes to increase the tax to 25 per cent., he is proposing to tax those whose profits are little for the advantage of those whose profits are very great; in fact it is an attempt to distribute the profits earned by different parties in this country to the advantage of one particular party. It does seem to me that the hon. gentleman will do a serious injury to the publishers in this country, if he persists in increasing the tariff upon paper.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I wish to call the Minister's attention to one point on which I think he is a little inconsistent. The other day he placed a duty of 25 per cent. on these printed backs, these papers which come from the United States half printed. Now, he is going to place the same duty on paper unprinted; therefore, he is going to give a direct premium on the importation of these American half printed papers.

Mr. WILSON (Argenteuil). I would like to correct some of the statements made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who says that by making this duty 25 per cent., a heavier tax will be imposed upon publishers. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is not correct. Publishers to-day import but very little paper—I believe during the last 12 months, only three or four car loads, between 40 and 50 tons of paper of that class used by the publishing community in Canada, has been imported. This additional duty has been asked for from the hon. Finance Minister for various reasons. During the past year, in fact for several years past, the tariff on paper has remained stationary; it has been 20 and 22½ per cent., a very peculiar state of things indeed. From a lack of knowledge on the part of those who approached the Finance Minister previously, two different duties were placed on paper; the one was termed calendered paper, and the other simply paper. Now, under that tariff ruled paper, not calendered, that costs the most money, came in for the lesser duty. Take hand made papers, for example, and blotting papers of the finer grade, those came in during all this time at a duty of 20 per cent.; whereas calendered papers, of an actually cheaper grade, being only glossed over, came in at a duty of 2½ per cent. This has been a vexed question between the paper importers and Custom house for the past seven or eight years. Seeing that there was some modification in the tariff about to be made, the paper industry approached the Finance Minister for the purpose of having that state of things done away with, and not only for that purpose, I may tell the hon. member for Bothwell, but because there are three or four million dollars invested in the mills in this country, which are making a class of paper that has not been made in Canada before. Now, since so large a sum of money has been invested in this business, is it not proper for this Government to protect to that extent this new industry? The Finance Minister has in his possession paper made in St. Jerome by the Rolland Paper Company, of which we may well be proud. Now, Sir, we must, as a Government supporting a general National Policy, protect at least this new industry of ours. Then, I can tell the hon. gentleman, we have only raised the duty from 22½ to 25 per cent., and seeing that the Government were rearranging the tariff, we have asked them to put the whole duty on all kinds of paper at 25 per cent., so as to avoid the collisions and disputes that arose between the Customs appraisers and the paper importers for the past seven or eight years. We have not asked very much, and considering the amount of capital invested in this industry, I think it is entitled to the same consideration as brass, or iron, or cotton, or wool, and we ask no more. The paper trade of Canada asks no more protection than those industries. Nearly all of them have a protective tariff of 25 per cent., and that is all that is asked for the paper industry. I may tell the hon. member for Bothwell that there are several million dollars invested in this, the paper industry, and it is certainly entitled to some consideration from the Government in rearranging the tariff. We have a mill, started two or three years ago at Cornwall, where $300,000 or $400,000 are invested; there is one at St. Jerome in which $250,000 are invested, and the Canada Paper Company's works at Windsor have an investment of $250,000. These mills are all making, and will continue to make, a fine quality of paper for which we ask a protection of 25 per cent. That is not asking too much. As to the question as to why the tissue paper item is to be left out, I might say that it was an oversight, no doubt, on the part of the Government, because there is a mill making tissue paper. The proprietor has gone to large expense to establish it, and had it been known by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs, I am sure tissue paper would have been included among other classes of paper, as the Minister of Finance intends to do to-day.

Mr. CASEY. Where is the mill?

Mr. WILSON. It is in Lachute, in the county of Argenteuil, sixty or seventy miles from here. The other item to be introduced is a further protection of 10 per cent. on the manufactures of paper, articles such as paper boxes, ruled papers, bordered papers and envelopes. I may inform the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who is the only member who has spoken on the question, that the envelope business is no mean industry and that it has come to stay, provided the Government will give it that protection which it deserves. The trade has been protected with a duty of 25 per cent. heretofore. That duty did not, however, protect us from job-lots and under-valuations from the other side of the line. We went to the Finance Minister to have that remedied. We wanted a specific duty of five cents per pound or thereabouts on envelopes so as to keep out job-lots, because cheap envelopes weigh as much as dear ones. In order to strike at the root of the matter a specific duty would be necessary. But specific duties are not desirable, in my opinion, and seeing we were going to rearrange the items connected with the manufactures of paper, and as blank books had a duty of 30 per cent, we propose to put blank books, envelopes, and all those articles under an ad valorem duty of 35 per cent. That is only asking 10 per cent. additional, which has been granted already to the cotton, woollen, and brass industries. In regard to the protection of labor put on the paper after it leaves the mill and is manufactured into paper bags or boxes, envelopes or blank books, I might say that 10 per cent. does not represent a proper protection, if we make a fair comparison between the amount of the duty placed upon the articles and the labor, as compared with the cotton, woollen or brass industries. In fact it is necessary to place an additional duty of 15 per cent. on paper goods in addition to the 25 per cent. to place them on the same footing as these other industries, but we did not wish to be excessive in our demand; and as the demands of other industries for 35 per cent. have been granted, I hope the House will not object to accede to it in this instance. It is nothing but a fair and reasonable demand that the paper industry of Canada makes.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman seems to possess a good deal of special knowledge on the paper question, and he has given the House considerable information. He seems to take it for granted that as soon as capital is invested in any industry it is proper to tax the rest of the community to make the institution a paying one. But in regard to the tissue paper item I confess I was astonished to find it increased from 10 to 35 per cent. in the space of two days. The Finance Minister has, no doubt, been informed since the tariff was first framed that there is a mill in Canada making tissue paper, and the hon. gentleman has told the House the mill is in Lachute. It seems to me I have heard of a paper mill at Lachute owned by a gentleman of the same name as the hon. gentleman himself. I do not know whether he is the owner of the mill or not. Perhaps he will give the House information on that point?

Mr. WILSON. Do you wish an answer to that question?

Mr. CASEY. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think it is a crime to be a member of this House and at the same time a paper manufacturer. I do not, however, think my name should be dragged into the question in this manner. I fail to see why because a paper manufacturer happens at the same time to be a member for Argenteuil, the paper industry should on that account fail to secure protection. I cannot help it if I have accumulated sufficient money to have acquired that paper mill. The fact that I am a paper manufacturer and member of Parliament is no crime, and I should not be treated differently from other hon. members. I do not want it to go abroad that because I happen to be a member of this House I am treated any way better than my confrères in the trade.

Mr. CASEY. No, of course it is no crime to be a member of this House and at the same time to be a paper manufacturer.

Mr. MITCHELL. Except if you are in the minority.

Mr. CASEY. I must say I admire the frankness with which the hon. gentleman has put his case, in the last few words. He wishes the House to understand that it is perfectly proper for a paper manufacturer to be a member of Parliament; that it is perfectly proper for the proprietor of the only mill manufacturing tissue paper to make representations to the Minister whom he supports, showing that tissue paper should get 25 per cent. additional protection. He wishes us to understand that it is perfectly proper for that paper maker, the proprietor of the only tissue paper mill, to urge upon the Government to impose 25 per cent. additional protection upon tissue paper. It is perfectly proper for him, in his opinion, to vote for this extra protection upon tissue paper, which will put a considerable sum of money in his own pocket. That is the hon. gentleman's position, as he has stated it to the House. I do not happen to agree with it, and I do not think the country will agree with it. It is, however, a grand illustration of the principle on which the tariff is arranged. These duties are arranged, either in fulfilment of promises made before the elections, in repayment of subscriptions made by large firms before the elections, or in order to further the interests of members of this House engaged in certain industries. That is evident from the statement of the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Wilson). It is well that the country should know this, and the people will be able to form their opinions upon it, without my further enlarging on the subject.

Mr. GUILLET. It seems to me most extraordinary to hear such statements from hon. gentlemen opposite. On a former occasion they objected to American capital coming into this country, and being invested in different industries. Now we find that because a gentleman interested in a certain industry happens to be a member of this House, the industry with which he is connected should not receive consideration at the hands of Parliament. If that argument were to be applied, no one connected with our railways or our banking business, or manufacturers of agricultural implements, or any merchant, could be a member of this House, because Parliament would be legislating upon mercantile interests with which they might be connected, and, therefore, all those important interests would have no representative in this House. It would come down to this, that no one should be a member of Parliament, except he was a foreigner. That is the amount of the argument, and it is a preposterous argument.

Mr. CASEY. My argument was not of that sort. I was merely pointing out the very peculiar position occupied by the member who controls the whole of one kind of trade, who is not a representative of the trade, but is the trade himself. The hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Wilson) is the tissue paper maker of Canada, the tissue paper interest of Canada, and I pointed out that his position, being such a very peculiar one, is different from that of other members who may be more interested in various kinds of trade. I am not attacking the hon. member so much, for I admit he is only doing as the rest do, that is, only following the rule that appears to be in force. The hon. gentleman is only acting like other hon. gentlemen on that side. I am not attacking him personally, but I am attacking the system of making a tariff in which such things are possible, and only attacking that very briefly and by implication, because I believe the country will be quite capable of pronouncing their verdict upon it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I trust the Finance Minister will not persist with this impost. Ever since the tariff was proposed I have had a large number of communications from publishers, in various parts of the country, and no doubt the hon. gentleman has received more than I have, and there is no doubt that this is a very serious matter for them. The hon. gentleman knows, and I am sure the Minister of Interior and the Minister of Customs will bear out the statement, that the paper that is consumed in Canada is practically given gratuitously to the subscribers to newspapers, and the purchasers of books and other publications. The publisher may be paid by the advertising, or in other ways, but as far as the papers are concerned, in Canada they are circulated at a far lower price than the product of any other trade or calling in this country, in consequence of the intense competition which exists among publishers. You can hardly go into a little town or village in the country in which you will not find two newspapers. In most cases they are published at $1 a year, though sometimes at a higher rate. Now, I know that the manufacturers of paper in Canada are better paid than the manufacturers of the United States. The material cost them the merest trifle, because the cost of collecting it is very little, and I know that these men are to-day receiving a higher compensation than the paper men of the neighboring Republic. I venture to say that there is not a paper manufacturer in Canada who is not receiving from 25 to 30 per cent. more than the American manufacturer, for precisely the same article. He has certain local advantages; in many cases they are the creditors of those who are the purchasers from them, and with the protection already existing, they are certainly well paid. Now the hon. gentleman proposes to increase the amount of the paper duty to such an extent that he will destroy, in a great measure, the little competition that, in spite of the tariff, exists at the present time, and he will simply place the hundreds of publishers of this country at the mercy of two or three paper manufacturers.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I desire to say that, so far as the publishers are concerned to whom the hon. gentleman referred, my experience is that there is very little paper imported for use as ordinary news paper, and that this tariff will not in the slightest degree affect the price of such paper to publishers in Canada. The result of the adoption of a substantially protective tariff has been largely to reduce the price of paper. No man who is a publisher can fail to know that, comparing the price of ordinary news paper to-day with the price paid comparatively a few years ago, the price has gone down enormously. We really do not compete in the slightest degree so far as the ordinary news paper is concerned. There is a competition for certain special classes of paper that the publisher may sometimes require—not for his newspaper, but in the jobbing department, or for book publishing, and this paper he may desire to import. But this paper is being manufactured every year to a larger extent, and a better class of it than formerly; the country to-day is supplied with a class of paper which a few years ago we had to import altogether, and that has been the result of the policy of protection. To say that this in the slightest degree affects the newspaper publisher is to ignore the conditions under which papers are published and the class of paper used in publication. The advantage of the change is that it destroys the difficulty that existed in the Customs Department with regard to classification—a difficulty which resulted in serious injustice to special importers, in determining to what particular class certain papers belonged; and, in this respect, the adoption of a uniform tariff is a very great improvement, while, as I have said before, it will not enhance the price of paper to either the publisher of a newspaper or the publisher of books in Canada.

Mr. MITCHELL. I must confess that I am a little surprised at the attitude taken by my hon. friend, or rather I would be surprised, if he were purely a publisher, but as he is a member of a Cabinet which has brought down a policy of protection that they are running into the ground, I ought not to be surprised that he tries to defend this duty, and, as he always does when he undertakes it, defends it very well. The hon. gentleman says that the effect of the duty is not to increase the price of the paper at all. Whether that is the case or not, if putting up the duty on paper in order to prohibit importation does not increase the price of the local article, it is a wonder to me that they do not make it 50 per cent., because it would seem to me to be their duty to put that rate upon it, if the higher they put the duty the less it will interfere with the protection. I will not deal unfairly with the matter. I admit that the imposition of duties which, by giving large bounties to the manufacturers, induce men of capital to put their capital into the industries of a country, like the paper industry—I am free to admit that down to a certain point the charges do not increase in proportion to the amount of protection. But to expect an intelligent public to believe that the imposition of this 25 per cent. duty does not add to the cost of the paper more than if there was not duty upon it, is ridiculous. It is an argument which men of intelligence ought not to be asked to entertain. With regard to the hon. gentleman's other argument, about making greater facility in the entries at the Custom house, we all know that there were graded and classified duties on paper up to this time under the existing law, and in order to simplify the matter and make it more easy to ascertain what the duty was, they made this 22½ per cent. But will the hon. gentleman tell me that changing the duty from 22½ to 25 per cent. simplifies the matter, or gives greater facility to the men who make the entries? I do not think that argument will be entertained by this House. The hon. gentleman says that, practically, no paper is imported into the country under the present tariff.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I said no paper upon which newspapers are printed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will take the hon. gentleman's words, and I state that I was purchasing some paper the other day from a large manufacturer, and, in discussing the matter with me, he told me that he could buy paper, of as good quality as his own, in New England, bring it into the country, pay the duty, and let me have it at the same price as that at which he was selling his own make. That statement came from a large manufacturer, who is an intelligent and straightforward man, and the statement was made only three or four weeks ago. If that is the case, is there a reason, unless we wish entirely to prohibit the foreign article at the expense of the people who consume it, why we should increase this duty, after having removed the objection which the hon. gentleman pointed out, and facilitated the arrangements of the Custom house for ascertaining what the duty is? After having agreed to one duty of 22½ per cent., why does the hon. gentleman come down to-day and ask us to increase that duty to 25 per cent.? I do not think that is treating the newspapers of this country fairly. I have great respect for the talents of the hon. Minister of Finance, and for his perseverance, his determination, and his doggedness too, and I hope that before this matter is ended, I shall have a high respect for his sense of justice and right also. Does the hon. gentleman wish to close up the newspapers altogether? Is he dissatisfied with the criticisms they make on his career? Does he wish to have these newspapers, some of which are so ably conducted, closed up by adding this heavy duty to the difficulties they already have? What the hon. member for Bothwell said, is true, that the newspapers of this country are practically given away, and to add to the cost of the raw material, which is already high enough, seems to me to be a great outrage. I trust the hon. gentleman will not insist on increasing that duty. There was not a murmur against the duty of 2½ per cent., although the newspaper publishers thought it very high, but if he goes on and increases it to 25 per cent., my hon. friend will excuse me if I think he has not that high sense of justice which I hope, before this matter is disposed of, he will give some evidence of.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will not be necessary for me to detain the House long, for my hon. friend has, I think, established our whole case. In that forcible and clear manner in which he always states his views he has illustrated, by a practical demonstration, the absolute necessity of increasing the tariff on paper. He admits that it is desirable that we should furnish employment for our people—that we should do our own work on Canadian soil with Canadian hands. No man has held that doctrine more strongly than my hon. friend; and what does he tell you? He tells you that as the tariff stood the manufacturers of paper could go into New England and buy the same article that they made and bring it into Canada at as great a profit as they got on their own product.

Mr. MILLS. Why?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Because there is not sufficient protection against the manufacture of the article in the New England States. It is because we are not able to compete. With any duty we have imposed, we have not given such an advantage to our own industries as to enable them to supply the trade. Now, I must say that in this matter we had the advantage of receiving a very large deputation of paper manufacturers and of persons interested.

Mr. MITCHELL. Had you any journalists?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I had the advantage of having at my side a journalist who understood the whole question. I had the advantage of having as a colleague in the Cabinet a gentleman who has been able to conduct one of the most important papers that has influenced public opinion in Canada for many years. I had the advantage of having journalists to the right of me and journalists to the left of me, to protect me against any imposition on the part of people interested in the manufacture of paper; and I came to the conclusion, I believe the sound conclusion, that the paper industry of this country was in such a position that there was sufficient competition in the trade to thoroughly and completely protect the general public and the publishers of newspapers, and that we could safely make this slight increase in the tariff on paper without increasing the cost to the consumer, while enabling the manufacturers to go on and produce a paper which would compete with those better classes of papers which still, notwithstanding our large paper industries in the country, continue to be imported. Under these circumstances, I came to the conclusion, in the interest of the public and in the interest of maintaining those industries in the country, and without bearing too heavily on any other industry in the country, that I might fairly ask this slight increase. I had the advantage of consulting, not only some of the paper manufacturers, but some of the most eminent publishers in Canada, and it was only after full and careful consideration that the Government arrived at the conclusion to impose this duty. I may say that the submission of the resolution in its present form, with 22½ per cent., was owing to a clerical error in copying the determination the Government had arrived at, which was the same as I am now submitting to the House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I certainly protest against the duty the hon. gentleman proposes to impose upon paper, an article which is, in fact, the raw material of a large number of our population. I venture to say that there is no manufacturing industry in Canada, of any kind whatever, that gives employment to so large a number of people, as the publishing industry. There are offices in Canada in which from fifty to one hundred men are employed, and in some perhaps even a greater number; and when the hon. gentleman proposes this tax he proposes to legislate against that industry in the interest of an industry which is to-day enjoying larger profits than perhaps any other industry in this country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How can that possibly be, after what the hon. gentleman has heard from the hon. member for Northumberland?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will explain how it can be.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the hon. gentleman pretend to be so innocent in this matter that he does not know that there is not a pound of paper sold in this country to-day that is not sold for twice what it costs to produce it? And when that is the case, it will certainly be very easy for the manufacturer abroad to pay the cost of transportation and insurance and the duty of 20 per cent. and at the same time sell the foreign product at the price at which paper is sold in the Canadian market. I know something about this matter myself. I had communication, twelve or fifteen months ago, with several Canadian publishing houses, and I found, accidentally, that paper was being furnished by a manufacturer in Philadelphia to his patrons throughout the United States at a very much lower rate than any paper manufacturer in Canada was furnishing paper to the publishers here. We brought to the notice of the Canadian manufacturers this fact, that we could pay the duty and bring the paper from Philadelphia for a very much less sum than we were paying, not because it was costing so very much to produce the paper in this country, but because the Canadian manufacturers were making enormous profits at the expense of the publishers. We gave them the choice between reducing their charges to us and leaving us to make arrangements elsewhere, and the result was that we got more favorable terms from them; but if the hon. gentleman's tariff had been in force at that time this opportunity would have been denied. I tell the hon. gentleman that he is legislating in the interest of men whose profits are ten times as great as the profits of those against whom he is legislating, and I can tell him this, that if there is any independence in the Conservative press of this country that is not subsidised by the Government, then the hon. gentleman will find that there are a good many others, besides the newspaper men who represent the Opposition, who will resent this attempt to legislate in favor of those already amply provided for. The hon. gentleman tells us that he has had the benefit of the support of certain newspaper men. I have no doubt whatever that the hon. the Minister of Customs can give him accurate information upon this subject, and I have no doubt the hon. the Minister of the Interior can give him accurate information; but certainly the Minister of the Interior stated to-day what is not in accordance with my experience. We know that there are newspapers in this country to which it does not make any difference—newspapers that are getting $12,000, $15,000 or $20,000 a year from the public Treasury can afford to pay better prices for paper than newspapers conducted on strictly commercial principles, but I shall not refer to newspapers alone. I speak of publishers in general; and everybody who knows the price of wages, the appliances necessary for the production of paper, and the material from which the paper is produced, knows that, so far as the interference of the Government is concerned, the paper manufacturers require less protection, are capable of relying more upon themselves, than almost any other industry in which the population is engaged. The hon. gentleman, adopting the principle of protection, as the hon. member for Muskoka has stated, has proposed to permit papers, partly printed elsewhere, to come in on payment of a duty of 25 per cent., and proposes to place the same duty on blank paper. There is hardly a town or village in Canada in which there are not two papers published, and we know that they are hardly able to live. We find the papers published in the cities are published at lower prices than they are elsewhere; they are published at scarcely the actual cost of the paper, and the hon. gentleman proposes to increase the burdens, and increase the difficulties, where competition is so severe, by increasing the cost of the raw material. In this respect he insists upon departing widely from the rule which he has professed to act upon, and the principle by which he professes to be guided. I may say that the hon. gentleman has legislated in the interests of some two or three powerful companies, to the detriment of the interests of this population.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. the Finance Minister has made an allegation that I have entirely proved his case, and he based it upon the fact that I stated that when purchasing paper some few weeks ago from a manufacturer in this country, the manufacturer told me he could lay down the same paper from the States at that price and pay the duty and freight. How does the hon. gentleman conclude that proves his case, that the paper manufacturers require additional protection. I should take the solution of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), that it proves entirely the converse, namely, that the Canadian manufacturers put on such a price that the American manufacturers can pay the duty and freight and deliver the article in Canada as cheaply as we can get it from the home manufacturers. Look around at the paper manufacturers in this country, millionaires almost the whole of them; or, if not, they will be in a short time. I can understand why the Finance Minister, leading the Government, as he is practically doing, and exercising a moral influence as well as the magnetic influence that he exerts on those around him—I can understand his being able to sway and control his party and raise or lower the tariff as he pleases, and have it swallowed wholesale by the hon. gentlemen behind him; but when he refers to the information he has, upon which he bases this increase, when he refers to the fact that at his right hand he has two gentlemen who have been engaged in the trade—one, at least, who has been for a considerable time out of it, and the other who has ceased for some time to take an active interest in it—I say it is not right for that hon. gentleman, on the plea of information from these sources, to come down and increase the duty on an industry such as the journalistic industry or that of the book publishers. If he wanted information as to what the paper industry would bear, why did he not ask hon. gentlemen on this side who would tell him the truth. We would tell him not to increase the duty over 22½ per cent. If he goes on increasing the duties on journalism, he will not have an independent paper like the Herald to point out his faults and call attention to the iniquities carried on in the shape of legislation in the interests of the National Policy, so called. I appeal to the sense of justice of the Finance Minister—I hope he has some left. I know his manner, his style, is very much improved; he has had some eulogiums from everybody in this House, in private—in public they do not speak so favorably of him; and I hope that, while he has shown his visits across the Atlantic and associations with distinguished peers and, no doubt, peeresses also, have improved his manners and style and temper, we will not have to come to the conclusion that he has departed from that sense of justice he used to give us more of before he left us. I hope the duty will not be increased.

Mr. MILLS. Twenty per cent. is plenty.

Mr. MITCHELL. We will leave it as it is, 22½. There is a motive behind this. I hope the hon. gentleman has not sent applications to those millionaires he is now benefiting for aid in the last elections. It looks a little like it. I hope it is not so, and that he will leave the duty as it is, and not further burden the journals of the country which are struggling for existence.

Mr. DAVIN. I consider that the eloquent appeal of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) is one that will be made in vain to the newspapers, and for this reason: I do not believe that this duty will increase the price of the paper used by newspaper proprietors. Hon. gentlemen opposite discuss every proposal made in this tariff from the point of view that every addition to the tariff will raise the price of the article. Well, those of us who originally supported the National Policy, and all of us who support it now, hold that we should not raise the price of the article to the consumer by protecting our own manufactures; we hold that the competition amongst our own manufacturers will bring down the prices; but should the contention of the hon. member for Bothwell and the hon. member for Northumberland be correct, that this increase of duty will raise the price of paper used by newspaper publishers, what will happen? From one end of the country to the other, an agitation would be excited and the paper makers denounced by the newspapers. Do you suppose, Sir, for a moment that if, as the result of the change proposed by the Finance Minister, the newspapers should have to pay more for the paper they use, their protests will not at once be heard from one end of the country to the other against the conduct of the paper manufacturers? The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has referred to the case of a paper manufacturer in the United States who was ready to pay the existing duty and still send in paper at a lower rate than the Canadian manufacturer could supply it for. If we enquired into that case we should probably find it was analogous with dozens of similar cases that were brought before us when we were enquiring into these matters before 1878. We found that the manufacturer was turning out large quantities of goods, and could easily afford to turn out a small surplus quantity for the Canadian market, rush it in here, and sell it at a ruinous price, as far as the Canadian manufacturers were concerned, but for an amount which would pay him very well on a mere surplus from his factory, besides making a Canadian market for his goods. I am a member of a company which publishes a newspaper, and I am naturally interested in the price at which newspaper publishers can get the paper; and, if I thought that the result would be to raise the price of paper, I should not like it, I should think the proposal was bad, not only for the company to which I belong, but for the community at large. I should think it would amount to a tax upon knowledge.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, the hon. gentleman says "hear, hear," and, if I thought it would raise the price of the article, I would not support it any more than, if I thought, in dozens of other cases, the price of the article would be increased by the duty, I would support the proposal. But I repeat that our theory is wholly different from the theory of hon. gentlemen on the opposite side. Our theory is that, by adopting a National Policy, we superinduce a state of things by which we not only get the manufacture of the article done in our own country, on our own ground, developing the resources of Canada and employing our own labor, but that in the end we lower the price of the article, and immediately after bringing the policy into existence we give you the article at a cheaper, or, at least, as cheap a rate as before. Two years ago I happened to be in that gallery, listening to a speech made by a member who, I am sorry to say, is no longer in this House, and that hon. gentleman, in his reply to the leader of the Opposition, and I think he referred also to the member for Bothwell, in regard to this question, because it comes up again and again, showed that the statement of the leader of the Opposition, that the price of the article was raised, was wrong, and that the result of the National Policy in regard to the article in question was to lower the price of it to the Canadian consumer. If these hon. gentlemen were logical, what they ought to do, and what would please many hon. gentlemen on that side of the House, is that we should take off the duty completely, throw wide the door to the American manufacturer, let him come in here and take our own manufacturer by the throat and kill him off, and then we should have to pay the price that would suit the views of the American manufacturer. If, for instance, you could injure the paper manufacturers of this country so as to throw us at the mercy of the American manufacturers, the effect would be that probably for a short time we should be getting cheaper paper, but in the end we should have to pay a higher price and probably not get as good an article. I will say to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills)—and I will note the matter, and make a point of seeing what will happen—that, if it is found that the result of putting on the duty that the Finance Minister wishes to put on paper used for newspapers is to raise the price of it to the publisher, I will take good care for one that the manufacturers hear of it within twelve months, and before this Parliament meets again. As a person who is interested in this matter, and knowing a little about it, and as one who is also interested in the general question of protection to our industries, a question to which I have given a good deal of attention, and behind which there is the general principle, which cannot possibly be driven into the heads of hon. gentlemen on this side, I have no hesitation in supporting the duty proposed by the Finance Minister.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am not going to enter into a general discussion of the subject of the tariff or the theory of protection on this item, but I would remind the hon. member who has just spoken that it is very extraordinary if he subscribes to the views he has just now enunciated, that he should ever favor a drawback. The hon. gentleman has supported the policy of giving to the millers a drawback upon the wheat which they import from the United States for manufacture. He has supported a drawback upon the iron which is imported and enters into the composition of a ship which is sold in a foreign market. If the hon. gentleman's views are correct, that the imposition of a tax never increases the price of an article, upon what principle does he propose to pay back to any man money which they have never paid; upon what principle does he propose to pay them money which has not increased the price of the article which they have purchased? The hon. gentleman enunciates one particular view, but, when it comes to a question of practical politics, neither the hon. gentleman nor those whom he follows on the other side of the House, act upon the principle he has just enunciated. On the contrary, all these gentlemen go upon the presumption that the duty imposed upon an article enters into the price as much as the wages do. What does the hon. gentleman say as to the articles which are imported here from the United States? We have heard a score of times, since we have been discussing these resolutions, about the prison labor, about the small price of an article on account of the low price of the labor. Why, the labor, the original price of the raw material, the material used, whatever it may be in the manufacture of an article, enters into its price, and upon what theory does the hon. gentleman pretend that the duty paid upon an article, when it reaches the border, does not enter into its price as much as the labor and the cost of the raw material? The hon. gentleman's leaders do not subscribe to his view. They sometimes enunciate it, but it is never the view put forth in practical politics; and, if the hon. gentleman knows anything, he knows that the duty imposed upon paper will necessarily add to the price of every publisher in the country.

Mr. DAVIN. I will explain that in reply to the hon. gentleman. I do support a drawback in the case of an article which is about—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope the question of drawbacks will not be entered into at this stage. It will quite defeat the object we have in view.

Mr. DAVIN. Then I will reply to that at another time.

Mr. WILSON (Argenteuil). I wish to make a few remarks—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope my hon. friend will not prolong the debate, or we will not get through to-night.

Mr. WILSON (Argenteuil). Of course, if the Finance Minister wishes, I will not proceed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In item 24 I propose to strike out the words "tissue paper," and to substitute the following:—

Manufactures of paper, including ruled or bordered papers, paper-teries, boxed papers, envelopes, and blank books, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Then I propose to take up item No. 40, woollen goods. I may explain to the House that having had the advantage of a very full discussion with a large representation of the Board of Trade and others from Toronto and Montreal, I propose to reconstruct that clause in order to meet their views, and to simplify the tariff in this way: to strike out number 40 and restore item 473 of the revised tariff, and make item 475 of the same to read as follows:—

All fabrics composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca goat or other like animals, not otherwise provided for, on all such goods costing 10 cents per yard and under, 22½ per cent. ad valorem; costing over 10 and under 14 cents, 25 per cent. ad valorem; costing 14 cents and over, 27½ per cent. ad valorem.

I do away with the specific duty altogether.

Mr. MILLS. That is a very great improvement. I have in my hand from a leading wholesale man of Toronto, a criticism of the tariff as it stands, and these resolutions. According to his statement goods that in England cost 2½d. sterling per yard would actually pay a duty of 57½ per cent., and goods costing 3½d. per yard would pay 49 per cent. In fact the hon. gentleman has proposed a reduction of the tariff on these goods of a little more than one half.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to alter item 92 so as to make it read:

Plate of iron and steel combined, and steel not specially enumerated or provided for, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

That is to meet the case of certain articles in which there is a combination of iron and steel. I propose that item 169 be struck out and the following substituted:—

Screws commonly called wood screws, 2 inches or over in length, 6 cents per pound; 1 inch and less than 2 inches, 8 cents per pound; less than 1 inch, 11 cents per pound. (b) Other screws of iron, steel, brass or other metal, not otherwise provided for, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MILLS. That will be a very high duty.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not very. Just about the same as at present. Then, I propose that item 112 be struck out and the following substituted :—

Iron or steel rivets, bolts with or without threads, or nuts or bolt blanks, less than $\frac{3}{8}$ of an inch in diameter, $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

This gives about 35 per cent. on the highest value.

Mr. MILLS. About 75 per cent. on the lower.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then I propose to strike out item 113, and substitute the following :—

Nails and spikes, wrought and pressed, galvanised or not, horse shoe nails, hob nails and wire nails, and all other wrought iron or steel nails not elsewhere specified, and horse, mule or ox shoes, one and a half cents per pound, but not less than 35 per cent. ad valorem.

I also propose to submit the following resolutions :—

Resolved that it is expedient to repeal the following items in schedule "A," chapter 33 of the Revised Statutes of Canada intituled: An Act respecting the duties of Customs, namely, numbers 57, 135, 143, 344, 345 and 369, and to make other provisions in lieu thereof as follows :—

All clothing made of cotton or other material not otherwise provided for, including corsets and similar articles made up by the seamstress or tailor, also tarpaulin, plain or coated with oil, paint, tar or other composition, and cotton bags made by the use of the needle, not otherwise provided for, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. DAVIES. What change does this make in the present tariff?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present duty is 30 per cent., and it gives an addition of 5 per cent. on all clothing made of cotton or other material not otherwise provided for, including corsets and similar articles made up by the seamstress.

Mr. WELSH. Does it include the tarpaulin that belongs to ships?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes. The duty is increased 5 per cent.

Mr. WELSH. This is used on ships to cover up the hatchways when they are filled with grain, to keep it from getting wet. It is taken away. It does not stay in the country. Do you think that is fair?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If it came in that way and went out with the ship, it would not be entered.

Mr. WELSH. Yes, it would; because I have seen it done. I have sometimes ten or twelve loads of grain, and I want the hatches secured to keep the grain dry. Sometimes I send over to the sail-maker and say: Make me a dozen tarpaulins as cheaply as you can. I want that canvass, and when you put a duty on tarpaulins you strike me home. When you come to the shipping interest, I tell you that you had better strike out tarpaulins, and if you take my advice you will.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think my hon. friend is mistaken. I think he would not communicate a little arrangement of that kind to the Customs Department.

Mr. WELSH. No; all right, I won't object to it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.—

Drain pipes and sewer pipes, glazed, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The duty is now 25 per cent. and we propose to make it 35 per cent. The next item I propose is:

All square piano fortes, whether round cornered or not, not over seven octaves, $25 each; all other square piano fortes, $30 each; upright piano fortes, $30 each; concert, semi-concert or parlor grand piano fortes, $50 each; in addition thereto 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The duty is now 15 per cent., which I make 20, and there is no change in the specific duties, so it is an addition of 5 per cent. ad valorem on these articles.

Mr. WELSH. Well, I do not object to that, I am not very musical. They that want it as a luxury let them pay for it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.—

Parts of piano fortes, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

They are now 25 per cent.

Clothes wringers a specific duty of $1 each and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

They are now 35 per cent., I propose to make it a specific duty on each and reduce the ad valorem from 35 to 30 per cent. The new duty will be, as near as I can judge, 35 per cent.

Mr. WELSH. There will be an increase.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. WELSH. I am glad of that, because having dealt with the seamstresses I think we should not tax washer-women's clothes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to add to the free list: "Red wood planks and board, sawn but not further manufactured." This is done for the purpose of furnishing the matter for the promotion of manufacture of cigar boxes in the country.

Mr. MILLS. That will take the duty off all lumber I suppose.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All red wood. I now propose to deal with item 115, to strike that item out and substitute:

Wrought iron or steel nuts or washers, iron or steel rivets, bolts with or without thread or nuts and bolt blanks and finished hinges or hinge blanks not elsewhere specified, 1 cent per lb. and 25 per cent. ad valorem.

And also in resolution 2, strike out item 700 from the heading in the first paragraph.

Mr. MILLS. What is item 700?

Mr. BOWELL. It places certain vegetable matters used for mattresses on the free list. It was proposed to impose 15 per cent., but this amendment is to strike that out and leave the item on the free list.

Mr. MILLS. The Finance Minister has not given me any information with respect to the admission of red wood free of duty. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that in Canada we have no wood out of which to make cigar boxes, and that it is necessary to import wood from a foreign country. Does the hon. gentleman not know that there are many kinds of lumber in Canada that would be admirable for that purpose and that by this proposal he is discouraging native industry.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What is it?

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has but to look in an ordinary lumber pile at any mill in the country, and he will find hard woods of various sorts admirably adapted for this purpose. The hon. gentleman surely is departing widely from his notion of keeping the money in the country when he proposes, with the immense quantity of wood of every kind here, to import wood for the purpose of making cigar boxes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The extent to which I depart from the principles I have enunciated will, I am sure, be very gratifying in the view of the hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. MILLS. Not at all.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no such wood as red wood in the country. There is a red cedar, but that does not exist to any very great extent. More than that, it cannot be used for the purpose of cigar boxes, because it would destroy the flavor of the articles placed in the box. There is another reason. There is such a striking similarity between a cedar which is now free, and the red wood of southern California and other southern countries, that it is difficult to draw the distinction. Red wood does not exist in this country, and consequently does not come into competition with anything here.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Any wood imported must come into competition with another wood used here. Nearly all the wood used for the manufacture of cigar boxes years ago in the United States was obtained from Canada from Canadian sycamore. When the hon. gentleman pretends to say that no wood can be used except red wood, he seems to be imposing on the credulity of the House.

Mr. WELSH. What is the reason why the whole people should be taxed on iron, and the railway corporations are to have their iron admitted duty free?

The Committee rose and reported.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope, with the consent of the House, the resolutions will be allowed to be received now. It will be a great convenience, for we can print the Bill; and, as hon. gentlemen opposite know, there will be every opportunity of dealing with every item when the Bill comes before the House at a later stage. I wish to express the great obligation the Government are under to hon. gentlemen opposite for the facilities they have offered, and the great saving of time that has resulted from the spirit in which they have met these propositions; and I think they will be still further consulting the convenience of the House without impairing in the slightest degree their opportunity of dealing with any part of the Bill, if they allow these resolutions to be concurred in now.

Mr. MILLS. With that understanding.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. With that understanding.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to say a word in connection with iron pipes. I received a telegram the other day from the president of the Board of Trade of British Columbia, stating that the revised Customs tariff will seriously affect the shipments of iron pipe contracted for in connection with the water and gas works in Victoria, New Westminster, Nanaimo, and the new city of Vancouver. I desire to ask the Government if there will be a proviso inserted that all those shipments that are in transitu will not come under the new tariff. If some such provision can be made, by which they will be exempted from the operation of the new tariff, a great hardship will be prevented.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That subject has been very carefully considered by the Government. I have no doubt very much inconvenience will necessarily arise to importers and persons who have made large and important contracts, in consequence of the very material changes in the duty, and I propose to submit in the Bill a clause authorising the Government to deal with those cases, with a view of preventing the hardships which would otherwise arise in connection with it.

Resolutions read the first and second time and concurred in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER introduced Bill (No. 107) to amend chapter 33 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, respecting Duties of Customs.

ADJOURNMENT—PASSES ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. DAVIES. I am sorry the Minister of Railways is not in his place, but I would ask if it is the intention to send passes on the Intercolonial to all members of the House, or only to favored individuals. I am not interested in the matter myself, because it is not my happiness to be able to return home, but it has been communicated to me in a manner that entitles it to belief, that these passes have been sent to some members and not to others.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am able, in the absence of the Minister of Railways, to say that every member of the House will be treated precisely alike in that regard, on whichever side he may sit. All will be treated precisely in the same manner; there will be no distinction, and whatever favor has been accorded to hon. gentlemen on this side, will be accorded to every hon. gentleman on the other side.

Mr. DAVIES. I am glad to hear it because it has not been the case up to half-past five to-day.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am certain that if anything of that kind has occurred it is an oversight, because I communicated with the Minister of Railways and he assured me that what was done in the one case would be done in the other.

Mr. DAVIES. I may state that some gentlemen have gone home, and they had to pay their fares; they were accompanied by others who had passes sent to them, and unfortunately the distinction was that those gentlemen sitting on this side had to pay their fares, while the supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite had passes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can assure the hon. gentleman that that is entirely an oversight which will be corrected, for all are to be treated precisely in the same manner. If through an oversight anything of that kind has occurred measures will be taken to make it all right.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 5:30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 25th May, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 109) respecting the Manitoba and North-Western Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Scarth.)

Bill (No. 110) respecting the Saskatchewan and Western Railway Company.—(Mr. Scarth.)

QUEEN'S, N.B., ELECTION.

Mr. SPEAKER. I beg to inform the House that I have just received intimation that Mr. John R. Dunn, the returning officer for the county of Queen's, N.B., is now present and is waiting the pleasure of the House.

SUPREME AND EXCHEQUER COURTS ACT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 111) to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, and to make better provision for the trial of claims against the Crown. He said: This is the Bill of which intimation was given in the Speech with which His Excellency opened the Session, and in which it was referred to as a Bill making provision for the improvement of procedure relating to the trial of claims against the Crown. At this stage I will merely explain the principal features of the Bill, and defer further explanation of the reasons for introducing it until the motion is made for the second reading. It is proposed to establish the court which is indicated by the title of the Bill, the Court of Claims. This court shall bear the title of the Exchequer Court, and it is proposed to transfer to it all the Exchequer jurisdiction which is now possessed by judges of the Supreme Court of Canada. The judge of this new court is to be possessed of Exchequer jurisdiction to the same extent as the judges of the Supreme Court; he is to have exclusive jurisdiction where they have exclusive jurisdiction, and concurrent jurisdiction where they have concurrent jurisdiction. He is likewise to have transferred to him all the jurisdiction which is now exercised by the Board of Dominion Arbitrators. It is proposed to repeal the several Acts relating to the Board of Arbitrators, and to apply the procedure in investigations by that board to the tribunal of this judge. The jurisdiction, therefore, which he will exercise in lieu of that which is now exercised by the arbitrators, he will exercise in cases referred to him by a Minister of the Crown, who will have the same facility for transferring claims to him as the Minister now has for putting claims for adjudication before the arbitrators. It follows, from what I have just said, that, instead of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, he will have the adjudication upon petitions of right, and likewise upon that class of claims which, not having the formal procedure attached to petitions of right, are assigned to the Board of Arbitrators by any Minister. It is proposed that this judge shall receive $6,000 per annum as his salary, and that he shall have a registrar who shall receive a salary of $2,000 per annum. These salaries, of course, are not mentioned in the Bill, but will be mentioned in the resolutions of which I will give notice to-day. I only mention the salaries at this stage in order to facilitate the consideration of the Bill. It is also provided that the present Dominion Arbitrators, although their present jurisdiction is abolished, shall be continued in office to act as official referees of this judge. Hon. members are aware that claims are frequently investigated by the board, or by individual members of the board, which involve very small amounts, in regard to which the board is a convenient method of obtaining redress. It is often the case that the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of Railways and Canals dispatches a single arbitrator to investigate a claim in a distant part of the country, and in this way the large expense of the board in regard to transit to that distant part of the country, and the sittings of the full board at that place, is obviated. The Minister is informed of the nature of the evidence, and in many cases he makes his report and dispatches the matter without any additional expense. It will be convenient to continue this method in connection with the new court, so that the judge of the Court of Exchequer appointed under this Bill will have power to use the Dominion Arbitrators as official referees. It is, however, provided that when vacancies occur in the office of Dominion Arbitrator, these officers shall not be replaced, but the position shall be filled by official referees, not bearing the title of Dominion Arbitrators, and not exceeding three in number. It is provided, likewise, that there shall be an appeal from this judge to the Supreme Court in all cases where the amount in controversy exceeds $500, and there is also a proviso that pending business may be transferred to this tribunal.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he proposes in this Bill to give to the judge simply or strictly judicial functions, or whether his functions are to be similar to those hitherto exercised by the Board of Arbitrators. At present, the decision of the board is not conclusive or binding upon the Government. Is this to be a recommendation to the Government instead of a judgment, or is the judge to give judgment upon the merits of the case before him, by which the Government would feel itself bound and with which it would comply?

Mr. THOMPSON. The judge is to exercise purely judicial functions, and any decision which he may give on any claims tried before him will have the same effect as a decision of a judge of the Exchequer Court has now on a petition of right.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

LAURENTIDE BRANCH LINES TARIFF.

Mr. RINFRET, in the absence of Mr. GAUTHIER, asked, Whether the tariff of rates for the transport of freight and passengers on the Canadian Pacific Railway, in the Province of Quebec, on the Laurentide branch lines to St. Jérôme and St. Eustache, have been laid before the Governor in Council and approved of by His Excellency?

Mr. POPE. This tariff was fixed by the Local Government and has never been submitted or interfered with since, as the railway was then under the control of the Local Government.

ELECTORAL LISTS FOR THE COUNTY OF L'ASSOMPTION.

Mr. RINFRET, in the absence of Mr. GAUTHIER, asked, What is the total amount of expenditure made by the revising officer, Pierre Blouin, Esq., in the electoral district of l'Assomption, in the drawing out of the electoral lists, including salaries, printing expenses, travelling allowances, wages of clerk and bailiff?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The answer to this question is to be found in the report of the Auditor-General, containing all these statements, and which was brought down before the House the other day.

CAPTAIN LUDGER BOLDOC.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to grant another enquiry to Captain Ludger Bolduc, in relation to his dismissal as commander of the Government steamer La Canadienne, under order dated 27th May, 1884?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not the intention of the Government to grant another enquiry to Captain Bolduc.

KIT ALLOWANCE TO VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. O'BRIEN asked, Was any application made for kit allowance for the York and Simcoe Provisional Battalion? If so, what answer was made to such application, and why has not such allowance been made?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. An application was made by Lieut.-Col. O'Brien, through the proper channel, on the 2nd March, 1886, for an allowance in lieu of underclothing, &c., on the grounds that all the other battalions which were engaged in the North-West and were in action were either supplied with underclothing or were made an allowance in lieu thereof, which statement is at variance with the facts. This application was replied to through the General commanding on the 4th January, 1887, stating that this battalion had no claim, as they had been provided with their kit by the county, and that if payment was made at all, it should be made to the municipality. Some battalions were given some allowance, but they proved that they had expended the amount for the purchase of kits for the men. The York and Simcoe battalion does not appear to have any claim for such allowance.

GABRIEL DUMONT.

Mr. RINFRET, in the absence of Mr. PRÉFONTAINE, asked, Whether the proclamation published in the Canada Gazette on the 17th July, 1886, announcing an amnesty in favor of persons implicated in the troubles in the North-West in 1885, covers the case of Gabriel Dumont, formerly of Batoche, and now in the United States of America? Is the said Gabriel Dumont perfectly free to return to Canada and reside therein, without being molested or liable to criminal or civil prosecution on the part of the Government, or of any person acting for the Government, in case of his return to Canada; and, in the event of such molestation or arrest, would the Government be prepared to grant full and complete protection to the said Gabriel Dumont? If not, what course would the Government take in relation to the said Gabriel Dumont, in case he should return to Canada, or what proceedings would they take against him?

Mr. THOMPSON. The proclamation which the hon. gentleman's question refers to extends an amnesty to all persons engaged in the North-West disturbance, except such as committed homicide otherwise than in actual warfare. It must be in the knowledge of Gabriel Dumont himself whether his case is covered by that amnesty or not.

WHARVES AT ST. FRANÇOIS AND STE. FAMILLE.

Mr. LANGELIER (Montmorency) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to cause to be continued during this summer the works already begun on the wharves at St. François and Ste. Famille, Island of Orleans, county of Montmorency?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I must say that a balance of $248 was left out of the grant for the wharf at St. François. That amount will probably be expended on that wharf. With regard to the wharf at Ste. Famille, nothing has been expended there for the last two years, and I am informed by the chief engineer of the Government that the extension of this wharf would require an enormous sum, which the Department is not now in a position to ask the House to grant.

WHARF AT ST. CÉCILE DU BIC.

Mr. FISET asked, What is the amount of the sums expended since 1878 for the building of the wharf at St. Cécile du Bic?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount expended on the wharf at St. Cécile du Bic, up to the 16th of May this year, is $15,931.08.

INDIAN AND COLONIAL EXHIBITION.

Mr. HOLTON asked, What was the total cost of sending four officers of the Geological and Natural History Survey to the late Indian and Colonial Exhibition—including their salaries while absent from Ottawa? What was the total expenditure in connection with the Exhibition incurred through the Survey, and what proportion of this outlay was paid out of moneys voted by Parliament for the purposes of the Survey?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The total amount expended on Exhibition account by the Director of the Geological Survey was $15,873.37. This amount was made up of salaries, $6,449.12, and expenses $9,424.25. Of the sum of the expense there were paid by the Department of Agriculture, $4,243.54; by the Department of Interior out of the vote for Geological Survey purposes, $5,175.71. The salaries were the ordinary salaries of the officers in charge of the Geological Exhibit, and were paid out of the appropriations for Civil Government, Department of the Interior, in the usual way. I may say further that the cost of the four officers engaged in this service is substantially the same as the cost of those engaged at Philadelphia and Paris.

POSTMASTER OF ST. ALEXANDRÉ.

Mr. DESSAINT asked, Whether the Government have received any complaint or petition asking for the dismissal of George Brochu, postmaster of St. Alexandré, in the county of Kamouraska, or for an enquiry into his conduct as postmaster? If so, what is the name of the petitioner? Has such enquiry been held? when and by whom, and what are the names of the witnesses examined?

Mr. McLELAN. A complaint was received against the postmaster. It was sent to the inspector for enquiry, and no report has been received yet.

FISHING IN THE RIVER MATANE.

Mr. FISET asked, To whom have the Government leased for the last five years, and at what price, the right of fishing in the River Matane? Is it the intention of the Government to lease the said right this year again, notwithstanding the formal protests of the riparian proprietors and censitaires?

Mr. FOSTER. The admitted right of fishing in the River Matane has been let for a series of years to Sir Alexander Galt. There has been nothing received in the way of payment from him except that he has borne all costs of the guardianship of the river and the maintenance of the fisheries. That was in pursuance of arrangements made by the late Government as a compliment to Sir A. T. Galt. The lease has still to run till December 31st of this year.

WHARF AT KAMOURASKA.

Mr. DESSAINT asked, Whether the Government are aware that the works executed under their control, last summer, on the wharf at Kamouraska, have been considerably injured by the ice? If so, is it their intention to make the necessary repairs and to complete the said wharf this year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The damage done to the wharf at Kamouraska amounts only to $250, and consequently the wharf will be repaired immediately. As to the last part of the question of the hon. member, I am unable now to answer it.

SCHOONER LIZZIE LINDSAY.

Mr. JONCAS asked, Whether the schooner Lizzie Lindsay, employed last year in the service for the protection of the fisheries, is to be employed again this year? If not, for what reason?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not proposed to employ the schooner Lizzie Lindsay, it having been found desirable to engage for the protective service, vessels of a different build and weight.

GASPÉ BASIN MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. LANGELIER (Montmorency) asked, Why the contract for carrying the mail between the post office of Gaspé Basin and the wharf at which the steamer Admiral touches, was taken away from Mr. A. Carter, who held it since 1879? Were tenders called for in relation to the said contract, and what is the price paid to the party who is now charged with the execution of the same?

Mr. McLELAN. It has not been the practice to ask for tenders for conveyance of the mail between post offices and wharves at which the Admiral touches. Arrangements are made from time to time with persons who are considered suitable for the service and are willing to perform it on economical terms. The price paid this year is the same as last.

Mr. LANGELIER (Montmorency). That is no answer to the first part of the question.

Mr. McLELAN. There was no contract before. The inspector makes the arrangements from year to year with parties willing to do it on economical terms. The inspector made the arrangement this year at the same price as last.

SCHOONER BELONGING TO ROBERT LINDSAY.

Mr. LANGELIER (Montmorency) asked, For what reasons have the Government refused this year to employ the schooner belonging to Robert Lindsay, Esq., of the township of Douglstown, county of Gaspé, in the protection of our fisheries; after he had gone to considerable expense in fitting her out in a suitable manner for this purpose? Whether it is the intention of the Government to indemnify the said Robert Lindsay, for the expenditure aforesaid, and to pay him the sum of $500, which is still due him?

Mr. FOSTER. The first part of the question has already been answered. The vessel was chartered for one season only, and certain repairs were necessary in order to fit her for the work. The full charter fees have been paid, and Mr. Lindsay has no further claim in respect to that vessel.

MR. H. J. McGRATH.

Mr. WELDON (St. John) asked, Is Mr. H. J. McGrath still in the employ of the Government as inspector of masonry of the new wing of the penitentiary at Dorchester, N.B., or in what other capacity? and at what salary?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. McGrath was employed in 1883 at $90 a month. On the completion of the work he was notified, on the 12th May inst., that his services would be no longer required.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND SUBWAY.

Mr. PERRY asked, Is it the intention of the Government to cause a survey to be made during the present season, of the Straits of Northumberland, with the view of building a subway across the straits, as promised by the First Minister in a letter to Senator Howlan, dated January 28th, 1887?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the intention of the Government to cause a survey to be made, with a view to building a subway across the straits.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE asked, Is it the intention of the Government to commence this year the establishment of an experimental farm in the Province of British Columbia?

Mr. CARLING. The establishment of an experimental farm in British Columbia is under the consideration of the Government.

BLACK COD BANKS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE asked, Is it the intention of the Government to bring down this Session, the report of the expedition sent out last year to examine the Black Cod Banks in the waters of British Columbia?

Mr. FOSTER. A partial report will be brought down this year, and a complete report when the explorations shall have been completed, which will not be until this season is over.

LIQUOR PERMITS IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to make any change in the liquor permit system now in practice in the North-West Territories?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That question is now engaging the attention of the Government.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY CO.'S LAND SALES.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia) asked, Whether the information asked for by him, in reference to lands sold by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, will be furnished? If so, when?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I may say that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have been asked to furnish that information, and I am told that they are now procuring it from their officers in the North-West.

ESQUIMALT GRAVING DOCK—CLAIM OF McNAMEE & CO.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE moved:

That a Special Committee be appointed to examine into and report upon the claim of Francis B. McNamee, Anthony Gilbert Nish and James Wright, as set forth in their petition, received on May 8th, 1887, said Committee to be composed of Messrs. Casey, Casgrain, Colby, Shanly, Tupper, Weldon (St. John), and the mover.

Mr. MILLS. I think the hon. gentleman should give the House some information with respect to the nature and merit of the claim, before asking the House to appoint a committee.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. The petition sets forth the claim. It states that F. B. McNamee & Co. have a claim against the Dominion Government; that on 24th January, 1880, they entered into a contract with the Province of British Columbia for the building of a graving dock at Esquimalt; that $10,000 were deposited as security for the fulfilment of the contract; that they entered upon the work in September of the same year, and prosecuted it until 1882, expending a large sum of money; that in June, 1882, the Government of British Columbia took possession of those works; that afterwards it was publicly stated the Dominion Government intended to purchase those works from the Provincial Government; that Messrs. McNamee & Co. notified the Dominion Government, as the petition sets forth, that they were the real owners of that property. Still, it appears, the Dominion Government, in the face of that notification, purchased the property from the British Columbia Government, and this company claim that the Dominion Government are indebted to them in the sum of some $60,000. Now, the question is, whether the ground of claim they set forth is a justifiable one or not. The object of obtaining a committee is to investigate the matter, and ascertain whether this company have a just claim or not.

Mr. MILLS. I think the House is entitled to know from the Government something with respect to the merits of this claim for which the appointment of a committee is asked. According to the statement of the hon. member, the Dominion Government is a party, the British Columbia Government is also a party, and McNamee and Co. constitute the third party interested, and this House has a right to know precisely what is the position of the matter, what are the contentions of the company, and whether the Government admit the validity of the claim, because large claims made against the Government should not be recognised unless the Government consider they possess some merit.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This case was properly put by the hon. member who submitted the motion. McNamee & Co. had a contract with the British Columbia Government to build a dry dock at Esquimalt. After proceeding with the work for a certain time the Provincial Government thought they had the right under the contract to take the contract off the contractors' hands, to confiscate all their plant, and also retain the deposit of $10,000 which McNamee & Co. had made under the contract. Sub sequently the Dominion Government concluded an arrangement with the Provincial Government, which arrangement was sanctioned by Parliament, by which a certain sum of money was given to the British Columbia Government, and that Government transferred to the Dominion Government the plant they had on their hands and also the graving dock so far as built, and the Government of Canada undertook to complete the work. Later on, whilst the work was proceeding under a new contract entered into by the Government of Canada with other parties, McNamee & Co. made a claim on the Dominion Government for the value of the plant and also for the deposit of $10,000 which had been placed in the hands of the British Columbia Government. The matter was investigated (of course I will not enter here into all the details), and finally the matter was brought before the Minister of Justice in order to ascertain whether there was any legal claim against the Dominion Government, and the advice we received was that there was none, but that the claim was against the British Columbia Government. Nevertheless, McNamee & Co. made a strong case, and the Dominion Government considered that, if there was not any legal claim, McNamee & Co. had, nevertheless, shown strong reasons why they should not be left without redress, and under those circumstances, the Government have no objection to this matter being investigated by a committee of the House. Hon. members will observe that it is a mixed matter between this Government and the Government of British Columbia, and the investigation being conducted here with proper care will most likely bring out all the facts, and the report of the committee will show how the case stands. Then, of course, the matter will be laid in the hands of the House, and in the hands of the Government.

Motion agreed to.

VOTERS' LIST—COUNTY OF MONTMORENCY.

Mr. L'ANGELIER (Montmorency) moved :

That the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery do lay before the House the final list of voters for the county of Montmorency, sent to him by J. A. Charlebois, Esq., revising officer for the said county, with letter of the said Charlebois accompanying the said list; also the other lists, with all additions thereto subsequently sent to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery by the said Charlebois, with copies of letters of Charlebois accompanying the same; also the polling books of the parishes of L'Ange Gardien and St. Pierre, in the said county of Montmorency.

(Translation) Mr. Speaker, before this motion is adopted I wish to give a few explanations on this question. At the beginning of the Session I have listened to the various remarks which were made from both sides of the House on the way the returning officers had acted during the last elections. But I believe that in no other county has there been such a violation of the law as that which was perpetrated by revising officer Charlebois in the county of Montmorency. In order to show the unlawfulness of his conduct it will be sufficient for me to state, as briefly as possible, the circumstances which induced me to put this motion on the order paper. In the course of last summer, Mr. Charlebois, a notary who had been appointed revising officer for the county of Montmorency, proceeded to draw out the lists, and in July last he finally revised the electoral list for the county of Montmorency. The notice stating that the final list for the county was deposited, is found in the Official Gazette of the 6th of August. This notice reads as follows:—

"Notice is hereby given that I have received the finally revised voters' lists for all the polling districts of the following electoral divisions for the year 1886, to wit: Megantic, Rouville, Montmorency, &c., &c."

(Sd.) "RICHARD POPE,
"Clerk of the Crown in Chancery."

"OTTAWA, August 6th, 1887."

As will be seen, at that date, on the 6th of August, not only were the electoral lists finally revised, but the notice to the effect that they had been deposited was published in the Official Gazette, and no appeal had been lodged with regard to these lists, so that these lists were legally in force and nobody had a right to tamper with them. Mr. Charlebois, as he was in duty-bound to do, had transmitted in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, the lists such as finally revised, as stated in the notice which I have just read. Everything was correct so far, and it is known that the law is very clear on that point. Mr. Charlebois had acted according to clause 29, of which a part reads thus:—

—"and from the date of the publication of this notice in the Canada Gazette the persons whose names will be inscribed on these lists as electors, will be held as electors duly inscribed in and for that electoral district under correction or alteration by the judgment rendered on appeal, as hereinafter provided.

Now, as I have just stated, no appeal has been lodged, consequently the lists were final, and Mr. Charlebois has no right to change these electoral lists. But Mr. Charlebois, that most extraordinary and exemplary revising officer, had noticed in the meantime that general elections had arrived, and, as he wished to take part in these elections, he saw fit to resign his office as revising officer. He only sent his resignation on the 2nd of February, and it was only accepted on the 14th of that month. Subsequently to his resignation as such revising officer, he took upon himself to add names to the electoral lists of the parish of St. Pierre and of the parish of L'Ange Gardien. He took upon himself on the 18th of February, that is to say, a few days before votation, after having resigned his office as revising officer, to add fourteen names to the electoral list of St. Pierre, and on the 21st of the same month, or one day before the votation, Mr. Charlebois again took upon himself to add twenty names to the electoral list of the parish of L'Ange Gardien. And Mr. Charlebois did this without taking too much trouble to keep the thing secret. He sent copy of this list to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, with a letter informing him that he had taken upon himself to add these names to the electoral lists, in spite of the law, which says that when once the final deposition of the lists has been made in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and when the notice has been published in the Canada Gazette, these lists will be final; these lists, which the judge is bound to respect, Mr. Charlebois has thought that he might change them and thus put himself above the courts of the country; he has thought that he could become guilty of forgery of a public document. I do not hesitate to say it, Mr. Charlebois has been guilty of a real forgery. Because, if a revising officer was to be permitted, on the eve of the elections, to prepare lists as he sees fit,—and it is known that in many cases the revising officers have shown themselves very unscrupulous—and to add names to them as in the present case, where, I ask, would be the guarantee of the candidates? At the beginning of an election, the candidate gets the electoral lists; he sees with what kind of electors he has to deal; he sees who are his friends in such and such a parish, but while he is in another part of the country—exactly as the thing happened to myself—Mr. Charlebois takes upon himself to add nearly forty names to the electoral list of the county of Montmorency. Well, Mr. Speaker, here are facts which will be established by the papers which I desire to have brought down before the House. And in order to show how revolting has been the conduct of Mr. Charlebois, of what a violation of the law he has been guilty, I will quote the 31st clause of the Electoral Act, which says:

"Only the persons whose names will be inscribed on these lists, thus revised, altered and corrected, will have a right to vote at any election of a member for the House of Commons, in the polling districts and electoral divisions for which these lists shall have been made, respectively; and these lists shall be binding for any judge, or court, who will be charged with the hearing of a petition, complaining of the election, or the irregular return of the election, of a member of the House of Commons."

So this clause says that these lists will bind the judge, or the court, having to deal with a contestation of election, but, as I said, Mr. Charlebois saw fit to put himself above that, and thought that he had more power than the judges or courts. But what is most outraging in his conduct is, that he took the liberty to alter these lists even when he had ceased to be revising officer, and when he had no right whatever to alter the voters' lists. But, more than that, Mr. Speaker, he took upon himself to make these alterations in violation of the law, at a time when he had sent in his resignation as revising officer, at a time when he had just taken an active part in the elections, in the district of Quebec and in the county of Montmorency. Well, the revising officer is one of the officers of this House, and I ask, as a simple act of justice, that the House should punish this revising officer, so that his example may be a lesson to the others in the future. No member of this House, I am sure, whether he sits on this side or on the other side of the House, would like to be exposed, to see the law violated in this way in his county, and to see his election imperilled by such a disgraceful violation of the law as that of which I, myself, have been a victim during the last election. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that everybody in this House will, like myself, feel an interest in securing respect for the law, and in compelling revising officers to do their duty, and I demand that this revising officer, as an officer of this House, be punished according to law.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the attention of the House has already been called upon the great inconvenience, not to say the unfairness arising from the fact of an hon. member making remarks bearing condemnation on or involving very serious charges against a public official, with regard to papers which are not yet before the House. It is very difficult, even impossible, for it would not be parliamentary to say that the hon. member has not given to the House an accurate statement of the facts just as they have occurred, and it is impossible for me, notwithstanding the information I may have received personally, to make a statement contrary to that which has been made by the hon. member, as I have not the papers before me. But I know one thing, or at least I have received information which I have reason to consider as correct, and it is that the man against whom the hon. member is complaining, has not been actuated by party spirit in doing that which is charged against him, and, furthermore, has not acted in an underhanded or secret manner. The information I have received has reference to the correction of an error which the revising officer considered as the correction of a clerical error, which was made known to the hon. member, who was then a candidate. The revising officer sent him a list of the names to be added. I must say, by the way, that these names formed a category of a list, that is to say, in the list forwarded to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, the whole series of names, commencing by a certain letter, had been overlooked—for instance, the letter F or the letter D. The error was palpable as a clerical error, and according to the information I have received, the hon. member, who was then a candidate, was informed of the fact. Moreover, the electoral committee, which was in favor of the candidature of the hon. member, was also notified that this clerical error had been corrected, in order to avoid complaints being made. The notice was given that the list, as completed and certified by the revising officer, contained these names which, through a clerical error had been omitted from the list which had been sent to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Now, Mr. Speaker, I cannot say any more; I have not the documents before me. The revising officer, of whom the hon. member complains, said to me: "Let the papers be brought down before the House; let people take cognisance of what has been done, and it will be seen that I have acted in all fairness and with all possible courteousness towards the man who was then a candidate, and who, now that he is elected, complains of my conduct, and says that I have been actuated by the desire to defeat him." The names of the supporters and non-supporters of the hon. member, without any distinction, were to be found in the correction of this clerical error. As I have just said, the list, such as it has been made, is perfect, and is conformable to the lists which were furnished to the deputy returning officers by the returning officer for the election. Now, my hon. friend has mentioned before the House a fact which he seems to consider as highly important: it is that these corrections were made after the revising officer had sent in his resignation as such. This is true; but it is well known that until the moment when the resignation of a revising officer is accepted, this officer, whenever there is a necessity for him to act, is obliged to do so during the interval which elapses between the sending of his resignation and its acceptance. This is admitted by everybody, because in certain cases the revising officer might dispense with doing his duty by sending his resignation, and in this manner certain acts which he is bound to perform would not be accomplished at all. In the present case, if the revising officer has thought that he was doing, not a blameable act, but if, on the contrary, he thought that it was his duty to correct a clerical error, it was perfectly fair for him, when his resignation was not accepted, to do what he has done. Therefore, the only question is whether the facts as stated by the hon. member will be corroborated by the papers when they are laid before the House, to which neither the revising officer nor the Government have the least objection.

Mr. LANGELIER (Montmorency). (Translation.) The hon. Secretary of State has been fairly correct in the remarks which he has made in the first part of his speech. In fact the revising officer informed me towards the end of the election that he had made alterations in the list of one parish. But, as I said in the course of the remarks I had the honor to make a moment ago, it was only after the election was ended that I was informed of that fact. I was then in another part of the county, and on the day before the votation the revising officer wrote me a letter, in which he stated that he had made certain alterations to the list of St. Pierre—I have that letter still—but he never told me that he had made alterations to the list of L'Ange Gardien. The hon. Secretary of State may assure us that this was not done through party spirit, but I know Mr. Charlebois, the notary, more intimately than he does, and I can tell him that he is one of the most violent partisans in our district; he is a member of the Conservative Association in the district of Quebec, and one of those who have always taken an active part in the elections in the county of Quebec and other counties. He is perfectly known as a supporter of the Government, and a most devoted supporter, and the best proof that he has shown party spirit is, that out of that list of St. Pierre to which he added fourteen names, I only received thirteen votes in all, consequently I do not think I had much chance to obtain votes among the fourteen names which were added. Now, in the parish of L'Ange Gardien, where he saw fit to add twenty names, I had a minority of thirty-six votes. As will be seen, he might have exerted his zeal in other parishes, and I can inform the hon. Secretary of State that in other parishes my friends complained bitterly that names which were placed on the list as being those of qualified voters, were struck off the list by the revising officer, and were not on the list when votation took place. How is it that he exerted such an extraordinary zeal, and that he took upon himself, a few days before the votation, to add names to the lists of these two parishes, where he knew that my friends were by far the minority, while in the parishes where he knew that I was strong, he did not deem it expedient to do the same thing? Besides, the hon. Secretary of State is too good a lawyer not to know that either the law exists or does not exist. If it does exist, it says explicitly that when the final lists have been made they cannot be changed, except on an appeal, by a Judge of the Superior Court. Therefore an appeal may be lodged before a judge, and if these gentlemen thought that their names had been illegally struck out, nothing was easier than to apply to the court—because there are judges at Quebec—and have the list altered in the way they desired. But, I repeat it, Mr. Charlebois saw fit to put himself above the law; he thought that he was a higher authority than the judge, and he altered the list himself. I will ask the hon. Secretary of State whether he is willing to take the responsibility of declaring before this House that this revising officer, after the lists had been deposited, and after the notice had been published in the official Gazette, had a right to alter these lists. For my part I have not the great experience of the hon. Secretary of State as a member of the profession, but I hold that he had no right to do it, and that his conduct was absolutely contrary to law. Mr. Speaker, if that revising officer had been a man having little knowledge of the law, I should understand that he might have had some excuse, but Mr. Charlebois is one of the most prominent notaries in the city of Quebec, a man who is conversant with the law, who knows his profession perfectly well, a man who must have made himself familiar with the law which he was called upon to carry out, and consequently, Mr. Charlebois, the notary, ought to have known that when he added those names to the list he was shamelessly violating the law. Again I repeat it, the papers which I demand will thoroughly establish the facts which I have just related. I have little experience in this House, and I may have used rather severe expressions with regard to Mr. Charlebois, but it will be admitted that I had reason to complain in a somewhat bitter manner of the way in which I have been treated by him. Besides, Mr. Speaker, the revising officer did not add any Liberal names to the list; it may not be for the sake of party spirit, but, at all events, it was not for the sake of their candidates; it was probably a mere chance.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It was done on the sly.

