Mr. Pipes was right and he was wrong. The hon. gentleman has referred to the county of Pictou, and but for that reference I would not have taken the floor to-night, but he further insinuated, although our opponents fought that contest in a fair and honest way and have admitted that they were beaten fairly and above board, that we made an attempt to bribe the constituency, and used what he called these bushels of Minutes of Council in reference to the Short Line Railway in the county of Pictou, for that purpose. I deny that. I say it is absolutely without foundation. The hon. gentleman was not in that county at all; I traversed it from end to end, and, though I did not meet an ex-Minister of the Crown during that election, I met an hon. gentleman who apparently knew more than the hon. the senior member for Halifax in reference to the Minute of Council. All parties admitted in that county, and Mr. McLeod, the Liberal candidate himself, admitted, and in fact claimed the benefit of that admission, that, by that Minute of Council being passed as the logical sequence of the action of this Parliament, which the hon. gentleman seems to have forgotten, the necessity was recognised for the Short Line, for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway into Cape Breton, which by building this piece from Oxford to New Glasgow, would bring the whole of eastern Nova Scotia forty miles nearer to this detested Canada. My opponent knew enough to see that this had placed the question beyond the point as to who would serve the people best in reference to the Short Line Railway, and he further stated that, if Mr. Blake were returned to power, he had an assurance from Mr. Blake that he would carry out that policy in the spirit and the letter; and I want to know if the hon. gentleman challenges the accuracy of the statement made by a gentleman who, since his defeat in that county, has been elevated to a position in the Government of Nova Scotia, the friends and allies of my hon. friend. He knows well that a Minute of Council never has been and never can be used as a bribe. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will teach my hon. friend a lesson on that point. He will tell him that the faith of the Governor General of Canada is pledged to carry out the statements and the assurances which are made in a Minute of Council; and in no part of Nova Scotia did any public man on the Liberal-Conservative side say that it depended on the return of the present Government whether good faith would be kept or not in reference to these Minutes of Council. Such Minutes of Council have never been repudiated, and I do not think the hon. gentleman will find any authority for saying that Minutes of Council have ever been held out as bribes or to induce false hopes and expectations. The hon. gentleman has not been able to give us the list, or to apportion out that amount of from ten to fifteen millions of dollars which he said, and said inaccurately, were promised by Ministers of the Crown in Nova Scotia. We meet that with an absolute denial. The hon. gentleman has a scrap-book in which he has his own speeches. Perhaps it also contains the speeches of the Ministers to whom he has alluded, and I challenge him to show that the Minister promised that ten or fifteen millions to the Province in that campaign. He cannot do it. He knows he cannot do it. But he knows what his friends in the Province of Nova Scotia did. He says this is a corrupt practice. Let me tell the House what was done by Mr. Fielding, who acts under orders from my hon. friend opposite, whose great adviser he is, whom he advises daily, when he is in Halifax, as to how he shall shape his policy and over whom he has great control. Previous to the election, at the very time that he said our Province was ruined and had not a dollar in the exchequer, Mr. Fielding introduced a Railway Bill with a lobster clause, that promised every part of Nova Scotia a subsidy of $3,200 a mile for any railway that might hereafter be built there, and also 2,000 acres of land for every mile of railway. And, even if the project were taken up by this Parliament, Mr. Fielding, in his generosity, was willing to add that on to the subsidy to be granted by the Dominion Parliament. And yet my hon. friend, the friend and ally and leader of that gentleman, pretends to look with horror upon the statement made by the Ministers of the Crown, responsible to the people of Nova Scotia, that they were able to redeem the promises held out by the Liberal-Conservative party long back, and that if they would utterly disregard those extraordinary statements made to them by small-minded politicians from day to day, that all this expenditure west was to be of no benefit to them, that the money expended in that direction would never be paid back, the time would come when, having grappled with these great public works and with these great railways of national importance, more attention would be paid to the eastern Provinces; and when they came to that Province and told the people that from time to time legislation had been obtained, pledging the country to lines of railway of national importance in the Province of Nova Scotia, and that, no matter whether the Liberal or the Liberal-Conservative party were returned to power, these roads were secured, and it was beyond the power of any party, which regarded its own interests and its own standing in the country, to repudiate these Minutes of Council. Then this hon. gentleman, hiding forsooth behind this other policy of the Liberal Government of Nova Scotia, charges the Dominion Government with bribery in the use of these Minutes in Council. He sings a different song down in the Province of Nova Scotia. What is bribery here is justice there. He told the people of Halifax, and his friends told the people of Nova Scotia, that these works should have been carried out long ago.

Mr. TUPPER.

Mr. JONES. Hear, hear.

Mr. TUPPER. He says "hear, hear," and his friends there assert that it is justice which has been long delayed. But, taking his cue, I suppose, from the columns of the Globe, he says now, as the Globe said in 1869, that the better terms and all these subsidies, are bribes to the people of Nova Scotia. Does he mean to insinuate that that Province was bribed wholesale at the last election, and that the people of his Province, when they are making large claims now, and he and I hope that something may come out of these claims upon the Treasury here, are to be beaten off their demands, are to be changed in their views as to what is necessary for them and the country in this way? What has become then of the cry for better terms? Has the bribe been sufficient, does the hon. gentleman think? I think he was on dangerous ground when he tried the other evening to read a lecture to the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) in reference to his having stated what was apparently evident to the members of this House, that that repeal cry was a dishonest and a disloyal cry, used for election purposes only. I think it strange that the hon. gentleman should say that the Province has been bribed in this matter. Well, now I have shown that the policy declared while he was out of the House, the policy which, I believe, was forced through in the face of great opposition from his new found friends, was not for the first time enunciated by the Minister of the Crown during the election, and from that no departure was made; and that policy is that wherever there is such a railway, or such an enterprise, that in the opinion of the Government it can be secured by the payment of $3,200 a mile, and it will be for the benefit of Canada, Canada at least should aid that enterprise to that extent, and further than that none of these hon. gentlemen went. I am sure that, on reflection, the hon. gentleman will admit that that is true. Now, in the excitement of the other evening, the hon. gentleman was bold enough to denounce the electors, and I hope he confined these denunciations to the electors of the county of Halifax, before whom, no doubt, he will soon have to make his bow; he denounced them as unfair, dishonest and ignorant, and I call the attention of the electors to that charge, and I throw that charge back in his face; I say that language was unworthy of him, and could only be pardoned by hon. gentlemen stating that he labored under great excitement. He told the House to-night that the franchise was the right of free men, and that a Government who interfered with the exercise of the franchise should be denounced, and before he sat down he wanted to rob every man of his franchise; he wanted to put them back on their backs where he had them during the time he was permitted to aid in administering the affairs of the country. But I want to remind the hon. gentleman of the time when he had it in his power to threaten and coerce. It was all very well when he went before his electors to tell them, as he reads from his scrap-book to-night, that they were free men and could exercise the franchise as they pleased, and he scorned, of course, to coerce and intimidate those men. But when standing up as a candidate for the Dominion Parliament in 1874, before these same electors, before their rights had been taken away by a so-called Reform Government, the hon. gentleman spoke language that I am going to read, and I want him to reconcile it, if he can, with the language he uses now. In 1874, in the city of Halifax, as a member supporting the Reform Government in Canada, he spoke to the civil servants as follows:—

"So long as they served the State, they were protected in their offices, but if they disregarded that principle, and took a part against the Government, whose subordinates they were (?)"—

Not servants of the members of both sides of the House, not servants of the people, but subordinates, as slaves of the Government!

—"they took their offices in their hands."

This, Mr. Chairman, is language from an hon. gentleman who denounces my hon. friend and the party with which I am identified, for having coerced the civil servants, the Intercolonial Railway employés, and threatened them with loss of office. He says they would stand or fall with the party, that was the rule and that would be observed here, and to make the matter clear, the organ in the city of Halifax, that either controls the hon. gentleman or which the hon. gentleman controls, on the 10th of January, said:

"They are certainly not free to vote against Mr. Jones or against Mr. Power, and if any one of them votes, canvasses, or in any way opposes the Government of which he is a subordinate, he will do so at his peril."

That, I fancy, is explicit enough, and this has come from the organ of that pure party that we have in Nova Scotia, which has one cry here and altogether a different one at home. Then it goes on to say:

"Whatever benefit can legitimately be derived from the patronage of a political party, should be enjoyed by themselves and not by their enemies."

So, Mr. Chairman, in order to expose the hon. gentleman and to weaken the force of any harangue he may make here, it is only necessary to refer to the reports in his own press, of his own speeches, to show not only that he has no true sympathy with the Liberal party in that Province, but that he has in no sense worked in their interest. Now, we find that his political ally, his leader in Nova Scotia, only a year ago, in the House of Assembly, reaffirmed the position which my hon. friend took in 1874. He held the whip out to that effect over the backs of the employés of the Local Government. Then, my hon. friend's figures are a little wrong. He says that in the Intercolonial workshops, where he deemed it right to go, the immense majority was coerced. Why, it is only when men are employed on full time, when work is booming, at the terminus of the Intercolonial Railway in Halifax, that there are 300 men all told, so my hon. friend would have difficulty in finding the 400 votes who were allowed by that terrible franchise officer whom he has spoken of, to put their names on the list. But there is another more serious thing to which I wish to call attention. Everyone was surprised to learn the hon. gentleman who proclaims so much belief in political purity, fairness and freedom, that during the last election a gentleman holding a responsible position as a member of this House, not a civil servant or Intercolonial employé, but an independent member of this House, stated that he received a letter from the hon. gentleman when his party was in power, and he asked permission, in consequence of this statement made by the hon. gentleman, abusing the Liberal-Conservatives for coercing and intimidating their opponents, to remove the seal of secrecy from that letter, and he charged that hon. gentleman with having resorted to the same practices himself that he denounced in others, and from that time to this that hon. gentleman has not seen fit to remove the seal of secrecy from that letter. Until he complies with that request and allows that letter to be read, it will be difficult for him to stand here and claim that in all these matters himself and his party are without stain. I have another reference, if references are necessary, to show the hollow hypocrisy of the sentiments uttered by the hon. gentlemen who stand up and claim that they were not fairly and honestly beaten. I ask the hon. gentleman, the senior member for Halifax, to run back to the month of December previous to the June elections; does he recollect the argument that was made to the electors then? Because, no doubt, the hon. gentleman who used it agreed with him in thinking that the electors were ignorant, that they were corrupt, that they were unfair and dishonest, and that they could be bought off from this hallucination of repeal. Does the hon. gentleman remember when Mr. Anglin, one of the great Grit apostles of Ontario now, exiled from his native Province politically, paid a visit to his constituency? Has he got that gentleman's speech in his scrap-book—the speech of Mr. Anglin in the Temperance Hall or in one of the public buildings in Halifax, when he came there authorised by the leader of the Reform party of Canada, because neither the leader nor any organ of his party from that day to this has repudiated the statement made by that gentleman holding so high and important a position in the Liberal party of the Dominion? Does he recollect the style in which that gentleman placed the public questions before the people of Halifax? How was he on the question of subsidy, on the question of holding out bribes and spreading them by the bushel before the people? The member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) sat on the platform with Mr. Anglin; Mr. Jones cheered him. Mr. Anglin concluded his speech amid rousing cheers, and the hon. gentleman adopted and reiterated those statements made by Mr. Anglin; and I will ask the patience of the House while I read one or two extracts to show the promises held out by one of the purists of the party. Mr. Anglin, coming to this question, said:

"We feel up in Ontario that the people of Nova Scotia had something to complain about. We felt that, despite all the effort of the Opposition in the House, many of those burthens had been placed there, and, as I said, we knew that you had just cause to complain. * * * We can change the character and tone of the whole fiscal policy, so as to materially encourage and revive the commerce of the country, and in that way render important service to the people of Nova Scotia. We can do a little more than that."

I wish the House to notice that that gentleman was willing to go one better than all the gentlemen who had preceded him or who afterwards succeeded him, and he spoke as to how far this Parliament could reach in point of legislation. He said:

"There are some questions between the Dominion and the Local Government as to subsidies and as to the means placed at the disposal of the Local Government for the carrying out of the important railway work. * * * A Liberal Government, I think, if in power during the next five years will be able to arrange that question somewhat to the satisfaction of the people of Nova Scotia."

Could any more monstrous bribe, according to the rules laid down by the hon. gentleman, have been offered to any constituency? I wonder the hon. gentleman does not blush when I read it. The hon. gentleman spoke of what constituted corruption on the part of a Cabinet. Here is a promise held out by Mr. Anglin to the electors whom the hon. gentleman represents, and made in his presence, that if a Liberal Government obtained power it would be able to make a satisfactory arrangement in regard to these terms, or this "raid" on the public Treasury of Canada. That is the favorite term of the Globe and in the backwoods of Canada, and it is used by demagogues who endeavor to stir up feelings of animosity among the people of Nova Scotia. Mr. Anglin further said:

"Now, I have no doubt whatever that if the Liberal party were in power to-morrow, Mr. Blake would be willing to reconsider the whole plan of Confederation, and not only give you more for your railways but accord to your necessities all that you are entitled to. He would be willing to look at the whole question fairly with the eye of justice, not to be too exacting to the smaller Provinces, but to give them, if possible, a little more even than they are strictly entitled to."

Railway subsidies must not be promised, railway aid must not be promised! It must be denounced in the House of Commons at Ottawa, but in Cape Breton, Colchester, Cumberland and other counties, every supporter of the Government must be denounced for not having procured railway aid! The position is absurd. And I may further say that the hon. gentleman's own leader in this House, who led the Local Government in Ontario, differed from the hon. gentleman in regard to this question of political morality when he defeated John Sandfield Macdonald's Administration. Everyone knows that he made a boast, and he did so during the last election where it caught my eye in a speech delivered before a western constituency, that when he came into power in Ontario and found that John Sandfield Macdonald's Administration had voted some million odd dollars for the purpose of aiding local railways in the Province, he immediately doubled the vote and adopted a bold and vigorous railway policy. Well, if that is all right for those hon. gentlemen to do, surely Parliament will listen with very little patience and attention to an indictment against the Government, not for having introduced a general Railway Bill, promising railway aid everywhere, but for telling the people of the country that the legislation they had adopted ever since 1882 would be moulded into substantial results, and having grappled with those great questions in the west they would be able at once to take up the railway question in the east. Both parties were always expressing their great desire to aid railway enterprises in Cape Breton and the western counties, and the only difference is that the people understand that the hon. gentleman's party is a party of promises, while the present party in power is a party of performances, and that is where the thing sticks.

Mr. JONES. I thought it very likely my reference to these Minutes of Council would call up my hon. friend instead of the senior member of the same name.

Mr. TUPPER. I am old enough to know what a Minute of Council is.

Mr. JONES. I think the hon. gentleman's excitement is excusable under the circumstances. I had no doubt that when reference was made to the transactions that took place in Pictou and the influences that were used there to secure the return, as I pointed out, of the Government candidate, not only in that but in other counties, the hon. gentleman would feel some disturbance in his own mind. But the hon. gentleman is not going to draw me away from the real argument. I told him at the commencement that so far from being opposed to granting subsidies to railways in Nova

Mr. TUPPER.

Scotia, I was in favor of such a policy, that I had always contended that the Government of the Dominion while expending large sums in the west had never substantially recognised the importance of public works in the Province of Nova Scotia, and, therefore, when the hon. gentleman made those promises, so far from taking exception to them, I, on the contrary, was one of those who approved of them, and I approve of them to-night; but I take exception to the time, to the mode, to the occasion, and that makes the whole difference. This Government was in power for eight years. They knew very well that the gap between Annapolis and Digby had not been completed. They knew that great efforts had been made by both Governments to secure the completion of that piece of road, and still they left it until the last moment, just before the writs were issued. They voted it down last Session, and then, just before the writs were issued, they issued a Minute of Council, pledging the resources of the Government to carry that work to completion. Now, I say that on the face of it there was a deception; there was on the face of it an intention which the people of Nova Scotia recognised, that it was only done for a party and election purpose. And the same remark applies to the Minute of Council which was passed with reference to the Short Line Railway. Here is the Minute of Council, dated on the 31st of January, and after reciting all the circumstances connected with the road, and setting forth that it shall be made a public work, "the Minister further recommends that a Bill be prepared and submitted to Parliament next Session accordingly." Now remember this was only a fortnight before the elections, and, therefore this expenditure of public money, which would perhaps be justifiable under any circumstances—and I am not saying it would not—was extremely suspicious, when you take into account the fact that these Minutes of Council were issued only a few days previous to the election writs.

Mr. TUPPER. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman wishes to misrepresent the facts.

Mr. JONES. Certainly not.

Mr. TUPPER. Can you tell, if you know, when the legislation was passed in Parliament? Does the hon. gentleman know the dates, because that is the point. I say that legislation preceded every Minute of Council.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman is not—as he said the other night—going to get away from me in that way.

Mr. TUPPER. I want you to stick to the facts.

Mr. JONES. There was a certain subsidy or subvention promised to the Short Line, under which it was to be constructed as a private enterprise.

Mr. TUPPER. There was more than that.

Mr. JONES. No, I say that is all there was, and after the money was expended, after the House had voted a certain sum of money to pay the laborers the whole thing collapsed. It was left in statu quo, with not a shovel, or a pick or a man at work upon it, and then, on the 31st January, the Government came down with a Minute of Council, giving it an entirely different character, giving it the character of a public work, and pledging the Government to bring in an Order in Council to carry it on. This was done immediately previous to the election. The hon. gentleman says that I have stated, that promises were made for a very large amount. But I forgot some of the railways. There was one railway respecting which the Minister of Finance was interviewed—one from Halifax to Pictou, about ninety miles long—and I was given to understand, by a gentleman interested in the work, that the Minister of Finance had pledged that the Government would vote a subsidy to that line.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, the hon. gentleman was misinformed.

Mr. JONES. Well, it was a gentleman in Halifax, on the hon. gentleman's own side of politics, who said that the Minister of Finance, when there, had pledged that the Government would give that subsidy. It is a very proper public work; I do not dispute the propriety of it, but I only say that it is one of the enterprises which, amongst so many, had for the moment escaped my mind.

Mr. TUPPER. The Local Government passed a Bill, the hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman says the Local Government passed the Bill which was called the Lobster Bill, but he did not tell the circumstances in connection with that measure. The Local Government found it necessary to carry out certain railway enterprises, if possible, and they pledged the credit of the country; they went into the money market to supplement these subsidies by the public credit of the country, and in that way and in no other way had they any resources at hand to carry on that work. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman says that Mr. Anglin, when he was in Halifax, promised what would be done by the Liberal Administration, provided they came in power. The hon. gentleman has not done that distinguished man full credit. I think if he had read the whole of Mr. Anglin's speech—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. JONES. I say if he had read it himself; I do not wish him to read it to the House.

Mr. BOWELL. I have read it.

Mr. JONES. He was speaking at Halifax, where there was a great agitation for repeal.

Mr. TUPPER. Headed by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. JONES. I was on the platform, if the hon. gentleman desires to know, and I shall presently give him high authority for my presence there. Mr. Anglin was there referring to the position which the people of Nova Scotia occupied at that time, and regretting that the people of Nova Scotia had found it necessary to pursue a repeal policy; and he said then, the same as had been said by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), the leader of the Opposition, that he hoped if the Liberal Government came in they would be able to remove those objections which had been pointed out by the Minister of Justice without effect; that the Liberal Government would be able to meet the just expectations of the people of Nova Scotia, so far as regards financial considerations, and would in the end reconcile them to the Union. The hon. gentleman should have given Mr. Anglin full credit for that statement. The hon. gentleman says I have not here avowed my position with reference to the repeal discussion in Nova Scotia. Sir, the hon. gentleman knows me well enough, and hon. members who had a seat in this House before the hon. gentleman was ever here, know me well enough to know one fact—that I have always the courage of my convictions, and that I have never hesitated to explain them here or elsewhere, whatever they may be. The Province of Nova Scotia was dissatisfied and discontented; she was in a bankrupt position—

Mr. HESSON. Who made her so?

Mr. JONES. The Minister of Justice was one of those who pointed out that position. Who made it so? somebody asks me. The men who put us in the Union, the gentlemen who carried out the terms of Union. The hon. gentleman who asked me that question cannot be aware of the fact that, had it not been for the additions made to the revenues of Nova Scotia, time and again, that Province would have been in a position of bankruptcy long ago. But so just were her claims, when they were presented to the House, and so unfair was the position she originally occupied under the Confederation, so little credit did it reflect on the gentlemen who had charge of Nova Scotia's interests at the conference for the Union, that a very large addition to her revenue was made under the arrangement that was made by Mr. Howe and the present Postmaster General. And a subsequent arrangement was made twice over, and in all these arrangements hon. gentlemen know—no one better than the Minister of Justice himself, whose utterances I gave to the House yesterday—that it was utterly impossible for the Province of Nova Scotia to go on in the position she was in, and maintain her public works. And after the hon. the Minister of Justice had made this application to the Government here, and obtained no answer; after the question was taken up again by the Government which succeeded that Administration, without any answer being given, then it was that the Government deliberately arrived at the conclusion that they must make some effort either to obtain financial consideration or to go out of the Union. They put that question fairly and squarely to the people, and they invited the co-operation of the people of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick to adopt the same policy. They had high authority for that course. I hold in my hand a letter written some time ago by the present Postmaster General. This letter is addressed to one of the late members for the county of Colchester by the Hon. Mr. McLelan, in which he said:

"I am willing to take my share of the responsibility of accepting more money for the local services, and wait a better opportunity to get out of the traces, say until the other Provinces are willing to join us."

That was the course recommended by the present Postmaster General. What does "out of the traces" mean? Why, out of the Union, of course, as soon as we could secure the co-operation of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Therefore I give my hon. friend a very high authority, an authority to which I pay great deference and which he will doubtless regard.

Mr. BOWELL. Is that in 1869?

Mr. JONES. 1869. On that occasion the people of Nova Scotia voted on the question of repeal, and I say this in the presence of hon. members in this House, although I am sorry to have to say it, that the people of Nova Scotia to-day feel their interests are suffering in consequence of their connection with the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. TUPPER. I deny that.

Mr. JONES. I say emphatically that if that question were put to the people of Nova Scotia by a plebiscite, and they believed their vote would decide for or against the Union, I believe three-fourths or seven-eighths of the people of Nova Scotia to-day would vote to be restored to the position they occupied previous to 1867. Regrettable as it may be, perhaps it is not altogether their own fault, because they were led by the delusive expectations of hon. gentlemen opposite into a fiscal policy which they have found ruinous to the best interests of their country. They were captivated by a so-called National Policy of a protective character, and they had not the wisdom to see that a maritime people, situated as we are, with a fishing and mining population, all large consumers and not manufacturers, must be free traders per se. But they were captivated by the promises that everything was going to be changed, every man was going to be made rich, and they elected members to this House to support the policy which hon. gentlemen opposite advocated and still sustain. Therefore I state with the hon. leader of the Opposition, that if the people of Nova Scotia are suffering to-day, it is largely due to their own act, because they had not the wisdom to see that the policy under discussion at that time would be detrimental to the best interests of a maritime people. The hon. gentleman says that this question is dead forever. It may be or it may not be. The Local Legislature has gone through a most successful session, and has just passed a series of resolutions which conclude with the following resolution, which seems to be the deliberate policy of the party in power in that Province.

Mr. TUPPER. Would the hon. gentleman mind reading the whole of them ?

Mr. JONES. I only took the last :

"That the House strongly affirms the resolution of the last House that Nova Scotia suffers great disadvantages in the Union, and declares its opinion that unless a material change takes place in financial affairs and commercial relations, whereby the position of the Province is improved, the discontent in Nova Scotia will continue and increase, and it will be necessary to again submit the question of separation from Canada to the people of the Province for their decision."

That is the final conclusion of the address, and it is only carrying out the policy of the Government of which the hon. Minister of Justice was a member, saving the question of repeal, because the Government of the hon. Minister of Justice stated most emphatically that unless they had an extra allowance, great difficulties would arise. Therefore it will be perceived that this question is not at all settled. What may be the outcome of it I cannot predict ; but I am here to take my responsibility for every word I uttered, either in Nova Scotia, during the campaign, or in this House, and to stand up here for the Province, which in her present position has not resources equal to her expenditure. I have pointed out that the position taken by the hon. member for Pictou is not tenable, inasmuch as all the promises made for railway assistance in the Province of Nova Scotia were not made during the previous years when the Government was in power, but were all made on the eve of an election, apparently for election purposes ; and I hope most sincerely that every one of these promises will be redeemed.

Mr. WELSH. Since I have had the honor of a seat on the floor of this House we have been steering North-West. I had a great mind to-night to call on the Minister of Marine to alter the course ; but I do not know whether he is well acquainted with the compass. Of course, there are many things about marine that he does not know, such as when the sun is over the foreyard. But I will not have to call on him to-night, for there has been a squall got up in Nova Scotia. I am not going to interfere with the discussion on Nova Scotia ; but this discussion is supposed to be on the Bill for North-West representation. Its object is to open up a way for appointing some senators for the North-West. I did not intend to speak on this question at all. But on Friday evening the leader of the Government got up and sung his little song of triumph before the House. He started the song, and "as the old cock crows the young one learns," so the young cocks on that side of the House began to crow to-night. Well, I will turn to Prince Edward Island to reply. The hon. First Minister said something about threatening the bolters of Prince Edward Island about voting. If I were on my oath to testify at this minute about any Government employé voting for me, I would say I could not name one. I was asked to take a walk down to the railway wharf previous to the election, and there were 200 or 300 boodlers employed about the railway works, who, as soon as they saw me, began to hoot, and I thought I would go away. Our opponents, the Hon. Donald Ferguson and the Hon. Wm. Campbell, were up here, just previous to the writs being issued, on a deputation. In fact they have been here a great many times on a deputation. They have been claiming something like $5,000,000 from the Dominion Government. The islanders do not come here begging for any favors ; they do not ask for anything more than justice, but it appears this Local Govern-

Mr. JONES.

ernment—parties of your own stripe, Sir—have been repeatedly here asking for justice without getting any justice ; and they went back to the Local Legislature and the Local Legislature and Council unanimously voted petitions to be sent by memorial to the foot of the Throne to claim justice. They went home to represent the Government's case to the British Government ; and the Minister of Finance was there to checkmate them and argue against the granting of their petition. The whole affair is published in a blue-book, which, no doubt, every hon. member is well acquainted with. They came out, and reported the matter would be referred to the Dominion Government by the home authority. Then they came up here in January on another deputation, and returned to the Island. Whether they had the writs for the election or not, I do not know ; but they said they had a Minute in Council stating that if Sir John should be returned, he would bring in a Bill granting $500,000 to the Island at 4 per cent. interest, which would be $20,000 a year. Further, they stated this amount would not interfere with the $5,000,000, but was merely granted on some arrangement connected with the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway. I was not here the other day when the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) stated this, and the right hon. gentleman denied it. There must be a mistake somewhere, but I rather think it is true, because, if I am not mistaken, the other night the Minister of Finance, in reply to a question, said it was the intention of the Government to grant the Island an extra subsidy of $20,000 a year. We not only had to contend against all these things, but we had to contend against the Government railway employes and civil servants, and also against the Local Government officials ; yet the majority given us in a Conservative county exceeded anything ever known in the county before. The people of the Island took it that the whole thing amounted purely and simply to bribery, and I suppose they voted accordingly. During the discussions here, on various occasions, we have had the revising officers and the returning officers brought cut, and each hon. gentleman passed his opinion as to how they acted. But I have this much to say for Prince Edward Island : That we have three sheriffs there, partisans of the Government, and the returning officers were partisans too ; but I am proud to say that these gentlemen acted honorably, and I believe the officials under them acted very fairly throughout the whole Island. It is much to their credit that we did not see, what many perhaps would have liked to have seen, a double return, or a man who had not the majority of votes sent here to represent the people. We call ourselves hon. gentlemen when we get up to address each other, and really, I think, we ought to act in accordance with the title, but I am afraid the title will not apply all round. The elections were on the 22nd of February, and I think it was on Saturday, the 19th of February, the last public meeting I was at in the county, when the Hon. Donald Ferguson got up and produced a telegram purporting to be from the Minister of Finance, dated Amherst, saying : If the party returned him to support Sir John, the Government was prepared to go on with the sub-way right off. If that be not true, the hon. the Minister of Finance can contradict it. We have heard a good deal about Nova Scotia secession. I consider I am just as loyal a subject as lives under the Queen's flag, I was born under it, and I hope to live under it and to die under it. I like the constitution we have, but I tell the right hon. gentleman this, that if you send us to the poor-house you cannot expect us to whistle Rule Britannia. No, Sir, we will not do it. Now the right hon. gentleman is very good-natured and very jolly. He is a friend of mine, and during the whole contest I always stood up for him. I always said he was a good fellow and I can say so still. He came to the Island once very sick, and came away very much improved, almost as if he had been to the hot springs at Banff ; but unfortunly he left his sickness behind him, and we have been sick ever since.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will have to go back.

Mr. WELSH. You will, Sir, and take the sickness away. You have the power to do it. Nine years ago my esteemed friend, lately gone, the Hon J. H. Pope, said: Come to the rink, we are going to have a good meeting; the Minister of Finance will be there, and will make a speech. I said I would, and we went. The Minister of Finance walked in, surrounded by a body-guard of Pictonians—good-looking fellows, every one of them. He took his place on the platform, and made a very good speech from his point of view, and I sat near the door so as to be ready to run. The hon. gentleman said—I remember his words well: Gentlemen of Prince Edward Island, give us the National Policy for two years, and I will guarantee you reciprocity. If you do not put a duty on potatoes and oats, the Americans will come down here and drive you out of the country. I jumped up and ran. Mr. Pope said: Do not go yet; but I said: I cannot stand that. As the hon. Minister of Finance has just come in, I will just repeat what I said a moment ago. At our last meeting before the elections, in my county, the Hon. Donald Ferguson got up and read a telegram, purporting to come from the Minister of Finance, dated Amherst, Thursday or Friday, I am not sure which, stating if the men of Queen's county would return the Hon. Donald Ferguson, the Government would build the sub way.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will allow me to say that I never sent such a telegram or anything like it. I never made such a statement. I never made any reference to the contingency of the present Government being supported or any pledge if they were supported, in reference to the sub-way whatever.

Mr. WELSH. Quite satisfactory. I did not say you did. I only said that the Hon. Donald Ferguson got up at the meeting and said: "Here is a telegram I got from Sir Charles Tupper, dated Amherst, and saying, if you return the Hon. Donald Ferguson, the Dominion Government will build a sub-way."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I know Mr. Ferguson well, and I do not hesitate to say that the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken in his recollection of what Mr. Ferguson said on that occasion. I undertake to say that Mr. Ferguson never read such a telegram or pretended to read such a telegram as the hon. gentlemen has stated.

Mr. WELSH. You were not there. I say it is a good man who can answer for himself in this world. When you come to answer for the sins of your friends, you have more to answer than you think for.

Mr. DAVIN. You will permit me to recall the attention of the Committee to the question before it, whether we shall give two representatives in the Senate to the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think, as we are coming back to the subject of the reference to the Committee, and most likely we will have a considerable continuance of this debate, the hon. gentleman had better move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. DAVIN. Then I move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is right; do as you are told. Committee rose and reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11:45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 4th May, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ST. JOHN HARBOR.

Mr. ELLIS asked, Is it the intention of the Government to place at the mouth of St. John Harbor during the coming season, a bell-buoy instead of that now there, which is practically unservicable?

Mr. FOSTER. It has already been decided to place a bell-buoy at or near the place occupied by the old one, and tenders for its construction have been asked for.

PUBLIC WHARVES, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. ROBERTSON (King's) asked, Whether the Government has any official in Prince Edward Island to report on the state of the public wharves in that Province, and to attend to repairs on these wharves?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The management of wharves at Prince Edward Island, with that of the other wharves in the Dominion, is through the Department at Ottawa. The resident Agent of the Department in the Maritime Provinces reports, when requested, in the usual way, on the condition of the wharves in this Province, and attends also to such repairs as may be ordered.

FISHING BOUNTY.

Mr. FLYNN asked, Has the bounty money to fishermen in the Maritime Provinces been distributed yet? If not, when will it be?

Mr. FOSTER. Part of the bounty has been distributed, and the remainder is being distributed as rapidly as the cheques can be made out.

SAWDUST IN STREAMS.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Is the Act which compels the owners of sawmills to keep sawdust out of streams in force in every county in Ontario? If not in force in every county, what counties are exempt from its operation, and why the discrimination?

Mr. FOSTER. The Act which compels the owners of sawmills to keep sawdust out of streams is enforced in every county in Ontario. The mills on the Ottawa River, near the city of Ottawa, are exempted by Order in Council.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Why?

Mr. FOSTER. The reasons will be found in the Order in Council which made the exemption, and which was based on the report of the commission appointed by the leader of the Mackenzie Administration.

QUEBEC CENTRAL.

Mr. GUAY asked, Whether the Government have taken under consideration, since last year, the question of granting this Session to the Quebec Central Railway Company an additional subsidy to assist them in extending their line from Beauce Junction through the valley of the Chaudière to the Province line, and thence to the line of the International Railway at or near River L'Original in the State of Maine?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Minister of Railways not being present, I must tell the hon. member that this matter is under the consideration of the Government.

FERRY BOATS BETWEEN QUEBEC AND LEVIS.

Mr. GUAY asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to establish a regular line of ferry boats between the cities of Quebec and Levis to connect the railways on the north shore of the St. Lawrence with the railways on the south shore in the Province of Quebec, those of the other Provinces and of the United States? If so, when?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is the intention of the Government to do so as early as possible.

LEATHER AND RAW HIDES INSPECTOR, LEVIS, &c.

Mr. GUAY asked: Whether Mr. Eudore Lemieux, inspector of leather and raw hides for the counties of Lévis, Bellechasse, Dorchester and Lotbinière, has resigned? If so, what is the name of his successor?

Mr. BOWELL. Mr. Lemieux has not resigned.

HUBERT HÉBERT.

Mr. DESSAINT, in the absence of Mr. CHOQUETTE, asked, 1st. What is the balance due to Hubert Hébert, revising officer for the electoral district of Montmagny, for salary, travelling expenses, printing, &c., in connection with the preparation of the electoral list for the county of Montmagny? 2nd. Has the said Hubert Hébert filed his account for all he claimed as due to him as revising officer for salary, expenses, printing, &c.? And if so, what was the total amount of such account?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Mr. Hébert, the revising officer alluded to, has filed an account for $1,051. The sum of $1,018 was granted to him, thirty-two dollars having been withheld by the auditor according to the regulations which were passed. Mr. Hébert, like other revising officers, received $250 on account of his salary; what is left due to him is a balance for salary, which salary has not yet been finally fixed upon. The account of Mr. Hébert seems to be an account of all his personal expenses concerning the revision.

THE BUDGET.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to enquire of the hon. the Minister of Finance, whether he is yet in a position to give us any definite information as to when we may expect the Estimates and the subsequent Budget statement?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope to be able to name Tuesday next.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For the Estimates?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman fix the date for the statement? I understand that he will bring down the Estimates on Tuesday, but has he made up his mind when he will be able to make the statement?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not sure about the statement, but, if I am able to reach it on Tuesday, I will lay the Estimates on the Table a day or two before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As the House is aware, we have, as a rule, had the Estimates a day or two before the statement is made, and it is highly desirable that that rule should be followed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Certainly, it will be.
Mr. GUAY.

DISALLOWANCE OF MANITOBA RAILWAY CHARTERS.

On the order being called for Mr. WATSON's motion for Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions on which to found an Address to his Excellency the Governor General, praying that he will be graciously pleased to effectuate the altered policy stated to the House of Commons on the 5th February, 1884, and in pursuance thereof to leave to their operation any Acts of the Local Legislature, not otherwise objectionable, which have been or may be passed for the construction of railway lines within the original Province of Manitoba,

Mr. WATSON. I have received a communication from the chairman of a deputation that has arrived from Winnipeg for the purpose of laying this matter more forcibly before the Government. They have had an interview this morning, and I have received a communication which I will read to the House:

"As the matter of disallowance is now under consideration by the Cabinet, I am desired by the Manitoba deputation to suggest that you should, if possible, have your motion on the paper for to-day stand for Thursday, to-morrow week.

" F. W. ROBERTSON."

If it is the wish of the House to have the matter stand until then, in accordance with the wish of the deputation, I ask it to do so. Of course, this deputation feel that every means possible and every pressure possible should be brought to bear on the House, and, if the Government will agree to allow this to stand till a week from to-morrow, I should like to have it stand.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, there is no objection.

Order postponed until Thursday the 12th instant, to be then the First Order of the Day.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S WARRANTS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved for:

Return showing the amounts (in detail) expended under warrants from the Governor General in each of the years from 1873 to 1886, both inclusive.

He said: In making this motion, I desire to call the attention of the House to the general question which is involved in the use of these Governor General's warrants, and I wish to do that, not merely because the amount involved is very large, but also because a constitutional and parliamentary question of the very first importance appears to me to be involved in this matter. Now, as this is a new House, and as a large number of the gentlemen present are new members, I may take the opportunity of recalling to their minds the facts under which we separated last June. We sat for an unusually long time; we sat up to the first week of June; the parliamentary year terminated on the 1st July, so that all Departments ought to have been unusually well prepared with their estimates of the expenditure required, at any rate, for the year which terminated on the 1st July, and more than usually well prepared with their estimates for the expenditure for this present year. Now, I do not suppose that there is any member, young or old, in this House, who is not aware that it is the very cardinal principle on which all parliamentary institutions hinge that Ministers of the Crown, and the Crown itself, should not, under any pretext whatever, expend public money until that money has been voted by Parliament, and until the reasons why the Crown asks for the money has been fully explained and discussed. To that rule there is but one exception. That is very well defined in the statute under which these same Governor General's warrants are issued. In cases of public emergency, in cases where unforeseen accidents occur, in cases where things arise which could not reasonably be foreseen or arranged for by the several Departments, then and in such cases, if Parliament be not in Session, as the Act states, a Governor General's warrant may issue, with certain formalities and under certain precautions and safeguards. I want to call the attention of the House to this further fact, that the appropriations given by us for the service of the year 1886 and for the service of the present year, were unusually large and liberal. We voted thirty-eight millions and a-half, in round numbers, for the service of 1886; we voted about thirty-four millions and a-half, in round numbers, for the service of 1887; and yet the first thing our attention is called to when this House meets is that, over and above the thirty-eight millions and a-half appropriated for 1886, over and above the thirty-four millions and a-half appropriated for ordinary service in 1887, with a large sum further required on capital account, the Government of Canada have, under Governor's warrants, abstracted from the public Treasury two sums, one of $308,748, for the service of the few remaining weeks of 1886, and another, amounting to $2,005,539, for the service of the current year. I think that all hon. gentlemen on both sides will agree that this House would be entirely false to its duty if it did not, at an early period, institute an investigation into the circumstances and causes which have induced the Government of Canada, without parliamentary authority, to withdraw amounts of very nearly two millions and a-half of dollars from the public chest, without any parliamentary authority whatever, under the pretext that they were entitled to do so by Governor General's warrant. Now, Sir, although this question was alluded to incidentally yesterday, it is desirable, in case any hon. gentleman here should not be familiar with the clause, that I should read to the House the circumstances under which this extraordinary prerogative may be exercised. As I said, there is but one occasion on which, according to law, the Government are authorised to order a special warrant to issue, and this is defined as follows:—

"If, when Parliament is not in Session, any accident happens to any public work or building which requires an immediate outlay for the repair thereof, or any other occasion arises when an expenditure not foreseen or provided for by Parliament, is urgently and immediately required for the public good, then, upon the report of the Minister of Finance that there is no parliamentary provision, and of the Minister having charge of the service in question, that the necessity is urgent, the Governor in Council may order a special warrant to be prepared and be signed by the Governor General for the issue of the amount estimated."

Now, I want to call the attention of the House seriatim to the sort of charges which have been conceived to be warranted under this clause, which have been conceived to be sufficiently urgent to authorise the issue of a Governor General's warrant, and to be of a class which could not reasonably be foreseen or provided for in Parliament. As I have said, we separated in the first week of June last, and I find that in the short interval between the 2nd of June and the first of July, the Government found themselves obliged to call for $150,000 to pay the Mounted Police accounts in connection with the suppression of the rebellion. Now, that rebellion had been suppressed about a year previous to the date this order was issued, and I submit that one of two things has occurred: either the Department, whose duty it was to provide the Finance Minister with the requisite estimates, has been conducted prima facie with great carelessness, as otherwise their estimates could not have come short of the required amount by so large a sum as $150,000; or it has been found convenient to suppress their estimates and to adopt this extraordinary mode of providing the funds required rather than allow them to appear and be discussed in Parliament. Then I find, under the head of Charges of Management, an additional amount of $100,000 required. Now, Sir, I confess that I cannot see how it was that with ordinary circumspection on the part of the Department whose duty it was to ascertain what was required for this service, so large an additional sum as $100,000 should be required. I think, also, that on the 2nd of June, or thereabouts, when we separated, the Dominion Lands Department ought to have known sufficiently nearly what they would require to expend for income to have been able to estimate for it for the few remaining weeks, instead of demanding by Governor General's warrant nearly $19,000. However, it is possible that there may be a sufficient explanation to be advanced with respect to these various charges. But, Sir, when we come to the larger warrants involving the enormous sum of $2,000,000, which have been added to the service of this present year, I confess that it does appear to me, on the face of it, that very grave irregularities, to say the least, have prevailed. Now, it might have been necessary that on the 1st of February, 1887, we should require to vote $125,000 to pay certain legal costs between the Windsor and Annapolis Railway and ourselves.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is one of the election expenses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I cannot say. Some of those dates as the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) appears to perceive are singularly suggestive; but bearing in mind the delays which have occurred on other occasions in payments of awards, I do not see myself there was any such hurry for the payment of this sum of $125,000 on the 1st of February.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What was that?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That was the award to the Windsor and Annapolis Railway. The award was a legal one, therefore I do not pretend to say that it may not have been necessary to provide for it; but my recollection is that in a good many other cases after these awards have been made, considerable time elapsed before they were paid. However, I am not going to insist upon that item. It is one that calls for explanation, no doubt, but it is one as to which there may be, and there probably is, a satisfactory explanation to be given. As to the next item of $46,000 for the Banff Hot Springs, and to pay for surveys, roads and bridges—we had that tolerably well discussed on a recent occasion, and I will only say that I believe that if there was one class of expenditure which was never contemplated by the framers of this Act or by Parliament, to be defrayed by Governor General's warrant as an urgent public necessity, it was an expenditure of money for walks and drives in a public pleasure ground. Now, Mr. Speaker, I perceive that a considerable sum of money, about $32,000, has been taken by Order in Council for salary and expenses of Commissioners on rebellion losses. That may be in itself a reasonable expenditure, but I think it was quite within the competence of the Government, and of the then Minister of Finance, and of the Department concerned, to have foreseen that this sum would be required, and to have made a provision in the Estimates; or if they liked, to have taken a larger amount under the head of Unforeseen Expenses, to which such Commission might properly enough, perhaps, be charged. The same remark would apply to the Royal Commission on Railways, for which a charge of $20,000 is made. I think that that subject was also discussed, and I think that if the Government thought it expedient to issue a Railway Commission, they might with great ease have foreseen and provided in the Estimates, a reasonable amount for covering it. Now, Sir, I do not object so much to bringing forward the lapsed balance of the appropriation for expenses of the rebellion, because that had already been discussed in Parliament, and that, perhaps, is one of the cases in which they might reasonably and legitimately, not having been able to get through this expenditure by the 30th of September, have applied for Governor General's warrant. But when I come to the grants for seed grain to settlers in Assiniboia and Saskatchewan, although I am aware that there was serious destitution in that region, and, therefore, I forbear criticising this as much as I otherwise might, I must say that when my hon. friend from Northumberland and other members consider the dates at which these orders were given, being respectively the 11th of March and the 17th of March, it may occur to them that other causes than the destitution of the settlers governed the grant of $115,000 to these unfortunate people. So, Sir, similarly, although there may be a cause for it, I have my doubts whether the expenditure of the 25th of January, 1887, of $10,000 for relief to the sufferers by the flood in the town of Cornwall, would have been so freely granted by the hon. gentleman opposite if there had not been some considerable doubt as to how the town of Cornwall would go at the approaching elections. But, Sir, I think, for many reasons, that the appropriation which I see further down of $4,000 to the St. Catharine Milling and Lumber Company, costs in the suit of the Queen represented by the Ontario Government against that company, is one of the last things that should have been passed without reference to this House, and full discussion here. Coming to larger matters I find that in spite of the large grants made for the service of the Intercolonial Railway, enormous sums have been appropriated for various purposes—$85,000 for rolling stock; a grant on February 18, 1887, of $150,000 for land claims and damages for the St. Charles Branch. That, also, is a suggestive item. The sum of $150,000 was paid for land damages for the St. Charles Branch on Feb., 18th, and a little later $72,000 more, making in all $222,000 paid for those land claims and damages. I cannot conceive why Parliament, which was shortly about to assemble, should not have been consulted on this subject, and why the required sum should not have been obtained here. I also fail to understand why such a large sum of money as $20,000 for the Pictou Town Branch, and a large sum of money for other expenditures on the Intercolonial, amounting in all to $264,000, should have been required to have been expended in three months. In all about $600,000 has been expended by Governor General's warrant, without the authority of Parliament, on the Intercolonial alone. The reason why, on the 10th and 16th November, under the head of the Canadian Pacific Railway, $30,000 were paid to A. Onderdonk for removing slides, I cannot say, and I shall be glad to have an explanation. Then I come, on 4th January, to a warrant for $100,000 for the Franchise Act. I venture to say that the exercise of common foresight and prudence on the part of those charged with the working of that Act, might have judged that this sum would have been required, and that a vote should have been taken for it. Why the vote was not taken is probably clearly apparent. It was the object to minimise the expenditure under that Act, and therefore a smaller sum was demanded than that which was pointed out on this side of the House would be needed, and which hon. gentlemen knew, was likely to be required. It will be remembered that last year an attempt was made to cut down the expenditure for Dominion lands both on capital and income; and, I fancy, as a result of that, $101,000 more were demanded for that service—and again I think a very little prudence and foresight on the part of the officers of the Department would have led them to inform the Government what sum was really required, and prevented the Government having recourse to this extraordinary means of meeting it. Later on I find on 14th April the Governor General's warrant was issued for about $25,000 for an experimental farm, $189,113 for expenses of Indians in Manitoba, the North-West Territories and British Columbia, and about $53,000 for other purposes. With respect to the expenditure for Indians I have two remarks to make. First of all, I think it reflects seriously on the Department that they should be unable to estimate within $200,000 what sum will be required during a period of about nine months. But there is another and I think a graver question involved in regard to these charges. I find there are no less than twelve charges, involving in all an amount of

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

$423,000, very nearly half a million of dollars, which were paid by Governor General's warrant, according to the statement laid on Table, on 14th April, this House having met on 13th April. It appears to me—the Minister of Justice is in his place, and he can correct me if I misread the Act—that this is clearly illegal. The words under which Governor General's warrants are authorised to issue read as follows:—

“If when Parliament is not in Session”——

Now, I cannot understand how it was legal, after the use of such a phrase in the Statute which gives the authority, and after Parliament met on 13th April, how it was constitutional or proper in any way that while this Parliament was sitting here, the Government, by Governor General's warrant, should take $423,000 for different purposes out of the public Treasury. I shall be glad to hear from the Minister of Justice, if I am incorrect in this interpretation; but it appears to me, taking merely the statute, and reading it as it stands, that here there has been a distinct illegal procedure, wholly apart from the question of the advisability of the practice. With respect to a very great number of those items I desire to call the attention of the House, on both sides, to the fact that it is a most useless farce for us to go through the discussion of Estimates night after night if we find that when the Government have brought down their Estimates, and stated that they require thirty-four or thirty-five millions, as the case may be, for the public service, the Government can, when our backs are turned, by Governor General's warrants take $2,300,000 out of the public chest and expend it for a variety of purposes. Some of those purposes may be justifiable, some may be good enough, but it appears to me to prove conclusively one of two things: either the various Departments did not fully understand their business, and made exceedingly loose estimates of the sums likely to be required, or else the Government, for certain reasons of their own, saw fit to refuse to listen to the reports of the Departments and placed smaller sums in the Estimates than were really required. Moreover, there is, I think, a special reason why attention should be called to this particular series of items. Those items were mostly taken out of the public chest at the time of the general elections, at a time when hon. gentlemen opposite could not know, unless they possessed the spirit of prophecy, whether they possessed the confidence of the country and would be sustained by the incoming Parliament or not. Under any circumstances, I think the practice is most objectionable, but it is doubly and trebly objectionable when it occurs prior to a general election, and when, as a number of these payments show, those sums were paid in certain constituencies within a few days of the time at which the voters went to the polls. I may be wrong in my reading of the law, although the law appears very clear and distinct, and although I quite clearly recollect under what circumstances Governor General's warrants in days gone by were usually issued. But it does appear to me that under colorable pretext, and even without any pretext at all, the law as laid down in the Consolidated Statutes, at all events, has been openly and boldly violated; and, I repeat, that there does not appear to be any escape from this alternative, either that the various Departments have made very gross under-estimates of the sums required, or else their estimates have not been attended to but kept back, and this number of Governor General's warrants was issued to cover very large sums which it was not convenient to allow to appear in the Estimates of last year. I will only say, in conclusion, that I cannot conceive what earthly purpose will be served by bringing Parliament together here, what earthly purpose it will serve to have financial statements submitted or careful estimates prepared, if after these have been submitted, discussed, and voted on in Parliament, we are to find that millions of money may be taken, under this or any other pretext, out of the public Treasury, on grounds which it appears to me the hon. gentleman will find it difficult to show, come either within the letter or the spirit of the Act to which I have alluded.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Of course, there can be no possible objection to the motion which the hon. gentleman has made. In fact, I assume that, when the information for which the hon. gentleman has moved comes down, and a comparison is made between these warrants and those which were issued under the Administration of my hon. friend on the other side, it will be found that very little explanation will be required as regards a considerable portion of the remarks he has just addressed to the House. I may say at the outset that I am disposed to concur with the hon. gentleman in the principle he has laid down. I think the warrant of the Governor General should be confined to services which are contemplated by the authority under which that warrant is issued, that is, services which are unforeseen and which it is necessary should be provided for without reference to Parliament. It will be observed that with regard to this very large sum—and it is an abnormally large sum—of over $2,000,000 comprised in these warrants, the hon. gentleman has not taken exception, as I understand him, to any item in this paper. He has not challenged any one of these expenditures as an improper expenditure. It is quite possible that my hon. colleague behind me may be open to the charge of not having accurately estimated the precise amount which would be required for some of these various services, but I may say that it is not always convenient to make an estimate in regard to matters of that kind. If an estimate which is thus made is a very large estimate it stimulates the parties who are making claims to make those claims commensurate to the estimate. Take the rebellion losses claims, for instance, which were under consideration. The hon. gentleman knows that if Parliament, in advance of the report of the Royal Commission, had provided a very large amount for the settlement of these claims, it would stimulate the parties to put in claims for amounts which, at all events, would cover the appropriation of Parliament. So that I think there is a sufficient reason why it is not desirable, in many of these cases, to anticipate what would be required by an estimate which must be, in the nature of things, very inaccurate and incomplete. The hon. gentleman has drawn the attention of the House to a number of these items, as to which it will be seen at once that all possible foundation for a criticism of the action of the Government disappears. Take the first item of $125,631.75. What is that item? The hon. gentleman knows that the Government of which he was a member dispossessed the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company—for whom one of his colleagues exhibited a great deal of sympathy on a recent occasion—of the possession of the Windsor branch—forcibly dispossessed them, took it out of their hands, and placed it in the hands of another company. The Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company, under a petition of right, took an action—as they were entitled to do—against the Government of Canada for that act; and the Government—the successors of hon. gentlemen opposite—felt bound to resist in all its stages the claim which was made, and the verdict which was secured against the Government with regard to that claim. But when the time came, when the last appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had gone against Canada, I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me that, under those circumstances, when it was found that they were entitled by the verdict of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to a certain amount, he will agree with me that there should be no unnecessary delay in paying them a claim which was raised so long ago as the period when the hon. gentleman was in office, a claim which was founded on the act of the Government of which the hon. gentleman was a member. I think it will not be necessary that I should occupy the time of the House any longer in relation to that question. I will also pass over the Banff Hot Springs, as I hope the information afforded to the House yesterday in regard to that matter will be considered sufficient to make it unnecessary for me to add anything to the full and complete explanations which were then given. The fact is that the Government were led to believe by gentlemen on both sides of the House that it was very important that steps should be taken in regard to that question; and having decided to set aside that locality as a public park, the needful steps were instituted by the Government for the purpose of ascertaining precisely what would require to be done. Parliament not being in Session, they considered that it was not desirable that any time should be lost in developing the springs and making them valuable to all classes of people who might resort to them for the benefits they would afford. Steps were accordingly taken, and in order to avoid the loss of a year, the grant was anticipated and a warrant was obtained.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman will observe that the larger portion of that was after Parliament was in Session.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was April the 14th, but the order was passed before that. I may say that I quite agree with the hon. gentleman on the question of law, because it seems to be explicit, but the Order in Council was passed previous to the meeting of Parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE. How long previous.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A very short time previous; but the hon. gentleman will see that it was to cover expenditures already made and that there would be considerable delay in meeting it, unless it was met by the warrant of the Governor General. No Order in Council for any warrant contained in this list was passed by Council after the meeting of Parliament. Then the hon. gentleman did not say much in regard to the question of compensation for losses arising out of the rebellion in the North-West Territories, and very naturally, because he would at once perceive that the Government would be bound promptly to provide for losses, if there were any. If there was any case which could possibly justify the issue of the Governor General's warrant, it would be a case of that kind, in which it was found that individuals had suffered—as they did suffer—in consequence of that unfortunate rebellion. Therefore I think you will agree with me that no unnecessary time should be allowed to lapse between the finding of the commission and the payment of the relief to the parties who are the claimants. Then, the salaries and expenses of commissioners on the rebellion losses could not be very well estimated until the work was closed, and it had been found what amount of time, labor and expense had been involved in performing that important duty. The hon. gentleman has made no remark in regard to the consolidation of the Statutes, because that is a lapsed balance for which Parliament had provided, and which forms an item of $24,772.30. The Royal Commission on Railways was also authorized by this House. I do not, perhaps, sympathise so very much with that appropriation, from the fact that while I had the honor of occupying the position of Minister of Railways I opposed the efforts that were being made in that direction; but the House came to the conclusion that it was desirable to have that whole question examined by a Royal Commission, and provision, of course, had to be made for it. Then, the amount of $163,938.83 for expenses of the rebellion in the North-West Territories is also a lapsed balance, and the hon. gentleman will agree that having had the sanction of Parliament before—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did state that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I think so; but as my hon. friend will see, it all goes to make up that large total of $2,000,000, and shows that for a considerable portion of that amount there was actually the previous vote and approval of Parliament. So, with reference to seed grain for settlers, I believe there is no question that, if it was found necessary to give relief of that kind, it should be dealt with as an unforeseen expenditure. So with regard to the relief of distressed settlers at Prince Albert and Batoche. Therefore I think this sum of $136,679 is one to which no objection will be raised, and I think it will be admitted that it was right and proper that a Governor General's warrant should be obtained in order that relief should be afforded. The Royal Commission on Lachine Canal leases was a matter that would necessarily have to be provided for. The Bow River bridge in the North-West Territories was found to be very much demanded, and as this was a case in which the Government were led to believe that delay would be attended with great inconvenience, the expenditure was warrantable. The compensation for sinking the barge Williams in the Lachine Canal was entitled to be granted, it having been found that the Government had damaged those parties to the amount of $2,638.79. Then the sum of $10,264 is a lapsed balance, which had received the approval of Parliament, for a return to persons in Prince Edward Island of the amount of duties paid to the United States Customs on fish and fish oils. The next item is a small amount of a savings bank account paid to the surviving executor of the late George Wilson. The only item in the whole of this long and rather formidable list to which the hon. gentleman took very decided exception was $4,000 to pay the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company costs in the suit of the Queen, represented by the Ontario Government, against that company. But the hon. gentleman will be greatly relieved to learn that that expenditure had received the approval of Parliament, and is among the lapsed balances, although it is not so stated here. Then, we have next a number of items connected with the Department of Public Works, in reference to which my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works will, doubtless, as he is always able to do, give the most minute, specific, and satisfactory information. The expenditure of $25,460 for Mounted Police buildings is also in the category of lapsed balances, having been approved and previously voted by Parliament. The expenditure of $18,000 on the Negro Point breakwater, at St. John, was, I suppose in consequence of its being carried away by a storm or something of that kind.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is one item in the Public Works Department which the hon. gentleman has passed over—arbitrations and awards—to pay Messrs. Call, Sadler & Co., for loss of tug Sultan, $8,000, on January 10th, 1877. I should like to know what great urgency there was for that?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That was in consequence of an award. The award was contested by the Government, but the parties wanted a larger amount than this. They wanted interest as well, and finally they agreed, in order that their case might be settled, to take the $8,000 without costs or interest, and a Governor's warrant was obtained for the amount.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The next item of $5,000, for rolling stock on the Intercolonial Railway, it will at once be seen, arose from the hope on the part of the Government when Parliament was in Session that they would not be required to increase the rolling stock, and a sufficient vote for that service was not taken; but it was found during the year that the great increase in business, especially the greatly increased demand for coal cars, made it an absolute necessity to have this increased amount for that purpose. The land claims and damages on the St. Charles Branch, to the amount of $222,091.46, to which my hon. friend also took very decided objection, will at once, I am sure, be recognised as warranted by the fact that the awards of the arbitrators were resisted by the Government. They refused to pay those awards to the parties, took the case into the Exchequer Court, and this amount was to pay the judgment of the Exchequer Court against the Government, and was consequently one which it was impossible to avoid. The expenditures amounting in all to $264,000, for the Halifax Extension, the Dartmouth Branch, the Dalhousie Branch, the Rivière du Loup Branch, the Pictou Branch, the Indian-town Branch, air brakes and sleeping cars, were expenditures that became due under the authority which Parliament had granted for proceeding with those works, and, of course, there was no possible means of avoiding payment as the work was done and the money became due. The largest proportion of that amount had been voted by Parliament, and had lapsed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is not stated.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It ought to have been, but I may say I have been so very closely occupied as not to have given, perhaps, the personal attention I should have to this paper; but the bulk of that amount of $264,000 should appear as a lapsed balance, which it is practically. Then the payment to Mr. Onderdonk for slides in British Columbia arises from the fact, as the hon. gentleman knows, that the railway there had been constructed through an exceedingly difficult country, and it has been found impossible to avoid very serious landslides. After the track had been completed and everything done according to specification, it was not unusual to have serious landslides occurring. I saw myself in that locality, on the Fraser, a case in which a large portion of a farm was one day on one side of the river and the next morning on the other side, with some of the buildings and constructions upon it not having been disturbed. In regard to the Franchise Act, that Act involved an expenditure of $100,000, and, as my hon. friend knows, that also had the approval of Parliament. It was expenditure incurred carrying out the Act which Parliament, after full, careful and exhaustive discussion, had decided it was necessary should become law. Then there is the expenditure on the canals, repairs to Port Colborne and Port Maitland harbor works, Welland and Chambly Canals. The hon. gentleman knows repairs have to be made occasionally, and these repairs, amounting to $23,661, had to be provided for.

Mr. POPE. They were owing to a very heavy storm.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They were the result of an exceptionally severe storm which involved the absolute necessity of immediate expenditure to relieve the damage. The House will see this was a case of unforeseen expenditure which we could not avoid providing for. Mail subsidies and steamship subventions, St. John, N.B., and ports in the Basin of Minas, $2,000. This arose from an error in not having put in the amount which it was agreed between this Government and the Government of Nova Scotia should be provided for, and that error required to be corrected by warrant. The next item, $2,016, mail subsidy from Campbellton to Gaspé, is also a lapsed balance, provided for by Parliament, but which had not been paid over at the time the amount lapsed. So with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway's suspense account, to pay the Grand Trunk Railway for fuel and the North Shore Railway, at the time of the transfer to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, $35,373. It was not known under the contract what money would be required to be paid when the claim should be established, and the claim was not established during the Session of Parliament. The Province of Manitoba debt account, was a settlement in full of all claims in connection with the contract of J. A. Gellay & Co., for the Parliament Buildings, Winnipeg, in which the amount provided was exceeded by $4,767, to complete the buildings. Carleton Branch Railway capital, to pay for outstanding stock, $3,000. The Liquor License Act, to refund fees, $29,000. The amount of $70,000 in connection with the Colonial and Indian Exhibition is due to the fact that the expenditure considerably exceeded what we hoped at an earlier period would have covered the cost.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When did that close?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The exhibition closed about the 11th November. Of course the closing of the exhibition and getting rid of the exhibits which filled such an enormous space as we were able to fill in that exhibition, are two very different things, and it required a large amount of expenditure, under the arrangement which had been made by the Government, to dispose of the exhibits after the close. The experimental farm had also received the approval of Parliament, and the appropriation of $25,000 for that was to carry out the arrangements submitted to and sanctioned by Parliament. The $189,113 for the Indians in Manitoba, North West Territories and British Columbia was, of course, unforeseen, the amount required to meet the necessity in that case having very far exceeded the amount anticipated by the hon. the First Minister, who has charge of that Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And whose attention I called to the probable estimate at the time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman having called the attention of the Head of the Department to the fact of its being a moderate estimate, would be better prepared to excuse the necessity of the Governor General's warrant.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Quite the reverse. I cannot agree with that logic.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The next item is Quarantine: compensation to owners of cattle to prevent the spread of pneumonia, $39,256. This arises from the great misfortune created in pleuro-pneumonia having broken out in the quarantine station at Lévis, and to the prompt and energetic measures necessary to be taken—measures which have had the effect of instantaneously stamping out all possible extension of the disease in this country, and thus enabling us to continue to enjoy the security we do. This security makes the expenditure, great as it is, appear very insignificant, compared with the very important purpose for which it was provided. I am certain the House will agree with me that this was entirely an unforeseen expenditure, and one which I hope will not soon occur again. Ocean and River Service and Dominion Steamers, $14,000, arises from the fact that this service which Parliament had authorised exceeded by this sum the amount appropriated. I quite agree with the principle which the hon. gentleman has laid down, that the Governor General's warrants should never be resorted to in any case in which it is possible to obtain the consent of Parliament, without great inconvenience to the public service, and I hope, when the papers he has moved for are brought down, to find a great deal of justification in the practice of the Administration of which the hon. gentleman had the honor of being Finance Minister.

Mr. MITCHELL. I rise now mainly to call the attention of the House, after the explanations given by the Finance Minister, to a single item in this list; but before doing so I may say in reply to the hon. the Finance Minister, that it would be very desirable now, in order to avoid the recurrence of such a statement as this, which certainly presents a very abnormal amount of money drawn from the Treasury without the action of the people's representatives having been had upon it—I say it would be very desirable for the

hon. gentleman in future to get accurate statements as far as possible from the different Departments. Either they are to blame in not putting in such amounts as would cover their probable expenditure, or the officer who made up the Budget must have understated these amounts, and, therefore, misled the House in making the expenditure of the year apparently less than was actually required. With regard to a single item in this, I propose to criticise the action of the Government. The Minister of Public Works has given an explanation of this. The item is a warrant issued on the 10th January, under the head of Public Works—Arbitrations and Awards, to pay Call, Sadler & Co. for the loss of the tug Sultan, $8,000. The hon. gentleman says there was an award made by the Dominion arbitrators, and that these gentlemen awarded this amount to Messrs. Call, Sadler & Co. for the loss of the tug Sultan, but that, as they claimed more, and the Government were going to contest the award, they accepted that amount. I know the circumstances of this case, and I will give them a little more fully. This tug Sultan was employed on behalf of the Government to do certain service, and during the season to transport tugs and scows between Prince Edward Island and a port in Nova Scotia. A Government officer was on board that tug, the Government officer was in charge of that tug, and the captain of the tug took his instructions from that Government officer. The proprietors of the tug had the Government officer effect an insurance upon a particular voyage on which that tug was engaged, but, while at sea, and after proceeding on the voyage to transport these vessels from one port to the other, the Government agent altered the order of transportation and changed the voyage, and so vitiated the policy of insurance, and then the vessel was lost. When a claim was made on the insurance company, the fact came out that, by direction of the officer of the Government, who was on board and in charge of the tug, the voyage had been deviated from, and the insurance company obtained a non-suit before the Circuit Court in Northumberland. I think this occurred eight or nine years ago. I am not sure about the time, but I know it was a long time ago, more than five years at any rate. The firm applied to the Government for compensation, which the Government refused to give them. The matter went through my hands. I did my level best to induce the Government to come to some arrangement, but they would not do it. I tried to get them to refer it to arbitration, but that was refused year after year. I will, however, say this for the Minister of Public Works, under whose charge the matter was, that he was always impressed with the justice of the claim, and that I never found more fair consideration given to any claims that I had to press upon the Government than was always given by him as head of a Department; and I do not impute to him anything improper or any act of injustice in connection with this transaction. At last, I got the matter referred to arbitration, I think something like fifteen or sixteen months ago. The arbitrators sat upon it, I think some fourteen or probably fifteen months ago. I think it was in December twelve months, some time near Christmas. They awarded $8,000 to Messrs. Call, Sadler & Co. After that award was made, I had occasion to wait on the Department in order to endeavor to get the amount paid, or to get it put in the Estimates of last year. I was told by the Minister that he would have to submit it to Council. I understood that the decision of Council was that they were determined to contest the claim, and the amount was not put in the Estimates last year. So the matter stood. Peter Mitchell was out of favor with the Administration. He had the courage of his convictions. He had the courage, when he differed with the Administration, to say so. Consequently, although this was a just and equitable claim, which had been passed on by the Dominion arbitrators, I could not get a sum put in the Estimates last year to pay it. These gentlemen are two prominent merchants in the port from which I came. They were and are great personal friends of mine, and have been strong political friends of mine in the past.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will come to the key of the position. When it was probable that an election might occur, a gentleman who had for years been my friend, who had supported me for years, who had got into my buggy and gone over portions of the county and canvassed the county in July last with me, was approached by some members of the Cabinet for the purpose of endeavoring to induce him to come out and oppose Mr. Mitchell. Then it became necessary to go around and work up the influences in the county which were necessary to defeat Mr. Mitchell, and this was one of them. These two influential gentlemen, who are still great personal friends of mine, were led to understand that, if they would sign Mr. Adams' requisition, then the Liberal-Conservative convention having committed itself to hostility to me, the knowledge that two influential friends of mine would oppose me would largely influence the county in regard to the vote which Mr. Adams would get. The next thing was that Mr. Adams was sent for. Whether he was sent for by the Government or not I do not know; but he came to Ottawa, and the word came down that if these gentlemen would sign the requisition and would support Mr. Adams, that which Peter Mitchell could not get from a sense of justice and fair play would be given to them as a matter of political exigency. When it was attempted to get up political meetings against me, though I know they were very loath to do it, they attended some meetings of these conventions. Then an Order in Council was passed, and I believe it was held over for some time in order to see if they were firmly fixed in their opposition to me; and then what Peter Mitchell could not settle, though over a year had elapsed since the award was made, the imminence of the election made it desirable should be paid, so that these men might be conciliated. Was there any reason for this being paid in January or February last more than there was for its being paid in the previous January or February? Why was it not put in the Estimates of last year? The award was made in the previous December, and I should like to have some explanation of this. The Finance Minister has stated that he agrees with the mover of the resolution in regard to Governor General's warrants and the inexpediency of using them as they have been used.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad that the hon. gentleman agrees with me in that. I think that the House and every member in it should be anxious to see that no improper use is made of these Governor's warrants for one purpose or the other. Certainly, they should not be used on the eve of an election in order to defeat members who have generally supported the Government in past years, but who have stated their opinions on the floor of this House and have chosen to differ from the Government, and have had the courage of their convictions in that regard. If a member who does that is to be blackballed and tabooed, and if the public moneys are to be used in order to get up an opposition to him, then it is time that we were a little more strict in regard to the use of Governor General's warrants. That is all I have to say about that matter just now.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat says that this matter was settled for a purpose, referring to what occurred in his county. This is the first time I have heard that alleged, so far as I am concerned —

Mr. MITCHELL. I exonerated you.

Mr. MITCHELL.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Although I thank the hon. gentleman for his confidence in me, he must be aware that I share with my colleagues all the odium there may be in this matter. Of course, being a member of the Government, no matter what my colleagues may do, I share in the responsibility of their acts, as they share in the responsibility of my acts. With reference to this matter, the hon. gentleman states correctly that he came to me several times to get it settled. He was aware that the matter could not be settled there and then. I tried to have it settled according to the award, but, as is usually the case, the matter was referred to the Minister of Justice to ascertain his opinion whether we should pay the award or appeal to a higher tribunal, and the Minister of Justice thought the award should be appealed from. This occurred during the last Session. Later on during the summer, the parties interested came and tried to get the Government to give them the amount of the award, which was $8,000, and the interest which, at the date of settlement, would have been about $3,800, and the costs, $500, which would have amounted to $12,300.

Mr. MITCHELL. Was Mr. Adams with them?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not remember. I know the parties interested came about this case. Is Mr. Adams a lawyer?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Well, I suppose he came as a lawyer, but I do not remember whether he was alone or with one of these gentlemen who are mentioned here; but, at all events, parties interested came to my Department, and after discussing the matter I told them that I would recommend that the award alone, $8,000, should be concurred in, and that there should be no interest or costs. I submitted the matter to Council, but the hon. gentleman knows I cannot say what occurred there. The result of the decision of the Council was what the hon. gentleman sees on this paper: we agreed to pay $8,000 instead of $12,300, and as that sum was the award, we procured a Governor General's warrant for it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think I can tell you what took place in Council.

Mr. BLAKE. There was a good deal of the Old Adam in it, I think.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Could the Finance Minister explain how it was necessary that warrants should issue in favor of a Royal Commission on Railways for $20,000, when I find it was not necessary to issue any in respect to the Commission appointed to enquire into the management of Indian affairs in the North-West?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not able to state to the hon. gentleman what reason there was in the one case more than the other; but I think he will agree with me that it is not usual to find gentlemen of the position and ability necessary for such a commission as this Railway Commission, to travel all over the country, and spend a long period of time, at large expense, without being paid. However, I do not understand him as taking any exception to the amount provided for the payment of the Railway Commission.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The First Minister, last year, gave a distinct pledge to the House that there would be a commission appointed to examine into Indian affairs. It was charged against certain members of the House that they had made statements that were not correct, which were really false, and the Administration declared that the charges made against them were not true, and the First Minister pledged himself in the following words: —

"More than that, I accept the challenge thrown out from the other side. It is the intention of the Government to issue a commission, and I pledge myself that it will be an impartial commission, to look into the whole question of the management of the Indians in the North-West, as well as the charges which have been brought, or may be brought against the Department. I am quite satisfied, on the part of the Department, to abide by the result."

That was a very burning question during the last of the Session, and during the late election, and the Minister having pledged himself that a commission should be issued, I do not see why it was not done, especially when we find special warrants issued for the payment of commissioners appointed for another duty. I wish to ascertain whether the Indian Commission had been appointed, as the First Minister said it would be.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There has been no commission appointed, and unless an occasion is made out, there will be no commission. At the time I made that statement the House will remember the circumstances. When I was absent, from indisposition, for a couple of months, an attack was made upon the Department by a member of the House at that time, he giving an immense number of instances of impropriety, and offences of various kinds, of misconduct, neglect and absolute malfeasance. I said there would be a commission, when I returned, as it was impossible to examine into the matter without sending messengers to the North-West to ascertain on the spot whether these charges were true or false. On examination into them which I caused to be made, I found the charges, from beginning to end, to be a mass of falsehoods, without one single merit of candor or honesty in the statements, and I think that was proved in the statement issued by the Department. So complete was the answer that during the whole canvass we did not hear anything, so far as I was concerned, about either the offences of commission or omission on the part of the Government. The answer was complete and thorough. There never was a more unjust, a more dishonest, a more untruthful attack made since the beginning of the world to this date, than was made on the Department at that time. The answer was complete, and there was no necessity for a commission.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I, on behalf of Mr. Cameron, of Huron, who is the member alluded to, beg to inform the House that he again and again challenged the First Minister to meet him on any public platform, and the First Minister did not dare to do so.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). With reference to that matter, I suppose the First Minister has alluded to the hon. gentleman whose name has just been mentioned?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think justice ought to be done to everyone. The First Minister complains that he made his statement when the First Minister was absent from the House. I am sure that hon. member regretted, quite as much as any member of this House, the cause of the First Minister's absence, but he cannot be condemned for having made these charges in the House in the presence of the hon. gentleman's colleagues. He also made charges against the Department. I made the charge on returns brought down for which I moved. I supported those charges by proofs, and I produced official documents from the hon. gentleman's own office, and those documents so recorded and forming part of the history of this country, clearly established by the testimony of the Government's own officers that there had been incapacity and neglect, that it had gone to such an extent, according to the reports of the hon. gentleman's own officers, that life had been sacrificed through it. I gave the authority. It was not my own statement. I did not wish unduly to push the Department, I made all the excuses I could; and the First Minister having failed to carry out what he said he would do, it is no excuse now to affirm that he has ascertained that those statements were untrue. We had the solemn pledge of the First Minister given to members of this House that he would appoint a commission, and the country had a right to look for it, and had a right to demand it; and the hon. gentleman is not in a position, having thus pledged himself, to say, in the absence of the gentleman who brought up the matter, that that gentleman told lies in the House. The right hon. gentleman himself said: I will appoint a commission, and I pledge myself it will be an impartial commission, before which he and I can submit our proof. But the right hon. gentleman never appointed his impartial commission; but he takes advantage of his position in the House now to say that the charge which a gentleman who was then a member made, is as false as false can be. It would have been more proper and becoming after he had seen fit to make a distinct pledge, as I have read from Hansard, if he had appointed an impartial commission and allowed the country to judge as to who told the truth in regard to this matter. I say that the charges made against the Department were supported and proved by official documents and by the hon. gentleman himself, and the attempt made in this book, prepared in the Indian Department and printed at the public expense, which we had not an opportunity for criticising, but which was prepared in the hon. gentleman's own Department and purports to be an answer to the charges made—I say that this attempt does not answer the charges I made. I maintain to-day, as I did when I made the charges, that the statements were true, and their truth was proved by the document of the hon. gentleman's own officers, and those charges were sufficient to warrant investigation, especially when this investigation was promised to be made by the appointment of a commission. It will not do to say to hon. members that the charges were unsubstantiated. The First Minister is not in a very nice position in regard to this matter. The right hon. gentleman and his press have denounced Mr. Cameron as a liar, as the hon. gentleman has virtually done to-day, and they have prepared the document in the hon. gentleman's Department, which, as I have said, is not subject to criticism; and yet when Mr. Cameron challenged the First Minister, in the absence of a commission, to meet him on the platform and discuss the question, he failed to do so. Nevertheless the First Minister appeared in that hon. gentleman's riding and made charges against him, and, in common justice, he ought to have had an opportunity of appearing on the same platform and defending his statements. Not only was the commission not appointed, but the right hon. gentleman now denies that he has any intention of issuing it. This report of the Indian Department is prepared by men not responsible to this House—I suppose the First Minister is responsible, but I question very much if he examined it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This report is prepared in the Department and sent through the country as clearing the Government of all charges of mismanagement and neglect made by the ex-member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) and by myself—and I speak for myself positively—on the evidence of official documents brought down under an Order of the House, documents which were prepared for the hon. gentlemen's medical and other officers; and the country will understand that these charges levied against hon. gentlemen opposite have not been answered in that pamphlet, let the hon. gentleman give what reason he may for failing to carry out the solemn pledge made to the House for the appointment of an impartial commission to which all the facts were to be submitted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman having spoken twice, perhaps I may be allowed to do likewise, although he committed a breach of order in speaking twice. The hon. gentleman also committed a breach of order in bringing up this subject, which is not at all germane to the subject now before the House. I will say this, that when I promised a commission it was in answer to charges made by the then member for Huron (Mr. Cameron); it had no reference to the statements made by the hon. gentleman opposite, I think.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman is wrong.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, very well. If I remember rightly, the statements made by the hon. member for Brant were answered at once and on the spot fully and satisfactorily by the hon. gentleman behind me. But I will say this: Let the hon. gentleman bring up this subject separately and we will discuss it in all its bearings. As to the vague challenge made by Mr. Cameron, that I would meet him on the hustings and discuss 999 specific charges against the Government and bring up 999 answers to those charges, and that I should keep an audience for hours, even for days, was an absurdity. It meant nothing—it was a mere matter of bravado. It was only by specific charges being brought in words and figures that they could be dealt with. Every charge brought was answered, and answered in the only way it could be answered. The speech of the hon. gentleman was fully reported in Hansard. The charges were specifically made, and they affected men in the North-West, civil servants, who had their own characters to maintain, officers whose conduct was challenged; and evidence was taken on the subject. I am quite satisfied that in the opinion of the country that answer was full and satisfactory. But let us not enter into this discussion on a question about warrants. Let the hon. member for Brant make his motion, and he will have a full opportunity of discussing it, and we will have a full opportunity of replying.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I was very much taken aback by the statement of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), that the law, which is very specific and precise, had been violated by warrants having been issued after the meeting of Parliament; and I communicated with Mr. McGee, the Clerk of the Privy Council, and I will send across the House the statement which he returned, and which shows that those dates are inaccurate. The trouble has arisen from a typographical error or an error in the manuscript.

Mr. MILLS. Does the hon. gentleman refer to the date of the Governor General's warrant or to the date of the Order in Council?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These are the dates of the warrants.

Mr. MILLS. I think they will be found to be also the dates of the Orders in Council.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. McGee writes:

"I have corrected the enclosed list in red ink showing dates of Orders in Council authorising special warrants, in so far as the date 14th April is mentioned."

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman will see that that does not touch the question. The point made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was as to the issue of the warrants. The Governor General has no legal authority to issue a warrant for the expenditure of public money when Parliament is in Session. It does not matter whether an Order in Council was passed or not. The very moment Parliament meets the Order in Council becomes inoperative, no action can be taken upon it; and the hon. gentleman will see that the additional information he has furnished does not add to that we have already before us, in regard to the correctness of the date, in regard to the issue of the Governor General's warrant, but it is merely additional information as to the date of the Order in Council on which that warrant was based. Now, so far as the law is concerned, it is not of the slightest consequence when the Order was passed; the law assumes immediate action. Suppose it was passed before Parliament met, and the Governor General's warrant was issued after the meeting of Parliament. Would not the absurdity of such a step being taken be perfectly apparent to everybody? and it is not the less a violation of the law that it was issued a few days after the Order in Council was carried. After Parliament was in Session the Governor General had no power or right to act; he has no power except under the supreme and urgent necessity of the State, and when Parliament is not in Session. After Parliament is in Session and is capable of acting, the Governor General has no authority to act on behalf of Parliament, and to invoke his authority in such a case is clearly an act in violation of the law of the land. I was rather surprised at the speech made by the hon. the Finance Minister. He has made many speeches during the last twenty years, since I have been in Parliament, but I never heard him make a reply so weak as the reply he made to the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). He took up this statement of the issue of the Governor General's warrants; he admitted that the action of the Government was a violation of the law; but did the hon. gentleman assign any reason why the Government, in any one of these particular instances, should have taken the course they did take?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I did not admit that the action of the Government was in violation of the law. I stated that I agreed with the general principle laid down by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), who formerly occupied the position I now occupy, that the Governor General's warrant should not issue except in the case of necessity, as provided by the statute.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman admitted that the Governor General's warrants had issued for some expenditures which he said provision had been made by Parliament, but which had lapsed. Now, what is the rule with regard to these appropriations? Why should they lapse at all? If the view which he endeavored to impress upon the House be the correct view, why should a warrant be necessary? Why should there be a provision that appropriations should lapse after a specific time? We know that, under the provisions of the law, the Government may extend the period for which appropriations are made, for three months, by an Order in Council, but they cannot extend them further than that. Parliament, in its wisdom, must see some propriety in limiting the period for which appropriations that have lapsed might be extended by Order in Council. Now, the period for which Parliament had limited the expenditure, expired. Then what was the position of the Government with regard to that expenditure? They were precisely in the same position as if Parliament had not made the appropriations at all. Parliament may have seen sufficient cause for making the appropriation at the time. But the Administration, acting perhaps upon the view which it knew Parliament would take, failed to make the expenditure, and allowed the appropriation to lapse; and what then? That appropriation having so lapsed, the Government were in precisely the position they would have been in had such an appropriation never been made. Then what answer does the hon. gentleman intend by the observations which he has made? In what way does he meet the objection made by the hon. member for South Oxford, that these were appropriations which had lapsed, and that the Government had no power to make them?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. On the contrary, the hon. member for South Oxford passed over the lapsed balances, as having been approved by Parliament, and therefore not coming within his strictures.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. member for South Oxford never could have committed himself to so absurd a proposition. It is a proposition in face of the law of the land. It is a proposition which that hon. gentleman could not for one moment have seriously defended. My hon. friend from South Oxford is not so much in the confidence of the Government, nor does he approve so highly of their course, that he will attempt to extenuate a violation of the law of the land on behalf of hon. gentlemen. So that the hon. Minister of Finance must have fallen in this matter into some misapprehension, as to the observations addressed to the House by the hon. member for South Oxford. That hon. gentleman passed them over, not because they were not violations of the law of the land; he said that every one of them was a violation of the law of the land, but he pointed out that there were other far more serious and glaring violations of the law, and it was to them that my hon. friend addressed himself, and it was to them that he especially directed the attention of the House. We find here any number of Governor's warrants, issued for enormous sums, on the 14th of April, after Parliament was in session. There is no argument which could be advanced in favor of the issue of the Governor General's warrants, under these circumstances, that would not apply twenty days after Parliament was in Session, as well as the second day after it was in Session. There is not a reason in law or parliamentary government that the hon. gentleman could assign in defence of such an appropriation, that would not apply to the whole of the moneys required for the public service for the twelve months of the year. Why, Sir, hon. gentlemen need only look at these appropriations to see that they are not such as were contemplated by the law—not such as the law was intended to meet. They are not of the class that the Act put upon the Statute-book was intended to enable the Government to deal with. These are ordinary appropriations for ordinary purposes. If they are extraordinary appropriations for extraordinary purposes, they are for purposes that Parliament itself might not approve of, and, that being the case, the hon. gentleman has really made no defence. The Government have openly and flagrantly violated the law of the land and set it at defiance; and the hon. gentleman, in reading over the list, in giving information which we have already before us in the printed paper, is not making a defence of the Administration; it is no defence of the conduct of the Government to say that these appropriations have been made. Why, we know that. But we see here that they were appropriations, many of which were made after Parliament was convened, when this House was in Session, when neither His Excellency alone, nor His Excellency with the assistance of the thirteen gentlemen who are his advisers, had any authority to take any action. Not a dollar had they the right to take from the public Treasury, under the authority of the law, and every dollar which has been taken in that way has been a flagrant violation of the law.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Unfortunately I was not present when this subject was first under discussion, and I lost—which I greatly regret—the speech of the hon. member for South Oxford. I was exceedingly anxious to hear that speech, but it is my loss, which perhaps I may repair by looking at it in Hansard. I shall, therefore, only speak of the one point which has been raised by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who says the Government have acted flagrantly in violation of the law, because money has been issued on warrants dated on the 14th day of April, Parliament having met on the 13th day of April. That, I think, is the charge made by the hon. gentleman as being conclusive proof of the illegality on the part of the Government, in issuing warrants on the 14th day of April. Well, I do not wish now to discuss the question as to whether any of these warrants which have been issued were improvidently issued, or issued contrary to the spirit of the law or not. I am not able to discuss that point, not having been present during the previous part of the debate. But I think the hon. gentleman will admit that although the Government may have acted very improperly, a warrant dated on the 12th of April would be legal.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It might be—not necessarily.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It would be legal, although it might be very improvidently and improperly issued by the Government. It would not be a breach of the law in any way. Now, I contend that the hon. gentleman has misread the clause, and that the law does not say that the warrant is not to be issued while Parliament is sitting. What it says is that the Order in Council authorising the issue of the warrant shall be issued during the recess; the warrant may be issued any time afterwards. I will read the clause to the House, and they will see that it is so:

"If when Parliament is not in Session any accident happens to any public work or building which requires an immediate outlay for the repair thereof, or any other occasion arises when any expenditure not foreseen or provided for by Parliament, is urgently and immediately required for the public good, then, upon the report of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General that there is no parliamentary provision, and of the Minister having charge of the service in question that the necessity is urgent, the Governor General in Council may order a special warrant to be prepared."

So that whenever the Minister goes to the Governor in Council, when Parliament is not sitting, and states that an interest is urgent and that there is no money in the Treasury, and the Finance Minister says there is no appropriation out of which that urgent need can be supplied, then at any time during the time Parliament is not in Session the Governor General may legally issue his warrant; and the fact that the warrant, the mere paper, is not signed until afterwards, is a matter of no consequence whatever. It is like the appointment of a man to hold any office under the Crown. The moment the Order in Council says he is appointed, he holds his office, although the commission may not issue for twenty years afterwards. And so, in this case, the moment the Order in Council is signed, that is an appropriation of the money; it is quite legal and does not come under the technical point taken by the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman's point, as I understand it, is this—that supposing the case is urgent and the money is wanted at once, supposing there will be great loss to the country if the warrant is not issued, yet if the warrant happens to be issued after the 13th of April, when Parliament is sitting, that is altogether illegal. I do not think that is good law, nor is it common sense.

Mr. DAVIES. The First Minister arrived in the House at such a late stage of the discussion that he evidently has not understood the position taken by the hon. gentleman who made the motion. The main objection which has been urged is not that the ministerial act of signing the warrant took place after the meeting of Parliament and after a proper Order in Council had been passed. That is a mere ancillary point, and may or may not be correct. I am disposed to think myself that if a proper Order in Council had been passed, the mere affixing of the signature of the Governor General, while Parliament is in Session, might not invalidate it. But surely the hon. gentleman understands that that is not the point which has been pressed here. The point submitted by the hon. member for South Oxford was this: that a large sum of money, amounting to $2,000,000, has been paid by Governor General's warrants, and while a portion of that money—and he singled out some of the items—might be justified, it was clear that a large portion of it was issued unjustifiably and illegally. The hon. gentleman went through the list, gave the items, and asked for explanations; and certainly, if there were circumstances which in any of these cases justified the Order in Council, we would have heard those circumstances detailed by the Minister of Finance. But has the Minister of Finance attempted to justify them? He has done this: he has made statements which might or might not have been received by the House if we were sitting in Supply, and the hon. gentleman was asking a vote for this purpose or that purpose. He has said this was necessary and that was necessary. The point is not whether it might have been prudent for the House to vote the money. The point is that the Government, not recognising the powers and limitations prescribed by the statute, have chosen to vote moneys by Orders in Council which should only have been voted after having received the sanction of Parliament. Two things that must concur are—first, that the expenditure is unforeseen, and next, that it is urgently and immediately required. Has the Minister of Finance attempted to say that one-half of these expenditures were urgently and immediately required? Has he attempted to argue that the issue of these warrants was within the powers given to the Government by Parliament? He has not done so, nor has the First Minister. Then, I say that the document on its face clearly shows that the Government have been guilty of issuing those warrants unconstitutionally and illegally. I know the facts connected with one or two of those items myself, and I know they cannot be justified; I know the money was spent illegally. Here is a small item of $3,800 for filling in a station yard at Charlottetown. That was not a matter which was not foreseen, because it is many years since it was reported upon by the engineer in chief as a work that ought to be undertaken by the Government. Nor was there any particular urgency about it. The space filled in has remained for many years unoccupied, and will, I venture to say, remain unoccupied for years longer. But just before the elections came on it was thought advisable to give employment to the large class of unemployed. Orders came down from Ottawa that the unemployed of Charlottetown should be engaged at the public expense. That was the urgency. No doubt, my hon. friend thought the public good would be served by gentlemen being returned to Parliament to support his Government, and the money was spent to secure that return. Not every unemployed man, but every unemployed man who could go to the hon. gentleman's candidate and obtain a certificate of character, could go and get work and be paid out of the public moneys of Canada, illegally appropriated by hon. gentlemen for an illegal and immoral purpose—the purpose of trying to control in an improper way the voice of the people. I venture to say that those who take up this statement and go through it, and have a knowledge of the facts contained in it, will be able to make the same statement as I have made. If these are the facts, the remarks of the hon. member for Bothwell are strictly true that these warrants have been issued illegally and unconstitutionally, and I am glad that this new Parliament, at its first meeting, should take the opportunity of putting on record, clearly and distinctly, its views on this matter. The hon. gentleman says he recognises the truth of the proposition laid down by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright); but if he recognises that proposition in theory, he has flagrantly abused it in practice.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I might call attention to the fact that if there be any confusion, it was none of my making, because the date, the 14th April, is given in the document itself.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course the statement of the Minister of Finance was based on an entire misapprehension of the character of the document with reference to which he made that statement. He said there was a typographical error. There is none in the return, which is perfectly accurate. It is a statement of the Governor General's warrants issued, and it gives the numbers and dates, no doubt, accurately, with reference to the warrants issued on the 14th April, just as it does with reference to the warrants issued before.

Mr. DAVIES.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does not Mr. McGee's correction in red ink alter the dates?

Mr. BLAKE. It does not. Mr. McGee says:

"I have corrected the subjoined list in red ink, showing the dates upon which the Orders in Council issued, authorising special warrants in so far as the date 14th April is mentioned."

But this return does not purport to give the date of a single Order in Council. It does not deal with them, but with the dates of warrants in all cases, as well in the cases of warrants issued on the 14th April as in the others. There is no typographical or other error corrected, but an additional piece of information is supplied to us, namely, the dates of the Orders in Council upon which the warrants of the 14th April were in fact issued. There is nothing incorrect in the paper. The First Minister says this is a technical point, that these warrants were issued after the 14th, and the Orders in Council just before. It is a technical point to pass Orders in Council the day before Parliament meets in order to escape from the jurisdiction and the control of Parliament, as to the votes of money required. It is to prostitute the powers which the Government are given under the law, to issue warrants when no public necessity required the money to be paid before Parliament met, in order that the Government may close the transaction and then call upon us to go through the empty form of saying the money should be paid. I agree in the criticism made of the general declaration of the hon. the Finance Minister. He said he entirely agreed in the general view taken by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). Why, we all understand that there is nothing more popular than the agreements in declarations of a high standard of morality, or of a high code of public virtue, and there is nothing more unpopular than the application to particular instances of that high standard of public morality and virtue. "I entirely agree," says the hon. the Finance Minister, "in the principle laid down, but I object to its being applied to the cases in hand." It is only in cases of urgent necessity, in which the public interest does really require an expenditure to be made, that, owing to certain circumstances beyond the control of the Government, could not be foreseen in time to obtain parliamentary approval, that this power of issuing special warrants ought to be used. We find, by this statement, it has been used to the extent of $2,000,000, and the hon. the Minister of Finance claims, rightly used. But on what grounds does he justify it? In almost every case, he confines himself to the statement that the money ought to be voted by us because the expenditure was a good and proper one. This would be a good reason, if true, for the hon. gentleman, when bringing down an estimate, to ask Parliament to pass it; but it is no reason for asking us to vote him this money which he has expended in this unauthorised way. More than a justification of that description is required for the exercise of this particular power. The law does not entrust the Administration with the power of making expenditures during recess simply because the expenditures may be good in themselves; the law does not authorise the Government to incur expenditure which is simply to be justified, when Parliament meets, by the statement that this would be a proper thing to vote if you were here, and therefore we were justified in spending the money without your consent. The law imposes certain restrictions—restrictions which are not adequate, but it certainly does impose restrictions upon the expenditure by the Administration, outside the Session of Parliament, of moneys which Parliament did not vote. What is the marginal note to this clause of the Act? "Accidents during recess of Parliament." That is the interpretation which is given. Then the clause goes on to say:

"If when Parliament is not in Session, any accident happens to any public work or building which requires an immediate outlay for the repair thereof—

If a lock breaks in a canal or some accident happens which requires some public work to be repaired.

—"or any other occasion arises when any expenditure not foreseen or provided for by Parliament is urgently and immediately required for the public good, then, upon the report of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General that there is no parliamentary provision, and of the Minister having charge of the service in question that the necessity is urgent, the Governor in Council may order a special warrant to be prepared."

So that you get, first of all, the example of the class of cases, you are told what Parliament meant; and then you get the general principle from the illustration just given. If some accident happens to a public work or building which requires immediate outlay or repair—not merely an accident, but an accident of such a character that it requires immediate outlay for repair—then the warrant may be issued; or

"If any other occasion arises when any expenditure not foreseen or provided for by Parliament is urgently required for the public good."

So that you get the illustration in the particular, and then you get the general condition, and you find urgency and the necessity for immediate action for the public good are the elements which give to the Administration power to act. Now, in a great many cases, it is utterly impossible to apply these views to the warrants in this return. In many cases, the use of this power was made so late that Parliament was actually sitting when the warrants issued. I care not whether there is a legal justification in the clause of the absolute power of the Government to issue the warrants for which the Orders in Council were passed, the day before the Session of Parliament or the day before that again. I want to know what the spirit of the clause is, and what the meaning of it is. It is that if the public good imperatively requires money to be expended, in respect of which the condition of things renders it impossible that Parliament should be consulted and its consent obtained, the Government may issue special warrants for such expenditure during recess; but that cannot be said in reference to certain expenditures for which the Orders in Council were passed just before the 13th April, so late that the warrants could not be issued in time to have them out before Parliament. Take the expenditure on 14th April of $31,000 on the Banff Springs. I am not speaking of the work done. What I would ask is, was there such urgent and immediate necessity in the public good for that expenditure, that it was necessary on the 12th April, the day before Parliament was summoned to meet, to pass an Order in Council ordering the immediate issue of a special warrant, which it was not possible, with all diligence, to get out until the day after we met? If the public good required the immediate expenditure of such moneys, the duty of the hon. gentlemen was at the earliest possible moment to have brought down a vote of credit, to have brought down a proposal to us to ask us to assent to the expenditure of this money on the ground of the public urgency, and not to have waited for estimates, but to have said: We cannot wait for the estimates, but the public good requires that we should ask for this expenditure, and we ask you now and at once to grant this money for the public good; but it does appear, and I repeat it, that this power is prostituted when, just on the eve of the meeting of Parliament, warrants for this large amount are issued, warrants for moneys which are not paid until long after the time of our meeting, warrants which were not issued at all until the date of our meeting. We see here an Order in Council passed on April 12th to pay the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company, costs in the suit of the Queen, represented by the Ontario Government, against that company, $4,000. Did the public interest so urgently require that the eminent lawyers who were employed in that case should be paid before a vote was taken, that it was necessary to use the Governor General's warrant, this statutory warrant, in order to prevent our having a voice in saying whether they should be paid or no? It is absurd, it would be ridiculous, if it were not worse, to apply the warrant under these circumstances. It is only when the necessity is urgent that this special warrant is to be prepared, and it is only when the expenditure is immediately required. I find, by the light the Finance Minister has thrown upon this matter, that one Order in Council was made on the 11th February, and that not until the 14th April was the Governor General's warrant issued for it. There is proof upon the face of the documents that that Order in Council was improperly issued, that it could not have been urgently needed, for, though they passed the Order on the 11th February, more than two months followed before the authority was acted upon. When they had waited so long, would it not have been easy to wait until they got our consent and authority for the payment. One of the most important functions of the House of Commons—perhaps the most important function, if the House rightly understood its duties—is its control over the public expenditure; and how is it possible to say that we are discharging our duty, as controlling public expenditure, if we are to permit two millions of money to be expended, without our consent, upon such flimsy excuses and pretences as have been offered for our consideration to-day. Then there is the First Minister's own Department. On the 11th April, it seems, by the information which has been supplied to us, an Order in Council was passed under which a warrant issued on the 14th, for Dominion Lands, income, amounting to the sum of $26,000. I do not know, I have no particulars as to what it is for, but you find that, after the meeting of Parliament, the consummation of the authority is taken to pay $36,000 on account of income, in the Department of Dominion Lands, which the First Minister, at any rate, presided over very lately, and in regard to which he is said still to have a great deal to do. There is yet another instance, in regard to Indians, Manitoba and North-West Territories and British Columbia, a very large sum. On the 23rd March, according to the corrections, so-called, which the Minister of Finance has placed in our hands, a warrant was issued for the Indians of Manitoba and the North-West Territories and British Columbia, to the amount of $189,000, but it is not until the 14th April, after Parliament has met, that the Governor General's warrant issued for that payment; so that it is evident that the necessity was not urgent and immediate to obtain the money, but it seems clear that in many of these cases the necessity was urgent and immediate to obtain the authority to spend the money without the consent of Parliament, and nothing else. Now, I cannot understand how it is possible for us, consistently with our duty, to accept as satisfactory the statements of the Minister of Finance as a fair justification for this use of this extraordinary power. It is a power to be used for the good of the State in order that, in case some unavoidable, some unforeseen, some extraordinary accident or other emergency occurs, the commonwealth may not suffer damage by the fact of the Government not having the power to spend necessary moneys at the moment. That is the essence of the whole provision, and, if such a provision as this, given for such purposes as these, illustrated by such an example as the statute illustrates, is to be admitted by the House of Commons of Canada as a reason to justify the expenditure of two millions of money on the principles on which that expenditure has been justified, then I do not think that, whatever may have been the expectations of the people of Canada as to the action of this House of Commons newly elected, those expectations will be at all realised.

Mr. THOMPSON. In this discussion it seems a little difficult to ascertain precisely what the point is that hon. gentlemen opposite desire to make against the Government in regard to this matter. The hon. gentleman who made the motion distinguished himself by fairness from some of those who followed him, and stated that those points were two—in the first place, that we had exceeded the right the statute gave us in respect to the nature of the expenditures themselves—that they were not of the kind contemplated by the statute; and in the next place, he pressed upon us the point that no less than twelve of the warrants issued had been issued in the exercise of a power which no longer existed in the Governor in Council, because Parliament had commenced to sit; and, holding in his hand the statement of the warrants, he pointed out that no less than twelve had been issued under date of the 14th April, the day after Parliament sat. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), followed him and declared, in answer to the explanation of the hon. the Finance Minister (which was that the power had been exercised by the Governor General on Orders in Council which had been previously passed, and that the date which appeared was the date of what was called the ministerial act of signing the papers occurred), that the Governor General's power in this respect ceased when Parliament met. Immediately, my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), rises and says that is not the point at all; that there is no doubt about the power of the Governor in Council to issue his warrant, and that no question is involved in regard to the date at which he issues it; and, immediately after he resumes his seat, the leader of the Opposition rises and says that is not the point, but the point is the technical use of the power which is vested in the Governor in Council so near the opening of the Session. I think that, when so many of these hon. gentlemen, one after the other, has repudiated the point so prominently put before the House by his predecessor, the House must conclude that the points have been pretty well disposed of; and, as to the twelve warrants which have been referred to as bearing the date of the 14th April, it has been explained by the Finance Minister that these warrants were ordered to be issued before the sitting of Parliament. In stating that this return was typographically wrong, the Finance Minister was misled by me. I sent for the Clerk of the Privy Council, and asked him to give an explanation of the dates which appeared to be subsequent to the opening of Parliament, and, in stating to the Finance Minister that those were erroneous, and had been corrected in red ink on the paper which was in the hands of the leader of the Opposition, and which he stated was not corrected at all, I was simply giving the information which I had received from the Clerk of the Council without having examined carefully the head note at the top of that paper. So it appears that what two out of the four gentlemen, who have undertaken to lead the Opposition on this question, say is the principal point this afternoon, is disposed of by the admission of one of them that there was nothing in it at all, and by his calling the attention of the House back to the point that although we had not used wrongly, in point of law, the power granted to us, still as to the time at which it was exercised these sums ought not to have been paid. Now, addressing ourselves to that point for a moment, let me refer to the statements which were put forward by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) as the ground for attack. His statement was made in refutation of the admission of the hon. gentleman who made the motion to the House. The hon. gentleman who made the motion to the House based his criticisms principally on this ground of argument: that it was unfair to Parliament that large expenditures should be made without the consent of Parliament having been obtained, but he was candid enough to say that that criticism did not apply to the items in this list which had been previously voted by Parliament, and in respect of which the power of ordering a warrant to issue was simply used to revive the lapsed grant. After he had made that candid statement to the House as one of the leaders of the Opposition, the hon. member for Bothwell declared that he could not have made any such statement at all, because it would not be common sense if he had. The hon. member for Bothwell went on to make this single criticism: why should these grants lapse at all? He declared the Governor in Council had power to extend them for three months. So they have. But in respect of some of these which are immediately connected with my own Department, I can give the hon. gentleman an illustration by way of answer. Votes were taken by this Parliament during last Session for certain purposes, and the votes were extended for three months, and even after they had been extended for the three months, although the service was being performed, its complete execution had been delayed beyond the time expected, and the time had not come for the payment of the money. In pursuance of the authority of Parliament we had ordered the work to be done and made a contract. The contract was longer in its performance than was expected, and the hon. gentleman says that although we have the authority of Parliament to enter into the contract after a vote of Parliament for the payment of the money and the extension of the grant for the time which was supposed to be sufficient to cover the time during which the contract was being performed, that we were not at liberty to pay the liability that was incurred under Order of this Parliament, simply because the time had elapsed within which the vote of Parliament itself was available, after, as I said, authority had been expressly given by Parliament, and after the money had been voted by Parliament, and when payment of the money was simply delayed because the time for payment had not arrived. All I can say is that if the hon. gentleman thinks that is a reasonable and fair argument to answer to the contention of the Finance Minister that many of these were lapsed votes, I am glad to know that the hon. gentleman who leads him and who made this motion, does not agree with him. Let me refer the hon. member for Bothwell, however, to a statement of special warrants of His Excellency the Governor General issued in accordance with that chapter he has quoted, from the 1st of July, 1877, to the 9th February, 1878, inclusive. The hon. gentleman has declared to the House that under the provisions of that very statute, the principle that ought to prevail is that after a grant has lapsed, and after the Government has exhausted its power of extending the grant, even by his cheer to me a few moments ago, he must be taken to have implied that even if a contract had been made under authority of a vote of Parliament last Session, we were just as much without power until we came here and met Parliament, and waited for three months to get an appropriation to cover the contract—we were just as much without power as if that statute had never been passed at all, and as if the grant had never been made by Parliament. I think there is a very good reason why the hon. gentleman who made this motion did not concur with him; and the hon. member for Bothwell will find, when he refers to that statement of special warrants from the 1st of July, 1877, to the 9th February, 1878, when he was not in a position, I admit, to exercise the fine legal criticism which he has displayed this afternoon—he will find that the Government of that day, of which he was a member, exercised that power in relation to lapsed balances to an extent of no less than $134,718. The hon. member and his Government expended on account of the following services, being balances of previous appropriations the votes of which had lapsed, namely: British Columbia penitentiary, $19,106.89; public buildings in the North-West, $503.05; Lieutenant Governor's residence, Battleford, $3,784.83.

Mr. THOMPSON,

Mr. MILLS. Hear, hear.

Mr. THOMPSON. I hope the hon. gentleman will turn his attention to the first section of the Act, and remember how urgently he required these items: Removal of beacon rock, British Columbia, $9,800; Guelph Custom house, $6,378.36; Shippegan harbor, $9,630.27; Grasshopper relief, $380.10; Criminal statistics, $4,558.75; Australian exhibition, $6,959.20; Cow Bay, Cape Breton, $1,343.84; military stores, ammunition, &c., $71,973.34, making, as I said before, a total of $134,718.63. These warrants were brought down on 9th of February, 1878, and Parliament met on the day previous to the date down to which that return comes. Some of these warrants bear date the 9th February, 1878, and Parliament met on the 7th day of February on that year. The hon. gentleman will see from the language of the heading of his return, that it is a statement of the special warrants drawn from the 1st of July, 1877, to the 9th February, inclusive. Now, Sir, in respect of all these appropriations, the hon. member must admit that there was no authority for them, and no urgency for them, except that these appropriations having been made by Parliament during its previous Session, the work was undertaken by Government and contracts were entered into, and the faith of the Government was pledged to the payment of the contractor when his contract was finished, even though, in the meantime, the vote had lapsed. I stated to the House what the expenditure of the hon. member's Government during the six months prior to the meeting of Parliament in 1878 had been, but I find I have only stated those which fall under the head of Consolidated Fund expenditure. But that hon. gentleman and his colleagues had found that expenditures on capital account were urgently and immediately required to no less a sum than $236,587.66.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That was when wheat was worth $1 for half a bushel.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am measuring the hon. gentleman in his own half bushel. The hon. member for Bothwell perhaps will call attention to the urgency of some of the items of capital expenditure which were required, and had not been foreseen or provided for, and he will find them as follows: Ottawa public buildings, tower, $8,950; Ottawa buildings, western block extension, $142,325.80; Intercolonial Railway freight cars, $76,736.72; Intercolonial Railway expenses before the Supreme Court—almost as iniquitous a claim as that of the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company—$8,575.14. And those amounts, extending not over a whole year, but over less than six months, came to nearly $400,000. Some observations were made by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) as to one item of this statement, in respect of which he said it was quite apparent, or, at all events, his argument was to that effect, that there could be no urgent or immediate requirement. That was with regard to the appropriation for the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company, and I suppose special attention was called to that item because it might kindle some political feeling in relation to the particular case in respect of which those costs were paid. Let me call the attention of the House, however, to the fact that as regards that item of $4,000, it is less than one-half of the sum which Parliament voted for that service last Session. The hon. gentleman bases some argument on the fact that the Order in Council for the payment of the $4,000 was made in February and the warrant did not issue till April.

Mr. BLAKE. No, it was not that item. The item for the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company was dated 12th April, I think—that is the date of the Order in Council just before we met.

Mr. THOMPSON. That claim, as I said, was less than half what Parliament voted for that service. The costs had been actually incurred under the authority of Parliament, and the amount had not been paid before, for the reason that I gave in reference to other balances, that although costs were being incurred from day to day, the case had not reached a stage in which they could properly be taxed and payment made.

Mr. BLAKE. I would just say in regard to that point that the expenditure on account of the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company is not stated in this return to be any part of a lapsed balance.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is, nevertheless.

Mr. BLAKE. It may be so, and of course it may be another error in printing or otherwise.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know whether the Minister of Justice has the dates of the Orders in Council passed in 1877, or whether he was simply giving a general statement with respect to the date at which the return was laid on the Table of Parliament. The information will, of course, be given fully when the return for which I move is brought down, but it has a bearing on the question in hand. I am rather inclined to think the hon. gentleman will find that the date given refers to the date of the return. That is my impression. I see the dates do not appear to be given.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You were wrong.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If we were in the same box we shall be glad to be put in the right way, and we hope you will be of the same mind. I do not think the hon. gentleman will find it is quite so, for I notice that the dates are 20th and 30th October, and the last date is given as the 17th December. The last of the whole list, I say, is apparently an Order on 17th December, 1877, for public works, approved by the Governor General in Council on 24th December, a good while before Parliament met. I rather think the hon. gentleman will find that the date, 9th February, 1878, simply refers to the date at which the return was presented. And I may observe that I think this form of statement which was used in my time is to be commended for other reasons. Under it the Orders and copies of the reports of the committees were printed, the very thing for which I am going to move; and I think that was drawn in a more business shape, and more in conformity with the dignity of a Parliament, than the one at present in my hands.

Mr. BLAKE. But it would increase the cost of printing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt it would add to the expense of printing, but if there are any subjects on which light is wanted it is on points like these. The other matter deserves a little consideration, and I speak under correction in regard to it. I think the Audit Act, under which we now work, was passed as late as 1878, and I am not quite certain as to the terms of the Act under which we worked previously. The First Minister, whose memory is good on these points, can perhaps inform us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot say.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It also will be a matter worthy of enquiry to ascertain whether these orders are under an Act passed as late as 1878, because I think we appointed the Auditor General to whom the Audit Act has special reference. I do not attach the same importance to items with respect to lapsed balances that I do to other items being paid, for two or three reasons. One is that the matter having been discussed in Parliament, and parliamentary authority having been obtained, although there might be grounds which my hon. friend pointed out on which they might be objectionable, yet they were not prima facie so objectionable. Another point is this, that, as regards public works particularly, I am aware that it was found necessary during Mr. Mackenzie's Administration as well as under other Governments, to push them forward in order to prevent damage being done to the works. As regards public works, no doubt this is a difficult question; I know its difficulties, and I introduced several modifications, with a view to remove some of them, and everyone understands that when a work is in progress it is difficult to suspend it without great injury being done.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman has asked me a question as to whether the dates of the warrants appear. They do not. It may possibly be that they did not come down so late as 9th February, 1878. The hon. gentleman will not find that I was in the least degree incorrect as to my statement of the items of those warrants.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was not disputing the items.

Mr. THOMPSON. As regards the dates: the hon. gentleman has made reference to December, 1877, and some other dates which appeared in the papers. These are the dates of the Orders in Council. The dates of the warrants do not appear.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state the latest date given.

Mr. THOMPSON. December.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The hon. Minister of Justice has hardly been fair, because the House was led to believe that the warrants came down almost the day before the House met, and the dates came down to 9th February, 1878. It appears, however, that that is the date of the Order brought down to the House. We now find that, although there were no dates given for the warrants, yet the very paper which was in the hands of the Minister of Justice gives the dates of every Order in Council, and the last order was passed on 24th December, or nearly six weeks before the House met. The Minister of Justice, I say, had the information in his hands at the time he made his argument, and yet he endeavored to lead the House to believe that these Orders in Council went up to the date of the meeting of the House, and he put that forward as a justification for the issue of the warrants under discussion. So much with regard to that question. I think, however, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice ought not to have dealt unfairly with the argument of my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island. He said there might be cases of urgency in which an Order of Council might be passed a short time before the meeting of the House, but I scarcely think the Minister of Justice will undertake to say that the circumstances here are circumstances of extreme necessity or urgency, such as will alone justify such action. I think the hon. member for Bothwell is right in laying down the principle that this is a power which should not be used except in cases requiring immediate attention. But does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that there was any immediate necessity for passing an Order in Council before the meeting of the House, to pay the costs in the case of the St. Catharines Milling Company? Then I see there is an item, Intercolonial Railway deep-water wharf, St. John, $5,000. Now, what urgency was there for paying that amount, or issuing an Order in Council, dated on the 21st of February, just one day before the elections took place? I may state that there was a large hole there which had remained open for years, and they suddenly put men on to fill it up. These men were paid by tickets, hundreds of which were issued by special parties in the city of St. John, who exacted a promise from those who received them that they would vote against the Opposition candidates. That is the case of urgency which required an Order in Council to be issued on the day before the elections. I would ask the Minister of Railways what urgency there was that required the issue of an Order in Council, on the 11th of March, for increased accommodation at St. John. It is rather remarkable that while the Minister of Justice puts forward such pleas as those, the dates of the Orders are mostly found to be between the time of the issue of the writs for election and the day of election, a fact which, to say the least of it, is very suspicious. And we find that the Minister of Justice has been put forward, with the assistance of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, to make the charge against the Government of Mr. Mackenzie that they issued Governor's warrants to the extent of $100,000, and they urge that as a justification for the issue of warrants to the amount of $2,500,000, most of these warrants being dated after the House met, or being based upon Orders in Council issued a few days before. Sir, the Act itself points out under what circumstances this power should be used, that is in cases of immediate necessity and urgency, and hardly a single item has been pointed out where that urgency exists except, as my hon. friend behind me has said, the urgency of a general election. This power is granted for a particular purpose, and there is no power which a Government possesses as to which we should be more careful; it is a power which, as has been said before, should not be prostituted by being used for the mere party advantage of the Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 24) to incorporate the Goderich and Canadian Pacific Junction Railway Company.—(Mr. Porter.)

Bill (No. 26) to incorporate the Kincardine and Teeswater Railway Company.—(Mr. McCarthy.)

Bill (No. 27) respecting the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company.—(Mr. Patterson, Essex.)

Bill (No. 28) to incorporate the Brandon, Souris and Rock Lake Railway Company.—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 29) to incorporate the Manufacturers' Life and Accident Insurance Company.—(Mr. Brown.)

Bill (No. 36) to incorporate the New Westminster Southern Railway Company.—(Mr. Chisholm.)

Bill (No. 38) to amend the Act to incorporate the Hamilton, Guelph and Buffalo Railway Company, and to change the name of the company to the "Hamilton Central Railway Company."—(Mr. McKay.)

DISCHARGE OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS.

On the Order for second reading of Bill (No. 9) for the discharge of Insolvent Debtors whose estates have been distributed ratably among their creditors.—(Mr. Edgar.)

Mr. THOMPSON. I will ask the hon. member to be kind enough to allow this Bill to stand, and I will state the reason. Within the last twenty-four hours documents have been served on me in relation to proceedings now pending before the Court of Appeal in Ontario to test the validity of the Ontario Act, the efficacy of which is necessary to be established in order to make this Bill effective. I will undertake that the hon. gentleman's Bill will not be lost by delay.

Mr. EDGAR. It is getting fairly late in the Session, and I should not like to see the Bill lost on account of delay. I really think a good deal might be gained and nothing would be lost if the Government would allow this Bill, after discussion to-night, to go either to the Committee on Banking and Commerce or to a special committee. In either case there will be ample time to consider it in all its details as well as with regard to its general principles. With reference to what the Minister of Justice says about the constitutionality of the Ontario Creditors' Relief Act, which I suppose he refers to, having arisen, that does not materially affect this Bill. It is not to the Province of Ontario alone that this Bill is intended to apply. It is intended to give relief to debtors who are entitled to relief all over the Dominion, and it will apply in Ontario to cases which do not come up under the Creditors' Relief Act, those of debtors who have made full assignments for the benefit of their creditors. That is a very minor point indeed, and I hope the Minister will allow the Bill to be gone on with to-night. No harm can possibly happen, as the Bill can be stopped at any stage of the proceedings, and there is another House before which it must come, and in which it will probably be fully discussed.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is true there will be abundant opportunities to consider the details of the Bill, but if we take the second reading we assent to its principle, and it affects very important principles in the Province of Ontario, and in other Provinces. I should like very much that the Bill should stand, but I will give the hon. gentleman a pledge that it will not be lost by the delay, and I do not ask it to stand longer than to-morrow.

Order allowed to stand.

PUBLIC MORALS AND PUBLIC CONVENIENCE.

Mr. CHARLTON moved second reading of Bill (No. 21) to amend the Act respecting public morals and public convenience. He said: I explained the character of the amendments briefly on the first reading. The Act passed last Session provided that the seduction of idiot or imbecile women should be a misdemeanor. One of the amendments proposed in this Bill is to add insane women to that list. The other is to restore the original provision with regard to seduction under promise of marriage. The Bill was changed in the Senate last year so as to restrict the age of the woman who could have a remedy under the Act to 13 years, the male not to be liable under the age of 21 years. The Bill proposes that the male shall be liable over the age of 18 years, and the women shall have a remedy up to the age of 21 years. The principle of the Bill was assented to by the House. The amendment with regard to insane persons is of the same character as the Bill passed last Session in the Ontario Legislature.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

OXFORD TO NEW GLASGOW RAILWAY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into a Committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient that the railway from Oxford to New Glasgow should be completed as a Government railway, and that, in addition to any unexpended balance of the sum of $224,000 granted as a subsidy for the construction of the said railway by the Act 45 Victoria, chapter 14, there shall be granted to Her Majesty, for the said purpose, out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, a sum of $500,000.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC STORES.

Mr. THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 20) respecting Public Stores.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give some fuller statement of the specific circumstances which have led to the introduction of this proposal.

Mr. THOMPSON. I cannot state the circumstances more fully than this, that in Nova Scotia and Quebec it has at various times been found necessary to prosecute persons who had committed larceny in respect to public property, especially to that property which belongs to the Railway Department. The House is quite aware that in that Department, more than any other, goods and chattels which are public property are scattered at various points along the line. These consist not only of sleepers and rails but, more especially of tools used in the construction and repair of railways, such as pickaxes, axes, shovels, barrows and chattels of every description. It has been found practically impossible to prove the property, and the proposal which the Bill makes is that it shall be in the power of the head of each Department to establish certain marks which shall be put on goods of that description. Such marks shall be proof of the property of the Crown in respect of such stores, and penalties will be imposed, similar to those provided in chapter 170 of the Revised Statutes, against persons having goods of that description in their possession so marked, also against persons who counterfeit or obliterate the marks. On reference to chapter 170, hon. members will find that nearly all the provisions of this Bill are there contained in respect to property connected with the Departments of War and Admiralty. It was found necessary, and it was requested by the Imperial authorities for precisely the same reasons as those given now, that such an Act should be passed. It was passed in Nova Scotia, and was afterwards adopted in this Parliament, and we think it would be very desirable in order to meet the difficulties which have led to the loss of a large amount of public property by larceny, to establish the same provisions in respect to other Departments. The principal difficulty has been the identification of the property. The matter has been brought to the notice of my Department by our agents in those Provinces, who have experienced that difficulty in conducting public prosecutions, in respect to which there is no reason to doubt the sufficiency of proof in any other particular than that which arose from the impossibility of identifying the things which are precisely like those in use by other individuals. The same provisions will be found useful in connection with my own Department in the penitentiary service, although not to the same extent. These are the reasons for the Bill more than any special defalcations, which the hon. member seemed to suspect had led to the introduction of the Bill.

Mr. JONES. Clause 11 of this Bill reads:

"No person shall, without permission in writing from the Admiralty, or from some person authorised by the Admiralty in that behalf, creep, sweep, dredge or otherwise search for stores in the sea or any tidal or inland water, within one hundred yards from any vessel belonging to Her Majesty or in Her Majesty's service, or from any mooring place or anchoring place, appropriated to such vessels, or from any mooring belonging to Her Majesty, or from any of Her Majesty's wharves or docks, victualling or steam factory yards."

I think the hon. gentleman will remember that vessels in the harbor of Halifax sometimes lose their anchors in their moorings, particularly about the upper wharves, and under this Act they would not have power to employ persons to search for their own property without permission from the Admiralty or the Government. I remember several occasions, within my own knowledge, when steamers have had to slip their anchors or lose them or foul them with the Admiralty moorings and the Admiralty moorings off the deep-water terminus are rather an obstacle in the way at times. Of course they have to be respected, but when a steamer or sailing vessel drops its anchors there they would not have, under this clause, the right to search for their property without authority from the Admiralty.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think any difficulty has ever arisen in obtaining the necessary permission, from any undue insistence on the provision of the Act. I may say to the hon. gentleman, however, that that section is merely a transcript of the present law and is only embodied here in order that all these provisions may be contained in the same Act. That provision has been in force for many years in the Province of Nova Scotia, and I do not think there has been any trouble in regard to it.

Mr. JONES. I am not aware that there has been any trouble about it. I did not know it was in the present Act.

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest that, in regard to some of the marks appropriated for the stores in the schedule, it would be much more satisfactory if one mark or series of marks were designated by the Act. It is important to involve as little risk and embarrassment as possible to the trade of the country, and, if you are to put the initial of every Department on the stores, it might require a much more extended knowledge than I think is general of all the public departments in order to be quite sure that certain initial letters which were to be found on a bale or what not, represented the cabalistic insignia which would render it criminal to have the property in possession. I suppose it is only in one or two classes or cases that this would come into operation. The hon. gentleman has mentioned the penitentiaries for example, and it seems reasonable that the penitentiary goods should be secured in this way, and so with regard to the railway stores, which, I suppose, will be those principally affected. But why not adopt some one mark, such as "P.S.C." for Public Service of Canada, to be put on all the stores which are to be protected in this way? Then the public would know that this, whether with or without the Royal Arms, was a mark indicating Government property; but this which is proposed would be almost a trap as you would have some thirteen or fourteen different sets of initials.

Mr. THOMPSON. We will amend that.

On section 2,

Mr. THOMPSON. I propose to strike out the words "and also the city court of Halifax." That jurisdiction is exercised really by the stipendiary magistrate of Halifax, and the city court is merely a court in which he sits, so that it is sufficiently described.

On section 15,

Mr. THOMPSON. I propose to amend this so that it will read: "any person convicted or sentenced to imprisonment under this Act before the stipendiary magistrate in Halifax, in his discretion."

Mr. BLAKE. Is it not possible that any person may be convicted in Halifax before any other of the persons named than the stipendiary magistrate?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, he is the only person.

On the schedule,

Mr. THOMPSON. I understand the suggestion of the hon. gentlemen to be that we should use the letters "D.C." with the name of the Department.

Mr. BLAKE. No, I would put only "D.C." or "Canada."

Mr. THOMPSON. The name of any Department, or "Canada."

Mr. BLAKE. If you have the full name of the Department, I suppose that would be a sufficient warning, but it would be simpler to put "Canada" and the Royal Arms.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think it would be better to have the discretion to use one or the other.

Mr. BLAKE. Very well.

On the preamble,

Mr. BLAKE. I have not had an opportunity of examining the references in the Bill. I observe that in some cases only part of the clauses are adopted. I would ask the hon. gentleman if there is any substantial change from existing legislation.

Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. THOMPSON. No, the only reason for adopting only part of some clauses is that the other portion has been embodied in other sections.

Committee rose and reported.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 5) to amend the Act respecting Public Officers.—(Mr. McLelan.)

SALARIES OF PENITENTIARY OFFICERS.

House resolved itself into Committee to take into consideration certain resolutions (p. 223) respecting salaries to be paid to officers of penitentiaries.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. THOMPSON. In order that the committee may understand the matter I would refer them to chapter 132 of the Revised Statutes, which is the Penitentiaries Act, and especially to page 2222 of the second volume, in which the committee will see a schedule prescribing the salaries of the different officers of the penitentiaries. As I explained to the House when I moved the resolutions, the schedule to the Penitentiaries Act contains, as respects every officer in the penitentiaries, a minimum and a maximum sum between which the salary is to be fixed by the Governor in Council. In practice it has been found necessary and fair to make a distinction between all the penitentiaries according to prison population, Kingston, of course, being very much the largest, St. Vincent de Paul coming next, Dorchester next, then British Columbia, and Manitoba. The salaries of all these officers are graded, from the warden down, according to prison population, but the schedule to the Penitentiary Act makes no distinction as to each prison. What I propose to establish by the first resolution is a scale of salaries for each of these penitentiaries, and a provision that the officers, according as they are newly appointed, shall begin at a fixed minimum, and progress from year to year until they attain a fixed maximum. I think that will be more satisfactory and more economical than allowing this matter to be fixed from time to time as the offices become vacant. When a vacancy occurs, especially in some of the chief offices, it is somewhat individious to appoint the new officer, by the mere act of the appointing power, at a smaller salary than his predecessor received. But that would be comparatively unobjectionable if the officer knew that according to law he would progress from year to year. He is to begin always at a minimum salary. The hon. gentlemen will see by reference to the Kingston penitentiary, it is proposed that the warden shall begin at $2,600, and he is to progress by $50 annually, until he reaches the maximum of $3,000; the deputy warden beginning at $1,200, and going to $1,500; the chaplains beginning at $1,000, and progressing to $1,200; the surgeons beginning at $1,400 and going to $1,800. Then at St. Vincent de Paul the warden begins at $2,400 and goes to $2,800; the deputy from $1,200 to $1,500; the chaplains from $1,000 to $1,200. I may say that it was the original suggestion that the latter should begin at $800, but I think there are practical objections in the way of commencing at a smaller minimum than $1,000. That arises to some extent from the fact that the prison population is large, the two chaplains as a matter of course, receiving equal salaries, and the difference between $800 and $1,200 would, perhaps, be severe. I therefore propose that the minimum should be $1,000 and the maximum $1,200. The surgeon begins at $1,000 and goes to $1,400. In the Dorchester penitentiary the warden begins at $2,000 and goes by $50 a year increase to $2,400; the deputy goes from $1,100 to $1,400, and where the deputy warden's and chief keeper's offices are combined, he begins at $1,200 and goes to $1,500; the chaplains begin at $500 and go to $600.

Mr. LANDRY. Why is there so much difference between the salaries of the chaplains at Dorchester and the salaries in other penitentiaries?

Mr. THOMPSON. In all cases the difference of salaries is in consequence of the difference in the prison population. Speaking from memory, giving the figures roughly, the population in Kingston is about 600, at Dorchester only about 200. In Kingston the chaplains require to devote their whole time to the prisoners; that is not necessarily the case in Dorchester.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to ask the hon. Minister as to the chaplain's work. I see that in St. Vincent de Paul and Kingston, the salary ranges from $1,000 to $1,200; in the Manitoba and British Columbia penitentiaries the salary is half this sum. Now, what is the duty of a chaplain? Is it simply preaching sermons on Sunday and having prayers, or does he attend generally to the religious and moral interests of all the inmates, and how much of his time is devoted to this work?—because a chaplain might be quite as hard worked, and quite as diligently employed in one institution as another, although there might be a smaller population.

Mr. THOMPSON. There might be a great difference in the zeal of the chaplains. But the duties of the chaplain are not merely to officiate on Sundays, but to attend to all the spiritual wants of the prisoners. In some of the large penitentiaries the work of the chaplains is laborious. For example, the work of one of the chaplains at St. Vincent de Paul, the Catholic chaplain, and I mention him because he has far the larger proportion of prisoners under his care, is such as to occupy his whole time, and a very laborious office it is.

Mr. BLAKE. I observe there is but one engineer provided for Kingston, one for St. Vincent de Paul, but an engineer and an assistant engineer for Dorchester. Why is this?

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will understand that it is not necessary that this staff be appointed. We are now fixing the salaries of persons who may be appointed from time to time.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand the hon. gentleman does not propose to ask the committee to prescribe salaries for officers at penitentiaries whom he does not intend to appoint.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is the possibility of their being appointed.

Mr. BLAKE. What is that possibility to the smaller institution at Dorchester which requires us to provide for filling the office of assistant engineer when at the very much larger institutions of Kingston and St. Vincent de Paul, there is no such possibility as the hon. gentleman is proposing to meet.

Mr. THOMPSON. The reason why there is no such office at Kingston is because there are other persons connected with the Public Works Department who are capable of doing the work.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give us an indication as to what will be the general result of this new scale of salaries, whether it will increase, diminish or leave at the present sum this public charge.

Mr. THOMPSON. The result will be a reduction when the system gets fairly into operation. At the present time the warden of Kingston receives $2,600 a year, and in addition he has perquisites of at least a value of $400. He is, of course, entitled to his house, and that is not reckoned; but he has been entitled for a number of years past to fuel, light, keep of horse and cow, and convict labor to work on the grounds he has for domestic purposes. Under the operation of this resolution he will begin at $2,600, without any perquisite except his house. So, practically, there will be a reduction of $400 a year when a new appointment is made although he will receive an increase of $50 a year. The late warden of St. Vincent de Paul received a salary of $2,600 a year, and perquisites amounting to $400 more. On his retirement some three or four months ago, the present incumbent was appointed at a salary of $2,400 without any perquisite. So there is a saving for the present year of $600. The warden at Dorchester will receive under these resolutions $2,000. The late incumbent had $2,400 and perquisites amounting to $400 more. In all these salaries we have placed the minimum at considerably less than the officers now receive in order that they may begin with the understanding that they are to progress in salary. I am not prepared to give in very great detail what my estimate of the saving is, but I have had such a calculation made, and my officers inform me that it will result substantially in a saving of $5,000 or $6,000 a year, and that will be more especially by the abolition of perquisites.

Mr. BLAKE. Then so far as regards the salaries they will remain about the same.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I understand the Minister of Justice by these resolutions is desirous of seeking to equalise the salaries paid to the officials of the penitentiaries, and he grades them according to the size of the penitentiary, the responsibility attached to the office and the danger, because we know that the officials engaged in the penitentiary not only occupy responsible positions but at different times incur great danger, and they are entitled to the consideration of the House in that respect when it is fixing their salaries. But I notice there is a strange difference between the salaries of some of the guards and keepers, when you compare the penitentiaries of greater importance with those of minor importance. For instance, the guards at Kingston receive from $400 to $500; the guards at Manitoba from $500 to $600. The guards at the Manitoba, British Columbia and Dorchester penitentiaries have, moreover, free residence, whereas the guards at Kingston have greater responsibility and incur greater danger, and yet have no residence. A short time ago the guards at Kingston sent in a petition referring to this matter and asking that their case should be considered. I do not see that these resolutions make that matter any better, but they rather keep up the inequality of giving these officers at the smaller penitentiaries larger salaries and more perquisites. That is not in accordance with the object of the resolution stated by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. THOMPSON. At Kingston penitentiary the inferior officers are divided into two classes, guards and keepers. In Manitoba the guards are really keepers as well; and as regards perquisites, the hon. gentleman will bear in mind that they are proposed no longer to be continued as to those officers coming under the operation of the Act. As regards residence it is true that in Manitoba residences have been provided. That is principally owing to the fact of the distance of the penitentiary from the city of Winnipeg and the necessity of providing residences for the guards at Stony Mountain, where it would be almost impossible to get residences if they were not provided in this way. I may say it is the intention of my colleague the Minister of Public Works to ask Parliament for an appropriation which will enable us to put up residences for the keepers and guards at Kingston, because we find that the efficiency of the institution is very much enhanced by the officers having residences on the penitentiary property and thus being at all times accessible for any services which may be required of them.

Mr. BLAKE. As I understand, the reason why there was the difference in those salaries, which has been alluded to by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick), was largely the cost of living in these remote parts, owing to various causes which may come under discussion at an early day. I see the messengers in Manitoba penitentiary get from $500 to $600; British Columbia, the same; Kingston, $400 to $500; St. Vincent de Paul, $400 to $500. I see the teamsters at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary get $300 to $400; Kingston, $300 to $400; British Columbia, $500 to $600, so that my hon. friend must understand that they require more money to live in those distant places.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That was in the olden times. It is all done away with, now that the country is opening up.

Mr. THOMPSON. The only reason for the lower salaries being paid at the latter place is the one mentioned by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick), that is, they have residences, but it is not proposed to give residences to the messenger in Manitoba.

On resolution 2,

Mr. BLAKE. Is this based on regulations which the hon. gentleman has found applied in any analogous institution?

Mr. THOMPSON. This is substantially the present regulation which allows a month's salary for every year of service as a retiring gratuity to those officers not entitled to superannuation. It has been thought fair to make a distinction between those officers who have been long in the service and those who have been a short time in the service.

On resolution 5,

Mr. BLAKE. The effect of the last clause of this resolution appears to be to provide for a supply of uniforms at the public expense?

Mr. THOMPSON. They are so supplied now. All the officers have uniforms excepting the chaplains, so there is no change as to that.

Mr. BLAKE. Has it been a perquisite of any person that there should be any personal services rendered by the convicts, apart from keeping the grounds?

Mr. THOMPSON. There has occasionally been the employment of convict labor for domestic purposes, for some of the principal officers. It has also been found that lands which are not connected with the domicile have been tilled by the convicts. Practices like that have grown up in various places without any distinct sanction that I know of.

Mr. BLAKE. What occurred to me was that the words used, which are obviously intended to make it very clear that, with the exceptions specified, there should be no convict labor employed by any of the officers, might be construed into meaning that convict labor might be employed for other private purposes.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will add the words, in the fifth resolution, "or in any other manner for any officer."

Mr. LANDRY. I would suggest that there ought to be some authority allowed for convict labor to be employed. For instance, when the guards have houses, it is often desirable to employ some of the convicts to keep them in repair. I do not think it should be done at the will or option of the guard himself. But if it were provided that it should be done at the order of the warden or some other responsible officer, it appears to me that it would not be out of place.

Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course you have always to guard against abuses which might grow up. If it be the intention that the public, besides providing residences for the officers, should keep them in repair, it is well that it should be done by convict labor. But a provision of that kind, I am afraid, would result in the neglect of residences by those occupying them.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think the words I have added will prevent the convicts being employed in that way. They would not be working for the officers, but for the Department of Public Works.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the Act to be based on these resolutions will be an Act amending the Penitentiary Act.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. There is a provision in the last resolution which I think requires some explanation. It is that the Governor in Council may make regulations respecting the sale to officers of articles manufactured in the penitentiary shops or grown upon the penitentiary property.

Mr. THOMPSON. Of course the hon. gentleman is aware that there are various workshops in all the penitentiaries, in which the convicts are taught trades, such as tailor's shops, shoemaker's shops, &c., in which articles are made for prison use. The convicts are provided with clothing by the tailor's shops, and with boots and shoes by the shoemaker's shops; and in respect of any articles of that kind which may enter into domestic use, instead of having no regulation on the subject, the result of which might be that wardens or superior officers might, by the exercise of their mere authority, order articles produced in those trade rooms to be transferred to their own houses, it is thought better to have a definite regulation. It is not provided that they shall not have the right to obtain any goods produced in these workshops. If a regulation is made, it will be that, under the supervision of an accountant, proper charges shall be made against the officers receiving those articles. It is virtually in the same direction as the other provisions, to prevent abuses creeping in.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it liable to considerable abuse that the officers in the penitentiaries should have the practical power of utilising the labor of the convicts, and deciding the price at which they should supply these articles. Of course, if it only concerns boots and shoes and articles of clothing, the amount would be very little, but still there is always that difficulty. Then, with reference to articles grown on the penitentiary grounds, I do not know that the accountant would exercise a very diligent supervision as to the prices his superior officers, or those with equal authority to himself, should pay for them. I should think it would be better for those persons to buy what they want outside, instead of having such an anomalous regulation as would exist if they made their purchases within the walls of the penitentiary; besides which there would be less interference with free labor if they bought their goods at the general store, the production of the mechanic, of whom the hon. gentleman has constituted himself the guardian.

Mr. THOMPSON. That may be very true, but we have not yet engaged in brickmaking at any rate. The accountants in the various penitentiaries keep an account of the hay, oats, potatoes and other produce of the penitentiary farm, and the institution is credited with the produce at the regular market prices. The accounts are laid before Parliament in the report on penitentiaries, and whenever an officer receives any of the produce, the accountant charges him with it.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not say that the accountant did not keep an account. What I said was that he was not exactly the right person to decide what should be charged his superior or co-ordinate officers for the goods.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is quite true, and it would be a good argument if there were no supervision over the accountant; but there is the accountant in the Department to whom the accounts of each penitentiary are submitted. It is his duty to see that precisely the same price is charged for the produce of the farm that the institution has been credited with.

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 9:25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 5th May, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

VACANCY.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received a notification of a vacancy occurring in the electoral district of Restigouche by the decease of Mr. Robert Moffat, and that he had issued his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER also informed the House that the Clerk of the House had received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery a certificate of the election and return of Mr. Adam Hudspeth to represent the electoral district of the south riding of the county of Victoria, in the Province of Ontario.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

The following member, having previously taken the oath according to law and subscribed the roll containing the same, took his seat in the House:

Adam Hudspeth, Esquire, introduced by Sir John A. Macdonald and the Hon. Mr. White.

CROWN SECURITIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. McCARTHY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 51) to amend an Act respecting defective letters patent and the discharge of securities to the Crown. He said: This Bill is for the purpose of discharging the lien which the Government have on the lands of the makers of bonds under an old law which is practically now extinct. Before 1866 the mere entering into a Crown bond of itself became a charge or lien upon the obligors in regard to land wherever situated. Since 1866 the bond must be registered like any other security on the lands. I am told by the Referee of Titles that it costs a great deal when parties desire to have a title made, to discover whether this bond has been discharged to the Crown or not, and the object is to relieve the lands of all claim or lien by the Crown where it has not been registered.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 52) to empower the employés of incorporated companies to establish pension fund societies.—(Mr. Hall.)

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE ACT.

Mr. TISDALE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 53) to amend the Electoral Franchise Act. He said: The object of the Bill is to amend sub-sections 4 and 5 of section 3, and is to enable occupants or tenants to vote if they are entitled to vote at the time of the preparation of the list. As the law now stands, they have to be residents a year in the electoral division, before their names can be put upon the roll.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 54) to amend the Chinese Immigration Act. He said: This Bill contains all the provisions of the Bill passed by this House last Session, but which did not pass through the Upper House. First, the Chinese wife of a white man shall not be subject to the duties imposed upon Chinese, she being considered as of the nationality of her husband. The second provision is to allow Chinese to pass through the territory of Canada, as it were, in bond. The third provision is to allow Chinese to take leave of absence for three months, and to return to Canada without paying a duty, after it is ascertained that there has been no fraud in the return of such immigrant. The fourth provision is to make one fourth of the net proceeds of the entry dues paid by Chinese immigrants payable to the Province of British Columbia.

Mr. BLAKE. The Bill does not contain any provision restricting the immigration of Chinese in a more stringent form?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FLOODS IN THE RIVER ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. HESSON, in the absence of Mr. CURRAN, asked, Has the report of the engineers charged with investigating the River St. Lawrence flood been received, and is it the intention of the Government to lay it before the House at an early day? If so, when?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was only one report received from the engineers, and that was made public at the time. We expect another report in a very few days, and then I will bring it down.

AMENDMENT TO THE CUSTOMS LAWS.

Mr. HOLTON asked, Is it the intention of the Government to propose any amendments to the Customs laws during the present Session of Parliament?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

POSTMASTER AT PICKERING.

Mr. EDGAR asked, Who is the present postmaster at Pickering, in the county of Ontario, and when was he appointed to that office; also, was he deputy postmaster previously to December, 1883?

Mr. McLELAN. William Logan is the postmaster at Pickering, and was appointed on the 22nd November, 1884.

The Department has no deputy at that office. I believe Mr. Logan was in the employment of the postmaster previous to that date.

PACIFIC MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. EDGAR asked, Has the Government expressed its willingness to contribute a subsidy in aid of the Pacific mail service, as announced by Lord Onslow in the House of Lords, on the 29th April? If so, to what amount? Is the proposed service to be fortnightly, tri-weekly, or monthly? What are the proposed terminal ports for the line?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the Imperial Government will grant a subsidy for a Pacific line of steamers of £60,000 sterling, the Canadian Government has expressed its willingness to ask the Canadian Parliament to contribute £15,000 annually to that amount. That matter is now under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government. It is hoped that with that sum we will get a good tri-weekly service.

Mr. EDGAR. Between what ports?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Between Vancouver and Hong Kong.

CUSTOMS OFFICER AT ST. GERMAIN DE RIMOUSKI

Mr. Fiset asked, What is the name (Christian and surname) of the officer of Customs appointed for the port of St. Germain de Rimouski, in the place of L. P. Gauvreau, deceased?

Mr. BOWELL. The name of the officer is Joseph Adhémar Martin.

WEST INDIA COMMISSION.

Mr. JONES. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Minister of Finance when the report of the gentlemen who were sent to the West Indies, to open up trade with that country, will be laid on the Table.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I expect to be able to lay that on the Table to-morrow.

PUBLIC MORALS.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend the Act respecting public morals and public convenience.—(Mr. Charlton).

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. CHARLTON. The Bill as passed by this House last Session, provided that any one unlawfully having connection with idiot or imbecile women or girls, is guilty of misdemeanor and liable to two years' imprisonment. Since then, representations have been made showing that insane women should also have been placed under the provisions of this Bill. I have had communications from the superintendents of various asylums in Ontario, on this point, and a Bill was introduced and became law which made the provision which this amendment proposes to cover—that the seduction of an insane woman shall be a misdemeanor as well as the seduction of an idiot or imbecile woman. It is merely adding "insane" after the words "idiot or imbecile."

On section 2,

Mr. CHARLTON. The Bill of last Session, as it passed this House, provided that the seduction of a female under Mr. McLELAN.

promise of marriage, the female being under the age of twenty-one, by a male over the age of eighteen, shall be a misdemeanor. The Bill was amended in the Senate, and as it passed that body it provided that the seduction of a female under the age of eighteen years, by a male over twenty-one, shall be a misdemeanor. I propose to restore the provision as it passed this House, viz.:

"Everyone above the age of eighteen years who, under promise of marriage, seduces and has illicit connection with any unmarried female of previously chaste character and under twenty-one years of age, is guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to two years' imprisonment."

Mr. THOMPSON. I presume the hon. gentleman will have no objection to amend the provision so as to read, "not to exceed two years' imprisonment," so as to leave some discretion with the court.

Mr. CHARLTON. That was the phraseology of the original Bill, and I am quite willing to accept the amendment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would suggest that the age of the man should be placed at twenty-one and not at eighteen years. There is, in my opinion, quite as much risk of females of twenty-one seducing lads of eighteen or nineteen as there is the other way. Although I most heartily approve of the general principle of this measure, and I think the hon. gentleman has done great service to the community, I would suggest that the age limit be altered and the ages of the parties be made equal, at all events.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am perfectly willing to submit to the view of the committee with respect to changing the age to twenty-one. I do not know but that there is some force in what has been said by the hon. gentleman with respect to having the ages equal. Perhaps there might be cases where young men of eighteen or nineteen had not arrived at the age of discretion, but my observations in this country go to prove that young men of eighteen are pretty well informed as to the affairs of life. I should like an expression of opinion by the committee on this point.

Mr. BERGIN. I suggest that the proposal of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) be embodied in the Bill, and that, accordingly, another clause should be provided, by which young ladies of eighteen who seduce young gentlemen should be punished.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think there is no necessity for having this clause.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would point out that the Act at present only applied to females under eighteen years. I am willing that the age of the male shall be made twenty-one before he is liable to imprisonment; but it is important to give females the remedy up to the age of twenty-one years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman had better leave the clause as it is in the Act. A woman between eighteen and twenty-one is equal in age and worldly wisdom to a man of twenty-five years. I think that when girls are above eighteen they should protect themselves, and there is no need of special legislation. If the hon. gentleman presses this clause, the chances are that the whole Bill will be thrown out in the other branch of the Legislature, and we shall lose the advantage of a very great improvement in the first clause.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think it very doubtful whether the other branch of the Legislature would, on account of this second clause, sacrifice the whole Bill. However, I cannot abstain from pressing it owing to any such possible contingency. I would point out that the general sentiment of the country which calls for legislation of this character considers the character of the Bill in this respect, as it now stands on the Statute-book, not a commendable one, and that sentiment calls for the protection of the female of any age under the circumstances of seduction under promise of marriage. I felt it was impossible to secure the passage of a clause protecting females of any age, but I thought it would be a reasonable compromise to adopt the age mentioned in the Bill. I can see very little difference in protecting females under eighteen and twenty-one years, and I act in this matter in obedience to the expressed sentiment which favors legislation of this kind. Although I always feel like paying all due deference to the wishes of the right hon. gentleman, I cannot feel it to be my duty, under the circumstances, to abandon entirely the provision contained in the second clause. As a compromise I have proposed that young men shall not be liable till they are twenty-one, but that females shall have this remedy up to twenty-one years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On the assurance of the hon. gentleman that there is a general sentiment in the country in favor of it—though I must say we have no assurance of that fact—I am willing to amend the clause as indicated, the punishment not exceeding two years' imprisonment.

Mr. CHARLTON. Not exceeding two years' imprisonment?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. Very well; that makes it conform to the other provisions of the Bill with respect to other offences.

Bill reported.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S WARRANTS.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Sir Richard Cartwright for:

Return showing the amounts (in detail) expended under warrants of the Governor General in each of the years from 1873 to 1886, both inclusive.

Mr. WELDON. It seems to me from the arguments which were used by the members of the Government, when this subject was discussed in the House the other day, that they believed that the Administration of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was so worthy of imitation that they desired to imitate it in every respect. In those days we were told that if a change of Government took place all these things would be remedied, while to-day we find that when any complaint is made from this side, of their mode of managing public affairs, they immediately turn round and justify it by referring to something that was done by the previous Administration. The Minister of Justice, in this particular case, endeavored to show that the warrants which were issued in 1877 and 1878 were of a similar character, and issued under similar circumstances, to those which were brought down during the present Session. But, as I said before, I think my hon. friend was rather disingenuous in the manner in which he referred to the special warrants issued from the 1st of July, 1877, to the 9th of February, 1878. He will find, if he refers to those warrants, that they were totally different, and that they were mostly issued in October, 1877, the last one being on the 27th of December, 1877. I find that the statement is a statement of special warrants of His Excellency the Governor General issued in accordance with Act 31 Vic., cap. 5, sec. 35, from 1st July, 1877, to 9th February, 1878, inclusive, and that certified copies of the warrants and of Orders in Council recommending the same, were annexed. I find in that statement the particular reasons given why the warrants were issued. For instance, the first one authorises an expenditure on public buildings at St. John, N.B., $50,000. I find on the 20th of October a warrant, under the hand of the Governor General, on a report of the Privy Council, dated the 19th of October, 1877, in which it is pointed out that in consequence of the great disaster which occurred at St. John, immediate provision had to be made for the repair of certain buildings, and making a commencement to rebuild others. The fire had taken place in June, 1877, and it is stated:

"That there is no parliamentary appropriation from which such expenditure can be made, and that a necessity for the work in question is urgent and immediate, and recommending that a special warrant do issue conformably with the provisions of the 35th section of the Act 31 Vic., chap. 5, for the said amount."

Then we find that the next one was for the following services, being balances of previous appropriations which had lapsed: Ottawa buildings, the tower; western block extension; Intercolonial Railway freight cars, and expenses before the Supreme Court. I find that the report states:

"On a memorandum dated 15th October, 1877, from the hon. the Minister of Finance, stating that having had under consideration the reports of the Ministers of Public Works, Militia and Agriculture, respecting certain balances of appropriations of 1876-77 which have lapsed, and it appearing that the continued expenditure for those services, which are not otherwise provided for, is necessary, he concurs in the recommendation that those appropriations be provided for by Governor General's warrant."

That report is dated on the 15th of October, and the warrant issued on the 20th of October. Then the next one is for certain public buildings and other services, being balances of previous appropriations which had lapsed. They are as follows:—British Columbia penitentiary; public buildings, North-West; Lieutenant Governor's residence, Battleford; removal of Beacon rock, British Columbia; Guelph custom house; Shippegan harbor; grass-hopper relief; criminal statistics; Australian exhibition; Cow Bay, C.B.; ammunition and military stores. Then on the 12th of November, 1877, a warrant for what is called the Mennonite loan issued, on a report dated the 9th November, 1887. The report states:

"On a report, dated 30th October, 1887, from the hon. the Minister of Finance, stating that on a memorandum from the hon. the Minister of Agriculture, representing that there was a pressing necessity for an advance to the Mennonites, for which there was no available appropriation, an Order in Council was passed, the 26th of October, advising that $7,600, the balance unexpended of the appropriation for the Mennonite loan, in the years 1875-76, be paid into the hands of the Receiver General for that purpose; that the balance had been deposited by the Receiver General, 14th September, and that there is no authority for issuing a warrant for the amount."

Then the last one is a warrant issued on the 27th of December, 1877, on a report of a Committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency in Council on the 24th December, 1877:

"On a memorandum dated 17th December, 1877, from the hon. the Minister of Public Works, representing that the Superintendent for the construction of the Government buildings and other works at Battleford and Fort Pelly, North-West Territories, reports under date 20th September last, that owing to several unexpected causes the original estimated cost of these works has been exceeded by about $30,000, and recommending that in accordance with the provisions of Act 31 Vic., chap. 5, sub-sec. 2 of section 35, a special warrant for $30,000 be issued to meet the extra liabilities necessarily incurred for the works in question, and that the amount be placed in the Supplementary Estimates to be laid before Parliament at its next Session."

There we have not only a statement in regard to the special warrants and Orders in Council, but setting forth the reasons why these expenditures were made.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is in them all.

Mr. WELDON. Not in what is brought down here.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, but every one of these warrants is founded on an Order in Council in precisely the same terms as the hon. gentleman has read to the House.

Mr. WELDON. I know that, and they can only be issued on an Order in Council, but the report brought down by the Minister of Finance should include a statement of the reasons for which the warrants were issued, showing the urgent and immediate necessity for them; and it appears that this is required by the Act, because it says:

"The Auditor General shall in all such cases prepare a statement of all such legal opinions, reports of Council, special warrants and cheques issued without his certificate, and of all expenditure incurred in consequence thereof, which he shall deliver to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, to be by him presented to Parliament not later than the third day of the Session thereof then next ensuing."

The object in having this return is not only that we should guard the public expenditure, but that the Government should be required to show to Parliament the urgent and immediate requirements which made it necessary to incur such unauthorised expenditure.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman does not touch the point I raised, that is, that you cannot get the Governor General's warrant at all without stating precisely in the same terms that he has read to the House the urgent necessity that exists. That is all that is contained in what he read; there is no information further; because the law requires that the Governor General's warrant shall only be obtained on the statement that the necessity of the expenditure is urgent and unforeseen, and that there is no parliamentary provision for it. So that the hon. gentleman's argument does not affect the case at all.

Mr. WELDON. I do not think we quite understand each other in this matter. There is no doubt that the law is as pointed out by the hon. Minister of Finance, that urgency is a condition precedent to the issue of the Order in Council. The Act provides that the Auditor General shall prepare a statement of all such reports of Council, special warrants and all expenditure incurred in consequence thereof, which he shall deliver to the Minister of Finance, to be by him presented to Parliament, not later than the third day of the Session thereof then next ensuing.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That has been done in all these cases.

Mr. WELDON. That has been done, but what I say is that it should appear in the statement brought down to this House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then, the hon. gentleman, I suppose, will be very much surprised when I tell him that although the law requires that this statement should be laid on the Table within so many days of the Session, in the years 1874, 1875 and 1876, the Government did not lay any statement on the Table of the House at all, although they had expended money in the same way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The law was passed in 1878.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, the law was passed before. It was exactly the same in 1874 that it is to-day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What warrants were taken in those years?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A number of warrants. The hon. gentleman will find in the Supplementary Estimates a large number of items, with a foot note saying that $222,000 of the above were issued on Governor General's warrants.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. 1877, I think.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That was brought down in the proper time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, not laid on the Table.

Mr. WELDON. The Audit Act was not passed until 1878.

Mr. WELDON.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The law requiring these Governor General's warrants to be laid on the Table of the House was passed in 1867.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As this is getting to be a conversational discussion, I may remind the hon. gentleman that the warrants for that $222,000 he refers to were brought down and laid on the Table on the 9th of February.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not in the previous years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You have not produced the statement of the previous years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Because they are not in the archives and cannot be produced. Therefore it is impossible to comply with the demand of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WELDON. What I say is that the authority was not obtained previous to 1878, and the Auditor General's office was not created until that year. But when the hon. Minister of Finance refers to the statements brought down in those years as his justification, I say the circumstances are very different. Those statements showed precisely the days on which the Orders in Council and the warrants were issued, and it is the duty of the Government to bring down the warrants and Orders in Council as well as the accounts. What have we to show the urgency of these matters? We can form no opinion with reference to many of these transactions, and we can hardly suppose a case in which there was urgency. On the 14th of April, by Order in Council passed on the 12th of April, $4,000 is paid to the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company for their costs in the suit of the Queen against that company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is only half the amount voted by Parliament for the purpose.

Mr. WELDON. If it is a lapsed vote, it should be so pointed out; and that, again, is a strong argument why we should have the warrants, the Orders in Council or the report of the Committee of Privy Council, to show the House whether it is a lapsed vote or not. In some cases the amounts are stated to be lapsed votes, and I am not disposed to quarrel very much with them; but where it does not appear that the expenditure is a lapsed vote, but appears to be something new, the objection is that on the eve of the sitting of Parliament the Government passed this Order in Council with regard to a matter for which ever, as a lawyer, I cannot see any urgent and immediate necessity. Then we find that nearly $85,000 was expended in October and December and March for rolling stock on the Intercolonial Railway. We voted an appropriation for that purpose for the year; and has there been during the past year such destruction of the rolling stock as to require the expenditure of that amount of money for additional rolling stock?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would my hon. friend allow me to call his attention to the fact that in the appropriation of the Governor General's warrant, which he has in his hand, of 1878, there is $76,726 for Intercolonial freight cars.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A lapsed balance.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not so stated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, it is so stated.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I believe it is, but the service is precisely the same as that taken exception to.

Mr. WELDON. The Order in Council reads:

"On a memorandum dated 15th October, 1877, from the hon. the Minister of Finance, stating that having had under consideration the reports of the Ministers of Public Works, Militia, and Agriculture, respecting certain balances of appropriations of 1876-77 which have lapsed, and it appearing that the continued expenditure for those services, which are not otherwise provided for, is necessary."

Again, we find the deep-water terminus at Halifax. I do not know whether the hon. member for Halifax saw such damage created to that, that it required this expenditure, but I can speak with regard to the deep-water wharf at St. John, and I think my hon. colleagues will join me in saying that we could not understand what immediate necessity there was that required work to be done to the extent of $5,000 on that during February, 1887, except that it happened just about the time of the general elections. We also find on the Intercolonial alone nearly $600,000 paid out of the Treasury by special warrants. We should have full explanations with regard to these matters, to show whether the Act authorising the warrants to be issued, which is clear and specific in its terms, has been complied with. There is no point in which we, as representatives of the people, should be more jealously guarded in our conduct than in the appropriation of money unauthorised by the representatives of the people, and when we find an unauthorised expenditure of between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 we ought not only to have the fullest explanation, but, as was done in 1878, we ought to have the warrants and the Order in Council showing the necessity of this expenditure and enabling us to judge whether it was necessary expenditure under the Act or not.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has brought up a new point to be added to the many views adduced yesterday, and that is, that these expenditures were unwarrantable, because the Orders in Council upon which they were based do not appear with the return laid on the Table. He says the Orders in Council are necessary to show why these warrants were issued, and that the Orders in Council having been brought down in one case whilst they were not brought down in the other cases, is proof of the necessity of their being brought down in all cases. There is not much in that argument. The Orders in Council are simply the orders upon which are based the warrants, a statement of which is laid before the House, for the past year, and if they were brought down they would be couched in the same language as those upon which the statements brought down of warrants issued in previous years were based. My hon. friend stated, and I think some other hon. gentlemen bore him out in his statement, that there was no law which made it necessary, under the late Administration, to bring down a statement of warrants which strictly defined the purposes for which warrants could be issued. The law was passed afterwards. If he will look at 31 Victoria, chapter 5, Statutes of 1867, he will find there was an Act then, and that it was just as strong and explicit as the Act from which he read; he will find that the present Act from which he read is in this a transcript of the other. The second clause of section 35 says:

"If when Parliament is not in Session, any accident happens to any public work or building which requires an immediate outlay for the repair thereof, or any other occasion arise when any expenditure not foreseen or provided for by Parliament is urgently and immediately required for the public good, then, upon the report of the Minister of Finance that there is no parliamentary provision, and of the Minister having charge of the particular service in question, that the necessity is urgent, the Governor in Council may order a special warrant to be prepared, to be signed by the Governor himself, &c.

The words are the very same as those in the clause in the later Act. More than that, the Act requires that not later than three days after Parliament sits, a return of the warrants shall be presented to the House. It would not make much difference whether there was an Act or not, provided you took your stand, as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) did yesterday, on the principle that it was one of the peculiar functions of the House of Commons to regulate and to keep a strong supervision over the expenditure of public money, and that it was an abuse of power to expend money without parliamentary appropriation. Surely that hon. gentleman will not argue that it was necessary to have an Act in order to keep him right; surely he will not argue that if there is a constitutional function invested in this House, and that function would be violated, the excuse may be set up that there is not an Act of Parliament forbidding its violation? Unfortunately, however, for my hon. friend, there was an Act of Parliament whose provisions were just as stringent as those of the present day, and that Act having been violated by my hon. friends opposite, they are responsible for the wrong. However, the hon. gentleman seems to think that the present wrong cannot be condoned by the fact that a previous wrong had been done. That is true, but the whole force of the indictment yesterday made specially by the leader of the Opposition, was, that it was wrong, that it was almost criminal to use money under Governor General's warrants unless an accident happened, unless some great and pressing necessity existed, and if any money was expended under a Governor General's warrant without this condition, the expenditure was illegal and almost criminal. My hon. friends opposite cannot get away from that position; they cannot escape the castigation of their own leader. If it is wrong and almost a crime in this instance to use money under the Governor General's warrant, when there was no accident, no great unforeseen pressing necessity, it was equally wrong then. If the castigation applies to any one, it applies to the hon. member for Bothwell and his colleagues in the Mackenzie Government who did the wrong complained of.

Mr. MILLS. You have not shown anything wrong.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend says I have not shown anything wrong. Hon. gentlemen opposite say they have shown wrong in connection with the statement of warrants now brought down, but in 1874-75 it has been said no statements of warrants issued were brought down as required by the law. Not having been brought down, that omission was a direct violation of the law and of the Act of 1867, and it was committed by hon. gentlemen opposite. I find that in 1876 $25,000 were expended under the authority of the Governor General's warrant, and I do not find that any accident occurred or that there was any great or pressing necessity to justify this unauthorised expenditure. The $25,000 were voted for the exhibition at Sydney, N.S.W., and if we are to go by the letter of the Act, as the leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Bothwell say we ought, why not go by it in the one case as in the other? There was no pressing necessity or urgency for this expenditure of $25,000 by special warrant, yet the warrants issued. The hon. the leader of the Opposition yesterday made some very severe remarks about hon. gentlemen on this side not estimating sufficiently the sums required, or being so wide of the mark that afterwards they had to make up the deficiency by special warrants, and he stigmatised that as a very improper thing. What do we find in this report of the warrants issued in 1877? We find them confessing, in a report of the Privy Council, that for some unexplained or exceptional causes, the original estimate of the cost of works in the North-West, at Battleford and Fort Perry, had been exceeded by $30,000, and they had to cover up that error in estimation which my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, stigmatised as so improper, by obtaining a Governor General's warrant for $30,000. I find, also, that in 1878 there were Governor General's warrants issued, special warrants to complete the main tower of the Parliament building, no appropriation having been made for that purpose. Why was that appropriation not made? Did not the hon. gentleman know that the main tower needed some amount of money to complete it? But they did not ask for it during the Session, and, after the House adjourned, they obtained a Governor General's warrant. Then there were a number of lapsed balances which were carried over in the same way. Then, in order to relieve the distress among the Indians, they had another warrant issued. That might be found to be a pressing necessity, but the same thing occurs in the warrants for this year, which these hon. gentlemen so vigorously denounce. They may say that the warrant required to relieve the Indians in 1877 or 1878 was not for an amount so large as that which was passed this year, but the principle is the same, whether the amount involved be $10,000 or $20,000 or $100,000. Then there was a warrant issued in 1878 for expenses incurred in connection with the Fishery Commission, and also for annuities to Indians, and supplies and appropriations for agricultural implements. There was no more urgent necessity because of accidents or unforeseen or unavoidable expenditure in those cases than in regard to the various statements which appear in the list of warrants which have now been brought down to the House. The main point is this, and hon. gentlemen opposite cannot get over it: Why, if it is wrong for the Governor General to issue his warrant for the expenditure of money now, it was not equally wrong in 1875, 1876, 1877, or 1878. Before hon. gentlemen can appear to be so virtuous and indignant in regard to what has been done this year, they should look at the corners of their own room and sweep them out before they refer to the cobwebs that may have accumulated in the rooms of others.

Mr. DAVIES. Does the hon. gentleman say of his own knowledge that moneys were paid on Governor General's warrants in 1874 and 1875, for which no returns were brought down, or is it a mere statement which he makes on information from others?

Mr. FOSTER. I have already said that I made this statement on the information of the Finance Minister.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think it is time that this kind of argument was put an end to, and I speak now as an independent member. I object to the course of this Government, and the criticisms upon it, being answered by a statement that a previous Government did something of the same kind. The tu quoque argument is one that will not affect very much the view of the House, and I object to it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have listened to the arguments which have been used in reference to these expenditures, and, I think, if the House is to trust to the Finance Minister to make the Estimates every year of the annual expenditure, this is simply a manner of getting rid of what he professes to do. It is time that a stop was put to this expenditure of money without the consent of Parliament. The other evening the Finance Minister made an apology for his hon. friend behind him, on the ground that he had not closely estimated what was necessary for the coming year, and then it became necessary to make this deficiency up by Governor General's warrants. If we follow this system, any Government may strike off $500,000 or $600,000 from the Estimates, if it is likely to startle the House, and say they will make that up by applying to the Governor General for the issue of his warrant. We ought not to allow this system to go on, and it is no reason, when hon. gentlemen say their predecessors possibly violated the law in this matter, that we should go on and perpetrate the same wrong for years to come. We, as a new House and as new members, coming fresh from the country, should express our views and should let hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as hon. gentlemen on this side, understand that this is to be put a stop to, and that, unless there is an urgent necessity, the deficits at the end of the year should not be made up by Governor General's warrants. The law has been laid down in regard to the terms upon which the Government may expect to get a Governor's warrant, but I would ask if there was any urgent necessity for the payment of some of these amounts. For instance, in connection with the commission which was appointed to settle the rebellion claims, was it necessary to apply for a Governor General's warrant on the 14th April to pay these commissioners? Were they in such distress that they could not wait until Parliament met in order to obtain this amount, or was it absolutely necessary that the Government should apply for a Governor General's warrant to pay them $12,100? Take another instance. There was a Royal commission appointed to investigate the matters connected with railway freights, and so on, as they affected the interest of the public. That commission was appointed last year, and it appears that no appropriation was made to pay the members of that commission; but they appear to have been in such financial embarrassment, in such distress, that it became absolutely necessary for the Government to apply to the Governor General for his warrant to pay them $10,000 a day after this House met. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has pointed out the terms on which the Governor General's warrant could be applied for, and I think the Governor General has been very lenient in accepting the excuses which hon. gentlemen have given for the issue of these warrants, for I think no case of absolute necessity has been shown where the country is going to destruction for the want of the money. Then I would like to know what excuse the Government gave for asking for the Governor General's warrant to pay this $10,000 for the Railway Commissioners. I hold that it is wise on the part of this House to closely criticise this expenditure, and for every man here to express his determination, no matter what Government or what party is in power, to condemn the course which has been followed as a gross fraud and imposition on the people of this country and upon their representatives. I certainly hope that the Finance Minister will be able to lay before us this year such a statement as will put a stop to the abuse of Governor General's warrants. He apologised for his friend behind him and defended the course that had been adopted during the last year. He felt, I suppose, that the ability necessary closely to estimate the necessities of the country, was wanting in the case of the hon. gentleman whose place he has now taken, and I supposed he had a guarantee that, for the future at least, nothing of this kind would occur again, as long as he fills the post of Minister of Finance. During last year, Governor General's warrants to the extent of $1,000,000 have been resorted to to make up for the miscalculation, for the want of that necessary ability to estimate the country's necessity, which has been shown by the ex-Finance Minister. Now, we have for the next year another Finance Minister, who, I hope, is going to estimate more closely, who is evidently going to put his best foot foremost, in order to stop this system. I say it is the duty of every member of this House to express his opinion fully, and we certainly shall in the future closely criticise the grounds upon which the Governor General has been asked to issue warrants.

Mr. FOSTER.

Motion agreed to.

DISCHARGE OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS.

Mr. EDGAR moved second reading of Bill (No. 9) for the discharge of insolvent debtors whose estates have been distributed ratably among their creditors. He said: In the year 1885, a large and important special committee was appointed by the House to consider the whole question of insolvency legislation. That committee, after very full consideration indeed, under the able presidency of Mr. Abbott, reported a comprehensive Bill on the subject of insolvency. Nothing was done with that Bill in the Session of 1885. However, in 1886, I felt so strongly impressed with the importance of, at least, one branch of insolvency legislation, that I introduced a Bill largely taken from the provisions of the Bill that had been reported upon in 1885, to deal with that portion of the insolvency law which affects the discharge of insolvents. That Bill, last Session, was introduced, printed and distributed among the members, and they had an opportunity of which, I dare say, they availed themselves, to some extent, of allowing the different classes of the people who are interested in that subject, to become acquainted with its provisions; and the Bill, the second reading of which I now move, is the same Bill that was introduced and printed last Session, so that there is no possibility of the House or country being taken by surprise at this important Bill being introduced again. All former insolvent laws have dealt with the two great branches of insolvency, of which one is the distribution of the estates of insolvent debtors, and the other is the discharge of debtors when their creditors have obtained all their assets. Canada had a complete system of insolvency from 1864 up to 1880. Under the different Acts of 1864, 1869 and 1875, the objections which were made in this House to the Insolvency or Bankruptcy laws, and which ultimately prevailed, caused their repeal in 1880. The chief of these objections was the cost of the distribution of the assets; and it was pointed out by many hon. members from the Province of Quebec that in that Province they had a very satisfactory system of distribution of the assets of insolvent debtors. But since then, in Ontario, upon the repeal of the Insolvent law in 1879, a Creditors' Relief Act was passed, but that law was not brought into force until the 25th March, 1884. It has since been in force with several amendments, and it has accomplished, I think very fairly, the object that its title expressed, that is, to abolish priority of and amongst execution creditors. That is a very important portion of the Insolvency law, which has been adopted and is in force in the Province of Ontario. I am informed, and have ascertained, that in the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and British Columbia, there is no system of equal distribution by law, except, I believe, where the debtors have been confined in jail; but in every one of the Provinces debtors are at liberty to make assignments for the benefit of all their creditors equally. Now, this Bill provides for the discharge of all honest debtors whose entire estate has been distributed without any undue preferences amongst their creditors, whether that distribution takes place by the force of law in the different Provinces, or whether the debtors have done so voluntarily, by making assignments for the benefit of their creditors. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, grossly unfair and unwise to refuse a discharge to any man who gives up all he has in the world to pay his debts, and who has been unfortunate, but has not been dishonest. To-day, in every Province, the creditors may take all the debtor has. In some Provinces, I am sorry to say, there are still preferences allowed amongst the creditors by preferential assignments, or by priority of execution. But there is no discharge provided for under this Act, and, in fact, no discharge can be obtained under its provisions where any preference has been allowed to exist in the distribution of the debtor's assets. The two great Provinces of the Dominion have legislated against preferences, and surely a discharge ought to be made to cover every honest debtor in those Provinces at least, and it also should be made to cover all cases of voluntary assignments in every Province where the creditor has given up all he has to pay his debts. On this subject, I would ask permission to quote the words of the distinguished Chief Justice Meredith, which are quoted by Mr. Abbott in his book on insolvency. They are as follows:

"So long as the debtor has his estate in his own hands, he need not despair; his friends, to supply his deficiency, may come to his assistance; his creditors may accept a compromise, or he may, by some fortunate speculation, increase his means so as to meet the demands of his creditors; but no situation in life can be more utterly hopeless or more deserving of commiseration than that of an honest debtor, who, after having been divested by law of every vestige of his property, is cast upon the world destitute of all means, and still exposed to the claims of unrelenting creditors."

Now, in order to guard against a dishonest debtor obtaining a discharge unduly, this Act provides that, as a basis for the whole thing, the consent of the creditors is required. Then the insolvent has to make a full and complete statement, under oath, of his affairs. Still further, the insolvent is subject to examination before a judge of the court and is bound to make a full disclosure under oath; and even after that, his discharge is to receive the approbation of the judge of the court. But under the third section of this Bill the consent of the creditors is so arranged as to encourage voluntary assignment before the insolvent has parted with the whole of his estate. It is done in this way: in proportion to the percentage of assets which the estate pays to the creditors, so will the number of consenting creditors be decreased; the more the assets the fewer the number of creditors that have to sign the discharge. That, surely, will be a great public advantage. It will induce the debtor to make a voluntary assignment before his whole estate has become wasted. Now there is no encouragement whatever for a debtor to make an assignment for the benefit of his creditors; on the contrary, the temptation is very strong to hold out to the very last, to continue to make a living out of the remainder of his estate, or to make away with part of the assets and get them out of the hands of his creditors. In Provinces where preferential assignments are allowed, this Act would not apply, and no discharge could possibly be given under it in those cases. Another condition is that the insolvent shall make a full statement under oath showing the nature of his assets, the full amount of his liabilities, and give the causes of his insolvency. Then at the public examination of the insolvent, which is to take place on his application for confirmation of the discharge, he is bound to produce all his books and his wife may be examined, and every possible facility is given to oppose any improper application for a discharge; and then at last, when all this has been done, the judge may either confirm the discharge or refuse it, or sign it conditionally. I know it is sometimes said that if a discharge of any kind is made possible to a debtor it will destroy credit; that a trader who may obtain his discharge by force of law will not be able to secure credit. I venture to think that if the system of long credits in this country is destroyed, it will be all the better for the country, for it is one of the curses of the Dominion, and if by giving an honest trader an opportunity of obtaining his discharge he does not obtain such long credit, it will be an advantage both to himself and to the wholesale merchant. I should like to ask if the present condition of the law is at all satisfactory. It encourages frauds of all kinds, in this way: if the debtor becomes involved, he is hopeless of obtaining relief and becomes desperate. He has lost his freedom in a free land, his honesty is not rewarded by a discharge, and, no matter how honest he may be, he cannot go to any tribunal and say: I wish to get my discharge because I have done everything I could, and acted honestly. The present condition of the law offers a premium to dishonesty. The trader secretes his assets; he sometimes puts his business in his wife's name, and under that thin disguise he goes along for the rest of his life. Or he may be driven from the country altogether, and go to a new country where he can make a fresh start without having around his neck the millstone of debt which he cannot throw off in Canada. We lose a great many of our good but unfortunate trading population in that way. The other day I received a letter, sent to me through the hands of an hon. gentleman opposite, relating to this Bill. I will read part of it to show the House how the Bill strikes some people who are interested in it. The writer says:

"I do pray to the God of Heaven to prosper your efforts. By a life of almost incessant toil I earned and saved $40,000. I put the whole into a woollen mill. The market failed for that particular line, and I had to give all up, and I lost every dollar and honestly relinquished everything; and yet I have no relief. I hope and pray your measure may succeed."

Of course it is true that a debtor to-day may get a release from his debts. But how can he do it? He must get every single creditor in the world to sign or he cannot get a release. What is the result? Among a number of creditors there is always somebody who insists on obtaining one hundred cents on the dollar, whether the estate can pay it or not. That man has to be bought off by the debtor to induce him to sign the deed of composition, and if one man gets one hundred cents on the dollar, others, who are not attempting to blackmail but are acting honestly, obtain a reduced amount, and they are injured. Every business man knows, and every lawyer knows, that cases continually arise where, in order to obtain a deed of composition and discharge, and the assent of the creditors, the debtor goes and secures by undue preference the signatures of certain important creditors to the deed, to start the movement, and the other creditors follow; and thus the preferential creditors, who are paid some special amounts, get something more while the other creditors get less than they should receive. Surely that is a position of affairs that should not continue to prevail. Surely the commercial morality of the community must suffer where that law is the only law relating to the discharge of honest debtors. Now, Sir, in this Bill it is not proposed that the benefit of the discharge should be limited to traders only. I think, as all people have to pay their debts, as all other people as well as traders may have families dependent on them, and all classes as well as traders may honestly become insolvent, that all have equal rights to be relieved, if they are not guilty of fraud. Some of the former Insolvent Acts—the later ones, at any rate—applied only to traders, and no farmer, for instance, could get the benefit of a discharge, no matter how much in debt he was, and no matter how injurious it would be to him to stand all his life with a load of debt on his neck. Sometimes farmers have been ruined by traders, by endorsing for them, or becoming sureties for them, and then we know that summer frosts and wet seasons, disease among cattle, and rust in wheat, and fire, and sickness happen to farmers as well as to other people, and why should not they have a discharge? I propose that they shall, as well as any other class. I would be ashamed to advocate a Bill to confer a boon upon honest men and not include farmers, or confine it strictly to traders, for that would be class legislation. Now, Sir, I really do not see any valid argument against giving honest debtors their discharge. It must be remembered that, if this Bill becomes law this Session, we can repeal it any future Session if we choose. Debtors have been seven years without their discharge, and why not give the honest debtors a jubilee year in 1887. I think I remember having heard the First Minister express himself in favor of a sort of jubilee discharge of honest debtors; that from time to time provision should be made to relieve them, and that they should not be forever without release and discharge by law. Now, I call his attention to the fact that over seven years have elapsed since they obtained a discharge, and I think we might mark the jubilee year of Queen Victoria, in Canada, by passing this Bill, even if we have to repeal it after it has been in operation a year. I would propose that this Bill should either go to the Banking and Commerce Committee, if it is read the second time, or a special committee, whose names I would suggest to the Government. I, therefore, move the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. JONES. I have listened very attentively to the observations of my hon. friend, and he has not over-estimated the importance of this Bill, in bringing it to the notice of the House. I remember that at the time an Insolvent Act was passed in this House, there was even at that day a very divided opinion on the subject. There were many in this House who were of opinion that an Insolvent Act was a necessary measure for a certain time to clear away some of the difficulties which had been accumulating for the previous years, but that it was not a measure that should be a permanent statute of the Dominion. For myself I was of opinion at that time, looking at it from my own experience and from the opinions of gentlemen in my own community, that an insolvent Act of some character was necessary for the protection of the creditors generally. I believe the Bill on that occasion was sent to a committee comprising as large and influential a body of gentlemen as are likely to be selected to-day, or at any future occasion, to take such a measure into consideration. I well remember, Mr. Speaker, the difficulty which was felt by that committee in considering the Act. It was supposed by those who had charge of the Bill and were interested in its success that, when that Act became the law of the land, we had established an Act which was, in fact, as near perfection as could be passed by this House. That Act was put in operation, and I speak now with reference to my own Province, because while I advocated that measure at the time I was opposed by many prominent gentlemen, leading commercial men in my own community. We had the working of that Act most satisfactory—I mean to say as far as the assignees were concerned; but we found in a very short time that the expense and inconvenience and delay under the Act were so tedious and annoying that the creditors lost their interest in the estate, and the estate as a whole paid smaller dividends than it would have paid under other circumstances. We found also that the small estates only were placed in the hands of the official assignees, and that undoubtedly was one of the weak points of the whole Bill, because, whenever an assignment was made of any value it was generally arranged among the creditors that some one man should be appointed assignee to work the estate. Now, so far as my own experience goes, I am bound to say that the working of that Act in my own Province was not satisfactory. My hon. friend beside me (Mr. Mackenzie) says the creditors did not manage their own business. That is perfectly true, and that is what I pointed out—that the delays and intricacies were so great that, after a short time, the creditors lost all interest in the management of the estate, and it was left to the official assignee to drag it along just as long as he thought proper. While expressing that as my own opinion, I am bound to add that the Chamber of Commerce in my own constituency, no longer ago than last year or the year before, passed a very strong memorial in favor of renewing the Insolvent Act. That measure I think was promoted more in the interests of the banks than in the interest of the commercial community generally. Still, it had the sanction of the mercantile community at Halifax, and representation was made to this Chamber at that time in favor of the passage of such an Act. No action was taken at that time, and the Act therefore stands in the position in which my hon. friend proposes to deal with it to-day. Of course, the measure which he introduces to-day is of an entirely different character. It is almost in the nature of a permissive Act. While, of course, its clauses become obligatory upon the bankrupt, the creditors have, to a certain extent, control over it, without all the machinery which was provided by the original Act. I think the question is of such importance that it would be wise to send this measure either to the Banking and Commerce Committee or to a special committee to consider all its provisions. I have not had time to read them over as carefully as I should like to do before expressing a final opinion upon the Bill; but I am willing to agree with my hon. friend to this extent, that if a man is placed in such a position that he is obliged to make an assignment, an honest assignment, and distribute his property among his creditors, I am willing that an Act should be passed in this House to give him a legal discharge. I have seen one or two cases myself in which one or two creditors have refused to go into an assignment since the old Act became ineffective, holding out with the object, in which they sometimes succeed, of getting a larger dividend than those who came forward and frankly accepted the dividend which the debtor thought he could pay. If, under the circumstances, a measure such as is contemplated by this Bill could be reached, I certainly think it would be without objection; but there are so many clauses in the Bill to which I presume some exception will be taken, that I think it can only properly be considered by a committee, where the opinions of gentlemen both outside and inside of this House can be obtained, with the view of making it as perfect as possible, if the principle of the Bill meets with the approval of the House. That is the main question for our consideration to day. I have no hesitation in expressing my own opinion that a measure such as this should pass, and that a man who has honestly distributed his assets should not be kept in the position which my hon. friend has spoken of, but there should be an inducement to a man, when he gets into difficulty, to place his affairs honestly in the hands of his creditors, knowing that the law will give him a discharge if he has acted honestly.

Mr. EDGAR,

Mr. THOMPSON. I understood that the hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill expressed himself last evening as entirely willing, after the second reading of the Bill, that it should go to a special committee, or the Committee on Banking and Commerce, with the fullest opportunity to consider its details. With that understanding I think it would be expedient to let the Bill go to a second reading this afternoon.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think this Bill is really enacting insolvency legislation again. Those who were members of the previous Parliament know that, when it was attempted to repeal the Insolvency Act difficulties were raised. Such an attempt tends to disarrange trade, and if you make it you are sure to find a large crop of men ready to take advantage of it. I trust that I am not insensible to humane feelings. I trust that I am not one of those who are inclined to grind down and keep in abject position those who are unfortunate in business. But I can scarcely agree with all the statements made by the introducer of the bill. The Bill is in effect to compel men who are not willing to take a portion of their debt in full settlement, to do so. That, on the face of it, I think hon. gentlemen will see, is something that can only be justified by very strong reasons. The hon. member has pointed out that it is very hard to keep an honest man, a man who has been unfortunate, in a position of being subject to obligations which he is unable to pay. To that, of course, every one of us would assent. We could all desire that it were possible for every creditor to receive his pay in full, and every honest debtor to have a discharge. But misfortunes happen to men engaged in trade. There are many good men, good business men, who have been unfortunate perhaps because of circumstances they could not control, and who have found themselves unable to pay their liabilities in full. But I differ from the hon. gentleman in this respect—I do not think these men are without hope simply because there is not an insolvent debtors discharge Act on the Statute-book. In the great majority of such cases there is relief for a man in that position without the operation of a Bill of this kind at all. A trader who becomes insolvent through misfortune, on the presentation of the state of his business to his creditors, will, I believe, in almost every case receive the assent of his creditors to a composition and discharge. I have been nearly a quarter of a century in business, and I think in that time I could point to very few commercial houses in Canada who have not been prepared to deal with the honest debtor in the most liberal manner. During that experience I have known a business man, a manufacturer, who has only once refused to sign a discharge, having done it in hundreds of other cases; but in this case he thought he was justified in withholding it, as did all the other creditors, because they thought it was a case of such clear embezzlement and fraud on the face of it that it was in the interest of the general public that the man should be kept out of business. If the hon. gentleman is prepared to show that he knew of any number of cases of men who were unable to become free through the voluntary act of their creditors, then I would be willing to go a great way in helping him forward with his Bill; but in my experience I have been unable to find men of that description. It is true, he has read us a letter of one gentleman who embarked \$40,000 in a woollen mill, and upon whom reverses came and he was bound down and handicapped. I do not know the case at all, but I am sure that unless there are circumstances connected with it which would tend to make the hearts of his creditors close against him, I believe he would have found relief in the voluntary action of his creditors. I, at any rate, speaking of my business experience of wholesale men, manufacturers, traders, and of all those who are the creditors in this country, believe the experience has been, and it has found expression in monetary journals before now, that instead of being blamed for withholding their consent to deeds of composition and discharge, these men have been found fault with as a rule for being too willing to obtain a composition and discharge, and then re-enter trade advantageously against their neighbors who have tried to pay dollar for dollar. The hon. the Minister of Justice seems willing the Bill should go to a special committee. I do not know that I shall assume the responsibility of opposing it, if it be the desire of the House that the Bill should go to a special committee, but it seems to me that the proposition to place an Insolvent Act again upon our Statutes ought not to be lightly considered. I believe the right hon. the First Minister did, at one time, say it would be well at certain periods to pass an Act by which those who for years had been placed in a position of hardship, through the want of an Act, might be relieved, but, if I understood him, his idea was not to place an Act permanently on the Statute-book, but only to place one there periodically in order that relief might be granted. The mover of the Bill suggests that we can put this Bill upon the Statute-book this Session, and next Session repeal it. But we know the difficulties when an Act is once placed on the Statute-book, especially an Act of this nature, in the way of its repeal. We know that its repeal causes disarrangement in trade and commerce, and also that many will take advantage of its existence, knowing that it may be repealed, and ask for a composition, who otherwise would make an effort to meet their debts, and probably carry on their business successfully. The hon. gentleman designs that if a man who is conducting his business, and is conducting it at a loss, should ascertain his position and finds he is actually doing business at a loss, if he finds he is doing what his neighbors are doing, selling goods at cost, and any business man knows that if he sells goods at cost he cannot pay his honest debts—the hon. gentleman designs and this Bill provides if such a man stops at a period when he can pay 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ cents per dollar on his liabilities, the majority of his creditors in value and amount shall compel the large minority of creditors in value and amount to accept this 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ cents, though this minority may say: This gentleman should not have sold his goods at cost, but should have pursued prudent business methods. The Bill provides he may go on after he has found he is short that much, and apply to his creditors when he is only able to pay 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ cents in the dollar, for his discharge, only then he will require to have two-thirds of the number of his creditors representing three-fourths of the value of his liabilities. Then, if he finds he has run behind and is running still further behind, he can pay only ten cents or fifteen cents on the dollar, but the task devolves upon him to get a larger majority in proportion of his creditors representing a larger amount in order to obtain his discharge. The statement made that the present state of things is grossly unjust, unfair and unwise, is a statement of the hon. gentleman that I think requires a little demonstration. Even the un wisdom of it might not be easily demonstrated, but how such terms so grossly unfair and unjust should be applied is rather beyond my comprehension. I do not know that it would be grossly unfair and unjust on the part of the hon. member, if I owed him a dollar, that he should say to me: I want you to pay me. If he should say: I think you ought to pay me that dollar, and you ought to conduct your affairs in such a way that you would be able to pay your debts, would I have the right to reply: It is grossly unfair and unjust that you will not allow me to live and bring up my family in a certain style, and that the Parliament of Canada will not pass a law to compel you to do that. Whether the hon. gentleman's Bill be desirable or not, I do not pronounce against it wholly, but I do say it is not well that we should enact such legislation on the idea that there is any large number of persons in the country who are weighted down by the present condition of affairs, who are in an abject condition, suffering that which is cruel, unjust and unfair. There may be cases of hardship, cases of misfortune in business and sickness in family, but these things find a legitimate remedy in the large, hearty sympathies of our fellow-citizens; and I believe that in the vast majority of cases, that a man, unfortunate in business, and anxious to do his business honestly, as the hon. gentleman points out, is the debtor to whom he wishes to give relief, he has but to present a statement of his affairs to his creditors, showing such to be the case, and a composition will be accepted, and a voluntary discharge given him by his creditors. If the hon. gentleman can show any perceptible percentage of cases of hardship, I would be inclined to listen to them, and hear what he might urge in their behalf. I trust, if the Bill goes to a committee, the importance of the subject will not be lost sight of, for, depend upon it, it is a very important measure we are considering.

Mr. SPROULE. The number of petitions and applications sent to this House for several years past would indicate that the commercial community are in favor of some such Bill. One of the great objections always raised against Bills previously introduced in this House, is avoided in the present one. Other Bills for the relief of insolvent debtors only applied to traders, and hence they met with the opposition of the very large class known as agriculturists, who could not take advantage of the insolvent law, because, while these Bills compelled those indebted to traders, who were frequently farmers, to pay one hundred cents on the dollar, the insolvent trader need only pay whatever percentage on the dollar the estate realised. In this Bill, however, that anomaly has been avoided, and if the other principles of it are as much in harmony with public opinion as this, I think the country will be satisfied to see it become law. This Bill applies to all classes in the community, and appears to be a fair measure, while previous ones applied only to traders, and, being unfair in this respect, did not commend themselves to the better judgment of the people. There was another objection to the Bills which we had before on the Statute-book of this country, and that was, that they were always too roundabout in the matter of settling up an estate. A man was put into insolvency, and the greater part of his estate was eaten up in administering the estate, and the creditors received very little from it. Generally speaking, the experience was that the greater portion of the estate went into the hands of lawyers or the courts, and the creditors received very little when the estate was wound up. Many people were opposed to the law on that ground. If these objections could be obviated in this Bill, I believe the country would be satisfied with its adoption. I believe there is a general desire for some such measure, but, if the same objections are found to exist which existed in regard to other Bills, it will be almost as objectionable as those Bills which heretofore have become law. Seeing, however, that this Bill includes not only traders but non-traders, I would be disposed to support it, and if it is sent to a committee, no doubt that committee can perfect it in such a way as to avoid the mistakes which were contained in other Bills, and then I think the country will be willing to accept it.

Mr. PATTERSON (Brant.)

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. In 1864 the Parliament of Canada passed a Bill for the division of the estates of insolvent debtors and the discharge of those debtors. In 1869 more extended provisions were made, but, it having been found that that Act did not work satisfactorily, a new Act was passed in 1875, which, with few amendments, existed until 1880. In that law, there were two ways of obtaining the discharge of an insolvent debtor. The first was the consent of the majority in number and value of all creditors having claims for an amount of \$100 and upwards. The second was that, when the debtor could not obtain the consent of such a proportion of his creditors, after one year he could apply to the court for his discharge, after giving thirty days' notice, and then the creditors could appear and oppose the application if they chose, but there was no satisfactory provision made as to the proportion of dividend which was to be paid by the insolvent debtor before obtaining his discharge. It is true that there was a provision that, if he paid less than 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ cents on the dollar, the judge might refuse the discharge or suspend it, but it was found in practice that the facilities for obtaining a discharge were so great that the law became objectionable, and in 1880 the feeling was so strong that the law was repealed, and since that time we have been entirely without an Insolvent Act. But the necessity has been felt for such an Act, and boards of trade and other commercial bodies have asked that some such provision should be made. Accordingly, as the Dominion Parliament took no steps in that direction, the Provincial Legislatures have made provisions for the equitable distribution of the assets of insolvent debtors. But they have been unable to provide for the discharge of those debtors. There is no difference of opinion in regard to the discharge of an honest man who has been unfortunate in business and has given up every cent he possessed in this world; but, because the fear that, if once the principle was admitted, the discharge would again become so easy to obtain, that there would be no practical guarantee against its being granted to unworthy parties, this Parliament has not interfered. The Bill which is now before the House attempts, and, I think in a great degree succeeds, to provide as much safeguard as can be provided against such an abuse. The insolvent cannot obtain his discharge unless a very large proportion of his creditors consent to it. If the estate has paid 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent., which is practically the highest dividend that can be expected from any estate when the party has made an assignment, the majority in number, representing one-half of the creditors in value, is required for such discharge. If the dividend is less than 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ and not less than 33 $\frac{1}{3}$, it requires the consent of two-thirds of the creditors in number, representing three-fourths in value; and, if it is less than 33 $\frac{1}{3}$, it requires three-fourths of all the creditors in number, representing four-fifths in value, to agree to the discharge. The author of the Bill has also provided that the relatives of the insolvent shall not be counted in this proportion of the creditors, so that the father, mother, brother or cousin of the first degree cannot be considered in the proportion of the creditors who have signed or refused to sign such a discharge. More than that, should any creditor desiring to have a higher proportion of dividend refuse to sign, and then sell his claim to others, he is barred from taking part in the final decision. That is not all. After the discharge has been signed, it has to be deposited in the court, with a sworn statement by the insolvent of all claims existing against him, with the names and addresses of all his creditors and the nature and extent of such claims, and that statement must be sent to every creditor by the clerk of the court, and in that way the greatest possible publicity is given to the proceedings which are being taken. The statement is also to be published in the Official Gazette and another newspaper. The insolvent is bound to appear before the court to answer all the questions that may be put to him in regard to the administration of his estate. After that has been done, after he has been examined, he is bound to deposit an affidavit stating that he has not obtained the consent of his creditors by payment or promise of payment or advantage, and then he has to give thirty days' notice to every one of his creditors of his intention to apply for his discharge. After the expiration of the thirty days, the insolvent and the judge are bound to be present, and the creditors are entitled to appear and show that the insolvent debtor has not been honest in his statement, or has not acted in accordance with the law. Then, if the insolvent is unable to prove, to the entire satisfaction of the judge, that he has administered his business honestly, the judge may, and in fact is bound, to refuse the discharge. The Bill also provides that all claims of a personal nature, and especially all claims of farmers for the sale of their produce, are excluded from the operation of the discharge, and the insolvent remains bound to them to the last cent. It has been objected that the farmers' interests were not sufficiently protected in insolvency legislation, but that objection is removed by the present Bill. Ample protection is granted to farmers, and if the insolvent, discharged from his commercial debts, goes back to business and makes any money, of course the farmer will be entitled to claim every cent that is due him. Under these circumstances, I think the House will admit that the provisions of the Bill submitted by my hon. friend are in this respect wise, and afford ample protection to the farming class. There are some points, however, in regard to which I would like to see some changes effected in the Bill. I would suggest that notices sent to creditors should be registered for greater safety, and that the discharge should not apply to any creditors who have not been notified according to the Bill, so that the insolvent debtor should be bound to give ample notice to all his creditors if he wishes to be discharged. I think that this Bill will be regarded as a boon by the community, inasmuch as it will enable men who otherwise would remain idle, to go back to their business and become useful members of society.

Mr. BÉCHARD. I must say that I cannot concur in all the opinions expressed by my hon. friend who introduced this Bill. We remember that until a few years ago, we had an insolvency law in this country, but public opinion became so indignant at the consequences of the operation of that law, that in the Session of 1880 the House repealed it. The old members of this House, perhaps, will remember that I took an active part in the repeal of that insolvency law, and for that reason I must be regarded as looking with much suspicion on the Bill which is now before the House. It is true this cannot be considered, perhaps, as an insolvency law, but I regard it as partially, if not entirely, so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would say to my hon. friend that if it is not an insolvency law we have no right to deal with it.

Mr. BÉCHARD. I repeat that it is, to some extent, an insolvency law; that it deals, it seems to me, with what is considered the principal feature of an insolvency law, that is, the relief of what is called in stereotyped phraseology, the honest but unfortunate debtor. This expression is always used, and I have heard it used in this House by those

hon. gentlemen who have pleaded in favor of an insolvency law—the relief of the honest but unfortunate debtor. It appears that but for this reason there would be no occasion at all for the existence of an insolvency law in any country. Well, Sir, like my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Paterson), I am not inaccessible to humane feeling. I am always disposed to sympathise with men who are in distress, but, as he has well said, there are several causes of distress in operation in this world, and it is certain that this Parliament cannot afford relief for all kinds of distress which are suffered by humanity. The purport of the Bill is to come to the relief of what is called the honest but unfortunate debtor. In my view here lies the great objection to such legislation—the great difficulty of discriminating between the honest and the dishonest debtor, of discriminating between the honest and the dishonest man. It is my opinion that out of 100 men who become insolvent, at least 80, if not 90, of them cannot be called honest debtors. Sir, we are living here under the influence of a good and sound principle, an old principle, a very moral principle, against which nobody can say anything, and that is that every man ought to be responsible for his liabilities, and ought to pay his debts. He uses his own judgment when he goes into debt, or at least he ought to do so; and, Sir, I do not think it is right for the representatives of the people in any Parliament in the world to interfere to protect any man from the consequences of failing to pay the debts which he has contracted; it is unfair to men who have dealings with each other. The hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill has said that under the present law, if any man cannot meet his liabilities and cannot get a discharge of his debts, he is obliged to leave the country. If this is the last shift which is left the debtor, I think that in ninety cases out of a hundred it would be better for the country that such men should leave it. We want honest men in the country, men who are willing to pay their debts, and if we could get rid of all those who are unwilling to pay their debts, I, for one, would be glad to have some law to which we could resort in order to place them in such a position that they would have to leave the country, for it is no misfortune to the country to lose men who will not do justice to their creditors. The hon. gentleman says that any debtor has a right to be discharged, provided he has not committed fraud. But how can you ascertain that a man who has become insolvent has not committed fraud? I think that most of us who have been in the habit of doing business, will be able to remember some cases, some transactions, where men who were, perhaps, your best friends, men whom you have trusted, have conducted themselves in such a way as to leave in your mind that they had committed a fraud upon you, that they were dishonest debtors, and that they took all the means they could to pay as little as possible to their creditors and endeavored to reserve or conceal as much as possible of their estate in order to keep it out of the reach of their creditors. The hon. gentleman said that for six or seven years the country had had no means of discharging debtors, that consequently it is time to pass a law by which they would be discharged from their legal liabilities, and if the people were not satisfied with the law we could repeal it next Session. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) has pointed out the difficulties which exist with respect to repealing such a law after it has been in operation for some time; and the action of my hon. friend from South Ontario (Mr. Edgar) would, I think, be found in practice to amount to the enactment of a law for one year, during which all debtors, dishonest as well as honest, would be discharged. We would then repeal the Act, and when another period of seven years had elapsed we would probably be asked to pass another such law so as to grant discharges to all debtors whatsoever. That hon. gentleman also suggested that this Act might fittingly become law during this jubilee year, the celebration of Her Majesty's fifty years' reign. I would be very sorry for my part that such legislation, which would add a great deal of rascality, should be enacted in this jubilee year. The hon. gentleman and the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil) have spoken at length upon the advantages which this Bill would confer upon farmers. Well, I am a farmer, I live among farmers, and I can tell this House that the farmers of the country do not want such legislation. If you go to them and tell them: "We will place on the Statute book a law under which when any one of you becomes insolvent from his own conduct or through extravagance he will be relieved of his liabilities after he has surrendered to his creditors all he possesses, what would they say? They would feel indignant. Such a proposal conflicts too much with their natural honesty and their habit of paying their debts, and their belief that every man who incurs debt ought to make payment. Such an Act would be very unpopular with the agricultural community instead of being favored by them. They do not want such legislation. But if such legislation is to be enacted, they want to be kept out of its operation and not be affected by such a law. The hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill, said that the discharge of the debtor would not affect the claims of the farmers who happen to be creditors, if the claim was the result of the sale of his farm produce. To my mind this is too vague and indefinite. It would take time and some kind of machinery to ascertain whether the claim of the farmer came into existence by the sale of his farm produce or not. I do not feel inclined to move any amendment to prevent this Bill going to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, but I think this House will hesitate a long time before passing such a measure, and that it will require to be studied much more than it has been studied by hon. members. We must examine it more closely, and I really hope it will not pass. I dislike the principle of the Bill; but, if it is to pass, it must be amended so as to make it less objectionable in many of its provisions.

Mr. CASEY. I do not propose to refer to the details of the Bill, for on the second reading we should only consider the general principle. This Bill has steered clear of many of the objectionable points that have existed in previous Insolvent Acts. It is proposed to use the machinery existing in the several Provinces for the distribution of the assets of insolvent estates. This Bill contains no provision for the distribution of the property. The definition of the word "insolvent" in the interpretation clause makes that quite clear. It is:

"The word 'insolvent' shall mean a debtor whose estate has been ratably distributed amongst his creditors, under the provisions of any Provincial Statute providing for such ratably distribution, or who has made a general assignment of all his estate for the benefit of his creditors."

This steers clear of the difficulty involved in the old Insolvent Act. So far as I am aware the principal objection to the old Act arose from the cost of distributing the property of the bankrupt debtor. The hon. member for Iberville (Mr. Béchard) evidently thinks the farmers will object to being included in the Act, and the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) seems to think that some persons should not have the advantage of it. I, on the other hand, think that the best point about this Bill is that it applies to all classes; that it is not a Bill to relieve insolvent traders merely, but that it applies to all classes of the community. All who are agreed that an insolvent is entitled to his discharge, under any circumstances, should vote for the second reading of the Bill. I do not pretend to have studied its details, and I do not know what my opinion will be after I have studied them; but I strongly support the principle that under some circumstances an insolvent should obtain a discharge. I do not see what good can come either to the creditors or the community at large by maintaining claims upon a debtor who has given up all his property for the benefit of his creditors. I do not know what good can come either to the creditors or the community by maintaining claims on a man who is unable to make payment, and I think it would be better for all parties if insolvent debtors were allowed to start afresh, whether they were traders or non-traders. I call the attention of the House to the fact that the discharge is not compulsory, and cannot be obtained unless by the consent of an increasing majority of the creditors according to the amount of the dividend the insolvent is able to pay. Every safeguard appears to be provided for the creditors, and as hon. members I believe, are unanimously of the opinion that an honest but unfortunate debtor should obtain a discharge, they should support the second reading of this Bill, which is intended to effect that object, at the same time surrounding the granting of discharges by sufficient safeguards. If I thought it would be likely to allow rascals to secure their discharge even once in seven years, I would oppose its second reading. I, however, support heartily the second reading, whatever opinion I may have to pronounce upon the details when we go into committee.

Mr. BÉCHARD.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. CURRAN. The Bill which has been introduced by the hon. gentleman is one of considerable importance, and is deserving of mature deliberation before we embark on the project of making it the law of the land. I think it will be generally admitted that such legislation as this is not usually resorted to except in cases of dire necessity. Such legislation is generally enacted for a brief space of time, and in the presence of a demand made by the country at large, through the press, or from boards of trade, or other bodies which are recognised as authorised to give expression to the views of those engaged in commerce. The principal objection that I see to the enactment of such a law is that there is nothing before this House to show that there is a demand for bankruptcy legislation, which this really is, as distinctive from the ordinary Insolvency Acts that we have been called upon to pass or amend from time to time. If there was any large class of persons in our community laboring under the want of such a law as this, we should certainly have heard something of it through the columns of the press. A demand would have been made upon this House to enact some law of this kind in order to afford relief to such persons as were in need of a discharge. It would have been pointed out to us that there were a large number of persons in the different cities and towns of the Dominion, as well as the country parts, that were laboring under a great disadvantage, that were being kept out of trade and commerce, that were kept in a state of oppression, owing to the want of legislation of this kind. Now, we have no such representations made. On the other hand, in so far as the public bodies of the country—boards of trade for instance—are concerned, we have had no representations from them upon this subject. We have had on several occasions—and I have been charged to bring before this House—an Insolvency Bill which, being enacted, would affect the whole Dominion and enable mercantile people to obtain an equitable distribution of the assets of insolvent debtors. My hon. friend who has brought in this Bill to-day knows what was the fate of the last Insolvency Bill that I had the honor of laying before this House on two or three consecutive occasions. When at last we were authorised by this House to have the matter brought before a special committee, appointed for the purpose of investigating the subject and reporting thereon to this House; after many weeks of arduous labor the committee presented to this House the draft of a Bill which embodied in it a discharge clause. We found that amongst those who had been the strongest in urging on this House the necessity of insolvency legislation, there was not the slightest unanimity when that Bill came before the House, and those who were the most prominent in urging it said they would not have any such Bill. It is true, there were some who were willing to have a Bill with a discharge clause, but there were also a large number of the leading merchants in the country who said they would rather the law remained as it was than that we should have the country exposed to the dangers which would be incurred under a law containing a discharge clause, such as our former Insolvency Acts had. Under these circumstances we allowed the matter to drop, and the mercantile community thereupon, as has been represented by the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beau-soleil), applied to the Local Legislatures to have legislation enacted there which would, to some extent, meet the requirements of the case. There is no doubt that the laws existing in certain Provinces of the Dominion enabling persons to make undue preferences are very objectionable, and that in the large centres there is felt the need of some law that will enforce in the Dominion at large the principle which is found in the law of the Province of Quebec, and, I believe, in the Province of Ontario, that these undue preferences shall not be tolerated. But this Bill will not meet any of the requirements that have been urged upon this House by those various mercantile bodies. There is another thing also, to which I would direct the hon. gentleman's attention. The only principle upon which any Parliament of this kind has ever attempted to introduce insolvency legislation granting a discharge, and thereby interfering with rights which have been so ably dealt with this afternoon by the hon. member for Iberville (Mr. Béchard), is this: that it is merely the case of traders, that there was a special privilege, as it were, attaching to traders, or men in commerce, that entitled them, owing to the peculiarities of the business in which they were engaged, to a discharge when they had performed all that was required of them and given over their property, after having been unsuccessful in business. But I believe this is the first time it has ever been attempted anywhere to introduce a law by which any general discharge would be given indiscriminately to all classes of persons, wiping out their indebtedness by Act of Parliament, outside the cases of traders and commercial people. I do not think the hon. gentleman will find a precedent for such legislation as he is attempting to enact here. There is another very grave and serious objection to such legislation. No doubt it is pleasing to hear from the representatives of the agriculturists of the country that they for one class would repudiate any such legislation as this; that they do not desire a law to relieve them from the just payment of their debts, and which will have the effect of putting temptation in the way of honest men, and inducing people to become insolvent who otherwise might struggle along and pay their debts in the end. Under these circumstances, I think it is gratifying to find the hon. member for Iberville, speaking as he does advisedly, and as a representative man of his class, stating that the agriculturists do not require, and would repudiate, any such legislation as this. I think my hon. friend when he considers the matter will discover that those who are in most need of such legislation are the very persons who cannot utilise it. They are the very class of persons beyond whose reach this law would be placed, that is, the poor working men of the country. How can a poor working man obtain the money to pay for a discharge under this law, if he is crushed under a weight of debt? I have been an eye witness myself of cases in which a poor man has found himself crippled by two or three paltry judgments of a few dollars each, in which the costs have amounted to twice the debt for which his wages have been seized. He never can be in a position to obtain a discharge and become a free man under this Act. There is nothing in it which will reach the working classes, who are most in need, to enable them to rise superior to their difficulties. I concede that if the hon. gentleman could have devised some means by which that large class of the community could be relieved, it would meet with a great deal of favor in this House; but I do not perceive in this Bill anything that should commend itself to the good sense of the House; and for my part, until I hear from the boards of trade of the country, as representing the great commercial and industrial interests, I will not be disposed to vote for any measure calculated, as I believe this is, to entail upon us another reign of depression, and to open the door to very serious abuses which cannot be avoided under such a law. We all know what these abuses were under the old law. True, this law does not go so far as that one did; but even as a mere bankruptcy law, it will open the door to a whole series of abuses, and I am satisfied that if it should become law and is enforced for a few years, there will be as great an outcry to have it abolished as there was to have the old insolvency law struck from our Statute-book. Under these circumstances, not having had any information from those most authorised to speak on behalf even of the commercial community, I think this motion of my hon. friend is premature, and I must refrain from giving it my support.

Mr. KENNY. I did not intend addressing the House on the measure now under consideration. I assumed that the very reasonable suggestion that a measure of this importance should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce would meet with the approval of the House. A measure so important to the commercial community should not in my opinion be summarily dealt with. The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), placed its importance forcibly before the House, and informed us that in his experience in the larger Province, where a debtor had behaved with becoming honesty, he had been invariably treated kindly and generously by his creditors. I may say that as that has been the hon. gentleman's experience in the largest Province of the Dominion, it has also been mine in the smaller Province from which I come. My hon. friend, the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), I believe—for I was not in the House when he commenced his remarks—made it known to the House that in the community from which we come, there is a certain desire on the part of some of our fellow-citizens, that some bankruptcy law should be enacted. That opinion prevails especially amongst those connected with our monetary institutions, whose opinions on matters of this kind are entitled to every consideration. But, I am also aware, on the part of many commercial men in our community, there is a very great objection to anything in the shape of an Insolvency or Bankruptcy Act. That hostility is very largely due to the fact that the last Insolvency Act worked so unsatisfactorily. I believe that this House gave a great deal of attention to the preparation of that Act. I believe that it was a very good Insolvency Act. It placed the property of the debtor entirely in the hands of his creditors, and provided for an equal distribution of his estate. I think it would be impossible to improve upon an Act of that kind. And yet, Sir, the working of that Act was so entirely unsatisfactory that the commercial men of our community united with the commercial men of Canada in petitioning for its repeal, and it was repealed. Therefore, while I recognise the importance of the measure we are now considering and think we should not deal hastily with it, yet I am not prepared to express myself in favor of a Bankruptcy Act. The very expense of the late Act was a great objection to it, and I am afraid the same objection might apply to the present Act. The last Act to some extent encouraged fraud, and we should be very careful about enacting a measure which might have the same very injurious effect. At the same time, Sir, coming from a commercial community as I do, and recognising the importance of the measure, I think the House will do wisely to leave it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Mr. DUPONT (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I notice that the hon. gentlemen who have spoken before me are not quite agreed as regards bankruptcies. Some of them say that we ought to have an insolvent law; others, and more especially the author of this Bill, hold that we ought to have a law to discharge honest debtors, and thus shield them from the revengefulness of their creditors. I believe that the hon. members who feel such an overwhelming sympathy for honest insolvent debtors should also extend some of this sympathy to honest creditors and traders who have invested their capital into business enterprise. Such a Bill would tend no more nor less than to manufacture traders, and to make them more numerous than is required by the trade of our country. If that Bill was adopted we would undoubtedly have a multitude of young men, entirely devoid of capital and business experience, who would not hesitate to go into large business enterprises, and to interfere by their competition with those already engaged in the various branches of trade. And, Sir, this is just what happened during the period which elapsed under the Insolvent Act of 1869. A large number of young men, without experience and without capital, launched out into business, established commercial houses alongside of honest traders having capital, alongside of houses perfectly well established, and, by a ridiculous competition, have ruined these houses, have caused them to fail, and have failed themselves afterwards. I repeat it, the hon. members who have so much sympathy for honest insolvents, should above all have some sympathy for those who are ruined by traders without experience and without capital. I think we ought to leave to each Province the power to legislate on this matter and to determine its own mode of distributing the insolvent's estates. I believe, moreover, that it is not necessary to pass a law to discharge insolvent debtors and allow them to release themselves without paying anything to their creditors. There is an axiom which says that fear is the beginning of wisdom, and I consider that the House would be wrong in removing from these reckless and impecunious young men, this wholesome fear which to-day hinders them from going into hazardous enterprises. Besides, Mr. Speaker, the present Bill is absolutely unfair in its principle. It purports that a debtor, in order to have a right to his discharge, must obtain the consent of one-half or three-quarters of his creditors either in number or in amount of claims. Well, if it is absolutely intended to protect honest debtors, it would be better to leave it to the discretion of the judge to determine when the debtor will be discharged from the obligation of paying his debts; because, an honest debtor may sometimes have merciless creditors, and so find it utterly impossible for him to obtain leave to apply to the court. Therefore, it would be better to give the creditor leave to apply before the judge, and to call his creditors before the court, and the judge himself would determine whether the creditor according to the management of his affairs, would or would not have a right to the clemency and to the sympathy of the court. I believe, that the fact of leaving to the creditors themselves the power to determine whether the creditor may or may not apply to the court for his discharge, would be detrimental to those honest debtors which this Bill intends to protect. Besides, as I said a while ago, this law is not necessary, and the immense majority of the country will certainly be opposed to it. As regards the farming community, as my hon. friend the member for Iberville (Mr. Béchard) so truly said, instead of rejoicing at the adoption of such a Bill, I think they would be totally opposed to it should it be adopted in this House. I may add, Mr. Speaker, that under this Bill the securing of a discharge is wrought with so many technicalities, that should it be adopted in its present form it could only have one result: that of procuring many clients to lawyers while it would be far from profitable to those whom it is proposed to aid through its adoption.

Mr. KENNY.

Mr. HESSON. I must regret that it is considered necessary by any hon. gentleman to bring forward a measure of this kind again. Those who have had the advantage of being present in this House for a number of years past must have experienced this fact, that popular opinion is opposed to a measure of this kind. We have had Bills of a similar character, though probably not so far reaching as this one, which applies to agriculturists as well as to traders, presented at each previous Session, but we never considered it in the interest of the country to revive the Act that was repealed some seven years ago. The title of the Bill is: "An Act for the discharge of insolvent debtors whose assets have been distributed ratably among their creditors." Could the hon. mover of the Bill have said it was for the discharge of honest insolvent debtors who have not been met in a fair spirit by their creditors, and who have not been dealt with in a fair, honorable and honest way, after having given up all their assets to their creditors, I could have gone with him in that direction a very long way. But I do not think that the hon. gentleman, in introducing this measure, has shown to the House that necessity exists for the relief of the men whom he proposes to relieve. My experience of thirty years as a business man has led me to this opinion, that creditors invariably deal honorably and honestly with their debtors, when the debtors have endeavored to act honestly and honorably by them. I feel there is not the slightest occasion for the introduction of this Bill; I feel that it is an insult to the farmers of Canada. As an individual representing a very large agricultural constituency, I feel it my duty to protest against the introduction of a measure of this kind. I shall oppose it at every stage. In the committee, I shall, if I am spared, do what I can to prevent its promotion. If it reaches that stage, I shall oppose its reference by the committee to this House, for I do not consider it is in the interests of the honest traders of Canada that such legislation should be put upon the statutes of the country. We know the disastrous effects of the Insolvency Act of the past; we know how dishonest traders made the best use they could of the privileges afforded them by the law to cover up the most careless, even dishonest acts, and take unfair advantage of their creditors. Whilst my hon. friend may find here and there an individual who feels he has been unfairly dealt with by his creditors, he has failed to produce sufficient evidence to convince us there is necessity for the measure. Were there necessity for it, we would have had petitions from those who are laboring under those great disadvantages and under the grievous burdens imposed upon them by their creditors; we would have had complaints from all parts of the country, and more especially my hon. friend who resides in a large commercial city, the city of Toronto, would have been the recipient of a number of petitions to present to the House; but we have had none such, and I feel it my duty, therefore, to oppose this legislation. Our experience has been unfavorable to a measure of this kind, and I repeat it has not been asked for. On behalf of the farmers of Ontario, at least of that part of the country which I have the honor to represent, I must say they do not ask for such legislation, nor would they feel it to their credit to have their names connected with it; and, if my hon. friend were to canvass the rural districts, he would find the majority opposed to the Bill he now proposes.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew.) The question respecting the discharge of insolvent debtors is one which has more than once engaged the attention of former Parliaments since I have had the honor of a seat in this House. The Parliament previous to the last repealed, by a very large majority, the Insolvent Act which had been on our Statute-books from 1869 to that time. For my part, I have always held that it was desirable we should have some Act on our statutes which would provide for the equitable distribution of the assets of insolvent debtors; and whilst it is very true that under the Insolvent Act of 1869, and the amendments thereto, abuses arose, evils existed, and frauds were perhaps committed, my own opinion always has been, and it is still, that many of those frauds were perpetrated through the negligence of creditors themselves. It was not the fault of the Act, but the fault of the creditors who were lax in administering the Act. And, while it may be very true that dishonest people may take advantage of an Act such as that which is now proposed to be placed on the Statute-book, I think there are many honest traders, honest debtors who, from circumstances over which they have no control, from fire or other causes, may have sustained losses that will render it necessary for them to endeavor to obtain a discharge from their creditors. While these causes exist, it is, in my opinion, desirable that there should be some Act upon the Statute-book by which these insolvent debtors, having given up all their property to their creditors, having given them everything they are possessed of in the world, should be entitled to a discharge; and, whilst it may be very true that honest debtors generally meet with consideration at the hands of a majority of their creditors, there are always some creditors who find it in their interest to hold out in order that they may be paid in full, while the majority are willing to take a dividend upon the debts owing to them. It is true that in the Province of Ontario, and, I believe, also in the Province of Quebec, there are local statutes which provide for the distribution of the assets of a person who may have been sued and may be insolvent, but, so far as my experience goes, at any rate in the Province of Ontario, I do not think that that Act has been a success, that is, I believe that in that Province it has not been found to work in such a manner as to distribute equitably amongst the creditors the assets of the insolvent debtor. I have not looked into this Bill with sufficient carefulness to say that the whole of the provisions would meet with my approval, but certainly the principle of the Bill does meet with my approval, and I shall vote that the Bill be referred to a committee, whether the Committee on Banking and Commerce or a select committee of this House, in order that they may examine its provisions and report a Bill which will meet, if possible, with the approval of a majority of the House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. McCARTHY moved second reading of Bill (No. 30) to amend the Companies Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S WARRANTS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The motion that I propose to make is as follows:—

That the several items stated to have been paid under warrant from the Governor General for the service of the year 1886-87 be referred to the Committee on Public Accounts.

And, after what occurred in the previous discussion, I propose to add:

Together with copies of the several reports and Orders in Council under which the same were appropriated.

Before I put that motion in your hands, I will take the opportunity of calling the attention of the House to one or two statements which were made on this subject, which I had not the opportunity of replying to. In the first place, I may say that it might have been as well probably if the hon. gentlemen opposite had followed the wise example of the Minister of Finance, who frankly declared that he thought the practice had been carried to an objectionable extent, and who did not attempt to defend it. It has been attempted to defend the practice on the grounds, not that the arguments that I used were uncalled for or unnecessary, but apparently on the grounds that Governor General's warrants had been used in previous years. It is quite true that the Governor General's warrants were used in previous years, and were used under circumstances which I think I will be able to show to the House were amply justified by the Statute. But the Minister of Finance was in error, I think, when he stated that I, when Finance Minister, had omitted to bring down proper reports to the House on the occasion on which those warrants had been used. I have not been able to get the Votes and Proceedings for the year 1875, but I see that in 1876, one of the years which the hon. gentleman alluded to, on the 14th February, apparently, I laid on the Table of the House a statement showing the expenditure of $34,000, appropriated for Treaty No. 4, by Order in Council of the 27th September, 1875, for which a special warrant was issued, which I presume was a Governor General's warrant; also a return of expenditure of $30,000, by Order in Council, for the North-West Mounted Police; also statement of expenditure on a warrant of His Excellency the Governor General, dated the 5th October, 1875, for $60,000 for the settlers' relief in Manitoba. These were the occasions on which apparently special warrants were issued in 1875, justified, I think, all of them, under the Act to which I alluded, and, as the House will observe, not in all exceeding the sum of $130,000 or $140,000. At any rate, that statement for the year 1876 disposes of the question whether or not a proper return was made. Now, in 1877, when the hon. gentleman stated that he could not find that I had made any return of these special warrants, I find that, under date of the 15th February, I laid before the House the statement of expenditure to date on account of New South Wales exhibition, under authority of special warrant of His Excellency the Governor General, dated 21st December, 1876, for $25,000, a charge which I think was necessary, which could not well have been foreseen at the early date at which our House was prorogued in the year 1876, and which, at any rate, disposes effectually of the question as to these two years. For the succeeding year, the evidence is before the House that a proper statement was made. Now, I will further call attention to this fact. In the year 1878, when the largest number of these warrants was brought down by us, the whole of these warrants were for lapsed balances except two items, one of $50,000 and one of $30,000. To the one of $50,000, caused by the great fire at St. John, no exception, I think, will be taken. To the other of $30,000 in the North-West Territories, all I can say is that I do not think it was a case in which it was possible, without injury to the public service, to defer the completion of the buildings. But in no one of these cases did the hon. member who is now Finance Minister challenge any of the expenditures. Now, the House will notice that in these three years to which I have alluded—I have not got the returns for 1875, but I have just read the returns for 1878—the Governor General's warrants were exceedingly carefully used; three warrants, amounting to an aggregate of $140,000, were used in one year, one warrant of $25,000 was used in another year, and with the exception of the lapsed balances of appropriations carried forward, only two warrants for $80,000, collectively, were used in the last year. In the present case we find that whereas, almost the whole of the items appropriated by me, or carried forward by me, were lapsed balances, according to the statements laid on the Table—which the Minister of Finance says, however, does not include all the items—out of $2,313,000, only $239,000 are put down as lapsed balances, and I do not think there can be found any just ground for excusing the use of warrants for two millions and a half under the circumstances. However, if there are, the hon. gentlemen are perfectly welcome to all the advantage they can derive from it. I took occasion to point out that there were certain circumstances under which the Governor General's warrant could be properly used, and I did not blame the Government for using them. I think, for instance, such a case as the slaughter of cattle in quarantine was a proper and legitimate subject for the use of a Governor General's warrant. What I objected to then, and what I continue to object to, is the vicious practice of allowing the Department to under-estimate the sums required, and to supplement the deficiency by Governor General's warrants. I do not think, in the three years I have alluded to, the hon. gentleman can fairly point to any such cases—and they constitute, in the majority of cases, the points to which I took objection with respect to these other large expenditures. Now, Sir, I think it will be eminently in the public interest, and I think it will be a very proper thing, that the Committee on Public Accounts be allowed to investigate the circumstances under which these several warrants have been issued; and I take the opportunity of repeating the suggestion I made already, that in matters where money is expended without the authority of Parliament it would be convenient and proper that, at the time these warrants are laid on the Table of Parliament, accompanying them should be copies of the several orders and reports under which they were obtained.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is not usual, is it?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, I am not censuring the present Minister of Finance for that, but I think it is desirable the practice should be so. I think that every reasonable care should be used when an extraordinary power is exercised, that the House should be put in possession of all the details at the earliest possible moment.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I intend to occupy the attention of the House but for a few moments on this matter, and I would not have said a single word if this discussion had been confined to the position to which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) left it when he made the previous motion. I not only took no exception to that motion, but I concurred, as I now do, in the principle that he laid down as a sound constitutional maxim, that the expenditure of public money by warrant of the Governor General should be entirely exceptional, that it should be used for the purpose of providing, after Parliament has risen, for expenditures that were obviously necessary and required. I certainly, however, took no exception to the criticisms which the hon. gentleman found it his duty to make, and which I am quite sure he did make under a sense of public duty, with reference to the expenditures under the warrant of the Governor General, and detailed in the paper which we laid upon the Table of the House. Had the discussion rested there, I am quite certain we would all have been as one as to the desirability of carrying out in every possible way the objects which the mover of the resolution stated to be his, in bringing the subject under the attention of the House, and that was to draw the attention of the Government and of Parliament to the necessity of strictly confining the expenditure to the purposes to which the law provided that the warrant of a Governor General should be used, and that is, a demand for public money during the recess of Parliament, and the neglect to provide which would be attended with great inconvenience to the public service. I stated in the outset that I had not time or opportunity to investigate the matter before the hon. gentleman made his motion, nor did I know the line he proposed to take; but I referred to the action of the Government of the hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in power, and to the action of the hon. gentleman himself when he was Finance Minister, to show that the same practice to which he had taken exception had been adopted and found necessary by them. But, Sir, the discussion would not have taken the wider range that it did take, had not the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) taken the ground that the Finance Minister, who was his colleague, had entirely failed to discharge his duty as Finance Minister in the House, when he held that position. I referred to the expenditure that had been made under Governor General's warrants—not to show that they were wrong; I took no exception to them, they may be entirely within the category, in my judgment, of necessary expenditures. I say, therefore, I did not join issue with the hon. gentleman, but I simply alluded to the practice that had prevailed, and said I was quite certain when all these papers were brought down, that it would be found that the present Government had ample justification, that the course they had pursued was the course adopted by the hon. gentleman when he was Finance Minister himself. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) intimated that the Government were adopting a tu quoque argument in order to shelter themselves from wrong-doing, by saying: You have done so, also. My argument was not brought forward in that spirit. It was brought forward to show that the explanations which had been offered in reference to the items contained in the paper laid before the House were sufficient, and that the items not only in themselves were proper, but that they were justified by the practice of the hon. gentlemen opposite, when they were in power. That is a legitimate argument, it is not a tu quoque argument, it is not a justification of a wrong on the ground that some person else has done a similar wrong. I deny there is any wrong in the case. I say the warrants contained in the papers laid on the Table, so far as I am able to judge, were properly required, they were necessary in the public interest, and the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has given a very vigorous and eloquent defense of the most objectionable item, if that term may be applied to any of the items, contained in the whole—that is the item for the appropriation of the park at Banff. I am free to say that the case, in my judgment, is not so strong for that expenditure by Governor General's warrant, although it is strong enough to justify it, as it is for almost all, if not all, the others; and as the member for Northumberland has eloquently defended the only weak point in our case, I was rather surprised to find him charging us with using a tu quoque argument and justifying ourselves for wrong-doing by saying that somebody else had done an equal wrong.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. MITCHELL. Allow me to put you right.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to conclude, as I have only a few words to say, and I am afraid if I allow the interposition of the eloquent declamation of the hon. member for Northumberland, I may be so far carried away as to be thrown off the track.

Mr. MITCHELL. It was simply because you were representing me.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. When the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), took the ground that there was no one of those expenditures so indefensible, so utterly in violation of the statute, as a Governor General's warrant for a lapsed balance, the discussion took a wider range, and, of course, it was right for the Minister of Justice to point out that it was not open to the member for Bothwell to take that ground, as the Minister of Finance of the Government with whom he had served, had adopted exactly the same principle, and had brought down lapsed balances by the half-dozen, at the very least, consequently sweeping away that argument. I do not intend to detain the House further than to say this: I am pleased this motion is made. I should have been glad if the investigation, which the hon. gentleman proposes to make in the Committee on Public Accounts—and I am quite prepared to say that it is a very suitable and appropriate investigation to be made—and the discussion in this House, could have taken place after the investigation by the committee and when the papers were laid before the House. The hon. gentleman very properly and in a right spirit moved not only to bring the warrants down signed by the Governor General during our term of office, but also, and very properly so, during the period which covered his tenure of office as Finance Minister. With all those papers brought down—and I stated at once that it would give us great pleasure to bring them down—and after that investigation had been made, this House would have been in a much better position to discuss the question. I suppose the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) will be very much surprised if I tell him that when the papers are brought down it will be found, that not only the Government of which he was a member, but the hon. gentleman, as Finance Minister, in performing the duties devolving upon him did not perform them, as the law imperatively demands, by laying upon the Table of the House a statement of the warrants signed by the Governor General, and with all that fullness which the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) so much admires.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. gentleman was out of the House when I read the statements from the Votes and Proceedings.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I undertake to say that that does not comply with the law. The law declares that the Finance Minister shall lay on the Table of the House within so many days after the opening of the Session a statement, not mixed up with general estimates and public accounts, but a clear statement of the warrants signed by the Governor General.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has said that in 1875-76-77 the law was not complied with. I find that in 1877 I laid before the House a statement of the expenditure to date on account of the New South Wales exhibition under the authority of a special warrant of the Governor General, dated 21st December, 1876, for $25,000, which I think was the only warrant issued in that year. In 1876 I laid three separate special warrants for $34,000, $50,000 and $60,000 before the House—His Excellency's special warrants for such and such date. That, I think, was in full compliance with the law.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All I can say is that I applied to the custodians of the archives and the papers could not be produced, and the statement returned to me was that there was no statement of Governor General's warrants for that year. I say more. The hon. gentleman will perhaps be surprised to learn, that when the papers are brought down it will appear that an appropriation of $20,000 was made during the recess of Parliament without any Governor General's warrant; and I have the original paper in my hand showing that an appropriation for that amount was made for the sufferers at St. John—and a very proper use of the Governor General's warrant it would have been, if it had been obtained. It was an appropriation of $20,000 made on the 25th June, 1877, for which there was no report of the Minister of Finance as the law declares there shall be, that it was a matter of urgency and that no funds were appropriated to meet it; but it was an appropriation made and placed in the expenditures of the Public Accounts not as a Governor General's warrant. So I am exceedingly glad that the hon. gentleman is moving for those papers, because they will show that, if there has been any laxity in the practice, it has not been altogether confined to one side.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To what is that amount charged?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is in the general expenditure, which the hon. gentleman will find in the Supplementary Estimates, I think of 1878. On reference to the archives and the Order in Council, I find there was no Governor General's warrant and no report of the Minister of Finance as the law requires. And certainly the hon. gentleman has not been able to show anything so irregular as that. It must have been an oversight under the circumstances.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In what year is it charged?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You will find it, I think, in the expenditure of 1878; it was made on the 25th June, 1877.

Mr. MILLS. That was for the sufferers by the St. John's fire?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; as I said, it would have been a very proper use of the Governor General's warrant, but unfortunately it was made by an order of the Committee of the Privy Council without any legal authority, such as the law requires to authorise a Governor General's warrant to issue. It reads:

"The committee have had under consideration a memorandum dated 22nd June, from Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, calling attention to the subject of the calamitous fire which has desolated a large portion of the city of St. John, N.B., and recommending that $20,000 be advanced to the mayor of St. John in aid of the sufferers and for their immediate wants. The committee submits the above recommendation for Your Excellency's approval."

That was authorised by Sir Wm. Ritchie who was Deputy Governor, and the appropriation was consequently made. I only refer to that matter—for I assume it was a mere oversight—to show the desirability of having all the papers brought down, and I shall be only too glad if the result of that examination by the Committee on Public Accounts is effective in any way checking any extravagant use, or inordinate use, of the warrant of the Governor General in these cases.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am very much obliged to the Finance Minister for the complimentary manner in which he spoke of my eloquence. Whether his words were actually meant, or spoken in a satirical sense—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not at all.

Mr. MITCHELL—I am quite unable to say. When I dealt with the question to which he referred, yesterday or the day before, I did it from an honest desire to see an enterprise, which the Government had taken hold of and dealt with, protected in the public interest; and when I referred to the fact, at a more recent time, on a debate on an entirely different subject—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is mistaken; it was the same day.

Mr. MITCHELL. Excuse me—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend is quite as liable to err as I am. I can tell him that the subject upon which I spoke—as he was pleased to say, so eloquently in reference to the Banff Spring—was the Act which the Minister of the Interior introduced, and which had nothing whatever to do with the question of the Governor General's warrants.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was a discussion of this very question.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let my hon. friend bear in mind that one of the strong points I made in that discussion was this: that, on a question of that kind, I appealed to the House—and I am in the memory of hon. gentlemen who know that what I am saying is true—I appealed to the House that, in a question in which the public interests and the public health might be so possibly concerned, in the future as well as at present, we ought not to mix up a mere political or constitutional or financial question, with what I conceived should be dealt with in a sanitary point of view. I appeal to hon. gentlemen if that was not the stand I took; and when the Finance Minister imputed to me that I had changed my attitude on this question he was entirely wrong. My reference to the fact that the tu quoque argument was used did not refer to what was said by the Minister of Finance, but referred to a statement made by the Minister of Fisheries to this House; and when I got up I said that, while it might be satisfactory to hon. gentlemen opposite to attack hon. gentlemen on this side, and say: "You did it, too," and while it might be satisfactory to hon. gentlemen on this side to make use of the same kind of argument towards the opposite party—that while this might be satisfactory to the two great political parties, I occupied an independent position in this House, and it was not satisfactory to me, and I did not think it would be satisfactory to the country. Now, I have never dealt with the question of the Governor General's warrants. I merely made an incidental reference to the question for the purpose of trying to keep the two sides of the House right.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, I am glad my hon. friends approve, by their cheers and applause, of the position I have assumed. I know there is justice enough on both sides of the House to appreciate a correct position when it is stated, as I have stated it on this question. When the hon. the Finance Minister was speaking, I asked his permission to allow me to make the suggestion that he was misrepresenting me when he made that statement. But he was so carried away with his own eloquence and the powerful arguments with which he was extinguishing an hon. gentleman on this side—his former predecessor—that he would not permit an explanation, and I had to wait to the close of his forcible and powerful speech until I had an opportunity of explaining myself. I repeat again that I did not deal with the question of the Governor's warrants. I made only an incidental reference to it when I defended the policy of the Government in relation to the Banff Springs; and when I made the remarks, which he was pleased to describe in the way he did, I spoke by way of an appeal to the House to dis sever the question of financial interests, as created by the outlay for the Banff Springs—which he says is the most indefensible expenditure of the whole lot of them—from the sanitary question which was then before the House. I never dealt with the manner of spending the money or the amounts said to be expended; but when the question of preserving a great natural remedy, and what would prove to be a great health resort in the future, was before the House, I applauded the Government for the fact that, while they owned that territory and before it got complicated by the claims of private individuals, as had occurred in other places to my knowledge—I applauded them for taking control of these grounds, and asked the House to dis sever the financial interest from the sanitary one, and deal with it purely on the principle of the Bill which the Minister of the Interior had introduced, giving him ample power to carry out a measure which so fully met with my approval, and which, I was sure, would be approved of by a majority of the House. When I referred to the tu quoque argument, my hon. friend was wrong in charging me with mixing up the two questions. I wanted to dis sever them; I endeavored to do so, and my attitude will be, I think, in the recollection of the House, and the Minister of Finance did wrong in attempting to put me in the wrong.

Mr. MITCHELL.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The $20,000 to which the hon. gentleman referred as having been paid illegally and irregularly, although for a desirable object—the relief of the sufferers by the St. John fire—I find was charged, and I think correctly charged, in the accounts of 1877, to the $50,000 for unforeseen expenses, which we had the authority to expend.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman will find, on further investigation, that he is entirely mistaken. I would like to ask him, if it was charged to the $50,000, why it was necessary on the 25th of June, 1877, to have an Order in Council to appropriate the $20,000?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Certainly, I had no right, nor has the hon. gentleman any right, of his own proper motion, without the authority of the Governor General in Council, to spend any part of the $50,000. I think he will find that is so, if he consults his advisers.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman think that any individual Minister has the right to cheek out $50,000 on his own individual authority?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Certainly not.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it must be done by an Order in Council.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But I think he will find that it was for the construction of buildings.

Mr. BLAKE. No, no.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is unforeseen expenses of any kind.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman is getting rusty.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I wish to make a remark or two with regard to the observations addressed to the House by the Finance Minister. I think the hon. gentleman has to some extent misapprehended the position I took yesterday, with regard to the same question. The hon. gentleman said there was a difference of opinion between the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and myself: Now, that is a mistake. I cordially subscribed to the view put forward by the hon. member for South Oxford, but, because my hon. friend did not discuss certain expenditures of the Government to the extent he might have done, the hon. gentleman assumes that my hon. friend from South Oxford did not call in question the propriety of those expenditures. Then the hon. gentleman's friends took another position which I commented upon, but to which the hon. gentleman has to some extent misrepresented—perhaps unintentionally—but nevertheless the hon. gentleman has not correctly represented the statement I made. Now the hon. gentleman and his friends took this position. He said if an appropriation had once been made it was quite right and proper for the Government, subsequently, notwithstanding the fact that it had lapsed, to provide by Governor's warrants for that expenditure. It was that general proposition that I called in question, and I pointed out that the Act provided that the Administration might extend the period beyond the period of the year for which it was voted, for a period of three months, and that if it were in the power of the Government to extend the period indefinitely then such a provision of the law was altogether unnecessary, and in fact altogether inoperative. Therefore it was impossible to put the construction on the law which the hon. gentleman had put upon it. Now, an appropriation once made by Parliament for a specific public work, and for which the country has entered into a regular contract and incurred certain specific obligations, stands upon a wholly different footing from an ordinary appropriation which Parliament may have voted and which may not have been expended. That was my position. Now, what do the facts show which the hon. gentleman has laid before the House, and to which the Minister of Justice called the attention of the House yesterday? He read certain Orders in Council, and showed that certain warrants signed by the Governor General had been issued; but in every case they were for appropriations of this particular class, or for unforeseen calamities. They were not of that class which the hon. gentleman's friends have advised the issue of warrants to cover. Now, I called attention yesterday to the fact that a number of these warrants had been signed after Parliament was in Session. The hon. gentleman and his friends seem to forget that the clause of the Audit Act relating to these is an enabling clause—that it is not a limitation on the power of the Government, but a power positively conferred upon the Government and determined by the words of the statute. If it were not for this statutory provision, no Governor's warrants could be issued; no such expenditure could be legally incurred which had not the prior sanction of Parliament; but it is because the statute confers this power in certain cases that that can be done. The statute provides what? That if, when Parliament is not in Session, certain emergencies arise, certain acts can be done. But Parliament was in Session, and therefore Parliament ought to have been consulted.

Motion agreed to.

THE WELLAND BRIDGE.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Copies of all petitions, memorials, correspondence, orders and reports, whether made by the resident engineer or Mr. Page, in connection with the bridge across the Welland Canal at Welland, lately removed, and the construction of a new bridge in lieu thereof.

He said: I am informed from the locality by the person who requested me to make this motion that a bridge existed across the canal for a period of about seventy-five years, in relation to which the town was in fact built up, and that a large portion of the principal structures are upon the streets connected by that bridge. The removal of the bridge some time ago in connection with the works on the canal has caused great loss to the owners of the buildings which still exist, and application both personally and by letter have been made to the Department with a view to having these grievances remedied, but is yet without success. I am very anxious that the hon. Minister should, if he can, make any statement on this occasion which would be calculated to inform the House, and those interested, as to what the intentions of the Government are with reference to the restoration of this means of communication between the two parts of the town, and the principal portions of it, that I have described.

Mr. POPE. I can inform the hon. gentleman that this bridge was placed some 600 feet from where the old one was because it could not be placed on the old site to any advantage. According to the report of the resident engineer and accepted by Mr. Page, if placed on the old site, it would have completely stopped the old aqueduct, leaving only the new one to be used. The complaint is not just from a village of that neighborhood, but from a farming community settled over a considerable distance, that they have to go over this 600 feet. The Government, when they changed the location, made a road from Main street down to Division street, where the bridge now stands. Those people made some complaint that there was damage to their property; but the reason the change was made was what I stated. I will give the hon. gentleman the report of the resident engineer. That is all I have got.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). Before this motion is put, I wish to say a few words. It is a hardship to the town of Welland that this bridge should be removed. The road upon which it stands has been in existence 75 or 100 years. It is not an ordinary street laid out by a municipality. It is an old township line, and upon it all the important business structures of the place are built; in fact, all the business of the county town of the important and intelligent county of Welland is done on that street, and I deny entirely that it is simply a country place. So far as inconvenience to the aqueduct is concerned, I understand that the placing of the bridge on the old site is merely a matter of expense. Whether this is so or not I am not prepared to say. I know that during the time of the Government of which the hon. gentleman for West Durham was a member in 1877, when Mr. Page made this report, that Government made the change of the structure from the original location to where it is now. From that time to last fall I never heard anything about this bridge. The people did not realise the inconvenience that would arise from its removal until the structure was actually taken down. They then found that it was a great inconvenience. A deputation was sent to Ottawa, which I accompanied, and I found to my astonishment that the change had actually been determined on ten years previously, and that the contract for the new bridge was let in the fall of 1877. However, as a great injury has been done to the town, and particularly to individuals who have large and expensive buildings constructed on that street, which will certainly be reduced in value by reason of the removal of the bridge, I believe, if it is at all practicable, that the bridge should be constructed on the original township line. If it is not practicable, then I say the people who have been injured are fairly entitled to compensation at the hands of the Government of this country. If this change has been made for the purpose of saving the public exchequer, a few individuals in that locality should not be called upon to suffer loss by reason of the change; and if it was necessary to make the change for the general advantage of Canada, then I say the individuals ought to be compensated by the Government.

Mr. POPE. That is another part of the story altogether. The question is whether this bridge could be placed on the old site. I assert that my hon. friend, who was Minister of Railways, found by the reports of his engineers that it could not be placed there, and I find from the report of my own engineer that if it were placed on the old spot it would completely stop the old aqueduct. Apart from that, the complaint has not come from that section of the country to which my hon. friend refers, but from the other side where there is a sparse population, and not from the town itself, so that, in that respect, he has not quite represented the thing as it is, but he has represented it perfectly right so far as the site is concerned. The site was fixed by my hon. friend from East York, and I believe he was justified in so doing.

Motion agreed to.

BLUE-BOOKS AND DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS.

Mr. CHARLTON moved:

That the rule now in force requiring the withholding of blue-books and Departmental reports till the assembling of Parliament—results in the suppression, often for periods of many months, of information relating to public affairs which the public interests require should be promptly made public.

That the blue-books and Departmental Reports for each fiscal or calendar year should in future be made public as soon as practicable after the same are prepared, and that no unnecessary delay should be permitted to interfere with the issuing of the same.

That the Finance Department cause to be inserted in the Canada Gazette at the close of each month a statement of revenue and expenditure for the month, and also for the unexpired portion of the fiscal year, distinguishing between expenditure upon capital account and expenditure on account of Consolidated Fund, and giving statement of gross debt and net debt.

That the Customs Department cause to be inserted in the Canada Gazette at the close of each month a statement of exports, of imports, of immigration and of navigation for the month, and also for the unexpired portion of the fiscal year.

That the Department of Railways cause to be inserted in the Canada Gazette each week a statement showing the gross and the net earnings of each of the Government railways for the preceding week, and also for the unexpired portion of the fiscal year.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would ask that this be allowed to stand over in order that we may see whether it is necessary there should be some legislation. Looking at the Act, I do not think there is, and that the resolutions can be adopted as they are. I would suggest, however, that the word "rule" should be altered to "practice" in the first line. I do not think there is any rule.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have no objection, and I would ask also that the word "unexpired" which is a clerical error should be changed to "expired."

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

DEPUTY SPEAKERSHIP.

Mr. FISHER moved :

To rescind the Standing Orders respecting the election, at the commencement of every Parliament, of a Deputy Speaker and Chairman of committees.

He said: In moving for this change, I do not wish to deprive you, Sir, of that relief which, no doubt, is necessary for anybody who fills the position you occupy in this House. But, Sir, I take it for granted that you intend to follow the example of your predecessor, not only in the fairness and impartiality with which that hon. gentleman performed his duties as our Speaker, but also in the assiduity, the close attention, he gave to those duties, and by which he earned the respect and confidence of every gentleman who had then the honor of a seat in Parliament. I take it for granted you, Sir, will not call upon your deputy, should you have one, very frequently to occupy your position. During the short experience I have had in Parliament, both before and after the Deputy Speaker was elected by this House, I did not perceive that the Speaker on many occasions or for any long time, was forced to call on the Deputy to take his place in the Chair. In fact, from what I saw during the two years we had a Deputy Speaker, the chief duty that devolved on him was to act as the Chairman of our Committees, and not as the Speaker in the Chair. This being the case, I am sure, Sir, you will relieve me of the imputation of any desire to prevent your having that relief which I am sure is necessary to one charged with the onerous duties you have to perform. I feel that in making this motion I may, perhaps, count on the support of the Ministry of the day. Although coming from an humble member of the Opposition, I find that this motion has, if not by the direct action of the Ministry of the day, at all events, by their inaction, obtained a certain amount of endorsement and support. What says the Standing Order? I will not attempt to read the whole of it:

"That the House do elect a Chairman of Committees of this House at the commencement of every Parliament, as soon as the Address has been agreed to in answer to His Excellency's speech."

Now, we have been some three weeks since the opening of Parliament. I think it is about three weeks since the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne was agreed to, yet I find that the hon. gentlemen who are responsible for the conduct of business in the House, have not seen fit to take the initiative, which belongs to them, in proposing the name of an hon. member to occupy the position of Deputy Speaker. I do not know why this has not been done, but am almost disposed to hope the Government have thus been inactive through a desire to accept, if not to support, the proposition I have put before the House. There are a good many reasons why it is not necessary we should have a Deputy Speaker. This country, we all know, is subject to very heavy charges in the annual expenditure, charges which are in a great degree due to the effect of the multiplication of officers and the large salaries paid to the various officers connected with the Civil Government. I believe that the only justification that can exist for the multiplication of these offices, or for our continuing their existence, is paramount necessity, and I do not consider that in this case there is any such paramount or absolute necessity. For a long time, I think for about eighteen years, the Dominion Parliament did not feel the necessity for this office, and the Ministers of the day did not think it necessary to adopt this procedure. In my own short experience, it was my good fortune to sit here for two years during which we had no Deputy Speaker, and I have sat here since that officer has been introduced. I confess that, from what little I saw of the proceedings of this House before the office was created, and from what I have seen since, I have not been led to believe that this was a necessary innovation. The Deputy Speaker's duties, as I have already said, are chiefly those of Chairman of Committees. In fact, he is called Chairman of Committees in the Standing Order. Ever since the Parliament of Canada has been in existence, it has been the custom to call upon one of the members of the House to act as Chairman of Ways and Means and Supply, and I believe there is a concurrence of all who are acquainted with the mode of parliamentary procedure that this custom is a right one, that one gentleman who is accustomed to the work should be asked to carry on that committee; but there are other committees in which it is usual to call upon other experienced members of the House to act as chairman, and I do not think there has been any difficulty in finding members capable of performing the duty. This being the case, it is evident that our business can be carried on perfectly well without this new salaried officer. For eighteen years, we were able to get on very well without him, and this Session of Parliament is now three weeks old, and we have been able so far to get on without this officer. It may be said that up to this time the House has hardly been in Committee of the Whole, but, if it is necessary that we should have a Chairman of Committees, it is not therefore necessary that he should be Deputy Speaker or should have the power and authority which the Deputy Speaker has. Judging from the short experience we have had of this official and of the gentleman who occupied the position in the last Parliament, it is better, in my judgment at all events, that the same gentlemen should not be continually harassed by being continually called upon to occupy this position. We know it is an onerous position. We know that often the committee sits for a length of time, and that the one who is called upon constantly and continuously to fulfil this duty has a much more onerous task than anyone would have when the duty is divided up, as it used to be, among the experienced members of this House. If you, Mr. Speaker, are able to call upon one gentleman at one time when the House goes into committee, and a few minutes afterwards, or an hour or two afterwards, to call upon another gentleman to occupy that responsible position, it is less likely that one member would be exhausted by the work or would feel the onerousness of this duty. Without wishing to reflect upon the hon. member who occupied the position in the last Parliament, who certainly devoted great attention to his duties and displayed great consideration in the fulfilment of those duties, still those who were present, as I was, during the long debates of the Session when the

Mr. CHARLTON.

Deputy Speaker was first chosen, can recollect the fact that, in consequence of the long sittings of the committee, the one hon. gentleman, whose duty it was to fill that position, was and must necessarily have been exhausted, and found his patience and his physical endurance tested beyond his power to sustain the test. It would be obvious that, were it within your competency to call upon any member to fulfil that duty, the case might be different, but when one member has to perform that duty, I can well understand the delicacy of Mr. Speaker in calling upon other hon. members, when that one member is paid a salary for performing that duty. If we had no such official, and if you, Sir, were at liberty to call upon any member whose experience is sufficient to justify his filling that position, no hon. member would have that feeling. There is another reason why I think we should refrain from continuing this office. The Government of the day are creating new offices in the civil government. There is a new Minister of Trade and Commerce to be created with a large salary, there is a proposition to create a Solicitor General with a large salary, and in the Public Accounts and in the Official Gazette we find that the expenditure has become alarmingly great. We believe that any officer who can be dispensed with ought to be dispensed with, and I have not yet heard any argument showing that it is necessary that this particular office should be continued. I suppose the First Minister and those who were responsible for the creation and for the continuance of this office, will say that we are adopting the English procedure, that we are following the example of that Parliament which we take for our model, and that, as they find it necessary to have a Deputy Speaker, it is necessary for us to follow their example. In the debate when the First Minister proposed to establish this office, he referred to the fact that in various other colonies there were Deputy Speakers who had large salaries. I think the circumstances are different. I am not going into an elaborate argument in reference to the existence of a Deputy Speaker in England. We can refer to our own experience in this matter. We can look back to the eighteen years which elapsed before the institution of this office, in order to show that we can get on perfectly well without this official, that it is unnecessary in our Parliament, and we need not take the example of any other legislature or country. I trust the desire will be shown by gentlemen sitting on both sides of this House to curtail our expenditure and to do away with what is unnecessary and decrease the burdens on the tax payers of the country, and that, therefore, we may hope that an end will be put to this leak, small though it may be, but occurring in regard to an office which I believe to be entirely and absolutely unnecessary. As the First Minister has not proposed a gentleman to fill this position and as it is incumbent on him to propose some one to fill that position, I hope he may have changed his mind and that he does not feel the same desire as was felt by the Ministers at the time to propose the filling of this office. I trust that this motion will be accepted by both sides of the House, not only by those who have experience of the past and have seen something of parliamentary procedure here, but by the new members who, coming fresh from their constituencies, will feel that they will fulfil the wishes of a large portion of the people of this country by showing their desire to economise and to carry on the business of Parliament with as little expense and as little formality as possible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am quite sure the House will not adopt this retrograde step suggested by the hon. gentleman in his motion. The last Parliament, after full consideration, and with the general acceptance of the majority, came to the conclusion that the establishment of this permanent officer, with all the powers and duties conferred upon him was necessary for the efficient performance of our duties as members of Parliament, and for the purposes, in the first place, of assisting and protecting the Speaker from the consequences of having no such support, and in the next place, to have an officer under the supervision of yourself, Sir, armed with the same powers, and called upon, by holding office permanently, to pay the same attention to the rules and practice of Parliament as the Speaker himself. It is quite true, as the hon. gentleman says, that when the debate on this Deputy Speakership took place, I alluded to the practice of the English Parliament. It may be well said, I admit, that there may be a great deal more business there, that Parliament sits much longer in England than it does in Canada, and that, therefore, it is straining the point a good deal in the matter of imitation, to adopt the notion simply because it is English. But, Sir, we pay great respect to the practice in England, and they have found it absolutely necessary to have such an officer. I think any one who has watched the progress of parliamentary proceedings of late days in England, must see that whether that Parliament sits for three months or for six, the appointment of an officer of that kind, the Speaker in every respect, I may say, except in rank, and supposed to possess the same qualifications, supposed to devote himself to the study of the practice of Parliament, and to train himself to the overseeing, in fact, not only of the House, but when the Speaker is out of the Chair, the innumerable cases in which the House is in Committee of the Whole—I say, all these things show the absolute necessity for a Deputy Speaker. And that necessity, as the hon. gentleman reminds me, was felt in our sister colonies, situated in the same conditions, very much as we are, with sessions not longer than ours. I think that in almost every one of the Australian colonies, they have found it necessary to appoint a deputy, with the powers of Speaker, and holding the position of permanent Chairman of Committees. All the colonies in Australia, and I think New Zealand as well, have such an officer. You may remember, Sir, how much the first Speaker suffered from the fact of not having such an officer. Mr. Cockburn, in fact, contracted the disease of which he died from being obliged to preside over long sittings for so long a period of time. And then we were obliged, as it will be remembered, to pass an Act for the purpose of giving additional powers in the way of having an officer to sit in the Chair during the enforced absence of the Speaker from ill-health or otherwise. But, Sir, it is quite clear that the casual appointment of a member to sit on a particular occasion, to sit in committee when a particular Bill is before the House, is not satisfactory. He has not of necessity given any particular attention to the practice of Parliament, it is not his duty to make himself acquainted with the practice of Parliament, and it would be improper and unwise to clothe with the authority of Speaker a casual Chairman of Committees appointed from time to time, varying every time, and therefore in no way fit to assume your position and have your authority, or to have the control or influence with the House of Commons which such an officer should have. The mere statement that the very moderate allowance given to the Deputy Speaker should be an impediment to such an officer if he is wanted, I think is too penny-wise to be worth consideration. I have no doubt that the House will sustain the opinion so strongly expressed in the last Parliament, of the propriety and expediency, and the importance of having such an officer. The hon. gentleman says that the Deputy Speaker ought to have been appointed before. Well, he will be appointed as soon as he is wanted. He was not wanted really until the committees that had been appointed had got to work, and until this House was called upon to go into Committee of the Whole. But, I tell my hon. friend that he would have been appointed before we went into committee at all if it were not that I asked the hon. gentleman to postpone his motion. I intended to move the very next day for the appointment of a Deputy Speaker, but as I was apprehensive that hon. gentlemen might say: Well, the leader of the House has got the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) to postpone his motion in order to give him an opportunity of moving for the appointment of a Deputy Speaker. I have deferred it until now, but I will now give the hon. gentleman and the House notice that it is my intention to move to-morrow for the appointment of a Chairman of Committees.

Mr. BLAKE. You must give notice of that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, it is not necessary to give notice.

Mr. BLAKE. I think so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it has been decided otherwise.

Mr. BLAKE. It could not have been decided otherwise as yet.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it will be so decided.

Mr. BLAKE. That I dare say.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am sure that it will be decided rightly, and if it is decided rightly it must be decided that this motion may be made without notice. I am altogether opposed to the motion of the hon. gentleman, and I call upon the House to reject it.

Mr. FISHER. I thank the hon. gentleman for not having taken advantage of the postponement of this motion, which I am glad he did not do. While commenting upon the fact that the Chairman of Committees was not yet appointed, I drew the attention of the First Minister and the House to the words of the Standing Order, which said, not as the First Minister would like to imply, that the Chairman of Committees should be appointed when he is needed, but that he should be appointed as soon as the Address in answer to His Excellency's speech is agreed to. This shows no connection with his duties as Chairman of Committees, and has nothing to do with the delay to which the First Minister has alluded. As regards the remark of the First Minister that the office was created only after the subject had received full consideration and full discussion, I think the hon. gentleman, in making that statement, is going a little beyond the fact.

Mr. SPRAKER. Hon. gentlemen will please keep order. I have no means of discovering who is making that noise, but it ought not to be done.

Mr. FISHER. I have no desire to waste the time of the House, but after the remarks of the First Minister I think I am in order in replying in a few words. I was alluding to the way in which the Deputy Speaker's office was created, and when the First Minister said it was done after full consideration and with deliberate intention, I think that he was going a little beyond the fact. While in England when the Deputy speakership was instituted there was very full consideration of the question and a full discussion, and the report of a committee which took evidence and examined a large number of the leading parliamentarians of the country, we know perfectly well that that action was taken here without any investigation on the part of the House or any of its committees. The First Minister took the responsibility for the action taken after I suppose consulting his colleagues, and probably consulting his own party, but without consulting the House. I do not consider that can fairly be called full consideration and investigation. It may be partisan investigation, it may be partial consideration; but I do not think it can be considered to be full investigation on the part of the House of Commons or Parliament. The hon. First Minister also alluded, as he did when he first brought the question before this House, to the unfortunate affliction of a former Speaker. I am glad to believe that the Speaker of the last Parliament has escaped any such disastrous result, and I believe that if we were to follow the rule adopted by the First Minister at the opening of this Parliament, namely, that the same gentleman should not be twice consecutively chosen Speaker of the House, such disastrous results would be very unlikely to occur. I understand Mr. Cockburn, the Speaker alluded to, was twice consecutively Speaker of this House, and it is evident that at the close of the first Parliament he did not consider that he was so ill as to be unwilling to receive a second appointment. Had his health been impaired and a Deputy Speaker required, then would have been the time to have appointed this additional officer. But that course was not taken until last Parliament. I cannot believe that the First Minister had any conception that the Session was going to last so long—or that the sittings were going to be so tiresome and so long—unless, indeed, the hon. gentleman and his colleagues were aware that the iniquitous contents of the Franchise Bill would be stoutly opposed by hon. members on this side of the House, and they prepared at the very commencement, before the Bill was known to members of the Opposition, for a prolonged struggle, and they therefore believed it to be necessary to establish this office to provide for the contingency they expected, and which really did come about. I believe the argument of the First Minister is no justification for this office and I trust the House may be so far independent of the leader of the Government on this occasion as to support my motion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, when the Government proposed to appoint a Deputy Speaker, the House did not oppose the motion; on the contrary, it seemed to be their desire that the appointment should be made, and I do not think that we have ever had any occasion to complain of the fact that there was a second officer to preside at the proceedings of the House. Your predecessor, Mr. Speaker, would certainly not have been able to perform his duties had he not had a deputy to fill the Chair on more than one occasion, and now that the House has decided to have this officer, I do not see anything in what the hon. member told us when he made his motion nor in what he has just told us, which might induce the House to adopt his motion. As the hon. Premier has said a while ago, when the Speaker was obliged to choose an ordinary member of this House to discharge the duties of Chairman of Committees of the whole House, he indiscriminately took a member from one side of the House or the other, and none of these chairmen knew the rules of the House as well as the Speaker knows them, or as well as the Deputy Speaker knew them when he discharged these duties during the two last Sessions. Surely we the old members of Parliament should remember the scenes which often took place when the Speaker called upon an ordinary member of the House—a member who was not the same for all the committees, since it was the privilege of the Speaker to choose a member from either side of the House, and, as a rule, he did not always choose the same member—to discharge these duties. We have seen, on many occasions, members of this House rather deficient in respect for the Chairman of the Committee, and scenes which were certainly not a credit to the House of Commons. But on the other hand, I must say that under the new system inaugurated by the appointment of a permanent Chairman of Committees, we have seen no repetition of such scenes. The Chairman of these Committees had evidently, in the opinion of most of hon. members, the same powers and the same authority as the Speaker, and was consequently listened to and obeyed with more respect than the old Chairmen of Committees. Under these circumstances, I do not see why we should change the rule which was adopted. The hon. member who made this motion, I did not give any truly valuable reasons to induce the House to contradict itself, and to rescind the rule which now forms part of the regulations of this House. The question of salary, which is really a very small salary, owing to the permanent duties of this officer, cannot be an important matter for this House, for, after all, two thousand dollars are not a large sum for an officer who is bound to be constantly here, and to preside at all the committees of the whole House, aside from the fact stated by the hon. Premier, that this officer is obliged, in order to properly discharge his duties, to study the rules of the House, in the same manner as you study them, Mr. Speaker, in order to preside as you do at the proceedings of this House. Therefore, I do not see why we should change the practice of this House. On the contrary, I hope, that this House, desirous to see order and harmony prevailing in our proceedings, will maintain the position which was taken during the two last Sessions, and will not vote for the motion of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher), but will be willing to assist you in your duties as Speaker, by making it possible for you to leave the Chair with a certainty of having, to fill your place during your absence, a member familiar with the rules of the House, and who, on this account will be respected by the members. Mr. Speaker, I will say no more, I thought it my duty on this occasion to use my mother tongue, in order that those hon. members who do not understand the English language as well as the French language, might be posted on the question now before the House.

House divided on motion of Mr. Fisher (p. 296):

YEAS:

Messieurs

Armstrong,	Dessaint,	McMullen,
Bain (Wentworth),	Edgar,	Mallory,
Beausoleil,	Edwards,	Mills (Bothwell),
Bécharé,	Eisenhauer,	Mitchell,
Bernier,	Ellis,	Mulock,
Blake,	Fiset,	Paterson (Brant),
Borden,	Fisher,	Platt,
Bourassa,	Gauthier,	Préfontaine,
Bowman,	Geoffrion,	Purcell,
Brien,	Gillmor,	Rinfret,
Burdett,	Guay,	Robertson (King's, P E I),
Campbell (Kent),	Holton,	Robertson (Shelburne),
Campbell (Renfrew),	Innes,	Ste. Marie,
Cartwright (Sir Rich'd)	Jones,	Scriver,
Casey,	Kirk,	Semple,
Casgrain,	Landerkin,	Somerville,
Charlton,	Lang,	Trow,
Cimon,	Lavergne,	Turcot,
Clayes,	Livingston,	Watson,
Cook,	Lovitt,	Weldon (St. John),
Davies,	Macdonald (Huron),	Welsh, and
De St. Georges,	McMillan (Huron),	Wilson (Elgin).—66.

NAYS:

Messieurs

Audet,	Guilbault,	Porter,
Bain (Soulanges),	Guillet,	Putnam,
Bergeron,	Hale,	Reid,
Bergin,	Haggart,	Riopel,
Bowell,	Hall,	Robertson (Hastings),
Boyle,	Hesson,	Robillard,
Brown,	Hickey,	Roome,
Bryson,	Hudspeth,	Ross,
Burns,	Jamieson,	Rykert,
Cameron,	Kenny,	Scarth,
Campbell (Digby),	Kirkpatrick,	Shakespeare,
Cargill,	Labelle,	Shanly,
Carling,	Landry,	Small,
Carpenter,	Langevin (Sir Hector),	Smith (Sir Donald),
Caron, (Sir Adolphe),	Macdonald (Sir John),	Smith (Ontario),
Chapleau,	MacDonald,	Sproule,
Chisholm,	McCarthy,	Stevenson,
Cockburn,	McCulla,	Taylor,
Coulombe,	McDonald (Victoria),	Temple,

Coursol,	McDougall (C. Breton),	Thérien,
Couture,	McKay,	Thompson,
Curran,	McKeen,	Tisdale,
Daly,	McLellan,	Tupper (Sir Charles),
Davin,	McMillan (Vaudreuil),	Tupper (Pictou),
Davies,	McNeill,	Tyrwhitt,
Dawson,	Madill,	Vanasse,
Denison,	Mara,	Wallace,
Desjardins,	Marshall,	Weldon (Albert),
Duchesnay,	Masson,	White (Cardwell),
Dupont,	Mills (Annapolis),	White (Renfrew),
Ferguson (Leeds & Gren.),	Moncreiff,	Wilmot,
Ferguson (Welland),	Montague,	Wilson (Argenteuil),
Foster,	Montplaisir,	Wilson (Lennox),
Freeman,	O'Brien,	Wood (Brooknox),
Girouard,	Perley (Ottawa),	Wood (Westland), and
Gordon,	Pope,	Wright.—109.
Grandbois,

Mr. GRANDBOIS. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Doyon) has voted and I have in my hand a note from the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Joncas) stating that he has paired with him for to-night.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain, explain.

Mr. DOYON. It is true the hon. member for Gaspé, when he left asked me if I should vote. I told him that I thought of leaving myself. I forgot the thing; I did not think I had paired. If it is considered as such I am prepared to withdraw my vote. It was not a private conversation; it was merely while passing here.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Doyon) say that he has paired or that he has not paired?

Mr. Fiset. He does not say that he has paired.

Mr. DOYON. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish that there should be a misunderstanding. The hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Joncas) was passing here, and he asked me if I was going to vote. I said: "No; I think I am going to leave." He said further: "If I should stop here, necessarily, I should vote with the Government." I said: "As for me, I should vote against them." He said: "All right, I am going away." From that I do not understand that I had paired.

Mr. GRANDBOIS. I must say this: That the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Joncas) only left on the express condition that the member for Laprairie should not vote.

Mr. Fiset. How does it happen—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member for Laprairie says that he has paired, and desires to withdraw his vote, I believe that the practice in this case is to allow a member present in the House to abstain from voting, or, if he votes, to withdraw his vote. But if he does not say that he has not paired, and does not wish to withdraw his vote, the Speaker cannot interfere.

Mr. DOYON. So that there should not be any misunderstanding, I prefer to withdraw my vote.
Motion negatived.

RETURN AND GAZETTING OF MEMBERS.

On the Order, to refer the return laid upon the Table of the House by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, relating to the return and gazetting of members, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections to make enquiry into the conduct of certain returning officers and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, &c. (Mr. Mills, Bothwell).

Mr. BLAKE. The Order which has just been called is one upon which there will be considerable talk. My hon. friend will make a statement, and there will be speeches by several others, I think it is rather a late hour to commence such a discussion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on, go on; adjourn, adjourn.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman says there will be a discussion—

Mr. BLAKE. I have said it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, if the hon. gentleman says it in that kind of tone, perhaps we had better go on.

Mr. BLAKE. I am willing that it should go on, if it suits the convenience of the House. I said that my hon. friend was going to speak at some length, and that some others would speak, and upon that ground I suggested that this was not an hour to begin the discussion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, I got up as gracefully as I could to accede to the suggestion, and then the hon. gentleman—as is his habit—made that remark in a very curt way.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sure I am very sorry, for I can assure the hon. gentleman I did not intend to apply it in that way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. All right. I move the House do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10:45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 6th May, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 55) to incorporate the Eastern Canada Savings and Loan Company.—(Mr. Kenny.)

Bill (No. 56) to incorporate the Alberta and British Columbia Junction Railway Company.—(Mr. Shanly.)

Bill (No. 57) to incorporate the Prescott County Railway Company.—(Mr. Scriver.)

Bill (No. 58) to terminate the trust respecting the South-Eastern Railway, to authorise its sale, and to incorporate the South-Eastern Railway Junction Company.—(Mr. Hall.)

Bill (No. 59) to amend the Act incorporating the Alberta and Athabasca Railway Company.—(Mr. Hall.)

Bill (No. 60) to further amend the Act incorporating the Western Assurance Company, and other Acts affecting the same.—(Mr. Cockburn.)

Bill (No. 61) to amend the Acts incorporating and relating to the British Canadian Loan and Investment Company (Limited).—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 62) to reduce the stock of the Ontario and Qu'Appelle Land Company (Limited), and for other purposes.—(Mr. Sutherland.)

Bill (No. 63) to incorporate the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa Railway Company.—(Mr. Kirkpatrick.)

THE BUDGET.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the absence of the Minister of Finance, I beg to say that the Estimates will be laid on the Table on Monday night, and that the Minister has communicated with the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), who has consented to waive his motion, which is the first Order on Thursday, and, with the consent of the House, the Minister of Finance will deliver the Budget Speech on that day—Thursday.

Mr. BLAKE.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT ON THE 18TH INST.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I desire also to say that I have received a memorandum from a member of Parliament, handing me the names of a number of hon. members on both sides of the House, I believe some fifty-eight on the other side and a large number on this side, the two together composing a majority of the members I think, asking that when the House adjourns on Wednesday, the 18th, it shall stand adjourned until the following Wednesday. Thursday is a holiday—Ascension Day—and the House cannot sit. Friday it can sit. Saturday and Sunday we do not sit. Monday we can sit. Tuesday is the anniversary of Her Majesty's birthday, when we do not usually sit; and it has been suggested that as there are only two days, Friday and Monday, on which the House can sit, unless by being over-zealous, the House, when it adjourns on the Wednesday, should stand over until the following Wednesday. I throw this out now for the consideration of the House. I think the majority of the members have presented this proposition to the Government.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT REPEAL.

Mr. CARGILL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 64) to repeal the Canada Temperance Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. CARGILL. As I am a new member of this House I hope hon. gentlemen will pardon me if I commit any breach of parliamentary etiquette. I may give a few reasons why I propose asking for leave to introduce this Bill. My riding, the east riding of Bruce, opposed the introduction of the Scott Act. In the whole county it was carried by a considerable majority. The east riding of Bruce was opposed to it, but had to submit, owing to the majority of the whole county being in its favor. Now, these people feel aggrieved, and my own convictions are that the beneficial results anticipated from the introduction of the Scott Act have not been realised, and, therefore, the general interests of the county would be advanced by its repeal. I know that municipalities which formerly derived a revenue from hotels now get no revenue from that source. In consequence of the passage of the Act, municipalities have had to reduce the assessed value on hotel property about one-half, and when this is the case in municipalities where the people are opposed to the Act, it is a very serious grievance. I, therefore, ask for the repeal of the Scott Act. Some people, of course, consider that the Act will ultimately bring about beneficial results in the interests of temperance. For myself, I do not think that legislation of this kind is at all conducive to temperance—moral suasion is much better. I know that, in driving through municipalities where beer is very largely used, I find the agricultural population in a much better condition, financially and otherwise, than in municipalities where they have adopted the Scott Act, and accept this as evidence that the use of beer is no obstruction to the progress of the agricultural or any other class of the community. As I have introduced this Bill at the request of my constituents, and in accordance with my own convictions, at present I have nothing further to say, but hope the House will give it their serious consideration, and at a further stage of the discussion, after hearing the pros and cons, I may be able to give the House some more information on this subject.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 47) to amend the Railway Act.—(Mr. Pope.)

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 16) respecting the Banff National Park.—(Mr. White, Cardwell.)

Bill (No 20) respecting Public Stores.—(Mr. Thompson.)

SALARIES OF PENITENTIARY OFFICERS.

Resolutions reported from Committee of the Whole (May 4) respecting the salaries to be paid to officers of penitentiaries (Mr. Thompson) were read the first and the second time, and concurred in.

Mr. THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 65) to amend the Penitentiary Act.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman promised to lay on the Table a detailed statement of the savings. I do not ask him to do it this moment, but before the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have it and will send it to the hon. gentleman.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SENATORIAL REPRESENTATION FOR THE N.-W. T.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 17) respecting the representation of the North-West Territories in the Senate of Canada.—(Sir John A. Macdonald)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MILLS. I invite the attention of the First Minister and the Minister of Justice to the wording of the clause that constitutes the Bill. It provides that the North-West Territories shall be represented in the Senate by two members, and that the provisions of the British North America Act shall apply to them. I have looked at the provisions of the British North America Act empowering the Parliament of Canada to give representation to the North-West Territories, and I find that there is nothing in that Act beyond an enabling clause authorising Parliament to grant such representation. Under the terms of the British North America Act of 1867, the moment representation is given, the whole provisions of the Act apply to any representatives of the Territories, either in the House of Commons or in the Senate. It is quite impossible by any legislation of this House to restrain the operations of the British North America Act. Its provisions operate absolutely. In 1868, when we were invited to determine upon what terms and conditions those Territories should be admitted to Canada, I called the attention of the First Minister and the House to the meaning of the words in the 146th section of the British North America Act. I pointed out that it was necessary to state in those terms and conditions upon what terms those Territories were to be erected into Provinces and to have representation in the Senate and the House of Commons, and that when the terms were set forth, and were by Order in Council made part of the British North America Act, then all the machinery necessary to give representation to those Territories in either House would be provided in those resolutions. That opportunity was allowed to go by. The Territories were embraced in the territorial limits of Canada without any such provision for their representation either in this House or in the Senate. When the hon. gentleman proposed to give representation to Manitoba, I think I called the attention of himself and of Parliament to the fact that the legislation we adopted did not constitutionally admit Manitoba to representation in the Parliament of Canada—that it did not establish a Federal relation, and that any law of ours admitting Manitoba to representation in this House, no matter what terms we might set forth, would only make Manitoba a municipality. We could give the Province representation here, but not a constitution that could not be altered or amended. The hon. gentleman admitted the soundness of that contention. The British North America Act of 1871 was passed on a Bill prepared by Parliament. I think the hon. gentleman was at Washington at the time that measure was prepared. I know his colleague, Sir George Cartier, consulted me with regard to its terms. That measure was passed, and Manitoba was granted a Federal constitution. The hon. gentleman last year took another step, I think in a somewhat irregular way—I think it was unfortunate that he did so—and the Imperial Parliament was invited to legislate without being informed by this Parliament what were the precise terms required; and so we have a third British North America Act supplementary to the Act of 1867 and the Act of 1871. In that Act we have a provision made for representation in the House of Commons. Apart from the fact that we had legislated in advance, whether we could give to the Territories representation other than representation based upon population, I need not here discuss. They have a larger representation than their population would warrant, and that representation has been confirmed. I apprehend that the provisions of the British North America Act regarding that representation are in operation, and it would not be in the power of this Parliament to increase or alter that representation in any way. But so far as the Senate is concerned, there are no limitations on the power of appointment; there is no general rule to guide this House that would operate in the way of restraint as to the number of senators to be appointed, other than there would be for the representation in the Commons. But the provisions of the Imperial Act, empowering us to legislate, do not alter or interfere with the general powers and restrictions imposed by the British North America Act of 1867. Therefore, it does not enable us to make operative certain sections of that Act, and to leave others without their due influence or their necessary operation. The fact that these particular sections apply to the Senate does not depend upon any declaration by this House or Parliament; it does not depend upon the sections being set forth in this particular provision of the Act. They depend altogether upon the necessary and paramount operation of the British North America Act itself. We may say that there are to be two senators, we are authorised to say that; we might say there should be more when we make that provision, and the Crown may make the appointment, but what shall be the qualification of those senators we cannot say. The British North America Act says what it shall be. We cannot elude or confirm that by any declaration we may make; what may be the power of those senators does not depend on anything we say. If the provisions of the British North America Act here referred to depended upon this declaration for their operative effect, it is quite clear that, beyond making those men members of the Senate, nothing would be done. If it is necessary to refer to these particular sections to make them operative in the matter, these men would be created members of the Senate after they were appointed, without having any power at all. They would not have the power to vote, they would not have the power to perform any of the functions of members of the Senate, because those powers are not given them. That would, of course, be an absurd contention, but its absurdity depends upon the fact that the clauses of the British North America Act operate absolutely, and require no act upon our part to bring them into operation. So the hon. gentleman will see it is not necessary to refer to any particular sections; if it were necessary to refer to these, it would be necessary to refer to every other, to the 91st as well as to these. Therefore, it seems to me that this clause ought to be recast, and that we ought to rest content with the simple declaration that we propose to give to the North-West Territories two representatives in the second Chamber.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was kind enough to mention to me in private, when this Bill was up before, the objection he has made. I think there is value in that objection. I quite agree that particular reference is not required, and perhaps might encumber the Act, and be liable to the inferences which the hon. gentleman says might be drawn from it. The particular clauses of the Bill were put in by the Law Clerk, but I quite agree with the argument of my hon. friend.