Mr. LANGELIER (Montmorency). Unfortunately he has committed on the sly a violation of the law, and I have suffered greatly from it. Again I ask this House to make it their business to consider this question. The hon. Secretary of State says that it was done on the sly, but it is for that reason that my majority has been reduced to one vote. Had I been treated like other candidates of the hon. gentlemen opposite with whom I am acquainted, had I had more sympathetic revising officers and returning officers, I would probably have had a majority of a hundred or a hundred and fifty votes. At all events, my election is contested, and should we have a new election we will be delivered from the services of Mr. Revising Officer Charlebois, whose resignation has been accepted by the Government, and my majority will be greater.

Motion agreed to.

P. E. I.—WINTER SERVICE.

Mr. ROBERTSON (King's) moved for:

Return of all papers, reports, correspondence, Orders in Council, &c., relating to the winter service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, or referring to the condition of the Northern Light, and any steps that have been taken for the construction of a new steamer to supplement the Northern Light.

He said: This is a subject which has frequently been before the House on former occasions, and the only apology I can offer for bringing it up again is its importance to the people of Prince Edward Island. The establishment of this winter communication was one of the reasons for our entering Confederation, and we feel very much disappointed at the manner in which the service has been carried out. The only real attempt which has ever been made to carry it out was the placing of the Northern Light on the route some eleven years ago. For the first three years she performed the service very effectively, keeping up communication for the greater part of the winter, and being stopped only for very short intervals in February by the heavy ice. After being on the service for about three years she was sent on an expedition to Pugwash, and after battling with the ice for three weeks she had to abandon the attempt, and return to Georgetown some time in February, and she remained there until late in the following spring, before again resuming her trips. Every year since then she has been laid up from about the last of January until late in the spring, and as these intervals when she is not engaged in the service are becoming longer and longer each year, the people are very much dissatisfied that more energy and determination are not shown to lessen the length of these yearly intervals. No doubt this difficulty is caused by the boat becoming old and getting so much out of repair, and the reason I make the motion is to ask the Government to place on the route a new boat of larger proportions and greater power, to supplement the Northern Light. I take the liberty also of asking the Government to be particular not to depart from the model of the Northern Light when building the new boat, as that vessel has been found to perform the work so effectually. We frequently hear it said that if a Newfoundland sealer was put upon the route she would do much better service. Last winter the Government put on the Newfoundland steamer Neptune, and having had ample opportunity of observing and comparing the work of the two boats, I have no hesitation in saying that the Northern Light was by far the best of the two, and that she frequently helped the Neptune out of her difficulties in the ice. I would also say that I think it would be much better if the movements of the Northern Light were left entirely to the judgment of the captain of the vessel, instead of being governed from the Department at Ottawa, as their agent at Charlottetown frequently loses good opportunities of making the trip across the straits, simply because the captain has not the orders to proceed to sea. It may be asked: why build a new boat, as the Government are about to build a subway. I see this was promised in a letter from the right hon. Premier to Senator Howland, and circulated in the island during the time we were running the late election. Even supposing the Government decided to construct a tunnel or submarine way, it would take some years to get the contracts let and the work completed. It is on behalf of the service in the meantime that I wish to speak on this occasion. What we want is to have the steam communication kept up efficiently. The present steamer, Northern Light, is becoming old and considerably damaged, and she may not be fit for the service next winter. We think a new boat should be built to take her place. This is not a party question at all. It is one in which all the people of Prince Edward Island are interested, and I hope the Government will take the matter into their serious consideration, and give us a new boat at as early a day as possible. I wish to urge, particularly, that the management of the boat should be left entirely in the hands of the captain. That would secure a better service than can be secured when the captain is governed from the Department. I think he should be left to use his own judgment as to when he should go to sea and when he should not. As I said before, the maintenance of inter-communication with the mainland was one of the principal reasons why Prince Edward Island entered the Union, and we are disappointed with the manner in which the service has been performed. With strong and thoroughly equipped steamers, it could be performed much more satisfactorily than at present, and I believe the service could be made to pay for itself. During the last season the Northern Light carried a very large quantity of freight, and a very large number of passengers, and I believe that with the increased business which an improved service would bring, it would not be such a heavy expense to the Government as the service has been in the past.

Mr. McINTYRE. I do not intend to occupy very much time on the subject of the winter communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, as it has been before this House for a number of years past. But I regret to say that so far very little improvement has been made in that service. One thing that both sides are agreed on is, that the Northern Light is now a used-up boat. She has been engaged for nine or ten years in the most arduous service that any vessel can perform. For some years past she has been laid up too early in the winter and has started out too late in the spring, and this state of things is getting worse year after year. There is now some reason for that, because she is getting old. Last year she was laid up as soon as ice began to appear in the Straits of Northumberland, and she did not start out until the 4th of April, although the straits had been clear of ice for about three or four weeks before. In addition to the Northern Light, a Newfoundland sealer, the Neptune, was placed on that route in the hope that she would be of some assistance, but it turned out that she was altogether unfitted for the service. In the first place she was too slow, travelling at the rate of only five or six knots an hour. A boat of that description is entirely useless to navigate through the ice of that channel. Again, she was not of the proper construction for the service. A boat to contend successfully with the ice in the Straits of Northumberland must be built somewhat after the model of the Northern Light. The steamer Neptune turned out an entire failure. I see in a return made a few days ago that this boat, during the period she has been running, has cost something over $18,000. It is my opinion that that sum would have been much better expended in building another boat adapted to the service. The manner in which the terms of Union are being carried out is really getting worse, year after year. There appears to be less desire on the part of the Government to carry them out. During the late election contest another project was broached, that is, the project of a subway connecting the two sides of the straits. What there is in this project I do not know. There was, I believe, some sort of a survey made last summer, but what the result was we have not learned up to the present time. During the election this question was brought very prominently before the public. Meetings were held by Mr. Howlan at various points for the advocacy of the scheme. At one of these meetings, I believe at Charlottetown, Mr. Howlan read a letter from the Premier, a copy of which I hold in my hand, and which, in the light of the fact that there was an election going on at the time, becomes very interesting reading. It is as follows:—

“EARNESCLIFFE, OTTAWA, January 28th, 1887.

“MY DEAR HOWLAN.—Referring to our several conversations, and especially to the one of to-day on your return from the south, I desire to repeat that the Government has shown its interest in your subway already by the expenditure last year. The Government continues its interest and is encouraged to make further examinations and surveys, and to submit those already made, as well as those proposed to be made, to a board of civil engineers accustomed to hydraulic works, and works altogether or principally in water, with the view of ascertaining, first, the feasibility of construction; second, the durability; third, the danger of injury or destruction from any known causes; and fourth, the cost. This all important point will be strictly scrutinised in Parliament, and it must depend on the amount necessary for the construction of the subway whether the representatives of the people will consent to incur the expense. The surveys and reports can be easily and speedily obtained, and I trust that the report will be such as will justify the Government in entertaining the project.

“Believe me to be, yours very truly,

“JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Hon. Senator HOWLAN.”

I have very little to add in reference to this letter; but it is a very extraordinary thing to me, and also to the people of Prince Edward Island that all these promises were made on the eve of an election. In the election of 1882 we had not the question of the subway; but we had what is known as the East Point Railway, which was to be built for eight or ten miles to a section known as the East Point, and during the campaign we had surveyors running lines all through that part of the country. On the eve of the last elections, the question of a subway was brought up. So far as the subway is concerned, it is popular with all classes, no matter on what side of politics they may be, because all parties are anxious that the terms of the Union should be carried out as nearly as possible. No doubt, the Premier will continue to display that great solicitude in the future, which he did prior to the elections of 22nd February last, and I hope he will see his way clear to carry out all that he mentioned in his letter. Of course he is as solicitous to-day as he was on that occasion, and there is every reason to believe he will go right ahead with the work so that in a short time we may have easy communication with the mainland.

Mr. WELSH. This Northern Light service is very important. It was begun some ten years ago under the Mackenzie Administration, and at the election, two years later, the Northern Light was denounced by supporters of the present Government as a boat totally unfit to perform the service. In the campaign of that day the late Hon. John Pope said the boat was totally unfit for the work, and that, if elected, he would at once urge upon the Government to replace the Northern Light by a new steamer. He even went so far as to show the models of a new boat. Well, nine years have passed and we still have the Northern Light. To every question put the Government as to what they intended to do, they answered: “The matter is under consideration.” The Government have had the matter under consideration for the last seven or eight years, and it is time we should have something more than consideration; it is time immediate action should be taken to replace the Northern Light by a proper steamer. This would cost from $150,000 to $200,000. Even if the Government took immediate action it would still take eighteen months before they could get a proper boat for winter navigation. I believe the service carried on in winter from Charlottetown to Pictou by the Northern Light is the best solution of the question of winter navigation, so far, and also that the regulations which the Minister of Marine has made at the cape for the winter service there, when the Northern Light is laid up, are the best that could be made for the present. The Government has made great improvement in that direction during the past two or three years, but the crossing is quite open to further improvement. The Government, as far as they have gone, have done well as regards crossing at the cape, but there is room for more to be done still. The hon. member who has just spoken made a reference to subways, and we could go on talking about these visionary projects for a long time. We do not want to be like the dog crossing on a plank with a bone, and who, seeing the shadow in the water of another bone, let go the one he had in his mouth and lost everything. We want to hold on to something that is solid. The crossing at the cape in winter, as we have it now, is the proper thing, and I believe an improved Northern Light, or two of them, would be the proper plan at the lower end. The subway may be valuable or not. I class it with the undertaking that was proposed some years ago in the district represented by the hon. Minister of Finance—that was the marine railway to cross from Baie Verte to the Bay of Fundy. A company was formed—I do not object to it; I think the Government acted rightly in that matter. First, the project was formed to build a canal; a commission was named, which made a report, and that project was condemned. Afterwards, a company proposed to build a marine railway across from Baie Verte to Bay of Fundy, to take ships across. The project was brought before Parliament, and an Act was passed granting a subsidy, but the company did not get their hands into the public purse, and we have no marine railway. I have understood from Senator Howlan himself that all this company wanted was a subsidy from the Government, as they had money enough to build and run the road, if the Government would grant them a subsidy payable when the road was finished. If that be the case, I would not object to the Government treating the subway as it did the marine railway. I would urge it upon the Government, as a matter of justice and right, that this matter of the Northern Light should be taken into hand at once. It would be better if the Government even had to put up tenders and give the work to a company, but I fancy hardly any company would tender for it, as it is a risky and dangerous undertaking, with a very uncertain prospect of definite success. However, that is for the Government to see about, and I hope they will take immediate action. Last winter a boat was engaged by the Government from Newfoundland, a very fine sealer. She was brought up, but proved no better than the Northern Light.

Mr. DAVIES. Not as good.

Mr. WELSH. I have been engaged in this sealing business and am fully acquainted with these steamers. Those Newfoundland sealers are the finest ships in the world. They are built strong enough, but are too heavy. They are not suited to the service, because there you want almost double and treble the power you put in an ordinary steamer. Our boats of Newfoundland are driven by auxiliary power, at the rate of eight or ten knots an hour, whereas a proper boat would require sufficient power to make fourteen or fifteen knots an hour, so as to force her way through the ice. The Northern Light has power sufficient, but has not weight sufficient, and her model is not quite suitable, although she has performed good work. I think the Department is fully alive to the interests of the case. I have had the pleasure of a conversation with the Minister of Marine, and I think he has the matter under consideration. I only say these few words to urge on the Government the necessity of immediate action, which will do away with the word consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. There is not much new to be said upon this question. Reference has been made to the efforts of the Government last year in putting the Neptune upon the route as a trial steamer. That was done in response to representations which had been made to the Government that the very best kind of vessel that could be used for the service was a powerful sealer; and having some respect to those representations, and the Northern Light not being in the very best possible condition, last year, the Government determined to get. A sealer—and, as one of the hon. gentlemen has stated, a sealer which, I think, was the very best that possibly could be got, a sealer from Newfoundland, which was the strongest, and had the greatest power—was chartered by the Department and put upon the route, and ran for two months, or two months and a half, the result, as stated by some of my hon. friends, not being very satisfactory. It has been stated that she did not prove as satisfactory as the Northern Light, and, from reports of her work in the ice, as far as our officers have given them, I am inclined to think that this is about true, and that the largest and best sealer we could get would not prove herself to be much, if any, better than the Northern Light. The intention of the Government was to test that question. That has been tested, and there will probably not be found a necessity to make another test. It has been stated by some of the hon. gentlemen that better work could have been done by the Northern

Mr. WELSH.

Light, provided the control of her were given to the captain, and she were not directed altogether by the Department at Ottawa. It is true that the captain and the agent there upon the spot must be the men who are best in a position to judge when the vessel can go out with safety, what amount of strain she can bear, and how she is to be conducted, and I want to say here that that discretionary power is not, and has not, been taken away from the officers there. This year, the commander of the Neptune, as well as the commander of the Northern Light, and as well as our agent there, were given that control. Of course, the question as to when they are to start and when they are to stop in their operations in the winter and in the spring is in the hands of the Department, and I do not suppose my hon. friends would wish to take that out of the hands of the Department at Ottawa. From what has fallen from the lips of the three hon. gentlemen who have spoken, I gather that they think the Northern Light is the best model yet devised for that service.

Mr. WELSH. No.

Mr. FOSTER. At least two of those hon. gentlemen believe that. Perhaps my hon. friend who has made an expression of dissent does not believe that, but I am inclined to think that it is true, not from my own knowledge of the vessel, which is extremely limited, but from the evidence before me. From the evidence which was taken before the special committee, from the men who have been in the vessel and have run the vessel, and from our officers who have observed the vessel's running, and from our marine officers, I am inclined to believe that the Northern Light is the best vessel, so far as model and power are concerned, which has yet been devised.

Mr. WELSH. Best as to power, but not as to model.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the Province will be ever thoroughly satisfied until complete communication can be carried on between it and the mainland. It is hard to overcome nature, and I believe they will always feel the difficulties of being cut off from the main channels of communication. I believe that feeling will always continue more or less in the case of Prince Edward Island, but it is not fair to say that, from year to year, the Government has been keeping, worse and worse, the compact to carry on communication between the island and the mainland. I do not think that is a statement which will bear investigation. I do not think my hon. friends will adhere to it. If you take the old ice-boat service and the present ice-boat service, I think there is no one who will not admit that the present service is a great advantage and gain over the other. That brings to my mind the objection which will be brought by my hon. friend's suggestion, that the whole matter should be let out by contract. The ice-boat service was let out by contract, and the Government had no peace until they took it into their own charge and conducted it themselves; and I think it will be admitted that the service has been conducted much more satisfactorily since the Government took charge of it, than it was before.

Mr. WELSH. Hear, hear; you are right there.

Mr. FOSTER. In that case, then, the Government have not been going backward, but have been making an improvement. I believe that anyone who reads the report and the evidence will come to the conclusion that, by vessel, it is impossible to keep up continual communication between the island and the mainland. You may talk about vessels having power and dashing through the ice, but there is some ice that no vessel can dash through at all seasons of the year. My hon. friend seemed to think that, with a suitable vessel, the cost might be lessened in consequence of the passengers and freight that would be carried. I do not think that the returns for the last few years would bear that out. Although at the beginning and the end of the season there may be a considerable number of passengers and a considerable quantity of freight, yet, if you take the season through, and what it amounts to in the way of carrying passengers and freight, you will find that it would be very small, and would form no considerable item of the expense necessary to carry on and conduct the service. My hon. friend from King's asked whether it is the intention of the Government to build a new vessel? I must make the answer which I have made before, that that matter is under the consideration of the officers of the Department, and I hope, within a few days, when the matter next comes up for discussion in the House, as it will on the Estimates, if not before, to be able to tell the House what has been determined upon with reference to that route. There are certain things which may be considered as alternatives. A new vessel may be built. I must say that my hon. friend rather startled me when he put the cost of a new vessel at $200,000. It is a large amount.

Mr. WELSH. $150,000 to $200,000.

Mr. FOSTER. We generally take the larger amount when an estimate is made in that way. There is the other alternative of taking the Alert, a solidly built vessel, built for ice service, putting powerful engines into her, and fitting her up for that service. There is the third alternative of taking the Northern Light. The bulk of the vessel is just as good as when she was built. She is stronger in fact than she was then, because she has been strengthened. Her boilers last year would not allow a high pressure of steam, and, therefore, she could not make the speed she otherwise would, but it is believed that, by putting new boilers into her, by revamping her, and by rebuilding her top, she will gain a knot or two on her old speed, will be stronger than she was at first, having been strengthened considerably, and will be a thoroughly equipped and good vessel for that service. There are these three alternatives which are now engaging the attention of the officers of the Department. I think the reports are nearly in, and, when these come, I will have pleasure in bringing them down to the House and stating the conclusion which has been come to. This is a subject which we must approach in a reasonable spirit. It is the desire of the Government to give as good a service as it reasonably can, and it should not be the wish of the people on the island to get a service more than can reasonably be given. We may differ as to what is a reasonable service, but the Government desires to give the very best it reasonably can in order to make the position of Prince Edward Island as little isolated as possible during the three months of the winter season.

Mr. DAVIES. The apologetic speech of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine sounds rather strange in my ears, when I recollect the language which was made use of by his predecessor in office. It now seems that the Northern Light, although she has been some ten years engaged in battling the Straits of Northumberland, is still such a remarkably good vessel, with model and everything so perfectly satisfactory, that she is really considered, after ten years of hard work, good enough to continue the service. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman talk about approaching this question in a reasonable and rational spirit. I remember, a few years ago, when this boat was put upon this route and endeavored to carry out the contract between Prince Edward Island and the Dominion, she was put upon this route as an experiment, to do what no boat had ever done before. But so far from approaching the subject in a rational or reasonable spirit, before the boat had fairly been tried at all, there were torrents of abuse heaped upon her by hon. gentlemen, then in Opposition, who support the present Government. Not a good word could be said for her, hon. gentlemen denounced her right and left, and after she had proved that she could do good service these denunciations continued the following years, while the Mackenzie Government was in office. There was nothing then too fierce and too bitter to say of that boat or of those who were trying to carry out that contract. Now, that is all changed, and the Government are coming to the conclusion that this old, worn-out boat, after having done service for ten years, is the best thing that can be devised. Hon. gentlemen from Prince Edward Island cannot understand how it is that while the members who live in Manitoba, or the North-West, or British Columbia, can always start an agitation which can procure them almost anything they want; in Prince Edward Island it seems, no matter how real our grievances are, or how simple they are, or how simple the remedy is, we go on year after year repeating the same old story and get the same old answer: "It is under the consideration of the Government." I tell the hon. gentleman, without desiring to use any harsh language at all, that in this year, 1887, for the hon. gentleman to say it is now under consideration, is disgraceful to the Department. The hon. Minister knows well that, five years ago, at the instigation of the Department over which he presides, an hon. member here moved for a special commission to enquire into all the facts, to lay the data before the Minister on which he could form a judgment. I pointed out to him that the facts were very simple, that the facts were known to everybody who had crossed from Prince Edward Island to the mainland—the facts were that the Northern Light was doing excellent service, but she was getting worn out and needed to be supplemented by a new boat. The hon. gentleman talks about the different way in which the people of Prince Edward Island look at this question from the way in which those on the mainland look at it. Well, Sir, it is to be borne in mind that it is the interest of the mainland to have this service carried out, and it is the duty of the Government to carry it out, because it is a solemn compact made between the island and the mainland that it should be done. But when that commission which was appointed, reported to the House, the report did not contain one new fact. They sent down and examined a lot of gentlemen who had a pretty good knowledge of the service, but who had not a bit better practical knowledge than have the members for the island, who are crossing there every year. The report just stated what we have told the House from our places here, but after they had gathered all the facts and gone to a good deal of expense, the report was laid before the Department, and it has been there for four or five years, and the Minister of Marine comes down to-day and says it is under consideration. Now, I tell the hon. gentleman it is not creditable to him, because he knows that since the report was presented he has had reports from those in charge of the service that the Northern Light is a dangerous boat to run in her present condition. I tell the hon. gentleman this—and I am speaking language which I have carefully weighed—that I shall hold him, as one member of this House, responsible if anything happens in that service. I took the trouble to go to the officers in command. It is true they would not say a great deal; they said they preferred to communicate to the Department. Then I went to some of the largest shipbuilders and vessel owners in Prince Edward Island, and they told me, eighteen months ago, that it was not safe for a man to cross in that boat in its then condition. The hon. gentleman is running a service which experienced men declare to be an unsafe service, when the hon. gentleman had witnesses to that fact, when reports went to the Department to that effect. The hon. gentleman knows it is so. My hon. friend and colleague has told him that if he makes up his mind to do so, it will take eighteen months before he is able to put a fit boat on the service to carry out the contract. What he ought to do, what he was told five years ago to do, was to repair the Northern Light, and to put her into something like effective condition as a supplementary boat, and then to supply a thoroughly good boat to do the main work. We know, Sir, that the service can be maintained continuously every year, except for four or five weeks. Hon. gentlemen know that; the witnesses before the commission told them; the members who represent Prince Edward Island told them that. But they knew that the Northern Light could not do that, they knew she was a dangerous vessel, and yet they have kept her on that service ever since. What is the service? Hon. members who have not been down there do not know. This boat, running against great masses of ice day after day, at full speed, it is a wonder to me that she endures, and if she had not been remarkably well built she would have been smashed to pieces long ago. But she was a thoroughly built boat when she was refitted and strengthened in the hands of the then Minister of Marine, after she left the contractor's hands; she was thoroughly repaired and did good service. But I will tell the Minister now what I told him a year ago, and I am only voicing the opinion of all the practical men in Prince Edward Island, and the practical men on the mainland, that he ought to build a boat something like the Northern Light, but three or four hundred tons larger, and then put the Northern Light in such a condition that she will be able to act as a supplementary boat in spring and fall. Of course hon. members in the House, listening to the island members talking about this every year, may be getting tired of it, but it is a vital matter to us. It is most essential that business men should be able to cross to the mainland to carry on their business, and what must they think when this boat is laid up under repair, or if the officers are not quite sure that she is strong enough to risk a voyage? The hon. Minister knows that what I am saying is correct, and he knows that he has undertaken a very heavy responsibility if he runs that boat again without having her thoroughly well repaired; and I tell him I am not satisfied for one with the manner in which the service is being carried on—I am thoroughly dissatisfied. I am informed by those who ought to know, that those who get on that boat take their lives in their hands when they cross the straits. I say that ought not to be so, and the hon. gentleman, if he had been as keenly alive to the interests of that part of the Dominion as he was to some other parts of the Dominion, would have had a boat built long ago. Supposing it does cost $150,000, that amount of money is not going to stand in the way of the Government. Why, they are spending millions, and tens of millions, at the demand of the people of British Columbia and the North-West, who are only a few hundred thousand people. They can get anything they like. If they want a million, or ten millions, they have ways of getting it. But it seems that Prince Edward Island can get nothing from this Government, no matter how badly she needs it—nothing whatever. Just before the election we had great promises. The leader of the Government smiles.

Mr. MILLS. A submarine railway.

Mr. DAVIES. Yes, the hon. gentleman smiles. He heard read a little while ago, by my hon. friend from King's county, a letter which he wrote down there. He was not going to be satisfied with the Northern Light, but he was going to have a subway built; he was going, at all events, to take the necessary steps to ascertain whether the scheme was feasible. That is very proper.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. I have the hon. gentleman's letter. I went with it upon the platform throughout the island, read it over paragraph by paragraph and gave it my thorough endorsement. What I now want to know is, whether the hon. gentleman is prepared to implement his pre-election promise? That is the point. I heard with some surprise this afternoon the hon. gentleman tell one of my colleagues that it was not his intention to cause surveys to be made with a view to the construction of a subway. And that in the face—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that.

Mr. DAVIES. I hope that we will have an explanation of what the hon. gentleman did say.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the language was sufficiently plain.

Mr. DAVIES. I think that what the hon. gentleman said was, that it was not the intention of the Government to cause surveys to be made.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A little further.

Mr. DAVIES. With a view to having a subway built?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES. Then it is not with a view to having a subway built. There are two objects which the hon. gentleman could have in view: One, to deceive the public; and the other, to obtain data on which capitalists might go on and build the subway. He says he has not the latter intention, and I do not like to impute the former.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. DAVIES. No, I think the hon. gentleman's career has been such that he would do nothing of the kind—his career has been so particularly good. What did the hon. gentleman say to the people of the island just before the elections? He wrote this letter during the elections, when the people were considering Dominion questions, to try and draw their attention away from them and to secure the defeat of my colleague and myself.

"The Government continues its interest and is encouraged to make further examinations and surveys, and to submit those already made, as well as those proposed to be made, to a board of civil engineers accustomed to hydraulic work and works altogether or principally in the water, with a view to ascertain, first, the feasibility of construction;"—

The hon. gentleman pledges himself to that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Go on.

Mr. DAVIES. We will go on step by step. The hon. gentleman pledged himself to ascertain the feasibility of constructing a subway; and yet he tells us to-day that he is not going to have a survey made.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman continues:

"—second, the durability; third, the danger of injury or destruction from any known causes; and fourth, the cost."

And he winds up with a very proper statement that:

"This all important point will be strictly scrutinised in Parliament."

That was perfectly right; but I want to know whether the hon. gentleman is going to do it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Go on.

Mr. DAVIES. I suppose we shall have an explanation before the debate closes. I would be sorry if he should allow a misconception of his views to go forth on a question of such importance as this. But the hon. gentleman was not alone in promising to the people of Prince Edward Island that if the Government were returned they would take the necessary steps to build a subway. The hon. gentleman who sits beside the Premier, the saviour, if not the driver, of the Government, the Finance Minister, who is second in command, if not first in command, went to Amherst just before the election, and, speaking with all the authority he possessed, either as the actual Prime Minister or the Prime Minister in succession—and, possibly, we shall hear he is to be so very shortly—also made a statement, and for fear that the First Minister's letter could not have all the effect intended, and would not defeat your humble servant and his colleagues, the Finance Minister expressed his sympathy in favor of the subway scheme in the following language:—

"He says that we have not treated Prince Edward Island very well. All I can say is that the Government of Prince Edward Island are not making any complaint."

And that in the face of the fact that the hon. gentleman was straight from London, where he had been carrying on a controversy with two members of the Island Government, who had gone home and complained at the foot of the Throne that they could not get justice done to the island; and yet the hon. gentleman declared that he was not aware that the Government of Prince Edward Island were making any complaint, although he was aware that the Local Government had gone to the utmost extreme in complaining of the unjust treatment they had received at the hands of this Government. "I am not aware," he said, "that the Island Government are complaining." I have in my desk a document signed by the hon. gentleman himself, containing fifty or sixty paragraphs, a very large part written by himself and all signed by him, setting forth reasons why the complaint of the island at the foot of the Throne should not be received or given weight to by Her Majesty. The hon. gentleman goes on to say:

"The Provincial Secretary of that Government has resigned his seat to support us, and the Government of Prince Edward Island are standing at our backs to-day."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. I tell the hon. gentleman that they stood at their backs and that they fell at their backs, too. The hon. gentleman continued:

"The Government of Canada, to show how anxious they are to realize the highest expectations of the people of that Province, are providing the money necessary to have a proper survey."

No half way measures with the hon. gentleman just before an election. It was not a question of to-morrow, it was a question of to-day. The Government were determined to carry out the highest expectations of the people. He knew what that meant; that it meant that we are commencing surveys for the building up of the subway. That is what the hon. gentleman intended to convey, and no other construction can be placed upon the language. The hon. gentleman further said:

"We are providing the money necessary to have a proper survey, examination, and report upon the proposal to construct a subway connecting the island with the mainland, and if it can be shown that that work can be constructed at any reasonable cost, the Government of Canada will be prepared to take that question up and to connect the Island of Prince Edward Island with the rest of Canada by rails, so that you shall have the advantage of the closest and most complete winter communication with our neighbors."

We have that promise. And the hon. gentleman, fearful almost that the island people would not read the report of his speech in the Halifax papers, took the precaution to telegraph over to the gentleman contesting the county in his interest in the following words:—

"On nomination day, at Amherst, I came out strongly in support of connecting Prince Edward Island with the rest of the Dominion by rail."

Hon. gentlemen know what it means when the Minister of Finance says that he came out strongly, that it was no half way measure, especially before the election; that he put down his foot squarely, and that he was going to connect the island by rail; and, no doubt, those who listened to his speech believed that the railway would be built within six months. He added in his telegram:

"It is most important to the island to send a united phalanx to sustain the Government."

The people of the island might have doubted as to the language of the First Minister, but when the Finance Minister made this promise the people thought it would be carried out. The friends of the hon. gentleman opposite, moreover, made all the use possible of those promises. I should like to ask the First Minister whether it is his intention to implement the promise given in his letter, and when the surveys are to be made? But I take this opportunity of reiterating the language made use of by my colleague, that even if the hon. gentleman does determine to make the surveys, and should, after obtaining the information which the surveys will give him, come to the conclusion to recommend Parliament to expend a certain sum for the purpose of building a subway, that would be no excuse for the delay of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in providing efficient boats to carry on the communication with the mainland, and I hope the island is not going to be like the dog which grasped the shadow and lost both the bone and the shadow.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It did not lose the shadow.

Mr. WELSH. We have nothing but the shadow now.

Mr. DAVIES. I am afraid the island will be placed in the same position as the dog, and will not catch the implemented promise. I hope, however, to see the surveys made, because, whatever may be my private views, I am not capable of forming an opinion on such a great scheme, until we have the promises of the First Minister and the Finance Minister carried out, and the results of the surveys and reports laid before us. I think their promises should be implemented, and that the surveys should be made, and the results laid before Parliament, and Parliament should determine whether it will vote money to carry out the project or not. A matter of a few millions in the present state of our finances is nothing, but in the meantime I desire to impress on the mind of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, with all the force of which I am capable, that his duty is clear, that I hope that he will be prepared to carry it out. I hope his attention will not be entirely carried away to other parts of the Dominion, but that he will see that action is taken at once with a view of providing efficient steam communication on the route between the island and the mainland.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is very curious to know whether I am going to implement my letter, and he says he was rather surprised and sorry to hear my answer to the question which was put to me to-day. Well, it was a plain question, and I gave it a plain answer. I will read the question:

"Is it the intention of the Government to cause a survey to be made, during the present season, of the Straits of Northumberland, with the view of building a subway across the Straits, as promised by the First Minister in a letter to Senator Howlan, dated 28th January, 1887?"

If the hon. gentleman had asked me this question: Is it the intention to carry out the promise respecting the survey? I would have said yes. But the hon. gentleman's question went further, and said it was with a view of building a subway as promised, and I was obliged to say no, because there was no promise of building a subway. That is not contained in the letter read just now, and, therefore, I was obliged, in order to give a truthful answer to the question, to answer it just as I did. Some hon. gentlemen objected very much to that letter being written at all—perhaps not the hon. gentleman himself, but some of those who addressed the House.

Mr. DAVIES. I did not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, what is the meaning of the charge that that letter was written just before the election, and that it ought not to have been written just before the election; that it was evidently written for the purpose of trying to seduce the electors in the hon.

gentleman's county away from him. The hon. gentleman must settle that with an hon. gentleman in the Upper House. An hon. gentleman in the Upper House chose his own time to write me a courteous letter, and I answered him promptly as I answer every letter, if it is written in correct and courteous language. I answered him, and the hon. gentleman got the letter, and that letter will be carried out unless, indeed, it is shown that there is not the slightest use of going to the expense. The hon. gentleman said awhile ago that the Northern Light, when it was built and set afloat, to perform that service between the island and the mainland, was perfectly sufficient for the purpose.

Mr. DAVIES. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Don't interrupt me just now. He considered it was quite sufficient, and he said that the Mackenzie Government were attacked again and again, and improperly attacked, for objecting to the Northern Light as insufficient. Well, if the Northern Light was sufficient always to do that work there can be no necessity for a subway. Then again my hon. friend, the hon. gentleman's colleague, says he does not believe much in the subway, that it is somewhat like the marine railway on the mainland, that it is a myth; and the hon. gentleman not very obscurely says, that whatever his private opinion is there is no harm in having the survey. The hon. gentleman has made up his mind that the subway cannot be built, that it ought not to be built, that a subway never will be built.

Mr. WELSH. That is pretty near right.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then what are the Government to do? What can they do? The senior member for the county says that it is very extraordinary that Manitoba, and the North-West, and British Columbia can get whatever they want, but that poor Prince Edward Island cannot get anything she wants. Well, they have got a good deal; and, perhaps, if the hon. gentleman will agree with his colleague as to what more they want they may get more. But what do we find now? The hon. gentleman who sits near me just now, and who I hope will by-and-bye sit en permanence on this side, says it is pretty well true that the subway is a myth, that is not wanted. The hon. gentleman says the Northern Light was sufficient, and my hon. friend, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, says that by making some improvements in the machinery and the boilers, and putting her in a good state of repair, she will be as good as or better than ever. My hon. friend, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, says she once was good, and that, from information he has got from his officers, who are experts in the matter, he believes she can be made as good as ever. What more does the hon. gentleman want? He says that whatever his private opinion may be, there is no harm in having the survey made; a little more expenditure of public money can do no harm, except to the public Treasury. If we are to take the opinion of those two hon. gentlemen, we will not go on with the surveys. But I am not convinced that the hon. gentlemen are quite right. They have no confidence in me, and I have not much confidence in them, and, perhaps, notwithstanding the facts that they are both of opinion that the subway is no good, as we have voted some money before, I think we might vote some money to a reasonable extent again, to ascertain whether the survey already made can be implemented or carried out further. The hon. gentleman was rather annoyed that that letter was written, and that an answer was given, because, I suppose, he found it perhaps might have had some effect. But happily his great influence, his great power, his great eloquence, and those various powers which have made him so prominent a public man, defeated this corrupt object that a corrupt Government had at the time. But, notwithstanding that the elections are over, unless my hon. friend the Minister of Marine is convinced by the statements and opinion of those two gentlemen as to the expenditure of the money, the promise will be carried out.

Mr. DAVIES. I rise for the purpose of correcting the hon. gentleman, who, two or three times over, gave as statements made by me statements which I did not make. I did not say the Northern Light was quite sufficient for the purpose for which it was built. On the contrary, I explained that in spring and fall it did effective service, but that in the middle of the winter, for a period of a month or six weeks, no boat could be built to do the work. The hon. gentleman should not put words in my mouth that I did not use. I used no language capable of that construction, nor did I use any language such as he imputed to me at the close of his speech—that I had information that the subway was no good. I carefully guarded myself upon that subject; I expressed no opinion on it one way or the other, simply because I was without the information to enable me to do so.

Mr. BLAKE. The First Minister has explained, circumstantially, how this letter was written. He says that Senator Howlan wrote to him a courteous letter of enquiry and he answered it, as he answered all courteous letters of enquiry, at the time, and that it was Senator Howlan's fault if the time was inopportune. It so happens that Senator Howlan did not write him a letter at the time. How do I know the hon. gentleman's business better than he does? Because I have the letter here, and it begins:

"MY DEAR HOWLAN.—Referring to our several conversations, and especially to the one of to-day, on your return from the south, I desire to repeat that the Government has shown its interest in your subway already, by the expenditure last year."

So the explanation of the hon. gentleman was, no doubt, circumstantial; it was particular; he gave us an account of the courteous manner in which Senator Howlan had written, though perhaps at an unfortunate time, and how in his stern performance of his duty he answered that letter. But the only difficulty is that there was not a morsel of truth in it. They talked earnestly at Ottawa on January the 28th, 1887, about the subway; but of course on January the 28th, 1887, three weeks or four weeks before the elections there was no talk about island politics. Of course there was no talk about island politics; oh, no! The hon. gentleman talked about the subway and discussed the matter, and proceeded to obtain from the leader of the Government a letter—not a personal assurance, not simply word of mouth. They had had a conversation; Senator Howlan stated his views to the hon. gentleman; but Senator Howlan, knowing the hon. gentleman very well, was not satisfied to take a verbal answer from him, or else he wanted a letter to satisfy somebody else. Now, we all know the relations of Senator Howlan to the hon. gentleman, and we are quite sure that it was not for his own satisfaction that he asked for a letter. He had perfect confidence in the hon. gentleman, and he would have been quite satisfied with any statement the hon. gentleman should make in conversation, and, therefore, the letter was obtained, as no doubt Senator Howlan explained to him, in order to satisfy somebody else. Now, there is no use of attempting to disguise it, you know. Even the hon. gentleman himself, with all his self-possession cannot say with a straight face that this letter was not written to aid Senator Howlan to carry the island elections, just as the telegram expressing the urgent and strong desire of the Minister of Finance that there should be a railway to connect the island with the mainland, was sent across to the island at the same time. This is not the first occasion on which political use has been made of this communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. I remember very well what use was made for political purposes of this question at the period when my hon. friend from East

York (Mr. Mackenzie) led the Government. I remember very well the attacks which were made on the Government, and also on the bulk of the island representatives, because of the inefficient and improper steps which it was said they were taking towards securing that communication. The predecessor of the present hon. Minister of Marine, the former member of Queen's, Prince Edward Island, the late Mr. Pope, on that occasion spoke, and it was very plain with what object. It was very plain from his language that the object was to make a political point against the Liberal members from Prince Edward Island because of their course with reference to the Northern Light. On the 16th of February, 1877, Mr. Pope said this :

"He did not look on this vessel as a great success. At the same time he had no desire to find fault with the Administration on that account, as he believed they allowed the Maritime Province members to settle it pretty much their own way. He did not wish, at the present time, to say much against the Northern Light; but in his opinion she was not capable of doing her work in the solid or fixed ice, although he thought she might answer very well for working her way through drift or floating ice."

Then he gave a number of instances of alleged failure in her duty, and proceeded to discuss the subject with all the authority which his position in Parliament, as the representative of the Conservative party on the island, and as a prospective Minister, and his position as a person engaged in the shipping trade, could give :

"The Newfoundlanders had a great deal of experience in ice-breaking vessels, and all theirs were built with overhanging sterns, which facilitated their being forced up on the ice. Besides this, the main breadth of their vessels was near the bow, and when they broke the ice down the rest of the vessel passed through easily; whereas the Northern Light was much the shape of a wedge, and when she broke through she wedged herself in nearly her whole length, and could not go further without first backing out and running full speed at it again. Another great objection to the Northern Light was her great draught of water, which was over 17 feet, whereas she should not exceed 12 feet. On this account she could not enter many of the harbours."

That was the first year. In 1878 Mr. Pope renewed the attack. He stated again :

"He did not find any particular fault with the Government as regarded the style of the boat, because he believed that the members for Prince Edward Island agreed to accept her offer, having seen the model. If there was any blame to attach to any persons, that blame was to be attached to the members for Prince Edward Island who had consented to take such a boat. She was a boat which from her model was never suited at all for such a purpose; he said so last winter, and he repeated it now, and the experience they had, he thought, had proved it."

Then he proceeded to admit :

"She had powerful engines, but so far as the boat herself went, he never saw in all his experience—and he had been ship-building for 25 or 30 years—so great a fraud imposed upon any people."

And he went on to discuss the materials used in the construction of the steamer. This was the style of attack with which we were regaled during the period when the Northern Light was new and was first used. This was the method adopted by a gentleman belonging to the Conservative party in treating the subject that the hon. member for Queen's now asks should be discussed in a reasonable spirit and with a fair consideration of the circumstances of the case. And after all this, after a political success had been achieved in the island at the next election, very largely on account of the undue and improper attacks on the Government and the members for Prince Edward Island in regard to the Northern Light, after all that, we find that eight or nine years of subsequent experience of the Northern Light has left the hon. gentleman under a conviction that it is at least doubtful whether he can improve that boat to-day. He says some improvements, some rebuilding of the boat, will give an increased speed of a knot or two an hour. He acknowledges that she has done good service and he does not know whether the conclusion will not be that the Northern Light will be the best thing yet. But as she is apparently worn out, after so many years of service of such an exceptionally arduous kind, it is impossible to suppose that the attacks which were made in 1877 and 1878 were founded in truth and in fact, with reference to the model and style of that boat, in face of the declaration of the hon. Minister of Marine to-day. I trust very earnestly that no attempt will be made to use the Alert from what I have heard and read of her. I do not profess to be engaged in the shipping business or to have any very great knowledge of the matter; but all I have heard in reference to the Alert leads me to the conclusion that it would be a great mistake to employ her on this service. There are two questions to be considered. The first is whether the Northern Light can be substantially improved on in style and construction, which is not at all unlikely, seeing that it was a somewhat experimental business to build a boat for that berth at that time. If she can, then I say a boat ought to be built on that ground, because I maintain that it was the duty of Canada, having regard for the compact with the island, to do all that skill and science could do to give the best communication possible. Then comes the other question, no less important, what the condition at this time of the Northern Light is? Is she safe, or can she be put in a safe condition? Even if she be in model and other particulars suitable for the service, is she, or can she be at a reasonable expense made safe? Of course, it is absolutely essential that she should be made safe. Now, considering all I have heard about the Northern Light for this long time, having regard for those diatribes of which I have read only a few lines, and there are much stronger phrases than any I have read, it seems to me unlikely that the boat can be reasonably placed in such a condition as to be made the sole dependence. And I was strongly impressed with the view of my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) that the proper course would be to fit the Northern Light out so that she would be safe as a second subsidiary boat, and to put a first-class boat upon the route. Of course, if the hon. gentleman, the First Minister, and the hon. the Minister of Finance, putting their heads together, are determined to proceed immediately with the surveys, not at all with the view of constructing the subway, but with the view that it is possible—just possible—that they may result in a determination to construct the subway. Of course, if that is so that does not alter our duty in this respect. It is quite out of the question to expect that, with all the stern determination to construct that work which the hon. gentleman has evinced this afternoon, it will be constructed in time enough to supply the wants of the service for a year or two at any rate. Therefore, we must proceed in this matter, just as if the subway were out of the question, to secure the continuance of the best possible service by the best navigation that can be obtained. I do not express an opinion upon the feasibility of the case. I was a little surprised to learn the hon. gentleman was shaken in his views by the expressions of hesitation and doubt of my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies). I had understood from this letter of the right hon. gentleman that the Government had been encouraged by scientific information, by information it had received from experts after the imperfect survey that had been made. The hon. gentleman nods a gracious assent to that. But the encouragement appears to have been so faint, the spark of animation attached to this project appears to have been so feeble, that the mere suggestion of my hon. friend, who, however conversant he may be with things above the water, does not profess to be an engineer in matters under the water, has imperilled the continued existence of that spark of hope, that encouragement which the hon. gentleman entertained on the 28th January, and even up to five o'clock of the evening of the 22nd February, it seems now is in such a sickly, weak condition that the suggestion of my hon. friend from Queen's is enough to blow out the flickering spark. What was the hon. gentleman going to do? He was very precise and particular.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And dogmatic.

Mr. BLAKE. Oh, no, not at all dogmatic; but he was so particular that you would almost have supposed, if you had not known him as well as you and I do, that there was something in it. He says:

"The Government continues its interest and is encouraged to make further examinations and surveys, and to submit those already made, as well as those proposed to be made, to a board of civil engineers accustomed to hydraulic work,"—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAKE.—

—"and to works altogether or principally in the water, with a view of ascertaining,"—

Now we come to the categorical part,

—"first, the feasibility of construction; second, the durability; third, the danger of injury or destruction from any known cause; and, fourth,"—

And of course last,

—"the cost. This all important point will be strictly scrutinised in Parliament, and it must depend on the amount necessary for the construction of the sub-way, whether the representatives of the people will consent to incur the expense, the surveys and reports."

After having thrown that little dash of cold water on the project he proceeds to encourage it once again:

"The surveys and reports can be easily and speedily obtained, and I trust that the report will be such as to justify the Government in entertaining the project."

One would almost think this letter was written to be read at an election meeting.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that is a model letter, and I recommend to the hon. gentleman and his friends to write such letters.

Mr. PERRY. This question has been before Parliament ever since the first Session the Government came into power, and the people on the island are no nearer the fulfilment of the terms of the Union to-day than they were then. I was surprised to hear the statements of the Minister of Marine that all that could be done had been done by this Government to carry out the terms of Confederation. He said that without a blush. I contend that it is an insult to the people of Canada, if the hon. gentleman thinks he voices the sentiments of the people of Canada to throw such a slur upon them. We find that the Northern Light, which the present Government hounded down as a gigantic fraud and imposition on the people, is now, according to the Minister of Marine, the only thing the Government can do to carry out the terms of Confederation. The Northern Light commenced operations last fall on the 21st December, and made regular trips until about the 1st February, when all of a sudden she stopped. By whose orders she was stopped, I would like to know. How is it that the Northern Light made, from the 21st of December to the 4th of February, 63 trips and carried 714 passengers. How comes it to pass from that day to 6th of April, not one trip was made by that boat. Is it because my hon. friend who manages the Marine Department wrote down to Mr. Lord to stop the boat from running, in order to punish the people for not having returned a solid phalanx, as the Finance Minister says they should have returned? Let us go a little further and ask what sort of experiment the hon. gentleman made in bringing out the Neptune. I suppose the Neptune must be owned by some people in whom the hon. gentleman has a great interest. I find that for the short time she was here she has cost the Dominion not less than $18,500, or about three times the amount of her services from the 20th of December up to the 4th of February, which that hon. gentleman has recommended, and no doubt orders, and which may be one of the items of the $2,000,000 paid by Governor's warrants. I find from the 20th of September to the 4th of February, that that boat has fleeced this country out of $18,500 for 38 trips, she carried 156 passengers. Three times that amount would build a boat which would be an improvement on the Northern Light. My hon. friend has stated that the traffic between the island and the mainland is very small. I can tell the hon. gentleman that it is not small, when I come to find that the Northern Light has crossed nearly 800 passengers during the winter.

Mr. BLAKE.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

ST. GABRIEL LEVEE AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 12) to revive and amend the Act to incorporate the St. Gabriel Levee and Railway Company.—(Mr. Curran.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 3,

Mr. MILLS. It might be well, for the information of those of us who were not in the Railway Committee, if the hon. gentleman were to state the reason for extending the time, why the work has not been gone on with, and what greater prospects there are now than there were before.

Mr. CURRAN. When the Bill was passed last year the time was limited to three months, during which the work had been begun. It was expected that the city of Montreal, and the neighboring municipalities which were interested in this work, would contribute a certain sum of money towards carrying it out. The city of Montreal was very anxious to do so, but it had not the power to make any advance of money for this particular work without applying to the Local Legislature of the Province of Quebec, and the consequence was the work fell through for want of the powers both in the city of Montreal and in the neighboring municipalities. The city of Montreal, however, has taken a deep interest in this matter, and this Bill has been so amended in the Railway Committee as to allow the city of Montreal itself to take up the work by carrying out the dyke at Point St. Charles as well as by constructing additional works in front of the city, and, at a meeting of the corporation of the city of Montreal held two or three days ago, a resolution was passed to take up this work by the city, so that the company which has been incorporated has had a clause put in the Bill to permit the city, on payment of the actual disbursements by the company, to take over the work if it chooses to do so, and the city will now carry out this work as a city work.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

GODERICH AND CANADIAN PACIFIC JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 24) to incorporate the Goderich and Canadian Pacific Junction Railway.—(Mr. Porter.)

Bill considered in Committee and reported.

On the third reading,

Mr. MITCHELL. Would it not be better to pursue the order and let the Bill take its third reading to-morrow? I do not oppose this particular Bill, but we are getting into an irregular practice.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When the Bill is reported without amendment, it is the usual practice to pass to the third reading at once.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think it is contrary to the rules of the House.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If there is any opposition to it—

Mr. MITCHELL. I withdraw any opposition to this Bill, but I think it is the duty of the Speaker to see that the rules of the House are observed—with all due respect.

Bill read the third time and passed.

MANUFACTURERS' LIFE AND ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 29) to incorporate the Manufacturers' Life and Accident Insurance Company.—(Mr. Brown.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. HALL. It was the sentiment of the Committee on Banking and Commerce that the clause in this section about the decrease of capital should be withdrawn. That clause was reconsidered, but the discussion drifted upon some other subdivision of it, and that matter was overlooked. I believe there is no objection on the part of the promoters of the Bill.

Mr. BROWN. The promoters of the Bill accept that alteration.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 26) to incorporate the Kincardine and Teeswater Railway Company.—(Mr. McCarthy.)

Bill (No. 27) respecting the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company.—(Mr. Patterson, Essex.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 80) to incorporate the South-Western Railway Company.—(Sir Donald Smith.)

Bill (No. 81) to confirm and amend the charter of incorporation of the Témiscouata Railway Company.—(Mr. Grandbois.)

Bill (No. 82) to incorporate the Oshawa Railway and Navigation Company.—(Mr. Smith, Ontario.)

Bill (No. 83) to incorporate the Londonderry Iron Company.—(Mr. Kenny.)

Bill (No. 85) to authorise and provide for the winding up of the Pictou Bank.—(Mr. Tupper.)

Bill (No. 87) to revive and amend the charter of the Quebec and James' Bay Railway Company, and to extend the time for commencing and completing the railway of the said Company.—(Mr. Grandbois.)

Bill (No. 88) to incorporate the Canadian Horse Insurance Company.—(Mr. Small.)

ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. EDGAR moved second reading of Bill (No. 46) to amend the Dominion Elections Act. He said: I would like much that this Bill should be read the second time, so that a committee of the House should have an opportunity of considering it this Session. It has already stood over at the request of the Government, and I am perfectly certain, if it stands over after this, that will be the end of it this Session. I think the experience of all members of this House who have recently been to their electors will have shown them that there are a great many defects in the election law as it stands. I do not at all suppose that all the defects of the election law have been covered by this short Bill, but I am quite satisfied that some very glaring defects in the law are covered by it. I do not think any session could be more appropriate to consider an election law than one which just follows a general election, when we have all had the experience which will enable us to consider it profitably. Nor is there any use in saying that it is unnecessary to amend the Dominion Elections Law in the first Session of a new Parliament, because we cannot help knowing that there are a great many petitions before the courts, and that it is very probable that there will be a good many new elections before long in the Dominion, and therefore I think we should try to amend the law this Session. The first two clauses of this Bill refer to the system of voting by ballot. Of course the whole object of changing the system of voting from public to private, from the open vote to the secret voting of the ballot, was to obtain secrecy; otherwise, there was no excuse for doing so. It has been the experience of the last election that the system of voting by ballot as practiced then was in very many cases far from a secret system of voting. I do not propose at all to make any suggestions affecting the system that has been adopted of voting by ballot. Probably it is as good as any of the many systems which have been adopted in different countries. I propose only some small changes in the mechanical appliances for carrying out that system. Now, I happen to know individually, from having voted in several ridings, that the quality of the paper used in making the ballots—the paper upon which the names were printed and upon which the votes were to be marked—was altogether too thin and slight in its material to prevent the mark made by the pencil from appearing through on the other side. There are no directions in the Act, and I do not think any have been issued by the Government to returning officers, requiring them to see that the quality of the paper was of a certain standard of thickness. There is no doubt that ordinary newspaper paper is so thin that if a hard pencil is used in the marking of the ballot, especially if the surface upon which it is used be rough or soft, the pencil will make an impression upon it which shows through upon the other side very distinctly indeed; and the deputy returning officer, the poll clerks and the agents of the candidates, who have the right to be present, will know from the position of the mark on the ballot just exactly how a man has voted. That is a difficulty which I think might be very easily remedied. I have made enquiries from a number of sources, and especially from the officers of the stationery department of this House, as to the different qualities of paper, and as far as I can judge, if it is provided that the paper upon which the ballot shall be marked shall be writing paper, there is a distinct quality of paper provided for; and being writing paper, if it is provided, as suggested in the first clause, that if it is foolscap it shall be of a weight of not less than seventeen pounds to the ream, and, if it is large post, not less than twenty-nine pounds to the ream, I think it will be very difficult, unless a person tries to do it by main force, to mark the paper so as to show on the other side. I have enquired and I find that the additional cost of providing paper of this kind will be very trifling indeed, almost nothing. I have had a number of letters from returning officers making various suggestions—and I am glad to say that, as far as this Bill goes, it has met the approval of every one who has written me—and among the suggestions is one that the Government should furnish the paper to the returning officers for that purpose—a suggestion which I think might very well be considered. However, if it is provided that a certain quality of paper is to be used, they will know what to do and how to do it. I fancy that most returning officers know little about the quality of paper. They go in a hurry to the printing office in the county and take any paper which is supplied to them. Then there is another mechanical arrangement in connection with the marking of the ballot which is very important. I have myself seen in the polling-booths a rough, unplanned board used as a desk or surface upon which the voter was called upon to mark his ballot, because the pencil was placed upon it and he was shown nothing else to mark it upon. Now, I defy any person to mark a paper on a rough surface like that without showing the mark distinctly on the other side. If the surface be a soft one, such as a desk covered with cloth, the mark would show on the other side, so I suggest in section two a provision that a table or desk with a hard and smooth surface shall be provided upon which the voter may mark his ballot paper. Now, I do not think any hon. member of this House will dispute that those simple provisions will make a vast difference in securing the secrecy of the ballot. Then, by section three it is proposed to add a clause to the 42nd section of the Act to make the law clear that deputy returning officers and poll clerks are not disqualified from voting at the elections. I know that very eminent lawyers in Ontario have taken different views of the law on that subject. I think there is something to be said in favor of preventing deputy returning officers and poll clerks from voting, now that the returning officers are not officials, but are appointed by the Government of the day from among their partisans or any others whom they may choose to appoint. It is of course placing considerable power and patronage in the hands of the Government when they are able, at every polling subdivision, to pick out a couple of voters, and, by employing them for so many dollars a day, secure their votes and influence. But, on the whole, I think it would be a great pity to disqualify two electors in each polling sub-division who possess the intelligence requisite for the positions of deputy returning officer and poll clerk. So I suggest that the words be added to section 42 which are now in the Ontario election law, under which, until 1885, all the Dominion elections in Ontario were held. I cannot understand why those words were left out, unless it were to disqualify the deputy returning officers and poll clerks.

Mr. LANDRY. What about constables?

Mr. EDGAR. Very likely the same arguments would apply to constables. That is a matter which I think the House might very well consider in committee. But, as deputy returning officers and poll clerks are the two officers in reference to whom legislation has been enacted before, I thought it well to deal with them alone in the Bill as introduced. The clause I propose to add to section 42 is this:

"The preceding provisions shall not apply to disqualify deputy returning officers and poll clerks appointed under this Act, and receiving as such the fees to which such officers are entitled thereunder."

While that clause was left out of the Act of 1885, Parliament still left in provisions enabling returning officers to give to the deputies and the poll clerks certificates entitling them to vote at other polling places than those where their names are on the list. Of course, by implication, that would give them the right to vote, and that was one of the considerations which influenced many eminent counsel to believe that they were authorised to vote by the Act. But the general language of section 42 has been held to disqualify them, and I suggest that it should be made clear that they should be allowed to vote. Now, though I can scarcely understand how it could have occurred, I think there is no doubt that in many elections held in February last, somehow or other, a large number of persons voted at certain polling places on certificates from the returning officer that they were agents of the candidates and had a right to vote at a poll where their names did not appear on the list. It is said that a number of people obtained those certificates, and voted at polling places, whose names were not on the list of any polling place at all—that blank certificates were given and were used. If that be so, and I am satisfied that it is so, it would be well I think to prevent the possibility of any such thing occurring in the future. It certainly was not intended by the law, and elections carried by such means could be set aside. Now, I suggest, as there are only two agents allowed to any candidate at each polling place, only two electors should be authorised to vote at any polling place other than their own as agents upon certificate of the returning officer. Therefore, I propose to add to section 44 the following words:—

"And no more than two agents of any candidate shall have the right to vote at any polling place under such certificates."

I think there can be no possible objection to that, because it is a decided improvement in the law, which I am told has been strained as I have indicated. Now, section 58 of the Election Act refers to the preparation of the statement of the result of the poll, not simply to the counting of the votes, but to the preparations of the statement of the different votes cast and all the rejected ballot papers, and various matters which are intended to close up the business of the day. Then, it is provided that the poll box, with all those papers in it, should be sealed and sent to the returning officer, and the election is over, unless there is a recount or a scrutiny held. I suggest that it should be provided that the deputy returning officer shall forthwith, after the completion of the counting of the vote, after the closing of the poll, do this, because we have heard of cases in which the deputy returning officer did not always complete this business of making statements and putting them in the box and sealing the box at the close of the poll. It is evident that if all that is not done in the presence of the candidate or fully accredited agents, there is a large loop-hole left for fraudulent practices. It is provided in this section that after these statements have been made and placed in the box, it shall be locked and sealed, but the section does not say by whom or how the box is to be sealed. I suggest that after the word "sealed" the following words should be inserted:—

"With the seal of the deputy returning officer and the seals of such agents of the candidates as desire to affix their seals."

That, surely, is another safeguard, if the agents choose to affix their seals in addition to that of the returning officer, and that is a provision in the Ontario Election Act under which the Dominion elections were so long held. There is an extraordinary provision in the Act, and I do not see how it has been got over by the deputy returning officer in the last elections in a great many cases. The deputy returning officers are placed in an exceedingly awkward position by the law as it stands. The last provision of section 58 says that this statement, which is to be put into the ballot box at the close of the poll, shall be authenticated by the oath of the deputy returning officer and the poll clerk. The forms of those oaths are given, and it appears, by reference to the forms "AA," at the end of the Act, that the deputy returning officer (page 129 of the Act) is only authorised to swear to this statement, which he has liberty to put in the ballot box at the closing of the poll, before he seals the box, before a justice of the peace or the returning officer himself. In rural districts, the returning officer can clearly only be present at the close of one poll, and a magistrate is not always loafing around a polling place at its close to take this oath voluntarily, and unless the deputy returning officer had sufficient foresight to secure the attendance of a magistrate at the close of his poll, there is no possibility of his complying with the law as it stands. I do not know what the deputy returning officers have done when there have been no magistrates present. They must either have closed up their boxes without taking the oath required, which is a serious matter, or they must have carried off the box and hunted up a magistrate. We should certainly make provisions that the deputy returning officer be allowed to take the oath before the returning officer, or a justice of the peace, or the poll clerk. This provision is in the Ontario Act, and I think it must have been a clerical omission when it was left out of this Act. Section six merely proposes to add the words "poll clerk" as a party who may administer the oath in form "AA." I think these are amendments to the law that are all in the right direction, all maintaining the secrecy of voting and preventing frauds. I am sure the House would be only too glad to have an opportunity of considering the Bill in committee, and I dare say other and perhaps more valuable suggestions will be made from the wisdom and experience of the House. I move that this Bill be read the second time.

Mr. THOMPSON. I presume the House has been interested in the statement of the hon. gentleman, inasmuch as he has pointed out to us a number of defects which have been the subject of a good deal of observation since the last general election. The hon. the First Minister asked the hon. member, when the order to introduce the Bill was called, to allow the matter to stand over for the present, at any rate, and I desire only to say a few words at this stage with the view of repeating that request. The hon. gentleman has addressed to us a number of observations pointing out what he considered to be defects of the Election Act. It must be within the observation of hon. members that since the elections a number of complaints have been made, including not only those which have been presented by the hon. gentleman, but directed to a number of other sections of the Election Act in respect of which he has not proposed a remedy. I may say to the hon. gentleman that those who had to do officially with the conduct of elections have made on this subject, and are still making, repeated representations to the Government as to amendments which seem to be desirable to the Election Act. It has not been feasible to deal with the suggestions and to take up the subject of the revision of the entire Election Act during this Session. Indeed, since the hon. gentleman has introduced this Bill, representations on the subject of amendments which are considered desirable by persons who have given a good deal of attention to the subject, have been made and are under consideration. It is the intention of the Government to give the matter very careful study, and to present to the House at its next Session a number of amendments dealing with these points which the hon. gentleman has brought forward and with others which have apparently escaped his attention. With regard to one or two points in this Bill, it is the intention of the Government to ask this House to deal with them during the present Session. Considering, however, the fact that the defects that the hon. gentleman has mentioned are not the only ones in the Bill which require to be dealt with, and that, as regards some of those, they may be dealt with more appropriately than by legislation; as, for instance, by instructions, as to such matters as the quality of the paper that should be used, &c., it would be better than passing amendments now dealing with one or two isolated cases to give the subject thorough consideration at a period when it can be more fully dealt with. Therefore, in view of the fact that the Act requires a larger amendment than the hon. gentleman proposes, and that some of the defects he has referred to will probably be dealt with by a Bill to be introduced by the Government during the present Session, I hope the hon. gentleman will consent, having made his statement, that this Bill should stand. I move that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. EDGAR. The Minister of Justice has stated that the Government intend during the present Session to deal with a number of the points which are suggested in this Bill, and, of course, if the Government intend to do that, undoubtedly the opportunity will be given to the House to consider all these points quite as well as if this Bill were proceeded with, and the object I have had in bringing this Bill before the House will have been fully attained. All that I have aimed at is to try and perfect a law, which, I am sure, we all admit is defective. I know there are a great many other points which are not alluded to in this Bill, and in which the law might be improved, and I am very glad to hear that the Government are considering those points; but, on matters which are absolutely apparent, and which indisputably require attention, as some do which are brought before the House in this Bill, I do not see that there should be any delay to another Session. I hope, therefore, that the Government will bring down their measure at an early date, and I, for one, will assist them in every way I can.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the Government ought to bring this matter before the House at a very early day in order to give us the opportunity of considering the Bill. If it cannot be made as complete as is desirable, that is no reason why very serious defects in the law should not be dealt with. Besides those referred to in the Bill of my hon. friend there are many others which require attention. As to the naturalisation of aliens, for instance, we no longer recognise the principle of indefeasible allegiance, but we are aware that many persons who are British subjects by birth, but have become American citizens by naturalisation, return and are able to take the oath under this Act. They can swear that they are British subjects by birth although they have ceased to be British subjects in fact, and the oath ought to be so amended as to conform to the modern doctrine of allegiance, and to exclude those persons who have become American citizens under the law, and who have not again become British subjects under the law. Then again, with regard to the summing up of the votes, in order to avoid the expense connected with a recount, the law was amended by Parliament a few years ago so as to provide that, where a mistake was made, not by the deputy returning officers, but by the returning officers, the judge might sum up the votes just as the returning officer should have done. Take the case where the statement of the deputy has not been signed. The law provides that, if the ballot box is lost, then extrinsic evidence or outside evidence may be taken. You may take the certificates which have been given to the agents and use these, or you may send for the agents of the parties and of the deputy returning officer and examine them upon oath; but, if you get the ballot box back without the statement in it, there is no corresponding provision that you can send for these parties or take the statement furnished to the agents and use it for that statement which ought to have been contained in the ballot box. In that respect the law ought to be amended and simplified and made perfectly clear. There can be no difficulty in making it what it ought to be in these respects, and it seems to me, where you have a large number of elections contested, and where you are likely, in consequence of that contestation, to have vacancies, that you ought not to wait till next Session, but to amend the law at once, and remove those obvious defects which lead to serious difficulty and expense to the candidate without any corresponding advantage to any party.

Mr. DAVIES. There is one slight defect in the election law to which I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice. Where the returning officer opens the ballot boxes, if he finds the statement by the deputy of the number of votes, he adds it up; but I have known in my own elections several times where the ballots were returned, put in the envelope, and no statement put in the box by the deputy returning officer at all. Then the returning officer is absolutely powerless. If the ballot box is lost, he may take extraneous evidence, he may take the certificates given to the agents, and so on; and may ascertain in that way what vote has been polled, but if the box is returned and the statement, by accident or otherwise, is omitted to be placed in the box, the whole poll has to be thrown out, and the only remedy is a recount before the judge. I should think it might easily be provided that, in cases of that kind, it should be in the power of the returning officer to open the sealed ballots and count them himself, or to send for the deputy and resort to extraneous evidence. The certificate given to the agents, for instance, might be taken as prima facie evidence. I know that in two or three elections in which I was engaged large polls, two or three hundred votes, were thrown out, and there was no remedy.

Mr. IVES. At the same time, I think, Mr. Speaker, that frequent amendments to the election law are to be deprecated. We have just got a consolidation of these Acts in the Revised Statutes. I do not know that they will be of great use to the public generally, because there is no circulation of the Revised Statutes except for a material consideration, which will rather tend to restrain the circulation. If there are serious defects in the election law, I think it would be desirable that time should be taken to cover all those defects, if possible, in one and the same Act, and that is the chief objection I have to passing the Bill which is now under consideration. It is admitted that this Bill does not cover all the defects that exist. The hon. gentleman who moved it, admits that there are other defects. I know it is a serious trouble to the non-professional public who have to administer and deal with this law, that there are so many amendments, and that the law has to be sought for in so many different statutes; and it is very desirable, if we interfere with the present law, that it should be done by a very carefully prepared Bill, which should, in one and the same Bill, remedy all the defects which are supposed to exist. So far as the objections which are proposed to be covered by the first two sections of this Bill are concerned, I think the remedy might be applied by the Government without any legislative action. The Government, I fancy, could furnish the paper on which the ballots are printed without any special authority from the law, and certainly in the regulations they issue to the deputies or to the returning officers, they could prescribe the sort of table which has to be used. I think, however, in that case they would have to make a little more liberal allowance to the deputies before they could expect them to use a black walnut or mahogany table. This year they were very economical, and I know that, instead of supplying them with a screen or something of that sort, they supplied them with a yard and a half of cotton behind which a man was to go to mark his ballot. I found in my constituency a large number of men who were unable to conceal themselves behind this screen and could not use the device. I think, therefore, that the proposal of the Government to take this matter up is to be commended, even if it were not to be taken up this Session. If all the defects that exist were to be remedied by one and the same Act, it would be much more desirable than for an individual member of the House to cure one or two defects, and another member to cure some other defects, and so on.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would it not be a much more simple way in view of all the objections that have been pointed out against the Act, and which took up so much of our time two or three Sessions ago, to wipe it out altogether and adopt some other simple way? It strikes me that is the proper thing to do, and I would suggest to the Government, if they are going to give their attention to this matter, that they take that view.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If we cannot get the Act wiped out altogether, which we propose trying to do pretty soon, we should remedy some of the defects already in the Act. A change was made, I think last Session, that was liable to lead to grave irregularities in the conduct of elections, I mean the mode that is pursued under this Act of collecting the ballot boxes. It leads to great delays and is liable to create irregularities of a grave character. Under the old system the deputy returning officer returned the ballot boxes to the returning officer the day after the election. This was not as expensive as the present system where the returning officer sends out people to collect the ballot boxes from the deputies. Under the old system every ballot box in my riding, at least, was in the hand of the returning officer the day after the voting.

Mr. BOWELL. That could not be done in many constituencies, Ottawa county for example.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There are very few constituencies in which it can not be done. We have a large net work of railways in almost every constituency in Ontario, and if not they are not so far away that it would be impossible to collect them. In the riding I have the honor to represent, after the system was changed and messengers sent out by the returning officer, in order to collect the ballot boxes, the result was that they were not in the possession of the returning officer until, I think, ten days after the election. Any person can understand what an opportunity this gives for the commission of fraud, and I hope when the Government reconsider this matter, they will revert to the old system. I believe the expenses will not be any greater, and there will be greater safety secured. Now, there is another matter in connection with the ballot. I understand that in some elections ballots had no counterfoils attached to them. On the back of the ballot were the initials, and on the opposite side a short strip for counterfoil, and the returning officer who put the initials on the ballot put them on the back, with the number in front, so it was impossible for him to see, unless he opened the ballot, whether that was the exact ballot he had sent out and given to the voter who took it behind those hiding places mentioned by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives). Now, there should be a new form of ballot, a new form of counterfoil. That of itself is very important, because it may lead to very grave abuses. I hope this and other matters to which I have referred will be considered by the Government in the sense I have indicated.

Mr. FREEMAN. There is another difficulty in recording the ballot, and that is in respect to making the cross. I find that there is great difficulty in ascertaining what a cross means. The man who is to record his ballot is required to make a cross, and if he does not make it in a particular place, if he does not make it in some particular shape, the cross is good for nothing. There are many men in the country who find considerable difficulty in making the cross just as it ought to be made, though to us it seems a very small matter, there are many men that do not quite understand the making of a cross, and in their desire to make a particular cross, they make something which cannot be called such. Now, I think we can find quite a number of volumes in which are descriptions of what a legal cross is. I think if the matter goes on, you will have to enlarge your library to contain the books to define just what a legal cross means. Now, if the Government contemplate dealing with this matter there should be some simple way devised by which a man can make his cross signify which way he wants to vote without having it questioned by lawyers, so that if a man makes anything that is like a mark, whether it is a cross, or whether it is an o, or whether it is a straight mark, provided it is made within the lines made for the candidate's name, I think the law should accept that as legal, and his vote should not be thrown away. I trust, therefore, when the alterations are made in this law, or when the defects are remedied, when the new Bill is brought in, that it will simplify the mode in which the voter is to signify who he wishes to vote for.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 52) to empower the employes of Incorporated Companies to establish Pension Fund Societies.—(Mr. Hall.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 9:35 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 26th May, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

RECEPTION TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

Mr. SMALL. I beg to move that at 4:30 p.m. the Speaker leave the Chair, and the House take recess until 8 p.m., in order to give members an opportunity of being present at, and joining in, the reception to His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. CURRAN. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand, Sir, that motion cannot be put without the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The objection is well taken. If any hon. member takes objection to the presentation of the motion, it cannot be put.

Mr. BLAKE. I take objection.

QUEBEC RIVER POLICE.

Mr. LANGELIER (Montmorency) asked, Why the Government have taken, this year, as a constable in the River Police at Quebec, Fraser Blackburn, in the place and stead of Louis Blouin, of St. Jean, Island of Orleans, County of Montmorency, who was dismissed? Is there any report against the said Louis Blouin from the Chief of the River Police, or from J. U. Gregory, Esq., Agent of the Department of Marine at Quebec?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government have not taken on a constable named Fraser Blackburn in the River Police at Quebec in the place and stead of Louis Blouin. It is the custom of the Department to engage the River Police Force at the opening of navigation in each year, and to disband it at the close of navigation. Changes are made in the force from time to time as may be found necessary, but no constable has any claim for re-engagement from year to year, and Louis Blouin was not employed this season. No report has been received from the Chief of the River Police, or from the Agent of the Department at Quebec, against Louis Blouin. No constable of the name of Fraser Blackburn is engaged on the force, but there is a constable named Malcolm Blackburn.

NORTH-WEST REBELLION LOSSES.

Mr. FISSET asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to provide for the payment, immediately or at an early date, of the losses incurred owing to the rebellion in the North-West; as ascertained by the Commission appointed to enquire into these losses?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). A sum will be placed in the Supplementary Estimates to meet these losses.

DEATH OF MR. CAMPBELL (DIGBY).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I rise for the purpose of expressing my regret, which will be shared in by every member of this House without exception, at the painful news we received this morning of the sudden and unexpected decease of the hon. member for Digby, Mr. Campbell. That gentleman had but recently become a public man, he had not had the opportunity of showing that the confidence and respect which was bestowed upon him by the constituency which elected him was justly earned, but I understand from all those who have known him that his life was in every respect one of great promise. Respected as his family were before him, respected for all the civil and civic virtues, they have been prominent members of society, social and commercial, and the probity and ability and earnestness which distinguished his private life showed that, when he took the responsibility of becoming a member of Parliament, they would gain him the same respect in this House and in the country as they had gained him in his own house and in his own locality. He has been cut off in the flower of his youth or early manhood, when everything seemed to betoken long life, physical endurance and capacity, of which he has shown the effect in his business relations; and yet, such is the uncertainty of human life that he has been carried away after a few days' illness, and we are left to lament his early and regrettable decease. I am sure that every member in this House will join in sympathising with those who are bereaved by the loss of so good a man as Mr. Campbell, I believe, is acknowledged to have been.

DISALLOWANCE OF MANITOBA RAILWAY ACTS.

Mr. WATSON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:

1. That under the terms of Union each of the Provinces of the Dominion as existing in 1881, at the time of the confirmation by Parliament of the charter granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, had full Legislative authority to provide for the construction of local railways running from one point to another within the limits of the Province.

2. That by section 15 of the charter it is provided as follows, viz.:—
“For twenty years from the date hereof, no line of railway shall be authorised by the Dominion Parliament to be constructed south of the Canadian Pacific Railway from any point at or near the Canadian Pacific Railway, except such line as shall run south-west or to the westward of south-west, nor to within fifteen miles of latitude 48°, and in the establishment of any new Province in the North-West Territories, provision shall be made for continuing such prohibition after such establishment until the expiration of said period.”

3. That during the debate in the House of Commons on the Act to confirm the charter, objection was taken to the monopoly and limitation proposed to be created by the said clause.

4. That during the debate in explanation of its real meaning and effect, and of the policy of the Government on the subject, and with a view to obviate such objection, the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, then and now First Minister, used the following language:—

“In order to give them a chance we have provided that the Dominion Parliament—mind you, the Dominion Parliament, we cannot check any other Parliament, we cannot check Ontario, we cannot check Manitoba—shall, for the first ten years after the construction of the road, give their own road, into which they are putting so much money and so much land, a fair chance of existence.”

5. That thereafter in the course of the debate, Thomas White, Esq., then a supporter and now a member of the Government, with the same object used the following language:—

“But we are told now that because of the fifteen miles there never can be any railway into this country. To what does that apply?—simply to the Territories over which the Dominion Parliament has control. There is nothing to prevent Manitoba now, if it thinks proper, granting a charter from Winnipeg to the boundary line. At this very moment there is a company in course of organisation to build a railroad from Winnipeg to West Lynn on the boundary, and after this agreement is ratified. This provision does not take away from Manitoba a single right it possesses. In fact this Parliament could not take away those rights. It has the same rights as the other Provinces for the incorporation of railway companies within the boundary of the Province itself, and there is nothing to prevent the Province of Manitoba from chartering a railway from Winnipeg to the boundary to connect with any southern railway. The only guarantee which this company has under the contract, is that the traffic shall not be tapped far west on the prairie section, thus diverting the traffic away from their line to a foreign line. But there is nothing to prevent a railway being built in Manitoba within the Province that would carry the traffic to any railway that may tap it from the American side. That is the position with respect to this matter."

6. That on the explanations made Parliament confirmed the charter.

7. That three Provinces of the Dominion, viz:—Manitoba, Ontario, and British Columbia, are or may be affected by the construction to be placed on the said provision and the policy of the Government in regard thereto.

8. That since the confirmation of the said charter, the Local Legislature of Manitoba has passed several Acts creating companies for the construction of railways within the Province.

9. That some of these Acts have been disallowed, on the advice of the Government of the day, on the ground, as expressed in the report of the Minister of Justice, of date January 4th, 1882, approved by Order in Council, January 12th, 1882, that the Acts conflict with the settled policy of the Dominion as evidenced by the clause in the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which was ratified and adopted by Parliament.

10. That on the 5th February, 1884, Sir Charles Tupper, then Minister of Railways, in proposing to this House resolutions authorising a large loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, with a view to induce the House to agree to the said loan and with the object of expounding authoritatively the policy of the Government on the subject, made the following statement:—

"I showed on a former occasion that the present Government had adopted the policy of their predecessors in regard to what is called the monopoly in the Province of Manitoba; that when the late Government undertook to carry on the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway as a Government work, they felt bound to protect the traffic of the road from being drawn off to lines to the south of us in the adjoining Republic, and had consequently refused to issue a proclamation which would charter lines within the Province of Manitoba to connect with American lines to the south. I said that the present Government, when we came into power, adopted that policy; that we felt, as our predecessors did, that, grappling with so gigantic a work as the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, we were bound to adopt every possible means of protecting our own line against having its traffic drawn to lines to the south—and, mark you, this was at a time when we did not contemplate, at an early day, carrying the Canadian Pacific Railway further than Port Arthur. I said, further, that when we made it obligatory upon the Canadian Pacific Railway to extend, at once, the line north of Lake Superior, giving us an all-rail route from Montreal to the Pacific Ocean, or from Callendar to the Pacific Ocean, we felt obliged to give to that company, upon which we imposed such onerous obligations, all the security that we had considered necessary, and that our predecessors in the Government had considered necessary, for the protection of the Canadian Pacific Railway. But I am glad to be able to state to the House, that, although true to that policy, the Government refused to give assent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba to connect with American railways to the south, such is the evidence presented by the operation of the line so far as it has gone, such is the conclusion arrived at by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself in regard to the ability of a through line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to take care of itself, and, by the inherent power of its own advantages, to maintain its position, notwithstanding any competition to which it may be subjected, we are now in a position to review and to reconsider the policy of the late Government and the policy of the present Government, as to the continued necessity for any long period of protecting the Canadian Pacific Railway against competition within the Province of Manitoba, and I am glad to be able to state to the House, that, such is the confidence of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the power of the Canadian Pacific Railway to protect itself, that when the line is constructed north of Lake Superior, the Government feel it will not be incumbent upon them to preserve the position they have hitherto felt bound to preserve, that of refusing to consent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba, connecting it with American railways to the south. I can give no better evidence to the House and the country of the advanced position which we consider this great enterprise of the Canadian Pacific Railway has attained, than when I say that I feel it is consistent with what we owe to the people of this country and to that great national work, that the Government should not deem it incumbent on themselves to pursue the restrictive policy within the Province of Manitoba which we have hitherto been obliged to maintain."

11. That upon the said explanation and statement Parliament agreed to the loan.

12. That the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway has been constructed north of Lake Superior.

13. That by an Act passed by the Local Legislature of Manitoba on the 3rd June, 1884, entitled "An Act to amend an Act to incorporate the Manitoba Central Railway Company and amending Acts," power was given to the Manitoba Central Railway Company to construct a railway as follows: "From the town of Morris southerly to the boundary line of the said Province between the Red River and the first principal meridian within the said Province," and providing that no portion of said railway should be built in the portion of territory added to the said Province in the year 1881 in such a way as to contravene the terms in which said territory was added to the said Province.

14. That the authentic copy of said Act did not reach the Secretary of State for Canada until after the first day of April, A.D. 1885, about ten months after its passage.

Mr. WATSON.

15. That the said Act was, notwithstanding the premises, disallowed on or about April, 1886.

16. That discontent has been created by reason of the said policy of disallowance, and that the rights of the Provinces, the interests of Manitoba, and the declared policy of the Government, all point to the propriety of no longer persisting therein.

17. That a humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, setting forth the preceding resolutions, and praying that His Excellency will be graciously pleased to effectuate the altered policy stated to the House of Commons on the 5th February, 1884, as in the 10th resolution set forth, and in pursuance thereof to leave to their operation any Acts of the Local Legislature, not otherwise objectionable, which have been or may be passed for the construction of railway lines within the original Province of Manitoba.

He said: The discussion of this question has been delayed from time to time, and perhaps the present is the most opportune moment to take it up, because matters in Manitoba, to which this resolution particularly refers, have lately assumed a somewhat serious aspect. I may be permitted very briefly to call the attention of the House to the history of the legislation of this Parliament which, at present, has so excited the feelings of the people of Manitoba that they have to-day in that Province a unanimous Legislature, a thing which is scarcely known in any other Province of the Dominion. On this particular question of railway construction in Manitoba, we have to-day a unanimous Legislature, the members of which feel that though they may differ on other questions relating to Provincial or Federal affairs, they are united as to the necessity of railway competition in the interests of the people of that Province. I may say that there are various reasons why we should have competition in railways in that country. When the Canadian Pacific Railway charter was first proposed, the Province of Manitoba protested against certain clauses of that charter, viz, the clause which is commonly known as the monopoly clause of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, clause 15. They protested at that time against the clause, because it would seriously affect Manitoba and the North-West Territories. But after the explanations made by the First Minister and by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), now Minister of the Interior, the representatives from that Province supported the contract. Later on we had pledges from hon. gentlemen opposite, notably a pledge in 1884 from the Minister of Railways, now the Minister of Finance, that as soon as the Canadian Pacific Railway was completed north of Lake Superior, the Government would no longer disallow the local Acts of the Province of Manitoba. In 1880, when the contract was let to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Manitoba Legislature passed a resolution in reference to the matter. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I think it necessary to refer to these matters, because it is claimed by some that the people of Manitoba wish to break faith with the contract made by the Government of Canada with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and I may also remark that so far as the monopoly clause is concerned, it does not apply to the old Province of Manitoba as it existed at the time that contract was let, and the people of Manitoba never agreed to submit to the monopoly clause as construed by some hon. gentlemen opposite, and by the press of the country. On the 22nd of November, 1880, the Local Legislature of Manitoba considered this contract, which was about to be let to the Canadian Pacific Railway, in so far as it related to Manitoba. At that time the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), who has now a seat in this House, was a member of the Manitoba Legislature. It was moved by Mr. Hay and seconded by Mr. Ross:

"That a humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General in Council, praying that the terms proposed with the Syndicate may not be entered into, inasmuch as the said terms will be found unacceptable to the people of Manitoba and the North-West Territories, more particularly with respect to part of clause 11, and clauses 14, 15 and 16."

Clause 15 applies to the monopoly in the added territory ; clauses 14 and 16 apply to the exemption from taxation of the land, and the selection of land by the company. There was an amendment moved to that resolution by Mr. Norquay, seconded by Mr. Girard, as follows:—

"Whereas, it appears from a telegram dated 18th Dec., 1880, addressed by the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, Premier of the Government of Canada, to Thomas Scott, M.P. for Selkirk, that the Canadian Pacific Railway will have power to build branch lines anywhere ;

"And whereas, it is further intended, as appears from the publication of the terms on which the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate have agreed to construct, equip, maintain and operate the said Canadian Pacific Railway, to grant to the said company the exclusive right of building and operating branch lines of railway to the international boundary between Canada and the United States ;

"And whereas, it appears further that the said company have the right of accepting only such alternate sections of land as they may think proper, and it is deemed that the powers intended to be granted to the company would be detrimental to the best interests of the Province of Manitoba ;

"And while this House is of the opinion that the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway should be entrusted to a private company, it views with alarm some of the terms of agreement between the Government and the Syndicate ;

"Therefore, be it resolved,

"Whereas, it appears, &c., that for the present the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate should have given to them power to build only the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that any other line or branch line should be built by the Syndicate or other company only after their obtaining power from time to time from the Parliament of Canada to build such line or branch line, and that the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway shall not be allowed to approach at any point within fifteen miles of the international boundary line, and that Parliament should not abandon its right of authorising the construction of railways in any direction by other companies."

Now, Mr. Speaker, this resolution was passed by the Local Legislature, and in that resolution the Province of Manitoba entered a protest against the granting of the charter, with this provision, to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. An objection was also made to it by the representatives for Manitoba in this House, but on the assurance of the First Minister, who was also First Minister at that time, and after the explanations made by himself, and the hon. member for Cardwell, (Mr. White), the Manitoba representatives consented to the letting of the contract. For the information of the House I will read what the First Minister said :

"In order to give them a chance we have provided that the Dominion Parliament—mind you, the Dominion Parliament, we cannot check any other Parliament, we cannot check Ontario, we cannot check Manitoba—shall, for the first ten years after the construction of the road, give their own road, into which they are putting so much money and so much land, a fair chance of existence."

So, at that time the First Minister did state that the Province of Manitoba would not come under this provision, clause 15 of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract. The hon. member for Cardwell, now Minister of the Interior, also stated :

"But we are told now that because of the fifteen miles there never can be any other railway into this country. To what does that apply?—simply to the Territories over which the Dominion Parliament has control. There is nothing to prevent Manitoba now, if it thinks proper, granting a charter from Winnipeg to the boundary line. At this very moment there is a company in course of organisation to build a railroad from Winnipeg to West Lynn, on the boundary, and after this agreement is ratified. This provision does not take away from Manitoba a single right it possesses. In fact this Parliament could not take away those rights. It has the same rights as the other Provinces for the incorporation of railway companies within the boundary of the Province itself, and there is nothing to prevent the Province of Manitoba from chartering a railway from Winnipeg to the boundary to connect with any southern railway. The only guarantee which this company has under the contract, is that the traffic shall not be tapped far west on the prairie section, thus diverting the traffic away from their line to a foreign line. But there is nothing to prevent a railway being built in Manitoba within the Province that would carry the traffic to any railway that may tap it from the American side. This is the position with respect to this matter."

Nothing could be plainer than the statements made at that time by the First Minister and by the member for Cardwell, the present Minister of the Interior. They correctly interpreted the powers of the Province as they are laid down in the British North America Act, which sets forth that the Province shall have the right to charter lines of railway to run entirely within its own borders. But those solemn pledges made to Parliament at that time by gentlemen occupying those high positions, have been violated. In 1882 Acts were passed by the Manitoba Legislature for the building of railways to the boundary line; and they were disallowed. In 1883 other Acts were passed granting similar charters; and they were disallowed. Protests were entered, notwithstanding which the Dominion Government persisted in disallowing such Acts, and the country has suffered seriously by the action of the Government in making such disallowance. The action of the Government has been the means of ruining certain portions of the Province, and from the evidence presented within the last few days of the fact that the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is in a position to intimidate and coerce the people of the city of Winnipeg; and the Province of Manitoba, it is evidently time this House took action in the matter. All we ask in these resolutions is a fair measure of Home Rule for Manitoba. I do not know of any case wherein intimidation could be made any stronger than it was in the telegram sent by the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to the Premier of the Province of Manitoba, and I will take the liberty of reading that telegram. It is a message which should be placed on our records, so that in future ages the people may look back and see the position taken by presidents of railway companies :

"MONTREAL, 18th May, 1887.

"TO HON. JOHN NORQUAY, Winnipeg, Man.

"I am informed that negotiations are in progress, if not already completed, between your Government and others and the Northern Pacific Railway Company, with the view of giving that company an independent connection with Winnipeg. I cannot but regard this as an act of undeserved hostility towards the Canadian Pacific Railway, which in the end will do nothing but harm to Manitoba and the North-West; and further, I consider it a breach of faith towards the holders of the one hundred and thirty-four million dollars of private capital invested in Canadian Pacific Railway securities. If the mischievous agitation in favor of diverting the business of the North-West into American channels is continued, and the Canadian Pacific Railway is treated as a public enemy by the people of Winnipeg, the company will at once take steps to establish their principal western shops at Fort William, which, from an operating point of view, has many advantages, leaving nothing at Winnipeg but the ordinary division shop. Pray do not be mistaken; this is not an idle threat; it is a fixed purpose taken after full consideration.

(Sd.) "GEO. STEPHEN,

"President C. P. R. Co."

That telegram had not the effect which was expected by the president of the company, because when it was read in the Local Legislature, which is now in session, it was answered in the following terms:—

"Cannot understand how your company can construe the contemplated action of the Provincial Government to build a railway to the southern boundary, as a breach of faith to the holders of Canadian Pacific Railway securities. The Government is acting on behalf of the Province uninfluenced by Winnipeg's attitude toward the C.P.R., or the C.P.R.'s contemplated removal of workshops.

(Sd.) "J. NORQUAY."

It has been intimated that the agitation going on in Manitoba, as represented by the action of the Local Legislature, was merely a Winnipeg movement. That is not the case. The Legislature, which includes representatives from all parts of the Province, is unanimous on this question; and although Winnipeg, for the sake of retaining the main workshops of the railway company, might desire to sacrifice the Province and accordingly seek to retrace its steps, it could not do so. As regards the position of the western portions of the Province, the workshops might as well be placed at Fort William as in Winnipeg, so far as they are concerned. Besides, the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company signed a solemn undertaking with the city of Winnipeg, on receipt of $200,000 of bonus, to establish and maintain there the main workshops of the company, and also all the branch lines in Manitoba, for all time to come. He, nevertheless, now attempts to intimidate the Local Legislature and the people of the Province by sending that telegram. This is an opportune time to discuss this matter. I regret that the Government have seen fit to take the steps they have taken in the past in disallowing our local Acts, which they pledged themselves not to disallow, for the construction of lines of railway to the boundary, lines suggested by the First Minister and the present Minister of the Interior during the debate of 1879-80. It was maintained by some persons that such charters would conflict with clause 15 of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's contract, inasmuch as they extended beyond the old boundary of Manitoba to the west. The Local Legislature of Manitoba have been very careful, in every Act they have passed, not to grant any charter that would conflict with clause 15 of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract. They made provision, in all the charters for the purpose of building lines in Manitoba, that they should not interfere with the territory added to the old Province of Manitoba in 1881, and there was a clause inserted in each and every one of those Acts, providing that those Acts should not interfere or extend beyond the boundaries of the old Province. The different Acts vetoed and disallowed contained this saving clause, and in all cases the Acts disallowed were for roads within the boundaries of the old Province of Manitoba and entirely within the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature as laid down by the British North America Act. When the contract was let to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company they received from the Dominion large subsidies, a large cash subsidy and a large land grant. It was thought at that time that the company were receiving valuable franchises; and from the evidence we have to-day they did receive valuable franchises, because, according to their annual reports, they have made a lot of money out of the construction of the road. So far as the undertaking is concerned, I am not here to decry the road as regards its construction or equipment. It is a good road and well equipped. But a railroad which is built entirely by the public money of Canada, ought to benefit the people of Canada, and this road has not had the desired effect, and has not accomplished the object which was stated to the country it would accomplish when the contract was let. We were informed at that time that by letting this contract to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the company would use their best endeavors to have that country settled. We had some very exaggerated statements as to what the population of that country would be within a certain number of years, but those dreams—as I might call them—have not been realised. Certain reasons, I think, can be given why we have not more people in the Province of Manitoba and the North-West Territories than we have, and one of them is the fact that we have a monopoly railway. We are told by some that we are trying to divert the trade of Manitoba and the North-West into American channels—

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. gentleman says, "hear, hear." But, if we are doing that, we are doing exactly what hon. gentlemen opposite told us we could do, when the contract was let and when the matter was under discussion. We have no wish to divert trade into American channels. We wish to have competition in that country; we wish to have another great Canadian railway there, namely, the Grand Trunk. The people of the east are clamoring for connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, because they have been subjected to a Grand Trunk monopoly. We, in the west, have been suffering from a Canadian Pacific Railway monopoly, and we want to have the Grand Trunk Railway as a competing line—a road which I do not suppose anyone will say is an American railway. I believe its stock is owned entirely by British capitalists.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is all the worse for that.

Mr. WATSON. Probably it is, but we want competition. It is claimed that, by the construction of a road running to the international boundary line, the trade of Manitoba and the North-West will be diverted into American channels, that the eastern manufacturers will be deprived of the privilege of controlling the trade of Manitoba and the North-West. I have simply this to say: that if the protective wall which we have built up, and which, in the case of agricultural implements, amounts to 35 per cent—and they are the articles particularly referred to—if that wall is not enough to keep up the competition with a road to the south of us, then there is something wrong in the rates. We have to-day almost an entire monopoly in implements. I can assure you that the rates cannot break down this wall that is built up between us and the American manufacturers, and my view is, that by having competition into that country, the trade of the eastern manufacturers will be increased. The eastern manufacturers do not sit down and figure upon the fact that their market in the west is 1,200 or 1,500 miles distant from their factories, but they figure it upon the basis of so many dollars or cents per pound or hundredweight, and the lower you can reduce the freights the closer do you bring the Provinces together. I believe that with competition that country would grow rapidly, and the manufacturers in the east would be better served than they are to-day. I am satisfied that such is the case, from conversations I have had with manufacturers in the east, who tell me that they want competition for their freights into the North-West. The results which were promised by the Government from the letting of the contract to the Canadian Pacific Railway have not been realised, so far as immigration is concerned. We have in that country better natural advantages and greater inducements to offer immigrants than they have to the south of us. It is admitted on all hands that we have a better soil, a better climate and that we can show a better sample of wheat than in northern Dakota. But we are obliged to ship our wheat by a monopoly railway; and I say that to-day the Canadian Pacific Railway is in a position to make more money out of carrying the farmers' wheat from the Province of Manitoba to Port Arthur, than the farmers are in a position to make from growing it. The rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway on wheat carried out of that country are so exorbitant that to-day the farmers are questioning whether it will pay them to produce that fine quality of wheat which our country is capable of producing. Coming to the question of population, we find that it has increased very slowly. The population of Manitoba in 1871 was 18,995; in 1881 it was 65,954, or an increase of 46,959—an increase of 4,696 per year, or less than 25 per cent. of an annual increase. In 1886 the population was 108,640, and taking from this the 10,000 people, which I think would be a fair allowance, for the added territory which was not included in the census of 1881, we have an actual increase of 36,686, or 6,587 per annum, equal to about 9 per cent. I will now refer to the assessment figures to show that the country is not advancing as rapidly as we think it should advance. It is not advancing to the satisfaction of the people of the east, and I can assure the House that no person feels this more than we do in the west. We know we have a good country, and that we should have had a large number of immigrants brought into that country that we have not received. Yet I have been accused of decrying the country, simply because I stated what are the facts, that the country is not progressing. For stating these facts I have been proclaimed disloyal. I say that the facts ought to be stated, and stated publicly. If there is a disease we should try to suggest a remedy, and the quicker we apply that remedy to the Province of Manitoba and the North-West Territories the better it will be, not only for that country, but for the whole of Canada. The assessment values of 1882 amounted to $101,000,000. In 1886 they amounted to $63,903,648, or a decrease of $37,000,000. Of course we must remember that in 1882 a large amount of property was at boom prices, but such are the facts as to the assessment. The rural population, including Indians, is estimated at 79,848; the population of towns and villages, at 28,792. It was estimated by the Statistical Department in Manitoba in 1882 that the population was 135,500; it was estimated by the Dominion Government in 1884 that the population of Manitoba and the North-West Territories was 248,102. Taking from the last figures the number shown to be in the Territories in 1885, that is 48,362, there is left 199,740. In other words, there are now about 90,000 people less in Manitoba than there were in 1884. This is not as it should be, because we not only have the immigration into the country, but we have the natural increase as well, and the natural increase in Manitoba is large. The country has expended large sums annually on immigration, principally to the North-West, and what has been the result? We had a population of 65,000 in 1881, to which we must add 10,000 received by the addition of territory. This would make 75,000, yet to-day, according to the census, we have only 95,000 people in the Province of Manitoba. That is a very poor showing. I have prepared a list showing the comparative increase of the population in Dakota and Manitoba.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the population of Manitoba and the North-West is 90,000 less than it was in 1882?

Mr. WATSON. Yes; according to the Dominion Government estimate, in 1884 there were 240,000 people there.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understood the hon. gentleman to say it was actually 90,000 less.

Mr. WATSON. We simply have the estimates of the Local and Dominion Governments in that year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I misunderstood the hon. gentleman. I understood him to say that the population was 90,000 less at the present time than in 1882.

Mr. WATSON. According to the statement as made by the Dominion and Local Governments, I think those figures were properly stated by the hon. gentleman himself. In Dakota, in 1870, there was a population of 14,181, and in 1880, 135,177, being an actual increase of 120,996, or 12,100 per year; or, in other words, an increase at the rate of 85 per cent. In 1885, the population was 415,000, and a natural increase of 280,000, showing an increase of 56,000 per year, or 42 per cent.; that is in northern Dakota. Other portions of the western States show about the same increase, and to-day, according to the returns, the State of Dakota should have at least 110,000 added to her population during the year. There is one notable fact to be considered in this connection, and that is in the States the prepaid fare for immigrants coming to that State is large, while there are very few people in Manitoba and the North-West who pay the fares of their friends in the Old Country, and I say there is no better immigrant in the world than the man who advises his friends to come and settle in the country where he resides. I was saying that we were led to believe that the Canadian Pacific Railway would expend large sums of money to induce settlers to come to that country, but we have obtained returns and fail to find where the Canadian Pacific Railway have organised that great immigration policy it was predicted they would put into operation. Certainly the results give no evidence of the working of any such policy. I will give you, Sir, some of the rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway, which, to my mind, are exorbitant. This cry of monopoly has not been raised for nothing. We find that the Canadian Pacific Railway are in the position to make more money out of the wheat grown by the farmers in Manitoba than the farmer is, and I see, by an interview with the president, Sir George Stephen, that he suggested it would be much better for the people of Manitoba if they would take off their coats and do a little more ploughing and a little less talk. I have no doubt if they did more ploughing and raised more wheat, it would be a great deal better for the Canadian Pacific Railway, but so far as the farmer is concerned, past experience does not show that it would be a great deal better for him to plough more land. I have reason to believe the Canadian Pacific Railway are charging every cent they can per bushel of wheat that will not absolutely stop production. I do not particularly blame them as business men for working for what they consider their own interests, but I think it would be more to their advantage if, instead of charging all they can, they would charge less rates and thus encourage the production of a larger quantity of wheat. If the people had the assurance that the rates would be reduced five cents to eight cents per bushel, there would be double the area of land broken in twelve months that there is, because farming would then pay. When you go 800 miles west of Winnipeg you find the rates are only some four cents or so per 100 lbs. higher than in Winnipeg, showing that the company have the farmer ground down to the last cent, because the increase is not a fair increase of rates, and they publish this rate for comparison as there is no wheat shipped east from points far west. I will give some of the rates charged for passenger traffic, which will show you the disadvantage under which the people of the North-West are placed, in comparison with the people living east. Passenger rates, as charged at the Canadian Pacific Railway depot at Winnipeg, from Winnipeg to Ottawa, are $46.25; no second-class or return tickets are issued in Manitoba. Go into the Canadian Pacific Railway office at Ottawa and you can buy a ticket from Ottawa to Winnipeg for $40 for first class, $21 second class, and a return ticket for $55. From Ottawa to Victoria a ticket can be purchased for $75, but the Winnipeg man who wants to buy a ticket to Victoria in Winnipeg has to pay $80, or $5 more for half the distance than a man in Ottawa, simply because he lives in a country where the Canadian Pacific Railway have a monopoly. From Ottawa to San Francisco and return the rate is $90, while $30 is charged from Winnipeg to Victoria. These are facts that cannot be contradicted. These are the rates everyone, with the exception of a favored few who secure passes, has to pay. I will give you some of the freights charged and make a comparison, not such as has been made by the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from figures published in the Montreal Gazette, but from figures such as we receive from each end of the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, comparing the western portion with the eastern portion; and, Mr. Speaker, it cannot be argued for a moment that we have not as good a road-bed, or a railway as easy to operate in the west as in the east. On green lumber the rate by the Canadian Pacific Railway from Rat Portage to Winnipeg, a distance of 123 miles, is $4.50 per 1,000 feet, while the rate by the Canadian Pacific Railway from Ottawa to Montreal, a distance of 120 miles, is $1.00 per 1,000 feet. In other words, the company charge four and a half times as much for carrying a thousand feet of lumber from Rat Portage to Winnipeg as from Ottawa to Montreal. Now, we have started some industries in the North-West, among them a linseed oil mill at Winnipeg. As the country is adapted to raising linseed, the people who started that mill thought they would be able to ship oil and cake to the west at a profit. But on that article the Canadian Pacific Railway charge $1 per 100 lbs. from Montreal to Vancouver, and they charge just the same rate from Winnipeg to Vancouver, a little over half the distance. On confectionery, from Montreal to Vancouver, they charge 90 cents per 100 lbs., and from Winnipeg to Vancouver $1.89 per 100 lbs. This figure, I may say, is not on the regular list, but it is a rate given to the manufacturers, and can be substantiated by the invoices. Now, we will make another comparison of the rates charged for carrying from Ottawa to Montreal, 120 miles, and the rates for carrying from Winnipeg to a point an equal distance westward :

Winnipeg to 120 miles west- ward.....	.55	.47	.38	.30	.27	.15½

Now, this comparison shows that these rates are not fair to the west. But we are told that there is a saving clause in the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, providing that the Dominion Government can interfere with the freight rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as soon as their profits exceed 10 per cent. But what protection is there for the people in the west so long as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company insist on carrying freight and passengers at less than cost where they have to contend with competition? They carry passengers from Ottawa to California and back at a rate which I do not believe is a paying one, but they make up the loss on the poor man who lives in Manitoba, who is obliged to travel on the Canadian Pacific Railway, because he has no other means of getting out of or into the country. They make up their 10 per cent. of profit on that portion of the country where they have an entire monopoly. I have some figures here which show the discrimination made by the company against the wholesale houses in Winnipeg, and in favor of the wholesale houses of the east; but, as that matter was thoroughly gone into by the deputation from the North-West, who laid their case before the Government, I will not take up the time of the House in going over the figures. Now, I will give a few comparisons of rates on freight charged by the different lines of railway. In the first place, I will give you the difference in the rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway in the North-West and in Ontario. I am going to deal particularly with the rates charged on wheat, because it is of the greatest importance, in considering this matter from a Manitoba point of view, that we should consider specially the rates charged on our natural product. I have not been able to secure the rates for distances less than 400 miles, but I will give them on the longer distances. For 425 miles the Canadian Pacific Railway charges 28 cents per 100 lbs. in the west and 21½ cents in Ontario, and the Grand Trunk Railway in Ontario charges 20 cents. For 500 miles the Canadian Pacific Railway charges 30 cents in the west, 23½ cents in Ontario, and the Grand Trunk Railway in Ontario, 20 cents. For 550 miles the Canadian Pacific Railway charges 30 cents in the west, 28½ cents in Ontario, and the Grand Trunk Railway in Ontario, 22½ cents. Now, I find that the Lake Shore Railway carries wheat 420 miles for 15 cents a bushel, and all the roads competing between Suspension Bridge or Buffalo and New York carry grain at a much less rate. The four lines of railway running between those points carry grain 500 miles for 15½ cents per 100 lbs., and 450 miles for 13 cents. I also find that the Wabash Railway carries wheat 425 miles for 13 cents per 100 lbs., against 28 cents per 100 lbs. by the Canadian Pacific Railway in the west. The Wabash Railway carries wheat 500 miles for 15 cents per 100 lbs., exactly half the rate of the Canadian Pacific Railway for the same distance in the west. Now, it might be interesting to the House to give an approximate estimate of what a farmer in Manitoba contributes to the Canadian Pacific Railway for shipping his crop, not to

Mr. WATSON.

Montreal, but from a central point in the Province of Manitoba, say the town of Portage la Prairie to Port Arthur, a distance of about 500 miles. For carrying wheat that distance the company charge 30 cents per 100 lbs., which amounts to a very large percentage of the farmer's crop. For instance, a farmer who raises 25 bushels to the acre, has to pay to the company for carrying his wheat to Port Arthur, at the rate of $4.50 per acre, and for carrying it to Montreal, $7.50. When we look at the matter in that way, it appears to me that it must be very plain to all hon. gentlemen in this House that those rates are exorbitant. The rate for carrying wheat from Portage la Prairie to Port Arthur, is about three times as much as the land would rent for, so that it is becoming very questionable with the people of Manitoba who really own the land—whether it is the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or the farmer who holds the Patent, occupies it. Now, I find that the Grand Trunk Railway carries wheat from points west of Stratford to Liverpool for 30½ cents per 100 lbs., which is only one-half a cent per 100 lbs. more than the Canadian Pacific Railway carry it from Portage la Prairie to Port Arthur. In regard to local freight, I will give you an instance of a gentleman who bought a buggy in Winnipeg and wanted to ship it to Portage la Prairie, a distance of 57 miles. The freight asked was $14. The man was able to ship that buggy by the Express Company for $10.50. You can actually ship as large an article as a buggy for a less rate by the Express Company than by the Canadian Pacific Railway as freight. There is a case of a man with a farm of 320 acres, producing about 31 bushels per acre, which is a fair average. This is given as the experience of one farmer during the last season. The products of his farm in wheat he shipped to Port Arthur at a rate of 30 cents per 100 lbs., and he contributed $1,760 for freight, on the products of 320 acres, to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, for carrying his crop a distance of less than 500 miles. I say it is too large a sum, and the people of that country are commencing to feel that they cannot pay the rates that have been exacted from them. We have men in that country, not disloyal Grits as they are sometimes spoken of, but men who are known to be good Conservatives, who use very strong language in connection with the rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the treatment they receive. I do not know that I can do better than read to you the language used by the gentleman who moved the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, in the Local Legislature of Manitoba, during the recent Session. The Government of Manitoba is known to be Conservative, but this gentleman felt compelled to use the following language:—

"Mr. Kirchoffer, who moved the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, said Mr. Van Horne had promised the building of an extension of the Souris branch. Lately, on being reminded of that promise, he treated Mr. Kirchoffer to a lecture on the attitude of the Province with respect to disallowance, and further intimated that not one foot of branch lines would be built here until the question of the taxation of Canadian Pacific property was settled. Mr. Kirchoffer closed his address as follows:—'Let us be true to ourselves by patriotic firmness, let us succeed in removing the disabilities under which we labor, let this grinding monopoly which is squeezing our heart's blood out of us be broken up, and free trade in railways be established within our borders. By proper and judicious assistance let branch lines be extended so as to meet the requirements of our settlers, and, Sir, I predict that within a very brief period we shall see confidence in this country restored, emigration increasing, old world capital flowing in upon us for investment, until, in a few short years, we shall see this noble Province, the home of our adoption, occupying a position, financially, commercially and politically, as the centre and backbone of our great Dominion.'

The mover of the Address was forced to use that language a few weeks ago in the Local Legislature of Manitoba, and the Local Legislature felt that such a pressure was being brought to bear upon them that it was necessary for them to adopt the very unusual procedure of passing two local Acts, two charters, to build two railways to the boundary line before considering the Address. These charters have been granted, but the Government of Manitoba have been afraid that the Dominion Government would proceed in the policy of disallowance, and they did not wish to risk the building of a line under these charters, but passed resolutions through the House taking $1,000,000 to build a railway to the boundary line as a provincial work. It will be granted that this is to be regretted, because we feel satisfied that outside capital can be secured to build a road providing authority to build a road is granted. It is a burden that our Province can ill afford to bear, but, as a matter of self-preservation, the Province feels it necessary to take this unusual course in order to get competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and so it has passed this resolution and contemplates going on and constructing this railway, providing the Government here will not yield on this point. In order to maintain the feeling which has existed in the past, between Manitoba and the Territories in the west, and the Provinces in the east, it would be wise on the part of this Government to pass the resolution now before the House. We do not ask for any assistance; we do not ask the Government to grant a large subsidy to a railway to the boundary line; we simply ask permission to build a line of railway under a local charter. In other words, we ask that the Government will let us alone and will let us build this road. I do not think the eastern Provinces should fear that any trade will be diverted to the south. In fact, I know that the largest shippers, and the largest manufacturers from the east, are in favor of having an extension of the Grand Trunk Railway into the Province of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. They feel that, by having a competing line, they would be able to obtain cheaper rates, and would bring the North-West markets nearer to them than they are now, as the cost of freight is considered rather than distance. Not only that, but we would have cheaper rates from our Province for our produce, and it is most important that we should have cheaper rates in that direction, because we are beginning to realise that the produce which goes out of the country is not equal to the amount of money which comes into it. We have no resources except our swamp lands in that Province, and we will be reduced to direct taxation to provide for those public works if the Province has to build them herself. It is in the interest of the whole Dominion that the Province of Manitoba should be allowed free competition in railways. I have given you some freights between Winnipeg and Port Arthur and between the Portage and Port Arthur. For fear some members in this House might imagine that we are dealing entirely with local freights between local points, I will give you the experience of a lumber merchant in Brandon. The freight rates on lumber in car loads from Duluth to St. Paul, 140 miles, are seven cents per 100 lbs., or one cent per ton per mile. From St. Paul to St. Vincent, 400 miles, the rate is 16 cents per 100 lbs., or four-fifths of one cent per ton per mile. From St. Vincent to Brandon on the Canadian Pacific Railway, 190 miles, the rate is 19 cents per 100 lbs.—that is, three cents more per 100 lbs. for 190 miles than the St. Paul and Minneapolis road charge for 400 miles—or two cents per ton per mile. From Rat Portage to Brandon, 265 miles, the rate by the Canadian Pacific Railway is 21½ cents per 100 lbs., or 1½ cents per ton per mile. There are some other classes of freight, but, as I stated before, the classes of freight which more particularly interest the people of Manitoba are wheat, lumber and articles of that description. Now, I will give you some of the freights charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway on other articles, although they are not of as great importance as wheat and lumber, but there is a considerable quantity of coal shipped into that country. I will take the average of nine different shipments of coal by a hardware merchant in the town in which I live, Portage la Prairie, the average cost of a car load delivered at Port Arthur, duty paid. It is true that now the duty is taken off anthracite coal, but, when the duty charged was 50 cents per ton a car load delivered at Port Arthur, duty paid, reckoning 15 tons to the car, cost $86. The Canadian Pacific Railway charged for carrying that coal—and I am not speaking merely of the freight on that coal, I am speaking of the original cost of the coal with the transport from the mine in Pennsylvania, and the 50 cents duty per ton added—they charged $86 for delivering it on the wharf at Port Arthur, while they charged for carrying that car of coal from Port Arthur to Portage la Prairie, a distance of less than 500 miles, $108. That is one instance of the exorbitant rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, in reference to shipping generally. A hardware merchant who was purchasing his goods last fall had a certain class of freight which he was shipping from Montreal to Portage la Prairie, where he had an establishment, paid $1.65 per 100 lbs. for that particular class of freight. He said he was surprised to find that he could ship that same 100 lbs. of freight from Montreal to Vancouver, over double the distance, for $1.35, or 30 cents less, showing the disadvantage that the people are under from this railway monopoly. I have heard men claim that we were getting our tea much cheaper in the western portion of Canada, because it came from the Pacific coast. I have made enquiries as to the freight charged on tea, and I find that it is carried from Yokohama to Montreal for $1.25 per 100 lbs. I suppose, under the ordinary mode of doing business, that tea would be dropped off at Winnipeg for $1, but the fact is that they drop it at Winnipeg for $1.75, so that, as a result of this want of railway competition, we have to pay 50 cents more in Winnipeg than do the people of Montreal; in other words, with competition we could re-ship it back from Montreal to Winnipeg as cheap as you can get it left at Winnipeg on the way out. Now, I have heard a good many members of this House on both sides claim that the people of Manitoba could not really be in earnest in this agitation, that it was the work simply of a few boomsters and speculators, as Sir George Stephen put it, who are trying to boom the country. I say such is not the case. The argument is used here that Manitoba has approved of the policy of the Government in respect to disallowance, by sending to Ottawa at the last general election four members to support the present Government. I have no doubt the Government will get the support of some of those gentlemen, but they will not get the support of others on this question. The fact is the people of Manitoba were led to believe that the policy of disallowance was to cease, that the people of Manitoba would have a right to build lines of railway within our bounds. We had in the member for Winnipeg (Mr. Scarth) a particular friend of the First Minister, or supposed to be, and I expect he is. We had him stating in Winnipeg that he was in correspondence with the right hon. gentleman who leads this House, and was receiving cipher telegrams which he stated to be to the effect that the policy of disallowance was to be discontinued.

Mr. SCARTH. I rise to a point of order. I never made any such statement as the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has alleged.

Mr. WATSON. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is simply a question of veracity between the hon. member for Winnipeg and myself.

Mr. SCARTH. It is not a question of veracity. Will the hon. member say that he heard me make such a statement? If he will, then it is a question of veracity, but not otherwise.

Mr. WATSON. It does not matter much. Suffice it to say that it was generally believed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. WATSON. Well, all right. It was stated for a fact by the Government organ that the hon. gentleman made such a statement, and the day previous to the election the city of Winnipeg was placarded with bills stating that the policy of disallowance was to be done away with, and "vote for Mr. Scarth, you will have the Grand Trunk in Winnipeg by the 15th July." That was the inducement held out to the people of Winnipeg to support the Government candidates. I have no doubt that the part the hon. member for Winnipeg will take in the discussion will show you that he was pledged to the people of Winnipeg to vote even want of confidence in the Government on this particular question of disallowance, if the Government did not yield. I say that I can produce no better evidence than the member for Winnipeg's own actions. The member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) claimed that the same thing would result, that the policy of disallowance would be discontinued.

Mr. DALY. I never made any such statement, or anything of the kind.

Mr. WATSON. All right, Mr. Speaker, those gentlemen will have an opportunity of explaining their position when I get through. These interruptions do not at all bother me. But I expect that the part the hon. gentleman from Selkirk will take will justify my statement that the people of Selkirk did believe that the policy of disallowance was to be discontinued, and that the monopoly was a bad thing for the county of Selkirk. I say that every candidate who offered himself for election, in Winnipeg or elsewhere, had to declare on a platform that he was opposed to a policy of disallowance. I know my opponent claimed that he was opposed to disallowance; that he had actually got permission from Sir John A. Macdonald to vote against the Government on that particular question, so long as he supported it on other questions, and I suppose those gentlemen who will vote on this question will follow the same course. It was very kind of the right hon. gentleman to give him that permission, because, if it had not been for that permission, I would have been returned with a much larger majority than I obtained, because that was a burning question. The people said that, so far as the question of disallowance was concerned, one man was as good as another, but they have some reason to doubt that such is the case. I do hope that the Government will leave this an open question, and allow this resolution to pass, so that a certain measure of Home Rule may be granted to Manitoba, such as we asked for Ireland. In order to show that this is not an individual movement on my part, but that I am supported by the whole Province of Manitoba, I shall quote interviews had with members of the Local Legislature on this subject, which show that the Legislature is solid on this question:

"Mr. C. S. Douglas said he thought it was an insult to the people of this Province to insinuate that any corporation can have its own way.

"Mr. Hamilton said the public already had the opinion of the Government upon the question; they were going to build the road, and what more could be asked? The Government did not wish to introduce clap-net, but were resolved to build the road at any cost.

"Hon. Dr. Wilson thought it strange that the C.P.R. should threaten the Government to cut off Winnipeg. The Government was the Government of the Province, and not only of Winnipeg, so that the threat to cut off Winnipeg was somewhat absurd.

"Mr. Alexander considered that the C.P.R. was acting very meanly in the matter, and if they adopted such a policy as was threatened, the people of the Province—for it was purely a provincial matter—would be bound in defence to take a strong position against the company. The sooner we knew our position the better, so that we might be in a position to defend ourselves."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to make a suggestion. A large number of members of the House are anxious to leave a little earlier than usual. I, therefore, suggest that it be now declared, by common consent, six o'clock, so as to meet the case, and the hon. gentleman will have an opportunity when the House resumes to continue his speech.

Mr. WATSON. If it is the wish of the House, I have no objection.

Mr. SPEAKER. No objection being offered, I declare it now to be six o'clock.

After Recess.

Mr. WATSON. When the House rose I was quoting from a report of interviews with different members of the Manitoba Legislature, and I feel I should give the individual opinion of those members, so that this House may know that it is not a feeling that exists in the minds of a few people of that Province:

"Mr. T. Gellay said it was merely an awkward attempt at bluff, to try and frighten the people here.

"Mr. Martin (Morris) said he hoped the company would start to-morrow to tear up their track. It was well that affairs had taken the turn they had, because the result could not fail to be of great benefit to the country. Van Horne would soon find out that he could not bulldoze the public.

"Mr. Macdonell did not think it would materially injure Winnipeg if the C. P. R. did pull up stakes. Another and more liberal corporation would soon be in the country, and if the C. P. R. could do without Winnipeg, Winnipeg could easily do without it. The city would then be in a perfectly independent position. There was no doubt that even with half-a-dozen roads into the Province the C.P.R. would compete just as actively for traffic. He considered that the interests of the country were in direct antagonism to the C.P.R.

"Mr. S. J. Jackson thought the Legislature should pass a resolution showing the syndicate that if they could do without Winnipeg that city could do without the railway. The city would be in better shape to-day if the C. P. R. had never entered it.

"Mr. Smart believed it was the best thing that could have happened under the circumstances. It would bring matters to an issue.

"Mr. S. J. Thompson believed the threat was a game of bluff. We knew now just where we stood. Instead of frightening us, it would only make us more determined to have a competing railway, no matter what the cost would be. The people of this country were loaded up the wrong way to pay serious heed to such threats.

"Mr. Kenneth McKenzie said there could be no two opinions on the question either in Winnipeg or throughout the Province. We had a right to build a railway, and if the C.P.R. was going to act in such a manner as indicated by Sir George it was just as well that we knew it at once. It was time this Province ceased to be a packhorse for the rest of the Dominion.

"Mr. Crawford thought it was a sign of weakness on the part of the C.P.R. Such a threat showed that they knew they were wrong, or they would not attempt coercion.

"Mr. Martin (Portage) said the C.P.R. thought that this was simply a Winnipeg agitation, but even if Winnipeg was scared, it would not make the slightest difference to the country at large. Long before Winnipeg took up the question, the country west of it was a unit on it. Winnipeg has not sufficient influence to secure the abolition of monopoly, and it is an absurd position for the C.P.R. to take.

"Hon. C. P. Brown smiled and said, Gentlemen, there ain't nothin' to it."

I suppose he was once Minister of Railways.

"Mr. Prendergast thought it was an outrage, but it would never be put into execution. The Canadian Pacific Railway was only a private company, bound by its interests and its contract, and couldn't bluff this Province out of its rights.

"Mr. Burke thought it was a — farce from the word go. "Mr. Greenway would not conceive that a business man like Sir George Stephen would send such a telegram, unless it were for some strange reason which we knew nothing of.

"Mr. Winram thought it was a great piece of impudence, which should be resented. It was not a question between Winnipeg and the Canadian Pacific Railway, but between the Province and monopoly. It was the Province that was seeking relief, and not Winnipeg. What did the Province care if the work-shops and every inch of track the company had in this city were removed?

"Mr. F. Young regarded it as an insult and thought it should be resented as such.

"Mr. Drewery thought Sir George must have wanted a competing road to the boundary built very badly or he would never have taken the course he did. If there was anything that would spur him on and make him determined to have his rights it was being bulldozed.

"Mr. Robinson would not be surprised if the company would do it. From a Manitoba point of view, such an act only intensified his feeling, because it demonstrated the fact that we were at the mercy of the monopoly.

"Mr. Marion thought it was simply a case of coercion.

"Mr. MacBeth regarded it as exceedingly bad taste, and very ill-timed. As a member of the House, he intended to do all he could to secure connection. He had no idea that such a threat would be executed.

"Mr. Kirchhoff did not consider that the C.P.R. controls the Province any more than any other corporation in it. He did not think the people would stand by and submit to such bulldozing.

"Mr. Gillies said that Stephen seemed to think that Winnipeg was the whole Province. It is the interests of the Province that we are thinking about, and we are going to have our rights.

"Mr. Leacock believed that Sir George had become so puffed up recently at his own greatness, that he had conceived the opinion that he could rule the earth. He would soon discover that while we would extend him every fair play, we would not submit to have a revolver held at our head.

"Mr. Smith considered it merely a bluff game to which Mr. Van Horne was accustomed from his long experience at the poker table."

Those are the opinions of the members of the Local Legislature of the Province of Manitoba; those conclusions they arrived at after due deliberation, and they at the same time proceeded to pass resolutions in the Legislature for the purpose of building a line of railway to the boundary. I may refer to other evidence to show that the people of Manitoba are in earnest in this matter, and I can produce no better evidence than the evidence fresh from a public meeting which was held in the city of Winnipeg last night. This morning there was a report in the Citizen which stated that a meeting had been called, that it was but poorly attended, and that there were present only three or four representative men from outside constituencies. I see by the Free Press that the meeting was called by telegram only last Saturday, so that only those places having telegraphic communication had an opportunity of being present. A full report of that meeting, with the telegrams read from the representatives of municipalities who were not present, is contained in this evening's Free Press, and as I think that it is important that this evidence should be before the House, and as I consider that this is a very critical time in the relations which have existed in the past, and are to exist in the future, between the Province of Manitoba and the Dominion Government, I will trouble the House by reading those telegrams, as well as the resolutions which were passed at the meeting:

"Winnipeg, May 26th.—(Special)—An immense mass meeting was held here last night, lasting till long after midnight. Over two thousand people were present, including some 25 mayors and Reeves of outside municipalities, besides Honorable John Norquay, Premier, and Mr. Greenway, leader of the Opposition, and all the members of the Legislature. The wildest enthusiasm prevailed on the railroad question, and not a dissenting voice was heard. The following telegrams were received from outside municipalities:—

"From Louise.—The Louise council fully concur with you in expressing their strongest disapproval of any further interference with their rights, as expressed in your circular, and have telegraphed Mr. Greenway to act as a delegate.—M. Young, Reeve, Clerk of the Municipality of Louise.

"From Glenboro.—I am duly in receipt of your circular inviting me to attend a meeting in Trinity Hall on the 25th of instant. I am very sorry indeed that press of business will prevent me attending, but I may say that the feeling in this municipality is thoroughly in accord with the efforts in favor of the abolishment of disallowance, and the enclosed resolutions, passed at a large and representative meeting held at Northfield school in this municipality on the 21st instant, show conclusively the opinions of the farmers here on the question.—FRANK BURNETT, Reeve.

"From St. Laurent.—At a public meeting of the municipal council of St. Laurent, held in the municipal chamber the 23rd day of May, it was unanimously resolved and adopted: 'That in view of the fact that a disallowance resolution will come before the House at Ottawa, on Thursday next, and as it has been clearly shown that this Province has the right under the constitution to grant charters for the construction of railways within the limits of this old Province, and it having been stated by the Minister of Justice that our provincial charters were disallowed as a matter of trade policy simply, we, therefore, express strong disapproval of any further interference with the rights of this Province under the constitution to construct competitive railways within the limits of this old Province, and express a firm determination not to longer submit to such wrongful interference.—J. M. J. MOLVAHILL, President and Reeve.

"From West Lynne.—I am instructed by the council of the town of West Lynne to inform you that at a meeting held this 25th day of May, 1887, it was unanimously resolved that this council strongly disapproves any further interference with the right of the Province under our constitution to construct competitive railways within the limits of the old Province, and expressing a firm determination not to longer submit to such wrongful interference.—H. TREHANT, Mayor.

"Emerson Resolutions.—Resolutions passed by the Emerson town council, 25th May, 1887:—'Whereas the policy of disallowance pursued by the Government of Canada in relation to this Province has already worked serious injury to the development and progress of the Province; and whereas further continuance of such policy is neither just to the Province nor in accord with its legal rights as a member of Confederation, and is intolerable in view of its past effect; and whereas a monopoly in the carrying trade of the Province is detrimental both to the Province and to eastern Canada, as checking development and settlement, and it is absolutely necessary that competition in freight rates eastward should at once be secured which can only be obtained by the construction of an independent line of railway to the international boundary line; be it resolved, that this council representing the citizens of the town of Emerson do most earnestly protest against further continuance of such monopoly and strongly urge upon the Provincial Government to proceed forthwith to construct an independent railway line to the international railway boundary, there to form connection with the American system giving competition eastward to this Province.'—Carried.

"From Emerson.—I consider railway monopoly detrimental to the progress and prosperity of the Province. Will assist in any way we can to have the same done away with.—O. R. IRWIN, Mayor.

"From Douglass.—Should like competing railways by all means.—HECTOR FINK, Reeve of Douglass.

"From Portage la Prairie.—Monopoly is a curse to this Province. We cannot get competition too soon.—J. P. YOUNG, Ex-mayor.

"From Pipestone.—I am heartily in accord with the Provincial Government measures re disallowance, and trust our Province will withstand all monopoly pressure. A competing line will not only reduce rates but encourage and increase immigration. While giving due credit to C. P. R. enterprise I think we should look to the interest of our Province rather than to those of a syndicate of capitalists.—W. MACDONALD, Reeve of Pipestone.

"From Westbourne.—A large majority in the country are opposed to the disallowance policy of the present Government.—R. E. SMALLLEY, Reeve of Westbourne.

"From Morris.—I am heartily in accord with the decision of the Provincial Government to build a line to the boundary in order to relieve this suffering Province from the curse of monopoly. I think that Sir George Stephen's insulting telegram most opportune, and to have no other effect than to confirm the people's intention to build the railway. I am convinced that the people of the Province are united on the question, and believe if ever there was a time when we should stand to our guns as men and wrench our rights from the clutches of monopoly that time is now.—J. S. CAMPBELL, Reeve, of the Municipality of Morris.

"From Birtle.—Railway monopoly is unjust to old Manitoba. During the passage of the Canadian Pacific Railway Bill I was in Ottawa, and gathered from members and supporters of the Government that we would be exempt. North-Western Manitoba is strongly in favor of another outlet.—J. S. CRAWFORD, Mayor of Birtle.

"From Gladstone.—I believe it to be injurious to all business interests in this Province, preventing the investment of capital. That speculators are the cause of the present agitation is untrue.—JOHN L. LOUIS, Mayor of Gladstone.

"From Lansdowne.—Dead against monopoly. People are a unit on that question.—JOHN MCGREGOR, Reeve of Lansdowne.

"From Rosedale.—Put me down as sound on anti-monopoly. No difference of opinion on that point here.—J. CRAWFORD, Reeve of Rosedale.

"From Deloraine.—There can be but one opinion in reference to railway monopoly, and that is that it is a curse to the country and should not have been tolerated so long as it has.—JOHN RENTON, Reeve of Deloraine.

"From Morris.—I consider the monopoly ought to cease.—R. F. McTAVISH, Mayor.

"There was in fact not a single dissenting voice from any part of the Province, and in every municipality meetings will shortly be held."

There is an account here of last night's meeting in Winnipeg and the resolutions passed there:

"The mayor of Brandon moved the first resolution; the Reeves of Lorne and South Dufferin, the Reeves of Youville and St. Francois Xavier, the sixth and seventh. Messrs Leacock and Gillies, Conservative M. P. P.'s moved one resolution, and leading citizens of Winnipeg the remainder. Mr. Leacock declared that if Premier Norquay show the least sign of wavering, himself and the others would vote against him as the Legislature insists on this question. Messrs. Norquay and Greenway spoke with great determination. The following resolutions, among others, passed:

"Whereas, competition in railway carriage between Manitoba and the North-West Territories and other Provinces of the Dominion is essentially necessary to the natural development of the inter-provincial trade, the fostering of Canadian manufactures, both in the eastern Provinces and in Manitoba, the encouragement of foreign capital to seek investment in the development of the North-West, the encouragement of immigration and natural progress of the Province generally, all of which would be of great advantage both directly and indirectly to every portion of the Dominion; and

"Whereas, it is clear and has been repeatedly declared by Sir John Macdonald and other members of the Dominion Cabinet that the C. P. R. Company have no right under their contract with the people to the maintenance of monopoly in the old Province of Manitoba; and

"Whereas, it has been recently again declared by the present Minister of Justice to our Local Legislature, and to a deputation of citizens who recently visited Ottawa, that the question of the disallowance of Provincial charters was purely a question of trade policy and not a question of illegality or unconstitutionality, or breach of contract with the C. P. R. Company therein: Now, be it

"Resolved, in the unanimous opinion of the meeting representing as it does the whole Province of Manitoba, the interests of every portion of the Province demand free competition in railways for the cheapening of the necessaries of life to the settler, the lowering of freight rates for carriage of our wheat and other products to the seaboard, and above all the removal of the bar of monopoly which frightens foreign capital and immigration from our lands where the interests of the eastern Province demand it for the facilitating and fostering of their trade with the North-West and for a development of a larger market here for their manufacture. That the meeting recognise the telegram from Sir George Stephen to the Premier of the Province, recently published in the press, as the frank and natural product, and illustrative of the species of monopoly whereby free people are sought to be kept in a condition of serfdom to a tyrannical and grasping master. It brings forcibly home to people of the Province that while the monopoly is maintained the fortunes and future of themselves and of their children are at the mercy of unscrupulous men who are ready to do their best to ruin all who do not tamely submit to their tyranny. This meeting demands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company a faithful observance of the solemn contract with the city of Winnipeg, whereby in consideration of $100,000 paid by the city to the company, land for station grounds and exemption from taxation, the company bound itself to establish and forever continue at Winnipeg its principal workshops for the main line and branches in Manitoba.

"This meeting denies emphatically the charge that the establishment of railway competition in the older Provinces would be a breach of faith towards the holders of private capital investing in Canadian Pacific Railway securities. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company never bargained for, and neither the Parliament of Canada nor the Legislature of Manitoba, ever agreed to give them a monopoly in the old Province of Manitoba. Not only is this evident on the face of its charter, but the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself has expressly declared on several occasions, on the floor of Parliament, by Sir John Macdonald, before the Canadian Pacific Railway contract was ratified; by Sir Charles Tupper when Parliament was asked to assist the company with a loan of $30,000,000, and by Hon. Thomas White, and the Hon. Minister of Justice in response to a deputation. It is well known to the president and directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself, and the meeting indignantly condemns the conduct of the officers of that company in persistently endeavoring to mislead and prejudice the people of the Dominion by contrary pretensions. That

"Whereas, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and those in league with them, assert that the people have elected supporters of the Government, having well known the policy of disallowance, and thereby proved that they were in favor of a continuance of that policy, now this meeting declares that the election by the Province of supporters of the Dominion Government in the recent election was secured by means of telegrams and communications from the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald to Government candidates and leading people, to lead them to believe that by electing them they might expect a cessation of the policy of disallowance. And the assertion of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company above referred to is a base perversion of the truth as to the well-known and strongly expressed feelings of the people of this Province on this question.

"Resolved, that this meeting most warmly approves of the course of our Provincial Government and Legislature in the recent railway legislation with a view to giving this Province the much-needed competitive railway connection with eastern Canada, and this meeting solemnly pledges itself to stand by the Provincial Government and Legislature in their efforts to secure the immediate construction of the proposed railway to the boundary, and to urge upon them the great necessity for the immediate and speedy construction of the same, that without fail it may be completed during the present season; and this meeting looks with confidence to every member of the Provincial Legislature to stand firmly and loyally by the right of our Province, and at all hazards and in spite of any and all attempts at obstruction or interference from any source whatsoever, to forthwith carry to completion this important work to which they look to secure the rapid development of a great and fertile Province."

"In the speeches which followed the passing of the foregoing resolution many illustrations of glaring injustices in freight rates were produced, and Mr. Van Horne was charged with quoting grain rates for American roads for purposes of comparison which had no existence, and which he had manufactured."

Now, this is a somewhat lengthy document to read, but I do not know that it would be possible to lay before the House stronger evidence of the fact that this is a burning question in Manitoba to-day. I gave some comparisons of freights already, but there is one particular comparison that I forgot to mention, and it is in connection with the freights between Duluth and Port Arthur, giving the comparative rates on the Manitoba, Minneapolis and St. Paul Road, also a monopoly, and on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. WATSON.

One great reason why we should have this competition, and why we should have connection with the Grand Trunk is the fact that the Grand Trunk runs through almost every constituency in Ontario and down to the Lower Provinces. We occupy the peculiar position in Manitoba of having four lines of railway tapping at our door for admission. The greatest immigrant agents that a country can have, as a rule, are the railway companies. The Grand Trunk to-day is an immigration agent for the western States, because they have no interest in our territory to the west, and you will find in their offices immigration pamphlets for north Dakota, Cheyenne, and Minnesota. The Grand Trunk Company state they have no interest in carrying passengers to the North-West, and consequently do not advertise the North-West. If we had railway competition, our country would fill up more rapidly. I would not like to prophecy, as the Minister of Finance did in 1884, that we should have a large immigration there in a very short time, but I believe that the population would double in two years. We have a better country than that to the south of us, and the reason we cannot get the immigration we should, is that we have not the inducements of free trade in railways to offer to the people which our neighbors have. The price we receive for our grain is not sufficient to induce farmers to raise larger quantities of it, as they would did not the Canadian Pacific Railway charge exorbitant rates for freight. The opinions which exist in Manitoba on this question are also held in the North-West Territories. It will be hardly necessary for me to remind the House of the fact that the representatives of the North-West Council who visited Ottawa two years ago, pressed on the attention of the Government as one of the greatest grievances they had to complain of, the freight charges of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I find that the hon. member for East Assiniboia pledged himself on this question to his electors. He said he was strongly in favor of disallowance.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I beg to correct the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WATSON. I meant the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), the Pericles of the west. I also find that the Conservative paper printed in the west claims that Mr. Davis made similar pledges to the electors in his section of the North-West. I hope the House will consider this resolution favorably. I have endeavored to place the matter before it as fairly and as temperately as possible, and I think I have produced sufficient evidence to show that this is a question the people will not permit trifling with. The people of Manitoba are determined to have competition in railways, and if they cannot obtain the right to grant charters to build roads, they are going to burden themselves with a debt they are not able to bear. It is a question with them as to whether they should not rather carry a load of a million dollars and have competition, than do without it. Sir George Stephen has said that it is an agitation of Winnipeg speculators. This is the term he sees fit to apply to some of the best citizens of Manitoba. Men like Mr. Whitlaw, and Mr. Ashdown, and others of the same class, men who are known to be the best in the Province of Manitoba, who went there before there was a railway in the country and have now great influence—these are the men who are at the head and front of the agitation to-day. And they are not Liberals, they are not rebels and Grits, as some gentlemen please to call them, but they are the best Conservatives in the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They are more likely to be rebels than.