Committee rose and reported, and Bill read the third time and passed.

OXFORD TO NEW GLASGOW RAILWAY.

Mr. POPE moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to take into consideration a certain proposed resolution respecting the railway from Oxford to New Glasgow, Nova Scotia.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman ought to explain his resolution.

Mr. POPE. The object of the Bill which will be founded on this proposed resolution I will explain. It will be with the recollection of the House that a contract was made with what was called the Short Line Railway Company to build a railway from Oxford to New Glasgow. It did some work for a portion of a year. It finally abandoned its work and its charter expired. The work now remains in that position. Considerable work has been done. I think, if I remember rightly, that the first twenty-two miles are graded, twenty miles more are about two-thirds graded, and there is a little done on another twenty miles, but very little, I think. The men on this road, the laborers and others who had done this work, remained unpaid by the company, but two years ago, or thereabouts, a vote was taken in this House, and a second vote was taken about a year ago, which completed the payment of these laborers. Before this was done these people gave a mortgage to the laborers, or to a portion of them—I forget exactly what the arrangement was—as a lien upon the road, and that remained a lien upon the road. That road was transferred to the Government when the Government paid up the laborers. That is the condition in which this matter now stands. The Government, feeling that this road was going to ruin, that the grading that had been done, and the dump which had been made, were all going to ruin, and also a good deal of the other work, bridges and so forth, felt that they must attempt some way of completing the road. They are now proposing to introduce a Bill based upon these resolutions to give them authority to complete this portion of the road.

Mr. BLAKE. It would be well, as this is now become a Government railway, if the hon. gentleman would give us some statement of what the length of the line is, what the estimated cost is, what the outcome is expected to be, and whether we are to work the road as well as make it, and also as to when this new policy was inaugurated.

Mr. POPE. There is no new policy about it. The new policy is forced upon us, if we are to save the work at all. It is the intention of the Government to work this as a Government railway. The supposed cost of the railway, though we have not a very close estimate yet, and we do not know exactly what remains to be done, is something like $1,000,000 in addition to the appropriation.

Mr. MILLS.

Mr. BLAKE. That is $1,250,000 altogether?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the mileage?

Mr. POPE. Between sixty and seventy miles to build.

Mr. BLAKE. And that is without equipment?

Mr. POPE. No, that is for an equipped road.

Mr. JONES. I understood that, during the recent interesting period in Nova Scotia affairs, there was a purchase made by the Government of a piece of road from one of the railway companies to form part of this line. Is that embraced in this Order in Council, or is that extra?

Mr. POPE. No, this does not embrace that. That was for another purpose. That is part of the Pictou Town Branch. It may form a part of this road, or it may not, but the purchase was made for another purpose.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. When was it made?

Mr. POPE. Two years ago.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Two years ago?

Mr. POPE. No, it was completed a year ago.

Mr. BLAKE. When was this arrangement, which it is now proposed to sanction, made?

Mr. POPE. The Government have, since they were obliged to pay off these men, supposed that in the end they would have to take over the road and complete it.

Mr. BLAKE. At what date was it decided?

Mr. POPE. I should say it was decided some time last summer, but I cannot say positively.

Mr. JONES. I am not going to oppose this proposal, but this seems to have been made under a Minute of Council of the 31st January in this year.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear. That is not summer.

Mr. JONES. One would suppose, naturally, that this is carrying out the Minute of Council which is dated the 31st January of the present year, and, during the course of the debate the other evening, when I drew attention to that fact, I was reminded by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) that it was only done in pursuance of the policy of the Government at a previous period.

Mr. TUPPER (Pictou). Hear, hear.

Mr. JONES. I reminded him then that the only legislation on the Statute-book was in the shape of a subsidy which had been granted to that Short Line Company, and that, in consequence of their inability to complete their work, the work had in fact, as is now stated by the hon. the Minister of Railways, entirely collapsed; and it would seem that it was only in view of the elections which were coming on that an Order in Council was issued on the 31st January, only twenty-two days before the election. I am not taking exception to this expenditure at all, but I repeat that it does seem a very fortunate circumstance that these hon. gentlemen, after four or five years, were only brought to a sense of their responsibility to carry on this work a fortnight before the elections came off. I congratulate the Government on having arrived at such a proper conclusion, although at such a late hour, and although the circumstances under which it was arrived at might be regarded with some sort of suspicion. Still, the completion of the road is a very desirable work, no doubt, and I hope it will go on now, as it will be of very great advantage to that part of the country.

Mr. POPE. I thought my hon. friend looked very much pleased about something, but I did not know what it was. I now understand it. But he is very much mistaken. We had decided early last summer that we would complete this work. We supposed, when we made the last arrangement to pay these men, that the road would have to be completed by ourselves.

Mr. TUPPER. My hon. friend from Halifax has alluded to the discussion which took place in regard to this Minute of Council the other evening, and referred to the argument which occurred between himself and myself on this particular question. I would like to explain, in answer to the hon. gentleman's remarks, both then and now, that, as I understood the question, I challenged a statement made by him, which he seems to believe still, that this policy, as now presented to Parliament in definite shape, was first considered advisable and necessary, and decided upon shortly previous to the last general election. Now, what escaped the hon. gentleman's attention, evidently, in connection with the history of this very important railway matter in Nova Scotia, was the action taken in reference, not merely to the road between Oxford and New Glasgow, but in reference to the whole question of the extension of our railway system to Cape Breton. This work is specially one of the most important features in connection with the extension by Government, to which Parliament was pledged before the last Parliament ended, that could possibly be imagined, as it shortens the distance between this part of Canada and the Island of Cape Breton by about forty-five miles, making a short cut through the three finest counties in Nova Scotia, and crossing the Intercolonial Railway, and making a branch which would be remunerative to the Intercolonial Railway from one end of it to the other. I would point out to the hon. gentleman opposite that the reason I challenged the statement that this policy was first mentioned in the Minutes of Council was because Parliament, having taken up this question, first undertook to deal with it by granting very large subsidies, both a money subsidy and again a subsidy formed partly of the Eastern Extension Railway from New Glasgow to Canso, for the construction, not only of that portion now being built in the Island of Cape Breton, but also for the construction of this piece, forty-five miles in length. When a company failed to carry on that great public work and complete it, Parliament deemed it wise to take the necessary steps to construct as a public work the portion in the Island of Cape Breton, and the reason at that time, I take it, that Parliament did not make arrangements to build, then, this piece of forty-five miles between Oxford and New Glasgow, a portion of that general system, was because that portion of the line was involved in difficulties. The company to which I have referred, and which had already begun to build the piece of forty-five miles long, having a contract in reference to it, and having done certain work, failed, and left this matter in a tangle, as far as this portion of the work was concerned. Well, when Parliament took this definite action in reference to the Cape Breton extension, these difficulties existed upon a portion of the seventy miles—I think I alluded incorrectly to it as forty-five miles; it shortens the distance by forty-five miles, but it is about seventy miles long. Parliament had already sanctioned the construction of that portion of this seventy miles as a public work, the piece lying between the town of Pictou and New Glasgow, which, as I explained in the discussion when that matter was before Parliament, is a part of this piece between Oxford and New Glasgow. Therefore, I say that when Parliament having first of all attempted to build this piece of railway, and the portion in Cape Breton by a company, and that arrangement having fallen through, Parliament then took up the very portion to which allusion has been made last, lying between Oxford and New Glasgow, and having built that part of it which was not involved in the title of the company. Since then the rights in that piece formerly owned by the company have passed from the company. The Legislature of Nova Scotia, understanding the great value and great importance of this railway to Nova Scotia, took such action as to ratify a mortgage given by that company to the sub-contractors, and the leader of the Nova Scotia Government, Mr. Fielding, himself introduced a Bill which passed unanimously in that House, arranging for a sale of these rights under this mortgage which had been given informally, to some extent, by the company themselves. But, under a vote of this Parliament, and by authority of the legislation of this Parliament, the Government of Canada obtained the title that was in the sub-contractors under that lien, and under the authority of this Parliament the money was paid for the acquisition of those rights, and therefore all the rights of the company are now almost completely in the Crown. Steps were taken in the courts of Nova Scotia by the company to resist the sale, but the decision of the court has been on two occasions in favor of the Crown against the company. But be that as it may, the matter simply stands in this position through the inability of the Short Line Company that began this work to go on with it, the importance of which the hon. gentleman from Halifax has acknowledged. The Parliament of this country having recognised that, I am glad the Government is now making an application to Parliament which will enable them to go on and construct this work, in which so much of the money of Canada is already invested, and for which there is every justification to induce Parliament to sanction this legislation—legislation which I called, the other evening, the consequence or outcome of legislation already passed, and which may be found in the Acts of two or three Sessions of this Parliament.

Mr. BLAKE. This is another but a striking example of the necessity of the Parliament of the country demanding an entirely different course from the executive Government of the day, with reference to the financial proposals which they lay before Parliament. I very well remember the time at which the first proposal was made with reference to assistance to be given to the construction of this piece of railway—I cannot now recollect the exact denomination, but it was a very large one. The Minister of Finance, no doubt, remembers it, whether it was the Great Short Line, or the European and American Short Line; but it was some magnificent name, very long and very expensive. When the hon. gentleman, then acting as Minister of Railways, proposed to Parliament that they should grant $3,200 a mile as a subsidy, I enquired what grounds there were to believe that the object which he stated would be accomplished, would really be accomplished by the grant which he proposed, apprehensive as I was, that in that, and in many of other cases, the hon. gentleman would lead us along into an expenditure manifold that which he presented to the House as the total expenditure to be incurred, when he asked us to engage in that transaction. The hon. gentleman stated with the greatest positiveness that he had had communications, representations and negotiations with capitalists and able men who were concerned in the company we were to subsidise, and he pledged himself that the results would be satisfactory. The results were very far from satisfactory, and other proposals were afterwards made, and great difficulties, to the bottom of which we have never been permitted to look, were encountered, as to the contract and the relations of the Government to the company; but in the end it happened that some work I believe was done. I know of no law under which the company incorporated for the purpose of constructing the work and failing altogether to perform its work could have a lien upon the enterprise in reference to which some grading was done. But that is by the way. Then after a year or two or three we were appealed to ad misericordiam. We were told there were certain unfortunate persons, laborers and small contractors, along the line, who had invested money in labor or supplies for those people and were unpaid, and were asked to pay those poor suffering people; and we agreed to a vote, which, with the fine sense of humor in which Parliament sometimes indulges on those occasions, was said to be a lien or charge on the $224,000. It was only a charge on our subsidy. And it happened after a time, a little later, we were asked to repeat the operation—I think last Session—and we had to make a second advance on our subsidy to pay many debts on construction. Now we learn, if the hon. gentleman in the statement which he has made has based it on an accurate recollection of the facts, that so long ago as when he proposed to Parliament, last Session, the second grant on account of the subsidy of $224,000, the Government had come to the conclusion that they would have to take up the enterprise and build it themselves. But, although the hon. gentleman tells us that the Government had come to that conclusion, he did not tell us then. He did not state there was any such policy, he did not in the slightest degree indicate to Parliament that that which originally had been a proposed aid of $224,000, not complicated by any question of running the road afterwards, was to be turned into a grant of one million and a quarter dollars, and we were to have the blessing of running it after it was built. There was not a word, a whisper or a suggestion made to Parliament, when it was asked to make this additional advance on account of the subsidy, that the Government saw that their whole plan failed and they would have to execute it as a Government work. Nay, I am almost inclined to believe that the hon. gentleman was not guilty of that surprise upon Parliament, of that undue reticence towards Parliament of which his statement to-day would lead us to suppose he was guilty, for I claim that it was his duty, if the Government had resolved on a change of policy, to have announced it then. There are circumstances which seem to indicate that that was not really the state of affairs. I will now tell the hon. gentleman why I say so. I remember to have read a speech delivered by the Minister of Finance in Cumberland when he sought to woo the suffrages of that constituency once again, just a few days before nomination day, and in that statement—I will not pledge myself to the exact words, because I have not seen it for some time, since very shortly after it was delivered—the hon. gentleman appealed once again to his former constituents and told them that, at Ottawa, when he was asked to join the Government, he made but one stipulation, which was that an Order in Council should be passed and effect given to it for the building of this work as a Government work.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAKE. If that was done in January, if the Minister of Finance made it a stipulation in January, and it was the only stipulation and condition of his joining the Government, I want to know how was it all settled the summer before? Why, there was nothing to do. The hon. gentleman boasted to his constituents that he had secured this boon for them. He told them, wooing their sweet voices: "I was asked to leave my fine office, my handsome house, my position of ease, dignity and consideration, and engage once more in the turbulent atmosphere of Canadian politics, and when I was invited to do so, what did I do? Did I make any stipulation for myself, did I say anything about office, about any arrangement of any kind? Yes, one thing only, and that was with respect to your business. I said I wanted this matter settled." But, Mr. Speaker, it was all settled before; there was nothing to settle. The Government had decided on it six months before, and the hon. Finance Minister, if the statement of the Minister of Railways is correct, was claiming credit under false pretences with his constituents for having accomplished a result which had already, in secret, been decided on by the Government six months before. Now the Minister of Railways tells the House that he does not know the length of the line. Not he—he does not trouble himself about twelve or fourteen miles of railway; he said it is sixty or seventy miles long. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) told us at one time it was forty-five miles, and another time seventy.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. TUPPER. I corrected that.

Mr. BLAKE. I know the hon. gentleman corrected it: he said it was to build seventy, say forty-five miles, or something of that kind. However long it may be, the Minister of Railways said there were sixty or seventy miles to build. When asked as to what it was going to cost after all these years, after we had made payments so long, and made agreements with one company and with another company, and given one subsidy, and settled with one set of people and then with another, and after six months repeated the operation, and when the Government, according to one Minister, determined, in January, to build it, and according to another, arrived at that conclusion a year ago, the Minister of Railways made no reply. We are told that the Government have not got the cost, but that it may be one million or so in addition to the subsidy. It is a matter of no consequence—it is well to leave these matters elastic—what does it matter how much it costs. It is under such circumstances as these that we are asked to proceed. It does seem to me, as I stated in the opening, that Parliament in past days has been wholly remiss in its duties to require close investigation and full information from the Executive with respect to its pecuniary proposals, that information which would enable us to judge intelligently whether the undertaking could be carried out approximately, for the money which is proposed, that the scheme is a feasible one. We have it stated here now by the Minister, that the work, which was to cover a distance of between sixty and seventy miles, would cost about $20,000 a mile. We were told that it was going to be built for $3,200 a mile. Before it is completed the cost will, no doubt, reach $25,000 a mile, six times as much as it ought to have cost, and there is to be set off the profits we are to make on the running of it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I never listen to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, without envying his powers of special pleading, and without envying him the ability he possesses to make the worse appear the better reason. If ever there was a case presented to this House that on its own merits should at once commend itself and receive the candid consideration and the approval of this Parliament, it is the question that is presented to-day. Several years ago I proposed to this Parliament to aid in the construction of seventy-five miles, I will call it, of railway—I have not measured it exactly, I have not the measurement under my hand, but as far as my recollection serves me it is about seventy-five miles long. I proposed to Parliament to grant a subsidy to the European and Short Line Railway Company of $3,200 a mile, for the purpose of constructing a railway from Oxford Junction, on the Intercolonial Railway, to New Glasgow. I can best illustrate to the House the position if I say that that corner of the chamber is New Glasgow, that corner is Oxford Junction, on the Intercolonial Railway, and that corner is Truro. At present the people of the whole of the eastern portion of Nova Scotia, the whole of the great county of Pictou, the county of Guysboro', the county of Antigonish, and the whole of the Island of Cape Breton in addition, have, in order to reach Moncton in New Brunswick, to travel to Truro, and this intersection, taking the hypotenuse of seventy-five miles—that the construction of the road which I proposed to this Parliament to secure—shortens the distance between the whole of that great portion of Nova Scotia and the rest of Canada by no less than from forty to forty-five miles, for every pound of freight and every passenger that is carried. But that is not all, Sir. It brings the Pictou coal fields into nearer communication with Canada, and gives them in distance an advantage of forty-five miles over that they now enjoy, in competing with the Springhill coal fields, which at present monopolise, to a great extent, the supply of the Intercolonial Railway and of these upper Provinces. I say, Sir, if there ever was a case presented to Parliament in which the interests—not of a section or of a small portion of the country, but the interests of the whole of this country—were involved, it was in that proposal to aid in the construction of those seventy-five miles of railway. The hon. gentleman says I was very confident that this company with a very high-sounding name, would be able to accomplish the work. Well, Sir, I was very sanguine. I took the trouble to go to New York with Mr. Schrieber, the Chief Engineer. I availed myself of every means in my power to satisfy myself that the company, with Dr. Green, president of the great Union Telegraph Company of the United States, at its head, would be able and were prepared to carry the work through. I do not profess to be infallible, but I do not expect the hon. gentleman to suppose that, when I make a statement of that kind, I make it on any other than the best information I can give, or to suppose that I am making any other than a candid statement to the House of what I then believed. This company proposed to carry on a grand scheme of communication, intersecting Newfoundland. They had already made a contract for a line across that island, and this was a portion of the scheme for which they were prepared to make a contract. They did make a contract, and I must say, in justice to the company, that the mode in which they expended some $200,000 or $300,000 of their own money, shows that they did it in good faith, and that they intended to complete the line. The contract enabled them to draw a subsidy of $3,200 per mile, on the completion of every ten miles, but they have never drawn a dollar of that subsidy, for, instead of building it in such a way as to be able to avail themselves of the subsidy, they expended between $200,000 and $300,000 of their own money—they say the larger sum—in such a way as not to entitle them to a dollar of the subsidy. They failed in carrying out that great enterprise in which they were engaged; they were unable to obtain the means of carrying it forward, and they stopped work, leaving some $150,000 due to the sub-contractors which they owed to the men who furnished the labor, the food and the materials which had gone into the line. Under these circumstances, the Government of Canada, feeling that this work must be completed at some time, as the Minister of Railways has said, that it was too important not to be carried out, if it could not be carried out by the company—and they were a long time in making the arrangements in France and England, endeavoring to negotiate the bonds, and professing that they would be able at an early date to carry to completion—my hon. friend the Minister of Railways felt that it was right, as no portion of the subsidy had been drawn, to ask the House to allow him to appropriate $150,000 of the subsidy for the company to pay the contractors and the laborers. Not only that, but before I left I came before Parliament again and, after the failure of the company to go on, I obtained a large additional subsidy from this House for the purpose of completing this very road. The House placed in the hands of the Government power, not only to pay $3,200 a mile, but on a full statement of the case to Parliament they authorised the Government to agree to pay $3,200 per mile for the eighty miles in Cape Breton, they authorised this House to give eighty miles of completed railway and its equipment, and the sum of $30,000 a year for fifteen years, for the completion of the road from Oxford to Louisburg and Sydney in Cape Breton. Now, I think if there ever was a case in which the Government had the assurance that they were carrying out in good faith the views and opinions of this Parliament to provide for the construction of a road, it was under the circumstances I have stated. The hon. gentleman knows that Parliament at its last Session provided for the construction of eighty miles of road from Sydney, in the Island of Cape Breton, through to the Strait of Canso, as a Government work, as a portion of the Intercolonial Railway. The hon. gentleman knows that Parliament purchased from the company the road from New Glasgow to the Strait of Canso, and he knows that these seventy-five miles between New Glasgow and Oxford Junction would interpose—provided the company were to take it up and complete it on any terms—would interpose a company in the line of Government railway, extending from Quebec on the one side to Louisburg on the other. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what he would think of a proposal to have a company on the Canadian Pacific Railway, between Ottawa and Pembroke, and whether he thinks that would be likely to promote either the interests of the public or the interests of the road. I would like to ask him whether he thinks that interposing a company between Prescott on the Grand Trunk Railway and some point seventy-five miles up towards Toronto—another independent company—would be for the benefit either of the company or of the public. He would at once say no: that at any cost and hazard, under these circumstances, the company must secure this link which would break their connection. So, the Government, in order to be consistent, in order to consider its own interests, the advantage to the road and the advantage to the public, must take into their hands this portion of the road from Oxford to New Glasgow. The hon. gentleman wants to know why that was not stated to Parliament. Well, Sir, there were difficulties in the way. When the money was paid the Government took over a mortgage, which had been given to the sub-contractors, for the sum of $150,000. That mortgage turned out to be not a legally and duly executed instrument. The company denied the right of their agent to execute it, and so important did the Government of Nova Scotia consider this road, that at once, as the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) has said, a resolution was passed unanimously by the Assembly of that Province, to entitle the Government of Canada to sell under the mortgage for the money which had been expended for labor to the amount of $150,000. I give these facts to show that in the Province of Nova Scotia, as the senior member for Halifax has said, there are no two questions as to the importance and value of this road. When the hon. member for West Bruce (Mr. Blake) takes exception to this, I think he ought to rely on the statement of a former colleague of his own who sits behind him, and who says that he is extremely glad that the Government have taken steps to make this section of the road between Oxford Junction and New Glasgow a portion of the Intercolonial Railway. Well, Sir, the Government were met with a further difficulty. The company served an injunction, stopped the sale and stopped the Government of Canada from getting possession of this work and putting them in position to ask Parliament for the necessary means of completing it; and when I came out here last summer, when I had not the most remote idea of occupying a seat in this Parliament again, feeling a deep interest in this road, and regarding its importance to Nova Scotia and to the whole of this country—for there is not a portion of Canada that has not an interest in securing this connection with the great coal fields of Pictou—I went to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and asked him what step he proposed to take. He said: "We are taking the necessary steps as fast as we can, but we are prevented by the courts." I said: "Now that you have undertaken to build the road in Cape Breton as a Government work, it will be absolutely necessary to make it a portion of the Intercolonial Railway;" and my hon. friend assured me that although he did not know what view his colleagues would take, he himself had arrived at that conclusion, and that the moment the legal difficulties were removed he intended to present that view to his colleagues.

Mr. JONES. What date was that?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say that took place when I was here last summer, when I had not the smallest idea of again occupying a seat in this House, and was looking at the matter purely in the interests of the country.

Mr. KIRK. It was after the June elections.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I cannot help that. I am sure the hon. member for Guysboro' will say that from the first down to this hour I availed myself, both in this House and out of it, of every possible means of securing the completion of that road. When this matter broke down I came back here and asked for a larger subsidy—for what I then believed would be sufficient to secure the completion of the road. I gave every evidence of my interest in the undertaking, and I may tell the hon. gentleman that it was not by the June elections that I was stimulated in the slightest degree to do what I did in this matter. But when I came back to Canada I felt that the first question that would be asked in the county of Cumberland, in the county of Colchester, in the county of Pictou, would be, what do you intend to do with this road? It was very natural that they should do so; a large amount of money had been spent on the road, and they were promised that it should be completed. And I did say to my colleagues, "I want this matter brought to a determination; I want this important question settled, so that we can say to Nova Scotia what the Government intend to do with regard to it." I meet at once the insinuation that there was the slightest desire or intention to use that question in the least degree as an inducement for political support. If I wanted to use it to do that, I would have done as the hon. member for West Bruce (Mr. Blake) did; I would have sent a man of high standing and character in the party down to the country to tell the electors that if they did so-and-so the road would be built, and make it contingent on the success of the Government and the party. The hon. gentleman looks up in surprise. Let me ask him to read the speech delivered by the Hon. Timothy Warren Anglin, when he was sent down to Nova Scotia to organise that Province in the interest of the hon. gentleman. I say that if I wanted to bribe the constituencies of Nova Scotia, to bribe the counties of Cumberland, Pictou and Colchester, I would have adopted the astute policy of the hon. member for West Bruce as delivered to the people of Nova Scotia by the mouth of one of the leaders of the party, who announced that he felt it incumbent upon him to go down there at such an important crisis and speak with the authority that a man should who had taken so prominent a part in the party as himself.

Mr. JONES. He did not come down for that purpose at all. He came down to attend a mining meeting, of which he was secretary.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, I will allow him to speak for himself. He says:

"I felt, Sir, as you happily expressed it, that in the present emergency"—

That is, on the eve of a great general election—

"we have all a common duty to perform, and that if I could, by anything I might be able to say, render services to the great Liberal party in this Province, it was my duty, as a sincere Liberal, and as one who has held a somewhat prominent position in the ranks for some years, to endeavor to discharge my duty to the best of my poor ability."

That is the way he announced his mission to the people of Halifax and the people of Nova Scotia. He proclaimed on the housetops that he held a prominent position in the party, and that in this emergency he felt it necessary to go there and discharge his duty—by doing what? By propounding the policy of the hon. member for West Bruce.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will give the hon. gentleman his words, and then he will see whether he can find breath for a derisive cheer. I say, Sir, you will search the records of public speaking in Canada in vain to find a more glaring, indecent attempt by a party, through an influential member, professing to speak for the leader of that party, to bribe constituencies and provinces wholesale. Sir, we know what the hon. member for West Bruce has done for the Province of Nova Scotia in this House. We know that his policy and the policy of his party has been to do what he is doing to-day—doing his little best to obstruct anything and everything that has been propounded on the floor of this House to advance the interest of the people of Nova Scotia, or to remove that sentiment of dissatisfaction that his party succeeded in creating at the time of the Union. What does he do now? After having done all that he could do here, after having obstructed, after having taken a course that was calculated to intensify whatever dissatisfaction existed in that Province, after having adopted a policy that was calculated to bring about the very thing that every patriotic Canadian of any shade of opinion deplored—that is, a proposal for the secession of one of the most important Provinces in this Dominion from this great Confederation; having, I say, adopted a course that resulted in that, that kept alive that hostility and dissatisfaction, the hon. gentleman, on the eve of a general election, sends down to the Province of Nova Scotia a man who declares himself to be one of the leaders of his party, and who is so intimately associated with the hon. member for West Bruce that he is able, ex cathedra, to propound to the people of Halifax and the Province of Nova Scotia the policy that the hon. gentleman will pursue in the early day when he has control of the public affairs of this country. This, the hon. gentleman does, speaking by the voice of one who could not use the language that he ventured to use unless he had the authority of that hon. gentleman to use it. And I say that alive, keenly alive, as that hon. gentleman is, to the utterances and declarations of the policy that was ascribed to himself, ready as he is to criticise the most minute reference to his public policy, made by whoever it may be made and wherever it may be made—I say it is too late for the hon. gentleman to disclaim the language that I am now going to read, as placed in the mouth of Mr. Anglin, in propounding his policy to the country. He says:

"I am satisfied we could re-distribute the burden so as to make it bear less hard upon the people of Nova Scotia, and so as to bear more fairly upon all the Dominion. We could sweep away the tax upon flour."

Was that the policy of the hon. member for West Bruce?

Mr. BLAKE. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, it was his policy down to a certain period to declare the tax on flour one of the most odious that ever a Legislature fastened on a people, but the time came when the hon. gentleman found himself face to face with the millers of Ontario, and then he altered his policy. Then he found the tax on flour must not be repealed, but should be modified. He would go the full length on corn meal, but flour should stand as before.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman had better read his speech at Malvern, and see whether he there denounced the tax upon flour as one of the most odious imposts ever placed upon a people. He will find there he qualified all that, took it all back, and was prepared then for modifications, not only on flour, but on coal. The man who for seven long years had made this Chamber echo and re-echo with his denunciations of the tax on coal as a frightful injustice to the people, especially to the people of Ontario, no sooner found himself in the presence of the great coal interests of Cape Breton and Nova Scotia than he also took back what he had said for seven or eight long years. It was no longer an odious tax, but a tax that would have to be modified; and as for abolishing it, the gentleman who ran in his interest in Nova Scotia declared he would be prepared to support a duty on coal, and I believe made that declaration with the hon. gentleman's authority. The hon. gentleman's speech at Malvern certainly gave him that authority.

"We can change the character and tone of the whole fiscal policy, so as to materially encourage and revive the commerce of the country, and in that way render important service to the people of Nova Scotia. We can do a little more than that."

That is a general policy that would not appeal quite so strongly to the minds of the electors as the hon. gentleman wished, so he proceeds to add:

"We can do a little more than that. There are some questions between the Dominion and Local Governments as to subsidies, and as to the means placed at the disposal of the Local Government for the carrying out of important railway works."

Would anyone suppose that the hon. gentleman, one of whose principal men goes down to propound his policy to the people of Nova Scotia and tells them if they will put the hon. member for West Bruce in power they will be treated with greater liberality than ever with reference to subsidies—would anyone suppose that, sitting still in the cold shades of Opposition, the hon. gentleman would be the first to raise his voice in denunciation against the application of the hon. the Minister of Railways to carry out the very pledges Mr. Anglin was giving. "They were to have more money placed at the disposal of the Local Government." The gentleman who has been here voting against every increase of subsidy to Nova Scotia; the gentleman who denounced at the very outset the better terms obtained by Mr. Howe and by my hon. friend behind me (Mr. McLelan); the gentleman who at that time endeavored to close the door against the people of Nova Scotia, ever obtaining another dollar, by bringing in a resolution himself to that effect; the gentleman who put forward on the floor, by one of his then ablest lieutenants, the declaration that we required no better terms, and who rewarded that lieutenant with the Chief Justiceship for his able support given on that occasion—for, I say Mr. Wood in this House declared Nova Scotia required no better terms, and he moved a resolution, which received the support of the hon. gentleman, in opposition to anything being done—this gentleman, after all that was done, after everything this Parliament had honestly, fairly, and faithfully done to give fair and efficient support to the great railway interests in the Province of Nova Scotia, sends down his first lieutenant to proclaim that they shall have more subsidies and more means put at their disposal for the promotion of railways, if they will return him to power. He says:

"When Confederation was formed, there was no idea entertained that the Provinces would have to subsidise their railways very largely or undertake the construction and completion of those railways. The idea was that for a long time we should not require those railways that we now have or require. But an entire change in the circumstances of the country must render a change in the financial regulations a necessity also. A Liberal Government, I think, if in power during the next five years, will be able to arrange that question somewhat to the satisfaction of the people of Nova Scotia. Mr. Blake has been accused over and over again of being opposed to Nova Scotia."

So that the hon. gentleman did not content himself with giving his opinion, with giving the views of his party, but he came down to particulars; he used language which he could not have used unless he stood there with the authority of the hon. member for West Bruce, prepared to propound the views with which that hon. gentleman would consent to be bound.

"Now, I have no doubt whatever that if the Liberal Party were in power to-morrow, Mr. Blake would be willing to reconsider the whole plan of Confederation, and not only give you more for your railways, but, according to your necessities, all that you are entitled to. He would be willing to look at the whole question fairly with the eye of justice, not too exacting to the smaller Provinces, but to give them, if possible, a little more even than they are strictly entitled to."

I ask this House if, taking the policy and action of the hon. gentleman in the House on every occasion in which the interests of Nova Scotia have been at stake, on every occasion on which there has been a proposal to do anything to promote the interests of that Province, or to satisfy the expectations of her people—I ask those gentlemen who in this House have known that, from the first hour of Confederation down to this hour, the friends of Nova Scotia have met with nothing but hostility from the hon. gentleman, I ask them what they think, on the eve of a general election, when it is necessary to get—seventeen, was it, that the hon. member for Halifax promised the hon. member for West Bruce? Seventeen if not twenty-one—and, Sir, when it was necessary, when the hon. member for West Bruce was reading from platform to platform in the Province of Ontario the assurances that he had received, assurances from so high and so reliable a source that they could not be doubted for a moment, when he was pledging the support of from seventeen to twenty-one members from Nova Scotia to support the Administration of which he was soon to be the honored leader, he felt it necessary that that past hostility that he had exhibited to that Province, that refusal to do anything that was calculated to promote the progress and prosperity of that important portion of the country, should be modified, and he felt that, as a foundation for obtaining that large support, he must radically change not only his attitude to Nova Scotia, but must go back on the very questions, the very items, that for eight long years, in this House, he had denounced the hon. gentlemen on this side for advocating. He had denounced us for imposing taxes on flour and coal, and he was ready for the sake of office—no, I will not say for the sake of office, because, perhaps, that he does not care much about—but for the sake of power he was ready to go back on his record and to say one or two things: either that he had been wrong for eight years, or that being right, he was prepared to be wrong now for the purpose of obtaining power.

Mr. MILLS moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says I am a special pleader. Which of us is the special pleader? What were we discussing? What proposition was it that I ventured to lay down, in a speech of a few minutes, to the House a short time ago? Why, I pointed to the history of the course that this Administration had pursued with reference to its pecuniary proposals with reference to railways in general, and with reference to this railway in particular. I pointed out that the hon. gentleman himself, who accuses me, forsooth, of special pleading, had told us, had pledged his reputation as a Minister of the Crown, that the scheme he brought down to us would be carried out, that the success of that scheme, which involved an expenditure of only $3,200 a mile, would be assured. It seems that this wonderful scheme was a part of the great European and North American Railway, which rolled out of his lips on that occasion, which he rolled between his lips as a sweet morsel, and he dazzled our eyes and dinned our ears with the wonderful things he was going to accomplish for the expenditure of $3,200 a mile. I told him that the Administration had failed to fulfil the pledges in which they had asked the country to engage in, in that instance, and I told him that, on a second occasion, I had pointed out that he had failed on a former occasion to fulfil the promises which he had made, and that now, at any rate, he had no right to ask us to increase the arrangements for these railways, but that once again a too confiding Legislature had accepted the word of a man who had deceived them once, and had granted what he asked. I told him that that was followed up by a more conspicuous and a more ignominious failure, and that then it was contended that we were obliged to provide a subsidy for the poor sub-contractors and for the laborers along the line, and that was to settle the matter for a Session or two; but then it is well known—what is the use of discussing it—that hon. gentlemen were brought under pressure from the hon. members for Pictou and the other counties in that section to provide for the dissatisfaction which existed in consequence of the failure of the promises of the hon. gentleman. Those that trusted that company trusted it on his certificate. Sitting here as a member of the Government of Canada, he had declared that that company was competent and was responsible, and would build the road, and the people said: We trusted you, we did not trust them, we have lost our money, supply the deficiency, or we will vote against you; and, under that threat and under that terror, Parliament was asked again to supply the money. We did it, but once again a system of deception was practiced, because the Minister of Railways says it was then decided practically that we should do much more, that we should not confine ourselves to the amount which was voted to complete this link, but he had come to the conclusion and had pressed it upon his colleagues and upon the Minister of Finance—he says in the summer—that it was plain, it was inevitable, it must happen, if we were going to do the other thing which this Parliament had voted to do, that we could not leave this undone, that we could not leave the broken link, and that we must have all understood that. I said that Parliament was not supposed to act without any exhibition of frankness and candor by those gentlemen, that Parliament was not supposed to be governed by them as autocrats and commanders, but that they were simply a committee of this House and could not command Parliament without giving sufficient information. But then again we were to be led on by degrees to build the railway in Cape Breton. They said: Build the railways you shall know the rest some other day.

Mr. POPE. When we ask for the money.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, but when the hon. gentleman asks for the money, he says that there was a policy which would involve a further expenditure, but he keeps the rest to himself because he does not want to tell the electors of Canada what the matter is when he seeks their suffrages once again. I strove to draw the moral as to our course in the event of the Minister of Railways of Canada, under these circumstances and at this day, coming down with his record of broken promises, of violated faith, of want of candour and frankness, and being unable to tell us within ten miles what the length of this road is, whether it is sixty or seventy miles, or what it will cost, and calling upon us with a well-grounded confidence, I admit, from the experience of the past, to go it blind, as he would say, once more. The hon. gentlemen says I have always been admirably fitted for special pleading. He has bettered my instruction. He came dangerously near the point once or twice, but he travelled far away, and adopted every recourse to obscure what the plain and simple issue is, what the story of the past and the issue of the present is. He says I was obstructing and opposing this grant as I had obstructed and opposed everything of the kind. I deem it my duty in every case to present to the Commons of Canada what I think is their duty to adopt in regard to any demand of the Ministers, to ask for that full information which will enable them intelligently to judge of the propriety of the ministerial proposals, and to vote as men and not as automatons. That I have done in the past, and, to the best of my poor ability, I shall do the same in future, notwithstanding the failure of past times, in reference to transactions in which I consider it necessary; and I am to be misrepresented as obstructing and opposing, because I call for that information which it is well known is always given in such cases in the Imperial Parliament. I will go on; I will bear the misrepresentation and the misconstruction; I will continue to discharge my duty. The hon. gentleman has said the road is very important. Did I say it was not important? Not at all. The hon. gentleman spent a long time and gave us some of his old speeches, almost in the old words. I remembered them as he rolled them out, about this "Grand European and North American Railway." Some of the old phrases came again as he described the importance of this road. Well, then he says that, last summer, he spoke to the hon. Minister of Railways about it. The Minister of Railways, according to his statement—we have got witnesses now upon this subject—told him that he, himself, had thought it was necessary: he had about come to that conclusion, but he had not presented it to his colleagues. He was not the whole Government, though rather an important wheel, I think, myself, but still, not the whole Government. Of course, he could not say more, so that the thing was not settled, except in so far as the mind of the hon. Minister of Railways had settled down in that direction. The thing was not settled by the testimony of the Minister of Finance; it was not settled by even more than his testimony, by that which makes his testimony absolutely certain—by his own acts six months later; because this happened in the summer. But in the winter, when he came in, he did ask that this question might be raised; he asked for a decision of his colleagues; he called for it, as he acknowledges, and asked that it should be put in proper form; and I trust that what was done in the shape of any Order in Council last January or February, will be laid upon the Table before we go much further with this resolution, so that we may see it. Well, it was the doing of the Minister of Finance, after all. The Minister of Railways decided six months before that he would propose it, but with greater caution, and consideration, and care, than he has sometimes exhibited, he had not done it until the Minister of Finance came up to Ottawa and had accepted a seat in the Government, and was going down to Cumberland, Colchester and Pictou. And, said he, I want to bring the Order in Council down with me to show the electors. And this was his demand, an extraordinary demand it was, for he was in that position that he could have taken almost everything. Do you remember what Lord Clive said, in the course of his trial before a Committee of the House of Commons when they were accusing him of having taken a trifle of one or two hundred thousand pounds from the servile populations amongst whom he was. "Good God! gentlemen," said he, "when I think of it I am astonished at my own moderation;" and in the position of the Minister of Finance I think he might well repeat that observation. Am I certain that that is all? No, Sir, I am by no means certain. If I could only be sure that it was the only Order in Council—I would not merely advise the Minister of Finance to make that his own exclamation, but I would almost re-echo my own expression of surprise. But I expect to have some other and less pleasant surprises; I expect to hear something more. For example, I have another little telegram here. It was not to Nova Scotia this time, it was to New Brunswick. It is dated from Parrsboro', a classic spot in the county of Cumberland, Nova Scotia:

Mr. BLAKE.

"February 11th, 1887.

"To R. O. WELDON, Hillsboro', N.B.

"I intend to submit to my colleagues a proposal to consolidate the branch railways with main line, by which greater economy in administration will be effected, and much greater utility to the country secured.

"CHARLES TUPPER."

In the county of Albert there is a railway or two; there is the Albert Railway, which does not pay its working expenses, but which is furnished with an ample lot of ballast—in a word, with stocks and bonds which are upon the London market at present, although not very quotable. There is another little railway called the Elgin and something railway; but for one or both of these railways, the people of the county of Albert, not a very large county, had given municipal bonuses, and they were interested in the keeping up of the road, and they were interested, also, in being relieved of their bonuses. It was rather a burning question, I believe, in the county of Albert, down to, and sometime before, the 11th February. We are familiar with the road, we know it in the way in which the Parliament of Canada knows a great many concerns—we have loaned it some money, a small sum—I am again astonished at the moderation of the Government—I think it was only $15,000 at that time, a trifle hardly worth spending ten seconds of the clock to talk of, but still we loaned the road $15,000. The road and the general condition of railway facilities were rather a burning question, and consequently it was a very important thing that the people of Albert should know that something was going to be done; and in this case, as it did not concern Cumberland, Colchester and Pictou, which had to be attended to, coûte que coûte, and as to which there must be a decision arrived at, but as it was not quite so important, an Order in Council was not passed, but the proposal was to be submitted to the colleagues of the hon. gentleman, and the hon. member for Albert read, I have no doubt, with that correct emphasis and admirable punctuation of which we have had experience, this telegram, and I dare say he received a round of enthusiastic cheers and very much support from the people of Albert, as having been the happy medium or instrument by which these good things had reached Albert. Now, therefore, I think, for these and for some other reasons, it will be premature for us to congratulate ourselves just at this moment upon the moderation of the Minister of Finance. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman then proceeds to say that I sent Mr. Anglin down to Nova Scotia, and he used a number of his old adjectives and substantives with reference to Mr. Anglin's mission, and what he did, and what he said. Now, it may be surprising, Sir, but it is a fact, that up to the moment the hon. gentleman read some passages from Mr. Anglin's speech, I had never seen or heard of the matter. It may be surprising, but it is a fact, that, so far from my having sent Mr. Anglin to Nova Scotia, we neither had any communication on the subject of his proposed visit there, nor was I cognisant of the fact that it was to take place, nor did I know that it would take place until one day—for it seems I am to relieve myself of the impeachments of these hon. gentlemen by making disclosures which one need not, ordinarily, be called upon to make. His son happens to be a student in my office. I sent a dinner card inviting Mr. Anglin to dinner. His boy came to me with the card, and he said: "Sir, here is the note; I was just going to send it to my father, but he has gone down to Nova Scotia. He has been away a week." That is the first I ever heard of Mr. Anglin going, or intending to go, down to Nova Scotia. But the hon. gentlemen are determined to make Mr. Anglin my deputy. They say he is my ambassador; they say I sent him there. Well, I have told you the literal fact. Now, I do not know, except what the hon. gentleman has read, as to what Mr. Anglin said about it. All I can say is, I repeat that I never had the slightest conversation with that gentleman as to going anywhere, as to his doing any such business, or as to his saying anything of the kind, and whatever he said, whatever he did, was, as I presume, stated from a knowledge of my public utterances of the past, as I know it was not said from any private communication or personal communication to him by me. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman declared that he had there in Mr. Anglin's speech the proof of bribery. Sir, I know Mr. Anglin well. I know him to be a man of judgment, of sober sense, of honor, of candor, and I was amazed to see that even the hon. gentleman's powers of imagination should be supposed capable of constructing any such imago from any words that Mr. Anglin might have uttered. I will tell the hon. gentleman what I believe—as he read, I happen to have a book here which gave me the clue—I will tell the hon. gentleman whence, I presume, Mr. Anglin derived his statement of his views. He derived them from former unworthy speeches of mine, I have no doubt. I have here the statements which I have made each year, which I, the great enemy of the Province of Nova Scotia, have made, not merely amongst my people and on the platform elsewhere, but in this Chamber as well. We had a discussion, I think it was in the year 1884, upon the subject of the proposed railway grants, including an additional grant in respect of the Canadian Pacific Railway through the Province of Quebec, and I said this:

"Now, Sir, I think that the position of the Province of Quebec, as I have pointed out, has demanded for some time past and is now demanding the attention of this Parliament; and for my part I have always been prepared to deal fairly by that or any other of the Provinces, but on the condition of equal and fair justice to all. And I do not suppose my hon. friend from the Province of Quebec, will ask more; all those sitting on the other side though they might view my proposition differently from what I view I do not think they will dissent from the spirit in which I now address myself to them; namely that it is fair and reasonable under these circumstances when a new policy of this kind is being proposed to consider what its real basis is, to consider what the real condition of the other Provinces is relative to that basis and otherwise, and to see whether what is being proposed as it stands, and without applying proper remedies for the application generally of the new principle you propose can be called just. I say, Sir, that for my part I should desire and it is one of the things which is most important for us to consider next to the constitutional character—I should desire that we should address ourselves, very early and very earnestly, to the solution of the question, by the adoption of some plan whereby once for all the question of the Provincial subsidies should be placed on a permanent and lasting basis. I believe it to be destructive of the independence and autonomy of the Provinces that they should be looking to Ottawa for favors, that they should be dependent on the central Government for carrying on their affairs. I believe it to be destructive to confederation itself that a system should continue under which it might be said: 'Oh we will go on, we will expand more, we will go into debt, and when we get to a pass that we cannot carry on any longer, the Ottawa Parliament must relieve us.'"

Then I said this:

"If it be the fact that the Provincial Governments and Legislatures, after an experience of seventeen years, are not in a position financially to discharge those functions which belong to them, the whole subject ought to be reconsidered. If in consequence of their impecuniosity they are unable effectually to discharge their own functions, you may do one of two things. You may say: We propose to alter the constitution so that the Central Government shall take this, that and the other, and so relieve you both of important dignity, power and provincial autonomy, and of expense at the same time; or you may propose a new adjustment of the financial question which will enable you efficiently to continue the discharge of those functions which for seventeen years you have been discharging."

Again I said, referring particularly to Nova Scotia:

"Quebec is in a condition which demands the serious consideration of the Confederation. But she is not alone in that condition. You will find statements made from the Province of Nova Scotia for example, and those who have endeavored to analyse—I know with difficulty, with very great aptitude to her, for want of information—those who have attempted to analyse the expenses of that Province will, I think, find that there has not been a very great deal to complain of in the way of extravagance. At least that was the result of such cursory investigation as from time to time I have been able to make into the expenditure of that Province, and I am not singling out any one Government from another; there has been alterations of government. I do not find that there has been much extravagance or that the expenditure has been in excess to a large amount, if at all, of the demands of that Province. We know, however, that its resources are cramped, that it is more or less in a state of distress, locally."

I have spoken also at other times and in other places, here and elsewhere, on this subject in the same strain. So that I think I have shown that the views I held with respect to the Province of Nova Scotia, the views I held as regards the Provinces, were views not applicable to Nova Scotia alone, but they were views which I stated on the floor of this Parliament, in the presence of my assembled colleagues from all parts of Canada, as open to general discussion, and as applicable to the general condition of affairs. Then the

hon. gentleman declares that my policy has always been a very bad policy for Nova Scotia—that I have always been obstructing it. I am not going to enter to-day into a discussion of matters twenty years ago or eighteen years ago, which have been discussed and threshed out so often, and which the hon. gentleman, being so far removed from a special pleader, thought it fit to drag into this discussion. But I have spoken for a long time in one sense and in one voice with respect to the fundamental constitution and rights of the Provinces. I have not proposed any special plan for relief applicable to one, no principle which I did not think just to all. I believe this, as I said as long ago as 1883 and 1884, is a serious condition, and we ought to address ourselves to it. I think, with one exception only, which I will not complicate this discussion by even naming, it is the most serious difficulty that we in this Confederation have to meet; but I hold myself absolutely blameless from the suggestion of the hon. gentleman that I have been at one time unjust by the denial and at another time unjust by the proposal of a bribe or undue favor, either to the Province of Nova Scotia or to any other Province. Well, then the hon. gentleman, by the way once again of confining himself to the subject and showing that he is no special pleader, drew a red herring across the track; it was not a red herring, but a barrel of flour and a ton of coal. He discussed my Malvern speech. I could not help thinking that there has been a sort of premature delivery—that a portion of the hon. gentleman's Budget speech had been extracted by a sort of caesarian operation. It seemed so to me, at all events, for it did not appear to come out the natural way, and I thought it was by a very extraordinary operation that he was delivered. I am not going to discuss that point at length just now. The hon. gentleman put words into my mouth which I did not say. I stated the condition of things as to our fiscal and financial position earlier than in my speech at Malvern. I stated it in Toronto at the Adelaide street rink. In my speech at Malvern I opened what I said by declaring that I had nothing new whatever in point of principle to state, but having been grossly misrepresented by those opposed to me in politics, I proposed to speak with greater fullness and to explain more amply what had been my policy for the earlier periods and what continued to be my policy. In the course of that statement I repeated and enlarged upon the proposition to which I had alluded briefly in my speech in Toronto, the serious complication that the condition of our finances imposed on us with respect to duties in any proposed alterations of tariff. I showed that in my speech at Toronto I had used different expressions from those I had used in my address to my electors in 1882, and I showed in that respect and I gave the reasons. I did not in my speech use the word "modify," I used the word "reduce," in regard to taxation on coal and flour. The hon. gentleman said I used the word "modify."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Reduce.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman declared that I said that the flour tax was to continue as it was, and now he acknowledges that I said it was to be reduced. But he is not a special pleader, and so we must excuse him. I declared the reason. I pointed to the deficits which the year before last, and last year, hon. gentlemen opposite had imposed on the country, and I pointed to the circumstance that reductions and abolitions of duty which, when there was an overflowing surplus, running from four millions in one year to six millions, the second year and seven millions in the third year, we could fairly and were bound to propose, but which it was absolutely impossible to propose when the finances had been scandalously managed and changed for the worse. That was the condition and that was the circumstance, and any hon. gentleman who will calmly read what I said at Malvern, will see that in no respect did I depart from the settled principle I have mentioned, in no respect did I depart from the single view I have taken, and that only changed conditions and circumstances necessarily for the time modified the application of those principles. Now the hon. gentleman says that I took back my policy, that I declared there was still to be a duty on flour, and on coal, because those two duties were no longer odious. No, I never did so. I have declared both taxes odious, and in the very speech to which the hon. gentleman refers, or to the speech immediately before it, I forget which, but I think it was the one to which he referred, I repeated the language used by me in 1882 with respect to taxes on articles of prime necessity, such as breadstuffs and coal. But, Sir, the people who, by the mal-administration of their rulers, are reduced to a position in which double expenditure and a depleted Treasury oblige them to bear undue burthens, will readily understand that those who are called to consider what the responsibilities of Government are, and who know that the maintenance of the credit of their country is the first object, cannot, under such a condition, do things which they would be glad and willing to do in the condition in which they proposed them and at the time when they ought to have been done. Now, I do not propose to complicate the discussion of the Oxford and New Glasgow Railway by a general discussion. A brief answer was necessary out of courtesy to the hon. gentleman, speaking as a special pleader to a plain man. That brief answer I have made, and I trust I have made it so plainly to him that he will not consider that I deserve a continuance of his criticism with regard to this subject.

Mr. BLAKE.

Motion to adjourn withdrawn.

Mr. KIRK. The question of constructing this railway has been before the House for a good many years. I think this road was first spoken of in a bye-election in Pictou in 1881. In order to carry that bye-election the people of Pictou were promised that, as soon as possible, a railway would be built from Oxford to New Glasgow. When Parliament met after that election a proposition was made to this House to grant a subsidy of $3,200 a mile to construct the road. The Minister of Finance, who was then Minister of Railways, led the House to believe that that amount per mile would be sufficient to construct the road, that it would be all the House would ever be called on to vote for that purpose. Well, Sir, we know that although the hon. Minister of Finance declared that the company to whom the contract was given were sufficiently able to go on with the work, they did not prove to be able to do so, and the road was not built. At the next general election the road was promised to be completed in 1884, but 1884 passed and 1887 came, and yet the road was not built. We all know the difficulties that occurred with regard to that road. We all know that the company failed to build the road with the subsidy and that Parliament was called upon to make good to the contractors, or to the laborers, the money expended on the road, and to pay those men for the work which they had performed. The Minister of Finance says this is an important road. There is no doubt at all about the importance of this road, but to whom is it important? It is important to the counties of Cumberland, Colchester and Pictou, to the districts through which the road passes, but I deny that it is of any such importance as the Minister of Finance pretends it is, to any other section of the country, to Antigonish, Guysboro', Prince Edward Island or Cape Breton. The hon. gentleman says the length of that road is seventy-five miles. I do not know what the length of it is. He has told us it will shorten the distance from Oxford to New Glasgow or Pictou on the present line by 45 miles. I do not know how much it will shorten it, but I have been informed by some of the best and most truthful men of the county of Pictou that it will not shorten it more than between fifteen or twenty miles. Now, when we consider that this road is to be a competing road to the line of railway now built and running by the country it will show the great importance and advantage it is to this country. The seventy-five or eighty miles which are to be built are to shorten the distance between fifteen and twenty miles at the most, according to the best information I have been able to gather with regard to it. I have no objection to the Government building the road; I approve of their building it. When the measure was introduced for the purpose of building a branch line from Stellarton to Pictou, I thought that it was the intention of the Government to abandon the building of this line altogether. I believe that was the intention at the time, and that if the Company would not build it for $3,200 a mile that part of the country was to do without the road. I think I stated my opinion last year when this question of the Pictou branch was before the House in that regard. We know that the Government have been pressed to construct this line from year to year, and that they have refused up to the present to build it. As I have stated, I do not object to their building the road as a Government work, but I claim that it was a corrupt act to pass a Minute of Council before going to the country, pledging the people of Pictou, Colchester and Cumberland that this road was to be built as a Government work. Why was it the Government refused last year to build it as a Government work? How was it that they so suddenly ascertained that it was necessary to build the road? I will tell you what I think about it. It is known that there was an election held in the Province of Nova Scotia for the Local Legislature in June last. That election was run upon the question of repeal, and the Minister of Finance claimed that the leader of the Opposition was the cause of the agitation for repeal in Nova Scotia. I tell him, Sir,—and no man knows it better than he—that that was not the cause. The cause of the dissatisfaction in Nova Scotia was the high taxation imposed on the people; it was the fact that the country was in the first place forced into Confederation without the consent of the people and against their will, the fact that the people were dissatisfied with the financial arrangements at that time, and the fact that those financial arrangements were proved to be insufficient for the public works of the Province. Those were the reasons for the dissatisfaction in the Province of Nova Scotia. Appeals have been made to this Government, time and again, asking for relief from the distress in which the Government of Nova Scotia found itself. Application was made in the fall of 1879, or the early part of 1880, by the Government of Nova Scotia, of which the hon. Minister of Justice was a leading member, if he was not the actual leader. That Government memorialised this Government on the question of better terms or an additional subsidy to enable the Government to carry on their local works. The Government pointed out truly that they were hampered for want of means, that it was necessary to have quite a large accession to the revenue, or otherwise they would require to resort to direct taxation to carry on their public works. This Government paid no attention to the appeals of Nova Scotia at that time, and the Government of Nova Scotia, which was a Conservative Government, did not renew those appeals. They went to the country in 1882, and were defeated. A new Government came in, and they renewed the appeal for better terms. No attention was paid to it by this Government. The last appeal was in 1885, when they pointed out that the dissatisfaction with regard to the terms of Union was greater than than it had been in 1867; but this Government, after taking twelve months to consider, returned an answer to the Nova Scotia Government to the effect that it was not true that the people were more dissatisfied with the terms of Union than they had been in 1867. Then, the Local Legislature, during the Session of 1886, passed a resolution asking the people of Nova Scotia to decide at the polls whether they wished to continue in the Union or not. Under those circumstances, on the 15th of June, 1886, the people declared by an overwhelming majority that they wished to withdraw from the Union. Well, Sir, I think that had something to do with the action of this Government in afterwards passing those Minutes of Council in reference to railroads. The Government of the Dominion could not avoid seeing that something had to be done, in order to carry the elections if they were brought on soon. What did they do? They had sent down in June, from here, two members of the Cabinet, the Minister of Justice and the then Minister of Finance, who is now Postmaster General, in order, if possible, to defeat the Local Government at the polls. Those gentlemen went into several counties, made their speeches and used what influences they could. They sent their officials to the agents of the candidates opposed to the Government with bounty checks for the fishermen; and those agents went into the polling booths on the day of the election, presented the fishermen with their bounty, telling them it would be the last check they would ever receive if they supported the candidate favoring Mr. Fielding's Government. But notwithstanding all the influences these Ministers and their officials could use throughout the Province, they were overwhelmingly defeated at the polls. Therefore, something had to be done, and what was done? They sent to London and brought over the Lord High Commissioner, who had been luxuriating in pleasures and palaces, and sent him to Nova Scotia to retrieve, if possible, the falling fortunes of the Government. He was shrewd enough to see that something must be done, and he came to Ottawa and got this and other Orders in Council passed containing promises to build railways here, there and everywhere in the Province of Nova Scotia in order to carry the election.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman let me say that this was the only one?

Mr. JONES. For that purpose?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, no; this was the only Order in Council passed after my arrival touching any railroad in Nova Scotia.

Mr. KIRK. When was the Order in Council passed with reference to the Western Counties Railway?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Long before I came; certainly not after.

Mr. KIRK. It may have been long before the hon. gentleman came, but it was not made public until after the writs were issued, and it was not intended that it should be made public until the proper time came. It is not against the Order in Council being passed for this work that I protest, but the time that it was passed and the purpose for which it was passed, that, is to corrupt the electors of the three counties through which it would pass. But the hon. Minister of Finance did not consider that even that was sufficient to carry the county of Pictou. During the election he went down into New Glasgow in that county. Perhaps he went there from natural love and affection for one of the young gentlemen who was running in the interest of the Government in that county; and I understand that the hon. gentleman made other large promises there. I have been told, I do not know how truly, that the Minister of Railways had promised to keep the ferry running in Pictou harbor; and every hon. gentleman who was in this House last Session knows that the condition under which the Government undertook to build a branch railway from Stellarton to Pictou was that the ferry should be taken off, and that the line from New Glasgow to Fisher's Grant was not to be run in the same expensive way that it is now.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I assure the hon. gentleman that I never uttered a word in reference to the ferry at Pictou harbor, nor was the matter mentioned to me or anybody while I was in Nova Scotia.

Mr. KIRK. I am well aware that the hon. gentleman made no such statement on a public platform, but I am told that in a private room, among his leading friends—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I assure the hon. gentleman that he has been misinformed. Pictou harbor, so far as my recollection serves me, was not mentioned while I was in Nova Scotia.

Mr. CASEY. His recollection may be at fault.

Mr. KIRK. I know that the hon. gentleman's memory in cases of that kind is quite treacherous. Other promises were made, and made for what purpose? Corrupt promises to induce a candidate who was in the field to withdraw and allow the election to go by default. Will the hon. gentleman deny that he promised in a room in New Glasgow that the terminus of the Short Line Railway, and the branch from Pictou to Stellarton should be made at or near New Glasgow, and not at Stellarton, although there had been already built at Stellarton quite an extensive building for terminal purposes? It is said that the hon. gentleman did make such a promise, in order to induce a candidate who was then running to withdraw from the field in the interest of his party. But the hon. gentleman did not succeed. Now, while I approve of the Government building this line, I do not do so because I believe it to be of such great advantage to the whole country as the hon. gentleman makes out, but because it will be a convenience to the three counties through which it passes. It is of no advantage that I can see to any other county at all. I live in Guysboro', and I know that the people of that county do not regard it as of any value to them. The genial member for Pictou the other day approved of the passing of this Minute of Council and making it public during the time of the election. I consider it a corrupt act, and I believe in the words of a reverend gentleman who support hon. gentlemen opposite, that you might as well defend Sodom as defend such a transaction as that.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 34) to incorporate the Chinook Belt and Peace River Railway Company.—(Mr. Davis.)

Bill (No. 35) to incorporate the Berlin and Canadian Pacific Junction Railway Company.—(Mr. Bowman.)

Bill (No. 37) respecting the Regina and Wood Mountain Railway Company.—(Mr. Davin.)

Bill (No. 39) to authorize "The Grange Trust (Limited)" to wind up its affairs.—(Mr. Masson.)

OXFORD TO NEW GLASGOW RAILWAY.

House resolved itself into committee on resolution (p. 273) respecting the railway from Oxford to New Glasgow, Nova Scotia.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say he has a survey of this line.

Mr. POPE. We had a survey deposited with us.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it an exploratory or location survey?

Mr. POPE. About two-thirds of it location.

Mr. KIRK.

Mr. BLAKE. Is the estimate which the hon. gentleman mentioned about $20,000 a mile?

Mr. POPE. About that.

Mr. BLAKE. What proportion for equipment?

Mr. POPE. The usual proportion, about $2,050.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman formed any idea as to the length of time the work is to take, and how soon it is proposed to let the contract?

Mr. POPE. We will go on with the work this summer gradually and hope to have it completed by the time the other parties have completed the work in Cape Breton.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman lay the Order in Council on the Table, as we may have to refer to it.

Mr. POPE. Certainly.

Mr. KIRK. Is it the intention of the Government to pay the right of way for this railway?

Mr. POPE. So far as built along our location in Cape Breton, we pay the right of way. I do not know whether this right of way has been paid for or not, but if not we shall have to pay for it.

Mr. KIRK. Has the Government decided where the terminus is to be at the New Glasgow end?

Mr. POPE. No.

Resolution to be reported.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 21) to amend the Act respecting Public Morals and Public Convenience.—(Mr. Charlton.)

PUNISHMENT OF SEDUCTION BILL.

Mr. CHARLTON moved that the Order for second reading of Bill (No. 4) to amend the Act to punish seduction and like offences, and to make further provision for the protection of women and girls, be discharged, and the Bill withdrawn.

Motion agreed to, and Bill withdrawn.

TELEGRAPHING SHIPPING NEWS FROM POINT ESCUMINAC.

Mr. CHARLTON in the absence of Mr. MITCHELL, asked, Whether the Government have issued instructions to the proper officer at the Port of Miramichi to report ships and vessels arriving off Point Escuminac, as well as general shipping news, over the Government telegraph line between said Point Escuminac, as was done last year? And if not, whether they intend to give the necessary order to report such vessels and shipping intelligence, between the said Point Escuminac and the town of Chatham and Newcastle, in the said Port of Miramichi; and if not, why not?

Mr. FOSTER. I answer the question in the affirmative.

BREAKWATER AT FIFTEEN POINT, P.E.I.

Mr. LANDERKIN in the absence of Mr. PERRY, asked, What is the sum estimated by Mr. Perley in 1879 as the probable cost for building a breakwater at Fifteen Point, in Prince county, Prince Edward Island?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $5,500.

THE DAVID J. ADAMS.

Mr. WELDON (St. John) asked, Has the case against the David J. Adams, in the Admiralty Court at Halifax, been heard? Has any judgment been given? If not, what has been the occasion of the delay?

Mr. THOMPSON. The case had not been heard. The occasion of the delay is this: The evidence was taken in the cause during the early part of last summer, and, at the instance of the counsel for the Crown, a day was fixed in the month of July, before the judge of the Court of Vice Admiralty, when the trial should take place. When the trial was fixed, application was made on behalf of the defence to have a commission issued to take the evidence of a number of witnesses who would not return to their homes, being engaged in fishing, until the fall. Therefore, the commission was delayed until late in the year, and then the engagements of the judges and the counsel made it impossible that the case could be heard. In the meantime, it was agreed between the counsel for the Crown and the defence, that the cause should stand until the day was fixed for hearing the case of the Ella M. Doughty. The evidence in the latter cause has just been completed, and I have been informed that an application has been made for the two cases to be heard together.

ST. LAWRENCE CANALS.

Mr. BROWN asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to enlarge the St. Lawrence Canals, so that vessels of as large a capacity as those passing through the Welland Canal can proceed through the St. Lawrence Canals without breaking bulk?

Mr. POPE. Some considerable work is being done every year on the St. Lawrence Canals. It is not the intention of the Government just now to bring down a very large appropriation after the very large expenditures we have been making, but the Government have every interest in continuing the enlargement of those canals.

TOBACCO DUTY.

Mr. BOURASSA, in the absence of Mr. BEAUSOLEIL, asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to grant a fair measure of protection to the tobacco-growing industry by abolishing the duties and license fees now imposed, and allowing farmers to sell their tobacco to manufacturers of tobacco and cigars, who also make use of foreign tobacco, without an increase of duty, or by granting a bonus for the cultivation and manufacture of Canadian tobacco, or otherwise?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not able to make any statement affecting the Tariff before the Budget is brought down.

THE "JAMAICA" PULLMAN CAR.

Mr. SOMERVILLE moved for:

Return showing the expenses, if any, in detail with dates incurred, by the several members of the Government, and any other person or persons accompanying them, charged on account of travelling expenses while journeying in the "Jamaica" Pullman car, together with a statement of all sums paid by Ministers to any, and to what, railway corporations for use of said car, and transport of same over their roads, and all incidental expenses of any description connected therewith, from the 30th day of June, 1886, to the 1st of April, 1887; also a return showing all other travelling expenses, in detail, of the several members of the Government, and of Sir Charles Tupper, High Commissioner, from the 30th June, 1886, to 1st April, 1887.

He said: The people of Ontario are pretty well aware of the number of trips which were made by the right hon. the leader of the Government and his colleagues during last summer and autumn and winter in this well known Pullman car "Jamaica." I have no desire to have a minute statement of the expenses incurred by the hon. gentlemen in their trips through the country for the purpose of making converts to their particular political views, because I do not think it would be well to enquire into the details very closely. I would not care, for instance, to know whether the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries refreshed himself with high class wines, or was satisfied with Carling's ale, or took pure water during the trips he made on those occasions. I do not wish to have the details of the expenses incurred by the First Minister when he visited the Indian reserves for the purpose, as Superintendent General of the Indians, of influencing them to record their votes in favor of what he supposed to be good government in this country. But I think if expenses were incurred by members of this Government in those trips throughout the Province of Ontario, which were not only intended to influence the Dominion elections, but which were intended to influence the Local elections which took place prior to the Dominion elections—I say, if such expenses were incurred, the people ought not to pay them, but if expenses were incurred which the people of this country would have to pay, I think it is due to this House and to the people of the country that we should know the amounts which were expended by these gentlemen in their peregrinations throughout the country in what was known as the celebrated chestnut combination. I believe that was the title bestowed upon the hon. gentlemen on that occasion when they visited the rural constituencies in Ontario for the purpose of influencing the elections. I think it is due to the people of this country and due to the members of this House, that we should have as soon as possible, details of the expenses of those excursions which were made. I know that Ministers of the Crown ought to be allowed all reasonable travelling expenses when they are discharging the duties of their several departments; I do not think this House or the people would expect a Minister of the Crown to incur expenses connected with his Department in travelling over the country, without meeting the bill. But if these hon. gentlemen expect that the country ought to pay their personal expenses when they are on electioneering tours, I do not think that the idea will commend itself to the people who have to foot the bill. Then, with regard to other expenses of the Ministers, I think it is well that we should have a return brought down at as early a date as possible. Last Session I asked for a return in connection with such expenses, and up to this time, at least according to the report of the Secretary of State, that return has not been brought down. I do not think that is paying proper attention to the requirements of Parliament, because if we pass an order that a return should be brought down, I think that we ought to have it brought down in some kind of season. And then with regard to the High Commissioner, I think it would be interesting to the people of this country to know something with regard to his travelling expenses. We all know that since he has been appointed to that high position in England, he has made several flying trips to this country. We know that on the last trip he made to this country, when he came over, as he stated to a reporter in New York, he had no idea that an election was impending in this country. Since that time we have learned that he took an active part in the election, and I think it is due to the people of this country to be made aware of the facts in connection with his visit here. If he came here as an official of the Government, as High Commissioner in the discharge of the duties of that office, of course we ought to pay his expenses; but, if he came here with the purpose of assisting in the election campaign, I think it is right that he should pay his own expenses. We all know, Mr. Speaker, that the High Commissioner enjoys a very handsome salary in his office in London. He gets $10,000 a year, and I see by the Public Accounts this year that he is paid no less a sum than $3,609 76 for contingencies. Now, if he sees fit to come to this country to assist the right hon. leader of the Government in his electioneering campaign, he ought to pay his own expenses. Altogether

I think that this return which I am asking for, if it is brought down at an early stage, will prove an interesting return, and will afford this House and the country information which they are desirous of obtaining. I, therefore, urge on the members of the Government to see that this return is not delayed, that we have it early in the Session, and that it is not treated in the same manner as the motion which I made during the last Session.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope the motion will be granted, because it is quite right the hon. gentleman should have his laudable desire of knowledge gratified. The return will be brought down immediately, and I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman will find great satisfaction in perusing it. My other colleagues may speak for themselves, but I may as well say that between the dates mentioned, the Government has neither paid, nor will pay, for the use of that car, or any car, or for travelling expenses of any kind, nor for my food, or clothing of any kind. I paid my own expenses.

Motion agreed to.

MR. JOHN CREIGHTON, INDIAN AGENT.

Mr. SOMERVILLE moved for:

Return showing the date of Mr. John Creighton's appointment as Indian agent at Saugeen; the date of his removal from office; the nature of the charges preferred against him, and all correspondence connected therewith.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The date of Mr. Creighton's appointment was 20th September, 1882; the date of his ceasing to be a public officer, was the 22nd of April, 1885. As to the charges that were made, if the hon. gentleman will give an explanation, and the reasons why he asks for the charges, I may, perhaps, agree that he shall get them.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would say that we have heard a great deal in connection with North-West affairs about the misconduct of Indian agents, and I have been informed, I do not know how correctly, by parties on the ground, that this gentleman, who has some eminent connections in this country, has been guilty of similar offences to those which have been charged against Indian agents in the North-West. For this reason I was requested to ask for this return, and I cannot see that there can be any objection to bringing it down.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If it had been a complaint made by the party who was removed, a complaint made to the House, and an appeal to Parliament, I might, perhaps, yield to it, but I do not see there is any reason why I should agree to this portion of the motion.

Mr. BLAKE. That seems to me a very extraordinary doctrine. I think we have a right to know what the conduct of a public officer has been. I think the Parliament of the country has a right to know what has been the course and the conduct of the officials whom we authorise to act in our behalf. Under the same general doctrine of the hon. gentleman, we may not know what the misconduct of any public officer has been if he has been removed from office, unless the hon. gentleman himself chooses to say that we shall know, or unless an application is made on his behalf. I say the public has a right to know in what manner the public affairs have been conducted. And the hon. gentleman's statement is that we should be kept entirely in the dark, unless the person presumably in the wrong should himself ask that an explanation be given as to his removal.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This House desires to know whether this officer has been properly or improperly dismissed. It is not an impertinent action on our part to seek to know what has been the conduct of the Government in regard to one of their officers, and the reasons why he was dismissed. If a competent officer performs the duties of an office efficiently, we naturally want to know why the Government dismissed him. If it was not for improper conduct on his part, we want to know why he was dismissed; and it is the duty of the Government to allow members of the House to know the grounds on which they remove public officers. It was not an unreasonable but very proper request, and the Government should grant it, not only in the interests of the country but in their own interest.

Mr. SOMERVILLE.

Mr. MILLS. I think the doctrine laid down by the First Minister is one which is altogether untenable. The statement is made that a certain public officer has been improperly dismissed. The officer may have committed a wrong; the Government may be justified in dismissing him. But the Government are discharging certain public duties, they are trustees of the public, and they are responsible to this House and the country for the proper discharge of their duty. It is a reasonable proposition that the House should be placed in possession of certain information in regard to the dismissal of that officer. The position taken by the First Minister is that if the party himself complains, he is willing to disclose the grounds of his dismissal; but, if not, it is none of our business and we are not entitled to know. I do not think that the hon. gentleman when on this side of the House propounded that doctrine. My impression is that he insisted upon having information with respect to every public act of the Government and the dismissal of public officers, such being a public act, which the Government might be called upon by the House to justify.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will be found that when persons hold office during pleasure, the Crown can exercise its pleasure, and the House of Commons is not to be a court of appeal.

Mr. MILLS. The dismissal of a county court judge could not be questioned in this House under that doctrine.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I find that the Home Secretary, Sir James Graham, opposed a motion of this character, giving, however, an explanation of the matter complained of, while protesting against such a course being followed, and as the result the motion was withdrawn. Hon. gentlemen will find that in respect to officers holding office during pleasure, the Crown exercises that pleasure, and the House of Commons is not to be a court of appeal. If hon. members will look into the authorities they will find that such is the case. If any hon. member will rise and state that the public officer committed a crime, and move for the papers, we will bring them down; but this is a mere matter of curiosity on the part of the hon. member. The language of the hon. gentleman shows why he made the motion.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The hon. gentleman is laboring under an erroneous impression in regard to my motive in making the motion. It is not from any feeling of curiosity whatever. I consider I am discharging a public duty in moving it, and the members of the House, the people resident in the constituency where that gentleman held office, and the people of the country generally are entitled to the information which I ask. It is not, I repeat, from mere curiosity or any such motive, but in the discharge of a public duty, that I move the motion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What is the duty? If the hon. gentleman will state in his place that this person has committed any crime, we will bring down the papers; or that he is informed that he has committed any defalcation, or the party himself complains and states that he has been improperly used, if there is a prima facie case, then we will bring down the papers.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It is quite evident from the trouble taken by the First Minister to attempt to conceal the information I am desirous of obtaining, that it is advisable the House should secure it, and therefore, I think, the motion should be carried.

Mr. DAVIN. The contention of the hon. gentleman who has moved this motion is, that after a public officer has been dismissed and after he has ceased entirely to be connected with the Government, if from any motive, wholly apart from the man, a motion of this sort is made, it ought to be agreed to. That is the contention of the hon. gentleman and it is also the contention of a far higher authority in this House, the leader of the Opposition. It is palpable that a great and grievous wrong might be done to a public officer if such a contention were allowed to prevail. A public officer who had served his country faithfully for some years might be guilty of an error or offence and be dismissed and have afterwards entered into some new undertaking and prospered in life, and yet from other motives altogether, because the hon. gentleman who has brought forward this motion says it has no connection with Mr. Creighton—

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to impute motives.

Mr. DAVIN. I imputed no motives.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I claim that no hon. gentleman has a right to impute motives to me.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not understand the hon. gentleman to impute motives to the hon. gentleman, the mover of this resolution. On the contrary, I understood that the hon. member was complaining that the hon. the mover of the resolution had stated no motive or reasons for the production of the papers voted for.

Mr. DAVIN. I imputed no motives whatever to the hon. gentleman. If he remembers the language he used when he proposed this motion, it was this. I will quote it from memory and I think I will quote it with tolerable exactness. He said that charges had been made against the Indian agents in the North-West; that this man Creighton had, according to rumor, been guilty of similar offences, and he wanted to have the information as to the circumstances attending the dismissal of Creighton brought down to the House. For what purpose? For any purpose connected with Creighton? Not at all. It was to throw some light on a question wholly apart from that. I say that if the principle that is behind the contention of the hon. gentleman were to be adopted in this House, a great wrong might be done to persons who would be placed in the position that their case might be dragged here on the floor of Parliament for no other purpose than to hit some body over their mangled carcase. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) laughs. On the question in the interest of which the subject is brought forward, he is about—I do not think it is an unparliamentary expression—the most benighted hon. member on that side of the House. Now, Sir, the hon. the leader of the Opposition takes what at first sight appears to be an unassailable position. I consider that the leader of the Opposition, in standing up and saying that this House has a perfect right to learn all about its officers, that it has a perfect right to know why an officer is dismissed, that it has a perfect right to know all about his conduct, to know what motive has governed Ministers in taking a given course, occupies an unassailable position. But when he is buttressing up the motion made by the hon. gentleman who brought forward this question, when he does not dissent from the reasons given by that hon. member for bringing forward this motion, he must be assumed to have adopted the reasoning of the hon. gentleman, and therefore he is in the same vulnerable position as that occupied by that hon. gentleman. That is to say, he occupies the ground that it is a fair and proper and right thing to ask for an enquiry into one circumstance in order to affect an end wholly apart from that.

This man Creighton has been dismissed from the service now for two years. It is perfectly clear that the position taken by the First Minister is a sound and wise and humane position; and not only that, but I venture to say it is a position which will be supported by parliamentary precedent. The right hon. gentleman says that if any one comes forward in the interests of Creighton, if Creighton complains, it would be a proper thing to accede to the request of the hon. member who brought the matter before the House; and although he does not go as fully into it, it is palpable that this was in his mind—that it would be an unjust thing if we were to go into an enquiry of this kind in order to accomplish a side issue. Now, Sir, I hope the House will not consent to the motion of the hon. member. If he wants to get the information on this subject that he seems to be so anxious about, the proper thing for him to do is to make a motion straight and above board. And let me say this: that if hon. gentlemen opposite wish to go into that question, there are now three or four members in this House that thoroughly understand it. And I can tell you that nothing helped to elect the four members who have been sent down here from the North-West Territories more than the mendacious, foul, unjust charges—

An hon. MEMBER. Draw it mild.

Mr. DAVIN. I really cannot draw it mild, because the offence was not mild.

Mr. WELSH. Go it strong then.

Mr. DAVIN. Nothing helped these members more in their election than the charges made against the Government policy in the North-West—and above all the charges with regard to Indian matters—by an hon. gentleman who is no longer in this House.

Mr. RYKERT. Ananias.

Mr. DAVIN. Is that what you call him here? I call him the late hon. member for Huron. His fate is to some extent deeply tragic; there was a sort of irony in it too, because his charges were the battle cry of the Reformers in the late election. He flung forth the boldest banner of all the lieutenants of the hon. gentleman opposite, and to day instead of crossing swords with the hon. member for Cumberland, or fighting the right hon. Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, he is politically dead.

Mr. MCMULLEN. He will rise again.

Mr. DAVIN. Will he? At present he has been stretched on his bier in consequence of having had too much Porter—a most unheroic ending for a gallant political knight.

Mr. MCMULLEN. It was the gerrymander.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, Mr. Speaker, let hon. members go into that question, and I can promise them that before they are through with it they will be heartily sick of the matter. But if the hon. gentleman wants information on these points let him boldly come forward and move a resolution which will bring them up. If I am not travelling beyond the record—and this point was raised by the hon. gentleman who brought forward this motion—I can tell the House that when those charges were first made about the conduct of these officials—charges with regard to the management of Indian affairs, starving Indians and so on, I went myself on a reservation, I saw the food which they had received, I had it cooked and I ate it, and all I can tell you is that the charges were excogitated out of the moral consciousness of Mr. M. C. Cameron.

An hon. MEMBER. Immoral consciousness.

Mr. DAVIN. I don't know whether it was immoral or not; I don't pry into these matters. I haven't the curiosity that excites the bosoms—the extremely fine bosoms—of hon. gentlemen.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it would be better if the hon. gentleman would confine himself to the question which is before the House.

Mr. DAVIN. I am glad you called me to order, because I do not like to travel outside the record. To return to the question before the House, I may say that if the motion goes to a vote I will certainly vote against it, because I believe that by passing such a motion we would be setting a precedent following which we might one day do great and grave and most unjustifiable wrong to an officer who might have served the Government well, but having committed some fault, and been dismissed, might be doing well in private affairs, and who would thus be done an incalculable injury by the matter being brought before the House in this way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Looking at Todd, I find the doctrine recently laid down, and acting within the text, I think the hon. gentleman might, by putting this question in the right way, get all the information it is proper to give him. Here is what Todd says:

"But while, as a rule, any direct interference by Parliament with the exercise of the prerogative of the Crown in the appointment, control, or dismissal of public servants, would be unconstitutional, unless under the peculiar circumstances already indicated, when it may become the duty of Parliament to tender advice on the subject; it is nevertheless agreeable to usage for enquiries of Ministers, or desultory discussion to take place in either House, in reference to the appointment and control of office holders, in particular instances, when a direct motion on the subject would be objectionable. In this way opportunity is afforded to the Administration to explain and defend the propriety of appointment which may have been subjected to misrepresentations by the press or the public at large."

I suppose that truly lays down the doctrine that no motion of this kind should be made, except for the distinct purpose which is indicated in the text. If the hon. gentleman will put it in the way of a question I may say, to end the discussion, that Mr. Creighton was removed because he was irregular in his habits, and because he was trading with the Indians, although he was an Indian agent.

Mr. BLAKE. I had no idea that the hon. gentleman was about to dismiss the motion, so that I have not had an opportunity of refreshing my memory as to precedents. I remark, however, that what the hon. gentleman read from Todd, has reference to a different branch of the whole subject, namely, to the somewhat fine distinctions, which I think are getting a little more out of date as democratic notions are prevailing, as to cases of interference with the discretion as to appointments and removals. But this is not a proposal which will, as I understand it, invite the Crown either to appoint or remove a particular individual. It is simply a proposal to obtain information as to the grounds on which the Crown has acted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That I think is wrong.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says he thinks it wrong, and he has just now given us the grounds. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) seemed to suppose that there was some ulterior motive in this matter. All I have to say is that I heard of Mr. Creighton for the first time when I heard the hon. gentleman read his motion. I know nothing but what I have heard in the House, and I am concerned only in what I regard as a legal principle. As the hon. leader of the Government has stated his view of the principle, I would recommend my hon. friend to ask leave of the House to withdraw the motion, which will prevent our setting a precedent one way or the other, and will leave him free to move it again at an early day if he should be so advised.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. All right.

Motion withdrawn,
Mr. DAVIN.

THE CLOSE LOBSTER SEASON IN NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. FLYNN moved for:

Copies of correspondence in connection with the lobster fishery and close season in the Province of Nova Scotia.

He said: In making this motion I desire to draw the attention of the Minister to the difficulties and drawbacks under which the lobster fisheries are carried on in Nova Scotia in consequence of the impossibility of the fishermen taking advantage of what is considered the fishing season. Under the regulations of the Department they are allowed four months to fish, and the close season lasts eight months. The fishing season commences on the 1st of April and terminates on the last of August. On the southern coast of Nova Scotia it is practically out of the question to fish at all in April, during which month the coast is, as a rule, completely surrounded with ice. It is even rare that they can commence their fishing operations on the 1st of May, and frequently they cannot do so even then. Not long ago they could not commence until near the 1st of June. This very season, even to this date, according to late advices I have received, the ice is on the coast, and the fishermen are unable to get to the fishing fields. Therefore, while they are supposed to have four months in which to fish, they do not really have more than two and a half months in any year. In consequence of a similar statement having been made to the Department some time ago, I believe the people of Prince Edward Island were allowed an extension to some time in the month of August. The very reasons which exist for giving an extension of time to the fishermen of Prince Edward Island exist also for giving an extension of time to the fishermen in the southern part of Nova Scotia. I know that when the Minister enquires into this question, he will remove the evils which exist, and give the people at least four months' fishing season.

Mr. WELSH. I wish to say that, in my opinion, the whole fishing business ought to be put a stop to for a number of years. I speak from personal observation. I have been in a great many factories in Prince Edward Island and in several in New Brunswick, and I have found that the lobsters in them are very small. Where it used to take one or two lobsters to fill a can, it now takes six or seven, and it is really disgraceful to go into one of those lobster factories and see the thousands of little fish that are taken out of the sea. While the fishermen are asking for more time, I will not say whether they should have more or not, but my own opinion is that the Minister of Fisheries will have to devote a great deal of attention to this subject, or the whole lobster industry on our coasts will be destroyed in a few years.

Mr. FLYNN. I do not know anything of the character of the lobsters on the Prince Edward Island coasts, but I think I can speak with some knowledge of those on the southern coast of Nova Scotia, and the lobsters there are to day as plentiful and as large in size as they were ten or fifteen years ago. There is a regulation of the Department that no lobster can be taken under a certain size, and the fishery overseers are very careful in watching that that regulation is observed. If the fishermen get lobsters into their traps which are too small, they are obliged to put them into the sea again, or are subject to a fine. But what I complain of is that while the Department fixes a close season of eight months and leaves four months in which to fish, the month of April is practically out of the question, because if the fishermen set their traps in that month, they are in danger of losing them.

Mr. DAVIES. I am glad the hon. gentleman has brought this subject to the notice of the House as it is a very important one to the Maritime Provinces. I am also glad to learn from him that the fishery is maintained as well as he says it is in his Province. I wish I could say the same for my Province. The lobster fishery in my Province, which is very valuable, is gradually becoming poorer, the lobsters are getting smaller, and some of the manufacturers do not think it worth while to keep open at all. I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that the regulations which have been enforced, fixing the close season in Prince Edward Island, and, I presume, in Nova Scotia also, are very unsatisfactory indeed. I am aware petitions have been forwarded to the Department, praying for a change in the regulations, and I wish to state I have made it my business to enquire from a large number of those engaged in the trade, what regulations would suit them best. I have ascertained that hard and fast regulations applied to the whole Province would not do, that while between certain specific dates it may suit very well for the southern parts of the island, where, owing to calm weather, they can fish almost every day, on the northern part where they are exposed to rough weather the same dates will not suit. This is a matter which calls for immediate action. I know that those engaged in the trade look for the decision of the Minister with great interest, and I hope before the season progresses further the hon. gentleman will have made up his mind to some change in the existing regulations, and that that change, whatever it may be, will not be an arbitrary one for the whole Province but one that will deal with the different conditions of affairs in the northern as distinguished from the southern part of the island. I believe that those in the southern part would like a close season in midsummer. I know the hon. gentleman has a large mass of information in his Department on the subject, and all I press for is that a conclusion may be come to as speedily as possible. If the regulations are enforced in Cape Breton, all I can say is that there is laxity, and consequently a different state of facts prevailing elsewhere.

Mr. KIRK. The lobster fishing business is one of very great importance to the Maritime Provinces. It is a very large and growing industry. Last year there was about $1,750,000 in value of lobsters exported from the Dominion, and this business is of such importance that it demands the particular attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The close season, as it now exists, does not give satisfaction to the fishermen of Nova Scotia, or at any rate to those of the county of Guysboro'. We have a good many lobster establishments there. We have twelve in the county of Guysboro', employing hundreds of men and thousands of fishermen. I find the consensus of opinion among the fishermen is that the close season does not begin at the right time. The fishermen of the county of Guysboro', as was stated by my hon. friend from Richmond, have not an opportunity in the spring of commencing fishing early, in consequence of the ice and bad weather. However, I find that they generally agreed the fishing season should be extended. They all agree that there is a necessity for a close season, but that close season, according to the present regulations, does not begin at the right time. They claim that lobsters, after the middle of July, are not fit to be eat, and that the close season should commence about the middle of July and last to the end of August. They think that a season of six weeks in the year is quite sufficient, and that after the end of August they ought to be allowed to fish to the end of the year. The fishermen say that there are more lobsters destroyed during the two weeks after the middle of July than during the rest of the year, from the fact that the lobsters are then spawning. They claim it is in the interest of lobsters that they should be protected when in a spawning condition, and the lobster itself then is not suitable for food. The Government has been in the habit of extending the close season from the first to the middle of August, I believe, in the eastern part of Nova Scotia and in Prince Edward Island. There they do a very wrong thing, for that is the very season they should not allow fishing at all, namely, from the middle of July to the end of August; but after the end of August, fishermen tell us, you may fish as much as you like and you cannot destroy the fish. It is only necessary to protect the fish during the spawning season from the middle of July to the end of August. So far as the size of the lobster is concerned, I do not think I can say anything, but I do know that the fishermen of my county are very anxious that the Government should allow fishing in the fall of the year, and they maintain unanimously it is quite sufficient to have the close season from the middle of July to the end of August.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no objection at all to the papers being brought down. I am afraid, however, the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn) will not find them very voluminous. There will be an opportunity later to discuss this question of lobsters, when we shall be very glad indeed to have the opinions of hon. gentlemen present on both sides of the House who are building up this industry. As many different men write about it so there are as many different ideas with reference to these lobster fisheries as to the close season, as to when it should commence, and the time when the spawning season is on. It is a difficult subject, and a little later I shall be glad to have the co-operation of all who understand anything about this question.

Mr. LANDRY. No doubt the opinions offered by hon. gentlemen to the Minister of Fisheries will be of great value to him, but I suggest to the hon. Minister that he himself should make a visit to the portion of the Province where these lobsters are, and study the situation for himself. I think he will then find as many different opinions as there are letters written to him on the subject, and I think it would be a very wise thing indeed for the hon. gentleman to visit the localities himself during the next season and try to ascertain the facts for himself, from information obtained on the spot and from personal observation. I think that is the best way for him to obtain the information, because there is a considerable difference of opinion, and very often information is given by persons who are interested in the lobster fishery, not perhaps for the benefit of the fishery interest itself so much as for the benefits which they themselves hope to derive from the carrying out of the views they express. I do not accuse all the fishermen of being prompted by that interest, but naturally they must be prompted by it more or less. They look to the fisheries for the profits which they yield to them, more than to the actual protection of the fish itself. In view of all this, and believing that the Minister takes a deep interest in the matter, and desires to do the best which is possible for the fish, I advise him to visit the localities himself.

Mr. DAVIES. I would suggest that the motion be amended, so as to embrace the papers and correspondence in regard to Prince Edward Island as well as Nova Scotia, and then we will have the whole question before us.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection to the motion being so amended. I thank my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Landry) for his suggestion, and I hope that, when I go around that coast to visit these fishery grounds, he will defend me afterwards from any charges of junketting.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—LANDS SOLD.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia) moved for :

Return of lands sold by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company up to 1st April, 1887, in the North-West Territories; when sold, and to whom.

He said: I make this motion with the assurance that I will have the sympathy and support of every hon. member in this House. We are all quite aware of the fact that, in the district which I have the honor to represent with my hon. colleague, a large portion of the lands which were given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as a bonus, were selected; and while we do not claim that we want any portion of the contract which that company violated, not even that which exempts their land from taxation for a number of years, yet there is a provision in the contract that when that land is sold it shall be subject to taxation. It is well known that certain companies have purchased certain portions of land from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and that they are seeking to have their lands still exempted from taxation, while they are selling them and otherwise receiving a benefit from them. This is a great detriment to the settlers. I think this House is quite conversant with the fact that it is very important in the interest of every community that all the lands should be open to taxation for the support of schools, roads and bridges, and other purposes for which lands should be taxed. We are all aware that the progress of that country must depend upon the contentment and satisfaction of the settlers. But, when you find that a large portion of the land has been sold to companies who have come in under an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, a very great injustice and a very great wrong has been done to the settlers of that country. While we are not desirous in any way to alter the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, nevertheless we are of opinion that some pressure should be brought to bear on that company to give information to the settlers as to whom these lands have been sold to. In the North-West Territories we are very short of funds. We have not the advantages of Local Government so as to be able to impose taxation in the same way as other portions of Canada, so that our people are unable to secure schools to the extent they otherwise would, and they are unable to obtain a very large revenue for the support of roads and bridges, because we have not the money and have not the people from whom to get the money. It is very important for the well-being of that country, in regard to which every member is deeply interested, and which every member is looking to with hope and pride, as likely to become a prosperous land, that the contentment of the people should be secured, and that can only be done by their having facilities for local self-government and enjoying those privileges which they are entitled to. In conversation the other night with a gentleman who represents one of the great corporations in that country, I was informed that they own $1,500,000 worth of land in the North-West, and, when I expressed surprise at this, he told me that the bargain was so ingeniously made that his company was exempt from taxation. If there is any question which affects the people there it is this. The land is set off on the checker-board system. The people are a mile apart at best, and, when the odd sections are sold to these companies and to different individuals in such a way that they cannot be taxed, because the people cannot find out to whom the land has been sold, a great injustice is done. That is one of the reasons why I ask that this information should be brought down and should be brought down fully, so that our municipalities may be enabled to find out to whom the land belongs without going to law and having to pay costs, because the land may have been sold to some one other than those from whom they seek to recover the taxes. I believe the House will agree that, in justice to these settlers, they are entitled to this; and I may inform this House that nothing upon which it will legislate this Session will be more to the advantage of that country than to make those lands, when once they are sold, subject to taxation, and to compel the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to state to whom the land is sold. I want you to understand that we do not desire that one iota of the contract shall be violated in any respect, but after the land has been sold, we claim that this large corporation shall be compelled to tell who owns the land, in order that the person may be able to have a fair share of the benefits that will accrue to the land and to the country in the way of improving it, as the settler is now doing. Mr. Speaker, I thank you and the House for your kind attention to this, my first speech, and I am glad that I have not been called to order.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia).

Motion agreed to.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Copies of the accounts of the revising officer for the electoral district of Kamouraska, including the cost of printing the electoral lists, the account of the revising officer's clerk and that of his bailiff, with a statement of the amount paid by the Government to each of the said officers.—(Mr. Dessaint.)

A copy of the Chief Engineer's report on the construction of a harbor of refuge at or near Port Rowan, Ontario; also a copy of a memorial signed by George Stewart, M. D., and others upon the subject, and also copies of such correspondence between other parties at Port Rowan and the Government on the same subject as has not already been brought down.—(Mr. Charlton.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 9:30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 9th May, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

LANSDOWNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1888, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867" the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 9th May, 1887.

INCORPORATION OF RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. TISDALE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 66) to incorporate the South Norfolk Railway Company.

Mr. MILLS. What is the object of the Bill?

Mr. TISDALE. It is an ordinary Bill to incorporate a railway company.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will state between what points the railway will run.

Mr. TISDALE. From Port Robinson, in South Norfolk, on the shore of Lake Erie, to some point on the Canada Southern Railway, probably Waterford.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

MASSAWIPPI JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. SMALL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 67) to incorporate the Massawippi Junction Railway Company. He said: This Bill is to incorporate a company to build a railway from a point in the township of Magog, or township of Oxford, on the Short Line Railway from Montreal, to the maritime ports, where a connection can be made with the Short Line Railway.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS COMMITTEE.

Mr. WELDON. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in his place, but I understood that the whole of the proceedings of the committee in the Queen's County election case were to be reported. I notice, however, that it simply contains the resolutions which were adopted and the report of the sub-committee. I think all the proceedings should be given—the motions which were lost as well as those which were carried, as I think that is the usual course; at any rate, it was done in the Prince Edward Island case. I think the report should be amended by including the proceedings.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will observe that this report is neither one thing nor the other. One would have supposed that the committee would have adopted either the one course or the other—either report only the resolution to which the committee came, or report all the proceedings. But besides the reporting the resolutions adopted by the committee—and none others—the report includes the report which was made by a sub-committee created by the committee. Either this should not have been reported or all the motions should have been included, and I think the report should be amended.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The chairman of the committee will be here this afternoon, and I will speak to him on the subject.

Mr. EDGAR. I am a member of the committee, and I distinctly understood that all the proceedings should be reported. There was a little confusion about the time the committee adjourned—most of the members were standing when the motion was put, but I think it was clearly understood that the proceedings were to be reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think all the proceedings are usually reported.

Mr. BLAKE. There is generally a motion to that effect, and in compliance with it, it is generally done. I was informed by one member of the committee that the proceedings were to be reported, and now the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) states that that was his impression.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the motion was that the resolutions should all be reported, but it was a verbal motion, and was probably not understood by the clerk of the committee.

Mr. BLAKE. We had better have all the resolutions and the votes.

Mr. McCARTHY. Certainly, I think they should all be reported. I think I mentioned in the motion that just the resolutions should be reported.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman will see that either too much or too little has been reported. Either the sub-committee's report should not have been reported, or else all the proceedings should have been included.

Mr. McCARTHY. Quite so.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. McCARTHY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 68) to amend the Canada Temperance Act. He said: I may just say, in explanation of this Bill, that one of its objects is to simplify the proceedings when a petition is presented for the repeal of the Scott Act, or, as the Act puts it, the revocation of the Order in Council bringing the Act into force. As the law now stands the proceedings and forms that are given are applicable to introducing the Act into a county or city, but they are to be changed, the Act says, to suit the proceedings for the revocation of the Order in Council. But on the ballot, difficulties may arise with regard to these forms and proceedings, and difficulties have arisen. The ballot says those who vote one way are to vote for the petition, and those who vote the other way, against it; but doubts may arise—and I understand that, in several cases, difficulties have already arisen—as to whether voters were voting for the Act or against it, when the Act was submitted for repeal. I propose also by this Bill to repeal a very important clause, or rather one which has just come to be very important, and that is the one compelling a man and his wife to give evidence. As first interpreted by the courts it was held that a defendant was not to be compelled to answer questions which would criminate him, but a recent decision of the Chancery division of the High Court of Justice for the Province of Ontario has decided otherwise. I think, therefore, this provision is one which ought not to remain, and I propose to change it by saying that the husband may be a competent, but not a compellable, witness. I propose, also, to change the sub-sections of the Act with regard to the sale of beer and cider, in the direction in which I had the honor to move in the Session of 1885—that is, to permit those who are entitled to carry on the business of brewers to sell to parties in their own county. We know, that as the law is at present, while such parties may sell to those living out of the county, and while people living in the county may buy outside the county and bring it in, those carrying on the business of brewers in which the Act is in force cannot sell to people in that county, which I think is a very absurd provision. These provisions, along with others with reference to druggists—these latter also having been before Parliament—are the principal matters with which the Bill deals.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT ON THE 18TH INST.

Mr. BLAKE. There was a statement made in the House a few days ago with reference to a suggestion that an adjournment for a week should be made on the 18th inst. I think it would be to the convenience of the House that some announcement of the views of the Government should be made, and the earlier the better, so that hon. gentlemen could make their arrangements accordingly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I threw out the suggestion for the consideration of the House. The members of the Government are, of course, obliged to be here to go through their work; but the paper which was handed to me shows that a large number, in fact a majority of the House, were in favor of the adjournment; and, if it be the decided sense of the House that we should have a recess, of course we will submit. I may repeat what I stated before, that Thursday the 1st is Ascension Day, upon which there can be no House sitting. Friday we could sit; Saturday and Sunday we would not sit, and Monday we could sit; so that there would be Friday and Monday as working days. Tuesday is the Queen's birthday, and we generally have adjourned upon that day. It was therefore proposed that the House should adjourn on Wednesday night, and that it should stand adjourned until the following Wednesday night. We would only lose, as it was stated, two days, unless we sit on the Queen's birthday. I would like to hear the general opinion of the House on the subject, but so far as this irresponsible paper handed to me is concerned, it would appear that a majority of the House is in favor of it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Practically, you lose the Wednesday as well.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We could adjourn till Wednesday, and members will be all here by eight o'clock on the second Wednesday. There are, according to the memorandum handed to me, thirty-three members of the Opposition besides all the Quebec Opposition members, and forty Ministerial members besides all the Quebec members on this side, in favor of the adjournment.

Mr. CHARLTON. As this is the Jubilee year, I would ask whether it is proposed, in the event of the House not adjourning, to observe the Queen's birthday? A holiday will probably be held on the 21st of June.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like to say to the Prime Minister that some of our friends on this side have not heard a word about this matter. I never heard a word of it until I heard it in the House, though I do not object to the adjournment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The paper handed to me begins with the Opposition members, and then gives the names, headed by that of the hon. member for Bothwell.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I was never spoken to on the subject.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I took the responsibility of this paper, I may be allowed to explain it. At the request of a few of the members I undertook to see what the feeling of the House was, and I spoke to almost all the Ontario members, who, without signing any paper, agreed, on consideration, that there would be no time lost. That was the almost unanimous expression of opinion. The members from Quebec to whom I spoke said they would be almost all in favor of it.

Mr. TISDALE. I will explain the paper for this side of the House. I spoke to more than fifty, not one of whom objected, and Mr. McMillan spoke to the members for Quebec, and said they were all for it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps we had better bring the question to a vote. I move that when the House adjourns on Wednesday, the 18th inst., it stand adjourned until the following Wednesday at 3 o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders are called I desire to call the attention of the hon. First Minister to the statement made on Thursday that the motion for the appointment of a Chairman of Committees would be made on Friday. It was not made on Friday, and we have now passed the time when that motion could be made to-day. It would be well to know what the hon. gentleman's intentions are as to making the proposal.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will move it to-morrow, which is a Government day.

UPPER COLUMBIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. MARA moved second reading of Bill (No. 49) to incorporate the Upper Columbia Railway Company.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Some of these Bills are not printed in French.

Mr. SPEAKER. If my attention is drawn to the fact, of course I cannot allow the Bills to be read. It cannot be done without the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. I will say to my hon. friend that we have adopted perhaps a rather lax practice in allowing the Bills to be read, if they are printed in either language, at the earlier part of the Session, and do not appear to be objectionable, so that they might get to the committees as early as possible. I do not consider that if any hon. member has an objection to a measure, he is to be precluded from insisting on the absolute rigor of the rule. However, I think it would be for the advantage of the House if we winked at the irregularity.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD,

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 43) to incorporate the Niagara River Bridge Company.—(Mr. McCarthy for Mr. Rykert)

Bill (No. 45) further to amend the Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—(Mr. McCarthy for Mr. Kirkpatrick.)

Bill (No. 48) to incorporate the Guarantee and Pension Fund Society of the Dominion Bank.—(Mr. Sutherland.)

Bill (No. 55) to incorporate the Eastern Canada Savings and Loan Company (Limited).—(Mr. Kenny.)

Bill (No. 59) to amend the Act incorporating the Alberta and Athabasca Railway Company.—(Mr. Shanly for Mr. Colby.)

Bill (No. 61) to amend the Acts incorporating and relating to the British Canadian Loan and Investment Company (Limited).—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 62) to reduce the stock of the Ontario and Qu'Appelle Land Company (Limited), and for other purposes.—(Mr. Sutherland.)

SCRIP TO VETERANS OF 1837.

Mr. PURCELL asked, Is it the intention of the Government to make provision, during the present Session, for the payment of pensions or the granting of scrip to the Veterans who served the Crown in 1837, as has been done in the case of the Veterans of 1812 and in the case of those who served in suppressing the recent North-West Rebellion?

Sir A DOLPHE CARON. It is not in the power of the Federal Government to grant scrip or pensions to the Veterans of 1837. It is a matter which properly comes under the purview of the Governments of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, as it occurred previous to Confederation.

POST OFFICE AT CORINTH.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Is it the intention of the Government to open a post office at Corinth, in the township of Bentinck, at an early date?

Mr. McLELAN. That matter was under the consideration of the late Postmaster, and the decision was that it should stand a while.

DUTY ON TOBACCO.

Mr. THÉRIEN asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to impose a Customs duty on leaf tobacco imported? If so, what will the duty be?

Mr. BOWELL. That is a question which cannot be answered until the Budget is brought down.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY RATES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. MARA asked, Have the rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the Province of British Columbia been submitted to and approved of by the Governor in Council?

Mr. POPE. They have not; but having been called on once or twice to submit rates, they informed me a few days ago they would do so shortly.

WHARF ACROSS THE RICHELIEU.

Mr. BÉCHARD asked, Have the Government ever given power to the "Stanstead, Shefford and Chambly Railway Company," or their successors, "the Vermont Central Railway Company," to build a wharf alongside of their bridge across the Richelieu river, near the towns of St. Johns and Iberville?

Mr. POPE. We can find no trace of any permission having been given. I think, at the instance of the hon. gentleman, we made enquiry in 1883, and could find nothing of the kind. We wrote to these people and have no reply.

JOSEPH DIONNE.

Mr. DESSAINT asked, Whether Joseph Dionne, of St. Denis, county of Kamouraska, is an employé of the Government; if so, in what capacity, in what Department, since when, and what is his salary?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Joseph Dionne, of St. Denis, is employed in the Department of Public Works, and has been employed for about three or four weeks in the accountant's office of that Department. His salary has not yet been fixed, but will probably be $1.50 per day.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS, GUYSBORO'.

Mr. KIRK asked, On what date did A. F. Falconer resign the office of Collector of Customs for the sub-port of St. Mary's River, in the county of Guysboro', Nova Scotia. Has his successor been appointed? If so, who is he?

Mr. BOWELL. No resignation of Mr. Falconer has been received at the Department, and in consequence no successor has been appointed.

COLLECTOR AT ST. GERMAIN DE RIMOUSKI.

Mr. Fiset asked, Whether the regulations of the Customs Department have been modified in relation to the holding of the office of collector at a port, in such manner as to permit the holding thereof by a merchant, as in the case of J. A. Martin, collector, appointed and acting for the port of St. Germain de Rimouski for some years past?

Mr. BOWELL. This question goes a little beyond the rules of Parliament by affirming the fact of which the Customs Department has no knowledge. Even if it had, I am not sure the question is put in proper shape. I may say, however, for the information of the hon. gentleman, that no regulations of the Customs Department have been changed in that respect.

OFFICIALS IN NORTHUMBERLAND, N.B.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, Has the Government, or any of its Departments, received any recommendations for the superannuation or removal of any official or officials in the county of Northumberland, New Brunswick? If so, who made such recommendation and who are the parties whose removals or superannuation is recommended, and what are the reasons alleged for such removals or superannuation; and has any person or persons been recommended for appointment in their places, and if so, what are the name or names of the party or parties so recommended for appointment? Has any report been made to Council by the head of any Department for the removal or superannuation of any such official, and if so, state grounds therefor, with the names of the party or parties on whose representation, oral or otherwise, such head of Department acted, with the names of the party or parties so recommended for removal or superannuation; and has any report been made to Council for the appointment of a successor or successors to said party or parties, and if so the name or names of the party or parties so recommended?

Mr. POPE. I speak for my own Department, which, probably, has more employees than any other in that county, and I will say no one has asked for any people to be removed that I know of. No one is suggested as his successor, and we have heard nothing from anyone about this.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no recommendation of that kind as far as the Customs Department is concerned. The hon. gentleman knows there is a vacancy.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Nor yet in the Indian Department.

Mr. FOSTER. The Government, so far as my Department is concerned, has not received any recommendations for the superannuation of any officials in the county of Northumberland; consequently there has been no recommendation for superannuation. With reference to removal of officials, I think some conversation has passed, and I will enquire and be able to give the hon. gentleman a fuller answer later.

BRAE HARBOR, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. YEO asked, Is it the intention of the Government to dredge the Brae harbor in Prince county, Prince Edward Island, during the present season, as prayed for by petitioners?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. At Brae harbor, there is a depth of two feet at low water, which must be increased to eight feet to permit a dredge to work, otherwise it will be impossible to open any kind of a channel. The length of cutting to be opened will be 1,500 feet, width 50 feet, quantity to be removed 15,000 cubic yards, probable cost $5,000. There is no probability that this cut will remain open. So says the chief engineer, so there is no intention to do this work.

RICHELIEU RIVER BUOYS.

Mr. CLAYES asked, 1st. To whom was the contract in respect to the buoys of the Richelieu River, &c., awarded? 2nd. For what length of time and for how much? 3rd. Were the contractors the lowest tenderers? 4th. Who are the sureties? 5th. Has the Government received complaints from navigators regarding the buoy service on the Richelieu River?

Mr. FOSTER. I may say that, 1st. The contract in respect to buoys of the Richelieu River, and River des Prairies, has been awarded to Louis Henry Hébert, machinist, of St. Johns, P.Q.; 2nd. The contract is for a term of three years, and the contract price is $400 per annum; 3rd. The contractors were the lowest tenderers; 4th. The sureties are John Black and Henderson Black, private bankers, both of St. Johns, P.Q.; 5th. No complaints have been received from navigators regarding the buoy service on the Richelieu River.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN PICTON.

Mr. PLATT asked, Is it the intention of the Government to place a sum in the Estimates for the ensuing year for the construction of Customs and Post Office buildings in the town of Picton, Ontario?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to answer that question authoritatively, because the Supplementary Estimates are not yet completed.

MURRAY CANAL.

Mr. PLATT asked, Has an extension of time for the completion of Murray Canal been granted to contractors? If so, when was extension asked for, when granted, and to what date has the time been extended? What is the date for completion in original contract?

Mr. POPE. The date of the completion arranged for in the original contract was July 1st, 1885. The date of the contract with J. B. Silcox & Co. was 24th August, 1882. No written extension of time has been given.

POSTMASTER AT MILFORD.

Mr. PLATT asked, Who is at present postmaster at Milford, Ontario? When was appointment made?

Mr. McLELAN. That office is at present vacant.

FISHING LICENSES IN EAST AND WEST LAKES, PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY.

Mr. PLATT asked, Have fishing licenses for net and seine fishing in East and West Lakes, county of Prince Edward, been refused to any or all applicants? if so, upon whose representations and for what reasons?

Mr. FOSTER. Fishing licenses for net and seine fishing in East and West Lakes, county of Prince Edward, have been refused to all applicants. They were refused upon the representations of the District Inspector, who said they were destroying the fish.

CONDUCT OF RETURNING OFFICERS.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell) moved :

That the return laid upon the Table of the House by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, relating to the return and gazetting of members, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to make enquiry into the conduct of certain returning officers and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and the said committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses on oath or affirmation.

He said: I regret that I have to bring the misconduct of certain public officers under the attention of this House, but I think the duties assigned to them under the law are of such immense consequence to Parliament and to the country that it is absolutely necessary that this House should exercise the most careful scrutiny over their conduct. The duties that are imposed upon these officers who are referred to in this motion are not onerous, they are not difficult to perform, but they are certainly of very great consequence, and, being of great consequence to the constitution of Parliament itself, it is of the utmost importance to this House, and to every member of the House, to look to the conduct of these officers with the most jealous care. If there is any matter about which this House should be careful, if there is any subject more than another about which it should divest itself of everything like partisan bias, and should think only of the honor, the dignity and the fair constitution of Parliament, it is with reference to the conduct of these officials who are connected with the elections, and who constitute in some degree the machinery by which the House of Commons is called into existence. The conduct of the officers who are necessarily connected with a parliamentary election, and by whose faithful and honest conduct this House may in some degree approach accurately and strictly to the character of a representative body, can never be a matter about which Parliament itself can be indifferent. The writs that are issued by the Crown, upon the advice of the Administration of the day, for holding a general election are not the only authority which governs the actions of either the returning officers or the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. The returning officers look to these writs for their authority to hold an election, but the manner in which that election is to be held and the duties which devolve upon them are not derived from the writ, but are derived from the statute law by which their conduct is regulated, defined, and clearly set out. In fact, the legislation in this matter is so clear and so precise that no officer of ordinary intelligence, who is disposed to discharge his duties honestly and as the law directs need make any mistake. In the case of the returning officer, he has not, as formerly, any discretion with regard to the day of election or with regard to the day of nomination. He is entitled to receive the nomination of candidates in a certain way and upon certain conditions. The day on which he has to sit for the purpose of receiving nominations is set out. The hour when he is to cease receiving nominations is set forth. After the nominations have been received, it is for him to issue a proclamation and to name with the utmost definiteness the places at which votes are to be polled. He appoints the deputy returning officer, he names the poll clerks, and the statute sets out the duty of these clerks with as much definiteness, with as much fullness, with the same freedom from any ambiguity or doubt, as it does his own conduct, and does not leave him any discretion as to when he shall make his return. It provides with the utmost precision when that return shall be made. It says that if certain events do not happen, then he is to make it at the end of six days from the day of polling. He is not to do it after that, but on the expiration of that particular period, and on the contingency of a recount, then he is to take immediate action after that recount is completed. There is no room for discretion, there is no authority for delay. Even in England where there is no such precision—at least there was not formerly—in the statutes, yet Parliament intervened in case there was the least exhibition of a want of due diligence on the part of the returning officer in the discharge of his duty. When he has made his return, then the law provides that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery upon receiving that return shall gazette the member so returned and having a majority of votes, in the next ordinary issue of the Gazette, so that there is, in his case, the same precision, the same definiteness, the same absence from any discretion left him, that there is in the case of the returning officer. He is not permitted to make any delay. Those who framed the law know what the duties of a Clerk of the Crown in Chancery are. They know that they are not arduous. They know that they are not complicated. They know that it is possible for him to take action immediately after the receipt of these returns, and so it is provided that he shall, on the receipt of these returns, gazette the party so returned in the next ordinary issue of that paper. Now, what I have to complain of is, that this duty, which is set out with the utmost clearness and precision, about which no man of ordinary intelligence need err, was grossly neglected in certain cases by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, as it was grossly neglected in certain cases by the returning officer. Now, Sir, the members of the House stand here upon a footing of equality. There is no superiority in rights or privileges of one member over another. If the officers who were appointed to conduct the elections, to make the returns, and to gazette the members, discharged their duties as the law directs then there is nothing of which any member can complain. Formerly the officers who were connected with elections were named in the law itself. Some of those might sympathise with the Opposition, and some of them with the gentlemen on the Treasury benches. If there was a disposition to go wrong, if there was any bias influencing the officers in one direction, there might be a bias influencing another officer elsewhere in the opposite direction. The possibility of bias being exercised on both sides had thus a tendency to prevent any such bias being exhibited, in most cases. Now, at the present time, the Ministers advise the appointments of returning officers. These officers are creatures of the Government, and it is, therefore, all the more necessary that those who are in opposition to the Government should watch with attention the conduct of these officers; it is all the more necessary that the gentlemen who are elected on the Opposition side should insist upon the law as it stands, being strictly obeyed, for their own protection. I know that the hon. First Minister, when I first moved for this return, was disposed to question my statement that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, or any of the returning officers, had been guilty of dereliction of duty. Now, I will just mention that in my own case the returning officer delayed the return for eight days, and after it was received the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery delayed the gazetting of that return for twenty-three days, so that, in fact, the time within which it was possible to petition against my return, was extended thirty-one days beyond the time fixed by the law, if the law itself had been obeyed. Now, I say that it never was intended, the law never contemplated, that the members of the House should stand in this respect upon a footing of inequality, that it should be in the power of the Government, or of its friends, to contest elections on this side of the House, in a large number of cases, after the time had gone by, or after it was possible to file petitions against hon. gentlemen on that side of the House. The law with regard to corrupt practices fixes and limits the period within which petitions may be filed. It does so for a purpose. The law does not expect in the conduct of an official, any more than in any other case, an ideal perfectability. It seeks to discourage corrupt practices. It assumes that if corrupt practices exist, they will, to some extent, be notorious; and therefore it provides that if action is taken it must be taken within a certain limited period of time. It is not intended vindictively to pursue a member because here or there a wrong may be done, or the law may have been departed from or disregarded by some over-zealous supporter, as long as the general results of the elections have not been affected by what has been done. But if it is in the power of any officer indefinitely to protract that period of time within which action may be taken, by refraining from returning the candidate, or by withholding his name from the Gazette, then it is possible for him to prolong the time, to enter into minute enquiry with a view of hunting up evidence which may be technically sufficient to unseat the member. It may be that he has time to take all the necessary steps to enable him to file a petition, and thus on account of the improper conduct on the part of the officers who are not officers of the Administration, though appointed by the Administration, the members on both sides of the House may stand in a wholly different position. That was not the intention of the law. Then the First Minister said: "There was no disadvantage in having your name omitted from the Gazette for an indefinite period of time; on the contrary, it was rather an advantage to a public man to get time for the feeling that was evoked during the election excitement to cool down, and the probability was that petitions in those cases would be abandoned." It is very extraordinary that the position of the Government is altogether against such a notion—I had almost said the conduct of the Government, for I can scarcely believe that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery adopted the course he did without consultation with or any advice from any member of the Administration, and I am more confirmed in this view by the actual position of the First Minister himself, with respect to this matter, not only by what was done, but by what was omitted to be done, not only by the promptness with which the law was obeyed in one instance, but by the fact that it was slightly disregarded in another. I find that the First Minister was returned for Kingston on March 4th; he was gazetted on March 5th. I am assuming in these particulars that the statement brought down to the House by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is correct. I find that the Minister of Militia was returned on the 11th and gazetted on the 12th. The Minister of Finance was returned on the 11th—or his return was received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the 11th—and he was gazetted on the 12th. The Minister of Agriculture was returned on the 9th and gazetted on the 12th. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the Minister of Justice and the Postmaster General were severally returned on the 8th and gazetted on the 12th. The Minister of Railways and the Minister of Interior were returned on the 9th and gazetted on the 12th. The Minister of Public Works was returned on the 5th and gazetted on the 12th. The Minister of Customs was returned on 16th and gazetted on 19th. The Secretary of State was gazetted the same week he was returned. So that there is not a gentleman sitting on the Treasury benches who was not gazetted within the week in which he was returned, such being according to the provisions of the law. Now, the First Minister and his colleagues certainly exhibited very extraordinary courage if it be true that the danger of being petitioned against was increased on account of the promptness with which they were gazetted. But even if this were the case, in their case the law was but complied with. The law says that it is the duty of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, on receipt of the return to gazette the member as returned. But the qualifying words are "in the next ordinary issue of the Gazette." But, apart from those words, the construction is immediate action. I find the First Minister was returned for a second constituency. He was thus returned on 4th March, just as he was for Kingston on that date. Somehow or other in that case the gazetting of the right hon. gentleman was delayed until 12th March; that is to say, one Gazette was omitted, and instead of having his election entered in the next Gazette it did not appear until the week following. I suppose every hon. gentleman knows something of the party divisions in the county of Carleton, and are aware that the hon. gentleman's party is overwhelmingly strong in that constituency, I do not know, but I suppose, the hon. gentlemen did not even hold a meeting in that constituency after the issue of the writ, that he did not feel much in danger of being unseated, and that there was not much danger of his being petitioned against even though the law was disregarded in a single instance by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. So that when the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery received his instructions, if he had such instructions, to disregard so far as regards hon. gentlemen on this side, there was some advantage in his being able to say that in even one instance, and that of the First Minister, the gazetting was delayed for a single week. So we find the First Minister the only member of the Cabinet who was elected to a second seat in this House, and that the announcement of his return for Carleton was omitted from the Gazette a single week. That fact goes to confirm the impression which the fact has made upon my mind, and I think will make upon the minds of hon. members, that the Government were not altogether ignorant of what was being done by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. I am inclined to think that if the Secretary of State and hon. gentlemen opposite had had the frankness to answer the question which I put to them a few days ago, perhaps the Secretary of State would have been able to tell us how it was that over a hundred members on that side were gazetted as the law directs, and that, out of ninety and over on this side, only fifteen were gazetted as required by law. We would be able to know why the law was in this respect so flagrantly disregarded, that the deliberation and design manifested, about which there can be no doubt, admit of no explanation but one—that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery deliberately withheld the names of hon. members on this side from being gazetted immediately after they were returned. The House must bear in mind that ministerial pressure is no excuse for the flagrant disregard of public duty by a public officer. The rule of municipal and constitutional law in this particular is wholly different from what prevails with respect to political offences against a foreign State. A citizen of one country, if he commits a crime against another Government or subjects of another country, and if his act is assumed by his own State, it ceases to become his offence, but becomes the offence of the Government of the country to which he belongs. There is no such rule applicable to the conduct of public officers. The law imposes upon them certain duties. They owe obedience, not to the Ministers or to the parties who appointed them, but to the law of the land; and while they may have accomplices in their crime and wrongdoing, the fact they have accomplices is no defence whatever for the commission of the offence on their part. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is just as responsible, his conduct is not less offensive and not less contrary to law, because the Secretary of State may have advised him, than if he had acted wholly on his own motion. Now, let me call the attention of the House to this gazetting of members. I take the first general week, leaving out those members who were returned by acclamation, and I find that in the week, up to Saturday, there were returned on the 5th one Tory and two Reformers; one Tory and one Reformer were gazetted in the Gazette of next week. On Monday the 7th, sixteen members were returned—eleven Tories and five Reformers. In the Gazette of the Saturday following all the Tories were gazetted and but one of the five Reformers. On Tuesday there were fifteen Tories and eleven Reformers returned. In the Gazette of the Saturday following the whole of the fifteen Tories were gazetted and but two of the five Reformers. On Wednesday there were sixteen Tories and four Reformers returned, and on the Saturday following fourteen Tories and one Reformer were gazetted. On Monday there were six Tories and five Reformers returned, and in the Gazette of the Saturday following six Tories and not one Reformer were gazetted. On Friday, the day preceding the issue of the Gazette, eight Tories and ten Reformers were returned, and there were five Tories, and no Reformer, gazetted. For the week there were fifty-seven Tories and thirty-seven Reformers returned, and of the fifty-seven Tories fifty-two were gazetted, while of the thirty-seven Reformers but five were gazetted. So much for that week. Taking the week following, I find that on the Saturday there were nine Tories and sixteen Reformers returned, and there were nine Tories and three Reformers gazetted the next Saturday. There was a whole week, and there was the same deliberate omission of the names of the Reformers whose names had been received from the Gazette of the following week. On Monday sixteen Tories and seven Reformers were returned, and sixteen Tories were gazetted on the Saturday following. On Tuesday there were two Tories and two Reformers returned, and two Tories and one Reformer were gazetted. On Wednesday two Tories and one Reformer were returned, and two Tories and no Reformers gazetted the Saturday following. On Thursday and Friday one Tory was returned on each day, and both were gazetted. For that week thirty-two Tories and twenty-nine Reformers were returned, and thirty-two Tories and but ten of the twenty-nine Reformers were gazetted. Then, for the next week—I need not go over each day—five Tories were returned and seven Reformers, while the five Tories were gazetted and not one Reformer. The names of those Reformers were not only omitted from that Gazette, but the majority of them were omitted from the Gazette of the next week; and it was not until the third and sometimes the fourth week that they were gazetted. Now, there is no excuse for such conduct, and there is a certain, easy, obvious explanation. No one can have the slightest doubt as to the motives by which the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery was actuated, and no one can have any doubt as to the motives which actuated those who advised and impelled him on in this course in opposition to the law and in violation of his oath of office. Now, Sir, I need not go further into detail, by way of justifying the motion I have made. I would now ask the attention of the House to the misconduct of certain returning officers. I find, for instance, that if the return brought down to this House by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is correct, the return of the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) was delayed thirty-two days by the returning officer. I find that the return of the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Mallory) was delayed thirty-six days, the return of the hon. member for East Peterboro' (Mr. Lang) was delayed for thirty-three days. The return of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) was delayed for twenty-one days, and the return of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was delayed thirty-seven days. Now, in these cases there is clearly a gross violation of duty on the part of the returning officers. I understood from the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt) and the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) that the returning officers respectively assure them that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has brought down a false return, as far as they are concerned, and therefore, in these cases, it is all the more necessary that an investigation should be had into the conduct of the returning officers in these cases, and the conduct of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. The law makes the duty of these officers perfectly clear, and it provides that where they have grossly neglected their duty they shall be liable to punishment. And, Sir, if the facts which I have brought under the attention of the House are at all sustained, then I think it is clearly the duty of the Administration to dismiss the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery from the office which he now holds. By his conduct in this matter, by his withholding from the Gazette the names of certain members who were elected, contrary to the direction of the law; by his setting at defiance the law, and his disregard of his oath of office and the obligations which the holding of that office has imposed on him, shows himself wholly unworthy of the office which he holds—wholly unworthy of public confidence. There is, perhaps, no officer connected with an election about whose conduct there is less room for excuse. Sir, his duties are light, although they are important. There is nothing in the world to hinder him from being ready to gazette the members who are regularly returned. If there is anything irregular or wrong in the return, then he will, upon enquiry, be able to show that; and I say it is impossible that such a statement can be true, as that there were mistakes and errors made by the returning officers who were employed in constituencies which returned members to this side, but that there were no mistakes made by returning officers who returned members to the other side of the House. I find, Sir, that in upwards of seventy cases there have been delays, contrary to the law, in the gazetting of members who were elected on the Opposition side.

Mr. PLATT.

Mr. MILLS,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This whole subject, was, I think, discussed fully on the previous motion of the hon. gentleman to have the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery brought to the Table to make the returns, so that it is scarcely worth while to go into the matter again. The hon. gentleman has only elaborated his former argument. In his motion, however, he refers to the returning officers as well as the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. It is quite clear, from the speech of the hon. gentleman, that most of his argument applies to the conduct of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. He said in the first place that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery should be dismissed. If he should be dismissed, there is not the slightest necessity of having a committee enquire into his conduct; yet the hon. gentleman moves that the matter should be referred to the committee. Well, we have heard the indictment against the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. We have not heard his reply, and I think we ought to have his reply before we condemn him or consider him as quasi-condemned by the House, by having this referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I therefore move:

That all after the word "That" be struck out, and the following substituted: "That the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery be ordered to address a letter to the Clerk of this House specifying the course adopted by him in gazettement the election returns of the last general elections, and his reasons for such course."

Mr. BLAKE. It does not seem to me that this is a fitting method of dealing with the question of my hon. friend's motion. In the first place, it proposes entirely to retrench that portion of the motion which deals with the question of the conduct of the returning officers. The hon. gentleman proposes that we shall not address ourselves to an enquiry upon that subject at all; and yet that is a very serious question indeed. My hon. friend stated that in England, where the duty of the returning officer was not at the time specified by statute in the precise manner in which it is in our country, where consequently his duty was reasonable diligence only, Parliament had intervened—not in the mild method which my hon. friend proposes, but in a much more summary method. A recent publication summarises the action of the Imperial Parliament on that subject:—

"The neglect to make a prompt return, and unnecessary delays in scrutinizing votes, have also been summarily punished. Prior to the Acts 10 and 11 William III, c. 7, as to the writs of vacancies, and George III, c. 84, as to writs at a general election, there was no statute regulating the time of the return of the writs by the returning officer. But these Acts are not applicable to elections in Canada, as the Dominion Elections Act fixes a precise time, and requires the returning officer 'immediately after the sixth day after the final addition by himself' (unless a recount is granted) 'to transmit his return to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that the candidate having the largest number of votes has been duly elected.' And in the case of a recount, he is, on receipt of a judge's certificate, to make his return, i.e., forthwith. In administering its jurisdiction in this branch of parliamentary election, the House"—

That is, the Imperial House—

"has declared that a month's delay of the return was a neglect, and ordered the returning officer to be sent for as a delinquent."

And that was at a time when there was no specific provision but he was simply to use reasonable diligence.

"So also a week's delay, and in another a fortnight's delay have been held to be 'neglect.' And a delay of eighteen days caused the House to order the sheriff to attend and explain."

Here we have a provision that within six days, unless there is an order for a recount, the returning officer shall act; but the delays have been very great. I do not know how they are explicable in many cases, but in some of them they seem to be quite inexplicable. I find, for instance, that in the east riding of Elgin the returning officer delayed to act for twenty-one days after the election, and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for eighteen days after he got the return, making a cumulative delay of forty-six days. In the East Northumberland election, if the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery correctly states the date of the receipt of the writ, it took thirty-six days for the return to reach him from the returning officer, and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery delayed acting for ten more, making a cumulative delay of forty-six days. In the case of the East York election, thirty-seven days elapsed between the date of the election and the receipt of the return by the Clerk, and the Clerk added to that delay—which one would have thought enough for all lawful and most unlawful purposes—nine days, making a cumulative delay of forty-six days. My hon. friend who represents East York has been kind enough to place in my hands the certificate which, according to law, the returning officer was bound to give him, which is as follows:—

"I hereby certify that the member elected for the Electoral District of East York, in pursuance of the writ of election received by me, as having received the majority of votes lawfully given, is the hon. Alexander Mackenzie, of the city of Toronto, Esquire.

"As witness my hand this third day of March, A. D. 1887.

"JAMES ROBINSON,

Returning Officer, East York."

But according to the statement of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery it was not until the 21st of March that he obtained from this returning officer the documents on that return of which he had given my hon. friend a certificate so early as the 3rd of March. Now, that is the case in which the evidence is not confined to the dates as given to us by the Clerk of the Crown, but we have cumulative evidence in the statement I have just made indicating there must have been gross and wilful neglect—at any rate, neglect which demands enquiry. In the case of the south riding of Brant, the return was delayed for thirty-nine days. I do not know whether it took the returning officer a very long time to count my hon. friend's majority.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I have the returning officer's certificate dated the 9th March.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend has the returning officer's certificate to himself, dated the 9th March, of his election, but it was not until the 2nd of April that the return reached the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, according to his statement; and it was not until the 9th that my hon. friend's election was gazetted. These officers, appointed by the Administration, are charged with the statutory duty of making these returns within six weeks. Of course, they are entitled to delay in the case of a recount; of course, if there is any irregularity which obliges them to obtain further evidence, they are entitled to delay, and they obtained it; and there may be some delay in the mailing or delivery in the course of a post. But we find in these cases delays altogether inexplicable, because all such suppositions are excluded entirely by the statements from my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie), and by my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Paterson), which he has just made in his place, that there was no question of recount or of any difficulty in getting the vote. I find that on the 3rd of March, in the one case, and on the 9th of March in the other case, the returning officer had completed his duty. My hon. friend has handed me this return:—

"I hereby certify that the member elected for the electoral district of the south riding of the county of Brant, in pursuance of the writ of election, dated the 17th day of January, A. D. 1887, and to me directed to return a member to serve in the House of Commons of Canada for the said electoral district, as having received the majority of votes lawfully given is William Paterson, of the city of Brantford, in the county of Brant, manufacturer.

"H. McK. WILSON,

Returning Officer.

"Dated at Brantford this 9th day of March, A. D. 1887."

So you find these two cases, and I dare say we may find some others also. It is, however, right to say that two hon. members I think, certainly one, mentioned the other day—and there may be further statements before the debate is over—that the information they had received from the returning officer was that the despatch of the return varied from the account given of it by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and that the return must have been received by him, in the course of the mail, at a considerably earlier period than he accounted for. There is thus the probability, in some cases, the possibility in some others, of the fault of the returning officer not being as great as the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery would make it out to be, because we find the statement made that the fault lies at his door to a greater extent even than the faults applicable to himself in the way of gazetting, namely, the fault of making an erroneous return. I do not charge him with that more than the circumstances would imply, but is it not the fact that these returning officers were competent on the 9th of March to give in their returns, and should their returns not have reached the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery earlier than the 31st of March? Does not that demand enquiry? Yet the hon. gentleman's motion proposes to wave that away as a matter of no consequence, as a matter to which there is to be no remedy or application of the power of this House, with the view of enquiring into the causes which led to this apparent misconduct. The hon. gentleman's suggestion strikes me as one very unsatisfactory. It is proposed that a letter should be directed to be given by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, stating what his course was. But we know what his course was. Here it is. We have got the dates at which he received the various papers; we have the dates at which he gazetted the various returns; we have the only cases in which he had any correspondence with the returning officers, after he had received the returns—I think there were but two—and, therefore, in all the other cases there was nothing for him to do, for nothing he did, except open the papers which were received by him, according to his account, on that day. It was obvious, from the correspondence that appeared in the newspapers, and from an interview with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, that the blame was to be put on the returning officers. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery said the returns were, in many cases, very defective, and that it would be a good thing if some of the returning officers were brought to the bar in consequence of neglect of duty, and so forth. It rather looked, from these statements in two papers of opposite politics, in identically the same terms, as if the delays, which had been so apparently flagrant, were caused by the fault of the returning officers. For that reason it was suggested that we should see in what cases there had been any correspondence, and what was the purpose of that correspondence. The Clerk of the Crown had the opportunity, and he availed himself of it to make a statement in two cases of the cause of delay, so that he leaves the whole question entirely untouched as regards the other cases. Assuming the accuracy of the statement of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, assuming that he received the returns in all cases as late as he says—I have taken those four weeks which bore the stress of the election, from Saturday, 5th March, to Friday, 1st of April, in which there were about one hundred and eighty returns, according to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, received by him. Of these returns about ninety-eight were Conservatives, about four occupied more or less doubtful positions, and seventy-eight were Reformers. Now there were gazetted in the first Gazette ninety-three out of ninety-eight Conservatives, leaving only five Conservatives in respect of whom the law was violated when it affected hon. gentlemen opposite. I will not say absolutely violated, because, of course, there are some causes; for instance, the returns might be received very late Friday night, and it might be impossible to carry out the law, and that is the reason I began with Saturday, not taking the returns of the preceding Friday, because several, with no apparent favoritism, at that early period had been omitted. There may be some cases of this kind. But you will find it was possible for the Clerk of the Crown to gazette, and he did gazette, ninety-three out of the ninety-eight Conservatives returned in those four weeks. There were seventy-eight Reformers returned practically in the same four weeks, yet only fifteen was the Clerk of the Crown able to gazette according to law. Thus it appears that almost all the Conservatives were gazetted and hardly any of the Reformers. Of course, we know there is such a thing as the doctrine of chance, but the doctrine of chance applied to 180 cases with these results proves to you there is more than chance in the matter. No man with a grave face can say—

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. BOWELL. The chances were against you.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, in this as in other things, because the dice were loaded.

Mr. MILLS. And by the First Minister.