Mr. WATSON. They are treated as such by some of the red-hot Conservatives in the Province, but a large majority of the people say they are right, and they believe they are right, and they intend to back up the Local Legislature in building a railway to the boundary line. I believe there has been one resolution passed in the town of Selkirk in favor of monopoly, and it is the only one. I have seen a report in the press of that meeting, which states that it was held in Selkirk and that there were twelve electors present, and that they resolved that their representative should stand by the Government on this question of disallowance. The Conservative association that reported on this particular matter, that there were twelve electors present at that meeting, were also honest enough to state that the member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) forwarded this particular resolution to be passed by that meeting from the city of Ottawa. Of course, I know nothing about that, but the anti-disallowance Conservative association of Winnipeg reports it as a fact. I have now the pleasure of moving the resolution of which I have given notice.

Mr. SPEAKER. Who seconds this resolution?

Mr. WATSON. Will the hon. member for Selkirk second it?

Mr. DALY. No, Sir.

Mr. WATSON. Then Mr. Armstrong will second it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As I had the honor of holding the position of Minister of Railways at the time when the views were enunciated which the hon. member for Marquette has embodied in this resolution, the House will naturally expect me to make a few remarks in reference to this matter. I may, in the first place, be permitted to compliment the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) upon the ability with which he has presented his case to the House. I may say further that I believe there is not a member on either side of the House who does not sympathise very largely with many of the sentiments to which the hon. gentleman has given utterance. I am certain there is no hon. member in this House who would not feel extremely glad to be able to support the resolution which the hon. gentleman has moved, if he felt that it would not involve consequences of an injurious character to Canada. The hon. member has done me the great honor of embodying in his resolution a portion of a speech which I delivered to this House in 1884, when moving for a loan for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in order that they might be enabled to expedite the great work in which they were engaged. I will say in the outset that when I made that speech to the House, I did it in all candor. When I expressed the views that are there enunciated, I confidently believed that at a very early date when the Canadian Pacific Railway would be completed north of Lake Superior, the Government would find itself in a position not to demand any longer a continuance of the policy of disallowance. But the hon. gentleman will see, if he reads with care and attention the statements I made, if he looks at the spirit as well as the letter of those remarks, he will see how carefully guarded they were. He will find in the first place, that I stated the fact that the policy of disallowance was not the policy of this Administration alone. I stated in the outset that that policy was originated by the Government of the hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in power, that when those hon. gentlemen were in a position which required them to protect the interests, not of one section of this country alone, but of all sections, that they should have regard first and primarily to the interests of Canada, over and above those of any section of our country, they felt obliged, no doubt reluctantly, to refuse to permit lines of railway to be constructed that would compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway or any portion of it which they were engaged in constructing. An Act had been passed which required a proclamation to be issued, an Act passed at the instance, if I remember rightly, of Mr., now, Sir George Stephen and his associates who were negotiating to build a line of communication to the city of Winnipeg; and the Government upon being applied to, to issue that proclamation, promptly refused, and they refused on the ground that it would not be just to the people of Canada, who were spending large sums of public money for the purpose of opening up and developing the great North-West and constructing a Canadian Pacific Railway, that means should be taken to tap our own line of communication and to carry the traffic away to the south of us into a foreign country. That policy was not only propounded, was not only established by the Government when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, but they reiterated it again in the most formal manner. I have in my hand a very important Bill that was laid on the Table of this House, respecting the policy of that Administration, by the then Minister of the Interior, the present member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). That time, in 1878, almost at the close of the period during which those hon. gentlemen governed the country, it will be found in that Bill that so determined were they to protect the Canadian lines of communication against competition, to protect the line which was being built by the public money of this country against being interfered with and its traffic being carried away, that the hon. gentleman used in his Bill, which was to embody the policy of that Government, the following words:—

"No company shall be incorporated under the provisions of this Act for the construction of any railway having the same general direction as the Canadian Pacific Railway or any branch thereof, at a nearer distance than 40 miles."

So, Sir, this policy was not originated by my right hon. friend, or his Government; this policy of disallowance, of refusing to permit competition with a line of railway communication constructed by the public money of this country, was originally propounded by the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite; and, Sir, in the spirit that my right hon. friend has always administered the affairs of this country, we have shown our readiness to copy the example of hon. gentlemen opposite whenever and wherever we found that it was conducive to the interests of the country. We believed on that occasion that they had propounded a sound policy and we adopted that policy. When, after great efforts had been made, and failed, to obtain the prompt construction of a line of Canadian Pacific Railway to which all parties in this country had committed themselves in the most unqualified and unhesitating manner, and when we were able to make a contract with a number of gentlemen, then called the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate, for the purpose of constructing, within the period of ten years, a line that would accomplish not only that which was aimed at by hon. gentlemen opposite, in the near future, but that provided for the prompt construction of a line of railway from Montreal connecting the tide-waters of the Atlantic with the Pacific Ocean by a line of railway; when we undertook to make that contract we felt bound to give that company all the security that the Government of Canada felt bound to exercise itself in order to protect their traffic from being tapped or drawn away by remote or hostile lines, by what the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House properly termed as competitive lines. It is not necessary that I should go over, at length, this matter which is familiar to the House; but I may say that it was with no little pleasure that I learned from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that the policy they had felt obliged to ask us, in the interest of that great work, to pursue, of disallowing railway charters passed for the purpose of tapping the traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Winnipeg, and carrying it away to the south and to another country—the belief they then held that the rapid development of the North-West, the rapid establishment of business on their own line of communication, would be such as to enable them at an early day, or when their line was completed, to relieve the Government from the obligation that they felt they might fairly claim on their part, viz., that we would disallow those railway charters. I never made a more candid statement to the House, I never made a statement with greater pleasure than when, with the authority of the company and the consent of my colleagues, I found myself in a position consistent with the policy we had pursued, and the policy we had adopted of preventing competition, while at the same time we encouraged Canadian interests, to be able to state that the time was near at hand when we would be enabled to be relieved of that obligation and not feel it necessary in the interest of Canada longer to continue that policy. But if the hon. gentleman will read the statement over with care he will find running through it, from the beginning to the end, that my statement is replete with the spirit of still maintaining whatever protection was necessary for the assistance of our great transcontinental highway, and our own line of communication. All a government can do and all a government can be expected to do when enunciating questions of public policy, is not to be bound by a hard and fast line or by a cast-iron rule, but the Government are bound to state what, at the time the statement is made, they believe the interest of the country involves; they are bound at the same time to keep their minds open and place themselves in a position to change or vary that policy from day to day, or from time to time, as the interest of the whole country demands. If there ever was a government that could lay claim to the confidence of the people of the city of Winnipeg and Province of Manitoba it is the present Administration. If there is one man in this Government more than another who can claim the confidence of the people of Manitoba and the city of Winnipeg, that person is myself. I need not remind the House that when I had the honor of being charged with the administration of the Railway Department, one of the first acts I submitted for the consideration of my colleagues was an act on which the existence of the city of Winnipeg as it stands to-day depends. On entering on the administration of the Railway Department I found that my predecessor, with the best intention, no doubt, with the most patriotic intention of doing that which he judged would be best in the interest of the whole country, had located the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway twenty miles to the north of Winnipeg. I ask hon. gentlemen where Winnipeg would be to-day if that policy had been carried out—and that was the policy of this country, adopted after the fullest consideration, adopted upon the advice and concurrence of the chief engineer, Mr. Sanford Fleming, and maintained with the most unflinching determination by the hon. gentleman who filled the position I subsequently filled as Minister of Public Works and Railways. The hon. gentleman opposite need only turn—it is not worth while going back over this whole history—but let him read the debate in the Senate (I will not take time to do so now) and he will find that the leader of the Senate treated with the most supreme contempt the idea that the village of Winnipeg was to deflect the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway away from the course that, in the judgment of the Government, had been decided to be the right and best one. Is there any person in Winnipeg or in the Province of Manitoba who does not feel that the greatest benefit which could be conferred on the Province of Manitoba and the city of Winnipeg was conferred when the Government to which I belong deflected that line from the position assigned of twenty miles to the north of Winnipeg, and brought it down to Winnipeg and made that town the great entrepôt for the traffic and business and communication of the whole of that vast country. I may say, in passing, that that act was my own act, that the policy was one arrived at by myself in opposition to the views and sentiments of the gentleman on whose opinion in such matters I was obliged, to a great extent, to rely, and that was the chief engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, for every one knows how rigidly he held to the adoption of the line he had first propounded, and how reluctant he was to have that line diverted. But my colleagues and myself took the view that the interests of the country, as well as the interests of the rising city of Winnipeg, demanded that that change should be made, and we made it. I mention this to show that from the first all that a government could do for a Province or a city has been done by this Government in the interest of the Province of Manitoba and the city of Winnipeg. Many a battle have we fought on the floor of this House; it has been almost a continuous battle from the hour we undertook the development of and settlement of that great North-West country, for the interest of Winnipeg and the Province of Manitoba, and the construction of that transcontinental line of railway. If the Government felt bound when there was no prospect of a line being constructed north of Lake Superior, and that was the position of hon. gentlemen opposite, for they were not to undertake the construction of a line north of Lake Superior at all, but they relegated it to the remote future (and it would be in the remote future to-day but for the fact of this Government coming into power and changing the policy to which the country had been committed), if, when there was no intention of putting in those 1,000 miles of railway between Winnipeg and Ottawa, when the district north of Lake Superior was intended to be left as an unpeopled desert, when no line of communication existed between the old Provinces of the Dominion and the city of Winnipeg, the Province of Manitoba and the North-West Territories—if I say at that time these gentlemen felt that they owed it to Canada, they owed it not to this section or to that section, but owed it to their country, to take the line of policy that they must maintain and protect the traffic of their own lines which were being constructed there from being tapped and diverted and carried away to the south, how much more incumbent was it upon us to provide such protection for a company who, in the face of unheard of difficulties, grappled with that gigantic project and have carried it with success to a conclusion of which every man, I care not on which side he sits—he may admit it or not admit it—but I say there is not a man in this Parliament to-day who does not feel a sense of pride in his heart when he recognises that that company have been able to carry out that gigantic work of building this great transcontinental line in the manner in which they have carried it out. As I said before, in all frankness I stated to the House that we anticipated at an early day that we would be in a position not to hold to that hard and fast line of protecting the traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway from being tapped and carried away to a foreign country to the south. The hon. gentleman will find that while that frank and candid statement of opinion was made, it was only a statement of opinion—only what under existing circumstances, and viewing everything in the light of the facts as they then existed, we hoped we would be able to do, and nothing more. The hon. gentleman will recollect that he has himself relieved me from the principal part of the argument that I would otherwise have felt it necessary to address to the House by the long and succinct story of the disappointment of the present Administration in regard to the position of the North-West and the Province of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman has himself shown that the roseate colours with which the future of that country was surrounded in our estimation were to a considerable extent fallacious. But he has not adverted to one of the most striking historical facts bearing upon this question, and one that he knows had an immense influence in regard to it. He knows that when that statement was made by me, when I held those views on the floor of this House, as to what I hoped we would be able at no distant day to do, no man in this House or out of it anticipated that, at an early period, a serious insurrection would take place in the North-West. No person at that time believed, no person at that time had any reason to suspect, that the tide of immigration to that great North-West would be suddenly and strongly checked by the fact that the country was under arms, that there was an Indian war, that, in fact, persons could not go into the country, except at the risk of their lives. I say that there is a single circumstance which largely accounts for the changed condition of things. I will not avert to other circumstances at any length, because I do not wish to say a word which would be damaging to the future of that great country, in the future of which and in the development of which I have the same unqualified confidence that I have always had. But every person is aware that we have had bad seasons there. Bad seasons will occur in all countries; they have occurred in the western States where they have suffered perhaps to a greater extent than we have suffered; and every person knows that the progress, the development, and settlement of the North-West have not proceeded at that rapid ratio that we had the right to expect, judging from the data as they existed at the time these statements were made. The hon. gentleman has drawn a picture which I will not repeat, because I do not wish to give it greater publicity than necessary; but he has drawn a most gloomy picture of the condition of the North-West, and if there be any truth in his statements, with regard to not only the want of progress but the retrogression of that country, I think he might find abundant justification for the Government not staying its hand from the adoption of a policy which our predecessors felt was necessary in the first instance, and that we, coming after them, felt that we were bound, in the interests of the country, to adopt. Under these circumstances we are in a different position; and, more than that, I say that no person anticipated, at the time these statements were made, that at this moment Canada would find itself in a position that gives greater importance than anything else in the world could give to its own line of intercommunication. No person could have supposed that we would find ourselves in such a position that at any moment it may be of the most vital consequence to the people, not of the city of Winnipeg, great and prosperous as it is, or to the prosperous Province of Manitoba—no person could have supposed that, in the interest not only of that section, but of all Canada, we might find ourselves in the position in which the very life, the very essence of the progress and prosperity of our country, would depend on the perfection and completion of our own independent line of intercommunication for travel and traffic. Now, I say that under these circumstances we have not the slightest hesitation in saying that, gratifying as it would be to the city of Winnipeg, gratifying as it would be to the Province of Manitoba, if we could meet their wishes, I believe they have been greatly misled; I believe at this moment, instead of having their interests bound up and identified with obtaining this communication, and in fact making the city of Winnipeg a source of revenue to the Northern Pacific. I believe the interests of Winnipeg to-day, the interests of Manitoba to-day and the interests of the great North-West of Canada to-day, are running on all fours with the interests of the other Provinces. I say it is in the interest of the whole of Canada that we should build up our own lines of intercommunication, that we should keep the traffic of those lines and develop them, and by that development enable the parties who control them to steadily reduce the cost of travel and traffic over those lines of communication, instead of throwing our resources into the pool of a rival enterprise, the Northern Pacific Railway, and that is the position in which the question stands to-day. To-day the hon. gentleman finds it convenient to talk to us about the Grand Trunk. Well, it is not saying much for the Grand Trunk when the hon. gentleman said that, while the Canadian Pacific Railway has its emissaries all over the continent of Europe, in England and everywhere else, attracting travel and traffic to the heart of Canada, he at the same time brought up an armful of pamphlets from Minnesota and Dakota, and the western States, and said that all the energies of the Grand Trunk are concentrated, not in bringing people to Canada to build up Canada, but in bringing traffic and travel and immigrants into the great north-western States of the Republic to the south of us. I do not think that that established any particular claim; and it is a delusion to suppose that this is a question between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is a question between the Northern Pacific Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the men to the south of us, the men who think that, regardless of everything else, setting patriotism aside, setting the development of their own country aside, it is to the best interests of Canada to build up a great rival line to the Canadian Pacific Railway, must expect to have their views put before an intelligent people, not in a small Province, not before a comparatively small population of this Dominion, but broadcast over the whole of this country. It must be understood, and it may as well be understood at once, that this is not a question between two great Canadian companies, but it is a question between a great transcontinental highway, binding all these Provinces together and giving us easy and rapid communication with each other, and a rival line of railway that has spared no effort and is prepared to spend any amount of money in order to undermine that serious competitor for the traffic of the east that the Canadian Pacific Railway has already shown itself to be. Under these circumstances, I feel that this House will not hesitate. Gratified as every man here, on either side of the House, would be to meet the views, even the erroneous views, and to satisfy the prejudices of the rising city of Winnipeg and the important Province of Manitoba; anxious as this Government has shown itself to be by every act by which a Government could evidence its anxiety to develop and promote the interests of the Province of Manitoba and the great North-West, notwithstanding all that, the time has come when we must choose between what I believe to be the prejudices of a section of the community and the interests of the whole of Canada. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has spent a good deal of time in elaborating the question of the immediate interests of the population in that section of the country. But, Sir, that is not the only thing to be considered. Have not the older Provinces of this Dominion done something to promote the interests of Manitoba and the North-West? Why, Sir, let the hon. gentleman turn to the Public Accounts, and he will find that within a comparatively few years, there has been spent by the late Government and by this Government over $71,000,000 of hard cash of the people of the older Provinces, in order to build up and to give this great line of intercommunication to the people of Winnipeg and the Canadian North-West. Does that establish no claims? What have we been obliged to say in asking this House day after day for such aid as our predecessors asked when they were expending the public money for the same purpose? When they committed themselves to the policy of building a Canadian Pacific Railway by public funds, what did they say? Did they say that they intended that all this expenditure should be exclusively at the dictum and in the interests of one Province, or that one small portion of the population should be alone considered? No, Sir; they asked every Province, from Prince Edward Island to British Columbia, freely to contribute whatever money was necessary to build this great transcontinental highway, as the means not of promoting the interests of a section, but as the means of building up a great British nationality in this Canada of ours. I say the response to those appeals has been most generous. The people have shown their appreciation of this policy, and the Public Accounts testify how generously they responded, in revealing the fact that no less than $71,300,000 has been expended by older Canada for the construction of this great national highway. I say, Sir, that under these circumstances there is not a man in this House but must feel that it would be a gross breach of faith, after that enormous expenditure, after we have risked even the credit of this country in order to accomplish this Herculean task, I say there is not a man on either side of this House but must feel that these older Provinces would have a right to say we have been deceived and misled, if you permit a policy to be adopted that is going to take the traffic away from the line to the north of Lake Superior, and divert it into foreign channels, even at the bidding or in the interests of a certain section of the population of Canada. That trade we have all looked to, not only as the means of benefiting the older Provinces, but of establishing close intimate commercial relations between the people of Winnipeg, of Manitoba and the great North-West and the people of those older Provinces. If we are to be knit together, if we are to become a nation, if we are to have patriotic aspirations, these things will be found in the policy of standing by each other, not in a single Province asking that everything shall be conceded to it, regardless of the interests and feelings of the other Provinces who have borne the burden of this great undertaking. They may take the bit in their teeth and say, after all you have done for us we will turn our backs upon you; we will use our traffic to suit ourselves; we will consult our own interests, even if our doing so should have the effect of building up a rival country and a rival line to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has cost the people of this country such a vast amount of money. Now, Sir, as I said before, I do not intend to labor this question. It only requires to be stated fairly and frankly to commend the position I take to the judgment of every man in this House. I want to ask the representatives of the Province of New Brunswick, without reference to the party to which they belong or the side of the House on which they sit, what they think of this proposition. But yesterday the Government of Canada came down here and asked this House to vote something like $4,000,000—for what purpose? For the purpose of securing connection with Canadian ports and an eastern terminus of this great Canadian Pacific Railway. Will these gentlemen—I care not on which side of the House they sit, coming from New Brunswick—will these gentlemen, coming from the city of

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

St. John, opposed to the present Administration as they may be, after we have obtained a grant of $4,000,000 to bring St. John 280 miles nearer Montreal, the commercial centre of this country, than it is by the Intercolonial Railway—will these gentlemen turn around and say: notwithstanding all this, we are willing to divert this traffic—which you have shown your determination shall be Canadian traffic, intended to build up Canadian lines of communications and Canadian ports—we will turn our backs upon you and assist in diverting that traffic to the south, so that it will go to Chicago and St. Paul and on to the sea, by another route. I do not believe it. As the hon. member for Marquette has said, one or two of our friends in this House impelled by the strong overpowering interests that surrounded them, felt it necessary to pledge themselves to give a vote against the present Administration on the question of disallowance. But, Sir, I appeal from those gentlemen, who in their extremity were obliged to dis sever and dissociate themselves from their friends on this question—I appeal to the independent sentiment of members sitting on the Opposition side of the House, and I ask them to discharge their duty, not to their party, but to their country, in supporting a policy which in this regard is essentially a national policy—in supporting a policy that is going to maintain faith with the older Provinces—that is going to realise to the older Provinces that the most intimate and easy and rapid means of communication shall be kept up between St. John and Halifax, between the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Quebec, and Ontario on the one hand, and Manitoba and the Great North-West on the other. I say there is not a man in this House, I care not on which side he sits or what his political proclivities are, who will not say that as we stand to day in the presence of a threatened danger, the danger of having our own lines of communication on which we have expended so large an amount of public money, embarrassed and paralysed—there is not a man to whom I cannot confidently appeal on such an occasion as this, to stand by the whole country. It is a painful position for me and my colleagues to occupy, after all we have done for the Province of Manitoba, and the city of Winnipeg, and the Great North-West—after the support they have unanimously given us at the recent elections, it is an embarrassing position to stand for a single moment in conflict with the hopes and sentiments, or even the prejudices, of any considerable portion of our friends; but we owe something more to Canada than to any personal consideration for ourselves, and that debt can only be discharged by independently, at any cost—aye, at the cost even of alienating the political support of these gentlemen which we have had the good fortune to obtain, and which we value so highly—even at that cost, we owe it to ourselves and to our country, straightforwardly and unflinchingly to pursue the course that, not our expectations of a couple of years ago, but the present exigencies of the country demand at our hands. Now, the hon. gentleman dwelt very much upon the question of freight rates, and I call the attention of the House to the rather extraordinary fact that, instead of dealing with this question in the fair and candid spirit which the House had a right to demand at his hands, he should have assumed that no person in this House knew anything about the question of railway freight rates. Why, there is not a man in this country, who understands anything in regard to railway freights, who does not know that you cannot institute any comparison between the different portions of the same line of railway without you take the outside considerations into view as well. The hon. gentleman found it convenient to draw a comparison between a newly settled district of the North-West Territory, where there is neither population nor traffic sufficient to sustain a railway, with an old settled portion of the country where there is abundant population and traffic. The hon. gentleman must suppose that we know very little of railway questions or railway intercommunication or railway freights, to address such an argument to us. I am not prepared to say that the rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway are perfect and cannot be improved, but I say the Canadian Pacific Railway stands in a different position as regards this question of rates to that of any other railway in this country, because they are bound by their contract to submit their rates to the Administration of the day for revision, from time to time, as the Administration, in their judgment, consider necessary in the interests of the country. If, therefore, the hon. gentleman can show that injustice is being done by the freight rates or passenger rates especially established by the Canadian Pacific Railway, we have the power, under the contract, to revise them and force the company to do justice, if they are not disposed to do it without our intervention. But I will say the hon. gentleman does not, in my judgment, commend himself to the candid consideration of this House, when he undertakes to say that the Canadian Pacific Railway would be mad enough, would be so insensible to their own interests, as to adopt a policy whose effect would be to crush the life-blood out of the North-West. What future are they to have? What are they to look forward to? What are they to do for their shareholders and bondholders? What will be their position if they prevent and destroy settlement in the North West. The hon. gentleman knows that a very high authority—regarded as a very high and convincing authority years ago—said that it would be impossible to maintain the Canadian Pacific Railway until there were two millions of people settled in the North-West. If that be the case, if there be a scintilla of foundation for such an estimate as that, what are we to think of the estimate that the hon. gentleman has given of the present population of the North-West? And yet he does not hesitate, in order to excite a feeling of hostility in this House against the Canadian Pacific Railway, to contrast the rates in this unpeopled section of the country with the rates prevailing in the older settled portion of the country, where there is abundance of traffic and travel to sustain a railway. It is well known that railways are able just to reduce their freights in proportion to the amount of traffic they have to handle, and that if they are obliged to run trains through a sparsely settled country, it is impossible to give those low rates that in older portions of the country are known to exist. The hon. gentleman had an illustration at hand. He knows that the Canadian Pacific Railway lies a long distance to the north of the Northern Pacific; he knows there are two lines running across the continent, one having the advantage of being considerably to the south of the other, if that may be considered an advantage, and running through the fertile territories of Minnesota and Dakota. He had that illustration at his hand; he had the St. Paul and Minneapolis Railway running through a comparatively settled country that has grown up with marvellous rapidity between the boundary line of Manitoba and St. Paul and Minneapolis. These railways would have afforded the hon. gentleman subject for comparison, and the House would have been enabled to form some conclusion as to whether the Canadian Pacific Railway were fools enough, because they would require to be first class idiots, at the very least, if they were to adopt such a policy as the hon. gentleman leads the House to suppose they have adopted. Their own existence depends on the settlement of the country, and the hundreds of thousands of dollars they have expended, to my knowledge, in circulating information in England, Ireland and Scotland, and all over Europe, as to the advantages of settlement and the cultivation of wheat in the North-West of Canada, is the best evidence that they are fully alive to the fact that if their great enterprise is to be crowned with that success which every man in this House most earnestly desires should crown it, and which is in the interest of the country from end to end, irrespective of politics, should crown it, they would be not only insensible to their own interests, but simply idiots to adopt such a policy as the hon. gentleman has indicated. They have not adopted such a policy. When they brought forward their proposal, and, as obliged by law, came to us with their traffic rates for revision, we cut the rates down. We said to the company: You are wrong, these rates can be reduced, you are standing in your own light by fixing these rates so high, and we cut them down. But what has happened? There has not been a single instance in which the company have charged up to the rates the Government had allowed. The moment they got into contact with the public, the moment they came to do business with the freighters, they were convinced they would be studying best their own interests, not by charging up to the rates the Government permitted, but by largely reducing those rates. I will glance for a moment at a comparison that everybody will feel more just than that which the hon. gentleman has made. His was not a fair comparison, because the Northern Pacific Railway and the Minneapolis Railway both have greatly the advantage of the Canadian Pacific Railway. They have larger sources of traffic, and larger sources of travel, than the Canadian Pacific Railway has enjoyed. Notwithstanding that, it will be found that all these comparisons are greatly in favor of the Canadian Pacific Railway, are infinitely more favorable to the farmer, to the agriculturist, to all classes of people who are settling that country, than those of either of those great routes of railway communication with which I am comparing them. I hold in my hand a comparison of rates for equal distances on the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Northern Pacific Railway, and this is not an old and antiquated table but a table which is in existence to-day, which was adopted on the 5th April, 1887, by both these companies. I may mention that the population of Minnesota, Dakota and Montana is not what the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) described the population all told of Manitoba, the North-West and Winnipeg to be, but a population of about 700,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It must be more than that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The population I am referring to is that covering that line of railway.

Mr. MITCHELL. You are not dealing with the whole population of those States?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I am taking the distance from Montreal to Winnipeg, 1,423 miles on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I take the distance from St. Paul to Heron, Washington Territory, 1,429 miles, and of course, that runs through other sections besides Minnesota, Dakota and Montana. These distances are about the same, there being a very slight difference between them, and they are similarly situated. I find the rates for first-class merchandise per 100 lbs. is $2 on the Canadian Pacific Railway and $3.77 from St. Paul to Heron. For second-class merchandise the rate is $1.70 on the Canadian Pacific Railway, while from St. Paul to Heron it is $3.27. On third class merchandise it is $1.45 on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and for the same distance from St. Paul to Heron it is $2.77. On fourth class merchandise it is $1.20 on the Canadian Pacific Railway and $2.33 on the Northern Pacific Railway from St. Paul to Heron. Then I will take a comparison of the grain rates to which the hon. gentleman attached so much importance; and I may say here that the hon. gentleman did not inform us, when he was speaking of the great advantages that the people of Dakota and of Minnesota had over those who were settled in the North-West Territories, he did not find it in his way to inform us that, notwithstanding the fact that they have any amount of competition that private capital is willing to establish—because, as you are aware, under the laws of Dakota and Minnesota, anybody can build a railway that can find the means—all they have to do is to register their company, find the means and build the line wherever they like, and therefore competition is unlimited,—and mind this, that it is competition which the hon. gentleman says is to be the cure for all this difficulty, and there is no limit to the competition that may take place in Minnesota and Dakota—notwithstanding this, what do we find? We find this extraordinary fact that the wheat which the hon. gentleman says cannot be grown in the North-West of Canada or in the Province of Manitoba, so that the farmer thinks it is more profitable to put on his coat and go to a public meeting to agitate than to take his coat off and plough more land for wheat—

Mr. WATSON. I did not say so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman says he did not say that. I do not desire to put words in his mouth which he did not say, but I think he showed us that the farmers were engaged in a very wild and fierce agitation, and also that in his judgment it was not worth the farmer's while in the Province of Manitoba to take off his coat and plough any more ground because he would be no better off by raising any more wheat. If that be the case, will the hon. gentleman explain how it is, if Manitoba is in such a deplorable condition under the iron heel of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that these farmers in Dakota and Minnesota hauled their wheat long distances in order to get into the Province of Manitoba, because they could there obtain a higher price than they could by sending it to the south or over their own lines of railway? I will give the hon. gentleman a comparison of the grain rates, and I will contrast the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Northern Pacific Railway, and the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway:

If you run this table down, you will find that it is constantly in favor of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in some cases more than double on these other roads what the rate is on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and yet the hon. gen Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

tleman would lead the House to believe that all you want in order to remedy the ills under which the farmers of the North-West and the Province of Manitoba labor, is to introduce the competitive system, which is enjoyed to the fullest extent in Minnesota and Dakota. The Northern Pacific Railway figures are based on their special grain tariff, which applies only for 600 miles, and on their local distance tariff, which applies for a greater distance. The St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba tariff is based on their special grain tariff, which applies only for 514 miles, and on their local distance tariff, which applies for greater distances. I will now turn to the merchandise classes, and in regard to these the following is the rate per 100 lbs.:-

(700 miles is the St. P. M. & M. maximum distance).

I will not weary the House with this, but I will take 700 miles and there you find that first class merchandise is carried for $2.43 on the Northern Pacific Railway, for $1.80 on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and $1.96 on the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway, showing that on this road which the hon. gentleman denounces as a monopoly, which he says is a giant monopoly which he asks this House to interfere with and to forget what it owes to all the rest of this country, and to regard only the interests of the people for whom he professes to speak—the hon. gentleman finds that the comparison is all in favor of the Canadian Pacific Railway and against the two other railways similarly situated, which I have named. Now, the hon. gentleman is aware that there has been a greater average decline in the freight rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway than on the other roads. I have shown that the rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway are much more favorable to the agricultural classes, and to all classes of the community, than are the rates on the Northern Pacific, or the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway, with which the former can be fairly contrasted. The average decline of rates in the last four years has been greater on the Canadian Pacific Railway than on either of the other two railways to which I have alluded. Then, the statistics of Manitoba and the North-West prove that the average price of produce has been better during the past four years, where the country was served by the Canadian Pacific Railway, than it has been where the country was served by the Northern Pacific or the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway. The hon. gentleman is aware that the most liberal arrangements made by any railway company in the world have been made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with the millers who are engaged in grinding their grain, and under those arrangements grain is brought down without mixing from Manitoba to Goderich and Montreal, and is ground by the millers under terms more favorable than can be found at the great mills of Minneapolis. The milling-in-transit system is more liberal, as I have said, on the Canadian Pacific Railway than on any of the other railways. I will not occupy the attention of the House longer than to say that under these circumstances I feel that this House owes it to itself, and owes it to the whole people of this country, not to be led away by the very able presentation of his case made by the hon. member for Marquette, not to be led away by that natural sympathy which large communities invariably feel for smaller ones, not to be led away by the great desire that everybody on both sides of this House has to do everything that can possibly be done to advance the interests of the rising city of Winnipeg and the prosperous Province of Manitoba. This House has shown in the past, and this Government has shown, that there is no proposal which can be made in the interests of that important section of our country, with which we have not been ready to heartily co-operate. The hon. gentleman says that we ought to promote immigration into the great Canadian North-West. But, Sir, there sits before him a gentleman whose chief point of attack on this Administration the other night was that we spent money on immigration, and in endeavoring to bring agriculturists into that country to people the North-West.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I said you failed totally to do it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But the hon gentleman must give us credit for good intentions. I frankly admit that we have not been as successful as we ought to have been. But, Sir, we have had more than usual difficulties to contend with; we have had an Opposition in this House who have obstructed and embarrassed our efforts in endeavoring to bring capital and immigration into this country, and under those circumstances we have not accomplished all that the money expended ought to have accomplished. But I hope that under the advice tendered to the late Minister of Finance by the hon. gentleman who has so ably presented his case to night, he will modify his views on that point, and that in the future we shall have the aid and co-operation of those hon. gentlemen, not in carrying people out of Canada, but in drawing people into Canada, and building up a great British nationality in a country which is better adapted for settlement, I believe, than any country in the world. So, Sir, I ask the House, without regard to party, without being led away by sympathy, and a desire to protect to the utmost extent those who are weak, to look at this question from the standpoint of what we owe the whole country, and to reject the resolution moved by the hon. gentleman.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no doubt whatever, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman's intentions with regard to promoting immigration, and, in particular, promoting the settlement of the North-West, may have been most excellent, but I have not forgotten what sort of a place is paved with equally excellent intentions. Now, Sir, I must say that it was with feelings of profound disappointment that I listened to the hon. gentleman, as the mouthpiece of the Government, disowning and repudiating that infinitely more statesmanlike utterance which forms an important part of the motion placed in your hands by my hon. friend. I think that if there ever was an occasion in which men confronted, as the present Government are, with the result of their own policy, as evidenced by their own official returns, ought to have come down to this House, and ought to have admitted, as indeed the hon. gentleman partly did, that their whole policy had been a failure, a fraud and a mistake, that they were being visited by their evil deeds, and that they were about to change their policy so as to bring about better results, it is on this very occasion. The hon. gentleman was good enough to preface his remarks by stating that he only carried out the policy of the late Government in disallowing Railway Acts in Manitoba. Now, I do not recollect that any Railway Acts were passed in our time by the Legislature of Manitoba which we disallowed, and if the hon. gentleman remembers any Acts of that kind, and will mention them, I will be pleased to accept his correction.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; I said we were following the policy of the hon. gentlemen who refused to issue a proclamation necessary to bring a charter into effect, and, consequently, disallowed it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think that is a strict logical consequence, although it may suit the political exigencies of the hon. gentleman to maintain that on the present occasion. Now, I think that was a Dominion Act, wholly within our cognisance. We committed no usurpation of the territorial rights of the Province of Manitoba; we dealt with our own acts as the Parliament of Canada has a good right to do. Let the hon. gentleman point me to any disallowance of a railway charter passed by the Legislature of Manitoba in our time, and then I will say that the hon. gentleman may have some justification for saying that he is acting on the lines laid down by his predecessors. I recollect that we proposed to lease a branch which we had constructed to the St. Paul and Manitoba Railway Company, for the purpose, as the hon. gentleman must know, of giving railway competition to that Province. We were constructing at that moment our own line of railway from Port Arthur to Winnipeg, or rather to Selkirk, with a branch to Winnipeg, and the hon. gentleman opposed our lease of that identical branch—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I did not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—on the ground that we were giving a monopoly to the St. Paul and Manitoba Railway.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see the First Minister has the Debates for 1873 in his hands, and he can show the passage to his hon. friend beside him, for if he will look the matter up, he will find that the Minister of Finance opposed, and opposed very strongly, the monopoly which we were going to give the St. Paul and Manitoba Railway by leasing the Pembina Branch to them. I must say that I do not think the present Minister of Finance has made out a case of acting on the lines, be those lines good or bad, adopted by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie). On the contrary, had the policy of my hon. friend been carried out, the people of Manitoba would have had direct competition by a very valuable competing line; they would have had the St. Paul and Manitoba with the Pembina Branch, and they would have had the line which we ourselves were constructing from Port Arthur or Fort

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

William at the same time. I am still more surprised to find the hon. gentleman arguing that the very liberal Railway Act introduced by the Minister of the Interior, which gave almost as great facility to all people in the North-West and Manitoba to build railway lines where they pleased, as they enjoy on the other side of the boundary, can be twisted by any perverse sophistry into a precedent of justification for the arbitrary refusal to allow the Legislature of Manitoba to charter lines or to construct lines in their own territory. What did this Bill propose, according to the very clause which the hon. gentleman read? It was not by formal agreement, but that the Government of the country should not permit railway lines to be constructed under that Act within forty miles of a branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway; that is to say, the Government did not take the power, but it remained open to the House, if good reason could be shown, to construct such line at any moment. I must say that the hon. gentleman has been far from reading my hon. friend's Act with the care that he should, or he would never have pretended to quote that as any justification of the policy which the Government are now adopting. But I contend that, even had the member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) laid down such a proposition as that laid down by the Government of the day, the cases are wholly and entirely different. What my hon. friend was doing at that time was this: He was constructing a railway to be, and remain, the absolute property of the people of Canada. My hon. friend never proposed, in my hearing, and I should like hon. gentlemen opposite to show any statement in which my hon. friend made the proposal, that a private corporation should be granted monopoly powers. He may have said at times that he desired for a short period to retain the control of the trade for a railway which was the property of the people of the country, which was to be worked by them and to be under their control in every shape and way, but I defy the hon. gentleman or his colleagues to show me that we ever proposed to grant these extraordinary and exaggerated monopoly powers to any private corporation whatever. I do not think they will find any utterance in any speech or proposal of the member for East York leading to any such conclusion as that. When the Minister of Finance talked as he did a little while after of the obligation they were under to disallow railway charters, surely he had lost sight of the facts recited in this very motion by quotations from the speeches from the First Minister and of the present Minister of the Interior, in which they say expressly—at least the First Minister does—that:

"In order to give them a chance we have provided that the Dominion Parliament—mind you, the Dominion Parliament, we cannot check any other Parliament, we cannot check Ontario, we cannot check Manitoba—shall, for the first ten years after the construction of the road, give their own road, into which they are putting so much money and so much land, a fair chance of existence."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To give the railway a chance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the hon. gentleman mean by giving them a chance? Will he tell the House that he, the First Minister, had at that moment in his mind a pitiful evasion, that he was telling the House that in order to get this clause through, while all the time he had made up his mind to disallow all charters?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To give them a chance meant to give the Canadian Pacific Railway a chance, not the people of Manitoba.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see. I confess I did not put that construction on it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman will observe that his language will bear both meanings.

Looking at what was under discussion at the time, I thought the hon. gentleman was pointing out, as had been pointed out in the speech of the present Minister of the Interior, that they were perfectly safe because Manitoba, if it thought proper, could grant a charter. Said the Minister of the Interior:

"There is nothing to prevent Manitoba now, if you think proper, granting a charter from Winnipeg to the boundary line."

And then the Minister of Interior goes on to say:

"This provision does not take away from Manitoba a single right it possesses. In fact this Parliament does not take away those rights. It has the same rights as the other Provinces for the incorporation of railway companies within the boundary of the Province itself, and there is nothing to prevent the Province of Manitoba from chartering a railway from Winnipeg to the boundary to connect with any southern railway. The only guarantee which this company has under the contract, is that the traffic shall not be tapped far west on the prairie section, thus diverting the traffic away from their line to a foreign line. But there is nothing to prevent a railway being built in Manitoba within the Province that would carry the traffic to any railway that may tap it from the American side."

All I can say is this: that if ever language was used which was calculated to mislead Parliament as to the intentions of the Government with respect to the monopoly clause, it was the language used by the present Minister of the Interior and by the First Minister, on the supposition that he had then in his mind the intention of disallowing charters, and of interfering with the clear right of the Province of Manitoba to construct railways within its own territory. We, on this side of the House, have, to say the least, quite as earnest a desire to see Manitoba and the North-West developed and settled as hon. gentlemen opposite can have, and that the means we proposed to secure that end, when rightly understood, would have contributed infinitely more to build up a prosperous central province in that Province than the means which hon. gentlemen opposite have seen fit to adopt. But when the Minister of Finance tells us, if I understood him aright, that one main cause of the disappointment which has attended their exertions, of the miserable result which has flown from all the time, money and labor expended in endeavoring to settle the North-West arose from an insurrection which there was no sort of reason to expect and which no man thought would occur, I am sure the hon. gentleman has entirely forgotten if he ever heard or read the perfectly unparalleled list of warnings of every sort and description, from all kinds and conditions of men, which were displayed in the evidence laid before the House by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) time and again in the debates to which that unhappy insurrection gave rise.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am speaking of February, 1884.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I, too, am speaking of February, 1884. I say that from 1879, from the time when the hon. gentlemen went into office up to 1884 and 1885, there was such a succession of warnings, such a succession of threatenings, such a succession of remonstrances and petitions from all sorts of people in the North-West, as never were hurled at the head of any Government before; and it is to be remembered that, even to this moment, we only have such portions of that evidence as it has pleased the hon. gentlemen to bring down. But we know from the evidence we have got that the warnings that they acknowledged to have received form but a part, and probably only a small part, of the total mass of warnings which ought to have taught them, long before 1884, that if they did not alter their course, most assuredly there would be an insurrection in the North-West. I wholly agree with the hon. gentleman that the interests of all Canada are to be considered. I wholly agree with him that, in discussing this question, we are bound not merely to consider the interests of Manitoba but the interests of all the people of Canada. I wholly agree with him; further, I believe that the real interests of the people of Canada, the real interests of the people of Manitoba, and the real interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway are all at one if rightly understood. But I say that the hon. gentleman and his friends have been in the last degree unfortunate in the means they have taken to promote those interests. What, I would like to know, are the real interests of the people of Canada in this matter? Why, and why alone could Canadian statesmen on either side of this House justify the enormous expenditure which has been incurred, justify the enormous addition to the public burdens under which we are now laboring? Not, Sir, for the mere purpose of building a railway across this continent, not for the purpose of constructing an iron link from one part of Canada to the other; but for this reason, and this only: that it was a matter of the very first moment to stop, if we could, the enormous exodus which has been going on for very many years from this country to the neighboring Republic, and to find homes for our own people on our own soil. That, Sir, was the sole justification in my mind which ever warranted us in undertaking the construction of this road; and it is because the policy of the Government has resulted in utter and total failure, it is because they have entirely missed their way in this matter, because, as I said the other night, instead of being able to point out to us a prosperous central province, with five or six hundred thousand souls, as under wise government and wise tolerance—letting the people alone to make the best of the situation—we might easily have seen; it is because we have such miserable results as those which are revealed by the census papers laid upon the Table of the House a few weeks ago, it is because of that, because they have wholly failed to understand the interests of this country that they are called on to reverse their present policy. The rights of the older Provinces are to see that that vast inheritance is made available for the sons and brothers of all the people of the older Provinces, and at this moment, when we know that that has not been done, that from one end of the American North-West to the other we find, not tens of thousands, but hundreds of thousands of Canadian settlers that under a wiser policy and a wiser Government would have found homes in our own North-West—it is for that reason that we are justified to-night in calling upon the hon. gentlemen to consider themselves and reverse their action before it is too late. And it is in that way that we can best of all maintain good faith with the older Provinces. It is quite true that the older Provinces have not been kept faith with. It is quite true that not a single solitary one of all the promises made on the floor of this House by the First Minister and his colleague, the Minister of Finance, has even been attempted to be fulfilled. It is quite true that of all the tens of millions of land sales that they promised not one has been realised. It is quite true that when we come to look for inhabitants in Manitoba we find, as my hon. friend showed, that there are not nearly 120,000 of the people, who, according to those hon. gentlemen's own official reports, we were supposed to settle there at great cost to us. Now, I always believed that this policy of interfering with the Manitoba Legislature was a very great error. It may be, although I have my doubts of it, that this Government have the legal right to disallow Acts of that kind, passed by the Legislature strictly within their legitimate power. If it be legal, all I can say is it is high time that a power so liable to abuse, and a power which has been so persistently abused, should be taken away. I do not think it is a proper power for the Dominion Government to possess, and I say its existence is a great peril to the future of this Confederation. But, Sir, I say that so far from the hon. gentlemen being entitled to claim credit for themselves for the introduction of their monopoly clause, and for their perseverance in this monopoly system of theirs,

I say the true policy, if they could have risen to the level of the situation and understood their duty to the country, in the way of developing the North-West, was to encourage all roads which were willing to go in there. I say that this policy of attempting to seclude the North-West absolutely and entirely from all connection with the country to the south, is a policy which could have but one of two results. Either you will cripple Manitoba and prevent it from growing and being colonised as it ought to be colonised, or you will create a spirit of intense dissatisfaction amongst those people, who are debarred from the exercise of a clear natural right which this Government has no just cause whatever for taking away from them. I say it is an act of intolerance, of tyranny and usurpation; and I say that far from condemning the people of Manitoba for the indignation they have manifested, although somewhat late in the day, at the outrage that has been committed upon their liberties, if these hon. gentlemen would allow railroads to be constructed freely through that part of the country where they can be constructed, according to the bargain made with the Canadian Pacific Railway—because, as the hon. gentleman has not ventured to deny, there is nothing whatever in the charter which warrants us in interfering with the privileges of old Manitoba—I say that those companies would be the best of all colonisers, and would aid us most materially in so developing the North-West that the trade we would obtain from it, if there was competition on the part of one or two American railways there, would be worth ten or twenty times over the trade we are ever likely to receive from them, as long as this miserable policy of isolation is persisted in. Has the hon. gentleman forgotten that, having started five years ago with a population in old Manitoba of some 60,000 souls, the returns we have before us show that in the same old Manitoba there are hardly 90,000 white people to-day, and that if you deduct the natural increase from that, the total increase in five years would barely amount to 22,500 souls, or scarcely more than 4,500 families added to our population there in five years. It is true that, by the addition which has been made, a small additional number may be counted, but making even that allowance, all we can count upon is a paltry six thousand families in Manitoba, and three thousand families in the North-West. The hon. gentleman may well tell us that things have not turned out as he expected, that the roseate picture he drew has been sadly dimmed. I do not think any hon. gentleman on this side, even when we were criticising the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite most severely, ever dreamed that we would be confronted with such a state of things as the hon. gentleman's own census reveals to us. I say there is no possible evidence that could be imagined, no possible evidence that I, at any rate, can conceive, which shows more clearly and distinctly how total a failure the policy of hon. gentlemen has been in every respect, than these figures from the census returns of Manitoba. As my hon. friend behind me has said, under such a state of things, it is the duty of the Government to seek for a remedy. It is quite clear that their land policy, their railway policy, and I may add as regards Manitoba, their tariff policy, have been disastrous failures in promoting the settlement of that country; and when all that is required of them on this occasion is to let the people of Manitoba alone, not interfering with their plain right, surely with the evidence before us, we might have expected that the hon. gentlemen would have had the magnanimity to admit their mistake, and consent to allow the people of Manitoba to extricate themselves from the dilemma that their erroneous policy has placed them. We have had evidence again and again of the extreme danger of disregarding the remonstrances of the people of Manitoba and the North-West. The hon. gentleman from his official position has access to sources of information that I have not; but I believe from all the information that has come to me, that the people of

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Manitoba are very deeply in earnest in this matter, and I think the hon. gentlemen opposite will find that if they persist in their ill-advised course, it may lead to results which we may all have to deplore; but, if it does, the responsibility must rest on them. We know what came of their persistent disregard of the discontent and dissatisfaction, among a very much smaller and less influential portion of the people of the North-West. I, for one, have no desire to see that unhappy tragedy repeated; but I think the hon. gentlemen will do well to bear in mind, if it be repeated owing to their misgovernment and mismanagement in Manitoba, that the consequences may be very much more serious than those which attended the late unhappy outbreak. Sir, the fact of the matter is this: that at this present moment one of the main reasons why immigration will not go to Manitoba, and why men are deserting Manitoba—though possibly the feeling may be overstrained—is the persistence of the Government in preserving this very monopoly. People at large do not like, and it is not reasonable to expect that they should like, to go into a country where the law is such that the Local Legislatures are deprived of the power of which I think they ought never to be deprived, of constructing railways at their own cost and charge in any part of the Province. At this very moment we know to our cost that an immense number of persons who went to Manitoba have left that country. We know that the tide has set the wrong way. All who have paid any attention to this matter know that there are vigorous colonies of Canadians scattered throughout various parts of the western States, and that they continue constantly to draw many of the best of our countrymen to them. If the hon. gentleman desires to put a stop to that unfortunate state of things, there is no one thing he can do which will be so likely to do it as to allow the people of Manitoba to manage their own affairs without let or hindrance. I do not ask, and no man on this side of the House has asked, that he should abrogate the bargain he has made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as to the rest of the territory. But we do press upon him the duty of simply leaving the people of Manitoba alone. Now, I am well aware that the Canadian Pacific Railway has served two or three purposes of considerable importance. I am quite well aware, and the hon. gentleman has made a good deal of the matter, that it has provided a route which under certain circumstances may be very convenient and very valuable to the English people. All that is a very good thing in its way, but it is no justification for the enormous charge and cost which has been inflicted on the people of Canada. I say there is but one thing the hon. gentleman can do which would be of the slightest real service to the people of this country, and that is to contribute, as far as he can, to fill up this country. Why, Sir, what is the real interest of the people of the eastern Provinces? Their real interest, as I have said, is to have a large, prosperous Province built up there. The trade of such a province will naturally come to them. A little will go, perhaps, to the United States, but I do not think it will go to the interior of the United States. I think, on the contrary, there is every probability, should a competing line be established, that the grain would go, during the greater part of the year, to Duluth, and thence seek its way down through our canals to the sea; or, if the Sault Ste. Marie Canal is constructed, it will, in all probability, drawing with it a considerable portion of the grain of Minnesota and Dakota, find its way over Canadian territory by crossing the Sault Ste. Marie and passing down to Montreal or another port of shipment. I say also that the real interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway lies, as the hon. gentleman in one part of his remarks truly said, in filling up this country. But I tell them that they cannot hope to fill it up if they persist in retaining, against the wishes of the people, against the remonstrances of the Legislature, and against the inclination of all incoming settlers, their absolute monopoly of all the lines of transport, within that country. I must say that I had hoped better things, not merely from the Minister of Finance, but from the gentlemen connected with the railway themselves. It was with very great regret that I saw that Sir George Stephen had recently addressed a telegram to the people of Manitoba, which I must characterise as being very unfortunate indeed. I do not see how that people, with any degree of self-respect, can allow themselves to be dragooned—because no other word will meet the case—into giving up their local rights under a threat like that; and I do trust that the gentlemen of that enterprise, who deserve a great deal of credit for the energy with which they have pushed it through, will reconsider what I regard as a hasty utterance. Now, Sir, in this matter I trust, for my part, that the Manitobans will stand firm. Not only are their interests at stake, but I believe the interests of the whole of Canada are at stake in their standing firm. When they stand up for their own local rights and liberties in this matter, they are really standing up for the local rights and liberties of the people of all the other Provinces, and a great many gentlemen who have stood forward in this House as the champions of the local rights and liberties of their own respective Provinces, will do well to remember that, if the example is set of trampling on the local rights and liberties of Manitoba, they may live to see that act made a precedent for similar acts committed at their expense. All that the people of Manitoba ask is simply fair play. They are not coming before us craving for subsidies or assistance. And here let me say, that it is not fair, or just, or right to pretend to charge the people of Manitoba and the North West with the whole cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway. A very large portion of the cost of that work could not be said to be undertaken in any respect for their benefit. They would have been quite as well served, as they are to-day, by the expenditure of a vastly smaller sum of money. In fact, I believe that with a smaller sum, judiciously expended, their position would have been infinitely better than it is to-day. Now, I do not charge hon. gentlemen opposite with being wholly responsible for the present unfortunate state of things in Manitoba. I am aware, and I have frankly admitted, that it results partly from causes that they could not foresee and could not control. It is quite true, there have been bad seasons there. It is quite true, the people of Manitoba, with the other people of this country, have been exposed to intense competition, arising largely from the introduction of Indian wheat into the European market. But over and above bad seasons and foreign competition, they have suffered from causes which could be removed. They have suffered from a bad railway policy, they have suffered from monopoly, they have suffered from bad laws, they have suffered from a great many other things which it is in the power of hon. gentlemen to remove. I would like to know how it is that, although it has been exposed to seasons almost identical with our own, Dakota, which started with a population some fifteen or sixteen years ago not one bit larger than that which Manitoba then possessed, has prospered and made headway to the extent that it has? I cannot admit, I never have admitted, that there is anything in the climate or the soil of Dakota which gave it a superiority to Manitoba, and I do not think the hon. gentleman will contend that there is. On the contrary, I say that in a very large part of our own country both climate and soil and all the natural conditions are quite as favorable to rapid settlement and to rapid development as those which exist to the south of the line; and what makes the matter clearer than anything else is this: that, as the hon. gentleman well knows, a very large number of those who are now contributing to develop and settle the northern territory of the United States are Canadian born, a great many of whom went to Manitoba, as the hon. gentleman's records show, and, finding themselves unable to obtain comfortable homes there, withdrew to seek them on the southern side of the line. The hon. gentleman was good enough to accuse my hon. friend behind me of gross unfairness in the matter of quoting freight rates, but I did not observe, and I think the House will do well to notice, that the hon. gentleman contradicted any statement which my hon. friend made. What he did, as far as I noticed, was to take other statements referring to other portions of lines running in different directions. It may well be that the hon. gentleman's statements are correct, but what my hon. friend pointed out, and what the hon. gentleman did not disprove, was that at this moment along the Canadian Pacific Railway line, going eastward, a distance of 400 and 500 miles, the rates were considerably higher than those which prevailed on the other lines of which he gave example. Nor did the hon. the Minister of Finance deny—I do not suppose it was possible for him to deny—the fact to which my hon. friend called attention, that in many articles of goods it was at present as cheap to send them from Montreal to British Columbia and then back into Manitoba, as it would be to send them, half the way, direct to Manitoba. It may be that it is impossible for the Canadian Pacific Railway to transport these goods over their long line, and through the sparsely peopled country through which it passes, for lower rates than the Government have seen fit to fix, but that is no ground whatever for refusing to these persons, who are endeavoring under circumstances of great difficulty to settle and develop Manitoba, an opportunity of obtaining reasonable rates; and I must beg the hon. gentleman to remember this, so far as the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway goes, that that line appears to have been wholly constructed out of the moneys furnished to the company by the people of this country, at any rate, if you include in the sums the hon. gentleman referred to the large amount obtained from sales of land granted by this Parliament. I do not think the hon. gentleman was quite justified in wholly ignoring that most material fact when comparing the rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway with those charged by other railways which possessed no similar advantages, which obtained no similar contributions from the people of the United States. I agree with the hon. Minister of Finance that the whole situation is one in which every man in this country who cares for the welfare of the country ought deeply to deplore. There is no doubt, whatever, that we have mortgaged the whole future of this country to an enormous extent for the purpose of constructing this road. There is no doubt, whatever, that a very heavy burden indeed, has been laid upon the people of the older Provinces, and, perhaps, more particularly on the people of the eastern Provinces, who can, from the nature of the case, derive comparatively little advantage, directly at any rate, from the completion of the road; and that being so, I say that the hon. gentleman is more than ever called upon to remove those obstacles which the people of the country, who live there, who have to make their fortunes there, feel unanimously are preventing the settlement of the country. It may be possible that they exaggerate the mischief which is being done, although I must say the evidence my hon. friend behind me presented goes very far indeed to make out an overwhelming case in the direction of hardship. But the hon. gentleman does not require to be told that that may operate to a very large extent in preventing the settlement of the country; the hon. gentleman does not require to be told that, from a variety of unfortunate causes, Manitoba is more or less under a cloud. I do not believe there is anything in the country itself; I do not believe there is anything in its climate or soil which, even yet, need prevent us seeing a very important Province developed there, a development, perhaps, at almost as great speed, if only they will give it fair play, as even the hon. gentleman in his visions of former years led us to believe. But if the hon. gentleman and the Government with him persist in the policy that they have laid down, if they make it manifest, as I fear they are resolved by their vote to-night, that the people of Manitoba have no relief to hope from the consideration of this Government, and that this House is determined to maintain its policy of disallowance, if they are resolved not to allow the people of Manitoba to exercise their natural rights as free men, I warn the hon. gentleman he has to expect one of two things, that either the people will leave Manitoba, that he will find all our sacrifices utterly worthless, or that he will be compelled, as his colleagues have been, to do justice to these people by means which the hon. gentlemen will regret as much as I to see employed. I think the hon. gentlemen are acting with extreme folly in disregarding the plain, clearly expressed desire of the people of Manitoba on this question; and I believe in the interest, not merely of the people of Manitoba, but of the people of Canada, and for that matter of the Canadian Pacific Railway as well, the best thing they could do is to revert to the policy foreshadowed by the hon. gentleman as long as three years ago, and to allow these people to construct railways under the existing circumstances wherever they may deem it in their interest to construct them. I still hope that, before this House rises, the hon. gentlemen will see cause to withdraw from the position they have taken. I believe the situation is far more critical than they admit it to be, and I must say I dread the effects of this extended refusal on the people of the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. DALY. I am one of the unfortunates who have been referred to by the hon. member for Marquette, and, by way of innuendo, by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, as being one of those who were pledged to their constituents during the late elections to vote against the Government on this question of disallowance. The hon. member for Marquette would lead the House to believe this afternoon that these people voted for me solely upon the pledge I gave on that matter, and that I led them to believe that I had the authority of the Premier for making my pledge to these people. Such a statement is utterly at variance with the facts. I expressed the same views on the question of disallowance three years ago, previous to my election, that I did on the different platforms throughout that election. I based my belief that the Government would not continue this policy of disallowance on the speech of the hon. member for Cumberland which is referred to in the resolutions in question. However the hon. member for Cumberland may seek to avoid that point, I have simply to tell him that the people of the Province of Manitoba believed, when he made that speech, that a new era would dawn and that the policy of disallowance would be discontinued. I had the honor and pleasure, some three years ago, of agitating the policy of building a railway from the border to the part of the Province in which I live, and I acted in that matter in conjunction with Mr. Greenway, the leader of the Opposition in that Province. We stood on the same platform, and together we advocated this policy, which was based entirely on the speech of the member for Cumberland (Sir Charles Tupper) which is alluded to in the resolutions, and we believed that, when the Canadian Pacific Railway had been completed to the north of Lake Superior, this policy of disallowance would not require to be pursued by the Government at Ottawa. Before going into this question of disallowance, I think it necessary to refer shortly to some of the statements which have been made by the last speaker (Sir Richard Cartwright), in reference to settlers going out of our Province into the State of Dakota; because, although I am going to vote against the Government on these resolutions, and although I intend to show, and I think I shall be able to show satisfactorily to the House, that I have good reasons for so doing, and that the people of Manitoba are right in pressing this view upon the Government, yet I cannot agree with some of the statements made by the last speaker. It is noticeable that the hon. gentleman who has just sat down seems to take occasion, whenever the opportunity offers, to try to throw cold water upon the condition of the people of the Province of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. He is a sort of general distributor of gloom throughout the length and breadth of Canada. I do not know whether or not he is interested in land speculations in that Province, which have not turned out as satisfactorily as he expected they would, but he always seems desirous to present the most unsatisfactory statement of the unfortunate condition of the people there as shown by the census. The census of Manitoba taken in 1836 shows a population in that Province of 108,640, but the hon. gentleman does not quote that. He continually refers to the white population as being 95,000, or 90,000 as he sometimes states, and so unfortunate was the statement he made in his speech on the Budget as to the population being only 95,000 that I see it is quoted in some of the American papers, though the population shown by the census is 108,640. In 1881, the population was 65,954, and that does not represent the true population of the Province at that time, because we must take into consideration that this number included the population of Keewatin and of the portion which was then known as the disputed territory some distance east of Winnipeg. That population was 3,694, which has since been added to the Province of Ontario, so that the population of Manitoba properly in 1881 was 62,260 and not 65,954. If you deduct 62,260 from 108,640, it shows that we have had an increase of population in these five years of 46,380.

Mr. BLAKE. That includes the addition to the west.

Mr. DALY. Certainly, and I include the addition to the west.

Mr. BLAKE. You knock off the portion to the east and include the addition to the west.

Mr. DALY. The population of that portion was 12,758 in 1881, and my statement includes that addition to the west. I say that the population of Manitoba in 1881, without the portion since taken away, but including the western portion, was 62,260, and if you deduct that from 108,640 it leaves an increase of population during that time of 43,330, or 74.5 per cent. increase of population. If we go on in the same ratio—and we expect to increase in a greater ratio in the next five years—we will have an increase of 150 per cent. in the ten years. It is not fair to compare the progress of Manitoba with that of Dakota in reference to our population, because, if you take the population of other States as well, if you take the population of Colorado, Dakota, Kansas, Minnesota and Illinois, you will find in the census returns of those different States during the different decades that they have gone up and gone down, and the fact that we have not such a large population in Manitoba to day does not rest, as the hon. gentlemen opposite would like the House and the country to believe, upon the fact that this Government which is now in power has not exercised a proper policy towards that country; but we must take into consideration that we had frosts in two succeeding years, and a drought last year, and the rebellion in 1885, and these four things alone would be sufficient to crush out immigration in any country. I think, when we take into consideration these things, and remember that we have increased 46,380 in five years, we have a pretty good showing. More than that, the hon. gentleman refers to the exodus from Manitoba to Dakota. During the late election, as my constituency runs down to the boundaries of that State, I had occasion to meet some of the farmers who had gone from Manitoba to Dakota, and all of them wished themselves back into Manitoba, without a single exception. The fact is that, instead of being, as our people are in my constituency, along the line of the South-Western Railway, able to market their grain twelve or fifteen miles from their own doors, they have to go some sixty or sixty-five miles to Neche and Bathgate for a market. I am speaking of the people in Cavalier county, Dakota. They do not, however, go that distance for their market, but they smuggle their grain across the line into Manitoba and sell it along the route of the South-Western Railway. More than that, what is their condition in regard to taxes? The fact is that in Cavalier county, Dakota, their taxes last year were 5½ cents on the dollar—not 5½ mills, but 5½ cents. Everything they have is taxed, their threshing machines, their horses, their window-sashes, and all other personal property they have is taxed; and at the same time in North Dufferin, the adjoining municipality in Manitoba, the taxes were not more than nine mills, or at the outside one cent in the dollar. In other parts of Manitoba, in Brandon, for instance, where we have a debt of $270,000, the taxation last year was only 14 mills in the dollar. More than that, I find that out of forty Canadian settlers in Cavalier county, Dakota, all except three are Grits. Last year a petition was presented to the Minister of the Interior, signed by twenty-six Canadian settlers in Dakota, asking him to open Township 1, Range 6, for settlement, and a number of those men came back to Manitoba and made their entries and are living there now, and they all regret that they ever went across the line. They did not go because they could not get land in Manitoba or because the policy of the Government as to the land laws was oppressive, but they went because during the boom they were able to get $3,500 and $4,000 for a half-section, and they sold their land and went to the other side of the line. When they got there, they found that instead of being able to get a homestead, as a young man can here, at eighteen years of age, and having only three years of residence to put in and a certain amount of settlement duty to perform, there a young man has to be twenty-one years old and put in five years residence before he can apply for his patent; and, instead of being able to come to the agent without any expense to himself, with two of his neighbors to make an affidavit as to his performance of his settlement duties, or instead of a homestead inspector coming to his land and deciding the matter, he has to publish for five weeks in a newspaper in Dakota his intention to apply for his patent, and has to give the names of the witnesses he is going to adduce to the land officer, and has to employ an attorney at a cost of $25 or $30, whereas with us a farmer simply goes to the land office, and so stringent are the regulations that they do not permit an attorney to have anything to do with the application for his patent. More than that, we find a great difference between the farmers in Manitoba and those in Dakota, as far as personal welfare is concerned. We have published by the Manitoba Government a letter or report by Mr. J. H. Wood, who was sent into Dakota in order to ascertain the condition of the Canadian farmers there, and he reports as follows, so far as the prices of certain articles are concerned:—

	Manitoba.	Dakota.
Tar paper, per cwt.....	$3 65	$4 00
Nails.....	4 00	5 00
Hoes.....	0 80	0 65
Shovels.....	1 00	1 00
Manure forks.....	0 80	0 90
Sugar, 14 lbs.....	1 00	1 00 11 lbs.
Tea.....	0 50	0 75

Clothing at least 30 per cent. less in Manitoba than Dakota.

Now these people who went into Dakota at that time were not aware of these prices, they were not aware of the oppressive nature of the land laws, and the oppressive taxation that existed in that State, and the best evidence of the fact that these men have seen that they made a mistake, is their anxiety to get back into Manitoba to-day. I have not the slightest doubt that, in the course of one or two years, as soon as these men can sell out in Dakota, every one of them will come back into this country. But what do we find further in this report of Mr. Wood, in connection with these men? He says he finds that they are in the habit of reading the Globe and other Grit papers published in Canada; that they were really under the impression that Sir John A. Macdonald and his Government were sitting like leeches on the field of politics and drawing the life-blood out of the country.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That is true.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a true report, but it is a false statement.

Mr. DALY. That is the condition in which this gentleman found these settlers in Dakota. But suppose these men were not in that condition, is it a patriotic position for any man representing a constituency in Ontario or Manitoba, to come here and decry our country and to run it down? Although we have not got the immigration we expected, it is not the fault of the Government, but, as I said before, it is the fault of nature. But just as soon as we have one good harvest in the Province of Manitoba we will see more contentment among the people than we have ever seen before. More than that, the people in the northern portion of Dakota do not enjoy as good a climate as we do. I have heard men tell me that the people of Manitoba do not know what a blizzard is. They say: If you want to know what a blizzard is, come down to Dakota. Neither have we suffered from any cyclones in our country. There is no doubt, I think, that, so far as climate is concerned, Manitoba is better off than the adjoining states to the south. But the want of immigration in our country is largely due to utterances like that of the hon. gentleman who spoke last, which will be sent broadcast throughout the country. The Globe has shown sufficient interest in our country to send there a correspondent named Conant three or four years ago, and he could not write too harshly against that country. All these little things are taken up by the American railway companies and scattered broadcast among intending immigrants. Then as to the expenditure made by the Government on immigration, these gentlemen never take into consideration the fact that, so far as Dakota, Minnesota, and other states are concerned, they have been reaping for 25 or 30 years the results of the efforts made by their Government to attract immigrants. Literature has been sent to every portion of Europe to explain the capabilities of that country, as was stated by Mr. Eden, the Land Commissioner of the North-Western Railway Company, last year. It is not reasonable to suppose that these people would come to our country in face of the fact that their relatives have been coming to the United States for 20 years past. So far as Manitoba is concerned, we have not been in a position to receive immigrants until 1881, when the Canadian Pacific Railway was constructed; and when you take all these things into consideration, I think you will come to the conclusion that our prosperity has been pretty considerable under the circumstances. Now, as respects the prosperity of Manitoba, I want to quote some figures from the last return of the Brandon Board of Trade, which will show that, so far as that place is concerned, the prosperity has been considerable, and the country about it is also prosperous as a consequence. Now, we find that the general trade of that town, last year, amounted as follows:—Articles not classified, $1,159,000; grain, $432,600; agricultural implements, binders, twine and fence wire, $400,000; horses, cattle and pork, $222,900; lumber, $100,000; building contracts, $50,000; fuel, coal and wood, $31,500, making a total of $2,426,300. Now, that shows a very prosperous condition in a town which did not exist six years ago, and the country around it is proportionately prosperous. Why, you can go into that Province to-day, and you will find men who came in there with four or five dollars in their pocket, who are independent to-day. They have a quarter section or a half section of land paid for, and do not owe a dollar, with a team of horses, and the necessary implements to carry on farming operations, every one of them doing well. But the men who have not done well are those who expected to make a living by merely tickling the ground, or who came for the purpose of manufacturing wheat instead of growing it. But men who went there with a determination to grow up with the country, who were willing to go slowly, as their fathers did before them, are now prosperous, and as these men prosper, so does the country. All our country asks is a fair chance. We do not want to be decried by gentlemen living in Ontario or the other Provinces. I say that with only one good harvest, you will see such a state of things in Manitoba that even the most optimistic of us could not desire to see better. Now, as regards the question of disallowance, I trust the Government are impressed with the idea that there is a great feeling of unrest in Manitoba on this question. It does not exist in Winnipeg alone, but throughout the whole Province. The hon. gentleman for Marquette read to the House the resolutions which were passed at a meeting held in Winnipeg last night. At that meeting there were present the Premier of the Province, the leader of the Opposition, the mayors of twenty-five towns, and telegrams were read from various counties and from leading men, and all these telegrams and resolutions indicate that there is a general feeling throughout the Province that the policy of disallowance must be abandoned. Now, I do not speak thus because I made a pledge to my constituents, or because, as was insinuated, I made a pledge before I came here that I would oppose the policy of disallowance. We do not wish to interfere with the Canadian Pacific Railway, we do not ask for the abrogation of clause 15, but we say we should be left in the same position as the other Provinces, and that we should be allowed, under section 92 of the British North America Act, to charter lines of railway within the bounds of our own Province. It is admitted by the Minister of Justice that there are no legal obstacles in the way whatever, that it is a matter of policy. It is said that if we are permitted to have an independent line of railway, the trade of the country will be diverted into United States channels. Now, Sir, in face of the National Policy, with the tariff that exists, I cannot see how that can happen. Our export trade consists of grain of all description and agricultural products, and every gentleman knows that the duties upon those articles in the United States, would exclude us from carrying these articles into the States. More than that, we have the fact that before the Canadian Pacific Railway was constructed at all, everything that was brought into that country came by Duluth or the Northern Pacific; and under these circumstances we believe that so far as Manitoba is concerned, instead of this policy of disallowance having the effect of lessening the trade of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it will increase that trade by the competition created by other lines, that a greater trade will be developed, that the price of produce will increase and consequently there will be more freight carried both by the Canadian Pacific Railway and this new line in connection with the Northern Pacific. Statements have been made as to the rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the rates of other railway lines. Now, one is at a loss to know where to find the truth, because if you take up any paper published in Manitoba to-day, or the Toronto Mail, you will find certain rates quoted as charged by certain lines, and certain other rates quoted on another line, and you cannot find any comparisons of rates that agree one with the other. But setting aside the question of rates, it is an abstract question that we wish this House to decide to-night, namely, whether we shall stand in the same position that the other Provinces do with regard to local railways. The people of Ontario have a perfect right to grant railway charters for lines within their own boundaries, and we ask the same right. A question may arise as to whether we possess power to charter lines of railway that can connect with lines from the outside, and that is a question for the courts to decide hereafter; but in asking the right to grant charters for lines within our own boundaries, we are not asking too much. We simply want to be placed in the same position as the other Provinces. I desire to read to the House a resolution passed at a meeting held in Winnipeg last night, for it indicates the true feeling of the country on this question. The resolution is as follows:—

"Whereas, competition in railway carriage between Manitoba and the North-West Territories and other Provinces of the Dominion is essentially necessary to the natural development of the inter-provincial trade, the fostering of Canadian manufactures, both in the eastern Provinces and in Manitoba, the encouragement of foreign capital to seek investment in the development of the North-West, the encouragement of immigration and natural progress of the Province generally, all of which would be of great advantage both directly and indirectly to every portion of the Dominion; and

"Whereas, it is clear and has been repeatedly declared by Sir John A. Macdonald and other members of the Dominion Cabinet that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have no right under their contract with the people to the maintenance of monopoly in the old Province of Manitoba; and

"Whereas, it has been recently again declared by the present Minister of Justice to our Local Legislature and to a deputation of citizens who recently visited Ottawa that the question of the disallowance of provincial charters, was purely a question of trade policy and not a question of illegality or unconstitutionality, or breach of contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company therein: Now be it

"Resolved, in the unanimous opinion of the meeting, representing as it does the whole Province of Manitoba, the interests of every portion of the Province demand free competition in railways for the cheapening of the necessaries of life to the settler, the lowering of freight rates for carriage of our wheat and other products to the seaboard, and above all the removal of the bar of monopoly which frightens foreign capital and immigration from our lands where the interests of the eastern Provinces demand it for facilitating and fostering of their trade with the North-West and for a development of a larger market here for their manufactures. That the meeting recognises the telegram from Sir George Stephen to the Premier of the Province, recently published in the press, as the frank and natural product, and illustrative of the species of monopoly whereby free people are sought to be kept in a condition of serfdom to a tyrannical and grasping master. It brings forcibly home to people of the Province that while the monopoly is maintained the fortunes and future of themselves and of their children are at the mercy of unscrupulous men who are ready to do their best to ruin all who do not tamely submit to their tyranny. This meeting demands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company a faithful observance of the solemn contract with the city of Winnipeg, whereby, in consideration of $200,000 paid by the city to the company, land for station grounds and exemption from taxation, the company bound itself to establish and forever continue at Winnipeg its principal workshops for the main line and branches in Manitoba.

"The meeting denies emphatically the charge that the establishment of railway competition in the older Provinces would be a breach of faith towards the holders of private capital investing in the Canadian Pacific Railway securities. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company never bargained for, and neither the Parliament of Canada nor the Legislature of Manitoba, ever agreed to give them a monopoly in the old Province of Manitoba. Not only is this evident on the face of its charter, but the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself has expressly declared on several occasions on the floor of Parliament by Sir John A. Macdonald before the Canadian Pacific Railway contract was ratified; by Sir Charles Tupper when Parliament was asked to assist the company with a loan of $30,000,000, and by Hon. Thomas White, and the hon. Minister of Justice in response to a deputation. It is well known to the president and directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself, and the meeting indignantly condemns the conduct of the officers of that company in persistently endeavoring to mislead and prejudice the people of the Dominion by contrary pretensions; that,

"Whereas the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and those in league with them assert that the people have elected supporters of the Government, having well known the policy of disallowance and thereby proved that they were in favor of a continuance of that policy, now this meeting declares that the election by the Province of supporters of the Dominion Government in the recent election was secured by means of telegrams and communications from the right hon. Sir John A. Macdonald to Government candidates and leading people, to lead them to believe that by electing them they might expect a cessation of the policy of disallowance. And the assertion of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company above referred to is a base perversion of the truth as to the well-known and strongly-expressed feelings of the people of this Province on this question.

"Resolved, that this meeting most warmly approves of the course of our Provincial Government and Legislature in the recent railway legislation with a view to giving that Province the much needed competitive railway connection with eastern Canada; and this meeting solemnly pledges itself to stand by the Provincial Government and Legislature in their efforts to secure the immediate construction of the proposed railway to the boundary, and to urge upon them the great necessity for the immediate and speedy construction of the same, that without fail it may be completed during the present season; and this meeting looks with confidence to every member of the Provincial Legislature to stand firmly and loyally by the right of our Province, and at all hazards and in spite of any and all attempts at obstruction or interference from any source whatsoever, to forthwith carry to completion this important work to which they look to secure the rapid development of a great and fertile Province."

I think the House will see that, there is a determined feeling existing between the people of Manitoba that, so far as disallowance is concerned, this question must be settled once and for all. So far as my vote to-night is concerned, I say it is not given because this was made a plank in my platform simply at the elections, but because I feel that the action taken by the people is the correct one, and I took that view three years previous to my election. So far as regards the remarks of the member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), and it is one made by the Grit press throughout Manitoba, that the people made a mistake in sending here supporters of the Government, I venture to say that if Manitoba had four representatives of the capacity of that hon. member, it would make no difference to the Government, and the House will give me and the hon. member for Winnipeg credit for having used our best efforts to place our views before the Government. If we fail in obtaining this concession this year, probably another year the Government will feel differently. I have great hope of this, because the more the matter is discussed the more certain it is that the Government will come to the conclusion that the question must now be settled. The Minister of Finance stated that $71,000,000 had been expended on the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and he would lead the House to believe that we in Manitoba and the North-West are getting all the benefit. Does the hon. Minister not recognise the fact that in opening up that country he is developing a market for the productions of the eastern Provinces under the protection of the National Policy. The people of the eastern Provinces are receiving almost, if not quite, as much benefit from the expenditure on the Canadian Pacific Railway as are the people of Manitoba and the North-West, and it must be remembered that 25,000,000 acres of our land went into the building of that line. I desire to refer for a moment to the fact that the member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) asked me to second the resolution. I felt rather surprised at the time that he should do so, for he had never mentioned the matter to me in any way before, and he might have asked the member for Winnipeg, who is my senior, to second it; but his object in asking me was, that it might go throughout the Province of Manitoba that I was afraid to second it. I do not agree with everything contained in the resolution, because the hon. gentleman has raked up a great deal of old matter not necessary to the discussion, and I did not, therefore, second it; and a great many of the people of Manitoba agree with me that it was not until the present year that we were ripe for running a line into Manitoba from the south. It was only this year that the St. Paul and Manitoba commenced to extend its road into Montana, and it was not until they made that movement that the Northern Pacific made a movement to our boundary, and it was, therefore, only this year there has been a proper chance of obtaining another connection east and south. But that opportunity has arrived, and as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have finished their lines north of Lake Superior, it will not injure them nor affect their trade in any possible way from Manitoba and the North-West if we obtain a competing line; but, on the contrary, it will build up the traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway, give them increased freight and at the same time assist largely in developing the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. DAWSON. This is a question on which I think every hon. member should express his opinion and in expressing my view I am expressing that held in the district I have the honor to represent. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has based his argument entirely, so far as I can make out, upon the question of rates. He says that because the rates over the Canadian Pacific Railway are too high, therefore we should have competing lines and should encourage the construction of another railway to the frontier. He does not say there is not already in Manitoba sufficient railway accommodation for the population. There are already in Manitoba two railways running to the boundary line, one on the east and the other on the west side of the Red River. The hon. gentleman's statement is not that those railways are not capable of carrying all the freight to be forwarded to the south, or that the Canadian Pacific Railway is not sufficient to carry all the traffic from the east and west, but that the question is simply one of rates, and that we should encourage the building of another railway in order to reduce rates. The Minister of Finance has explained very clearly that the Government have the power of regulating the rates; that it is in their power to reduce the rates if necessary, and to compel the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to adopt such reduced rates as would be in the interest of the people at large. If that power is possessed by the Government, the question arises whether it would be for the advantage of Manitoba and the country at large that the rate should be made such as would encourage settlement in Manitoba although they were not entirely remunerative to the railway company, and whether the Government of the country should not make up the difference to the company. Surely some means might be found whereby the Canadian Pacific Railway should be remunerated for the particular advantages they give to the settlers of Manitoba if we are to compel them to adopt unremunerative rates. One thing is certain in my estimation, and that is that this contract has been made with the Canadian Pacific Railway, that this country is bound to abide by that clause in the contract which prevents them from running railways in the North-West Territories to the frontier, except in a given direction. When that contract was made Manitoba was fully and fairly represented in this House. Her representatives were parties to that contract, as well as the representatives of the other portions of this Dominion, and I do not think that there is now any reason in her turning round and saying that that contract ought to be abrogated, as it virtually would be by adopting this motion, just because they can gain a temporary advantage by its abrogation. The country has not merely to look to the interests of the present population of Manitoba, but to the interests of the millions who will inhabit that country in the future. If we once open up routes of traffic through a foreign country and establish channels of trade, it will be very difficult in the future to divert the trade from those channels. That we should at the very moment when we have established a line of railway across this continent and have got it into working order, when that line has been put in operation after immense difficulties, with an energy and an enterprise which has never been equalled in the history of railways in any country—that we should turn round now and say that we shall not allow the company to have this traffic, that we shall, in effect, break the contract with them, that we shall open up rival lines, that we shall give facilities to the great Northern Pacific to come into this region to sweep away the traffic from our own company, would be a very serious matter indeed; and I for one am not at all astonished at the telegram which Sir George Stephen sent to Manitoba. It may have been hastily written, but who, with such a thing as that which was threatened, and with such vast interests at stake, could sit quietly by and hear of such proceedings taking place. I merely rose to express my views on the matter, and they are decidedly that the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway should be maintained, and bills which would virtually annul that contract disallowed. More than that, as has already been said we derive a great deal of advantage from the Canadian Pacific Railway. I say that if the Canadian Pacific Railway had done nothing more than enable us to send forward our troops to suppress the rebellion in the North-West, it was a cheap bargain to this country. If the Canadian Pacific Railway had not then been in a condition to admit of those troops being sent forward, we could not have sent them forward at all. I remember that, on a former occasion, when we attempted to send troops through the United States, the Sault Ste. Marie canal was shut against us, and we had to make roads on the Canadian side before we could send them forward; and I can easily imagine that if application had been made on this last occasion to the American Government, with no means of our own to send forward the troops, that permission would not have been accorded, the rebellion would have gained headway, and the whole of the North West Territory to the east of the Rocky Mountains would have been in the hands of the rebels before we could have sent the troops forward. But with the Canadian Pacific Railway, even before it was quite completed, we had the means of sending them forward and of thus saving our country from what might have been a much greater calamity than it was. As has been stated to-night, the Canadian Pacific Railway is in a different position from that of our other railways. The company have opened up a line through a new country, only partially settled in many places, and in others not settled at all, and to expose them at the very initiation of their enterprise to a competition with other lines, to allow new lines to be built in from a foreign country to draw off the trade of those settlements in the very infancy of the Canadian Pacific Railway, would be most impolitic and imprudent. Along with all this we must also consider that the Canadian Pacific Railway has, on its part, faithfully performed its share of the contract, that it has opened up the line across the continent in a much shorter time than was originally contemplated, and has thus given us greatly improved facilities for getting immigration. When we consider the immigration that is now flowing in, to a greater extent this year than before, when we consider that the prospects of that country are very promising, and that the more these Territories are known the better are they appreciated, I think we should proceed with extreme caution, and that we should look carefully at the probable consequences before consenting to traffic being diverted from our own national highway.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) has somewhat mistaken the question before the House. He has spoken as if the question before the House was whether we should break the contract made with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, that is not the question. It has not been contended by any hon. gentleman up to this time that the proposal which is in your hands is one which involves any breach of the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway. In so far as that contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company entitles it to a monopoly, entitles it to be free from competition, it is quite clear that the public faith is pledged to that company for the performance of that contract; and that if at any future time the public interest should require some other arrangement, that arrangement must be made with due regard to the existing rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. No contract in this country, with any company or any individual is so inviolate but that, if the general public interest requires some change to be made, he and it are subject to that change being made, but only on condition of just compensation to the individual for the loss involved in the change which the public interests demand. That is the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with reference to its charter rights, to which the hon.

member mistakenly alluded when he argued that the proposal before you was a proposal for any breach of the charter. Now, with reference to the general question of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company complaining that it should be exposed to a competition to which its charter renders it liable, or from which its charter does not protect it, I do not myself perceive any particular ground that that corporation has to ask such consideration. First of all, it has been constructed, mainly, if not entirely, so far as the main line is concerned, at the public expense. Secondly, it professes, by its last annual report, to occupy the fortunate position—rating its stock even at par, when we know it was issued at 43—of having assets double the amount of its whole liabilities, including its liabilities to the stockholders. Thirdly, it has promoted its commerce and traffic—I do not say so complainingly—but it has promoted its commerce and traffic upon the principle of undertaking an aggressive competition with the other railway companies within, and with some which might have been supposed to be without its reach. It has promoted an active competition in the Province of Ontario and the other older Provinces of Canada, and it is to-day engaged in the promotion of a competition, not with the Northern Pacific so much as with the other Pacific lines, taking the freight from San Francisco by steamer to Vancouver, thence over its lines and along the routes to Chicago, in competition with the short and direct line. Now, in so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway finds itself able to carry that traffic, without loss or at a profit to its shareholders, so far from condemning it for entering into that competition, I highly approve of it; but I do not think it is entitled to use the great position which the Canadian people have given it to carry on an active and aggressive competition of the character to which I have referred, and at a loss to be recouped by means of extravagant rates of freight obtained from those portions of the Canadian people who are placed, either by law or by the action of the Government, at its mercy. The proposition before us to-night is one in which, so far from the Government and the Parliament being asked to violate any pledge made to the company in connection with the contract, the Government and the Parliament are called upon to carry out the pledges which were made before Parliament at the time the contract was made. At the time this contract was made, as I shall show presently, arguments were addressed against it on the ground that it created a great monopoly, and those arguments were answered by the statement from the leader of the Government that the statement as to the monopoly was an over-statement, because the contract did not affect the right of Manitoba or the right of Ontario to charter lines; it was only in so far as the Dominion Parliament had power, namely, within the Territories, that it was proposed to act. Now, to what intent was that argument advanced? We were saying, you are giving the Canadian Pacific Railway Company a monopoly. No, the hon. gentleman said, not such a monopoly as you contend, because it is limited to the Territories; Manitoba, we cannot check, Ontario we cannot check. And I say that, in common parlance, in common honor and good faith, that was a pledge and a declaration to Parliament that the monopoly was to extend only in so far as the language of the contract, as interpreted by the Minister, would extend it. It is true, that pledge, made to Parliament upon the occasion of the contract, was subsequently departed from by the Government. It is true that a few years afterwards they proceeded to disallow Manitoba charters, and that an agitation sprang up against their course—an agitation of great strength joined in by a large portion of the population; and that agitation reached such a pitch that there were discussions in the Legislature, meetings among the people, and representations to Ottawa; and when from time to time the Government asked Parliament to make further concessions to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, hon. gentlemen on this side of the House proposed as conditions of those concessions that the monopoly should be to some extent abandoned. When perhaps the largest of all these concessions was propounded to Parliament, in the year 1884, the Minister of Finance, then Minister of Railways, felt that it was necessary for him to deal with this question even at that time, and he dealt with it in the language which is quoted in these resolutions—language which he has endeavored to-night to narrow down to the expression of a hope, but which certainly was more accurately characterised by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), in the language which he applied to the hon. gentleman's words. Plain men, such as an elector of Canada, could draw no other inference than that which the hon. member for Selkirk says the people of his constituency and of his Province did draw from the language of the Minister of Railways. What did he say?

"I am glad to be able to state to the House that such is the confidence of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the power of the Canadian Pacific Railway to protect itself that when the line is constructed north of Lake Superior, the Government feel it will not be incumbent upon them to preserve the position they have hitherto felt bound to preserve, that of refusing to consent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba, connecting it with American railways to the south. I can give no better evidence to the House and the country of the advanced position which we consider this great enterprise of the Canadian Pacific Railway has attained, than when I say that I feel it is consistent with what we owe to the people of this country and to that great national work, that the Government should not deem it incumbent on themselves to pursue the restrictive policy within the Province of Manitoba which we have hitherto been obliged to maintain."

Sir, that is not the expression of a hope or an expectation. It is a positive pledge that upon the happening of an event, which was expected to happen within a few short months, the policy of disallowance would be abandoned and the Province of Manitoba would be restored to its constitutional rights and its constitutional freedom which had been up to that time improperly abridged. Thus you see that the solemn pledge given to Parliament in 1880, at the time of the contract, that the Legislature of Manitoba should not be checked, was departed from afterwards, was reiterated in the year 1884, upon an occasion when a great demand was being made upon the liberality of Parliament at the instance of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not hesitate to say, Sir, that the declaration of the hon. Minister had much to do with the success of his proposal which he then laid before the House. I do not hesitate to say that his declaration that that boon was about to be given—not to the people of Manitoba alone, because I agree that this is not a Manitoba question in itself at all, but is to be considered in the common interest—that the declaration which he made as to the restoration to that Province of its constitutional rights and of the benefits of competition, helped him very much, as he expected it to help him, to carry his measure. He carried his measure and he broke his pledge; and he now proposes to us an indefinite continuance of that disgraceful state of affairs. Now, Sir, what the Government is asked is at once, without further delay, to fulfil those reiterated pledges to Parliament. What the Parliament is asked to do is to see that the pledges made to itself are observed and maintained; that to the Province of Manitoba are restored its constitutional rights and the care of its material interests, and that to the whole of Canada is restored the better, the sounder, the wiser policy which is involved and implied in the reversal of the policy hitherto maintained on this subject. Now, Mr. Speaker, the North-West and Canadian Pacific Railway policy of this Government for the last eight years has been a very large part of its whole policy. It has filled the minds of the people of this country to an extent equal, perhaps, to all the other branches of the policy of the Government, including its fiscal policy. It has involved an expenditure on capital account for the North-West and the Canadian Pacific Railway policy of somewhere about $80,000,000. And that policy was so important, so far-reaching, materially and politically, was based, was recommended to Parliament, and was adopted by Parliament, upon the faith of calculations, and of pledges, and of predictions made by the Government at the time in each Session in which they recommended to us to pursue the course which, at their instance, we adopted. These calculations, these pledges, these predictions of theirs, have lamentably failed, and the condition of the North-West to-day affords a satisfactory contrast to their pictures of that promised land, as it was to be under their guidance and their policy. To-night a mild admission was made by the hon. the Minister of Finance, that the roseate picture had not been altogether realised, but that mild admission, though it is something to have obtained from his lips, even such a mild admission of failure, does not answer the exigencies of the case. It is not that the roseate dream has not been altogether realised; it is that the roseate dream has not been realised at all. It is that it has been an utter mistake, a strong delusion and a lie. Now, to reach a right decision upon this question to-day, it is necessary, particularly after the mild admission of the hon. gentleman, that we should glance for a moment at the contrast. It was in the year 1880, seven years ago, that the policy of expansion began, and the grounds for it were then stated. Those of us who sat in this House then will remember the tall talk in which the First Minister and the Finance Minister, then Minister of Railway, indulged upon those occasions. They backed each other up; they vied with one another in altitude and in amplitude of statement, and one of them said that the other erred only in the moderation of his language. Many of the members of the Ministry, I have observed, have been commemorated by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Their names adorn stations on the line. I see Chapleau, and Caron, and Bowell, and Langevin, and Tilley. They stretch all along the line. Odd to say, that one of the very best friends of the Canadian Pacific Railway does not appear in that particular relation, the Minister of Railways (Mr. Pope), who everybody will acknowledge, is a good friend to them; he does not show up.

Mr. DAVIES. There ain't nothing to it.

Mr. BLAKE. But the Minister of Railways has had the satisfaction of receiving a certificate from an unexceptional source, a source which might have been still higher than it is but for unforeseen circumstances. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) wrote of the hon. gentleman in reference to a transaction, in which he said the honor and faith of the Government were involved, in these words:

"I must confess, however, that I had not the same faith in his acting Minister, who certainly seemed to me then, as he has ever since then, to be acting as the friend of and in the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway."

Notwithstanding this certificate so well deserved, as we all know, the Minister of Railways does not show up as the proprietor of one of the stations by name, but the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) is a practical man; nay, he is an international man. He prefers, perhaps, some other memorials; his name may not be blazoned upon a station, indeed, but it may, perhaps, in some corporate capacity, be imbedded in a contract, and be found recorded in the quiet annals of a short line. But whatever may happen to him, the two principal composers of these works of Confederation, by which we were deluded into the course we took for the last seven years, the First Minister and the Finance Minister, deserve, no doubt, as certainly I find they have received, a still more exalted memorial than being honored by giving a name to a station on the line. It was yesterday I found it in the report of the Department of the Interior, whose officer describes in vivid words the Rogers' Pass in British Columbia:

"The pass is narrow, only affording room for the creek and railway, and on each side rise stupendous mountain masses, that on the south side being Mount Macdonald, towering over a mile with almost perpendicular wall above the track, while on the north side rises Mount Tupper to nearly the same height."

Mark the accurate appreciation of the fitness of things. Both are high, but Mount Tupper is not yet quite as high as the companion mountain. But, Sir, I find also that exalted as are these two memorials, there are two elsewhere which dominate even them, for, if I rightly understand the topography of mountain peaks, there are to be found elsewhere and higher still Mount Stephen and Mount Sir Donald. Once again, I commend the admirable proportion of things which has been realised, and it is fit revenge for a long and a happily buried past. I see that the Canadian Pacific Railway's report of the other day speaks most hopefully of the prospects of developing the mineral resources of the region to which I have been referring. I am sanguine enough, I confess, to share these hopes of the proprietors of the line, and even to indulge in some peculiar to myself. I venture to hope that there may be found yet in these mountains what is a prodigy in mountains, if not a prodigy in men; I venture to hope yet that on the face and cheeks, and head and front, of each of these twin peaks may be found extensive veins of composite matter—extensive veins of brass. It will make the parallel still more complete, as is shown to-night, when we see the hon. gentlemen so cool and so calm under the beneficial process of a contrast between what they have told us for the last seven years and the actual result of the wretched policy which they induced the country to agree to. Now what was this policy, and upon what was it founded? What were the promises which these gentlemen made, which, the hon. gentleman says, have a little faded in the washing? The basis of the policy was brilliant. There were 250,000,000 of acres of the most fertile land under the sun, a sun which dealt so kindly with that favorite soil as to leave it but little vexed with unkindly droughts and summer frosts, and gave assurance of regular, repeated and unparalleled crops of No. 1 hard. Then their policy, they declared, was to produce the actual settlement by the year 1890, within eleven years, of which over seven have now gone by, of 34,640,000 acres of agricultural lands in that country. Such was the statement of the hon. the First Minister which the hon. the Minister of Railways thought was rather erring on the safe side. How many acres of agricultural lands will they allege have been settled within the last seven years? I do not mean speculated homesteads, but settled for good, and how many will they now estimate for the remaining four years of that eleven years' term? It is needless to discuss the subject. We know that that promise has most lamentably and egregiously failed. Then they declared—and here the Minister of Finance took up the parable—that the North-West was a huge wheat farm. The hon. gentleman delighted and instructed those of us whom he did not amuse and astonish by a calculation by which he showed that one hundred thousand farmers in the North-West would produce 640 millions of bushels of first class wheat in a year. What has the profit been? What has the export been? What are the prospects compared with the statement of the hon. gentleman? Is it not now admitted that it will not do to turn the North-West into a wheat farm? Have not the most experienced persons been advising the settlers for some years to reject that treatment, and to adopt mixed farming as the proper course to be taken in the North-West? Will anybody seriously repeat, will the hon. the Minister himself seriously repeat, as a thing fit to be entertained, as a subject to form an argument in a deliberative assembly, that one hundred thousand farmers in the North-West can produce 640 million bushels of wheat in a year? Then they declared that the agricultural land sales for these eleven years would, by 1890, give us $38,600,000 actually received in cash, and $32,700,000 secured and as good as the wheat, or in all $71,300,000; and the expenses of surveys and of administration were to be $2,400,000, which, being deducted by them, as prudent men making such calculations ought to do, left a handsome balance of $69,000,000 as the produce of the agricultural lands of the North-West to the country by the year 1890. Their gross receipts, including the scrip, including the speculative and other sales made during the boom, their gross receipts from the agricultural lands of the North-West seem to have been between four and five millions in the first seven years of this eleven years' term, and the later receipts smaller than the earlier receipts. Their net receipts have been only nominal, after you deduct the costs of survey, of administration, and the head office expenses, and that without taking into account a shilling for the expenses of the Territory, such as mounted police, Indians, immigration, territorial government and improvements; and besides all this we have paid out over ten millions in solid cash to buy more of the lands that we cannot sell. That is the comparison between the statement as to land sales and the results. So late as the year 1883, they produced calculations that we would receive, not now from the agricultural lands but from these and all other sources connected with lands in the North-West—forest, grazing, timber and mineral—between 1883 and 1890, fifty-eight millions of dollars in cash, and that they would make ten millions out of colonisation companies, and a very large number of more millions out of the land grants to the local railways. Now, that was the state of things as late as 1883. These predictions have wholly failed. Who dares estimate to-day large net receipts out of the North-West lands within any appreciable time at all? They affirmed that the land sales of the North-West would repay the expenses of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which would so cost the country nothing, that our debt would not be increased nor would our taxes be heightened, and so late as 1883, the Minister of Railways said that his colleague, the then Minister of Finance, would have the satisfaction of proposing a decrease in the public taxation and in the public debt, as Mr. Childers was doing in his budget, besides constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway. Who dares to say to-day that the seventy millions and interest, apart altogether from eastern expenditure, which the railway has cost, can be met out of the net North-West lands, or that our debt and our taxes have not been largely and permanently increased by the construction of the railway? Have we not heard an argument this evening—has not the Minister of Railways pointed to the Public Accounts with triumph—the record of his shame—has he not pointed to the fact that there are seventy-one millions expended there, and called upon the east to be unjust to the west because it had been at this cost which up to this time he has been declaring to us the west itself was to bear out of the sales of its lands. In the year 1880, they gave us figures as to the immigration, which the hon. the First Minister delivered, and which his backer, the then Minister of Railways, declared erred only on the side of moderation—figures of immigration in a progressive series for the eleven years commencing with 1880, which would result by the year 1886, allowing for the initial population and a small allowance for the natural increase, in our having a population of between 370,000 and 380,000 whites in the North-West by 1886, and by the year 1890 would result in 680,000 whites being in the North-West; and they asked us to act, to adopt their policy, to agree to the expenditure, upon the pledge that these moderate estimates would be fulfilled or more than fulfilled. After that year, 1880, and very shortly after, they hastened the railway construction, they promoted the era of boom and speculation which took place in the North-West. They made an enormous, and at an earlier period, an entirely un contemplated immigration expenditure, and they declared that their policy of increased vigor was resulting and would result in their predictions of 1880 being far more than realised, and realised far earlier. In the four years from 1881 to 1884, they actually told us officially that 148,000 immigrants had settled in the North-West—no longer an estimate, but it was the declaration of a fact, that 148,000 had settled between 1881 and 1884 alone. But by the last reports there are only, all told, about 125,000 whites, as the result of the old settlement, of the immigration previous to 1881, of the immigration between 1881 and 1884, and of the subsequent immigration up to the period of the census. This, a mere fraction of the estimate, has resulted from all these things and from the natural increase besides; and beside all this, though the papers are not yet brought down to enable us to verify the fact as to Manitoba, yet, allowing the same result in Manitoba as is indicated by the census for the Territories, of these it may be conjectured that only about 50,000 come from abroad. The rest was a mere transfer of population from one part of the Dominion to the other, but not an accession to our total population; and that is the net result of the enormous expenditure which we have made in immigration and in other particulars for the development of the North-West. Why, Sir, by these accurate calculations of theirs, the immigration for last year was to be 55,000, for the present year 60,000, for the next three years 210,000. Who now pretends that these figures, or anything approaching these figures, will be realised, or that the predictions—nay, I go further—these statements of what had occurred, were anything else than grossly inaccurate? They declare, Sir, in the general, that they would show us within these few years, a powerful, a numerous, a thriving, a wealthy and contented population, making a new Province, and the material for many more Provinces, for Canada, their creation adding to our material, adding still more to our political and national strength, helping to bear our burdens, and to carry onwards our destiny, and uniting it to us by those bonds of affection and common interest which would have resulted from the realisation, no doubt, of their dreams. Now, what are the facts? The facts are that you have there some six score thousands of whites, who are struggling, who are discontented, and who are calling on you to-day for relief, who are asking you to-day for the liberty to live and to prosper. Now, how comes this contrast, the record of which hon. gentlemen, unmoved, hear? It comes, no doubt, from the gross exaggeration of the picture they presented. No doubt it was very largely, as I pointed out at the time, an exaggeration of all the possible hopes for the North-West that sane and prudent men could entertain, and, therefore, a portion of this contrast is due to that exaggeration. It comes largely from their blunders, their maladministration, and the faults of their general and local policy. On these I do not intend to say a single word, nor to enter into the enumeration of them to-night, except with reference to that particular branch of that policy which forms the subject of the present motion. That is the question of that portion of their policy which involves the keeping of the North-West in bondage to one railway company. Now, it is time that the truth should be heard and should prevail in this matter, and the truth is that the North-West requires relief in order to its having a chance, a fair and reasonable chance, to succeed. I have heard statements made from the other side, which, if they had been volunteered from this side of the House would have been denounced as treasonable—that there have been two frosts and a drought; that there have been failures of crops, and that this has caused all the difficulty; that there has been a rebellion; and that all these circumstances were entirely beyond the control of the Government. No doubt, Sir, the drought was beyond their control, though I remember when my statement as to a particular portion of the southern part of the territory, that it was inferior to another part in view of the want of water supply, was stigmatised as something very wrong, very untrue, and calculated to damage the prospects. Still, I hear from one hon. member opposite that there has been a drought, and that there has been two summer frosts for two years, and that there has been partial failures of three consecutive crops, at any rate. We must all deplore that unfortunate conjunction, and I earnestly hope that the prospects which are at present bright in the North-West for a good year, may be realised to the full. I am glad to hear that the prospects, so far as the appearance of the crops goes, and the rainfall that has taken place, are such as to lead us to hope for that good year for which the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) hopes. I should not be at all surprised if there was a good year and that it would produce an abundant crop, which we all desire, and which I am sure the people of that country want, and I hope the expectations of the hon. member for Selkirk will, to some extent, be realised, and that the people will cease to be so uneasy and anxious as they now are. But we must remember that where there have been frosts and droughts, these may possibly recur. We must remember that they have no immunity there, any more than any other part of the world, from these contingencies, and that the people of that country are entitled to be treated by us as a people who are exposed to these contingencies, and whose prospects of success are to be reckoned with regard to those contingencies; and, therefore, we ought to see that we do what we can to enable them to profit as much as may be from a good crop, and to stand, if they have the misfortune of a bad one, as well as they may against that misfortune. I have always regarded this question of railway accommodation and rates for the North-West as the cardinal question, as the cardinal material question. Several years ago I pointed out in this House that the great question in that country would be cheap freights, that the fight of the North-West farmer was a fight against time and space, against a short season and a distant seaboard. I pointed out, seven or eight years ago, though the prospects then seemed dim and remote, perhaps, but sufficiently clear, that large additional areas would be brought under cultivation and within reach of the main market of the world, altering the condition of the wheat supply for exportation altogether, and affording the prospect of a long period of low prices for that commodity. I showed, therefore, that with reference to the peculiar local position of the North-West farmer, and with reference to the prospect of the wheat market of the world, the success of the North-West was vitally bound up in the question of cheap rates. In the month of December, 1880, and in the month of April before December, I dealt with some of these questions. At that time the proposal of the Administration was not the handing over of the road to a company; the proposal was Government construction, and of course many of the questions which were raised by the subsequent change of policy did not exist. But at that day, Sir, in view of those rosy pictures which hon. gentlemen presented, I pointed out some of the difficulties which would beset the North-West farmer. I said:

“He has to build his house, he has to build his barn, and to fence his land; he has got to get his implements and his animals, and to maintain his family—in the homely parlance of our country, he has ‘hard scratching’ before him for some years. It is true that the prairie has very great advantages in some respects. It enables you, if you have capital and can lay out money, to fence in and sow very much earlier, and to raise very much sooner. But on the other hand, the scarcity of timber and so forth renders the material required for the house, and the barn, and the fences dear, and that is what, I have no doubt, the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) meant, when he spoke of the initial difficulties of the settler in the prairies of our North-West, as compared with those of the wooded country. I expect to be called unpatriotic because I tell a few plain truths, but those who are so loud in this kind of denunciation may go on. I believe it is not patriotic to be dishonorable. I believe it is not honorable to present false views of one's country to immigrants or others. We should not overstate, but fairly state the position and situation of the case."

I further said :

"It is quite true that in early years he will not have home manufactures, but these years will be the hard years for the settlers. They are the years in which it would be vastly important for his welfare to have, I will not say home-made goods, but cheap goods, to be allowed to purchase the necessities of life at the cheapest rate, and in the market that gives the greatest satisfaction. But you encourage him in this way : You tell him that we have established a tariff wall, by which you must buy in old Canada, at our prices, what you require in the North-West. The large expenditure due to the increased price of goods will diminish the settler's narrow and limited purchasing power, and will in effect render him subject to a rate of taxation so high as to interfere with his comfort and advancement."

Also :

"Now, Sir, I for one have no wish to prevent any expenditure which is essential for the settlement of the country. I wish the House to understand that that is, at any rate, no part of my policy. On that subject, as I have said, the die is cast. Most of us believe that we have a prospect there, and I want all to unite in the effort to realise the prospect. I think even those who do not believe it to be so bright as others do, will agree in making the effort. I wish that we should direct our exertions to every step calculated to make the best of that country ; to settle it at the earliest day, to give it as soon as possible a productive population and to make it a prosperous and influential portion of the Dominion."

When December came, when the contract came before us, I showed repeatedly the danger to which the North-West was involved in this connection. I adverted to the early experience of the United States. I am not one of those who tell you that they have a paradise there or that Canadian railway monopolists, or railway proprietors, act upon any different principles from the American railway monopolists and the American railway proprietors. I said then, as I say now, that they act upon the same principles ; they are going to make the most out of the property they possess, out of the rights and privileges confided to them. Human nature is the same on each side of the line ; the same principles will be found acting under the same conditions. I pointed out the course taken by practical monopolies on the other side of the border. I pointed them out as a warning to us. I inveighed against the proposal to make a gigantic monopoly in this country. I showed, feebly but as well as I could, the results of such a policy. I pointed out the advantages for us of our great interior system of water communication and the Sault connection. I pointed out that that would secure to us the North-West trade, not only Canadian but American as well. I showed the possibilities open to us by means of our own railway, which we were then about completing at the public expense, from Selkirk to Port Arthur, a continuous railway and lake navigation, and I implored Parliament not to throw away all those advantages. Speaking on 14th December, 1880, I said, among other things :

"I know that, in the prairie country, we are told that ten miles on each side of a railway will support a railway. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I believe it to be true, but what makes it true ? Why it is the rates they charge. It is because they are landlords of the area of twenty miles. That is the reason it is profitable, and unless you have given them power to exact those extortionate rates, they will not have the great interest to which I have referred, to get settlers on their lands.

"Oh, it would never do, after you pay them a price and a half for building the road and give it to them, and allow them to take whatever they please for fares and freights—it would never do to allow any one else to build south or south-west. No ; they must be protected in their vested rights, and there is a prohibition for twenty long years that no one else can construct any line which shall go south or south-west of any line which shall go within fifteen miles of that abominable boundary. But they may go themselves ; they only may touch it, they can do no harm. They are the country, they are the Government, and, of course, they can do no wrong ; but all the rest of us are prohibited solemnly, by the Parliamentary contract, which binds our descendants as well as ourselves ; binds all those who may be induced to go into the North-West ; declares that in the constitution of any new Provinces to be created out of that vast territory there shall be inserted a constitutional provision divesting the inhabitants of that country of the right to build railways wherever they may think advantageous to them, and leaving them to the mercy of the Syndicate. They have the absolute right ; you cannot restrict them ; you cannot say others can build with the consent of Parliament, for the Syndicate have the absolute unconditional right to build in a way from which everybody else is absolutely excluded. Now, there is in this a practical monopoly of the trade of the North-West Territory secured by law for at least twenty years, and it probably means in perpetuum to this corporation.

"Within a few years past the people of the neighboring Republic, having the greatest development of railway enterprise in the world, having, I suppose, in round numbers, some 90,000 miles of railway running there, have had the opportunity of knowing, and, by sad experience, do know, what the difficulties and evils are which are incidental to these great benefits to humanity, railway corporations and railway enterprises. The peculiar circumstances favoring with us, the growth of the evils of monopoly, render it still more necessary that we should see what those evils are which are experienced elsewhere, and devise some means of averting them instead of blindly going on as if there were no evils, or as if there were evils that were not capable of being averted. Sir, these people will become the landlords of the North-West. They will take such a share of the profit of every farmer in the North-West as they choose to demand, consistently with there being any stimulus on the part of that farmer to raise grain for the market. They are not entitled to ask, Sir, for the privileges given to men who build railways at their own risk. They do not occupy that position. You are giving them the money to build up a monopoly of trade, and giving them statutory security for that monopoly, and you are bound to restrain them. Their exceptional position obliges you, if even the general evils did not, to restrain them. Talk to me of this thing standing. It will not stand. If you pass this law, and if the country of which you speak so glowingly is what you depict it, if its prospects of settlement are such as you hope they are, I say you are blighting these prospects by passing this law ; and if these prospects are measurably realised, notwithstanding the passing of this law, I say the people of that country would be less than men if they suffered such a law to exist. Talk of the immigration of Irishmen to the North-West. You are proposing to them to substitute the scorpion for the rod. You are proposing to those who are suffering under the tyranny of individual landlords, to expose themselves to the soulless tyranny of a gigantic corporation. You are telling them that their chance of profit is to depend on what this corporation thinks they ought to pay as tribute before they can take their produce to market.

"Now, Sir, it does seem to me that if it had not been for the wonderful productiveness and expansion of the North-West, the people could not have borne the taxation which the railroad companies have been imposing upon them, and as year by year the average fertility of the soil diminishes, as year by year the crop to the acre decreases, it will be found a burden which will compel a change by the act of Congress or some other power. It will be found a burden wholly intolerable to be borne very long ;—this control which these great railway companies have over that great country and over the agricultural interests of the great North-West. And while that state of things is existing in the neighboring Republic, while its people are groaning under the burden, while they are looking all around them for means to redress the evil with reference to existing corporations possessing vested rights, the Government of this country, blind to the lessons which the experience of the Republic teaches, proposes to extend and inaugurate that evil in a ten-fold more aggravated shape in this country. To what end is our splendid road to Thunder Bay ? To what end did we sink millions more than necessary to produce the extraordinary grades and splendid provisions with respect to curvature which exist on that road ? Why, was it not to cheapen the cost to the head of navigation and enable us to defy competition, having a good port, and being so circumstanced that we can take down freight a little cheaper, as we can from Prince Arthur's Landing to Montreal by the lakes, than they can from Duluth, and so beat them ? Was it not to invite farmers to the North-West by the statement : "Gentlemen, here is a country in which you have not got monopolist rates for freight charged, a country in which the Government itself, in order that you may have your freight down cheap, has built, at an expense entirely unnecessary for other purposes, a railway superior, perhaps, to any other except the Canada Southern, and capable of transporting your freight at the lowest possible rate ?" Sir, the grades and provisions as to curvature of that road are such, as you will learn from the report of the chief engineer last Session, as to enable us to take within a fraction of twice the paying load the average grades and curves would allow. It will, therefore, approximately carry freights at half rates. Approximately the cost for transportation will be one-half—I do not say actually one-half, because there are other circumstances which may require to be considered, but approximately it will take freights at very little more than half of the average rates. That is the means, that is the inducement you have to offer to the people of Manitoba and the North-West within a year or two. But, Sir, to whose advantage are these splendid grades ; to whose advantage is this magnificent railway constructed so that it can be run and worked very cheaply, and enormous trains twice the length of those on other roads can be brought down ? To whom is the gain to enure, if the practical result is to be that freight can indeed be carried down at a less actual cost and that you have only given a greater margin on the division of the profit on the crop to the railway company ? Then I must say it has been a very unprofitable expenditure. We are bound, in my opinion, by the most obvious duty to our country, to see that the singular advantages which the Thunder Bay road gives, of taking down the wheat of the North-West to the seaboard, and taking up the manufactures of the East to the North-West at moderate rates, shall be used not to give still larger profits to a railway company but to secure cheap transport to the public, whose money has paid for that road, and who will have, for generations, to bear the burden of the interest due to it. Now, there are various remedies. Competition is, of course, an imperfect remedy, because the competitors may combine, but it is better than nothing. Look what it does between Chicago and New York! Look what it does between Chicago and Montreal! Contrast those distances and the rates on these lines with the rates where there is no competition, as in the case I have given you of the St. Paul and Manitoba Railway. And remember that often, though there may be a difficulty in keeping up a competition, and though you cannot ensure that the competitors will not combine, yet the possibility of competition, and the knowledge that extortionate rates may lead to the building of other roads, is a check upon these corporations. But you prevent anybody, who is not in the interest of the Syndicate, from building at all in a way which will produce competition. You not merely do not secure but you prevent designedly the possibility of competition, and the hon. Minister seems rather to congratulate himself that he has secured a consolidation of interests with the St. Paul and Manitoba Railway Company, so that this very line of railway to Thunder Bay which the people of the North-West were looking for, and hoping for, and praying for is closed to them as a means of relief, and the Syndicate is to control every gateway to the North-West.

"Now, I have stated that this route is of vital consequence to Canada, irrespective of the North-West altogether. I say the prospects it opens to us are cheering in the extreme. I take as a point which is most reasonable, Glynndon, to which I have before referred, which is, if I remember aright, 132 miles to the south of the border and on the line of the Northern Pacific Railway. The distance from Glynndon to Montreal by the Sault would be 1,307 miles. A line by the Sault running down to South-East Bay, thence on to Brockville, and thence to New York, is the shortest line that can be obtained by any existing or even by any projected or reasonably devised means of communication. Therefore, if the traffic from that point to New York is going to take the shortest route it will come through our territory all the way from the Sault Ste. Marie to Brockville, and it will be 1,566 miles from Glynndon to New York, a saving of 299 miles. But if you suppose, as not unnatural, that the great railway companies via Chicago, which at present engross that trade, compete for such of it as is going to New York, and if you compare the distance from Glynndon to Montreal by our line with that from Glynndon by Chicago to New York, you will find that the latter gives a saving to Montreal of 299 miles. If you take Boston, rising in importance as a port, the shortest line to Boston from Glynndon would be down to Brockville, and it would be 1,600 miles, or 293 miles longer than the distance to Montreal. If you take the travelled route, by which the trade would most likely go, by way of Chicago, it is 1,662 miles to Boston; that is a saving in favor of Montreal of 355 miles. Then you must add the 250 miles saving in the ocean passage between New York and Liverpool and Montreal and Liverpool, and you will get, on the whole, in land and water, some 500 or 600 miles shorter distance from Glynndon by the port of Montreal than by way of the great Atlantic ports in the United States. I believe that is a controlling advantage. I do not assert that it would secure all the traffic against the gigantic competition, the determined competition, which would, no doubt, be exhibited in favor of the existing roads; but I have no doubt whatever that the Northern Pacific would desire, and it would be to their interests so to do, to take the traffic right along to the Sault Ste. Marie, which would give them 300 or 400 miles more of transportation over their own lines, and all the traffic that they could control would go there. It is also to the interests of St. Paul to send their stuff by the shortest route to market, and seeing we have the combined advantage of 300 miles of rail and 250 miles of water, we are bound, in my opinion, if only we act in time, and stretch forth our hands towards the future that is waiting us, to obtain it.

"The hon. gentleman opposite said last year in Montreal and Toronto, that he quite agreed that the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie line would be to the public interest, because it would give a short route to the North-West and could be presently used to get the American trade. I believe that if we can get the American trade we cannot but hold our own. Do you suppose that if you will go and take the trade for 300 or 400 miles south of the boundary, that the Canadian trade will go by other roads? Do you suppose they will not prefer to go that way when the Americans, from their business point of view, prefer to use it? Every man must believe, as the Minister does, that we will take the American trade by the Sault line, and we must believe that we will keep our own trade. My views upon this subject are maintained by the report of the engineer in the last Session. He pointed out in strong terms that both by land and water the route of this line was admirable; that the railway would command the traffic of all the country north of St. Paul; that was a cautious statement, and my belief is that it would take the traffic of a considerable area to the southward of St. Paul.

"We are interested in doing the best for the North-West, and we are interested in common with all in that. We are interested in the trade and commerce of the North-West, being taxed as lightly as possible, and why? Because we are paying millions every year to maintain the North-West; because it is our direct interest—the interest of all of us—to see the North-West self-sustaining as soon as possible; because its being self-sustaining depends upon a population getting in there and thriving after they have got in; and because their getting in and thriving afterwards depend upon traffic facilities being given in the earliest and best way.

Now, I can understand, even if I cannot sympathise with that sort of feeling which, in other circumstances, would be rather apprehensive of trade going south. I could understand the hon. gentleman's putting in a clause saying that no man should build a railway in a particular direction or within fifteen miles from the United States frontier unless he belonged to the Syndicate; I could understand his saying that, if our conditions differed. But, since we have the key of the position, since when the stuff does go south, it must, by the laws of trade, find our shores again by the Sault Ste. Marie, since all that it goes away for is to come back again, since it can only go by another route at a manifest disadvantage, since by that line we are going to tap the American trade, I cannot understand the carrying to such an extraordinary extent the objection to using other people's lines for our own purposes as is implied in the suggestion that it is wrong to have a south-westerly line. I maintain that we will be able to control the traffic of the North-West legitimately, and I do not want to control it in any other way. I do not believe we have the right—speaking for posterity, speaking for the future of a country which you say contains 250,000,000 acres of fertile and habitable land—a country which contains such an area of fertile and habitable land that the largest of our Provinces shrinks into utter insignificance in comparison—we have no right to say, still less have we the right to expect, that the commercial prosperity of that country shall be kept dependent on any other consideration than what will be to the highest advantage to the producers and consumers of that country—what will give them the cheapest route to market. But it is our good fortune that their and our interests will harmonise, because we cannot only give them the cheapest route to market, but we can point out to them that their cheapest route to market takes their stuff to our own ports, and takes their imports from our own ports.

The problem, which of the two agencies, rail or water, will win in the competition for transportation, may be said to be in doubt. The actual cost, not including profit, to take the grain from Selkirk to Thunder Bay, 400 miles, would be on an average road 4 cents. I have already said that you can double freights on that railway, and, therefore, you may fairly count the rate of actual cost at 2½ cents, making no allowance for profit at all. It is pretty clear, I think, from what information I have been able to gather, that you can freight the grain in large vessels on Lake Superior at from 1½ to 2½ cents from Prince Arthur's Landing to Goulais Bay, the smaller sum being the actual cost, and the larger one embracing a profit; and the average rate from Goulais to Montreal is 6½ cents, making a total of 10½ cents. If you go by the lakes, you pay 2½ cents to Thunder Bay and thence to Montreal 7 cents, making a total of 9½ cents for actual cost exclusive of profit, so that at present both routes are nearly equal, and at present both routes are very good if only you resolve not to hand over those advantages which you have bought and paid for to others that they may profit by them, instead of your countrymen."

From these extracts hon. members will discern that the propositions I then presented are the propositions which I maintain to-day. I showed that we could give the new settler cheap rates from Winnipeg, or as far west as we built the prairie line, right down to Montreal, and what I asked was, that we should not abandon that power of so promoting his prosperity. During that debate we offered various amendments to the proposition before the House. We offered amendments with respect to the Sault line, with respect to the monopoly clause, with respect to controlling immigration and with respect to those avenues west and south of the North-West, those gateways, one then constructed and another almost constructed from Winnipeg to Pembina and from Selkirk to Port Arthur, and the right to keep them open by the Government and give running powers to other corporations should be preserved. Our general line was met by argument, our amendments were rejected; but the proposition as to the danger of a monopoly, and with the existence of a monopoly by which the western country and Canada at large were being hampered, was disputed by hon. gentlemen who sought by argument to minimise those dangers; and they suggested to us two reliefs. The first was the Hudson Bay route. The Minister of Finance, who was then the Minister of Railways, brought that forward. There was no monopoly, he said, because there is a line open to Hudson's Bay, an excellent line it is, and so forth. Now, I have not yet been able to find in the documents that I have read, with respect to that proposed route between the interior of the North-West and Liverpool, evidence which satisfies me of its ultimate feasibility as a successful mercantile operation, but, notwithstanding that, I have always here and elsewhere supported the proposition of the people of Manitoba and the North-West that they were entitled to generous consideration from the Parliament of Canada to enable them, if they could, to carry out that project. I thought that it was the least we could do for them, strangled as they were by our general policy, to afford them a chance which they might think was open to them for relief. And this I did, although it was very clear indeed that should the scheme succeed, its consequences would be such as to blight the hope of many eastern traders, inasmuch as short and successful steam communication by rail and water, between Winnipeg via James' Bay and Liverpool, would mean that the wheat would go that way and a large proportion of goods would return that way, and that the direct trade which it was hoped to create between the older Provinces and the North-West would be to a very large extent prostrated. I thought we had no right, selfishly, to say: We refuse you this method of relief. But since, by the combined operation of the charter and the Government policy, we were prohibiting them from getting access to the south, I thought the least we could do was to help them out by this method of relief. But neither the Government of the day, nor the Hudson Bay Railway Company, ever opposed any obstacle to that Hudson Bay route. Anxious as they were for competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway, they rather favored than otherwise the Hudson Bay route. Why so? I may be rather uncharitable, but I have a suspicion that a red herring was being drawn across the trail. What they feared was a continuous and persistent looking for a southern avenue on the part of the people of that country, and they were very glad, believing that nothing would come of the Hudson Bay route, that they should turn their attention in any other direction than that of Pembina; and, therefore, they said: Go on, gentlemen, build a railway to James' Bay; get your steamers, and all is well so long as you turn your eyes away from the south. That was the first proposal made to the country as modifying the proposition that we were creating a great monopoly adverse to the general interest and prosperity of the North-West. The second was, that we were overstating the case because the proposal that was made to us was not to create a monopoly in so far as the old Province of Manitoba was concerned, but that it was confined to the Territories and that old Manitoba was not to be, as she could not be, checked. Now, as I said in the opening of my remarks, for what purpose was that statement made? Was it not made in order to point out to the House that Manitoba would go that way, and might go that way, and should, if she pleased, go that way? Can it be said to be inconsistent with candor or honor, or good faith, that a statement of that kind should be made, if there were a mental reservation in the mind of the maker of it, that he was about to use the executive power which was in his hands to check Manitoba in going that way, to prevent her from using the power which he had just declared that Parliament should not check. Did not candor and honor and good faith demand that a statement made at that time, under those circumstances, with that object, should be accompanied with the statement: but of course we do not intend to allow that; true, Parliament cannot prevent them but we, the executive, will prevent them from building a railway to the south. Now, Sir, it was on these assurances that Parliament acted and passed the contract. I say that it would be a fraudulent evasion of the statements and pledges which were then made to argue that the executive of this country, whose policy is under the control of the Parliament of this country, should the next day decide to nullify that measure of relief and freedom of action which they had just declared existed for the Province of Manitoba, and upon the faith of which the difficulties in that Province and the objections here had been largely met. Sir, the executive policy as I have said, is moulded by Parliament. Why, the matter is in the hands of Parliament to-day. I observe that the answer was made to the deputation, or to some persons who interviewed the Government on this subject, that they could not say anything because the matter was in the hands of the House. It is in the hands of the House. Let us pass an address to His Excellency to disallow the charter, and no doubt that charter will be disallowed, or, the Government will go out and another Government come in who will advise His Excellency to disallow it, and it will be disallowed. Let us pass an address asking that the charter be not disallowed and no doubt it will not be disallowed, else the Government will go out and another come in which will adopt that policy. The executive policy is the policy of a committee of this House; it is moulded and guided by the views of a majority of this House. Hon. gentlemen ought not to forfeit their convictions of the public duty in order to retain office; sometimes it is said they do, but if they do, that does not interfere with our control over matters of this kind. Nobody disputes the constitutional right of this House to pass this address; nobody disputes that it is constitutionally our right to advise that a particular course shall be followed and that, so advising, that course must be followed. I say it would be a shameful mockery to say that there was relief for the North-West by the suggested limitation, under the powers of the Parliament, of this monopoly clause, and to intend all the while that the cup shall be torn from the lips of the sufferers by those who pretended to present it. And yet that is what the hon. gentleman said. We said we could not check Manitoba, but we in our secret hearts intended all the while to check Manitoba, whether you liked it or not; though we acknowledge you are our very good masters, and though you direct the policy of the country, we intended all the while to do that which we told you we could not do. The Minister of Finance said this was an old policy; it was Mr. Mackenzie's policy. My hon. friend from Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has answered that statement pretty fully. I have pointed out, I think, that it was utterly immaterial. We take our stand upon the condition of things at the time the charter was granted. It was an entirely new condition. Mr. Mackenzie's policy was not a policy of disallowance or interference with a provincial right at all. Mr. Mackenzie's policy, so far as it was a policy of restricted action by this Parliament, with reference to the railways which should be chartered, was avowedly a temporary policy, pursued until the line should be finally located, and the plan and system for its construction arranged. Mr. Mackenzie's policy was a policy devised for and applicable to the then condition of things, which I have pointed out, and pointed also markedly to the fact that it was a Government work which was then under construction. But, as I pointed out in 1880, the whole condition of things is changed when you interpolate between the different sections of the community, no longer a Government and a Parliament, the guardian of all interests, but a private and separate corporate interest. The moment you propose to interpolate that, that moment new considerations of action arise. Let me illustrate it. You have two great national railways; one the Intercolonial Railway serving the eastern Provinces, worked by the Government and built by the Government. The other the Canadian Pacific Railway serving the great west, worked by a company though built by the country. Who pretends that the Intercolonial Railway rates are not duly looked after, with regard to the interests of those who pass along and use the line? Who pretends that the rates there are not low? Why, the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) in that speech in which he brought forward the telegram of the Minister of Finance, as to his new scheme for consolidating the local railways in the Lower Provinces, and making them one with that enterprise, pointed out what the results would be. And what were to be those results? Better service, lower rates of fare and freedom from railway taxes. Local taxes were to be abolished, lower rates and better accommodation were to be had the moment the Government acquired that line. The danger which the public, as a whole, has to guard against, in the case of a government railway, is that there will be too much accommodation and too low rates. The danger the public has to guard against, in the case of a private railway corporation, is that there will be too little accommodation and too high rates. We had to deal with just the reverse state of things in Mr. Mackenzie's time from that which is created by this particular contract. Then we are told—it was repeated by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson), and suggested time after time; in fact it was avowed at one time as part of the policy of the Government by one of its officers, and a very large portion of the spirit of the argument of the Minister of Finance was in that sense—we are told, in effect, that this will be a sort of breach of faith with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that suggestion is made by the president of that great corporation. I should be sorry, as I said before, to recommend, or suggest, or countenance anything approaching a breach of faith with the humblest or the greatest in the land. I cannot understand that it is any breach of faith whatever. Let us understand wherein this breach of faith consists. When was it? where was it? how was it? that this country agreed to disallow Railway Acts in Manitoba, in order to prevent competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway? Show me that; show me that Parliament agreed to it; show me that Parliament assented to that view; show me that that was a term of the contract! If you can, well and good; but nothing of the kind is shown. If there was such a bargain, it was a secret and a shameful bargain between a Minister of the Crown and the great corporation which they were dealing with. If there was such a bargain, it was a bargain which cannot be allowed or justified. If there was a private term or understanding of that kind between the Government and the company, they were bound to make it public when calling upon the House to ratify their bargain. We were bound to know every term and every fetter that they were binding on the country. Therefore, I repudiate the notion that there was any secret, which, I say, would have been a shameful and a disgraceful act. Well, it is stated that we are interfering with them. No, Sir, we are interfering with nobody. We are proposing that we shall cease to interfere with people. We are proposing that we shall cease unwarrantable interference with the Province in the exercise of its constitutional rights. We are proposing that we shall cease unwarrantable interference with the material concerns of those who, under our constitution, are entrusted with the authority of determining how those concerns may be conserved. It may be that those are prejudices, as the Minister of Finance suggests. It may be that the interests of the Province of Manitoba would be best conserved by their not building the railway which they wish to build, as the hon. gentleman suggests. Sir, we have no right to judge that for them. The constitution has given them the right to decide that for themselves, and we have no right to set ourselves up against their judgment. But we ask more than this. We ask that unwarrantable interference may end. We ask also that solemn and repeated pledges may be at length observed and fulfilled. We ask that the statement made at the time of the contract, the true meaning and understanding of which was developed and amplified without dissent from the ministerial benches to be merely as recited in this resolution—we ask that the reiterated pledge of 1884, made in the name of the Government by the Minister of Railways, may be granted. We believe that these views will in no sense interfere with the progress and prosperity of this country as a whole, but, on the contrary, that they will largely conduce to that progress and prosperity. It is suggested, indeed, that the result of such a change would be to promote a competition which, however beneficial it is to Ontario—and where is the Conservative from Ontario who wants to get rid of the competition of the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway—can only be baneful in the west. Sir, I have read a little about railway rates, and have studied that confusing subject to some extent, and I quite admit that you have different rates under different circumstances; but either it will require a great deal more study than even the hon. Minister of Finance has given to this subject to justify the view that because he selects some particular rates in some quarter, therefore no benefit would ensue to the Province of Manitoba if competition were permitted. I have never said that the people of Minnesota had no grievances. On the contrary, in the very speech to which I have referred, I pointed out that they had great grievances. I never said that if it was possible to get capital to build another railway, therefore they would get competition; they would have the possibility of competition. But in this case you know you can get the competition. In this case the advantage—though doubtful in its character, no doubt, because of the possibility of the competitors combining—yet exists, and here results will be achieved which will produce an entirely different state of things—which will render the farmer of the North-West really prosperous in a good year and enable him to exist even in a bad year. At this very time the views I expressed in the early years of this great controversy, now extending over several years, have been realised. The company is practically the landlord of the North-West, and has practically the power of deciding what rates shall be charged and what proportion of the profits of the farm shall be exacted from those of whom it is the landlord. Now, I have an authority, and a very recent authority, which it is important to quote, with reference to the probable results of such an operation as is now proposed. It is pleasant to compare the ante-election and the post-election statements of hon. gentlemen opposite. The general election took place in the bulk of the Dominion the third or fourth week in February, but the North-West elections were delayed somewhat. In the anxious interval the hon. Minister of the Interior visited the North-West, and in Winnipeg he was addressed by some people on this subject, and this is what he said in reply:

"Should the decision of the Government be in the sense that the people of Manitoba evidently hope it may be, I am quite sure that the Canadian Pacific Railway will be able to hold its own in the competition to which it may be subjected. It occupies a position of special advantage over any other possible line to the south of it. It is shorter in mileage, and it is for its entire length under one management—an advantage the influence of which can hardly be overestimated. Moreover, competition, resulting in creating a new interest in the development of Manitoba and the Territory, would soon create new and enlarged trade. That has been the result everywhere. In Ontario, for instance, where the Canadian Pacific Railway has invaded territory which the Grand Trunk Railway Company was disposed to regard as its exclusive possession, the result has been to enormously increase the general traffic, an increase in which the Grand Trunk has become a sharer. Everyone must rejoice to see that the traffic returns of that railway to which Canada has been so much indebted in the past, are showing a steady weekly increase, and I think I am right in saying that that increase has come chiefly from Canadian freight and passengers. There will be trade enough in Manitoba and the North-West to afford profitable returns for both the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Railways, if the latter should find entrance here, and it would be no small advantage to the country as a whole to have the large interests connected with these two great corporations enlisted in the work of developing the great west, instead of, as there is too much reason to fear has been the case in the past, as to one of them, devoted rather in the prevention of the development."

Now, Sir, do you want a better argument to meet the hon. Minister of Finance with than the statement of his colleague the Minister of the Interior delivered before the elections? He tells us that the Canadian Pacific Railway will be practically destroyed by the proposed competition—that there is not trade enough, there is no trade and there are no people; there is no necessity for another railway because there is nothing to move. He tells us that painfully and reluctantly, the Government as a whole, including his colleague the Minister of the Interior, are convinced that the public interest demands that the great difficulties and prejudices to flow to the whole country from competition, should be averted; and yet as late as March last the Minister of the Interior pointed out that if there were competition the Canadian Pacific Railway Company occupied a predominant position, that it had the shortest possible line, that it had the great advantage of being under one management, that the general result of competition would be an advantage to both the competing companies, that there was plenty of profitable trade for both, and that it would be no small advantage to the country that these two corporations should have entrance to the Territory. Can I be surprised that the people of the North-West supposed that the hon. Minister of the Interior rather favored the cessation of the disallowance policy? It is an uncharitable inference to draw from that speech? Is it uncharitable I should suppose he wanted the people whom he was addressing, and whom his words reached just before polling day, to come to a similar conclusion as to his views? And when did his views change? Did he think of these things then? If he did, how does he make them accord with the opinions which have been expressed by the mouthpiece of the Government to-night, the Minister of Finance? I, for my part, have always opposed the disallowance of charters in old Manitoba. I have always opposed the disallowance of charters as an unconstitutional interference with the rights of the Province; I have opposed them as a breach of the faith to which the country was pledged by the results of the discussions on the Canadian Pacific Railway contracts; I have opposed them since 1884 as a still further breach of that reiterated pledge; I have opposed them also in the general interests of the country which, to my mind, are bound up with this consideration, that if the North-West is to thrive and grow it must to-day thrive and grow because its people feel that they receive equal rights with the other Provinces; because its people feel that they receive equal justice with the other Provinces; because the moral effect, the effect outside of the circumstances of this monopoly, is itself destructive to the full chance of the emigration and settlement in this country; and because the practical effect of this monopoly and power is, and will be in the nature of things, no worse, but no better, in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, than it will be in the case of any other great corporation. Man is not fit to be entrusted with despotic powers, and any departure from the rights and liberties, any departure from the attributes of a free people, is not merely derogatory to manhood, but is also calculated to lead to great practical and pressing dangers and deprivations. My belief is that the chances of the real development of the North-West, in which we all have a deep interest, largely depends on the reversal of the policy of the Government followed up to this time. I do not believe that with the tariff now placed upon goods the possibility of the goods going round in a double way by Chicago would enable American goods to enter. I do believe, on the other hand, that the possibility of reducing all rates on wheat and produce outbound, and on the consumptive goods which come into the country, is of the greatest consequence to the people of that country. My belief, hope and expectation is that the Sault Ste. Marie connection will be speedily made. I believe we will then have a fair prospect of attracting to us the trade of a very considerable portion of the American North-West as well as our own. I call your attention, Sir, to the fact that the Government of the country have said so and believe it. They, with my hearty approval, some years ago, released the Algoma Branch from its mortgage in order to enable the construction of the Sault line to be made, and I gave my approval in the hope and expectation that we would thus tap Minnesota, Dakota and northern Michigan. If we can tap the trade from a country two hundred or three hundred miles to the south of Manitoba, can we not retain our trade to the north? Is it possible that we can take the trade of the region which will feed the Sault from Duluth and yet not be able to retain our own trade, which must go 300 miles down to reach that latitude? That is out of the question. Therefore, the theory upon which the railway company, the Government and Parliament act, the general opinion which Ministers and other public men have expressed, that there is a bright future for Canada of development by the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie line, is one which utterly destroys the opinion that we cannot retain the trade of the North-West. If it leaves us for a while at Emerson, it leaves us only to return at the Sault, and if it does not return it is only because of the exorbitant rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Against those some safety valve is required. Let us give it by no longer allowing the executive of the day to interfere with the constitutional rights of our sister Province.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can congratulate the House and the hon. gentleman on the cheering spirit in which he opened his remarks. He evidently was speaking under a certain sense of relief at being rid of a heavy load. We hear the hon. gentleman is resolved no longer to suffer under the painful servitude of having to obey masters, under the pretext of leaving them, and that now he is,—

"Free as nature first made man,
'Ere the base laws of servitude began."