Mr. BLAKE. No man can say that the law was incapable of being observed out of seventy-eight cases on the one side, while it was quite capable of being observed, and was observed, in ninety-three out of ninety-eight cases on the other side. But that is not all. As well as I can make it out, of these sixty-three Reformers about twenty-seven were held over one Gazette, and of those twenty-seven no less than twelve were held over for fourteen days; for, assuming the returns were received on Saturday too late to be gazetted in that week's Gazette, there was the whole week from that Saturday exhausted by the Clerk of the Crown; still he was unable to put them in the next Saturday, and consequently another week had to elapse, so that fourteen days, in the case of twelve of these men, was exhausted before the law was complied with in their cases. There were twenty-five Reformers held over for two Gazettes. Two of them sixteen days, four seventeen days, ten eighteen days, seven nineteen days, two twenty-one days, making really three Gazettes, the returns having been received on Saturday and gazetted Saturday three weeks later. That makes the twenty-five. There were nine Reformers held over for three Gazettes, seven of them twenty-two days' delay, one twenty-three, and one twenty-six. In all, the gazetting of sixty-three Reformers was postponed, and this large number of Reformers whom I have referred to were left over not for one day, or two days, or three days or four days, but postponed, as I have said, the shortest time of all but fifteen being fourteen days, and a very much longer time for all the remainder. Now, take the Province of Quebec. There, as well as I can make out—and I was not able to go over these papers a second time, and there may possibly be an error or two in them—there were twenty-five cases in which the gazetting was delayed. There were three cases in which the Gazette was passed over—one for ten days, one for twelve days, and one for fourteen days. There were seventeen cases in which two Gazettes were passed over, one for sixteen days, one for seventeen days, and fifteen for nineteen days, and there were five cases in which three Gazettes were passed over, in each case for twenty-two days; and in these cases in which the gazetting was delayed, twenty-three belonged to the Opposition and the other two were the cases of Nicolet and Montcalm, in regard to which the unfortunates who were delayed were not to be credited to our side of the House. So there were twenty-three to two. In New Brunswick there were seven cases of delay, five in which one Gazette was passed over, three by ten days, one by eleven days and one by twelve days; there was one in regard to whom two Gazettes were passed over by eighteen days—my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell)—and there was one in regard to whom three Gazettes were passed over by twenty-two days, my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor). Of these seven cases, six belonged to the Opposition, and only one to the Government, and a number of them were very long delays. In Nova Scotia there were five cases of delay of fourteen days each, all being, according to this doctrine of chance, on the Reform side; and in Prince Edward Island there were four cases of delay of fourteen days each, all being also Reform. So, in the Maritime Provinces there were sixteen cases of delay, fifteen being Reform and one Government; and in Quebec and the Maritime Provinces there were forty-one cases of delay, thirty-eight being Reform and three Conservative. In Ontario, as far as I can make out from the return, there were seventy-four members gazetted in those four weeks, about forty being Conservatives and thirty-four Reformers. Of the forty Conservatives, thirty-nine Tories were gazetted in the first Gazette and one in the second Gazette. Of the thirty-four Reformers, nine were gazetted in the first Gazette, twelve in the second, nine in the third, and four in the fourth Gazette. Thus you see that one Conservative was delayed out or forty, and twenty-five Reformers were delayed out of thirty-four. These are the facts as we find them in the statement made by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery himself, in a case where the law required him to take the return sent down to him, and gazette them in the ordinary form in the order in which he received them. I have shown you some seventy cases in which the law was not followed, and I have shown you that almost everyone of these cases affected the Reformers, and that hardly one affected the Conservatives. Therefore, there is an enormous number of instances of apparent breach of duty, and you have to add to that the fact that the breaches of duty affect one side almost exclusively, and affect the other side hardly at all. Surely that is a state of things which demands enquiry. The hon. gentleman says that we ought to get a letter from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Does he suppose that we will be satisfied with that letter or with that plea of the Clerk of the Crown, whatever it may be? Of course, if this is referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the first thing the committee would do would be to ask the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to come there and make his statement, but they would not be satisfied with his statement alone; they would cross-examine him; they would ask him the reason why, and the persons by whose command, connivance, or suggestion this was done; and that is the reason why the hon. gentleman moves his amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I hope that the amendment placed in your hands by the First Minister is not intended to indicate the character of the investigation which is to be had. If it be, and if it is carried out by the consent of this House, I think we may well despair of obtaining at the hands of the Government of the day anything in the shape of fair play. I do not know of any case which has come to my notice during my short parliamentary career which so imperatively demands and richly deserves investigation and action as the case in regard to the conduct of an officer which has been brought under our consideration to-day. I have already in this House, in regard to the returning officer in my riding, relieved him, as far as I knew the facts of the case, from any error in regard to the matter. I have nothing new to state in regard to his conduct in that election. I have been informed, however, and the returns show, that in many other constituencies, the conduct of the returning officers has been just as blameworthy as in my opinion is the conduct of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and I think that an investigation should be held. We have this gentleman here at our command to a certain extent, and that is a very different thing from the returning officers. I know that in my constituency our friends are well able to take care of the returning officer; and, if any palpable unfairness were shown by him, I think they would be able to take a shorter means of inflicting condign punishment than by bringing him to the Bar of the House. As far as the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is concerned, he is an officer of this House, and is here. I suppose he is in the service of the Government, and that they can dismiss him or retain him in his office. If anything can be done by a public officer which deserves the immediate attention of the Government in dismissing or retaining him, I think the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has shown clearly that he should be dismissed, and if the motion had been so framed I should have been better pleased with it. It has been said that his excuse was that the returning officers were at fault, and we know that he informed many of those who called on him for information that this was the case. Then he brought down a return to this House showing that in only two cases had he to call on the returning officer. He stated to the press that he had, in several cases, to write to these returning officers in order to get returns. Other cases are given by him in his statement which I believe will fall to the ground when they are investigated. We are asked to request the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to direct a letter to the Clerk of the House, giving explanations in regard to this matter. I have a letter from the Clerk of Crown in Chancery which I do not consider very satisfactory, and I do not believe that any other letters he may write will be very satisfactory. I will give the House the benefit of that which I have, and I think the House can judge from that whether we are likely to have a satisfactory explanation from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. After my election I waited very patiently until the 3rd April, and not having been gazetted at that date, I addressed a few lines to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to ask the reasons for delay. In reply he wrote me as follows:—

“OFFICE OF THE CLERK OF THE CROWN IN CHANCERY, “OTTAWA, 5th April, 1887.

“DEAR SIR,—In reply to yours of yesterday, I beg to state that the papers in Prince Edward, with those in other constituencies, had to be examined before I could gazette them, which, of course, takes considerable time, as they are voluminous. Prince Edward, with some others, will be gazetted on Saturday next.

“R. POPE,

“Clerk of Crown in Chancery.”

Well, Sir, I do not know that can be held as being very satisfactory, I do not know how these papers are very voluminous. If he had opened that package and taken out the writ, he would have found endorsed on the back of it these words:

“I hereby certify that the member elected for the electoral district of Prince Edward, in pursuance of the within writ, as having received the majority of votes, lawfully given, was John Milton Platt, of the town of Picton, in the county of Prince Edward, physician.

“GEORGE ALCORN,

“Returning Officer.”

This was the voluminous document which he said took several weeks to examine and report upon. I have further to say in regard to the assertion that a delay, such as occurred in my own particular case, was occasioned by dereliction of duty on the part of returning officers. I have here from the returning officer these words:

“I have had no communication with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery since the acknowledgment of receipt of the return, which receipt I showed you,” &c.

This was written on the 26th April. I now come to another part of the charge which I have to make against that gentleman. I said that not only has he, by delaying the gazetting, violated the law and endeavored to deprive certain members of this House of the chance of receiving fair play as compared with those on the opposite side, but, in excusing himself, he says that the returns are irregular, that these registered packages were not received here until several days after they were mailed. I informed the House on a previous occasion that I was in possession of proof of the fact that a registered package from my town was mailed on the 9th. I have since Sir, received from the post office authorities proof that it was mailed on the 9th, that it was despatched on the morning of the 10th, that it was received here on the evening of the 10th, and yet the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery brings down to this House a statement that he received it on the 14th.

Mr. BLAKE. Read your proof.

Mr. PLATT. The proof that I shall be most happy to read if I have the privilege of bringing this officer before a committee, will be found to be this: The inspector of the Post Office Department writes as follows:—

"The postmaster at Ottawa reports that registered parcel for Clerk of the Crown in Chancery from Picton, reached his office on the night of the 10th," &c.

I have a letter from the postmaster at Picton saying:

"Mr. S. Alcorn mailed a package after all mails were despatched on the 9th of March, and it went forward on the morning of the 10th March by Deseronto, billed on the Grand Trunk mail clerk going east," &c.

If anything more be needed I can read to you a letter from the returning officer stating that he showed me the Clerk of the Crown's acknowledgment of the receipt of the return. I have not that acknowledgment in my possession, but it can be had for the committee's information if necessary. When it was read to me I took this memorandum. He only read a short distance, and I said that was satisfactory, it was all I wished to know. And here is the memorandum I made:

"OTTAWA, 11th March, 1887.

"Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of yours of the 9th instant, enclosing return," &c.

Now, Sir, I do not think that with such evidence before the House, we will be justified in simply asking for a letter from that officer. So far as I am concerned I believe him now to lie under the double charge of having purposely, as I believe, delayed the returns of many members, and in my case he gives the 14th as the date of the receipt, when he received it on the 11th. Why? Because that would pass it over until the next Gazette. If he received it on the evening of the 10th, or on the 11th, I should have been gazetted on the 12th. Five that were received on the 11th must have gone to the printing office on the 11th, and were gazetted on the 12th. We know that my return was received at this office on the evening of the 10th and was not gazetted on the 12th, and on the 12th of April when I left for the capital I did not know that I was gazetted. I ask if that is done in a spirit of fair play. If this officer is the only officer at fault, I want him punished. I want some recognition of the fact that we are living in a country where we expect British fair play. There are very many other gross instances of unfairness which can be proved before this House, but, as I said before, my own case appears to be of all the worst. Why, Sir, we find from the 12th of March, the date upon which I should have been gazetted, they had to the 9th of April, twenty-seven days; from the 22nd of February to the date of my being gazetted, was forty-seven days; and from the 22nd February, the date of the election, until the petition was filed against me, there were just seventy-five days. Now, I think, there are very many hon. gentlemen holding seats in this House who, after the excitement of filing petitions had arisen, and as each party was desirous of getting as many in chancery, so to speak, as possible, if their thirty days had not elapsed, would have been, a great many of them, in the same boat as myself, so far as election petitions are concerned. But, Sir, the result of this becoming known, I trust, will be to arouse a spirit and a feeling in the country in favor of fair play. So far as my own individual case is concerned, and this particular officer's conduct, I do not very much regret it, but I think for the credit of the country, and for the credit of this Parliament, it is very much to be regretted.

Mr. BURDETT. I believe I have also been singled out as a victim of this species of political rascality. I desire to enquire as to the conduct of the Clerk of Crown in Chancery. Either he or the mail service have been guilty of neglect in my case, and the result of that neglect is that I have to fight, and go to the trouble and expense of defending an election protest. I desire to say that the returning officer in my own district was and is an honest man; he did his duty like an honest man, but I limit that declaration to the returning officer personally. I have his letter in which he stated that my return was sent forward to Ottawa on the 8th of March. Now, in due course of mail, it would reach here on the morning of the 9th, and I am quite satisfied that it did reach here on the morning of the 9th. I desire an investigation, and I challenge proof upon that fact, and I believe I will be able to prove, if the receipts in the post office are not besmeared with ink, so that we cannot see when these men who get the returns, signed the receipts therefor, it will be found that my return reached here on the morning of the 9th. Yet the Clerk of the Crown states in that paper which he brings down here as a return, and which, probably, is about as truthful as any letter that he may sign—that they did not reach here until the 12th, so that my return was not gazetted until the 19th. Now, I say that is a state of affairs that no hon. member, be he Grit or Tory, will tolerate, and if it is tolerated by members of this House, it will not be tolerated by the people of this country. Now, the result of it is this: there was no trouble found in gazetting the member for West Hastings (Mr. Robertson)—no trouble found in his case whatever; and it was well known that if his election was protested, he, in all probability, would run the same, if not greater, risk of being unseated than myself. If the evidence could be at all relied upon we were certain to unseat the member for West Hastings, and he and his friends were desirous that no protest should be put in against him. But his time for a protest expired much sooner than mine, much sooner than it would otherwise have expired but for this gazetting business; and therefore he and some of his friends said to me that if no protest was put in against him, they would use their best endeavors to prevent a protest against me. I desire to say that I acquit the member for West Hastings (Mr. Robertson) and his friends of any dishonorable action; I believe they honestly wished to carry out what they promised, and if that hon. member had had his way, and if the leading men of the Conservative party in Belleville had had their wishes carried out, there would have been no protest entered against me. But the point is here: I firmly believe that if my return had been gazetted when it should have been done, no protest would have been lodged, because a protest was lodged on the afternoon of the last day. Had that extra week not been given, no protest, I say, would have been lodged, because it is evident from what I can learn that the decision to file a protest was not reached until the Saturday previous to the Monday on which it was filed. This is not only unfair but it is unmanly for an officer of this Government and of the Crown to delay returns in order to give one party an advantage over the other. If the Conservative party can beat us on a fair and open field let them do so; but this striking below the belt, this striking a man when he is down, is an unmanly and cowardly way of attacking any man either personally or politically.

Mr. PLATT.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). I have a little grievance which I desire to present to this House in regard to the matter under consideration. When the subject was up for consideration before I said nothing in regard to my case, because I was not then in a position to speak for lack of possessing the necessary information. I have, however, received a communication from the returning officer in my riding, who is a man of respectability and honor, stating that he mailed the return on 9th March; but I find by the return of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that he did not receive the return until 26th March, seventeen days after the time when the returning officer registered the letter containing it in the post office near where he lives. Feeling that some mistake might have arisen, or that the return might have had to be sent back for amendment or for completion, I took the opportunity of writing to the returning officer to ascertain that the return was made properly and at the time stated by him in his letter to me. I received this letter from him a few days ago :

" GORRIE, 25th April, 1887.

" To PETER MACDONALD, M. P., " OTTAWA.

" SIR,—In reply to your request of the 23rd, in reference to the return of election made by me, I have to say that the writ of election with all the matter pertaining to the election was by me mailed at the Gorrie post office and registered as required by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, addressed to him on 9th day of March, 1887. A copy of your return as M.P. was sent to you at the same time. Hoping this reply will be satisfactory to you,

" Yours Respectfully,

" THOMAS K. BODDY,

" Returning Officer for East Huron."

I find on looking up the return submitted to the House by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that the return for my county purports not to have been received by him until the 26th, that is to say seventeen days after it was said to have been registered at the Gorrie post office; and if it was registered on the 9th it would certainly have arrived here on the 10th, and my name should have been gazetted on the 12th. But the Gazette of that date was published and my name did not appear. The Gazette of the 19th, also of the 26th, appeared without my name, and it was not until the 2nd April that my return was gazetted, no less than twenty-one days after the return was made. The hon. member for Bothwell said that probably a great deal of this want of punctuality arose from the returning officers. It is, however, plainly seen by the letter I have read that the returning officer for my county discharged his duty efficiently and made his return in accordance with law; and therefore the fault, wherever it lies, does not lie with the returning officer. In fact, I judge that the fault is not entirely with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery; because from an answer to a question propounded to the First Minister the inference must be drawn that there has been some tampering with that official. It is impossible to see what object the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery would have in gazetting the names in such a way as to favor the Conservatives and injure the Reformers, unless he had received some instruction from a high source, the source from which his office comes. When the First Minister said he refused to answer the question as to whether the Government had a conference with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery or not, the only natural inference to be drawn was that they had given instructions to him. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as hon. members on this side of the House, whether they consider such conduct as right and just in the interests of the affairs of this country, and whether it is right and proper to adopt an amendment so as to prevent an investigation by which the blame could be placed on the shoulders of the persons who are actually responsible. If the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery were brought before the Committee on Privileges and Elections he could be interrogated, and in order to shield himself from the imputation of acting dishonestly, he would, no doubt, under oath, give testimony as to whether he had received instructions from the Ministers or not, and then the country would see who were the parties to blame in this matter. I, therefore, hope that for the honor and dignity of this House, hon. members will rise above politics and vote for a full and complete investigation of this scandal.

Mr. MALLORY. It is evident from remarks of hon. gentlemen who have preceded me that something wrong has occurred either in the management of the elections, or in the returns which the returning officers have made to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, or in the action of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery himself, or possibly in connection with the instructions which Government may have given their servants in connection with the conduct of the elections which recently took place. It is incumbent upon this House that some investigation into the serious charges made should take place. If the Government whose servant, particularly the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is, and to whom the returning officers owe their appointments, have through their officers conducted the elections properly, it is only fair to this House and the country that this fact should be known, and it is unfair to them that any imputation should hang over them in this respect. If the returning officers have performed their duty properly and faithfully in the public interest it is only right that they too should be cleared of any imputation of wrong-doing. If, again the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has discharged his duties properly it is only right that he should have full opportunity to clear himself from any charge made against him. So, the only proper course for this House to take is to refer the whole matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in order that the committee might enter upon a careful examination of the parties, under oath, and ascertain just where the instructions came from, if any instructions were given to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and ascertain exactly what instructions were given to the returning officers, if any instructions except those which the law provides, were given to them. I believe that in some instances the blame cannot be placed upon any one particular set of shoulders. I honestly believe that there has been a preconcerted scheme, in order that the returns should be delayed by the returning officers and by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. So far as my own constituency is concerned the election was held on the 22nd of February; the six days which the law allows to make the return had nearly expired when, on the evening of the sixth day my opponent applied for a recount. The application was granted, and it took from that time until the 17th of March to get the decision of the judge in reference to the recount. I do not wish it to be understood that I blame the county judge in any way for the manner in which he conducted the recount, for I believe he conducted it fairly and honestly, though there was some unavoidable delay. On the 17th his decision was given with regard to the recount, and the declaration was made. On the 18th I received a notice from the returning officer that my return was made on the 18th of March, and, if that was the case, the return should have been mailed to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the evening of the 18th. But such was not the case—why, I cannot tell. I should be sorry indeed to cast any imputation on the returning officer, because I believe that, unless he had instructions from some outside source, he would have mailed his return promptly, for on the day of declaration he informed me that he had only six days in which to make his return, and that if a recount was asked for—as they stated that day that it would—immediately the decision of the judge was given he must mail his return to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. But what do we find? Although he gave me notice of my return on the 18th, that return was not mailed from the post office until the evening of the 29th. Why should this long delay occur, unless there were instructions from some outside source? The returning officer was a lawyer himself; he knew the law, and he told me what the law was when I asked him. As I stated, I have a letter from him, and I have also a letter from the post office authorities at his post office, showing that the return was not mailed until the evening of the 29th. Now, Sir, in this case the mails were not at fault, because I find from the return of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that this particular return was received on the 30th. But I find also that, instead of its being gazetted in the next Gazette, which was issued on the 2nd day of April, it was delayed for some mysterious reason. What that reason was I cannot tell. Possibly it was the great press of work in the office of the Clerk of the Crown, although, as most of the returns were in at that time, I cannot see why he should have been pressed so much in this particular case. I find that on the 2nd of April a Gazette was issued, but my name did not appear. I find that on the 5th my name did not appear, but on the 9th day of April my return was gazetted. Now it appears to me, and I think it must appear to every member of this House as well as to the country, that there had been some peculiar instructions of some kind issued to the officers who conducted the election. If not, why is it that that returning officer, who knew his duty and who knew the law and all the circumstances in connection with it, should have withheld the making of the return from the 17th or the 18th—the day on which he gave me notice of my return—until the 29th? And why is it that a return which was received here by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the 30th, was withheld from the Gazette until the 9th of the next month? I think it is due, not only to the Ministry themselves, but to these returning officers who have delayed their returns, as well as to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, that this matter should be fully investigated, so that members of this House and the country at large may know exactly where to attach the blame, if blame there is. The law is plain; evidently some one has violated it, and in my case both the returning officer and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery have violated the law. If they have a reasonable excuse for acting as they did, it is but right that we should hear what that excuse is, and the only way of hearing it is to bring them before the Privileges and Elections Committee, so that we may hear on oath what they have to say in defence of their action in this matter. I believe that this is one instance among many where the authorities in power have used the power they have in their hands, contrary to the law and contrary to honor, to defeat their opponents. I cannot easily forget the very humorous remark that the First Minister made, when this matter was being discussed in the House before. He said it was of no importance whatever, that gentlemen ought to be glad their returns were delayed, because the heat of the contest would have passed away, and of course protests would not be entered so frequently, protests were not so apt to be entered, as if the gazetting had taken place in accordance with the law. But how is it, as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has conclusively shown, that every one of these hon. gentlemen opposite was gazetted as rapidly as possible? What mysterious influence has been brought to bear upon the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and upon the mail service of this country, as well as upon the returning officers appointed to conduct the late election, which made them all contribute their share to secure the early gazetting of these particular gentlemen. The only conclusion that can strike one is that all, like one hon. gentleman who spoke the other evening, rushed as rapidly as possible to the returning officer, and insisted on the returns being made as fast as they could, in order that the time for entering a protest might elapse. I believe that some mysterious influence of this kind has been brought to bear on these officers. In my own instance I do not know whether a protest has been entered, because to-day is the last day upon which a petition can be presented. But a gentleman wrote me on Saturday night that there would likely be a protest. But whatever may be the fact, I have to say this: that although the court concluded its labors on the 17th of March, one week from that day my opponents held their convention, when they concluded there was no evidence against me, and that they should not enter a protest. But they have had ever since that time to investigate matters, and I find that a few days ago my opponent was here. Whether he came of his own accord, or was summoned, I cannot say, but it is rather a strange coin-idence that the great majority of the defeated Tory candidates in the late elections have made flying visits to this city of late, and whether my opponent has been "loaded up the other way" in order to push the protest, I cannot say. I say it is only in accordance with justice, fair play and that loyalty to our country and to our constituencies, which hon. gentlemen opposite are so prone to ask from the people of this country, that a full and free investigation of this matter should take place, so that we may know where the blame lies, if there is blame.

Mr. MALLORY.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Kent). This case seems to me to be so plain, and the duty of the House so clear, that I thought there would be no opposition to the motion which has been presented by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). I was therefore very much surprised when the hon. leader of the House proposed this amendment. Now, Sir, what are the facts? A charge is brought against the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that he has failed to perform the duties devolving upon him, and a motion is made to refer the whole matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in order that the charge may be investigated. To my mind that is a course which ought to be adopted without a moment's hesitation. Before that committee witnesses can be examined, and the matter can be investigated more fully and freely than anywhere else. What did we do a few days ago? It was charged against a returning officer in New Brunswick that he had failed to do his duty. The matter was referred to that committee, and what does the committee do? It reports back to this House that whereas it appears that irregularities have been committed, that officer should be sent for and brought all the way from New Brunswick to appear before this House to explain his conduct. In that case the resolution merely says that the irregularities appear to have been committed, whereas in this case there is no question at all that gross irregularities have been committed, and that on the admission of the officer himself. Therefore it is the bounden duty of this House to investigate these charges; it is due to the good reputation and character of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that that should be done. Therefore I hope that the matter will be referred to the committee.

Mr. BOYLE. It may seem presumptuous in me, a young member, to pronounce an opinion on any matter of this sort; but it seems to me that the time of the House is unnecessarily taken up in raking over every petty election scandal in the endeavor to account for the defeat our friends opposite sustained in the late elections. When this matter was first brought before the House by the hon. member for Bothwell, he drew a comparison between the conduct of the partisan returning officers, so-called, appointed by this Government, and the judicially inclined returning officers appointed by the Ontario and other Provincial Governments in their elections. Will it surprise hon. gentlemen opposite to know that whether by accident or otherwise, an almost similar state of affairs has prevailed in connection with the returns to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in the Ontario elections. It is true, the law is somewhat different in Ontario. There the time for entering a protest is not determined by the time the gazetting takes place.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BOYLE. Hon. gentlemen say "hear, hear," but I will come to the point directly. The Ontario law states that the returning officer shall make his return to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and twenty-one days after that shall be the limit for entering a protest. What are the facts regarding the Ontario returns? The Ontario Gazette shows that on the very day the elections came off, the 28th of December, one Conservative and one Reformer were returned to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery as elected; on the 31st of the same month, one Conservative and one Reformer were returned; so that up to that point we had tolerably fair play; but immediately afterwards the returns begin to change. On the 1st of January one Reformer was returned and no Conservative; on the 3rd of January three Reformers were returned and no Conservative; on the 4th of January, one Conservative and five Reformers; on the 5th of January, five Conservatives and ten Reformers.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Was it a daily Gazette?

Mr. BOYLE. If the hon. gentleman knew what he was talking about he would know that these returns were made to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery from day to day, and they were published in the Gazette at the end of the week. We find, therefore, that in the first week eight Conservatives and twenty-one Reformers had been returned to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery as elected. In the second week they received fair play; but that was the average week, and it does not count. In the third week the returns were as follows: On the 17th one Conservative and no Reformer, on the 18th three Conservatives and one Reformer, on the 19th one Conservative and no Reformer, on the 20th no Conservative and one Reformer, and on the 21st one Conservative and one Reformer; or in all for that week six Conservatives and three Reformers; so that the deficiency which occurred in the first week's returns was made up in the last week. In other words the injustice which has been charged against this Government is also chargeable according to the Ontario Gazette against the Ontario Government.

Mr. BLAKE. Take the numbers for the second week.

Mr. BOYLE. That is the average week, and, therefore, it does not tell. The point I wish to make is this, that in the first week eight Conservatives were gazetted and twenty-one Reformers; in the second week eighteen Conservatives and twenty-nine Reformers were gazetted—that is the average week; and in the third week six Conservatives and three Reformers, thus showing that an undue proportion of Reformers is included in the earliest returns and an undue proportion of Conservatives in the latest.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think it would have been better if the hon. member for Monck had left the question of the fairness of the Ontario Government alone. We find by his own statement that the gazetting in that case was fair and honest. Can we say as much for the conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite? Can we say that their conduct was above suspicion—that they acted fairly in dealing with the members of the Opposition? The hon. member for Monck ought to have known that in the Local Legislature there is a very large majority of Reformers, and had it not been for the iniquitous gerrymandering of this Government we would have had the same proportion of majority here as we have in Ontario. I have no grievance to offer against my returning officer. He is a fair, straightforward man; but what I do complain of is the delay, for which he was in no way responsible, in the gazetting of my election. I was not gazetted until the 9th of April, and in fact I and some others who had started on our way down here, did not know whether we would be permitted to enter the folds of this Parliament or not. But I found after I started that I was gazetted. I was one of those held over eighteen days after the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery stated he had received the certificate from the returning officer of the 12th March declaring me elected. Why this long delay? Why did it occur? There is no doubt that a gentle hint had come from my opponent in the county of Elgin. Hon. gentlemen opposite thought they were going to carry that riding without any difficulty. One of the members of the Government said: Be sure and defeat that Wilson; we do not want him down here, he makes too much noise. No doubt the desire was expressed by an opponent that my gazetting should be delayed as long as possible, because we knew well that I was one of those who believed in running an election purely, fairly and honestly, and that he would have great difficulty in finding even that any of my supporters had done anything that they ought not to have done, and that he would probably be unable, under any circumstances, to petition against me. It has been said by the First Minister, and by hon. gentlemen opposite: Oh! it is better to be late; while the heat and excitement of the election are great, you will have more protests perhaps than now. Do hon. gentlemen opposite preach and practice alike? Do they act upon what they recommend to be the best course? Not at all. They preach one doctrine and practice another. I have no hesitation in saying that if hon. gentlemen opposite would pursue the course laid out by my hon. friend from Bothwell, they would pursue the right one. The hon. the First Minister has a good deal to say in the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Why does he not take the opportunity here of saying that this committee is the proper tribunal to try this case, and that we should not make a charge against a servant of the House without giving him an opportunity to vindicate his character? Is he going to allow that servant merely to send in the reason why he acted in this matter without giving him the opportunity of going before the Election Committee and explaining everything connected with the matter. Or, is it possible this servant of the Government knows more than the leader of the Government desires should be known? Is the First Minister afraid that a cross-examination would bring out something which he is anxious should not be known? Is there a sinister motive behind his conduct? If there be not, the hon. the First Minister will at once, as it is his duty to do, give that servant an opportunity to show that he, at least, is not responsible for the wrongs afflicted on the members of the Opposition. Why should the First Minister have any fear if the Government has done nothing wrong? If it is purely by chance or by accident, as the First Minister states, that these delays in gazetting occurred, why should the Government hesitate for a moment to allow the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to go before the committee composed of a majority of their own friends. Their hesitation will produce the impression from one end of the Dominion to the other, that it was not all by chance this gazetting took place. If the Government refuse to allow a fair investigation to be had into this matter, they will lead the country to believe that they have been using loaded dice, and were bound to be sustained by means foul or fair. What statement can be expected from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery? Supposing he sends a statement here, I must say that I, for one, judging from the manner in which he gazetted my return, could have no confidence in any statement he would make. It is only in a fair, careful, thorough investigation that I could have confidence. Should the Government persist in refusing an investigation, the country will feel that the acts of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery will not bear light. The country will hold them responsible for striking below the belt, and taking undue advantage of their opponents. Such conduct is un-British, I was about to say cowardly, on their part.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. member who brought this matter before the House mentioned North Wellington and the action of the returning officer in connection with that constituency, which I represent. Personally, I have no complaint to make with regard to the returning officer. I believe that he endeavored to discharge his duty faithfully. I hold in my hand a certificate he gave me after the close of the election:

"HARRISTON, 7th March, 1887.

"I hereby certify that the member-elect for the electoral district of the north riding of the county of Wellington, in pursuance of the writ in writ, as having the majority of votes lawfully given, is James McMullen, of the town of Mount Forest, in the county of Wellington."

My return is marked as having been received at the city of Ottawa on the 15th March, though this certificate is dated the 7th March. I feel quite certain that the returning officer, after the required number of days had expired during which he was required by law to hold the papers for the purpose of a recount, forwarded them to Ottawa. It only takes a day for a letter to reach Ottawa from Harriston, so I think those papers must have been received here before the 15th. The returning officer told me he should return the papers the moment the time fixed by law expired. I believe he did so. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery says that the papers were received here on the 15th March. I was not gazetted until the 2nd April. The Clerk of the Crown kept them over not only for one Saturday, but for two, and it was not until the third that my constituency was gazetted as having returned me as its representative. From the discussion that has taken place in connection with this matter, and from the evidence which has been already presented to this House and will go to the country, those people who are unbiassed in their political views can come to no other conclusion than that an arrangement has been privately and secretly entered into, to keep back the gazettement of Reform members, so as to give the Conservatives all the opportunity possible of entering protests after they themselves had escaped being protested. The first Minister, in his reply to the hon. gentleman who brought this question before the House, in the first place, said that the probabilities were that, if the returns remained over for some time, until the heat of political passion had worn off, they might not be protested, but if they were gazetted immediately, and while the people retained the feelings of bitterness which had arisen during the contest, possibly a protest might be entered. From that view of the case, he would lead us to suppose that the members of the Government were all anxious to have protests entered against themselves. If that be the position, we must conclude that they all courted protests, because almost all of them were gazetted first, while most of the Reformers were left to the last. I have no such idea. I am satisfied that they had a very different intention from that. I am satisfied that they were a little scared at the close of the contest on the 22nd, and that they feared that things would be a little tighter than they had expected, and so they kept back the gazettement of members on the Opposition side of the House, and possibly it might have resulted in a number of gentlemen not being gazetted at all if the Government had not found that they were going to have a small majority after all. I am satisfied, from the evidence which has been brought before the House, from the exposures which have been made, that no reasonable-minded man would come to any other conclusion than that the Government were disposed, if it were necessary in their own interest, to put off the gazettement of a number of Reformers until after the House had met, until after the Speaker was elected, and possibly until after the House had risen for the first time; so that in some way or other they might defeat the intention of the electors and might prevent members coming here to represent the constituencies for which they had been elected. It is not at all creditable to the hon. gentlemen that these means should have been resorted to. It shows a spirit of unfairness which is very much to be deplored in a Canadian Parliament. While we differ in our views on a great number of questions, while we go to the polls and fight before our constituents, and while we seek the suffrages of the people on the ground of the different views held by us on political matters, it is necessary that when the verdict is given it should be carried out; and, when the people decide that a certain individual, holding certain political views, should be their representative in this House, it is right that their views should not be interfered with, or the man whom they have chosen prevented from taking his seat, or placed at a disadvantage when he does so. We know, from the number of protests that have been entered, that if in any case a Conservative has been protested, then a Reformer has been also protested, in many cases out of a feeling of bitterness. Taking the counties which lie in the neighborhood of my constituency, what do we find? We find that the return from North Grey was received here on the 15th, the same day as my return was received, the same day that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery admits that he received the return for North Wellington. The member for North Grey was gazetted on the 19th March, while, for some reason best known to himself, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery did not gazette me until the 2nd April. Then take East Grey, the county by which mine is bounded on the east. The return from that constituency was received on the 14th, and the member was gazetted on the 19th. There was nothing wrong with those papers. There was evidently no necessity to make any enquiry into the papers from East Grey, because that hon. member was gazetted on the 19th, but my papers were received only the day after, and I was not gazetted until the 2nd April. Then again take the case of Centre Wellington. That was formerly represented by Dr. Orton. It is now represented by another gentleman. The papers in connection with Centre Wellington the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery says he received on the 4th, but he did not gazette the member until the 26th; he could not find room for him in the Gazette of the 19th. Then take the case of Cardwell, the constituency of the hon. the Minister of the Interior, which is also on the east of me, touching my constituency. His returns were received here on the 9th and he was gazetted on the 12th. Then take the case of Peel, a constituency which is also quite close to me. The returns from Peel were received on the 9th and the member was gazetted on the 12th. We notice that all the Conservative constituencies in my immediate section were, in every single instance, gazetted immediately after the returns were received. There was not a single instance in which a Conservative return was left over, while in many cases the Reform returns were held over for one, for two and even for three weeks. What does this all mean? It means this. Take the case of South Grey: it was received early in March and not gazetted until the 26th. Nearly three weeks elapsed from the time the papers connected with South Grey were received before the return was gazetted. Now, the meaning is this: If there had been a protest in North Grey, there would certainly have been one in South Grey, because there was plenty of time from the 15th to the 26th to work up the necessary evidence and file a protest against the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin), if North Grey had been protested. Then take the case of Cornwall. If there had been a protest there it would have had to be filed before the 12th April. There was plenty of time up to the 2nd April to file a protest in North Wellington, and so on in all the constituencies around. It shows that the Government intended to have all the advantage in filing protests, and from the number that has been filed and the way which hon. gentlemen on this side have been treated, it is quite clear that was the intention. Take the case of the member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt), which I think is the most glaring of all. We have evidence that the return was made at the proper time. He took the pains to enquire from the postmaster at home as to the date upon which these papers were mailed to Ottawa, and he also enquired at the Post Office Department here as to the date when they were received, and he ascertained that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery received the return four days before he claimed to have received it. The remarkable thing is that these papers bear evidence of having arrived here and of having been received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, or some person on his behalf, four days before the date at which he states them to have been received. Now, I say that all these facts prove that, if necessity arose, the Government intended to take advantage of these delays. We went to the country under the disadvantage of the Franchise Act. Hon. gentlemen opposite expected that it would accomplish a great deal in their interest, and no doubt it did. But when the elections were close and there was some doubt as to the result, then they got ready to make this last move, in order, if possible, to prevent the will of the people from being made manifest. Now, I say that this man who is charged with this unfairness in the matter of gazetting the different returns, should either be allowed to appear before this House or before a committee of this House, in order to show whether he is guilty or not. Why, Sir, take the question of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) that was put a few evenings ago, and take the answer that was given by the First Minister, and any fair-minded man will come to the conclusion at once that there has been some collusion between the Government, or some member of the Government, and that particular official. The question was as follows:

Mr. McMULLEN.

"Whether any member of the Ministry had any conversation, correspondence or communication of any kind, mediate or immediate, with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, on the subject of gazetting the members elected to this House? If so, which member of the Government, and what was the nature of such correspondence, conversation or suggestion."

This question was put to the First Minister and he declined to answer it. He refused to give a reply. No doubt, if the Government had not really been guilty of collusion with this man, if they had had nothing at all to do with this unseemly and ridiculous business, why did not the First Minister get up and say so? What particular harm would there be in his saying the Government had no conversation or no interview with this officer? That would have cleared the skirts of the Government. But the First Minister could not do that, I presume. I suppose he felt it would be unwise and imprudent on his part to dare to load that official with the responsibility by saying that the Government had not had any conversation with him. Now, every one will come to the conclusion that the Government are responsible as well as the official for what has taken place. The official himself is undoubtedly responsible, because, no matter what influences may have been brought to bear on him, it was wrong for him to allow himself to be made a tool of by the Government for the time being. If he has permitted himself to be made a tool of, he does not deserve to occupy that distinguished position any longer, but he deserves, as implied in the resolution of the hon. member for Bothwell, to be dismissed. Any man in an official position that will stoop to be guilty of any act such as undoubtedly that official must be guilty of in the course he has taken in connection with this gazetting, certainly deserves to be dismissed. If this House is to be truly representative of the people, we must have an election law carried out in a manner that will be creditable to ourselves, and give the people a controlling voice in this House. If we are not going to have that, if we are going to have a continued system of political trickery from year to year, then we shall have to bear with it until such time as the people rise in their might and put a stop to it. I hope there are enough people in this country who are fair-minded and honest, to put a stop to this system, that they will condemn it, and those who practice it. Now, Sir, an hon. gentleman referred to the returns made in the Ontario elections, and tried to offset the charge that is being made against the Dominion Government, by the Local Government returns. The two cases are not in point, and for this reason: In Ontario the time for filing petitions dates from the time they are received, and not from the time they are published in the Gazette. When the return is received by the Clerk of the House, the time begins to run within which a petition has got to be filed. In the case of the Dominion, from the date on which the return is gazetted, the time begins to run within which a petition may be filed, consequently all the advantage is in the hands of those that were gazetted early, as against those who were gazetted late. Now, Sir, there is an amusing thing in this connection to which I wish to draw the attention of the House, and that is in relation to the North-West returns. Up there the elections took place on the 15th March. The election returns for Alberta were received on the 4th April, and they were gazetted on the 9th. The first Saskatchewan return was received on the 9th April, and it was gazetted promptly on the 9th. The return from West Assiniboia was received on the 8th, and gazetted on the 9th. The return for East Assiniboia was received on 1st and gazetted on 2nd. There was no delay in any of those cases; the business was always put through promptly and there was not a minute's delay in the returns being placed in the hands of the Queen's Printer. The evasive answer given by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, that the papers were voluminous and considerable investigation had to be made which caused delay in gazetting, did not apparently apply to returns from the North-West, because no examination was made in those cases. There was not a return held over for a week, nor for any unnecessary time whatever. They appear to have gone straight to the Gazette on being received; but in the case of Ontario returns a system of discrimination appears to have been adopted and to have been carried out systematically. At first a few Reformers were gazetted with Conservatives, to give a color of fairness to the course of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, for if he had kept all Reformers off the lists the offence would have been too glaring. A few days ago the House considered the question with respect to the difficulty in the return for Queen's county. Hon. gentlemen opposite were very anxious to send that case to a committee and not have it judged by the House. Now, however, they wish this matter judged by the House and oppose its reference to a Committee. The truth is they adopt any course which seems to suit their purpose at the time. If it suited their purpose to send the question to a committee they would do so, but under the existing circumstances they think it will suit them best to have it dealt with by the House. Very possibly if the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery was examined on oath by the Committee on Privileges and Elections he might frankly say that he had been duped, that influences had been exerted over him and that he had carried out his instructions.

Mr. DAVIES. Hon. gentlemen opposite should not indulge in cat-calls.

Mr. MILLS. It is very unfair to act in that manner at this early part of the Session.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must ask hon. members to cease the noise. If I could discover an offender I would certainly use my powers.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not intend to occupy the attention of the House any longer. I shall, however, always address the House on any subject that I consider in the interests of my constituency, and any action on the part of hon. gentleman opposite will never deter me from expressing my opinion. This question should be thoroughly ventilated, for the country cannot afford to have it repeated at another general election. This dodge is about the last that can be resorted to, I imagine. Our political experience of recent years, has been that something is always unearthed to give hon. gentleman opposite a means for accomplishing their object. This last move is not a creditable one, and no member of this House would dare to face the public and defend the action of this officer. Gross injustice has been done and steps should be taken to prevent its repetition. I hope such an impression will be made on the people of the country that it will not be repeated.

Mr. BOWMAN. This discussion has revealed a very extraordinary state of affairs in regard to the gazetting of returns, especially those of hon. members on this side of the House. I do not propose to discuss the returns of other hon. gentlemen; I simply desire to state the facts in regard to my own case. When we consider the discrepancy which exists in the gazetting of returns, we must come to the conclusion either that the returning officers or the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery failed very seriously in discharging their duties. So far as the return of my own riding is concerned, I have a letter in my possession from the returning officer in which he states that he made the return on 7th March, and that statement is corroborated by the return laid on the Table by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, in which he acknowledges it was received on the 8th March; and consequently there has been no failure on the part of the returning officer to discharge his duties properly in that respect. Consequently the fault lies altogether at the door of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. The return was received on the 9th March. The next Gazette was published on the 12th. So there were three days for the return to be sent from the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to the office of the Queen's Printer. But for some reason or other it was not published in that number of the Gazette. The next Gazette was published on the 19th March, but although a week elapsed it did not appear in that issue. It did not make its appearance until the 26th March. So it took eighteen days for the return to get from the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to the office of the Canada Gazette. There is another feature in connection with this case. It is stated by that official, I understand, that in some cases it was necessary to have some correspondence, that in some cases the returns were so defective they had to be corrected. But in this case there was no correspondence and the return was accepted as sent in. It is important we should know the cause of the delay. It is too much to ask us to assume that these delays were the result of accident or oversight. If one, two or half-dozen cases had occurred, they might be assumed to be due to chance, but when such a large number failed to be gazetted at the proper time we must look for the cause elsewhere. We can only account for this state of affairs by assuming that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery deliberately kept back the returns of members on this side of the House for reasons which are, no doubt, fully understood by at least some hon. gentlemen opposite. I simply desire to state the question of my own return in its true light and show that the returning officer, at all events, was not to blame.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am glad the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has followed in the wake of those who preceded him on that side of the House in making many general statements charging revising officers, returning officers, and all the other officials in connection with the elections, with being responsible for their being in the cold shades of opposition, on that side of the House. But there is not one of them so far who has pointed out any particular returning officer or revising officer, who has done an injustice to him personally. There is not an hon. gentleman on that side who has said: The returning officer in my county was a Tory, and he did me a flagrant wrong. Of what are they complaining? Simply that they have not been gazetted in time to suit them. Surely there must be something at the back of this—there must be something to fear. I can point to the election in Kingston, where the right hon.

Mr. McMULLEN.

the leader of the Government was elected. No doubt the returning officer there was a Tory—one of the worst kind of Tories, and no doubt his officials were Tories. But being honest, like all Tories, they counted up the ballots, and gave the opposition candidate, Mr. Gunn, the benefit of every doubt, and they returned the leader of the Government to this House by a majority of twelve. The friends of hon. gentlemen opposite opposed it; they said there was a dire wrong somewhere, and they applied for a recount, knowing that the judge was an appointee of their own, and not favorable to the leader of the Government, so far as politics were concerned. What did he do? He said: These corrupt Tory returning officers have not given the Premier a full count; I will increase it to seventeen, and he gave the Premier a majority of seventeen, where the corrupt Tory officials had given him a majority of only twelve.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What about Mr. Dunn?

Mr. TAYLOR. Who is Mr. Dunn? Speak for yourselves; name your own returning officer; name the returning officer for Bothwell, or any other returning officer in Ontario. But they point to Mr. Dunn, whose case we have not investigated. Let them speak for themselves and bring a direct charge. The hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt), said he regretted very much that the motion placed in your hands was not for the dismissal of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Try him without judge or jury; cut off the head of an old servant, who has served this Government faithfully for the last twenty years, served when my hon. friends opposite were in power, and no doubt as faithfully then as he has on this occasion, for there were no complaints from that side of the House. But this appears to have been the policy of hon. gentlemen when they were appealing to the electorate of this country. I know it was so in my own riding. I know there was not a public officer there but was threatened with dismissal when the leader of the Opposition and his friends returned to power, as they expected to do, and were sure they would do, on the 22nd of February. Every Custom house officer, every lighthouse keeper, every fishery overseer that took part in the elections was to be dismissed, and their places were promised for political support to the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite. Not only that, but the portfolios were distributed to hon. gentlemen opposite, and I am credibly informed that an hon. gentleman, occupying a leading position on the other side of the House, has received correspondence addressed to him as Mr. So-and-So, M.P., Minister of Customs. No doubt this hon. gentleman said to some of his friends, after the House meets I will be Minister of Customs, and when you address me, address me as Minister of Customs. The hon. gentleman whom I see laughing so pleasantly before me knows that is correct; and it proves conclusively that they fully expected to attain power; and that the portfolios were distributed. But a majority of forty-three on the other side does not give them much show of getting in. Now, I was elected on the 22nd of February with a majority of four hundred and sixteen. That was a majority that ought to have guaranteed that my name would appear in the next week's Gazette, or in two weeks at most, and yet my name does not appear until the 19th of March. But I am not complaining; I have nothing to fear. But hon. gentlemen opposite were in purgatory, and they wanted to get out; they wanted the ten days' rule to apply to them, and the thirty days' rule to apply to us. If hon. gentlemen opposite had nothing to fear they would not complain of their names not being gazetted for a week or two after being elected. A notice that the return of the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Burdett) was gazetted on the 19th March. The Minister of Customs, who was elected in the north riding with a larger majority, was gazetted on the same day.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He was returned on the 16th.

Mr. TAYLOR. His name appears in the Gazette on the 19th.

Mr. EDGAR. Immediately after being returned.

An hon. MEMBER. Gazetted before he was returned perhaps.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Addington (Mr. Bell) was gazetted on the 19th of March. The hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) was gazetted on the 19th. I was gazetted on the 19th of March. The hon. member for North Leeds and Greenvile (Mr. Ferguson) was gazetted on the 26th of March, and the hon. member for West Peterboro' (Mr. Stevenson) was gazetted on the 26th April. Now none of these gentlemen are complaining of the acts of the returning officers. The hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Burdett) insinuates that not only the returning officers, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and other officials are corrupt, but he insinuates that the postmaster would deface the register book in order to assist the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in proving that certain letters had not arrived on a particular day. I am surprised at the hon. gentleman saying that he had made arrangements with the people at Belleville that there would be no protest there if there would be none against him, knowing that if my hon. friend from West Hastings (Mr. Robertson) was guilty of corrupt acts, it was his duty as an honorable man not to be a party to a corrupt bargain. If he knew that the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Robertson) had violated the law, it was his duty to say: Yes, he will be prosecuted; I will take my chances, for I have done nothing wrong. But he could not say that; he made this bargain, and he said that if he was gazetted on the same day as the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Robertson) there would be no protest in that case. But he did not blame the hon. member for West Hastings for being a party to the protest, but he blamed somebody else. I think he has himself and his friends to blame for the protest being filed. I could have told him the next day after the election, and why? A couple of his constituents worked in Gananoque, and one of his leading friends wrote down, telling them: We are going to have a hard fight; Burdett wants you on the 22nd to vote for him; you may be sworn; we cannot promise you anything, but come—it will be all right. Those two gentlemen got these letters, and they were advised not to go on these letters, for "we have money in hand." They wrote up to their friends stating that they could not afford to go and pay their own expenses. They received another letter telling them to go to a certain individual in Gananoque who was working for a lumber firm, and would see that they got paid. Those two gentlemen went there and saw that individual, were furnished with funds, and went up to East Hastings and recorded their votes. The hon. gentleman finds fault because the protest was not served on him until the last day. He had a right, perhaps, to find fault because he was not served on the first day; but I suppose that is the experience of all gentlemen on either side of the House. The law is the same for hon. gentlemen on that side as it is for those on this side of the House. If any hon. gentleman on this side did a corrupt act during the election, it was their duty to see that his election was protested, as hon. gentlemen on this side have seen fit to protest the seats of hon. gentlemen opposite. Of course the Conservative party have always been charged with being the corrupt party of this country; but it has always been proved in the courts that hon. gentlemen opposite and their friends are the party who have done the most corrupt acts in the election campaigns.

Mr. McMULLEN. Sir John in Kingston.

Mr. TAYLOR. What about Sir John in Kingston?

Mr. McMULLEN. He was unseated.

Mr. TAYLOR. When?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I can tell you; in 1874, for a corrupt act of himself or his friends.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was the act?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The most corrupt of acts, and he was only spared by the lenity of the judge. If the hon. gentleman wishes to know, Chief Justice Richards declared that he never had more hesitation in not disqualifying a man in his life.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman will move, I will second a motion for a special committee to look up precedents in the courts to show which party has the cleanest record in election trials. I am willing to stake the reputation of hon. gentlemen around me that the white glove will not be handed to my hon. friend who made the statement about Sir John in Kingston. Now, until hon. gentlemen opposite will rise and say: "The returning officer in my riding did me a wrong," I am not prepared to have that returning officer dragged before an election committee of this House to have his conduct investigated. I found out, when I was home, why my return was not made sooner. I got my certificate about the 1st of March that I was the elected candidate for South Leeds, and when I was home I asked the returning officer why I was not gazetted sooner. He said: "The fact was, that after I made out the statement, I got a telegram stating that my son, who was in the United States, was ill; I went to see him, and the return remained until I came back." So he did not send it down to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery until the 12th of March, when it was received here, and I am gazetted on the 19th.

Mr. BLAKE. It was received on the 14th.

Mr. TAYLOR. Be that as it may, the returning officer perhaps should have had his return in sooner, because my election was settled without any trouble, and the returns were all in within two or three days after the election. But that was the excuse the returning officer gave me, and it was a valid excuse; and until hon. gentlemen opposite make a specific charge against any of these returning officers of having done them a gross injustice, I am not prepared to bring them before a committee of this House, but am ready to believe that they did what was fair and proper, as Tories always do.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat is a delightful example of that wonderful product of our constitution, the innocent Tory member. He examined the returns of half a dozen constituencies that returned Conservative members, and discovering in every instance that they had been gazetted within a day or two after the return to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, he asks in innocent surprise, what have the members of this House to complain of? It never struck him, I suppose that there were members on this side of the House who were not dealt with in the same way. The motion of the hon. member for Bothwell is based on that very fact, that members on this side have not been dealt with by the ministerial officers of the Crown as those officers have dealt with hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for Monck (Mr. Boyle), who spoke this afternoon, appeared to be very much dissatisfied that the time of the House should be wasted, as he said, by those petty squabbles over the elections.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. The sentiment appears to be cheered by hon. gentlemen who share the opinion; but I think a little reflection will show them that the taking of proper steps by this House to assert its own dignity and liberties, and to condemn the wrong-doing of those officers who have been guilty of it, is one of the highest duties to which it can devote itself. It is absurd to imagine that outrages which no hon. gentleman in this House has undertaken to defend—outrages such as that most wicked and diabolical outrage in connection with the Queen's county election that any officer has ever attempted—I am sorry to see hon. gentlemen smile at that—I say, in the face of such outrages, it is time the House devoted some of its time to such cases. In this particular case it may be that the conduct of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is capable of explanation; it may be that the conduct of the returning officers who held the returns back for several weeks is capable of explanation. I do not suppose my hon. friend who made the motion proposes to condemn them unheard. What is his proposition? It is the most reasonable imaginable. It is that to the tribunal which hon. gentlemen opposite have declared to be an impartial tribunal, composed of the highest legal talent of the House—a tribunal where, they have told us, again and again, party passion is silent, and everything is done in the judicial spirit of the courts—shall be referred the facts which on their face show that wrong-doing has been perpetrated on a large number of the members of this House, and that that wrong-doing, by a peculiar combination of circumstances, has been perpetrated exclusively on the members of one particular party. It is proposed to refer the facts which on their face, and until they are answered, constitute a very strong case against the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery; and until they are answered more than one member will retain the opinion that that gentleman has not shown himself fit to hold any longer the office he has filled for many years. The hon. member for Monk attempted to answer the proposition that this House should assert its privileges by referring to the Ontario election returns. There are some hon. gentlemen in this House who can never get their noses beyond the Province of Ontario. It is nothing to me even if in that wonderful Province a wrong was done. If a wrong was done there, it is no argument that I should assist in doing a wrong here; but when he came to his facts, he got the wrong brief, for it turned out that a right was done there, and he argued that because right was done there, wrong should be done here. Now, there are two propositions before the House. One is that on the state of the facts, which constitute a strong prima facie case against the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, the committee should take evidence and report to this House. The other is that we should humbly ask the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to write a letter saying why he took the course he did. There is only one proposition of which I have heard within the last few days that equals the coolness of this, and that is the proposition made in the Committee on Privileges and Elections that an apology should be sent by this House to the returning officer, Mr. Dunn. What return will the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery make to us? He will simply say that he received the papers and made the best possible use of our and his time, which was taken up, as he informed a member the other day, in reading over the documents connected with the return. We know that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has no business to delay the publication of a return made by a returning officer for one hour in order to read those documents. The law is plain and distinct on this point. If he had any judicial duties to discharge, if he had to revise the return of the returning officer and see that it was correct, then, in the Queen's county election, he should have revised the return made by Mr. Dunn, and amended it, so as to declare Mr. King elected. But, I am happy to say, we have not delegated to officers of that kind any judicial duties. All the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery had to do was simply to give notice in the next issue of the Gazette of the name of the candidate declared by the returning officer to be elected. We know that he has not done so in many cases for weeks; we know that he has thus put hon. gentlemen on this side in a very unfavorable position as compared with that in which he has put hon. gentlemen opposite, as regards the publication of their election returns. The proposition of the hon. gentleman is objectionable from another standpoint, that it deliberately proposes to do away with one-half of the subject matter of complaint. The proposition of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) embraces the complaints made against the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and also against the divers returning officers. He proposes that where the returning officers have done wrong and where the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has done wrong, their conduct shall be investigated into and reported upon; but we are asked by the First Minister to give the go-bye to the entire charges against the returning officers and simply to call on the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for a letter as to his share in the matter. I do not think that is at all fair or consistent with our self-respect. In the Province I come from—which, I am happy to say, has returned six good Reformers—I find that in the counties of King's and Queen's where there were no hints of a petition being filed, our returns were not gazetted until the 2nd of April, while in the county of Prince, where the returning officer did not make his return until long after the officers of the other two counties had made theirs, his return, by some inexplicable freak, reached here five days before those of the other two counties, and was gazetted on the 19th of March when a petition was immediately filed. Thus where they wished to file a petition hon. gentlemen opposite managed to get their returns in a long time, fourteen days, before the returns of the other counties. Since this debate has proceeded we have had statements made by many hon. gentlemen in their places as to the facts connected with the returns, as to the time they left the officers' hands and were placed in the post office, and the time they should have reached the hands of the clerk, compared with the time the Clerk of the Crown reports to have received them, showing that he reported having received them long after the time they should have been received by him. There has evidently been wrong-doing on the part of some of the officers in cases which materially affect privileges of members of this House, and I propose to move in amendment to the amendment:

Mr. DAVIES.

To leave out all the words in the amendment after the word "That" and insert the following instead thereof:—"The following words be inserted after 'That' in the main motion:—'it appearing from the statements of several members in their places that some of the returns should have reached the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery earlier than he reports; and it appearing from the return of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that great delays have occurred in transmitting to him and also in gazetting by him many of the returns, and that the returns of the great bulk of the Conservative members were published in the earliest Gazette while the returns of the great bulk of the Reform members were delayed, many of them for several Gazettes.'"

Mr. TUPPER (Pictou). I do not know whether, in the debate upon the resolution proposed by the hon. gentlemen opposite and the different amendments, attention has been called to the fact that in the House of Commons in England it has not been the custom for years past to venture on this fishing investigation in reference to whether officers of the House or returning officers in the country have or have not performed their duty. Listening to the hon. gentleman from Queen's, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), it seemed to me that he admitted that these returning officers may, one and all of them, have performed their duty in the last election, and that these facts that seemed to carry conviction on their face, to his mind, of wrong-doing may be so explained, when these gentlemen appear in answer to the summons, that all cause for complaint will be removed. I understood from the tenor of his remarks that he at present passed no opinion upon the conduct of those officers other than was passed upon prima facie evidence or the evidence at present before the House, which may be met and which certain hon. gentlemen in this House think ought to be met in the way they point out. Then my conclusion is that this is a fishing enquiry, that the House proposes to endeavor to ascertain whether there has not been some wrong-doing, and that, while uncertain and with minds still undecided as to whether there is really cause for directing the attention of Parliament to the manner in which any particular returning officer have performed their duty, still, perhaps, some hon. gentlemen hope that, in the immense number of cases that will of course be brought up and that can be brought up, they might find one or two glaring cases in which the officer has not performed his duty, and then they will be able to censure him, to punish him, and to make political capital out of the transaction and so to use it against the Administration of the day. I take the ground that that is not at all in keeping with the wise course of procedure followed in England for some time back. If hon. gentlemen, in their perusal of the many cases into which investigation has lately been made, have read carefully the precedents in the journals in the Mother Country, they must have been struck with the many complaints similar to those which are being made in this Parliament which were ventilated against the returning officers in England time and time again; and there were many cases in which Parliament went through this form, in which the returning officers were summoned, in which the returning officers appeared, in which the returning officers were found guilty and were punished, and their conduct seemed so bad in many cases that Parliament undertook to rid itself of sitting as a quasi-criminal court, or to rid itself of sitting in judgment upon these men. And how did they do it? They passed penal enactments, they passed stringent regulations, imposing heavy penalties upon the returning officers for neglect of duty. These statutes are of comparatively modern date. They were passed to compel these officers to perform their duties properly, and this matter was in that respect left for the ordinary tribunals of the country to deal with. We have copied the statutes from the English Act, and among others is the 101st section of chapter 8 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, and that section says:

"If any returning officer wilfully delays, neglects or refuses duly to return any person who ought to be returned to serve in the House of Commons for any electoral district, such person may, if it has been determined on the hearing of an election petition respecting the election for such electoral district, that such person was entitled to have been returned, sue the returning officer who has so wilfully delayed, neglected or refused duly to make such return of his election, in any court of record in the Province in which such electoral district is situate, and recover from him a sum of five hundred dollars, together with all damages he has sustained by reason thereof, and costs, provided such action is commenced within one year after the commission of the act on which it is grounded, or within six months after the conclusion of the trial of the petition relating to such election."

Now, if the conduct of the returning officer has been such as to lead to grave injustice being done to any hon. member of this House, the laws of the country have met that case and it is now the law of the land that a remedy is at hand for any person so aggrieved. But it is not proper, in my humble judgment, that the House of Commons, sitting here to transact business of great importance, should go on this roving enquiry and endeavor to punish these officers for the mere sake of individual cases or personal spite, or whatever you choose to call it, or in order to make political capital, or for any other reason where it does not affect any hon. gentleman in his rights in this House, or as a representative or as a candidate in the election. I claim that, if such an enquiry as is proposed to this House is a proper one for us to enter upon, surely there are others, there are hosts of cases, there are thousands of cases equally important upon which we should also enter. I take it that the law of the land is more particular in regard to bribery than it is in regard to anything else concerning elections, and not only are members compelled to face the serious consequences of any bribery that they may individually commit in an election, but individual electors are to be punished for the commission of such an offence. We know that the statutes regulate the sitting of a court of enquiry or the issuing of a commission of enquiry into corrupt practices in the different constituencies; and, if we proceed upon this investigation, we will have to devote the whole year or several Sessions of Parliament to the issue of a commission to fish, to seek out, and to find if we can the thousands of cases that may have happened, that the hon. gentlemen opposite charge have happened, where gross bribery or gross intimidation has occurred, and the laws of the land have been directly violated in connection with the representation in this House. Do the hon. gentlemen seriously propose to follow this up?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If my hon. friend will allow me to interrupt him, I would ask if he means to argue that our only redress is in the courts of law and under this penal statute, that, in regard to our own officer, we cannot enquire into his conduct with a view to his dismissal, that, in fact, we cannot dismiss him on certain grounds, and that our only recourse against him is to sue for damages.

Mr. TUPPER (Picton). I hope, before I sit down, I shall be able to reach the intelligence of the hon. gentleman from Bothwell, so that that enquiry on his part will prove to be unnecessary. Up to this point I will tell the hon. gentleman opposite I have not made that statement, I have not made that argument. I may have been a little ambiguous, but I have endeavored to express as concisely as possible the views I entertain. The argument that I have been endeavoring to state is one that struck me a moment ago, and is not at all affected by the position which the hon. gentleman asks me if I am willing to take. Now, I have not stated that the House of Commons cannot enquire into the conduct of the late elections; I have not argued that, as in the election case which we discussed the other night, the House of Commons has no jurisdiction, or that the House of Commons has divested itself of the jurisdiction which it contained. I have been endeavoring to show that it is inexpedient, and there is no good purpose for us to exercise this power, which I understand it is plain we do possess. I do not understand that any hon. gentleman has challenged the right of the House of Commons to enquire into the conduct of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, or of any returning officer, but I say that it is inexpedient for us to enter upon an enquiry which the hon. gentleman from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), says, stands now in a position that so far as we are informed, we do not know what may actually happen. So far as his position is concerned, there is no real necessity for this investigation, and no real outrage has been perpetrated, because, as he says, the evidence is merely prima facie, he is not able to name the delinquents, he is not able to say that such and such an officer has come within the provisions of the Act which punish violations of it. He says it appears from the returns laid upon the Table by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, that irregularities have occurred which have affected hon. gentlemen on that side of the House more than on this side; therefore, he proposes that we turn ourselves into a commission of enquiry, and summon all the returning officers of the Dominion and endeavor to see, after a cross-examination, whether we cannot find some poor unfortunate whom we can punish and then leave him to be punished again in the courts. When my hon. friend interrupted me in—and I do not speak in an impolite sense—an impertinent question, as it had no bearing on the views I was expressing, I was proceeding to say that I considered it highly inexpedient that we should enter upon this kind of investigation unless we were prepared to put all the other business of the country aside in order to enquire, first, into this question, and then as to whether gross bribery has been committed in this or that constituency. I for one am not prepared to go into this investigation. I am not prepared to say that it is expedient we should sit here as a court or commission on matters that are brought before us. I do not believe that it is a matter interesting to the country at large. I believe that the last elections were conducted just as properly, just as morally, just as fairly as any elections were conducted in the past since 1867. But the trouble with my hon. friends opposite is that the result has been so unfortunate to them that they cannot bear to look at it as calmly and as magnanimously as they have been accustomed to. I do not believe that public opinion would justify us in going into this enquiry when all the rights of the members of the House, and therefore of their constituents, are properly conserved by legislation in existence, and when any aggrieved person can go into the court if he desires, where he can have the conduct of the returning officer investigated. It is no argument to say that it imposes responsibility upon the plaintiff who begins this suit, because that difficulty attends every one who goes to the courts for redress. The returning officer is already responsible enough under the general legislation of the country, and is liable to penalties for any wrong or offence of which he may be guilty. We have the proper machinery that would save a great deal of time to the country if we let the parties aggrieved seek redress from the courts. My hon. friend has alluded to the returns in 1874 which I have brought before the attention of the House; he has alluded to them at least twice, and I think it unfortunate that we are not in a position to say whether his estimate of the political opinions of the gentlemen returned in 1874 is correct, or whether my estimate is correct. I by no means vouch for the figures I gave to the House, because I moved for the papers in order that we might examine them, and I hoped that my hon. friend after he had seen the comparison, would have been satisfied to delay his motion until we had the papers on the Table. I stated that in the first Gazette four Grits were returned; on 21st February, ten Grits and two Conservatives were returned; 28th February, four Grits and one Conservative. There was a reason for these returns being delayed so long, according to the ideas of hon. gentlemen opposite. Then I find the prominent men in the different Provinces did not appear in the Gazette until the very last. There were seven batches in all. The hon. member for Cumberland (Sir Charles Tupper), who was a prominent man in politics at that time, was not in the first Gazette, and the Minister of Inland Revenue was only in the last batch. But I did not bring that argument forward as a tu quoque argument at all; I brought it forward to show that this accident would happen, as the common phrase is, even in the best regulated families, and I think it has additional importance to-night, as it corroborates the views taken by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., in virtually saying that we should hesitate before passing final judgment upon the statements of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman misunderstood what I said. I said that it was apparent that a primâ facie case had been made out against the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, but that, like other primâ facie cases, possibly it might be answered if it was referred to a tribunal where there was an opportunity to take evidence.

Mr. TUPPER. I said no more. I think the hon. gentleman is fair in the statement he made. He practically admits that the result of this roving commission may be to waste the time of the House for weeks and months. Stronger primâ facie cases have been made and successfully met time and time again in the hon. gentleman's own practice and in the experience of every hon. gentleman, and the result may be that the time of Parliament would be wasted on this fishing excursion. I am not, therefore, prepared to vote for any proposal of that kind. Judging from the temper of hon. gentlemen opposite who have given their experience, I have no doubt if there is a bond fide case, they will be ready to drag the offending officer before a tribunal. If our tribunals are worthy of public confidence, returning officers who have neglected to perform their duty faithfully will be punished, and no one would be more anxious to punish the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery than some hon. gentlemen opposite. Our judges are paid to do this work, and we are sent to this Parliament for an entirely different purpose. The English Parliament does not deal with cases of this kind, but they are covered by the statutes from which I have quoted. Individual members have made statements with respect to their own returns, and, if we are going to proceed with an enquiry, it is very unfair that returning officers who have been accused in the most wholesale manner of neglecting their duties, should be thus attacked and serious charges preferred against them. Those gentlemen, as I have pointed out, are face to face with those penal enactments, and surely it is unfair in the case of officers who may have to appear before a court of law that their conduct should be discussed here. The return for the county of Pictou was one of the longest delayed, and, strange as it may seem to hon. gentlemen opposite, the returning officer is a member of the party of hon. gentlemen opposite and a life-long opponent of my colleague and myself. Though he delayed his return, and I think it was almost the last of all those gazetted, yet I have not the slightest doubt he acted in a bond fide manner, and I never complained. Hon. gentlemen opposite who have been returned to this House by their different constituents should have been the last to complain. They are here, and they should not quarrel with their returning officers for sending them here, even if a little tardily. There has not been a bond fide complaint made out. Reference has been made to the election in Queen's; but that has nothing to do with the present question and it was not attacked in connection with a long delayed return. There has not been a single case upon which to maintain the general charge that has been made, and I trust the House will hesitate before it imposes on us this most unfortunate duty of sitting as a commission of enquiry and assuming functions which the courts of law possess, and which they can adequately discharge.

Mr. TUPPER (Pictou).

Mr. LISTER. As I understand the question before the House, we are not enquiring into what the returning officers did particularly, but the resolution before the House questions the actions of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. That is the particular subject of investigation here this evening. I always listen with a great deal of pleasure to the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper). The hon. gentleman discusses the question with that vigor and ex cathedra style which leads us to hope that in the course of time he will make a leading debater in the House. But the hon. gentleman seems to fall into the way of a good many of his friends, of constantly referring to the results of the last elections. I desire to inform the hon. gentleman that we do not feel nearly so badly over it as he thinks we do, and when the facts are made clear he will not have so much reason to congratulate himself as he seems to have on the present occasion. The hon. member for Monck (Mr. Boyle) undertook to defend the action of the Government, and instanced the elections for the Local Legislature. It made no difference, however, when the gazetting took place as regards those elections, because the time for protesting does not run from the time of gazetting. Even if it did, the hon. gentleman put himself out of court, because it was plain that those returns were perfectly fair, and that the Conservatives received a fair proper proportion of the number of members gazetted at a certain time. The hon. gentleman talks about fishing excursions. He seems to have fishing excursions on the brain, to use a common phrase. There is no fishing excursion about this matter. The document placed on the Table shows that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has not made the returns as the law requires, that he delayed the gazettement of the returns after he had received them. If that officer has acted properly and can furnish a valid excuse for delay and for disregarding the statute, who will be injured by the investigation? The time of the House will not be occupied; it is a reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and the only witness to be examined will be the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. But that is what hon. gentlemen opposite fear; they are afraid that if he is examined he will tell a story not creditable to them. If rumors are correct, the Secretary of State could tell something about this matter. At all events, it is a duty the House owes to itself and the country to see that an explanation is given as to why an officer of this House should utterly disregard the law. If it has been done for the purpose of giving hon. gentlemen opposite a political advantage, then the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is not fit to hold the position which he has held for so many years. If he has any lawful and valid excuse, then every hon. member will be prepared to extend to him that consideration to which he would be entitled. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that we should not refer to this matter at all. If there is no necessity to refer to the matter, if we have no right to bring that officer to task, why does the First Minister propose this amendment? Why should he ask the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to furnish a letter of explanation, if this House has no right to enquire as to his conduct? And yet the First Minister proposes that this clerk be asked to write a letter to the Clerk of the House, explaining the delay. If we have no right to enquire into it, we have no right even to ask him for that letter, but the amendment proposed by the First Minister on the face of it shows that we have a right to ask for some information on the subject. And having that right, the proper place for investigating this charge is before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. In other cases hon. gentlemen opposite are very anxious to refer matters to this committee. They have proclaimed over and over again that its functions are judicial, and that the actions of its members will be governed by the feelings which should actuate men who are acting in that capacity. If such is the case, this officer runs no risk in having his case investigated, unless he has been guilty of misconduct, and then he should receive his punishment. This is but the last joint in the tail. We have had, in this country, partisan returning officers and revising barristers; we have had gerrymanders; we have had everything that the ingenuity of man can devise for the purpose of keeping the Tory party in power. We have had millions of dollars expended, on the authority of the Governor General's warrants, immediately before the elections, the money taken from the Treasury and expended, perhaps it may be properly. Lastly, we have the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, who is to be used to give an advantage to the Conservative party over the Liberals, by gazettement as he has done. I say that this is not only a gross irregularity on his part, but I say that the documents in the return laid before the House show, as I believe, that this was a deliberate fraud upon the Liberal party of this country. I feel that there ought to be no question about referring this matter to the Privileges and Elections Committee. As I said before, if the conduct of this officer has been right and proper, if it does not deserve censure, he has nothing to fear; but the fact of the Government taking the position they have taken is strong presumptive evidence that they have, themselves, something to fear from this investigation.

Mr. TROW. I will confine myself to the circumstances in my own particular riding. The subject has been pretty thoroughly discussed generally, and it is evident that a wrong has been perpetrated. The speeches of hon. gentlemen do not seem to me to condemn any of the returning officers, but they all unite in condemning the action of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. In regard to my own particular case, I have nothing to say against the returning officer; I think he acted fairly and rightly. The return was received here on the 10th March, but though the Gazette was issued on the 12th, and again on the 19th, my return was not gazetted until the 26th. Under the statute it was unquestionably the duty of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to have included my return amongst those which were gazetted on the 12th or the 19th. I find that my neighbor in the same county and living in the same city, the hon. member for the north riding of Perth (Mr. Hesson) was returned the day after I was returned—he was returned on the 11th and he was gazetted on the 19th, a week before I was gazetted, although my return was received one day before his. I cannot conceive why the Government should hesitate in allowing the matter to be thoroughly investigated. It is due to their credit, it is due to the public at large, as well as the members of this House, that an investigation should immediately take place. The committee is composed of the best legal talent in the House—gentlemen well versed in investigations of this description—and I have no doubt that members will approach the subject without any degree of partisanship. There are no less than twenty-three Conservatives on that committee, as against seventeen members of the Opposition, so that they have sufficient advantage in that respect. The investigation cannot possibly occupy more than a day or a part of a day at furthest in the examination of one single witness. I think it is due to the House and the country that the committee should call this officer to give an account of his stewardship.

Mr. GILLMOR. I have a complaint to make, and I am rather curious to know how the question I am about to ask will be answered. My young friend from Pictou (Mr. Tupper) went fishing. Now when a young man goes fishing he generally wants to catch something, but evidently he did not want to catch anything. It is remarkable to me how few hon. gentlemen opposite want to speak on this subject. I should think that they would want to get up and say something about it—they could mystify the matter, if nothing else. Taking the returns from New Brunswick, I find that the return from the county of Restigouche, where a Conservative was elected, was received here on the 11th of March and gazetted on the 12th of March. In Charlotte, my own county, the return was received on the 11th. There was no room for my name in the Gazette of the 12th; there was no room for it in the Gazette of the 19th nor in the Gazette of the 26th, and they kept me until the 2nd day of April before they gazetted my return. I do not know that I am very much worse off than if I had been gazetted on the 12th, but I would like to know the reason. I do not know whether there is any hon. gentleman on the Treasury benches who can give me the reason, but I cannot think that my hon. friends there, whom I am looking in the face, would have anything to do with such a small, mean matter as this. If they do know anything about it, I would like them to explain why my name was kept out of four Gazettes when it could have gone in. I find that the return in the county of Albert, where a Conservative was elected, was received on the 14th and it was gazetted on the 19th, only five days after. In the county of Carleton, N.B., where a Liberal was returned, the return was twelve days in Ottawa before it was gazetted. The return in my own case was in Ottawa twenty-two days before it was gazetted. In the county of Gloucester, where a Conservative was elected, his return passed by one Gazette; it was the only Conservative return from New Brunswick that did, and it was gazetted in ten days. The return from the county of Kent, where a Conservative was elected, was only four days in Ottawa before it was gazetted. So in King's county, four days; York, two days; Westmoreland, seven days; Victoria, four days; St. John, ten days. The hon. member for Northumberland, who was an independent, was kept out of his place for eighteen days. I do not know how that is; I do not know that any injustice has been done me, but I cannot understand the reason why these returns should be in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery here so long without being gazetted. Was there not room enough in the Gazette? Is the Gazette confined to a certain number of sheets of paper so that when you fill those you cannot fill any more? I think more sheets could be added. There must have been some ulterior motive in this, and surely the Government could not be a party to a small matter like this. Surely those knights to whom people have to bow and take off their hats, could not be a party to a transaction of that kind. I think it must have been done by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and I think it was due to me that an explanation should be given of the reason my return which was made on the 8th of March and received on the 11th, was not gazetted until the 2nd of April, remaining for twenty-two days after being received. I think this official ought to give an account of his conduct in this matter. Of course the reply by hon. gentlemen opposite is: Oh, you have thirty days after you are gazetted, and your case is not prejudiced at all. But I did not know what was coming. I kept watching week after week, and I could not understand why my name did not appear in the Gazette. I really began to think I was not going to be gazetted at all. I think this is a sort of conduct that ought to be explained by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and a good tribunal before which to make that explanation is the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I think it is due to that officer also to give him a chance to state his reasons for treating members of the different parties in the way they have been treated.

Mr. BURDETT. I do not rise to add anything to this discussion, but as the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has kindly given me his personal attention, I do not desire his remarks to go unchallenged, or to show that I bear him any unfriendly feeling by passing them by without notice. I wish to say that, so far as I have been able to discover, there was only one man east of Kingston who had a vote in my riding. He was written to to come, and I suppose not being able to read his letter he placed it in the hands of the hon. member, or some other honest Tory, who endeavored, perhaps, to lay a trap to catch him. But in that he ignominiously failed, for the elector did not vote at my election at all. The only way they can unseat the member for East Hastings is by perjury, and I know how to doctor men who indulge in that, for I have doctored them before. I am much pleased to hear the hon. gentleman talk about political morality. It is the first glimmer of that kind of light which we have had from that side of the House. I can say for myself, and the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Robertson), that when we were through with an exciting contest, and everybody knew that the health of both of us was very poor, and that we were both physically unable to go through such a contest, except at the call of our friends, it was felt to be a manly and generous thing in both parties to leave both of us in the possession of our seats, and not to harass either by protests of any kind. But I have since learned that gentlemen whom the hon. member for South Leeds endeavors to set up as political moralists, have said that they would hound me until all that I would require would be a hearse to carry me to my grave.

Mr. GILLMOR.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hastings). I believe, Sir, that I had the good fortune to be the first member whose name was transmitted by the returning officer to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and the first to be gazetted. The hon. member for Bothwell, in alluding to this return the other day, sought to leave the impression upon the House that the expedition with which it was made was due to its being made by a partisan returning officer, and to partisanship on the part of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery; and when I rose in my seat and told him that the returning officer in my riding was a Reformer, there was great applause and clapping among the members of the Opposition. It is the old story, that whatever may be considered criminal or objectionable on the part of an official who may be a Conservative, is a commendable, virtuous and laudable act on the part of the official who may be a Reformer. Now, Sir, regarding the alleged arrangements which has been alluded to by my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Burdett), I am very glad to see that hon. gentleman rise in his place and acquit me and my friends of any breach of faith or trust in connection with the arrangement which he has referred to as having been made by the political friends of both of us in our respective ridings. On two or three occasions the friends of the hon. member for East Hastings waited upon me and said to me that if I would enter into an agreement or arrangement that there should be no protest in East Hastings, West Hastings would not be protested. I replied that it was absolutely absurd to ask me to enter into an arrangement for the entire electorate of East Hastings; that so far as I was personally concerned, having already gone through the worry of an election, and the anxiety and expense of an election protest, I had no desire to go into another, and that any influence I could use with my friends in East Hastings, it would give me great pleasure to use in the endeavor to bring that arrangement about. Subsequently a meeting of the Reform Association of West Hastings was held, and a member of that association afterwards told me that the hon. member for East Hastings had not only refused to enter a protest in the west riding, but had declined to contribute any funds towards one. Meeting the hon. member subsequently I told him I felt it my duty not only to file no protest myself against him, but to endeavor to persuade my friends in East Hastings not to do so. So far as I was concerned, I carried out that promise. I felt, as the hon. member has said, that both of us were not enjoying very good health; both desired to avoid a protest, and I used all the influence I could to prevent it. I supposed that was the conclusion which had been come to, and it was not until I saw in the papers that a protest had been filed against the hon. gentleman, that I was aware that East Hastings was protested. I may say that the chairman of my committee, who has a great deal of influence in East Hastings, as well as in my own riding, also did all he could to endeavor to prevent that protest, and the gentleman who has entered it has done it on his own responsibility. I think he both signed the petition and filed it himself, and those who have the pleasure of knowing John White, the late member for East Hastings, and who know his pugnacious and pugilistic proclivities, know that you might as well try to turn the Chaudière up stream as to persuade him to abandon any course which he makes up his mind to pursue. I thought it my duty to make this explanation. I do not know to what to attribute all this great expenditure of eloquence, this consumption of gas, this great waste of time and money to the country, and these charges against the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery of dereliction of duty, malfeasance of office, and all that sort of thing. I have reason to believe all these complaints would not have been heard of in this House had our friends on the other side not been chagrined and disappointed in being still compelled to remain in the cold shades of Opposition. I shall not detain the House at any length further in this connection. I have nothing to complain of, as far as the returning officer in my constituency is concerned, or the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Mr. WELDON (St. John.) If we wanted any additional or potential evidence of the necessity of this motion, it has been furnished to us in the narration of the facts given by the hon. member for West Hastings, because it is evident that an arrangement was there made between the parties, and as soon as the hon. member for West Hastings was relieved from all liabilities, some one at once turned round and attacked the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Burdett).

Mr. BOWELL. He said nothing of the kind.

Mr. WELDON. It shows that certainly in that case the hon. member for West Hastings had a great advantage in having the returning officer return him at once, and in having his name gazetted on the 5th March. Listening to the arguments advanced by hon. gentlemen opposite, I have come to the conclusion that it is about time we abolished the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. Of what use is it? It has nothing to do with elections at all, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, since we are told when a motion is made with regard to privileges and elections this House has nothing to do with it, that it has been relegated to the courts. We are told that though this is a matter which affects the electors and the privileges of this House our time should not be taken up by it. Well if the motion of my hon. friend had been acceded to, all this discussion would have been avoided; we would have had the matter discussed in the committee and it would not have interfered with the business of the House. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) says this is not a question for the House to deal with. The hon. gentleman must know that the conduct of a returning officer as to making his return should not be a question to affect the result of the election. It is his conduct during the course of an election which is the subject of judicial decision, and as to the duties of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that is a matter with which the courts have nothing to do.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has misunderstood me. I did not say what the courts had to do with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. What I said was that the complaints in reference to the different returning officers could be enquired into in a prosecution under the statute imposing penalties.

Mr. WELDON. I understood him to say that the conduct of a returning officer could be complained of before the judges. In this respect he knows it could not. It may be that his conduct during the election and his conduct in making the return are subjects for the judges to decide, but as for the time in which he makes the return that is not a matter which affects the validity of the election. The conduct of a returning officer, so far as it affects the validity of an election, may be brought before a judicial tribunal, but the mode in which the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery performs his duty is not within the cognisance of a judicial tribunal. The only judicial tribunal to which the party aggrieved can appeal is this Parliament, and when this Parliament delegates it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections it is their duty to investigate this matter. It is not the duty of this House to investigate at the bar of the House questions of this kind, although I do not admit that this question is of the character which hon. gentlemen opposite would assign to it, namely, that it is a matter of no consequence. I contend that the breach of any law, the infraction of any rule of statute is no trivial matter. When I find on the pages of our statutes that the Clerk of the Crown and when I find the cases of Prince Edward and Charlotte counties, I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that there has been some infraction of the law which we should enquire into. It seems to me the amendment of the First Minister is one that is not consistent with the dignity or honor of this House, proposing as it does simply that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery should be called on to write a letter to the Clerk of the House, as to the reasons for his conduct. Let us appeal to our own tribunal, the Committee on Privileges and Elections; let the Clerk of the Crown be heard in his defence at that tribunal, and if he gives satisfactory reasons that committee will absolve him. If, on the contrary, he has been guilty of dereliction of duty, wilful and clear, despite the plain language of the statute, it will be the duty of the House to censure and, if necessary, to punish him. My hon. friend from Pictou has undertaken to say that in England they have done away with reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections by the repeal of the statute, and that we have followed in that direction. The hon. gentleman says the 101st section of the statute applies to this case. I take issue with him on that point. I maintain that, while parties who have been specially aggrieved may seek redress in the courts and have a penalty inflicted on the returning officer for his conduct, this House alone, where wrong has been done to the electorate and a blow inflicted on the privileges of Parliament, still retains its right to deal with the matter. My hon. friend endeavored ingenuously to argue from the 101st section of the Act that the penalty alone was the only punishment to be inflicted. The section says:

"shall, on receiving the return of any member elected to the House of Commons, give notice in the next ordinary issue of the Gazette of the name of the candidate elected."

"If any returning officer wilfully delays, neglects or refuses duly to return any person who ought to be returned to serve in the House of Commons for any electoral district, such person may, if it has been determined on the hearing of an election petition respecting the election for such electoral district that such person was entitled to have been returned, sue the returning officer who has so wilfully delayed, neglected or refused duly to make such return of his election, in any court of record in the Province in which such electoral district is situate."

That means simply that after the election petition has been determined on the party aggrieved shall seek in the ordinary tribunals of the country redress for the injuries he has sustained. That is simply his redress. What is the complaint we have here? It is that, according to the return brought down, gross irregularity has been committed and a prima facie case has been made out which has been fortified by personal statements from members of this House. Those are matters which are not trivial, but which are of great importance, affecting the rights of the elections, the purity of our elections, and the manner in which the law should be carried out. We should have a searching investigation, not in the one-sided manner suggested by the hon. the First Minister, which only applies to the conduct of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, but if returning officers have also wilfully delayed the returns their conduct should also be enquired into even if that should take up some time of the committee.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not catch all the hon. member for East Hastings said in reply to my statements, but I will just repeat the statement I made from my place, and which is substantially correct. I understood the hon. gentleman to say I had but one voter at Kingston. I say this, that there were two voters residing in Gananoque—one of them working in the carriage works and one in Gillies' establishment. The names I can give if the hon. gentleman wishes. They were written for by friends of the hon. member for East Hastings, and money was furnished them by friends of his, and they went up there on behalf of the hon. member for East Hastings.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not desire to enter into this discussion further than to set the House right with regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) in reference to the protest for East Hastings. My hon. friend from West Hastings (Mr. Robertson) did not say that an honorable or any other arrangement had been come to between these parties. On the contrary—

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I did not mean to say that there was any actual agreement between them, but that there was an understanding that if the hon. member for West Hastings were not petitioned against, the hon. member for East Hastings should not be petitioned against.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman has now stated what he probably intended to say, but the language he used was that an honorable arrangement had been come to between the member for East Hastings and the member for West Hastings that no petition should be entered, and that, as soon as the time expired for a petition to be entered against the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Robertson) his friends took advantage of the situation, betrayed the confidence which had been reposed in them, and entered a protest against the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Burdett). The hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Robertson) did not say what the hon. gentleman attributed to him, but he said that, as far as he was individually concerned, he had done all he could to prevent a protest being made, but he qualified that statement by the remark that, when the proposition was made to him by the friends of the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Burdett), he told them that it would be absurd for him to attempt to speak for the electors of another constituency. There has been no breach of faith on the part of either of these parties. I have no doubt that both these gentlemen did their best to prevent a protest. My hon. friend behind me (Mr. Robertson) has stated that he tried to prevent a protest being entered, and my hon. friend in front (Mr. Burdett) says he tried to prevent a protest being entered against himself, which was very natural. But, if nothing was done in that election to implicate him in an improper act, there is no reason for him to call so many hard names.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL. Why "hear, hear"? The moment an hon. gentleman speaks on this side, we have an echo of "hear, hear" from several hon. gentlemen on that side.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no one in the House who interrupts more than the hon. gentleman from Grey.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I never interrupted anyone in my life.

Mr. BOWELL. It is impossible for the hon. gentleman to hold his tongue for ten minutes, or even for five minutes when anything is said affecting his party. Every gentleman on the other side has been listened to courteously, except one, and there was a little noise while he was speaking, and at once steps were taken to stop that by all those on this side who took an interest in proper debate. But my hon. friend from Bothwell, as was said in reference to my friend, Mr. White, is a little pugnacious, and he is always very anxious to say "hear, hear" in a disapproving manner when anyone is speaking on this side. What I was saying was that, if there is nothing wrong in regard to the contest in East Hastings, my hon. friend who occupies that seat now has nothing to fear, but I must question the veracity of the reports which have been carried to him. I do not accuse him of making these statements, but, when he says that any member of the party in Hastings said that they would not only hound him out of political life, but would place him on his bier and would carry him to his grave, I do not believe that any such statements were made.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. BURDETT. I will prove that John White said in the Bank of Montreal, that when I got through all I would require would be a hearse.

Mr. BOWELL. I have no right, from a parliamentary standpoint or in parliamentary courtesy, to contradict the statement of the hon. gentleman, but, if there be no more truth in the statement which has been carried to him as to what Mr. White said, than there was in the statement with regard to myself, the hon. gentleman will find no ground for repeating these statements, for the remark which was attributed to Mr. White in regard to myself was without a scintilla of truth. This has nothing to do with the debate, but I mention it in order to show that my hon. friend should not make such statements unless he heard the expressions himself, or unless he has received them on evidence which is unimpeachable. I have said all that I intended to say, which is to state that the party to which I belong in the county of Hastings, and which I believe to be right, is one that I believe to be incapable of saying what is attributed to them. If any arrangements were made by that party in Hastings, they would have been carried out, but the people of Belleville, in another riding, had no more right to make an arrangement as to what the electors in East Hastings would do than the hon. gentleman opposite would have to make arrangements between my constituency and his own in Nova Scotia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. All that the hon. gentleman has stated may be correct enough, but I will venture to say, from a tolerably long experience in these matters, that if the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Robertson) had been gazetted on the same day as my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Burdett) you would have heard very little of a petition in East Hastings. It appears to me, though I am not offering a legal opinion, that, if one thing be clearer than another, it is that the law has been distinctly violated by returning officers, apparently in some cases, and if the statements of hon. members on the floor of this House are to be believed, by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in many cases. I want to call the attention of the First Minister and the attention of this House to this fact. My hon. friend from the county of Prince Edward (Mr. Platt), standing in his place in this House, has brought forward evidence which goes to show that our Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has deliberately made a false return to this House. This hon. gentleman states, as I understood him, that he himself saw a letter from Mr. Pope, in which Mr. Pope admitted the receipt of his return on a certain date, the 10th or 11th of the month, and that Mr. Pope has returned him on the 14th, three days later. I say that, if Mr. Pope did that, Mr. Pope has sent down a false return, and such a charge, so made by a member in his place, is one that ought to be investigated either by a special committee appointed for the purpose, or, if the House so chooses, by the Committee on Elections and Privileges. Let us understand why the Government object to go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. They have been virtually charged by many hon. members in this House with having abused their influence and position in order to influence the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to delay the proper gazetting of members according to the law. Are they afraid to allow the Clerk to be examined on oath before a committee of this House in public, for fear that that charge should be substantiated? If they are afraid to allow their doings to be brought to light, then I understand the pitiful evasion which has been attempted by causing him to report by letter to our Clerk at the Table; but, if their hands are clean, if they have nothing to fear, if no member of that Ministry is known to his colleagues to have abused his position in this matter, then I am at a loss to understand why they refuse to allow this gentleman to be examined before that committee. If there is one thing clearer than another, it is that in practice, as everybody knows, a gross injustice has been done to members of this House by subjecting them to the threat of an election petition for many days later than the vast majority of members on the other side have been subjected to it. I have never, in all my experience, had an election petition presented against me, but the First Minister has had many, and has not come very well out of them; and he must know that it is not a pleasant thing to have, that it is a disagreeable and a costly thing. Why, Sir, he knows perfectly that if you succeed in unseating a man, you have got to pay a round sum over and above all that the courts will allow. I think a recent hon. member of this House, my esteemed friend, Mr. Allison, can testify to that fact, and probably the hon. gentleman could, too, of his own personal experience. Sir, I repeat, first of all, that if the law is correctly laid down by my hon. friend from Bothwell—I did not hear the First Minister or any gentleman who rose on that side dispute the law—prima facie, the Clerk of Chancery has deliberately disobeyed the law; and it must be remembered that, after the answer which was made to my hon. friend by the First Minister himself, we are justified in presuming that that gentleman did so under pressure put upon him by members of the Government. Sir, I say that if this House has any respect for itself, has any regard for fair play, honor or decency, it will insist on having an investigation, either before a special committee, or before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I take it my hon. friend does not care which. But I call again attention to the fact that the member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt)—if my ears did not entirely deceive me—has stated in his place, he has brought forward strong corroborative evidence that show that this officer has, in his case, deliberately made a false return in the paper which is now before us. Surely no man is going to say that when a member of this House makes such a charge against an officer of ours, there is not a case for investigation before a competent tribunal.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to address a few observations to the House before this motion is put. One hon. gentleman has asked us what we have to complain of. Sir, we have this to complain of, that the law has been flagrantly violated by an officer of this House. I called the attention of the House to a great many cases. I have pointed out that upwards of 60 members returned to the House on this side were not gazetted as the law required; I have pointed out that the time of a very considerable number was delayed not merely for a week, but for several weeks, and that members who were returned after they had been returned, were gazetted before them. After I was elected my return was received by this officer on the 10th, and I can name a dozen gentlemen sitting opposite who were returned on the same day, and they were gazetted on the 12th. On the 12th I was not gazetted, on the 19th I was not gazetted, on the 26th I was not gazetted. The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), the Minister of Finance, representing the constituency of Cumberland, the Minister of Justice, were all returned on the 11th, they were gazetted on the 12th. Does any hon. gentleman pretend to say that was in compliance with the law? What are the words in the statute? It says:

"The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall, on receiving the return of any member elected to the House of Commons, give notice in the next ordinary issue of the Gazette."

Did the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery give this notice in my case, did he in the case of my hon. friends on my right and left, did he in the case of the hon. member for Prince Edward, did he in the case of 60 other members of this House, enter the returns in the Gazette as required by law? Why, then, should we not enquire into these facts? Does the First Minister or his colleagues say that this is not a necessary provision of the law? Does he say that it is not necessary that members of this House should stand upon a footing of equality in a matter of this kind? Sir, we know why these hon. gentlemen do not choose to allow my motion to pass; we know why they will not submit the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to be examined on oath. Why, Sir, I hold in my hands the Public Estimates, and they prove beyond all question why the First Minister and his colleagues are not willing that this officer shall be examined on oath. What is the information disclosed in these estimates? I find on looking at page 322 that he has received a salary of $2,250, charged to the expenses of legislation. I find on looking at page 11 of these estimates that that officer is to be transferred from this House to the Privy Council, and to receive a salary of $2,600. Now, will the First Minister tell this House when this resolution was come to? Will he tell us when it was found necessary to add $350 to the salary of this officer who had so faithfully neglected his duty? Will the hon. gentleman tell us how it is that when an officer has violated his duty and his oath in sixty cases, that he finds it necessary to promote him? Why, Sir, hon. gentlemen who sit on that side of the House can understand as well as those sitting on this side of the House, and I can tell the hon. gentleman that the country will understand why he has done this act. The country will understand why the hon. gentleman has seen proper to promote a man who is guilty of perjury, who instead of conforming to the law has set the law at defiance, who, instead of doing as the law has directed him, has done as hon. gentlemen sitting on the Treasury benches have directed him, in the face of the law, and who propose to reward him at our expense for this nefarious violation of duty. We have here in the case of this officer a mean unprincipled minion of authority, who is ready to play the janissary for those gentlemen, and to play the assassin on members on this side of the House. That is the position which this officer occupies before this country, and the people will understand the position assigned him by the hon. gentlemen who sit on the Treasury benches. They will know why this officer ceased to be an officer connected with this House, and became an officer connected with the Privy Council; they will understand why he is promoted, and why it is proposed to add $350 to his salary; it is because the law has said that he shall gazette members who are returned in the next Gazette, and he has refused to do so. It is because the law has said that thirty days from the time after the gazetting of members in the next Gazette shall be allowed for contesting the seats of members, and he has added thirty days to the time fixed by the law as against members on this side of the House. Why, Sir, we see in the case of one hon. member sitting there how he has had his head taken out of the noose, and how it has been kept on the neck of an hon. gentleman on this side of the House. We can understand this, and I tell hon. gentlemen who have been elected to support the leader of the Administration, and are disposed to follow him in this offence, this conspiracy between the Government and the Clerk of the Crown—I say the country will understand what has been done by the Ministry in this matter. Sir, I am ready to vote on this question, and I dare say that every hon. gentleman on this side of the House is ready to vote, and we will see the First Minister proposing his motion preventing this man from being examined on oath before a committee of this House. We shall see the First Minister playing in this matter the same sort of show, giving to the House and to the country the same kind of exhibition, that was given here during the Pacific scandal. Why don't the hon. gentleman stand up and call heaven to witness, "these hands are clean?" Sir, we understand now why the hon. gentleman did not answer the questions I put to him the other day, and why he regarded them as impertinent, and why it would have been the proper thing for me to ask for correspondence that has never taken place.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I have heard nothing in this debate to change the view I expressed when the subject was under discussion some days ago. I regard the whole affair as a trivial matter and believe that no particular grievance has been made out by any hon. gentleman opposite. It does not appear that a single case of wrongdoing has been proved or that any member has been deprived of his rights or has a serious grievance to complain of. In regard to the case of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down and whose return was delayed for twenty days, I believe that if it had been entered earlier, a petition would have been filed against him.

Mr. MILLS. They could not raise the money.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). Not that I would suggest that the hon. member was aware of anything wrong. I have reason to believe that the facts are as I have stated in regard to this case. I do not see why the language of political vituperation should be exhausted about a matter which is really one of secondary importance. The effect is to destroy the moral sense of the public outside, when exaggerated language is bestowed on a question of this kind, for the public do not know, when a question of real importance arises, whether to attach weight to it or not. Some remarks I made the other evening were taken up by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), and he implied that I had probably had something to conceal, because it was stated that I went to the returning officer and asked him to send in my return. I had intended to say, though I am not so reported, that it was the place of members to see that their returns were sent in as soon as possible. In my case I was not in my riding when the day of declaration came. The matter was adjourned owing to some irregularities, and it was uncertain for a moment whether those irregularities might not be used to prevent my return. I did not see the returning officer from the beginning to the end of the election and I have not seen him since. But the hon. member for West Durham, in that generous and genial spirit which so enhances his personal magnetism in this House, and endears him to its members, took advantage of a verbal slip to assail me as if I must have some dishonorable motive because I had wished to have my return made early. It is perfectly legitimate that members should, if possible, get their returns early, but I have explained the facts in my own case. Under all the circumstances, I think that hon. gentlemen opposite have ample remedy under the Election Act.

Mr. MILLS. No.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I will give the hon. gentleman the section which I think will fully cover the case:

"Every officer and clerk who is guilty of any wilful misfeasance, or any wilful act or omission in violation of this Act, shall forfeit to any person aggrieved by such misfeasance, act or omission, a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars in addition to the amount of all actual damages thereby occasioned to such person:

"Every returning officer, deputy returning officer, election clerk or poll clerk who refuses or neglects to perform any of the obligations or formalities required of him by this Act, shall, for each such refusal or neglect, forfeit the sum of two hundred dollars to any person who sues for the same."

I think if any returning officer has done wrong or neglected to perform his duties, any sitting member who has suffered injury has ample recourse under this Act, and I do not see it is a matter of sufficient importance to justify the very strong terms which the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) used to the official who is blamed for not being so prompt as he might have been in transmitting to the Canada Gazette the names of members. In order to complete our information we should be furnished with the names of members who have been petitioned against, so that the public may be able impartially to judge of the whole matter. I intend to oppose the motion to send this subject to a committee, because there is ample remedy against the officer, and I do not see why the time of the House should be taken up with a matter that is after all a trivial one. It really looks as if hon. gentlemen opposite, having been disappointed in obtaining a majority, are now venting their spleen on the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Mr. MILLS.

Mr. LAURIER. We are just out of an election, and the Government have been sustained by a majority; but we may well question at this moment whether we still have responsible government in this country or whether we have an autocracy pure and simple. Judging from what has taken place since the opening of the Session we can come to no other conclusion than that responsible government is a thing of the past in this country. Of course we have kept all the paraphernalia, the gorgeousness, the ceremony and all the rest; but so far as practical matters are concerned, it is no longer the Government which is responsible to Parliament, but Parliament which is responsible to the Government. On a recent occasion a motion was made in this House to have papers laid on the Table as to the dismissal of an officer by the Government. This motion was refused. In the good old times it was held that the Government of the country was responsible for every act of its own, even for the dismissal of an officer. In the good old times, whenever it was asked as to the cause of the dismissal of an officer by the Government, an explanation of the reasons would be placed at once on the Table in order that the House might judge as to whether the conduct of the Government was warranted or not, because the Government was responsible for the acts of their subordinates. But at the present day a Government can dismiss an officer, and when an enquiry into the cause of dismissal is made, no answer need be given. At this day what have we? We have here an officer of the House, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery (to speak of him alone and not to speak of him with the returning officers) who is accused of having failed in his duty. Why, in the Province to which I belong, we have, according to the report made by this Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, no less than twenty-three different cases of members, all belonging to this side of the House, whose returns of election were kept in the archives of that officer one, two or three weeks before they were published. Is not that a grievance? The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, who is generally so fair-minded in his opinions, sees no grievance whatever. I have not seen, he says, a single case of grievance. Let me refer him again, not to the twenty-three cases to which I have just alluded, but to the language which he must have heard this afternoon of the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt). He stated in his place in the House, and he not only made the statement but he corroborated it by actual proof, that the return of his election had been stated by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery as being on a certain day, and a different day had been placed in the return. Is not that a grievance? If an officer of this House is allowed to make a false statement, is it not a grievance of which the House should take cognisance? It appears that an officer of the House, wilfully or not wilfully, makes a false statement, and yet this is not a grievance. If that is not a grievance I am at a loss to know what is the meaning of the word "honor," and also of the words "British fair play," as understood at one time. Of course the majority is here, and the members can sustain the Government; and, indeed, as I have said, we have come to this that the majority is here simply to do the bidding of the Government, and give solemnity to their decrees. It is no longer the majority which controls the Government, but it is altogether the Government which controls the majority. We cannot do much in the matter; we are a minority; but, at least, we can protest, and protest we will, in the name of British fair play and of British independence of character.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat might very well speak for himself, but I think when he assumes the right to talk of the honesty of the intentions of members supporting the Government he is going a little too far. If evidence were wanted it could be found from many quarters to show that members on this side are just as independent in their action, as honest in their intention, as intelligent in what they do as hon. gentlemen opposite, and they are quite as anxious to understand and carry out the principles of responsible government. It seems to me there is a strange unanimity in the condemnation of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery by hon. gentlemen composing the Opposition. Every one of them has about the same story to tell, and there is something very strange in the coincidence that this story happens to come from those members who are to-day honored with an invitation to appear before the courts and show whether the transactions in which they were engaged during the elections were legal or illegal. They are very unanimous in their condemnation of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery; they say that the trouble is all due to the fact that he did not place their names in the Gazette at a certain time, but I think the courts and the judges will decide before very long that the trouble is due to some other cause. There is not an hon. gentleman in this House to-night who has satisfactorily shown that a single protest entered against an hon. member on the Opposition side is due to the fact that that member was gazetted a few days or weeks early or late. If he did no wrong why should he fear? It is not the honest man who is afraid of the law, but it is the man who has done illegal acts. The time is a matter of no consequence to him, if he committed no corrupt or illegal acts during the election, because he knows that such acts cannot be proven against him if he is innocent; but it is the party who has been doing illegal acts who is afraid. With him time is the essence of the agreement; he is anxious to get through the period of suspense as early as possible. During the argument on the Queen's county case the whole gist of the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite was that the returning officers were partisan and unfair, that they had not done their duty, while to-night their whole cry is against the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. It seems to me that, ever since the opening of the Session, the whole drift of the Opposition speeches has been an endeavor to show why they were defeated at the elections, why they have again been left in the cold shades of Opposition in this House. When they were before the people in the elections they said they were bound to succeed. They were confident they would carry the country, and a determined and persistent effort was kept up to strike down the character and reputation of every man supporting the Government. They failed in that policy, and now they come back chagrined and disappointed because they are still unable to convince a majority of the electorate that they are the honest and able men they represent themselves to be. The hon. member for Huron gave his reasons for their defeat. I remember distinctly the reasons which he gave in 1878 for their coming to this House in a minority—that the people had been deluded, and hoodwinked, and deceived, but that the time would come when they would awake to the truth, and when that time came the decision would be reversed. Well, that decision was not reversed in 1882, when they said the same thing—that the people were deluded and deceived into giving the verdict which they had given. The same cries were raised this present year when the elections took place; it was said that the verdict would be reversed. But that verdict was not reversed, and now the whole gist of their speeches is to explain why they happen to be sitting on the Opposition side to-day. They have to find some scape-goat—some Jonah; and the whole gist of their argument is directed against the returning officers, and the revising officers, and the judges of the country. In the Queen's county election case they blamed the returning officer, but to-night one after another gets up, and yet they fail to give a single instance in which a returning officer did anything illegal and wrong. They are trying hard to find something to lay before the House and the country to show how they were defeated at the elections, and why they are now sitting where they are. They have at last hit upon this gentleman, who is a civil servant, and cannot come forward in his own defence; they have at last found a Jonah—a scape-goat, and the whole argument is directed against him. If I could satisfy myself that all the members of this House supporting the Government, or a majority of them, were gazetted within the prescribed time, and all those on the other side, or a majority of them, had not been gazetted within the same time, then I might presume that it was probable that this man had not done his duty fairly.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is the case.

Mr. SPROULE. But I find that members on both sides were not gazetted immediately after the return, according to the papers which have been laid before the House, and is it not so very inexplicable that it should be so? The hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Burdett) says that he is satisfied that if he had been gazetted by a certain time, a petition would not have been entered against him. The return was made on the 12th of March, and he was gazetted on the 19th. He was returned on the very day the Gazette came out, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery could not prepare all the returns that came in for the Gazette of that day. The hon. gentleman was gazetted in the next Gazette, and yet he complains that a protest has still been entered against him. He goes on to say that an understanding was entered into between the parties that they would countenance illegal acts, that both of them honorably agreed that they would refrain from entering a protest. But I ask, would that be honorable; would it not be winking at criminal or illegal acts? I say that if the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Burdett) knew of illegal acts being committed, he was just as culpable as the men who committed those acts if he refrained from taking steps to punish them. But I think he forgets that shortly after the elections, when John White was interviewed, he stated that he was in possession of sufficient information then to unseat the hon. gentleman; that he intended to do it, and now, because he is carrying out his intention, the hon. gentleman complains, and says that the member for the other riding should save him; that it was an understanding, because both were in delicate health, that there should be no protest, although there was evidence that he had committed illegal acts. Again, take the case of the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt). Did not the hon. gentleman speak in a way which would have the effect of at least shaking the confidence of hon. gentlemen in his good intentions? He said: Why we are in a position to show not only that the sealed parcel was mailed to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on a certain day, but to show that he received it on a certain day. He said: If the registry books of the post-office are not blotted, and if there has been no erasure upon them, we can show that they were received on a particular day. But I would ask the House if that is not an unfair and gratuitous presumption.

Mr. PLATT. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to correct him. He is putting words in my mouth which I did not use at all. I did not say anything about the blotting of the erasure of the post office books.

Mr. BLAKE. It was another man—the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Burdett).

Mr. SPROULE. I can only say that I withdraw the statement I made with reference to the hon. member for Prince Edward county. I believed it to be that hon. gentleman, but even if it were not, I say the arguments he advanced were equally fallacious.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) laughs as if there was something ridiculous in that statement, but though it may be so to his great mind, common sense will appeal to common minds with the same force that intricate questions will to great minds, and we are entitled to our opinions just as much as the hon. member for West Durham is to his. There is nothing strange in the fact that a sealed parcel should be sent to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on a particular day, and that he should not register it the very day and hour it was received. When receiving, as he must have received, within a few weeks, hundreds of these parcels, is it to be expected that he should open and examine the whole of them and register them the very day they are received. If there is any discrepancy between the time of the post-office register and the receipt of these returns, it would not be at all unusual, because we often find that letters have lain in various departments for days before they are answered, and when you look at the registers you find that they have been filed and registered in the letter-books of the Departments days before their receipt is acknowledged. These returns might lie with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery days before he could read them and attend to them, as he had a large number of them to go through, and I say that it is no evidence that he did not act in good faith, because a few days intervene between the time the parcel was received at the post-office and the time the member was gazetted. In my own case the election was held on the 22nd of February, and I was not gazetted until the 19th of March, and though I could not see any reason for the delay, I did not find any fault with it; I did not even look at the Gazette to see when my return was there, because I believed the election was carried on legally and fairly, and, therefore, I was not afraid of a protest. I think these hon. gentlemen who are so much afraid of a protest must have a strong impression that there was something wrong, or they would not look upon the matter so closely and so interestedly to know when they were gazetted. And there is a strange significance in the fact that these wholesale charges come principally from the men who to-day are haunted with the knowledge that they must shortly appear before the courts to give an account of their acts during the election. I do not see anything wrong at all in the proposition made by the hon. leader of the Government, to order the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make any explanation he can make to this House. If that explanation is not proper, there will afterwards be the same opportunity to call him to account that there is now. I do not think there is a valid reason why so much of the time of this House should be used in discussing what hon. gentlemen opposite are pleased to call great grievances, but which appear to me to be no grievances at all. In other words, they are trying to explain away the fact of their being in the unfortunate position they are in to-day, and of being obliged to show whether their conduct in the election has been legal or illegal, honest or dishonest.

Mr. BRIEN. In looking over the return furnished to the Government, I find that my return was acknowledged by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the 14th of March, and I was not gazetted until the 2nd of April. I would like to know the reason why. But I find that the return of the hon. member for North Essex, who is a general supporter of the Government, was acknowledged on the 9th of March, and he was gazetted on the 12th. There seems to be a strange coincidence in so many of these delays taking place in the returns of Reformers as against the few in the case of Conservatives. As the matter stands at present, the blame rests with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Hon. gentlemen opposite try to draw a herring across the trail by saying that we are always trying to find fault with the returning officers. We have found fault with very few of the returning officers. If the motion of the hon. member for Bothwell passes, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery will have an opportunity to defend himself. There is a strong suspicion that this gentleman has been coached by the members of the Government, and they also will have an opportunity of acquitting themselves, which I hope they will be able to do for their own credit and the credit of this country. Hon. gentlemen speak about the loss of time, but if this motion had been allowed to pass, there would not have been so much time lost. It is said by an eminent authority that he who attempts at any time to conceal evidence is always presumed to be guilty, and the conduct of the Government on this occasion seems to show that there is something they wish to conceal in this matter. In the hope to justify themselves, hon. gentlemen go back and try to find something against the Mackenzie Government, or the Ontario Government; but the hon. member who endeavored to do that only showed that they acted fairly in such matters. Instead of going behind either the Mackenzie Administration or the Mowat Administration, hon. gentlemen opposite should allow the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to defend himself against these charges. If I may be allowed to use the phrase of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), I should say that if they deserve a licking, they should take it like gentlemen. There has been a wrong committed in my case, and I am desirous of knowing why it has been done. The argument has been continually raised that wrong has been done before, and, therefore, this is not wrong. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) is fond of quoting precedents. I, for my part, think the time has arrived when this country should cease to lean on the Mother Country, or to be forever going to her for advice. I think this country is quite capable of transacting its business for itself. This Parliament is not a Parliament of imbeciles, incapable of handling a simple case of this kind. I thank the House for the attention with which it has listened to me.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I think there is more ground for investigating the doings of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery than some hon. gentlemen opposite are disposed to admit. It may suit these hon. gentlemen to resist such an investigation, because the dice have been loaded in their favor, and nobody knows that better than themselves; but it does seem to me preposterous for them to say that there is no ground of complaint against the conduct of this officer. We have been told that sometimes the returning officers fail to make the proper form of return, and delays were necessary to correct their returns. Again, the plea was set up by one hon. gentleman that the papers were voluminous, and that time, and care, and attention were required to examine them; and to night we have listened to elaborate arguments from the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) and the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) to demonstrate that the returning officers and the revising officers have done their duty properly, and that, therefore, nobody has any right to complain. When the conduct of the revising officers and the returning officers is under the consideration of this House, we propose to discuss their conduct; but the motion of my hon. friend from Bothwell deals in the first place with the conduct of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and if he fails to show that the fault is not with him, then the conduct of the returning officers can be dealt with. So far as my own case is concerned I do not happen to be decorated with a protest, and, therefore, perhaps, I am not open to the charge that it makes any difference whether my return was early or late.

But I want to draw the attention of the House to a peculiarity in the mode in which the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery gazetted the returns from the part of the Province of Ontario which I have the honor to come from. It does seem to me that that gentleman must have bestowed a great deal more time in reading the newspapers of the day to keep himself informed of the political complexion of the candidates who were returned, than he did in reading up the statutes which define his duty to publish the returns in the official Gazette at the earliest opportunity. In the case of the north riding of Wentworth, which I have the honor to represent, I find, turning to his own official statement, that he received the returns from my returning officer on the 5th of March. In corroboration of that I may say that the returning officer furnished me with a certificate, dated on the 4th of March, intimating that on that day he had forwarded my return to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. The 5th of March was the day on which the Canada Gazette was issued, and I had no reasonable right to expect that it would appear in that day's issue, and so far as I remember there is just one member whose election was gazetted on the day his return was received, and curiously enough he happens to belong to the ministerial side of the House. However, he had a week to wrestle with the returns from North Wentworth, and the 12th came and there was no official announcement of the election in North Wentworth in the Gazette. Another week elapsed, and the 19th came, and still he was unable to decide whether anybody had been returned in North Wentworth or not; but by the 26th he made up his mind that the North Wentworth returns were in proper form, and it was his duty to have them gazetted. What was the action with respect to the south riding, where he had the same postal facilities and occupied the same position as the officials here? His statement is that he received the returns from the south riding two days after he received it from the north riding, on the 7th of March, and he was able to determine that the gentleman from South Wentworth was properly elected and gazetted him on the first issue of the Gazette. It was in the Gazette of the 12th, immediately after his election. In the city of Hamilton, which happens to be close to both our ridings, the returns were made on the 4th of March, and he was able to discover, notwithstanding Hamilton is a large constituency, that next day they should appear in the Gazette, and accordingly they appeared. Take, adjoining on the east, the constituency of Lincoln and Niagara, and what do we find there. We find that he received those returns on the 7th—or two days after he received the return of North Wentworth—and on that very day he was able to decide that the election for Niagara should be gazetted. Again in Monck, the representative of which aired his eloquence to-night with respect to the wrongdoing in Ontario, I find the returning officer is announced as having made the return on the 14th, and it appeared in the next Gazette. Take the riding of Haldimand. We all remember there were some peculiar circumstances in connection with Haldimand. We have a Judge Upper there, and I dare say it is fresh in the recollection of the members of this House that there were some peculiar occurrences in connection with the official in that riding. The matters in that riding connected with the election were referred to Judge Upper. He took a week to consider, and after he got through his return with respect to Haldimand, his report reached the Clerk of the Crown on the 18th, and he was immediately able to decide that the return was in proper shape to go in the Gazette the next day, and we find Haldimand gazetted on the 19th. In Wentworth it took the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery twenty-one days to make his return; in Halton, it took him fifteen days to find out whether my hon. friend was properly elected so as to be gazetted. In North Brant it took him ten days, although North Brant was one of those cases in which the election was gained by a large majority. In South Wellington it took him twelve days to decide. It is most extraordinary that in all these cases if these things do occur accidentally, that where Conservatives were returned their elections were placed invariably in the first issue of the Gazette, and in every single case of adjoining counties represented by members of the Opposition it took him from ten days to three weeks to get his returns from his office here to the Canada Gazette. Yet hon. members say that the conduct of this officer should not be enquired into. If their sense of political justice has gone so far astray, the public at large had better be acquainted with the fact, and we had better have the matter discussed and thoroughly ventilated in this House. If the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is to be a political officer, who is to publish returns in the Gazette according as it suits his politics, he should be brought before this House. If this gentleman is to do as he pleases in connection with this matter, or, rather, if he is to act, not as the statute, but as the Government of the day prescribes, that should be known. In so far as the motion of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is concerned the arguments of hon. members on the other side have not been directed to meet the issues in question, but have been directed to every other possible issue; and while on other occasions they are very zealous to have every question affecting members of the House referred to a special committee, yet on this occasion no other inference can be drawn from their conduct than that there is something to be concealed which will not stand investigation. It is plain on the face of it that no letter from the gentleman will convey to the committee the information that a direct personal examination would tend to bring out. I shall support the original resolution as moved by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), to have a thorough examination of this officer's conduct before the committee, and I shall vote against the attempt made by the Government to screen him against either his own misconduct or the misconduct of any officer of this House or any officer outside of this House.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have noticed and have been struck by the fact that not a single member of the Government has been heard upon the question before the House, with the exception of the right hon. the First Minister, who merely moved the resolution to burk this enquiry, and the hon. the Minister of Customs who rose to make a personal explanation in regard to this matter. With these two exceptions, not one of the Ministers has deigned to give any explanation of the views of the Government or to enter into any defence of their conduct in regard to this matter. I deem this a very remarkable fact, and it reminds me of a certain memorable episode in the parliamentary history of Canada two years ago, when that most iniquitous measure, the Franchise Act, was introduced here and was debated week after week and month after month, and the solid majority on that side sat dumb and voiceless, allowing the discussion to be monopolised by this side of the House and confining their own labor to the effective work of casting their votes in order to overrule us. It is true that the course taken by the Government is defended by some of their supporters. The hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Patterson), in the course of his brief remarks, asserted that this was a trivial matter. Is it indeed a trivial matter, a case which involves the conduct of an officer of the Government, a question which involves his truthfulness, a question which involves the propriety of the mode in which he has performed his duty, which charges that he has falsified records, that he has been guilty of perjury, that in the exercise of his judicial functions he has prostituted them for partisan purposes, that he has acted for the purpose of forwarding the interests of one party in this country and injuring another party. Is this a trivial matter? Is it a trivial matter that many of the returning officers, the creatures and appointees of this Government, are charged with having withheld the returns and acted with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in a common conspiracy to defraud members of this House of their rights? And are we to relegate to the inferior courts of this land—we, the high court of Parliament—questions affecting our own rights and our own honor, questions as to the conduct of our own officers, the officers of the gentlemen who lead this Parliament? No, this is the tribunal where properly these charges should be tried. If these men have, in violation of their duty, insulted Parliament and failed to discharge the duty of their offices, Parliament should deal with them, either itself directly or through one of its committees. It is said that this will take up our time. Not at all. It will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that committee has plenty of time to sift the evidence, to call these men before it, to cross-examine them, and to ascertain from their statements and the other statements which will be submitted to it, what the true state of the case is.

It seems to me that the Government is a little inconsistent in its conduct. The other day we had the Queen's county case before us, and it was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The case was a clear one and rested upon one acknowledged fact. It was contended on this side that Parliament should at once proceed to do what was just and proper in righting a great wrong. No, not at all. The Government said that this must be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that they would deal with it in a judicial capacity. Here we have another case of a similar character, and the Government says, when it is proposed to refer it to the same committee, no, in the case of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, Mr. Pope, and the returning officers who are charged with not doing their duty, we must not refer that to the committee; oh, no! What are we to do? We are to take the statement of these men without the opportunity of cross-examination, without being face to face with them. They are simply to send their letters to the Clerk of the House. They are to make their statement as it may please them, without the opportunity being given to the members who may deem themselves aggrieved to test the accuracy of their statements. Why, Sir, this would be a mockery of justice, and no party, no men would resort to a dodge of this kind who had not something in their own conduct to conceal, who were not afraid of having the truth exposed. This is not the course taken in any trial. The accuser and the accused should be brought face to face. The accused is not to send in his letter and the accuser to be deprived of the opportunity of examining him. It is not in accordance with the principles of justice, but it is simply a dodge resorted to by the hon. gentlemen opposite in order—we are warranted in the inference—to conceal their own connection with the action of this officer. A good many references have been made to remarkable disclosures which have been made by these returns. Hours might be spent upon the subject. The more you study these returns, the more palpable becomes the fact that there has been collusion and fraudulent conduct in the withholding of these returns. I take the case of the riding in which I am most interested, the north riding of the county of Norfolk. I received the certificate of my election on the 8th March. I find it was received here, according to the statement of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, on the 12th March. I have no doubt it was mailed on the 8th and received on the 9th, but it is said to have been received on the 12th and I am gazetted on the 26th. I find the return from the south riding of Norfolk was received, according to the statement of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, on the 15th, three days later than my own, and that the gentleman who represents that riding is gazetted one week earlier than myself. His return was received on the 15th and he was gazetted on the 19th. Mine was received on the 12th and I was gazetted on the 26th of March. In the case of North Simcoe, the return was received on the 10th, and the gentleman representing that riding was gazetted on the 12th. In the case of East Simcoe, the return was received on the 15th, and the gentleman representing it was gazetted on the 26th. The one was a Conservative, the other a Reformer. I find, in the case of the county of Ontario, that the return for the north riding was received on the 9th, and the member was gazetted on the 12th, while the return from the west riding was received also on the 9th and the member was not gazetted until the 26th. The one was a Reformer and the other a Conservative. I might adduce instances of that kind by the score, but it is only necessary to point out a few of them. In the case of Cumberland, in Nova Scotia, the return was received on the 11th, and the member was gazetted on the 12th, while, in the case of Shelburne, the return was received on the 19th and the member was not gazetted until the 2nd April. Then in New Brunswick, the return for Albert was received on the 14th and gazetted on the 19th, while the return for Charlotte was received on the 11th, and the member was gazetted on the 2nd April. In the case of Northumberland, the return was received on the 8th and the member was gazetted on the 26th.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. MITCHELL. And great efforts made to get a protest.

Mr. CHARLTON. In the case of Queen's, N.B., the return was received on the 5th April, and the candidate who had the minority of votes was gazetted on the 9th. This state of things is outrageous. No member of the Ministry had the hardihood to stand up here and assert that these discrepancies are accidental, that there was not a design in this case. The design is palpable. There can be no other way of accounting for this except there was a fraudulent design in this matter. It was not a trivial matter. It was an attempt made and carried out on the part of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to place some fifty or sixty members of this House in a perilous position. We are told here by the hon. gentleman from Grey (Mr. Sproule) that honest men are not afraid of a protest. Sir, no man in this House desires a protest. There is no man in this House but knows that a protest is a very serious matter; no man in this House but knows that the Government, with the money at its command, can assist defeated candidates who come trooping down here as they have been coming for weeks past, and can place funds in their hands to protest members from motives of spite; and if you leave the returns in such a way as to enable the great majority of Government supporters to escape unscathed, then fifty or sixty Reformers will be liable to protest, and great outrage has been committed upon them. They have not been dealt fairly with. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has prostituted his powers, and has been guilty of a dereliction of duty, and deserves the condemnation of this House. Sir, if we are to permit crimes of this kind to go unpunished, if we are to allow this Government to usurp power after power, to trample upon the rights and liberties of the people of this country and the minority of this House of Commons, there will be no remedy. The day is speedily coming when there will be no remedy but a resort to arms. The First Minister of this Government has already provoked one rebellion, he has driven a few wretched half-breeds in the North-West to take up arms, by his careless and criminal neglect, and he may drive white men to take up arms in this country. I tell you that such outrages as the Gerrymander Act, which gives to two Conservatives the power of three Reformers in Ontario, such outrages as the Franchise Act, which was introduced here for the purpose of robbing the people of this country of their rights, such acts as that in connection with the Queen's county case, where a man who was elected by a majority of votes is left at home, and will remain at home, in all probability, through this Parliament—such acts as these we are dealing with to-night, where the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has acted as the tool of the hon. gentlemen opposite, has systematically withheld returns in the case of one side, and has rushed them with as great alacrity as possible in the case of the other side—I say these are things which require attention on the part of Parliament, and it does not behove us as representatives of the people to allow these things to go without protest, without an attempt to rectify the wrongs, and if that degree of independence existed on the opposite side of the House which my hon. friend from Grey has declared to exist, this motion would carry by an overwhelming majority in this House. I do not suppose it will carry. I have been in the House of Commons long enough to realise that there is little use in making protests against usurpation, tyranny, outrage and wrong. I realise that we are helpless; I realise that there is no appeal but to the public sentiment of this country. We can appeal to that here, but we spend our voice in vain in appealing to the members of this House for justice, in appealing to the members of this House to carry on the business of this country in accordance with the constitutional precedents derived from our Mother Country. Such things as these are not done in England. They were once. Great parliamentary outrages took place there a few centuries ago, but a crisis came and the head of a king was brought to the block; and, in consequence of this, and succeeding events, popular rights in England are respected. We may possibly have a catastrophe in this country sometime, that will lead to a proper respect on the part of the Ministry of the day of the rights of the people and the rights of the minority in this House. But the Government now, Sir, does trample ruthlessly and with impunity upon the rights of the people, upon the rights of the minority of the members of this House. They have done it in this matter. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has been charged with being guilty of certain offences. One member of this House has made specific charges against him. He has charged that he has wilfully, and with knowledge of the fact, falsified the records. Now, that charge is made by a member of this House, and it is proper that it should be investigated by this House; and if the Government of the day were honest in this matter, if their skirts were clear, they would be satisfied with nothing less than a searching investigation in order to clear themselves; and the fact that they propose to deny that investigation, is, to my mind, evidence unanswerable that they are guilty of all that is charged against them, and of more than is charged against them. They propose—not that there shall be an investigation, not that members who feel aggrieved as to the conduct of their own officer, shall have the privilege in a committee of this House to question him as to his conduct. Oh no! He is not to be brought to the Bar in committee of this House. There is to be no investigation, but he is, forsooth, to address a letter to the Clerk of this House, explaining his conduct in such a way as may please him, and leave the members of this House unable to cross-examine him. Sir, this is a mockery of justice. In doing this, as they propose to do it, as they will do it, this Government has simply given us another illustration of the facility with which they trample upon liberty and justice, and outrage every principle of right and every principle of decency in the administration of the affairs of this country. I protest, Mr. Speaker, as a member of this House, against the conduct of the Government. I assert, Sir, that we are fast drifting to a condition of things that will be no better than the state of affairs in Mexico, where rule is exercised by virtue of pronouncements and revolutions. Sir, we are fast approaching a crisis in the affairs of this country, and the abuses that have been perpetrated by the Government in power, not the least of which is that which they propose to perpetrate to-night, give us very solemn reasons for looking with apprehension on the future of this country, unless these men shall be driven out of power by an uprising of the people, and by a repudiation of their acts.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I have listened with a great deal of attention thus far to the discussion of this subject, having some little doubt in my own mind at the outset whether there was not some advantage in being gazetted early rather than late. But the language of the last speaker, extravagant and violent out of all proportions to the importance of the subject under discussion, has convinced me that if I had any doubt it should be dispelled. He told us during the course of his remarks that his return should have been gazetted before the return of the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), the adjoining constituency, and yet the member for South Norfolk who was returned sooner than he was returned, is protested against to-day, and that hon. gentleman's return, who was returned later, is not protested. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries was among the first who were returned, and he is to-day under protest.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I beg your pardon. He is not protested against.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The hon. Postmaster General's return was among the first that were gazetted; he to-day is under protest. The hon. Minister of Finance was among the first to be returned; he to-day is under protest. And I submit, Mr. Speaker, that to any person who has listened with attention to the remarks of hon. gentlemen opposite, and has penetrated through that apparent zeal and sincerity they have thrown into this discussion, will discover that in many cases, I venture to say in the majority of cases, there has been no advantage whatever gained by those members whose returns were made late instead of early. Now, in the face of all this, is there any possible excuse for the dangerous language we have just heard from an hon. gentleman who has sat in this House for many years, and is among the old parliamentarians of this country? I submit that in this country, when hon. gentlemen attempt to build up a case upon the action of this Government, based upon the idea that there has been an assault on the liberties of the people, they ought to be very careful in their language and very certain of their facts. Have they been certain of their facts, in this case, as they would lead us to believe? I venture to say they have not. I venture to say, as the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Patterson) has said, that lapse of time after the bitter partisan spirit which is evoked in an election softens rather than strengthens that spirit which would naturally tend to bring about an election protest. I believe that is the experience of many hon. gentlemen who, if their returns had not been late would, perhaps, to-day have been honored with a protest. As to the case of the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Burdett), I do not see of what that hon. gentleman can complain. His return was gazetted very soon after it was received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and the fact of his return being gazetted or not has nothing to do with the state of facts he has brought up in connection with the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Robertson). He can have no complaint whatever against the Clerk of the Crown. I never knew when the return of my own election was gazetted—I never made an enquiry about it. I knew that the election took place on the 22nd of February, and I think I was gazetted on the 19th of March.

Mr. MILLS. On the 12th.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I do not see that there could be any advantage from having been gazetted two or three weeks earlier, as perhaps I might have done if I had gone to the returning officer and urged him to hurry up his return. I submit that the time of the House and country has been to a great extent wasted by this discussion. We have here the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and the papers presented against him. Is it not but fair that he should put his own case in writing as against the papers submitted against him. It is, I think, eminently fair and just that both sides of the case should be placed in writing and submitted to this House and the country so that the judgment of the people may be passed upon it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman thought the speech which the last hon. gentleman who spoke made a case against himself. I might say with respect to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Wood) remarks that he has furnished an additional reason why the Clerk of the Crown should be called to account for the very extraordinary manner in which he caused the return of members to be gazetted. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat is a member of the legal profession; no doubt he aspires to a judgeship at some time; he views every question with judicial propriety, and he tells us as he gives us his cool and unbiassed opinion that in delaying the returns of members the officer was taking a very sure way of minimising the possibility of those members being protested against. Here is the case of forty or fifty members of the Opposition, and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery appears to have been acting in this partisan manner in delaying the gazetting of those members. If he had gazetted them at the time when party strife was warm, we are told, they would most surely have been protested against. But the Clerk of the Crown delays their gazetting, he does not gazette their returns for weeks after the hot political excitement has passed, and so he has saved them from protest! What an injustice that is to the other side of the House? It is really a question that should be considered and examined. While there is much that is humiliating in what we have witnessed today, even in the amendment offered to burk enquiry, there is one gleam of pleasure, that while there are some members who are anxious to stifle enquiry, hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken, with one or two exceptions, have been just those whom we would have expected to defend this action. We have not heard the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) say anything. He is a high judicial authority, and I should like to obtain his opinion. I should be pleased to hear him explain why the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood), whose return was received on 11th March, was gazetted on the 12th, but the hon. member for Bothwell, whose return was received on the previous day, was not gazetted on the 12th, 19th, no. 26th, but on 2nd April. I should like him to account for this: that in the case of his own riding the return, which was received on 10th March, was gazetted on the 12th, while the member for Russell, whose return was received three days before, was not gazetted till two weeks afterwards. One of the hon. gentlemen who attempted to defend the amendment to prevent enquiry was gazetted on the 19th, his return being received on the 14th, while the return of the member for Kent was received on the 11th, and not gazetted till 2nd April. Similar results took place in two ridings of a county, such as the two ridings of Essex, the two ridings of Wentworth and of Norfolk and so on. Not only was that the case in Ontario, but it also prevailed in the Province of Quebec; and in Nova Scotia, the return of the hon. member for Shelburne (Mr. Robertson) was received on the 19th and not gazetted till 2nd April, while that of the hon. member for Cumberland (Sir Charles Tupper) was returned on the 11th and gazetted on the 12th; and in New Brunswick the same state of affairs prevailed. In fact looking through this return, all we have to do is to notice the discrepancy between the time the return was received and the time it was gazetted, and in each case when the return was delayed a Liberal was returned. Under such circumstances it is proposed to bring this officer before the Committee of Privileges and Elections to give an explanation. There is an additional reason why this should be done. Statements have been made by hon. members in their places that they had documentary proof that the return as submitted to this House in reply to the Order of the House was not a correct return. If the motion of the First Minister should prevail, what position does this officer occupy? Here are charges made against him and he has no opportunity of defending his character. It may be said that the members of the Government would rise and defend him, that it would be their province to do so, as he is not here to defend himself. But, Sir, they are silent; they say nothing. The First Minister said scarce a word; the Minister of Customs rose, but he rose but to scold on some side issue. We have not heard from the Minister of Public Works, or any of the other members of the Government. And there are some members on this side of this House who think that perhaps the reason why the Ministers have been quiet when this matter was discussed is that they had given instructions to that officer in some way or other. At any rate they want to have an opportunity of cross-questioning that officer, to have him explain how it is that such a state of things exist. One speaker on this side ventured the remark that perhaps the hon. Secretary of State, if rumor spoke truly, could tell us something about it. It may be that he thought that because the Department of the Secretary of State was the one with which the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery had most to do, possibly that rumor was true; but I think I shall be able to show, after I have pointed out some statements which have been made, that he could not possibly be a party to any transactions of that kind, whatever anyone else might do. A few weeks ago some one was kind enough to place in my box in the post office a book containing a description of the life and character of that gentleman. I perused it with great pleasure, because I thought that in such a crisis as I conceived our country was passing through it was a good thing that the Parliament of Canada had among its members a gentleman possessed of such a character—one who, when the rights and liberties of the people were invaded, was ever found to be the champion of those rights and liberties. We have to go back to the fifth century before Christ to understand the character of that hon. gentleman. The description of his life states:

Mr. WOOD (Brockville).

"In the fifth century, before Christ, there appeared a man to whose ear all the people of Greece seemed attached; his insinuating and persuasive eloquence had crowned him king of speech, and his oratorical contests, which were but one series of victories, gave to his century the name of Pericles. What an admirable analogy between that phase of Greek history and the present time in Canada? In the two countries all depends on speech; the acts of the Government are discussed openly, the people take part in Government contests"—

An hon. MEMBER. Government contracts.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No, not contracts, contests.

"speech is sovereign; the statesman should be an orator. And if Pericles at Agora in Athens defended the rights of his people, here the Hon. Mr. Chapleau in seductive accents of persuasive eloquence supports with energy the rights of progress and patriotism, everything connected with him recalls to mind that fine eloquence which fascinated and conquered antiquity and enlightened the modern world with the purest rays of oratorical art."

Now, can we for one moment suppose that an hon. gentleman gifted like that—Pericles the Second—would be a party to a thing like this? But my surprise is not there; my surprise is that one who has been noted all his life as the champion of popular rights and constitutional government, one who has stood up for the liberties of the people, should have remained silent at this supreme crisis of our country's history. He should speak and lend the weight of his mighty eloquence in denouncing the wrong that has been perpetrated, for he will see, with his quick perceptions of what is right and wrong, that there has been a gross outrage committed on the rights and privileges of members of Parliament. I want to hear his strong tones, for I am told that:

"He belongs to the finest class of exalted orators, his speech, at the same time, harmonious and sweet, his incomparable mastery of irony, the broadness of his views and above all his invincible love of his country have raised him to the rank of Demosthenes and Isocrates."

There is where I experience a feeling of surprise—that the hon. gentleman should go through a long discussion like this, when he sees that there is an evident attempt being made by the First Minister to bark enquiry, and should take no steps to protect the rights and liberties of this Parliament from being invaded—I say that I am at a loss to understand why he forbears to speak.

"We are at a loss as to which we should the more admire in him, the seductive manner of his victorious speech or his admirable expression of an ever invincible patriotism."

But, Sir, we have had no opportunity on the present occasion of judging of "the seductive manner of his victorious speech or his admirable expression of an ever invincible patriotism." He liked politics, he says, because his own words are quoted:

"I liked politics before having known the way of interest, ambition or intrigue, I studied politics before having understood the narrow meanness or the calculating impudence which is connected with it."

I should judge from this article that he entered politics pure, and that he has maintained the purity of his political character; and I would like him now, with his fresh and pure political character, to rise and lend the weight of his eloquence in denouncing what a large number of the members of this House conceive to be an outrage on their rights and liberties. There are times we are told:

"When Mr. Chapleau decides to cease tormenting his adversaries by bringing to their mind evidence of their own shame, and when he ascends the rostrum when the great question of governing the world is concerned and when he speaks of the strength and patriotism of the Canadian people, his majestic and grave delivery commands the respect even of his enemies who find themselves obliged to bend before his noble utterances."