Under this pleasant feeling that he was no longer obliged to work with uncongenial material, he broke out in a new place, if I may use the expression; and although the jests were rather prepared and smelt of the lamp, they were very cheerful, and I was delighted to hear the play of his language in which the hon. gentleman pointed out the very important fact that one station was called Chapleau and another by the name of some one or other of my colleagues. Well, our greatest victories and exploits are written on the face of this continent. I have a mountain called after myself; but if the hon. gentleman's railway policy had been carried out, no mountain would be called Blake in his time or in the time of the present generation; no stations would be marked across the continent with the names of hon. gentlemen opposite. If I remember rightly, we were told that we were building the railway far too quickly, that we might creep and crawl across the continent at the rate of 100 miles per year, if we were very expeditious and energetic and that more speed was in fact a mistake in politics, and a mistake in the interests of the country. The hon. gentleman, however, has not forgotten his theories, and has adopted his usual course of late years of repeating what he has said before. We always like to hear the hon. gentleman, but we would like to hear him say something new. However exquisite the language may be, however potent the argument, however pointed the sarcasm, yet sometimes these things get stale and pall on the public ear, and we have heard that speech—every man in the old Parliament has heard the same identical speech, in the same identical words the hon. gentleman has favored us with to-night. No, he has not favored us with it to-night; perhaps he began to think, on reflection, as he was speaking, that the repetition of those things would pall on our ear, however brilliant, so instead of imposing on us the repetition, he has handed it over to the reporters and the public. We have heard the old story of our exaggerated statements and the roseate pictures that we have drawn, and we were told by the ex-Minister of Finance, the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), that if the North-West Territories were not settled, it was because our railway policy was bad, our land policy was bad, and the laws affecting the North-West altogether were bad; and how could a country prosper, how could we expect people to go into that country with this series of mistakes and malefeasances on the part of the present Government? Well, as to our railway policy, we need not defend that. In 1878 and 1879 we pro-pounded that policy; the Parliament of the country adopted that policy; we went to the country in the elections of 1878 on that policy, and the country in advance approved of that policy. We carried out in 1880 the pledges we had made to the people in 1878. We got up the syndicate, we made the contract with the millionaires, the contractors who built the road so successfully. We made that contract, and we were told our policy was altogether erroneous, that we were ruining the country, that our course was visionary and reckless, that the credit of Canada would be gone, that we were putting a mortgage on every man's farm, and that the children yet unborn would suffer in consequence of the recklessness of the policy which was ruining the credit and destroying the prosperity of the country. Well, we went to the country in 1882, and the country, not frightened by the gloomy forebodings of hon. gentlemen opposite, not frightened by the statement that the country was going to be ruined, but feeling confidence and faith in the future of the country, that confidence and faith of which hon. gentlemen opposite are utterly devoid, said that policy is correct, and said: God-speed to the carrying out of that policy to the utmost extent. Since 1882, we have gone on, we have increased the burdens on the people of the country, we have still further—as is said by hon. gentlemen opposite—mortgaged the resources of the country, and on the 22nd February last, the country gave its voice on that policy with no uncertain sound. The two questions that were discussed on every platform and on every hustings, the two questions which decided which party was to govern this country for the next five years, were: first, the National Policy, and next, the Canadian Pacific Railway policy, and we have got the voice of the country, the unmistakable voice of the country, that the Pacific Railway policy was the true policy. If ever a people in the world, if ever an electorate in any free country in the world pronounced on a question, one way or the other, it was when the country, by electing a majority to this House, declared that the Canadian Pacific Railway policy was the true policy, that it was a policy which was calculated more than any other to develop the resources of Canada. And strange to say, wherever we go, whether we go to New York or across the Atlantic; whether we go on the stock exchange, or go to Amsterdam or Paris, or Berlin, we find that that policy has been supported in the most practical way by all the securities of Canada—securities increased in amount by millions, in consequence of the expenditure on that railway—being more valuable to Canada than they were before a single sixpence, before a single cent was expended by our Government on the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have the endorsement of the whole of the capital of the world; we have the endorsement of the people of Canada, and we have the endorsement of the representatives of the people in this House, showing that our railway policy was the policy for the future. It is true that we have reason to regret, from the various causes that have been mentioned, that the expected population has not come into the North-West in such large proportions as we could have wished; but certainly it was not in consequence of our railway policy. Our railway policy opened that country to the immigrant, and, therefore, it could not prevent or deter the immigrant from going into it. It was not in consequence of our land policy. You have heard the speech of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), and it is merely repeating what was known to the last Parliament, and is known to the people, that the land policy of the Government of Canada, the land policy of the Parliament of Canada, the land policy approved by the people of Canada, is the most liberal land policy that exists in the whole of North America. Then our general laws are all bad. Why, the law which now governs the North-West is the law which was passed by the hon. gentlemen opposite during the Government of Mr. Mackenzie, and, if the law is bad, the responsibility rests upon those gentlemen. But that law is not bad. The constitution, in the first place, which was given to that infant country, was a sufficient one for its purpose. The adoption of the principles of English law, and the application of those principles to the circumstances of a new country, contained in that measure, were well considered, and that they were well considered is proved by the fact that we, during our eight years of administration, have not altered them in any material degree. So that, if the immigrants have not gone into that country, if the country has not been settled so fast as we could have wished, certainly it is not to any of those causes that this unfortunate position of affairs is to be attributed. But there is a reason, which has been alluded to, but not sufficiently pressed to-night, although the people of the country understand it. The great and the chief reason why that country has not been settled, is the persistent slander of that country by the hon. gentlemen opposite—by their persistently decrying that country. I see the hon. gentlemen laugh. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island was not a member of Parliament in those days. Why, Mr. Speaker, you can remember—if I may be allowed to refer to the Speaker having been on the floor of the House except as Speaker—the debates which took place in those days; and my hon. friends on both sides, who were in Parliament at that time, can remember that it was said to be absurd for any people to go into that country when they had Kansas and Texas to go to.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, no.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hon. gentlemen say "no." I know they do not like to hear this, but litera scripta manet, and you will find it in Hansard, and in the days when there was no Hansard you will find it in the columns of the Globe. You will find that this country was systematically disparaged by those hon. gentlemen opposite. It was said that the immigrants should go to the older portions of North America. They should go where republicanism and all the benefits of republicanism had proved themselves so distinctly, that it would be absurd to suppose that the North-West could be filled up until the country to the south of us, equal in soil, superior in climate and having the whole of the United States at its back, was filled. And we all remember how these speeches of the hon. gentlemen opposite were published as advertisements of lands in the United States. We all can remember the admirable likeness of the hon. member for West Durham, that was published in Chicago, in St. Paul and elsewhere, showing that this was the great man. I must admit that the great man is written on that hon. gentleman's countenance. But in order to make the thing sell, there was a portrait of the hon. gentleman put on the front sheet, and it had its effect. The hon. gentleman's speech and the hon. gentleman's picture taken together were irresistible. They might have resisted the picture, they might have resisted the speech, but with that speech delivered by a man having that countenance—why, they both together carried the whole country. But, Mr. Speaker, I am told by the hon. gentleman that there was a breach of faith in consequence of my having made a speech, a portion of which is set out in the resolution now before the House. Well, Sir, I did make that speech, every word of it, and I hold to it now. You must remember, Mr. Speaker, that we were discussing a Bill before this Parliament, and which it was within our competence to pass, and I was asked the question whether the contract provided that the Dominion Parliament should not for twenty years pass any Act chartering a railway running to within fifteen miles of the boundary, or running in any direction south-west or west of south-west, and I said, yes, we can pass that. But will the contract, or will this Act, prevent the Province of Manitoba from passing any Act? I said, no. We have no power, we cannot do it, we cannot put it in the Act. The Province of Manitoba, like the Province of Ontario, or any other Province, has the power of passing Acts within their jurisdiction, and, therefore, we cannot in our legislation, we cannot in that Bill that was then before Parliament, make any provision to put any check or control upon the legislation of any Province. That was what I said. That was common sense, and everybody knew it who did not wish to draw a sinister meaning from plain language, and everybody understood what I meant, which was that the Act was simply carrying out what we had a right to pass, and that we did not expect in that Act to pass any clause preventing any Province from exercising its power of legislation. Now, we have heard a great deal from hon. gentlemen about the policy of the Government on the Canadian Pacific Railway, whether we were right or whether we were wrong in not listening to the warning. He told us his predictions. He is very glad to get up with the old woman's statement: "I told you so"; and he seems to rejoice whenever he can say that our policy has failed, that immigrants have not gone in, that our expectations about the future of that country have been fallacious. Oh, how he gloated over it. How the two gentlemen opposite belonging to the late Administration, gloated and rejoiced as if they had found a treasure, when they could say to us that our predictions were fallacious, much of the fallaciousness being caused by the course taken by the Opposition of that day, and, I am sorry to see, persisted in up to this moment by the same Opposition. The hon. gentleman says that we have been guilty of a great breach of faith, after the speeches made by my hon. friend who sits near me, myself, and by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior. But, in the very beginning of the hon. gentleman's speech, he said: The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) is mistaken; I would not take away a vested interest from either the greatest or the poorest man; I would protect those vested rights. But, said he, there may be cases with regard to those vested rights where, if the public interest demand it, those vested and vested rights should be overridden. The public interest must come first, and, of course, the private interest to be sacrificed must get compensation. Well, Mr. Speaker, why not apply that to a Province, as well as an individual? If the Government, and if Parliament, which has a check over the Government, believe that the general interests of the whole Dominion require that the private rights of an individual, or of a private corporation, or a public corporation, or a Province—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I say, Mr. Speaker, that if they believe that the general interests of the whole Dominion require that the private vested interests should yield, why the public interest must be paramount, and the vested interests of individuals must be fully and to the last farthing compensated for. Now, Sir, I have not remarked in the speech of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), nor yet in the speech of the hon. member for West Durham, that they addressed themselves to the resolution which is now before us. Our railway policy has been attacked, the faith of pledges has been spoken of, the rights of Manitoba have been dwelt upon, but the great question which this resolution brings before the House has scarcely been spoken to at all—certainly not by the hon. member for South Oxford, and very cursorily by the hon. member for West Durham. The question in this resolution is whether, under the circumstances, this Act which was passed by the Province of Manitoba, did not commit a great injury to the interests of the Dominion as a whole. That is the simple question—whether the Act passed by the Legislature of Manitoba, which was disallowed last year, was not an unmistakable injury, a great injury that could not be surmounted, to the interests of the Dominion as a whole. The Government made up their mind that the Act was injurious to the vital interests of Canada as a whole, and under their responsibility to Parliament, they recommended His Excellency to disallow it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Oh, but, says the hon. member for West Durham, this is despotism and there must be no despotism. Sir, there is no despotism in this country. The hon. gentleman said very truly that the Government of the day is merely a committee of this House. If the Government of the day acts improperly, it is liable to the censure of Parliament, and this motion is a direct censure upon the Government of the day. They have a right to say so, and the only consequence will be that the moment that it is said, the Provincial Legislature at its next meeting will pass that Act, and a new ministry here which will take the place of the old one that has improperly disallowed the Act, will at once advise His Excellency the Governor General to allow it to go into effect. The only consequence of the disallowance of an Act by the Administration is this: that it is liable to be reconsidered, to be reviewed, and to be approved of or censured by the representatives of the people at the very next Session of Parliament. This is the course adopted by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). He says we were wrong in disallowing that Act, he asserts that it was an improper policy and one that should be reversed. If this House thinks so, it will so express its opinion, and another Government will advise His Excellency the Governor General when Manitoba repasses those Acts, and they will be allowed to go into operation.

Mr. HESSON. Later on.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Next Session. There is no despotism—

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman seems to have misapprehended me when I spoke of despotism. My remark was in respect to the despotism of the railway company, not of the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The simple question for the House to decide is this: We are representatives of the whole Dominion, representing every Province from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to use a worn-out expression, and we are here to decide whether it was wise to allow the Province of Manitoba for a very natural, but we will say a selfish, purpose, to build railways to carry off the whole of the western trade of Canada from the great line of railway which at so much expense, and at so ruinous expense as hon. gentlemen opposite have stated, we have built for the purpose of securing one great line through Canadian territory from the Pacific, skirting our great lakes and carrying the riches of the great west, increased by the trade of Asia, of China and Japan, and ultimately of Australia, to our eastern ports. This great road, I say, will bring eastern traffic which has landed in British Columbia past Winnipeg, making it one of the greatest cities on this continent, past the Lake of the Woods and through the whole length of the great Province of Ontario, skirting Lake Superior and opening the mines of that vast region, and down to Montreal, Quebec, Halifax and St. John. Every Province is interested in keeping that trade along the line, both going east and west. Every Province is interested in keeping that trade for ourselves, and no one knows better than hon. gentlemen opposite that the Pacific Railway charter would not have been granted, that the land would not have been given, that the money would not have been voted and the loans would not have been made if it had been understood by the representatives of the older Provinces that the money was to be expended on an enterprise which might be bled at one hundred different points, so that by the time the traffic arrived at Montreal, it would be a miserable fragment of the magnificent stream of commerce that we had a right to expect to pass through Canada from one end to the other. Every member of this House and every man in the country knows that the charter, and all measures for the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway, would never have become law if every member of Parliament had known that instead of opening a great empire for the eastern Province and a country where our children could settle, we were to benefit New York, Baltimore, Boston, Portland, Chicago and that our trade was to be diverted to those points instead of coming in a full stream to Montreal or Quebec. The House and the country know this. We believe we were right, we are sure we were right in disallowing an Act of that kind. If the representatives of every Province of the Dominion think we were derelict in our duty, and hold that we ought to have handed over the commerce of our great west to Duluth and Chicago they will say so. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken said that the trade would go back to Sault Ste. Marie. The great interest of Chicago and the great railway interest would turn the stream far south of the Sault. New York, Boston, Baltimore, Portland and even as far south as the Mississippi would be the recipients of the great bulk of that trade, and while we had offered a fish we would have given a stone to the people of the Eastern Provinces. No; we are convinced our policy was right. We have confidence in it. We will, subject to the opinion of Parliament, not shirk from performing the same duty as representing the whole Dominion, and I am very much mistaken in this House, and in the people whom the members represent, if by an enormous majority our policy in the past and our avowed policy in the future shall not meet their hearty approbation.

Mr. DAVIES At this early hour of the morning I have no intention of inflicting a long speech on the House, and I do not think the flippant speech of the hon. gentleman, if I may say so without giving offence, on a subject which I think deserves a little more serious consideration at his hands, requires a very lengthy speech from me in reply. The lucid and convincing argument addressed by my leader requires no amplification at my hands. But one or two remarks fell from the hon. Premier which I do not propose to leave unchallenged. He has had brought home to him to-night, perhaps more clearly than heretofore, the fact that the promises he has made to the people of the North-West have not been fulfilled,—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have heard it one hundred times in this House.

Mr. DAVIES—and that the predictions of the hon. gentleman are as little likely to be fulfilled; that alike his predictions and his promises have been a failure. It has been made clear that neither with respect to immigration nor with respect to the trade which was promised to flow from the speedy construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, have the promises of the hon. gentleman been fulfilled, and the lamentable condition of the North-West, as pointed out by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is being brought home to his mind and to the minds of hon. gentlemen behind him, and the fact made clear that the policy in vogue in this country for the past three or four years of reckless expenditure, without regard to the ability of the people to pay, is one respecting which the people will require a halt to be called very soon. Sir, we are told that this policy of telling the truth about this country in the North-West is a policy of slander. I have heard it stated not only to-night, but for the four or five years during which I have been a member of Parliament, that we must not tell the truth about this country at all, that the facts are to be disguised. I took in my hand this evening a copy of a paper which, until a short time ago, was the organ of the right hon. gentleman himself. It is now released from party trammels, and says it is released from party ties, and I find that that paper, which for the past ten or twelve years was the mouth-piece of the hon. gentleman and the exponent of his views, when those ties and trammels are removed is itself able to tell the honest truth about that country, sad though it may be. And, Sir, I will, with the permission of the House, read a paragraph or two to show what is the actual condition of things in that country at the present day—a condition of things which, if it is allowed to exist, will leave that country in a few years in a much worse condition than it is to-day; a condition of things which we think will be materially relieved and improved if the policy of repression which has been pursued by the government heretofore is altered, and the people are allowed to govern the country, as they should be allowed, according to the rights which the constitution gives them. Speaking of Manitoba, the Mail, of Thursday, 26th May, says:

“The census shows that numbers have already abandoned the country, and there is reason to believe that the exodus this year is of unprecedented proportions. The St. Paul Pioneer Press, of the 21st instant, contains a letter from its Bottineau, Dak., correspondent, who happens to be a Canadian, in which it is stated that no fewer than sixty settlers from Manitoba have moved into his district alone since 1st April, bringing with them 198 horses and cattle, together with farm machinery and household goods valued at $22,400, all of which, of course, were admitted duty free. The correspondent adds that ‘an almost unbroken stream’ of emigrants from Manitoba is crossing the boundary into Dakota and Minnesota; and, we regret to say, his story is corroborated by the testimony of residents in Manitoba who cannot be suspected of trying to injure that Province.”

That is a sad picture of this bright land of promise of which we have heard so much during the past few years—a picture not drawn by any of those dreadful Grits who sit on this side of the House, but a picture drawn by the paper which, until the other day, was the recognised organ of the right hon. gentleman, edited by the same gentleman then as now edits it, and a paper from which we at least may suppose, in speaking of matters outside of party politics, we will receive facts and statements that may be relied on by the people. If these statements are true, does the hon. gentleman suppose that they are to be answered by a speech such as he delivered to-night, a speech in which, with all due deference to him, I say that he begged the entire question before the House, and in which, with the exception of the few remarks at its close, wherein he stated that the Government had nailed their policy to the mast, he hardly referred to the resolutions at all. I regretted very much to hear the right hon. gentleman make that statement. He stated to-night, with regard to the pledge he had given in 1880, when the Canadian Pacific Railway charter was passed through this House, that no man in his sane senses could imagine that he gave the pledge which we supposed he had given, which the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me in this debate said they believed he had given. For myself I can put no construction upon his language except the construction put upon it by the leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). The Premier said at that time:

“In order to give them a chance we have provided that the Dominion Parliament—mind you, the Dominion Parliament, we cannot check any other Parliament; we cannot check Ontario, we cannot check Manitoba—shall, for the first ten years after the construction of the road, give their own road, into which they are putting so much money and so much land, a fair chance of existence.”

There was no inference could be drawn from that language used by the hon. gentleman but that he did not intend, either in his position as member of Parliament, or as the head of a committee of Parliament, as Premier, to check Manitoba if it legislated in that direction. Parliament could not check Manitoba, nor could the executive check Manitoba unless they acted in a manner at variance with the views which the hon. gentleman laid down there. But to show how those views were interpreted at the time, as I interpret them now, not by his opponents but by his trusted lieutenants, I need only refer to the language made use of a few days afterwards, in the course of the same debate, by the present Minister of the Interior, who put his construction on the language of the First Minister, and explained and amplified it to the House, and told what the First Minister did mean in stronger and clearer language than he employed himself. He said:

"The only guarantee which this company has under the contract, is that the traffic shall not be tapped far west on the prairie section, thus diverting the traffic away from their line to a foreign line. But there is nothing to prevent a railway being built in Manitoba within the Province that would carry the traffic to any railway that may tap it from the American side. That is the position with respect to this matter."

That is the understanding which his own followers formed at the time of the pledge made by the right hon. gentleman, and I will undertake to say that there is not a gentleman who listened to those two hon. gentlemen speaking, or one outside this House who read their speeches, but came to the conclusion that the policy of the Government was to leave the people of Manitoba to exercise their constitutional rights to charter railways within their Province wherever they pleased. We were giving a monopoly to the Canadian Pacific Railway in the far west, beyond the boundaries of Manitoba, but we were leaving that Province in the same position as the Province of Ontario, or any other Province, which can charter railways within their boundaries as they please. I say that was a distinct pledge. And what does the First Minister say to the subsequent pledge, made with his full concurrence, at the time he asked Parliament to vote $30,000,000 of the people's money in further aid of the Canadian Pacific Railway? Was there any ambiguity in the language then used by the then Minister of Railways, now the Minister of Finance? Did he or did he not state in unequivocal language that, if Parliament yielded to his demand and gave $30,000,000 in further aid of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that monopoly clause would cease to exist. I am not going to weary the House by reading an extract —

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. "Hear, hear." There are some hon. gentlemen who might read it for themselves, and perhaps, as it would do them some good, I will trouble the House with one sentence, and that the concluding one. And here I wish to remark that on that occasion the Minister of Railways was not only speaking as the mouth-piece of the Ministry, he proclaimed himself as the mouth piece of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. He was announcing a compact, as it were, between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on the one hand, and the people of Canada on the other, and he says to the Parliament of Canada, if you will give the $30,000,000 which the company requires to complete the construction of this great transcontinental road, the company are prepared, as soon as the line is built north of Lake Superior, to give up this monopoly which is so hateful to the people. The language he used was:

"Such is the confidence of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the power of the Canadian Pacific Railway to protect itself that when the line is constructed north of Lake Superior, the Government feel it will not be incumbent upon them to preserve the position they have hitherto felt bound to preserve, that of refusing to consent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba, connecting it with American railways to the south. I can give no better evidence to the House and the country of the advanced position which we consider this great enterprise of the Canadian Pacific Railway has attained, than when I say I feel it is consistent with what we owe to the people of this country and to that great national work, that the Government should not deem it incumbent on themselves to pursue the restrictive policy within the Province of Manitoba which we have hitherto been obliged to maintain."

Sir, if the hon. gentleman had searched the dictionary he could not have chosen clearer words to express the views he was then conveying to the House and the country that the policy of the Government had been changed, and that thereafter disallowance would cease, and the people of Manitoba would be allowed to exercise unrestrictedly their constitutional rights to charter companies to build competitive railway lines in that country. There was no doubt about it. It was understood by both sides of the House, and by the country, and it was cheered to the echo by the hon. gentleman's followers as a master-piece of statesmanship. And the same gentleman comes down to-day and swallows his words, and asks the House to accept the statement that it will not be in the interest of the country that they should reverse that policy. But, Sir, I find that not only was the hon. gentleman's speech at that time so understood, but it has continued to be understood by his colleagues in the Government that this policy of disallowance was to cease. I find that the Minister of the Interior, addressing the Young Men's Conservative Club of Winnipeg, in the month of March last, stated that he had always understood it to be the policy of the Government to abandon this policy of disallowance as soon as possible. He said:

"I have always regarded the policy as a temporary one. I have always regarded the statement of Sir Charles Tupper, when Minister of Railways, and when urging the $20,000,000 loan upon the acceptance of Parliament, as embodying the views of the Government. That statement was, that the granting of that loan would secure the completion of the railway some four or five years before the time fixed in the original contract, and thus render possible the abandonment of the policy of disallowance at an earlier period."

That is the view of one of the leading members of the Ministry given only a few months ago. That is the view the Ministry authorised him to present to the country when the people of that part of the Dominion were polling their votes. They, therefore, voted in the North-West under a Ministerial guarantee that the disallowance policy was to cease. The hon. member for Selkirk stated that they were elected in the Province of Manitoba to oppose the Government unless the Government abandoned disallowance, and the paper from which I quote the speech of the Minister of the Interior makes comments of nearly a column in length upon the announcement he then made, and triumphantly asks the Liberal party of the North-West: What more do you want? The hon. Minister of the Interior gained his point by declaring that to be the policy of the Government which the hon. First Minister repudiates to-night, and the people of the North-West voted on the assumption that the policy then announced was the right policy, whereas the very contrary is announced to-night. But we heard the First Minister say that this policy is maintained because it is for the benefit of the eastern Provinces, forsooth.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. For the whole Dominion.

Mr. DAVIES. And he mentioned the eastern Provinces. The hon. gentleman must think us a lot of gullible people down there. There is no man from the eastern Provinces who would maintain for a moment that the maintenance of the policy of disallowance would benefit them. The hon. gentleman repeated the names of the winter ports which were going to be benefited by the Canadian Pacific Railway. He mentioned three, I think, Shippegan, St. Andrew's and Louisbourg. The Minister of Finance, when Minister of Railways, used to roll these names out one after another. He made the people at each of them believe that they were going to have the winter port of the Canadian Pacific Railway; but he mentioned another to-night. He told us there was the port of Old Harry, the depths and soundings of which I suppose he understands very well. However it may suit this port of Old Harry, the argument, to talk seriously, is perfect nonsense. The eastern Provinces of the Dominion, the hon. gentleman knows, are not very seriously interested in the maintenance of this disallowance policy. They prefer, as I hope all true Liberals prefer, that every Province should be allowed unrestrictedly to exercise its constitutional rights within its bounds, unless the exercise of these rights can be clearly shown to be in opposition to the public good. No attempt whatever has been made to answer the arguments of the leader of the Opposition; but the hon. the Finance Minister has told us that the policy of the Government is approved at Amsterdam and at Berlin and at some other places. Sir, it is not of great matter to this House whether the people of Amsterdam, or Berlin, or any other foreign part, approve of the policy of the Government. What we are more interested in knowing, is whether the people of Manitoba approve of the policy of the Government in this regard. I think that even the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) will assent to the truth of the statement, that the people of Manitoba know a little more about their rights and interests than do even the people of the eastern Provinces. I think he will admit that in local matters, which the constitution has wisely relegated to them, they had better be left alone, and it is much more preferable to have the appreciation of the people of Manitoba upon a matter which affects their interests than the endorsement of the people of Amsterdam, or Berlin, or any other European city. It has been borne home to my mind, beyond all reasonable doubt, that this policy which the Government has pursued is a policy simply in the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway line. The hon. the First Minister heard it intimated that, possibly, there was a secret agreement between the Government and Canadian Pacific Railway magnates at the time the contract was entered into. He had the opportunity of denying to-night whether that secret agreement was made. If there was a secret agreement, it was a disgraceful piece of statesmanship; if there was not, the right hon. gentleman in replying to the leader of the Opposition should have stated so. We have a policy continued which is in the interest solely of a corporation, which has been proved, even by members supporting the Government—the hon. member for Selkirk among others—to be antagonistic to the people of Canada, and to all the people concerned in the building up of the great North-West Territories; and the hon. gentleman has chosen, when the interests of the people are on the one side and those of the Canadian Pacific Railway are on the other, to give the latter the preference. I hope the hon. members of this House will not follow the hon. gentleman's lead on this occasion. I may have my doubts whether they will or not, but I hope there will not be a man from Manitoba who will record his vote in favor of disallowance. If such an hon. member should be found, and his conduct afterward be endorsed by his constituents, all I have to say is that I have misunderstood the reports I have found in the daily papers of Winnipeg, which give the opinion of the whole Province. It is not alone the interests of Winnipeg, which the Finance Minister says the Government has done so much to build up, that are concerned. The interests of the great Province of Manitoba are in question, and are being ignored, and, if we are to believe the First Minister, so long as he continues in his place, a continuance of that policy may be expected.

Sir DONALD SMITH. I intend addressing but few words to the House, and hope I shall keep within the limit proper to a member interested in the Canadian Pacific Railway. The right hon. the First Minister will recollect that when, at an unfortunate time for Minnesota—that is, when, on the collapse of the Jay Gould projects in 1872, the St. Paul and Pacific Railway being constructed in that State, stopped short about one hundred miles from the International boundary—I, with his consent, made some enquiries regarding the possibility of continuing the road through to Manitoba. I was thus led to look into the possibilities of that country, crossing it over as I had to do so often between Winnipeg and St. Paul, on the way to and from Montreal. Then, after a while, I succeeded in inducing some friends to join with me in taking up, but not for four or five years, the St. Paul and Pacific Railway, now the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway. Mr., now Sir George Stephen, was one of those who embarked in the enterprise, and at that time we certainly did not expect to make much profit out of it, but we did desire, and that very earnestly, to have a road into our own North-West.

Contrary to the wish of our associates, we made it a condition that it should be continued on to the boundary to meet a line at Pembina, a proposition which they thought was very foolish indeed, as it would result in no profit, but in a loss to the company. The First Minister will bear me out, I am sure, when I say that Sir George Stephen and the other members of the so-called syndicate—the gentlemen who became a syndicate afterwards—did not approach the Government with regard to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but that the Government had tried in Europe and elsewhere to get others to take it up, capable of carrying it through, but did not succeed in this.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Sir DONALD SMITH. I say distinctly that the gentlemen who undertook the charter, although at first unwilling to assume the responsibility, ultimately consented, more with a view of assisting to open up the country than from any expectation of gain to be derived from it.

Mr. MILLS. When?

Sir DONALD SMITH. At the time the arrangements were entered into—in 1880, I think. I do not come here with any figures, statistics or dates, but wish to say plainly, in few words, that while the idea appears to prevail in this House, as it does throughout the country, that the gentlemen who undertook the contract for building the Canadian Pacific Railway have been dipping their hands very freely into the public Treasury, and have made vast profits by their connection with it, the actual facts are quite otherwise; and that as regards two of the individuals most actively engaged in it, their income to-day is at least $100,000 less annually than it was at the time they undertook the work, and that they would be so much richer to-day had they not pledged every sixpence they possessed, with the view of carrying on the enterprise to a completion. Some hon. gentlemen opposite appear to think that if Manitoba had roads into the United States, we would be in a much better position to get settlers into the country than with the road only through our own territory. Now, how was it before the Canadian Pacific Railway was completed to Winnipeg? How many of those emigrants who came out, intending to settle in Manitoba, found their way there? Having to run the gauntlet of the Northern Pacific, the St. Paul and Manitoba, and other railroads west of Chicago, the inducements held out to them for settling there were so great that only a small percentage of them ever reached Manitoba; and one great reason for pushing on the road north of Lake Superior, and of having an unbroken line of railway through our own territory, was that we should be free from such drawbacks as those spoken of, and thus be pretty certain of getting into the North-West all who intended to go there from Europe and elsewhere. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) said that the settlement in the North-West had come principally from the eastern Provinces, and that consequently we have gained comparatively little. Does not the hon. gentleman know that a very large portion indeed of the settlers in the North-West of America, in Minnesota and Dakota, have come from the middle and eastern States? If he does not know it, I can assure him it is the case; and when we consider that the population of the United States is upwards of fifty millions, is it at all surprising that with such numbers to draw from there should be a great many more, in a given time, going into Minnesota and Dakota, than we have been able to transfer into our own North-West out of a population of five millions? Again, is not the population in the middle and western States made up greatly of Germans and Scandinavians, and has not this been one of the great factors in inducing others of their countrymen to come out? To some extent it has been the case also with us, and it will be so still more as our country fills up. It would have been very easy, even were we not aware that it is the case, for anyone who heard the leader of the Opposition speak of the North-West and of what he at one time thought, and still affirms, would be sufficient for it—that is, partial railway communication supplemented by water courses—to know that the hon. gentleman has not thought it worth his while to visit that country. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will readily admit that, until he did visit the North-West, he had very little idea of what that country was, and that his policy afterwards was in some measure changed. So I have no doubt it would have been with the hon. leader of the Opposition had he gone there, but there are people who do not desire to be convinced, and I regret to say I am almost inclined to believe that the hon. gentleman did not wish to see for himself and to be convinced that we have there a country which every patriotic Canadian ought to be proud of, and aid in advancing. We have been told by the hon. gentleman from P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) that we need not care for the opinion of Amsterdam and the money centres of Europe. But does not the hon. gentleman know the bearing of the opinion in these centres on our credit, and that if we deery our own country and its resources we cannot expect those outside to think well of either? As regards the agitation in the North-West, I believe that were we to do away with disallowance to-morrow, we should have very great difficulty in getting any more money from the other side of the Atlantic for enterprises, especially in the North-West. If we are to open up the North-West to the United States and lead our trade into that channel, why think of building a short line to the ports of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia? The leader of the Opposition was very facetious. He spoke in a vein of pleasantry, and I am sure we were all delighted to see him so condescend, and I think he would live more and more in the affection of his fellow citizens if he would more frequently show that milk of human tenderness, that sympathy for his fellow men, and that love of his country which is due from everyone who is a citizen of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. LANDRY. It is with great reluctance I rise to make a few observations.

Sir DONALD SMITH. There is one thing I omitted which I really intended to say. It has been insinuated that there may have been some secret understanding between the Government and the so-called Canadian Pacific syndicate, by which promises were made which did not appear in the contract. I can say, without hesitation, that this is not so, and that in all the negotiations everything was straightforward and above board.

Mr. LANDRY. I was going to say that it was with great reluctance I rose to address a few words to you on this subject. I do it the more reluctantly because I see there is a general disposition to have a vote taken in order that the House may adjourn. However, I think it is only right that I should give expression to a few thoughts that have occurred to me as I listened to the speech of the hon. gentleman from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies). He professed to speak on behalf of the Maritime Provinces, and to say that there was nobody in those Provinces but believed and knew that the policy of the Government in reference to the disallowance of these Acts from Manitoba was not for the benefit of the Maritime Provinces or the eastern portion of this Dominion. He also referred to Manitoba as being in a lamentable condition. I do not desire to enter into any details at all, though I think details could be easily given to prove that his qualification of the condition of Manitoba as lamentable is not a correct one. I cannot understand how anyone, who has been in this Parliament as long as that hon. gentleman has, and have heard the discussions on the floor of this House, can come to the conclusion that Manitoba is in a lamentable condition. Make a comparison between Manitoba and anyone of the Maritime Provinces, or any one of the old Provinces of this Dominion. Make a comparison between the growth and development of our older Provinces and the Province of Manitoba. I ask the hon. gentleman and those who will read his speech, to take the growth of the whole of the North-West, including Manitoba, during the seventeen years previous to its being introduced into the Union, and compare it with its growth and progress during the sixteen or seventeen years after it was taken into the Union, and see what a difference there is in the prosperity and progress of the country. By such a comparison it will be found that that country has prospered with much greater rapidity during the last period than during the first. I would ask them also to answer what has been the cause of this great prosperity since it has become a Province of this Dominion as compared with the progress made before. Why, Sir, we were told to-night that, in five years, the population had increased something like 74 per cent. Now, compare that with the progress made in the other Provinces, and can you tell us that Manitoba is in a lamentable condition, so far as the increase in its population is concerned? Take the Province of New Brunswick, from which I have the honor to come; in ten years, I think, the population increased something like 13 or 14 per cent., while in five years the Province of Manitoba, with all these disadvantages which are alleged to exist, augmented its population 74 per cent., which would have been in the ten years seven or eight times, perhaps nine times, as much as the Province of New Brunswick; and I think the same comparison may apply to Nova Scotia, Quebec and Ontario. Why, I venture to say, though I have not made the calculation accurately, that the Province of Ontario, during the last decade, did not increase more than 18 or 20 per cent. Another fact that cannot be disputed is that the Province of Manitoba to-day has a greater number of miles of railway according to its population than any other Province in the Dominion. Is that a lamentable state of affairs? Who has contributed the money to build these railways in Manitoba? I dare say the people of that Province have contributed all they reasonably could, but it has been chiefly contributed by the rest of the Dominion, in subsidies that have been granted by this Parliament and sanctioned by the people of this country. If that be true, why should we say to-day that the condition of Manitoba is deplorable? Hon. gentlemen opposite declared, over and over again, that the Government was building the railway too rapidly, but now that it is completed they approve and demand that extended facilities be afforded for more railway accommodation. We admit the wisdom of all that we have done, and we think the money has been well invested. Why, if we consider for a moment all that has been done for that Province, all that has been done for this great territory which we purchased at so small a price, when we consider its extent, it does appear to me that the people of the Maritime Provinces, on behalf of whom my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island undertook to speak, will be satisfied that a good deal has been done for Manitoba, and they will not believe that it is in the condition that has been alleged by some hon. gentlemen. Why, Sir, we have built the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we have purchased the North-West Territory. We have surveyed its public lands, we have improved its rivers and navigation, we have fed its Indians, we have quelled a rebellion, we have given it a constitution and representation, and we are contributing yearly subsidies for its local wants. A large amount of money has been paid for the purpose of encouraging immigration, and large amounts have been expended in various ways for the purpose of developing and ensuring the progress of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. Sir, we think that great success has attended our efforts in that direction, so great a success, at any rate, that it has caused some jealousy in the Maritime Provinces. If there was an argument that was used with more persistence than another by hon. gentlemen opposite in the Maritime Provinces during the last election, it was that too much money was being expended in the North-West Territory and Manitoba, and the Maritime Provinces were not deriving any benefit from it, that they were being bled for the advantage of Manitoba and the North-West; and yet to-day, some of them have the effrontery to come to this Parliament and show by their voices that everything they said upon the hustings on that occasion was not true, that we have not yet done enough for the North-West, but we must do something more. I do not mean to say that we have done too much for Manitoba but at the same time I do say that we have done a great deal, that we have assisted very much in its material development. And if to-day the Government believe that the charters granted by the Local Legislature of Manitoba should not be sanctioned because it would be to the detriment of the Dominion generally, I for one am prepared to sustain them in their policy, and to vote against this resolution.

Mr. ROYAL. It is not my intention to say more than a few words on this occasion, although the subject is so interesting to Manitoba and to Canada at large. Other members of this House have referred to the agitation now existing in Manitoba in respect to disallowance, and I believe that every hon. gentleman opposite tried to make it appear that there was a unanimous feeling in that Province on this matter. Well, Mr. Speaker, having spent seventeen years of my life in that Province, and having witnessed personally its progress both commercially and from an agricultural point of view, I may perhaps be allowed to say that I know something of the feelings of the people. During the seventeen years I have lived in that Province I have been in political life, and I think I am able to say that in respect to this question of disallowance, there is far from unanimity existing among the people. Of course I do not pretend to say there is not an agitation. My Province, unfortunately, has been the theatre of agitations for a great many years. We have had the Farmers' Union agitation, we have had the better terms agitation, we have had the Hudson Bay Railway agitation. I suppose we are bound to have an agitation every year. Well, at the last general election, in my own county, where the population is, perhaps, most interested in having as many railways as possible traversing it, the only two questions of importance which were discussed during the campaign were the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway and the Riel matter. It was my lot also to be a candidate after I had sustained the policy of the Government with respect to the Riel question. It was also my lot to be a candidate again and to be elected by a population fully one-third of whom are French-speaking half-breeds. Well, the Hudson Railway question was discussed at nearly every meeting during the campaign, which lasted over seven weeks, which in fact lasted over three months, and only three times was the question of disallowance discussed, or at least only incidentally mentioned. On account of the agitation in Winnipeg, and Winnipeg has been the point in Manitoba most favored by this Government as well as by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, some of my opponents wished to bring up this question, and of course the question was put to me whether I was in favor of disallowance or not. I stated that I was in favor of the discontinuance of that policy, but not before such time as the protection given by Canada to the railway company was thought to have no ground for being continued. I stated on every occasion that so long as that protection should be considered necessary for the maintenance of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which I considered to be a national undertaking, I would be in favor of that protection. I was returned by over 300 majority. My only colleague who is in sympathy with my views and in harmony with the Government on this question is the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), and he was returned by acclamation. So much for the unanimity of feeling in the Province of Manitoba. Now, with respect to later events. We have seen a delegation from Manitoba to Ottawa, to interview the Ministers on this question. Who were those delegates; what part of the Province sent them; were those delegates from the rural districts as well as from the cities? They were delegates only from Winnipeg. The purport of their remonstrances and representations centred in Winnipeg. In fact, it was impossible for any one who attended the meetings and interviews at Ottawa not to be of the opinion that some of the delegates at all events would be satisfied if Winnipeg had railway rates cut in her favor; they wanted to make, and I believe their contention may be to a certain extent a rational and reasonable one, Winnipeg a favored centre as regards railway rates. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company declared that they had no favor to show Manitoba or any other territory in the Dominion; that their tariff was a settled one and gave favorable terms to every city. Those delegates were sent here from Winnipeg, and not from the rural districts of the Province. After their return to Winnipeg it was thought a mass meeting would advance the interests of the agitation. Circulars were sent out; notices were published in the newspapers calling on the reeves of all the municipalities either to attend a public meeting themselves or send a representative. In an Ottawa paper of this morning we read the following:—

"WINNIPEG, 25th.—The managers of the anti-monopoly meeting, which was held in Trinity Hall to-night, were greatly disappointed. Although invitations had been sent out to over one hundred of the mayors and reeves of the different municipalities throughout the Province to attend, only some five or six put in an appearance. Mayor Jones presided, and gave a history of the Winnipeg delegates' interview with the Government at Ottawa, as shown. Mr. Brock and the other delegates followed, all going over the same ground. Telegrams were read from prominent men in different parts of the Province, some favoring and others against disallowance."

Mr. WATSON. Have you seen the report sent down from Winnipeg, and published to-night?

Mr. ROYAL. I have heard part of that report read by the hon. gentleman, but this is another report. We know very well that in Lisgar there was a meeting held last week, and at that meeting, which was well attended by men of all parties, resolutions were passed favoring disallowance. In fact I believe, notwithstanding all that has been said upon the lamentable state of affairs in Manitoba, there are some patriotic men there, some men who believe that Manitoba is only a portion of Canada, that if Manitoba has been favored by the Government with railways, with better terms, and in every respect placed on an equality with the other Provinces, it has no right to rebel and more especially to do as the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) stated it would do to-night. No, I believe in Manitoba, with the exception of a few hot-headed politicians and ruined real estate men, the bulk of the people are patriotic men who well understand the position of the country and the interest of their own Province. With respect to disallowance and the assertions of hon. gentlemen opposite, some persons seek to adopt the same methods of opposition as they would with respect to a tariff policy. We know very well that this Dominion is composed of different Provinces which have different interests, some industrial, some agricultural and some in other directions. When the tariff applies to all and an agitation is made in one Province against the general tariff, the proposition is exactly the same as is that in the present case. Would hon. gentlemen opposite countenance such an agitation? Would they not look upon it as disloyal agitation? We have a right to grumble, to forward petitions and to show that some measure for the general good of Canada deals too harshly in some of its parts with Manitoba; but I am sure petitions will never go to the extent foreshadowed by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). The unanimity of feeling in Manitoba with respect to disallowance may be inferred from these two facts.

Now, with respect to the agitators. With the permission of the House I will read a few extracts from newspapers in order to show that those who are at the bottom of this agitation have changed their minds at different times. The Free Press which is the organ of the Reform party in Manitoba, on the 20th December, 1880, said with respect to the monopoly clause,—

Mr. MITCHELL. Question or adjournment.

Mr. ROYAL. It is not my intention to inflict a longer speech than I can avoid at this time of the morning. I will accordingly content myself to say that the Free Press in 1880 entertained a different opinion from that which it entertains to-day. The Free Press is the exponent of the views of the Reform party in the Province of Manitoba and it was decidedly in favor of disallowance. Here is the language at the date aforesaid:

"The one article in the (C. P. R.) agreement to which the Times appears to have some objection, is that which gives the syndicate power to build branch lines from any point to any other point in the Dominion, while independent companies are prohibited from going within fifteen miles of the international boundary. Even about this, however, our contemporary is only half-hearted. It does not object to the power thus conferred upon the syndicate of running lines to the boundary, but thinks there should be no discrimination between them and other companies. As a matter of fact the distinction is scarcely worth discussion in view of the other mighty interests concerned in the bargain."

Now, later on, in the month of January, it reiterated those views on this subject in the following terms:—

"We have never regarded the privileges respecting branch lines conferred upon the Stephen syndicate as in any way obnoxious. The extension of our railway system to the international boundary at points west of Winnipeg to meet and tap the American railways cannot, in the nature of things, be fraught with those evils whose contemplation has disturbed some minds. With the Canadian Pacific Railway, constructed even to Thunder Bay, and with the syndicate in control, the inevitable tendency must be to send the products of Montana, Dakota and Minnesota through Canadian territory to the water outlet. It is no reasonable to suppose that the owners of the Canadian Pacific would send freight to the lake through the United States, and in doing so share the receipts with rival railway organisations, when they have an outlet of their own through Canadian territory. The inference is plain, that it would be entirely in their own interest to divert to the Canadian Pacific all the American traffic they could command. The St. Paul and Manitoba road is much more likely to become a feeder of the Canadian Pacific, when the Stephen syndicate controls the latter, than vice versa."

The Free Press has stated to a large extent the agitations we have had in the Province of Manitoba. The Free Press was at the bottom of the Farmer's Union and several other agitations, and the construction of the Hudson's Bay Railway was as much spoken of by that paper as anti-disallowance is to-day. On the 12th of May, after having done all its editors could do to favor the agitation, the Free Press stated that even if the disallowance were discontinued it would not place the Province in a better state; that the effect of the existence of the interstate Commerce Bill in the United States was such that there was no result to be hoped for from the discontinuance of disallowance. I will quote the following from the issue of the 12th instant:

Mr. ROYAL,

"But come to the boundary then what? Until the Inter-state Commerce Bill be abolished with its discrimination against long hauls, it will be impossible to compete with Canadian Pacific Railway rates to the seaboard. We may get our connection with the United States railway system, but as long as the Canadian Pacific Railway has the advantage of cutting on long haul rates at the expense of the short, it can laugh at our connection and maintain its own in spite of anything that can be done in the way of competition. Has Mr. Norquay thought of this? By all means get to the boundary if we can; but in the meantime a greater enterprise, and of more immediate and substantial advantage is awaiting that assistance which the Province may give without a grudge in order that it may be carried on to successful completion."

So much for the character of the agitation which it is said at present reigns supreme in Manitoba. But, Sir, if these agitators were in earnest, there is a very simple method for them to ask a remedy for the grievance, and that remedy is to be found in the Canadian Pacific Railway Act. It is within the knowledge of every member of this House that no petition has ever been sent from Manitoba against the tariffs of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—no petitions to any member of this House, or to the Government, with respect to the crushing effect—as the word goes—of that monopoly. If politics were not at the bottom of that agitation, I believe the people of Manitoba had a very simple way of asking for the redress of the grievance, and it was to petition the Privy Council with respect to the rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway. From these few observations you may infer what is the truth with respect to the unanimity of feeling which hon. gentlemen opposite say exists in the Province of Manitoba on this question, and to such an extent that in the eyes of some people we are on the verge of a revolution. There is no such thing in existence in the Province of Manitoba. It has been stated that the Grand Trunk Railway would prove the salvation of the North-West. Now, every hon. gentleman who read the report of the last annual meeting of the shareholders of that company at London, and read the remarks made by a certain Mr. Abbott, will know what is in store for Manitoba and the North-West if they are given over to the tender mercies of that institution. That gentleman took great pride in stating that the Grand Trunk Railway had carried nine hundred immigrants to Dakota and Texas, and prevented them from going to the Canadian North-West, which he represented to be an unfertile land and a country of perpetual winter. I believe I am in accord with the great majority of my constituents; I am in accord with my own feelings with respect to the interests of my Province and of Canada as a whole, when I say that I shall vote against the resolution of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson).

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am one of those who hold a contract sacred. I believe it is the duty of private individuals faithfully to carry out a contract, and if it is the duty of private individuals much more is it the duty of the Government to carry out faithfully and fully any compact they enter into. If there was anything in the Act of Parliament by which this contract was created, anything in the legislation of this House which bound them to a policy of disallowance, then I would say, by all means either carry out that policy or else by mutual agreement pay such a sum as would compensate the company for allowing it to lapse. However, Sir, there is no understanding of anything of that sort. There is nothing in the Act by which this contract was created, nothing in the legislation of this House that gives any sanction to the idea that such an agreement was ever entered into. On the other hand, we have the statement of the hon. the First Minister, as well as the statement of the Minister of the Interior, that such action was never contemplated, that this policy of refraining from granting charters to railway companies was only intended to apply to the North-West, and not to the organised Provinces, and it was on that statement and understanding that Parliament sanctioned the granting of the contract. Such being the case, we have nothing of that kind to deal with, but we have simply to deal with the question on its own merits. A great deal has been said about the immense benefits that the building of the railway has conferred upon the country. I am willing to grant to the fullest extent all that has been said. I agree heartily with the statement of the Finance Minister with regard to the stupendous nature of the work which has been accomplished. It is a stupendous work. It was a great and a plucky undertaking. It is true that the company had all the resources of the country before them, but even with all that it was a great undertaking to build that road. The company are entitled to all the credit for successfully carrying it out, and I may state, too, that after having had the privilege of riding over it, it is a marvellously smooth road to ride upon. But, Sir, there are other considerations. While we all wish the Canadian Pacific Railway Company well, and value the work they have done at its true value, the country is also to be considered. Now, I want to draw the attention of the House for a few minutes to a question that has not been mooted to night. You are aware that the road, as it now runs, is not built on the route on which it was originally intended to run. That route was surveyed at the time the hon. Alexander Mackenzie led the Government, and it was selected by probably the best engineer in Canada. It was chosen because it was considered the most advantageous to the country, and when we look at the physical features of the country we can see that it was wisely chosen as the one best calculated to promote the development and settlement of the country, to bring immigration there, and to serve the interests of the country in the highest degree. Anyone who has been in that country or who looks at the map knows that the route as originally surveyed ran for a 1,000 or 1,200 miles through the most fertile part of the country, which is destined to be settled and to become a great agricultural country, and it must become such if this Dominion of ours is ever to be able to carry the great load of debt which it has assumed. But in 1882 the Government asked from this House the privilege of allowing the company to change the route. The House granted them that privilege, and the route was changed. Now, I do not wish to be understood as blaming the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for seeking that change. It was their right and privilege to make it if they thought it to be to their advantage. But it was otherwise with the Government of the country. It was their duty to decide which route was most in the interest of the country and to insist that the road should be built on that route. Now, I hold that anyone who looks at the physical features of the country must come to the conclusion that the route originally surveyed was the route on which the road should have been built. But the company evidently thought a more southerly route would be more in their interest, in securing the Australian and Asiatic trade, of which we have heard so much, and which I earnestly hope they will secure. They seemed anxious to obtain that instead of developing the farming resources of the country, and the Government allowed them to do it. Now, let me draw the attention of the House to the route on which the road is built. You are aware that what is called the Great American Desert drops down into our great North-West, where it ends. North of that, on the line where the original route was surveyed, we have a fertile country; but anyone who has travelled over the railway and is acquainted with the country through which it runs—I speak not only from what I have seen myself, but from personal knowledge of others who are familiar with the country—knows that beyond Manitoba there is little or no land fit for general farming on the route of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I know that this is a startling statement, but I make it without fear of contradiction. From Winnipeg to Moose Jaw the fertile land extends for only 393 miles, and beyond that point there is really no good land fit for general settlement until you get within 120 or 125 miles from the Rocky Mountains. That is, for about 307 miles from Moose Jaw to Gleichen the country is a sterile desert. The soil is there, and if the climatic conditions could be changed it would be fertile. But it is well known that no rain of any account falls in that country, as is the case with the North American Desert to the south of the boundary line. I believe that when the world becomes so populous that people require elbow room water will be brought all the way from the Rocky Mountains to irrigate the land, and then it can be cultivated and will become fertile; but that is a long way in the future, and we have to consider now what is best for the present interest of the country. After leaving that stretch of country you come into the ranching country, where the land is more productive, where rain falls, and everything exists for the production of crops; but the experience of those who have tried farming there, is that it is at such a high altitude, and the dangers from summer frosts are so extreme, that it is not safe for any man to venture his all in trying to carry on general farming there. Such are the features of the country, and I repeat that when the company sought the change of route, it must have been because they despaired of settling the fertile part of the North-West at an early day, and therefore decided to try and grasp the Australian and Asiatic trade in lieu thereof. But I claim that when they made that change the road ceased to be a national road, and, instead of being located so as to promote the highest interests of the country, it was simply built with the prime object of securing the through traffic for the benefit of the company which owns it. In what position does the country stand now? If we are to bear the load of debt which we have incurred, the country will have to build another road to do the work which the Canadian Pacific Railway was originally intended to do, and which according to their contract they were bound to do, but which the Government relieved them of. There is a road building as fast as the circumstances of the company permit them to build it on the identical route of the Canadian Pacific Railway as originally chosen; I refer to the Manitoba and North-Western Railway. The sooner that road is built by the company the better, because until it is built we cannot hope for the rapid settlement of the North-West. In view of these facts, is it not too much to determine that that road, when it reaches the Canadian Pacific Railway must stop, and the company must depend on one road for an outlet, and must not have the benefit of any competition whatever in carrying their freight to the seaboard. Then there is another consideration. The Canadian Pacific Railway is not the only great railway in the country. We have an old established road that has borne the burdens and heat of the day, that commenced the enterprise of railway building when the country was nearly new. I refer to the Grand Trunk Railway, and I need not tell the House that the Bill now before it to enable the Grand Trunk Railway to carry its line through to the Sault and connect there with the road running to the North-West is one which is fairly entitled to our support. Is it not too much to ask that one road should have the monopoly of that country and that an old established road like the Grand Trunk should not be allowed to enter. A great deal has been said about diverting traffic to the United States, and that is a very plausible pretension, but there is very little in it. What freight is there to be carried away? Do hon. gentlemen expect the people of Manitoba to go to the States and buy their goods in the face of our tariff? The thing is absurd. We have built a Chinese wall which will prove an effectual bar to any such trading. Are we to fear that the grain and other traffic of the North-West will be carried down south and around by Chicago? That supposition is more preposterous than the other. It is well known the traffic always seeks the shortest and most accessible routes, and we have happily the shortest route to the market. There is another consideration which affects Ontario. The Pacific Railway to-day only touches a corner of the settled parts of Ontario, and of the parts that are likely to be settled, but with the extension to the Sault we would have a road from the Sault running nearly the whole length of Ontario. To those who have been over the Canadian Pacific it is well known that probably the finest timber in the world will be found on the route of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but before we can avail ourselves of the timber we must have a market for it. Where is the market for it now? It is not in the Eastern part, because we get timber between here and Manitoba. Is it going away West to Australia and Asia? That may be possible, but, judging from the small progress made on the Pacific coast cutting and utilising timber I do not think there is much market there for it. If there is to be a market for that lumber it will have to be on these western prairies of our own, and a market will have to be created by settling up the country. Had the road been built on the route originally contemplated, as soon as you struck the Rocky Mountains you struck the timber, and all along the survey for 1,000 miles you have a market for the railway to distribute the timber and lumber to the settlers who would need them, while now, if the lumber is brought by the Canadian Pacific Railway, it must be brought down along one side of an acute angled triangle over 600 miles of country where little of it is needed, and then it will have to be carried back along the other side of the triangle 700 miles for distribution. Taking these things into consideration, we can see what the country has lost by the change of route. The company have saved something in the length of the road, but if you take into consideration the sharp curves and the heavy grades, I doubt very much if they have saved anything by saving distance, and possibly a road may yet be built on the line originally surveyed. Now, a word on the general principle of disallowance. I believe that the disallowance clause should never have been allowed into the Confederation Act. I believe that it was a great mistake, and that it was never intended it should be used. This will appear more evident if we will take into consideration the fact that it was from the Local Parliaments this Parliament received its power. It was found that the Provinces were willing to give up part of their rights to this House. Certain of their rights they reserved for themselves, so that this House is really the creation of the Local Houses, and the Local Legislatures are not the creation of this House, and when this Government infringes on the rights and privileges which the Local Governments reserved to themselves, it is acting against the constitution. The First Minister has claimed that this Government are under popular control just the same as the Local Governments, but we all know why the two Provinces of Ontario and Quebec were led to seek confederation. They felt that as regards the local matters, people living in the one Province did not understand the questions that affected the other, and it was to reserve to the Local Legislatures their powers and rights that Confederation was entered into. As to the statement that the Dominion Government and Parliament are amenable to public opinion as expressed at the polls, we all know how difficult it is, for instance, to get the people in British Columbia interested in a question that affects Prince Edward Island, and vice versa, so that on the whole, viewing the matter in this light, disallowance if intended to be used at all, should only be used very sparingly. If this is not the correct idea, then I submit responsible government is a sham. Once you lay down the principle that the Dominion Government may for any cause that they see fit veto any legislation of the Local House, you establish the principle that it is to the Dominion Government, and not to the people, the Legislature is responsible. I think it is a pity that disallowance should ever be resorted to. You are aware we have a very extensive country made up of several Provinces, which have their own desires and interests, and it is only by protecting the rights of each one we can ever hope to consolidate the country into one harmonious union. That can never be done by infringing on the rights of the people or by building up the one at the expense of the other. Unhappily this course has been pursued in the past. We have had a trial of it in Ontario, and simply because we have a Government there that is firm enough to hold its own, we have experienced no disagreeable effects. Do you suppose you can keep Manitoba in leading strings for all time to come and infringe upon their provincial rights for all time to come? The sooner we disabuse our minds of that idea the better. Manitoba may not yet have come to the years of adolescence, but she is fast approaching them, and, accustomed as these people are to the boundless extent of the country, breathing the free air of the prairies, and knowing their rights, I tell the House that they cannot hope to hold them in bondage, they will draw the strings too close, and then the results will be such as we do not wish to contemplate. The sooner we recognize their rights the better. The sooner this policy of disallowance, this policy of interfering with provincial rights in any Province is abandoned, the better for the Dominion.

Mr. WATSON. I have listened in vain for any reply to the arguments I advanced for doing away with disallowance from a Manitoban standpoint. I have heard the question argued from several standpoints, but not from the standpoint of a Manitoban. I have not heard refuted any of the figures I gave as to freight rates. They were not compared with those given by the Minister of Finance, but they are rates which the farmers of Manitoba have to pay. I am satisfied that the House must admit, if the rates which I gave are correct—and none of them have been disputed—they are an injustice to the Province of Manitoba. The member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) did not understand why I looked to him to second my resolution. I looked to him fully understanding it was his intention to second it, because I was to move the resolution and deal with it from a commercial standpoint; he was to second it and deal with it from a legal point of view.

Mr. DALY. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; no such arrangement was ever made.

Mr. WATSON. I am giving that as I understood it, and as it was understood, I know, by the delegates who were down here and took part in arranging this resolution.

Mr. DALY. No such thing.

Mr. WATSON. There is one point which I omitted to refer to in the first place. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company are to-day, as Mr. VanHorne, the manager of that Company has admitted, paying the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway 12 per cent. of the gross earnings on freight carried between Port Arthur and Winnipeg. That is in order to maintain the monopoly and keep the Manitoba, Minneapolis and St. Paul rates higher than they would otherwise be, because that company did try to run freight into Manitoba by boats on the Red River, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate now give them 12 per cent. of the gross earnings between Port Arthur and Winnipeg, and have done so for two years past. As a penalty clause, the Manitoba, Minneapolis and St. Paul Company have to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway Company 40 per cent. on all freight carried between St. Paul and St. Vincent, which is simply a prohibitory rate. With these facts before you I feel satisfied that this House, without looking at the matter from a party standpoint—and the party whip has been cracked pretty hard to-night—whatever hon. members do for party purposes, and individually to protect the Canadian Pacific Railway, they must be convinced that, as far as Manitoba is concerned, it would be a good thing for the Province and the Dominion if the policy of disallowance were to cease. The First Minister to night, in stating reasons why people should stop in the North-West instead of going to the United States, referred to the land laws, and stated that the land laws were much better than they were in the United States, and he also said that the land laws in Manitoba to-day were similar to those which were in force during the previous Administration.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I said nothing about the land laws of Manitoba. I spoke of the North-West.

Mr. WATSON. They are exactly the same. The Dominion land regulations are the same in Manitoba and in the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I spoke about the laws of the North-West, not the land laws.

Mr. WATSON. I think the hon. gentleman referred to the remarks made by the member for Selkirk where he had referred to the land laws, and said that the people would rather live in Manitoba than in the United States. I say that a number of people have left Manitoba in consequence of the vacillating policy which the Government adopted in regard to the land regulations. These regulations are much better now than they were in 1881 and 1882, because at that time the land laws were changed every few weeks by Order in Council, and people were dissatisfied on account of those regulations and a large number left the Province in consequence. I shall not have time to deal with all those matters as I would wish to-night. So far as the fear of a railway carrying the trade from Manitoba and the North-West to St. Paul or Chicago or to the seaboard over the American lines is concerned, there should be no such fear. We have to-day the Canadian Pacific Railway building across the Sault with the expectation of bringing freight from Minneapolis and St. Paul, and how could freight be carried past the points they expect to tap and away to seaports to the south. I believe the time will come in the very near future when a large portion of the freight, instead of going round by the north of Lake Superior, will be shipped either by Duluth or the Sault and through western Ontario. I have often felt that it was extraordinary, as the hon. gentleman who has just sat down has said, how the people of western Ontario have submitted to the traffic coming in the way it does to-day. Their millers have to get the wheat brought by way of Toronto and then back to London, but in the other way it will come in a direct line and pass the mill doors. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Royal) stated that the feeling against disallowance in Manitoba was not unanimous. I mentioned one exception, the only exception I believe in the Province of Manitoba, when a resolution was passed at a meeting of twelve men, who I suppose were electors, in the town of Selkirk.

Mr. ROSS. How does the hon. member know there were only twelve men at the meeting?

Mr. WATSON. I have already given my reason, that the anti-conservative disallowance association of Winnipeg reported that there were only twelve electors present at that meeting. The resolutions passed at a public meeting in the city of Winnipeg last night, and the telegrams received from the mayors and reeves of the municipalities are sufficient evidence that this is a burning question in that Province, whatever the people of the east may think of it. I would ask the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Royal) if the representatives in the Local Legislature do not represent the public opinion of the Province of Manitoba? As I stated before, we have to-day a unanimous Legislature against the policy of disallowance—not a dissenting voice. I feel satisfied, knowing the temper of the people of Manitoba, knowing the feeling that exists in the Local Legislature where they have passed a resolution to vote $1,000,000 to build a line of railway to the boundary line, knowing that the people will back up that measure—I say I feel satisfied that whether the Government accept this resolution or not, the people will insist on building that road to the boundary line. It will be much better in the interest of the Province and of the Dominion, that this House should adopt this resolution and allow local charters to be granted to build roads in Manitoba by private corporations. I have no doubt that if a charter were granted under which a company would feel safe in building a line of railway, that inside of three months a railway would be built in the Province of Manitoba to compete for the carrying of the freight in the North-West. The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) says that because there are only a few people in Manitoba the freights ought to be high. That is no argument at all, because you tax the people so high that they ought to be exempted from high freight rates. Do away with this policy of disallowance and give us free competition in railways, and allow the Grand Trunk to be an immigration agent for that country as well as the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in the very near future, you will see that country filled up with a good class of people, happy and contented. We know that we have got a good country there, and we know that we raise good crops. I was surprised to-night to hear some hon. gentlemen opposite say so much about the frost and the drought. I have lived in that country eleven years and I have seen ten crops reaped, and where I reside we have never suffered once from frost. Some portions of the country may suffer from a frost or dry weather, but in a large portion of Manitoba, they do not suffer any from frost.

House divided on resolution of Mr. Watson (p. 543):

Motion negatived.

Mr. TROW. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt) was not in the Chamber when the resolution was read.

Mr. SPEAKER. Was the hon. member for South Simcoe in the House when the motion was read?

Mr. TYRWHITT. I was not.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then his name must be struck off the division list.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 3:30 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 27th May, 1887.

RETURN OF MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that the Clerk of the House had received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery a certificate of the election and return of George Moffat, Esq., to represent the electoral district of Restigouche.

THE DIVISION ON THE DISALLOWANCE OF MANITOBA RAILWAY CHARTERS.

Mr. MITCHELL. In the division which was taken last night, I voted nay, and I find my name omitted from the list.

* Mr. Mitchell's name having been omitted from the division list, the Clerk was ordered, on May 27th, to amend the same by an erratum in the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. WATSON.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am informed by the Clerk of the House that the hon. gentleman's name was not called, as he did not stand up.

Mr. MITCHELL. I was called. I never stand up. I generally make a nod. I made the nod last night, and I understood I was recorded as having voted.

Mr. WRIGHT. I heard the hon. gentleman's name called. There is a mistake evidently. His name was called immediately before my own, and that is why I happen to know it. His name was called first on this side.

Mr. HESSON. I think that the members ought always to rise in their places when they vote, as when they rise to speak to the House they always take off their hats.

Mr. LANDRY. I may say that I counted the votes as the voting went on, and I found one more majority than the Clerk did, although I thought I must have made a mistake. I certainly counted the hon. gentleman on this side.

Mr. MITCHELL. As to standing, I will always be as ready to stand up as anyone else, if that is made the rule. It is a matter of convenience, and has always been the practice for a member, if he has his hat on, to take it off to signify his vote. I had not my hat on that time, and I nodded to the Clerk, which is the usual practice. Everyone around me heard my name called.

Mr. SPEAKER. No doubt the rule is that hon. members must stand up when they desire to vote, and they should not sit down until their names are called. But the practice has been that the members generally nod to the assistant clerk instead. In this case the difficulty is that the Clerk of the House states that the hon. gentleman's name was not called. I wish now to call the attention of the House to this fact, that the rules allow any member to ask for the reading of the names, after the result in figures is called out by the Clerk, so that if there are any mistakes, they may be detected at once. It is apparent to the House how inconvenient it is to correct such mistakes, and to alter the minutes of proceedings.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to say in vindication of myself, that if it was the custom of the House to stand up when voting, I would be as ready to rise on my feet as any other member. But not one in twenty members of this House rise when their names are called. I followed the usual custom. I care nothing whether my name is put on or not, I am not going to make any motion, but my name was called, and a number of gentlemen around me heard it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt it was called, and the assistant clerk had forgotten it. But I may say that I never knew a Clerk make fewer mistakes than the present Clerk. However, he did call the hon. gentleman's name, and I know it from this fact, that I was taking down the names of the division without looking up at all, and I always mark off a name as it is called, and I cannot be mistaken that the hon. gentleman's name was called by the assistant clerk, and not by the Clerk. In this case a mere erratum would do, I fancy.

The Clerk is ordered by the Speaker to insert the erratum.

QUEEN'S, N. B., ELECTION.