Will I be pardoned if I venture to suggest to him that now is an eminently proper time for the hon. gentleman to ascend to those regions? And I would suggest that he should not be too careful about the manner of ascending—whether he climbs up step by step, or whether he soars, so long as he reaches that eminence; and when he has done so, he should give us his candid opinion whether he thinks that in this manner of gazetted members he discovers anything of "narrow meanness or the calculating impudence which is connected with politics" but which he so carefully eschews. It is time for him and every man who is a lover of his country, every man who believes in constitutional and responsible government, to array himself on the side of those who are attempting to defend it. They say that this is time wasted. Time wasted in discussing a matter which strikes at the very roots of the liberties of the people! The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Wood) in a very glib way, told us we were wasting the time of the country. I would like to ask that hon. gentleman what are his conceptions of the duty of a member of Parliament, or of the fundamental principles of a free state, when he can find sufficient boldness to rise in his place, as a Canadian representative, and give expression to such views as those? The hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has pointed out to you that while we are denouncing this act we are but denouncing one long series of outrages against the rights and liberties of the people. This thing has been going on for some time. They say we are chagrined because we are not in office. Well, I don't think they are in a position to judge. I do not feel any great chagrin, but I do feel that when we have such exhibitions in this Parliament as men rising to sanction and uphold these outrages on the body of which they are members, we are in a measure abased; that we are not maintaining the high stand we should maintain as representatives of the people of this country. It matters not to this country what party governs, but it does matter to this country—it matters in the most solemn sense—that it shall be the people who shall make the laws under which the people live; and I tell you, that in all the outrages which I conceive have been perpetrated on the liberties and rights of the people, you have been but carrying out the Tory principles, those principles which have ever been held by the Tory party; principles which do not, perhaps, find expression in as open a manner now as in days gone by, but principles which are sought to be given effect to by these gentlemen, in representing the rights and liberties of the people, in endeavoring, by what I might almost call bribes, to stifle the expression of what ought to be the independent organs of public opinion, in endeavoring to subvert constituencies and members of Parliament who are elected to represent those constituencies. Sir, there has been a long series of that. To-day I believe in my heart that the success of the party opposite has been obtained through means that are not in the interest and well-being of the Dominion, which it ought to be our honor and pride, each one of us, to endeavor to build up. Sir, let the people rule; let there be a free expression of the people's will; untie the people's hands; give them a free ballot, and let them cast their votes; and if they relegate the Liberal party to the Opposition benches, all right. What the people do is right. But what we say is that when the Government use the power that they possess to tie the hands of the people and thus secure in their own favor a verdict at the polls that they could not secure on their merits, then they are recreant to their trust and are doing damage to the country over which they are called to preside. We charge that against the hon. gentlemen opposite, and as a proof that there is something in the charge, hon. gentlemen sit with sealed lips, and do not dare to rise to defend the iniquities that they perpetrate by their votes. That is a scene which has been witnessed in this House more than once. I said it was to their credit that they were able to maintain silence while they gave their votes at any rate; but it seems to me that an hon. gentleman who is prepared to cast his vote in a certain direction ought to rise and defend his course in doing it. In a grave case like this, which is proved on the very face of it, and it is sought that there shall be an investigation of it, the duty of the First Minister does not require him to intercept with an amendment by which he seeks to thwart the ends of justice. Why, Sir, the investigation does not need to be gone into. The people of this country only need to have printed in the public press the statement returned to this House by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Their knowledge of the different constituencies there referred to will enable them to see that no amount of explanation or sophistry can ever wipe out that record, which I venture to say is disgraceful to all who have been connected with it. It would only worry you, Sir, if I were to go again over the cases in which it is glaringly plain to every one that members of this House have been outraged. Sir, it is a thing to be regretted that in this Parliament such a thing is ever to be seen as this—that where an officer has plainly neglected to do his duty, and has had such grave charges made against him, as those specified by members of this House, an attempt should be made to prevent that officer going before a tribunal, where he will have an opportunity of presenting his own case and giving explanation of his conduct. Sir, the people of the country will judge; but it should not be left to the people of the country to decide on this matter some years hence, when this House may be dissolved and we are sent back to them. There ought to be in the breasts of the members of this House sufficient of the principles of honor and of regard for the standing of this House and the rights and liberties of its members, that when members rise in their places and say that they believe they can prove that incorrect return has been sent to this House, there should not be a man here who would not say that the officer concerned must appear and explain his conduct, and if incapable of explaining it, must suffer the consequences. Sir, two methods have been proposed of dealing with this matter. I for one feel that there have been such revelations in this case that I would be lacking in my duty, in my own sense of honor and dignity, and in my duty to my constituents, if I hesitated to vote in favor of that gentleman being brought where he shall have an opportunity of explaining his conduct. Of course the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin), who laughs at me, may have different ideas of his duty and dignity. If the hon. member feels that the privileges of this House have not been invaded, and that there has been no harm done, he is at liberty to cast his vote in such a way as he pleases. But I warn the House again that liberty, popular rights, responsible and constitutional Government were only attained after a long series of constitutional struggles, and it is well that we should beware of the first attempt that is made to sap the liberties that we are enjoying. In my opinion, this is not the first, it is not the second, it is not the third, it is not the fourth attempt that has been made; but there has been a series of attempts, of which this is, we may say, the culminating point, to subvert the liberties of the people and to again reduce us, as it were to vassalage, and to gain for those on the Treasury benches the absolute power to govern this country, those who are elected to this House to judge questions on their merits, casting aside their judgment and their conscience and yielding judgment, conscience and all to the few men who hold power. Sir, I believe in liberty, I believe in responsible government and constitutional government, I believe in the rights and liberties of this House, and let the majority do what they will, I will not bind my judgment, my conscience, and my liberty, to any Government in this country, be its name Tory or be its name Liberal.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My modesty should have prompted me a moment ago to rise and call the hon. gentleman to order. But I must say that I yielded to the charm of once hearing from the lips of a Reformer my eulogy as a humble member of the Conservative party. It was a novelty to me, who have been accustomed during a long period of public life never to have heard uttered from the mouth of a Liberal, Reformer or Grit anything but abuse, the vilest slanders and the greatest outrages—it was a novelty to me to listen to the hon. gentleman repeating the far too flattering and exaggerated compliments that he has been reading. I pay him my compliments—he did it well. One of these days, perhaps, he will believe what he has repeated, and I hope that that day is not very far distant. I hope this evening, after my remarks, the hon. gentleman will say that I deserve at least the credit of always taking in a debate the part that is noble and generous. I do not want to yield to the two or three different appeals that have been made to me as the humble head of the department which comprises the Queen's Printer and the official Gazette, to tell of the great conspiracy and the dark deed with which an important officer of this Government is charged. I have no tale to tell except one which is personal to me, and if I have been a party to that conspiracy, as it is called by my hon. friends, I have certainly well covered my tracks, as I am one of those unfortunate members who had to wait a long time for the gazetting of his return to Parliament. There certainly should have been no doubt about my having been elected. It is true the prophecies made by hon. gentlemen opposite on the hustings and in the press, would have led people to suppose that a crushing defeat was awaiting me in the county I have represented for over twenty years. Gallows had been erected in my county once, and it was said that if physically I would not hang to those gallows which were erected in January, 1886, that politically my existence would cease on those gallows built up in commemoration of the Regina scaffold; but on the 22nd of February, though I had paid just two short visits to my electors, I was elected by a majority of from 875 to 900. The returning officer surely had not to wait for a recount in my case. My adversaries did not want a recount; it was painful enough for them to have counted once. Still, I waited until the 14th of March for the return, and until the 19th March for the gazetting my election. Why did I wait patiently and quietly as I did, in spite of my legitimate desire of seeing my name in the Canada Gazette? It was because my conscience was not terror-stricken as was the consciences of hon. gentlemen opposite. I was never in any trepidation of hearing people say that it was the money which had been sent from the other side of the border, which had been the cause of my election, nor any other money. My conscience, politically and personally, was quiet, and I did not complain. One would believe, in listening to the declamations of hon. gentlemen, that the constitution and the country were in danger, and I was surprised to find out in the suave preacher of morality and Sabbath observance, in that quiet lecturer of this House, a Roman soldier, a man who was ready to take up arms, against us. I thought for a moment the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) would cross over to another seat and snatch from the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) his old Saskatchewan musket. But no, I am sure that display of warlike sentiment was only—I will not say for the show; because that would not be parliamentary—the consequence of over-zeal in politics. I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Quebec East say that responsible government was no longer in existence here, and that Baldwin and Lafontaine had been fighting for nothing. Why, what was his ground for that statement? Because ten or twenty days had elapsed before the official Gazette announced the results of the elections to the electors. I have heard also that popular rights had been trampled under foot, and the hon. gentleman who has just sat down appealed to me to use my eloquence in denouncing those wicked men who had allowed popular rights to be trampled under foot. What popular rights have been trampled on? Our popular rights have been exercised during the elections. Has there been a petition of the electorate complaining of what the Clerk of the Crown and Queen's Printer have been doing? Has the liberty of the people been attacked, or the right of a single elector invaded? No; true, the comfort of some hon. members may have been disturbed, but that is all, and their comfort has been disturbed only in the cases of those who had reason to fear between a wrong election and a true return. I am surprised at these denunciations. It is a tradition in the bar, the profession to which I belong, that a client has forty-eight hours to curse his judge. Had the hon. gentleman been denouncing those who rendered a verdict against them, I would understand it; but I am at a loss to understand that when a pleader has lost his case he should say, not that the judge was incompetent, or the jury stupid, but that the prothonotary who registers the judgment is a scoundrel. It is the first time I have heard of a suitor venting his wrath in that way. The judgment is not denied, the judge is not accused, the jury is not denounced, but the clerk is called a dishonest man. I have been surprised at this debate, and I must say I have regretted it. I did not intend to take part in it at all. The hon. gentleman has said that during my life I have defended popular rights and the liberties of the people,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant.)

It is true, and I glory in it, but there is also one thing I have always respected; I have always respected what is noble and generous, and I have always tried to be generous towards the weak. To be ungenerous towards officials serving under us, towards those who have no right to defend themselves, I cannot accuse myself of. I would not condemn a man who is not before the House to defend himself, as do hon. gentlemen opposite, who have denied him the right of giving him an answer. Hon. gentlemen opposite may laugh, but they are doing this by their vote. What is the proposition of the leader of the Government? He moves that the Clerk of the Crown be called on to give an answer and an explanation of the report which he has laid before the House. Is it not right that he should be allowed to give this answer? Hon. gentlemen opposite say, let him give his answer before the Committee on Privileges and Elections; but his answers there would not have the same significance after the denunciations of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman may say "hear, hear," but he must admit that I am right. I always felt that great consideration was due to the position of the servants of Parliament and of the Crown. Seven years ago, when I was the Premier of Quebec—

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. To the shame of the Province.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has used a word which is not parliamentary, and I will call on him to withdraw it.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. I will withdraw it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I will not retort out of respect for the dignity of the House and for my own dignity; but I must say that if that gentleman who has just risen to insult me thinks he is the glory of his county and his Province he may keep that opinion to himself.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. I suppose it is parliamentary—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. Well, I appeal to the Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. (Translation.) The hon. member may interrupt me as much as they like, but even if they should see fit to do their utmost to intimidate me, that would not hinder me from speaking. I have sat in parliamentary assemblies before this, although this is my first session here. I wish to know this, Mr. Speaker: I have been called to order by you and I have submitted to your decision. I had, perhaps, nothing to withdraw from what I had said, but, at all events, I have done it, and I do not wish to go back on what I have done. But it seems to me that the hon. Secretary of State has made use towards me of expressions which were unparliamentary when he said that I was not a credit to my constituency. Well, if it is parliamentary for him to use these expressions towards me I wish to know it from you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. There are some expressions that are glaringly and evidently unparliamentary, when the same thing said in another way and in other words may not be unparliamentary. The rule is that members of the House must speak of each other like gentlemen do, and I maintain that any word conveying in itself that a man is not a gentleman or anything meaning the same thing, is not parliamentary.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. I never said—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. I want to get a decision.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman chooses to appeal to the House against my decision he can do so, but it must be without debate.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. What is the decision?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I was just going to say that, under strong provocation, though I am accustomed to it, I might be, and I think I would be quite excusable in making use of expressions which otherwise and elsewhere I would not use. In this instance I know that the expressions which I used were not unparliamentary, but I may say that, except under provocation, I would not have made use of those expressions. This is, I suppose, sufficient to satisfy the House that I had not the intention of hurting the feelings of the hon. gentleman. I generally try to keep within the rules of debate when I address the House, which I am sorry to say is not often, because I am not sufficiently au fait of the language of those who generally speak in the House to do it with advantage. I was saying, what probably my hon. friend from Chambly (Mr. Préfontaine) knows quite well, that seven years ago I was the Premier of the Province of Quebec, and I have had praise in that regard from the present Premier of the Province, whose testimony will not be suspected by the hon. member for Chambly.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend has said he is accustomed to parliamentary assemblies, but I am afraid that he is going to prove that, if he has been there for a long time, he has not much profited by his experience. When I was Premier in Quebec there was a man who was an officer of the Government, who, before being an officer in that Province, was directly opposed to me in politics. He had been sitting in this House for some time, and was known to be thoroughly in the ranks of the Liberal party. On one or two occasions, over zealous partisans attempted to bring the name of that officer before the House, in connection with alleged partisan action. I am glad to say that I then and there stepped forward and said that I would not, unless a gross injustice, a gross damage, a flagrant injustice had been done, ever allow, as long as I could command the House, an officer of the House or an officer of the Government to be dragged out and to be denounced in the House when he had no opportunity to defend himself. I was surprised at the denunciation of the hon. gentlemen on the other side, and afterwards at their refusal to do what the right hon. gentleman is asking, to give the officer in question an opportunity of giving an explanation, which will not prevent the hon. gentlemen afterwards, if they choose, from making any motion they desire after his answer has been received. Upon that answer will depend the whole fate of this discussion, which I would not like to call frivolous, but which did not deserve to occupy the time which it has occupied. Suppose the answer of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is before the House, and is found by the House to be satisfactory and to be sufficient to convince everyone of us; and hon. gentlemen opposite cannot say that they will not be convinced, they do not know what the answer will be. Suppose they see that there is nothing in the conduct of that officer to be reprimanded, nothing to be blamed, what then would have been the good of this discussion to-night and the denunciations which we have heard, denunciations which should not have fallen from the lips of those hon. gentlemen; insinuations, for instance, such as that from the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who, with the ingenuity which he always displays and which belongs to him—and I say this in all sincerity—who is seldom misinformed in his statements, who is painstaking in looking up the facts which he is presenting to the House, made a discovery and thought he had found in the estimates the secret of the nefarious conduct of this officer, because he said the officer had been transferred from this House into the Department of the Privy Council, that is to say, the Department of the right hon. the leader of the Government. My hon. friend might have known, and, if he had looked at the Civil Service List for 1883, 1884, 1885 and 1886, he would have seen that that officer was in the Department of the Secretary of State. I can inform him that he was transferred from my Department several months before the Government thought of having a general election. The officer was in my Department. Some questions arose, questions of precedence between officials in the Departments, and, looking over the list of officials, I thought that that officer, who belonged partly to the House and partly to all the Departments in general, should be transferred to that Department which has no special work except the general work affecting all the Departments, the Department of the President of the Privy Council. That was done not at the demand of the right hon. gentleman, but at my own demand, and long before the Government had even thought of having a general election. So far with regard to that insinuation of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I have known the Clerk of the Crown for years. He was in the Department over which I have the honor to preside, and a more painstaking, a more honest, a more impartial officer, and more ready to do his duty, I have not seen. I am glad to have an opportunity to render him this testimony after the obloquy to which he has been subjected on the part of hon. members opposite. I do not intend to go any further into the discussion of this question. To me it seems very clear, and I cannot see that it has any party bearings at all. At least, speaking for myself, I can say that I regard it wholly independent of political feeling. I take that case exactly as it should be taken, and I say that officer has obeyed our command. He has put before us a report, and that report has been commented upon far too strongly by hon. gentlemen opposite, accompanied with expressions and denunciations which I regret to have heard used. He is now asked to give his explanation; if it is satisfactory well and good. No damage has been done to anybody, and if the explanation is one which is satisfactory, this will end the matter. But, I do not wish to be obliged, for one, to go before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and enquire into the conduct of every returning officer during the whole of the last elections. It is said that members have got time to make that investigation; and I perceived immediately that some hon. gentlemen who spoke upon this question only intended that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery should be examined, whereas in the Committee on Privileges and Elections every hon. member will be at liberty to bring up the whole question of the returning officer in his county. Everyone who has a little political grievance in his county would be induced to call that up, and there would be no end to it. I say, Mr. Speaker, that this investigation would not be regular, and as regards the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery I am perfectly sure that as far as political partisanship is concerned, all impartial men in this House will say that this gentleman should have the protection that every one of our officers should have, and should be allowed to give his explanation as he has been asked to give it.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. (Translation.) At this late hour of the night I do not intend to delay the House very long, but the insinuations which have just been made by the hon. Secretary of State, in his speech, compel me to speak, if not for my own sake, at least for the fair fame of my county, which the hon. member for Terrebonne saw fit to insult on account of the choice it made by electing me as its representative. It will be sufficient for me to appeal to the hon. Secretary of State—

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh!

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. It is all very well for hon. members who do not understand French to sneer at me; it is their business. I suppose they are paid for it, but that will not deter me from taking as much time as will be necessary for my remarks.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The language the hon. gentleman has just used is not parliamentary. He said that hon. members were paid for interrupting him.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has no right to say that hon. members are paid to interrupt him.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. I never applied the word "paid" to any of the members of this House. I said that if there is anybody in this House who wishes to interrupt me he must be paid for it, because I hold that nobody in this House has a right to interrupt me without cause.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have given my decision and it seems to me that the hon. member should submit to it.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. Had I understood that the word could apply to any of the hon. gentlemen opposite—

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It could not apply to the galleries.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. I did not understand that it could apply to the galleries, because in this House we are supposed to follow parliamentary practice, and the public is not supposed to be present at our proceedings. When a member is addressing the House on a question in which his Province and the country at large are interested, he should not be interrupted. I say I have a perfect right, if not in my own name, at least in the name of my constituency, and in the name of the Province of Quebec to address the House in answer of the hon. Secretary of State. That hon. gentleman, after you had called me to order, Mr. Speaker, because in the course of his remarks he boasted that he had been Premier of the Province of Quebec—I know he is very skilful in that respect, that he causes himself to be banquetted and sticks feathers in his own cap for things that do not amount to much—and I ventured to say that it was for the shame of the Province of Quebec. You called me to order, and I understood from your decision that the language I used was not parliamentary.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member ought not to come back on that point and repeat those expressions in an indirect way.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. I was about to state, Mr. Speaker, that I had bowed down to your decision. It seems to me that there is nothing unparliamentary in that. At all events if there is anything unparliamentary in it I withdraw all that I have said with respect to that. To resume my subject, I say that from the standpoint of the Province of Quebec, and from the standpoint of the county which I have the honor to represent in the House of Commons of Canada, I believe that in the opinion of the majority of the electors of my county I represent them as honorably as any member represents his constituency in this House, and even as honorably as the hon. Secretary of State, notwithstanding his large majority. I can very well understand that the hon. Secretary of State should boast of his large majority, and I am not at a loss for an explanation of that fact. But, on the other hand, if, in the month of July, 1886, I did not have the advantage of having as large a majority as that of the hon. Secretary of State, that was probably due to his efforts and exertions in the county of Chambly. But strange to say, at the election of the 22nd of February last, the hon. Secretary of State did not show himself in the county of Chambly. The success with which he had met on the 30th July, 1886, had inspired him with the discreet courage of not putting in an appearance, and the result was—it was not to my advantage but rather to the advantage of the hon. Secretary of State—that my majority, which amounted to eighty-eight on the 30th of July, 1886, was reduced to forty-six. I suppose it was because the hon. Secretary of State had not shown himself in the county of Chambly. That was the secret of the change which took place in the county. At all events I am not complaining of that, Mr. Speaker; we are discussing a question which is far more important. I do not wish to relate the history of my election, it would be too long. In the month of July, 1886, it was intended to make a test case in the Province of Quebec. The hon. Secretary of State had, so to speak, flung his portfolio at the head of the Premier and hurled defiance at the Province of Quebec. He did not resign at that time. No; he made the people believe he was resigning, but it is well known that he was not slow in withdrawing his resignation. It was not serious. But he felt perfectly sure, that, by hurrying through the elections with the old lists, he would have a majority and carry the county of Chambly. Now, Mr. Speaker, you will please notice, that the cards had been spotted beforehand, so to speak; it was not a fair deal. The hon. gentlemen said to themselves: If we could only carry the county of Chambly under the circumstances, what a great success it would be. So and so is going to be a candidate, and we must begin to destroy him two months beforehand. Then, the organ of the Secretary of State—for he had an organ, and an important organ, at Montreal; he has two now—the organ of the Secretary of State commenced to demolish the future member for Chambly. The result did not annihilate him; on the contrary, the result was to bring his candidature out in full bloom; for he had no intention of re-entering politics, nor of running as a candidate in a county which, in 1881, had told him to go back home and devote himself to his professional pursuits; he had no intention, I say, to continue to take part in politics. But, owing to the repeated attacks of the organ of the hon. Secretary of State against me, I said to myself: There is only one thing for me to do, and it is to vindicate my honor, which is so wantonly attacked. It was rumored at that time that the member for the county of Chambly was about to obtain a situation—I will not say for what motive or for what reason. The member for Chambly who preceded me in this House is one of my personal friends, although he is not one of my political friends, but he is an excellent officer, who fulfils his duties well. He is not a returning officer.

Mr. BERGIN. I would like to ask whether the hon. gentleman is in order in discussing the political contest in the Province of Quebec, or whether he ought not to confine himself to the discussion of the question before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The moment the hon. member is called to order, I am obliged to tell him, that the point he is discussing with regard to the county of Chambly has nothing to do with the question before the House, and that if he will return to the question before the House he will be in order.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. I respectfully submit to your decision, Mr. Speaker, but I thought that owing to the wide area over which this debate had already been dragged, that I also, had a right to answer the arguments of the hon. Secretary of State. But I am willing to confine myself to the question now before us. What is our position, Mr. Speaker, on the question now before us? We hold, or rather it is held in the main motion that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has not discharged his duty; that he did not act according to law. I regret that I have been interrupted, because I should have successfully answered, I think, many of the arguments of the hon. Secretary of State, but I do not wish to revert to that. We complain that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has not performed his duties according to law. I have admired the artlessness of the hon. Secretary of State. It is not the first time. Those who do not know him, may believe in it, but I have not much faith in it, still one must always admire the expression of a feeling carried to its utmost limit, whenever it is to be found. I have admired him when he said in my county I had a returning officer who belonged to my party. I did not complain against him. He made the return of my election on the 12th of March, and I did not complain of the fact, that the gazetting took place some time after that. But let us examine when the return of the election of the hon. Secretary of State was made. We read in the report of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, as it appears in the Orders of the House, that the return of the election in the county of Terrebonne, an election which was carried by 800 majority, as he said, was sent to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the 12th of March, and he does not complain of the delay within which he has been gazetted. Well, Mr. Speaker, to hear him you would think that he was not gazetted until at least the 12th or 15th of April. Not at all. He was gazetted on the 19th of March in the number of the Official Gazette which immediately followed the election. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery followed the election law, which reads as follows, section 66:

"The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall, on receiving the return of any member elected to the House of Commons, give notice in the next ordinary issue of the Canada Gazette of the name of the candidate so elected."

Now, the hon. Secretary of State would have us pity his lot, when, according to this return, and according to what we have before us, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has acted entirely according to law.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I never said anything else. My hon. friend was mistaken. I did not complain of the returning officer. I said that I was quite surprised to see that he had not made the return of my election before the 14th of March, when I was elected on the 22nd of February.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. I understand that it was a question of discussing the duties of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and that in complaining of the conduct of that officer we are not complaining of the conduct of the returning officer.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That is the motion.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. And that when the return of an election was made on the 12th, no complaint could be made against the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery who published that return in the next number of the Official Gazette according to law. Now, I might tell the hon. Secretary of State, that this long debate which takes up quite a length of time, which perhaps would not have been better employed otherwise, at least by the hon. Secretary of State, and those who spoke on his side, for he gave us a very instructive course of constitutional law, which may learn to future generations what is a constitutional government put within the reach of everybody when the whole Tory party may have a hand in it. But with regard to the question before us, I say the members of this House have a perfect right to discuss the course followed by an officer of this House. Now, what is said to us from the other side of the House? Hon. gentleman opposite say: Oh, but this Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is a kind of a madonna, he must not be touched; he must not be approached, he is an employee of the Government and he is such a good employee, that, first of all an increase of $300 on his salary must be voted to him for having done his duty so well with regard to the publishing of the returns of the elections of members on this side of the House. So unapproachable is this man—although he is an officer of this House—that we must send him a letter and ask him very meekly if he will be pleased to give some explanations, just exactly as in the election for Queen's, N.B. Here is a returning officer who has failed in his duty in a flagrant manner—it is admitted by everybody—but he is a sacred person, a holy ark; we must not lay our hand on him; he is not a man like other men; he must not be attacked, even if he fails in his duty; we must let him go on because he returned as elected a member on the other side of the House, who supports the Government, instead of a Grit, a Liberal, a Reformist, or a Nationalist, for a Nationalist is considered as still worse than all. At all events, as long as he has made this return, he must not be touched; we must let him go on; take the matter very coolly, and not ask him to come and explain before the House; for it seems that this is the decision arrived at by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Be that as it may, that is not the question now before us; but I, for one, do not intend to defend the returning officer of Queen's county nor the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. I am convinced that they have not followed the law. I even feel that they have violated it in a most obnoxious manner. In the present case I believe that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery did not act in good faith. Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that he acted in good faith. Well, for God's sake, let us have the proof that he was in good faith; it is just what we ask. We asked that he be summoned to appear before the Committee on Privileges and Elections to answer to certain questions which would be put to him. Really, judging from this debate one would be apt to think that the members of the Opposition would put inconsiderate questions to him, and that hon. gentlemen opposite do not wish such questions to be put to him. He will simply be asked to write a letter; in this letter he will say what he will please and there the thing will end. But the Government say: You members of the Opposition, you are making a factious Opposition, you are taking our time uselessly; you are unnecessarily asking for a thing which you will not have. I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that we will not get it; therefore, we are not discussing the question for the hon. gentlemen opposite. I am satisfied that we will not get it because the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery can not reasonably explain his conduct. He cannot do it without involving the members of the Government. No man in his senses, whether in this House or in any part of the country will ever believe that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has not been dictated by anybody. And as has been said before, there is certainly something peculiar in the course followed by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in the Province of Quebec after the 14th of October, when the result was doubtful, it was attempted, by foul means, to snatch from the popular majority, from the majority of the representatives which the popular vote had elected to govern the Province of Quebec, the management of public affairs. The attempt failed. Every possible means were employed to displace this majority, but all in vain. But here, for the Government of the Dominion of Canada if it had only been a question of displacing four or five votes, the means which were employed would have succeeded. One member would have been intimidated by having his return published one or two months after the delay determined by law, another would have been intimidated through other means, and hon. gentleman would have managed to keep the power in their own hands. The Government did not get the real majority in the Dominion of Canada; it is well known on the other side of the House and it is admitted by hon. gentlemen opposite—it will not be admitted here on the floor of the House—but it is well known everywhere and public opinion is aware of it. Now public opinion may be manifested in various manners. I can very well understand that during the last elections it has not expressed itself exactly as there was reason to hope that it should express itself; that is to say, the result has not been what we expected it would be. But if we look at the reasons, if we enquire into the causes through which the result was obtained, there is no man on this side of the House, I am sure, who is not proud of the result, because, at least on this side of the House, the result which was obtained, was a frank and honest expression of the various counties of the Dominion of Canada. The hon. gentlemen opposite cannot say as much in this respect after having employed all the means they have employed to carry the elections. We are sneered at and we are told that we are raging because we did not obtain power. Well, Mr. Speaker, I say for my part, that rather than to obtain power and retain it by such means as the Government are now employing to retain it, I prefer to remain in the Opposition. I am proud of numbering as a private in the ranks of the Opposition and to oppose the Government when they fail to do their duty. I have not been elected here as an out-and-out Oppositionist. Whenever the Government will do anything which will deserve my approbation—I have said as much in my county—I will give them my support. I will not mind the fact that I had to contend with the hon. Secretary of State and his friends, I will not mind the petition against my election, nor the fact that he furnished $500 of the deposit required for the contestation. I have a duty to perform towards my electors; I shall perform it whatever may be the consequences, and no man will deter me from doing my duty. But I consider that in taking that position, I take an honorable position towards my electors, I take an honorable position towards the Province of Quebec, just as I took up the gauntlet which was thrown at the face of my Province on the 23rd of July 1836, in the county of Chambly, when I was elected on the 30th July, 1836. I can very well understand why the hon. Secretary of State does not like to be interrupted by me. He does not like me in any way. I do not know why. I never did him any wrong. On the contrary, I did him some good, and I might remind him of an instance in particular, in the county of Chambly, on nomination day, in the month of July, 1836, if he was allowed to address a meeting in the county, it was due to my intervention and to nothing else.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE.

Mr. BERGIN. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is still going away from the subject under discussion.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I presume that I may be allowed to speak to the point of order. I am astonished that a member who addresses this House for the first time is interrupted by old parliamentarians in the way he is —

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose I need not call the hon. member back to the question. He knows very well that he is returning to questions outside of the debate.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. Mr. Speaker, I will return to the election of the county of Chambly and to the report which was made of that election. Here is what I find in the report which is now before the House: the report of the returning officer has been received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the 7th of March, and not on the 12th of March. I pray the hon. Secretary of State to mark the date. The report was received on the 7th of March. Well, when was I gazetted? I do not complain about it; I knew that my election was going to be contested. The report was published in the Official Gazette on the 26th of March, and I find in this report two irregularities. In the first place, there was no recount of the votes in my county; people did not dare to ask for a recount; they were satisfied that I had the legal majority, and the deputy returning officers were so well trained that it was not thought that they had counted in my favor ballot papers which did not belong to me. The recount should have taken place within six days, if it had been demanded. Here is what the law says; I always base my opinion on the law:

"The returning officer shall immediately after the sixth day after the final addition by him, unless before that time he receives notice that he is required to attend before a judge for the purpose of a final addition or recount by such judge of the votes given at the election, transmit his return to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, that the candidate having the largest number of votes has been duly elected, and shall forward to each of the respective candidates a duplicate or copy thereof, and such return shall be in the form CC., in the first schedule of this Act."

I hope the hon. member will pardon me. It was my desire to read this in French, but we have not yet received the French version of the Revised Statutes. I suppose the hon. Secretary of State will explain to me how it happens that Statutes which have been in force since the 1st of March, 1837, have not yet been published in the French language. I suppose people have been too busy stewing the electoral returns. As I told the hon. Secretary of State, I was only gazetted on the 26th of March. As for him, his return was received on the 12th and he was gazetted on the 19th. This means that I did not hold the handle of the frying pan in that Department, and that he took very good care to have his return published before mine. That was probably intended to make me angry, but it has not hindered me from being so. Now, here is what has been proved with regard to other counties where elections took place at the same date and where they had a recount before the judge. Take as an instance the Joliette election. I do not blame the hon. gentleman opposite for having been elected in that county. It is true he has only been elected by the majority of the returning officer, but it is as respectable a majority as any other. The report of his election was received on the 8th of March, and people hastened to have him gazetted on the 12th of March. In the county of Yamaska, it was about the same thing with this difference, that the recount took a little more time; there were ballots which were tied with strings and the judge was unable to untie the knot, which explains the little delay. There was a little too much rope and the judge did not want to touch it. The return was received on the 14th and they hastened to have him gazetted on the 19th, that is to say, one week before me—poor martyr! belonging to the Opposition, and who had been elected twice for the same seat. Well, I am told by hon. gentlemen opposite that I have no right to complain. They say there is not a member of the Opposition who can point out to us a single wrong which has been committed against anybody. It is not a wrong, because my election might have been contested before, and I might not have been elected at all. But one thing is certain, and it is that by gazetting me on the 26th and by gazetting the member for Yamaska on the 19th, he was given the advantage of a week over me; then they might say: If the hon. member for Yamaska is contested, we will be able to contest the member for Chambly, and, right or wrong, after contesting him, we will endeavor to pair off the contestation of the election of the member for Yamaska with his own or with any other. Well, it seems that is the way it has been done in my county. But, unfortunately for me, I am unable to pair; the deposit of the petitioner is already seized. I have not enough to secure my costs. I am obliged to push it to the end, and I cannot request an additional security. On the strength of that, this is what I have done: I was in a very painful position. It is said that this was not an injustice. Well, I find that it is not just for me, since I have been obliged to file my appearance within the five days, to plead to the merits within the five days, and to immediately request the time of the trial to be fixed, and it was fixed on the 1st of June. So that on the 1st of June next we will know whether I am a member of this House and whether I have a right to occupy a seat here or not. There is one thing certain, and that is: if I have no right to hold my seat here I will not hold it by force. I will not do as some hon. members opposite are doing; I will not do as the Ross Government has done in Quebec when they clung to power after the elections of the 14th of October. But I understand that this is a little foreign to the question before us, and I say so incidentally to point out to the House and to you, Mr. Speaker, that I have not been treated with justice. Again I say, I am aware that these contestations are only meant as a dodge, because if we were to believe that they are serious there would be a very serious conclusion to infer from that, and that conclusion was drawn last fall, after the elections of the month of October, by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court for the District of Montreal, the Honorable Judge Johnson, who from the Bench made the following declaration: having learned from the newspapers that out of 65 elections held in the Province of Quebec, 43 were contested. He said: If we are to believe that these contestations are serious, if we are to believe that in 43 counties the electorate has been corrupted, the Province of Quebec is not worthy of being governed and is not worthy of a constitutional government. And if we must apply these words to the present case we will come to the same conclusion, because in the Province of Quebec alone, there are 26 elections which are contested. I am not aware of the number in the other Provinces, but I am sure of one thing, and that is, the Province of Quebec is not more corrupt than any other Province and that a great number of these contestations are only made for the fun of it. They are only made to intimidate certain members who are rather weak-kneed; as for my part I do not fear anything, and I will leave it to other members to get out of scrape the best way they can. Still the conclusion to be drawn is certainly that which was drawn by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court for the district of Montreal, and it is the only one at which a man with a sound judgment can arrive. Because, if in a country like this, out of 215 elections, over one half are contested, this country is not fit to be governed by a constitutional Government. For, in this country for a certain number of years back, a regular system has been organised of political corruption and political favors on one side to secure the votes of hon. members on that side. I repeat it, such a country is not worthy of a constitutional government. Well, I represent a county wherein political favors may have some influence; I know that the county of Chambly, with regard to patronage, may have great wants. I know that the Government cannot help giving justice to my county, but at all events, if they see fit to not give justice to it, they may, to a certain extent grapple me by the throat and say: Mr. Member for Chambly, you are opposing the Government, your county is in want of such and such works on the canal, of such and such subsidies for railways, you shall not have them unless you vote for the Government, or abstain from opposing the Government. Well, this policy is an immoral policy, it is a policy which can only lead us to political disasters and to nothing else. People may laugh at us, they may pretend in this House that we are not serious. Public opinion outside of this House will easily understand the true position, and recognise where is the sound majority in the Dominion of Canada and in the various Provinces. What is the result which we have before us at the present time? How are we to convince anybody whatever—I do not say here in the Dominion of Canada, I know there are people ready to do anything—but will we convince anybody in another country that the present Administration has the real majority of the electorate of Canada? It is well known that this is only for show. The hon. members of the Government know it right well. They know it better than anybody. They know that they have not the real majority of the electorate, and that if the electorate had been free on the 22nd of February last, the result would have been different—it would have been such as it was at the elections for the Local Legislatures. A glance around us will convince any man that the Local Governments in every Province are opposed in politics to the Government of the Dominion. So much is this the case that the hon. Secretary of State, at his great banquet, where he was to be crowned as leader of the Conservative party of the Province of Quebec, has found nothing better to do than to recriminate against the hon. Premier of the Province of Quebec, instead of delivering a speech worthy of a statesman. It was perhaps on that account that while he was speaking two of the hon. Ministers opposite were pretending to sleep. Mr. Speaker, I have said enough, too much, perhaps, but I do not regret what I have said, except whatever was out of order, since I submitted to your ruling. I regret that part only. I said a while ago, in answer to certain remarks, that I had parliamentary experience. I took part in the debates when the hon. Secretary of State was First Minister of the Province of Quebec, as long as he wishes me to consider that it was an honor for the Province to have him as First Minister; and also when he was leader of the Opposition, as long as he wishes me to consider that it was an honor for the Opposition to be led by him. But I did not understand the question as I understand it now. The experience I gained to-day will learn me that in the future I must not tread on such slippery ground, and especially not speak about things which are foreign to the question. I suppose that all these questions will be discussed anew, and that we will have occasion to speak at length about it and to talk about it between ourselves, as a member of this House and as a representative of the county which I have the honor to represent here; because I am not only the representative of the county of Chambly; it appears I am the representative of a Province. I did not understand that I had that honor. I understand that I had it on the 30th of July last, but I did not have it at the general elections. I thank the hon. members of this House for having listened to my somewhat lengthy remarks, notwithstanding the fact that on this occasion I thought it better to use, for the explanations I had to give, the French language with which I am more familiar. On other occasions when the questions will perhaps be questions of fact, I shall use the English language.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Davies (p. 336):

YEAS:
Messieurs

Armstrong,	Ell's,	Mallory,
Bain (Wentworth),	Fiset,	Mills (Bothwell),
Barron,	Flynn,	Mitchell,
Béchar, d,	Gauthier,	Mulock,
Bernier,	Geoffrion,	Paterson (Brant),
Blake,	Gigault,	Perry,
Borden,	Gillmor,	Platt,
Bourassa,	Godbout,	Préfontaine,
Brien,	Guay,	Purcell,
Burdett,	Hale,	Rinfret,
Campbell (Kent),	Holton,	Robertson (King's, P. E. I.)
Campbell (Renfrew),	Innes,	Robertson (Shelburne),
Cartwright (Sir Richard),	Jones,	St. Marie,
Casey,	Kirk,	Scriver,
Casgrain,	Landerkin,	Semple,
Charlton,	Lang,	Somerville,
Cimon,	Langelier (Montmor'ncy),	Sutherland,
Clayes,	Laurier,	Trow,
Davies,	Lister,	Tarcot,
De St. Georges,	Livingston,	Waldie,
Dessaint,	Lovitt,	Watson,
Doyon,	Macdonald (Huron),	Weldon (St. John),
Edgar,	McIntyre,	Wilson (Elgin),
Edwards,	McMillan (Huron),	Yeo.—74.
Eisenhauer,	McMullen,

NAYS:
Messieurs

Audet,	Guillet,	Perley (Ottawa),
Bain (Soulanges),	Haggart,	Pope,
Baker,	Hall,	Porter,
Bergeron,	Hesson,	Putnam,
Bergin,	Hickey,	Riopel,
Rowell,	Hudspeth,	Robertson (Hastings),
Boyle,	Ives,	Robillard,
Brown,	Joncas,	Roome,
Burns,	Kenny,	Ross,

Mr. PREFONTAINE.

Cameron,	Kirkpatrick,	Royal,
Campbell (Digby),	Labelle,	Scarth,
Cargill,	Landry,	Shakespeare,
Carling,	Langevin (Sir Hector),	Shanly,
Carpenter,	Macdonald (Sir John),	Small,
Caron (Sir Adolphe),	MacDowall,	Smith (Sir Donald),
Chapleau,	McCarthy,	Smith (Ontario),
Chisholm,	McGilla,	Sproule,
Cockburn,	McDonald (Victoria),	Taylor,
Coughlin,	McDougald (Pictou),	Temple,
Coulombe,	McDougald (OapeBreton),	Thérien,
Couture,	McGreevy,	Thompson,
Curran,	McKay,	Tisdale,
Daly,	McKeen,	Tupper (Pictou),
Davin,	McLelan,	Tyrwhitt,
Davis,	McMillan (Vaudreuil),	Wallace,
Denison,	McNeil,	Ward,
Desjardins,	Madill,	Weldon (Albert),
Ferguson (Leeds & Gren),	Mara,	White (Cardwell),
Ferguson (Welland),	Marshall,	Wilmot,
Foster,	Masson,	Wilson (Argenteuil),
Freeman,	Mills (Annapolis),	Wilson (Lennox),
Gaudet,	Moncreiff,	Wood, (Brockville),
Gordon,	Montplaisir,	Wood (Westmoreland),
Grandbois,	O'Brien,	Wright—104.
Guilbault,	Patterson (Essex),

Amendment to amendment negatived.

Mr. DAVIES. It was understood that my colleague (Mr. Welsh) had paired with the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McDougald), and I notice the hon. member for Pictou voted.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Welsh), told me when I was with him this afternoon, with respect to obtaining a pair with the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McDougald), that he would vote with the Government on this question. I asked him: "Will you on any other question consider yourself paired with Mr. McDougald?" and he said he would. If any other arrangement was made with any one else I do not know anything about it; but I made the arrangement for Mr. McDougald on this question, and they were not paired.

Mr. DAVIES. Mr. Welsh told me that he had paired, at Mr. Tupper's request, with Mr. McDougald for this vote.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McDougald) had better give his own version.

Mr. McDUGALD (Pictou). I know nothing about the arrangement. I wanted a pair, and I did not know whether a pair had been made. If it has been made, I am quite willing to abide by it.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for West Assinibria (Mr. Perley) told me to-night that he and Mr. Welsh had made a pair for to-night.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McDougald) will please state if he wishes to vote or not, so that the point may be settled. If he wishes to withdraw the vote, he has a right to do so, if he is paired.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) is one of the whips, and when the arrangement was made it was understood that Mr. McDougald had a right to vote on this question.

Mr. DAVIES. If the arrangement was so understood on the other side, I must say it was stated to me distinctly the opposite way by Mr. Welsh himself.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is not a whip.

Mr. MULOCK. Surely the hon. gentleman's own word is quite as binding as that of a whip.

Mr. HICKEY. If the hon. gentleman's word was worth much he would not have paired with two hon. gentlemen.

Mr. TROW. The rule is that a pair by one whip is not valid unless it is ratified by the whip of the other party. I heard nothing of this affair. The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Bowman) informed me this afternoon that he had paired with the hon. member for London (Mr. Carling) and he left the House in order to accommodate that gentleman.

Mr. CARLING. I met the hon. gentleman in the passage at 11 o'clock and told him I had to go to the station to meet a friend who was coming by the 11:30 train from Montreal, and I asked him to be kind enough to pair with me till I returned from the railway station, and he said he would do so. That is exactly what took place. I asked him to pair until I returned from the station, and I told him I would be back in one hour, and he said he would do so.

Mr. TROW. The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Bowman) was anxious to remain, but he understood that it was a pair for to night.

Mr. CARLING. I did not so understand it.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. I desire to say that last Friday afternoon I paired with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard). If I had voted I would have voted in favor of the amendment of the hon. member for King's (Mr. Davies).

Mr. TROW. I desire to say that the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Bowman) stayed away purposely.

Mr. SPEAKER. After what has been stated by the hon. member for London (Mr. Carling) I cannot interfere. I am not to be a judge as to all these private arrangements made between hon. members.

Mr. BLAKE. I quite agree with what you have said, Mr. Speaker, but I may be permitted to say that these rather unpleasant incidents show the very great importance it is to hon. members that when any proposition with respect to pairing is made, they should see that it is made through the whips, and then all this trouble would be avoided. It is no doubt unpleasant to hon. members that there should be any misunderstanding, and it is only by following the regular practice which I have indicated that it can be prevented.

Mr. CARLING. I should be very sorry if any misunderstanding occurred with the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Bowman) and I think I mentioned to the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Small) that I had paired with the hon. member until the time I returned from the railway station.

Mr. BLAKE. No doubt that was the understanding of the hon. member for London, but it appears that a different understanding obtains on this side of the House.

Mr. CASEY. I remember the practice in the old days used to be, and it has not been broken since, that when one party to a pair understood the pair was for a certain time and abstained on that account, it was usual for the other party to withdraw his vote. I have often known the whip of one party to withdraw his vote because the party to the pair could not withdraw his vote. It would be more courteous in this case if the Minister would withdraw his vote.

House divided on amendment of Sir John A. Macdonald (p. 325):

YEAS:
Messieurs
Audet,	Guillet,	Perley (Ottawa),
Bain (Soulanges),	Haggart,	Pope,
Baker,	Hall,	Porter,
Bergeron,	Hesson,	Putnam,
Bergin,	Hickey,	Riopel,
Bowell,	Hudspeth,	Robertson (Hastings),
Boyle,	Ives,	Robillard,
Brown,	Joncas,	Roome,
Burns,	Kenny,	Ross,
Cameron,	Kirkpatrick,	Roy-1,
Campbell (Digby),	Labelle,	Scarth,
Cargill,	Landry,	Shakespeare,
Carling,	Langevin (Sir Hector),	Shanly,

Carpenter,	Macdonald (Sir John),	Small,
Caron (Sir Adolphe),	McDowall,	Smith (Sir Donald),
Chapleau,	McCarthy,	Smith (Ontario),
Chisholm,	McGulla,	Sproule,
Cockburn,	McDonald (Victoria),	Taylor,
Coughlin,	McDougald (Pictou),	Temple,
Coulobre,	McDougall (C. Breton),	Thérien,
Couture,	McGreevy,	Thompson,
Curran,	McKay,	Tisdale,
Daly,	McKeen,	Tupper (Pictou),
Davin,	McLellan,	Tyrwhitt,
Davis,	McMillan (Vaudreuil),	Wallace,
Denison,	McNeill,	Ward,
Desjardins,	Madill,	Weldon (Albert),
Ferguson (Leeds & Gren),	Mara,	White (Cardwell),
Ferguson (Welland),	Marshall,	Wilmot,
Foster,	Masson,	Wilson (Argenteuil),
Freeman,	Mills (Annapolis),	Wilson (Leunox),
Gaudet,	Moncreiff,	Wood (Brockville),
Gordon,	Montplaisir,	Wood (Westmoreland),
Grandbois,	O'Brien,	Wright.—104.
Guilbault,	Patterson (Essex),

NAYS:

Messieurs

Armstrong,	Ellis,	Mallory,
Bain (Wentworth),	Fiset,	Mills (Bothwell),
Barron,	Flynn,	Mitchell,
Béchar,	Gauthier,	Mulock,
Bernier,	Geoffrion,	Paterson (Brant),
Blake,	Gigault,	Perry,
Borden,	Gillmor,	Platt,
Bourassa,	Godbout,	Préfontaine,
Brien,	Guay,	Purcell,
Burdett,	Hale,	Rinfret,
Campbell (Kent),	Holton,	Robertson (King's, PEI),
Campbell (Renfrew),	Innes,	Robertson (Shelburne),
Cartwright (Sir Rich'd),	Jones,	St. Marie,
Casey,	Kirk,	Scriven,
Casgrain,	Lacderkin,	Semple,
Charlton,	Lang,	Semerville,
Cimon,	Langelier (Montm'ncy),	Sutherland,
Clayes,	Laurier,	Trow,
Davies,	Lister,	Turcot,
De St. Georges,	Livingston,	Waldie,
Dessaint,	Lovitt,	Watson,
Doyon,	Macdonald (Huron),	Weldon (St. John),
Edgar,	McIntyre,	Wilson (Elgin),
Edwards,	McMillan (Huron),	Yeo.—74.
Eisenhauer,	McMullen,

Amendment agreed to.

Main motion, as amended, agreed to on same division.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1:40 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 10th May, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 69) to incorporate the Equity Insurance Company.—(Mr. Curran.)

Bill (No. 70) to incorporate the Alberta Railway Company.—(Mr. Shanly.)

Bill (No. 71) to enable the Freehold Loan and Savings Company to extend their business, and for other purposes.—(Mr. Denison.)

Bill (No. 72) to incorporate the Halifax and West India Steamship Company (Limited).—(Mr. Kenny.)

Bill (No. 73) to incorporate the Bay of Quinté Bridge Company.—(Mr. Robertson, Hastings.)

Bill (No. 74) respecting the Grand Trunk, Georgian Bay and Lake Erie Railway Company.—(Mr. Tisdale.)

Bill (No. 75) respecting the Midland Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Hudspeth.)

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.

Mr. WELSH. Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I wish to make a personal explanation. It appears that there was a misunderstanding about my pairing yesterday with the hon. senior member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper). I believe he stated that I intended to vote with the Government on the question before the House last evening. I think he was under a misapprehension. The hon. gentleman met me in the hall yesterday evening, and he said: "My colleague is busy writing; have you any objection to pairing with him this evening?" I said, "No, I do not think I have." I said, "What is the question?" He said he did not know. I did not promise that I would vote with the Government, for I would not have done so on the question before the House; but on another question I said I would support the Government. During the evening session I did not vote, but I supposed the hon. gentleman had finished his writing by eight o'clock, and I paired with the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) for the night. What I did promise to vote with the Government on, was that an Assistant Speaker should be appointed to help you, Mr. Speaker, in your duty. I do that from a fellow feeling. I am very fond of changing my seat myself. I know that if I were confined in my present seat as long as you have been confined to that, I should want a change. I hope this explanation will be satisfactory, and that no harm will result from the misunderstanding between the hon. member for Pictou and myself, for I believe it came out all right.

Mr. TUPPER. I think it is only right that I should say one word. I am very sorry that this misunderstanding occurred, but I am glad that no harm is done. But in justice to myself I should like to state my version of the conversation. If my hon. friend will think over the matter, I think he will remember that in the first place the conversation took place in the House and not outside, very near to where the hon. gentleman is now sitting; and in the next place I am able to make the statement most positively to the House, and I think the House will believe me, that I was fully aware of the subject before the House, for I had taken particular interest in the subject from the very first. Of course I accept the statement of the hon. gentleman that he misunderstood the matter; but that I attempted to explain the subject to him I most positively deny. I asked him if he would pair on this question. I mentioned no question, because I thought he knew the question which had been discussed for some time, and my hon. friend, as I remember, said most distinctly to me, "I intend to vote with the Government on that question." The question of the appointment of Deputy Speaker was not mentioned. Then I said: "Well, you will not consider this a pair, because, of course, I do not want to pair with you on that question if you intend to vote with the Government." I regret this misunderstanding, and am glad it has done no one any injury.

Mr. BOWMAN. I desire to make a personal explanation in reference to a misunderstanding between the hon. the Minister of Agriculture and myself about a pair between us last night. Some time during the evening session, about eleven o'clock, he met me in the wardrobe lobby and asked me whether I would do him the favor of pairing with him, as I understood, for the evening. After thinking it over for a moment, I said I would, and just as he was going away he said: "It is understood, then, that you do not vote on this question that is up this evening." I answered him in the affirmative, and I was fully under the impression, from the way he asked me, that I had paired with him on that question, regardless altogether of the time the vote was to be taken. Had I the faintest idea he was coming back again to take his seat, I certainly would not have gone away. I desire to exonerate the hon. gentleman altogether from any intention of wilfully misleading me. I do not entertain that idea for a moment, but it seems to me the difficulty has arisen altogether from a misunderstanding. I was certainly under the impression he had paired on that question for the night. I rather feel that if I were in the hon. gentleman's position and he in mine, I would not have voted or would withdraw the vote now.

Mr. WELSH.

Mr. CARLING. I understood that the pair between the hon. member for Waterloo and myself was exactly as I stated in the House last night, namely, that we paired during the time I would be absent from the House, until I returned the same evening. I understood it was only during my absence that the hon. gentleman could not vote. However, we have had an explanation from the hon. gentleman this afternoon and he has stated he understood the pair was for the evening and that he went home under that impression. I would therefore, with the permission of the House, ask that my name be struck off the list of last night.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think it would be judicious to comply with the request of the hon. member for London (Mr. Carling). The pairing business, as it has been very correctly suggested last night by the leader of the Government, and by the leader of the Opposition as well, cannot be recognised, and will not be recognised in future, except when arranged by the regular whips of the party. Any pairing that may take place outside of the cognizance of the whips will not be recognised here, and I propose, in future, not to allow hon. gentlemen to enter into any personal explanations on that ground. Of course, the moment I allow an hon. gentleman to explain his side of the question, I am bound, in fairness, to allow the hon. gentleman on the other side to give his own version; but in order to prevent any recurrence of that kind, and any further loss of time to this honorable House, I now intimate my intention in the future not to recognise any pairing business, except when arranged by the recognised whips of the two parties. As to the request of the hon. member for London (Mr. Carling), the House will see how inconvenient it would be to comply with it. The journals of the House would have to be altered, which would set a very bad precedent.

Mr. CURRAN. I rise to a question of privilege. In the Free Press of last night I notice the following paragraph:—

"Mr. Curran, M.P. for Montreal Centre, has shown himself to be a thorough Coercionist by ordering the dismissal of a number of poor canal laborers because they refused to vote for him. What an excellent Irish landlord Mr. Curran would make!"

I desire to state there is not one word of truth in the whole allegations. In the first place, I am not a Coercionist; in the second place, I never ordered the dismissal of a canal laborer or any other. There is not a shadow of ground for the accusation in this and other papers. I have never interfered with the Civil Government, or with anybody in the employ of the Government, except to do them a good turn. I will take an early opportunity of putting myself right in the courts with those who originated the report.

SICK AND DISTRESSED MARINERS.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 76) to amend the Act respecting Sick and Distressed Mariners. He said: The Bill is a very short one, consisting only of one clause, intended to correct an error which has crept in the revised edition of the Statutes, by which foreign fishing vessels are allowed to have the benefit of the Sick Mariners' Act. It is proposed to restore the law to what it was originally, and not give these vessels the benefit of the Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. WELDON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I draw the attention of the First Minister to the matter I mentioned in regard to the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The chairman will be here shortly and will give the information.

WRIT FOR RESTIGOUCHE.

Mr. WELDON. I would also ask whether the writ for the county of Restigouche has been issued?

Mr. SPEAKER. It has been issued, and the House was informed of the fact the other day.

Mr. WELDON. That was the warrant. I would like to know whether the writ has been issued and the day of polling fixed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot say.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The nomination for Restigouche will be on the 21st of this month.

MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE.

Mr. POPE moved :

That the House resolve itself into Committee to consider a certain proposed resolution respecting the salary of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. BLAKE. That was to stand until we had disposed of the other Bill, as any alterations made in it would apply to this.

Motion allowed to stand.

OXFORD TO NEW GLASGOW RAILWAY.

Mr. POPE moved that the report of the Committee of the Whole on resolution respecting the railway from Oxford to New Glasgow be received.

Motion agreed to, and resolution read the second time.

Mr. POPE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 77) respecting the Oxford Junction and New Glasgow Branch of the Intercolonial Railway.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. BLAKE. I would like the hon. gentleman, before the second reading of that Bill, to lay on the Table such reports from his officers as he has in reference to the estimate of the cost of this line.

Mr. POPE. Yes ; I stated what the estimate was, but I will do what the hon. gentleman asks.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 47) to amend the Railway Act.—(Mr. Pope.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. I think it would be important that the hon. gentleman should now give us a little fuller information as to the railways which have adopted, and the circumstances under which there has been adopted, the system which under this Bill he proposes to take the power to apply generally to the railways of Canada. Of course, we are aware that the system of crossing on the level exists to a very large, and, in my opinion, to a very dangerous, and an increasingly dangerous, extent on this continent. We built our railways, on the other side of the boundary line as well as on this, in the cheapest possible way. The advantage was considered, and the danger to life was perhaps not sufficiently regarded. It is possible that the condition of things in England may have been the reverse of this, and that there may have been too rigid an attention paid to precautions for safety. However, it is said that there are a great number of crossings on the level, many of which are very dangerous, and, as settlement increases around railway stations and railway crossings, what might have been perhaps of little consequence at first becomes of very serious consequence. The other day, I was talking to a gentleman from the neighboring Republic, I think from Jersey City, and he spoke of the crossings there as almost an arrangement for systematic murder. He said that hardly a week passed without somebody being killed there. Therefore, we have a reason, in view of the precautions which have been taken under the law up to this time to secure the avoidance of danger at these crossings, to consider the subject as one of considerable and growing public importance, and to enquire in regard to it when it is proposed to relax those precautions. The object of stopping at a crossing is, of course, not primarily to avoid the danger to persons crossing the street, but primarily to avoid the danger of collisions with trains on the intersecting roads. That is a continual danger, apart from the one to which I have specially referred. I think the hon. gentleman will see the reasonableness of the request I make, and that he will make a somewhat extended statement as to the circumstances which have caused him to propose this measure and as to the mode by which the safety of human life will be subserved by the proposed change.

Mr. POPE. I agree with my hon. friend as to the danger in many cases of level crossings. In this country, however, where capital is so scarce, and the people can hardly find money to build a railway, the level crossing has been adopted because it is much cheaper than the over-crossing or the under-crossing. For my own part, I would be glad if we could see our way, especially in cities or in the vicinity of cities, in such places as we find in and near Toronto, to have all under-crossings or over-crossings. We are not in that position, but we have done what we could to prevent collisions of this kind at road crossings. Where we were unable to have over and under-crossings, it has been provided that there shall be gates, and watchmen at these gates. There is another difficulty, however, in relation to this matter. Perhaps there is no difficulty where roads have been long established, but where municipalities have been deriving revenue in the shape of taxes from these roads, they should show some consideration. A year or two ago a clause was introduced into the General Railway Act to enable the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to distribute this as they might think best, after examining the whole question, and hearing the evidence which might be brought before them. I should go as far as any one, I should go as far as my hon. friend in this matter, but neither he nor I can go as far as we would like to go, under the state of things which exist in this country now, with a view of obtaining security against collisions at these crossings. The object of trains coming to a dead stop for one minute at these crossings is, as the hon. gentleman has truly said, to prevent these collisions, but the time spent in coming to this dead stop, in stopping for this minute, and then starting again, is considerable. The object of the legislation which I propose now—to adopt a system which has been adopted on the Michigan Central, and the Illinois Central, and which the Southern Railway of Canada is asking to be allowed to adopt—is, in the opinion of our chief engineer, and those who have represented this matter to him, just as safe as if the trains were compelled to come to a dead stand. It is quite possible that one road might ask to adopt this interlocking system, and the road crossing it might not care for it. We provide in this Bill that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council shall decide what proportion each of these roads shall bear to the other. If I for one moment thought that any danger could arise, I would not propose this legislation, but I know the necessity there is to give as much speed as possible to trains running between towns and carrying mails and passengers. If we can make it safe, as I believe we can, from information we have, so that trains can run at a good speed, I think it will be a great improvement, and that is the sole object of this Bill. I have not seen these switches in operation, but my engineer has seen them, and other engineers have spoken to me about it, and the engineer of the Canada Southern has seen it in operation. The Canada Southern Company ask permission to put it upon their road, and I think we can safely allow it to be done under the supervision of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, who, I am sure, will never allow any change to be made that will prove dangerous to the public.

Mr. BLAKE. Then I understand the hon. gentleman himself not to be aware of the character of the device.

Mr. POPE. I have the device before me.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman seen any reports from officials of roads on which it has been in operation—the Illinois Central and the Michigan Central?

Mr. POPE. No; I have only seen representatives of the roads, who have explained it.

Mr. BLAKE. How long has it been in operation on the Michigan Central or on the Illinois road?

Mr. POPE. I should imagine that it has been on a year or two.

Mr. BLAKE. Those who are at all familiar with the railway system of Ontario can readily understand why there should be a special desire, one laudable enough on the part of the Canada Southern Railway, to avoid any stops that they can avoid. Their line is the most favorable for making speed through a long distance, as there is no curve and no grade to speak of for a very long mileage. It is not for the local convenience so much as for through business that this is wanted. With a high rate of speed, of course, losses of four or five minutes, which, I presume would be caused by this arrangement, is a very serious thing, more serious than under other circumstances it would be. But, although that may be so, it seems to me it would be reasonable that with the experience of other roads, under circumstances somewhat similar, and by reports which have been acquired by the hon. gentleman and mastered by him, he should be able to show us that that result has been achieved. What he speaks of in his Bill is, of course, hypothetical. He does not aver that there exists at this moment any such system, but he proposes to take authority when, in the opinion of the Privy Council, such system has been proved to him to exist, and he has been advised to adopt it. We are, therefore, acting according to the theory of the Bill, which is hypothetical. It seems to me that the application of a system under these circumstances should be adopted with great caution. As the hon. gentleman has the advantage, as he has told us, of knowing it to be in operation on two roads with very extensive travel, I think his first duty would be to ascertain, by an exhaustive report, what the practical working is. Of course, we know there are a great many things which can be verified in theory, but when they come to practical application, difficulties arise. The hon. gentleman has here an opportunity of knowing how the theory has worked, and of which, I think, he should have availed himself before adopting this system at all.

Mr. POPE. Here is a new system that is declared to be an improvement, and here is a road that asks to be allowed to try it in Canada. The Bill does not provide that a railway company shall have power to extend it; it provides that we may extend it so far as we find it safe, and I think that in giving that road an opportunity of putting this switch into operation, we can see the working of it, and that will be some advantage. I can see no good reason why we should not let the Southern people try it.

Mr. POPE.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has told us that there are two roads, with very extensive travel, on which it is in practical operation to-day, and I proposed to him that before adopting it he should obtain such thorough information as to its practical working there as will ensure reasonable certainty of its being of the character which he says it ought to be in the Bill. It will be quite another thing if we proposed to try the experiment. There might be reasons for trying the experiment, but there is no reason for trying the experiment merely because it has been tried elsewhere, though the hon. gentleman has not got the test before him.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Railways stated that he had received the opinion of his chief engineer and other experts. I do not know whether he proposes to submit these opinions to the committee. If he does not, I see very little use in submitting such measures to this body, that is, if it is proposed to treat us as a deliberative body. If we are to take the responsibility of assenting to this matter, then we should be treated as reasonable beings, and be permitted to read these opinions ourselves. It seems to me to be only respectful to this House that the matter should stand over until these opinions, which the Minister says he has, should be submitted for the information of the House. The matter is one, of course, of no party importance in the slightest. We simply have the common good of the country to consider. I should be extremely pleased to see any improvement adopted that will facilitate the working of railways, but the one in question is one that might lead to disastrous results. It would be unfortunate, I think, if the members of this House were held responsible for accidents that might be the outcome of this legislation when they were not in a position, in advance, of being able to give good reasons either for or against the proposed measure. Of course, if a Minister deems it his duty not to submit these opinions to the House, he then takes upon himself the sole responsibility of forcing this measure through the House; and although I hope it will never happen that any evil will be the outcome of it, yet if such should happen, he will have to remember that he took the sole responsibility himself.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose the hon. gentleman who is at the head of the Railway Department has taken pains to inform himself through his officers as to the practicability and safety of this plan. I think that he, as the presiding officer of that Department, ought to be in the position to give this House, when it is called upon to sanction this plan, some definite information as to its character and how it has worked elsewhere. I hardly think it is satisfactory to inform the House that this plan has been introduced on two railways on this continent out of the hundreds of railways that exist. If the plan is feasible, if it is safe, if it is advantageous to the railway companies who wish to adopt it, of course no gentleman in this House would think of an objection; but in legislation of this kind we have not only to guard the interests of the railway companies, but the interests of the country, and if it is not a feasible plan, if it has not worked properly elsewhere, the introduction of it here might lead to disastrous consequences, and the result in connection with this plan of interlocking switches might cause the members of this House who had sanctioned this measure to regret that they had taken that step. I should like to obtain some information with respect to its practical operation and to what extent the Minister has examined into its working, whether he is thoroughly satisfied that it will be safe to introduce it, whether he has obtained the written opinion of his chief engineer and of the officers of the railway companies which have adopted it. It is an easy matter to elicit this information, and the hon. gentleman should have obtained it from the Illinois Central and Michigan Central, on which roads this plan has been adopted. If the hon. gentleman has taken the pains he should have taken, and has procured all the facts obtainable, he is in a position to ask the House to sanction this plan; otherwise the hon. gentleman is acting somewhat hastily in seeking its introduction.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman has insinuated that I was trying to force something on the House and on the railway companies. I am not seeking to force anything on the railways. We will not adopt this device unless it is a good one, and no railway can adopt it without the assent of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. Consequently, I do not see the danger which the hon. gentleman has suggested. The hon. member has said that I should have obtained information from those railway companies. I have information from those railways; plans and drawings have been laid before me and the Chief Engineer. The best proof is that one of those very roads, and that a connecting road, is asking to adopt this device. Scarcely a day passes but I am asked to try some new device in connection with railways. I have a trial made if the expense is not too great. If the device is not a good one, no further action is taken. The same course will be adopted with regard to this device. If I were to show hon. gentlemen opposite all the drawings and plans, they would not know more about the matter than they do now. Hon. gentlemen cannot suppose that I know all about these railway inventions, but I must take the opinion of the engineers of the Department. If I were to hand the drawings to hon. gentlemen they would tell me to keep them.

Mr. CHARLTON. Send them across.

Mr. POPE. There is no compulsion about this matter. We are not obliged to adopt it unless it works well. Let the people who ask permission to try it be allowed to do so, and if it is a good device let it be adopted.

Mr. MULOCK. It appears to me that before the Minister of Railways asks Parliament to entirely repeal a clause in the Act which has existed ever since we have had railways here, a clause which was, no doubt, adopted for the very best of reasons—the safety of the public—he should at least have on record, for his protection and the protection of the House, the opinion of experts. I have the utmost confidence in his practical judgment in this matter; nevertheless, I think he should have on record the written opinion of his chief engineer. The hon. gentleman asks Parliament to-day to approve a device which he cannot explain to the House. I do not expect the hon. gentleman to explain the working of intricate machinery or devices, such as are said to be adopted here, but it is his duty as a Minister to have on record the opinions of his own officers, and if possible, the opinions of other authorities as well. Those opinions he has not obtained, and yet he asks Parliament to go through the farce of saying that it is a good thing to repeal an old provision of the law in favor of something else which he cannot explain.

Mr. POPE. I do not agree with that.

Mr. MULOCK. I am fully aware that the Act will leave the power in the hands of the Governor General in Council. But we may as well abolish Parliament if the Governor in Council is going to do everything. It appears to be supposed that the Governor in Council embodies all the wisdom of the country, and that Parliament should simply record Ministers' views and hand over them to the power which at one time the people thought they possessed. This is wholly inconsistent with the theory under which Parliament is instituted, and under which Parliament was expected to understand what was proposed before giving its assent thereto.

Mr. SCRIVER. For my part I shall be exceedingly gratified if any device can be invented by which the present system of things can be improved. According to my own personal knowledge—for I travel very frequently upon the railway—the law with respect to the stopping of trains at crossings is constantly and systematically violated. In three cases out of four, so far as the railways I travel over are concerned, the law is not observed. If any invention can be devised and adopted by which the necessity for the existence of the present law can be removed, and a system can be obtained under which that safety which does not exist now can be reached, for my part I should be very glad to see it adopted.

Mr. MULOCK. I would suggest again to the Minister whether it would not be wise to put in a speed limit instead of giving companies permission to run past the point of junction at the highest possible rate of speed. Would it not be advisable to state that restriction in the Bill, instead of giving the power to the Governor General in Council, because if the Governor in Council have that power they will be compelled to grant it.

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. MULOCK. I am quite aware that the Governor in Council can refuse, but perhaps the Governor in Council may not have sufficient resolution to do so, and therefore why should not the House adopt in the commencement of this scheme some such safeguard as exist in the railway law to-day, viz.: That in the case of railways running through a thickly-settled country the train shall not run at a greater rate of speed than six miles an hour.

Mr. POPE. It is regulated by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. MULOCK. It is regulated by statute. There is a clause in the Railway Act to that effect. The Minister may shake his head, but it will not shake the clause out of the Act.

Mr. POPE. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council regulates the speed at which trains shall be run at dangerous places. This Act contains a similar provision, that the speed may be regulated.

Mr. MULOCK. I make this suggestion, although I suppose it is utterly useless to do so, as the Minister supposes there is nothing in it, for the hon. gentleman assumes that he monopolises all the wisdom. At all events, I would suggest that at the end of line 19 there should be inserted the words: But not at a greater rate of speed than so much an hour. In that way the Minister will have some protection against the opportunities of the railways.

Mr. POPE. Read the next paragraph.

Mr. MULOCK. I have read it. The Minister can regulate the speed, but I want to regulate the Minister.

Bill ordered to be reported.

Mr. MULOCK. I would remind the Minister of Railways, in case he has never read the Railway Act under which he is supposed to regulate railways, that by clause 78 he should not allow the cars to run at these places at a higher rate of speed than six miles an hour.

Mr. POPE. But I may regulate them at a less rate of speed.

Mr. MULOCK. But you said there was no such clause. It provides that you cannot authorise them to run at a higher rate than six miles an hour.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. POPE moved third reading of Bill (No. 6) to amend the Government Railways Act.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it would be convenient that legislation with reference to Government railways should be of the same character as legislation with reference to other railways. The hon. gentleman has adopted provisions with reference to other railways, in which he gives discretion to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council as to the order, and this one provides that the opinion of the Minister of Railways is to be the ruling power. I do not see why the lives and property of Her Majesty's liege subjects ought not to receive the same measure of protection, with reference to the adoption of this device on Government railways, that they are to receive with reference to the other railways of the country. Inasmuch as the Minister, notwithstanding my hon. friend from North York's (Mr. Mulock) opinion of his own opinion of his infallibility, did not choose to take to himself the sole responsibility to adjudge as to the other railways, I do not see why he should ask to be given power to be the sole judge as to Government railways.

Mr. POPE. The difference is that Government Railway Bills are in no case under the control of the General Railways Act, and this is a Bill in conformity with the Government Railways Act. Then the hon. gentleman must remember that I am Minister of Railways.

Mr. BLAKE. I know that, and that is the reason why I am so anxious to make this amendment.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

POSTAL SERVICE BETWEEN UPHILL AND VICTORIA ROAD.

Mr. BARRON asked, Has the Government received petitions from the public in the vicinity of Uphill, in the county of Victoria, asking them to establish a daily postal service between Uphill and the village of Victoria Road? If so, when was the first petition or request in that behalf received; what answer was made to the petitioners; and what does the Government intend to do in the premises?

Mr. McLELAN. The petition was received on the 19th of October, 1886. It was acknowledged and referred for enquiry. The matter is still under consideration.

DISMISSAL OF NAPOLEON GIASSON.

Mr. DOYON asked, Whether the Government are aware of the fact that Mr. Napoleon Giasson, measurer of stone, at Caughnawaga, has been dismissed from his employment? If the Government have knowledge of this,—why was he dismissed; what is the name of his successor; when was he appointed; and what is his salary?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Napoleon Giasson was dismissed on the 7th of April, 1887. The charges against him were neglect of duty, absenting himself from his post, endeavoring to induce the Indians to drink intoxicants, being himself intoxicated on the day of nomination in the Laprairie election, insulting one of the candidates, and acting generally in such a disorderly manner that the constable had to eject him from the room. Napoleon Giasson was appointed on July 4th, 1878. He receives no compensation now. His remuneration while in office was 2½ cents per cubic yard. His successor has not been appointed.

THE FRANCHISE ACT—MOTION TO REPEAL.

On the Order being called for Resolution:

That in the opinion of this House it is expedient to repeal the Franchise Act and to revert to the plan which has been followed from Con-

Mr. MULOCK.

ederation up to the enacting of the said Act, of utilising, for the elections of this House, the Provincial franchises and voters' lists.—(Mr. Laurier.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would ask my hon. friend to allow this motion to stand for another day, as we had a very late sitting last night.

Mr. LAURIER. Will the hon. gentleman fix a day?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Let it be set for Monday.

Mr. BLAKE. Being first on the notice paper, it will come in due order after the Private Bills, and we ought not to interfere with the progress of Private Bills.

Order allowed to stand.

PROPERTY OF THE LATE W. B. O'DONOGHUE.

Mr. BARRON moved for:

Copies of any and all letters addressed to the Government or any member of the Cabinet by M. F. O'Donoghue, or any other person in his behalf, asking for compensation for the alleged loss or confiscation of the property of the late W. B. O'Donoghue, who was concerned in the North-West troubles of 1869-70. Also for copies of all letters, Orders in Council and other documents in the possession of the Government relating to any claims made by the said M. F. O'Donoghue. Also for a statement showing the amounts paid to M. F. O'Donoghue, or any other person on his behalf, by the Government for services rendered or on any other account.

He said: I hope this motion will pass. We have it from one of the Ministers of the Crown that this Mr. M. F. O'Donoghue has been in the employ of the Government. It appears that he was in the employ of the Government in the month of January last, when the general elections were in progress, and it appears that during those elections and in the late bye-elections he did missionary service on behalf of hon. gentlemen opposite. I suppose we have no right to question that gentleman's right to take part in the public affairs of the country, and on that side which he thinks in the interest of the country. But we have it from that gentleman's public utterances that for some time past, while he has been in the employ of the Government, and while working actively in the interest of hon. gentlemen opposite, he has been a standing applicant for the property of his brother which had been confiscated, and it appeared to me that it was not proper for him to be working so actively on behalf of the Government while in that position. I think it would be interesting to know whether he has made any application on account of the property I have alluded to, and what are the chances of the property being given to him. It would also be interesting to know whether any other person, on behalf of the late W. B. O'Donoghue, who took part in the unfortunate rebellion of 1869-70 in the North-West, has made application for the property. After the papers are brought down it may not be necessary to pursue the matter any further; but from information I have received, I think it would be interesting to the public, especially in the vicinity where this Mr. O'Donoghue took part in the elections, to know what proceedings are going on relative to returning the confiscated property to the representatives of the late Mr. O'Donoghue.

Motion agreed to.

BANFF SPRINGS.

Mr. CASEY moved for:

Copy of report of W. Pearce, D.L.S., on the Banff Springs, and of claims made to the possession of said springs, or to indemnity for not obtaining possession of them, and all correspondence and papers in connection with such claims; also a detailed statement of all expenditure in connection with the Banff reservation, or any claims to said springs.

He said: I make this motion simply to obtain certain information of which I think the House ought to be in possession, and which the hon. Minister did not seem to be able to give us when we discussed the Bill relating to the Banff reservation. I would ask the leader of the Government, as the Minister who is technically concerned is not present, if he will allow me to amend this resolution by adding:

Also a detailed statement of all licenses issued or allotments granted to parties to settle on the reservation.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

APPLICATION OF JOSEPH SWISHER.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin) moved for:

Petitions and applications of one Joseph Swisher, a volunteer of the Rebellion of 1837, asking that some substantial consideration be granted him, on account of his health having been greatly impaired while serving as a volunteer during said rebellion.

He said: I desire to bring before the House the grievances under which this noble volunteer of 1837 has been suffering for a number of years. I am perfectly well aware that it is the general feeling of members of this House that we should deal fairly, liberally and uprightly with our volunteers. We all feel proud of our volunteer system, and an interest in their welfare and prosperity; and if we have those feelings to-day, we ought not for a moment hesitate to do ample justice to those who have been volunteers in the past. Of course there may be a difference of opinion as to whether these volunteers were right or whether those who took up arms on that occasion were right. That is a disputed point, and it is not for me to say whether those who took up arms against the Government were right or wrong, but the volunteers of that day were called out to sustain law and order, to put down what the Government of the day desire to put down, rebellion. They performed their duties faithfully and loyally, as good citizens and as servants of the Crown. I have no doubt you will sympathise with me, Sir, and agree that the volunteers of that day perhaps endured hardships different from what they have to endure to-day, and therefore, laying aside all considerations as to whether they were trying to subdue a rebellion that ought not to have been subdued or not, they are entitled at the hands of the Government to just and proper consideration. It may be said that the rebellion in 1837 is an act which this Government cannot take into consideration; it may be said that there was no provision made at the time of Confederation for the just claims of these brave men who endured the hardships and sufferings of 1837. All I have to say is that if such be the interpretation of our Confederation Act, the Act has done wrong upon a very large and worthy class. I have my doubts whether the Confederation Act can be so construed. I know the Minister of Militia said two days ago it was not the intention of the Government to include in the Estimates any consideration for these volunteers of 1837. I regret he made that statement. I think these volunteers are entitled to just as much consideration as those of 1812, as those who took part against the Fenian Raid, and as those who took part in subduing the North-West rebellion. It is unreasonable, unfair and unjust that the services of these men should be ignored, and that the Government of the day should say at this time that they have no right to grant any substantial aid to those who have served their country. These men defended the country, they defended law and order, they did what the Government of the day called on them to do, and no doubt the First Minister may remember the time and may have a feeling towards these men that they performed their duty efficiently, and that they ought to be considered and compensated for it. I think it has been the custom, not only in this country, but in every country under the sun, that those who, while serving their country as volunteers or soldiers, sustained any injury whereby they were incapacitated from following their ordinary avocation for the remainder of their lives, should receive a pension from the Government. This man to whom I am referring, during the time he was engaged as a volunteer in the 73rd Regiment in the rebellion, contracted a disease, and from that time up to the present, a period of fifty years, he has been unable to perform the ordinary duties he would have been able to perform had he not contracted this disease. That being the case, it is the bounden duty of the Government to make some provision to compensate him. He is now a very old man; he was engaged in suppressing a rebellion; he was in active service, and took the typhoid fever; he went into the hospital, and unfortunately, he says, the physicians of that hospital were not what they ought to have been and gave him too strong medicine. When he received a furlough and was permitted to go out, he was put on duty again and contracted a cold, from which he took other diseases, and has since been unable to perform his ordinary avocations. These fifty years having elapsed, and this man being unable to earn a livelihood for himself and his family, has a strong claim on the consideration of the Government. To substantiate that I am right in my contention that I do not think this is altogether a Provincial matter, I will read the opinion of one whose authority, when I mention his name to the House, it will, no doubt, think ought to be taken into consideration in reference to constitutional law. I am not going to offer here any mean authority upon this point. I am going to offer an authority that I think even the First Minister will respect, after the various opportunities he has had, after the various contests in which he has been engaged with that individual. I think he will, at all events, appreciate the opinion this hon. gentleman offers in reference to this matter. Mr. Mowat, speaking in reference to this matter, says:

"It is quite true that the Dominion Government has chosen to throw off themselves the burden on the Province, but surely the whole spirit of the British North America Act is that all matters of national concern are to be dealt with by the Dominion and not by the Provinces, and, if there is any matter that is of national and not of Provincial concern, it is surely a subject such as this that the resolution deals with."

Therefore, we find that one of the leading authorities on constitutional law in the Dominion of Canada has contended that the Dominion Government ought to take into consideration the treatment of those volunteers, instead of the Provincial Government. It would be only a just and fair thing at this time of the old man's life that some consideration should be granted to him. I might say, if it would be any benefit to the hon. gentlemen opposite, that he is a Conservative, that he has been a Conservative all his life although he has been enduring hardships at the hands of the Conservative party, and that all he asks is simple justice in the matter. He is not desirous of receiving a reward similar to what some of the soldiers have received in the last rebellion. He is not desirous of being knighted or of receiving for the services he rendered a gift of $20,000. All he asks is that he may be put in such a position that his declining years may be made somewhat comfortable. The Government ought to grant him that, so that during the latter portion of his life he may have means to sustain himself and his family. If it was necessary, I would be able to show that certificates were granted to this man by those who were engaged in the rebellion proving that he was injured by exposure in the interests of the Government and that in consequence he contracted these diseases. I hope the First Minister will not try to take the ground that this is a Provincial and not a Dominion matter. This Parliament has recognised claims somewhat similar before, and, if it granted a compensation to the veterans of 1812, it is within the power of the Dominion to grant to the brave volunteers of 1837 some consideration for the services they rendered. Are we, by the action of the Government, to be led to understand that they have no sympathy with these brave men on account of putting down the rebellion at that time? Are they coming to recognise the fact that that was a justifiable rebellion. Are we to understand, by their neglect in treating these volunteers as they ought to be treated, that they are virtually saying that those volunteers ought not to have been so foolish as to defend the country against what was virtually the conduct of the Government of the day? We know full well the hardships the country had to endure during the time of the Family Compact. It is said that that caused the rebellion, but these men were not responsible for it; they rightly came to the front and assisted the Government of the day in maintaining law and order and expelling those who had taken up arms against the Administration. I say it is a strong and just case, and I appeal to the Government to grant this man what he asks. I, therefore, hope the papers will come down, and I hope that a feeling of humanity will pervade the breast of the Government and induce them to grant this man what he is asking.

Mr. PURCELL. In any recognition the Government should make of the services of the surviving veterans of 1812, I would strongly urge them to include those who served in 1837-38. Men who did not turn out at that time were looked upon as disloyal; many of the survivors reside in my county, and I found in my canvass that some of them are almost destitute. The number, altogether, cannot be large, and I can see no reason why the Government should not take their case into consideration, and the expense it would entail would be very little. The brave Scotchmen of Glangarry of whom I have seen so much, turned out at that time in large numbers. Pensions were paid in 1874 to the veterans of 1812, and scrip has been granted to those who assisted in suppressing the North West Rebellion, and I cannot see any reason why the veterans of 1837-38 should not be treated in a similar manner. It was the Federal Government who dealt with the veterans of 1812, a long time after Confederation, in 1874; why, therefore, should they not deal with those of 1837-38 as well? It seems to me that as long as the Dominion Government have recognised the services of the survivors in the cases I have mentioned, they have an equal right, and it is equally their duty, to recognise the services of the survivors of 1837-38. The Local Government have not dealt with this question, and they are not likely to do so.

Mr. HICKEY. I heartily sympathise with the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Wilson) who has brought this matter again before the House. In the Session of 1884 I brought the matter up, and the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt) had previously brought it before the House. We got no sympathy then from the Opposition, and the leader of the Opposition sat upon my remarks in a most unmerciful manner, and in his elegant way made fun of the volunteers of 1837-38, of whom his friends now would seek to have some recognition made. I think there is no better class of men in any country than those who bore arms in those troubles. Their duty was towards their country, and they manfully did it, although they did not receive such recognition as they deserved. I think it would be an honorable thing for the country to recognise in some way the volunteers, not only in 1837, but also those who bore arms in 1868 during the Fenian raid. In the excitement of the late rebellion the volunteers got medals, which they richly deserved, but the same recognition ought to be made in the case of those who served their country in 1837. The House will remember that the decision arrived at, when I brought this matter before Parliament, was that of the leader of the Government, who said that it was not in the power of this Parliament to deal with it, but that it belonged to the Local Legislature. That opinion was fully endorsed by the leader of the Opposition, the present member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), who thought it was a matter wholly belonging Mr. WILSON (Elgin).

to the Local Government, and that the answer given to me by the leader of the Government was perfectly justifiable. I hope, however, that his friends had a mollifying effect upon his patriotism in this respect, and that he will lend his influence in the matter, if not now, at some future time.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not exactly catch the statement of the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey), but I believe my course upon the occasion to which he refers was one which ought not to have merited so much of his disfavor, for I believe it was my misfortune on that occasion to be obliged to agree with the leader of the Government.

Mr. HICKEY. I said so.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, but the hon. gentleman spoke of my action with contumely, while he spoke of the action of the hon. gentleman with applause and admiration. The hon. gentleman mentioned that I sat down upon him. I can assure the hon. gentleman there must have been a necessity for it, for if I had to choose a seat it would be quite a different one.

Mr. HICKEY. I said that the hon. member had made some fun of the volunteers of 1837.

Mr. CURRAN. Of course I fully appreciate the eloquent remarks made on all sides of the House, and I, for one, would be glad that some reward should be paid to the volunteers, and to the patriots of 1837-38 as well. They should both get compensation. But what I wish to say on the present occasion is in connection with a similar subject that I have already had the honor of bringing before this House and the consideration of the Government. I am satisfied that Mr. Joseph Swisher, who has been a volunteer and a military man, ought to receive some consideration, and that the Widow Martin should also have some attention paid to her. I trust that the claim that was put forward some few years ago will not be entirely overlooked, and as we are now dealing with military matters, I hope this poor old lady, whose son died from the effects of exposure while he was on service in 1866, will receive that consideration at the hands of the Minister of Militia to which she is entitled.

Mr. SCRIVER. I think the House and the few who are left of those old survivors of 1837-38, owe a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson) for once more bringing this subject before the attention of the House. Hardly a Session has passed since I have had the honor of being a member of this House, that the attention of the Government and the House has not been drawn to the services rendered by these old veterans, and their title to recognition on the part of the Government of the country for those services. I must say that I cannot quite understand the attitude of the Premier, and the attitude of his predecessor in the Administration preceding the present one, with regard to this question. If it is a fact that this Government have no power to deal with this question, it is certainly a very unfortunate state of things. I never could understand why the action taken by the Government with reference to the survivors of 1812 might not fairly have been taken as a precedent for similar action with reference to the volunteers of 1837-38. It is true, as the hon. member for Elgin stated, that a difference of opinion exists as to the provocation which the insurgents of that day had for doing as they did, but I do not consider that matter of any importance with reference to the question of indemnity to those who sustained the Government of the day on that occasion. Those men certainly did their duty faithfully and well; all of them risked their lives, and some lost their lives on the battle field. The loss of life in the section of country I live in was greater, in proportion to the number engaged, than that which took place in the North West Rebellion; and it does seem to me that the services rendered by those men are equally deserving of recognition with those which were rendered (great as they were) by the volunteers who went to the North-West. The leader of the Government has, on several occasions, stated that he himself shouldered his musket at that time, and, if that was a fact, he must have a strong fellow feeling with those whose services are brought to his attention to-day. It does appear to me that it would be quite proper, and that the action of the Government, if they chose to take action in this regard, would be sustained by a large majority of the House, if something were done even at this late day to recognise the services of those men. It was only quite recently I saw a report in the newspaper of an interview which took place between the Minister of Militia and the leader of the Government and some gentlemen who came here as a deputation to represent those men who took part in defending the country against the Fenian invasions of 1866 and 1870. The hon. gentleman certainly displayed the proper spirit in his remarks to those gentlemen. But if those who volunteered their services on that occasion deserve well of their country, certainly those earlier men in this gallant service also deserved similar recognition at the hands of this House and the Government.

Mr. DENISON. I am strongly of the opinion that something should be done to reward those men. Those events happened a long while ago, and still they have not lost interest to the Canadian people. The men did good service at the time, and even at this late date some recognition should be made of their services. It is quite possible that the rolls have been kept of those who served, and they would show those who were entitled to recognition; and I cannot let this opportunity pass without putting in a word in favor of those who served at that time.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman who introduced this resolution referred to the action of the Government of Mr. Mackenzie with reference to the veterans of 1812. He referred to it, I think, as the act of the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite, but the vote for the veterans of that date was introduced by the Government of the hon. member for East York. With all due deference I think that would hardly form a precedent for such action as the hon. gentleman asks this House to take to-day. The veterans of 1812 were engaged in a national war, defending the country against a foreign invasion, in which, of course, they hazarded their lives and property; but the veterans, so called, of 1837, in my judgment, while they deserve every credit from the people of the older Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, I fail to see have any claim on this Parliament of the Dominion, which now is composed of various Provinces, some of which did not form part of this Confederation. I presume it is on some such ground that the previous Government and the present Government have not dealt with the veterans of 1837 in the same manner as they have dealt with those of 1812, because they would naturally come to the conclusion that if any reward was to be given to the veterans of 1837 it would have to be borne by the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and not by the Dominion, in which other Provinces are now embraced.

Mr. BÉCHARD. I think the reasons which entitle the veterans of 1812 to their reward are quite different from those which apply to the men of 1837. It has been truly said by the member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) that in 1812 it was a national war, and the troops were defending the national honor. In 1837, on the contrary, the volunteers were engaged in civil war. We remember in 1837 the conduct of the troops towards our citizens; we remember the outrages committed in the rural districts and elsewhere. Those acts were carried to such an extent that a Bill was passed by the Parliament of Old Canada to indemnify the people who suffered by the depredation of those men. The adoption of a measure to recognise the services of those men would be a very unpopular measure, at least with the people of the Province of Quebec. It was suggested the other day by the Minister of Militia that this question was one that ought to be settled by the different Provinces in Confederation, more particularly by Ontario and Quebec. I hope the whole matter will be referred to those Provinces, and not be further discussed by this Parliament.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I cannot see how this question can properly be brought under the consideration of this House. It cannot be said that the residents of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or British Columbia can have any interest in this matter. They took no part in the rebellion, and I, for one, am of the opinion that if any reward is to be given to those who fought in the rebellion of 1837 it ought to be given to the rebels and not to the men who fought for the Crown. We all know that the men who fought then on behalf of the people fought for their rights and responsible government, and it was through the action taken by William Lyon Mackenzie, and men who sympathised with him, that we were put in possession of the liberal institutions of which we to-day boast as British subjects. I, therefore, say that if we recognise at all the services of the men who were engaged at that time in fighting for the liberties of British subjects in this country, we ought to recognise the claims of the rebels. What have we on the Parliamentary grounds at Ottawa? We have evidence that this Parliament has recognised one of the most prominent rebels of the Province of Quebec on that occasion, for a reward of $2,000 was placed on the head of Sir George E. Cartier; and we have to-day a monument here to show that he was a true patriot, and a vote was passed by unanimous consent for that purpose and to keep his memory dear in the hearts of the people. I contend that this Parliament has nothing to do with the question now before the House. If the friends of those who fought to sustain the old Family Compact and to uphold their tyranny over the people of Ontario, desire recognition to be given, let them be rewarded by the men who sympathise with the opinions they were sustaining at that time, and not by a Parliament which owes its existence to the very fact that those men rebelled against the tyranny prevailing, and secured for the people of this country responsible government and free institutions; because we all know that Lord Durham, who was sent out to report on the rebellion, reported that it was really justifiable, and that William Lyon Mackenzie and those who maintained the rights and liberties of the people were doing just what British subjects ought to do on all occasions and in all portions of the British Empire.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the turn the debate has taken shows that it would be better in the future that these motions should be avoided—any motion referring to the unhappy events of 1837. It arouses, as we all see, very warm feeling, both in members from the Province of Quebec and some members from Ontario, and it cannot result in anything like getting relief for the volunteers of 1837. The true line of distinction has been drawn by several hon. gentlemen opposite. The war of 1812 was a war between the United States and the British Empire. Every portion of the British Empire was interested in that war, and British North America as a whole was interested. If Canada had fallen in 1812, if it had been conquered, the consequences of conquest would have followed with respect to the Maritime Provinces, for all British North America was interested in the conflict. In 1837 there was a civil conflict; it was a war of fellow-subject against fellow-subject, under most regrettable circumstances, which should, as much as possible, be forgotten. Besides, the distinction seemed to be agreed upon in 1884 and 1885 that the volunteers of Upper Canada of 1837, for instance, should be rewarded by the Province of Ontario, where there was an outbreak against legitimate authority, where the battle was, in fact, fought out. There was no foreign foe to resist; it was not a foreign war; it was subject against subject—people of the same country warring against each other. The Province of Ontario has got plenty of lands and means, I suppose, and if the Legislature of Ontario think it right to reward those inhabitants of their Province who served loyally in 1837, it is for them to do so. So in the Province of Quebec, if the Legislature of that Province think it well to look into the cases of those who bore arms on either side, it is for them to do so; it is certainly not for the Dominion. I hold in my hands extracts from the Hansard reports of the discussions on this subject in 1884 and 1885, and if I may be permitted to quote myself, I will read them:

"It occurs to me and to the Government, that the recognition, if it comes at all, should come from the several Provinces; that is to say the Province of Ontario, formerly Upper Canada, should recognise the services of its volunteers, and the Province of Quebec, formerly Lower Canada, should recognise the services of its volunteers. I do not think the Dominion Parliament can be called upon to recognise the services of men who served, not only before Confederation, but before there was a united Canada, when there was an Upper and a Lower Canada, and no prospect or idea of their ever being one Province. This is a disappointment to myself."

And then I went on to speak of my being one of the volunteers. Mr. Blake said:

"I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that this is entirely a provincial matter, a matter for Old Canada, or the Provinces of which it was composed. In the Legislature of Ontario, in former days, during the régime of the first Government, a question connected with this matter came up, and the only person whose services was recognised was one named Montgomery."

Then, again in 1885, my hon. friend the member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey) moved in the same sense as the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson) has moved to-day. I used the same line of argument then. I said:

"It appears to me that this cannot be the place where these services can be recognised. They should be recognised by the different Provinces where the disturbances took place and where the volunteers performed their duty."

On that occasion Mr. Blake said:

"I quite agree in the hon. gentleman's view on this subject, as I did before, and I am glad to seize an opportunity of agreeing with him. When the matter came up in a former Parliament, and I may say to the hon. gentleman who was not a member of that Parliament, and may not be aware of the fact, that that view has already been taken by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario in the first Legislature of that Province, under the lead of the late Mr. Sandfield Macdonald, when they felt that it was for them to deal with questions which might arise out of the disturbances, and acted accordingly, and compensated Mr. Montgomery for the burning of his barn by the volunteers."

In both cases the motion was withdrawn; and as the hon. gentleman has shown his sympathy with the volunteer named in the motion, as he has placed his views on record, I think he might profitably follow the course followed on previous occasions, and withdraw the motion. He has expressed his sentiments; they will appear in Hansard, and, no doubt, they will be very grateful reading to the gentleman whose case he has advocated.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I cannot understand what injury would result from bringing down this return, and I can see no good object in merely moving the motion and then withdrawing it. I have not a great deal of sympathy with some of the remarks which have been made in the course of this discussion, in reference to the treatment of those who were either drafted or went out as volunteers to serve their country during the rebellion of 1837-38. These men have been charged as if they were guilty of all the crimes that could possibly be imputed to them. I have no sympathy with the expressions used by the hon. member for South Brant, that they are deserving of censure instead of commendation.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I rise to a point of order. I made no such statement. I did not censure those who were called out to serve their country, but I praised those who fought for civil and religious liberty and responsible government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I accept the hon. gentleman's statement, but I say without hesitation that it would be a most unfair thing that we should not consider the cases of those who were in the strict sense of the word faithfully doing their duty to their country, at that time, just because of the conduct of some of those who were parties to that conflict. These men were ordered out by the Government of the day, by the united Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and I say it would be unkind and unjust that their rights and claims should be ignored, when those Provinces are a part of the Dominion of Canada as it is now constituted. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to say that he does not desire that any complications may arise on this question. Those people loyally served the Dominion of Canada of that time, just as they would serve the greater Dominion of Canada at the present time; and the position taken by the leader of the Government, or the leader of the Opposition, is no justification for allowing these men, who submitted to all kinds of hardships and endangered their lives, to have their claims ignored by this Parliament. These men placed themselves in danger, they fought valiantly for their country, they contracted disease, and yet we are told that this matter should not be brought up in this House for fear it should create ill feeling. Are these men to suffer wrong lest feelings should be engendered in this House? Is that the sort of justice we are to have measured out to true and loyal men, as they were, whether they were led on by the Government of the day, or whether that Government was doing wrong or not? I say it is not, and I feel it my duty to raise my voice for those men who served their country faithfully and well and showed their patriotism by responding to the call of their countrymen when their services were required. No harm can be done by the reports of the petitions being brought down, which will enable us to see just what claims they have set up. I am not asking for a grant for these men; I am only asking for information that will enable me to see what efforts they have been making to get their claims recognised. Of course, if the First Minister insists I will withdraw the motion. If he does not insist I should like to have it passed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. After the remarks of the hon. gentleman I will not ask him to withdraw the motion, and he shall have the papers. I opposed it simply because he made it merely as a groundwork for a speech in favor of relief for the gentleman mentioned in it. That was the object for which he made the speech. The reason I wished him to withdraw the motion is that it will come to no purpose. It will not gain anything for anybody, and it will cost a little to get the returns prepared and printed. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will take the responsibility of that expense.

Mr. WILSON. I did not ask that the returns should be printed. I merely asked that they should be brought down.

Motion agreed to.

ELGIN JUNIOR COUNTY JUDGE.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin) moved for:

All memorials, petitions and correspondence, asking for the appointment of a junior judge for the county of Elgin; also the names of all applicants for the said position since 1st January, 1886.

He said: I understood that a great number of applications and a great number of promises were made in regard to this appointment, and there was a good deal of activity among the barristers in my locality about it a short time before the election. I would like to know who are the applicants.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is no objection to the hon. gentleman's motion for the papers, but, in reply to the remark he has just made, I wish to inform him that there are no applicants.

Motion agreed to.

LEASE OF MAIN DUCKS AND WALPOLE ISLANDS.

Mr. PLATT moved for:

Return of correspondence from January 1st, 1873, to the present time, between the Department of Indian Affairs and John Walters, and others, relative to purchase or lease of Main Ducks and Walpole Islands in Lake Ontario; also all applications for purchase or lease of said islands, all offers made to or by the Government as to purchase or sale, reports of all persons at any time appointed to appraise or value said islands, the annual rental paid by present lessee and date of expiration of such lease; also all charges preferred since January 1st, 1878, against John Walters for violation of terms of lease or regulations of Department, together with names of parties making such charges, and the report of parties commissioned to investigate them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he does not mean the Yorkshire Island and not the Walpole Island. Yorkshire is an island near the Main Ducks.

Mr. PLATT. I mean the island generally leased with Duck Island.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is Yorkshire Island. Walpole Island is on Lake Erie.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the motion be amended so as to replace Walpole Island by Yorkshire Island.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

WELLINGTON HARBOR OF REFUGE.

Mr. PLATT moved for:

Return of correspondence, petitions, reports of engineers and others, relative to construction of harbor of refuge at Wellington, Ontario.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I would ask the hon. gentleman to put in instead of engineer, chief engineer, for the same reason that I gave the other day on a similar motion.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 44) respecting the Atlantic and North-West Railway Company.—(Mr. Kirkpatrick.)

Bill (No. 56) to incorporate the Alberta and British Columbia Junction Railway Company.—(Mr. Shanly.)

Bill (No. 57) to incorporate the Prescott County Railway Company.—(Mr. Scriver.)

Bill (No. 60) further to amend the Act incorporating the Western Assurance Company, and other Acts affecting the same.—(Mr. Cockburn.)

Bill (No. 63) to incorporate the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa Railway Company.—(Mr. Kirkpatrick.)

SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. Hall moved second reading of Bill (No. 58) to terminate the Trust respecting the South-Eastern Railway to authorise its sale, and to incorporate the South-Eastern Junction Railway Company.

Mr. LAURIER. This Bill is not printed in French. Under ordinary circumstances, I would not make any objection, but the Bill is very objectionable.

Motion allowed to stand.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Statement showing the various amounts paid to William McKay, or any other person on his behalf, for painting or other work in or about the Parliamentary and Departmental Buildings at Ottawa, from the 1st of January, 1875, to the 31st December, 1878.—(Mr. Bryson.)

Copies of all correspondence between Mr. Vankoughnet, or any other officer of the Department of Indian Affairs, and the Rev. James Robertson, superintendent of Presbyterian missions, in relation to the administration of Indian Affairs and the conduct of the officers of the Government in the North-West, and all other correspondence relating to such matter.—(Mr. Somerville.)

Return showing up to date the several sums paid in respect of preparation and revision of voters' lists in county of Prince Edward for 1886, viz.:—Amount paid revising officer, amount paid clerk, amount paid bailiff, amount paid for printing; also amounts claimed for said revision yet unpaid.—(Mr. Platt.)

QUEEN'S COUNTY, N. B., ELECTION.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. WELDON. As the hon. member for Jacques Cartier is in his place, I would ask him the question I made some time ago about the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. GIROUARD. The report as sent to the House was prepared by the clerk of the committee according to what he understood to be the usual practice. I called his attention to the fact that the amendments were not in the report, and he said it was not the practice to put in the amendments, but only the resolutions adopted by the majority. That is the reason the return was so made. If it is the wish of the committee that the two motions in amendment should be inserted in the report, I would ask permission of the House to withdraw the report and introduce another one containing the amendments as well as the main motion.

Mr. BLAKE. I was not able to be at the committee at the time of adjournment, but it was understood that such a motion had been made. The proceedings were rather hurried at the end as it was late. It is the usual, customary motion in all these proceedings, and I am not aware of a case in which such a motion has not been made, namely, that the votes and proceedings of the committee should be reported.

Mr. GIROUARD. That motion was made in a general manner.

Mr. BLAKE. The report had better be withdrawn.

Mr. MILLS. The report even as brought down is not precisely as it was intended it should be. Not only is the resolution come to by the committee reported, but all the authorities that were hunted up by the sub-committee, and the report they make to the committee. If the clerk simply intended to report simply the decision of the committee, he has done too much, but if he intended to report the proceedings of the committee he should have done more.

Mr. GIROUARD. The wish was expressed in the committee that the precedents and authorities should be a portion of the report.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it is very good that they should.

Mr. WELDON. I certainly understood the motion of the hon. member for North Simcoe was that all the proceedings should be reported.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is no objection.

Mr. GIROUARD. I move for permission to withdraw the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Motion agreed to.

DISALLOWANCE OF MANITOBA RAILWAY CHARTERS.

Mr. WATSON. I would like it to be distinctly understood that my resolution will be the first order after the Budget Speech is delivered by the Minister of Finance. That is the understanding on which I agreed to allow him to take Thursday and to postpone my motion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, Thursday and Friday perhaps will be taken up by discussion on Supply. On Monday I think we have agreed that the motion of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) in reference to the Franchise Act shall come up. Hon. gentlemen opposite may arrange among themselves whether the Franchise discussion will come up on Monday or the resolution of the hon. member for Marquette.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think it would answer at all to interrupt the Budget debate by allowing the motion of my hon. friend to come after the statement of the Finance Minister. That has to be replied to. However, this can easily be arranged to-morrow, when these matters will be considered. What my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) desires, as I understand, is that he shall have an early opportunity of making his motion. There can be no difficulty in giving him that, because it is for the convenience of the House he has altered his arrangement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By all means.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 5:55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 11th May, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

LETTER FROM THE CLERK OF THE CROWN IN CHANCERY.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honor to inform the House that, in obedience to the order of the House of Monday last, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has addressed a letter to the Clerk of the House, specifying the course adopted by him in gazetting the election returns of the last general election, and his reasons for such course.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell) moved that the said letter be laid on the Table, and be now read.

Motion agreed to, and the Clerk accordingly read the letter, as follows:—

“OFFICE OF THE CLERK OF THE CROWN IN CHANCERY, CANADA, “OTTAWA, 10th May, 1887.

“To J. G. BOURINOT, Esquire,

“The Clerk of the House of Commons.

“SIR,—In obedience to the Order of the House of Commons of yesterday, respecting the gazetting by me of the Returns of the last Dominion General Election, I beg to say that when the returns first began to reach me, they came in slowly, and I endeavored, as far as possible, and did, gazette them in the order in which I received them; but afterwards they came in so fast, by every mail, some mails over thirty letters, and as many large bundles of papers, some of them being in size about two feet square, in addition to others, which, instead of being sent by mail, as the law requires, were sent by express in large boxes, all of which, before I could gazette the Member elected, required to be arranged and assorted, and the letters, returns and reports of proceedings contained in them examined and read, many of the latter being lengthy and in different handwriting.

“It frequently occurred, also, that after opening and examining large piles of papers, oaths, statements and certificates of the various officers employed at the election, nomination papers and numerous other documents, that the return, or Form S, required by the Dominion Elections Act, to enable me to gazette the member elected, was wanting, and which, in some instances, would arrive several days later, and in others would not reach me till I had written to the returning officers to send it, after waiting a considerable time, in the hope that they would do as others had done—send it later, without being written to for it.

“Again, many of the returning officers, instead of sending the writ, return and report of proceedings in a separate envelope, put them in the large bundle of papers, together with the oaths, statements and certificates of all the various election officers—reports of proceedings, nomination papers, accounts, ballot papers, voters' and revisors' lists, all mixed together in one confused heap, all of which had to be carefully assorted, examined and read before I could gazette the member returned.

Mr. WATSON.

“Owing to the quantity of letters and large bundles of election papers which reached me by every mail, and which I was consequently unable to assort and examine before the arrival of an additional batch by the following mail, it necessarily happened, from both want of time and space, that those which came last were put on the top of the others, and were in consequence, in many instances, gazetted before those which were underneath, and which had previously arrived.

“In the midst of all the above work it must not be forgotten that I had, in addition thereto, the ordinary duties of my office to perform.

“I lost no time in gazetting the members, as fast as the necessary returns and papers from the returning officers reached me and enabled me to do so. In this connection allusion may be made to the difference, in point of numbers, of the party complexion of the members elected.

“I have the honor to be, Sir,

“Your obedient servant,

R. POPE,

“Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.”

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 78) to incorporate the Canada Accident Insurance Company.—(Mr. Mulock.)

DEPUTY SPEAKER—CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I promised yesterday, at the instance of hon. gentlemen opposite, to move for the appointment of a Deputy Speaker or Chairman of the Committees of the Whole House. I did not do so, owing to circumstances I will now mention. I had asked my hon. friend the member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) to accept that appointment, and my hon. friend was inclined to accept it; but on going home to St. Catharines and consulting his family and medical man, he thought better to decline, and he recommended, from his long parliamentary experience, a gentleman whose name I am going to mention, to get the appointment. I had not seen that gentleman in time to make the motion yesterday, or to get his assent to the act. My hon. friend from Lincoln recommended, as I already said, from his acquaintance with the leading members of Parliament, that Mr. Colby, the member for Stanstead, should be Chairman of Committees. I therefore move:

That Mr. Charles C. Colby, the member for Stanstead, be appointed Chairman of Committees of the Whole House.

Mr. BLAKE. It is with great satisfaction I rise to perform a duty very much more agreeable than that which I had anticipated would have fallen to my lot on this occasion. I do not know that the mode in which the hon. gentleman has introduced his proposal for the nomination of the hon. member for Stanstead, is altogether calculated to recommend it to the House. It seems he is the nominee of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), but that does not interfere with the merits of the hon. member for Stanstead. I ventured to state, when we first met this Session, some of the qualifications which I considered were necessary for the occupation of the honorable position proposed to be filled. It is only second, Sir, to your own. The duties, under the appointment which the House has decided to continue, are of very great consequence, and those characteristics, which I endeavored to describe as essential to the proper discharge of the duties of Speaker, may not unfitly be called for in the person who is called upon to fulfil the office of Chairman of Committees and Deputy Speaker. I am glad to be able to say that those characteristics are, to my mind, eminently possessed by the hon. member for Stanstead. He has shown himself, during a long parliamentary career, versed in the forms of the House; he has applied himself to the discharge of his parliamentary duties in a manner which, while indicating tenacity and firmness and decision of opinion in accord with his party, has always been entirely unobjectionable to any hon. member of those who were opposed to him. He has, I fancy, quite as many friends on this side of the House as on the other, and I think he has as great judgment to fit him for the position as any hon. member who can be named. I have very great pleasure in extending him my congratulations on the proposal which has been made.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think it is only due to the hon. gentleman who has been put forward as Deputy Speaker that I should say something in relation to him. I have had a long intercourse with the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby), and I have ever found him displaying fairness and honesty in regard to public questions before the House. His position as a party man is very well known, but no one could be named from one side of the House or from the other, and I doubt very much if anyone in my own party could be named, who would be more acceptable than my hon. friend from Stanstead. I rose to bear testimony, from an independent standpoint, to the general satisfaction given by the announcement that the hon. member for Stanstead will be appointed Deputy Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

MIMINEGASH BREAKWATER, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. PERRY asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to extend and repair the breakwater at Miminegash, Prince County, P.E.I., as asked for by petition?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have given instructions to have this matter looked into. I am not in a position to say more to-day in regard to it.

BOUNTY ON THE MANUFACTURE OF IRON.

Mr. CHARLTON asked, What amount has been paid during the fiscal year 1886, by way of bounty, on the manufacture of iron? How is the said sum entered in the Public Accounts? How much, during the current year, to 1st May, 1887?

Mr. BOWELL. The amount of bounty paid during the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1886, on pig iron manufactured in Canada was $39,269.56. The amount paid for bounty between the 1st July, 1886, and the 1st May, 1887, was $32,667.65. The amount paid for the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1886, is included in the amount of $132,815.87 shown for duties refunded in the Public Accounts, pages 10 and 11, part I. I may state that I think that entry is made improperly; it should not be put under that head, and I have given instructions that it shall be put under the head of "bounties" in future.

FISHING BOUNTIES IN VICTORIA, N.S.

Mr. BARRON asked, The names of all persons who applied for fishing bounties, for the year 1886, for the district of Grand Narrows and Washabuck, in the county of Victoria, Nova Scotia. The names of those applicants who, for that year, were refused. Was the claim for fishing bounty of Michael McDougall refused, and why? Was the said McDougall afterwards appointed Fishery Warden for the said district? Who was his immediate predecessor in office? Did the latter resign, or was he dismissed? If dismissed, why?

Mr. FOSTER. The answer to that question would take me a good deal of time to read, and would take a corresponding time of the House. I think my hon. friend had better put it in the form of a notice of motion for an order of the House, and then the information will be brought down to the House in the form of a return,

SALARY OF REVISING BARRISTERS' CLERKS.

Mr. CHARLTON asked, Has the salary of revising barristers' clerks been fixed, and if so, what is the amount allowed to each? Have the salaries of revising barristers' clerks, for services in preparing the voters' lists of 1886, been paid, and what is the total amount paid on account of such service? If such salaries have not been paid in full, how many revising barristers' clerks are claimants for arrears, and how many have received no payment up to the present time for services?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think I need only answer the first part of the question by saying that the salary of the revising barristers' clerks has been fixed by Order in Council at $2 a day. The clerks have been paid by the different revising officers. A number of them have been paid, but it is hard to state to how many balances may be due. I have put before the House a detailed account of the expenses of the revising barristers in the preparation of lists, and in perusing that account hon. members will see what amounts have been paid to each. Some complaints have been made about revising barristers not having completely paid their clerks. The answers have been sent to the Auditor, who is charged with that account, and before settling the balance of salary due to the revising barristers, the amount due to the clerks would have been attended to. Of course the Department could not deal with each of the revising officers' clerks, and it dealt only with those officers when receipts were sent by the different sub-officers who were employed.

Mr. DAVIES. Do I understand that the amounts submitted to the House include the payments to the clerks of the different revising barristers?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They include all the accounts, mentioning those which have been allowed, and those which have been disallowed.

Mr. MILLS. Does the account show the amount they claimed?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has that information?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MILLS. It would be very desirable that we should have it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We have the information regarding the demands of the clerks who claim amounts due them; there is no need of information regarding the amount of the revising officers' salary.

Mr. MILLS. I was asking as to the amount they demanded for their salary.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It does not concern this question.

Mr. MILLS. It concerns this House.

KIT MONEY FOR VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. EDGAR asked, When were the field allowance or kit money paid over to the Queen's Own and Royal Grenadiers of Toronto, and what sum was allowed to each man? Have the pay sheets for their kit money been signed by the members of the York and Simcoe provisional battalion, and if so, when were they received by the Militia Department? If the amounts signed for have not been already paid to the men, why has not the Government done so?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The Royal Grenadiers were paid compensation, in lieu of boots and underclothing, at the rate of $8.15 per man, on the 26th December, 1885, by District Paymaster Alger. The Queen's Own were paid an allowance, in lieu of kit and necessaries, the same as was granted to the Royal Grenadiers, at the rate of $8.15 per man, on the 2nd May, 1886, by departmental cheque No.

14422. No pay sheets for kit money of the York and Simcoe provisional battalion have been received, and no allowance has been made.

LIGHT-KEEPER AT MIMINEGASH.

Mr. PERRY asked, Whether a keeper of the Ranger Light at Miminegash, Prince county, P.E.I., has been appointed? If so, who is he? And at what salary?

Mr. FOSTER. No keeper has yet been appointed.

THE HALDIMAND ELECTION, 1887.

Mr. CASEY moved for:

Copies of return, if any, made by returning officer for Haldimand, at election of 1887, after making his final addition, or of his declaration, if no such return was made, and of his return made after the recount by the county judge. 2. Notice of a recount or other proceedings served upon such returning officer. 3. Certificate made by the county judge of Haldimand, as to result of said recount. 4. Any judgment delivered by said county judge during, or after such recount, and of all minutes or memoranda made by said judge or his clerk containing entries or memoranda in regard to any of the ballots in dispute during such recount, showing what decision was come to in the case of each ballot, which ballots were reserved, and what judgment was delivered in regard to such reserved ballots, whether such minutes and other papers were publicly read by such judge or clerk or not during said recount.

He said: As I see that the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) has returned to the House, I will proceed with my motion. I do not intend to go into any lengthy discussion of the allegations made in regard to the conduct of the Haldimand election; I intend to go no further than will be sufficient to justify me in asking for the papers mentioned in this motion, which refer to the proceedings at the recount of votes held after the election. I will say briefly, and in general terms, that the allegation is that the county judge who conducted the recount publicly gave decisions in regard to nearly all of the ballots in dispute on the 12th day of March last; that on that day he reserved three ballots for further consideration for the purpose of conferring with Judge Cameron, who was then at Cayuga, on the subject of these ballots; that finally, after his public judgment, in addition to disposing of these ballots which he had specially reserved, he disposed of other ballots and changed his decision in regard to other ballots on which he had already pronounced judgment, and disposed of them in an opposite way to that in which they had been publicly disposed of. Now, my information in regard to this matter is not personal; it is derived from persons in Cayuga, and their allegations are that the conduct of the judge led to the doing of an actual injustice to the gentleman who had in the first instance the majority of votes, Mr. Colter. I will try to put their statements in regard to it at a little greater length and in more systematic form. Mr. Colter, the Reform candidate for Haldimand, and the late member, was returned by the returning officer as being elected on this occasion by a majority of 13 votes. On the same day, I think, notice was given of a recount before the county judge. That recount began on the 9th March and continued for three days, and on the 12th judgment was given by Judge Upper in regard to all the votes but those I speak of. Two of the ballots on which judgment was given were numbered 53 and 55, and in regard to these Judge Upper said he disallowed them for Mr. Colter. Now, it turned out, on looking at the ballots themselves, they had not been marked for Mr. Colter. They had been marked—I suppose I may be allowed to mention the hon. member's name—for Mr. Montague, and not for Mr. Colter, and therefore this decision meant a loss of two votes for Mr. Montague, instead of a loss of two votes for Mr. Colter. I am informed that this judgment in regard to these two ballots resulted in leaving Mr. Colter in a majority of four, not counting the three ballots I have already spoken of as having been reserved, numbered 57, 58 and 59. These three were marked for Mr. Colter, and the question was whether they should be allowed for Mr. Colter or not. If they were allowed for Mr. Colter he would have a majority of four; if they were disallowed for Mr. Colter, he would have a majority of one. That was the condition of things at the end of the public judgment, delivered by Judge Upper, in his chambers at Cayuga, as I am informed. Well, Sir, it was publicly stated by Mr. Colter, in a speech in the town of Cayuga, and in which he challenges contradiction of his statements, that this was the case, and he goes into it pretty fully. I will read his own words to the House:

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

"All other ballots, except those two classes, were decidedly allowed or disallowed that day in presence of those previously mentioned, as well as Doctor Baxter, who came in after the judgment had been partially delivered. I suggested that before we summed up, Mr. W. Langrill, who was acting as the judge's clerk, should read over the judgment again, in order that it might be compared with my record and Mr. Snider's."

Mr. Snider being the agent of Mr. Montague.—

"He did so, and the judgment corresponded exactly with my notes and Mr. Snider's as to the numbers of the ballots allowed and disallowed. I have these notes in their original form—full, complete and unchanged still. Now, this arrangement, if the ballots belonged to each candidate as the judge's clerk had them down, would have cut out my entire majority, the returning officer would have given the casting vote against me, he said so repeatedly, and the reserved votes need not have been called upon at all to do duty. At this point, however, I pointed out that the ballots numbered 53 and 55 were not marked for me at all, but were marked for Mr. Montague. The judge's clerk protested that I must be wrong, but I maintained my position. Mr. Snider admitted that I was correct. The ballots were produced and proved me correct. This was like a thunder-clap out of a clear sky. This changed the tie into a majority of four for me, without counting the reserved ballots or taking them into the calculation. Suppose my ballots, not counting those two, to number 1,750 and Montague's 1,748; if they were deducted from my vote, each candidate would have 1,748, a tie. If the two were deducted from Montague's vote, I would have 1,750 and he 1,746, a majority of four for me. I then pointed out that if the three ballots reserved for having counterfoil, were disallowed, I had a majority of one; if allowed, I had a majority of four, and inasmuch as the judge had expressed so strong an opinion on number 3 Oneida ballots, those endorsed with the name of the deputy returning officer in full, I was entitled to judgment there and then and demanded it. The judge intimated that he would give judgment in my favor, that my majority was four, but wished to consult Chief Justice Cameron as to the ballots endorsed with the name of the deputy returning officer in full, and to consider the counterfoil ballots, and reserved judgment on these two points, and on these alone."

Now, it is clear that if this statement of ballots, of which I have here the original notes as taken down by Mr. Colter at the time, which, he says, were compared with the notes of the judge's clerk and found correct—it is clear that if the judge had only taken action upon the ballots which he reserved, Mr. Colter would have had a majority of one, and the judge would have so returned him with a majority of one. Two points now arise. The first point is whether Judge Upper, having publicly delivered judgment, which not only practically, but implicitly, gave a majority of one vote for Mr. Colter—whether his functions as a judge holding a recount were not then at an end—whether he was not functus officio, as I believe the lawyers say, and incapable of giving any further judgment except on the ballots he reserved. That is the view maintained by Mr. Colter and his friends, and I confess, as a layman, that there seems to me to be a great deal of force in the argument. But even supposing he was not functus officio as regards the ballots on which he had already pronounced judgment, suppose it was open to him to consider other ballots and reconsider his judgment on those ballots, the course he pursued appears to have been unfair and unjust to Mr. Colter, because, without reopening the court, without hearing further argument, without giving Mr. Colter a chance to object further to the changes he intended to make, he quietly, in the secrecy of his own room, reversed the judgment that he had delivered on certain of these ballots, and so produced a majority of one vote for Mr. Montague. In order to ascertain whether those statements were correct, whether the judge did reconsider the judgment previously delivered on any of the ballots, it is necessary to have a copy of the judgment that was delivered by him on Saturday, 12th March, in his chambers. It was a written paper read by his clerk, of which he still should have a copy. I have ascertained from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that no copy has been sent in, and therefore the judge will have to be asked to furnish one. It is necessary to have that paper, and compare it with the final judgment which the judge did send to the returning officer, and which has been sent to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, in order to see whether he did act as alleged in regard to those different ballots. I, therefore, make this motion for copies of the document. Whether it is in possession of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, the returning officer or the judge, we are, at all events, entitled to demand it, no matter in whose possession it may be. All those gentlemen were officers of this House for the purpose of that election, and the House has a right to demand papers from them. I am instructed also that undue influence was brought to bear on Judge Upper during the course of his recount; that a gentleman to whom it is said he owes his appointment as judge, Mr. McCallum, the late member for Monck, now a member of the other House, was present with the judge before and during the recount and brought his influence to bear on him; that other Conservatives, wire-pullers and party managers in that neighborhood, were also present during the recount, and were continually in his presence, and were supposed to have exerted influence on him. I am instructed also that they had special means of exercising undue influence on him, as his habits are such as to make him specially liable—

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. CASEY. I am quite in order in speaking of the conduct of any officer of this House. I am speaking of the conduct of Judge Upper in the recount.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have already ruled that no hon. member has the right to reflect in a disrespectful manner on the judges of the land, and I shall hold to that decision until it is reversed by the House. The hon. gentleman will himself see how unfair it is, especially when he began his speech by saying that the information he possessed was only second-hand information, to reflect in such a way on the judges of the land.

Mr. CASEY. I am quite at one with your decision, Mr. Speaker, that no attack should be made on the judges of the land. It is one of the old principles laid down that an hon. member should not attack a judge, unless prepared to take the usual parliamentary course with a view to remove him. It is, however, quite impossible to discuss this matter, in which the judge's conduct is involved, without stating what is alleged against him, and it is necessary for my case to state what I have been told about the habits of the judge, about the reasons why those gentlemen were supposed to have special influence over him. It is on account of the judge's habits, such as they are—I will not characterise them.

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot allow the hon. gentleman to charge anything of the kind against a judge. Here is the authority, and I will mention it to the hon. gentleman if he wishes to discuss my ruling.

Mr. CASEY. I am not discussing your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I find in "Brand's Decisions" the following:—

"Charges against the judges are unbecoming to be made, as there is a proper course open if their conduct is to be challenged."

I rule in the same sense.

Mr. CASEY. Do you rule, Mr. Speaker, that that applies in a case where a judge is acting as the servant of this House in conducting business in connection with elections? I will not, however, characterise the judge's habits. His habits, whatever they may be, certainly gave an opportunity to bring undue pressure to bear upon him, and it is said that he was threatened by this gentleman who secured him this appointment, that he would have him removed unless he gave a satisfactory decision in regard to this case. That is what is alleged. He was told that there were other Conservatives, quite as good and quite as active, who would get the place and he would be turned out, and by such reasons he was threatened into taking the action he did take. That was the case as I have been told it in connection with this matter. I have no reason to believe that any part of it is incorrect; I have reason to believe otherwise, because Mr. Colter, at Cayuga, on March 24th, made similar statements against the judge and challenged the disproof of the truth of his allegations. Neither the judge nor any other person attacked took any action against Mr. Colter, or did anything to disprove the accusation. I am, therefore, justified, in the meantime, in believing that those allegations are true. For these reasons I move for the papers named in my motion.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I know the House will pardon me this afternoon for saying a few words upon this matter, more particularly as I have not troubled them during the previous days of the Session by speaking on any matter that has come before the attention of the House. I am sure, Sir, that no one can question the right of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) to move for any papers in connection with the Haldimand election, or any other election which may have been held in this Dominion. But I am sure this House will agree with me when I say that I am perfectly in order in questioning the propriety and good taste of introducing before this House, in rather a partisan sense, a matter that has now properly and regularly come before the courts of this country. And I think the hon. gentleman displayed much worse taste when he came here to make, in the form of inuendo or insinuation, a charge in this House against any judge or any court of this country. I am sure, Sir, that hon. gentlemen opposite are not at all pleased with the result, so far as the county of Haldimand is concerned; and I can very well understand that they are anxious to discredit both me and my friends before the people of this country, in connection with that election. But I am convinced still further that the hon. members of this House, as well as the intelligent electors of this country, will require stronger evidence than the ravings of a disappointed candidate, the ambition and the aspiration of whose life has suddenly taken a drop, before they will decide upon any question as to my right to sit here, or the character of the county judge who made that recount. Of course, I recognise at once, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman is doing good service for his party. Indeed, I may be allowed to suggest that he is endeavoring to win a name and fame that might entitle him to the Cabinet position, in the Government of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), which I believe he announced to his electors, some time ago, he was about to take when that Government was formed. However, I congratulate the hon. gentleman upon the manner in which he has served his party, and I only hope that he may succeed to that position, when the time arrives when that Government shall be formed, because I am sure by that time he will have learned, during his years of old age, more discretion than he has displayed here to-day. I may say, Sir, that I am not personally displeased that this matter has come before the House in its present shape. Ever since the result of the election in the county of Haldimand was announced, my friends and myself have been attacked from one end to the other of this broad Dominion, in the public press and from the public platform, as having done something indecent or disorderly in connection with the recount in the county of Haldimand. And so I say to-day, for my own sake and for the sake of the county which I only desire to honorably and honestly represent in this House, that I am glad the hon. gentleman has brought this matter before the House, that I may have the opportunity of saying a few words in defence of those who have been attacked, as well as a few words in defence of myself. Hon. gentlemen opposite are, of course, very much displeased with the result of that recount. Perhaps it is well known to members of this House, as well as to the people of the country, that the county for which I sit to-day, as a supporter of the right hon. leader of this Government, has, for the last half century, been returning supporters of hon. gentlemen upon the opposite side of the House; so that I can well understand those gentlemen finding fault, and expressing their regret as well as their disgust, when they see those counties that through the long years of the past have stood by them, suddenly passing from their grip and returning members to support the right hon. leader of this House. I may also say, Sir, that another cause brings deep regret to the minds of these hon. gentlemen. Hon. members of this House are well aware that a vote was had in the county of Haldimand in the month of September of last year. It is not meet for me to-day, Sir, to discuss the reasons why the county of Haldimand was carried so strongly by friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, because there are other gentlemen in the House who may perhaps be able to say more upon that question than myself. I see the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) in his place to-day. That hon. gentleman had committee rooms in various portions of the county of Haldimand, and I have no doubt that if he were to-day to rise in his place he might be able to give this House some intelligent and pleasant information with regard to the success of his cause in the county of Haldimand. At all events, I can only say that his friend, Mr. Colter, of whom the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) has spoken, said the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) was worth one hundred votes to him in the county of Haldimand. I think that is good evidence that the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) is exceedingly popular in the county of Haldimand, or that he carried an article with him which was even more popular than he was himself. However, I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen opposite do not like the reversal of that verdict which was given by the people of Haldimand last September, because we were told from one end of this country to the other that the result of the contest in the county of Haldimand was but the local outbreak of that general storm which was to sweep the Government of the right hon. gentleman from power; and from one end of Canada to the other you heard that verdict of September given as evidence that the Government was tottering to its fall. I desire to say that I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to hon. gentlemen from the Province of Nova Scotia. I listened with especial pleasure to those hon. gentlemen because in the section of country from which I come we heard that the Province of Nova Scotia was to go solid for the incoming Government of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), as I have no doubt they heard that our section of the country was to go solid for that hon. gentleman. Well, I have to say to-day, Sir, that the members for the Niagara peninsula of the old Province of Ontario, stand here linked hand to hand as a solid file of supporters of the right hon. Premier. We were told even in that Niagara peninsula itself that the Opposition would carry every single seat in that district, and bets were, I believe, freely offered that we would not succeed in one single constituency. We were told that the then hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum) who was retiring, would have as a successor a gentleman who would support hon. gentlemen opposite; and yet my hon. friend from

Mr. MONTAGUE.

Monck (Mr. Boyle) comes here with a majority quadruple the majority which his predecessor received. We were told that Welland was to be wiped out of existence, as a constituency supporting this Government, and yet it increased its majority one hundred per cent. We were told that South Wentworth was solid for the Opposition, and yet my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Carpenter) sits for this county. We were told that Lincoln would go solidly for hon. gentlemen opposite, and yet Lincoln increased its majority for my good friend near me (Mr. Rykert) to the extent of five hundred per cent. And worse than all, old Haldimand, which had never broken its record, elected me to sit for that constituency as a supporter of the right hon. Premier. So I can well understand that those hon. gentlemen do not care particularly for the result in the Niagara peninsula or in the county of Haldimand. Coming more closely to the question before the House, I may say that, so far as the county of Haldimand is concerned, neither myself nor my friends have anything to conceal, as we have nothing to regret in connection with that election. It is true very many bitter things have been said, much to the injury of myself and of other gentlemen connected with that recount. But I have this to say, that I have refused answering those matters. I have refused to take those matters up either in the press or on the public platform, because the case was to come before the courts of this country, and I was willing to leave my vindication and the vindication of my friends to those higher courts to which the case has been referred. So far as the hon. gentleman's attack upon the judge of the county court is concerned, it appears to me that it must seem as out of place as it is unjust, unkind and untrue. The best legal opinion I can secure advises me that his judgment will be sustained. I have no doubt that the members of this House and the people of this country are also willing to wait till the proper time arrives, and a final judgment is given in regard to matters in connection with the election in the county of Haldimand. However, my hon. friend has entered into a rather detailed statement regarding some matters in connection with that recount. Let me say to him and to this House, that not one single illegal, irregular or improper step was taken by me or by any of my friends in connection with that recount. It is true, the hon. gentleman has insinuated—nay, more, he has stated boldly—that it has been publicly stated that a gentleman, who was formerly an hon. member of this House, but who now occupies a seat in the Senate of Canada, I refer to the Hon. Lachlan McCallum, had improperly influenced a county judge in connection with the recount. I have only to say, with reference to that, that I think that gentleman is sufficiently known in this House, and in this country, to render unnecessary any humble defence of his character which I might make in this Chamber; and though I say nothing regarding the personal honor of my hon. friend from West Elgin, it will be well for him if, when he comes to the years of that gentleman, he stands as well with the people of this country, and with his compeers, as does the late hon. member for Monck. I feel warmly on this subject, because I feel that it is unmanly to stand in this House and attack a gentleman, who is absent, with a base insinuation, when he stands as an honorable man before this House and this country. I must say I thought the hon. member for West Elgin was too dignified and too much of a gentleman to make such a statement, and I really regret that my expectations in that respect have not been verified on this occasion.

Mr. CASEY. I rise to order. I am charged with being unmanly, with having made base insinuations, and with not being a gentleman.

Mr. SPEAKER. No doubt the expressions are rather strong, and I cannot say that they are parliamentary. I would ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw them.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I withdraw, then, the expression "base insinuation."

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, before I withdraw, I think the hon. gentleman should withdraw his statements regarding a member of the Upper House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must simply withdraw what he said. The expression "base insinuation" is not parliamentary, neither is the word "unmanly," nor the statement that an hon. member of this House is not a gentleman.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If I said anything unparliamentary, I beg to withdraw it. But I still express my regret that a gentleman who is absent from this House should have his character attacked by an hon. member in this Chamber. I have only to say, in connection with the recount in the county of Haldimand, that the proper legal steps were taken. After the first result was declared, namely, a majority of thirteen for Mr. Colter, I took the pains to go from one to another of the various scrutineers throughout the county and obtain a history of the ballots which were rejected either for Mr. Colter or for myself. I also took the pains to enquire, as well as I could, of any ballots having been counted which they deemed improper or illegal; and after considerable pains and expense, I came to the conclusion, advised by the solicitor whom I had employed, that there was a chance of securing the seat by a recount—by having those ballots which were improperly marked for my opponent rejected, and others which were improperly rejected counted for myself. Therefore, the proper deposit was made, and the proper proceedings were taken to have that recount. I may say that there were technical objections by which I was advised by my solicitor the seat could be secured without any recount of the ballots at all; but I preferred not to take advantage of any such technicalities, and advised my solicitor not to do so, because my desire was that the person having the legal majority of votes should be declared elected, and should take his place in this House; and I am sure the hon. members of this House will award to me the desire to be honest and fair in this matter, as I am bound to award to them the desire only to get at the right. I have nothing to be ashamed of in connection with the Haldimand election or recount. I have the evidence of the Reform organiser of the county, the secretary of the Reform convention, that no fairer, squarer, purer election was ever run in the county. Therefore, I say I have nothing to hide, nothing to be ashamed of. My only desire is, that this whole matter shall be fully enquired into by the courts. I have no fear of the judgment of the superior courts in the matter, and I have as little fear if the people are again appealed to and asked to give their judgment between Mr. Colter and myself and the public questions that divide us. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the members of this House for the kind attention they have given me, and again express my desire to have nothing more than my rights, than which I will accept nothing less.

Mr. CASEY. Before the motion is adopted, as I have no doubt it will be, I must make some very brief reference to the remarks of my young friend who has just sat down. He says I have shown bad taste in bringing this matter up because it is now before the courts. Well, Sir, it is before this House also, because the conduct of certain of our officers is involved in it. The conduct of the judge, as to whether he acted properly in this recount, is before us, and we have a right to remove him from the bench if we find he did wrong. We have the same right to enquire into the conduct of the returning officers. As to the taste I displayed, I am very sorry indeed that I did not please the hon. gentleman; but I think the amount of bad taste I exhibited does not stand out in glaring contrast to his own speech. In fact, the personal feeling appeared to be all on one side, namely, on his. I have no wish to attack my hon. friend, or to degrade him in the opinion of his friends or the country. I have a very high opinion of his family. I think his brother who lives in my county, and is president of the Reform Association there, has made greater advance in the science of politics than he has. So there can be no possible personal feeling on my part towards my hon. friend. But he told us a fact which is very interesting: he told us that the county of Haldimand has been continuously returning Reformers for the last half century. That is exactly the point. It has returned a Reformer in every election during the past half century or so, and we believe it has returned one this time again. We have not the slightest doubt that a Reformer was elected there, but by the action of the county judge was unjustly deprived of his seat. It may not be the fault of my hon. friend that it was done, but we charge that it was done, and that thereby the will of the majority of Haldimand was defeated. The hon. gentleman refers to Mr. Colter's victory at Haldimand during last summer, and he said no doubt it was largely due to the exertions of the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar).

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is it not out of order to say that any man has been dishonorably, dishonestly, and unjustly deprived of his seat?

Mr. CASEY. Not at all.

Mr. SPEAKER. Not unless the hon. member suggested or stated that it had been done by a member of this House.

Mr. CASEY. I distinctly avoided that. I said that my hon. friend alluded to the victory of Mr. Colter last summer in Haldimand, and said it was largely due to the exertions of the hon. member for West Ontario. No doubt that is true. My hon. friend did work hard. He is a very powerful speaker, he is a powerful stumpster, and he did a great deal to elect Mr. Colter; but at the same time the credit is not due to him alone. There were other gentlemen working in Haldimand.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You were there.

Mr. CASEY. I was there myself, but I do not refer to this in order to claim credit to myself. I did my little best, but I do not think I did much. But there were other hon. gentlemen there from the opposite side. The right hon. the First Minister was down in Haldimand, visiting the newly enfranchised Indian voters and holding interviews with them. The hon. the Minister of Interior was there and addressed meetings at Cayuga and elsewhere. The hon. the Minister of Justice was down there also and addressed meetings. I do not remember whether any other Minister visited the county, but another gentleman whom we have long expected to be a Minister went down and addressed meetings. I allude to the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). To these gentlemen alone may be attributed the fact that Mr. Colter had such a handsome majority last summer. If the present member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) were really elected, as the returning officer states, by a majority of the people, I believe it was due to the other fact that he secured the absence of these Ministers from the county on that occasion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very likely.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman gives me what I may call a scolding for attacking my hon. friend, the late member for Monck (Mr. McCallum), in his absence. It would be quite impossible to discuss the matter at all without stating what were the charges, and my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague) will know, when he is a little longer acquainted with me, that I have as high a personal opinion of the hon. gentlemen referred to as most members, but I have to state what are the charges against him in order to obtain the papers. Therefore the outcry about attacking a man in his absence is perfectly absurd. The hon. member for Haldimand seems to think I have accused the late member for Monck of something wrong, something that Mr. McCallum considered wrong. Mr. McCallum has been charged with this publicly, he has been for some months attacked, and has never, as far as I am aware, taken any means to prosecute those who have made charges against him, or to disprove the charges. I would judge from that, knowing the hon. gentleman's high sense of honor and warmth of disposition, that he does not believe he did wrong, or that the wrong charged to him is calculated to injure him among his friends, and I do not believe that the charge of using undue influence was calculated to injure him among his friends. But I find my hon. friend has not gone into any details. He has made no statement with regard to the conduct of Judge Upper, but has fallen into the usual error of young speakers, of making assertions without giving facts. He has told us several times that everything connected with the election was clean and straightforward, but he has said nothing about details, and given no explanation of appearances, which, to our mind, point the other way. Therefore, I am in exactly the same degree of darkness in regard to these transactions after the hon. gentleman's explanation as before, and I hope the papers will give us more light than the hon. gentleman has been able to give us. I am sorry the hon. gentleman did not see fit to give us some of that, no doubt, very full information he has in regard to the matter, and thus to clear it up and save further consideration. That is all I have to say in answer to the hon. gentleman's remarks, and I hope he will find, if he remains in this House a few years more, as may unfortunately happen for our side, that it is quite possible to discuss these matters, and even the conduct of individuals inside and outside the House, without exciting any personal feeling.

Motion agreed to.

THE HIGH COMMISSIONER.

Mr. MILLS moved for :

Copy of the letter of resignation by Sir Charles Tupper of the office of High Commissioner, showing the date of such resignation ; also a statement showing the date when the Government House (the residence of the High Commissioner in London) was vacated, and showing in whose care the house has been placed since its vacation ; also a copy of the commission now in force, together with any instructions which may have been given to the present Commissioner ; also all correspondence between Sir Charles Tupper while High Commissioner and the Government, relating to his visit to this country, to his resignation of the office of High Commissioner, to his re-appointment, if he has been re-appointed, and relating to his acceptance, for the present, of an office in the Administration.

He said : I do not propose to enter into any discussion of this motion. I delayed making it two or three times, expecting the Minister of Finance would be in his place, but perhaps the hon. gentleman would be able to give some information.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The papers will be brought down at once.

Motion agreed to.

ENQUIRY AGAINST A. LABERGE.

Mr. Fiset moved for :

Copies of all papers connected with the enquiry held in 1885 by J. L. Anctil, Deputy Inspector of Post Offices, in the matter of A. Laberge, Postmaster at Ste. Luce Station, on a complaint made by Mr. Jean Baptiste Caron, respecting a letter containing money, addressed to Mr. Luc Vaillancourt, of L'Islet ; together with all letters, documents, &c., furnished to Mr. J. L. Anctil by J. B. Caron, in support of his claim.

Mr. CASEY.

(Translation.) He said : Before the motion is agreed to, I believe the House will need a few explanations. In 1885, J. Baptiste Caron, junior, of the Parish of St. Luce, sent to Mr. Vaillancourt, cartwright, of L'Islet, a money letter, containing $52, of which there were two twenty-dollar bills, one ten dollar bill and a two-dollar bill. Seeing that his receipt was a long time coming, Mr. Caron went to the post office at Ste. Luce ; it was a few days after the mailing of his letter. Mr. Laberge told him that he would soon get his receipt, and, in fact two days after Mr. Caron had his receipt, but, as the receipt appeared rather peculiar to him, he was not satisfied, and seven or eight days after he sent one of his friend to see Mr. Vaillancourt. It was nineteen days since Mr. Caron had sent the letter, and Mr. Vaillancourt had not yet received the money. Hon. gentlemen will please observe, that in the meantime Mr. Caron had had a receipt from Mr. Vaillancourt, although Mr. Vaillancourt had not yet received the money. It was evidently a forged receipt. The money letter reached Mr. Vaillancourt at the same time as Mr. Caron's friend, and, instead of containing two twenty-dollar bills, one ten-dollar bill, and a two dollar bill, it contained five dollars bills. Into these facts, Mr. Caron asked Mr. Sheppard for an enquiry, which was granted. Mr. Sheppard sent Mr. Anctil on the ground to make this enquiry. Witnesses were summoned, and proved the facts which I have just stated, that the money letter was opened, was delayed for nineteen days, and a forged receipt was sent to Mr. Caron when Mr. Vaillancourt had not received the money. However, this enquiry did not result in anything, Mr. Laberge has continued to be Postmaster of Ste. Luce station, and I believe he still holds that office. Mr. Caron, seeing that he had not obtained justice, on the 17th of December, 1885, wrote the following letter to Mr. Sheppard.

" W. G. SHEPPARD, Esq ,

" Post Office Inspector,

" Quebec.

" SIR,—The papers which I have remitted to Mr. Anctil, with regard to a complaint I made in your office, being useful to me, please be so kind as to return them to me, because I see that this affair did not deserve your attention ; and oblige,

" Your obedient servant,

" JEAN BTE. CARON, JUN."

Such is the charge made before the Post Office Inspector, Mr. Sheppard, and, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to remark at once that I do not wish in any way to attack the memory of the late lamented Mr. Sheppard, nor do I wish to attack Mr. Anctil. I will gladly believe that these gentlemen have done their duty, but, at all events, here is a serious neglect which deserves some few explanations from the hon. Postmaster General. This is not the only complaint which has been made against Mr. Laberge. Here are a certain number for which no enquiry has been asked, for the simple reason that justice had not been obtained in the enquiry held in 1885. You will please to remark, Mr. Speaker, that I would not say what I am about to say had I not within my hands written documents to prove these facts. Ubalde Bouchard mailed at St. Luce Station, a letter containing $45 and addressed to Mr. Rioux of St. Arsene. That money never reached its destination. As Bouchard could neither read nor write, and as he was convinced that the money had reached its address, he thought no more about it. It was only several months after, that Mr. Rioux meeting Mr. Bouchard, spoke to him about his money. Bouchard was quite astonished to find that Mr. Rioux had not yet received the $45 which he had sent to him. He called on Laberge, the postmaster, who admitted that he had not sent the money. But that is not all. Mr. Bouchard writes a letter to Mr. Rioux, in which he sends him $5 as interest on the $45, and as Mr. Rioux knows that Bouchard is perfectly responsible, the moment he pays him the interest on his money, he is satisfied. Well, this letter which I have here, is a forged letter, and advisedly sent to Mr. Rioux. I cannot say whether it was sent by Mr. Laberge and signed with the name of Ubalde Bouchard. It is only several months after, nine or ten months after, that this new fraud is detected. Has Mr. Laberge made any arrangements with Mr. Bouchard? It is quite probable, but at all events this fact explains to you, Mr. Speaker, how it is that although this letter had been opened the postmaster has continued to be employed as such. That is not all, Mr. Eustache Desrosiers who has been lumbering for Mr. Price goes to Metis to get his pay, which was to be sent to him according to the promise of his employer. It will be remarked that it is pretty hard for a poor workingman to be obliged to travel twelve or fifteen leagues to go after his pay. He goes to Metis, he sees Mr. Blair, the agent of Mr. Price, and Mr. Blair tells him that the money has been sent several days before. Well, says Mr. Desrosiers, I have not received it. Go back to the post office says Mr. Blair and enquire again. Desrosiers goes to the postmaster and tells him that Mr. Blair has sent him his money and that he has not received it. The post master says: Wait two days more and you will get it, and in fact, two days after he received his money. But that is not all yet. Messrs. Paul Côté and Ubalde Bouchard, the same Bouchard already mentioned, had each of them mailed a letter at that post office, last spring (1886.) The letters were addressed to a Mr. Telfer, sewing machine agent, at River du Loup. They took a certificate of post office registration and two months later Mr. Telfer went to their houses and demanded the payment of the machines he had sold them, saying that he had not received the money. They went to the post office and it was agreed that the letters would be forwarded the next day, after two months' delay. It appears they were forwarded. Perhaps there was no theft in this case, but why such a delay in sending money letters? It is not all yet. Pierre Roy's case is about the same. He sent money, $14, to Mr. Hébert, of Metapedia, for cattle bought from this gentleman. After waiting about a fortnight, as he had not received his cattle, he wrote to his man, and this time he took the trouble to go and mail his letter somewhere else. The answer came immediately: How could I send you your cattle? I have received no money from you. In the parish of Ste. Luce no more registered letters are mailed in the post office of Ste. Luce Station. Then Mr. Pierre Roy goes to see the postmaster, Mr. Laberge, and this gentleman tells him that he had forgotten to send the money, but would send it soon. Well, here are some direct charges. Do you not think, Mr. Speaker, and do not the House think with me, that it is high time that such breaches of trust should cease? Not only have money letters been opened, not only have other letters been delayed very long, but there are forgeries which are perfectly established. Still this man was retained in his office from 1885 to 1887, and I do not know whether he is still in office or not. Without wishing to cast any blame on either the Post Office Inspector or the Postmaster General, in the name of decency, in justice for the public of Ste. Luce, or in justice for the representative of this county, I think that a serious enquiry, not a delusive enquiry such as the enquiry already held, should be instituted, so that justice may be done to everybody.

Motion agreed to.

STATION OF ST. IGNACE.

Mr. CHOQUETTE moved for :

Statement showing the names of parties who tendered for the building of a station on the Intercolonial Railway in the parish of Cap St. Ignace, county of Montmagny, with the amount of their several tenders; and copies of all papers, plans, documents, correspondence, &c., in relation to tenders called for in connection with the building of the said station.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, this motion cannot be granted for the following reason: The Minister of Railways says that in fact tenders have been received, but these tenders have not been accepted, and as he is about to enquire into this matter, if he has not already done so, it would not be fair towards the persons who tendered in the first place to make their tenders known, because it would inform intending tenderers of the price which they could expect to demand. Therefore, the hon. member will please withdraw his motion and not insist on having these papers brought down.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Have the tenders been advertised for or will they be shortly called for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The tenders which are to be called for are public tenders in the ordinary form.

Motion withdrawn.

DISMISSAL OF NAPOLÉON GIASSON.

Mr. DOYON moved for :

Copies of all correspondence in the possession of the Department of Indian Affairs respecting the dismissal of Mr. Napoléon Giasson from his position as measurer of stone, at Caughnawaga, in the county of Laprairie.

(Translation.) He said: Mr. Speaker, in putting the question I have put yesterday, and in making this motion, my only purpose is to ascertain the degree of justice with which public employés are treated during election times. Mr. Napoléon Giasson was measurer of stone at Caughnawaga. The hon. Premier, in answer to the question put by me yesterday with regard to the cause of his dismissal, answered that he was dismissed because he had been intoxicated, had acted in a disorderly manner at a county meeting and had even insulted one of the candidates. The hon. Premier did not tell me that it was the electors who complained of Mr. Giasson having acted in a disorderly manner, nor has he told me which of the two candidates had complained. I hope this honorable House has already understood that I am not the man who complained of the behavior of Mr. Giasson at the public meeting of Laprairie. More than that, the hon. Premier added that a constable was obliged to eject him from the meeting. Unfortunately, for the sake of truth, it must be said that there were no constables there, or at any rate, if there was one, he was not sui compos enough to arrest others, which can be proved in proper time and place and I think it will be done shortly. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand that the candidates to an election were by the fact itself under the shield of the Government, but I could understand that a member should have the benefit of the protection of the Government. During my election, and since, I also have had to put up with slanders and unfairness on the part of certain public officers, and had I then known the good heartedness of the Government, I myself would have come and deposited a tear in the handkerchief of the hon. Minister. I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the Government would extend to me the same fatherly feeling, and I hope that if I should lay before the House those slanders which are constantly repeated against me by certain Government officials, at times when they are sober and at other times when they are in the same state as that described by the hon. Premier as being that of Mr. Giasson, I hope that the Government will make it their duty to protect me and to withdraw their favors from these employés. Mr. Speaker, the hon. Premier did not say that Mr. Giasson had not done his duty; he did not say that he was not competent to discharge the duties assigned to him. He simply said that he had absented himself from his work; and it must be known that on the 15th of February last, not only the public officers but everybody else was absent from his work. It was a duty, since the law makes it a duty for every citizen to vote, and if it was a duty for civil servants to vote as well as for the rest of mankind, it was also a duty for them to go to the nomination in order to hear the discussion on the politics of the country, in order to be posted on such matters and to be able to give a judicious vote. I must also remark to this House, that according to the testimony of the contractors themselves, by whom Mr. Giasson was employed, he was very well qualified, and, even more than that, he had a retentive memory, and they often consulted him about matters of the past, and he would always put them on the right track. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, persecution has become a regular system. One must worship the Government's golden calf or perish. It is sad to relate, but it is true. Will the hon. Minister, say that they were guided by public interest in this affair? Will they say that they have acted in the interest of public morality? Will they say that their purpose has been to teach electoral franchise, the new system to the Indians and half breeds? No; it is in order that every civil servant may understand in the future that he must vote for the Government or lose his situation. That is the long and short of it. Just as though the money received by these employés, came out of the pockets of the hon. Ministers. But it is very well understood in the country that the salaries paid to civil servants come out of the pockets of the people, of the pocket-books of the people, and that everybody should be treated with equal justice. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I will shortly put before the House a few very edifying facts with regard to certain Government employés. To-day, I will confine myself to humbly praying the Government to be pleased to give back to Mr. Giasson the position which was taken away from him, and by so doing they will give justice to a man who performed his duty. My only motive for making this demand, is to obtain justice for a man who has always done his duty in a satisfactory manner. Before concluding I must remark that there are in the reporters' gallery, certain insects which ought to be treated with rough on rats because that is the best vermin exterminator. Some reporters do not care about telling the truth, but they care a great deal about serving their party, as may be seen by the Daily Citizen of the 11th of May and La Minerve of the same date. Mr. Speaker, and hon. members of this House, I thank you for your attention.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. (Translation.) My hon. friend from Laprairie (Mr. Doyon) has chosen a very bad time and a very bad subject for his maiden speech in this House. When I say a very bad subject I have no intention to defame the man he has dealt with and whom he knows to be somewhat characterised as being a bad subject. But launching into parliamentary eloquence to defend a man and defending him as this man has been defended by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Doyon), amounts to very little short of losing one's time. The hon. member has not dared to say that the charges brought against this man who was dismissed from the service of the Government were false. They are well founded; and the speech of my hon. friend can be boiled down to two points, one of which is not correct while the other is false. My hon. friend has enlarged upon popular rights; he has stated that these rights apply as well to civil servants as to others, and that these civil servants have exactly the same right to speak and to act during elections as the ordinary electors. My hon. friend must know that this is a doctrine which is not supported by any of the leaders of the two political parties which are dividing the country. A few years ago the hon. leader of the Government which preceded the present Administration has laid down in this House the rule which applies to civil servants, and a fair and just rule it is, I think. The rule is this: No Government, the present Government no more than the previous Government, have any intention of depriving civil servants of their right to vote. And therefore, my hon. friend was right when he said that it was a public duty to go and vote. But he was wrong when he said that it was a duty for them to attend public meetings on nomination day. This is his false point. Perhaps my hon. friend forgets what the statute says on that point, or, perhaps, he does not know why the statute was passed, which did away with nominations where people were required to manifest their opinions by raising their hands. Under the old law, public nominations were an obligation; it was one of the stages of the election. They were abolished, and why? Because these meetings were unfortunately too often the occasion of such scenes as that in which so disgraceful a part was played by the man who is the object of the motion which is now made by my hon. friend. The day of political nomination with calling of the names and raising of the hands has been abolished, the sale of liquor was prohibited and the closing of bar rooms was ordered in order to avoid riotous meetings when the electors are called upon to perform their electoral duties. Therefore my hon. friend is wrong when he says that Mr. Giasson, a civil servant, was not only justifiable, but that it was a public duty for him to go to the public meeting to inform himself. His protégé, besides, does not appear to have gone there to inform himself, if we are to judge by the acts which are charged against him and which are not denied. He took his education elsewhere than in the statutes and he does not seem to have acted as an elector nor as a spectator at that meeting where he had no business to go. I said a moment ago that the leader of the Government which preceded the present Administration had expounded before the House a proposition which, I think, is the rule that ought to govern civil servants during elections. They are not deprived of their right to vote; they have a right to cast their votes. If they are asked their opinion, they have a right to give their opinion. But it ought to be forbidden to a civil servant, or to an employé of this House, to openly and actively take part in electoral contests. This is a fair proposition, which ought to be admitted by everybody. If we wish that our electoral and parliamentary institutions should work fairly, the Government cannot have in their public offices men whom they might have under circumstances when the violence of a debate must necessarily create a want of confidence and a malevolent feeling between the employé and his employer. Such is the reason why the employés of this House are blameable and run the risk of being dismissed if they actively and openly take part in politics. Likewise, I think there is a perfect reason and justification on the part of the Government to dismiss a civil servant who publicly and actively takes part in an election against the Government who employ him. My hon. friend says that the money given to civil servants does not come out of the pockets of the Ministers, but comes out of the pockets of the people. It is well enough to say that on a husting, but it is not quite proper in a parliamentary meeting. But I will perfectly excuse my hon. friend, who is quite fresh from the hustings, for having laid down that proposition. There is no harm in that besides, but it was useless to say so, everybody knows it. However, if the money received by an employé does not come out of the pockets of the Ministers, his duty and public justice ought to hinder him from actively and publicly canvassing during elections against the Government which gives him his living. Therefore, my hon. friend will be satisfied, I am sure—for I know his high sense of justice—when the correspondence for which he has moved, will be brought down, and when he shall see that the employé who was dismissed is an employé whose conduct has been such as to deserve suspension and dismissal from service, just as the dismissal took place.

Mr. DORON.

Mr. DOYON. (Translation.) I have only one word to answer. The hon. Secretary of State has just said that the Government was perfectly justifiable to dismiss any civil servant who publicly meddles with politics.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. (Translation.) No; who canvasses against the Government who employs him.

Mr. DOYON. Oh! If he works for the Government it is all right. You have perfectly stated that. Have you not?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Perfectly.

Mr. DOYON. In my county, on the platform and elsewhere, the principles of justice are recognised, but it seems that here they must be ignored; because really if you were to put all the civil servants on an equal footing, in the county of Laprairie, and elsewhere, you would be obliged to supersede a good number who have publicly and openly meddled with politics during election time; but, of course they did not canvass in my favor and it is very fortunate for them according to the principle which you have just expounded. It is a rickety sort of justice, allow me to say it.

Motion agreed to.

VACCINATION OF INDIANS ON FILE HILL RESERVE.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for:

Copies of appointment, vouchers, papers and correspondence, showing appointment of Dr. Dodd, of Regina, to visit File Hill Reserve for the purpose of vaccinating Indians, the length of time he was employed upon said service, and the amount of money he received for the same.

He said: I have information which leads me to suppose that the service might have been much more economically performed than it was in the way chosen by Lieutenant Governor Dewdney. It is said that he employed Dr. Dodd at a salary of $20 a day, to visit the File Hill Reserve to vaccinate Indians. His residence was sixty miles from the reserve, and equally competent men could have been secured at Qu'Appelle, which is within a short distance of the reserve, at a much smaller charge.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps I may give the hon. gentleman informat on which will do away with the necessity of pressing his motion. This medical man, Dr. Dodd, vaccinated 1,417 of the Indians of File Hills, between October 16th and December 8th, 1885, at broken periods; he was paid $560 for vaccinating these 1,417 Indians, being about 24 cents per head, the usual charge everywhere else being 50 cents per head.

Mr. CHARLTON. That information, I presume, will cover all the points which are called for in my motion, and, as we will have it in Hansard, I will consider that sufficient.

Motion withdrawn.

MEDICAL ATTENDANT AT THE QU'APPELLE INDIAN SCHOOL.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for:

Vouchers, papers and correspondence showing the appointment of James Collings, M.D., as medical attendant of the Indian children at the Industrial School for Indian children at Qu'Appelle, under the care of Rev. Father Huguonard, the length of such service as medical attendant, and the amount received for the same; also the date of appointment of M. M. Seymour, M.D., as medical attendant of the Indian children in said school, the length of time during which he has served as medical attendant for the children of said school, and the date and amount of payment received for such service.

He said: I am informed that Dr. Collings received for this service the sum of about $15 for fourteen months' service as medical attendant, and his successor has received something like $450 during July and September, 1886, and further sums. If so large a discrepancy exists, it is perhaps worth while enquiring why it is, and it is for this reason that I move for the information.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The memorandum sent me by the Department is this:

"Dr. Collings appears to have only made two visits to a patient at the school in October, 1885, for which he was paid $43. Dr. Seymour was appointed on July 15th, 1886, at $50 per month. He is still employed."

Mr. CHARLTON. Perhaps in this case the papers had better be brought down, because the fact that Dr. Collings performed the duty for fourteen months for $15 would hardly be a warrant for allowing his successor to be appointed at $50 a month. While I am on my feet I might ask whether the vaccine supplied by Dr. Dodd took in the case of those Indians on the File Hill Reserve, whether the vaccination was successful?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, I do not know that. Motion agreed to.

ANNAPOLIS FORT.

Mr. JONES moved for:

Return of correspondence between the Department of Militia and all persons at Annapolis or elsewhere applying for the purchase of military lands at Annapolis, with valuation placed on such lands by applicants.

He said: I move for this information because I have been informed that there has been some correspondence between the Department and various parties in that neighborhood who were desirous of obtaining the old Government property at Annapolis, and that representations have been made respecting the value of the property very much below its real value. I only refer to the information which has been conveyed to me. Apart from the idea of the value of this property, it appears to me that it would be almost a regrettable circumstance if the Government, for so small a sum of money, were to part with, or sell, or otherwise alienate a place of such historical value as the lands at the Fort of Annapolis Royal. They are connected with the early history of our country, and I hope the Government would be rather disposed to hold on to them and improve them to a certain extent than to dispose of them.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There is no objection whatever to the papers being brought down and the whole of the correspondence being laid on the Table. I fully agree with the hon. gentleman that it would be very much to be regretted indeed if an old fort like the Annapolis Fort, an historical fort like that, should be disposed of at any price, such as the hon. gentleman has referred to.

Mr. JONES. Hear, hear—or at any price.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In Canada we have a good many of these old historical landmarks, which, I believe, as much as possible, should be kept as a part and parcel of our history; and I, for one, should very much regret to see the old Annapolis Fort transferred, except for such reasons as really would make up for the loss we would incur as a people in allowing these old landmarks to disappear.

Motion agreed to.

FISHING ON LAKE ERIE.

Mr. CASEY moved for:

Correspondence between Department of Marine and Fisheries and holders of fishing licenses on the shore of Lake Erie in reference to claims for rebate of license fee or other relief to such license holders in consideration of injury to their fishing appliances by storm in the autumn of 1886.

He said: This motion concerns largely some of my own constituents and those of other hon. members representing counties on the north shore of Lake Erie. Gentlemen from Ontario will be aware—I do not know whether it was general or not—that we had two very unusually severe storms last autumn, one, I think, about the middle of October and the other in the beginning of November, coming from a south-western direction, so that the whole of our north shore was exposed to the violence of the waves. I know, as a matter of fact, that in my own riding, and I believe in other ridings, nearly all the fishing appliances used on that north shore are destroyed. By fishing appliances I mean pound nets, and apparatus for that purpose. Scows laid up on the shore, sails, &c., all were destroyed. I know one fisherman in my own riding who had all his capital invested in this business, and who was utterly ruined, I may say, inasmuch as it is almost impossible for him to go on with his business. I think there is a very good reason for asking the Government to make some rebate, or to grant some bounty to those fishermen on account of the almost total destruction that came upon their appliances during those storms. It has always been the policy of the Government to foster the fishing industry in the eastern part of our Dominion, and a good policy it is too; but, I believe, that the same policy should be applied as well to our inland waters. These inshore fisheries are a source of very considerable wealth to the country, and draw considerable trade from the United States, and I think the Government would be acting in the interest of the country and dealing generously with these fishermen, in returning the licenses, or giving them such other consideration as they think will meet the case. I think a number of those fishermen have applied, either directly or through the fishing inspectors, asking for some relief of this kind. I wish to have this correspondence in order that the House may be more fully informed about the matter than I can inform them in a few brief remarks. I take this opportunity of pressing these claims as strongly as possible upon the Government. I am sorry that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not in his place, but I hope some of his colleagues will remind him that the matter has been brought up. This is not a matter concerning one neighborhood alone, but one which concerns a very considerable extent of country. I may mention the counties of Essex, Kent, Flgin, North Norfolk, Haldimand, Monck and Welland, which are all more or less interested in this matter, and I believe the members from those counties would sustain the Government in granting a consideration to the fishermen.

Motion agreed to.

SHIPMENTS OVER THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. ELLIS moved for:

A return showing the quantity of grain of any kind in bushels carried over the Intercolonial Railway from Rivière du Loup to Halifax during the period July 1st, 1885, to March 31st, 1887, with the net amount of money received for freight thereon, and passed to the credit of the same railway.

He said: There has been a great deal of complaint in the eastern part of the Dominion with regard to railway freight rates. The complaint is that freight from the west is carried at a much less rate per bushel, per ton, or per car, than freight is allowed to come from the east. The rates from the east are much higher than the rates from the west. The hon. Minister says in his report that the railway has been operated during the past year at a loss of $104,000. Now, there is a presumption that the loss is largely due to the fact that articles like grain are carried at a much less rate than they ought to be carried. I may also say, while on this subject, that there is a good deal of complaint with regard to the coal rate. It is complained that the rate at which coal is carried is not fair, inasmuch as a higher rate is charged for a shorter distance than for a long distance.

Mr. CASEY.

Mr. POPE. There is no objection to the motion. I do not know whether I can give it in bushels, but if I can, I will; I will give the hon. gentleman the quantity of grain carried, in some way, but the argument used by my hon. friend is not a very sound one. If we are going to carry grain, we have got to carry it at such a price as we can get it to carry. We are competing with other lines, and if we cannot carry it as cheaply as other lines, we cannot get it. But if we get more return freight going east, it does no injury. As long as freights going west are carried at fair prices, if we carry this in our empty cars that carry freight down to the east at a very low rate, as we must do if we carry it at all, I say it does not injure the freight going the other way, it does not increase the rate. For instance, we have carried coal at a rate that does not pay, but we are developing the resources of the country by doing so. The whole of the lower Provinces are pressing the Government to do so. It is exactly the same with the wheat that is carried from the west to be shipped at Halifax; we either carry at a rate that we can get it to carry, or it goes by some other route.

Mr. ELLIS. If the hon. gentleman's argument is good, it ought to work both ways. The very same rule should apply to freight coming west from the east, as to freight going east, and if trade is to be developed, it should be developed by a fair application of the rates all round.

Mr. JONES. I think the explanation given by the Minister of Railways, while it may apply in the way in which he made it apply to that one branch of the subject, would not cover the whole ground of complaint. I have taken the ground before now that the Intercolonial Railway is a public work and one which we never expected to be remunerative, and, therefore, it should be placed somewhat in the same position as the canals which are intended to increase and benefit the commerce of the country. The inward rates over the Intercolonial Railway from abroad to western Canada are very much less than they are for local industries along the line, or for those larger industries in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, such as our cotton mills and our sugar refineries. I can say, from my own experience, that while goods from England for Montreal come at a very low rate, a pro rata rate on the steamer's freight, sugar and cotton, and those goods, sugar notably, for Montreal and Toronto, pay a much larger proportionate rate than do the through goods from England. Consequently, I think the Minister's attention might be properly directed to that subject. In connection with that matter, I may say that whenever it has been found that the canal rates have been too high, or that they require to be lowered so as to place Montreal in as fair a position in that respect as New York, the Government have reduced the rate; and I do not complain of their doing so. There may be circumstances which render it proper for the Government to take action and not allow the trade to go to a foreign port, when, by a slight reduction on the charges made by our own public works, it may be diverted to our own channels; and in that way I think also the rates over the Intercolonial Railway should, as far as possible, be reduced on all local industries such as those to which I have referred. I hope this subject will receive the attention of the Minister. That hon. gentleman may say, and say very properly, that the rates over the Intercolonial for those articles are as low or lower than the rates over any other private road. But that is no answer. It will be found, if the hon. gentleman will look into the subject, that the rates obtained for grain for export are very much lower (I am not finding fault with him) than would be charged over any private road for the same distance; and, therefore, I say that our local industries, which are of a much greater importance to this country than the small amount of exported grain which goes by way of Halifax, should be considered as favorably as the other branch of this subject. I hope the hon. gentleman will look at the subject in that light.

Mr. POPE. It is an undoubted fact that sugar and iron shipped from Liverpool to Montreal would not come in any quantity whatever over the Intercolonial except for the pro rata charges we have arranged, and that is the reason why they are carried at a cheaper rate than are goods manufactured in the Lower Provinces. With respect to the statement made that the road does not pay, I may say that I have endeavored to increase the freight rates, and, if I remember rightly, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) protested again that proposition. I tried to equalise the rates, thinking that such a policy would develop the iron business in the Lower Provinces. It was, however, so strongly objected to, and in fact it worked in such way that the iron and sugar for the west came through a foreign port, and it was abandoned. So we are obliged, as we are often obliged in railway matters, to accept very low rates in order to secure this trade. There would never be a bushel of wheat shipped from Halifax except for the reduced rates. In operating the Intercolonial Railway we find that we are very liable to carry empty cars going east, and if we can only obtain a low rate for the freight carried in that direction, it is better than moving the cars empty, in fact, the road actually makes money if we get any traffic going eastward. That is the ground I take in this matter. I never expect the Intercolonial Railway to pay one copper of interest, but I do think it ought to pay running expenses, and that the rates should be adjusted with this object.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman has referred to rates on iron. I think he will remember that he proposed to raise the local rates on iron, but he saw that that would be unfair to the furnaces along the line, and that it would take effect along the line, and that it would have the effect of sending all the freight by way of Portland. I think both the hon. gentleman and his party recognise that fact.

Mr. KENNY. I do not understand that the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) found any fault with the Minister of Railways for the low rate at which grain was carried. With respect to the Minister's remark about the Intercolonial never paying, I would remind him we should never have had a national existence without the Intercolonial, and the great mission of that road is to foster and encourage intercolonial commerce, and we do not expect the Government to derive any revenue from it. As regards the rates for which the Intercolonial is obliged to carry imports to points like Montreal during the winter and to western Ontario during the summer, I may say that the Intercolonial is obliged to carry that merchandise at low rates because it is competing with the routes via New York and Boston; and it is in the interest of Canada that the Intercolonial should carry those goods even at those low competitive rates, because the labor in connection with handling these goods and running the road is Canadian labor instead of American labor; and it is in the public interest that the rates on grain going east should be low, and the rates on through goods must necessarily be low. My colleague has referred to the rate charged on sugar. If the Minister would consider that that is an all-the-year-round rate, that the road is carrying that sugar not only during the winter months when the operating of the road is more expensive than during the summer but all the year round, I think he would find that the sugar rate was a very remunerative rate. I was sorry to hear him find fault with the rates on coal, because it is encouraging a large industry from which the whole Dominion derives great advantage, and I hold that the Intercolonial rates on through goods must necessarily be low, and lower than the rates on merchandise from local industries in different parts of the Dominion.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Kent). I desire to point out to the Minister of Railways an important matter which appears to have been overlooked by the Department. We should all like to see the Intercolonial pay, but there is one matter in respect of which great advantage might be conferred, and that is in regard to the carrying of flour. The arrangement made for Halifax, and it has been in force for some time, is this: the man who will bring in 2,000 barrels of flour per month will be entitled to a rebate of 10 cents per barrel on the freight; if 1,500 barrels per month, to a rebate of 7½ cents per barrel; if 1,000 barrels per month, to a rebate of 5 cents per barrel; but if only two or three cars per month, to only 2½ cents per barrel. Now, the consequence of that is, that every man cannot bring in so large a quantity as 2,000 barrels, and those who bring in small quantities cannot afford to sell as cheaply as those who bring in large shipments. The result is that the smaller dealers have to get their flour by way of Boston, and the Intercolonial Railway and the Government of Canada lose the freight upon that flour. I think this regulation should be stopped, and that there should be a uniform rate of so much per barrel upon flour and other freight, so that the man bringing in a small quantity would get the same rate as the man bringing in a larger quantity. I may mention as an instance that last fall the rate from Chatham to Halifax was 50 cents per barrel, but the man bringing in 2,000 barrels got a rebate of 10 cents per barrel, so that his rate was really only 40 cents, while the man bringing in two or three cars per month had to pay 47½ cents, so that he could not compete with those who received the larger shipments. The result of this is that there are thousands of barrels going from Ontario, via Boston and New York, to Halifax and St. John, that should go over the Grand Trunk Railway and Intercolonial Railway. To Charlottetown alone the firm of which I am a member sends 10,000 or 12,000 barrels every year, and every barrel of it goes via Boston or New York, and the freight which should go over the Intercolonial Railway is lost to that road. With that road running through the country, and with the various lines of steamers which connect with it, why should they not establish such a rate as would cause this freight to be sent to Prince Edward Island, and all over New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. It is a lamentable fact that, with the facilities which we have for carrying this flour, there is a line of steamers running regularly from Boston every Saturday for Halifax and Prince Edward Island, and those steamers are laden with flour and other freight which should go over the Intercolonial Railway. I think this is an important matter, not only in the interest of the Province of Nova Scotia, but in the interests of the whole Dominion; and now that the attention of the Government has been called to the matter, I trust that such steps will be taken as will lead to the development and increase of this traffic over the transcontinental line.

Motion agreed to.

ARREARS DUE CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

Mr. O'BRIEN moved for:

Return showing the amount of arrears now due to the Chippewa Indians of Lakes Huron and Superior on the surrender of lands made by them under the Robinson Treaty, and all correspondence between the Indian Department of the Dominion Government and the Provincial Government of Ontario, relative to the same, since the 3rd day of May last.

He said: In 1879 this matter was brought to the attention of the Government and a return was then moved for. A return was also moved for last year, and yet the matter still remains in the same position. There is a large amount of money due by somebody to these Indians who surrendered their lands under the provisions of the Robinson Treaty, and I would like to ask the Superintendent

General whether any progress has been made towards obtaining a settlement of these arrears. Whoever may be in fault, it is a hard case that these Indians, whose means are not very large, whose revenue under the Robinson Treaty is not very large—it is hard upon them that, through the failure of either the old Province of Canada or of the Province of Ontario, or of the Indian Department, or through the failure of whomsoever it may be, they should from year to year be kept out of the arrears which all Governments have admitted to be due them. The claim was admitted by the Government of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie); it has been admitted ever since; indeed, it has never been disputed, but so far the arrears have not been paid. Perhaps the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs can give us some information on the point—he can inform us, at any rate, whether any further correspondence has taken place. Of course, if nothing further has transpired since the return was last moved for, there would be no object in my making the motion; but I wish to call the attention of the Government to the case, and ask them if it is in their power to cause this matter to be settled, so that these men may get the arrears which everybody admits to be due to them, and of which, for many years, they have been deprived.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There can be no objection to this motion, especially as, I think, a letter or two has passed between the Dominion Government and that of Ontario since the last papers were brought down. It is certainly a hard case. These Indians have a right to the money due them under the Robinson Treaty. The difficulty is that the obligation rests on the old Province of Canada, and the accounts between the two Provinces of Quebec and Ontario still remain unsettled. The hardship of the case was admitted by the Mackenzie Government, and although the matter belonged altogether to the two Provinces and not to the Dominion, that Government—and I think properly—made an advance, in consequence of the hardship suffered by the Indians, with the understanding and the expectation that it would be recouped by the two Provinces. From circumstances beyond the control of the Dominion Government, these two Governments have never yet settled their accounts; no payment could be got from either of them, and the poor Indians are suffering in consequence of that state of affairs. Again and again we hear that the Finance Ministers of the two Provinces are to meet and settle the accounts finally, but no settlement has been arrived at. What is to be done I scarcely know. We cannot compel the two Provinces to settle their accounts, and, unless the Dominion Government should apply to Parliament for a grant of money, to be paid to those Indians and to be kept out of the subsidies of both Provinces, until they have a settlement, I see no other way of settling with the Indians. In the meantime the papers will be brought down.

Mr. DAWSON. This is a matter which has been brought up in the House from year to year, and it is one which affects a large number of Indians in my constituency. The First Minister has suggested what I think would be the best way of settling the matter, that is, that an appropriation should be asked for from Parliament, that the Indians be paid and the amount charged to whichever of the two Governments is found to be liable for it. There is a very large amount due to these Indians who in the meantime are suffering. If the plan suggested by the right hon. gentleman were adopted, and the money paid over to the Indian Department for the benefit of the Indians, a great deal of good might be done in the way of establishing schools, aiding them in their farming operations and in a great many other ways. In many parts of the district I represent, the Indians are suffering considerably, not alone from withholding from them the amount which as my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) has said is justly due them, but owing to the advance of settlement. But there are other ways in which they suffer not from the fault of the Government perhaps, but from the advance of civilisation. The Indians are changing their habits, and in the change they are suffering. There is one thing to which I wish to call particular attention. In the Robinson Treaty it was stipulated that the Indians should have the right of hunting and fishing in the territory they had relinquished. The wording of the Treaty is as follows:—

Mr. O'BRIEN.

“And the said William Benjamin Robinson, of the first part, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government of this Province, hereby promises and agrees to make the payments as before mentioned, and further, to allow the said chiefs and their tribes, with full and free privilege, to hunt over the territory now ceded by them, and to fish in the waters thereof, as they have heretofore been in the habit of doing.”

Here a stipulation is made to allow the Indians to fish in the waters where they have been accustomed to fish, and everybody knows that, when the wild animals of the chase disappear, fishing is the chief support of the Indians. When the white people come about them, all they have to subsist upon is the fish they can take. While we make this stipulation in their favor, we at the same time give people licenses to set pound nets, with which they scoop up the fish so that few are left for the Indians. This is the case in many parts of Algoma. For instance, the mouth of Garden River is so filled with pound nets that the fish cannot get up that river, and they are in consequence often in a state of starvation. Notwithstanding that the fish are disappearing, and the Indians suffering, there are other ways in which they are improving, from the improved management of Indian affairs, from the fact that liquor is being kept from them, and from the progress they are making in a great many places in agriculture. On the Island of Manitoulin there are 2,000 Indians who are now in a position to export wheat. If they continue to progress in this respect they will very soon be independent of the fisheries, but until that time comes I think they should be protected. It would be highly desirable if these large amounts which have been so long due to them could be placed somewhere where they could get the benefit of them. A certain portion ought, at least, to be available for establishing schools and obtaining agricultural implements.

Motion agreed to.

THE FISHERY QUESTION.

Mr. JONES. I see it stated in the press that the Government have decided not to send any more cruisers out for the protection of the fisheries pending arrangements in contemplation. I would ask the First Minister, also, if the Government have received any further information in the nature of a reply to Lord Salisbury's proposal to the American Government, and whether that will be brought down as soon as it is received.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman will repeat his question to-morrow, perhaps I can give him a fuller answer. I am not at all aware of any decision not to send out cruisers, nor am I aware of any answer having been received to Lord Salisbury's proposal. Of course it may have reached His Excellency without having yet reached us. Any papers that may be received will be brought down, if it is in the public interest to bring them down, and I suppose it is.

ADJOURNMENT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are no Private Bills on the paper that we can do much with to-night, and it will be for the House to say whether they desire to go into any of the Public Bills and Orders. If not, we might adjourn now.

Mr. EDGAR. There are Public Bills and Orders ready to be gone on with. There is that relating to the Dominion Elections Act, which I am afraid, if postponed, may not be reached.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Let that stand. I dare say there will be a Government measure on that subject.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the Government propose to introduce a Bill to amend the Election Law?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I said, perhaps. It is under consideration whether we shall not bring down a Bill on that subject during the present Session. If not, the hon. gentleman can press the Bill. I will undertake to give him an opportunity to do so.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Statement showing names of all candidates at the promotion examination held at Ottawa, beginning on 1st March, past; names of all who passed such examinations, copies of all examination papers submitted to such candidates; also statement showing whether any, and if so, which of such candidates were examined at such examinations later than the said 1st of March, and what questions were submitted to such candidate or candidates?—(Mr. Oasey.)

Return showing the names and addresses of all parties engaged, whether on the permanent staff of Civil Servants or otherwise, from the 1st of January, A.D. 1886, to the 1st of May, 1887; the kind of work performed, the amount of wages paid per annum, per month, or per day. Also, the names and addresses of all parties that have performed work for or under the direction of any Department, and the remuneration or salary paid.—(Mr. McMullen.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 6 o'clock p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 12th May, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 79) to consolidate and amend the Acts relating to the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway and Steamship Company, and to change the name thereof.—(Mr. Scarth.)

Bill (No. 80) to incorporate the South-Western Railway Company.—(Sir Donald A. Smith.)

Bill (No. 81) to confirm and amend the charter of incorporation of the Témiscouata Railway Company.—(Mr. Grandbois.)

QUEEN'S, N.B., ELECTION.

Mr. GIROUARD moved:

That John R. Dunn, the returning officer charged with the writ of election for the electoral district of Queen's County, N.B., be ordered to attend at the Bar of this House without delay to answer for his conduct in returning as elected the candidate who had not the majority of votes cast at such election, as recommended by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Motion agreed to.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY IN NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne) asked, In what counties, or section of counties in Nova Scotia will the officers of the Geological Survey Department survey during the coming summer? Is it the intention of that Department to make any special examination of the gold-bearing districts of western Nova Scotia?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). In the counties of Nova Scotia, Pictou, Halifax, Guysboro', it is not proposed to make any special examination of the gold-bearing districts this year. I think the hon. gentleman has already had a letter from the directors, explaining the reasons.

BARRINGTON HARBOR, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne) asked, Have tenders been asked for the construction of a new lightship to be placed at Barrington harbor, Shelburne County, Nova Scotia? If so, how many tenders were received by the Department? Has any contract been awarded; if so, to whom and for what price? What provision does the Department propose to make for supplying that station until a new lightship is completed?

Mr. FOSTER. Tenders were invited in February last for the supply of a suitable vessel for a lightship at Barrington, N. S., and nineteen tenders were received. No tender has yet been accepted or contract awarded. Instructions have been given to Mr. J. R. Kenny, keeper of the lightship, to have such repairs made to the old vessel as will render her sufficiently seaworthy for the summer months, and to have her placed at her station.

BOILERS IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS BUILDING.

Mr. CHARLTON asked, What length of time has elapsed since the boilers in the engine-room adjacent to the House of Commons have been inspected? What condition were they found to be in? What pressure of steam is allowed? How many years have the boilers been in use?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The mechanical engineer of my Department has supplied me with this answer: The boilers were inspected last month (April); they were found in good condition; there was 50 lb. of steam on locomotive-shaped boilers, and 35 lb. of steam on Cornish boilers. The locomotive-shaped boilers have been in use since January, 1875, and the Cornish boilers have been in use since 1865.

POST OFFICE INSPECTOR FOR QUEBEC.

Mr. GUAY asked, Has the Government appointed a Post Office Inspector for the district of Quebec? If they have done so, who has been appointed? If they have not done so, who has filled this office since the death of Mr. Sheppard? and what has been his salary?

Mr. McLELAN. No appointment has been made. The duty has been performed by the Inspector at Three Rivers. The salary is $2,000.

SHORT LINE RAILWAY—FREE ADMISSION OF MATERIAL INTO THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin) asked, Has the attention of the Government been called to the fact that the United States Government has refused to permit Canadian contractors engaged in the construction of the Short Line Railway, through the State of Maine, to take with them from Canada free of duty, the plant, machinery, &c., used in the fulfilment of their contracts? Has the Government taken any action in reference to the matter; and if so, what action?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In the absence of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, I may state that we have no such information.

DISALLOWANCE OF MANITOBA RAILWAY ACTS.

Mr. WATSON. As, at the request of the Government, my resolution was allowed to stand over, I would ask if they would place it as the First Order for next Tuesday.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow it to be the First Order for Wednesday next.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would hardly do, because on Wednesday we terminate notices of motion at six, and we may have a long debate on this, so that it would be inexpedient to fix it for that day.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. After the hon. gentleman's courtesy in giving way in this matter, I suppose we must do what he wants, so we will say Tuesday and make it the First Order of the day.

Ordered, that Mr. Watson's motion be the First Order of the Day for Tuesday next.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In rising to move that you leave the Chair for the purpose of going into Committee of Ways and Means, and taking advantage of this opportunity to make a statement to the House, I wish to say in the outset that, recognising as I do the great ability of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and the manner in which he was enabled to discharge the duties of the position I now occupy when he was Finance Minister during the period that hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and recognising as we all do, the great ability of the gentlemen who, on this side of the House, have served in the same position under the right hon. gentleman who now leads the House, I must ask for the considerate indulgence of the House on this, the first, occasion that it has become my duty to occupy that position. I do not propose on the present occasion, to go over the ground that has been so fully occupied by the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who have preceded me. It will be recollected that, under a comparatively low tariff, Canada enjoyed a very marked degree of prosperity during the first seven years of Confederation, but it must not be forgotten that during that period the industries of Canada enjoyed a great protection which arose from the dislocation of the labor market in the great Republic to the south of us, and which placed us in a very different position to that which at a very early period afterwards we occupied. When that change came, and when the languishing industries of Canada impressed the Finance Minister of that day; when, instead of large surpluses, large deficits succeeded year after year, the Opposition of that day urged upon that hon. gentleman that he should reconsider the position and that he should endeavor to give increased protection to the industries of Canada which would prevent them from thus languishing and from being destroyed. We were not successful, I will not say in leading the hon. gentleman himself to the conclusion that that would be a sound policy, for I have some reason to believe that he had many and strong misgivings on that question, but, at all events, we were not able to change the policy of the gentlemen who then ruled the destinies of Canada. As is well known, that became the great issue at the subsequent general election of 1878, and the Conservative party, being returned to power, pledged to foster and promote the industries of Canada as far as they were able, brought down a policy through the hands of my honored predecessor, Sir Leonard Tilley, whose absence from this House I am sure gentlemen on both sides all deplore; and I have no hesitation in saying that the success of that policy thus propounded and matured from time to time, has been such as to command the support and confidence of a large portion of the people of this country down to the present day. As I have said before, with ample material under my hand to show by contrast the great advantage that resulted from the adoption of that policy, I do not propose to take that course on the present occasion. The elaborate statements made by Sir Leonard Tilley, and the exhaustive statements made by my hon. friend who occupied the position of Minister of Finance a year ago, I think, render it entirely unnecessary that we should occupy the time of the House in going over the same ground. But I must be permitted to draw the attention of the House for a single moment to the change that has taken place in the opinions of the great political economists of the day on this question, as an abstract question of political economy. No person who has carefully watched the progress of public events and public opinion, can fail to know that a very great and marked change has taken place in all countries, I may say, in relation to this question. In the United States of America they hold, with the strongest tenacity they, perhaps, have ever held, to the principle of protection. In England, where it was a heresy to intimate anything of that kind a few years ago, even at the period to which I am referring, a great and marked change in public opinion has taken place. Professor Sidgwick, a learned Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Professor of Moral Philosophy in that great university, and the gentleman who read, at the great meeting of the British Association in 1886, a paper on political economy, has published a work in which opinions, that would have been denounced as utterly fallacious and heretical at that time, have been boldly propounded as the soundest and truest principles of political economy. But, Sir, I do not intend to occupy the attention of the House in recounting, as I could, the numberless evidences that we have of a change of public sentiment on that subject. The committee appointed by the Imperial Parliament to consider the question of the depression of trade, has, of course, adhered to the general line of the free trade policy that has so long prevailed in that great country; but it is equally worthy of note that statesmen of the first rank, that men occupying high and commanding positions in public affairs in England, have as unhesitatingly committed themselves, in the minority report, to the strongest opinion in favor of what is termed fair trade, or fair protection to British industry. I am precluded, however, I am happy to say, from the necessity of going into this question as a question of political economy, or of reasoning it out in the abstract, for another and a very important reason. Since the last Session of this Parliament, as is well known, the hon. gentleman who, with such distinguished ability, leads Her Majesty's loyal Opposition in this House, has, in the presence of the great electorate of Canada, announced his entire conversion to the principle that we have so long maintained from this side of the House. The re-election of that hon. gentleman to the position of leader of that great party in this House and in this country, is viewed with uniform satisfaction on this side of the House for two reasons: first, because of the hon. gentleman's eminent qualifications for that distinguished post; secondly, because we regard his re-election to that high position as an affirmation by hon. gentlemen opposite that at last the time has come when this country may congratulate itself upon the fact that the great capitalists of Canada who are interested in developing the resources of the country can put their capital into these great Canadian industries without any fear of disturbance arising from a change of Administration. Under these circumstances I feel it would be wasting the time of the House, and perhaps more than wasting the time of the House, for me to do more than express the gratification I feel that the time has come when we are all at one upon this great and important question, and when the only issue can be how best to carry out and how best to make the principle successful that has commended itself so entirely to the satisfaction of the great body of the people of this country. Now, Sir, I will pass at once to a brief notice of the financial position that Canada occupies at present.

Mr. WATSON.

With regard to the receipts and expenditure for the year ending 30th June, 1886, it will be found that the late Finance Minister, in his speech delivered in this House on the 30th March, last year, estimated that the total receipts on account of Consolidated Fund would amount to $33,550,000. The Public Accounts, which have been duly distributed to the hon. members of the House, show that the actual amount received was $33,177,040.39, showing that the late Finance Minister's estimates were almost literally verified. As a matter of fact, his calculation of the Customs yield was realised within $150,000, but the main difference arose from the receipts from Excise, which did not come up to expectations. It must be realised, however, that all through that year Canada suffered particularly from other causes, in addition to the ordinary depression of trade felt all over the world. I may remark just here that although it was the bad fortune of hon. gentlemen opposite to be in power at a time when a very marked and serious depression in trade existed, not only in Canada, but in all other countries, there has been, recently, an equal depression of trade in Great Britain, in the United States and in most other countries of the world. Canada has suffered more or less from that depression; but the fact that she has withstood that period of depression and emerged from it as she has done, is the best evidence of the wisdom of the policy that the Government had adopted and the people had endorsed. Now, Sir, in the early part of the year the effects of the rebellion in the North-West were severely felt, and altogether an unanticipated calamity took place that produced a very sensible effect upon the trade and business of the country, and paralysed business in a very marked degree, as such an event undoubtedly would, shutting off, as it necessarily did, immigration and preventing capital from coming into the country, and preventing people coming to settle here to a greater extent than would otherwise have been the case. In addition to that, Sir, we had the great commercial centre of this country, the great city of Montreal, suffering under an unusual and unexpected calamity from the very extensive outbreak of small-pox, which placed that great commercial centre in comparative quarantine for many months, producing, of course, most disastrous effects on the trade of the Dominion. On the other hand, the late Finance Minister estimated the total expenditure at $38,126,287.61. This was increased in the actual amount expended to $39,011,612.26. The difference may be said to be made up by the charges for suppression of the rebellion in the North-West, which were estimated at $2,300,000, whereas the actual expenditure on this head was $3,177,220.50, and in addition there was an increased charge on account of Mounted Police of $1,029,369.20, as against an estimate of $332,241.66. These expenditures were unavoidable and had to be met, and, unfortunately for the Dominion, the deficit of last year was the consequence. It may be argued that this expenditure in connection with the North-West rebellion, not being of an ordinary character, should be regarded as a capital expenditure, and it is proposed to adopt this course with sums paid in the current fiscal year to complete these services, and also with payments to be made to sufferers by the rebellion. Coming now to the outcome for the current year it will be found that the late Finance Minister, in his statement made to Parliament at its last Session, estimated that the revenue from all sources would amount to $34,500,000. Probably in making this estimate he took into consideration the depression under which Canada was suffering in common with all parts of the world, and made an estimate accordingly. However, from the returns up to date, which have been laid before the House, it will be seen that the amount expected was under-estimated; that Canada has in fact emerged from her depression, and that, instead of a revenue of $34,500,000, it is believed that the year's income will in round numbers amount to $35,300,000. It may be interesting to state in connection with this point that the columns of the Statist of the 5th February last, in reviewing the financial and commercial history of England for 1886, contain the following:—

"There is some cause for satisfaction at the general course of business throughout the year. People in business have shaken off their long languor and depression, have found at last that things have touched bottom, and have been more disposed to go ahead. There are many circumstances not altogether reassuring, and some trades, it would seem, have hardly participated in the general improvement; but on the whole, merchants are more cheerful, and an impetus has been given to trade which cannot but last a good while, unless some untoward event should happen."

Hon. gentlemen, I dare say, are aware that a very distinguished statistician, Mr. Giffin, is responsible for that statement. To notice the details of the estimate made above, it is expected that Customs will yield $22,000,000; in Excise it was estimated that the yield would be $7,000,000, but whether much of this yield was anticipated in the previous year, or whether the habits of the people are becoming more and more temperate, it is not thought by the officers of the Inland Revenue Department that the income from this source will be more than $6,000,000. The miscellaneous items will be about as estimated, viz., $7,300,000, making a total of $35,300,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You are now speaking of the present year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes. Turning to the expenditure side of the statement we find that the whole sum expended to the 30th April last, as shown by the returns submitted to this House, has been $25,935,548.30 from which as has been mentioned before, it is proposed to deduct and charge to capital $210,085.52 miscellaneous charges in connection with the North-West rebellion. The further charges on the Consolidated Fund services will probably be:—To complete interest payments $4,500,000; sinking funds, $600,000; and for miscellaneous services of all kinds and descriptions, $4,760,000. It is probable, therefore, that the expenditure may be about $35,600,000, leaving an apparent deficit at the end of the year of $300,000, and I have no doubt it will be found when the year has expired, if the revenue comes up to the expectations formed, that this estimate will be about correct. I think, in view of the position in which we unfortunately found ourselves a year ago, it will be a matter of sincere congratulation to this House, as I am sure it will be to the people of this country, to know that we will close this year under existing circumstances with a deficit of no more than $300,000—practically one account balancing the other, because that is so small an amount the slightest change will affect it one way or the other. I now come to the probable outcome for the year 1887-88, on which we must leave the ground upon which we have stood up to the present time of having tangible data as a basis and deal to a considerable extent with what we regard as probabilities. As to the probabilities for the year commencing 1st July next, which are purely a matter of estimate, the Government believe that if the present state of trade continues, and they see no reason from present appearances of any diminution, and taking into account the changes in the tariff, the revenue from Customs will amount in round numbers to $22,500,000. I am informed by the Commissioner of Inland Revenue that after close calculation the result next year from Excise will be a revenue of $6,400,000, of which, in round numbers, spirits will yield $3,500,000; tobacco, $1,600,000; cigars, $710,000; and malt and malt liquors, $100,000, the balance being made up of receipts from licenses and from miscellaneous sources. From miscellaneous revenues, including post office, railways, interest on investments and all other incomes, it is safe to assume that the amount realised will probably be $7,500,000, making in all an estimated revenue during 1887-88 of $36,400,000. Hon. members have before them the estimate of the expenditure likely to be made for the several services of the year 1887-88, and unless the hon. the Minister of Public Works should require further grants to complete services under his control, or to satisfy the requirements of the country, it is not likely that the Supplementary Estimates, to be brought down, will add largely to the sums therein shown to Parliament. Under these circumstances, the surplus that is shown by the comparison of the amount of revenue, which I have just estimated at $36,400,000, will give a very fair surplus for the coming year 1887-88, unless, as I have said, the Minister of Public Works should prove too strong for us, and obtain a larger amount than I hope he will find it necessary to ask. It is usual to enter into details explanatory of the variations in the several estimates of expenditure, and for the information of the House this plan will now be followed. Taking the capital expenditure during the year, it will be seen on examination of the Estimates, that as regards redemption of public debt a sum of over $870,000 will be required to take up bonds issued by the Province of New Brunswick prior to Confederation, which bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. and which mature during the coming fiscal year. It will be found that so far from that being a cause of regret, it will be a source of advantage to the Government, because they will be enabled to reduce the charge for interest on those bonds from 6 per cent. to a much lower rate than we are obliged to pay. With regard to the expenditure under the charge of the hon. the Minister of Railways and Canals, it will be noticed that, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, Parliament is only asked to vote $180,000 to cover expenditure in British Columbia, against an authorised expenditure during the current year of $922,000. For the Intercolonial Railway there is an increase of expenditure required of about $260,000; for construction account this House will be asked to vote less than last year, but in consequence of the estimated large increase in the traffic over the line, new rolling stock will have to be purchased to the extent of $318,000. As will be seen on reference to the Estimates, Parliament will be asked to vote the sum of $800,000 for the construction of the Cape Breton Railway, against an authorised expenditure for the current year of $500,000. Coming next to the question of canals, an increase has been asked of about $330,000. While the older canals require less money to complete the necessary works at present under construction, a new vote is asked for $1,000,000 towards the construction of a canal at Sault Ste. Marie; and I may say that, so far as can be judged from the information in our possession, I believe that sum will be found entirely adequate for the construction and completion of that work. The amounts chargeable to capital, under the control of the hon. the Minister of Public Works, will be reduced in consequence of the completion of the Esquimalt graving dock. The sum asked for the Public Building, Wellington street, is $200,000, against $110,000 for this year; for the construction of Port Arthur harbor and for Kaministiquia River, $90,000, against $70,000; and a revote will be required for Cape Tormentine harbor of $100,000. The hon. the Minister of the Interior will require an extra sum of $45,000 on capital account to provide for the payments for surveys, &c., in connection with Dominion Lands. Turning now to the several items of Consolidated Fund expenditure, and taking first, interest of public debt, it will be found that an increased amount of $380,000 is asked for. In round numbers this sum will be about what is required for interest on deposits received and to be received from the savings banks. The sinking funds require an addition of about $60,000, which, in fact, is the natural increase owing to the investment of the interest of the funds now held, and which is offset by the addition of that amount to the interest on investments. For Charges of Management there will be a small decrease, chiefly made up by the abolition of certain offices, the maintenance of which the requirements of the Dominion no longer demand.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

In civil government the increased charge is $39,875, the major portion of which is made up of increases to the Department of the Interior and to the Post Office Department. These will be fully explained when the separate votes are under consideration; but it may be mentioned here that the services under these Departments are continually growing with the growth of the country, and cannot be kept at stationary figures as in the case of the other Departments. In Administration of Justice the total increase is $18,100, made up of new services, as follows:—Maintenance of Prince Albert jail, $5,000; new junior judge, County Court of Ontario, at $2,000; five judges of Superior Court, North-West Territories, $20,000, instead of $12,000 as previously required, and the salaries of five sheriffs, at $500 each. In Penitentiaries, the service having been thoroughly overhauled by my hon. friend the hon. the Minister of Justice, there will be found a saving of $3,356; and it is believed that when the scale of salaries which the House has been asked to sanction, is put into force, the service will be put on a better footing, and in the end a saving will be effected of some thousands of dollars. In Legislation there is an increase of $102,375, almost the whole of which is to meet expenditure in connection with the Franchise Act, which it is estimated will require during the coming year $200,000 against a vote of $100,000 asked last year. In Arts, Agriculture and Statistics the increase asked for is $82,333.33. Hon. members, on looking at the estimate for this service, will find that the sum of $60,000 voted last year in connection with the Colonial and Indian Exhibition is dropped out, and similarly is omitted the $15,000 to cover the expenses of the census of Manitoba, no further sum being required for those purposes. On the other hand, the hon. the Minister of Agriculture will require to set in operation and maintain the experimental farms, which it is expected will be in full working order during the coming year. For this service the sum of $90,000 is asked, as against $30,000 in the previous year. Parliament will also be asked to vote, and that it will do so most cheerfully I have no doubt, £20,000 sterling as the contribution of Canada towards the Memorial of the Jubilee of Her Majesty's reign, viz., the Imperial Institute of the United Kingdom, the Colonies and India. I wish to say just here a few words in passing with reference to both those subjects, the great Colonial and Indian Exhibition and the proposed Imperial Institute. It would be impossible for me to find any language in which I could adequately do justice to the deep interest, the unwearied assiduity and the unflinching support given to the Colonial and Indian Exhibition by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. It is well known that the proposal to have a great Colonial and Indian Exhibition in London during the past year originated with His Royal Highness, and that he threw himself into that work with all the ardour and assiduity that the most enthusiastic colonist could exhibit or desire. That exhibition was purely a Colonial and Indian Exhibition. No British exhibitor could find place in it for any British product whatever. The entire exhibition was confined to the display of the products of India and the Colonies, and when it is remembered that noblemen, private gentlemen and capitalists in England, subscribed no less than £150,000 sterling, as a guarantee for an exhibition in which no British exhibitor could exhibit anything belonging to the United Kingdom, the best possible evidence, I think, is afforded of the deep and abiding interest that is felt in England in regard to the Colonies and India. I need not speak of the success of that exhibition, because the Minister of Agriculture, under whom I had the honor of serving, has already laid on the Table of this House, a report which I made in regard to it, and in which will be found clearly and succinctly stated everything connected with the exhibition, which I thought would be of interest to the House. I may say, however, that out of the success of this great exhibition grew the proposal on the part of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, for the establishment of a permanent Indian and Colonial Institute. But I must not pass away from the question of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition without, in the first place, tendering my hearty thanks to my old colleagues, who gave such a warm and enthusiastic support to that measure, to the Parliament of Canada who sustained them in giving that support, and I also wish to tender my equally heartfelt and sincere thanks to the Governments of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and British Columbia for the zealous and hearty manner in which they co-operated with me and with the general Government in making that exhibition as thoroughly successful as it proved to be. And I feel it especially due to the Hon. Mr. Mowat, to the Hon. Mr. Fielding and the Hon. Mr. Blair, as gentlemen representing Governments which were not supposed to be exactly in harmony with the general Government, to say that I received from them and their colleagues just as hearty and enthusiastic support as I did in any other part of the country. I desire also to express my cordial thanks to the people of Canada—to the exhibitors, without whose hearty co-operation, and the zeal and assiduity with which they threw themselves into the work, that great exhibition could not have been attended with the beneficial and lasting results to Canada that I believe will attend it. In many cases they had a direct interest in doing so, because they had reason to believe that their exhibits would have the result of extending their trade and developing the industries in which they were engaged. But in many other cases, when no such hope existed, there was the patriotic desire, thoroughly exhibited and heartily carried out, of making this exhibition, irrespective of the expense involved to the exhibitors, all that the most enthusiastic Canadian could desire that it should be. I say that I believe that lasting beneficial results will accrue to Canada from that exhibition. It was found that we were enabled to take a high position, not only in the estimation of England, but I may say in the estimation of the world; for that exhibition was visited by hundreds of thousands of people, not only from the continent of Europe, but from the great Australian colonies and all the outlying portions of the Empire; and an impression has been produced that has tended to elevate Canada in the eyes of the world to a position that this country has never before occupied. The best evidence of that fact is that the London Times, which we do not always consider the most enthusiastic journal in regard to the interests of Canada, but which some of us have been inclined to believe has been more pro-Australian than pro-Canadian, covered a whole broadside of its issue with a minute and admirable account of the Canadian Court; and it has afterwards filled its columns again and again with statements showing the greatly advanced position Canada has attained. I say the best evidence is afforded by the attitude of that paper and other leading British journals, of the great advance Canada has made in connection with that exhibition. We had, of course, the additional advantage of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has attracted the attention of the people of England and the people of all countries to the position we occupy to an extent that has also produced the most widespread and valuable influence upon our best interests. I am able here, Sir, to ask for a reduction of $50,000 a year in the vote for the immigration service. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture and Immigration feels that, in consequence of the great advantage that Canada has secured in connection with that exhibition and in connection with the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the efforts made by that company to disseminate information in regard to Canada, in which they are, of course, deeply interested all over the world, it is not necessary to ask for so large a sum, and we have reason to believe that the reduced amount will be productive of greater results, in connection with the influences to which I have referred, than would the larger amount. But, Sir, I want to say a single word in reference to the Colonial and Indian Institute. As is, I dare say, known to many hon. members of this House, I felt it my duty to visit this country in connection with that subject, when it was being actively pressed by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and the parties interested in it. I visited this country for the purpose of obtaining support and co-operation for that undertaking, and I must thank my old colleagues for the manner in which they responded to that application, by the pledge to ask Parliament to vote £20,000 sterling towards that Institute as a memorial of the Queen's Jubilee. It was found that Her Majesty preferred that the memorial to celebrate her reign should take the form of a Colonial and Indian Institute rather than any other form; and under these circumstances it was believed that no difficulty would be found in raising an adequate sum of money to permanently endow that institution, and to retain to India and the Colonies in the Institute the benefits which to some extent they enjoyed in connection with the exhibition then being held. And here I must repeat my thanks to all the Local Governments which I visited for the hearty manner in which they co-operated in the undertaking. They were satisfied that great benefits had accrued to Canada from the exhibition, and they were prepared to give the heartiest support to the proposal for a Colonial Institute. The proposal, as propounded by His Royal Highness, was, as you are aware, that it should be purely a Colonial and Indian Institute. That idea has been somewhat extended and enlarged. It was found that the commercial classes of England, the city men and others, felt that it was necessary in founding a memorial to Her Majesty in the form of an Institute, that the United Kingdom should be embraced as well as the colonies. I am not quite certain, Mr. Speaker, that we were not ourselves somewhat responsible for that change. I am afraid that our exhibition was a little too good. I am afraid the effect produced on the minds of a great many of the commercial and manufacturing classes in England was that Canada was becoming a rather dangerous competitor, and it was rather desirable that we should not have the field left entirely to ourselves. But, at all events, from whatever cause it arose, the result was that the commission appointed by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to revise the proposal as originally made, composed of the leading men of all classes and parties in England, decided that it was necessary that the United Kingdom should be embraced, and that it should be an Imperial Institute of the United Kingdom, the Colonies, and India; and here I propose to take the House into my confidence on a subject in which some little interest has been manifested. I was in communication, as I shall point out at a later period, with the Government in regard to a proposed treaty with Spain; and having received a letter from the Finance Minister on that subject, as well as a communication from my right hon. friend who leads the Government, in regard to the proposed Imperial and Colonial Institute, I felt that it was desirable that we should have personal communication on both of these questions. Under those circumstances I cabled to my right hon. friend to say that if he approved of it, I would take a run out to Canada so as to have an opportunity of discussing those two questions fully with him and his colleagues before proceeding any further. I received promptly his approval of my visiting Canada; and when I landed in New York I learned for the first time that a general election was to take place in this country. I not only learned it for the first time, but I will say with all frankness to the House that I was surprised at that information. I had previously learned the result of the Local elections that had just been held in the Province of Ontario; and while down to that period I thought it not unlikely that there might be an appeal to the people this season, after those elections I felt it unlikely that any appeal would be made until after this Session of Parliament. I mention that in order to show that this important question was receiving my attention. Well, unhappily for myself, I may say, I visited this country; and after I arrived here my right hon. friend laid an embargo upon me, and I was obliged to leave all those enjoyments and pleasures which have been so much descanted upon in this House and elsewhere; I was obliged to leave my comfortable residence in London and go into the campaign without that health or strength that I required for such a service. I may say that, notwithstanding the changed position of this question, so far as the colonial interest is concerned, I have no doubt every member of this House will be only too glad to vote the sum of £20,000 sterling as our contribution to the Imperial Institute for the United Kingdom, the Colonies and India. Not only in consequence of the interest that we naturally feel in an institution of that kind, and which, I hope, will receive the hearty support of all classes of the people in this colony and in all the other colonies, but because we feel that if there is a portion of Her Majesty's dominions that has a right to be thankful for the blessings which have attended Her beneficent reign during the past fifty years, it is the people and Parliament of Canada. So far, it may be said that all the estimates I have touched indicate increases, but I will just say here that I have naturally perused, as I suppose the hon. gentleman opposite used to peruse, the comments of the press, when he laid his estimates on the Table. I perused them with some interest, in the hope not only of finding something interesting but instructive; but while I have often found a disposition to criticise on the ground of extravagance, I have failed to see in a single instance any suggestion on the part of any portion of the press criticising these estimates, as to where the estimates as brought down could be reduced without injuring the best interests of the country. I can only say I shall be grateful to any of my hon. friends opposite or on this side who will point out any instance in which we may safely and judiciously pare down these Estimates without interfering with that progress and development of the country which every person knows lies at the very foundation of Canadian prosperity.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will you pare them down if I make the suggestion?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Certainly. It is one of the privileges our Constitution gives to members of this House, that they may propose reductions in the Estimates; but, wisely and fortunately for us, they are not permitted to propose increases, or if I rightly recollect and know anything of my hon. friend, I am afraid he would propose an increase rather than a decrease.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am afraid it would not be acceded to.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Coming now to the estimate for Immigration, it will be found that there is a decrease of $50,000, as we believe the time has come when this saving can be effected without detriment to the public interest, and without at all interfering with what is the great object of the Immigration Department and the Government, namely, to limit the immigration brought to this country to agriculturists, to farm laborers, domestic servants, and capitalists who have the means of entering upon the possession of land and its cultivation. In Quarantine, the same estimate is asked as was voted the previous year. Taking next the service Pensions and Superannuation, the amount required is estimated at $13,000 in advance of the provisions made in the previous fiscal year, and this increase is chiefly due to the new item for pensions to Mounted Police, Prince Albert Volunteers, and Police Scouts in connection with the rebellion of 1885. I was not here when the discussion on that subject took place, but I have no doubt that the House arrived at the wise decision that the services of these parties were entitled to recognition on the part of the House, in the same way as recognition has been given to the forces sent out specially to that country, for the purpose of suppressing the insurrection. An increase of $57,000 is asked for Militia, of which $47,000 is required for the batteries and the cavalry and infantry schools. A sum of $10,000, a new vote, is asked for a barracks in British Columbia, which the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence, when the House goes into Committee of Supply, will explain fully. The House will now come to a series of estimates in connection with services in which it is proposed to effect a saving. And I hope I shall not meet with any opposition on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite in carrying out those intentions. There is first, Railways and Canals chargeable to income, where a saving is proposed of $23,000, which is more than accounted for by the completion of the road system and bridge accommodation of the Lachine Canal. In the voluminous services under the control of the hon. the Minister of Public Works, it is proposed to effect a general saving, and it is hoped that as the works under that Department are now gradually arriving at completion, there may be a permanent saving under this head. One new item, however, for $80,000, is introduced for buildings and fencing, in connection with the Experimental Farm. The House wisely, I think, although I had not the pleasure of taking part in that discussion, arrived at the conclusion that the great farming interest of the country, that most vital and important interest, was entitled to the expenditure of a certain amount in connection with experimental farms, and I have no doubt that, wisely and judiciously administered, this expenditure will be a source of great profit, not only to the older portions of the Dominion, but especially to the new portions now being opened up for settlement. The decrease in the amount asked for Mail Subsidies and steamship subventions, arises from two items, the discontinuance of the votes for subsidies for steam services between the ports in the Gut of Canso, and between New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Great Britain. It is but right to state under this head that tenders have been invited for steam service between Canada and the West Indies, and it may be that a vote will also have to be submitted to Parliament in this connection. With regard to Ocean and River Service there is an increase of $81,550, of which maintenance and repairs of Government steamers require $19,750, whilst the expenses in connection with the Canadian registration of shipping, including printing, require the balance of $1,800. In Lighthouse and Coast Service, the net increase is $3,500 on a service requiring over $570,000. The increase is in the salaries and allowances of lighthouse keepers, and is spread all over the Dominion; and I am quite certain no one will recognise more than the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) the wonderful economy which has been exhibited in that service, and I should not be surprised to hear from that hon. gentleman a complaint against any proposal to reduce the expenditure. It is right, however, to note that the Cape Race light, which was recently transferred to the Dominion by the Imperial Government, is responsible for $1,000 of this increase. It has been found practicable to reduce the requirement for Signal Service by $1,500. There has been added to the grant for Meteorological Observatories $5,000, of which full details are given in the Estimates, the increased cost of telegraphing, and the incidental expenses in connection with this service necessitating the increase. It is not proposed to ask for any additional amount on account of Marine Hospitals or Steamboat Inspection. The estimates for Fisheries show a decrease of $23,500, caused chiefly by a reduction of the amount to provide for the cost, maintenance and repairs of the Government protection steamers, as it is thought that the appropriation can be safely reduced to this extent. After revision it has been found that the requirements for the Geological Survey can be reduced by $1,700. For Indian Affairs an increase, all told, is asked of $2,619, and it is believed by the officers of that Department that the amount asked this year will not require to be supplemented. There is a decrease of $16,500 in North-West Mounted Police, notwithstanding that the force has been reorganised and placed on a proper footing. This decrease is caused by the reduction of the amount for repairs, renewals, replacement of horses, &c. In Miscellaneous it will be found that there is an increase of $100,000, entirely made up of the cost of plant required for the Government printing office and bindery, and this being a first cost will not be a permanent charge.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. MITCHELL. How much ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $100,000, and that is expected to cover the entire service. Not only the entire service, but, as before stated, it is practically a capital charge, although not placed to capital account. It is a charge for the service, which, once provided, will not require to be repeated. Coming to Collection of Revenues, under the head of Customs, it will be seen that the hon. the Minister of Customs for the service under his control requires an increase of $28,300, full details of which are given in the Estimates, and further explanation will be given by my hon. friend when the vote is being discussed in committee. I may say in passing, if there is an hon. Minister to whom the House is always disposed to give anything he asks, it is my economical friend who administers the Customs Department, and who is much more eager to get money out of other people's pockets than he is to expend any belonging to the public. Suffice it to say, however, that more than half of the increase is at the port of Montreal. In Excise the increase asked for is about $14,000, being made up of increases of salary to the outside officers of that branch; increase for the preventive service; and an additional amount to enable the Department to purchase wood-naphtha and similar articles, for issue to bonded manufacturers, a charge which is, of course, more a matter of account than anything else, because the bonded manufacturers are bound to refund the money. In Weights and Measures there is an increase of $3,750, for salaries, rent and fuel, &c. Railways and Canals chargeable to Collection of Revenue require an additional amount of $235,837, of which repairs and working expenses of railways take $224,600, caused mainly by the additional sums asked for locomotive power and car expenses and maintenance of the Intercolonial Railway. I may say in reference to that, that the House ought always to receive with great satisfaction a proposal to charge to capital account any sum for the Intercolonial Railway, and for this reason, that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways is never able to ask a single dollar to be charged to capital account for that service except for the purpose of providing additional rolling stock to meet new and increased business. The larger the sum, therefore, that my hon. friend is able to show to the House that he is entitled to receive as chargeable to capital for the Intercolonial Railway, is the strongest and clearest evidence of the progress and development of the country and of the freight which is being carried over the Intercolonial Railway; because that is the only ground upon which he can ask that a dollar should be put to capital account. My hon. friend tells me, and the House will be glad to hear it, that the business on the Intercolonial Railway, the freight carried over it, has doubled since 1876, and I could give this House no better evidence of the remarkable and steady progress the country is making than the statement contained in those words. There is also included in this amount the charge for maintenance of the Eastern Extension Railway, and for car expenses, Prince Edward Island Railway. The small increase outside of railways, under this service, is due to an increase in the amount asked for repairs and working expenses of canals. Public Works chargeable to Collection of Revenue, will require a decreased sum of $26,000, caused by a reduction of the amount for telegraph lines in British Columbia by $28,000. Under the head of Post Office, a total increase of $45,864 is asked, and taking into consideration the great increase in the business of that Department which is constantly taking place, the additional amount asked from Parliament is comparatively small. Those who will take the trouble to read the statement of the late Minister of Finance, as to the development of the Post Office up to a year ago, and will observe the enormous increase in the number of letters sent, in the mileage which is constantly taking place in that Department, will find in it a complete justification for this increase, and the best possible evidence of the steady progress and development that our country is making. There only now remains an increase of $16,872 to be noticed in Dominion Lands chargeable to Collection of Revenue, and this is made up of a variety of causes, which will be explained by the hon. the Minister of the Interior when the House is in committee. As a good deal of discussion has taken place in this House, and especially out of this House, on the extent of the public debt, I intend to offer to the House a few statements in regard to that very important question. I propose to present to the House certain statistics in regard to the debt of the Dominion, and the expenditure since Confederation for capital charges. On the first of this month the gross debt of the Dominion stood at $270,072,855.27, and the net debt, $225,105,961.08, being a decrease of net debt in the month of April of $759,870.01. I may say, at once, that I would take off both the gross debt and the net debt, for all practical purposes, $10,000,000, and that because it is represented by a thoroughly good and available asset, in the shape of the lands obtained from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in payment of $10,000,000 of their debt.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad to find that that statement meets with the approval of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I knew it would meet with their approval, because, when I am able to congratulate myself and the Government and the country on the fact that we had been enabled to make an investment of $10,000,000 in the purchase of lands at $1.50 an acre, which these gentlemen estimated a few years ago at $3, $4 and $5 an acre, the House will see that I am not only justified in striking off $10,000,000 from our debt, but also in congratulating the country on making a very excellent bargain. There is this great advantage also, that one of the most formidable charges made against the contract between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and a charge which I always felt had a great deal of force in it—perhaps I felt it even more strongly upon that occasion than I expressed to the House—was the fact that that contract handed over twenty-five million acres of the domain of Canada—a great country of itself—to a single company. Therefore, we not only had the good fortune, by making this arrangement, to obtain this land from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, reducing the principal objection which I think could be brought against that contract in regard to the large monopoly of land in the hands of one company, but we obtained it on terms which I am sure will result at no distant day in replacing all that money and more in the Treasury of Canada. I may say that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company did not receive $1.50 an acre for the land.

It cost the Government $1.50 an acre nominally to obtain it, but it must not be forgotten that a part of the arrangement was, in regard to the payment by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of $20,000,000 in cash, that the Government could not call upon them to pay for five years; and that it was at the time of this unfortunate insurrection in the North-West, as my hon. friends opposite will fully recognise, very undesirable to go back to the English market and ask for a loan of $20,000,000 only one year after we had been to that market, very undesirable that we should go to that market under such very disadvantageous circumstances, with a falling revenue and an insurrection in the North-West, circumstances that were likely to be made use of by all parties who were interested in depreciating the securities of Canada. Not only was that the case, but the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in order to secure the purchase of their lands by the Government at $1.50 an acre, had to provide that $20,000,000 in cash. How did they do it? They had to do it, Sir, by substituting 5 per cent. bonds for the payment of a debt of $20,000,000 on which they were only obliged to pay 4 per cent. for five years. The Government were, under the arrangement, only entitled to 4 per cent., but to raise the money to pay this debt the Canadian Pacific Railway had to float their bonds, and they were floated at a small discount on the 5 per cent. bonds, so that at least, at the very best calculation, they lost a million dollars in interest in order to make a sale of the lands, and they reduced the amount received by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company per acre for their lands to $1.35, which was all, therefore, that they received. I mention that in passing, merely. But, Sir, I have not taken that into account here; it is, to a certain extent, an aside. I may explain to the House that this increase which accounts for more than the total increase of the debt last year, is more than accounted for by that purchase of lands which we hold at $1.50, which were estimated a very short time ago by hon. gentlemen opposite to be worth $3 or $4, or $5 an acre, and I should be extremely glad if, at no distant day, their highest estimate were realised. Well, Sir, at Confederation the net debt, by the Public Accounts, was $75,728,641.37, which deducted from the present net debt shows an increase since 1867 of $149,377,319.71. Let us now examine how this large sum has been expended; because I need not say to the House, that everything depends upon what there is to show for the debt. Suppose that it represented war, as the great increase of the debt of England represents; suppose it represented war, as the great increase of the debt of the great Republic to the south of us represents—we would then have serious cause to be alarmed, we would have serious cause for regret, at finding so large an increase in the net debt of the country. But, Sir, if, instead of representing war, instead of representing that which would deteriorate and injure the country, it represents valuable public works, works that are not only constructed for the purpose, but are calculated rapidly to develop the country, to increase its progress and prosperity, and to make an abundant indirect return to the revenue of the country for the expenditure, then, I think, you will all agree with me that there is no cause for alarm, no cause for anxiety. Now, let us examine that. I find that since Confederation to the 1st of July last, increased grants have been allowed to Provinces to the extent of $30,743,392.69. Now, Sir, that will not become a question of controversy here, for the good and sufficient reason that it was the policy sustained by an overwhelming majority of the members of both sides, of the most independent and intelligent men of this House, as a sound and wise policy. Therefore, no exception will be taken to that, but we may fairly deduct that from the increased net indebtedness, because it was not an expenditure, it was a transfer from the Provinces to the Dominion. Dominion Lands chargeable to capital, to the same date, $2,566,689.36; and, Sir, no person would be found at the present day who will question that sum as a wise and judicious expenditure. Eastern Extension Railway, $1,286,551.63; the Intercolonial, $1,224,348.15; the Canals, $32,132,280.73; the Miscellaneous Public Works, in which are included the Public and Departmental buildings Ottawa, the Esquimalt Graving Dock, the land and cable telegraph lines, and the harbors at Cape Tormentine and Port Arthur, $2,947,723.65; the North-West Territories, cost and organisation, $2,920,000; the Pacific Railway, $60,864,430.61, to which should be added the amount of debt cancelled by return of lands, $10,189,521.33, or, in all for the Pacific Railway, $71,053,951.94; the Prince Edward Island Railway, $212,288.27, and the Short Line Railway, $184,801.83. In addition it may be mentioned that various railways have received subsidies in accordance with the several Acts passed by the Dominion Parliament, to the extent of $3,312,494. All these charges as so far shown, are to the close of the last fiscal year; since that date and to the first of the present month further sums have been paid for the before mentioned services to the extent of $4,706,062.46. The aggregate of the several sums just mentioned, to the 1st May, is $183,292,584.76, and the net debt to the same period showed an increase since Confederation, as before stated, of $149,377,319.71, from which it will be seen that in addition to making due provision for all ordinary expenditure, in addition to building custom houses, post offices and other public buildings throughout the Dominion, in addition to providing for an efficient lighthouse system, Canada has paid for the several capital charges since Confederation the large sum of $33,915,265.05 beyond the increase in the net debt. Or, if we take these figures in another way and exclude from the increase of the net debt $149,377,319.71, the several allowances to the Provinces $30,743,392.69, and taking the balance $118,633,927.02 as for public works only, it will be found that for the three large services before mentioned namely, the Pacific Railway, the Intercolonial Railway and the canals, the cost has been $134,412,580.82, or $15,778,653.80 more than the whole net debt exclusive of the allowances to the Provinces. So, Sir, I think, in view of the statements I have made to the House, hon. gentlemen opposite will be relieved, and every person who has reflected upon this matter will be relieved from the apprehension that the Government of Canada are recklessly plunging the country into indebtedness for anything of an unjustifiable nature, that for all our net debt, there are large and most valuable public works, works of such value and of such importance to the country, that I am quite sure that my hon. friend opposite—if he has a recollection of the speech that he delivered, standing here in 1874, when he conjured up before our imagination an outlook as to the liabilities in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway in the face of which this entire increased indebtedness would sink into insignificance—will now feel that he may congratulate the House and congratulate us upon occupying the position of having accomplished that great transcontinental highway, having not only completed the Intercolonial Railway, but extended a great line of intercommunication from sea to sea, linking all these Provinces together, and accomplishing that which at no distant day will be a great highway of intercommunication between Europe and the East—I say he will congratulate us upon occupying a position of a very enviable character. There is this to be borne in mind that, great as is this expenditure, it is all for works that once done never require to be repeated. There is no man in Canada, there is no man in this House or out of it, who will not say that it is not of the most vital importance to Canada, that it is not a matter of absolute necessity at this hour, that we should have a great iron band of intercommunication binding all these various Provinces together, and giving us the means of free and rapid and easy communication from one portion of our country to another. In order to accomplish that gigantic work—which we have accomplished, and far below the expenditure which hon. gentlemen contemplated would be involved by Canada—in order to complete it even at a remote period, the boldest of us felt that, necessary as it was to engage in it, there was a danger that it would strain the credit of Canada. We all felt that it was a gigantic undertaking for the Government of Canada, representing as it did a population of only five millions of people, to carry out that which is now regarded, in connection with our population and the time occupied in its construction, as the most marvelous and wonderful work of the age. I repeat that the boldest of us felt that it might strain the credit of Canada, but we felt also that there was no alternative; that if this country was to be bound together, if we were to make Confederation a fixed fact, it was necessary to bring the remotest Province into easy and rapid communication with the centre of the country. We all felt the vital importance of opening the enormous fertile North West Territory for settlement and for population. We all felt the vital importance of developing the trade and commerce of Canada, and bringing all the trade and commerce through Canada that it was possible to bring. But as I have said we had our misgivings as to whether it might not strain to some extent the credit of the country. What is the fact? The fact is we have this gigantic work in full progress, we have the earnings rolling up in millions from year to year, altogether exceeding anything that the most sanguine man in this House contemplated in connection with the project; and we find ourselves in this position, that instead of the credit of the country being strained, it is now standing at the very highest point it ever attained. When we proposed to undertake grappling with this gigantic work, my hon. friend opposite (Sir Richard Cartwright) knows that our three and a-half per cents were selling on the English market at about 90. To-day I am in a position to congratulate this House and the country, that, so highly favored are the securities of Canada, so eminently has the position of Canada advanced in the estimation of the capitalists of the world, our three and a-half per cent. securities have already changed hands at par. Before passing away from the Canadian Pacific Railway, and what it has done for the country, I should like to allude to the fact, that during the five months of last year—I am now speaking of it as a through line of intercommunication—although the line was only open for five months of last year, during that period seven cargoes of tea and other commodities were brought over the line from China and Japan to the principal cities of Canada, and St. Paul, Chicago, New York and other points in the United States; and that only from seven to eight days were consumed in delivering freight from Vancouver to Montreal and New York. Not only so, but there has been a most gratifying increase in the development of traffic over the road. As indicated in the following comparison of earnings for the past three years, the growth of local traffic has also been most gratifying, and there is every prospect that this growth will be even more rapid in the future:

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

	1884.	1885.	1886.
Passengers.....	$1,980,902.30	2,859,222.93	3,170,713.69
Freight.....	3,410,365.39	4,881,865.48	6,112,379.89
Mails.....	85,736.83	137,151.92	205,024.18
Express.....	95,671.63	172,303.01	206,872.41
Parlor and sleeping cars....	43,492.60	73,523.55	118,658.99
Telegraph and miscellaneous	134,352.47	244,426.08	263,154.43
Total.....	$5,750,521.27	8,368,493.12	10,081,803.59

I presume it is not necessary to add another word in order to show this House and the people of Canada the high point we have reached in connection with this work. I now propose to say a few words in regard to the position Canada has attained. I have already stated to the House that I do not propose to institute any invidious comparison between the Administration of hon. gentlemen opposite and ourselves. I propose to take a wider range. I propose, and I shall occupy but very little time in doing it, to give to this House the evidence that the position of Canada at the present moment is one of which we might justly be proud. I have referred to our position in connection with the construction of that great national work, and I have referred to the very important and vital position of our credit in that relation. But I am happy to be able to say that I do not expect to be obliged to use that credit, high and great as it is. I am happy to be able to tell the House that at this moment we have no floating loan, that there is not one dollar of floating loan chargeable to Canada. I am also able to give the gratifying assurance to this House that the Government have no expectation of being obliged to resort to the capitalists of England for any new loan for a long period to come; and I am quite sure that this is a statement which no Finance Minister has had the good fortune to be able to make for a very long time past. The great works that were essentially necessary to the progress and development of Canada have been completed, and we anticipate that the income from the savings banks, the money deposited by the savings bank depositors with us, will be quite equal to meet the capital required to take up the New Brunswick loan, which shortly becomes due, and meet any other incidental capital charges that may fall upon the Government. I have been asked by many parties to consider the question of a reduction of the rate of interest we pay depositors in the savings banks. I do not propose to entertain that proposition, and for this reason: That gratifying as that might be to the banking institutions, there is something still more important to which the Government are bound to look, and that is, the giving of due encouragement to the wage-earners, to the working classes of this country, the giving to them the strongest incentive to save instead of spending their earnings. I may say that the result of the reduction of the rate of interest payable by the Government to them would not be warranted, for the reason that, although we might obtain money at a somewhat lower rate, than the 4 per cent. we pay to the depositors, when all the charges incidental to it are taken into consideration, I do not think that the balance would be such as at all to justify the Government in taking a step that strikes me as being one that would be greatly prejudicial to the great mass of the working classes of this country. Now, in order as I have said, to save the time of the House and avoid going over the rather tedious details of these comparative statements, showing the position we occupy, I have had diagrams constructed—not diagrams to illustrate the position of public affairs on these questions, as between the two political parties of the country, but taking a wider range, going back to the commencement of Confederation, the time when in the interests of Canada the great step was taken of uniting those Provinces together.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would ask if in these statements, which I suppose include a statement of the savings banks, there is given the amount held over the sum of $500, and those over the sum of $1,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I have not gone into that statement, although I shall be very glad to discuss the matter with the hon. gentleman, because I am inclined to think there is a point in it, and, as the Government are not extremely anxious to draw money from any source, I am inclined to think that the time has come when it may be worth while to see that the savings banks are used for the proper and legitimate objects for which they were instituted.

Now, I may say that the first of these diagrams shows the deposits by the people in the chartered banks, commencing with Confederation, and giving the eighteen years from 1868 to 1886, inclusive. These figures which may be seen at a glance in the diagram, make a very gratifying exhibit of how steadily and rapidly the country has advanced, as shown by the evidence of the deposits of the people in the chartered banks of Canada :

DEPOSITS BY THE PEOPLE IN THE CHARTERED BANKS OF CANADA.

1868 (June 30).....$32,808,104	1878 (June 30).....$66,503,757
1869.....38,823,333	1879.....63,635,952
1870.....50,767,100	1880.....77,891,498
1871.....55,763,067	1881.....86,507,571
1872.....53,986,818	1882.....99,100,729
1873.....55,547,607	1883.....99,364,760
1874.....65,991,047	1884.....92,413,313
1875.....58,367,942	1885.....99,383,673
1876.....63,320,858	1886.....103,583,950
1877.....63,241,128

Then the deposits in the savings banks cover the same period :

DEPOSITS IN SAVINGS BANKS OF CANADA.

1868 (June 30).....$ 4,360,692	1878 (June 30).....$14,222,074
1869.....5,723,567	1879.....14,702,715
1870.....7,591,978	1880.....13,237,496
1871.....9,367,941	1881.....24,331,202
1872.....10,526,376	1882.....31,098,718
1873.....12,933,894	1883.....35,189,426
1874.....15,101,195	1884.....38,003,116
1875.....14,125,477	1885.....41,980,776
1876.....13,838,201	1886.....45,072,886
1877.....13,391,014

DISCOUNTS GIVEN BY THE CHARTERED BANKS OF CANADA.

1868 (June 30).....$ 50,500,316	1878 (June 30).....$124,888,552
1869.....53,572,307	1879.....122,502,537
1870.....62,252,569	1880.....118,916,970
1871.....83,969,766	1881.....144,139,875
1872.....107,354,115	1882.....177,521,800
1873.....117,646,219	1883.....177,222,569
1874.....133,731,260	1884.....160,459,183
1875.....123,786,038	1885.....158,209,174
1876.....128,645,238	1886.....165,044,608
1877.....126,169,577

Then I give the total imports into Canada, in the several years from 1868 to 1886, and they show a most gratifying increase, notwithstanding the large decrease arising out of the active condition of so many great industries in Canada :

TOTAL IMPORTS OF CANADA.

1868 (June 30).....$ 73,459,644	1878 (June 30).....$ 93,081,787
1869.....70,415,165	1879.....81,964,427
1870.....74,814,839	1880.....86,489,747
1871.....96,092,971	1881.....105,330,840
1872.....111,430,527	1882.....119,419,500
1873.....128,011,281	1883.....132,254,022
1874.....128,213,582	1884.....116,397,043
1875.....123,070,283	1885.....108,941,486
1876.....93,210,346	1886.....104,424,561
1877.....99,329,962

TOTAL EXPORTS OF CANADA.

1868 (June 30).....$57,567,888	1878 (June 30).....$79,323,687
1869.....60,474,781	1879.....71,491,265
1870.....73,573,490	1880.....87,911,458
1871.....74,173,618	1881.....98,290,823
1872.....82,639,663	1882.....102,137,203
1873.....89,789,922	1883.....98,085,604
1874.....89,351,928	1884.....91,406,496
1875.....77,886,979	1885.....89,238,361
1876.....80,966,435	1886.....85,251,314
1877.....75,875,393

Then, Sir, we have the tonnage employed in the shipping of the country, showing an increase of over one million of tons notwithstanding, as every person knows, how very depressed that industry has been :

SHIPPING EMPLOYED, NOT INCLUDING COASTING VESSELS.

Tons Register.	Tons Register.
1868.....12,982,825	1878.....12,054,890
1869.....10,461,041	1879.....11,646,812
1870.....11,415,870	1880.....13,577,845
1871.....13,126,028	1881.....13,802,432
1872.....12,806,160	1882.....13,379,882
1873.....11,748,997	1883.....13,770,735
1874.....11,399,857	1884.....14,359,026
1875.....9,527,155	1885.....14,084,713
1876.....9,911,199	1886.....13,968,332
1877.....11,091,244

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

For the coasting trade I have no data earlier than 1876 :

COASTING TRADE—TONNAGE EMPLOYED.

Tons.		Tons.
1876.....10,300,939	1882.....14,791,064	1877.....8,988,862	1883.....15,683,568
1878.....11,047,661	1884.....15,473,707	1879.....12,066,633	1885.....15,944,421
1880.....14,053,013	1886.....16,368,274	1881.....15,116,766

The railway mileage is another evidence—and one of the most marked and striking evidences that possibly any country in the world can show—of the rapid and steady progress that Canada has made, and in that respect, as the House knows, we are still rapidly and steadily increasing :

RAILWAYS IN CANADA.

June 30.	Miles.	June 30.	Miles.
1868.....2,522	1878.....6,143	1869.....2,580	1879.....6,255
1870.....2,679	1880.....6,891	1871.....2,950	1881.....7,260
1872.....3,018	1882.....7,530	1873.....3,609	1883.....8,726
1874.....4,022	1884.....9,575	1875.....4,826	1885.....10,773
1876.....5,157	1886.....11,618	1877.....5,574

The next table shows the number of tons carried, and with respect to it I have only data which enable me to go back to 1876 ; but as will be noticed, between that year and 1886, the tonnage of freight carried has considerably more than doubled so that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways will not be alone in the ability to boast that the tonnage on his roads has more than doubled since 1876, for the tonnage of the whole of the railways of Canada has a good deal more than doubled during that period :

RAILWAYS IN CANADA—TONS CARRIED.

Tons.		Tons.
1876.....6,331,757	1882.....13,575,787	1877.....6,859,796	1883.....13,266,255
1878.....7,883,472	1884.....13,712,269	1879.....8,328,810	1885.....14,659,271
1880.....9,938,858	1886.....15,608,128	1881.....12,068,325

Then, Sir, there is another indication, and perhaps one of the most conclusive of the condition of the great mass of the people—and I am not speaking of the working classes, merely, but of the great body of the people who require to have some regard for the future—and that is life insurance. I am only repeating a very trite observation, the originality of which is certainly not due to myself, in saying that there are few indications of the condition and the prosperity of the people which surpass that of the ratio of life insurance. It is found that just in proportion as a country is prosperous and the people well off, they naturally and prudently invest their savings in life insurance, and the figures in regard to Canada are, in this respect, very striking indeed :

LIFE INSURANCE IN CANADA—NET AMOUNT IN FORCE.

1869.....$35,680,082	1878.....$84,751,937
1870.....42,694,712	1879.....86,273,702
1871.....45,825,935	1880.....90,260,253
1872.....67,234,684	1881.....103,290,932
1873.....77,500,896	1882.....115,042,043
1874.....85,716,325	1883.....124,186,875
1875.....81,560,752	1884.....135,453,726
1876.....84,344,916	1885.....149,962,146
1877.....85,687,903	1886.....171,309,688

Fire insurance is not, perhaps, an equally strong test, although it also is a very conclusive one, for although people ought to use fire insurance in proportion to their poverty, we find, as a matter of fact, that the rule is just the reverse—that they insure in proportion to their ability to do so. The figures in this respect are also very gratifying, indicating that the Canadians are not only a prosperous, but a prudent people, as regards fire insurance :

FIRE INSURANCE IN CANADA—AMOUNT AT RISK.

1869 (Dec. 31).....	$188,359,809	1878 (Dec. 31).....	$409,899,701
1870.....	191,591,586	1879.....	407,357,985
1871.....	228,453,784	1880.....	411,563,271
1872.....	251,723,940	1881.....	462,210,969
1873.....	278,754,835	1882.....	526,856,478
1874.....	306,848,219	1883.....	572,264,041
1875.....	364,421,029	1884.....	605,507,789
1876.....	454,608,180	1885.....	611,794,479
1877.....	420,342,681

Then as to business failures I have no data which go back beyond 1873:

BUSINESS FAILURES IN CANADA.

1873 (Dec. 31).....	$12,334,000	1880 (Dec. 31).....	$ 7,988,000
1874.....	7,696,000	1881.....	5,751,000
1875.....	28,843,000	1882.....	8,587,000
1876.....	25,517,000	1883.....	15,872,000
1877.....	25,523,000	1884.....	18,939,000
1878.....	23,908,000	1885.....	8,743,000
1879.....	29,347,000	1886.....	10,387,000

I think, Sir, I need not detain the House longer to show, and I am quite sure every member of the House will agree that these statistics afford the most reliable data for ascertaining the condition of the country, that the present outlook of Canada is one of the most gratifying character. I have already alluded to the sources which were drawing an increased number of immigrants into this country. I may say that the total arrivals, from the 1st of January to the 30th of April, 1886, were 22,723, while during the same period in 1887, the number has run up to 30,864. Of these the total number who settle in Canada was, in 1886, 12,666, against 17,609, in 1887, or an increase of over 5,000 settlers as compared with the same four months of the previous year. The total number of passengers to the United States through Canada, and I state this, because while we prefer immigrants, especially those with agricultural capabilities and those with capital, to remain in the country, we have no objection to any number of persons who are going to the United States, making use of Canadian channels of communication to get there—the total number of passengers to United States was 10,057 in that period in 1886, and 13,255 in the same period in 1887. Then, Sir, I will refer for a single moment to another evidence—which will probably be regarded by the House as more conclusive than all of those to which I have alluded—of the fact that we have passed the period of serious depression which Canada has suffered in recent years, and that the outlook for the future is all that we can possibly desire. I speak of it as a serious depression, and I notice that some hon. gentlemen opposite look almost incredulous, and why? Not because the same depressing causes and influences have not been in operation in Canada that have been in England, the United States and all other countries, but because here depression has been almost unfeared. Instead of suffering as the country suffered during the previous period of depression which has visited Canada, we have passed through a period of almost equal depression almost without knowing it, and why? Because, Sir, the changed policy of the country, the activity of our industries, the employment given to our own people, the keeping of the money in the country and distributing and expending it among our people, and the great expenditure in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway have enabled Canada to pass through what would otherwise probably have been as serious a depression as existed before, without scarcely knowing that such a thing as depression existed. Now, Sir, with regard to revenue, I am able to state to the House that the Customs revenue, the Excise revenue and the miscellaneous revenue all show a steady, marked and valuable increase for the last ten months of the year; and comparing 18-5-86 with 1886-87 the only exception that will be found in the following table—and its perusal will be most gratifying to every member of the House—refers to those periods in 1835-86, when the anticipated changes in the Tariff led to a very inordinate amount of revenue being collected in one or two months. That, however, of course does not affect the general statement, because it was simply discounting the revenue.

COMPARATIVE STATEMENT OF RECEIPTS FOR YEARS 1885-86 AND 1886-87.

Service.	July.	August.	September.	October.	November.	December.	January.	February.	March.	April.
Customs, 1885-86.....	$ 1,587,706 34	$ 1,739,695 63	$ 1,744,459 54	$ 1,680,142 37	$ 1,294,879 37	$ 1,308,901 84	$ 1,269,606 80	$ 1,545,849 90	$ 2,669,094 82	$ 1,393,637 57
do 1886-87.....	1,703,973 90	1,861,238 29	2,274,244 79	1,868,115 40	1,515,614 36	1,756,945 27	1,691,841 48	1,749,408 96	2,055,497 22	1,851,571 61
	+ 116,267 66	+ 121,532 67	+ 529,785 25	+ 177,973 03	+ 223,734 99	+ 448,043 43	+ 331,334 68	+ 183,559 65	+ 613,597 60	+ 457,944 04
Excise, 1885-86.....	308,346 47	305,107 18	353,742 20	442,791 14	471,123 35	535,214 20	407,079 88	493,786 80	1,917,359 02	167,088 91
do 1886-87.....	351,763 69	376,152 90	420,019 29	497,950 54	523,568 82	561,129 99	472,423 76	499,502 78	539,487 10	544,825 48
	+ 43,417 22	+ 71,045 72	+ 66,277 09	+ 55,156 40	+ 54,445 47	+ 41,916 79	+ 45,344 18	+ 64,294 02	+ 1,377,891 92	+ 387,736 54
Miscellaneous, 1885-86.....	436,638 62	458,073 58	402,970 31	595,777 00	631,618 84	488,514 20	907,638 12	448,546 89	750,577 93	591,606 27
do 1886-87.....	447,325 17	648,983 84	403,940 82	616,395 38	675,641 40	533,914 60	664,140 04	300,732 30	299,454 77	676,172 33
	+ 10,686 65	+ 190,910 26	+ 970 51	+ 20,618 38	+ 44,022 56	+ 55,400 40	+ 243,496 08	+ 147,814 69	+ 451,123 16	+ 83,566 06
Total Revenue, 1885-86.....	2,324,691 23	2,502,876 38	2,501,172 05	2,718,713 51	2,397,621 56	2,302,630 24	2,581,322 50	2,489,192 99	5,337,031 77	2,142,922 78
do 1886-87.....	2,503,052 76	2,866,365 03	3,098,204 90	2,974,461 32	2,719,324 56	2,841,959 86	2,707,405 38	2,469,644 03	2,894,419 09	3,071,569 42
	+ 170,361 53	+ 363,488 66	+ 597,032 85	+ 255,747 81	+ 322,703 02	+ 545,359 62	+ 126,082 76	+ 28,548 96	+ 2,442,612 68	+ 929,243 64
Aggregate Revenue, 1885-86.....	4,835,567 61	5,389,417 79	5,487,612 69	5,437,427 02	4,115,243 12	4,611,144 44	5,282,727 88	4,958,835 98	10,631,450 86	5,284,485 06
do 1886-87.....	5,173,104 52	6,314,730 81	6,585,817 59	6,411,882 84	5,437,948 12	5,458,114 06	5,990,132 76	5,428,483 92	13,525,869 95	6,353,141 46
	+ 337,536 91	+ 925,313 02	+ 1,098,204 90	+ 974,455 82	+ 1,322,705 00	+ 846,969 62	+ 707,404 88	+ 469,647 94	+ 2,894,419 09	+ 1,068,656 40
	+ 553,850 18	+ 1,160,883 03	+ 1,401,430 84	+ 1,726,633 86	+ 2,272,193 49	+ 2,395,276 26	+ 2,395,276 26	+ 2,364,717 30	+ 75,885 38	+ 853,361 26

— Decrease in 1886-87 over 1885-86.

+ Increase in 1886-87 over 1885-86.

In the month of February there is a decrease of $28,548 and in March a decrease of $2,442,612, due to the cause I have mentioned, of an anticipated change in the Tariff, and in the month of April we have again an increase of $929,246; or, deducting the items to which I have alluded as abnormal, and not fairly to be taken into consideration, a total aggregate increase during those ten months—a steady, constant, regular increase, from the last of July up to the end of April—of no less than $853,361.76; and I am sure, Sir, I can give the House no more complete evidence than that, as to the position the country occupies. Now, Sir, I think it will not be necessary for me to detain the House a moment longer in pointing out the evidences which exist on every hand—evidences that he who runs may read—and evidences of the most conclusive character, that Canada has passed the period of depression which she has suffered, and that we are again entering upon a career of very marked and considerable prosperity. There is, however, Sir, a single cloud on the horizon, and it is right that I should spend a moment in giving that a passing notice—that is, the question of threatened non-intercourse on the part of the great Republic to the south of us. Now, Sir, I need not say to the House that the question of the protection of our fisheries has not been a party question in this House. The protection of our fisheries was urged by hon. gentlemen opposite and their press throughout the period since the abrogation of the Washington Treaty, probably with more vehemence than it was urged by the members and press supporting the Government. All parties were at one, that it was the duty—a duty from which no Government in Canada could for a moment shrink—that we should maintain the admitted—I will not say the rights—but I will say the admitted rights that, by long prescription and through a long course of years, had been frankly admitted by the highest authorities in the United States as belonging to Canada. The time has not yet come, and I trust it never will, when any Government in this country will be permitted by this House to shrink for a single instant from temperately and judiciously maintaining in a fair and unflinching manner the admitted rights of the people of this country. I need not tell the House that, even at the risk of exposing this Government to the obloquy and attack, to a certain extent, of hon. gentlemen opposite, we said to the Government of the United States, so anxious are we this question should be settled amicably, if you will undertake to submit to the Congress of the United States a proposal for an international commission to dispose of it in the manner in which enlightened nations are accustomed to deal with controversies of this kind, we will allow your fishermen to enjoy the privilege of fishing in our waters throughout the season without interference or obstruction. And they did that, although our fishermen did not obtain the corresponding right of bringing the fish caught by them into the American market free of duty. But it was felt by this Government that while we were bound to protect the rights of Canada, while we would use every effort men could use to obtain a fair and favorable reciprocal arrangement with the United States—and I may say that I had the honor of being sent on a confidential mission by the Governor General previous to assuming my duties in England, and had a long and interesting communication with the late secretary Frelinghuysen on that subject; I may say I regard it as a great calamity, as a misfortune, that the administration of which he was a member had not been returned to power, and that his life had not been spared to carry out what, I am certain, he was prepared to carry out. The result was that a Democratic president was elected in the United States and a Democratic administration was formed, but that administration had not, as hon. gentlemen know, a majority in the Senate; and although the Government of the United States in good faith carried out the engagement with the Government of Canada, and sent down a proposal to dispose of this matter by an international commission, their proposal was rejected by the Senate. It was for that reason, and not because I wish to express any preference for one party or the other in the United States, that I said I think it was a misfortune that the recommendation of the Democratic President and Government had to be acted upon by a Republican Senate. That proposal was rejected, and Canada was forced, as you all know, ex necessitate rei, to adopt the policy of temperately and judiciously, but firmly, protecting the rights of Canadian fishermen in Canadian waters, and I am glad to be able to state that during my term of office as High Commissioner in London, when I had constant and frequent intercourse with the great statesmen of both of the political parties in that country in relation to this question, whether Lord Granville or Sir Michael Hicks Beach, or Lord Derby was in the Colonial Office—whoever the person was, whatever party was in power, whether Lord Idesleigh or Lord Roseberry was in the Foreign Office, or whoever might be representing the Government—I met the firm and unqualified desire, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, to study carefully what were the undoubted rights of Canada and the Kingdom; and I speak, not of one but of both parties, I speak of the Governments which represented both the great parties in England, when I say I found on their part the steady and uniform desire and determination firmly to maintain Canada in the assertion of her just and legitimate rights. I believe that anxious as are Her Majesty's Government, and everybody knows how extremely anxious they are to avoid the slightest cause of difference with the Government of the United States, the time is far distant when the Government of England will shrink in the slightest degree from giving fair and candid consideration to whatever the claims of Canada may be in relation to that question. Under these circumstances, I think we had a right to expect from the Congress of the United States a different course to that which they pursued. When the President of the United States sent this appeal to Congress for an international commission, what did the people interested in the fisheries say? They said: "We do not want to have anything to do with Canadian waters; we want no international commission; the fish have all turned south, they are all coming into our waters; we do not require to go into Canadian waters at all; we want no commission, no international arrangement, but simply to keep ourselves to ourselves, and let the Canadians do the same." I think that is very much to be regretted. I think the interests of that great country and the interests of Canada alike are bound up in close commercial relations and in extended reciprocal relations. I have no hesitation in saying so. It would be in my judgment a great calamity and misfortune if anything were to prevent reciprocal trade arrangements with the United States which would be, as they were when they existed before, alike beneficial to both countries. We know we were satisfied with reciprocity, but we do not conceal from ourselves, because the statistics of their own country prove it beyond question, that advantageous as was the Reciprocity Treaty from 1854 for twelve years to the people of Canada, it was infinitely more advantageous to the people of the United States. We know that, satisfied as we were with the arrangements made by my right hon. friend in connection with the Washington Treaty, that, advantageous as those arrangements were to the people of Canada, the statistics on both sides of the line prove that they were infinitely more beneficial to the great Republic to the south of us. But, as I say, we were met by the proposal to arm the President with the power of declaring non-intercourse. I do not believe he will put that power into force, and I am strengthened in that belief by the letter which the President of the United States addressed to the parties who communicated with him on the subject, and which showed that that gentleman, armed with this tremendous power, fully recognised the enormous interests that had grown up under that peaceful intercourse between Canada and the United States, and that he was fully alive to the momentous responsibility that would rest upon his shoulders if he should put it in operation. He might well feel that; when the statistics of his own country prove that during the 50 years to which the President alluded as having been expended in creating between the United States and Canada an enormous commerce and strong ties and relations, the people of the United States had sent into Canada no less than $1,200,000,000 worth of products of the farms and manufactories and various industries of the United States, and that, in addition to that $1,200,000,000 worth of American products sent into Canada, they had also sent in $200,000,000 of foreign products, whereas Canada, during that 50 years, had sent into the United States but $1,050,000,000 products in all; leaving a balance of trade during that 50 years of no less than $350,000,000 in favor of the United States. Now, these figures show that, large as are the interests which Canada has, the United States has a still larger interest in maintaining those friendly reciprocal relations that have enabled these two countries, the great Republic to the south of us and this rising Dominion of Canada, to steadily progress as friendly rivals in commercial enterprise, and in developing as best they could the resources of the two countries on both sides of the line. I hold in my hand a statement showing Canada's trade with the United States for a period of fifty years, comprising three periods, the first period of thirty-three years from 1821 to 1853, prior to the Reciprocity Treaty; the second period from 1854 to 1866, under the Reciprocity Treaty; and the third period from 1867 to 1879, that is from the date of Confederation to the adoption of the protective policy. I have separated the latter, not in order to draw any party distinction, but to show how the trade of the United States is affected by the revenue tariff, and by the protective policy which was afterwards adopted. Then there is the fourth period, embracing the time since the protective policy was adopted. The statement is as follows:—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

CANADA'S TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

1st period, 33 years, 1821-53—

United States exports to British North America—
Home products	$ 110,152,214
Foreign products.....	27,064,495
Total exports to British North America.....	$ 137,216,709
United States imports from do	67,794,426
Balance in favor of United States.....	$ 69,422,283
Average annual balance in favor of United States	$ 2,073,402

2nd period, 1854-66—

United States exports to British North America—
Home products	$ 300,808,370
Foreign products.....	62,379,718
Total exports to British North America.....	$ 363,188,088
United States imports from do	267,612,131
Balance in favor of United States.....	$ 95,575,957
Average annual balance in favor of United States	$ 7,351,766

3rd period, 1867-79—

United States exports to Canada—
Home products	$ 477,164,790
Foreign products.....	34,653,810
Total exports to Canada.....	$ 511,818,600
United States imports from Canada.....	399,423,586
Balance in favor of United States	$ 112,395,014
Average annual balance in favor of United States	$ 8,645,770

4th period, 1880-86—

United States exports to Canada—
Home products	$ 297,542,282
Foreign products.....	16,932,329
Total exports to Canada.....	$ 313,874,511
United States imports from Canada.....	274,947,511
Balance in favor of United States	$ 38,927,000
Average annual balance.....	$ 5,561,000

These figures are instructive, because they show that our American neighbors, so far from having any reason to complain of the closest commercial relations which have existed between us, have been very largely gainers under every system which has operated during the last fifty years. That is the solitary cloud upon the horizon, but it is not without its silver lining. Had this threatened non-intercourse been carried out, had any President, armed with such a power, under any circumstances been induced to put it in operation, what would have been our position as we stood half a dozen years ago? I ask this House what would have been our position under such a condition of things if this Government had not carried out the policy of completing at the earliest possible moment a great transcontinental railway from the port of Montreal to the shores of the Pacific Ocean? During the late insurrection the value of that policy was established beyond controversy. On that occasion it was shown that Canada had saved in blood and treasure, by the fact of being able to utilize that line of communication in order to send the gallant yeomanry of the older Provinces to the scene of the troubles, more than would cover the $30,000,000 which I asked the House to grant as a loan, even if it had been made a gift, and we had never received a dollar of it back again except in the service which we received from the advanced position to which that company was enabled to carry that great national enterprise, and which enabled us to send our forces over that line. But what would be our position to-day if we stood with this threat of non-intercourse flaunted in our faces and knew that we were dependent on American channels of communication for our connection with the rising city of Winnipeg, the capital of the Province of Manitoba, and the great North West of this country? What would have been our position if the Canadian Pacific Railway had not penetrated the Rocky Mountains, if the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite had been adopted, and there was no line north of Lake Superior or through the Rocky Mountains to connect us with British Columbia? In that case we would have been at the feet of our American neighbors, instead of, as we are to-day, though only five millions of people, being able to say to them, that deeply as we would deplore so mad and so unjustifiable an act on the part of a great country like this great Republic of the United States adopting such a barbarous policy as that of non-intercourse with a friendly power, we stand in the proud position of knowing that if that policy were adopted to-morrow, we have perfected our own lines of communication and have the most complete means of communication from the furthest and most remote section of our country down to the sea. As I said before, this cloud, this only cloud has its silver lining. Non-intercourse would not be an unmixed evil. I would deeply deplore it; every member of the House and every intelligent Canadian would deeply deplore any interruption of the commercial relations which exist between this country and the United States, but I cannot forget that, if this policy of non-intercourse were adopted, it would lead to the development of those channels of communication between ourselves, and that the commerce of Canada, which to-day is building up New York—I am speaking of the through traffic—which to-day is building up Boston and Portland, would be carried through exclusively Canadian channels to Canadian ports, and would build up Montreal, Quebec, St. Andrew's, St. John and Halifax with a rapidity which the people of this country can scarcely understand. Still further, I say that I believe that, if that policy of non-intercourse were carried out, strong as is the sentiment of free trade in the minds of the Imperial Government and the Imperial Parliament, still, consistently with the policy which Lord Salisbury laid down when he was interviewed by the sugar refiners and was shown by them that the bounty-fed sugar was crushing out the industries of the United Kingdom, and when he said that, strongly as he had adhered to the policy of free trade, he considered that a condition of things of that kind would warrant the Imperial Parliament, without departing from their present policy of free trade, in retaliating by imposing a duty equal to the bounty on the sugar which came into competition with the refiners of the United Kingdom. That policy has only to be carried a very short step further to lead Her Majesty's Government to the conclusion, that they would owe it to Canada and to themselves, as being the power under which Canada is happy to serve, to meet that policy of non-intercourse by such a different mode of treating the grain from the United States of America and the grain grown in Canada, as would vivify the industries of this country, especially the great farming industry of this country, to an extent which would make the most marvellous change in this Dominion. Sir, I never expect the time will come when non-intercourse will be adopted; and I am sanguine from my own knowledge of the growing sentiment of public men in England of the vital importance of Canada to the Empire, and their duty to give us all the support to which we are entitled, that if such a policy were adopted we could derive that benefit from it, and it could be done without any injury to any interest in the Empire. The competition between the wheat of India and that which could be grown in Canada under such an enormous impetus to that growth, would be sufficient to prevent any material advance in the price of bread to the British consumer. So, looking at this question in all its bearings, while I felt bound to give it a passing notice, and while I most earnestly hope that no such policy will be adopted; while I have not the slightest idea that it will, I say that should it be adopted, great as is the American Republic, enormous as is their population, they will find that Canada feels that she has as great and as valuable a portion of this North American continent under her management and control and to be developed, as that lying to the south of us; and they will find the people of this country, on both sides of politics, a united band of patriots who, sinking every other consideration will say that whatever Government is in power they owe it to their country, they owe it to themselves, to show that there will be no faltering in maintaining to the utmost the undoubted and admitted rights that belong to the people of Canada. Now, Sir, I may say that I recognise the fact that under the protective policy that we have adopted, and which, as we know beyond peradventure, the country most heartily approves and endorses, the great stimulus that has been given to Canadian industries has enabled them largely to overtake the consuming power of the country. We know that the result has been that which we all apprehended it would be, a fall in prices, and that the people of this country would enjoy as the result of that development of our industry by a protective policy, an opportunity of obtaining everything that they required and as cheaply as they would if that policy had never been put into operation. Now, under these circumstances, what we must especially do, what I think it behooves any person charged with the responsibility of governing this country to do, what it behooves this Parliament to do, whether hon. gentlemen sit on one side of the House or the other, is to adopt all the means in our power of developing the trade and business of our country. The efforts of the Government have been directed to that end. I may say, Sir, in that relation, that in 1879 Sir Alexander Galt, before his appointment as High Commissioner for Canada in London, was charged with the duty of endeavoring to negotiate with Spain a treaty of advanced commercial trade relations with Cuba and Porto Rico. That treaty, hon. gentlemen know, Sir Alexander Galt was not able to carry to completion, and when I had the honor of succeeding him in the office of High Commissioner, he left for my information and perusal a document in which he said that he found himself greatly hampered in discharging the duties imposed upon him by the Government of Canada, because he only stood in the position of a commercial commissioner, and it was necessary that all his negotiations with the Government of Spain should be filtered through Her Majesty's Minister at the Court of Madrid. At a subsequent period I was instructed by the Government of Canada, when Sir Leonard Tilley was Finance Minister, to take up that question and endeavor to arrange for improved commercial relations. It became more imperatively necessary for Canada than ever, because the United States' Government had succeeded in arranging a modus vivendi with Spain, which placed all their exports, their ships, and everything they had to send to Cuba and Porto Rico, upon infinitely more advantageous terms than the products of Canada. I addressed myself to the discussion of this question with Her Majesty's Government—and I may say that the Colonial Office at once put me in personal communication with the Foreign Office, and I was instructed to take the subject up with them—and the result was that after a full discussion of the whole question, the Foreign Office communicated to the Colonial Office not only that they had decided to allow Canada to negotiate such treaty with foreign countries as her own interest required, in conjunction with their own Minister, but they had decided that the representative of Canada must be clothed with plenipotentiary powers, and be placed upon an equal footing. Although I have not been able to bring down the correspondence moved for by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) for the reasons stated, that this matter not being terminated, the correspondence cannot, with advantage to the public, be laid upon the Table until a conclusion is arrived at. I will, however, read to this House an extract from a letter sent by the Foreign Office to the Colonial Office, dated 26th July, 1884, and forwarded to me for the information of the Canadian Government:

SIR CHARLES TUPPER.

"If the Spanish Government are favorably disposed a full power for these negotiations will be given to Sir Robert Morrier"—

Who was then Ambassador of Her Majesty's Government at Madrid—

"and Sir Charles Tupper jointly. The actual negotiations would probably be conducted by Sir Charles Tupper; but the convention, if concluded, must be signed by both plenipotentiaries, and be entered into between Her Majesty and the King of Spain, with the special object of regulating Canadian trade with the Spanish Territories specified in the convention."

I am quite certain that the House will appreciate the great importance of that arrangement, and they will feel that the discussions that have taken place in this House have no doubt done good in relation to that question. They will feel that another step has been gained by the concession from Her Majesty's Government in this matter of trade negotiations, and that Canada is to have the freest and fullest scope. But more than that, while they are prepared to give plenipotentiary powers to the representative of Canada, whoever he may be, as selected by the Government to negotiate those treaties, we are to have this vantage ground—and I draw the attention of the House to it as a very important one—we are to have all the aid and sympathy and support of Her Majesty's Government, through Her Majesty's Minister, at whatever place these negotiations may be carried on. Now, I may say that subsequently the Government of Spain intimated that they would like us not to proceed with these negotiations at present until an elaborate treaty which was arranged between Spain and the United States, had been passed upon by the American Senate. We were anxious to comply with the recommendation, and for this reason: If our proposition to Spain were accepted, it would be found to be utterly worthless if the advanced and extended treaty between the United States and Cuba and Porto Rico had been carried into effect. Hon. gentlemen are aware that the Senate of the United States rejected that treaty, and I may say that subsequently Her Majesty's Government were enabled to negotiate a treaty with Spain as between England and Spain herself, the colonies not being included. I at once drew the attention of the Colonial and Foreign Offices to the great injury that would result from Canada not being included in the treaty. I took up the question with Her Majesty's Government. I pointed out what were our requirements. I communicated with Sir Clare Ford, and pointed out what Canada required, not only that she should be placed under the most favored nation clause in Cuba and Porto Rico, which Germany and France enjoyed, but that she should obtain the advantage which the United States had obtained by the abolition of the 10 per cent. specific duty. Sir Clare Ford entered most heartily into that question, and I am glad to be able to say that without the concession of anything—and I point this out to hon. gentlemen who have discussed this subject a good deal, for it is a most important feature that a dependency of the Crown, a portion of the British Empire without any concession on our part (and we were prepared to make considerable concessions)—we obtained from the treaty negotiated by Her Majesty's Government and from concessions given by Her Majesty's Government in relation to wine duties there, and which do not affect us in the slightest, a proof of their anxiety to do justice to Canada, and we obtained everything the United States enjoyed under the modus vivendi which had been negotiated between Spain and the Government of the United States. I point that out as evidence of the advantages we enjoyed, not only that great liberty was conceded to us, but that every advantage was given to us, and our interests were promoted by Her Majesty's Government in treaties sought to be arranged between Great Britain and foreign countries. Since that period I am glad to be able to inform the House that the Government of Spain approached myself through Her Majesty's Minister at London, and approached Sir Clare Ford through the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Madrid, stating that they were now ready to take up the question of an enlarged arrangement between Canada and Spain as touching the trade between Canada and Cuba and Porto Rico. So important do I consider this question that I proposed to the right hon. gentleman (Sir John A. Macdonald) to allow me to return to Canada and discuss with him before going to Madrid the whole question of this proposed arrangement from which I believe the trade of this country may receive a great and valuable impulse in connection with those important Spanish Islands. As the House is aware, I received permission from the right hon. gentleman to return here, but it appears he had other duties for me to perform before I should turn my face towards Madrid. However, I do hope that, when Parliament rises at a very early day, the right hon. gentleman will allow me to return to London and proceed at an early day to Madrid, where I believe there is an opportunity of advancing the interests of Canada in a very marked and important degree. Now, Sir, I say that, consistent with that policy, we propose to aid in developing trade—I should not say we, because the Government had anticipated me before my return—and I found tenders were invited for steam communication between the West India Islands and Canada, and as will be gathered from the report of Mr. Wylde, who was sent as commercial commissioner to ascertain what opportunity existed for extending our trade, there is an opening for a very large and extensive trade, especially provided we can succeed in negotiating such a treaty as I have every reason to believe will now be found procurable. Canada now enjoys, to a very large extent, the fish trade with Cuba and Porto Rico. Our fish is just what they require, and I believe they obtain from the United States Canadian fish which passes through American hands. Not only so, but there is a large flour, lumber and potato trade to be built up and business done in a number of articles of general consumption, and this business is open to us if a favorable arrangement can be made. In order to show that this Government are alive to the importance of developing intercommunication, and to show how they estimate the importance of developing Canadian trade through every possible channel, I may say that tenders have been invited by the Postmaster General for a rapid steam service across the Atlantic in order to utilise our great transcontinental highway, for we think the time has come when in the interests of the Dominion as fast and as good a service should exist between France and England and Canada as is to be found between either Germany, France, England or New York. If by any means we can succeed in establishing such a line of rapid steamers on the Atlantic we will not only make this a great transcontinental highway and rapidly develop our trade on the Pacific, but I believe we will be able to deliver the mails in Boston and New York, certainly in Chicago and all western cities, a very considerable time before they could be delivered through any other channel. I can only say that Canada will be delighted to do that work for the Republic, and we shall be most happy to have this Dominion made a channel of communication either for their commerce or their mails or their passengers. I am quite sure there is a great field there for Canadian development, and that subject is engaging the attention of the Government. We have at this moment a commercial agent in Australia, where there is also a wide field for the development of Canadian industries. The gentlemen charged with the duty of administering the affairs of the various Australian Provinces at the Colonial Exhibition, were deeply impressed with the enormous strides made by us in the various branches of manufactures, and again and again they said to me: "Why cannot we obtain from British Provinces the goods we obtain, and carry on with them the trade we now do with a foreign country, the United States." The Government of Canada, as has already been stated to the House, with a view to establish a great traffic in the east, an intercommunication with China and Japan, have agreed to give £15,000 yearly, out of £60,000 required, provided Her Majesty's Government furnishes the additional £45,000, to ensure a rapid service from Vancouver to Yokohama and Shanghai, and Hong Kong in China. The Canadian Government have further agreed to give £25,000 per annum, provided £160,000 per annum, the amount required, is raised in England and the Australian colonies, in order to have a rapid line of steam communication between the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway and all the islands of Australasia, including New Zealand.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am quite sure, Sir, that the House has listened with very great pleasure to the evidences I have been able to lay before it, of the undoubted condition of progress and prosperity that Canada enjoys. I am quite sure, Sir, that no member of this House can fail to be gratified at the indisputable evidence, furnished by everything that can indicate a condition of progress and prosperity in a country, that Canada is at this moment in an exceedingly prosperous condition, and that the outlook for the future is all that we can desire. But, Sir, I may ask the House for a single moment, to what do we owe that condition of progress and prosperity, upon which we are all able to congratulate ourselves at this moment? I am quite certain that the answer will be found in the words—National Policy. It is the National Policy which has lifted Canada out of the position that it occupied a few years ago; it is the National Policy that has enabled it to pass through what otherwise would have been a period of great depression, without seriously feeling it; it is the National Policy that had vivified every industry in this country, that has furnished employment for Canadian hands on Canadian soil, that has kept the money of the country within the country, and that has diffused prosperity from one end of this country to the other. But, Sir, I drew attention to the fact that production had, to a considerable extent, overtaken consumption, and that the necessity was imposed on the Government of endeavoring to find outlets for the industries of Canada, by extending and developing our trade with other countries. I referred to the efforts we were making in connection with lines of steam communication, but I omitted on that occasion to refer to the fact that the sanction which was obtained from this House to establish a line of steam communication with France has, as you know, Sir, not been successful up to the present moment. But I am glad to be able to say that the appropriation placed by Parliament at the service of the Government for that purpose is about to be utilised, and that a strong French company are preparing to put on a line of steamers between France and Canada that I have no doubt will render that effort on our part as successful as the others. Now, Sir, I intend to invite the attention of the House to a new field for the development of the National Policy. We have applied it to the great cotton industry; we have applied it to the woollen industry; we have applied it to innumerable industries all over Canada, and with marvellous success. But, Sir, there is a field, perhaps the most important, still untrodden. There is a field still unoccupied that presents greater possibilities and greater opportunities than any other for developing Canadian industry, and it lies at the very root and foundation of the National Policy in all countries where it has been adopted. I refer to the iron industry. I say, Sir, that while we have adopted the National Policy with reference to other industries, while we have taken a leaf out of the book of our great neighbors to the south of us—and we are always delighted to avail ourselves of their experience, in order to benefit ourselves—while we have adopted to a certain extent their policy in reference to other great industries, in relation to this, the greatest industry of all in this country and in all countries where iron and coal are found to abound, we have neglected up to the present hour to do justice to this great Canadian industry. Sir, the Government of the United States, after the most careful and elaborate consideration of this question, after appointing a commission to go from one end of the Union to the other, to collect information and investigate the subject to the very root in all its bearings, adopted a thoroughly sound, rational, and scientific policy. They adopted the cardinal principle at which we are aiming, and that is the application of the principle of protection in reference to the amount of labor consumed in the production of the article. Now, Sir, down to the present hour there has never been an effort made, such as I believe can be made, to adopt in all its bearings that scientific application of the principle of protection to the labor involved. What we have already aimed at—what we have to a large extent attained—has been the development of the industries of the country, by protecting the industries of the country. But, Sir, in relation to this, the great industry of Canada, the great industry of Great Britain, the great industry of the United States, of Germany, of Belgium; one of the greatest industries of France and one of the greatest and most important industries of all the great countries that possess iron and coal, we have down to the present time ignored that fundamental principle of the application of the system of protection in proportion to the labor involved. What have we done? The United States adopted in regard to the iron industry, the policy of applying a certain Tariff to pig iron. They imposed a duty of $6 a ton; they have imposed a duty of $6, $7, $8, $9 or whatever number of dollars a ton was necessary, in order to establish the industry within their borders. At the present moment, however, their tariff is $6 a ton, imposed on every ton of pig iron coming into competition with a ton of pig iron produced in the United States. And, Sir, they have graded that duty—not with mathematical exactness, but to a large extent graded accurately their tariff upon the iron industry of the country, just in proportion to the amount of labor, the number of days' labor, required in order to produce a ton of any particular quality of iron. What have we done? Why, Sir, we have at this moment a bounty of $1.50 a ton on pig iron and $2 a ton duty upon pig iron. What then? Giving a protection to the production of a ton of pig iron, we have a duty, instead of three times as great, as the United States have adopted—or from twice to three times as great—on the puddled bar, we have a duty of $1.70 per ton. So that while we protect the inferior article, the lowest form in which iron is presented, we have so constructed our tariff as to make it utterly impossible to utilise and derive a benefit from it, by grading our tariff in proportion to the amount of labor involved. Now, Sir, if there is a country in the world to which the iron industry is important, it is Canada, and why? Because we possess the coal and we possess the iron ore and we possess the fluxes; and therefore it is necessary to develop the great iron industry within our borders, and yet down to the present moment we have left almost untouched, this enormous, this almost illimitable field for the extension of our National Policy. The national importance of the iron industry is seen at once when we take into consideration the fact that it furnishes the material necessary for agriculture, for commerce, for manufactures, for offence and defence, and for all other manufactures, with scarcely an exception. It becomes, for these reasons, the most important of all the industries of the country. So valuable is it regarded, that all nations who have the means of developing that industry, have addressed themselves to that work as one of prime importance. The means of developing the iron industry of a country depend, first, upon the possession of the ore; second, upon the possession of the coal or other fuel that is required to utilise it; third, upon the possession of the fluxes, and fourth, upon the proximity of these articles to each other, and of the facilities for transporting the product from the points where it is manufactured to the great centres of the country, where it is to be used as an article of commerce. Now, Sir, Canada occupies in this regard a vantage ground over almost every country in the world. England possesses coal and iron ore to an almost illimitable extent; but the House will perhaps be surprised to learn that even England, with all its ore and all its coal, imports from Spain, a thousand miles away, more ore than is required to manufacture the entire production of steel in England. The United States possess almost unlimited quantities of iron ore and coal; but they have no such advantage as Canada enjoys. Their iron and coal are widely separated from each other—so widely separated that the ores of Wisconsin and the Lake Superior region are sent a thousand miles away to Pittsburg to the coal area to be manufactured into iron. In the southern States they have coal and iron in close proximity, but with this drawback, that they are over a hundred miles from the seaboard, over which distance the manufactured article has to be transported by rail. France, which has developed a great iron industry, has to import both iron and coal. That country has both ore and coal to some extent, but no less than 35 per cent. of the ore manufactured in France is imported from a long distance. Belgium has plenty of coal, but imports iron ore from Germany. A large amount of iron ore manufactured in Belgium, which has become so powerful a competitor of England in iron, is manufactured from ore imported from Luxembourg; but it sends all the way to Spain for the ore used in the manufacture of Bessemer steel. If these countries, without the advantage of having iron ore and coal in close proximity, can import, one or the other a thousand miles and carry on the manufactures of iron, what can Canada do, which has the great advantage of possessing illimitable coal fields and illimitable stores of iron ore in close proximity? England and the United States both form notable examples of what can be done in the development of a great industry by protection. I need not tell this House that the most extreme protection that ever was adopted in any country in the world was adopted in England in connection with the manufacture of iron. England not only imposed high duties on iron coming in from abroad, but when it was discovered how coal could be used instead of charcoal and the manufacture of the steam engine was brought into play, it actually prohibited the workmen who were acquainted with those processes from leaving the country in order to retain the industry within their own borders. The United States recognising that the manufacture of iron within their own borders lay at the very foundation of that protective policy that has made that great country as flourishing as it is to-day, at the very foundation of that great policy that has enabled them to grapple with a gigantic war debt and sweep it away by hundreds of millions until to-day they are only embarrassed by the difficulty of knowing how to get rid of the revenue that is furnished by that policy. I say, Sir, recognising that this question of the iron industry lay at the very foundation of their national policy, they adopted a high protective tariff, and after the most careful, the most scientific, and the most elaborate investigation, they graded the tariff in relation to the different branches of the iron trade in order to furnish just such protection as the amount of labor entering into the creation of any article of industry involved. And thus, Sir, recognising the great principle of protecting first and above all the labor of the country, they have built up an iron industry that has astonished the civilised world. Germany imported 100,000 tons of pig iron in 1860; and it exported 1,000,000 in 1881—how? By adopting the policy that has prevailed in Canada of giving a feeble protection to the production of iron in its lowest stage, and leaving all the others unprotected to come into competition with it? No, but by adopting the true principle of protecting the labor that entered into the production of iron in all its departments; and thus, instead of being dependent, as it was, upon other countries for its iron, it has become a great exporter, as you see, of that commodity. The production of pig iron in the world in 1865 was 9,250,000 tons; in 1883 it had gone up to 21,000,000 tons, showing that all that is necessary in order to extend to an unlimited degree the use of iron is to be able to produce it, and showing also that it affords a field for the application of the sound principles of the National Policy that no other industry in the country affords. The result of this policy may be briefly stated that during last twenty-one years, from 1865 to 1885, the increase in the production of pig iron in Great Britain has been 76 per cent. In the United States, 456 per cent.; in Germany, 237 per cent.; France, 64 per cent.; Belgium, 64; Austria and Hungary, 152 per cent. So has the iron industry, under a national policy adopted for its development and its protection, flourished in all these countries. Of course, England when she became, under the most rigid and determined system of protection ever adopted in any country of the world, so advanced as to out-distance all other countries to such an extent that she thought she could adopt the principles of free trade, she adopted those principles; and she adopted them under the delusion, propounded by Mr. Cobden and sincerely believed in by that distinguished man, but proved by the result to be utterly fallacious, that if England, with her advanced position of mistress of the industrial arts of the world, adopted the policy of free trade, all other countries would be obliged to follow in her wake. And what is the result? It is that instead of following in her wake, France and Germany and all these countries have held fast by the national policy of protecting their own industries, and the consequence is that they are at this moment in a position to paralyse to a large extent the industries of England with all her advantages of iron and coal in close proximity. By their protective policy they are developing and advancing their industries in a way that England finds herself incapable of keeping up with, and the result is that Belgium and Germany are keen competitors on English soil with the great English industries. The time is not long since, when charcoal iron was one of the most important industries in Ontario and Quebec. I have no hesitation in saying that if the protection we have given to cotton and woollen and all other industries of Canada be applied to iron to-morrow, it will show what the past history of Canada has shown, that these charcoal iron industries will again be in full blast, and that in Ontario and Quebec they will become most essential and important industries to-morrow as they were in days gone by. Every person knows that charcoal iron is the most valuable product of iron; every person knows the increase of value of charcoal iron; every person knows that the great difficulty is the cost of producing it, but there is no country in the world that has such a field for the production of charcoal iron as the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario. What have you, Sir, in these Provinces? You have the ore in illimitable quantity, you have a boundless field for the production of the ore, and you have, running along through the same tract of country, magnificent forests adapted to furnishing the charcoal. At present what are the people obliged to do? Those who go into the wilderness to make a farm have to spend their valuable labor in cutting down this timber, and consuming it on the ground without receiving anything from it. Vivify, give protection to the iron industry, as you have given it to cotton, woollen, and everything else, and what will be the result? It will be, that when a man goes into the forest to make a farm in Ontario or Quebec, the most valuable product under his hand will be that which he has to spend all his labor and capital now in wasting. You will have colonisation extended in Ontario and Quebec as nothing else could extend it. The experiments recently made by some of the great lines of railway in the United States have shown, as the result of scientific analysis, that the mode of making the life of a rail infinitely greater than it is, is to have incorporated in the rail a large portion of charcoal iron, and under this recent discovery, there is a field for the development of charcoal iron, that will go far to make it one of the leading industries of Canada. There is at present, as you know, in Ontario, running through a large number of counties and townships, a most valuable deposit of iron ore. A railway has been built to Central Ontario, over 100 miles long, to carry this ore to Weller's Bay, to be shipped across the lake to Charlotte, Oswego, and other points on the American side. Well, from Oswego and Charlotte on the American side to the anthracite coal field, is only 150 miles, and I say that, under a policy which will give iron the protection we give to everything else in Canada, under the National Policy, you will have the ships that convey the ore to Oswego or to Charlotte, or to any of those places from Kingston, Cobourg and Weller's Bay, bringing back the anthracite coal, and you will have the establishment of blast furnaces at Cobourg, Kingston and Weller's

Sir CHARLES TUPPER,

Bay, that will give the iron industry of Ontario the same position it occupied years ago. I may attract your attention, Sir, for a single moment to the relative importance of these industries. We have given to the manufacture of sugar, and the manufacture of cotton, and the manufacture of woollens, a large protection with the result we anticipated, of building up these industries and rendering them flourishing. In addition to that, we have from 1868 to 1884, admitted $2,950,000 worth of machinery free into Canada, in order to give increased protection and development to these industries. Now, Sir, the relative importance of these industries may be shown by the following figures, compiled in regard to the United States. It will be found that in the refining of sugar and molasses in the United States, there are forty-nine establishments employed. The capital invested in these is $27,432,500; the number of males employed over 16 years of age, 5,832; the number of children and youths, 25; the amount paid in wages during the year, $2,875,032; the value of materials, $144,698,499; and the value of the product, $155,484,915. So much for sugar. In the manufacture of cotton goods there are 1,005 establishments, in which the capital employed amounts to $219,000,000; number of males employed 64,000; females, 91,000; and 30,000 children. The total amount of wages is $45,614,419; the value of materials, $113,765,000, and the value of the product, $210,000,000. Of woollen goods, the number of establishments is 1,990, $96,000,000 of capital is employed, 46,000 males, 29,000 females and 10,000 children are engaged; $25,836,000 is paid in wages; the value of the material is $100,000,000 and the value of the products $160,000,000. Now, come to iron and steel, and you will see at a glance by the comparison how entirely the iron and steel industry distances all the other industries of that great country, in regard to the amount of capital employed, of people engaged, and the result. Of iron and steel industries there are 1,005, the capital employed is $230,000,000; the number of males above sixteen years of age engaged, 133,000; of females, 45; of children, 7,730; the wages paid out are $55,476,875; the value of material is $191,000,000; the value of the product is $296,000,000. So you see that, great as are the cotton and woollen industries in the United States, as regards the employment of a vast population and the support of a great body of people in connection with these various industries, the iron industry far outstrips and leaves everything else in the rear. Now, charcoal iron from bog iron ore was formerly an important industry both in Ontario and in Quebec, and charcoal iron was also made in Carleton, N.B., where to-day, under a policy of fostering this industry in the same way as the cotton and woollen and other industries have been fostered, that blast furnace in Carleton would again be lighted up and would be the foundation of a new and extensive industry in the Province of New Brunswick. The following table, which I have had sent to every member, in order to make the matter more distinct, will show the Canadian iron trade at a glance:—

IMPORTS OF IRON AND STEEL AND MANUFACTURES THEREOF INTO THE DOMINION FOR HOME CONSUMPTION FOR YEARS

1868	$ 6,885,365	1879	7,952,295
1869	7,385,780	1880	10,128,660
1870	7,750,867	1881	12,955,855
1871	10,808,645	1882	17,499,488
1872	15,913,179	1883	20,080,274
1873	25,435,020	1884	14,790,727
1874	20,700,387	1885	11,415,713
1875	18,199,198	1886	11,053,365
1876	12,965,117
1877	11,082,331	Total.....	$253,210,512
1878	9,398,306

This large amount of $253,000,000 was paid out in hard cash by the people of Canada to support the iron industries of other countries while our own country teemed as no country in the world teems with all the materials necessary to manufacture iron, the coal, the ore, the fluxes, everything that is necessary, and with the labor of our country unemployed. Of this amount $94,819,630 was free and $158,330,882 dutiable. There is also a table showing the balance of trade, and how much is accounted for by the importation of iron and steel and the manufacture thereof. You have only to look at that in order to see that the balance of trade against Canada is largely and at once accounted for. If you subtract the amount of imports paid by Canada for iron to sustain the iron industries of other countries, you will find that it is nearly equal to the amount by which our imports have exceeded our exports, and, if you want to balance the trade of the country, if you want to have no outgoing beyond the incoming of the country, cut the Gordian knot, put this iron industry upon the same footing and foundation that you have put all the other industries of Canada, and you will sweep away to a large extent the balance of trade which stands recorded against Canada up to the present time. The imports have amounted to from fourteen to fifteen millions annually since Confederation. As I shall show you directly, there is no country in the world that is consuming iron to a greater extent than this Canada of ours. The consumption of iron in the whole world is 33½ lbs. per capita. In Canada the consumption is 260 lbs. per capita. In 1883 Canada imported at the rate of $1.55 per capita. Assuming an average of $35 a ton, that would represent 260 lbs. per capita, which makes Canada the third country in the world in the consumption of iron. Great Britain is the first, the United States the second and Canada the third of all the countries in the world in regard to the consumption of iron. The following table shows the consumption of imported iron, steel, and manufactures in Canada and in the United States, since 1863:—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

CONSUMPTION PER CAPITA OF IMPORTED, IRON, STEEL AND MANUFACTURES

Year.	Canada.	United States.	Year.	Canada.	United States.
	$ cts.	$ cts.		$ cts.	$ cts.
1868.....	2 01	0 80	1878.....	2 40	0 18
1869.....	2 17	0 74	1879.....	2 00	0 20
1870.....	2 25	0 81	1880.....	2 49	0 91
1871.....	3 01	1 09	1881.....	2 98	1 00
1872.....	4 55	1 30	1882.....	4 05	1 02
1873.....	7 01	1 39	1883.....	4 56	0 75
1874.....	5 77	0 81	1884.....	3 32	0 60
1875.....	5 15	0 46	1885.....	2 28	0 50
1876.....	3 46	0 28	1886.....	2 20	0 61
1877.....	2 89	0 22

From this it will be seen that in the United States they produce most of their own iron, whilst we import ours. Now, I will turn the attention of the House for a moment to a matter which lies in close proximity to this question of the iron industry, and that is the coal trade of the country. The following table shows the consumption of coal in the Dominion since 1868:—

TOTAL CONSUMPTION OF COAL IN THE DOMINION.