Mr. WELDON (St. John) moved :

That John R. Dunn, returning officer in the last election for the electoral district of the county of Queen's, N.B., do attend at the bar of the House on Monday next, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, to be examined, touching his conduct as such returning officer in returning a candidate who had not a majority of votes in said election."

Motion agreed to.

PROTECTION OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

Mr. McCARTHY moved for leave to introduce Bill No. (112) for the protection of railway employes. He said: The Bill is intended to compel railway companies to do that which has been found by experience necessary in order to afford reasonable protection to the employes on railways. One matter is the packing of frogs; another is placing a proper running board and railings to freight cars; the third is in reference to oil cups. These are the principal provisions of the Bill. Most of them, I think, have been embodied, in so far as the Province from which I come is concerned, in an Act of the Local Legislature. But it has been found that the Act of the Local Legislature is only applicable to provincial railways. I introduce this Bill with the view of making it compulsory upon those railways which are subject to the legislation of this Parliament, to carry out those provisions, and to do what is necessary for the protection of employes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION LANDS ACT.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 113) to amend the Dominion Lands Act. He said: This Bill has relation rather to the working of the Department than to any changes in the Act itself. The first clause requires that any person entering a homestead entry shall declare, at the time he goes to the land agent, under which of the systems of homesteading he makes entry. Under the present law he is not required to do this, and some difficulty has arisen as a result of it. The second provision has relation to abandoned pre-emptions. Under the law as it stands to-day an abandoned pre-emption may be opened for homesteading by the Minister. This provision makes it a statutory obligation that when an abandoned pre-emption is taken it must be taken by an actual resident, so as to increase the number of settlers in the country. The third clause has relation to providing simply for the cancellation of entries under the two new methods of homesteading which have been provided in recent Acts; that is, what is ordinarily called the two-mile limit homesteading, and the other the five-year homesteading. Another provision is with respect to second homesteading. Last year, in amending the Dominion Lands Act, we abolished second homesteading, but a provision was inserted, on the suggestion of a member of this House, by which it was provided that anyone who had obtained a recommendation for patent or a patent before the Act was assented to, might obtain a second homestead. It has been found that some persons in the North-West had so far completed the conditions as to be placed in almost exactly the same position as those who had obtained certificates of patent. This clause provides that, although they may not technically have received a recommendation for patent, yet, as they had practically performed the conditions and were entitled to a recommendation for patent last year, they should obtain a second homestead. The last clause is one recommended by the Commissioner of Dominion Lands, owing to a difficulty which has occurred in the administration of the Department under the law which requires the settler to make declaration as to the fact of residence and the fact of cultivation. But there are other provisions in the law which are not covered by those two—such, for instance, as that a homesteader is not allowed to create a lien upon his property before he has complied with the conditions and is entitled to a certificate of patent. In those cases the Commissioner has been advised by the legal adviser of the Department at Winnipeg that no man can be proceeded against for perjury in consequence of misstatement, and this clause provides that the Minister may require any statement to be made under oath or affirmation, which may be taken or made before any of the officers under the fifth clause of the Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE ACT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 114) to amend the Electoral Franchise Act. He said: Last year the procedure with respect to the lists was simplified and considerable expense saved thereby. Further improvements are contemplated in the same direction, and the Bill I now ask leave to introduce proposes to dispense with the revision this year and keep in force the revised list for another year.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Have not the revising officers already commenced work, and have not notices been given in some districts?

Mr. THOMPSON. The time fixed is 1st June. I am aware in some cases a little work has been done, but simply of a preliminary character.

Mr. EDGAR. Is it proposed to continue the old list for two years?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is proposed to make the existing list stand for the present year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think very serious inconvenience might arise.

Mr. TISDALE. I know that in my riding notices have been published.

Mr. TROW. Is there any provision to allow for change of property? Transfers are constantly taking place in the various municipalities, and difficulty and inconvenience will arise in cities and towns.

Mr. THOMPSON. The proposal is to take the lists as they at present stand without change.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In that case a large number of persons will be disfranchised. The sale of property, determination of leases, and the leasing of other property in place of that abandoned, would in a great many cases disfranchise at least 10 per cent. of those now entitled to vote. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) apparently does not think so, but he probably has not examined the lists. I have compared fifty or sixty, and I do not know a single instance in which, by comparison of one year with another, the lists do not show a variation of 10 per cent. If that is not so in the hon. gentleman's constituency, it is different from what it is in most constituencies in the west, and there are many young men attaining their majority every year who will not be entitled to vote at the time they ought to be entitled under the law as it stands. Moreover, there are many imperfect lists. I take the case of Kent. There were 1,450 names on the lists in that county to which exception was taken, and 300 odd were struck off. The revising officer made a ruling, to which certain parties in the constituency took exception. They appealed to the Superior Court in Toronto, and their appeal was allowed, and it was understood that the rule adopted in those particular cases should govern the rest. After the decision was given, the revising officer refused to be bound by that agreement made before the reference was had, and the result was that 1,000 names stood on the lists that in the estimation of some parties ought not to have been there. That is a condition of things which should not be permitted to continue, and yet the hon. gentleman proposes that a list which is a fraudulent list as it stands, shall continue to be the list of the constituency for another year. Now, it seems to me that this is a very serious objection. We pointed out to hon.

gentlemen on the Treasury benches, when the measure was introduced, that serious difficulties would arise and that very great expense would be entailed on the community, in consequence of the policy they had entered upon. But they persisted in that course, and now, finding that serious dissatisfaction is likely to grow up in consequence of the law that they put on the Statute book, they undertake to get over the difficulty by the perpetuation of these lists which are notoriously imperfect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no doubt the House will grant my hon. friend leave to introduce the Bill. The objections taken to the measure will, of course, receive every consideration from my hon. friend, when it comes to its subsequent stages, and, perhaps, the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will be able to persuade him to agree to the objections he has taken.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We tried that for three months.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman, fortunately for him, will not speak of the measure personally; he can speak disinterestedly on the subject, because I can congratulate him on the fact of his seat not being disputed, and, therefore, long before he will be required to visit his constituency, the whole machinery will be in good working order.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am speaking disinterestedly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, I know the hon. gentleman is speaking disinterestedly.

Mr. IVES. It seems to me to be rather hard to please the hon. gentleman opposite. He speaks about the expense of the annual revision of the lists, and now when a proposition is made which should commend itself to the common sense of the House, inasmuch as we have had a general election, and there are not likely to be many elections in the coming year, he objects to that proposition.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act. He said: The principle of this Bill has been attempted to be carried out by a Bill introduced by an hon. gentleman opposite, but I think the matter is one which the Government should take up. It provides, in brief, that the deputy returning officers and poll clerks are, and always have been, entitled to vote at the elections of the House of Commons of Canada. In another clause—sub-section 1 of the 57th section of the Act—the words “on recount” which were omitted, are inserted.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 116) to amend the Act respecting the Department of Agriculture. He said: This Bill is complementary to the other Bills now before the House, providing for the re-organisation of the different Departments, and I presume that with this Bill they will be discussed together. The Government think the time has come for a reorganisation of the Departments, in accordance with the increased wants of the country and its rapid development and extension. The first clause provides that, notwithstanding anything in the Act respecting the Department of Agriculture, the subjects of patents of invention and copyright may be placed under the management and direction of the Secretary of State, or of such other member of the Privy Council as the Governor in Council may from time to time direct. The second clause provides that the subject of industrial designs and trade-marks may be placed under the management and direction of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or of such other member of the Privy Council as the Governor in Council may from time to time direct.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that it would have been much better if the hon. gentleman had provided for the constitution of all the Departments in a single Bill. He proposes that for convenience we shall discuss them all at the same time, but I think if his measures had all been placed in one Bill it would have been equally convenient. It always seemed to me that the departmental organisation of the Government ought to have been embraced under a law which might be called the Institutional Act, making provision for the various Departments of the Government, and pointing out what the function of each Department was. The hon. gentleman knows that in the Act relating to Indian Affairs, that the duties of the Superintendent General which was formerly in the Department of the Interior, but which is now separated and is discharged by himself as President of the Council, are set out in that Act. Nothing could be more anomalous than to provide for the constitution of a Department in an Act relating to the conduct of subordinates. It does seem to me that the Government, in proposing to deal with the subject, ought to give the matter full consideration, and to deal with all the Departments which are proposed to be reorganised by one Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid the hon. gentleman thinks more of the convenience of the House in discussing the measures, than of the convenience of the bar, the bench and the public in referring to them. I think, if we had only one general Act relating to the different Departments, amending half-a-dozen other Acts, it would cause a great deal of difficulty, as the hon. gentleman, being a professional man, must know. On the other hand, if every amendment of this kind is separated by itself it is obviously convenient that such amendment can be annotated in the particular chapter of the Revised Statutes which it affects. Say that you make an amendment in the Act with regard to the Finance Department. All you have to do is to turn to the Act in the Revised Statutes and annotate upon it the particular amendment, and so with any other amendments that may be made. That, at all events, I think, is the suggestion which has been made in England, with respect to the revision and codification of the Statutes. I think it is a more scientific mode to keep the separate subjects in separate Statutes; it will only be in the discussion that any convenience of the kind suggested by the hon. gentleman will be experienced. As these Bills are all short ones they can be read and understood very easily, and, no doubt, the hon. gentleman, with his usual diligence, has read all the Bills which have been printed, and he will be as fully charged with the whole subject as if they had all been embraced in one measure.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

TRIAL OF CLAIMS AGAINST THE CROWN.

Mr. THOMPSON moved that, on Tuesday next, the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved, That the salary of the Judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada shall be six thousand dollars per annum.
2. Resolved, That there shall be paid to the said judge, for travelling allowances, his moving expenses and the sum of five dollars for each day during which he is attending as such judge, any court at any place other than the city of Ottawa.
3. Resolved, That in case the judge of the said court has continued in office for fifteen years or upwards, or in the said office and that of one or more of the Superior Courts of Law and Equity, or of the Court of Vice-Admiralty, or the county courts in any of the Provinces of Canada, for periods amounting together to fifteen years or upwards, or becomes afflicted with some permanent infirmity, disabling him from the due execution of his office, then, in case such judge resigns his office, Her Majesty may, by letters patent, under the Great Seal of Canada, reciting such period of office, or such permanent infirmity, grant unto such judge an annuity equal to two-thirds of his salary as such judge, to commence immediately after his resignation, and to continue thenceforth during his natural life, and to be payable by monthly instalments, and pro rata for any period less than a year, during such continuance.

4. Resolved, That the registrar of the said court shall be paid an annual salary at the rate of $7,000, and that in addition thereto, there shall be payable, out of any moneys appropriated by Parliament for the purpose, such salaries to clerks, stenographers and servants of the Exchequer Court, as the Governor in Council determines.

5. Resolved, That the provisions of the Civil Service Act and the Civil Service Superannuation Act shall, so far as applicable, extend to the registrar, clerks and servants of the Exchequer Court at the seat of Government.

6. Resolved, That as vacancies occur in the office of Official Arbitrators, the Governor in Council may appoint Official Referees of the Exchequer Court, not exceeding three in number, who shall be paid such fees and travelling allowances as the Governor in Council prescribes.

7. Resolved, That any moneys or costs awarded to the Crown by the Exchequer Court shall be paid to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, and that he shall pay, out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, any moneys or costs awarded to any person against the Crown by the said court.

8. Resolved, That all fees payable to the registrar of the Exchequer Court shall be paid by means of stamps which shall be issued for that purpose by the Minister of Inland Revenue, who shall regulate the sale thereof; and that the proceeds of the sale of such stamps shall be paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

WESTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY COMPANY'S AGREEMENT.

Mr. THOMPSON, in the absence of Mr. POPE, moved that, on Tuesday next, the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That the agreement entered into between Her Majesty and the Western Counties Railway Company, in relation to the completion of the line of railway from Yarmouth to Annapolis, in the Province of Nova Scotia, bearing date the 31st January, 1887, be hereby confirmed, and that the sum of five hundred thousand dollars be hereby granted to Her Majesty to enable her to comply with the provisions of section five of the said agreement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has this agreement been laid on the Table of the House yet?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not able to state.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because we ought to have that before we proceed to discuss the resolution.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes, certainly. The agreement will be laid before the House, if it has not already been laid before the House, before the resolution is discussed.

Mr. MILLS. And the Orders in Council?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes, all the papers necessary to discuss the subject.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Finance, now that we are commencing on the Estimates, that it will facilitate business if we have an understanding that we will go through them in due rotation. Sometimes they have been shifted about from point to point, and there has been unnecessary delay in consequence. I think it will serve both his purpose and ours if we have an understanding that we go through with them in rotation, and, if he wishes to vary the order for any special purpose, that he should give notice the night before.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that it will be much more convenient to take them up in that way. As he knows, sometimes it is necessary, owing to the absence of some particular Minister, to postpone his estimates; but in that case, we will endeavor to give notice, so that the committee will always know what is coming up.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, as I understand, you will give notice the night before, barring some extraordinary accident.

Office of Assistant Receiver General, Halifax $10,200

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is here a reduction of $2,400. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to explain how he has been able to make that saving? I assume that it is a substantial saving, and not a transference to some other Department.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The decreases in the offices at Halifax and St. John arise from the proposed closing of the auditors' offices in those places, which will yield a saving of $2,000 and $1,950 respectively. It is expected that the balances of the reduction of $400 at Halifax and $1,000 at St. John, can be made and yet leave sufficient to carry on the work of the offices of the assistant receiver generals. The duties of the auditors are now performed here without the transference of offices.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who are the gentlemen who were formerly assistant auditors general at those places?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Howe at Halifax.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is to become of him?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is not yet decided.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He is not yet superannuated or retired?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; but the duties that he has formerly discharged are no longer discharged at Halifax.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman proposes to transfer virtually those duties to the Finance Department here. As for these two gentlemen, who is the gentleman from St. John?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Seely, I think.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As to these gentlemen, you will have either to provide superannuation allowance for them or find them employment elsewhere.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. One or the other; that is not yet determined. Mr. Seely is a gentleman advanced in years; Mr. Howe is comparatively young. The disposition of these two is not yet settled.

Mr. DAVIES. Does the same change apply to Prince Edward Island?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; I think not. I think the duties have not yet been transferred. That matter is not yet settled.

Auditor and Receiver General, Winnipeg, board allowance..... $900

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This used to be stated as special allowance in consequence of expense of living in Winnipeg. As living is as cheap there as elsewhere now, I do not precisely see the reason for this board allowance. Putting it in that shape, the hon. gentleman implies necessarily that the cause exists which induced him or his predecessors to make special allowance some years ago.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will consider that point before next Session.

Mr. McMULLEN. What does the Finance Minister intend to do in regard to that item?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think I will strike it out, and if there is any special reason for retaining it, I can deal with it again.

Country Savings Banks, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and British Columbia $16,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the course of the recent debate on the Budget, I called the attention of the Minister of Finance to the fact that the deposits in these various savings banks had been very considerably abused; that is to say, that many persons were taking advantage of the rules to obtain a larger rate of interest than was defensible, looking at it as a mere bargain with them, and having reference to the current rate of money, and the Minister then stated he concurred with me that it was an abuse. I would like to know what is proposed to be done now with respect to these savings banks?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did entirely agree in the views expressed by the hon. gentleman, both as to the amount of deposits allowed in the Government savings banks, and also as to the use of the Government savings banks for performing banking operations. I think instructions have been given that no amount shall be received from any one depositor over $1,000, and that the deposit shall not be made or drawn in such a way as to interfere with the legitimate business of the banks. It will have to be drawn in the place in which the money is deposited, and not be deposited in one section and drawn in another.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does this rule apply both to the Government savings banks and also to the post office savings banks? There has been a different practice prevalent in both.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The same practice will be introduced in both, for it ought to be uniform. As far as we can, we are putting in practice the principle of not opening new savings banks under the Finance Department, but having post office savings banks instead, and I quite agree as to the necessity of having the same practice adopted in both.

Mr. DAVIES. Why does the hon. gentleman require this year $ 6,000? In 1885-86 the amount expended was only $13,587; the amount asked for was $16,000, and the Auditor reports simply over-estimate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You require a certain margin, because the amount of expenditure depends to a certain extent on the amount of deposits, and it is really of no consequence whether there is a thousand dollars too much or not.

Mr. DAVIES. You are supposed to be guided by the expenditure of last year.

Mr. CASEY. There must be room for serious question whether there is a necessity for continuing the savings banks at all. The hon. Minister himself has pointed out that he does not open any new ones, but prefers to use the post office savings banks instead. I do not see why the post office savings banks should not replace these Government savings banks everywhere. If the place is large enough to support a savings bank at all, there would be a postmaster there and an office large enough to manage a savings bank, and I do not see why we should have the two systems unless they are run on different principles. I do not know much about these Government savings banks, because we have none in Ontario, but I suppose they are simply banks of deposit. They do not do ordinary banking business, as I understand, and in that case I do not see why the post office savings banks should not serve the public as well as these. On the other hand, if there is any special benefit derived from the Government savings banks, instead of their being limited to certain districts they should be extended. The fact that they are limited to these Provinces shows that there are no special advantages connected with them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The policy of the Government is to amalgamate these, but you cannot do that suddenly or forcibly. You have the existing officers. In some cases the postmasters whom you do not wish to displace are not adapted for the discharge of these duties, but, as far as it is found to be practicable, the policy of the Government is not to create new independent savings banks, but to amalgamate them with the Post Office Department.

Mr. McMULLEN. It will be remembered that, during the last Parliament, we strongly urged that these Government savings banks should be discontinued, because of the expense connected with them. The leader of the Government, speaking in the city of Guelph, which is in my riding, said something in regard to the stand which I had taken in relation to the interest paid on deposits in savings banks, and he tried to represent that I was endeavoring to reduce the interest paid in the post office savings banks. I made no reference whatever to the post office savings banks. I referred to the savings banks of the kind we are now discussing. I say it is unfair that we should continue to pay the interest we have been paying, and to pay the additional expense, when we can utilise the post offices and get the work done at a much less expense than it is now. I fully concur with what the Minister of Finance has said in regard to amalgamating these savings banks as soon as possible. I think it would be better to do it at once and save the money to the country.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman forgets that there is an expense connected with the post office savings banks. The cost last year was $41,000, while only $16,000 is asked for here. The expense of running the post office savings banks is very much the same as that now under consideration.

Mr. CASEY. Oh, no. If the hon. gentleman compares the amount of expense with the amount deposited, he will find it is much less in regard to the post office savings banks.

Mr. McMULLEN. More than that, the postmasters are paid very small salaries in small towns where they receive deposits, so it would be an additional advantage to them to get the small percentage on these deposits.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In any remarks I made at Guelph or anywhere else, I did not discuss the question of the post office savings banks or the Government savings banks, but I alluded to the fact that the hon. gentleman had objected most strongly to the Government paying four per cent. interest, as that was an excessive rate of interest and interfered with the business of bankers, private or public.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The point which we took was this. Whereas, the hon. gentleman and his friends pleaded that they paid 30 per cent. more than the money was worth at current market rates in the interest of the poor depositor, we showed clearly that the bulk of the deposits were in sums so large as to put the depositors entirely out of that category, and he did not make a fair statement of our case, or of the case of my hon. friend. That was the point at issue. We always agreed that it was desirable to encourage frugality and the saving of money on the part of the poorer classes of our people, and we were willing enough that on moderate sums this extra rate should be paid, but we did object to paying it on the larger sums, and I was glad to hear the Minister of Finance agree with me that an abuse had arisen, and that it was going to be rectified. It is very much to his credit if he does rectify it; but that was the point at issue.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That was not the point at issue. I know that the hon. gentleman himself took that line of argument, but the speech of the hon. gentleman who sits behind him (Mr. McMullen) was directly an attack upon the Government for giving four per cent. at all, and I appeal to the Hansard whether that was not the case.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You had better look at the Hansard.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am quite willing that you should refer to the Hansard to see what I said, and you will find that my remarks were entirely applicable to the savings banks and not to the post office savings banks. I found fault with the interest paid on the sums deposited in the savings banks, because if those parties were anxious to find investment elsewhere, the rate of interest charged to those who desired to borrow on mortgage would be less than it otherwise would be, having to pay that amount of interest in addition to one per cent. for handling the account.

Mr. McLELAN. No doubt the savings banks have been used by others than those for whom they were intended. When the present Government came into power, in 1878, they found this condition of things left by hon. gentlemen opposite, that anyone could deposit in those banks to the amount of $10,000. The hon. gentleman says that was wrong; the present Government said it was wrong, and in 1880 they passed an Order in Council limiting the amount to be received from any one depositor to $3,000. Then last year, when I had this question under consideration, an Order in Council was passed on the 7th July, 1886, limiting the amount of any one depositor in any one year to $1,000, making the amount the same as in the post office savings bank. Any complaint which the hon. gentleman has now has therefore been fairly met. We remedied the evil in 1880 by reducing the amount from $10,000 to $3,000, and last year we went further and cut it down to $1,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think the hon. gentleman quite understands the position that was taken. Our position was not so much against allowing a large amount of interest, but it was against allowing a larger amount than the current rate. He must be aware that, during the time terminating in 1878, the rate allowed in the Government savings banks was less than that which was obtainable in banks of good credit. What we objected to was paying more than the money was worth. It would not effect the question if he had kept the limit much higher than it is now, provided he did not pay more than the money could be obtained for in the open market. I would ask the Minister of Finance whether there is any limit to the amount which is to be received during one year, or whether the $1,000 may be paid up in one year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not to exceed $1,000 in any one year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is the total amount, but you allow the total to be paid in any one year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any provision now for allowing those persons who wish to invest in Government funds, either four per cents. or 3½ per cents., to exchange their deposits for debentures for one year or some such term? Formerly, I think we permitted them to exchange into five per cents., when money was supposed to be worth that, and afterwards to exchange into four per cents. Is there any such regulation now?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They have to pay a premium of 2½ per cent. to invest in four per cents. now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What length of time would those four per cents. run?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think about ten years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You would allow any depositor to obtain a four per cent. bond at 2½ per cent. for ten years?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think that is the present regulation. I will make a note of that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like the hon. gentleman to bring me down a copy of the regulations on that point.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will make a note of that.

Interest on Public Debt.....$6,836,218.57

Mr. LANDERKIN. The commission on this amount, where is it paid, and to whom?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is paid in England to the financial agents.

Mr. McMULLEN. I find that one-half per cent. was paid last year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is the same rate. It is calculated on the amounts to be invested.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This interest charge, as the hon. gentleman knows, is made up of the interest on, perhaps, a dozen different loans, contracted at different times. Is the present arrangement that whatever number of loans you may make, you are to pay one-half per cent. on the payment of the interest?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think so. I think that is the rate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How long does that extend?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think that arrangement terminates in about two years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know the exact date for which that arrangement was made, if you will take a note of it. Then, brokerage on $15,840, British Columbia Loan Sinking Fund—I observe a reduction here on the loans of 1874-5-6-7-8-9; how does deduction come about?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There was an error in the last year's calculation, and it is corrected here.

Reduced 4 per cent. loans, brokerage and commission.....$509,740.65

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What arrangement has been made as to the sum that had accumulated in the way of accumulated sinking fund on this reduced four per cent loan? I think that remains as an asset in our book, does it not?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Should not that have been wiped out? In one sense it is a matter of account but it is just as well, I should say, that our debt should not remain nominally any larger than it need be. I do not see that there is any particular object to be gained in keeping it on both sides of the account. What is the reason for that? I never quite understood how that came to remain in our account.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will make a note of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman will turn to page 44 of the Public Accounts, he will see that our investments are headed: "Sinking fund, Canada, reduced four per cent. loan, $3,201,802;" that may possibly require some consideration. I am speaking now of the brokerage commission on $509,000 reduced. The four per cent. loan, I suppose, is mainly the interest on this sinking fund?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I will get a statement of that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not see how that is made up, unless some other four per cent loan is included. The interest would not be sufficient to realise half a million a year. I would like to know if any objection has been taken by the agents, or by our creditors, to paying this sum in reduction? Do they require that to be retained in the hands of the trustees?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is a question pending just now on that point.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me it ought to be wiped out; in that case we would save something in these commissions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That question is now being dealt with. I will get a memorandum and show it to the hon. gentleman.

Estimated sum payable to Financial Commissioner in England.....$1,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose this is our friend, Sir John Rose. In reference to this, I observe that our financial agent, Sir John Rose, apparently, was paid a commission of one eighth of one per cent. on the amounts of a number of loans with the London and Westminster Bank. The total amount paid him appears to have been $29,803 on transactions terminating in January, 1886. Well, I am not at all prepared to say that the charge made was extravagant, but it is a large sum to pay when we have other financial agents to whom we pay a large annual sum. But I want more particularly to call the attention to this of the hon. gentleman in his dual capacity of Finance Minister and High Commissioner. When he was High Commissioner he was expected to discharge the loan part of the business. We were told when we sent that hon. gentleman across the water, that one reason for appointing him High Commissioner was that he would be able to transact financial business, which otherwise would require special commissions to England, and would require employing parties there. Now, I should say that such a transaction as the renewals and loans from these banks in London were transactions which the hon. gentleman might very well have discharged; and yet I find that we had to pay nearly $30,000 in 1886 to Sir John Rose for doing that precise class of business which I had understood was to form part of the duties of our High Commissioner in London.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad to be able to inform the hon. gentleman that all that is corrected now. The payment to which he has drawn attention was an arrangement made by my predecessor, Sir Leonard Tilley, when he held the office of Finance Minister. And when he found it necessary to raise a considerable floating loan, something like £1,500,000 sterling, that arrangement was made through Sir John Rose, and the payment of one-eighth of one per cent. was a commission to him, as he made the arrangement with the London and Westminster, or through that bank with certain other parties. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is not unfamiliar himself with payments to Sir John Rose for commissions on certain transactions and certain allowances in connection with floating loans. I think I am safe in saying that he had some experience of that himself, and that he availed himself of the services of Sir John Rose in that capacity. I am glad, however, to be able to inform the hon. gentleman and the committee that since that period the duties that have been, ever since the appointment of a High Commissioner, discharged to some extent by the Finance Minister, have been entrusted to myself, and on the last occasion on which we required to effect a temporary loan in England I was able to dispense with the payment of any allowance or commission to any person, and I succeeded in negotiating with the financial agents themselves for whatever temporary loan we required without any commission, and on terms that, compared with the arrangements previously made, saved no less than £6,600 sterling. So the hon. gentleman will be glad to learn that whatever want of attention there has been to this subject in the past has been corrected, and the High Commissioner is now discharging this duty, and has been able to discharge it without having recourse to any outside assistance whatever.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is a great satisfaction to me, as I am sure it will be to the country, to know that our worthy Finance Minister, for whose ability I have great esteem and respect, and whom I know to be possessed of talents of an unusual character, has succeeded in doing what he has stated. It is not new to me, because at the time the loan was made I heard that, although Sir Leonard Tilley went over to England to perform the duties of Finance Minister and to effect the loan, it was mainly due to the zeal and efforts of the present Finance Minister that it was accomplished on such satisfactory terms. I heard it mentioned at the time, and I am glad to bear testimony to the fact. In regard to the payment to Sir John Rose, I am not quite satisfied with the explanations offered. My idea of the duties performed by Sir John Rose for a number of years, and for which he has been paid, is that they were of a diplomatic character, and had reference to obtaining titles for gentlemen in this country. That seems to me to be the chief duty which Sir John Rose has performed for Canada. I think there are far too many titles in this country, and I hope we shall have no more. I do not know what is the opinion of my friends to the right. The financial operations performed by Sir John Rose for the Dominion never amounted to much; the regular financial agents of Canada would have done the work much more effectively. But Sir John Rose acted in a diplomatic manner, and by suggestion and manipulation accomplished what hon. gentlemen opposite desired, and as a result we have C.B.'s, G.C.B.'s and Knights all around us. I hope this has come to an end, and that we shall hear no more of payments to that gentleman. I suppose the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) used him when he was in power; I am sure hon. gentlemen opposite have not been above doing the same thing. But I trust the Finance Minister, if he goes back to London, as rumor says, and again occupies the position of High Commissioner, for which he is fitted by his talents, abilities and associations with high personages, and the power of addressing public meetings, and a reputation as an orator, statesman and public man, the country will be relieved of the necessity of retaining Sir John Rose for such duty as he has performed in the past. I am sure our worthy friend, the High Commissioner, will be able to perform the duties. No doubt Sir John Rose has instructed him how to perform these little duties, how best to accomplish them by gentle manipulations and attentions and by bowing and scraping, and I hope we shall hear no more of Sir John Rose receiving commissions which we subsequently find entered in the Public Accounts.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This, I imagine, is intended to cover the payment to Sir John Rose as trustee of the sinking fund, to which position he was appointed as hon. gentlemen opposite know.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would suggest—and in making the suggestion I am expressing the opinion of the people of Canada—that when the next distribution of honors takes place, the leader of the left centre should not be forgotten.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad to find a suggestion of that kind made, for it is a recognition of the services I have rendered. If merit and public service were the test of rewards, honors and titles, I ought not to have been forgotten. I, however, want neither honors nor titles; I do not want to see them in the country, for we can get along very well without them. Every time a title or honor is given to a public man in this Dominion, it detracts from the good opinion in which he is held by the people. I do not want any of them, but I may say that I have rendered as much service, looking back at my career of 30 years in various public capacities, as many of the gentlemen who have obtained titles which they never really earned.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I should like to ask the Finance Minister who is at present High Commissioner? Has a commission been issued since the hon. gentleman's resignation, and to whom has that commission been issued? The hon. gentleman and the First Minister promised to bring down this information some time ago, but it is not yet in our hands, and before certain items in the Estimates can be intelligently discussed, we should know how the matter stands. Parliament has decided that a High Commissioner is necessary in London, and it is very important to know whether the Government, as trustees for the people, appointed a High Commissioner on the resignation of the hon. gentleman, and who the party, so appointed, is. Certainly we cannot, for a moment, suppose that the Finance Minister is still holding a commission as High Commissioner, and that he is acting in the double capacity of High Commissioner in England and Finance Minister in Canada. Of course, we know that the rule laid down by the Hibernian will apply to the hon. gentleman, viz.: that it is impossible for a man to be in two places at the same time. His duties as High Commissioner require that the High Commissioner shall be in England; the duties of the Finance Minister require that the Finance Minister shall be here. I cannot assume that the Government have disregarded the law, and the intentions of Parliament, by issuing a commission as High Commissioner—to an hon. gentleman who is, at the same time, a member of the Government in this country, holding an important office like that of Finance Minister. The hon. gentleman will perhaps be disposed to give us some information on the subject, seeing that the papers have not been brought down.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think I will leave that in the hands of the First Minister, who promised the papers, and he, I am quite sure, will be prepared to give the House the fullest information on the subject.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not think the hon. gentleman's answer is quite satisfactory. We look to the First Minister to bring down the papers promised by Parliament. The House has carried a motion declaring that the papers shall be laid on the Table, the leader of the Government has agreed to that proposition, and Parliament has approved of that motion. But the information I asked from the hon. gentleman, in the absence of those papers, I think we are entitled to have from the hon. gentleman now.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman was given the information. If I remember aright, the First Minister gave the hon. gentleman and the House, in plain, succinct terms, a reply to his previous enquiry. He said to the House that I had resigned the office of High Commissioner when appointed Minister of Finance, that subsequently the Government requested me to discharge the duties of High Commissioner without salary, fee or emolument of any kind, and the hon. gentleman will find that that is specifically provided for by law.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Has the hon. gentleman received a commission, or is it a mere verbal arrangement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have not received a commission.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then, of course, the hon. gentleman is not High Commissioner, nor has he any right to discharge the duties of that office. The law provides for the appointment of the High Commissioner in a particular way, under the Great Seal; he cannot be appointed in any other way. The Government have no authority to make the appointment in any other way; they may advise the Crown to make it, but the Crown has no power to act except in the way indicated in the law, on the advice of a responsible Minister, whose name must be attached to the instrument. So the hon. gentleman when he gave us the information which he says the First Minister gave us before—that he is High Commissioner, has also given us the information to show that he is mistaken—that he is not High Commissioner, and that he has no right to discharge the duties which the statute imposes on the High Commissioner, until he is appointed under the Great Seal of Canada.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to this sum paid to Sir John Rose, it is true, as the Finance Minister estimated, that on the occasion of floating permanent loans running over a considerable period of years, Sir John Rose may have received some small consideration, although much less, I think, than one-eighth per cent. However, if I understood the Minister aright the loan was a million and a half from the London and Westminster. We never obtained more than that, I think.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think that was the amount.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Now, this matter is one which I think deserves a little more attention, because I find that Sir John Rose has apparently received this commission of one-eighth per cent., not only on the original loan of one and a-half millions, but on two renewals of the same loan. In point of fact, on loans of very short character, not extending over eighteen months, three-eighths of one per cent. in effect have been paid him. Now, those charges, as the hon. gentleman knows, are very heavy indeed—far heavier than I should have considered myself justified in authorising to be paid on a loan of that kind. I am glad that practice has been stopped, but if the hon. gentleman looks into the Auditor-General's report he will see that to all appearance—of course if I am wrong, or if it is not correctly stated there, I will be glad to be corrected—to all appearance Sir John Rose has received this commission of three eighths of one per cent. I think it is altogether in excess of any sum which should be paid by Canada for negotiating a loan to any mercantile institution in London, more particularly as I think we had to pay four per cent., the full market value, for the money we obtained.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This was an arrangement made, I believe, by Sir Leonard Tilley, and I will bring down any further information. I am also glad to be able to state that I have not found it necessary to avail myself of the services of Sir John Rose in any respect, and that in negotiating a similar amount of one and a-half millions of a floating loan, pending the time we received payment of the money from the Canadian Pacific Railway, which made it undesirable that we should float the loan—in the interim there was no charge whatever, and the terms upon which I was enabled to procure that loan from the financial agents were, as I have stated, such as to enable us to have the money at the current bank rate, which gave it at a low rate without any charges or commissions.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then the hon. gentleman will furnish the correspondence relating to this matter to which I have called attention?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I have made a note of it.

Mr. DAVIES. With regard to this estimated sum payable to the Financial Commissioner in England, I understand that it is payable to Sir John Rose as trustee, or one of the trustees of sinking fund. Is he the sole trustee?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think not; there are three trustees, I know he is a trustee for the sinking fund, and he acts as such trustee.

Mr. DAVIES. On what basis is it calculated?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will give the hon. gentleman that information.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the reduction of $5,000 on bill stamps, postages, telegrams, &c., based on any calculation, or is it merely hap-hazard?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is estimated that no more than this will be required. The amount for printing Dominion notes shows an increase of $5,000, owing to the number of new notes that may be necessary.

Mr. CASEY. It seems very inconvenient to have so many things jumbled together in one item. It is almost impossible to look these expenditures up in the Public Accounts.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Auditor General's report gives everything very fully.

Mr. CASEY. But it gives them under different headings.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The expenditure last year for this service was $61,000.

Mr. CASEY. Part of this item is for contingencies of country savings banks, which I think should be taken along with the salaries in connection with those banks.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that the financial inspector, T. D. Tims, receives a salary of $2,600, and last year he received $1,500 for travelling expenses for 300 days. I would like to know if he is travelling every day?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He is travelling a great deal of the time. In order to be financial inspector he must be absent almost continuously.

Mr. CASEY. Has the hon. gentleman any memorandum showing what proportion of this mixed item is allotted to each service, or will it be drawn on promiscuously? For instance, could not the whole or the greater part of the $20,000 be appropriated to savings banks contingencies, or to advertising, as the item stands?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Nothing can be appropriated, the hon. gentleman knows, except with the authority of the Auditor General, and in that officer's report he will find a detailed statement of every shilling expended for these services. If the hon. gentleman wishes a separate account brought down, I will bring it down, showing how that money was expended last year.

Mr. CASEY. Yes, I would like that. But the point I was urging was not so much with reference to the expenditures of last year as to the inconvenience of voting money for so many different purposes in one item.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not responsible for that inconvenience. This money has been voted in the same way year after year, and if the form of the item was changed it would be difficult to make comparisons of one year with another.

Mr. CASEY. There is something in that argument, but it has never stood in the way of changing the forms of items for other reasons, and as the hon. gentleman has made so many improvements, I thought he might make an improvement here.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that the sums actually expended in 1886 under these two heads, for which the hon. gentleman now demands $50,000, were in the first case $50,000, and in the next $61,000, making in all $111,000. I have not the slightest wish to spend more money in that or any other direction than cannot be avoided, but it appears to me rather doubtful policy for us to vote sums which are likely to be largely under the real requirements. Does the hon. gentleman believe that $20,000 and $30,000 will be sufficient for the wants of next year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, that matter has been carefully considered, and I believe they will be found to be sufficient.

Printing Dominion notes.....$30,000

Mr. MALLORY. There is an increase of $5,000. How is that accounted for?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is still less than the expenditure of last year was, but the vote is increased because the vote of last year was not sufficient.

Civil Government.

Governor General's Secretary's Office.....$9,550

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are some changes here.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There are two statutory increases of $50 each; one third-class clerk additional, $750; and an increase in the salary of one third-class clerk, $150; making $1,000 in all. There is a decrease in the second-class clerks of $1,200, making a net decrease of $200. It is a re-arrangement of the service in the Governor General's Secretary's office, by which the service is rendered more satisfactory and efficient. At the same time, a net decrease of $200 is obtained.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is the second-class clerk whose service is dispensed with?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. McDermott was the second-class clerk who resigned during my absence.

Mr. MILLS. What is his age? Was he pensioned.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice you put in here the names of two gentlemen who were appointed to third-class clerkships, Mr. Walker and Mr. Lawrence. On what principle are their salaries arranged? They are both new appointments, and I see one of them began at $450 while the other appears to have been appointed as a third-class clerk at $750. How has that been brought about?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In the summer of 1886, Mr. McDermott, a second-class clerk in the Governor General's Secretary's Office, left the service. The office remained vacant for some time, and on the return of Lord Lansdowne from London, in the autumn, Mr. Courtney was sent for with reference to the filling of the vacancy. After conversation with His Excellency, Lord Lansdowne considered that the work of the office could be distributed and that greater duties should be thrown on Mr. Lawrence, the third-class clerk who, during the interval, had performed the work of Mr. McDermott as well as his own, and that it was not desirable to make an appointment of a new second-class clerk, as he was of opinion that a competent third-class clerk of good training in languages and capable of writing despatches would be sufficient. The returns of the Civil Service examination were looked through and no one was found possessing the required qualifications, and as Lord Lansdowne considered it desirable to appoint a Canadian to the position, he communicated with Dr. Wilson, President of the University College, Toronto, who recommended Mr. W. H. Walker, a graduate, and medalist in classics, of the University of Toronto. Mr. Walker was told that until Parliament voted the supplies his services would be temporary, and that he would be paid at the rate of $2 per diem, with the understanding that he would be appointed at the rate of $750 per annum, as soon as the supplies were voted by Parliament, and that he should pass the entrance examination and be treated as was Mr. Reid, of the Audit Office, and as other officers appointed in a similar manner have been treated. It was considered that Mr. Lawrence would be recompensed by adding $100 to his salary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What age is Mr. Walker? How has he been brought in? Has he been brought in under the provision which allows persons having special qualification to be specially introduced.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I think so. He is a young man of about 22 or 23.

Privy Council $25,902 50

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The changes here arise from thirteen statutory increases at $50 each, $650, one statutory increase $30, one increase to messenger $95, transfer of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery $2,600 and one additional third-class clerk $450, making a total of $3,825 increase. The increase to the messenger is because his salary last year ought to have been estimated at $375 instead of $315.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I perceive the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has been put in here, and also, fortunate individual, has had his salary increased. I suppose the necessity of devoting his attention to writing letters of explanation is justification for this increase. If I recollect aright, he received heretofore $2,200. He appears here as receiving $2,600, which is more than the statutory increase to which he is entitled.

Mr. WELSH. I am glad to see there is an item here to increase the salary of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. If it had not been here I was going to suggest that a sum should be placed in the Estimates for that gentleman, but the sum I was going to recommend was $2.15, for the purpose of getting an assistant at election time, so that members might be gazetted in due course, and also that the sum of $1.07½ should be placed in the Estimates for the purpose of getting an illuminated copy of his letter to this honorable House, in explanation of his conduct in not gazetting the members, and that it should be issued in pamphlet form and bear on the inscription the word "Flapdoodle."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think this is a favorable opportunity to bring again to the attention of this House the conduct of this particular officer. I am not going to raise to-day a discussion with regard to the legality of this gentleman's appointment. I assume for the present that he is legally authorised to discharge the duties that devolve upon the officer legally known as the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. I have twice before during this Session brought under the attention of this House the conduct of this man. The law of the land has imposed upon the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery certain duties, one of which is that he shall, immediately after the receipt of the returns from the various returning officers throughout the country, gazette in the next issue of the Canada Gazette the members that are elected. This officer is sworn to discharge the duties that devolve upon him in his official capacity, and I have before called the attention of Parliament to the fact that he has flagrantly disregarded the duties that the law has imposed upon him. I shall, as I have given notice, bring the matter again under the attention of the House, but I think it is proper, when the Government propose to not only pay this officer the salary which he has heretofore had, but to pay him a considerable sum in addition, that this House should again take into consideration the manner in which Mr. Pope, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, has discharged the duties which the law has imposed upon him. Now, I ask the attention of the House to the letter which that man has written in reply to the motion proposed and carried through this House by the First Minister. I asked that this House should refer the question of his conduct to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The hon. gentleman intercepted my motion with an amendment, and this House asked Mr. Pope to send to the Clerk of the House a letter showing what he did, what proceedings he took in order to discharge the duties that the law has imposed upon him. I hold that letter in my hand, and it is impossible to read that letter without seeing that it is an impudent and lying document, a document of such a character as would justify, if this House discharged its duty, or if this committee discharged its duty, his instant dismissal from office—such an impudent lying letter as was written to this House—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am in order; I understand my duty, and I intend to discharge it; and I trust that those hon. gentlemen on the other side who are in the most unparliamentary manner interrupting, will give some little attention to what is right and fair, and will discharge their duties accordingly. I wish to read this letter, and to call the attention of this committee to the manner in which this man says he has discharged his duties. I wish to say that that letter is not only not true, but it is impossible that it can be true; it is impossible that the proceedings he says he took would have resulted in the acts with which we charge him—in the dereliction of duty of which he has been guilty. It is the bounden duty of this House to see that its officers act in consonance with the law. It is the bounden duty of the leader of this House to see that the rights of the minority are not tampered with, and that those rights are not trampled under foot by an officer who is appointed under the statute to perform certain duties. A majority is always able to take care of itself. A generous majority, a majority led by one who is generous and fair in feeling and spirit, such as would elevate and not degrade the sentiment of Parliament, would not for one moment permit an officer who has acted in the way that Mr. Pope has acted to retain the position he now holds. There is scarcely room to doubt that this man has disregarded his oath and violated his duties under the direction of some hon. gentleman who sits on that side of the House; and, if we are permitted to refer this question to a committee, as we ought to have referred it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I believe I will be able to establish that this man, in disregarding the law and trampling on the rights of members on this side of the House, did so at the instance of some hon. gentleman who sits on that side of the House. Now, let me call your attention to what Mr. Pope says in this letter:—

"In obedience to the Order of the House of Commons of yesterday, respecting the gazetting by me of the returns of the last Dominion general election, I beg to say that when the returns first began to reach me, they came in slowly, and I endeavored, as far as possible, and did, gazette them in the order in which I received them; but afterwards they came in so fast, by every mail, some mails over thirty letters, and as many large bundles of papers, some of them being in size about two feet square, in addition to others, which, instead of being sent by mail, as the law requires, were sent by express in large boxes, all of which, before I could gazette the member elected, required to be arranged and assorted."

Is that true? Why, there is not a word of truth in that statement. Every hon. gentleman knows that Mr. Pope has but to look at the endorsement upon the writ of the returning officer, and obey that endorsement, and gazette the member whose return is endorsed on that writ. He has nothing to do with anything else. The law is perfectly clear. His duties are quite simple; and it would be very easy for the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, if he discharges his duties fairly and efficiently, not only to gazette the return of 20 or 30 members a day—which is not true, and the return shows that the statement is not true—but would be able to gazette the entire return of members to this House. Why, it is not two hours' work to examine those writs and see whose name is endorsed, and copy the name of the member returned for each constituency; and yet this statement that is made by this man—this lying statement that has been made by Mr. Pope in his answer to the order of this House—shows that he was not hurried, that he did not receive such a number of names returned to him as to make it impossible for him to discharge his duties. Then Mr. Pope goes on to say:

"It frequently occurred, also, that after opening and examining large piles of papers, oaths, statements and certificates."—

What had he to do with examining large piles of papers, oaths and certificates? He had nothing whatever to do with that. There is no such duty imposed upon him by the statute.

Mr. MADILL. Suppose the return of the writ was not received with the papers returned?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the member would not be gazetted. Then Mr. Pope would communicate with the officers. We have asked for those communications. We have his answer. We know in what particular they were deficient and we have his statement showing when he received these various returns, and I am going to show that the statement of Mr. Pope is not only not true, but that it is impossible that it could be true. Mr. Pope goes on to say:

"The certificates of the various officers employed at the election, nomination papers and numerous other documents that the return, or Form S, required by the Dominion Elections Act, to enable me to gazette the member elected, was wanting, and which in some instances, would arrive several days later, and in others would not reach me till I had written to the returning officers to send it, after waiting a considerable time, in the hope that they would do as others had done—send it later, without being written to for it."

Why, there is no foundation for a statement like that. Let any member turn up the Election Act and see what Form S is. It is the form endorsed on the writ, the statement as to which particular party was elected, and we know from Mr. Pope's own statement that the papers were not defective in this particular, except in two instances, both of which he gazetted before receiving this certificate. Then Mr. Pope says:

"Again, many of the returning officers, instead of sending the writ, return and report of proceedings in a separate envelope, put them in the large bundle of papers, together with the oaths, statements and certificates of all the various election officers—reports of proceedings, nomination papers, accounts, ballot papers, voters' and revisors' lists, all mixed together in one confused heap."

Well, what of that? All he had to do was to look at the writ and at the endorsement on the writ. Then he says:

"Owing to the quantity of letters and large bundles of election papers which reached me by every mail, and which I was consequently unable to assort and examine before the arrival of an additional batch by the following mail."

Now, this is the attempt to account for the delay and the failure to gazette some members, whose returns were received before those of others who were gazetted prior to them. He says:

"Before the arrival of an additional batch by the following mail, it necessarily happened from both want of time and space, that those which came last were put on the top of the others, and were in consequence, in many instances, gazetted before those which were underneath, and which had previously arrived."

Now, that is the explanation. I have taken the trouble to look over this list to see how far that explanation will account for what has happened. Thus, I find that in the case of the Russell election it was received on the 7th March and was gazetted on the 29th, 19 days after; Chambly received on the 7th, gazetted on the 26th; Montmagny received on the 7th, gazetted on the 26th. All the following were received on the 8th and gazetted on the 26th, namely, North Waterloo, Laprairie, Megantic, Portneuf, St. Hyacinthe, St. John's, Verchères and Northumberland, New Brunswick. West Ontario was received on the 8th, and gazetted on the 26th, as was also Kamouraska. Now, all these were received before certain parties who were gazetted prior to them. Those received on the 10th, were placed, according to Mr. Pope's account, on the top of the others. He had not time to examine them, so that those received on the 10th would come first. Well, what do we find? Why, that some of those received on the 10th were not gazetted until after those received earlier. How did Mr. Pope get below those that appeared on the 10th, and gazette those that appeared on the 9th? How did he get below those that came on the 9th and succeed in gazetting those that came on the 7th? Sir, the statement is untrue. It is a statement that is wholly unworthy of a public officer of this House, a statement that shows this clerk, instead of discharging the duties that the law imposed upon him as the law required he should discharge them, undertook to obey some other parties, and failed to gazette members as they were elected and returned. I find the following: Bothwell, received on the 10th March and gazetted on the 2nd of April; Glengarry, received on the 10th March and gazetted on the 26th; East Lambton, received on the 10th March and gazetted on the 12th March, two days afterwards. Here were some gazetted two days after the receipt of the writs. Of those that would be in the same pile, according to Mr. Pope's account, some were not gazetted until the 19th of March, some not until the 26th, and some not until the 2nd April. How was it possible, according to Mr. Pope's account, that when he had disposed of those that were above those that were received subsequently to them, those that remained of the same date were not all dealt with at the same time? Why, Sir, it is because the statement was not true, because it is an impudent and shallow falsehood, and such as ought to subject this officer to immediate dismissal. Then I find that South Perth was received on the 10th of March, and gazetted on the 26th, North Simcoe, on the 10th and gazetted on the 12th; Maskinongé, on the 10th and gazetted on the 26th; Missisquoi, received on the 10th and gazetted on the 26th; Ottawa county, received on the 10th, gazetted on the 12th; Rimouski, received on the 10th and gazetted on the 26th; St Maurice, received on the 10th and gazetted on the 12th; Selkirk, received on the 10th and gazetted on the 12th; Winnipeg, received on the 10th and gazetted on the 12th. So hon. gentlemen will see that those that were received on the same day were not published in the same Gazette. Suppose some of them had been left over, suppose that they had been deferred until those that were received subsequently had been dealt with, is it not perfectly obvious to every hon. gentleman that when the remainder of that particular day were reached, they would all be dealt with simultaneously? Yet we find that is not the case, that in every case where a member was returned upon a particular day to support the Government, he was gazetted in the following issue of the Gazette, but when he was returned as a member of the Opposition, he was not gazetted before two, three, or four weeks after the return was received, had elapsed. Then, for Brockville, the return was received on the 11th and gazetted on the 12th; Halton, received on the 11th and gazetted on the 26th; Kent, received on the 11th, gazetted on the 2nd of April; South Oxford, received on the 11th, gazetted on the 26th; North Perth, received on the 11th and gazetted on the 19th, as were also Bellechasse, Montreal Centre, Montreal West, Beauce, Charlevoix and Chicoutimi. Dorchester, received on the 11th and gazetted on the 2nd of April; Jacques Cartier was received on the 11th and gazetted on the 12th; Lewis, received on the 11th March and gazetted on the 2nd April; Quebec County, Restigouche and Cumberland were received on the 11th and gazetted on the 12th; Charlotte was received on the 11th and gazetted on the 2nd April. So hon. gentlemen will see that so far from their being 30 received on one day, there is not more than a dozen, and in no instance could the delay have arisen in the way stated in Mr. Pope's letter. Then, again, Addington was received on the 12th, that was on Saturday, and was gazetted the next Saturday, the 19th, as were also Waterloo, East Hastings, East Toronto, West Toronto, North York, Terrebonne, Cape Breton, Guysboro', Westmoreland and Provencher. The following were received on the 12th and gazetted on the 26th; West Elgin, South Huron, South Middlesex, North York, Prescott, Centre Wellington, South Wellington, Berthier, King's N.B., Lunenburg, Richmond, Yarmouth. L'Islet was received on the 12th and gazetted the 12th April; Sunbury was received on Sunday the 13th and gazetted on the 19th; South Essex, received on the 14th and gazetted the 2nd April; East Grey, received on the 14th and gazetted on the 19th March, as were also South Leeds, Lennox and Megantic. Prince Edward county was received on the 14th March and gazetted on the 19th April, a delay of 26 days. South Victoria, 14th, gazetted 19th; South Waterloo, 14th, gazetted 19th; Argenteuil, 14th, gazetted 19th; Beauharnois, 14th, gazetted 19th; L'Assomption, 14th, gazetted 26th; Richmond and Wolfe, 14th, gazetted 19th; Richelieu, 14th, gazetted 19th; Stanstead, 14th, gazetted 19th; Témiscouata, 14th, gazetted 19th; Yamaska, 14th, gazetted 19th; and at the same date Annapolis, Digby, Halifax, Hants, Queen's, Albert, N. B., and Prince, Prince Edward Island. I need not go through the entire list, but I have gone through enough to show that the statement of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is an untrue statement, that it is impossible it can be true, that he has not dealt with the matter in the way he said he did deal with it, and that he disregarded the law. It was the right of every hon. member, whether elected to support the Government or the Opposition, to be gazetted immediately after the receipt of the return of the returning officer of the constituency by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. That duty the law makes imperative. It is not a discretionary duty imposed on him: there is no discretion on his part; it is mandatory. It is his duty to obey the law, and hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches know that this officer has disregarded the law in this particular. And now we have before the committee a proposition to increase the salary of an officer who has done what? Done an act of gross injustice to hon. members on this side of the House; he failed to gazette over sixty on this side within the time fixed by the law of the land, and he subjected many of them to petitions affecting their return to this House after the time had expired, if he had discharged his duty as the law directs. Hon. gentlemen opposite have told us that it does not matter, if a member of the House has not violated the law, whether he is petitioned against or not. I say it matters very greatly. It is impossible that any seat can be contested without great expense and inconvenience, and it was the duty of this officer to have discharged his duty as the law directed. He has not done so, and hon. gentlemen opposite, knowing the fact that he has not discharged his duty, that he has violated the law, that he has disregarded his oath of office, come down and propose to increase his salary by $350. It is impossible to look at this proposal and come to any other conclusion than that the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches conspired with this man to violate the duties of his office and take an unfair advantage of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. He has proved a mean, unprincipled minion of authority, and that is shown by what he has done. It is shown by the letter addressed by him to this House, a letter which on its face is false, a letter which is such as would have secured, where no improper motives intervened, the instant dismissal of any one who would venture to write it. Yet hon. gentlemen, instead of seeking to secure the true and honest discharge of duties by a public officer, propose to offer a premium to the man who has violated his duty in this particular. Why, if there is any office with respect to which it was important that the man should act fairly, it is this office. He is not the officer of the Government, he is the servant of the law, and it is his duty to obey the law; and there is no rule or principle better settled in our law than that it is no excuse on the part of an officer to fail to discharge his duty and violate the law at the instance of his superiors. Hon. gentlemen opposite may have advised this man to act in the way he did. They were indisposed to have this matter go before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, where this man could have been examined on oath, where he could have been questioned with respect to any correspondence, conversation or interview had with the hon. gentleman or any of his colleagues. Yet the action of the Government, the course taken by the First Minister, shows very clearly that this officer felt that he was under the protection of the Government. My notice had scarcely appeared on the paper before the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery was walking the corridor of the eastern block waiting for the Secretary of State one hour before he arrived at his office. Why was he so anxious with respect to this matter? The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery knew he had disregarded the law, that he had failed to perform the duties the law imposed on him, that he had not gazetted the members as the law directed, and that he had violated his oath of office. Yet we find the Government in this instance undertaking to prevent any enquiry into the conduct of this officer, and in the Estimates proposing to increase his salary by $350. For my part I am opposed to this increase. I am opposed to any increase of the salary of an unworthy officer. It is as clear as noon-day that this man has violated the duties of his office. Hon. gentlemen opposite know it. How would they act in the case of an ordinary officer who had done as this man had done? Would they not dismiss him? If any officer were to conduct himself for one moment towards any hon. gentlemen on that side of the House as this officer has conducted himself towards three-fourths of the members on this side, his position would not be worth 24 hours' purchase; and yet hon. gentlemen not only endeavor to screen this officer, but they propose to reward him for his treachery to those who sit on this side of the House. I will oppose an increase of the salary of this officer, and when an opportunity occurs I will move his dismissal from office. I will ask hon. gentlemen opposite to take the responsibility before the House and the country that they have of defending a man who wrote an impertinent and mendacious production such as that which appears in the Votes and Proceedings. I want this country to know it if hon. gentlemen propose to strike below the belt; if they propose to carry on a war of this sort disregarding the law; if they are disposed to employ an instrument of this kind to take an unfair advantage of hon. members on this side of the House; if they are not willing to abide by the popular verdict; if they are not willing to rest content with the strength which an appeal to the country has given them. I intend, so far as I am concerned, that the public shall know precisely what this officer has done and what the Government propose to do in order to sustain him in the position which he occupies. I wish the country to know that hon. gentlemen opposite have used a public officer to violate the law, to take an unfair and illegal advantage of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, and that they propose to reward him for those services out of the public Treasury.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I heard the hon. member for Bothwell mix my name with the name of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and those abominations of which he has been speaking. The hon. gentleman says that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has been walking sentry at my office. Now, it is not parliamentary for him to charge me with being late at my office.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I did not charge the hon. gentleman with being there late, but I said that the Clerk of the Crown was there early.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Well, I will give this information to the hon. gentleman, that I have not spoken to, I have not corresponded with, I have not seen, either at my office or elsewhere, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery since long before the last general elections.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think there could hardly be a more indecent thing than the proposition to add $350 to the salary of an officer who, on the evidence of his own letter, to which my hon. friend has called attention, has evidently been guilty of acts which appear to me to be in direct violation of his oath of office, and certainly the violation of his duty. I say that no human being can read the letter of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, addressed to our Clerk at the Table, and believe for one moment that it has resulted from any honest intention; no one can believe that, from the statements which he has made in that letter, such a state of things could have arisen as my hon. friend has depicted. My hon. friend is perfectly right in stating that every line of this letter shows conclusively on the face of it that the explanation offered by this officer cannot possibly be true. There is no possibility, if that gentleman did as he said, if he pitched all these letters promiscuously into a waste paper basket, or whatever it may be—there is no possibility that the results which appeared in our Gazettes could have taken place on any other principle than that when the pot boils the scum comes uppermost; and if hon. gentlemen admit it is on that principle that their Gazettes came first, there may be some justification for the allegations made by this officer that, when he placed some twenty, thirty, forty or fifty returns or large bundles of paper together, by some unexplained, mysterious fatality it always happened that five or six or seven times as many returns affecting gentlemen on the other side of the House came to the surface as returns affecting members on this side. Sir, I must say that I agree with my hon. friend that a more impudent letter was never communicated to a body like this by any officer in its service—a more impudent letter; I say that distinctly; and I say it reflects exceedingly little credit on hon. gentlemen opposite that when they were charged, as they were repeatedly from this side of the House, with having been in collusion with this officer, to induce him to abuse his position for the purpose of giving an undue and unfair advantage, in the matter of gazetting these returns, to hon. gentlemen on that side over hon. gentlemen on this, that they should have refused an investigation. If their consciences are clear, if their skirts are clean, if they had no transactions, as the Secretary of State declares he had none, and no intercourse with this clerk, what on earth had they to fear from an investigation? Here we have a letter brought to us by this gentleman in which he states:

"Owing to the quantity of letters and large bundles of election papers which reached me by every mail, and which I was consequently unable to assort and examine before the arrival of an additional batch by the following mail, it necessarily happened, from both want of time and space, that those which came last were put on the top of the others, and were in consequence, in many instances, gazetted before those which were underneath, and which had previously arrived."

Now, does any hon. gentleman opposite pretend to say, in the teeth of the evidence of the Gazette returns, that that is a true statement of what happened? Does any hon. gentleman pretend to say that it could by any conceivable combination of circumstances have occurred that eighteen or nineteen gentleman on that side should have been gazetted as against three or four on this side, if those documents were all piled pell-mell in one huge receptacle and taken up by accident? Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman himself would be the very first to pour the most withering scorn and ridicule on gentlemen on this side if they offered such a statement as that as any exemplification of the doctrine of chances. Moreover, the Clerk of the Crown intimates that it was his duty to examine large piles of papers, oaths, statements and certificates of the various officers employed at the election, nomination papers and numerous other documents. Well, I must say that this is the first time we have heard that that was his duty—that he was to go over all these papers. For what purpose is he to go through them? He is not to sit in judgment on the proceedings taken by the returning officer. As my hon. friend stated correctly, and as the Act states in the most explicit terms possible, it is his duty to take the declarations of the returning officer, and, on that declaration, within the shortest time possible to gazette the man returned. Now, I would not make any disturbance about a matter of this kind, if the proportion was only two or three in excess; but no man can look at the Gazette returns and believe that what actually happened was an accident. Why, Sir, in the first week eight gentlemen on that side were gazetted and one on this side. Does any hon. gentleman pretend to say that what took place in the second, the third or the fourth week—does any hon. gentleman pretend that that kind of thing could have arisen from accident, or that it is satisfactorily explained by this precious document? If hon. gentlemen have any regard for their own honor, after the statement made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) who has very expressly, in his place in the House, intimated his belief that these hon. gentlemen have dealt with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and induced him under these circumstances to make a return contrary to the directions given in the law—if they have any regard for their own honor, they will, now that he has given the so-called explanation, which I venture to say nobody in the House can pretend to say is a satisfactory one, they will at once cause this letter to be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and have a full investigation made into the circumstances to which the hon. gentleman has alluded. I think thus and thus only can they possibly clear themselves from the imputation which will otherwise rest upon them, of having abused their power as Ministers of the Crown for the purpose of inducing this man, a servant of the Government, to act in the way he did, in a way contrary to all reason and fair play. I regret exceedingly that I should have to speak in such terms of the conduct of any official of this Government, and I regret still more that, on the present occasion, it should be proposed to reward this man, who has certainly discharged his duty at the best in the most careless and perfunctory manner possible—to reward him with a large increase of salary. Taking the circumstances altogether it is quite impossible for us to regard this as anything else than the wages paid for a gross breach of duty; and I certainly agree with the hon. gentleman in saying that we must move for a reduction of this item at the proper time. I think we cannot—and I believe the country will sustain us—we cannot possibly permit a matter of this kind to go without the severest censure it is in our power to inflict, and though we cannot, perhaps, deprive him of the wages of his iniquity, we will at least pillory and gibbet him as he has already pilloried and gibbeted himself by the letter he has written. I say that it is not the letter of an honest man; it is not the letter of an honorable public servant; it is not a letter which in any shape, form or way can be taken as an excuse or justification of the extraordinary irregularities which have occurred in connection with the gazetting of members on this side of the House.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 59) to amend the Act incorporating the Alberta and Athabasca Railway Company.—(Mr. Colby.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 79) to consolidate and amend the Acts relating to the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway and Steamship Company, and to change the name thereof.—(Mr. Scarth.)

Bill (No. 84) respecting the Edmonton and Saskatchewan Land Company (Limited).—(Mr. Scarth)

Bill (No. 80) to revive the charter of the Quebec Railway Bridge Company, and to amend the same by extending the delay for commencement and completion of its works, and in other respects.—(Mr. McGreevy.)

Bill (No. 96) to incorporate the Dominion Oil Pipe Line and Manufacturing Company.—(Mr. Mara.)

Bill (No. 93) respecting the Anglo-Canadian Bank.—(Mr. Ward.)

Bill (No. 100) respecting the Waterloo and Magog Railway Company.—(Mr. Colby.)

Bill (No. 101) respecting the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company.—(Mr. Labelle.)

Bill (No. 104) to incorporate the Canadian Power Company.—(Mr. Hesson.)

Bill (No. 105) to incorporate the Hereford Branch Railway Company.—(Mr. Ives.)

BILLS WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 86) further to amend the Act to incorporate the South Saskatchewan Valley Railway Company.—(Mr. Brown.)

Bill (No. 97) to authorise certain extensions of the Hamilton and North-Western Railway Company.—(Mr. Brown.)

COBOURG, BLAIRTON AND MARMORA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. SMALL, in the absence of Mr. GUILLET, moved second reading of Bill (No. 103) to incorporate the Cobourg, Blairton and Marmora Railway Company.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to have an explanation of the nature of the provisions of this Bill. The reason I ask an explanation is that, as I understand it, there has been a company in existence at Cobourg, in the west riding of Northumberland, which has become insolvent and its property sold; and as the property extends into three or four different constituencies and some of the matters in dispute are in my own constituency, I would like to understand what this Bill is asked for.

Mr. BOWELL. My hon. friend is not altogether correct. That railway does not run into North Hastings. All its proprietor desires is to have power to extend the road from the terminus at Rice Lake along the south side of the lake in order to connect with the short line that runs to the Blairton mines in the county of Peterboro'. That is all the owner of the road at present asks, as I understand from Mr. Pierce.

Mr. MALLORY. Does the hon. gentleman pretend that some of the property is not situated in the Township of Marmora.

Mr. BOWELL. I said nothing of the kind. I was speaking of the route upon which the railway is to run, and said nothing of the property. The Bill does not provide for any disposition of the property. I am quite aware there are some 20,000 acres of land in the county of Hastings, township of Marmora, belonging to the proprietor of the road.

Motion agreed to, and the Bill read the second time.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Privy Council $25,902 50

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not rise for the purpose of at all entering into the discussion raised by the hon. member for Bothwell. I do not think that that discussion arises here, although it is, of course, in the hon. gentleman's power to deal with the subject now. What we really have to consider here is not an outside question of that kind, which can be brought up in any way the hon. gentleman chooses, but to consider the change that has been made by the transfer from the Secretary of State's Department to that of the Privy Council. This officer, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, has no duties in connection with the Department of the Secretary of State. His duties are necessarily incidental to the Department of the Privy Council, and the transfer has been made to that Department. The reason for the increase of the salary is occasioned by the largely increased duties that devolve upon that officer. Every person knows there is not only, at present, a large increase in the members of the House, but that under the existing Franchise Act, additional duties are thrown on this officer. I think it would be better to deal with this apart from the question raised by the hon. member for Bothwell, and which no doubt will be raised in another way, and confine ourselves to the question as it appears in the Estimates.

Mr. WELDON. He is removed from the Secretary of State's Department to the Privy Council.

Mr. TUPPER. This increase is not an increase at all, so far as the transfer is concerned. It is the transfer of this officer from the Department of the Secretary of State, with which he was formerly connected, and which had no natural or necessary connection with the duties of Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, to the Department with which all his duties are connected, that is the Privy Council, and the increase has arisen from the increased number of members of the House, and the increased duties thrown upon the officer.

Mr. WELDON. Is it proposed that this officer shall not remain longer under the control of Parliament? His duties, as I understand them, are confined to this Parliament. What increased duties has he to perform?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no necessary connection between the legislation and the duties of this officer. The duties are connected with, and his instructions are given by the Department of the Privy Council, and the natural position for the office seems to be there, and it is in that view that the transfer was made, and not at all to remove the officer from the control of the House. He is just as much under the control of the House now as he was before.

Mr. DAVIES. I do not think the explanation given by the Finance Minister will be considered as satisfactory to the House. The House cannot ignore the statement of facts which have been made to it on the responsibility of two hon. members who addressed the House to-day. We are face to face not only with the fact that an officer holding the responsible position of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery who has certain statutory duties devolving upon him affecting the rights of members of this House, and the privileges of those they represent, has been transferred from one Department to another. That is a mere matter of detail. But the matter does not stop there. That officer has been charged with serious dereliction of duty. It has been charged that he has prostituted his office for party purposes, that he has been guilty of treating this House with contempt in a matter respecting its privileges and its rights.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What I proposed was this: I believe the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has a notice on the paper for a motion to refer to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I think the discussion of the conduct of the officer would come up on that or on confirmation of the vote in Supply. The hon. gentleman can bring the question up in any way he chooses, but I do not see the necessity for dealing specifically with the charge of improper conduct on the part of a public officer in connection with the appropriation for the salary of the office. Suppose it was found that a gentleman had so failed to discharge his duties, or had so improperly discharged his duties as to involve his dismissal, still you would require the provision to be made for the office, and it is the office and not the officer I am proposing to deal with now. As we are now in committee, and that is not a convenient place, as the hon. gentleman will see, to bring in any issue in relation to this matter, I have suggested whether it would not be better to deal with the question of this estimate now, and, at the suitable time, in whatever mode hon. gentlemen opposite might feel disposed to adopt, to deal with the conduct of the officer.