Years.	Net tons of 2,000 lbs.	Years.	Net tons of 2,000 lbs.
1868.....	714,893	1878.....	1,665,814
1869.....	636,704	1879.....	1,748,164
1870.....	859,630	1880.....	2,094,844
1871.....	852,217	1881.....	2,260,630
1872.....	1,227,653	1882.....	2,708,654
1873.....	1,398,403	1883.....	3,086,689
1874.....	1,454,636	1884.....	3,556,673
1875.....	1,362,363	1885.....	3,439,745
1876.....	1,466,531	1886.....	3,515,769
1877.....	1,751,031

The total production of coal for the Dominion is shown in another table:

TOTAL PRODUCTION OF COAL IN THE DOMINION.

Years.	Net tons of 2,000 lbs.	Years.	Net tons of 2,000 lbs.
1868.....	623,391	1878.....	1,109,595
1869.....	687,527	1879.....	1,152,783
1870.....	734,285	1880.....	1,456,795
1871.....	804,431	1881.....	1,514,542
1872.....	1,038,349	1882.....	1,845,548
1873.....	1,228,852	1883.....	1,831,819
1874.....	1,068,166	1884.....	1,997,368
1875.....	998,104	1885.....	1,973,987
1876.....	950,483	1886.....	2,104,170
1877.....	1,020,875

I may say that an unlimited increase, so to speak, is quite within the possibilities of the legislation of this House. I need not tell the House that, notwithstanding that great increase in the production of coal in Canada, a large number of the coal mines of Canada—take, for instance, those in Pictou, those in Cape Breton—which depend on the sea, are closed for something like six months in the year; and that upon a safe calculation it may be said that an enormous amount of loss of working power is caused by the fact that they are only able to work half time in consequence of a want of demand for the article itself. Now, the protection of iron in this country will give to the coal industry of this country such a development as will enormously increase the demand for labor in connection with the mining of coal and of ore. The manufacture of charcoal in the timbered country I have already referred to, and to the enormous amount of labor it will involve. The principle of the American tariff I have already explained. They have created this great iron industry in the United States by giving to the labor employed protection just in proportion to the amount of days' work consumed in producing the article, whether it was a ton of pig iron, a ton of puddled bars, a ton of bar iron, or the manufacture in its very highest state. Our policy, as I have shown, is diametrically the reverse, and the result is that while they have been building up this magnificent iron industry in the United States and at the same time steadily and enormously reducing the cost of iron in that country, we, with all that nature has done for us in the most unbounded and unstinted manner, furnished with all the raw material necessary to make our country great and prosperous, are allowing to pass away this golden opportunity of reaping a harvest by creating great national industries, giving increased labor to the people, and thus building up great and thriving communities, and furnishing profitable employment to thousands and tens of thousands of additional inhabitants to our country. We are allowing other countries to reap the benefit, other countries not half so well situated as we are for the production of iron—reap this golden harvest that lies unconsidered at our feet. Now, Sir, this was done in the United States by following a policy the very reverse of ours. I may just say before passing away from the question of coal, which we have developed so successfully, that instead of increasing the cost of coal to the people of this country, I hold in my hand a table showing that the price paid in the city of Montreal for bituminous coal in 1877, was $4.50 per ton, while in 1886 the same coal sold for from $3 to $3.50 per ton. Now, the United States, graduating their tariff upon the amount of labor employed in producing the article, put $6 a ton on pig iron; our duty is $2. They put $6 a ton on cast iron scrap and old shell; in Canada it is free. They put $16 a ton on puddle bars, blooms, &c.; ours is 10 per cent., or $1.70 per ton. They put $6 per ton on wrought scrap; under the Canadian tariff it is free. They put $16 and $22, according to sizes, on bar iron, spike, rod, &c.; our duty is 17½ per cent., about equal to $5 per ton. They put $20 a ton upon thick hoops and sheets; ours is 17½ per cent. They put $28 per ton upon thin sheets; ours is 12½ per cent. On cut spikes they put $25 per ton; ours is equivalent to $13.45, more nearly assimilating to theirs. Now, it is impossible to read those two tariffs of the United States and Canada without seeing at a glance why it is that while they have made the iron industry the most successful and most important industry in that country, we are standing still at the threshold, looking idly on, and leaving all these undeveloped treasures to lie at our feet, and only wanting the adoption of a sound and rational policy, the adoption of that National Policy that has placed Canada in the proud position it occupies to-day, by applying it to other industries; waiting, I say, to have that same policy applied to the iron industry of this country to give us an increased development that will, I believe, be found to surpass all the other industries of our country, just as the figures I have read of the woollen and cotton industries of the United States shows that they have been surpassed transcendently by the iron industry of that country. Sir, imagine the helpless position Canada would be in in the event of war. What could the country do without iron? I do not believe the child is born that will witness a war in Canada. I regard the position we occupy as one that gives the best possible assurance that we will have peaceful progress within our borders. But while that is the strong probability, is it not worth while for us to consider what a country would do, that is consuming 260 pounds of iron per head of the population, if they were cut off with no iron industry within the country to meet the emergency, and to give us that supply which is absolutely necessary for the progress and advancement of every other industry within our border. Why, Sir, our position is a helpless one at present. Belgium, Germany and England combined to put up the price of steel rails in Canada $5 a ton, and you had to pay that increase in consequence of the fact that you had no iron industries in your country, and to-day you may be paying for wrought iron pipe enormously above what the article costs, because those countries at this moment have agreed to put up the price to the consumers of wrought iron pipe in this country. Now, I say it was only a short time ago that England, Belgium and Germany combined, and Canada had to pay, and did pay, $5 a ton more for every ton of steel rails imported into the country than we ought to have paid, because we, in our present condition, with our country filled with iron, filled with coal, filled with limestone, and all in close proximity to each other, have not had the sagacity, we have not had the courage to adopt the same rational policy in regard to this industry that we have adopted with regard to others. Why, Sir, in this very county of Ottawa, the country teems with iron ore as rich as any in the world. All through this region there are unbounded forests to furnish charcoal, and all that is wanted is fair and legitimate protection to vitalise and develop the industry and give employment to the people, and aid at the same time the colonisation of those rich tracts of country by furnishing to the poor men who go into the forests the means of getting a fair price for the timber they are now obliged to waste, in order that they may cultivate the land. How do you suppose the combination between England, Germany and Belgium was broken up, under which we were paying $5 a ton more for our rails? Strange as it may seem, it was broken up by means of the United States. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company broke it up by giving an order for steel rails to the United States, instead of to that combination, teaching the people in England, Germany and Belgium that we were not so prostrate as they supposed, not quite so helpless as they supposed, and that led to breaking up the combination, because they became alarmed at the fact that in the United States, where rails were $159 a ton only a few years ago, the price has been brought down to $26, showing the influence of this rational policy.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is new.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not only a National Policy, but it is a rational policy. It is a policy that is national because it is rapidly making Canada a nation, it is a rational policy because the very foundation of reason is in a Government, a Parliament, a country furnishing employment to the mass of the industrial people. Well, Mr. Speaker, twenty years ago iron rails were made in Toronto and Hamilton, and within the next twenty years we will make all our own rails. I do not propose to ask this House to adopt the policy, the Government does not propose at this moment, regarding the increased railway development of the country as one of the vital essentials of progress and prosperity, to include in this arrangement what the United States has done, and done with such success, and that is to apply it to steel rails. We propose that they shall come in free as they have done in the past, because we consider that should be made an exception. I do not hesitate to say that the adoption of this policy will, in my judgment, place Canada in a position where she will be able to provide her own rails, and that at no distant period, at as reasonable a rate as any country in the world. Why should we not do so? Show me any country possessing as many miles of railway as Canada does that does not manufacture its own rails? It cannot be done. There is no country in the world with 12,000 miles of railway in operation that does not manufacture the rails used there. Why should we not at no distant day under the application of this protective policy for the iron industry of Canada, be in a position to manufacture our rails successfully and efficiently? Now, as to car axles. There are several places in this country where they are now made. As showing that there is no want of skill in Canada, that Canadians are equal, without any outside assistance, to deal with manufacturing matters, I can point to a foundry in Montreal where most excellent steel castings are turned out. Go to New Glasgow and you will find a steel industry built up by local capital of from $300,000 to $400,000 invested by Nova Scotians, or by Canadians, at all events, where they are turning out the very best articles that can be produced. All that is wanted is fostering protection in order to make the quantity as great as the quality is good. In those works there is not a man employed who is not a Canadian. The ready intelligence which Canadians possess enables them within a short time to master the most intricate processes in connection with any industry. In the county of Pictou, iron, coal and limestone are found in the closest proximity; within a radius of ten miles there is everything necessary to build up a great and successful industry; and this mineral wealth is found on the seaboard so that the products of the industry can be cheaply transported by water to the head of Lake Superior if required. All descriptions of iron ore are found in this county, so that when we are told by persons engaged in the iron founding industries that they require other iron to mix with Londonderry iron because it is too good, that they require to import Scotch pig iron, the answer is that we possess within our own borders every variety of iron ore, so that any mixture desired can be made. We have specular iron ore with 68.33 percentage metallic iron, compact limonite 57.71, fibrous limonite 59.50, red hematite, and also fossiliferous hematite 54.36, and spathic ore with 43.56. In New Brunswick there is hematite iron ore; in the county of Carleton ore and coal are to be found, also in different districts of that Province. Bog ore in Queen's, Sunbury, York, Charlotte, Restigouche and Northumberland counties, in close proximity to the Intercolonial Railway. It is specially applicable to the manufacture of charcoal iron. There are iron ores in Quebec. Magnetic iron ores are found more or less throughout the Laurentian range of mountains along the Ottawa River. At the Hull or Baldwin mines, west of the Gatineau River, the ore analyses 67 per cent. The quantity is estimated at 100,000,000 tons.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

The Haycock mine ore ranges from 64 to 68 per cent. metal, Bristol mine 58 per cent. iron. In Three Rivers and Drummondville there is both bog and iron ore in abundance, and unlimited timber for making charcoal. In the Eastern District of Ontario, back of Kingston, Belleville, Trenton and Cobourg, between Lake Ontario and the Ottawa River; in the townships of Marmora, Hastings, Tudor, Bedford, Madoc, Wollaston, Palmerston, Bagot, Belmont, Darling, Barrie, Galway, Snowdon and many others, there is magnetic iron in abundance. This district is served by the Ontario and Quebec, Kingston and Pembroke Railways, the Central Ontario, Cobourg and Peterboro', and Grand Trunk Railways, and by the Rideau and Trent Canals. There is plenty of timber all through this district. I had a conversation with a surveyor who had extended these lines for hundred of miles through these districts, and away up 130 miles further, to the intersection of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I was assured that not only was there an unlimited quantity of iron through that district, but that the forests along that line of communication could not be surpassed in any country in the world for the production of charcoal. Now, I have shown you that the Lake Superior ores of the United States are carried one thousand miles to the coal, for the purpose of manufacturing the pig iron. If that be the case, what is to prevent the policy of the ship that carries the ore from Weller's Bay, Kingston and Cobourg, across to the United States ports, bringing back a cargo of the anthracite coal which is within one hundred miles from the point of shipment? There is nothing to prevent it but one thing, and that is the duty upon the anthracite coal; and what I propose to ask this House to do, in adopting the policy of vitalizing this great industry for Canada, is to take the duty off anthracite coal and make it free. The moment that is done we shall have blast furnaces at Cobourg, Weller's Bay and Kingston, at all events, served by anthracite coal, making that description of anthracite iron which is so highly valued by gentlemen connected with foundries. The distance between Weller's Bay and Charlotte, in the United States, is about sixty miles, and from Rochester to the anthracite mines is 150 miles; and, I think, when I give those distances and give what is accomplished every day in the United States, where coal and iron are 1,000 miles apart, I shall have settled the problem that nothing will be easier than to establish blast furnaces in the Province of Quebec and the Province of Ontario, by which you can not only manufacture unlimited quantities of charcoal iron but manufacture the iron by the use of anthracite coal. Now, Sir, you may ask me what about the great North-West. Well, Sir, it is well known that you have in the North-West the most boundless supply of coal that is to be found in any part of this Dominion. One of the great advantages we have over the prairie country to the south of us, is the unlimited supply of fuel furnished by nature in the form of lignite and bituminous coal. And you have not only 50,000 square miles of this bituminous coal in the great North-West, to furnish enormous quantities of fuel for generations to come, but you have in Big Island, in Lake Winnipeg, a valuable deposit of iron ore, and any quantity of timber to make charcoal to convert it into iron. All it requires is the adoption of this policy in order to establish at an early day industries for the manufacture of iron in the North-West as well as in the other portions of the country. And what more? Across the Rocky Mountains, need I tell you that in British Columbia you have one of the most magnificent deposits of iron ore—on Texada Island (30 miles long and 5 miles wide)—that is to be found in any place in the world, rich in the highest degree in iron; and that you have the Nanaimo coal fields to furnish fuel to put blast furnaces in operation at an early day, lying within thirty miles of Texada Island. I say, that with the prospect of opening up trade with Australia, with China and Japan, although I am not a prophet nor the son of prophet, I believe that at no distant day you will have in the Province of British Columbia an iron industry built up which will compare favorably with that of any other industry in this country. Now, Sir, you will ask me to give you a little more closely than in the general terms I have employed, what would be the result of Canada entering upon this national policy of manufacturing her own iron, and I will give you briefly my calculations on that point. And, though I base my estimate on our past consumption of iron, giving this industry the same protection that is given to others—I say that we need not base it on the past consumption of iron, for, with the development which is opening up before industries, a very feeble glance at what the real Canada, the past furnishes, in regard to all these result of adopting such a policy would be. We are making rapid strides, and if you take these diagrams, these graphic illustrations which I have placed before you, and look at what we have done in the last eighteen years, tell me if you can, the measure of what the progress of Canada will be in the next ten or twenty years. We are only opening up this great question of developing the industries of our country, and I have no hesitation in saying that a more moderate calculation could not be made than the one I shall now offer the House, basing my calculation on the present consumption of iron. Our present consumption is 250,000 tons of pig iron, leaving steel rails out of the question altogether. To make this quantity of pig iron, you require 750,000 tons of iron ore. You require 120,000 tons of limestone and 750,000 tons of coal to make it into iron in its first stage, pig iron; and the freight required for the means of intercommunication in bringing these materials together, amounts to not less than 1,625,000 tons. To manufacture it into puddled bars, merchant bars, and the various shapes and sizes into which it is made, it would require an additional quantity of 750,000 tons of coal, making a total consumption of 1,500,000 tons. It is on the ground that the development of the iron industry of Canada will tax the coal industry of this country to its utmost capacity, in order to furnish the additional output that will be required, and with all the advantages connected with that increased development, that I am enabled to say to the House that although making anthracite coal free will take $497,000 away from the Government in revenue which it is now receiving, we would be perfectly justified in doing it, because the development of this iron industry would be giving to the coal-mining industry a greater advantage and boon than that which would be taken away by the removal of the duty. Now, Sir, what does this involve? Take the diagram of Sir Lowthian Bell—the highest authority in the world—the man who in England is considered head and shoulders above every authority on these questions. Taking his diagram, which I have sent to every hon. gentleman in the House, you will see the price of Scotch pig iron and the earnings of the colliers in Scotland in comparison with Westphalia, and it follows that just as the production of iron increases or decreases, so the production of coal increases or decreases. Now, Sir, the result is that by the adoption of this policy you will give permanent employment to an army of men numbering at least 20,000, increasing our population from 80,000 to 100,000 souls, and affording the means of supporting them in comfort and prosperity. I say, Sir, that if there is anything in the National Policy, if we have not been all wrong from the very start, if the history of Canada shows that this National Policy has achieved for Canada what we said it would achieve—and I have given the most abundant and irrefragable evidence on that point—if there is any question on which there ought not to be any doubt in the mind of any hon. gentleman, it is that the application of the same sound policy which we have found so admirable and successful in relation to all other industries, will have the same result in regard to the great iron industry of this country. Now, this estimate of an increased population of 100,000 souls does not take into account the manufacture of castings and forgings, cutlery and edged tools, hardware, machinery and engines, or steel rails. Were we to manufacture these articles now imported—and there is no reason why we should not steadily progress to that point—the population I have mentioned of 100,000 souls would be no less than trebled. I may briefly give to the House the effect of the resolutions which I propose to lay upon the Table; and I may say that the Government have given the most careful attention to the proposals that have been made to us in reference to changes in the Tariff. We have found that in order to carry to its legitimate conclusion the policy we have applied to the various industries established in the country, it is desirable to make changes in the Tariff, which in all will involve an increase in round numbers of something under $500,000 a year. In regard to iron, the increased revenue we expect to receive this year will not be over half a million from the changes proposed in these resolutions; and while we have no reason to doubt that they will be entirely effectual in bringing rapidly into this country all the capital that is necessary to vitalise this great industry and put it into a flourishing condition, all the increased taxation that will be involved over the whole of Canada, from sea to sea, will be something like half a million dollars a year. That increased taxation, however, will all be swept away and given back to the people by the one resolution which makes anthracite coal free; and the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, which largely pay that duty, will be greatly benefited instead of oppressed or burthened by the adoption of the policy that is now proposed. I do not think it necessary, Sir, to occupy the time of the House at greater length in making these explanations, and I am anxious to close at such an hour as will give an opportunity for the fullest criticism from the other side of the House. In this proposed tariff we have not followed exactly the American system. We have based it upon the principle of applying two-thirds of the American rate. There is at present provided by law a bounty of $1.50 a ton until the 30th June, 1889, on every ton of pig iron manufactured in the country; and afterwards that bounty is a $1.00 a ton, until it ends in June, 1892. We of course leave that as it is; and in the meantime, instead of adopting the American tariff of $6 a ton upon pig iron, we propose to adopt two-thirds of that tariff by raising the duty from $2 a ton, as it is at present, to $4 in addition to the bounty. And then we have applied as a general principle—modified in certain cases according as we felt it desirable in the interest of the country, a little more or a little less—that two-thirds rate to all the branches of the iron industry throughout the country. We do not propose to increase the tariff on sheet iron, hoop iron, or the lower kinds of round iron, which are left at the old rate at present, because these I do not expect at an early day to be manufactured in the country. The duty on steel worth 4 cents per lb. and under is placed at 30 per cent, or on an equal footing with the iron duty. On steel worth over 4 cents per lb., we leave the revenue duty of 12½ per cent., because we do not expect that high class of steel at an early day to be manufactured in the country; so that miners and others using a high class of steel will not be affected adversely by the change. On wire rods, wire rope and wire fencing the duty is not proposed to be increased. The duty on boiler plate and locomotive tubes remains, for obvious reasons, unchanged, as we wish to do all we can to develop the manufacture of engines in our own country, and to furnish all the aid we can to railways. The highest ad valorem rate, therefore, on them, under the proposed tariff, would be about 35 per cent. The unenumerated articles, embracing hardware stores, edge tools, cutlery, &c., will come in at 30 per cent. duty. And now, Mr. Speaker, thanking the House very much for the kind indulgence with which they have listened to my very lengthened statement, and my efforts at making these explanations, and regretting that the condition of my voice has not enabled me to do better justice to the subject, I will proceed to deal with the resolutions which it is proposed to offer for the consideration of the House. In blacking, shoe, and shoemakers' ink, the duty is 30 per cent. ad valorem. Harness and leather dressing, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What increase is that?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid if I attempt to give the increase it will make it so late that we will not have the pleasure of hearing from the hon. gentleman. I would prefer reading the resolutions and then taking them up seriatim when we go into committee.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have you got them printed for distribution.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I have not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. All I ask the hon. gentleman to do is, as he is going on, to state in each case what the increase is. I do not propose to ask him for the reasons in detail.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think I can do that by reading the resolutions from another paper. Blacking, 5 per cent. is added to the duty. Blueing, laundry blueing of all kinds, 30 per cent. ad valorem, an addition of 5 per cent. We will be able of course to give the fullest information to the hon. gentleman when we come to take up these matters in committee. It would take too much time to do that at present. Advertising pictures, pictorial show cards, illustrated advertising periodicals, illustrated price lists, advertising calendars, advertising almanacs, tailors' and mantle-makers' fashion plates, a specific duty of 6 cents per lb., and 20 per cent. ad valorem. The change makes no difference in duty; it merely adds certain words: "illustrated price lists, calendars and almanacs" to the resolution as it stood before, and would stand in the Customs' Act. Advertising pamphlets not illustrated, a specific duty of 1 cent each. The words "not illustrated" are added to make the item more specific; the duty is not changed. Braces and suspenders, 35 per cent. ad valorem, an addition of 5 per cent. Buttons, vegetable ivory, horn or composition, a specific duty of 10 cents per gross, 25 per cent. ad valorem. Buttons, all other kinds not elsewhere specified, 25 per cent. ad valorem. Buggies of all kinds, farm waggons, farm rig or freight carts, pleasure carts or gigs, and similar vehicles, costing less than $50, a specific duty of $10 each; costing $50 and less than $100 a specific duty of $15 each, and an addition thereto, in each case, of 20 per cent. ad valorem. All such carriages costing $100 each and over, 35 per cent. ad valorem. The duty is based on legitimate prices and intended to check under-valuation. Cotton sewing thread or spools, 25 per cent. ad valorem, an addition of 5 per cent. Jeans, cottilles, when imported by corset makers for use in their factories, 25 per cent. ad valorem, an increase of 5 per cent. in favor of cotton factories. Before it was 20 per cent. when imported by corset-makers for use in their factories. Printed or dyed fabrics not elsewhere specified, 32½ per cent. ad valorem. This is an increase of 5 per cent. additional protection to cotton factories and print works. Earthenware, stoneware, namely, demijohns or jugs, churns and crocks, a specific duty of 3 cents per gallon of holding capacity, an increase of one cent per gallon.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much do you compute that to be per cent.?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not over 30 per cent. Earthenware and stoneware, brown or colored, Rockingham ware, &c., 35 per cent. ad valorem, 5 per cent. increase.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Flagstones, sawn or otherwise dressed, specific duty of $2 per ton, being an increase of 50 cents per ton; glass carboys, 30 per cent. ad valorem, same as before. Flasks, phials of four-ounce capacity and over, telegraph and lightning rod insulators, specific duty of 10 cents per dozen and 30 per cent. ad valorem; that is an increase of 10 cents per dozen, in addition to the 30 per cent. charged before. Gold and silver leaf, 30 per cent. ad valorem, an increase of 5 per cent. Sewing machines, or heads or parts of heads, of sewing machines, specific duty $3 each and 20 per cent. ad valorem, the duty now being 20 per cent. ad valorem and $2 specific. Leather, sole, specific duty of 3 cents per lb. The present rate is 15 per cent., and we do not consider that is an increase. It is a change from the ad valorem to the specific duty without increasing the charge. Belting leather and all upper leather, including kid, lamb, sheep and calf, tanned or dressed, but not colored, waxed or glazed, 15 per cent. ad valorem; there is no change in the duty but a mere alteration in the arrangement. Japanned, patent or enamelled, 25 per cent. ad valorem, now 20 per cent. Liquorice root, paste, extract of, a duty of 2 cents per lb., the present duty is 15 per cent. and 2 cents would be equal to 25 per cent. Oil cloth, floor, specific duty of 5 cents per square yard and 20 per cent. ad valorem. This is introducing a specific duty, but it is not expected to increase the amount. The hon. gentleman will understand that in many of these cases this is done to meet one of the great difficulties of the Customs Department, that of under-valuation, from which our revenues have suffered very much. In reference to oil cloth in the piece, cut or shaped, &c., there is an increase of 5 per cent. ad valorem, the specific duty being as it was. On paper hangings, or wall paper in rolls, the new proposals are in place of the present duty of 30 per cent.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is that an increase?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not except on the first item of brown blanks. On papers of all kinds not elsewhere specified, we propose to levy a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem; the present duty is 22½ per cent. on calendered paper, and 20 per cent. on uncalendered. We now make it all 25 per cent. On tissue paper, the duty is the same, the only change consisting in striking out the words "of artificial flowers." In regard to pickles, sauces, &c., the present duty is 25 per cent., and we substitute a specific duty based upon 30 per cent. on the better classes of pickles. It will only increase the amount materially on the inferior kinds. In regard to plated cutlery, the present duty is 30 per cent. ad valorem. This is an increase on the cheaper kinds of plated knives, but will not materially increase the duty on the better class. The only difference in regard to plumbago is in regard to the manufactures of plumbago, on which the specific duty is increased from 20 to 25 per cent. On coarse salt we propose to charge 10 cents per 100 pounds, not including salt imported from the United Kingdom or any British possession. The same on fine salt in bulk, or on salt in bags or other packages, a specific duty of 15 cents per 100 pounds, the packages to bear the same duty as if imported empty. That is an increase of 3 cents per 100 pounds on the bags, barrels or other packages.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does that exempt the salt from the sea?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, all salt imported for the use of the sea or gulf fisheries is free of duty. The duty on sand-paper, glass, flint and emery paper is to be 30 per cent. instead of 25. On school and writing slates there is to be a specific duty of 1 cent each, and 20 per cent. ad valorem. Now, the duty is 25 per cent. without the specific duty. I now come to a very large and important change in regard to the duty on cigars and cigarettes, on which we propose a specific duty of $2 per lb. and 25 per cent. ad valorem, the weight of cigarettes to include the weight of paper covering. During the last fiscal year the number of cigars manufactured which were the product of imported raw leaf was 90,408,025. Assuming an increased production of 50 per cent. the output should be 135,612,037. The duty on 90,408,025, at $6 a thousand would be $542,448. The duty on 135,612,037 at $6 would be $813,672. We estimate an increased revenue from the duty on cigars of $150,000. There is no change in the duty on trunks, but we propose to charge a duty of 10 cents each and 30 per cent ad valorem on valises, satchels, carpet bags, pocket books and purses. In that case the 10 cents specific duty is added. The change in regard to varnishes, &c., is from 20 cents per gallon specific and 20 per cent. to 25 per cent. and 20 cents a gallon. The duty on potatoes is raised from 10 cents a bushel to 15 cents. The duty on tomatoes is raised from 30 cents per bushel to 30 cents per bushel and 10 per cent. ad valorem. Vegetables, not otherwise specified, are increased from 20 to 25 per cent. ad valorem. The duty on watch actions or movements is reduced from 20 per cent. to 10 per cent, that is in order to prevent smuggling and to foster the industry of making the cases in this country. On fabrics composed wholly or in part of wool, &c., the duty is to be 7½ cents per lb. and 20 per cent. ad valorem. The duty is now 7½ cents per lb, 20 per cent. on a part, and 22½ per cent. on another part ad valorem. On collars of cotton or linen, on which the present duty is 30 per cent, we have added 24 cents specific duty, as fostering protection to the seamstresses of the country. On newspapers partly printed and intended to be complete and published in Canada, 25 per cent ad valorem. That is to settle a disputed question in the Customs Department, and we give still greater protection to our own printers who furnish much more valuable matter within the country than that which is imported from outside. We have increased the duty on shirts of cotton or linen by $1 per dozen. The resolution with reference to articles imported for the Government, for Parliament, and for the use of the army and navy, makes no alteration of the duty, but it is only explanatory of items 532 and 533. The resolution with regard to anthracite coal repeals item 101, which provided for a duty of 50 cents per ton, and occasions a loss to the revenue of about half a million, the amount collected last year having been $49,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. How about bituminous coal?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It remains as before. The effect of the removal of the duty on anthracite coal will be not only to give great relief to the public who use anthracite coal, but also to give a great relief to the manufacturers of iron, who will have to pay on their raw material a larger price than before; but they will receive a considerable portion of that back in the form of remitted duty, the amount remitted being equal to all we will receive the coming year from the increased duty on iron. Of course anthracite coal stands in a different position from bituminous as it is not produced in the country. In the resolution with respect to scrap iron and scrap steel, we draw a distinction between imported scrap and scrap that is the result of wrecks upon the coast. The former duty of $2 per ton on imported scrap is restored, and I am afraid that is the principal blot on the policy as propounded, for to carry out the principle, it ought to be $4 a ton, the same as iron.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman state how many changes there are altogether?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think there are about one hundred and twenty. I now move that you do now leave the Chair and that the House resolve itself into Committee on the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to repeal the following items in schedule "A" of the Act 49 Vic., chap. 33, intitled "An Act respecting the Duties of Customs"—Consolidated Statutes, 1886, viz:—

Numbers 7, 31, 32, 37, 39, 44, 51, 72, 83, 101, 125, 126, 133, 137, 138, 144, 145, 146, 147, 154, 161, 181, 192, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 234, 237, 238, 240, 241, 244, 245, 246, 248, 251, 252, 254, 255, 275, 278, 282, 317, 318, 319, 330, 331, 333, 339, 346, 353, 354, 355, 365, 366, 368, 383, 403, 404, 406, 409, 439, 447, 451, 455, 456, 458, 462, 473, and 475, and to make other provisions in lieu thereof as follows:—

1. Blacking, shoe, and shoemakers' ink, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
2. Harness and leather dressing, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
3. Blueing, laundry blueing of all kinds, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
4. Advertising pictures, pictorial show-cards, illustrated advertising periodicals, illustrated price list, advertising calendars, advertising almanacs, and tailors' and mantle-makers' fashion plates, a specific duty of six cents per pound and twenty per cent. ad valorem.
5. Advertising pamphlets not illustrated, a specific duty of one cent each.
6. Braces or suspenders, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
7. Buttons of vegetable ivory, horn or composition, a specific duty of ten cents per gross and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
8. Buggies of all kinds, farm waggons, farm, railway or freight carts, pleasure carts or gigs and similar vehicles, costing less than fifty dollars, a specific duty of ten dollars each; costing fifty dollars and less than one hundred dollars, a specific duty of fifteen dollars each, and in addition thereto in each case, twenty per cent. ad valorem.
9. All such carriages costing one hundred dollars each and over, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
10. Cotton sewing thread on spools, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
11. Jeans and coutilles, when imported by corset makers for use in their factory, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
12. Printed or dyed cotton fabrics, not elsewhere specified, thirty-two and a half per cent. ad valorem.
13. Earthenware and stoneware, namely, demijohns or jugs, churns and crocks, a specific duty of three cents per gallon of holding capacity.
14. Earthenware and stoneware, brown or colored, Rockingham ware; white granite or iron stoneware, O. C. or cream colored ware; decorated, printed or sponged, and all earthenware not elsewhere specified, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
15. Flag-stones, sawn or otherwise dressed, a specific duty of two dollars per ton.
16. Glass carboys and demijohns, bottles and decanters, flasks and phials, of less capacity than four ounces, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
17. Flasks and phials of four-ounce capacity and over, telegraph and lightning rod insulators, jars and glass balls, and out, pressed, or moulded tableware a specific duty of ten cents per dozen pieces, and thirty per cent. ad valorem.
18. Gold and silver leaf, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
19. Sewing machines whole, or heads or parts of heads of sewing machines, a specific duty of three dollars each and twenty per cent. ad valorem.
20. Leather, sole, a specific duty of three cents per pound.
21. Leather, belting leather, and all upper leather, including kid, lamb, sheep and calf, tanned or dressed, but not colored, waxed, or glazed, fifteen per cent. ad valorem.
22. Japanned, patent or enamelled, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
23. Licorice root, paste extract of, a specific duty of two cents per pound.
24. Oil cloth, floor, a specific duty of five cents per square yard, and twenty per cent. ad valorem.
25. Oil cloth in the piece, cut or shaped, oiled, enamelled, stamped, painted or printed, india rubbered, flocked or coated, not otherwise provided for, a specific duty of five cents per square yard, and twenty per cent. ad valorem.
26. Paper hangings, or wall paper in rolls, the following specific duties on each eight yards of the following descriptions, viz:—
 - a. Brown blanks, two cents.
 - b. White papers, grounded papers, and satins, three cents.
 - c. Single point bronzes, seven cents.
 - d. Colored bronzes, nine cents.
 - e. Embossed bronzes, eleven cents.
 - f. Colored borders, narrow, eight cents.
 - g. Colored borders, wide, ten cents.
 - h. Bronze borders, narrow, fifteen cents.
 - i. Bronze borders, wide, eighteen cents.
 - j. Embossed borders, twenty cents.
27. Paper of all kinds not elsewhere specified, twenty-two and one-half per cent. ad valorem.
28. Tissue paper, white or colored, when imported by manufacturers for use in their factory, ten per cent. ad valorem.
29. Pickles in bottle, a specific duty of forty cents per gallon, sixteen half-pint, eight pint, or four quart bottles to be held to contain a gallon: In jars, bottles, or other vessels the quantity to be ascertained and the same rate of duty to be charged thereon, the duty to include the bottle and other packages.
30. Pickles in bulk, in vinegar, or vinegar and mustard, thirty-five cents per gallon, and in brine, twenty-five cents per gallon.
31. Sauces and catsups, in bottle, a specific duty of forty cents per gallon, and twenty per cent. ad valorem: sixteen half-pint, eight pint or four quart bottles to be held to contain a gallon.
32. Plated cutlery, namely, knives plated wholly or in part, costing under three dollars and fifty cents per dozen, a specific duty of fifty cents per dozen and twenty per cent. ad valorem.

27. All other plated ware, electro-plated or gilt of all kinds, whether plated wholly or in part, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
28. Plumbago, ten per cent. ad valorem.
- 28a. Plumbago, all manufactures of not elsewhere specified, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
29. Salt, coarse, ten cents per one hundred pounds (not to include salt imported from the United Kingdom or any British possession, or salt imported for the use of the sea or gulf fisheries), which shall be free of duty.
- 29a. Salt, fine, in bulk, a specific duty of ten cents per one hundred pounds).
30. Salt, in bags, barrels or other packages, a specific duty of fifteen cents per hundred pound-, the bags, barrels or other packages to bear the same duty as if imported empty.
31. Sand paper, glass flint and emery paper, thirty per cent. ad valorem
32. Slates, school and writing slates, a specific duty of one cent each and twenty per cent. ad valorem.
33. Cigars and cigarettes, a specific duty of two dollars per pound and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem. The weight of cigarettes to include the weight of the paper covering.
34. Trunks of all kinds, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
- 34a. Valises, satchels, carpet bags, pocket books and purses, a specific duty of ten cents each and thirty per cent. ad valorem.
35. Varnishes, lacquers, japans, japan driers, liquid driers, collodion and oil finish, not elsewhere specified, a specific duty of twenty cents per gallon and twenty-five cent. ad valorem.
36. Potatoes, a specific duty and fifteen cents per bushel.
37. Tomatoes, fresh, a specific duty of thirty cents per bushel and ten per cent. ad valorem.
38. Vegetables not elsewhere specified, including sweet potatoes, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
39. Watch actions or movements, ten per cent. ad valorem.
40. All fabrics composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the Alpaca goat or other like animals, viz.:—Blankets, flannels, cloths, doeskins, cassimers, tweeds, coatings, overcoatings, felt cloths, horse collar cloth, alpacas, Italian cloths, cobourgs, merinos, and all similar fabrics, not otherwise provided for, also manufactures composed of same materials, viz.:—Yarn, knitting yarn, fingering yarn, worsted yarn, and knitted goods, viz.:—Shirts and drawers and hosiery, not elsewhere specified, a specific duty of seven and a-half cents per pound and twenty per cent. ad valorem.
41. Barrels containing pork or other salted meats, a specific duty of twenty-five cents each.
42. British gum, dressing, sizing cream and enamel sizing, a specific duty of one cent per pound.
43. Collars of cotton or linen a specific duty of twenty-four cents per dozen, and thirty per cent. ad valorem.
44. Cuffs of cotton or linen, a specific duty of four cents per pair and thirty per cent. ad valorem.
45. Gas meters, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
46. Glue, sheet, broken sheet and ground, a specific duty of three cents per pound.
47. Mucilage, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
48. Newspapers, partly printed and intended to be completed and published in Canada, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
49. Photographic dry plates, a specific duty of fifteen cents per square foot.
50. Shirts, of cotton or linen, a specific duty of one dollar per dozen and thirty per cent. ad valorem.
51. Veneers of wood, sawn only, ten per cent. ad valorem.
52. Colored fabrics, woven or dyed or colored cotton yarn, or part jute and part cotton yarns, or other material, except silk, not elsewhere specified, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
53. Fertilizers, artificial, of all kinds, a specific duty of six dollars per ton.
54. Macaroni and vermicelli, a specific duty of two cents per pound.
55. Oranges and lemons, in boxes of capacity not exceeding two and one-half cubic feet, twenty-five cents per box; in one-half boxes capacity not exceeding one and one-fourth cubic feet, thirteen cents per half box; in cases and all other packages ten cents per cubic foot holding capacity; in bulk, one dollar and sixty cents per one thousand oranges or lemons; in barrels not exceeding in capacity that of the one hundred and ninety-six pounds flour barrel, fifty-five cents per barrel.
56. Paper, tarred, a specific duty of one-half cent per pound.
57. Spectacles and eye glasses, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
- 57a. Parts of spectacles and eye glasses, unfinished, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
58. Moss, Iceland, and other mosses, fifteen per cent. ad valorem.
59. Axes—chopping axes, a specific duty of two dollars per dozen and ten per cent. ad valorem.
70. Broad and ship axes, adzes, and hammers weighing ten pounds and over, a specific duty of three dollars per dozen and twenty per cent. ad valorem.
61. All other axes, hatchets, hammers, hay knives and 4 and 5 pronged forks of all kinds, a specific duty of two dollars per dozen and twenty per cent. ad valorem.
62. Hoes, garden rakes, 2 and 3 pronged forks of all kinds, picks and mattocks, a specific duty of one dollar per dozen and twenty per cent. ad valorem.
63. Shovels and spades, a specific duty of one dollar per dozen and twenty per cent. ad valorem.
64. Mowing machines, self-binding harvesters, harvesters without binders, binding attachments, reapers, sulky and walking ploughs, and all other agricultural machines and implements not otherwise provided for, thirty five per cent. ad valorem.
65. Grape vines costing twenty cents and less, five cents each.
66. Gooseberry bushes, two cents each.
67. Raspberry and blackberry bushes, one cent each.
68. Peach trees, four cents each.
69. Rosebushes, five cents per plant.
70. Seedling stock for grafting, viz.:—Plum, pear, peach and other fruit trees, ten per cent. ad valorem.
71. Manufactures of iron and steel, viz.:—Wrought iron, scrap iron and scrap steel being waste or refuse wrought iron or steel that has been in actual use and is fit only to be re-manufactured, two dollars per ton.
72. Ferro-manganese, ferro-silicon, speigel, steel bloom ends, and crop ends of steel rails, for the manufacture of steel, two dollars per ton.
73. Iron in pigs, iron kentledge and cast scrap iron, four dollars per ton.
74. Iron in slabs, blooms, loops, puddle bars, or other forms less finished than iron in bars, and more advanced than pig iron, except castings, nine dollars per ton.
75. (a) Bar iron, rolled or hammered, comprising flats not less than one inch wide, nor less than three-eighths of one inch thick, eleven dollars per ton.
76. (b) Comprising round iron not less than three-fourths of one inch in diameter, and square iron not less than three-fourths of one inch square, thirteen dollars per ton.
77. (c) Comprising flats less than one inch or less than three-eighths of one inch thick, round iron less than three-fourths of one inch, and not less than seven-sixteenths of one inch square, fifteen dollars per ton.
78. Rolled round iron in coils or rods less than seven-sixteenths of one inch in diameter, and bars and shapes of rolled iron, not elsewhere provided for, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
79. Iron or steel rolled round wire rods under half an inch in diameter when imported by wire manufacturers for use in their factories, five per cent. ad valorem.
80. Iron and steel wire, galvanized or not, smaller than number five gauge and not smaller than number fifteen gauge, twenty per cent. ad valorem.
81. Wire of spring steel, coppered or tinned, number nine gauge or smaller, twelve and a-half per cent. ad valorem.
82. (a) Boiler or other plate iron, sheared or unsheared, skelp iron, sheared or rolled in grooves, and sheet iron, common or black, not thinner than number twenty gauge, not elsewhere specified, ten dollars per ton.
83. (b) Sheet iron, common or black, smoothed or polished, and coated or galvanized, thinner than number twenty gauge Canada plates and boiler plate of iron or steel not less than thirty inches wide, and valued at not less than one and a-half cents per pound, twelve and a-half per cent. ad valorem.
84. (a) Hoop or band or scroll or other iron, eight inches or less in width and not thinner than number twenty gauge, thirteen dollars per ton.
85. (b) Hoop or band or scroll or other iron, eight inches or less in width and thinner than number twenty gauge, twelve and a-half per cent. ad valorem.
86. Iron railway bars, steel T rails weighing not over twenty-five pounds per lineal yard, iron or steel flat rails punched and iron or steel railway fish plates, nine dollars per ton.
87. Rolled channels and angle and T iron, and rolled eyebar blanks made by the Kloman process, when imported by manufacturers of bridges for use exclusively in their own manufactures, twelve and a-half per cent. ad valorem.
88. Iron bridges and structural iron work, twenty-five dollars per ton, provided that the duty shall not be less than thirty per cent. ad valorem.
89. Forgings of iron and steel, or forged iron of whatever shape or in whatever stage of manufacture, not elsewhere specified, thirty dollars per ton, provided that the duty shall not be less than thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
90. Steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms and slabs, by whatever process made, billets and bars, bands, hoops, strips and sheets of all gauges and widths, all of above classes of steel not elsewhere provided for valued at four cents or less per pound, thirty per cent. ad valorem, but not less than ten dollars per ton.
91. When of greater value than four cents per pound, twelve and a half per cent. ad valorem.
92. Steel not specially enumerated or provided for, thirty per cent. ad valorem
93. Provided that on all iron or steel bars, rods, strips or steel sheets, of whatever shape, and on all iron or steel bars of irregular shape or section, cold rolled, cold hammered or polished in any way in addition to the ordinary process of hot rolling or hammering, there shall be paid one-sixth of one cent per pound in addition to the rates imposed on the said materials.
94. Provided further, that all metal produced from iron or its ores, which is cast and malleable, of whatever description of form, without regard to the percentage of carbon contained therein, whether produced by cementation, or converted, cast, or made from iron or its ores by the crucible, Bessemer, pneumatic, Thomas Gilchrist, basic, Siemens-Martin or open hearth process, or by the equivalent of either, or by the combination of two or more of the processes, or their equivalents, or by any fusion or other process which produces from iron or its ores, a metal either granulous or fibrous in structure, which is cast and malleable, except what is known as malleable iron castings, shall be classed and denominated as steel.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

And provided further that all articles rated as iron or manufacture of iron, shall be chargeable with the same rate of duty if made of steel, or of steel and iron combined, unless otherwise specially provided for.

95. Malleable iron castings, and steel castings not elsewhere specified, twenty-five dollars per ton, provided the duty shall not be less than thirty per cent. ad valorem.
96. Cast iron vessels, plates, stone plates and irons, sad irons, hatters' irons, tailors' iron and castings of iron not elsewhere specified, sixteen dollars per ton, provided the duty shall not be less than thirty per cent. ad valorem.
97. Cast iron pipe of every description, twelve dollars per ton.
98. Iron or steel axles, parts thereof, axle bars, axle blanks or forgings for axles without reference to the stage of manufacture, thirty dollars per ton, but not less than thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
99. Engines, boilers and machinery, viz:—
(a) Fire engines, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
(b) Locomotives and other steam engines, boilers and machinery composed wholly or in part of iron or steel, not elsewhere specified, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
101. Portable machines, portable steam engines, threshers and separators, horse powers, portable saw mills and planing mills and parts thereof in any stage of manufacture, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
102. Locomotive tires of Bessemer steel in the rough, ten per cent. ad valorem.
103. (a) Boiler tubes or flues or stays of wrought iron or steel, fifteen per cent. ad valorem.
104. (b) Wrought iron tubing, plain, not threaded, coupled or otherwise manufactured, over two inches in diameter, fifteen per cent. ad valorem.
105. (c) Other wrought iron or steel tubes or pipes, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
106. Safes, doors for safes and vaults, scales, balances and weighing beams of iron or steel, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
107. Skates, twenty cents per pair and thirty per cent. ad valorem.
108. Wire rope of iron or steel, not otherwise provided for twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
109. Sledges, track tools, wedges and crowbars of iron or steel, one and one-quarter cent per pound and thirty per cent. ad valorem.
110. Hardware, viz.:—Builders', cabinet makers' and carriage hardware and locks, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
111. Muskets, rifles and other firearms and surgical instruments, twenty per cent. ad valorem.
112. Nails and spikes, wrought and pressed, galvanized or not, and wrought iron or steel nuts and washers, and horse, mule or ox shoes, one and one-third cents per pound.
113. Horse shoe nails, hob nails and wire nails and all other wrought iron or steel nails, not elsewhere specified, two and one-half cents per pound.
114. Cut tacks, brads or sprigs not exceeding sixteen ounces to the thousand, two cents per thousand.
Exceeding sixteen ounces to the thousand, two cents per pound.
115. Iron or steel rivets, bolts with or without threads, or nuts or bolt blanks, and finished hinges or hinge blanks, one and two-third cents per pound.
116. Cut nails and spikes of iron or steel, one cent per pound.
117. Street railway bars or rails weighing not less than twenty-five pounds per lineal yard for purposes other than railway tracks, six dollars per ton.
118. Manufactures, articles or wares not specially enumerated or provided for, composed wholly or in part of iron or steel, and whether partly or wholly manufactured, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
119. Labels for fruit, vegetables, meat, fish, confectionery and other goods, also tickets, posters, advertising bills and folders, fifteen cents per pound and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
120. Printing presses of all kinds, folding machines and paper cutters ten per cent. ad valorem.

2. Resolved, That it is also expedient to repeal the following items in schedule "C" of the same Act, viz:—Nos. 532, 533, 549, 599, 639, 661, 691, 700, 767, 770, 797 and 803, and to enact as follows, viz.:—The undermentioned items shall be free of duty:—

1. Articles imported by and for the use of the Dominion Government or any of the Departments thereof or by and for the Senate or House of Commons, and the following articles when imported by and for the use of the army and navy, viz.:—Arms, military or naval clothing, musical instruments for bands, military stores and munitions of war.
2. Brick, fire.
3. Coal, anthracite.
4. Cotton yarns finer than No. 40, unbleached, bleached or dyed for use in the manufacture of Italian cloths, cotton, worsted or silk fabrics.
5. Gannister.
6. Gums, amber, arabic, Australian, copal, damar, mastic, sandarac, shellac and tragacanth.
7. Quills in their natural state or unflumed.
8. Steel rails, weighing not less than twenty-five pounds per lineal yard, for use in railway tracks.

9. Steel valued at two and one-half cents per pound and upwards for use in the manufacture of shates.

10. Scrap iron and scrap steel, old and fit only to be re-manufactured, being part of or recovered from any vessel wrecked in waters subject to the jurisdiction of Canada.

11. Steel bowls for cream separators. Steel for the manufacture of files, when imported by file manufacturers for use in their factories.

12. Veneers of ivory, sawn only.

3. Resolved, That it is expedient to repeal item No. 816 in schedule "E" of tariff of Customs duties, and to substitute the following in lieu thereof, viz:—

1. Shingle bolts of pine or cedar, and cedar logs capable of being made into shingle bolts, one dollar and fifty cents per cord of one hundred and twenty-eight cubic feet.

4. Resolved, That it is expedient to repeal section 8, chapter 33, 49 Victoria, Consolidated Statutes, and to enact the following in lieu thereof:—

Except in cases otherwise specially provided for in the schedule to the tariff, packages manufactured of glass, tin, iron, or other metals, crates, barrels or other packages containing earthenware, china, porcelain, crockery, glassware, glass or other brittle goods, cases containing bottled spirits, wines, malt liquors, or other bottled goods, together with all articles used as first receptacles or packages for goods of any kind in which such goods are packed for purposes of sale or not solely for exportation, except as hereinafter provided, shall be chargeable with the same rate of duty as the goods contained therein, if such duty be ad valorem; but if such duty be specific, or ad valorem and specific, or if when ad valorem alone, such named duty would be less than that to which such receptacles or packages would be liable under the tariff in force at the date of importation if they were imported empty, or if the goods therein be free of duty, then the duty shall be that to which such receptacles or packages would be liable if imported empty; but all other packages being the usual and ordinary ones in which goods are packed for exportation only, according to the general usage and customs of trade, shall be free of duty.

5. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the foregoing resolutions, and the alterations thereby made in the duties of Customs on the articles therein mentioned, shall take effect on and after the 13th of May instant.

Sr RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have listened to the speech of the hon. gentleman with great interest and attention. I am inclined to admit that, although there are one or two points to which I may have to take exception presently, the speech, and particularly the earlier part of it, was a judicious speech, and I rather admired the dexterity and rapidity with which the hon. gentleman glided over some very dangerous ground. Still, I must say that I experience a feeling of some considerable disappointment on this occasion. I know that the hon. gentleman is a man of capacity and of resolution, and I had hoped that, having been withdrawn from amongst us for a period of some years, and having had the opportunity of breathing a wholesomer and purer political atmosphere than has, perhaps, always prevailed in this Chamber—I say I had hoped that, when he returned to fill his present very responsible position, he would have recognised more clearly than he appears to have done the very dangerous position in which the finances of Canada now stand. Of course, I am aware that there is a certain amount of official optimism which it is incumbent on the Minister of Finance to observe; but I think those who have paid much attention to the financial position of Canada will agree with me that if you choose to read between the lines of the hon. gentleman's speech, you will see he is aware that there is a very considerable deal in our present position which might well awaken the most careless of us to serious apprehensions. The hon. gentleman on the present occasion appears to take, as might perhaps be expected, an exceedingly roseate view of the situation. In one place he states not merely that Canada is in an exceedingly prosperous position, but he goes on to say that the outlook for the future is all that we can desire. There is, it is true, one slight cloud which he perceives in the horizon, but even that has so decidedly a silver lining that I almost thought before the hon. gentleman had closed that he was about to propose that we should decree non-intercourse with the United States in order that thereby the cities of Montreal, Halifax, St. John and St. Andrew's—as to the exact whereabouts of which latter I am not as well informed as I might be—might astonish us by the rapid progress they would make if we could only get rid of the necessity of carrying on trade with our American neighbors. Well, Sir, I cannot myself wholly agree with the hon. gentleman; nor can I quite agree with him in believing that a debt of something like $270,000,000 gross, or $225,000,000 net, is a bagatelle; or that two successive deficits, one of $2,250,000 and another of $5,835,000, are also the mere insignificant trifles that the hon. gentleman appears to consider them. Sir, I happen to be blessed, or cursed, as the case may be, with an exceedingly retentive memory, and I can very well remember how the hon. gentleman in days gone by, used to look on deficits, not of $5,800,000, but of $1,400,000, and even $1,100,000. I am not going to go back over those old speeches which the hon. gentleman used to deliver from this side of the House, but I think his own conscience must tell him that in those days he did not regard the existence of a deficit of $5,800,000 or even $2,250,000, as at all a trifling thing. On the contrary, I recollect very well his informing this House from this very place that the existence of such deficits was an unanswerable proof of the utter incompetency of the Ministry of the day, and especially of the Finance Minister thereof. Sir, we on this side of the House know too well the flights of imagination in which the hon. gentleman was accustomed to indulge in in old days. He has been emphatically a Minister of great expectations; and if we are not able to-night to lend as ready a credence as we could desire to those rosy pictures which he has evolved from the depths of his inner consciousness, he must pardon us if we recall former feats which have left a little doubt upon our minds. His great zeal for the welfare of his country causes him to slightly exaggerate the benefits which he expects to flow from the measure he proposes. The House will recollect very well that not merely the hon. Minister of Finance, but the First Minister, declared again and again, in tones very much louder than the hon. gentleman has used in depicting the great wealth that is to flow from the new taxes he is about to put on—declared, not once, but a hundred, I might almost say a thousand times—that if there was one thing more than another that the people of Canada might rest assured of, it was that the Canadian Pacific Railway would not cost them one cent. I recollect, when the hon. gentleman brought down, as Minister of Railways, his project for granting very liberal subsidies and unheard of exemptions and privileges to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that the leading argument the hon. gentleman then used was this, that it was infinitely better for us to be so generous and liberal, because thereby the bargain would be absolutely final, and we would never again have the Canadian Pacific Railway applying to us for one farthing. I recollect perfectly well, when the hon. gentleman was carrying that measure through the House, that he and his colleague beside him assured us, proved to us, and gave us minute details, to which I can refer, if necessary, that we were certain to realise, either in cash or in good mortgages, $70,000,000 from land sales by the year 1891. I recollect at a latter day, when he saw fit to modify that statement, how he laid on the Table a report from a responsible officer in the Department, by which he showed conclusively that $58,000,000 would be realised from these same sales by 1890. I can recollect—and it has certainly some pertinency on the present occasion—how the hon. gentleman, three or four years ago, showed us that we were certain to have very speedily an export of 640,000,000 bushels of wheat from Manitoba and the North-West Territories. I recollect his explaining to us how the National Policy was going to help our English trade and depress our trade with the United States; and I think he said something of the same kind to-night. Sir, I think it will aid us considerably in estimating the exact value of the promises we have just been listening to, to show how those statements, then made in so authoritative a fashion by the hon. gentleman, have corresponded with the facts. I have here a document to which I must pay profound respect, because it is the Public Accounts of the Dominion of Canada, laid on the Table of the House by the hon. gentleman himself; and I perceive that up to date the railway that was not to cost the people of Canada one dollar stands in our books for a little more than $71,000,000, for which we have not received as yet, that I know of, one cent. I have not at the moment time to dwell on the remarkable calculation by which the hon. gentleman wishes to reduce this by $10,000,000, alleging that we have got back land which we, on this side of the House, estimated as likely to bring $2, $3 or $4 an acre. Sir, it would have been possible, I believe, that the land, under a wise railway policy, a wise system of settlement, and a wise administration of the North-West, might have been worth its $2, $3 or $4 an acre; but I regret to say that the policy and administration of hon. gentlemen opposite have so injured and damaged the whole prospects of that country that I fear the six or seven million acres which we have received are, for all practical purposes, thanks not to any depreciation of the intrinsic value of land, but thanks to the manipulation of those gentlemen, of no present value to us whatever. I recollect when these hon. gentlemen assured us in 1881 that their bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway was absolutely final; I also recollect when the same hon. gentlemen in 1882 came down to us with an important modification which they declared was absolutely finally final, as my hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake) would say. I recollect in 1883 when there was another absolutely finally, finally, final settlement, and in 1884 when there was another absolutely finally, finally, finally, final settlement, and again in 1885 and in 1886 we had other absolutely finally final settlements; and I should like to know whether 1887 will pass by without another of those finally final settlements. But I do not want to ask too much from the hon. gentleman. I know that in regard to this matter of the Canadian Pacific Railway, they are not altogether free agents. I know that their position with respect to that company is rather like that of the English Light Brigade at Balaclava:—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

“ Their's not to reason why,
Their's but to do or die.”

I think there is an hon. gentleman in this House who might tell us whether this settlement in 1886 was really a finally final settlement—an hon. gentleman who knows, and has shown that he knows, a very great deal about the Finance Minister and about the First Minister too. If that hon. gentleman would only confirm the statement of the hon. the Finance Minister, and advise us that the settlement of 1886 is to be really a finally final settlement, I and a great many ratepayers of Canada will receive his assurance with great satisfaction. Here are the hon. gentleman's statements recorded in Hansard, whereby first, the Premier, and then the Finance Minister, have shown us we are to receive $53,000,000, at the lowest calculation, by the first of January, 1891, as receipts from the land sales to be made in the North-West. I turn again to this valuable volume of the Public Accounts, and I see that up to date, after deducting expenses, our receipts from the land sales in the North-West are stated to be just $1,200,000 worse than nothing. The hon. the Finance Minister and the right hon. the First Minister will observe that there are 44 calendar months between the first of May, 1887, and the first of January, 1891, at which their promissory note becomes due; and therefore, although I stand corrected if I make an error in the calculation, if to the $53,000,000 to be gained we are to add the $1,200,000 which we are out of pocket now, we will require to net from the land sales in the North-West $1,345,454 per month for each of these 44 months, or else the hon. gentlemen will stand convicted of having carried important measures through this House by means of promises which they are wholly unable to redeem. I may remind the House that the hon. the Finance Minister, not content with promising us $53,000,000 from sales of land in the North-West, also promised us a production in that country of 640,000,000 bushels of wheat, or equal, at a rough calculation, to 20,000,000 tons; enough to load 2,000,000 cars of ordinary capacity, equal to 100,000 train loads; enough to keep the Canadian Pacific Railway drawing train loads of wheat at the rate of one every five minutes, day and night, during the whole 365 days in the year. I do not object to a little miscalculation; I admit these estimates may be regarded as a little roughly made; and if the Finance Minister was only, say 1,000 per cent. wrong, and if instead of 640,000,000 bushels of wheat, we got, say 64,000,000 from the North-West, I would say that was near enough for practical purposes in his case. But I fear extremely, although I wish with all my heart it was otherwise, that throughout Manitoba and the North-West the total production of wheat would hardly equal 5,000,000 bushels, and I submit that is a little too great a discount on 640,000,000. Added to which, I have my doubts, looking at the Governor General's warrants which were laid on the Table the other day, and in which I was sorry to see a grant of $140,000 for seed grain for settlers in this very Territory, whether the hon. gentleman has fully considered the difficulties which attend the production of 640,000,000 bushels of wheat in Manitoba and the North-West. Now, the hon. gentleman thinks, and no doubt desires, that our National Policy should increase our trade with the Mother Country and diminish our trade with the United States, and here let me say that in the calculations which are submitted to us, and which I hold in my hand, the hon. gentleman appears to me to have overlooked the important fact, in speaking of our trade with the United States prior to 1879, that an immense proportion of what is put down as entered for consumption, is, really, simply goods in transitu, under the old system of keeping accounts. It needs merely to look at our Trade and Navigation Returns to see that no fair comparison can be made. But if you make proper allowance for this and then compare, on the basis the hon. gentleman has adopted, our trade with Great Britain during the last thirteen or fourteen years with our trade with the United States, you will see some rather remarkable proofs of how far this policy, be it good or bad, has increased our trade with Great Britain, and how far it has diminished our trade with the United States. In 1873 our imports from Great Britain were $68,500,000; in 1886, thirteen years later, our imports from Great Britain were $40,601,000. Thus, in thirteen years, our imports from Great Britain decreased no less than $28,000,000. From the United States, we nominally imported $47,500,000 in 1873, but at least $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 of that were goods in transitu, and our real imports from the United States thirteen years ago, exclusive of goods in transitu, were certainly not more than $40,000,000. In 1886 our imports from the United States were $41,853,000, so that while our imports from Great Britain in these thirteen years decreased $28,000,000, our imports from the United States, if they are fairly estimated and due deduction made for goods in transitu, increased $4,800,000. Now, that may be a proof of how much the National Policy is increasing our trade with Great Britain and diminishing it with the United States, but it is proof of a remarkable description. Similarly, we find that while we exported to Great Britain $38,750,000 in 1873, we now export $41,542,000, being an increase of $3,000,000. In 1873 we exported to the United States $42,000,000, and in 1886, $36,500,000. So that we have improved our trade relations with the Mother Country by selling to them $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 more, and by selling to the United States about $6,000,000 less, while we are buying $28,000,000 less from England and $5,000,000 more from the United States. Those are the figures taken from the hon. gentleman's own official return, which he will hardly pretend to dispute, and they hardly appear to me to bear out the statement which he has made, that one of the results of his policy has been to increase our trade with the Mother Country. The hon. gentlemen opposite and their press have complained, and perhaps with reason, that I have not always exhibited that implicit credence in their statements—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. May I ask the hon. gentleman to inform the House in what part of my speech I referred to that subject at all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I heard the hon. gentleman refer to the increase which has taken place. I took down the words, and I have heard him on several other occasions refer to the same thing, and, what is more, I observe that he referred to it in one of his speeches at St. John the other day. Of course, that was an election speech, and, perhaps, should not be brought in here. It is true that to-day the hon. gentleman did not say very much about it, because this has been up before. The hon. gentleman is not a novice in this matter; he has been for a round dozen of years engaging in debate on this subject on Budget nights, and he has probably had that subject threshed out of him, but, notwithstanding that, he alluded to the matter to-night.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, he did not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, if the hon. gentleman says he did not, and if he says the result of his policy has not been to increase trade with Great Britain but rather with the United States—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say that I did not refer to the question at all or make a single reference to it in my speech to-night.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course I cannot expect the hon. gentleman to remember all that he said in a five-hour speech. However, we will put aside the question of the English trade. The facts are as I state them, and he cannot deny the facts as I state them. I call his attention, and I also call the attention of the House, to this circumstance. The hon. gentleman objects to that subject. We will give him the benefit of the objection. We will say no more of the manner in which the National Policy has helped the English trade. But, as to the other four predictions of his to which I alluded, the hon. gentleman has not ventured to contradict me at all. Now I think that the hon. gentleman, under these circumstances, cannot complain if I warn the House that his fervent zeal, his fervent desire to make the best of everything, for the interest of the country, no doubt, has occasionally in past times led him into miscalculations, and there is some considerable danger that those miscalculations may be repeated on the present occasion. With respect to the Budget the hon. gentleman has brought down, with reference to the Estimates the hon. gentleman has placed in our hands, allow me to recall to the hon. gentleman's mind this slightly significant fact that, ever since 1873, during all the time that the hon. gentleman and his friends have been in office, in 1873, in 1879, in 1880, and thence onward to the present moment, the hon. gentlemen have never once laid a Budget on the Table of this House, they never have once given an original estimate to the committee of this House which estimate has not been very largely exceeded by the actual expenditure. The hon. gentleman, or rather the hon. gentleman's predecessor, as I very well remember, in 1873, brought down an original estimate of $20,000,000, and, when I came into office, I found he had taken authority in one way or another to expend $23,685,000, and the actual expenditure was $23,316,000. In 1879, those hon. gentlemen presented an original estimate of $23,427,000; their actual expenditure was $24,850,000, or nearly one million and a half more than their original estimate. In 1881, they presented an original estimate of $25,007,000; their actual expenditure was $25,502,000. In 1882, their original estimate was $26,189,000; their actual expenditure was $27,067,000. In 1883, their original estimate was $27,305,000; their actual expenditure was $28,730,000, a million and a half more than their original estimate. In 1884, their original estimate was $29,961,000; their actual expenditure was $31,107,000, nearly a million and a quarter more than their original estimate. In 1885, their original estimate was $29,811,000; their actual expenditure was $35,037,000, which, deducting a million and three-quarters for war charges, leaves the amount by which they exceeded their original estimate three and a quarter millions. In 1886, they presented an original estimate of thirty-one and three-quarter millions; their actual expenditure was $39,011,000, which, deducting three millions and a-quarter for war expenses, shows that they exceeded their original estimate by four millions and a-quarter. In this year of 1887 the original estimate appears to have been about thirty-three millions and a-quarter, and the hon. gentleman himself admitted in the statement I have before me that he expected the expenditure to go up to $35,600,000, and that, after deducting and charging to capital account $200,000 or $300,000 for war expenses. I do not think under those circumstances, that the hon. gentleman or his friends can complain of me, when, during every year that they have been in office, from 1873 to the present time, their original estimates have been largely below the sums actually expended, if I express my doubts whether the thirty-five millions which the hon. gentleman says he expects to expend in the next year will not be very largely exceeded. There are one or two other points in connection with that matter to which I will call the attention of the House. The hon. gentleman brings down an estimate of $35,041,000 charged to income, but when I turn to his expenditure on capital account, I find that $330,500 is there charged to capital account for rolling stock and service ties, whatever they may be. I hold that we have most grossly abused the practice of charging to capital account a vast number of matters, of which these are part, which ought assuredly to go to ordinary expenditure, and I say that in that respect you ought undoubtedly to draw the line, you ought not on any account whatever to charge perishable articles like rolling stock, many years after the road has been completed, to capital account. It is bad enough to charge every coal shed and every trifling expenditure along the line of the Inter-colonial Railway to capital account, but the putting of this rolling stock and other matters of that kind to capital account is, I hold, a distinct abuse, and it is one to which I have not unfrequently called the attention of the House on previous occasions. I shall be very glad if the hon. gentleman can keep down the expenditure on Mounted Police and Indians to the figures he has given, but, when I turn to the Public Accounts and see that in a long series of years, 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885 and 1886, the expenditure for Indians has never been less than $1,100,000, and when I look at the Governor General's warrants which were laid on the Table of this House a few days ago, and see that even while the House was sitting the Government thought themselves obliged to use this mode of obtaining $189,000 above the whole vote of last year for the service of Indians, I, for one, entertain very grave doubts whether, if we live to meet again another year, we will not find, in one shape or another, a similar state of things, and further grants of a couple of hundred thousand dollars for this purpose. The hon. gentleman himself practically admitted that he expected a large addition on the score of public works, not, as I understood, so much because he was afraid of his colleague as he was afraid of the gentlemen who support his colleagues, and who, I suspect, will not be willing to be put off with the very meagre allowance the hon. gentleman proposes to confine them to in the present Estimates. Then I doubt for my part whether the hon. gentleman will find, judging from past experience, judging from the details which are now given us, that $200,000 are enough to operate the Franchise Bill; and as the hon. gentleman craves suggestions how to reduce the public expenditure and promote the public good, here are $200,000 in these Estimates which are used for no earthly purpose under Heaven, except to do public mischief, and which may be saved with the greatest possible advantage. The hon. gentleman admitted that, over and above his estimates, about $200,000, if I understood him aright, would be required for steamship subsidies in connection with the Pacific and in connection with the Atlantic routes, and perhaps a little more on account of some other route to the West Indies, as to which he did not give us particulars. We have on the Table of this House propositions involving a further expenditure of $30,000 at least, one way or another, for the creation of certain new offices, new Ministers who are to be appointed. We know that the Government are obliged to grant a subsidy of $20,000 to the Island of Prince Edward; so I think if the hon. gentleman will look carefully at the expenses which have been incurred in former years, and would revise the Estimates a little, he must estimate the expenditure at $36,000,000; nay, I fear this is probably far less than he will expend for the service of the year which we are shortly to enter. Now, Sir, before we proceed seriously to consider this Budget, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he will venture to pledge himself that he will not be obliged to bring down Supplementary Estimates before we part on this occasion, to the tune of half a million or more, whether there are no considerable charges on capital account to be sprung upon us in the last days of the Session as they have been many times before, or whether, perchance, in spite of the hon. gentleman's protestations to the contrary—although I have no doubt but that he felt as I did, it was a scandalous abuse of power not intended to be made use of for such purposes—whether all these deficiencies are not to be covered up again by a couple of millions more of Governor General's warrants. Sir, I must call the attention of the House to the fact that according to declarations made in the press, according to declarations made on the floor of this House, there are a considerable number of obligations to which the hon. gentleman did not draw our attention on the present occasion, but which he and his colleagues will have to implement in one way or another before the House rises, in the shape of subsidies to various railway enterprises in Nova Scotia, Quebec and other parts of the Dominion, where it was thought that judicious expenditures of money might do good on a recent critical occasion. Anyhow, I will call the attention of the House to a certain statement made a few days ago by responsible heads of Departments. I was informed by the Minister of Railways that contracts had been entered into to the amount of $3,268,000, forming a further charge on capital account. Whether they are to be all implemented within the current year, I do not know, but they undoubtedly will form an addition to our future liabilities. He also informed us that $2,000,000 would be required for our canals, and about $600,000 for further public works. We see that we are to spend a million or so besides on the Sault Ste. Marie Canal; we have resolutions on the Table of the House involving an expenditure of a million and a quarter, by way of first instalment on some of those Nova Scotian railways for which the hon. gentleman made himself responsible a few months ago. We have annual charges which I may capitalise at about $4,000,000 roughly. So that, so to speak, over and above the present gross debt, here are nearly $12,250,000 of admitted additional charges on capital account which are actually in sight, not to speak of vast multitudes of others which hon. gentlemen will find themselves compelled to submit to if these are carried out as they propose. Sir, the hon. gentleman has prepared, at great pains and with great care, a most interesting series of diagrams in which he sets forth a number of valuable and interesting facts affecting the present condition of Canada, which diagrams are now, I believe, in the hands of all hon. gentlemen here present. But it appears to me that other diagrams are called for to make this as complete as it ought to be, and to serve as useful appendices to the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance. I have looked through it as carefully as my time permitted, but I can see here no diagram of the increase of debt for the last twenty years. I see here no diagram of the increase of taxes. I miss the diagram of the increase of expenditure. I miss most of all the diagram of the increase of prices of farmers' produce which was to be one of the most permanent results of the blessed and beneficent National Policy announced by these hon. gentlemen some half dozen years ago. I miss that most interesting diagram which, I think, ought not to be omitted, showing the rapidity with which settlement has been going on in Manitoba and the North-West during the last half dozen years, as compared with the adjacent State of Dakota, and as compared with the statement of the First Minister and the hon. gentleman, and, thirdly, as compared with the official statements of our own Department of Immigration. Add these five diagrams and I think I may venture to say that the series of the hon. gentleman will be tolerably complete. Now, I am not disposed to take much exception to the statement which the hon. gentleman has submitted to us as to the estimated income of the present year. It is possible that may be attained, although I fear that, as has happened heretofore, the actual expenditure will outgo his calculations. But I do object to charging even a small sum, even two or three hundred thousand dollars of the war expenses to capital account. I think that is a very serious error on the hon. gentleman's part, and as his predecessor set him, in that respect, an excellent example by honestly charging the war expenditures to the ordinary Consolidated Fund outgoings, I hope the hon. gentleman will reconsider his determination and will charge that matter, as it ought to be charged, to the ordinary expenditure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Has not the war expenditure all gone to capital account?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, not according to the Public Accounts.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Do not deficits go to capital account? I ask the hon. gentleman where all his deficits are? They are all in capital account, they are all in the increased debt of the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Certainly, but you have no right to charge them to capital account as an asset of this Dominion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If you have not a surplus, you have a deficit, and where does it go? There is no revenue to meet it, and it goes to capital account.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You have got to borrow money, it may be, to pay it, to pay for your deficit of two millions and a quarter of two years ago, to pay your deficit of six millions last year and your probable deficit of a million dollars this year. But that does not entitle you to consider it an asset, and that is the point at issue when you put it to capital account. Here is the hon. gentleman's statement, here are the comparative statements of expenditures charged to Consolidated Fund, and in these statements charged to Consolidated Fund he will find the whole of these war expenditures. There are his own Public Accounts laid by himself on the Table. If he disputes their authority I have no more to say, except that those accounts were most properly kept by his predecessor, and that the amount now in question should again be charged to the Consolidated Fund as were the five or six millions previously. But, as I have said, I am not going to dispute with him as to his probable estimate, I think it not unlikely that the sums mentioned may be received. I hope, at any rate, it may prove to be the case, and that the hon. gentleman may receive, in 1888, an equal sum; and to that I take no exception. I noticed, however, that the hon. gentleman took credit for himself for the reduced immigration vote, and he hoped he would produce a better result with that smaller sum than by the expenditure of the larger amount. And I will make him a suggestion: if he wiped out that amount altogether, a better result, in my judgment, would be produced than by the immigration expenditure for many years, because it has been most disastrous to this country. I know no greater abuse than the way in which the taxation of the people has been misused for bringing persons into the country, who if they obtained a living here at all, did so by driving out honest Canadians of much longer standing than themselves, who are compelled to seek their fortunes in a foreign land. And, therefore, I make the hon. gentleman a second suggestion, if he wishes it, that would enable him to save half a million by wiping out the atrocious vote for the Franchise Act, and the almost equally atrocious vote for immigration expenses, as that service is at present conducted. The hon. gentleman, I observed, in explaining to us the great advantage we had received from the reduction of our claim on the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from thirty millions to twenty millions, was good enough to tell us that the company had a yet further claim upon us because they had to borrow money at five per cent. to pay us money for which they were only obliged to pay us four per cent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to correct him. I made no such intimation that they had any claim, it was a distinct bargain between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Government. I recognise the fact that although they had paid one dollar and fifty cents per acre they had not received it, and I explained why. They had no claim, and I deny they have a claim for a further dollar.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I hope the hon. gentleman will keep in that mind. The hon. gentleman stated, however, that we should keep under consideration the fact that they have to float loans at five per cent, while all we required was four per cent. Those who recollect the original transaction, will recollect that the hon. gentleman and his predecessor insisted on the excellence of the bargain made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company because the original contract called for the payment of five per cent. which the Government afterwards reduced to four per cent. I agree with the hon. gentleman on one point: I think we were very lucky to get the twenty millions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think so too.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But I do not think the hon. gentleman was altogether wise in dwelling so very much upon that matter, because I observe that the hon. gentleman when acting as the principal instrument in negotiating the thirty million loan was good enough to state:

"I say there is no intelligent man who will say, in the first place, that there is a shadow of ground for supposing that every dollar of this principal or this interest will not be returned and repaid into the coffers of Canada."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. So it was, and better.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I can say that if the hon. gentleman remains Minister of Finance very long, and does not return to that sumptuous residence in London to which he casts a longing eye, he will be very glad to exchange the six millions of acres for ten millions of dollars in hard cash. The hon. gentleman also told us, and that is a point on which I shall have to enlarge later on, that he was always glad to see the Minister of Railways making an additional charge to the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway; and, as between them, he and his colleague have added ten millions to the capital account of the Intercolonial since my friend Mr. Mackenzie presided over it, their cause for gladness must be great. And when the hon. gentleman boasts that the business of the road has doubled since 1876, I have to say that I should be glad to hear it were I not aware that the annual loss has trebled since 1876, if you take into account the interest on the money we have expended since that time and add it to the present deficit on the working of that road. It is a most remarkable proof of progress and shows, I must say, very creditable management indeed that as fast as the business increases, or in an even more rapid ratio, the deficit on the working of the road increases. If that be a proof of progress, all I can is that in the interest of the rest of the Dominion, I should have been very glad if it had remained where it stood. Now, with respect to one important question which the hon. gentleman raised. With respect to the proof the hon. gentleman has laid on the Table of the advancement in material wealth of the people of this country, I am not disposed, and never have been disposed, either to say or to believe that four millions and a-half of intelligent Canadians, inhabiting a country which possesses very considerable resources as yet but very partially developed, would continue to toil from year to year without accumulating some wealth, at all events in the hands of some portion of them. But I can tell the hon. gentleman this, that if you consider carefully what those tables show, you will find that to a very great extent they represent rather a displacement of wealth than an increase of it, taking the whole population through. The hon. gentleman made a great point of the increase of the accumulations in the savings banks. But the hon. gentleman forgot to tell the House that there has been an enormous fall in the rate of interest; that the Government to-day are paying at least 33 per cent. for the deposits they receive in the savings banks more than depositors could obtain in any bank of decent standing in the Dominion. If I had granted a proportionately increased interest in 1876-77, if when the Canadian banks were paying 4 and 5 per cent. on deposits, I had gone one better and offered 6 per cent., I could have had as many millions as I could have desired. The hon. gentleman is aware that the banks are only offering 3 per cent., and that he is able to bring in considerable deposits only by offering 4 per cent., at least 33 per cent. more than the current rate on the open market. I do not object, and I was careful to guard myself against the allegation that I did, to any reasonable encouragement being afforded to the poorer portion of those depositors. But the hon. gentleman and the hon. gentleman's colleagues know right well the bulk of the deposits as to quantity are not held by persons for whom the rest of the community ought to be taxed, but that the bulk is held in large sums by persons as well able as the hon. gentleman or any member of this House to dispense with more than a fair interest on their money. We had all those accounts brought down to us a few years ago, and we found that in the case of one of the Departments—I forget whether it was the Post Office or the Government Savings Banks—one-half was held in sums of, I believe, over $2,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is wrong.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. gentleman will find that I am correct.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I mean that I object to that system.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. All we object to was the abuse of the system for that purpose. We are quite as willing as the hon. gentleman that moderate sums of money which may be fairly considered to represent the earnings of the poor, may receive a little extra interest; and I agree to it for this reason, that I hold that the present system of taxation presses exceedingly heavily on those persons, and therefore I am willing to go a little out of the way to indemnify them in some small degree. But what I objected to then, what I object to now, and what I am glad the hon. gentleman agrees with me in objecting to, is the gross abuse of having large sums of money put in the hands of the Government at rates largely exceeding the current value of the day. I was glad to hear—I had noticed it myself—that the price of our securities at three and a half per cent. had come up to par. That is a very fortunate circumstance for us, particularly looking at our present enormous indebtedness. But I would remark to the House, without in the smallest degree designing to discredit any operations which may have been recently conducted in London, that all that is proved by that is simply the well known fact, that in the last few years there has been a very great fall in the interest of money all over the world. I recollect perfectly well—and I think the hon. gentleman if he chooses to look back can verify the fact—that on the occasion of the very last loan I made myself in London in 1876, I was able to obtain as good a price for our Canadian 4 per cents as the Americans were able to obtain for their four and a half per cents, that same day and hour, on the London market, and I do not think that the credit of Canada, relatively to those securities, has advanced in any material degree since then.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Is not the hon. gentleman aware, if he is in the habit of looking at the Economist or any of these other papers that give the prices of stock in London, that a few years ago New South Wales was leading our four and a half per cents while we are leading them to-day?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am aware of that, but I think the United States is a better comparison for us than New South Wales. I say that if you want to compare the value of North American securities, you had better take the North American States, and not travel to the other side of the world for that purpose. Sir, I was rather astonished to hear the hon. gentleman, in alluding to the enormous value of the Canadian Pacific Railway, spoke of the value which it was to us in the late insurrection, and tell us we could have afforded to give thirty millions of dollars as a free gift to it, by reason of the service it was to us in putting down that insurrection. Sir, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman and his colleagues that it would have been better never to have so administered the North-West as to have had an insurrection, and that I cannot admit that it is much proof of the wisdom of their policy that, by their misconduct, they should first provoke these unfortunate Matis to rebel, and that then they should turn around and say that it is a proof of their great foresight, that foreseeing this rebellion and foreseeing their own misconduct—and they might easily foresee that it would have produced a rebellion—they constructed the railway in time to aid in suppressing the rebellion which they themselves produced.

Mr. MILLS. Would it not be well to adjourn the debate, as we are not likely to close it to-night?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) desires it we will adjourn.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it would be better, as it would not be courteous to the Minister o

Finance to answer a five hours' speech of his in an hour and a-half, and it would be cruel to members on both sides of the House to inflict three financial speeches on them in one day.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We will adjourn the debate then.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And take it up to-morrow?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to go into committee and pass the resolutions, with the understanding that the discussion takes place precisely as if the Speaker were in the Chair.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Very well, then, the first thing to-morrow.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I willingly accept the suggestion. I suppose that any criticism on the resolutions had better be deferred. We can pass them en bloc now and reserve the discussion on details.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will they be printed in the Votes and Proceedings?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No human being can understand them merely by hearing them read.

House resolved itself into Committee on the resolutions,

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved:

That it is expedient to provide that the foregoing resolutions and the alterations thereby made in the duties of Customs on the articles therein mentioned shall take effect on and after the 13th May, instant.

Motion agreed to, and resolutions adopted and ordered to be reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11:25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 13th May, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RECEPTION OF PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville) moved:

That the time for receiving petitions for Private Bills be extended until Monday, 30th May instant, and the time for presenting Private Bills until Monday, 6th June next, in accordance with the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. McNEILL. I beg leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Civil Service Act.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member will have to give notice of that, as it is a public Bill.

Mr. McNEILL. I give notice now that I will move for leave to introduce this Bill.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 82) to incorporate the Oshawa Railway and Navigation Company.—(Mr. Smith, Ontario.)

Bill (No. 83) to incorporate the Londonderry Iron Company.—(Mr. Kenny.)

Bill (No. 84) respecting the Edmonton and Saskatchewan Land Company (Limited).—(Mr. Scarth.)

Bill (No. 85) to authorise and provide for the winding up of the Pictou Bank.—(Mr. Tupper.)

Bill (No. 86) further to amend the Act to incorporate the South Saskatchewan Valley Railway Company.—(Mr. Brown.)

Bill (No. 87) to revise and amend the charter of the Quebec and James' Bay Railway Company, and to extend the time for commencing and completing the railway of the said company.—(Mr. Grandbois.)

Bill (No. 88) to incorporate the Canadian Horse Insurance Company.—(Mr. Small.)

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

Resolutions adopted in Committee of Ways and Means (May 12th) were reported and read the first time.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved second reading of resolutions.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before that motion is passed I desire to say a few words on the subject. When the House rose last night, I was occupied in pointing out that, much as I admired the Minister of Finance, I thought, bearing in mind certain predictions which he had made on former occasions in this House, and bearing in mind also the facts which the reports before us disclose as to the results of those predictions, I thought that the House would do well on the whole to receive the hon. gentleman's statements with some degree of caution. I pointed out, also, that as regards the Estimates which were recently laid on the Table of this House, it would be scarcely prudent for us to expect that the Government could keep strictly within the bounds of their original Estimates, taking into consideration the fact to which I also called attention, that during the last eight or nine years I could find no single instance in which the original Estimates of the Government had not been exceeded in many cases by several million dollars; also, that with respect to the diagrams, interesting as they are, which the hon. gentleman had submitted to us, I feared that on examination it would be found that they contained several important omissions, and that without those omissions being supplied, it would be very difficult for us to acquiesce in the consequences which the hon. gentleman had deduced from them; also, I thought, Mr. Speaker, that some of the declarations made by the hon. gentleman were rather rash. I feared that, owing, no doubt, to his absence from this country, he had somewhat exaggerated the situation, when he spoke of Canada, as a whole, being at present in a condition of exceeding prosperity, and when he assured us that the future was all we could desire. The hon. gentleman in his speech saw one single cloud on our horizon, but he intimated that even that cloud had such a silver lining that on the whole he was rather inclined to think it would be to the advantage of the people of Canada if the American Government were to carry out their threats and non-intercourse was established between us and our greatest customer and neighbor. Also, Sir, although I recognise the patriotic sentiment which inspired the state ment, I felt it was, perhaps, premature on the part of the Finance Minister to state positively in his place that our half of the continent was as good as that possessed by the Americans. And, as he has invited suggestions, and as it is clear from divers statements in the hon. gentleman's speech, that he was a brilliant success, as he mentioned several times, in his capacity of Lord High Commissioner to England, I would suggest to hon. gentlemen opposite, and particularly the Premier, that if he concurs in the view expressed by the Minister of Finance, it might be greatly for the advantage of Canada that the hon. gentleman should be sent as High Commissioner to Washington with full powers to negotiate a swop. I think that if the hon. gentleman be correct, that our half of this continent is as good as the American half, here is a fine opportunity, particularly bearing in mind that our territory is much the newer and more virgin of the two, of terminating some of the difficulties which have arisen between us and our American neighbors. But I doubt if I can agree with the statement which the hon. gentleman made, that the depression in the United States (I took down his words, and if I am wrong I shall be glad to be corrected) was as great in the years 1886 and 1885 as it was in the period between 1873 and 1878. As for the other statement which the hon. gentleman has volunteered, that the results of protection are to lead to a fall in prices, that we will obtain our goods as cheap as if we had no taxes on them at all; and also that he had no idea of the approaching elections till he landed in New York—they are, I must say, of a somewhat surprising character. It is due, no doubt, to the Minister of Finance to state that he advanced one very excellent reason indeed for his disbelief that a general election was about to take place. That hon. gentleman, who is known to have been always deep in the confidence of the Government and the First Minister, was perfectly well aware of the extraordinary exertions which had been put forward by the First Minister and his colleagues to defeat Mr. Mowat, and knowing, as he did know, that those exertions had wholly failed, that Mr. Mowat had been returned by an enormous majority, it was natural that so astute a politician as he is would have concluded that the probabilities were greatly against the right hon. gentleman's success. But, however astute the Minister of Finance undoubtedly is, he had forgotten one important factor in the situation, the revising barrister, and the fact that the list on which Mr. Mowat was elected was a very different, and, I may add, a very much fairer and honest list than that on which the hon. gentleman was elected. Sir, I also took occasion to intimate to the Finance Minister that I feared he was rather exaggerating the blessings likely to flow from the introduction of the multifarious taxes he proposed; that I feared in this, as on many other occasions, it would be found, if we relied too implicitly on his calculations, that we were following a will-o-the-wisp which might ultimately land us in a financial quagmire; and, briefly, I told him I could not agree with the statements he had made, more particularly as to the present position of this country. As I have already said, I am not disposed to dispute the fact that with four millions and a half of intelligent people, possessing a country with very considerable resources, it would be probable that from year to year, and much more over a long term of years, that there would be considerable progress in various directions. I am quite willing to agree with the Minister of Finance that there has been considerable progress, although much of it, in my judgment, has been partial and one-sided, and rather, as I intimated last night, in the nature of the displacement of wealth than of a general acquisition of wealth. I also pointed out that the evidences on which he relied were misleading and insufficient; that he had ignored very material and cardinal facts; that he had not shown that the rate of population was increasing as fast as we would wish; that the condition of the great producing classes was as prosperous as could be desired; that the prices of our great staples were advancing or even holding their own; nor had he touched, except in the slightest possible way, upon our success in the settlement and development of the North-West Territories, which have cost Canada so much to acquire. And here allow me to say a few words as to one matter on which the hon. gentleman dwelt at very considerable length during the latter part of the evening, that is, the proposal for developing a great iron industry in the Dominion. The hon. gentleman was kind enough to tell us that the iron industry was necessary for the progress of all and every industry. Well, Sir, I think he is pretty correct, although I would probably attach a different meaning to that fact than he seems to attach to it; and I say that, being a prime necessary to a great many industries, it is not quite so statesmanlike, wise, or prudent, as he would have us believe, to provide for making that article more costly which is the raw material of a great many industries. Sir, the hon. gentleman, in the midst of all his enthusiasm, permits some important omissions, for I notice that he does not propose to tax the largest consumers of iron at all, the wealthy and powerful corporations which monopolise the railways of the country. They are to go scot free. My own wish is that, had it been consistent with his policy, he should have shown equal consideration to the host of minor industries, to the small and poor men throughout the country, on whom, as well as on the rural population, this tax will press, in my opinion, with extreme severity. However, I agree with the Minister of Finance that it would be better, on the whole, that we discuss this subject in committee, in ordinary fashion, when we will be able to obtain fuller information, on various matters of detail, from the hon. gentleman, and in particular, when we can learn how he expects to promote, as, if I understood him rightly, he does expect, a great export of charcoal iron from this country. To my mind, if we can produce charcoal iron for export at all, we could do it just as well in the past as we are likely to do by reason of anything the hon. gentleman proposes to do in that direction. But, Sir, I think it is time for us to examine our position as regards our financial future. I think that as this is a new House, as this is the twentieth year of our young Confederation, as many things which in former Sessions were matters of speculation have been proved clearly and conclusively from the public records to be facts now beyond doubt, it will serve an excellent purpose to consider calmly and deliberately where we have arrived, and what are the real prospects of this country in a financial point of view. I want to call attention, in the first place, to the amount of debt as stated by the Minister of Finance, and to the amount of deficits he has admitted. I want to call attention to our total expenditure, and the proportion which our fixed charges bear thereto, and also to the obligations admitted to have been incurred, and the consequences which are involved in those obligations. I want to call attention particularly to the state of our population; to the state of our exports; to the fall in the prices of a great many of our productions; to the success or non-success which has attended our efforts for the settlement of the North-West, and, lastly, to the claims which are now being made on the Dominion Treasury by the various Provinces, and by sections of the various Provinces, from one end of this Dominion to the other. And, in connection with all these, I may take occasion to observe how the results agree with some of the former assertions made by the hon. gentleman as to the importance of maintaining an exact balance of trade, as to the importance of diminishing the drain of gold which the hon. gentleman used in former years to speak of as a source of great injury to this country; how he has succeeded in promoting an influx of immigrants who have remained in this country, and how also he and his colleagues have succeeded in carrying out those declarations of economy of which they used to be so profuse when they sat on this side of the House. In the first place I call attention to the present amount of our debt and the results we have to show for it. That is a point to which the hon. gentleman also called attention last night and it is a point on which I am afraid there will be some very considerable difference of opinion between himself and me. First of all, Sir, I call attention to the statement made in the Public Accounts, under date of the 1st of July, 1886, as to the exact net debt of this Dominion, which is there placed at a little more than $223,000,000. Now, Sir, I think that if any one thing could show better than another the imperative necessity for complying with the recommendation of my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and publishing these statements weekly or monthly, we will find it in the fact that although it must have been perfectly well known to the Minister of Finance and his Department as long ago as the 1st of July, 1886, that the net debt of Canada was $223,000,000, it is, nevertheless, a most singular fact to which I call the attention of the House, that although this was known on the 1st of July last, during the eight months or thereabouts which intervened between the 1st of July and the 22nd of February, several important members of the Ministry did not appear to know that the net debt exceeded $196,000,000. I respect official etiquette; I know that one Minister should not pry into another's Department; but just consider the position in which the hon. gentleman's return shows that these Ministers were placed by the unhappy reticence of his Department as to the amount of the debt. Here we have them stating all over the country, as appears in the published reports of their speeches, that the public debt was $196,000,000, when, in point of fact it was $223,000,000 on the 1st of July, or a difference of about $28,000,000. It is very hard that those hon. gentlemen should not have been corrected in time to prevent their exposing such extreme ignorance of the real financial position of the country, as to go before the people, on the eve of a general election, and understate the public debt by nearly $30,000,000. Now, Sir, we have got to see what that debt is and what we have got to show for it. As to the amount there is no dispute. But, Sir, when we come to consider what sort of properties we have, and what those properties are worth to us at the present moment, then I am afraid that the conclusions I am about to draw will hardly conform to those which were drawn by the hon. gentleman. He stated last night, if I understood him correctly, that the total cost of our canals and our Intercolonial Railway, with the sum we had expended for the Canadian Pacific Railway, and for these buildings, was about $163,000,000—in fact, I am not sure but I am understating it. However, Sir, I think we are both agreed in saying that after you deduct the Canadian Pacific Railway, the cost of the public works which the people of Canada now possess is about $103,000,000. I need not tell the House that at this present moment we are not in the receipt of one cent of interest on the amount which those works have cost us. But it may interest the House to know what is the annual charge, as taken from the Public Accounts, of administering those works from year to year. I take last year, Sir, and I find it to be as follows: For public works under the head of railways and canals, charged to income, we expended $81,450; under collection of revenues, $191,000; and for operating railways and canals, $3,339,000; and the two Departments of Railways and Canals and of Public Works cost us, with the Minister's salaries, $110,000. So that our public works cost us, as by statement, $3,728,000, and our total receipts amounted to $3,082,000, being an annual deficiency of $646,000. Now, Sir, I am bound to admit that I think that these results have partly arisen from unavoidable causes. I am not going to condemn the hon. gentleman because our canals, for instance, have turned out less profitably than they were expected to turn out, because it is now necessary to work them at a loss, whereas, I think, in my hon. friend's (Mr. Mackenzie's) time, they were worked at a small, but still a steady profit. I call attention to this, however: not merely is there an annual deficit of $646,000, as verified from the Public Accounts, but I find that over and above that there are charged in 1886 to capital account items like these: for rolling stock, $58,000; for air brakes, $378; for sleeping cars, $161,000; for coal cars, $4,460—in all, $223,000, which, according to the principle I laid down the other evening, ought, I think, at any rate, in dealing with Government works, to be added to the annual deficit chargeable to income, and which, if so added, would represent an annual deficit of about $870,000. Now, Sir, that is not all. Since my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Mackenzie) went out of office, we find that on the Intercolonial Railway alone, $10,000,000 have been added to the capital account. We find that in public works of all kinds since 1878, there have been added, without taking into account the Canadian Pacific Railway, $18,000,000 up to the present time. Now, Sir, for interest and sinking fund on that amount there is a further yearly charge of $810,000, as compared with our charge for the cost of these works in 1878. So, at this present moment, if you add those two sums together, you will find an annual deficit of $870,000, and a further annual charge for interest and sinking fund of $810,000, making $1,680,000 annual loss, incurred in the working of our public works, being about $1,200,000 more than existed in 1878. Now, Sir, in the time of my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie) it is true there was a deficit. The road was just completed; it was new; it had not had an opportunity of developing traffic; and, moreover, it was my hon. friend's practice to charge to income a very considerable number of items which are now charged to capital. At any rate we get this broad result, that taking into account the additional charge for capital sunk, we find that whereas there was under those peculiar circumstances, a deficit of $500,000 on the working of our public works in my hon. friend's time, there is now a deficit of nearly $1,700,000. As I said, I think that is partly our misfortune, and not altogether the fault of the hon. gentlemen; but I must say I am rather at a loss to see by what mental process the hon. gentleman convinces himself that these properties, which not only do not return one farthing of interest on their cost, but which involve a large and steady annual loss, can be treated as a particularly valuable or profitable asset, and how it is that he can tell us we need not mind our debt, because we have so valuable a property to show for it. And, I may add, that if I understand aright the effects of the policy which the hon. gentlemen are inaugurating, the carrying out of two or three of their railway schemes is likely to add very largely, indeed, to the deficits of the Intercolonial Railway. I am afraid that, bad as this showing is, it is nothing to the showing we may expect to face at the expiration of a few years. Now, Sir, with respect to the deficits which have occurred, there is no dispute. The hon. gentleman admits frankly and candidly that even after the whole expenditure on war account in 1886, there remains a deficit of about $2,750,000. Sir, I can imagine, as I remarked last night, how the hon. gentleman, when he sat on this side of the House, would have regarded such a deficiency had it occurred under the administration of my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Mackenzie). Now, I suppose such a deficiency is a mere matter of account, and following the excellent doctrine which the hon. gentleman expounded last night, you may charge it as an asset to the credit of capital account, and wipe it out at the same time. But there is this very material difference, to which I call the attention of the House. There were deficits, it is true, in the time of my hon. friend, but those deficits were incurred because of the reluctance of himself and myself and our colleagues to add to the burdens of the people in a time of distress, and our desire to save the public as much as we could from large charges. The deficits which have now occurred, and which are vastly larger than those which existed in our time, have occurred after an enormous increase of the public burdens, after practically doubling the incidence of taxation on the people. As the hon. gentleman admitted frankly enough that a deficit of a larger or smaller amount was inevitable this year, I shall not pursue that subject except to say that I for one will be heartily relieved if it turns out that the deficit the hon. gentleman expects will not be materially exceeded. At the same time I must observe that the statement of receipts and expenditures, which he has laid on the Table, appear to me to threaten that the deficit will assume considerably larger proportions than he now anticipates. But, Sir, a matter which well deserves our consideration is the enormous proportion that exists between our total expenditure and our fixed charges. I do not think enough attention has been paid to this in times past. Now, I will just state to the House the actual fixed charges which were paid in 1886, and contrast them with the actual income, and then the House can judge for itself whether or not I at all exaggerate the situation. I find that the actual sums paid in 1886 were: for interest and charges of management, $10,483,000; for sinking fund, $1,606,000; for what are known as "collection of revenue," which we cannot practically diminish, $7,807,000; for subsidies, $4,182,000; so that out of an actual revenue of a little over $33,000,000 in 1886 the fixed charges amount to $24,081,000, very nearly 75 per cent of the whole receipts in that year. And if to these you add the payments for superannuation and the payments made under Indian treaties, which together amount to about $1,200,000, you will find that we left ourselves in 1886 something like $8,000,000 for carrying on all the affairs of this country. Now, I do not find that there is any improvement under present circumstances, though I do not blame the hon. gentleman himself therefor. I find that the proportion of fixed charges continues to increase. I find that the proportion of fixed charges is in some respects larger in the present Estimates than they were in former ones; and, as I said before, it is quite clear that a very considerable number of those charges which were put down under the head of controllable expenditure have ceased to be controllable. They are treaty obligations which it is no longer within our powers substantially to reduce. This increase has taken place in spite of two things—in the first place, in spite of the fall of the rate of interest all over the world, which ought to have considerably diminished the burdens of the people, and, in the next place, in spite of the fact that a very considerable proportion of our expenditure is concealed by the practice, which has now apparently become habitual, of charging a number of items to capital account which ought, in all reason, to be charged to ordinary expenditure. Then, I come to consider the question of our future obligations. I pointed out last night that, according to the statements made by the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Public Works, and according to the Estimates and resolutions laid on the Table of the House, over and above our present net debt of $225,000,000, we had incurred obligations amounting to about $12,250,000 which we know of. I also called attention to the prospect that, as in former Sessions, within a few hours before this House separates, we may be called on to consider grants of many millions of dollars for various purposes, as to which the Minister of Finance and his colleagues have as yet vouchsafed no hint. But I desire to point out, what is of yet more importance, that if these obligations, which are in the nature of gifts and grants, are discharged, you may lay to your account a huge mass of other obligations amounting to more millions than I would

SIR RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

at this moment dare to mention. Why, Sir, it is but a very few days since we were informed—and publicly was given to it in the newspapers, and in fact the document has been since laid before the House—that a further subsidy was to be made to Prince Edward Island of $20,000 a year, representing, practically, a grant of $500,000 to that island. Now, I have this to say: If Prince Edward Island, with its population of 110,000 or so, is intitled to half a million on the grounds which are laid down in that Minute of Council, the hon. gentleman may rest assured that the 4,400,000 people who inhabit the rest of this Dominion will put in their claims, before he is very much older, for 44 half millions more; and the hon. gentleman will find that, in this grant of $20,000 a year to Prince Edward Island, he has tied his own hands, and the hands of his colleagues, in such a way that he may just as well at once admit that he will have to provide some $22,000,000 more to meet the demands which will assuredly be made upon him from the other Provinces. The whole of this system of special grants, and of special railway subsidies to this or that little railway, here or there, is a direct violation of the very essence of the Federal compact, and the hon. gentlemen, having done what they have done, having begun this system, having made these grants to outlying sections in this or that Province, for what reasons, political or other, I am not going to stop to discuss, have made it the duty of members of Parliament from the other Provinces (the hon. gentleman must admit it, although I regret the conclusion) and from every section of those Provinces, to insist that equal rights be granted to their constituencies. We are members of a limited partnership, and if one member is allowed to draw funds for its private advantage from the general partnership, you cannot, in reason or justice, hesitate to grant proportional sums to all the other portions of the Dominion. The hon. gentleman should have thought of this before he and his colleagues introduced this system—this system which we opposed at the time because we foresaw the result. I can tell the hon. gentleman that, in estimating our future liabilities, he or his successor—if he is not to be here long—will do well to bear in mind that, just so surely as you make special grants, either to a particular locality or Province, sooner or later, probably sooner rather than later, will you be compelled to make similar grants to every other Province, in proportion to its population and resources. There is another very important matter which the hon. gentleman and his colleagues and myself have discussed and disputed over before. I am sorry to say that all the information which I have been able to obtain leads me to the conclusion that while we are increasing our debt, and our expenditure, and our taxes, out of all proportion to our resources, the population of Canada, as a whole, has become almost, if not altogether, stationary, at any rate over a great area. I am sorry, Sir, indeed, it should be so; but I cannot shut my eyes to the facts which are making themselves apparent every day and hour to every man who chooses to consider this subject with any degree of care. On the present occasion I shall say nothing about the condition of the Maritime Provinces or the Province of Quebec. There are gentlemen here better qualified to speak on that subject than I, and if they tell me that their personal information tends to make them believe the population of the Maritime Provinces and Quebec is increasing in a greater ratio than that of Ontario, all that I can say is that I shall be sincerely rejoiced; but I do not believe an hon. gentleman will be found on either side of the House, coming from the Maritime Provinces or from Quebec, to rise and state that, in his judgment, the population of those Provinces shows signs of rapid growth. With respect to Ontario, we possess means of information not given us in other quarters, and I find that in Ontario certain very remarkable results exhibit themselves, as evidenced by the returns laid before the Ontario Legislature by its Bureau for the collection of Statistics. I find that in a period of five years, going back to 1881, the total population of the Province of Ontario, according to their municipal statistics, has increased just 128,000. Now, I am aware that some hon. gentlemen opposite have disputed the correctness of those statistics, and I will call their attention and the attention of the House to this important fact. Those statistics may not be absolutely correct, but they are, most assuredly, relatively correct in the matter of the increase of population, so far, at any rate, as we can deduce anything from our own census returns. If hon. gentlemen will choose to look at the Ontario statistics, they will see that, as a matter of fact, the Ontario statistics show a larger increase in the years from 1872 to 1881 than do our census returns. Consequently, I contend, if there be any error on the part of the Ontario returns, they are rather likely to err in exaggerating than diminishing the number. More than that, our assessors of late years have taken much greater pains than usual to obtain correct returns, and I may also refer to a very important circumstance, which is, that the returns of the number of registered pupils attending school in Ontario during the last five or six years show a positive decrease. I am unwilling to believe that those returns, though valuable in their way, are to be taken as showing a positive decrease on the part of the people of Ontario, but it is a very remarkable fact, and numerous theories have been advanced to account for this extraordinary state of things. We were told, on the other side of the House, I think, that one reason for the diminution of the number of pupils was that more children were earning their own living, and consequently could not attend school. We have been told, in other quarters, that our people have become poorer, and unable to send their children to school, and some persons have insinuated that at present the increase of families has been checked by artificial means, which last I hope sincerely is not the case. Be that as it may, the Ontario statistics show most clearly that the increase of our population, during the last five or six years, has not exceeded 128,000 souls, and what is more important, in my opinion, these same statistics show that the rural population of Ontario has become almost absolutely stationary. Sir, I find that in a period of seven years, from 1879 to 1886, the rural population of Ontario has increased a bare 15,000 souls; and I recommend to the careful consideration of the Minister of Finance this fact, that those same statistics show in the period from 1872 to 1879 the rural population increased by 87,000, as against 15,000 from 1879 to 1886. In other words, they show that, prior to 1879, the rural population increased at something like sixfold the rate it has since attained. I am not going to inflict on the House a detailed statement of the increase of the rural population in every county, but I give the general results, and those results are very remarkable. In Ontario we find that the counties which exceed 1 per cent. per annum number five; we find that counties which are increasing at the rate of less than 1 per cent. per annum number ten, and that there are twenty-nine counties in Ontario in which the rural population is either stationary or is retrograding. I hardly think that any hon. gentleman, in view of those facts, will be disposed to contend that I am wrong in intimating that I cannot see my way to allow an increase larger than 50,000 a year in the population of this Dominion, and that, deducting Indians, I do not think the white population of the Dominion can possibly be put to day at more than 4,500,000. I would call the attention of the House in this connection to certain significant facts to which the hon. gentleman alluded last night. As I have shown, our own municipal statistics only show a total increase in Ontario of 128,000 during the past five years. I think every hon. gentleman here is perfectly well aware that there is no great immigration to the Maritime Provinces, that there is no great immigration to the Province of Quebec; and we know perfectly well, from the hon. gentleman's own returns, the total immigration which has gone to Manitoba and the North-West, and we know what has gone to British Columbia. Therefore it is clear that, if the immigration statistics of the present Government are to be relied on, a very large proportion of the total number of immigrants must have gone to Ontario. We are informed on the authority of the public returns that, in 1881, 48,000 immigrants settled in Canada; that, in 1882, 112,000 immigrants settled in Canada; that, in 1883, 133,000 immigrants settled in Canada; that, in 1884, 103,000 immigrants settled in Canada; and that, in 1885, 79,000 immigrants settled in Canada; making in those five years a total of 477,000 immigrants who are alleged to have settled in Canada. We know that Manitoba and the North-West, according to these gentlemen's own census returns, have not absorbed at the outside more than 44,000; we know that British Columbia has not absorbed more than 33,000; we know that only a very small number go to the Maritime Provinces, or to Quebec; and, consequently, if the hon. gentleman's statements be correct, we are forced to this conclusion, that, whereas the total population of Ontario has only increased 129,000, nevertheless 300,000 immigrants, at the least, throwing off 100,000 for fear of accidents, according to these hon. gentlemen, must have settled in Ontario. Why, if that statement be correct, those immigrants must have driven out at least that number of native Ontarians, to seek their fortune elsewhere. For myself, I must say that I view those statistics with the greatest possible suspicion, that I do not believe that that number ever settled in Canada, that I believe they were either birds of passage, or that they came here for a very short time, and then made their way to other countries; but there is the statement of the hon. gentleman's colleagues, and from that statement we learn that 477,000 immigrants have settled in Canada in five years; we have the evidence of our own municipal statistics, of our own school returns, that in the Province which, if they came and stayed here at all, must perforce have absorbed the great proportion of them, the increase is not more than half the natural annual increase, without counting immigrants at all. That, I think, will be enough to satisfy any candid and unprejudiced mind that there is something very gravely astray in the returns which are yearly laid on our Table purporting to be made by the Department of Immigration, and, if those are all the results we are likely to obtain for the $300,000 or $400,000 a year which the Department of Immigration costs us, I again repeat my recommendation to the hon. gentleman to save the public money by wiping out that Department altogether. Now, not merely is it clear and plain that our population is practically reduced to a stationary condition, notably among the rural population of the Province of Ontario, and what is true of Ontario is true, I take it, in perhaps a greater degree of the rural population of the other Provinces—but it is likewise a rather remarkable fact that, at the same time, not merely is our volume of trade diminishing, but the actual exports from this country are diminishing in a very considerable ratio, that is to say, in proportion to our population. I am taking now not the exports which the hon. gentleman gave us last night, which are composed to a great extent of goods in transitu, but I am taking the exports of Canadian products only. I take two points, 1873 and 1886. I find that in 1873, Canada, with a population of 3,750,000, exported of our own produce $30,384,000 worth, or at the rate of $21.70 per head. I find that, in 1886, we exported $77,813,000 worth of our own produce, which, taking my calculation of a population of 4,500,000, is at the rate of $17.50 per head against $21.70 in 1873; and if you take the hon. gentleman's calculation of a population of 5,000,000, as given by him last night, it is clear that the reduction would be very much larger. So in regard to the total volume of trade. I find that the total volume of trade was $217,000,000 in 1873, which, on a population of 3,750,000, is $67.50 per head. I find that in 1886, with a population of 4,500,000, it was $189,000,000, being at the rate of $42 per head; and, as before, if you take the hon. gentleman's calculation of 5,000,000, the reduction would be greater still. And here is a curious and interesting fact. In 1873, our export of manufactures was $2,921,000 worth; in 1878, our export of manufactures was $4,127,000 worth; in 1886, our export of manufactures is given at $2,824,000 worth. In thirteen years, we have not only not advanced in the export of our manufactures, but have gone back about $100,000, after having attained to the amount of $4,127,000 in 1878. I am quite well aware that this reduction is very considerably due, not so much to a positive diminution of the quantity of our exports, as to a fall in prices, but the conclusion which I draw from that is very different from the conclusion drawn by the hon. gentleman. It appears to me that a time when prices are falling, when very large classes of our people are less able to buy than they were before, is not the time to go on enormously increasing the taxation and the burthens of this country. Now, I come to a point which I hope will be of considerable interest to some hon. gentlemen in this House, at any rate, and which does undoubtedly bear, and bear to a very considerable degree, on the wisdom of the policy of which the hon. gentleman boasts so much. It is only too well known to every hon. gentleman here, on either side of the House, who represents a rural population, that for many years back there has been a steady and grievous fall in the prices of all agricultural productions, but I doubt whether the public at large entirely appreciate the extent to which our farmers' incomes and profits have been reduced in consequence. Now, Sir, although I am not sure that hon. gentlemen on that side will admit the Mail to be quite as infallible an authority as they used to do, still, I think they will admit that at the date to which I propose to refer, it was in good standing, and was an accepted member of the Conservative league and alliance. From the Toronto Mail I take the extracts of prices I am about to read. I find that on the first day of October, 1873, the price of fall wheat in the Toronto market ranged from $1.25 to $1.30; of spring wheat from $1.17 to $1.19. I find that on the same date in 1878 it had fallen from $1.25 and $1.30 to 90 cents and $1.02, for fall wheat; and for spring wheat to from 80 to 97 cents. I find that on the 1st of October, last past, it had fallen to 76 cents for fall wheat, and 76 or 77 cents for spring. I find that a similar fall prevailed in the case of our next largest cereal, barley. I find that whereas barley in 1873 was $1.05 to $1.11, in 1878 it had fallen to 60 cents to $1; on the 1st of October last it was 48 to 63 cents. I am aware of my own personal knowledge that in the great barley growing districts of Canada the gap was much wider; I am aware that in 1878 barley was sold in those districts, and in October last, it was difficult to obtain from 45 to 50 cents. I find that in 1873 beef cattle were sold at $6 per hundred; in 1878, at $4.60; and in 1886, at $4 per hundred. Now, Sir, here is to be seen the fact, plain and clear, that prices paid to the farmers of Canada for their chief productions are very much less than they were eight years, vastly less than they were thirteen years ago. But the House would do well to remember this most important fact, that according to the best information I have been able to obtain, there has been no considerable reduction in the cost of growing a bushel of wheat or a bushel of barley since those dates to the present time. On the contrary, I am inclined to think that, as a rule, and bearing in mind that the soil was much less exhausted thirteen years ago than it is to-day, I believe that it was, probably—although I will not insist on that point—cheaper to grow a bushel of wheat or barley in a great many sections of this country, thirteen years ago, than it is to-day. Now, Sir, I have consulted authorities on this point—it is one on which I speak under correction—and I find that the cost of growing a bushel of wheat to-day is put down at 60 to 65 cents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, no!

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am merely stating the information I have got; it varies considerably. But none of these estimates furnished to me state the cost at less than 50 cents a bushel for the growth of wheat—of course I am speaking of an ordinary crop, say about twenty bushels to the acre; where the growth is larger, there would be a proportionate reduction. In short I find, from all the authorities I am able to obtain—though there are gentlemen here who can speak with much greater personal knowledge than I can—that the cost of growing a bushel of wheat has not been materially reduced in the last dozen years, and that the minimum cost of growing wheat is 50 cents per bushel. Now, if you choose to apply that test, I think the House will arrive at some remarkable results. They will see, in the first place, that supposing the Mail's prices to be correct, a farmer's profits in 1873 must have amounted to something like 60 or 75 cents per bushel on the growth of wheat, which I think is a convenient standard. In 1878, they ranged from 40 to 50 cents per bushel; and to-day, according as you take 50, 55 or 60 cents as the cost of growing, the net profits are reduced to 20 or 25 cents per bushel. I am afraid that when that matter comes to be discussed and examined we will find these figures to be substantially correct, and that the profits of the farmers in Ontario, and I suppose of the farmers of Canada in general, have been enormously reduced in the interval of thirteen, or in the interval of eight, years, to which I have alluded. Now, Sir, I call the attention of the Minister of Finance to that point. If, as I am informed, the profits of the farmers of Canada have been reduced in this proportion, or in anything like this proportion, in the last thirteen, or the last eight, years, then I say he will do well to consider this important fact, that, in almost all the changes which he proposed last night, in almost all the new taxes which he proposes, he will lay still further burdens on the backs of the farmers of Canada, and will still further diminish their narrow margin of profits, all too narrow as it is to-day. Sir, it would hardly be possible, without very careful and minute research, to estimate what is the loss of income that the farmers have sustained, and if I venture any calculation I do it, I repeat again, under correction. Still, after looking into the matter, after considering the amount of the exports of agricultural produce which we have had returned from year to year, after considering the prices that the farmers obtain from their home customers (after retaining enough to feed themselves), I am inclined to believe that within the last ten or dozen years, the net income of the farmers of Canada is something like $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 less, by reason of the enormous fall in prices to which I have referred. However, be that as it may, there is unfortunately no possibility of denying, no possibility of contradicting, the main facts to which I have alluded, namely, that the profits of the farmers of Ontario in particular have been enormously reduced within the last few years, and that being so, that it is a matter of most questionable policy, that it is a very imprudent thing, in my mind, to go on and load these men down with further taxes, while you know from the facts I have shown, that over the great majority of the counties of Ontario, at any rate, the rural population is absolutely stationary or retrograde. Sir, remember I have shown clearly and plainly an enormous reduction on the profits which the farmer can make by honest industry in Ontario; we have the proof that for seven long years the rural population of Ontario bardly increased, altogether, one per cent. in that interval. I do not comment further, but I commend these facts to the most serious consideration of the hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, I come to another point on which I greatly regret to have to dwell. I have to consider the success which has attended the efforts of the Government to settle the great territory we have acquired in the North-West. I have always admitted, I admit frankly now, that if hon. gentlemen, in return for all their huge expenditure, for all the vast burdens they have laid upon us, were able to-day to point to a populous and compact settlement in Manitoba or the North-West, let us say, of six or seven hundred thousand people, I would be willing to admit that they have something to show for the enormous sums they have made away with. But, Sir, what are the lamentable facts in this matter? Last year we took the census of that vast territory which extends from the western boundary of Manitoba to the borders of British Columbia, and what did that show? Why, it showed that in five years we had added 15,000 souls, about 3,000 families, to the population of that huge region. This Session we have seen, for the first time, what have been the results of the hon. gentleman's policy as regards the Province of Manitoba. The House will remember that in reply to a question from myself the Minister of Agriculture stated there were to-day 5,495 whites in Manitoba. I want to call the attention of the House to a few statistical facts. In 1881 there were by our own census 66,000 whites in Manitoba and the North-West put together. The natural increase in five years would amount to about 8,400 souls. There are to-day, according to the hon. gentleman's own census report, in all 118,495, putting Manitoba and the North-West together; so, after making allowance for the natural increase, we have added 44,095 souls to the population of Manitoba and the North-West Territories, or say nearly 9,000 families in five years. I take the Immigration reports, and I find that in 1881, 22,001 souls were reported by the Immigration Department to have settled in Manitoba and the North-West. In 1882, 58,751; 1883, 42,772; 1884, 24,240; 1885, 7,240; in all, in five years, according to our most trustworthy reports, 155,204 in Manitoba and the North-West; and now shall I say our lying census returns, or would that be unparliamentary Mr. Speaker?—at all events, our census returns show that, starting with 66,000, and adding thereto 155,000 emigrants and 8,400 for natural increases, we have got 118,000. So, Sir we find that according to the hon. gentleman's statistics, that if you include the last year, for which the number was 11,593—and I observe in the foot note it is said they underestimated the number—we have at a huge cost to this country settled in Manitoba and the North-West Territories 166,303, of whom 44,095 remain, and 120,000 odd formerly settled in that country are now scattered over the United States, England and Ontario, and Canada at large, acting only too vigorously as anti-immigration agents to prevent the settlement of Manitoba and the North-West. I should like to know what we are to say of the statements of the Department of Immigration? Here are returns brought down to us year after year, here are statements made by responsible Ministers declaring, in spite of our protest and the comments from this side of the House, that 150,000 people, as the hon. gentleman's chief colleague stated, had gone into Manitoba and the North-West in two or three years; and yet when we come to take the census returns we find that, at the outside, the number is 44,000 instead of 166,000. I say that these reports are not only misleading, but they are fraudulent, and they deserve to be expunged from the archives of this country. It may be interesting to know at what cost to the people of Canada this noble result was brought about. In 1881 we paid $250,812; in 1882, $253,000; 1883, $437,000; 1884, $575,000; 1885, $506,000; 1886, $347,000, and in the six years for the headquarters' department at Ottawa, $400,000. No less than $2,770,916 was the cost of the Department of Immigration and the head office at Ottawa for settling 44,000 souls in Manitoba and the North-West and of sending 120,000 out of it to prevent other people from going there. Now, there is another side to this question which may interest the people of this Dominion—I know it will interest the people of the older Provinces—and it is as to what Manitoba and the North-West have cost, and what are our annual charges thereon. Within the last five or six years, if you choose to add together the money spent on the Canadian Pacific Railway, the interest thereon, and all the innumerable side charges, we have paid out very nearly $100,000,000 of the public money in endeavoring to settle that country. As to the amount of private money, it is difficult to form a correct estimate. I thought, a few years ago, it was a smaller amount than that I have now reason to consider it; but after travelling through Ontario, from one end to another, and making minute enquiries in Winnipeg and Manitoba from parties entrusted with the investment of money by people of the older Provinces, I have been forced to the conclusion that, in estimating the total extent of our outlay, the amount of private funds to be added to the public funds I have alluded to, amounts to a very great many millions of dollars. I will put that, for the moment, on one side. I call the attention of the House to this fact, that up to date, within the last five or six years, the cost has been very nearly $100,000,000 of the public funds in all. I next direct attention to the annual charges to which this country is put, over and above the charge of about $4,500,000 for interest and sinking fund on that sum. I find at present that our annual outlay is stated as follows in the Public Accounts: Manitoba subsidy, $143,000; Post Office charges for Manitoba and the North-West, $266,000; the North-West Territories for Council, and so on, $100,000; Dominion Lands chargeable to income, $161,000; cost of maintaining the Department of the Interior and Mounted Police, which are kept up for the purpose of preserving order in those Territories, $182,000. And let the House remember that those are actual expenditures. Public Works chargeable to income, $30,000; annual charge of maintaining the Indians in Manitoba and North-West, about $1,000,000; annual charge for North-West Mounted Police, about $780,000; in all we are now spending per annum (over and above the interest and sinking fund charged on prime cost) $2,962,000, or say about $7,500,000 a year for the purpose of developing and maintaining our settlement in Manitoba and the North-West. We have certain receipts. We received $500,000 or $600,000 in Excise and Customs; and, lest I should be accused of omitting to credit this, I beg to inform the House that we find these are fully balanced by other expenditures in other directions. Customs in Manitoba and the North-West cost us $40,000 a year; the penitentiary, $52,000; Militia, $75,000; Public Works, $90,000; telegraph lines, $20,000; hospitals, $16,000. I suppose hon. gentlemen opposite will admit that the bulk of our expenditure for immigration is undertaken on account of Manitoba and the North-West, and so that expenditure may be fairly credited to the North-West, to the extent of say $200,000. I find the legislative expenses and Governor's salaries in those Provinces sweep away $30,000, and the judiciary $45,000. So that in all, Sir, although I do not in the least blame the people of Manitoba for it, we find, over and above the three millions a year to which I have alluded, over and above the four and a-half millions of interest and sinking fund, we spent practically every farthing we got in certain local expenditures, many of them proper and necessary expenditures, for the direct benefit of Manitoba. Now, Sir, I say that those are results which no intelligent man in this House, or out of this House can for one moment overlook. I say that when you find one hundred millions of the money of the people of Canada sunk in the attempt to develop Manitoba and the North-West; when you find, over and above the charge for interest for that amount, annual charges to the tune of three million dollars a year, amounting in all to seven and one-half millions per annum, and when you find in five years, as a result of this expenditure, that you have added nine thousand families to the population of that vast region, I think that somebody is very seriously to blame. Mr. Speaker, I present to the Government, and to the hon. the Finance Minister this alternative. Either this country is unfit for settlement; either, owing to climatic disadvantages or what you will, it is impossible for us to place a large population there—and in that case the conduct of the Government in rashly rushing into these profuse expenditures, and tying these millstones round the necks of the older Provinces, is utterly inexcusable; or it is, as I believe, a good country, a country capable of sustaining a large population, a country that only lacks fair play and good government in order to make it a prosperous country and one of very great value to the people of the Dominion. That is the other alternative. And, if that country be a good country, capable of sustaining hundreds of thousands of prosperous yeomen, even if they don't produce the 640,000,000 of bushels of wheat which my hon. friend saw as in a vision—if that be the case, no language can be too strong to condemn the imbecility, the perversity, the mismanagement and the gross corruption which must have combined together to produce such results, after such a huge expenditure as this. Again I forbear to comment further. I do not think those facts require much comment. But when the hon. gentleman tells us that Canada is in a condition of exceeding prosperity; when he tells us that her future is all he can desire, then, Mr. Speaker, although I have been charged with being far too disposed to take a gloomy view of the situation, I have to say that my views of what Canada might become, and what the North-West might become, enormously exceed all that it seems to have entered into the minds of hon. gentlemen to conceive. Let us look at it. Here we have mortgaged our whole future. There is not a man on either side of this House that does not know that the whole existence of this Dominion is staked on our success in developing Manitoba and the North-West. And these are the pitiable, the humiliating I was almost going to say the ridiculous results, only the thing is far too grave for ridicule or jest—these are the results which the hon. gentleman has to show after eight years of uncontrolled power and uncontrolled expenditure, caused by them and produced by them, and justified by the Government by reason of the urgent necessity that lay upon them to develop, settle and improve the great inheritance we have become possessed of. There is another point, and one of great moment, to which I alluded a little while ago, and it is this: here we find ourselves committed to an annual expenditure of about thirty-six millions of dollars, because, as I have already observed, I fear that the results of the future year will show, as the results of the past years have shown, that the Government have seriously underestimated the annual expenditure of this country. Here we are a population of four and a half millions of whites, with an annual expenditure of thirty-six millions, and a taxation which the hon. gentleman himself estimated at twenty-nine millions. And, Sir, we find in spite of all that, in spite of the enormous proportion of fixed charges that I have alluded to—which makes our real income very small, after all said and done—I find in every direction that claims are being made—many of them just claims, I am bound to say—claims are being brought forward, on behalf of various Provinces and various localities of this Dominion, under this policy which the Government has maintained and fostered. I alluded to the fact that, when the hon. gentleman chose to give a grant of half a million to Prince Edward Island, with its population of 110,000, he had by that act rendered it inevitable, in my judgment, that in a short time he would be obliged to grant proportionate sums, involving an additional charge of at least $22,000,000, for the remaining 4,400,000 people of this Dominion. And, Sir, what is the condition of the other Provinces? Does not the hon. gentleman know full well that to-day, according to the statements laid before the Legislature of Quebec, by the Finance Minister of that Province, that the resources of that Province are strained to the very uttermost? And here let me remind the House that, but a few months ago, when I had occasion to discuss this subject, I was told that Quebec was in a flourishing financial position, and that there was no fear of a deficit. Since that time there have been some very grave facts brought to light in the Province of Quebec; and I find now that, whereas these gentlemen would face me down last session that Quebec was in a flourishing financial condition, there was a deficit, if I recollect aright, of nearly a quarter of a million on the transactions of the past year. The hon. gentleman knows himself that within the last few days or weeks deputations from his own Province, from the sister Province of New Brunswick—deputations, I fancy, from almost every other Province, except, perhaps, the Province of Ontario, have been coming here seeking for further grants, further subsidies, further assistance from the Dominion Government. Sir, I say that this state of things, which augurs ill for the future of the Dominion, is the direct result of the conduct of the Government themselves. It is the direct result of their folly in opening the door by all these grants I have alluded to for every demand that every Province, aye that every section of a Province, may choose to make. It involves grave results, there can be no doubt. It is a most unwholesome relation to maintain between the Dominion and the Provinces that this Government and Parliament should be called upon to find the money, to impose the taxation, and that the others should be called upon to spend it. I can conceive nothing more calculated to offer a premium to extravagance and folly than such a state of things; and almost any alteration in our federal constitution would be hailed, and ought to be hailed, by us with satisfaction, if it would bring about a different result. Now, I know, and so probably did the hon. gentleman, from the very hour that Confederation was formed, that the granting of subsidies to the Provinces was a weakness and a danger; but the hon. gentleman and those who with him were entrusted with the task of bringing about the Confederation, although they saw and admitted the danger, contended, and perhaps contended rightly, that on any other terms Confederation was impossible. But I say that the knowledge of the danger ought to have been their warning, ought to have kept them from allowing the door to be opened as it has now been opened; and I can tell them that, thanks to their most mischievous impolicy and as the inevitable consequence of what has already been done, many millions will be added to our liabilities before there is any effectual settlement of these innumerable claims. Now, the hon. gentleman, differing again very widely from me, appears to treat the burden of taxation on the people of this country as a matter of very small moment. Here again I would be glad to hear from my friends from the Maritime Provinces, my friends from Quebec, and my friends from Manitoba and British Columbia, too, as to how the burden of taxation presses upon their constituents. Meantime I propose, for the sake of illustration mainly, to take my own Province, the Province of Ontario, and consider how the burden of taxation falls upon it, and notably upon the rural population of that Province. The hon. gentleman was good enough to tell us last night that there have been great changes and developments in political economy, although, if I recollect aright, he will find that the germs of all those ideas he alluded to are contained in the writings of the old economists, if he will take the trouble to study them. But I believe there is a school of economists who have great influence on the public mind, and to whose views I myself am somewhat disposed to adhere, who contend, with a considerable show of reason, that in the last result the whole burden of taxation rests on the cultivated land of any particular country. Now, I am not going to lay down any particular proposition, nor am I going to say that that is the case always or absolutely; but in the Province of Ontario I believe it is substantially true that in the long run the burden of taxation does rest in the end on the great producing farming classes. I would like to call the attention of the House to the extent of the burdens, which, on this assumption, now rest on the rural population of Ontario. I believe it will be admitted, even by the hon. gentleman, that I am not much out of the way in saying that Ontario is obliged to defray about three fifths of the whole taxation of this country. The taxation is, or was, about $27,500,000 before to-night; and if you admit that proportion you will find that $17,000,000 of nominal taxation falls on Ontario. Now, Sir, it is equally well known to anybody who has bestowed a second thought on the subject, that under our present system, by which, good or bad, a very large amount is taken out of the pockets of the people in taxation, beyond that which goes into the Treasury, the real taxation is vastly in excess of the nominal taxation. That excess cannot be estimated at less than 50 per cent. I believe myself that it is very much more, and I allege that the real burden of taxation, not measured by the amount that goes into the Treasury, but, as it ought to be by the amount that comes out of the pockets of the people, amounts to fully $25,000,000 as regards the people of Ontario. And I am taking this estimate on a lower scale of taxation than that laid down by the hon. gentleman. Our returns show that we had in the Province of Ontario, when the last municipal census was taken in 1886, 10,912,000 acres of cleared land, not all, I am afraid, perfectly good land; and I will call the attention of the House to this fact, that if they admit that the burden of taxation in the last result falls on the agricultural population, these $25,000,000 would represent a real tax of $2.40 an acre, though the nominal taxation would be $1.60 an acre. Capitalise that sum at 5 per cent, and it equals a mortgage of $50 on every acre of cleared land from one end of Ontario to the other, from Rat Portage to the Province line; and it is perfectly well known that the farmers of Ontario, as well as the people in other parts of the country, have other burdens to bear—that they have a considerable amount of local taxation, and that their farms are mortgaged to a considerable extent, how heavily I cannot say. I know that the loan companies of Ontario have about $77,000,000 invested in mortgage, very largely on farms. I am told that the mortgages on farms in Ontario to day amount to $120,000,000 or $150,000,000, the interest on which is payable largely abroad. Therefore, if you admit that in the long result the taxation rests on the land, we have matters brought to this state, that, apart from local rates and ordinary mortgages, you have in fact imposed a mortgage of $50 on every acre of cleared land in Ontario, equal to a net rent of $2.40 an acre to meet our Federal taxation alone. Now, I say the Ontario farmer, between this atrocious taxation and the intense competition to which he is exposed from foreign competitors, has a very poor chance of it. Within the last few years the profits of the Ontario farmers have been largely diminished. Their wheat which sold for $1 or $1.25 per bushel eight or ten years ago, they are obliged now to accept 75 cents or 76 cents for, which represents a net reduction of one-third in the profits on that article, and in some cases as much as two-thirds. You will see from this whether the evidences before us do not point as much to a great displacement of wealth as to a great accumulation of wealth—whether the great consuming class, the farmers of Ontario particularly, are not, as regards their means of making profits out of their farms, in a very much worse position than they were some few years ago. Thirteen years ago the profits on one bushel of wheat to the acre would nearly pay all the taxation that rested on the farmers' land. To-day, if the whole of the cleared land of Ontario were covered with a good crop of wheat, yielding 20 bushels to the acre, it would take, at the present reduced price at which wheat is selling, the profits of one-half of the wheat that could be grown on every acre of cleared land in Ontario to defray the burden of Federal taxation that now rests on the people of Ontario. Sir, is it any wonder that the rural population of Ontario keeps stationary? Is it any wonder that in seven years, on a rural population of over a million strong, the municipal returns show an increase of only 15,000 souls? Is it any wonder that in twenty-nine counties out of forty-four the rural population is absolutely stationary or retrograde? When the hon. gentleman talks of the exceeding prosperity of Canada, when he tells us that there is nothing in our future that need cause apprehension, I fear that he is speaking from the standpoint of a well fed and well paid practical politician, not from that of a hard working farmer of the Province of Ontario. Sir, if this state of things had been produced by real urgent necessity, if these enormous charges had been laid upon our people for objects which we could point to as involving the life of the nation, if as a set off to these huge burdens you could show me to-day a populous Province of a million or three-quarters of a million strong in the North-West, I would say that there was something to represent the sacrifice. But I find that, not only is that not the case, not only has there been an absolute failure to promote the settlement of that vast region, but I find that this scandalous state of things has been aggravated by the grossest and most intolerable waste. I take these Public Accounts, to which I have alluded, for a single year, and what do I find? I find that in this state of things the people of Canada, the farmers of Ontario in particular—aye, and the farmers of all the other Provinces, because, remember, I have taken Ontario only as an illustration, and I think my hon. friends beside me can duplicate everything I have said, from their knowledge of the position of their own constituents in their own Provinces—I find the people of Canada have to pay a charge of $352,000 for the Franchise Bill; I find for superannuation account (and a very considerable number of the men who are drawing this fund are as well able to do a good day's work as ever) a charge of $200,000 a year; I find a charge of $347,000 paid for immigration, which produces the result I have just told you. I find for experimental legislation—either on the part of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) or the First Minister, I do not know which—an item, and only one of many such in other years, of $152,000 for money lost in operating the Liquor License Act. I find an annual deficit of $1,000,000 on the Post Office. Now I am willing to see a reasonable amount above the receipts spent on the Post Office, and would not object to a moderate deficit, but I say that this reckless expenditure, this reckless running up of deficits, this spending of a million dollars more than we receive, is not a good policy, is not a wise policy, is not justified in the present state of the country. I find an annual expenditure of $1,195,000 on Indians. Well, if that went to the benefit of the Indians there would be something to be said in its favor, but my hon. friend from Brant, if he chooses to speak, can explain how a great part of that is spent. In one case, the case of the Province of British Columbia—I speak from memory, but am substantially correct—out of a grant of $50,000, $3,000 went to the Indians and $47,000 to white men to look after them, and to white men who, I fear, in a great many cases, were greater savages than the savages themselves. Then I find—and I think some of my hon. friends from the Maritime Provinces, at least, will agree with me that it is time we should rein up here—I find the repairs, the new furniture, the heating, the lighting, and the keeping of the grounds in order, of these identical public buildings, cost us last year $327,000, very nearly as much as the annual allowance of the Province of Nova Scotia or the Province of New Brunswick. Why, our furniture and repairs, counting of course Rideau Hall, the expenditure on which was not much this year, cost us $191,800; heating, $63,000; gas, $32,800; water, $15,000; telephones, $4,000; and $15,000 for grounds—in all $327,000 for the repairs and furniture, and heating and lighting of the Ottawa buildings. Well, I say, under such circumstances, when the people of this country are suffering under a great burden of taxation, when our population over a large area is stationary, when we find ourselves unable to grant reasonable assistance to various deserving objects, expenditures like these are utterly indefensible. Hon. gentlemen object exceedingly, I have observed, to any comparison being made between the way in which our Confederation has been managed and that in which the Confederation of the United States has been managed; but with every desire to gratify these hon. gentlemen, I cannot forbear, on this occasion, from calling the attention of the House and country to the way in which our expenditure compares with that of the great people beside us, who present on the whole the best possible example of the successful working of the Federal system. Sir, the hon. gentlemen, when it suits their purpose, are ready to copy and to quote American example. The hon. the Minister of Finance did it last night; he held it up to our eyes as a thing which deserved to be copied and imitated, and therefore he, at any rate, cannot take exception to the facts I am now about to call your attention to. In the early part of their history, the population of the United States was almost exactly equal to our own. When, in 1792, the Americans began the work of building a great nation on this continent, their population was about 3,900,000; their debt, and a curious coincidence it is, was exactly $75,000,000, almost the same figure to a dot as our own was in 1867; and their annual expenditure was $8,250,000. Twenty years elapsed, and the American population had grown, without any assistance from immigrants, from 3,900,000 to 7,250,000; that is, they had added 3,300,000 by their natural increase in those twenty years, to their population. Their debt, which was $75,000,000, had been reduced to $53,000,000, and their expenditure per year, which was $8,250,000, had grown to $8,500,000. The hon. gentleman last night gave us a series of statements, in which, however, he omitted to show the increase of our debt and expenditure. But let us compare the results of the twenty years in each country. Our country began twenty years ago with a population of 3,375,000 and a debt of $75,000,000; and our expenditure, including subsidies to Provinces, was $13,500,000. To-day our debt is $225,000,000; our expenditure last year was $39,000,000, or call it $36,000,000, deducting war expenditure. Our population, as I have shown, is not to-day more than 4,500,000, although we are alleged to have had an enormous immigration, which did not exist in the case of the United States. The comparison is worth noting. The Americans had difficulties to contend with; they had to purchase large territories, they had to endure the cost of very expensive Indian wars, but with all that, at the end of twenty years, their population had nearly doubled, their debt had decreased one-third, and their expenditure had hardly increased a single quarter of a million. Now, Sir, some hon. gentlemen object to any comparison, because they say we have expenditures the Americans have not. That is true, and Heaven knows they have expenditures which we have not been called upon to bear in anything like the same proportion. But on purpose to oblige these hon. gentlemen, instead of going back to 1810, I will go back to the middle of this century, 1845. I will strike off our subsidies, railway expenditures, militia and mounted police, post office, and the rest of them—everything as to which a question can possibly arise—and will compare the expenditure of the Americans in 1844 with our own, less all these items. I shall deduct in the case of the United States, the cost of their army and navy and war pensions, while I will give the hon. gentleman the benefit of our army and navy expenditure and pensions, with the greatest possible good will. In 1845 the American people had a population of 20,000,000 strong, and the gross expenditure was $22,900,000, of which $15,000,000 were for army, navy, and pension expenditure. The Americans conducted the whole of the expenditure under their Federal system, with a population of 20,000,000 in 1845 for a sum scarcely $8,000,000, without making these deductions. We in Canada, after deducting subsidies to Provinces, after deducting railway expenses and post office expenses, after deducting, in short, everything the hon. gentleman can wish, absolutely required about $24,000,000, with a population of 4,500,000 people, to discharge the identical functions which the Americans in 1845 were able to defray for a total sum of $8,000,000. And remember that we started under circumstances of enormous advantage as compared with the people of the United States, and remember also that we have deliberately destroyed those advantages, and, to a great extent, thrown away our chances. If the House wants to know the reason of the monstrous difference to which I have just alluded, the House, I think, will find it in this: that the Americans, during the time when they were laying broad and deep the foundations of their national greatness, had the extreme good fortune to be governed by wise, far-seeing and patriotic statesmen, while Canada, during the vast proportion of the time I have referred to, I regret to say, has not enjoyed similar advantages, to say the least of it. And now, is there any hope, is there anything in the propositions the hon. gentleman brought forward last night to lead us to hope—as, to say the truth, I had almost hoped—that he, being, as I have already said, a man of capacity and intelligence, had come to the conclusion that the time had arrived to call a halt, that the time had arrived to reform, that the situation was perilous. I dare say that the Minister of Finance may honestly and sincerely desire to reduce his expenditure. I dare say that the Minister of Finance in his secret heart knows perfectly well, as I know perfectly well, that this state of things is perilous in a high degree to the best interests of this country, but, like many another man, he finds himself now powerless to control the forces which he set to work long ago; he finds himself borne on irresistibly on the tide; he cannot make any effective reduction in the expenditure. He may try to carry out (and I am willing to co-operate with him and to the best of my ability to help in carrying out his proposed economies) some reductions in public works here, or in one or two little matters there, but he finds himself compelled, against his will perhaps, while making these little economies, to bring down to the House propositions which will result in an enormous increase of the taxation and the burdens of this people, which will result in entanglements, and very serious entanglements, and in more violations of the Federal pact, by strict adherence to which alone we can hope on our part to build up a nation on this continent. With respect to the hon. gentleman's tariff changes, as I said, I cannot propose to discuss them in detail, but I will say that, looking over the 120 changes which the hon. gentleman proposes to introduce, I am very much struck by this fact, which I commend to the attention of all hon. gentlemen. I do not know that they are going to bring in a great deal of revenue ultimately, though I think the immediate result will be to produce a good deal more than the hon. gentleman stated he expected to get; but I see this, that every solitary one almost of these changes means an additional charge, an additional tax on the rural population and on the bulk of the ratepayers of this Dominion; I see that a great many of these, by the introduction of specific duties, which may be convenient, which may serve the purpose of the Customs, practically involve what the hon. gentleman and the hon. gentleman's predecessor used to denounce so strongly in this House, an unjust charge against the poorer consumer in favor of the rich; I see, and it is rather interesting, that, whereas we were supposed to start with a moderately perfect tariff, the changes which the hon. gentlemen from time to time have introduced are almost innumerable. I have taken the trouble to look over the number of tariff changes which have been made within the last seven or eight years, and to my mind at any rate, they are something extremely startling. I find that, after the enormous revolution in our fiscal policy which took place in 1879, we made no less than 73 tariff changes in 1880, 59 in 1881, 79 in 1882, 64 in 1883, 42 in 1884, 73 in 1885, 74 in 1886, and now 120 at the very least in 1887, making in all since 1879, 584 known tariff changes, not to speak of innumerable arbitrary regulations introduced by the Customs Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. BOWELL. Not one.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As far as I can judge, though I say it is impossible to make a minute estimate of the effect of the proposals laid before us last night, the practical result of this will be, in the long run, to add but a very moderate sum to the revenue, but to add very largely indeed to the burthen to the consumers, and that as to one large section of the consumers of Canada. It is the undoubted fact, as I have pointed out, that the rural population and the farmers of this country, and those who depend on them are in greatly reduced circumstances, are making much less profits than they made a few years ago, and, I assure the Finance Minister, are very ill able to bear the additional burthen which he proposes to place upon them. I noticed, although the hon. gentleman did not allude to it, that one of his colleagues introduced a resolution to provide for certain subsidies to be paid to the Province of Nova Scotia, or to a portion of the Province of Nova Scotia. Well I would not have wondered if the hon. gentleman had indulged in a little triumph, and I must say a little pardonable triumph, for the victory which he achieved in Nova Scotia at the last election. Speaking candidly, I must say that that victory was in my opinion wholly and entirely due to the hon. gentleman, even if he only did arrive in New York to find the general elections on his hands. Perhaps, however, it was as well that the hon. gentleman should have been wisely silent on that subject, and as to the means by which the pacification of Nova Scotia was effected. There are some things which I suppose must be done, but which it is not very well to talk about, and it does appear to me looking at the whole situation, that the hon. gentleman may be said to have achieved on that occasion a veritable Byzantine victory. We know that in the later days of the Lower Empire, many victories were achieved by the Greek troops over the barbarians, and the modus operandi was this;

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask if he means to say that my victory was over the barbarians?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am going to explain, if the hon. gentleman will allow me. I did not say that his victory was over the barbarians. I compared it, as to the mode, with that in which, in former days, victories were obtained over barbarians by the Greek troops. Far be it from me to suggest that the people of Nova Scotia are barbarians. On the contrary, I think the people of Nova Scotia are very exceptionally wide-awake gentlemen. However, before I was interrupted, I was going to say that the mode adopted was this: The troops marched out with great parade and pomp, and with much clash and clamor of brazen cyrnals, but a few mules went before them heavily laden with gold to the camp of the barbarians, and that was found to be the easiest and cheapest way in which to obtain a victory. The barbarians allowed the Greeks to occupy their camp, and they themselves retired until the time of the next general election. I think the hon. gentleman might well have quoted the famous saying of Cæsar, with a slight difference veni, vidi, emi—he came, he comprehended the situation at a glance, and he bought the fellows straight out. Almost at the moment the hon. gentleman was achieving his victory in Nova Scotia, we were informed of what the hon. gentleman was about. I would like to call the attention of the House to a certain letter which was written by a certain eminent member of this House, in reply to certain proposals which were made to him about the time that hon. gentleman was achieving—what shall I call it—the pacification, the subjugation, or, perhaps, the purchase, of recalcitrant Nova Scotians. We were informed, as I have said, of the way in which this serious disaffection in Nova Scotia was being dealt with, and we were asked if we would see the hon. gentleman and “go one better”—if the House will excuse the phrase. This is the reply which was made to the proposal:

“MY DEAR SIR,—I have your letter of the 8th. You inform me that Sir Charles Tupper and Mr. McLellan are promising the people of Colchester, Cumberland and Pictou, that if they sustain the Government, a new policy, not as yet communicated to, or passed on, by Parliament will be adopted as to the railway you mention, and that it will be constructed as a Government work. You add that the people, while unwilling to trust Messrs. Tupper and McLellan wish from me an assurance that I will do as much for them as these gentlemen offer, and you tell me that such an assurance will materially help our prospects in the three counties.”