Mr. DAVIES. If I understand the position of matters aright, there is no time more apt than this to discuss the conduct of this officer and for these reasons: In the first place, some time ago a very serious charge was brought against this officer by a member of this House from his place in the House; after making that charge, that hon. gentleman moved that it be referred to the Committee on Elections and Privileges to examine into, and the leader of the Government moved an amendment that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery be requested to write a letter to this House explaining away, if he could, the charges made against him by the member. The amendment was carried, and then the hon. gentleman who made the charge in the first instance gave notice of a substantive motion which may or may not be reached at a subsequent stage of the proceedings of the House. It may be true that, if the Government had left matters as they were, the conduct of the officer might have been more properly discussed when that motion was reached, but the Government have challenged enquiry, they call upon the House not only to ratify the conduct of the officer, but to give to him a certificate of character by increasing his salary, and the House is now sitting in committee upon a motion, not in so many words to declare that this officer is entirely free of any charges of malefeasance against him, but to approve of his conduct, give him a certificate and increase his salary.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend is entirely mistaken. This matter was disposed of before the elections. This transference was made in October last, before the elections. It has had no relation whatever to them, and the proposed increase in the salary and everything connected with it was antecedent to the elections. These estimates were prepared before any charge of this kind arose. That has only come up incidentally. The committee may be a convenient place for discussion in some respects, but I am sure we all want to save the time of the House and to avoid having half a dozen discussions on the same matter. I have therefore suggested, as I suppose the hon. gentleman does not propose to bring this to an issue upon the question not of the officer but of the salary of the office which has to be provided in any case, whether it would not be more convenient and whether it would not answer his own purpose better to take some other occasion, because he cannot bring it conveniently to a satisfactory termination in the committee, and there are abundant opportunities of moving in it. If his motion is not reached, he can make a motion on any day on going into Supply, and can raise the question in any way most convenient to himself. I suggest whether, at this period of the Session and in this hot weather, it would not be well to economise our time and avoid a repetition of the same discussion by confining the discussion in committee to the office and leaving the question of the officer's conduct aside until the hon. gentleman finds it convenient to raise it in another form. Of course, I am in the hands of the committee, but I throw out this suggestion, which I hope will commend itself to their approval with a view to the convenience of members on both sides.

Mr. DAVIES. There is no one who is more anxious to facilitate the business so as to bring the Session to a close than I am; and, speaking for hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, I am sure it is the general wish to forward the business as much as possible, having due regard to the interests of the public service. But the hon. gentleman cannot ignore the fact that the committee is as convenient an occasion to discuss the conduct of an officer of this kind as can be obtained. There is no desire to prolong the discussions. I wished to express my regret that, at a time when the Government is proposing to increase the salary of this important public officer, and makes a proposition to that effect, and that proposition is met by serious statements of the character of those which were made by my hon. friends before dinner, these statements should have been allowed to go unchallenged. Do hon. gentlemen, do the leader of the Government and his friends expect that this matter will lie quiet? The hon. gentlemen know, as I was proceeding to say when the Minister of Finance made his appeal, that this is a proposition to increase the salary of this officer. The hon. gentleman says it was determined upon before the malefeasances mentioned occurred. It may have been; that is not the point; this is the first time that the proposition has been brought to the notice of the House.

Mr. MADILL. No.

Mr. DAVIES. When was it brought to the notice of the House?

Mr. MADILL. It was brought by the Secretary of State two weeks ago.

Mr. DAVIES. My hon. friend surely does not understand—and allowances will no doubt be made for him as a new member—the position in which the House now stands. We are now for the first time passing this vote in the Committee of Supply. We are passing upon it at the only time when members have a full and free opportunity of discussing every matter in connection with the proposed increases in the public service. Here is one of those increases, and this is the time when it can be discussed, not in formal set speeches which, once made, a member has no opportunity of explaining or commenting upon, but in friendly discussion across the House. If the statements which have been made are overcharged, if they are untrue, if the Government are perfectly spotless in the matter, if there has been no collusion between any member of the Government and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, I think it is due to the House and to this committee, and to the members on this side at least, that such an explanation should be given. It cannot be given. The fact that the Government are so silent shows that it cannot be given. There never has been an officer in the public service I will venture to say, at any rate within the recollection of the younger members of this House, against whom such serious charges have been made as have been made against this officer, and those charges have been made against him furthermore alleging that he acted in collusion with the Government to put the members of the Opposition at a disadvantage, to lengthen unduly and illegally the time allowed by law for petitioning against their return, lengthening it in defiance of the express words of the statute, going out of his way and omitting to do what the statute says he ought to do, but doing directly what the statute says he should not do. When the First Minister moved that he be permitted in explanation of his conduct to send a letter to this House, the letter was sent, and I would like to know if there is an independent member on either side of the House who will venture to say that that officer in that letter has given us a satisfactory explanation of his conduct. Specific charges were made against him in regard to certain members of this House, whose names were given, that he had improperly and illegally, for improper political purposes, delayed the returns in some cases for 15 days, in some cases for 30 days, and in one case for 35 days. The name of the member was given, the time that he delayed was given, and he was asked for an explanation, and he gave none. He treats this House with contempt. It was agreed by those who took part in the previous debate that theoretically, at least—and that was practically—the members on both sides should stand on an equality. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is not and ought not to be a Government official. He is a statutory officer to discharge certain statutory duties. He has no discretionary power. The reply he makes to this House is that his time was taken up in looking over the qualifications, and the oaths, and the statements made by deputy returning officers. Why, Sir, that is all nonsense. He had nothing to do with these oaths, the oaths may have been taken properly or improperly, the qualifications of the candidates may have been correct or incorrect, the elections may have been run properly or improperly, but that is a matter with which he had nothing to do. That is a matter which this Parliament in its wisdom has relegated to the proper judicial tribunals. He had a simple statutory duty to discharge, to look at the certificates sent him by the deputy returning officer, and to publish in the next issue of the Gazette the name of the man who had been returned as having the majority of votes. He had no discretion to alter it. Whether he found the preceding papers correct or incorrect, he had no discretion to send them back, or to do anything other than that which the law prescribed, and in mandatory terms directed him to do. He was charged with a dereliction of duty, for a vile and improper purpose, and he was asked to give an explanation to the House of his conduct. He has not done so, and we are asked to-day, in the face of these facts, to give him a certificate of character, and to increase his salary. Now, I ask the House if this is to be passed without discussion? The Finance Minister, in the few general observations he made, says that this man's duties have been increased under the Franchise Act, and, therefore, the salary must be increased. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman knows that the Franchise Act does not increase the duties of the Clerk of the Crown in any way. That officer's duties are set forth under the Election Law, and, whether the Franchise Act is in existence or not, his duties remain exactly the same. Therefore, the excuse falls to the ground, and the hon. gentleman must invent some other excuse. It may be that the Government can satisfy the House that the salary is altogether too small. The Government may be able to show the House that his duties justify an increase of salary, but they certainly cannot do it by a statement like that of the Finance Minister, that the Franchise Act has increased the duties of this officer. I do think that in this matter, which affects so seriously the privileges and rights of the members on both sides of the House, we should consider for some time before we not only vote what seems to be an approval of the conduct of this officer, but also to grant him an increase of salary. Sir, we have arrived at a pretty stage in the proceedings of elections at this period, when a returning officer sets the law at defiance and sends a man to represent a district who was never elected by the people, and who sits in the House, and Parliament takes no notice of it; and when the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery sets at defiance the law of the land, which is as direct and peremptory in its language as it can be made. He says, I will not gazette the members as the law directs me to do, but I will gazette the members of the party which has my political sympathies, I will gazette them first and let the others take their chances after 30 or 40 days, and then the Government come down here and in consideration of this officer having neglected his duty, they propose to increase his salary. I do think the House, the committee, and every member of it who has been outraged, and whose constituents have been outraged by this officer, are entitled to some fuller and further explanation from the Government. If the First Minister will rise in his place to-day and say he is perfectly willing that the conduct of this gentleman should be referred for examination to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, then there might be something to be said. But I have not heard a hint, I have not heard a word from any hon. member on the ministerial side that they intend to accept the motion of my hon. friend. The House knows, those who have sat here for any length of time know, that if this vote passes, my hon. friend's motion for an investigation will be voted down. The facts will never be reached, and the officer who has outraged—I will not say his oath, because I want to have the full facts before me before I make that statement—but who prima facie has acted in direct defiance of the law, is now to be patted on the back, and his salary to be increased, while hundreds of respectable gentlemen who are working twice as hard as he is, have no increase proposed to them at all, because they have done their duty. I look upon this as a most serious matter, not serious in the aspect that it increases by three or four hundred dollars the salary of a public officer, but serious because charges have been made against him by members on the floor of this House, charges which he is called upon to answer, and which he failed to answer, charges which it is proposed should be investigated and which up to this moment, I understand, the Government refuse to allow to be investigated. Under these circumstances, I think it is right to prolong for a time, at least, this discussion. If the Government choose to disavow his conduct, of course we will go on to some other matters. But, I think that while the Secretary of State thought it was necessary for him to disavow any connection with this disgraceful proceeding, and while the other members of the Government have remained quiet, the suspicion is naturally aroused that they are not able to make the declaration he did. I wonder if the First Minister can rise in his place and declare that neither directly or indirectly had he any communication with this officer with respect to the publication of the returns. I think he might do so if he is perfectly innocent. I dare say he knew something about it. We make no charge against him directly without proof; we are not in the habit of doing so on this side of the House. We always support our charges with proof, and in this case the proof is on the record of our proceedings. The names of the members, the time when the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery received the returns, the times when they were published, the fact that in the intermediate period he had received returns of Conservative members and had gazetted them and kept the Liberal returns over—all these facts are on the record—and with the absurd, ridiculous letter, which is almost in contempt of the House, which the Clerk sent here, I do not feel disposed to vote for this increase of salary.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not think it right that we should permit this matter to pass without entering individually and collectively our solemn protest against the proceedings that have taken place. We know perfectly well that if hon. gentlemen opposite sat on this side of the House a howl would have been raised if we had acted as they have acted towards us. We hold that the action of this officer deserves to be condemned, and we consider it our duty to condemn it. While home for the holidays I called on the returning officer of my division and asked him as to the time he made my return. I am satisfied that it was received a considerable time before the 15th of March, which is the date on which the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery says he received it. No less than three numbers of the Gazette were issued before I was gazetted. There is not a single constituency in the section from which I come represented by a Conservative that was not gazetted a week, and in some cases two weeks, before me, and consequently there was ample time to enter a protest against me as an offset to any action taken against a Conservative in that section. It is unfair to take this officer from the position he has occupied for years and place him in a higher position with an increase of $350 to his salary as a reward for his action in this matter. Such a case is nothing less than a national disgrace. It is an outrageous act, after the people are appealed to, that every technical advantage should be taken by gentlemen on the Treasury benches to perpetuate their power. What a record we have to throw in the face of hon. gentlemen opposite with respect to their actions in years past? There was the Gerry-mander Act; and I could name several hon. gentlemen opposite who would never have shown their faces in Parliament except for that Act. Then there was the Franchise Act, and the best evidence with respect to the character of that Bill is that the Government now propose to take last year's list for the present year; it has done its work, and after a quiet sleep they will resurrect it when they desire it to do duty again. In a word they resort to any measure to retain power and office. The Minister of Finance has made a very plausible and courteous suggestion, that we should allow the debate to terminate and should discuss the matter on a subsequent occasion. If we look at the reports for 1872-73 we will find that hon. gentleman and the Minister of Customs questioned every little item which was before the House, and moreover entered into a general and almost everlasting criticism. But hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think that because the general elections have passed, we should allow this matter to pass. As a matter of justice to ourselves and our constituents we are bound to enter our protests against the continuance of this proceeding. What may we expect in the future? It has been remarked that there is a member in this House with a majority of 60 votes against him. And then there is the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery taking advantage of his position to gazette Conservatives and hold over the gazetting of Reformers, and yet it is proposed to give him $350 additional because he allowed himself to be made a dupe for the purpose. It must be remembered that the Government had a fair opportunity of clearing their skirts from this matter had they acceded to the request of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who proposed that it should be investigated by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, where the clerk could have been examined under oath. If that had been done, the Government would have had an opportunity to clear themselves of all responsibility for what happened, but they felt that they dare not do this. When the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery was under oath, he would have had, in reply to questions, to have confessed the truth and admit that insinuations were made, that advice was given, and thus this political crime was perpetrated in connection with this gazetting business. The Government should have taken advantage of that proposal; and if they had done so we would have got over this difficulty, and the Finance Minister would not have had to make the suggestion he has made.

Mr. McMULLEN.

But hon. gentlemen opposite declined to do so, and requested the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to send a letter of explanation to the Clerk of the House. And a poor explanation it is. It has been thoroughly sifted by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who has shown that it is nothing short of a tissue of falsehoods, and one that does not bear investigation. It is our duty to make the country acquainted with this gross injustice. But this is only one of a series of acts of injustice perpetrated for years; we have almost got accustomed to them, and to the fact that the people of the country are prepared to always shut their eyes to the facts presented.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think that with the facts before the House and the assertions made by hon. gentlemen in their places with respect to the action of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, the matter should be fairly investigated before this increase of salary is voted. If we do not, we are simply giving away the case presented. Under the resolution moved by the First Minister, he was called on to give an explanation, and certainly no man who will read the papers can feel that that explanation is satisfactory. If he had, on the contrary, shown clearly and explicitly how the acts which he is accused of doing intentionally were committed, matters might have been in a different position; but no man can read that letter without feeling that it is an entire evasion of the matter which he was asked to explain. It is due to the honor and dignity of the House, it is only justice to the members of this House who make the charge, and the Clerk of the Crown himself, that this matter should be investigated, and that before asking the committee to increase the salary of an officer who has been charged with a dereliction of duty, the Government should either give an assurance that the matter will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or else the item should be allowed to stand over until the matter is fully investigated.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It is very evident that charges of a serious nature have been made against this officer and these charges do not bear on the officer alone, but by insinuation it has been stated that the Government of the day are responsible for the course he pursued. If, then, the Government will not allow the matter to be investigated as against this officer, they must themselves be held responsible for his conduct; and it appears to me to be a very strange course on their part that they should sit quietly by and not make any explanation of these charges. If the charges made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) are true, that officer should not occupy his position for a single day. If they are true the Government is bound to remove him from his position, and if they do not remove him they virtually acknowledge that they alone are to blame for his conduct, because he was responsible to them. If they do not offer any explanation of his conduct the country will regard them as the guilty parties, and will believe that that officer was merely an instrument by which the wrong was intended to be inflicted upon some members of this House. It is all very well for the Minister of Finance to say that we should allow this matter to pass, and that this is not a proper time to discuss it. It may not be a proper time to suit his convenience, and I believe any discussion of this matter is not a proper time, so far as the Government is concerned. Are there not other members of the Government who can rise in their places and state that they had no communication, directly or indirectly, with reference to the course of this officer? But as they sit quietly in their seats they put themselves in the position of admitting their guilt—admitting that they had some communication with that officer in the way of directing him to pursue the course he did pursue. I ask, is there a single member of this Government who would dare to go before an audience at the present time and defend himself against the charges which have been hurled against this officer and against the Government? It is true they are capable of defending many outrages but this one is the height to which they have arrived, and I believe there is no member of the Government so lost to shame, I might say, as to dare to defend their course before this House. Are we to reward an officer for doing that which he ought not to do by giving him a larger salary? They say this was a transfer from one office to another, but when was this transfer made? Was it made before the elections, when they were trembling at the prospect of being defeated at the polls? It is not a thing that they would leave to the last moment, for in 1882, before they went to the polls, they took good pains to make themselves secure, and before this election they assumed control of the voters' lists, and, not content with that, they resorted to the scheme of inducing a servant of this House to violate the duty he had sworn to perform faithfully. Did he do that through their instructions or advice? Had they a knowledge of it themselves? Did they tell him what course he was to pursue, how he was to find out who were Reformers and who were Conservatives, and to lay by quietly the returns of the Reformers and take up the returns of Conservatives as soon as possible? I ask any unbiassed man on that side if he can possibly come to any other conclusion than that there was a method in the manner of gazetting, and that it could not possibly be done as it was by accident. I do not believe any member of this House believes but that it was a deliberate intent, either of this officer or of the Government, that the Conservative party might have an advantage over the Reform party in this respect. If that is so, are we not justified in asking for an explanation when the Government are proposing to promote this officer? I say that it would not be proper to allow this item to pass without censuring him, and if the Government will not defend him, then they must be held guilty of the wrong which has been imputed to this officer. They should rise in their places and explain upon whose shoulders the blame really rests. Are we as a Parliament to let it go to the country and the world at large that an officer who deliberately violates his oath and neglects to do his duty will not be defended by the Government whose officer he is, nor will they take his responsibility themselves of his conduct. They do not display that high moral tone which ought to characterise a Government at all times. I believe it is the bounden duty of every member of this House to declare at once that this officer ought to explain what he has done and the reason he did it. We can easily understand now why the Government refused to allow this matter to go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Before that committee the officer could have explained the whole matter; he could have been examined, and he would have been obliged to tell who was the instigator of this fraud and wrong upon the Reform party. Perhaps it would have been very uncomfortable to some members of the Government. Perhaps some things would have come to light that they would not have cared to see exposed. I believe this is something on which we should raise our voices. I believe it was the intention of our opponents to have as many Reform members seats protested as possible. I happen to be one of the happy ones who have received protests.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). My hon. friend over there cries "hear, hear." I have no doubt he would cry "hear, hear," if the seat of every member on this side was protested. That is his appreciation of honesty and justice. I have no hesitation in saying here that had it not been for the neglect or wrong-doing on the part of this officer there would have been no protest. I say that to allow an officer to inflict a wrong upon me, and then in a short time afterwards to come and ask me to vote an increase of his salary, is something that I am bound to protest against. I hope the Government will give some explanation of the absurd and unreasonable course they are now pursuing. I see the Minister of Customs sitting there and smiling as if he had never committed a wrong in his life; but I too well remember his handiwork in the Gerrymander Act to believe that he is above suspicion; and I venture to think that there are others sitting on that side of the House who, if we could only get at the truth, would have to admit that they had a part in the course that officer pursued.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). I have a peculiar sympathy with my medical brother who has just sat down. If my friend will undertake to show, and does show, that any relief has been given by any infringement of the election law to any supporter of the Government by any action of this gentleman, and no greater criminality can be attached to any infringement of the law by a member of the Opposition, I am prepared to vote condemnation to that gentleman's conduct.

Mr. MADILL. I cannot understand why the hon. member for East Elgin is desirous to condemn the Government in regard to his constituency unless it is because, as he says, he has been presented with a protest. If that gentleman or his friends in the riding are not guilty of any corrupt acts in connection with the recent election, he has nothing to fear. Those gentlemen seem to be afraid of being gazetted. They are desirous that the thirty days allowed by law for the purpose of scrutinising the acts of themselves and their officials in the election should be limited. If they have not been guilty of any illegal acts by themselves or their agents in that election, then they have received no injury at the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. But these gentlemen have been in the habit, since we came into the House this year, from the leader of the Opposition down, of arraigning the Government officials of every riding and every municipality in the Dominion where a Conservative has been returned to this House. Now, these gentlemen have not an opportunity of defending themselves from the attacks made by hon. gentlemen opposite. Attacks were made on the officials of my riding both by the hon. member for South Oxford and by the hon. leader of the Opposition. I did not venture to defend those officials, because I thought that the hon. leader of the Opposition would not get up in the House and make such charges against officials unless these charges had some foundation. He charged that the returning officer in my riding was the secretary of the Conservative Association of North Ontario. I hesitated to question that statement at the time, but when I went home I ascertained that it was at variance with the facts. The secretary has occupied that position for twenty-five years, and he is just as respectable a man as the hon. member for West Durham, or any other member on that side of the House. Now, why should the characters and reputations of these gentlemen be brought up here, gentlemen who have the confidence of the people whether they are Conservatives or Reformers? The policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, so far as the Province of Ontario is concerned, has been a policy of slander against Conservative members and Conservative Ministers. I recollect my opponent in my riding getting up on a platform and saying: "Sir John Macdonald is a liar, and I can prove him to be a liar." I think these men would do well to note what the Bible tells them when it says, "Speak no evil of the leader of thy people." But the leaders of that party have no policy but the policy of slander against the leaders of the Government, and how can we expect any other policy from the rank and file? Hon. gentlemen opposite must be aware that the hon. Secretary of State, stated a few weeks ago in this House, that the officer against whom the present charges have been preferred was transferred from his department to the Privy Council long before this charge against that official could have been formulated, and yet these gentlemen get up and assert that his salary was raised in consequence of the way in which he performed his duty in connection with the election returns. I say it is unfair for hon. gentlemen opposite to drag up the question of the character and reputation of officers of the Government before they have had an opportunity of defending themselves.

Mr. EDGAR. I am not at all surprised that the hon. member for North Ontario should be perfectly satisfied with the conduct of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on this occasion. There are three ridings in Ontario, north, south and west. The north happens to be represented by two Conservatives in this House. I happen to have the honor of representing the west riding. I find, from the return laid before the House, that the returning officer sent to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery a return from each of those ridings on the same day, the 9th of March. It is a very extraordinary accident that on the 12th of March, on the very first issue of the Gazette after the returns reached the Clerk of the Crown, the two ridings of North and South Ontario, represented by my hon. friend and another Conservative colleague, were gazetted.

Mr. BOWELL. Has the hon. gentleman read the return?

Mr. EDGAR. Oh, yes, I have read it.

Mr. BOWELL. If I read it correctly, it shows that the return in the north riding was on the 9th of March, and the gazetting was on the 12th of April.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There was no Gazette issued on the 12th of April. It should be 12th of March.

Mr. EDGAR. The date of the returns was the 9th in the three ridings. The return of the north and south were gazetted on the 12th March, and my return was not gazetted until the 26th March. No wonder the hon. gentleman is quite satisfied, no wonder he supports the increase in salary of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and declares it is a policy of slander the Opposition adopt when they take exception to conduct of that kind.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I call the attention of the Finance Minister to a paragraph or two in the paper which this officer has submitted to the House. The Minister of Finance says this is not a proper occasion for a discussion of this question. I would not have thought of bringing it to the attention of the committee if the hon. gentleman had not proposed to increase the salary of this officer who is guilty of misconduct. When he proposes to increase the salary of an officer against whom certain charges are pending, he must certainly expect that we should point out to the committee why we think this increase ought not to take place. It is a matter of no consequence whether this increase was proposed in October or February; it is not of the slightest consequence to this House when the contract, the understanding, or bargain, was entered into between the members, or some member of the Government and this officer; but this we do know, that the law of the land imposes certain duties upon him, which he has flagrantly violated. Look at the statement made by this officer, and I specially call the attention of the Minister of Finance to this statement. He gives as a reason for delay in gazetting, that some of the papers were not received in time, and that certain returning officers had not made their returns in the form required in the statute. This statement is found on page 186 of the Votes and Proceedings. I turn back to page 60 of the Votes and Proceedings, and I look at the return which this officer forwarded to this House, in obedience to its Order, and I find there are two instances he himself reports—and he was asked to report them all—in which the returning officers neglected to make their returns. He said:

“On the 23rd March I wrote the returning officer for East Peterborough that I could not find the return form S among the election papers he had forwarded me on the 11th March. On the 26th March I received an answer from him, enclosing the return form S, stating that he had inadvertently omitted to send it on the 10th March with the other election papers.

“I wrote a similar letter to the returning officer for Brockville, and received the return form S from him in reply.”

Let me call the attention of this House to what this officer did. Will it be believed that, before he received these returns, he gazetted these members? Will it be believed that in the case of the return of the hon. member for Brockville, he gazetted it, although he had not received the proper certificate. Did he not do the same thing in the case of the hon. member for Peterboro'? Yet this officer, after having gazetted these men without having received the certificate, said the delay in receiving the returns was the reason for the delay in gazetting in the case of men whose returns were properly made. We have in this statement an impudent, and lying statement put upon the records of this House in reply to an Order of this House, and it is beneath the dignity of the House that the Government should retain such an officer an hour in its service. What does the law require? I do not care whether we were injured or not by this. The law says that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall discharge a certain duty. Has he discharged that duty? Has he complied with the law? Has he dealt with the members of the House as the law requires he should deal with them? There is not an hon. gentleman opposite but knows he has not. Yet in the face of this scandalous dereliction of duty, the Government propose to increase the salary of this officer. An hon. gentleman stands up and talks about a policy of slander. Who has slandered this man? Has any hon. gentleman on that side stated that this officer has done his duty? Has any hon. gentleman on that side stated that this officer has complied with the law? Have not the charges against him been sustained by his own confession and reports? There is no room to doubt that. The hon. the First Minister says: Oh! If none of your agents have violated the law, what have you to fear? But is it a matter of no consequence to be put to the trial and inconvenience and expense of a controverted election? Why, I had a contest two years ago, through the rascality and scoundrelism of a public officer appointed by the Government, and I vindicated my right and my innocence, and the innocence of those who were associated with me and supported me in that election; but I know that it cost me between $3,000 and $4,000. And the hon. gentleman thinks proving my innocence ought to be sufficient satisfaction. That is the way these hon. gentlemen talk. Why did not they act upon that principle? Why did this officer in every instance gazette these hon. gentlemen in obedience to the law? I can name those men sitting on the Treasury benches who were gazetted 48 hours after the returns were received. They were hurried into the Gazette, and this minion of a party, this janissary, this man who was ready to be the assassin of hon. gentlemen on this side, at the instance of hon. gentlemen opposite, is now about to receive his reward at the hands of this House. I protest against such conduct; and I tell the hon. gentleman what was once said by Mr. Pym, when he was about to be betrayed by Lord Wentworth: “You may desert us now, but I will never leave you while your head is on your shoulders.” I tell these hon. gentlemen they may compel this man to violate the law, they may degrade Parliament by proceedings of this sort, but if there is a sense of justice in the people of this country, I will see, as one member of this House, that that sense of justice is invoked, and that the rights of the people's representatives in this House, the rights of those who are in the minority and those whose interests require to be protected, are vindicated by the moral sense of the community against the misconduct and the conspiracy of those men who sit at this hour upon the Treasury benches, and who discredit free institutions by the defence of a man like this, and by the proposal to increase his salary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I may say to the Minister of Customs that I have here the official Gazette, issued under the authority of Government,—

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, I see it is a mistake in the statement here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—which shows that it was on the 12th March that these two gentlemen were gazetted, and I may further say that there was no Gazette issued on the 12th April.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; I admit that there is a mistake here.

Mr. MADILL. The hon. gentleman opposite endeavors to make it appear that there was a conspiracy between members on this side of the House and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in regard to gazetting the return of Conservative members. I was not aware—I had no communication whatever,—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is no reference to you.

Mr. MADILL. My return was received on the 9th and gazetted on the 12th, and the first information I had of it was when I received the Gazette containing it. I think I ought to deny the statement made by gentlemen on the other side that there was any conspiracy entered into by the Liberal-Conservative members returned at the recent elections with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to do any injury to those on the other side. I had no notice of it whatever. I had no notice of my return until I received the Gazette with my name in it.

Mr. MALLORY. The hon. gentleman opposite has stated that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House were in great haste that their names should appear in the official Gazette, knowing that they and their friends had committed acts which were contrary to the election law, and therefore it was in their interests that their names should appear in the Gazette early in order that no protest might be entered against them. I may be able to inform the hon. gentleman why I believe some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have acknowledged they were exceedingly desirous that their names should appear in the official Gazette as early as possible. I may remind the First Minister and some of his colleagues of an official visit paid to the east riding of Northumberland last fall, and I may call the attention of the House to the visit of that particular car, the "Jamaica," to my riding, and may inform the House of some of the promises that were possibly exacted from some of the followers, some contractors, men who are dependent upon the Government of the day for their very existence, their very living, for the money they were making, some of the promises which these men say, as the result of that visit and of other interviews with the Government, they were enabled to make to the Government of the day. These gentlemen have told my friends, and have told me, that they promised the First Minister, after that visit and on the occasion of that visit, that they would see to it that four members were returned from the four Bay constituencies to support the hon. gentleman opposite, and, in fulfilment of the promises which they had made, I know perfectly well, and so do my two friends who represent two other Bay constituencies here, what kind of tactics were brought to bear. They have said to me, and have said to my own friends and to their own that they promised the right hon. the leader of the Government that they would see to it that four members would be returned from those four Bay constituencies to support the hon. gentleman opposite, that it would be to their disgrace and to their personal injury as contractors upon the Murray Canal, receiving large favors at the hands of the Government of the day, if they did not return four supporters of the hon. gentleman opposite from those four constituencies. When I accused these men of using unlawful means the day after the election, they said: "Well, a few more dollars would have done it." This is the kind of tactics we had to submit to, and, if that is the case, I do not wonder that the hon. member for West Hastings was gazetted as early as possible, for I see his return appears as early as possible in the official Gazette. I do not say that the hon. member has committed any illegal act personally, but I say that the contractors on those public works knew perfectly well that they had done what was incorrect according to the law, that they had expended large sums of money in those constituencies, and that they had told me and my constituents and the constituents in Prince Edward and East and West Hastings, that they had promised the Government that they would return four supporters, and that it would be a disgrace to the people of those constituencies, when large sums of money were being expended by the Government of the day, if they should not recognise that Government by sending supporters of them to the House. These matters were continually held before our people as bribes, and it ill-becomes any hon. gentleman opposite to accuse hon. members on this side of the House when they appeal to the fair sense of justice in the country and in this House, and ask nothing more than fair play and equal justice and equal rights, nothing more than that a fair proportion of their names should appear in the official Gazette with a fair proportion of the names of their opponents. We ask no undue advantage, but a spirit of fair play, a spirit of that British fair play which our opponents are so wont to ask from us. That has not been given us, and, if gentlemen opposite will look at the returns as brought down by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, they will see how truthful are many of the statements contained in his letter. He tells us that these returns came in in such a hurry that they had to be piled up, and he was unable to get at them and gazette the names as they came in. I call attention to the dates on which these returns arrived and the number of them. I find that, on the 1st of March, one return came in. Was that such a wonderful pile that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery could not overhaul it and gazette that name? On the 5th, one came in; on the 4th, ten came in. Are these such wonderful numbers and such tremendous stacks of documents that this gentleman could not have got out these names and gazetted them? On the 7th, fourteen names were returned. Is this such a wonderful lot that he could not overhaul and gazette them? On the 9th, there were fourteen; on the 4th, ten; on the 8th, twenty-five; on the 3rd, two; on the 10th, nine; on the 14th, twenty-one; on the 16th, five; on the 15th, four; on the 22nd, only one; on the 18th, only one; on the 26th, two; on the 21st, two; on the 27th, one; on the 29th, one; on the 30th, one; on the 2nd, one. Is it not a fact that the statement which this man has brought down to the House is on the very face of it a fraud, a deception and an untruth, to put it as mildly as it is possible to put it. I maintain that, when an accusation as strong and severe as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has brought against this gentleman is made, it is only due to the Government itself and to this man that he should be called before the Committee on Privileges and Elections or before this House, and should be able to make his statement so that we should know exactly where the blame should rest. It is only fair to members of this House that we should know. My hon. friend from North Ontario has said that it is unfair and unjust that this man's character should be dragged before the House when he has no chance of defending himself. Allow me to ask the hon. gentleman who it is that has deprived him of an opportunity of defending himself. Did not the hon. gentleman himself vote that this man should not be brought before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, where he would be able to defend himself and his character from any suspicion of wrongdoing? If he is innocent, I should be exceedingly sorry that his character should be injured, but if he be guilty, why should the hon. gentleman from North Ontario, by his vote the other day, deprive that man of an opportunity of vindicating his character and throwing the blame upon some others? I ask the hon. gentleman to give this man for whom he pleads in such eloquent terms a chance to defend himself and his character against aspersions, and to throw the blame upon the shoulders of those to whom it properly belongs.

Mr. MADILL. Grave charges of dereliction of duty have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite, not only against this official, but against other officials throughout the land who have performed their duty well. Their names also were dragged before this House and charges were made against them which we know now to be untrue. Yet the characters and reputations of these men were attacked on the authority of the ex-members of this House who, having been defeated, were desirous of sending to the leader of the Opposition the charges which they themselves could not make in this House. Now, I do say that it is a mean and disreputable thing for the ex-member of my riding to go to the returning officer before he was ever appointed, and tell him that he would be the returning officer appointed by the Government, that the appointment would be satisfactory, not only to the Conservative party but also to the Reform party, that he hoped he would receive the appointment; and when he did receive it the ex-member wrote to the hon. member for West Durham to say that the appointment was unsatisfactory to the people of North Ontario. The very man who approached the man that was appointed as returning officer, was told by the candidate on the Reform side that he would be the man selected and would give satisfaction to the Reform party, and then he went round and condemned the appointment which he had said was satisfactory to the party. That is what I condemn; and I say that the ex-member for North Ontario, in doing this, has come to a very small market with very small potatoes. Not only that, but he went to another Conservative in a different part of the riding and told him that he would receive the position, thus attempting to stir up strife between Conservatives as to that appointment. That is what I find fault with. Those men pretend to be favorable to the man to be selected, and then they go behind their backs and attempt to destroy their characters after they had told them that they would be satisfactory to the Reform party. I say that it is a dastardly piece of business for those men to come here and rake over the characters of the returning officers, who are honest men, and who have done well, and who have received the commendation of the Reform as well as the Conservative party from North Ontario in reference to their conduct. The same thing was done in reference to the revising barrister. The counsel in North Ontario, who attended all the courts in behalf of our opponents, got up in court and proposed a resolution that the thanks of the people were due to that revising barrister, because not a single decision given by him had been questioned in North Ontario. Then the ex-member came forward and attacked the character of this very man whom he had before commended. I say that those men and their characters should not be dragged up into this discussion, criticised and condemned, when the very men who have lived in the county and know them, have nothing to say of them but words of commendation. That is why I say hon.

gentlemen are doing wrong in attacking those men here, when they have no opportunity of defending themselves. Now, our friend from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) says that South Ontario has returned a Conservative, that West Ontario has returned a Reformer, and that North Ontario has returned a Conservative. Well, notwithstanding the Gerrymander Act of 1882, which returned three Reformers, we have two Conservatives elected for North and South Ontario, and the candidate for West Ontario got in by a very small majority. When we come back here five years hence, I hope the result will be that all the three ridings will return Conservatives. Now, a great deal has been said about the "Jamaica" car. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that the leader of the Government went round the country electrifying the people. Now, there has been another car that has gone round the country, and that car was occupied by the hon. member for West Durham and the hon. member for West Ontario. That car honored North Ontario with a visit, and what was the result of the visit and of the visit of the hon. member for West Durham? The hon. member for West Ontario, in my hearing, made the statement that the Liberal-Conservatives were like the rotten carcasses of dogs thrown upon the stream and kept afloat by their own corruption. Why, although the ex-member for North Ontario received only a majority of six in 1882, he was in a minority of 126 in the last election. Hon. gentlemen may applaud, but the language used by the member for West Ontario is a disgrace to any riding in Canada, but I hope it will receive the same condemnation in other ridings that it received in North Ontario.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Kent). I think, considering the great importance of this question, it is to be regretted that the Government have not seen fit to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), that this matter should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for full investigation. This is one of the most important subjects that has come before Parliament this Session. It is one affecting the rights and privileges not only of members of this side of the House but also of hon. gentlemen opposite. There can be no question that a great wrong has been committed. It has not been denied that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has not properly performed the duties devolving upon him; and, that being the case, the matter should be thoroughly investigated in order to relieve the Government of the responsibility placed upon them and to clear the skirts of the officer in question. And the dereliction on the part of that officer has been so gross and unjustifiable that the Government ought not to hesitate for a single moment in granting the request for a full investigation. Some hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think that it makes no difference. The hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Mallill) stated that the Opposition seemed to be very much afraid of the result of protests which might be entered against them. But the fear has been shown by hon. gentlemen opposite, as is proved by the fact that they have taken every means in their power to see that their returns were gazetted at the earliest possible moment. One hon. gentleman told us the other night that as soon as the election was over, he hastened to the returning officer in order to get his return forwarded to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery as soon as possible, knowing that the sooner his return was sent down the sooner it would be gazetted. Then as to the attack which hon. gentlemen opposite said we were making upon the officer in question, I say we have boldly brought forward our charges against that officer, and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has made a most serious charge against him, one that should not be allowed to pass without the Government either justifying his conduct or permitting the charges to be investigated. Personally I have a grievance to complain of. My return was received on 11th

March, and the Gazette was issued the next day, but I do not suppose that the officer had had proper time to get it inserted. Surely, however, there was time for the issue on the 19th, or on the 26th, but it was not until the 2nd April that he found time to insert my return received on 11th March. On looking over the list, I find a great many returns received on that date, but in every case where a Conservative was returned they were gazetted either on the 12th or on the 19th. In fact returns of Conservatives received on 14th March were gazetted the next week or at all events the week after. In considering, therefore, the charges against this officer it is most absurd for the Government to come down and without giving any explanation refuse to have this matter investigated by a committee, and at the same time propose to grant him $350 increase of salary. The position is one of the most absurd positions ever taken by hon. gentlemen having any feeling of fair play. I am much surprised that the Government should have made such a proposal, and no member of the Government except the Secretary of State has had the manliness to rise and say that so far as he was concerned his skirts were clean. But the Minister of Customs and other gentlemen have not risen and made such a statement, but they have allowed this officer to be maligned and charges brought against him, and yet refused to have the matter sent to a committee for investigation. I, therefore, think we have a perfect right to take the position, that if the Government will not consent to refer this matter to a committee where it can be fully investigated, but come down with a proposal to give him a higher position with $350 more salary, we are entitled to enter our protest against such scandalous conduct.

Mr. PLATT. It appears that several months ago the Government determined to transfer the officer in question to another department of the service and to impose on him certain additional duties, for the performance of which he was to receive an increased salary. I am not disposed to say that the increase is out of proportion to the work done by the officer. It is no small matter for him to search over, as he must necessarily have done, that confused heap of papers, and the returns of which he speaks in his letter addressed to the clerk, in order to select the friends of the Government for gazetting purposes. It cannot be very well relegated to a junior clerk or assistant. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery must do it himself, because he is probably the only one who would know the political complexion of the member returned. There is considerable increased work placed on this official, and no doubt the Government were right in considering that an increased salary should be paid for performing the duty. In addition it requires no small amount of what I was going to call moral stamina for a man to undertake the performance of a duty so imposed. Only think of the position in which that officer has placed himself. I am satisfied that no member of this House and few persons outside of it would be willing to sell their reputation for honor and fair dealing for the paltry sum of $350. We know that he has exposed himself to the ridicule, and I might say the contempt, of every honorable man in this House and out of it for the part he has acted in this shameful instance of foul play, and whether directed from the Treasury benches or not it certainly had its origin in some association either inside this House or outside. I am disposed to believe, Sir, that the scheme or design was known in different parts of the country. I am satisfied that communications were had with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery by representatives of the Conservative Association in different parts of the Province. It seems very strange that the very train which brought the return from my own county to Ottawa should convey hither two prominent members of the party of my opponent, and a few days after their return it was whispered not very faintly on the streets of my own town, that the return would not be immediately gazetted. I have a moral certainty—I am not able to prove it, of course, but I believe that those gentlemen who came from the town in which I live had communication either with the Clerk of the Crown or with somebody intimate with him, and had the assurance before they left the capital that my return would be gazetted at a certain time and not before. If we compare the letter which that official has addressed to this House with the statements which were previously laid on the Table of the House, we find that it required a vast amount of ingenuity on his part to arrange the gazetting of the returns so as to give the advantage to the Government side which has really been given. The explanation which he gives, Sir, in connection with the receipt of those returns is entirely and flagrantly fallacious. It seems very strange indeed that the return which the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) speaks of as having been received on the 11th and not gazetted on the 12th is only one of very many which had the same fate, and I do not know how the Clerk of the Crown succeeded, on the evening of the 11th, knowing that the Gazette was going to be published on the morning of the 12th, in culling out these particular returns which he wished to have gazetted on the 12th. I have taken the trouble to examine the returns which he received on the 11th of March, and I find that there were in all nineteen received on that day, that five of that nineteen were selected to be gazetted on the following day, and by a strange coincidence those five were, first Jacques Cartier, second Quebec County, third Cumberland, fourth Restigouche, fifth Brookville. There were five supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, some of them Ministers of the Crown, some of them from doubtful constituencies, some of them no doubt who feared that petitions would be filed against their return, and although in two cases the return is not properly endorsed the clerk did not wait for the corrected returns, but published them in the Gazette on the following day. It almost seems as if a messenger had accompanied the return from Brookville, in order to ensure its being gazetted the next day. It is said by the Clerk of the Crown that some returns being received early were placed under those received later, and that, therefore, they were the last to be found. I do not know what kind of a package the returning officer must have sent from Picton, but it must have been a very lively one, because it seems to have been kept at the bottom notwithstanding the efforts of the officer to resurrect it. It is stated that it was received on the 14th. I have proven in the House, and I am prepared to prove before a committee, that it was received on the 11th, and that the officer who brought down that return brought down a false return. But even supposing it was received on the 14th, how is it that while there were twenty-one of those returns received on the 14th, the very day on which he says the return was received from Prince Edward county, eighteen of those twenty-one returns were gazetted on the 19th, and three of them, one being the return from the county of Prince Edward, and one from the county of Kent, were left ungazetted? This was an instance in which criminal neglect is palpable. Now, I am not going to analyse further either the letter or the return brought down by that official. I have simply to say that I believe that at the instance of somebody, that some understanding was had with this official that he was to do a certain amount of work for the Government and receive a certain amount of extra salary, and I only regret that up to the present moment the Ministers have not risen in their places and given a direct denial to the charges which have been hurled at them from this side. But we have simply to place the facts together, that an increase of salary was proposed and that increased work was given. I have shown you, as have other members on this side, what the nature of this increased work has been, and the Government could relieve themselves best, and I believe could only relieve themselves, from the charge which seems to be laid at their door by allowing this official to be brought either before this House or some committee of this House. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be horrified at the manner in which we dare to drag the characters of officials before this House and before the country, when they have, as they say, no opportunity of defending themselves. We sought to give this very official an opportunity of defending himself, and he has not been allowed that opportunity, simply because hon. gentlemen opposite refused to grant it to him. I would like to ask if hon. gentlemen opposite, and the Government of this country, are always so careful about dragging the characters of their officials before the country and before this House? If we go a little lower down in the ranks of official life, we find many instances where the characters of public servants are not very carefully dealt with, and an instance comes to my mind now in which, if hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches were careful to preserve the characters of those in their employ, the employé I refer to might have been left in his place until an investigation were had in his presence. How was it that a mail carrier in a humble position, earning $300 or $400 a year by doubling a mail route every day in the year, Sundays excepted, has had charges laid against him without his knowledge, has been tried for those charges by some Star Chamber court in the Post Office Department—tried in his absence, convicted in his absence, and the first thing he knew about it was the order for his execution? The public know that he is to be discharged and the contract terminated on the 30th of June, and for the reason that charges have been made by political opponents, and he has been tried and discharged without his knowing anything about them whatever. We do not propose to do anything like that. We ask that this official shall be tried by a tribunal before which he shall appear, and, if convicted, we ask for his dismissal. I am not going to use the harsh terms which come to my mind as to this official. Perhaps enough has been said in that direction to show the House and the country the indignation we feel; and I believe the country will have all the more pride in this Parliament, when they know that a certain proportion of its members, at any rate, are prepared to resent the insult and punish the perpetrators of this dastardly outrage.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I have no intention of prolonging this discussion; but I should be ashamed of myself as the representative of the people of my riding if I allowed a vote of this kind to pass without expressing my dissent. The proposal to increase the salary of an officer who has treated the representatives of the people in this House as the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has seen fit to do, and the way the charges against that officer have been ignored by members of the House who are familiar with the way returns ought to be made, are significant facts in themselves. Sir, we have had to-night the spectacle of the defence of this officer being left to one of the junior members of the House, who, for the first time in his life, has been gazetted a member of the House. I think that indicated very strongly that the gentlemen of more extended parliamentary experience on the opposite side of the House feel that in a case like this the least said is the soonest mended. I say it is a discredit to the Parliament of Canada that we should be asked to increase an officer's salary, after the miserable attempt that he has presented to the House by way of defence for his partisan conduct. I was amused at the coolness of the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Madill) in speaking about the feelings that ought to animate the hon. gentlemen opposite if they happened to have a protest filed against them. It does not matter how purely or honestly an election may have been conducted, if the hon. gentleman ever had any experience in that matter at all, he would have known that it was not a very satisfactory position for any man to be placed in to have a petition to fight even if the result were satisfactory to himself. It may suit my hon. friend very well to talk that way after the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery received the returns of his election on the 9th and gazetted him on the 12th of the month, whereas other gentlemen had to wait from day to day, and week to week, until they could ascertain whether there was an open field for the attack on their seats in this House. But I mistake very much the spirit of fair play that animates gentlemen on either side of this House if they will justify that kind of conduct. The hon. gentleman went further and said the policy of the Opposition has been slander and personal abuse of members of the Cabinet. I would like to ask hon. gentlemen if the hon. member has not himself given evidence of personal abuse of one at least who has no opportunity of defending himself. I refer to the predecessor of the hon. member for North Ontario. For the purpose of attacking that gentleman he went entirely away from the record to-night. While we were discussing the conduct of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, he had to drag into this discussion some matters regarding the returning officer of North Ontario. Sir, it is not necessary for me to say a word in defence of the ex-member for North Ontario. That gentleman was no stranger in this House. I remember, when I first came to this House in 1873, he was seated here by the House over the action of a partisan returning officer.

Mr. MADILL. I wish the hon. gentleman to understand that I made no statement, personal or otherwise, against the ex-member for North Ontario, and that I have nothing to say against that gentleman; so that he is dragging that matter in voluntarily, and without any justification. I have never said a word against the personal character of my opponent.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). We heard the hon. gentleman's statement, and Hansard to-morrow will show it. The hon. gentleman travelled entirely out of the record, and proceeded to attack Mr. Cockburn for certain statements he had made. I would only remind my friend of what Artemus Ward said, that "it is a mighty limited cuss that cannot get himself up without dragging another man down." I say that Mr. Cockburn is no stranger in this House, and he is the very last man who would be going around slandering his opponent behind his back, under the circumstances in which his name has been dragged into this discussion. Now, if the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is unable to defend himself against the charges made against him in this House, who but his friends on that side of the House prevented him appearing before the Committee on Privileges and Elections to explain his conduct? The resolution to send this matter to that committee was put before this House, and it was decided by the votes of my hon. friend and others that he should not be allowed to appear there. Does any one who reads his letter say that it is a clear and sufficient justification of his conduct? Does any gentleman say that it was purely by accident that the returns of members on this side failed to find their way into the Gazette without long delays, while the returns of supporters of the Government were hurried in frequently on the day following that on which they were received? And yet when that gentleman's conduct is criticised, they keep their seats, and they compel that official to keep his mouth closed when they ought to give him a chance to explain his conduct. Talk about a policy of slander and wrong. There are gentlemen sitting in this House prepared to find a salve for such a course of conduct by voting an increase of salary for it. Sir, I would fail fairly to represent my constituents if I did not rise and protest against it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I desire to say a few words in support of the contention that has been set up that an injustice has been perpetrated upon the members of this House and upon the people generally, by the course pursued by the Government in exalting an officer of their own who has been guilty of criminal conduct in the discharge of his duty. It must be plain to every member of this House, I do not care whether he be a supporter of the Government or an opponent of the Government, that a great wrong has been done by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. The law is made by this House, it is supposed to be initiated by the members who sit on the Treasury benches; and, I think the people of this country have a right to look to the law-makers, not as law-breakers, but as men who will respect the law, and see that the officers appointed by them discharge their duty and carry out the law. It must be evident to every hon. gentleman that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has not discharged his duty. No hon. gentleman opposite has attempted to defend his conduct; no Minister of the Crown, from the first to the last, has attempted to justify his conduct. This being the case, we must come to the conclusion that no defence can be made of this officer whose salary is now being increased, as a reward, no doubt, for the services he has rendered to the Government in doing their dirty work, by securing the gazetting of the returns of Conservative members and delaying the gazetting of the returns of Opposition members. In justice to this House, the members of the Government ought from their places, either to defend this officer, or admit that he did wrong, and free themselves from the blame which must otherwise be attached to them. It is evident that this officer would not have acted as he did, had he not been so directed by members of the Government; it is evident he would not have gone out of his way to do injustice to any section of the people's representatives, had he not been under orders of some member of the Government. I do not know who the member of the Government may be, but that some member of the Government was guilty, I truly and verily believe. Every member of this House, whether on the Opposition or Government side, must believe that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery would not have been guilty of this gross injustice against the liberties of the people's representatives and our free institutions, had he not been so directed by some member of the Government. Some hon. gentlemen opposite have attempted to draw a herring across the track by trying to make it appear that we are casting reflections on other public officers. But such an attempt is futile. We have here the proposition to increase the salary of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and, if any member of the Government is innocent in this matter, he should rise and declare his innocence, or we must come to the conclusion that he is chargeable with a share in this conspiracy, jointly with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. This act is but on a par with many of the other acts of hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches. We know that for many years the Government have been conspiring to do injustice to the people. In 1882 they did a gross act of injustice against the rights and liberties of the people by passing their infamous Gerrymander Act, an Act which they did not attempt to justify in the House at the time it was passed, and an Act which they have not been able to justify before the people in any of the contests which have been held since then. In preparation for the last election, in 1886, they passed another Act for the purpose of enabling themselves to secure by unfair means a favorable verdict. They passed their Franchise Bill, by which they sought to secure an unfair advantage over the Reformers of the Dominion, and in many cases they succeeded. And to day we have exhibited to us an instance of the outrages which they are prepared to commit against the rights and liberties of the people, by the fact that there sits in this House, as representative of Queen's county, N.B., a gentleman who was not elected as the people's representative, but who was 61 in the minority in his constituency. Yet hon. gentlemen opposite sustain him in his place. It is this Government, which has been guilty of all these outrages on the people, who sit dumb in their seats, being afraid to vindicate the conduct of their officer. They say he wrote a letter explaining his conduct. I would like to know if Mr. Pope had not that letter dictated to him by some member of the Government. I would like to know whether it was not submitted to the Cabinet Council to ascertain whether it would suit the emergency. What sense of justice is there in the conduct of hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches? They refuse to allow this officer of theirs an opportunity to vindicate his conduct before the Privileges and Elections Committee, yet they refuse also to vindicate in this House his conduct. They do not attempt to justify him in any way whatever. No other conclusion, therefore, can be arrived at but that the members of the Government supported the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in his wrongdoing, in order that they might obtain an undue advantage. I contend that, so long as the Ministers sit in dumb silence on the Treasury benches and refuse to explain their conduct, we can come to no other conclusion than that they are all guilty, and have made a scapegoat of Mr. Pope, Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, to carry their sins. I fancy, however, the people will be able to see through this conspiracy; I fancy the people will lay the blame on the proper shoulders; and although the time seems long before retribution reaches them, still I believe it is coming, and it may be nearer than hon. gentlemen opposite suppose. Justice will yet be done in these matters, and the people will insist, perhaps before a great while, that they shall be ruled over by men who will not be guilty of such gross injustice to the people, and who will not support men guilty of such conduct as that of which the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has been proven guilty.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Mr. Chairman—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman will hold his remarks, there will be ample occasion for him to discuss the question later, and in the meantime we could make some progress with the Estimates.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I did not rise with a view to discuss this question, but with a view to suggest that the Finance Minister would see the obvious necessity of allowing this item to stand.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We cannot waste another evening.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman has heard how serious the charge is.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It has nothing to do with this item.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes, because we are discussing the increase of the salary of an officer against whom serious charges have been made. It has been charged by one member that parties had come from an outside constituency, and were in a position to say when they went back that the return would not be gazetted. Another member states from his place in the House that the return which the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has sent to this House is a fraudulent return, that it is not true. Then you have the letter sent by him to the House characterised by another hon. gentleman as being false, as being a lying statement. We have had all those charges made and we have had no attempt at denial on the part of any hon. gentleman opposite of any of those charges; and the Finance Minister must see how absolutely necessary it is, when charges so grave and so circumstantial are made and not one word of denial is uttered, and when those gentlemen who make them state that they are prepared to prove them, to give them the opportunity to prove them. Surely the Finance Minister will not ask this Committee, in view of these grave charges, in view of the fact that there is an utter want of denial on the part of any single individual, to increase the salary of that officer by $350. It is asking too much of the Committee.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The item has been declared carried by the Chair.

Department of Justice.....$18,672 50.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may state—

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think I have the floor. I have been standing here about five minutes. I will willingly give way to the Minister of Finance on any other matter, but it appears that this item has been declared carried, when I have an idea that this item should not be carried, and that this House should not stultify itself by passing it, an item which of itself is an offence against the dignity of Parliament.

The CHAIRMAN. I must call the hon. gentleman to order.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was carried.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I say—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am speaking to the point of order, and I think I will confine myself to the rules of order. I seldom get out of order in this House, but this is a matter which is so important to the dignity of Parliament that I would be an unworthy representative were I to sit still.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. HESSON. The matter was decided three times; it was declared carried three times.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I say—

The CHAIRMAN. I must call the gentleman to order. The resolution has been declared carried, and another resolution read and submitted to the House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will speak to the present resolution, and I believe we have the utmost latitude in speaking in committee. As it is laid down by Bourinot, one of the most distinguished authorities we have in Canada, the utmost latitude should prevail in committees of the House in the discussion of matters of such grave import. Now, I say in reference to this matter, when an officer has violated the law—

The CHAIRMAN. I must call the gentleman to order. The gentleman is certainly showing disrespect to the Chair and to the House by persisting.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is the last thing I would do, to show disrespect to the Chair—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. LANDERKIN. But I will say this—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Allow me. I will say this, that I have very little respect for the House if it will pass an item to increase the salary—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order,

Mr. LANDERKIN,—to increase the salary of a man who has shown himself—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, Chair.

Mr. LANDERKIN—a rebel and a coward and the base slave of the Government.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In reference to the resolution now before the House, I may explain that the increases are caused by the statutory increases.

Department of Militia.....$12,100

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see the increases there are about $900. Are they all statutory?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The increase is caused by fourteen statutory increases of $50 each and by a promotion of a third-class to a second-class with an increase of $200, making the $900.

Department of the Secretary of State.....$29,915

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You seem to have added a clerk there.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There are fourteen statutory increases of $50 each, making $700; two of $30, making $60; one new second class clerk at $1,150, instead of one third-class clerk, at $900, making $250, or $1,010 in all. The decreases are one second-class clerk at $1,150 instead of one at $1,200, and a difference in Mr. Roy's salary of $300, $330. The net increase in all is $630. This part of Mr. Roy's salary was voted twice last year. On account of his name not appearing, it was put in the Supplementary Estimates.

Department of Public Printing and Stationery$17,255

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that the Queen's Printer is put down here as a deputy head. Is that under a recent statute?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is under the Queen's Printer's Act. There are nine statutory increases of $50 each, $450; two statutory increases of $30 each, $60; one promotion of a third-class clerk to second-class, $100; making $610. There is a decrease by the difference in the salary of a third-class clerk, $950 instead of $1,000, making a net increase of $560 in all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow the items for the Interior and for Indians to stand, as my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) wants to have some discussion on those.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Very well.

Office of the Auditor General.....$23,400

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The increase arises in this way. There are 11 statutory increases, $550; two second-class clerks, $1,100; promotions, $2,200; one new third-class clerk, $700; making $3,450 in all. There is a decrease, three third-class clerks promoted, $1,500; messengers, $250; making $1,750; leaving a net increase of $1,700. With regard to promotions—one takes the part of principal examiner; the other is a very capable officer who, besides examining accounts, acts as secretary. Another third-class clerk was transferred from the Halifax post office, having passed a qualifying examination on two optional subjects, and is possessed of special qualifications for the work required of him. I am giving the explanations of the Auditor General. His services are important. He has new work in connection with the accounts and the examination of the revising officers' expenses. In fact a second-class clerk would be required, but his salary will be paid from contingencies.

Department of Inland Revenue.....$41,890

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The increase arises from 18 statutory increases of $50 each, two at $25 each, and one at $30. The salary of an assistant commissioner, $2,500; promotions, $500. This new office is caused by the transfer of an officer from outside to perform the duties of an assistant commissioner while still discharging the duties that belong to his office, and making but slight additions. There are the ordinary statutory increases and promotions, and the appointment of a new messenger at $300, making altogether $1,280. There is a decrease in the difference of salaries of $150, leaving a net increase of $1,130. But it is an apparent increase, rather than otherwise, because the $2,500, the principal item, as I have explained, is for bringing an officer from outside who performed the duty of tobacco inspector.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But there is another officer besides the assistant commissioner?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the messenger.

Mr. BOWELL. The messenger was promoted to the third-class, and a new messenger appointed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a very large increase for first-class clerks—four of them. There are now nine first-class clerks. I must say that it looks a little extraordinary that you require nine first-class clerks in the Inland Revenue Department, while in the Department of the Finance Minister but five are required.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Inland Revenue Department is a very important one. There is a good deal of revenue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Still, it is a very unusual number. I do not think you will find as many in any other of the Departments, except, possibly, a great Department like the Post Office. For instance, in the Customs Department, the Minister does not appear to have a single first-class clerk.

Mr. BOWELL. There is a vacancy, but I have not filled it. I do not think it necessary just now.

Mr. DAVIES. It does seem extraordinary that you require so many first-class clerks in the Inland Revenue Department, which is not by any means one of the most important. We should have some information why there are nine first class clerks in that Department, an increase of four since last year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will make a note of it and give the information on concurrence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What figure does a first-class clerk come up to under the new rule?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $1,800, the same as before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That will involve heavy additional expenses.

Mr. DAVIES. I see that in 1835-86 there were only three first-class clerks in that Department; last year there were five, and now there are nine. I think the hon. gentleman had better give the names of these parties when he brings down his information.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will give the names.

Department of Customs $33,400 .

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does that include the salaries of the special detectives of the Customs Department?

Mr. BOWELL. No, they are charged to the outside service.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). In reference to the salary of Mr. Wolff, $1,600, I think he is a special officer?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I see that, in addition to his salary of $1,600, he has been allowed travelling expenses of $944.51, a total of $2,544.51. Are there any other sums to which that gentleman is entitled?

Mr. BOWELL. He is entitled to a certain proportion of any seizure he may make, the same as any other seizing officer. The apparent large sum paid to inspectors as travelling expenses is accounted for from the fact that to be of any value at all an inspector must be constantly on the road, and from the extent of territory over which they have to travel the expenses are necessarily large. Although it does not strictly come under this item, I have no objection to state now that a large proportion of the expense of travelling is paid from the seizures, whenever seizures are effected and condemnations are made. It is laid down as a principle as far as possible to deduct all the expenses before allowing any distribution to be made.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant.) How much is that gentleman's proportion from seizures during the past year?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not in possession of that information. It is a question I have never investigated. When a seizure is made and the expenses are deducted from the total sum, the distribution is made under the law. I do not take the trouble to ask who obtains the amount. The practice is, to ascertain the fact: That a seizure has been made, that information had been given upon which it was made, and then the seizing officer and informant receive the proportion to which they are allowed by law. If no information is given, but it is simply done by the officers, only one-third of the net proceeds is distributed. And that is done under an Order in Council based on the Act passed in 1868.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do I understand the hon. gentleman that when a seizure is made and a distribution is effected, there is a sum of money which goes for the payment of the travelling expenses?

Mr. BOWELL. The expenses are deducted. If there are travelling expenses connected with it or any other expenses, the amount is deducted from the gross proceeds of the seizure, and then distribution is made. I presume in the case referred to, the travelling expenses have been incurred in investigating some frauds, or officers may have been sent to look into cases respecting which information had been given and from which nothing resulted. For instance, on the frontier an officer may travel a week and nothing may result except incurring travelling expenses.

Mr. DAVIES. I understand that permanent officials by laying information can obtain, under the statute, a proportion of the fruits of seizure. Suppose they give information to an officer in another Province, would they share the fruits of the seizure?

Mr. BOWELL. They would share under the law.

Mr. DAVIES. Is that not a great advantage given to those officers in the service? It has been brought to my notice by outside parties that officials here, acting on official information, have been enabled to make seizures and obtain their proportion of the fruits of the condemnation. I would suggest for the consideration of the Minister whether this does not lead to very serious and improper results. The Minister says he has not given his consideration to that matter.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say that.

Mr. DAVIES. I understood that he had not examined into the amounts of the seizures, the divisions made or the amount which the officers had derived respectively from seizures.

Mr. BOWELL. That is a different matter. I have given a great deal of consideration and attention to the very point to which the hon. gentleman first alluded.

Mr. DAVIES. When the hon. gentleman furnishes the information he has promised I should like him to be able to say, and I have a good deal of confidence in his departmental judgment, whether the continuance of that system is in the public interest.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman has made a statement, and no doubt he believes his information is correct. But I am not aware that official information is often used by permanent officials so as to enable them to take the advantage which the hon. gentleman has indicated. If an officer here obtains information from outside parties, not from the official records in the Department, and he informs the seizing officer, he obtains his share of the fruit of the seizure. The hon. gentleman is aware that there are a number of clerks whose special duty it is to check all the entries made at the different ports. For instance, Montreal returns are checked by a number of clerks, those of certain ports of Ontario by other clerks, and so on. Their special duty is to see that no errors are committed in the entries, that no improper classification has taken place. Hundreds and hundreds of entries made at the different ports every month are sent back for correction. No matter how much may be obtained from amended entries which it may be necessary to make, owing to improper classifications or improper multiplications, the clerk seldom receives any portion of the amount. But if information is obtained by such officer from outside, they are entitled to a share of the fruits of the seizure. I know objection has been made to this proceeding, but I have thought the matter over, and I see no reason to deprive them of that right more than an outsider, provided the officers do not use their official time in attending to that business.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I have received similar information with respect to those officers receiving a share of the fruits of seizure, as has been mentioned by the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies).

Mr. BOWELL. I will give an illustration. One of the clerks in my department, when taking his three weeks holiday, said to me: "I have reason to believe that certain frauds have been committed in a certain section of Ontario. Have you any objection to my occupying my time in ferretting them out?" I replied: "Certainly not." The result was that very large seizures were made, by which the officer profited, and the revenue profited in proportion.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Will you give information with respect to the amount received by Mr. McLaren as well as by the other officers mentioned?

Mr. BOWELL. Mr. McLaren has not received anything so far as I know, since his present appointment as inspector. Previous to that he made a good deal of money by seizures.

Department of Postmaster General.....$185,230

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There has been the usual statutory increases, and the total increase in the Department amounts to $16,595.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In this Department, where the deficit is growing worse and worse every year, till it now amounts to about one million, we find the head office has increased its expenditure by $16,595 and has added about sixteen new employes. I appears to me that this matter of post office expenditure is being conducted in the most reckless fashion. I dare say that certain conveniences may require to be granted to outlying towns and cities in various parts of Canada, and that the people are always glad to get them, but whereas, when we made an improvement some years ago it was in the distinct expectation that the revenue would increase and overtake the expenditure, we now find that the deficit is increasing very largely. It is now $400,000 or more greater than it was six or seven years ago, and the expenditure at headquarters, speaking from recollection, is not much short of double what it was a few years ago. It seems to me that though expenditure in this particular office may be conducted with the view of granting increased accommodation it is done with an utter disregard of the exigencies of the Finance Department.

Mr. McLELAN. There has been a large increase caused by the opening of new lines of railway and new mail routes, in addition to the large number of offices opened in the North-West and British Columbia, as well as in the older Provinces. I may mention, however, that only $9,000 of this increase is outside the statutory increases, as the $50 in statutory increases amount to $7,510 out of the $16,000. Hon. gentlemen will also see that the vote for contingencies, out of which the extra clerks are paid, has been decreased about $5,000. The work of the post office is continually increasing, and I think it better—as my predecessor did—to make arrangements that these temporary clerks should be made permanent, to a certain extent.

Mr. BARRON. I am quite aware that there is a continual demand for additional post offices, and I quite appreciate how the expenditure may increase in that way. I wish to say, however, that with regard to the Department requiring additional clerks, one of the officers of the Post Office Department—at least it was so reported to me—found his way into my riding during the last election, where he was in idleness, as it might be called, for a period of two or three weeks, supporting the candidature of my opponent. If officials of this or any other Department can do that sort of thing during elections, I don't think it lies in the mouths of hon. gentlemen opposite to say that they require additional clerks. I think it my duty to make this statement at this particular juncture, because I don't think it right that officials of any Department should take part pro or con in any election.

Mr. DAVIES. I don't think there will be any disposition on the part of members on either side to object to any judicious increase in the Post Office Department. At any rate, it has been heretofore regarded as a Department operated in the interests of the country generally, and we know that in very many sparsely settled parts of the country it is almost essential to have new post offices which must more or less increase the number of clerks here. I would like, however, to ask the Postmaster General if these increases are likely to go on as they have been going on, or if we have nearly reached high-water mark?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope we have.

Mr. McLELAN. With a large increase of work there will necessarily always be an increase of expenditure. I may say, however, that the revenue from the post office for the present year seems to be doing very well. For the nine months we have had a greater increase than last year, by about $50,000, and the increase of the revenue will be more than double what it was in 1885. I think the expenditure will not increase so rapidly as it has in the last two or three years, as it is probable there will not be so many mail routes to be opened on new lines of railway.

Department of Agriculture.....$48,225

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The increases here are all statutory increases.

Department of Marine.....$24,462

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The increases in this department, as well as in the Department of Marine, are all statutory increases.

Department of Public Works.....$42,730

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The increase here amounts to $710, and consists of statutory increases.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe one thing upon which I think the House and the country are to be congratulated, and that is that we have apparently such an efficient body of civil servants that the Minister does not find it necessary to dock a single solitary man of his statutory increase. This is a state of things I believe unparalleled in any other Civil Service in the world.

Department of Railways and Canals.....$47,675

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The increase here amounts to $227.50, made up of statutory increases.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11:10 p.m.