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman tell me the date of that letter?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The date of the letter was apparently about the 15th of February. It was written in reply to a letter of the 8th February—

“It is plain that, if the course now put forward were to be adopted, it should have been laid before Parliament and discussed and decided on its merits. Instead of this, it has been kept back till the elections, and is now put forward in the locality as a bribe, a wholesale bribe, to three counties. I cannot take part in an auction of the votes of Colchester, Cumberland and Pictou. I never give a promise unless I am satisfied that it is right, and that I can redeem my word. It is possible that the course proposed to be taken as to this railway is justifiable, and if that be shown, I will support it on whichever side of the House I sit or whichever way the people of the counties may vote. But I have not before me at this time sufficient information as to the condition of the road, the cost of completion and the other important points involved, to enable me to form an opinion on the question, and therefore I cannot conscientiously make the pledge which you tell is so important to the interest of the Liberal cause.

“God help poor Canada.

“Yours truly,
“EDWARD BLAKE.”

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman tell me when that letter was made public?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Several days before the election.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to state the date?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The date is not given here. It was made public, to the best of my recollection, on the 17th or 18th February.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Too late to reach the Province of Nova Scotia before the election.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Too late? I regret to say that the reply was exceedingly well known in the counties of Cumberland, Colchester and Pictou, as was also the Minute of Council passed by the Government, I fear for the purpose of influencing the elections in the counties of Colchester, Cumberland and Pictou. Now, Sir, I say that these grants are practically being made at the cost of the whole future of this Confederation. Perhaps it is a just Nemesis. I recollect quite well how unfortunate I thought it at the time that Nova Scotia should have been dragged into the Confederation against the known and avowed will of the people, and I feared that we would later have to pay the bitter penalty of that piece of folly that brought Nova Scotia in against her will. But there is a more serious charge. I fear that the results of the efforts the hon. gentleman may think himself justified in making for the purpose of satisfying Nova Scotia, may, before all is done, rend this Confederation asunder.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. May I ask the hon. gentleman when he came to that conclusion, that it was very unfortunate that Nova Scotia was brought into the Confederation, and may I ask him how long he sustained the gentlemen who had been engaged in doing it, and co-operated with them in this House?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I came to this conclusion within a very few weeks after I had the pleasure of meeting the late Hon. Joseph Howe and my hon. friend who sits behind me (Mr. Jones) in the Parliament of Canada.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. When did the hon. gentleman give expression to that view?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think I gave expression to it somewhere about the year 1869, or about eighteen years ago.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Two years afterwards.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, but the hon. gentleman will recollect that I was not then responsible in any shape or way, other than as a private member of Parliament, for what had been done in Nova Scotia, that I had no influence and no control whatever over him or over the means which he thought fit to adopt for bringing Nova Scotia in. As soon as I had any right to express an opinion about it, I did so; and I tell the hon. gentleman further, I have not very often gone contrary to my own instinct and convictions in the votes I have given in this House; but I did once, and that was on the occasion when I consented, with very great reluctance, to vote for granting better terms to Nova Scotia, because I felt it was the only reparation we could make them, seeing that the people of Nova Scotia had been vilely treated in being brought into the Confederation as they had been. Now, Sir, I say that this is not finance in any proper sense of the term. I say that it is in fact simply a piece of desperate political gambling. The dice have been well loaded down with Gerrymander Acts, Franchise Acts, returning officers and revising barristers; they have gone in favor of the present Government and have gone against Canada, and I can tell the hon. gentleman that I think, if he remains here for any length of time as Finance Minister, he will find that the warning I now give him is only too well founded—if, indeed, the point of safety be not already passed—that it will be very unfortunate indeed if he or his successors do not rein up and rein up very soon; that even at the best, making all the allowances we can for possible fortunate accidents, I fear that the hon. gentleman has gone so far that he and his friends have opened the door to such innovations of our Federal compact, to such violations of the first principles of our Confederation, that it is a matter of great doubt indeed whether we will be able, at any rate on the present terms, to hold together for many years.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh! oh!

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, Sir, I shall be glad to hear hon. gentlemen, if they can do so at a later date, show that the facts I have stated are incorrect, but if the facts I have stated are correct, then I say that ample grounds have been given for me or any man who cares one straw for the future of Canada, giving formal warning of the dangers to which we are exposed. Sir, I am sorry to say that what I have drawn is only too faithful a picture of the result of the maladministration which has disgraced Canada for the greater part of the last 20 years. I say that those hon. gentlemen stand convicted of having failed utterly and totally to create any honorable national sentiment in this country to which a patriot or a statesman can appeal. Why, Sir, they do not even comprehend the necessity of it. Have we not heard the First Minister, who ought to know better, who has ability enough to know better—have we not heard him say and repeat in this place here, that he and his party in this House prefer annexation to independence? Sir, are we to go in leading strings forever? Does not the hon. gentleman know that such a statement, made by a man in such a place, is about as enervating, about as degrading, about as debasing, as any statement can be. Why, it is of the very essence of funkism in the highest possible degree, that a Canadian Premier could give utterance to such a word, though it is so far well founded that the policy of the Premier has been such for many a long day as to have gone very far to ensure annexation. Sir, I say that in point of fact the policy of the hon. gentleman has been such that our various Provinces are to-day further apart in essentials, in spite of the connecting iron link, than they were in 1867. I say that hon. gentlemen, all through, have shown from first to last, that they wholly and utterly disregard the very spirit of the Federal compact. I say their policy is one consisting largely of the invasion of local rights. What course did hon. gentlemen opposite adopt? How did they propose to consolidate Confederation? By seeking to secure control of Provincial rights, by their outrageous action in the matter of disallowance, by which they have driven the Province of Manitoba into downright disaffection, by choosing to interfere with the plainest Provincial rights in the Liquor License Act, by refusing to carry out the award which gave that additional territory to the Province of Ontario which it has now secured, by resorting to every petty device and trick to diminish the importance of the Provincial Legislatures, while on the other hand by granting better terms to Nova Scotia in 1868, and afterwards being obliged to make innumerable concessions under some shape or form to the smaller Provinces, and by their most misguided railway policy of subsidising little enterprises which had no proper claims on the Dominion Treasury, gentlemen opposite have gone far to utterly undermine the spirit of independence in the Local Legislatures which every statesman should have known, and ought to have known, it was of the highest moment to encourage as the best guaranty for preserving and perpetuating our Federal system. Sir, I have shown the House, and the Minister of Finance, with his own Public Accounts in his hands, cannot deny the facts, the enormous amount of debt and taxes inflicted upon us, and I have shown that, independently of that, he and his colleagues have failed to a very great extent to show any value for our outlay; that those public works to which the hon. gentleman points, and which long ago, no doubt, had some considerable indirect value, have, by the progress of events, become of very little use, that they are in point of fact the means of incurring a very heavy annual charge to the country. I have shown also that the hon. gentlemen's attempt to settle the North-West has resulted, so far, in a most disastrous failure, not from any fault on the part of the country or of the people, but because of the gross and continuous misgovernment on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite. Sir, the hon. gentleman knows, or if he does not know he can easily satisfy himself, that at the present moment Canada has become an exceedingly expensive country to live in. I have taken the pains, and the hon. gentleman might have been at the pains while he was in England, to examine into this question, and I think in the case of persons having moderate fixed incomes it is possible to live to-day cheaper in England than in Canada. I do not think this is the case to the same extent as regards the laboring class, or as regards artisans, because food is still very much cheaper with us than in England, and food forms a very large proportion of the cost of living in their case. But I take it upon myself to say that, on a fair comparison, the hon. gentleman will find that a person of moderate fixed income can live better in England than in Canada, and I can tell him that it is not a very creditable showing for us. I am very sorry indeed to say that, in the course of my recent peregrinations through the country, I have found that the question which is agitating the minds of thoughtful men has changed considerably. Formerly the question used to be: Is it possible for us, in the face of the difficulties with which we have to contend, to preserve Confederation? Sir, I am exceedingly sorry to have to tell hon. gentlemen opposite, and this House, that in many men's minds to-day the question is not as to the possibility of preserving Confederation, but it is this: Is Confederation such a blessing as to be worth a struggle to preserve? Sir, I say that under the existing conditions of affairs the position of Canada is growing worse and worse morally, financially and politically; that taking the country as a whole, we are growing poorer and more dishonest and more debased, and we will continue to do so unless a change takes place in the course and conduct of our Government. Our people and even members of this House are losing the commonest instincts of free men, and are allowing themselves to be trampled on under color of legal technicalities, until we have had here the wonderful spectacle of men sitting in this House as members who were openly and avowedly not returned by a majority of the votes of their own constituents, but by the whim of a returning officer. It might have been vastly otherwise; it ought to have been vastly otherwise. I say we had a great opportunity and a good country, and we should have proved ourselves worthy of the country and have made the best use of the advantages we have inherited. But the fact remains that, as matters stand, neither is the Minister of Finance nor are his colleagues helping this country forward; on the contrary, they are oppressing the people and practically driving them out of the Dominion. It may be that some remedy may be found. I trust it may—I trust that a remedy may yet be found. But I know that even when the people do wish to emancipate themselves they will be apt to find in the future as in the past that they are meshed in the results of their own folly, and that it is both dangerous and difficult to retrace their steps, even when they are aware of their danger. I have on former occasions pointed out that there were three great tasks which at the time of Confederation were placed before Canadian statesmen. If the hon. gentleman and his colleagues claim the title of real statesmen they must be judged by their success in accomplishing those tasks. It was our singular good fortune in 1867 to commence our career of national existence under circumstances which gave us a great advantage over the United States. Let us see how those hon. gentlemen have preserved that advantage. It was their duty, and notably and particularly the duty of the Finance Minister and his present chief colleague, to have educated the people of this country to a right comprehension of the Federal relations as between the Provinces and the Dominion; and it was, as they have oftentimes admitted, their special duty to help forward the settlement of the great country we acquired in the North-West Territory. I say that the claim of hon. gentlemen opposite to the title of statesmen depends wholly and entirely on the answer to the question as to how they have accomplished these tasks. How stand the facts? Twenty years ago the taxes of the people of Canada were exactly one-third of the taxes of the United States. Twenty years ago the debt of the people of Canada per head was exactly one-third of the debt per head of the people of the United States. Twenty years ago the expenditure of the people of Canada bore about the same proportion to the expenditure of the people of the United States. How stands the record to-day? Why, if the Finance Minister will take the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, he will see that the position is almost exactly reversed, to our great detriment. Whereas our debt twenty years ago was one-third of the United States per head, to-day the net debt of the people of Canada is very nearly twice and a half times as great as the net debt of the people of the United States. We owe $225,000,000, with a white population of 4,500,000. The American people, deducting the Pacific bonds, owe $1,290,000,000, with a population of 60,000,000, so that our debt per head is almost exactly twice and a half that of the United States. What is the taxation? Whereas twenty years ago we started in the race with a net taxation per head of just one third that of the people of the United States; to-day, if you take the necessary taxes of the American people, deducting the taxes which they choose to impose on themselves for the purpose of paying off one hundred million dollars a year of national debt, it will be found that our necessary taxes, taking the hon. gentleman's own statement of last night, amount per head to just about double the necessary taxes of the United States per head. How hon. gentlemen have educated the people of this country to a right comprehension of the Federal relations as between the Provinces and the Dominion, let the shoals of deputations which have been waiting on the Finance Minister of late, let the innumerable concessions made during these twenty years to the various Provinces, testify. All I can tell the hon. gentleman is that it is not possible, with any regard to the future of Confederation, to go on with this system much longer. While as for the way in which the hon. gentleman and his friends have carried out the settlement of the North-West, this House will remember that after expending one hundred millions of public money and many millions of private funds, after having to undergo an annual charge of $7,500,000 for the purpose of paying interest on our outlay and of keeping in order and maintaining our territory in the North-West, we have in five years added 9,000 families to the total population of that region. Sir, although there are many other matters to which I might allude, I do not propose to detain the House any longer; but I say this: that if ever men stood in their places self-condemned they are the men who come to us to-day and exhibit to us this result—that, after twenty years of what they are pleased to call careful, prudent administration, the national debt of Canada has been trebled, the taxation has been trebled, the expenditure been nearly trebled, and in all that time the total population of Canada has been increased by about 30 per cent. Our taxes have been increased 200 per cent., our expenditure 200 per cent., our debt 200 per cent., and our total population about 30 per cent. In one word, we have increased six times as fast in taxes, in debt and expenditure as we have in the matter of population; and I say to any hon. gentleman here who thinks that this can go on, or that for the next twenty years we can venture to indulge in such follies as have marked our course for the last twenty years, that far less than twenty years will suffice to put a period to the monstrous extravagance which has brought about this result. I apologise to the House for the length of time I have occupied, and I thank them for the courtesy and attention with which they have listened to the long array of, perhaps, rather tedious figures I have given them. I advise my hon. friends on this side, and I advise hon. gentlemen opposite, if they will take the advice, to do a little more than to listen to the respective speeches of the hon. gentleman and myself. I advise them to take the Public Accounts and to judge and learn for themselves whether or not the statements I have made can be verified; and I think that, if they will do that, they will agree with me that, whoever may be in blame for all this, there is ample ground for any thoughtful man to feel very grave alarm—as I confess I do myself—as to the result which will await the people of Canada, unless they put a stop to the measureless extravagance which has so long disgraced the administration of our affairs.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not rise for the purpose of continuing the discussion, or replying to the House, but of suggesting that, if agreeable to both sides, we should take the second reading of the resolution, and then continue the discussion as fully as any hon. gentleman on either side may desire, when the resolutions are taken up seriatim. I do not know whether that will be agreeable to hon. gentlemen.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have always thought that it was a great mistake to delay the discussion on the Budget; I think it should go on de die in diem. I would suggest that we should agree to go on with the debate to-night and, if need be, on Monday, until we get through. If that be the case, I suppose the suggestion of the hon. gentleman might be acceded to. My hon. friend behind me (Mr. Mills), however, points out, what of course is true, that Monday is, in a special sense, a private members' day. Still it would be a great convenience to have the debate go on, and I suppose there would be no difficulty in making an exchange of days.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I don't see any difficulty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would be a great convenience in that case.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understand the hon. gentleman to agree that we should take the second reading of the resolutions now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On the understanding that there is the fullest possible discussion, without confining it to any particular item.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Certainly.

Resolutions read the second time, and agreed to.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 10) respecting the Ontario Sault Ste Marie Railway Company.—(Mr. Bergin.)

Bill (No. 11) to incorporate the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company.—(Mr. Rykert.)

Bill (No. 13) respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Curran.)

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Ways and Means.

Blacking, shoe and shoe makers' ink, 30 per cent, ad valorem.
Harness and leather dressing, 25 per cent, ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Five per cent. is added to the duty on blacking. There is no change in the duty on harness and leather dressing. That is the reason the items are separated here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this change made for protective purposes, or does the hon. gentleman expect revenue from it, and if he does how much?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is done with the double object of giving a little greater protection, and of deriving revenue. It is expected that we shall receive an increased revenue of about $1,000 from that item.

Blueing, laundry blueing of all kinds, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is an addition of 5 per cent. on that. It is not a very large item, and this small increase of duty is intended to give increased protection to the industry in this country. We suppose we may derive about $300 revenue from that item. The amount entered for consumption last year was $8,350.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would point out that this is a tax which will be felt undoubtedly by a very hard-working and deserving class of the community, the class of washerwomen, and it is also, to a certain extent, a tax on cleanliness. On these two points it is therefore objectionable. It is a small tax, but really it appears to me we are running this thing to the ground. These unlucky washerwomen will have to pay a little extra, and the interest of cleanliness and domestic economy will suffer.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope not. It is not expected to increase the price materially.

Advertising pictures, pictorial show-cards, illustrated advertising periodicals, illustrated price lists, advertising calendars, advertising almanacs, and tailors and mantle-makers' fashion plates, a specific duty of six cents per pound and twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no increase of duty in this item. The clause is reconstructed for the purpose of adding "illustrated price lists, advertising calendars and advertising almanacs" to the articles already mentioned in the clause.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much does the hon. gentleman suppose this will be on the lowest grade of article? In these specific rates of duties, it is a matter of great difficulty to ascertain what the duty is, because some of these articles may be worth three or four times as much as the others, and this duty may be, as regards certain classes of articles, utterly prohibitory and comparatively little as regards superior quality. What is the maximum and minimum duty this would give?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That has not been specially investigated, for the reason that the item remains precisely what it was before, with the exception of adding these three or four articles I have named to the previous list, and I think there will be found no objection to that. The imports of last year were $24,405, and the duty received $9,308. We estimate the same amount of duty this year, because the tariff remains unchanged. The hon. gentleman would himself, I imagine, make the calculation more readily than I could as to the rates of duty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have not the facilities for doing it as the hon. gentleman has. I would ask him to make a note, and let us know at a more convenient time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will do so. You want the ad valorem rate as nearly as can be judged.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want what this 6 cents would represent. I would suggest in all these cases the hon. gentleman should cause enquiries to be made, as I have had numerous complaints made to me, as no doubt the hon. gentleman has had in many cases, of a specific duty being imposed in such a fashion as to be absolutely prohibitory, when possibly the Government did not intend that, and would certainly lose revenue by it.

Advertising pamphlets not illustrated, a specific duty of one cent each

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no change in the tariff on this item, but the words "not illustrated" are put in to make the item more explicit.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you call a pamphlet. Is there any limitation to the number of pages.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; provided it is not illustrated. If illustrated, it will go under the former class.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the hon. Minister can tell me what income he will get under this?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The imports of last year were $8,000, and the duty was the same as it is now. The duty received was $3,039, and we expect the same amount this year.

Braces or suspenders, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is an addition on that article of 5 per cent. The amount imported last year was $92,360, and the duty received, at 30 per cent., $27,705. We estimate the duty this year will be $32,306.

Buttons of vegetable ivory, horn or composition, a specific duty of 10 cents per gross and 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Buttons, all other, not elsewhere specified, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The object of this is to give a little increased protection, but it is not expected that any revenue will be derived from that source. The imports in 1886 were $305,863. The present duty on buttons of all classes is 25 per cent., and the change made adds 10 cents a gross to vegetable, horn and composition buttons.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the hon. gentleman suppose to be the range of value and the maximum ad valorem duty?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it is rather a wide range, and it would be very difficult to get at the duty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It occurs to me that although this 10 cents per gross covers a large amount of buttons, you will make the duty pretty heavy on the inferior kinds of buttons.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We estimate that the proposed change will increase the duty from $76,466 to $78,000; only $2,000 in all. It will increase the manufacture and limit the import.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think this was done by the hon. gentleman's predecessors. But might I enquire whether he is causing a note to be taken and records to be kept as to the results of these changes? In our Trade and Navigation Returns, a great many of these matters are lumped together in such a fashion that it is quite impossible, without special motion, to obtain the information we would like to have, and I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that it would be advisable to have some sort of record kept, either in the Finance Department or the Customs, of the operation of a good many of these small duties.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman for the suggestion. It think it is a valuable one, and I will take a note of it.

Buggies of all kinds, farm waggons, farm, railway or freight carts, pleasure carts or gigs and similar vehicles, costing less than $50, a specific duty of $10 each; costing $50 and less than $100 a specific duty of $15 each, and in addition thereto in each case, 20 per cent. ad valorem. All such carriages costing $100 each and over, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The object of this change is really to reach the question of under-valuation, and it will mainly apply and have a tendency to prevent very inferior articles being brought into the country that are really of very little value. The present duty on all kinds of these carriages is 35 per cent., and that will be very little changed by the present proposal. In fact, we estimate a very small increase, if any, to the revenue in consequence, but we believe that it will prevent under-valuation, and thus be fairer than the ad valorem duty was without the specific. On carriages costing over $100, the duty will remain what it is present.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the duty you get at present?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The duty received last year was $13,294, and we only expect $14,300 under the new proposition, so it is not for the purpose of obtaining revenue, but to check under-valuation, and to prevent the inferior description being brought into the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, that is true enough, but I recollect that that doctrine was a good deal objected to in ancient times.

Mr. BOWELL. The increase to 35 per cent. was objected to.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I mean the doctrine that the increase would prevent an inferior article coming in, but there is, no doubt, some truth in it.

Mr. BOWELL. That is the free trade doctrine, however.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can either the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Customs state roughly what the quantity of these articles of a less value than $50 is which have been imported?

Mr. BOWELL. They are not kept separately in our books, but the total number imported last year was 467.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Value, $41,475.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of all kinds named here?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, of all kinds.

Cotton sewing thread on spools, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is an increase from 20 to 25 per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What increase is expected on this?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The amount received last year was $83,670. Under proposed rate it would give $104,587.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you expect as much as $21,000 increase?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, if imports not checked.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Now, again, I point out in regard to this sewing thread, that, though it seems a small item in one sense, if I am correctly informed, the seamstresses and persons employed in making up clothing are obliged in many cases to provide their own thread, and this comes very heavily on an extremely ill-paid class of the community. I am afraid that the case is with us, as it is in England and in many other communities, that the unfortunate sewing girl, or seamstress, or tailoress, or whatever they may call her is about the worst paid, and approaches nearer to the condition of a white slave than any other wage-earner in the community, so, as those people supply their own thread, every additional cent of tax that you put comes on a very ill-paid and deserving class.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I quite sympathise with everything the hon. gentleman has said in regard to the seamstress. As he will find in regard to cuffs, and collars, and shirts, we have specially taken that into consideration, but in this matter it was believed there would be no material increase in the price owing to this increased duty.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it anticipated that sewing thread may be manufactured in Canada?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is brought in hanks, and spooled here. It will encourage the industry of spooling in this country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But the hon. gentleman will see that, if he is correct in expecting an increased revenue of $21,000, the price must be raised in proportion. You will not get the money without the price of the article being raised.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not say that we will receive $104,000, but that the rate of 25 per cent. on the same amount would give that. It is not expected that there will be so much imported. I find the estimate is that we will receive only $8,000 additional, owing to a larger quantity being spooled in Canada, and not imported in spools but in hanks.

Jeans and coutilles, imported by corset makers for use in their factory, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In that case, there is an increase of 5 per cent. in favor of cotton factories, but we do not expect to derive any increase of revenue on that account.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the present revenue?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $8,363.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I may mark that as a purely protective tax?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, it is.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you not expect to lose a little revenue on that?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is quite possible that we may, but at any rate we do not expect to get any additional.

Printed or dyed cotton fabrics not elsewhere specified, 32½ per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is also an increase of 5 per cent. to cotton factories and print works. The duty collected in 1886 was $524,854. The addition would give us $95,000 if the imports continued the same, but they will probably decrease, and we may possibly expect $75,000 additional.

Mr. McMULLEN. This is in my humble opinion a most unfortunate increase. The poorer classes of this country were called upon some years back to pay an increased duty from 25 to 27½ per cent. on printed cottons. Now the hon. gentleman proposes to raise that to 32½ per cent.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I must call your attention to the disorder which prevails, and I am sure that the Minister of Finance will agree with me—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That nothing can be more ill-judged than to interrupt discussions of this kind. There is no desire to do anything but to obtain reasonable information about this motion, and it is very much to be deplored that hon. gentlemen should delay our proceedings. They know perfectly well if they do, that no progress can be made.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope there will be no repetition of the slightest interruption when any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, or on this side, is addressing the Chair. I do not think anything could possibly be more objectionable or more calculated to delay the public business which the Government has brought before the House, from making progress.

Mr. McMULLEN. I was proceeding to say that I think that this is a very unfortunate increase. The hon. gentleman man could not lay his finger upon anything that is imported into this country that is used more generally by the poorer classes than printed goods. They cannot do without them, and I think that before asking us to increase an item of this kind, that is largely used by the poorer classes, and on which a very heavy duty has already been placed for the purpose of protecting a factory established in this country some years ago, I think he should have hesitated, and possibly have added to something rather than this. I am quite prepared to say that when luxuries are imported and revenue is necessary, duties should be put upon these things; but upon goods that are of absolute necessity, in the case of settlers, poor and rich, and particularly the poor, I think it is the most unfortunate increase the hon. gentleman could have made. We know perfectly well that common print is a thing that is manufactured in this country to a very limited extent. When the law was changed for the purpose of encouraging the manufacture, the argument was used that it was for the sole purpose of giving the company an opportunity of producing these articles in Canada. At that time the most positive assurance was given to the House that if we would consent to make the duty 27½ per cent. the company that was being formed for the purpose of producing prints would be able to operate within that limit, and operate successfully; that they did not think it would be at all necessary in the interest of that company to ask for some protection. Now, in place of carrying out that agreement, in place of carrying out the understanding that was then entered into between this House and the company, they now come to a new Parliament and ask an increase of 5 per cent., which is a direct levy upon the resources of the poorer classes. I think it is the most unfortunate thing the Government could have done. If it was necessary to keep that establishment alive, it would have been better, in the interest of the poor in this country, that the Government should not have consented to that increase, but should have said to the company, if you cannot possibly manage to manufacture within the limits we granted you, we will have to decline to give you a further increase.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I quite appreciate the argument the hon. gentleman has addressed to the House, and I feel its force to the fullest extent. But I may be allowed to remind him that when it was proposed to make the manufacture of cotton practicable in this country, and to establish these industries, exactly the same line of argument was adopted, namely, that the effect of putting on such a protective tariff for the manufacture of cotton in Canada as would enable it to be successfully manufactured, would cause great hardship to the mass of the people who were obliged to purchase that cotton. Now, the hon. gentleman knows that that has not proved to be the case, although it might have been so in the first instance. But it has resulted in such an amount of capital being brought into the country as to make cotton cheaper, perhaps, than it ever was before in Canada, and of a better quality, and that the only persons who are in a position really to demand the sympathy of the House are the unfortunate manufacturers who have invested their capital in the industry. Now, this industry does not stand under precisely the same footing as it did. It is perfectly well known that great populations, such as England and the United States, have an enormous advantage in the manufacture of prints. There is a great desire, of course, to have a great variety, and there is a considerable amount of expense, and I confess that I had some misgivings as to whether we had a sufficiently large population in Canada to carry out successfully the application of the principle to prints. However, Parliament did adopt that policy, and it is found that owing to the keen competition between countries which have a great population to provide for, and the enormous quantity they are able to manufacture of the same pattern, it is extremely difficult for Canada to compete with them. Under these circumstances the question arose as to whether this industry should be still further sustained by giving them a certain amount of protection. I may say that at the recent Colonial and Indian Exhibition in England, we had a wonderful display of those printed cottons, and I took means to inform myself as to whether the prices at which they were marked, and the prices at which parties sending them at that exhibition were willing to sell for, how they compared with prices in England and America, and I was greatly surprised to find that while these prints were of a very good quality indeed, the prices charged for them was not greater than that for which they could be purchased in London. I fully appreciate the argument the hon. gentleman has addressed to the House, but I am afraid it will be found necessary to give this slightly increased protection for the purpose of enabling the large amount of capital that has been invested in this industry to be made successful, and if it is made successful, I am quite sure that the competition is such that no material increase in the price will issue to the purchasers in Canada.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many factories are engaged in its manufacture here?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Only one. The competition is with foreign prints coming into the country.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think this is one of the matters which cannot be justified even on the theory of protection. It is well known that in England, where cottons are printed, that hundreds of pieces are printed of the same pattern from the same rollers. After the rollers are worn by the large quantity printed upon them, they are planed off and engraved the second time and used for printing another season. This process is continued as long as it is possible for them to be used. Now, in this country there is not a hundredth part of the print required to justify the expense necessary in order to engrave upon these rollers a new pattern. The hon. gentleman knows right well that the same machinery used for the purpose of printing a pattern of goods could be used for twenty years in succession here, and not then be worn to any greater extent than the rollers would be in England in a single season. Now, the expense necessary to make the changes and to meet the wants and tastes of the population, are such as those engaged in the printing of cotton cannot incur in this country, nor can they afford to carry on the business in the same way that it is carried on in England or in France. The hon. gentleman proposes to give an enormous protection to certain parties to enable them to carry on a business which the population of this country forbids them profitably to undertake, unless, indeed, they do what I understand is done, that those very gentlemen on whose behalf it is proposed to increase the burden upon the people of this country, go to England and buy the rollers that have already been planed off and engraved, and reengraved, until they have become too small to be used any longer, and then, after being used there for the last time, they are sold at a mere trifle to these gentlemen to be used in this country. And so, to compel people in this country to wear prints of the same pattern for a series of years, it is necessary that this increased tax should be imposed. Now, if the facts are as I understand them to be, that these men engaged in printing calicoes in this country purchase the worn-out rollers in England, then they do not need protection. If they undertake to engrave new rollers, and to furnish for themselves new appliances, they propose to engage in a business for which the country is not at all suited. The hon. gentleman might just as well undertake to give an enormous protection in order to encourage the orange industry here, as to propose to establish a system of duties to enable parties to engage in a business which would require at the very least a population of fifty millions, instead of five millions, to make it profitable. This is one of those industries for which, even upon the theory put forward by the hon. gentleman and those who have controlled the tariff for the past ten years, they can find no justification whatever on any principle, and the only effect is to add millions of dollars to the expenses of the people without any corresponding advantage to those who may be engaged in the business. Let the hon. gentleman take the quantity of calicoes imported and consumed in this country. Let him look at the prices and add the amount of taxes he proposes to levy, and he will see what a burden he is imposing on the people. And to what purpose? To enable half-a-dozen men who have formed themselves into a company to buy the worn-out machinery of a calico mill in England, and bring here obsolete patterns, and the Government imposes such a tax as will compel the women to wear goods printed in this particular mill. It is a monstrous proposition; and barons of old, who built their castles by the side of cross roads in order to pillage travellers and thus supplement their incomes, did not act in a way more objectionable or unjust than the Government propose to act in this matter. What advantage do they confer upon the people to justify them, or to afford a pretext even for what they propose to do? There is no justification whatever. If twenty men are employed in an establishment with worn-out machinery with which to produce calicoes for the Canadian markets, only those interested will receive advantage.

Mr. BOWELL. To what machinery do you refer?

Mr. MILLS. I refer to the rollers employed in printing calico, and I say that the Canadian manufacturer cannot afford to buy new machinery, but he will go to England and buy worn-out machinery from the mills there; and now the Government propose to charge this enormous sum in addition to the legitimate price, in order that those parties may put money into their pockets.

Mr. WALLACE. The statement of the hon. member for Bothwell that this proposal will add millions to the taxation of the country is not quite true. The value of prints imported was $1,907,000, and the additional duty proposed will amount on that sum to $95,000; so that it will not add millions to the taxation of the country as represented by the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman has also told the House that the quantity used is so exceedingly small that the mills cannot be profitably occupied and a very small quantity will be sold. It appears that 23,839,000 yards of printed cotton are used in this country, which would cover more than 16,000 miles in length, and that quantity would give profitable employment to a good many print mills. The addition of 5 per cent. will tend to promote the printing of those cotton goods with advantage to the people, because we know from experience that cotton manufactured here is much superior to cotton of English manufacture, and prints from this Canadian print mill are also much superior in quality to those we obtain from England. The additional taxation allowing for the best quality of prints, will be three cents per eight yards, sufficient to make a dress; and while it is not a serious tax, it will permit print manufacturers in this country to supply this quantity of upwards of 28,000,000 yards at present imported.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that the conclusion at which I arrived was this: that this proposition would not ultimately enhance the price, and for this reason. Evidence, which proved to be conclusive, was given that those parties who manufacture prints in England on such a gigantic scale, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), were ready to place their prints on the market of this country greatly below their value for the purpose of crushing out this industry, and being thus enabled to charge much higher prices. I had an opportunity to compare, and I did compare, the quality and the price of Canadian prints with those that could be obtained in London, and I am quite satisfied that no great, no material hardship will occur in the shape of an increase of price over that which our people would be compelled to pay if this industry were crushed out.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is the factory?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. At Magog.

Mr. COLBY. In regard to the industry referred to by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), I may say that the hon. gentleman is quite misinformed as to the character of the machinery used and the methods adopted at that establishment. An investment of some $450,000 has been made at that place for the purpose of carrying on this industry. The machinery is the most modern and the best that could be procured in England, regardless of cost. The company is doing its own engraving. It is printing patterns of great variety and giving most excellent satisfaction to the Canadian trade, and it is, moreover, under-selling goods of equal quality produced in foreign markets. It is laboring under the disadvantage which all new enterprises started in Canada have had to encounter, that is the disposition of the mercantile community and of importers to deal in foreign rather than in domestic goods. The woollen manufacturers had to encounter it, and it formed one of the chief obstacles in the establishment of that industry. The cotton manufacturers also found it one of the great obstacles in their way. The importers, the wholesale merchants, the dealers, can make more money on imported than on domestic goods. The public do not know the cost of the imported articles, but they ultimately come to know in some way or other the cost of the domestic article, and consequently—it is one of the secrets of the trade, an open secret but one of the methods followed—the merchants prefer to deal in foreign rather than in domestic goods. The establishment at Magog produces one-fourth of the prints consumed in Canada.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the production?

Mr. COLBY. I think about 6,000,000 of yards; I am not precisely certain upon that point, but I think 6,000,000 or more was the production last year. The Canadian manufacturers are laboring under those disadvantages which are incident to the establishment of new industries. It is not their expectation that an increase in the duty will be attended with any corresponding increase in the price to the consumer in Canada. They expect to be obliged to under-sell the similar article produced abroad in order to get the market. It is necessary to do it, but it is freely admitted by the trade of Montreal, and, I think, by the trade in Ottawa, Toronto and the lower Provinces, that better value is given in the cotton, and equal value in the subsequent process which are put upon it by the Canadian prints than by the foreign prints. My hon. friend shakes his head. His information may have been received at the time this institution was in its infancy. It is a young institution now, but during the last year or eighteen months it has made remarkable improvements. Of course, in the establishment of an industry which requires skilled labor it is necessary to have the best skill and the best labor. No company is absolutely sure, in the first instance, that it is going to be able to obtain the best skill and produce the best article within the first few months of its existence. Difficulties have to be overcome, losses have to be encountered, and experience has to be gained; but I may say to hon. members that the gentlemen connected with that industry are gentlemen of the highest financial standing in this country—business men who are seeking to carry forward a business enterprise strictly on business principles, and who are doing, and intend to do, everything in their power to supply the trade of Canada with an article which is adapted to the wants of our people, and which is required to meet the necessities of the country. And if it is necessary at all to ask the Government to give an increase from 27½ per cent. to 32½ per cent., it is not to enable them to add 5 per cent. to their price; it is simply that they find themselves handicapped by the disposition of the wholesale traders to give the preference to the foreign article, and not to encourage the domestic article. Consequently they are obliged to under-sell, they do under-sell, and they expect for some time to come to under-sell the foreign article. It is actually the case that merchants acknowledge the superiority of the goods produced in the mill, and yet, such is the prejudice against the foreign article, that the manufacturers of this superior article are not permitted to put their own trade mark upon it. The merchant insists that he shall put his own trade mark upon the goods, and many of those goods which are better than the foreign goods, are sold as foreign manufactured articles to-day. These things are incidental to the starting of a new enterprise; prejudices have to be overcome, and it is not in this line of cotton goods alone. I think the Government have done wisely to encourage and strengthen an enterprise which is well conceived and which will no doubt, under proper protection, become a success, and a credit and a useful industry to this country.

Mr. COLBY.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to know if the weaving is all done here.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, it is not; they are preparing to do it.

Mr. COLBY. I may say that the print mill was started almost at the identical time that the depression in cotton goods commenced, and that, while a building was constructed for weaving, it was impossible during that period of depression—and it has been impossible from that time to the present—to obtain capital—in fact, capital was not solicited; it would have been useless to solicit capital—to put in the spinning and weaving machinery. But in the meantime during this glut in the cotton market it has taken up, appropriated and distributed $300,000 of cotton goods which otherwise would not have had a market. I may say to the hon. gentleman that capital is now being raised for the spinning and weaving. The mill is prepared and everything is in operation for the reception of the machinery. Some $200,000 I think are required for putting in the necessary machinery for the manufacture of cloth. It is important to do so, because there is no machinery in Canada to-day which is precisely adapted to the manufacture of the finer qualities by the best and most economical methods; and in all probability within a very few months, should any hon. gentleman have an opportunity of visiting that establishment, he will find it one of which he will agree that the country may be proud.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby), I think, admits that the goods that are printed in these mills are not manufactured in the mills where they are printed. One hon. gentleman has spoken of the superior quality of the Canadian cotton.

Mr. COLBY. They are manufactured in Canada.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They may be manufactured in Canada, but they must be specially manufactured for this business, for I think every hon. gentleman knows that the kind of goods manufactured for the purpose of being printed and made into calicoes are somewhat different from those which are intended to remain as bleached cotton. I do not understand how the cotton goods of Canada, which are of a different width from those which are converted into calicoes, are being converted into calicoes at this moment. One hon. gentleman says that the English calicoes are not of as good a quality as these goods. English unbleached cottons and some of the English bleached cottons, are also-gether inferior to those manufactured in Canada and generally to some of those manufactured in the United States. The reason is that by the process of separating the superior fibre from the refuse matter they manufacture goods of different grades and qualities, and it is from the very best fibres that the best class of calico goods are woven. So that the hon. gentleman who made that statement has made a statement altogether at variance with the fact, when he says that the goods manufactured in Canada are of a superior quality to those of this class which are manufactured in England. On the contrary, they are necessarily of an inferior quality, because the refuse fibre is not separated from the better fibre to the same extent that it is in England. Then the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) says that the calicoes manufactured at this mill are printed from rollers engraved at the establishment.

Mr. COLBY. They are now engraving.

Mr. MILLS. That was not the case when the establishment was first formed. I think the hon. gentleman then informed the House—and my information from other sources was exactly the same—that the owners of those mills expected to buy their rollers in England—the rollers which were no longer required for use there—and to get them cheap, to be enabled to produce printed calico goods for something like the same price as they are produced in England. The hon. gentleman now tells us they have abandoned that notion. My information is that it costs about $2,000 to engrave a set of rollers. The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but that is my information—that to engrave a set of superior steel rollers will cost at least $2,000. Now, it is perfectly obvious that in a cotton mill where 800 or 1,000 million yards are printed in a season when this cost is added to the price of the goods, it is possible to produce those goods at a much cheaper rate than in a mill where five or six million yards are printed. The hon. gentleman says that they print six million yards, and that they have a great variety of patterns. What does that mean? It means that a great expense is incurred for appliances to print six million yards that would be sufficient to print six hundred million yards. It is to turn capital from profitable investments to unprofitable investments. It is a curious thing that in this country, where we have immense resources to the development of which capital could be directed, it is proposed to put an enormous tax on the people for such a purpose as this. It does seem to me that the Government are taking a false step. The hon. gentleman proposes to make a large addition to the taxation of the country, and even with that it is extremely doubtful whether the Government will be able to raise sufficient money to meet their obligations. It is extremely doubtful whether we shall not have, at the end of another season, another deficit, as we are likely to have one at the end of this year. What does the hon. gentleman propose to do? He proposes to close every avenue from which revenue may be obtained for this country. We are obtaining from the calico prints imported into this country a considerable amount of revenue, and yet the hon. gentleman proposes, by imposing an enormous burden on the country, to encourage the printing of cottons within the country. I think it is greatly to be regretted that Ministers should have formed this sort of combination with capitalists, and used their position for the purpose of levying a tribute on the people of this country. The farming population to-day have not by 30 or 35 per cent, as large an income as they had ten years ago. I know myself that the value of real estate has fallen 25 or 30 per cent. over a great portion of Ontario; and the hon. gentleman, with these facts before him, proposes to still further burden the people by levying a tribute upon them for the benefit of those who are quite capable of taking care of themselves. I am willing that the Government should put their hands into the pockets of the people and take whatever is required for public purposes; but I am not willing that they shall persist in taking from those who by their industry earn their scanty incomes and give to those who are better able to provide for their own wants. The Government, I suppose, are acting on the scriptural theory that "To him that hath shall be given, and from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."

Mr. WALDIE. I do not agree with the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who say that cotton prints imported from England are better than those printed at Magog. My impression is that they print on an excellent cloth at Magog; but that cloth is manufactured in this country. There is machinery enough in this country at present to produce all the goods we require, and I should be sorry if this increased duty should be the means of adding new spindles to the unused cotton machinery already set up. I see no reason why the gentlemen who have the print works at Magog should not purchase their cloth from the other mills in which machinery is standing idle for want of work. I think it would be for the best interest of the country that that should be done; and as there is only the one print mill with numerous cotton mills, I do not see that it is necessary to give this increased protection to this one mill. I think the proprietors of that mill are doing reasonably well. They are supplying the market pretty extensively, and I think with the protection they already enjoy they will soon pay a better dividend than any other cotton mill in the country. There is, I know, in the wholesale trade an unwillingness to take the manufactures of this country and place them in the hands of retailers, for the reason that the wholesale people themselves desire to make a profit; and as the character of the goods is known to the consumer, the retailer cannot so easily obtain a profit on the goods manufactured in this country as he can on imported goods, and therefore there is opposition to overcome, as the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) correctly stated. But I think that the merit of the goods is telling upon the market, and that the Magog company will be able to make a reasonable profit without this increased tariff. With regard to the character of the goods that come from England, the second year's run is frequently sent to this country, and these goods are sold in the English market at a lower price than the first year's produce. A limited quantity of the first year's print comes to this country to the first-class retail traders in the larger cities; but the general retail trade of the country only import the second year's run. The third year's production, I am informed, goes to India and other markets where it is sold at an even lower price than the second year's print in this country. I am very anxious that the industries of the country shall have reasonable protection and shall prosper; but I think that, as those gentlemen have the only mill in the country that we are likely to have, the Government should not give them all they ask, because people are inclined to ask too much. I have no doubt that the gentlemen connected with that mill are most respectable men, are good business men, and are very anxious to increase their dividend. They have pressed their case on the Government, but I think the Government have yielded a little too far, and I hope they will see proper to modify their proposition.

Mr. COLBY. I hope my hon. friend from Bothwell will be satisfied with the statement of facts given by his friend who sits behind him, although he would hardly admit them when they were thrown across the House from me. It is positively true, as the hon. gentleman who has last spoken has stated, that the Magog goods are superior in quality to the similar class of foreign goods, and that the cotton cloth upon which they are manufactured is better than what is used in the manufacture of that class of foreign goods, the fine spun theories of the member for Bothwell to the contrary. I would say, in reply to the suggestion which fell from the hon. gentleman who has last spoken, that there is no increase of duty asked upon the cloth which is manufactured for the purpose of being printed upon; consequently, the tariff will remain, so far as that is concerned, precisely as it was. While it is true that the mills have been able to supply the Magog factory with a good quality of cloth, they have not been able to do so advantageously, for this reason: that their looms are not specially adapted for that purpose. They do not work with that degree of rapidity which is susceptible of being attained in the manufacture of this special line of goods, and, consequently, a very considerable economy in the manufacture can be effected if the looms and the whole weaving and spinning machinery be adapted to this specially, and that is one reason why it has become necessary to put that machinery into the mill. There is one other point I will refer to which has been mentioned by the hon. member for Bothwell. It is quite true that I stated, when the proposition was originally submitted to the House to impose an increase of duty upon print cloths, that it was the intention of the company to purchase rollers from England, and the company did purchase rollers from England; and I will explain to the hon. gentleman the reason, and he will see that even that was not an unwise course to have taken. I am told there are certain lines of cotton printed cloths that do not vary from one year to another. I am sure that the gentleman who has just spoken will confirm my statement, for he seems to be familiar with the trade, when I say there are certain staple patterns and colors, which constitute a large portion of the consumption of the people of Canada, that do not materially change from year to year. Now, it was copper rollers, susceptible of printing that particular class of standard and suitable patterns, that were purchased by the company, but the company has been emboldened to go one step further. It has been emboldened to go beyond these ordinary common staple patterns, which are mostly used by the farming class of the community, and to attempt a more tasteful variety of goods, and in doing that, they are now obtaining from abroad, before they were ever reproduced at all upon rollers, the very best patterns that can be obtained in England and Paris, before they come upon the market, and are reproducing those patterns by their own engravers in their own mills here. That has been a very marked success, and during the last year very great satisfaction was expressed by the merchants, with the superior taste and superior quality and fine selection of patterns which this mill has been enabled to produce. I mention this point simply to correct the misapprehension that seems to exist in reference to it.

Mr. WALDIE I would wish to bring out this additional fact, that in England everything is done by printing companies, and they buy their cloths, and I do not see why the Magog Printing Company should not continue to purchase their cloths from the cotton mills as they do at present. This is done in the United States also. By giving this additional protection you will create a monopoly, and the printing company will no longer buy its cotton cloth from the cotton mills.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a large business, about one-third of our whole revenue from cotton appears to come from this. The hon. gentleman, I suppose, has taken stock of that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The total exports were a little under $2,000,000 on this item.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That makes one-third of the revenue from cotton goods derived from this article. The hon. gentleman, noticing how large an item it is, had better consider whether the revenue may be more diminished than he expects, as is possible if the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) is correct. We are now manufacturing one quarter of a million, and one additional quarter would make a serious inroad in the hon. gentleman's calculations.

Mr. COLBY.

Mr. COLBY. We will not do that this year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But if you go ahead in your monopoly you will.

Earthenware and stoneware, namely, demijohns or jugs, churns and crocks, a specific duty of three cents per gallon of holding capacity.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say there is an increase of one cent per gallon. The duty before was two cents. This will produce a very small increase of revenue, perhaps $500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then to attain $500 you add 50 per cent. to the tax on an article which most undoubtedly comes into general household use. I might mention to the hon. gentleman that I have received telegrams from parties whom I do not know, but who are in that trade, in which they protest strongly against the increase of duty on this particular kind of crockery, as it is likely to injure their trade very much. In this kind of ware, being of comparatively small value, the additional tax may be heavily felt. Does the hon. gentleman expect to increase the manufacture?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Considerably. Only $1,630 duty was paid in last year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman any information as to how much is consumed in the country?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There were 7,829 gallons for one month, when the duty of two cents a gallon was in operation. There will be little difference as far as revenue is concerned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I take it for granted the hon. gentleman has no particular objection to state the fact that this is one of the duties he has been requested to impose by the manufacturers.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman made enquiry as to the amount manufactured in Canada, and the number of establishments and hands employed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is manufactured in New Brunswick and in London and in St. John's, Quebec. It is thought this will give a very considerable stimulus to the industry, without sensibly affecting the revenue. I am not quite certain how many factories there are. There is the British Porcelain Works, white granite, at St. John's, P. Q., which is one of the principal places. There is the Davisville Pottery in Ontario.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is that?

Mr. BOWELL. In East York.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then there is a manufactory at Pottersburg in Ontario, also. I think that is in Middlesex. There is the London Crockery Manufacturing Co.

Mr. MILLS. There is one in Brantford.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, there is one in Brantford and one in Belleville.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is a considerable number, and this will cause more to be established in this country; it will lead to the extension of works, to the investment of more capital and to the employment of more labor.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the total exportation is only what the hon. gentleman led me to understand, there does not seem to be much margin for the employment of additional labor,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is only one item. There are other items in regard to this.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does that three cents per gallon mean, translated into ad valorem?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. About 30 per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Would it not be a good deal more on the inferior articles?

Mr. BOWELL. Not on the average.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, but the average is generally very misleading. A duty of 30 per cent. on the average might be 60 or 70 per cent. on the inferior article, and much less than 30 per cent. on the better article. I would suggest to the Finance Minister that it would be well if he would ascertain the maximum and minimum. Those are points that we should be advised upon.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I will take a note of that.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think the earthenware should have been separated from the stoneware. Earthenware is very much in use by the farming class for milk pans, and the cost of these will be very much increased by this change, while the amount added to the stoneware, which is much more expensive, will not be so great in proportion. I think it is a pity that a division should not have been made. I have a friend who is now a partner in one of those establishments, and has been for two years. I know from him, personally, that the profits during the past year were very satisfactory, that he was quite satisfied with the two years that he was in the business, and that he had found nothing in which he has been engaged in Canada so lucrative, and he made that statement to me before the three cents per gallon was put on. I think this proves most positively that for the Finance Minister to be able to judge as between the consumer and the manufacturer, he should be thoroughly posted as to the cost of producing these manufactures. The Minister of Finance is quite in the dark as to the profits which are derived from the manufacture. The result is that a combination is formed by the manufacturers, they come to him as others do who are engaged in other industries, he yields to their appeals, and an additional tax is put on the consumer, especially on the poorer classes, because earthenware should not be put in the same category with stoneware. I think, if there had been a duty of 1½ cents a gallon on earthenware and 3 cents on stoneware, it might be reasonable.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is only an increase of 1 cent, not 3 cents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is an increase of 50 per cent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is an increase from 2 cents to 3 cents.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the duty on earthenware and stoneware should be put together, because the stoneware imported from the United States enters into direct competition with the earthenware manufactured in this country. The retail price for earthenware is about 20 cents a gallon; so 3 cents a gallon duty is not very large. There are hundreds of these manufacturers in this country, principally of earthenware, but the stoneware comes into competition with them, and an inferior class of stoneware is made very cheaply in the United States, and is brought in at low rates, and is driving out of the business our manufacturers of earthenware.

Earthenware and stoneware, &c., not elsewhere specified, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The duty on this was 30 per cent. There is an increase of 5 per cent. It covers items 145, 146 and 147 in the present tariff, which are grouped together. The imports in 1886 amounted to $454,893; 5 per cent. of that would add $22,744 to the revenue, but we estimate that at the outside there will not be an increase of more than $15,000, because it will lead to a great deal more being manufactured in the country.

Flag-stones, sawn or otherwise dressed, $2 per ton, specific

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What does that cover?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It covers item 161 in the present tariff. The present tariff is $1.50, and it is proposed to add 50 cents a ton to that, the result being that the sawing, instead of being done out of the country, will be done in the country.

Mr. ELLIS. Does that mean marble?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not necessarily marble, but any kind of sawn stone.

Mr. ELLIS. The tax will be very objectionable in the Maritime Provinces. This stone, as I understand it, is brought in in the rough and sawn in Toronto or Montreal, and the expense of carrying it over the Intercolonial is so great that the manufacturers in the Maritime Provinces find it cheaper to import it from the United States. There is not enough used in the Maritime Provinces to make it worth while to saw it there, so you are compelling those who use a small quantity to pay the additional cost of carrying it over the Intercolonial Railway.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There were only 1,602 tons imported, and I am sure that, if there is anything that they do not require to import in the Maritime Provinces, it is stone. The Province of New Brunswick, which the hon. gentleman is so competent to speak for, abounds in the finest stone of every description and quality, and the Province of Nova Scotia, for which I am qualified to speak to some extent, possesses free stone of every description, of the finest quality. Why we want to import stone, either sawn or unsawn, I do not understand.

Mr. ELLIS. I asked if this covered marble.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, this is flag-stones. The $2 per ton, I may say, is equal to a rate as nearly as we can calculate, of about 33¼ per cent. The value of the imports last year was $9,413.

Glass carboys and demijohns, bottles and decanters, flasks and phials of less capacity than four ounces, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is the same as at present. It is separating the articles; they were grouped together with the next item; consequently we had to make two separate resolutions.

Flasks and phials of four ounce capacity and over, telegraph and lightning rod insulators, jars and glass balls, and cut, pressed, or moulded tableware, a specific duty of 10 cents per dozen pieces, and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The duty is 30 per cent., and the addition of 10 cents per dozen will materially assist glass blowers in competition with the very low prices at which these articles are sent from Germany, where labor is so much cheaper than it is in this country. The imports of these articles last year amounted to $371,840, and we may expect an increase of perhaps $10,000 in revenue, while it will lead to a large increased manufacture in the country.

Mr. MALLORY. Why should there be such a difference between bottles under four ounces and those over four?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The reason is that this is a specific duty by the dozen; and you would make it a very high specific duty if you put it upon ounce bottles; consequently four ounces is taken in order to limit the application of that specific duty which would be so heavy upon small phials.

Mr. MALLORY. There are particular uses to which the four, six and eight ounce bottles are applied, namely, for purposes of prescription. The six and eight ounce bottles, particularly, are the ones that are used more often than smaller ones. I have always understood there was considerable profit in their manufacture in this country, and I cannot understand why there should be such a distinction between the two ounce bottles, and the four, six and eight ounce. These are sizes generally used in prescriptions, and nothing else.

Gold and silver leaf, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is an increase from 20 to 30 per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it for revenue or protection? You will not get both.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will give about $15,000 more revenue if you apply it to the imports of last year; but it is expected that it will not give more than a $1,000, for the reason that there will not be so much imported.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it because the extra duty will diminish consumption?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I suppose it will be made here.

Sewing machines, whole, or heads, or parts of heads of sewing machines, a specific duty of $3 each, and 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The duty is now 20 per cent. and $2 specific. It is proposed to make that $2 specific instead of $2. There was $6,801 paid in duty in 1886. The addition of a dollar each would give $6,801 increase. But probably the imports will be greatly decreased. We estimate, therefore, the increase at only half that sum.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see you put a duty of $3 on each. Is that on every single item of a sewing machine?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Suppose some small part of a sewing machine was imported, would that be taxed $3?—for purposes of repair, for instance.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think what they call the head of a sewing machine covers the bulk of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does not the head of the sewing machine cover the great bulk of the machine?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, and it is to prevent bringing them in in parts.

Leather, sole, 3 cents per lb., specific.
Leather, belting leather, and all upper leather, including kid, lamb, sheep and calf, tanned or dressed, but not colored, waxed or glazed, 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present rate is 15 per cent. and the average value is 20 cents., per pound, which makes 3 cents per lb., practically the same. It is done for the purpose of separating that portion of the clause from the next clause that follows.

Japanned, patent or enamelled, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is an increase of 5 per cent. The value of the imports of japanned, patent or enamelled, was $15,000. The enamelling, &c., will be more largely done in Canada, and we cannot expect any increase of revenue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any factory for enamelling in existence at all?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, it is largely done in the country, in Montreal.

Liquorice root, paste, extracts of, 2 cents per lb., specific.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present duty is 15 per cent., an average value of 8 cents per pound would be 2 cents per pound duty, equal to 25 per cent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the revenue expected?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This should give about $10,000 more revenue. The imports were 1,072,685 pounds.

Oil cloth, floor, a specific duty of 5 cents per square yard and 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I move to reduce that to 15 per cent. ad valorem and 5 cents a yard.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the two together supposed to amount to?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present duty is 20 per cent., average value 50 cents. Five cents and 20 per cent. will be equal to 30 per cent. It is not intended to increase it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then you expect no increased revenue.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. The present duty is five cents and 10 per cent. The change is to an ad valorem duty of five per cent., which will yield an increased revenue of $2,500, and augment our Canadian manufacture.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there not a great variety in the qualities of this article and a very wide range of value?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The reason a specific duty is applied is to check under-valuation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It makes it a very heavy duty on the low grades, which are very largely used by many classes of the community.

Mr. McMULLEN. The duty on some classes will be raised to about 45 per cent. This applies to lower grades, which can be purchased wholesale at 20 cents per yard, upon which a specific duty of 5 cents per yard and 20 per cent. will raise it to the amount I have stated. On the higher qualities used by people who are well able to pay, the rate of duty will be much less. The effect of a specific duty of this kind is to increase largely the cost of goods used by the poor classes. This also applies to table oil cloths, some of which can be bought at from 10 to 20 cents per yard wholesale, and a specific duty of 5 cents and an ad valorem duty of 20 per cent. make a very heavy duty; on the poorer grades the duty may range up to 45 per cent., while on the higher qualities it will not exceed 30 per cent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will perceive that the change can make very little difference, because, although the import last year was 6,517,000 yards, of the value of $138,609, all we estimate as an increase of duty is $2,500. So it is scarcely a perceptible increase.

Paper hangings. (See Item 22, p. 405.)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present duty is 30 per cent. This is a reconstructed table altogether for the purpose of applying specific duties, and the specific duties have been arranged upon value, as nearly as we can ascertain the value of the different kinds, so as to keep the duty practically the same as at present. It will slightly increase the duty on the first item, brown blank; but it will practically leave all the balance at the same rate as before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You do not expect any increase of revenue?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am informed that although the hon. gentleman only intends to make the duty the same as before, yet that on some of the poorer qualities it will be very much increased, and as some qualities are sold wholesale at very low rates, the duty will be as high as 50, 60 or 70 per cent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is done to avoid disputes about value. This change to specific duty will simply increase the first item, but not the others.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The statements made to me are to a different effect. What revenue does the hon. gentleman expect to obtain from paper hangings?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The imports of last year were of the value of $225,116 and the revenue $85,579.

Paper, of all kinds not elsewhere specified, 22½ per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present duty on calendered paper is 22½ per cent. while that on uncalendered is 20 per cent. It is proposed to increase the duty on uncalendered paper. I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite to allow this item to stand.

Pickles in bottles, 40 cents per gallon.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is a considerable change. It is based upon a 30 per cent. tariff, as it now is upon Crosse and Blackwell's pickles, but increases the duty upon those of not so good a quality.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What revenue does the hon. gentleman expect?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Under the head of pickles we expect to obtain an increased revenue of $5,000.

Plated cutlery, 50 cents per dozen and 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the amount of the importation and what increased revenue is expected?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present duty is 30 per cent. This is a large increase in the cheaper kind of plated knives, but the duty on the best class will not be materially increased. We do not expect an increased revenue from it, and the duty is put on to shut out the worthless and inferior articles.

Plumbago, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Plumbago, all manufactures of, not elsewhere specified, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This leaves plumbago the same as before, and gives a protection of 5 per cent. on the manufacture. We do not expect any increase of revenue.

Salt, coarse, 10 cents per 100 lbs. (not to include salt imported from the United Kingdom or any British possession, or salt imported for the use of the sea or gulf fisheries, which shall be free of duty).

Salt, fine, in bulk, a specific duty of 10 cents per 100 lbs.

Salt in bags, barrels or other packages, a specific duty of 15 cents per 100 lbs., the bags, barrels or other packages to bear the same duty as if imported empty.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The effect of this will be to give an increase of 2 cents per 100 lbs., on the first two items and 3 cents per 100 lbs. on salt in bags or barrels. It is expected to give some small increase, about $3,000 only, because it will lead to more being manufactured in the country.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it would be well that some provision should be made that refuse salt, imported in bulk for agricultural purposes, should be allowed to come in at a low rate. I admit that it is not brought in, but there is a large quantity of salt used for agricultural purposes, and if a provision of that kind were made it would keep down the price of the home article and encourage its use.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will see that all salt imported from Great Britain or the British possessions comes in free.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why not make it free from any place for agricultural purposes?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Because we have abundance of salt in the salt wells of Ontario, and all it requires is an increase of the industry to enable it to furnish, at a reasonable price, all the salt that can be needed for any purpose.

Mr. McMULLEN. I admit the hon. gentleman's argument, but I contend that if you permit it to be imported from the United States in bulk free—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It would certainly destroy the industry altogether.

Mr. McMULLEN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. It would have the effect simply of keeping down the price of the Canadian article and permitting those who want to buy it by the car load to do so at a less price than at present.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, get out.

Mr. McMULLEN. This is an important matter which deserves the attention of the House, and no jeers from hon. gentlemen opposite will deter me from doing my duty with regard to it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Government are greatly indebted to the hon. gentlemen opposite for their assistance in carrying through these items, and I certainly hope there will be no interruptions to gentlemen discussing them, and I do not think there was any intended.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the item were altered to permit the importation from the United States, it would tend to reduce the value of the bulk salt at the well, simply because they would have to compete with imported articles—not that I think that it would be imported—but it would have the effect of lowering the price.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am told that the competition is now so sharp that it is almost impossible to produce at the present price, and allow it to come in free would simply shut up the industry, and nothing would be gained by that.

Mr. CASEY. I think the hon. gentleman has been misinformed as to the extreme competition with American salt. I live near the salt district and I know that a great deal is used in my neighborhood, but I am not aware of any American salt being brought in for use on land. I agree with my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that, as to this particular kind of salt, the increased duty will give too much protection. It is a cheap, refuse salt, used for putting on the land, and I think it should be allowed to come in at a low rate for the benefit of our farmers. I quite agree that it would not be brought in, but it would simply compel the manufacturers here to sell this lower grade salt at a little lower price. The effect of the changes in the tariff is not only to give an increased protection on the higher grades, but a disproportionate protection on the cheaper grades which the farmers use. That is one point. Another is that I think some consideration should be extended to those who import salt for dairy purposes. The dairy industry is one of the most promising in Canada. It is an agricultural industry which does show signs of some improvement at the present time. Cheese and butter are going to be staples, and salt is an important item in their production. A good deal of that salt comes from England, but some fine grades are now made in the United States, and I think that salt imported for dairy purposes should have the same consideration which is extended to salt for packing fish. The dairy industry is quite as important as the fish industry, and the farmers who have so long been asked to stand aside and allow the manufacturers to have the benefit of protection should have some consideration now.

Mr. CHARLTON. The policy of the Government is a protective policy, and this impost is undoubtedly in that line. It is certainly true that salt can be produced in the American salt districts cheaper than in Canada, and for this reason: In the Michigan salt districts the manufacture is carried on in connection with steam lumbering mills, the wells being in connection with the mills and the brine being pumped up by the mill power. The refuse of the mills is used for fuel for the evaporation of the salt, and the barrels are also produced at the mills, so that the production is thereby much cheapened. Although our salt in the vicinity of Goderich is of a superior quality, yet, owing to the fact that the fuel must be provided, especially for evaporation, and the material for the barrels must be provided, the production cannot be carried on as cheaply as in Michigan. For that reason it is necessary, if we are to permit our salt manufacturers to furnish salt here, to afford them some protection. I do not know the question practically. I suppose those interested in it have made representations to the Minister which led him to make this increased charge; and if we are to have protection at all, I see no reason why we should not grant this protection to the salt producers.

Mr. CASEY. I did not ask that there should be no protection at all. I merely stated as a fact that, under the existing tariff, American salt does not come into Canada to any extent at all, and if the present tariff excludes American salt, I contend that it is sufficient protection.

Mr. PORTER. As I have the honor to represent a riding in which the salt industry is a large one, I may be allowed to say a few words as to the change proposed. There is no doubt that the salt interest is a very important one in this country, although confined to a very small district. It is well known to gentlemen who have watched the progress of this enterprise, that the people who have been engaged in it have lost money of late years, and it is also true that this industry has provided employment for many of our own people; and when this House has committed itself to the policy of protection for Canadian industries, it should not object to any means of promoting this industry which the Minister of Finance may offer. The duties now proposed will certainly be an advantage to the salt industry, and I think every man who has the good of his country at heart, would wish to see every industry of this country promoted, so long as the burdens of the people are not increased beyond endurance; and I think the trifling duty the Minister proposes to add to that which already exists on the article of salt, will certainly not be a burden upon the people, while it will be a great benefit and relief to those gentlemen who have had the public spirit and courage to engage in this enterprise, although at a loss of money for several years. I hope this House will generously carry this motion, and the Minister of Finance will receive no opposition whatever in his endeavor to carry out the policy of protection which he has advocated in this House.

Mr. MALLORY. I have no particular objection, as the policy of protection has been adopted by the country, that there should be a reasonable amount of protection, provided it is apportioned with reference to the quality of the goods, and with reference to those who use the goods protected; but I can assure you, so far as this item is concerned, that the farming community throughout Ontario, where very large quantities of salt are used for fertilising purposes, will regard this duty as very objectionable. I have the honor to represent an agricultural constituency, and I know that very large quantities of salt are used by the farmers. I know also that the profits farmers are able to derive from farming are comparatively small; that they are hampered in every way, and that nearly every duty which is increased by this tariff has borne more heavily on the farming community, and upon the poorer classes, than it has upon the wealthy classes of the country; and this increased duty on salt is simply adding another to the already heavy burdens imposed on the farming community. I speak of this because our farmers have spoken to me in regard to the matter, and I know that I am only speaking their views when I say that this measure will be very objectionable to them. Their profits are so small that any increase, no matter how trifling, will be a source of annoyance and irritation to them. I sincerely hope that the Minister of Finance will be able, if it is absolutely necessary to increase the duty, to increase it on the finer grades of salt, and allow the coarser grades, which are used by the farming community, to remain at the present rate of duty.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The duty on salt has certainly not increased the price up to the present time, for never have the farmers got their salt at as low a rate as they do at present. But what makes the salt expensive is the enormous railway freights that we have to pay, and it is against these freights that the farmer needs to be protected, rather than against this or any other duty. I tried to get some salt for manure a couple of years ago, and, although the price at the wells was merely nominal, the freights over the Grand Trunk and Northern Railways were unbearable, so I had to give it up. There was no competition, and these railways charged just what they liked. As regards fine salt, that which is most valuable for curing meat and for dairy purposes comes from England; and, as for the duty being placed on fine salt alone, the farmers need that just as much as they do the coarse salt, so that there is no reason why there should be any discrimination between the two kinds of salt, so far as the farmer is concerned. As to the increased duty, a cent or two on a hundred pounds cannot affect the price to any extent. What we want protection against, however, is the exorbitant rate which the railways charge whenever they get a chance.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the hon. Minister of Finance had given us some statement as to the quantity of salt imported, it would have afforded some evidence as to the necessity of this change. My impression is that we do not import any.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The import of salt was 1,473,054 lbs.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will see that that import is almost wholly in the Maritime Provinces, and the increase is altogether unnecessary, because the existing duty absolutely excludes American salt from the Canadian market; and, certainly, the hon. gentleman has not proposed this increase for revenue, for even under the tariff that exists at present no revenue is derived from that source. In all these changes which are made in the tariff, not a single change is made in the interests of the agriculturists. The hon. gentleman in his Budget speech has spoken of the very great importance of our carrying out the principle of protection, and hon. gentlemen opposite cheered him; and yet we find that the protection is not protection for the community generally, but protection to small minorities, to particular parties, to persons engaged in special industries who call upon the Government to aid them at the expense of the rest of the population. The hon. gentleman proposes 120 changes in the tariff. And from the beginning to the end of those changes, he cannot point to one that is proposed in the interests of the farming class of this country. The hon. gentleman and his friends have been on the Treasury benches for nearly ten years, and to-day the lands of Ontario which had increased during the preceding four or five years at least 20 per cent. in value, are at least 30 per cent. less in value than they were when the hon. member first took office.

Mr. HESSON. Oh!

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman says "Oh," but I say it is so. I say there is not a farmer, not a landed proprietor in this House, who does not own land in the immediate vicinity of some growing town or city, who can to-day obtain, as the cash value of property, what he might have obtained during the most severe years of depression between 1874 and 1879. The hon. gentleman, if he knows anything of the value of property, knows that to be the case. The first Minister shakes his head, but I can tell him that there are loan companies in this country that loan on what is supposed to be two-thirds the value of the land, which are unable to obtain that value for the property to day. A friend of the hon. gentleman, in the Senate, is connected with one of the societies that loaned upon that principle, and were unable to proceed, that failed in business, in fact, simply because of the depreciation in the value of real estate. That depreciation is largely due to the fact that hon. gentlemen have from the first to the last, legislated in the interest of the minority and against the interests of the majority. What interest of the farming population have these gentlemen undertaken to protect? The hon. gentlemen have increased the public burden of this country to such an extent that what was a matter of choice has become a matter of necessity. The hon. gentleman knows it is impossible now, under the most careful administration, to have anything else than a high tariff. How does it improve this tariff? Take the case of the farming industry. So far as wool is concerned, no steps have been taken to protect the farmer in that respect. If there is anything in regard to which the farmer can be protected, that is left out of the tariff; if an article is imported into this country which goes into competition with what he produces, nothing is done to protect him. The farmer requires salt as a fertiliser. It is one of the things necessary to enable him to carry on efficiently his agricultural operations. The soil, from constant cultivation, has become depreciated and impoverished, and the hon. gentleman knows that it requires the use of fertilisers in order to improve its condition and increase its productivity. A farm which produces 15 bushels of wheat to the acre is worth less than one which produces on an average 25 bushels to the acre, yet the hon. gentleman proposes to legislate in such a way as to compel the farmer to be content with the average of 15 bushels. He legislates in such a way as to tax everything the farmer requires to enable him to cultivate his land properly. Is the cotton manufacturer dealt with in that way? No, the cotton manufacturer is allowed to import his cotton from the neighboring Republic free of taxation. The hon. gentleman does not pretend to tell the manufacturer that, the imposition of duty will not affect the price; but when it comes to anything that will benefit the farmer, a wholly different rule is adopted, and then legislation is had in such a way as to impose burdens upon him. Every step taken by the Legislature is a step taken to make the farmer tributary to the other persons in the community.

Mr. PORTER. I wish to say a word in regard to the agricultural position, as affected by this duty about to be proposed. I beg to say that the interests of the agriculturists will not suffer in the least degree by the proposed duty upon salt, because we know well that in this country there is salt enough and to spare, to supply all the possible wants that may arise amongst our people; and we know that salt is not to be in the control of one hand alone, but that it comes under the very salutary rule of competition. There are, perhaps, twenty different enterprises of this kind adjacent to the riding I have the honor to represent. Hon. gentlemen opposite are much exercised in reference to the farmers. Permit me to say, the farmers want, in Canada, nothing but fair play; we wish to share in the general prosperity; we wish to have no special benefit to ourselves, but that the same advantages be applied to us as are applied to all. If protection is applied to home industries, those engaged in the manufacture of salt have the right to the extension of that principle to their enterprises. No man who looks to the interest of the country and sees the vast extent of salt mines at our command, can for a moment suppose, except for the factious purpose of making capital before the farmers of the country, that the salt to be used on land will be raised one cent, even by the waggon load. They speak to the farmers—I am one myself—as their special friend. Permit me to recall the words of an ancient poet: Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes. "I am afraid of the Grits when they offer to be our friends."

Mr. HESSON. I regret the hon. member for Bothwell has on this occasion, as on all occasions when questions come up which may be discussed on their merits, endeavored to make some point with regard to the supposed disadvantages the agriculturists of Canada would labor under in consequence of the action of the Government. That gentleman lives in an agricultural part of the country and ought to be able to speak with a good deal of knowledge as to the surroundings of that country. Yet he stands here and professes to say, speaking for the farming community of Ontario West, that the farms are depreciated in value. He has stated what does not apply to any part of the country I have the pleasure of knowing. I have lived forty-four years in the county I have the honor to represent, and I can say that to my knowledge, and I think I know the western part of Ontario well, that that gentleman cannot point to an instance where farms in the west have depreciated in value. If I had the reports issued by the Departments of Ontario showing the improved value of farms and building stock, I could point out a tale that would rather startle the hon. gentleman. The value of these lands has increased millions and millions; in a very short radius of my district lands are sold to-day from $70 to $80, and as high as $100, an acre does not show a tendency to decline in the value of land, granting what has been said to be correct, that the farmers are not making the great profits out of the management of their farms and out of their grain and stock they once did. But that cannot be avoided. It is absolutely impossible to prevent a recurrence of that, in face of the competition existing throughout the whole world, especially coming from India, Russia, France and the United States; all seeking that great market where our own exports have to go. If the grain that was shipped to-day is cheap, it would be still cheaper were it not for the National Policy, which gives at least control of our own market. I have here some evidence with reference to the very question that my hon. friend the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) raised. According to the Seasonal Papers of Ontario for the year 1885, the values of farm property appeared to be these: The value of farm lands in 1884 is given at $624,000,000, and in 1883 at $654,000,000. Is that a decrease? That shows an increase of something like $30,000,000. The value of the buildings is $173,000,000 in 1884, and in 1883 there is apparently a decrease of $10,000,000, the amount being $163,000,000. In live stock there is a decrease, but that is only because the values have decreased, while the numbers have largely increased. The whole statement of my hon. friend, in which he desired to show that farm value is less than it was, will not be verified by any hon. gentleman who is acquainted with the farming lands of western Ontario. As to the question of salt, we know that the coarse article which is of value to farmers can be obtained in the neighborhood of the mines very cheaply, for from $1.50 to $2 a load. That coarse salt, with a great amount of lime in it, is unfit for any purpose except agricultural purposes, but what the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) says is true, that, when it is necessary to haul it by the cars, unless the farmers combine and get a whole train load at a time, it would probably not pay them to get it for their purposes. I know, however, that salt has never been as cheap in Canada as it has been in the last few years, and, if the farmers combined, they could get it for $1.50 to $1.75 a load. My hon. friend from Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), who once represented Huron, might say a word for the salt industry there. I do not know that it has had much advantage from this policy, and

I do not know that we could give it much advantage by adding this duty, but, if the producers are under the impression that they would be protected by a little addition to the duty, we might give them that protection. I find by the Trade and Navigation Returns that there was a very small amount collected for duty on salt in 1884, and I do not think that much would be added by the additional duty.

Mr. BROWN. I can speak with authority upon this question, as I have considerable dealings in the article. I know that never in the history of the country was salt supplied to the farmer or to any other consumer so cheap as it is to-day; and the result of such a policy as has been introduced now, in controlling the market for the salt producers, will be the same as has occurred in regard to other industries—not taxing the farmer by raising the price of the article, but by reducing the price of the article. Take the article of soap. My hon. friend from North Wellington knows well that to-day, notwithstanding that the tariff is prohibitory, the farmer buys his soap 20 to 30 per cent. cheaper than he ever did before, and the quality improving constantly, although hon. gentlemen opposite continually asserted that the farmer would have to pay an increased tax. It is unfortunate that clap-trap should be introduced into the discussion of a matter of this kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BROWN. Hon. gentlemen say "hear, hear;" but the farmer can understand that clap-trap which is intended to reach them as well as I do. They know that they get salt cheaper than they ever did before, and that the competition in this country may even make it cheaper. It is unfortunate that in the discussion of a question of this kind, matters should be brought in belittling the country in which we live, decrying the value of our lands, but the people would know more about this matter than the hon. gentlemen who are proposing to teach them. The farmer who buys the salt, and who knows that he is getting it cheaper than he ever did before, will understand the value of the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. SMITH (Ontario). I regret that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) should have told us in 1878 and in 1882 that nothing could be done to protect the farmers. I take it that the farmers have never wanted anything particularly in this way, but have only desired to be placed in a position to take advantage of the times. In reference to this salt question, I think the Government have taken a step in the right direction in regard to what we know as the Liverpool salt, which will be admitted free. It is generally conceded the results obtained from that salt for agricultural purposes are more valuable than are obtained from Canadian salt. With regard to the coarse salt produced in Canada, I do not think that any results would flow from making it free when imported from the United States. We have our wells here; we want them developed; and I do not think there is a farmer who wants to have them lying still in order to increase the importation of coarse American salt. We know that the competition is keen, and that the prices are merely nominal at the wells, but it is the heavy freights that raise the price to farmers east of Toronto. I think the small duty which is now proposed is in the right direction. There can be no question that those who are engaged in the salt industry have been almost compelled to close their wells in the last year. Salt has never been cheaper. We want those wells continued, we want to see those industries prosperous, and I say the Government is taking a step in the right direction.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Kent). There is just one argument for not placing this duty which is proposed by the Finance Minister. It will not affect the present price of salt, nor would it if you put on a duty of five times the amount which the Finance Minister proposes, because there is no salt at all imported from the United States for agricultural purposes. As has been stated on the other side, the price is as low as it ever was, and the farmers are buying their salt cheaper than they could get it for from the United States if there were no duty at all; but a few years ago the price of salt was down as low as it is to-day. It was down too low. The manufacturers could not make it at a living profit at the price they were getting for it. The consequence was that a combination was formed under the name of the Canada Salt Association. All the manufacturers of salt in Canada belonged to that combination, and the result was that the price of salt went up from 75 cents a barrel retail to $1.40 retail in the town of Chatham. We were largely engaged in the salt business at that time, as we are to-day, and we sold thousands of barrels of salt for 75 to 80 cents retail, and after the combination was formed the price went up and it was sold at $1.40 per barrel. The consequence was that so many men went into the manufacture of salt, on which there were large profits, that the competition was so keen that it broke up the association and the price came down as it is to-day. Now, the only thing I fear is that in placing a high duty upon this salt it may lead to a combination. The manufacturers have been for some time trying to arrange a combination to raise the price of salt.

Mr. Brown.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then the same operation will be repeated and down will come the price.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Kent). But see what the people lose in the meantime. There is no need for this high duty; there is no salt coming in at any rate affecting the manufacturers, as long as they keep the price as it is to-day, but if they form a combination and take it into their heads again to charge the people so much more for salt than they ought to charge them, then we will have a leverage to bring them to time by importing salt, if the people see fit, from the other side. That is the only reason why I think duties should not be placed so high. So long as they keep the price as it is to-day, there will be no need of any duty at all, because if you allowed it to come in free at present prices, no one could bring it in and live. There is another matter and that is in reference to salt used in curing and packing meats of all kinds. The packers tell me that this Canadian salt is not suitable for curing meats, and the consequence is that they have to import Liverpool salt altogether for that purpose. Now, the packing business is a very large industry in the west and in the east, and in Hamilton and in Montreal large factories are engaged in packing pork and meats of all kinds, and I think it would be a good idea for the Finance Minister, as he has proposed to allow salt to come in free from all the British possessions for the use of the fisheries, also to include it for packing purposes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It comes in now free for the fisheries from Great Britain or any British possession.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Kent). I think it is stated to be for the use of the sea or gulf fisheries.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will see it says: "Salt, coarse, not to include salt imported from the United Kingdom or any British possession for any purpose, or salt imported for the use of sea or gulf fisheries," so that it all comes free under the tariff.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Kent). I did not notice that. But it is the only thing which I think ought to be attended to, because it will materially assist in building up large packing houses that are now in their infancy, and, as I said before, it is the only point which I see against raising the duty. Other gentlemen have spoken about the high freights. So far as our experience has gone, the freights on the Grand Trunk have been very reasonable indeed. We have salt imported from Clinton and Goderich for $12 a ear delivered in the town of Chatham, and I understood the salt manufacturers had arrangements made whereby they could send salt nearly all over at a very low rate of freight. Of course, as the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) stated, when it came over two or three roads, probably there was a large increase in the freight on that account, but that cannot very well be helped.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to say just one word with regard to the value of farms. In my section of country, land has dropped considerably in value. I have acted myself as agent for the sale of several farms, and I can testify that in one case a farm for which the owner was offered $6,500, was sold three years afterwards, a year and a half ago, for $4,900. I know that land has dropped seriously in value in my section; in some other sections it may not be the same. The reason why the assessed value of land in the Province of Ontario appears to be about the same as it was, possibly a little increased, is owing to the improvements that are made upon the land. Of course there is more land cleared and consequently that is improved in value. But it is no use hiding our eyes from the fact that the farm lands of Ontario to-day are not as valuable as they were years ago. You can buy land throughout this country very much less than you could four or five years ago. The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) says that in his section farms have increased in value. I can only say to the hon. gentleman that in the township of Wallace, that used to belong to the county he represents. —I am sorry it does not belong to his county still — the farms certainly have gone down in price. In my last canvass, there was a farm pointed out to me that was sold five years ago for $4,500, and the man recently sold it for $3,800 because he was moving to another part of the country. With regard to this question of salt, I should like every advantage to be given to the farmers, because salt is a desirable fertiliser, and they have got to have it. I make this suggestion, not for the purpose of encouraging the importation of salt from the States, but to secure to the farmer an article that he wants at the lowest possible price. I think if the Government had seen their way clear to leave it optional with him to import or to buy it loose from the manufacturer, it would not be imported, but still it would keep it at a point that he would get it, in face of any combination, at the lowest possible price. I have no doubt that if an increase was put on, we will have another combination, and for three or four years the great majority of the people, and especially the farmers, who are the largest consumers, will have to pay an increased price for their salt.

An hon. MEMBER. No, no.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is very well for my hon. friend to say "no, no"; but he does not know as much about it as I do. I have owned land and farmed land, and I venture to say that the hon. gentleman does not own a farm. I own ten and I farm five, and I think under the circumstances I should be able to say a little more with regard to the matter than my hon. friend. I hold that salt is a necessary fertiliser for farms, and I say that it is highly desirable that a farmer should be allowed every facility for importing if necessary, because the farmer being allowed the facility to import it, will compel the producer to sell it at a reasonable price, such a price that he could lay it down for.

Sandpaper, glass, flint and emery paper, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The increase is 5 per cent., the duty now is 25, and it is proposed to make it 30 per cent. It will have a very slight effect upon the revenue, possibly an increase of $1,000. The imports were $21,995 last year.

Mr. JONES. I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that under item 30, salt in bags should also be allowed to come in free for the fisheries.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is all free for the fisheries no matter where it comes from.

School and writing slates, one cent each and 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present duty is 25 per cent. The duty collected amounted to $4 560. The proposed change will probably give an increased revenue of $500. It is not, however, made for purposes of revenue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not suppose it is; but it is practically a tax on knowledge, and there is an objection to this which does not apply to some other items. I do not think slates for school purposes form a very desirable article to increase, and the hon. gentleman is aware that the cost of purchasing books and articles for school purposes is somewhat severely felt by a considerable number of the poorer classes who have a number of children to send to school. I am sorry that on such an article there should be any intention to increase the duty.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The change to a specific duty is made for the purpose of preventing under valuation, and, therefore, unfair American competition. It is not expected to make any real increase in the price.

Mr. MALLORY. The class of slates used by the children of the poor classes is composed of slates of very small sizes and bought at very low prices. Many of them can be purchased at three or four cents, the larger ones being of course more valuable. The imposition of a duty on each slate discriminates against the small ones and those of low price. The duty ought to be arranged in accordance with the value and size.

Cigars and cigarettes, $2 per lb. and 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the amount of the change?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The change is a very considerable one. The value of the importation is $331,730. There were imported 157,305 lbs., the duty on which was $255,113. We assume that one-half will probably be imported, on which nearly the same amount of duty will be collected, and in addition 50 per cent. will be added to the amount collected for Excise, making an increased revenue from both Customs and Excise of say $150,000.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the duty at present?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $1.20 per lb., and 20 per cent.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is this expected to improve the quality of cigars?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I think it will enable people who prefer the foreign article to anything manufactured in our own country to enjoy it, but it will lead to quite as good an article being produced by the labor of our own people.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Previous to the last change in the duty, a five-cent cigar was a better cigar than has since been obtainable for 10 cents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that 90,000,000 of cigars are used in this country?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have sent that memorandum to the Excise Department for further information, which I will give the hon. gentleman. I think the number was as the hon. gentleman has just stated.

Varnishes, &c., 20 cents per gallon and 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This seems to be a considerable alteration.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is not merely an increase, it is the addition of some articles not included before, japan driers, liquid driers and oil finish. The duty, instead of being 20 per cent. and 20 cents per gallon, will be placed at 20 cents and 25 per cent., or an addition of 5 per cent., ad valorem; and it is expected to give $1,000 increased revenue, because we suppose the result will be that more will be manufactured in this country.

Potatoes, 15 cents per bushel specific.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present duty is 10 cents per bushel.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where are they chiefly imported? Into British Columbia?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They come from the United States. They are imported into all the Provinces.

Mr. CASEY. What was the amount last year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. 53,170 bushels, of the value of $26,620, on which there was paid a duty of $5,817.

Tomatoes, fresh, 30 cents per bushel and 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present duty is 30 cents per bushel, and it is proposed to add a specific duty of 10 per cent. It will give perhaps $2,000 increased revenue. There were imported last year 10,666 bushels, of the value of $10,716.

Vegetables, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present duty is 20 per cent. $16,851 duty was collected. It is assumed that that will give an increase of perhaps $3,000.

Watch actions or movements, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present duty is 20 per cent., and it is assumed that this change will not make any material difference in the revenue. It is believed that the effect of it will be to increase the business of the makers of the cases for watches, and prevent smuggling by making the inducement so much less.

All fabrics composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca goat, or other like animals, 7½ cents per lb., and 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. CHARLTON. This is a reduction.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, I think it is rather an increase.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, it is an increase.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Something like $100,000. The imports last year were 9,681,706 lbs., and the value $7,404,360.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In point of fact, you conclude that the whole of the woollen importation is in this?

Mr. ELLIS. I call attention to the fact that Italian cloth, which is almost entirely used in hat making is included in this item. It is rather against the policy of protection to increase the taxation on that article.

Mr. WALLACE. It is used for many other purposes besides hat making.

Mr. ELLIS. It is used principally in that.

Mr. CASEY. I do not intend, of course, to discuss this item fully to-night, but I cannot let it pass without entering again the protest I have entered year after year, without much effect so far, to the effect that while all articles manufactured of wool have been highly protected, and it is now proposed to protect them still more highly, the Canadian producer of wool is not protected. I think, now that the protection on the woollen articles which the farmer uses is being increased, I am bound to reenter in brief words, my protest against the injustice done to the farmer in the refusal to protect him. Some time ago a pretence was made of protecting the farmer by putting a duty on long wool, but as it was wool of a kind which we exported instead of importing, it had no effect. I urged then as I do now, that a duty on short and medium staple wool would increase the price to the Canadian producer, exactly to the extent of the duty put on. It would be a revenue tax, and it would also increase the price of the home-grown article to that extent. Now, if there is anything at all in the pretence that the Government are going to give protection all round, here is a chance for them to show their honesty by giving a protection to the farmer. Let them take this hint, and show their sincerity by putting a duty on the short staple wools. When I first spoke of the matter that kind of wool was little raised; now it is raised extensively, as the long wool got so low in price, that it did not pay to raise it. Here is a chance of benefiting, perhaps every second farmer, by putting a tax on this short staple wool.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. BOWELL. What class do you call the short staple wool?

Mr. CASEY. The long wool is taxed now.

Mr. BOWELL. But what character of sheep produces this wool?

Mr. CASEY. All the Downs and the Merinos.

Mr. BOWELL. The wool of the South-downs is already taxed.

Mr. CASEY. No.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman will turn to item 480 of the present tariff he will find it reads thus:

Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Southdown, combing wools, or wools known as lustre wools, and other light combing wools such as are grown in Canada, three cents per lb.

I know that merinos are not included in that list, because they have not been bred in this country to any great advantage. Formerly a number of our farmers used to breed that class of sheep in our section of the country but they found it would not pay, and consequently they have not been bred in late years. I think the argument used by the hon. gentleman is very much like the argument used by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills)—that it would be like putting a duty on oranges, to try to compel the people to grow them out-doors in Canada. If in late years they have introduced the finer classes of wool-producing sheep in the western section of the country, they have not produced the fine wools, which come in free, and the wool from South-downs are already taxed.

Mr. CASEY. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interject a remark? That is the South-downs. The South-downs are a small class of sheep—so small that it does not pay to raise them, on account of the size of the fleece, although the wool is excellently fine. The larger downs, such as the Shropshire, Oxford and other downs are the classes chiefly grown, but the word South-downs would not include those; and the larger number of short-woolled sheep grown in western Ontario, are a cross between those downs and the long-woolled sheep, producing a medium class wool. The only classification which would give a protection to the farmer would be one which would classify the wool according to its length, instead of according to the breed of the sheep upon which it is grown. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman is sincere in thinking that the reason protection was not given before was because the sheep were not in the country, but that was a good reason according to the policy of hon. gentlemen for putting on the tax in order to bring them into the country. The chief reason which hon. gentlemen give for introducing new taxation is that it brings new industries into the country. I used that argument years ago in regard to sheep, that if the taxes were put on that particular class of wool, we would soon have the sheep that produced it. Now we have gone on and got the sheep without the tax, but I think we should have a protection on the produce. The Government would really make a great deal of capital for themselves in the country, if they imposed the duty in the way I suggest, by classifying according to the length of wool, besides doing a great deal for the farmers.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman will satisfy me of that, I will consider the matter most carefully.

Mr. CASEY. I think I can satisfy the hon. gentleman of it, by taking him on a ten-mile drive into any part of the country. I do not say he would win my support if he accepted my suggestion; but I am quite sure he would increase the popularity of the Government, and I am quite willing to take the risk of that for the sake of the benefit that would accrue to the farmers.

Mr. BOWELL. I want to point out that what the hon. gentleman has been asking for, is actually provided for in this item. What he is really doing is repeating what has been said so often on the stump, and nothing illustrates it so well as the remark made by the hon. member for Bothwell, as to protecting oranges in the country. The very kind of wool that has been grown in the country has been protected, with the exception of the very fine choice kinds that have been introduced as experiments more than anything else.

Mr. CASEY. Not at all.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not a farmer, but I have paid a good deal of attention to agricultural matters, and have worked on a farm, perhaps, as much as my hon. friend. I have been connected with agricultural societies, from township societies up to the provincial association, and I flatter myself that I know as much about sheep as my hon. friend. This clause provides for all wool known as lustre wool and other combing wools. These wools are those of the very crosses to which my hon. friend refers. If the hon. gentleman will show to the Government what he has been advocating to be correct, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance says he will not only consider it, but place those wools in the dutiable list. I have no doubt the Government, whose policy is to protect all these industries, the farming as well as others, will place those wools on the list if the hon. gentleman shows that they come into competition with the finer classes of wool brought from the Cape and elsewhere and used in the manufacture of the finer cloth produced in this country.

Mr. CASEY. The remarks of the hon. Minister of Customs show, at any rate, that the election has certainly had some effect on the Government. If it has not destroyed their majority, it has made them comparatively mild, because on every previous occasion when I brought up this question of wool, when an answer was given at all by the then Minister of Finance, Sir Leonard Tilley, it was that this wool should be left free, because to tax it would be to tax the raw material of the manufacturers. My hon. friend, the Minister of Customs, is quite mistaken if he thinks the term "combing wools" includes the wool of the South-down, the Oxford-down and the Shropshire-down, and grades from them. Exactly the opposite is the case. Combing wools are the long wools. What I wish to have protected are the short wools, which come into competition with the Cape wools. The fancy breeds of sheep to which the hon. gentleman has referred, exist in his imagination and not in the country. The wool I want protected is the ordinary grade wool from the white and black faced sheep which are becoming so common in western Ontario. If the Cape wool were taxed, the price of this home-grown wool would go up to the price of the Cape wool duty paid. It will undoubtedly add a little to the cost of the raw material to the manufacturers, but now that we are giving them increased protection they could and should bear that.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think there is room for improvement in the classification of wool. I think the terms used here are a little confusing. At the same time, a term which admits the same grade as South-down will certainly admit all the fine wools grown in this country to which the hon. gentleman alludes. But still the classification might be better. There is this difficulty, however, that you will hardly find two manufacturers agree as to what classification or what terms should be employed, as different terms are used by manufacturers in different parts of the country. It is, of course, of no consequence whether the Cotswold wools and wools of that class are taxed or not, because we produce more than the country requires of those classes. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right in saying that what comes into competition with our fine wools are the fine Cape wool, the Merino, and the Australian wool. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs to take this matter into consideration, and, if he will consult both those engaged in the trade and manufacture of wool and those connected with agriculture, I think he will be able to make a better classification of the wool than he has at present, and can increase the duty on the higher classes of wool, so as to give some protection to our finer wools, which, as the hon. member for West Elgin says, come into competition with the finer imported grades.

Further consideration of resolutions postponed until Monday, 16th inst.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.20 o'clock p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 16th May, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

NIAGARA AND WOODSTOCK RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 89) to incorporate the Niagara and Woodstock Railway Company.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As there are several Bills before the committee, and it is desirable that this should be referred, I would ask the House to allow this Bill to be read the second time now, and be referred to the committee. There will be no objection, I think.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very well.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 90) to revive the charter of the Quebec Railway and Bridge Company, and to amend the same by extending the delay for commencement and completion of its works, and in other respects.—(Mr. Grandbois.)

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. TYRWHITT moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 91) to amend the Canada Temperance Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I shall be prepared to explain the Bill fully when it comes up for the second reading.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. TYRWHITT. The object of the Bill is to allow beer, wine, ales and cider to be sold in counties where the Scott Act is now in force.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think that on a matter of this importance it is very desirable that the House should know the views of the Government. The hon. gentleman who now leads the Government, on a former occasion, declared and supported a resolution that it was the duty of the Government on a question of this importance, and, in fact, on this very question, to lead the House and determine what the policy of Parliament shall be. Now, I think we are entitled to know the views of the Government on this question. There is a large number of gentlemen in this country who are of opinion that we ought to have prohibitive legislation, that we ought to go beyond the principle laid down in the Canada Temperance Act, which the hon. member proposes in part to repeal. There are then, too, those who are content with that Act, and hold that an opportunity should be given to give it a fair trial. Then we have the license victualers and others, who support the view propounded by the Bill which the hon. gentleman has just introduced. Upon this subject we are entitled to know what the views of the Administration are, and the hon. First Minister is in duty bound, looking to the action he took on a former occasion, to undertake to lead the House on this matter. In fact, I remember when the Canada Temperance Act was before Parliament the hon. gentleman assigned as a reason for not opposing that measure that he was not sufficiently strong in this House to do so effectively, that it was not in his power to prevent the passage of the Bill, and therefore he would not divide the House upon it. I think, if I remember rightly, the hon. gentleman during the recent election declared he supported that measure; at all events, he has been represented as having said so. That, however, was certainly not the impression made upon the Government of the day when the hon. gentleman at the time declared that his reason for not dividing the House upon the question was that he could not have done so effectively. However, I suppose, as the hon. gentleman did not divide the House on that occasion, and as the measure was carried through the third reading without a division, he may put forward the claim he put forward on a recent occasion. On that former occasion the hon. gentleman declared that members of the Government should have the courage of their convictions, and he insisted that the Government of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) should act upon that rule, when Dr. Schultz, who was then a member of this House, proposed a motion, a motion which received the support of the First Minister and those of his colleagues then members of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is à propos of the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Simcoe. When that hon. gentleman rose to propose this Bill, hon. members called out "explain," and I think I called out "explain," too; and we got a short explanation from the hon. member, and having heard his explanation, we will take into consideration whether the Government will support this Bill or not.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. O'BRIEN.

HARBOR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 92) to amend the Acts relating to the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal. He said: This Bill is to enable the harbor commissioners of Montreal, who can now only borrow money at par, to borrow money at any rate they may consider advantageous.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FINANCE DEPARTMENT AND TREASURY BOARD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 93) to amend the Act respecting the Department of Finance and the Treasury Board. He said: This is a measure consequent upon the other measures which now stand for the consideration of the House. If the Bills now before the House are adopted, the present Treasury Board must be altered, as hon. gentlemen know; and this Bill is merely to provide that the Treasury Board shall consist of six members, as it does now, but instead of having a cast-iron rule that certain members shall comprise that board, the members shall be appointed from time to time by Order of the Governor in Council. The Finance Minister will, as a matter of course, be a member.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the hon. gentleman proposes to carry out his plan of re-constructing the various Departments, and to create a Minister of Commerce, it will necessitate very considerable alterations in the functions of the Minister of Finance, of the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue, and I suppose that the Bills which the hon. gentleman proposes to carry will deal with that subject. I think the House should learn in general terms what are to be the functions of those various Ministers. I suppose this Bill is intended to define the duties of the Minister of Finance as well as of the Treasury Board, and that it draws a line between the functions of that Minister and the Minister of Customs. It would be interesting if the hon. gentleman would state where that line is to be drawn, and what duties devolving on the Minister of Finance are to be considered as pertaining to the Minister of Commerce.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think much greater advantage would arise if, instead of having a perfunctory conversation across the floor now, the whole subject as covered by the four Bills were discussed by the House.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman might give us an outline now.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the hon. gentleman propose to take up the subject before the holidays?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; we hope to take it as early afterwards as possible.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the subject is not to be taken up before the holidays, hon. members might have an opportunity of considering it, if the hon. gentleman gave the House a brief outline of the divisions to be made and the duties to perform by the different Ministers.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The Bill is printed, of course?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Let us get through the tariff. The Bill is printed.

Mr. CASEY. Will it be distributed before we go.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, it will be distributed to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. McNEILL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 94) to amend the Civil Service Act. He said: I may just say that this Bill is a measure for the relief of those civil servants who entered the service prior to the passing of the Act of 1882, which Act entirely revolutionised the conditions of the service, so far as promotion is concerned. Prior to the passing of that Act, Mr. Speaker, diligence, intelligence, knowledge of the work to be done, the power to do the work to be done, prompt and cheerful obedience—in fact, approved and practical efficiency in the Civil Service was sufficient to entitle a civil servant to promotion. The Act of 1882 changed all that. The provisions with reference to examination, which were, I think, very proper so far as those who sought admission to the service were concerned, were extended also to promotion in the service. In this way the theory as to the fact was made to overbear the established fact itself. The theory was, and is, that a civil servant who is unable to answer certain questions propounded by the board of examiners, is not an efficient servant and is not fitted for promotion. The fact may be that the civil servant in question is known to the head of the Department, and to everyone connected with the Department, to be notoriously a valuable civil servant, well qualified for, and well deserving of, promotion. But the theory being that he is not fitted for promotion unless he has been able to answer those questions, that theory is made to overbear the fact which has been thus established, and he is assumed to be unfit for promotion. This measure does not propose to sweep away altogether this system of selection—a system which might have commended itself to some minds as being peculiarly anti-Darwinian, for it is certainly not a system of natural selection. This Bill does not propose to sweep away altogether this system of unnatural selection; it merely proposes that any civil servant who entered the service prior to the Act of 1882, without imagining for one moment that he should ever fall under the provisions of this extraordinary system of selection, shall not be made to fall under those provisions, and shall not thus find the doors of promotion closed against him and his prospects in the service ruined for life. In other words, it simply provides that the provisions of the Act of 1882, as far as they relate to promotion, shall not be retroactive.

Mr. CASEY. I am afraid the hon. member who introduced this Bill drew rather a rosy picture of the state of affairs prior to the Act of 1882, when he represented that promotion at that time went entirely by merit and desert. I am afraid that Arcadian or Utopian state of things never existed in the Civil Service of Canada. But I agree to a very considerable extent with the proposition he has laid down. I believe that no examination, except an examination as to departmental matters, where such is possible, where technical qualifications are required before a man can be properly promoted—no examination but that can be any test of a man's fitness for promotion. I know quite well that there are Departments where an examination can be made a test of fitness for promotion; for instance, in the Inland Revenue, the surveying service, and probably in others, but nobody who is not expert in the business of the Departments could say off hand in which Department such an examination could be properly applied and in which it could not. I am, therefore, disposed to go a long way with the hon. gentleman in asking for the abolition of the promotion examination, all the more so because I find that it has been no bar at all in practice to the promotion of those whom the Minister of a Department wished to promote, and that it has been used very effectually against the promotion of those, however meritorious, whom the Minister did not wish to promote. I know parties—though, of course, I cannot mention their names, as it would be very injurious to them to do so—who are entitled by seniority and admitted merit to promotion, but who have been kept back by the simple expedient of refusing to allow them to come up for promotion examination. One of them, to my knowledge, has applied for more than a year to be examined for promotion to a clerkship of the next class, but has been refused examination, so that the Minister is able to say: "I have not promoted this man because he has not passed the promotion examination," when the fact is that he has not been allowed to come up for examination, so that the Minister might make use of this pretext for not promoting him. For these reasons I am much inclined to go for the abolition of this examination. I think if we abolish it at all, with regard to any class of clerkships, we should abolish it with regard to all of them. I do not think it would be pleasant or workable to have clerks who have come in the service at a certain date subject to this examination, while those who came in before that date are not subject to it. I believe on the whole that it would be more practical, as well as more logical, simply to abolish examinations altogether, and throw on the Minister of the Department the responsibility of promoting according to merit and tried fitness for promotion. I shall not speak further on the matter until I have seen the hon. gentleman's Bill, but I thought it proper to make these observations at this stage.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INTEREST ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. LANDRY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 95) to amend chapter 127 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, intitled: "An Act respecting interest."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. LANDRY. The object of the Bill is simple enough, and it is to make unlawful any charge for interest of more than seven per cent. per annum, on moneys loaned. On the second reading of the Bill I shall endeavor to give reasons why I believe it should become law.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FREEHOLD LOAN AND SAVINGS COMPANY.

Mr. SMALL, in the absence of Mr. DENISON, moved second reading of Bill (No. 71) to enable the Freehold Loan and Savings Company to extend their business, and for other purposes.

Mr. MULOCK. I have had my attention called to the provisions of this Bill by some gentlemen connected with other companies in the city of Toronto, and, therefore, before it takes the usual course of being referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, I take the liberty of calling the attention more particularly of the Minister of Finance to the question involved in the Bill. The communications sent to me are to the effect that this company, which is incorporated under the general provisions of the Loan Companies' Act, like all the other loan companies, of which there are a great many now operating in Canada, has borrowed money on its credit in England and in Canada. This company, by this Bill, is now asking for special borrowing powers far in excess of any heretofore given to any such company; and one of the other companies, the largest in Canada, so they informed me, sent a copy of this Bill to their London agents, asking them if there was any objection to it on general principles. They say they have received a reply to the effect that this Bill, altering as it does the entire contract between the company and the lending public, if passed, will have a bad effect on the credit of all such companies seeking to borrow money in England; and these other companies say they have a locus standi, entitling them to appear here to ask the Government not to allow any legislation in regard to one company, which, to-morrow, may become a precedent in regard to other companies. Of course the House is not now deciding on the matter; but if the Bill were to go to the committee entirely unobjectioned to, it might there be urged that the House had adopted the principle of the Bill, and that, therefore, the committee would scarcely be free to reject the measure. This Bill asks that the borrowing powers of the company may be equal to its assets—equal to its investments on real estate. Now, I think the time has arrived when no special powers should be given to any company of this class. The loan companies of Canada are sufficiently numerous to be dealt with by a general law, and I think it would be better for the country if they were all treated in the same way as banks are. We have a general Banking Act, applicable to all institutions incorporated as banks, and I think it would be well if the Government would take the responsibility, if the law requires amendment, of making it general. The interests involved to this country are so great that I think it is the duty of the Government now to control all such legislation by a general law.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman is quite right in calling the attention of the Government to this measure, for the reasons he has given. Of course, if this Bill passes, there can be no reason why similar extended privileges should not be given to all other companies of the same nature, and, therefore, it becomes a matter of general policy whether the extended powers should be given as a general rule to all such companies established in various parts of the Dominion, and which, in my opinion, have done so much good to the Dominion. Certainly all these loan companies should have the same powers and responsibilities in every respect. I think it would be a great mistake to allow any special privileges to any one of these companies in any particular whatever. Then, there is the other very serious point which the hon. gentleman has brought up that must be considered in the first place by the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and secondly by the House on the report of that committee, that is, the rights and position of investors—of lenders to such companies which have certain privileges and are under certain restriction. People lend money to such companies under a certain state of facts, certain powers, certain checks and certain responsibilities. It may be held that these people would not lend their money to any of these companies if they had any very extraordinary powers unchecked by the provisions of the law. The hon. gentleman says, as I understood him, that the information he had got was that the investors in England look with suspicion on the exceptional privileges given under this Bill. Of course, we cannot speak for or against the Bill until we see it, whether it is a Bill we should pass or not. I think the hon. gentleman is quite right in calling our attention to it, and I am quite sure the Committee on Banking and Commerce, especially after this debate, will see that under this Act the whole question relating to the powers of loan companies must be looked into.

Mr. CASEY. My attention has been called to this subject by several parties interested in other companies. I fully endorse the remarks of my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock). I think that the granting of such exceptional powers to any company would greatly interfere with other companies to which they are not granted, and I fear that even if these powers were granted to all companies the effect upon the public credit of companies in England would be as injurious as if applied to one company only.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That would depend upon the provisions of the Bill.

Mr. CASEY. These powers seem very dangerous, whether applied partially or wholly.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. MULOCK.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 58) to terminate the trust respecting the South-Eastern Railway, to authorise its sale, and to incorporate the South-Eastern Junction Railway.—(Mr. Hall.)

Bill (No. 66) to incorporate the South Norfolk Railway Company.—(Mr. Tisdale.)

Bill (No. 67) to incorporate the Massawippi Junction Railway Company.—(Mr. Colby.)

Bill (No. 69) to incorporate the Equity Insurance Company.—(Mr. Curran.)

Bill (No. 70) to incorporate the Alberta Railway Company.—(Mr. Shanly.)

Bill (No. 72) to incorporate the Halifax and West India Steamship Company (Limited).—(Mr. Kenny.)

Bill (No. 73) to incorporate the Bay of Quinté Bridge Company.—(Mr. Robertson, Hastings.)

Bill (No. 78) to incorporate "The Canada Accident and Indemnity Assurance Company."—(Mr. Mulock.)

GRAND TRUNK, GEORGIAN BAY AND LAKE ERIE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HESSON, in the absence of Mr. TISDALE, moved second reading of Bill (No. 74) respecting the Grand Trunk, Georgian Bay and Lake Erie Railway Company.

Mr. MITCHELL. It appears to me this Bill asks for an extension for a very great length of time—an additional five years.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

MIDLAND RAILWAY OF CANADA.

Mr. DALY, in the absence of Mr. HUDSPETH, moved second reading of Bill (No. 75) respecting the Midland Railway of Canada.

Mr. CASEY. Explain.

Mr. DALY. I only move it in the absence of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hudspeth).

Mr. CASEY. Some of these Bills are important, and the practice of one member moving the second reading in the absence of another is becoming too common.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is highly improper. On the second reading of a Bill, its principle is recognised.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman is in error. The principle of a public Bill is admitted by the second reading, but the second reading is not understood at all in that way with respect to private Bills. The practice, which has been very convenient, is to send all these Bills, unless they are obviously objectionable, to the standing committees, which report on them, and it is on the adoption of the report that the principle is brought out.

Mr. MITCHELL. All I can tell my right hon. friend is this: I attend the Railway and Canals Committee pretty regularly, and over and over again I have heard the objection taken that the principle was sustained by the House. We always have to fight that question, and, at all events, it would be more regular to explain the principle of the Bill on the second reading.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Before the standing committee the first question is: "Shall the preamble be taken as proved?" The promoters have to prove that, and if they do not, the Bill is not proceeded with.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House resumed the further consideration of resolutions reported from Committee on Ways and Means on 13th inst.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose, in the first instance, to go back to item 34 (see p. 406), which was allowed to stand. I propose to change that by adding to the words "trunks of all kinds, 30 per cent. ad valorem," the words "pocket books and purses."

Mr. MACKENZIE. After taking all our money he now proposes to take our purses.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will relieve the purses. Then I propose in the last part of that resolution to strike out the words "pocket books and purses," and to add the words "cases for jewels and watches and other like articles of any material." It is simply transferring the pocket books and purses to the first part of the clause, so as to leave them at the present rate of 30 per cent., and to put the other articles I have named under this specific duty of 10 cents each and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the object of making a distinction between trunks and valises? They are made of precisely the same material, are manufactured in the same establishments, employ the same labor, and I do not understand why a trunk should be taxed 30 per cent. and a valise 10 cents additional.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is to prevent the importation of elephants.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is in order to get more revenue.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If that is the object, the hon. gentleman would get more revenue if he put the trunks in the valise class.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The object of this is to leave trunks at the present rate of duty, 30 per cent., and to increase the duty on valises by 10 cents each additional.

Mr. MILLS. I see that, but I ask what is the reason for doing so?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is found that the difficulty of having these valises, satchels and carpet bags properly valued, makes it necessary to add a slight specific duty in order to prevent under-valuation.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose a specific duty of 10 cents on a trunk would be a very small matter, while on a valise, satchel or carpet bag, the value being so much less, the increase would be much greater. It gives more protection; that is the secret of it.

Mr. CASEY. On a large valise, I should not think the 10 cents would go very far to remedy the under-valuation. We all know what we would call a trunk, and what we would call a valise, but I should like to know where the Customs officers draw the line between them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman can hardly answer that question, because he premised it by saying that all understood it.

Mr. CASEY. I might call a thing a valise which my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) might call a trunk. A large valise with straps is called a trunk by some and a valise by others. I do not know what my hon. friend from Bothwell calls it, but I should like to know what the Customs officers would call it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They would call it what ever you would call it and what the hon. member for Bothwell would call it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I hope the hon. gentleman will put a good round tax on portfolios.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it is the Opposition who put the tax on portfolios.

Mr. MILLS. No; the Opposition put the tax on those who hold them.

Barrels containing pork or other salted meats, 25 cents each.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would ask to amend that by striking out the words "pork or other," and the word "five," so that it will read "Barrels containing salted meats, a specific duty of 20 cents each."

Mr. CHARLTON. Why is the change of five cents made in the duty on barrels?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is leaving it as the duty stands at present. A meat barrel, if it comes in empty, is charged 20 cents, and it is to apply the same duty to barrels containing meat.

British gum, dressine, sizing cream and enamel sizing, one cent per lb. specific.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What would that amount to ad valorem?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. One cent a pound is equal to about 25 per cent. on a value of four cents a pound.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, that is clear, but what is the average value of those articles?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the average value.

Mr. JONES. The change is from an ad valorem duty of 20 per cent. to a specific duty equal to about 25 per cent. British gum was free before.

Collars of cotton or linen, 24 cents per doz. and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The duty is now 30 per cent., and this adds a specific duty of 24 cents a dozen.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That makes on cotton collars a duty of about 55 per cent.?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; at the average value of $1.50 a dozen, the duty would be equal to 35 per cent.

Mr. CHARLTON. The average value of cotton collars is not $1.50 a dozen, but very much less.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have to take an average of some kind.

Mr. BOWELL. That is based on the quality of these materials that have been imported, and the officers have made that computation showing that the average is equal to that amount.

Mr. CASEY. On cheap cotton collars and cuffs, that laboring men have to content themselves with, this would amount to even more than my hon. friend from Bothwell mentions; it would amount to 75 per cent. That is one of those cases in which a specific duty works as a real hardship, because it puts a higher tax on the article worn by the mechanic than on that which is used by the richer classes. The $1.50 a dozen may be the average of all the goods imported, but it gives no idea of what the price of the ordinary cotton collar is, and how high the duty on it will be.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid my hon. friend was not in the House when the late Minister of Finance made a touching appeal on behalf of the seamstresses, or he would see that this is a concession to that very important class.

Mr. CASEY. I am afraid the extra two cents each will not go to the seamstresses, but to the capitalists who employ them.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Does this include the collar of the K.C.M.G.?

Mr. CASEY. What percentage would it be on that?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am happy to tell my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) that, if he had complied with the desire of Her Majesty to decorate him, he would have learned that there is no charge on the collar of a K.C.M.G.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is an instance of the Government favoring itself. The hon. gentleman's statement shows that this is a tax, not for the purpose of revenue, but for the purpose of prohibition. The intention is to exclude a certain class of goods from Canada in order to secure their manufacture here. No doubt, a tax of 75 per cent., and a tax of 100 per cent., as this will amount to, will exclude the foreign article in a great measure, but that 100 per cent. added to the price which the people will have to pay, the Government will not get.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We hope to prohibit prison-made goods, and the attention of Government was drawn to the necessity of making a change in this respect for that purpose.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hastings). On this subject I wish to call the attention of the Minister to a telegram I received from a large firm in Montreal, who are also manufacturing in my county :

"As you are aware we are largely engaged in the manufacture of paper collars and cuffs. Reports are being made to exclude from the tariff proposed by the Minister of Finance, celluloid collars and cuffs, on the ground that they interfere with no industry in this country. They operate most disastrously on our industry. Please represent our case to Minister as forcibly as possible, and ask that celluloid goods be included in tariff proposed for benefit of shirt and collar trade."

Mr. MITCHELL. Could not the Minister manage to exclude prison-made goods in some other way than by adding to the cost of the poor workingmen? I think he might put in a clause that would prevent the importation of prison-made goods at all.

Cuffs of cotton or linen, a specific duty of four cents per pair and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is supposed to be the average value of cuffs imported? What will a four per cent. specific duty amount to, ad valorem?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The average value is about 27 cents per pair, and the duty of four cents specific and 30 per cent. ad valorem, is about equal to 35 per cent.

Gas meters, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MACKENZIE. How is this to be collected?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In the same way that all other duties are collected, by the Customs Department.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Well, is the officer to visit all the private houses?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is for the purpose of leading to an industry in the country for the construction of gas meters. The present duty is 25 per cent.; we are making it 30 with a view to having them made in the country.

Mr. HESSON. What is the prospect of having them manufactured in this country? I feel an interest in this industry myself.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The difficulty was that at present they come in as machinery. We have no statistics to show what amount has been imported into the country, but we hope, under this arrangement, to have them manufactured here to a large extent. We do not expect, therefore, it will be a source of revenue.

Mr. HESSON. We are dependent altogether upon the foreign manufacture now.

Glue, sheet, broken sheet and ground, a specific duty of 3 cents per pound.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is not this a tax that will bear rather heavily upon some manufacturing industries in this country? Glue, no doubt, is used as a raw material for various manufactures.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We have abundant material, as my hon. friend knows, for the purpose of manufacturing glue in this country, and we believe this change will greatly increase the manufacture of glue in Canada. The amount imported last year was $33,039. The present duty is 20 per cent., as glue is at present among the unenumerated articles. The new duty is only equal to 30 per cent.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. CASEY. What is glue worth a pound?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is calculated upon the amount imported.

Mr. CASEY. Common glue can be bought for less than 10 cents per lb. even at retail; I do not know the wholesale price. An hon. gentleman near me says the wholesale price of common glue is seven cents per pound. The Minister has pointed out that we have abundant material in Canada for making glue. That is a fact. Not only is there abundant material for making glue, but under the present tariff the glue manufacturer is allowed to import more material for the making of glue, duty free. This is another of the taxes to which I wish to call attention, in which the farmer is not fairly treated.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The principal object is to help the farmer

Mr. CASEY. It will not help the farmer because the glue materials are to come in duty free. No matter how much the manufacture of glue is increased, it will not increase the price of glue scrap from the tanneries, and therefore it will not increase the price of hides, because all these goods come in free. In other words, the Minister is giving the manufacturers a protection of 45 per cent. and upwards—35 on his own calculation—while he continues to leave the raw material for glue on the free list. It is another instance of what a perfect farce it is to pretend that the National Policy is a National Policy all round. On the other hand, as is evident from the explanations given this afternoon, as is evident from the application of the hon. member for Perth to have special considerations for a factory in his neighborhood, it is nothing but a policy of shreds and patches, a patchwork policy, made up by special favors to this, that and the other manufacturer, not made on any general principle at all, leaving entirely out of consideration the largest class of the community.

Newspapers, partly printed and intended to be completed and published in Canada, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is now the duty on white paper not partly printed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present duty on paper is 20 per cent., 22½ and 25, according to quality.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not see anything mentioned in the tariff resolutions with respect to stereotyped plates. A good deal of feeling exists amongst newspaper men in regard to the duty on those plates, five cents per pound, and it is claimed to be altogether too high. Publishers are in the habit of receiving stereotypes which are placed upon wood blocks, and, when they have been used, they are returned to the parties from whom they were obtained, and by them broken up for type metal. It is said that this duty presses very severely on country newspapers. I call the Minister's attention to the subject, as there may be some just foundation for the complaint and the Government might see their way to reduce the duty.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will make a note of it; but so far as I have been able to consider the matter, I have found that there is a manufactory in the country of stereotyped plates.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That will not in the slightest supply the want of newspaper men, as the Minister of Customs well knows. It is quite impossible to secure what is required by newspaper publications from any establishment erected here. In fact, these stereotyped plates are prepared for a number of papers; they are sent to one paper but not to another in the same district, and those used by some papers here are used subsequently by different papers at distant points of the United States, whose circulation does not clash with Canadian papers. The real point of the difficulty does not lie with the Canadian manufactory of stereotyped plates, but with the printers. They sometimes object to matter being imported in this way for the purpose of filling up newspapers on which they think otherwise they would have an opportunity of setting type; but, in most establishments, there is an understanding between the publishers and the printers with respect to this particular matter, and a certain percentage only of it is printed. The tax imposed by the Government has the effect of withholding from Canadian publishers the opportunity of furnishing as good a paper as, under like circumstances, is furnished in the neighboring Republic, and this policy has also the effect of aiding to a certain extent his rival, the American newspaper publisher.

Mr. CASEY. Perhaps the best way to present this question clearly will be to read some extracts from a circular sent to members of this House by country newspaper publishers interested in this matter. They begin by setting out:

"1st. That the policy of the present Administration has been to assist in the diffusion of general information among the masses."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASEY. That is a point which the hon. gentleman will not dispute. The circular proceeds:

"2nd. That the use of American stereotype plates by Canadian papers has vastly improved the quality of the reading matter issued by them, and has been the means of establishing a large number of papers which could not profitably exist without the use of such plates.

"3rd. That it is impossible for the newspaper fraternity in Canada to support an institution capable of supplying the high grade of matter furnished by American plate manufacturers without the trade of several thousand papers, whereas Canada has only about four hundred papers published in the English language.

"4th. That the present duty of five cents per pound is almost prohibitory, and is a heavy burden on the publishers using plates. If this duty were removed, a large number of small papers would be greatly improved and new ones established.

"5th. That the plate matter obtained from manufacturers in the United States is not sold at all, but the use thereof is paid for at stated prices, the metal in same at all times being returned to the manufacturers.

"6th. That on matter the value of which is one dollar and twenty cents (value for duty, one dollar) we are compelled to pay a duty of seventy cents and afterwards return the plates, a tax which is much higher than the duty protection granted other industries.

"7th. That American manufacturers have gone to great expense to supply Canadian papers with a service which is strictly non-political and non-sectarian, embracing all kinds of literary matter. This includes many finely illustrated and news features descriptive of the resources and industries of the Dominion of Canada, which are widely disseminated throughout the Provinces and the United States as well.

"8th. That plates made from celluloid are only dutiable at 20 per cent. ad valorem on the cost of their use, whereas the duty on stereotype plates ranges from 40 to 70 per cent. ad valorem.

"9th. That differences in cost of transportation would of itself be adequate protection to any person who might wish to engage in this business at any central point in the Dominion of Canada, and should a small plate institution be established in Canada there would still be ample room for the use of American plates, because the product of one establishment can be used in but one paper in a town."

The gentleman who sent me this circular also sent me a letter emphasising these points, and showing very clearly that the stereotype manufactory in Canada does not produce what is required, and that the Government should reduce this duty. What the Canadian manufactory does produce is chiefly stereotyped plates on special order; but it does not do a general business of sending out stereotype plates on a large scale and exchanging them, because the circumstances of this country will not allow it to be done profitably by Canadian establishments.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I have received a letter from the publishers of a very respectable and excellent country newspaper, who take entirely the opposite view to that enunciated by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey). They protest against the use of American plates and wish a very high duty to be imposed on them, or at all events, that no greater facilities be given for their use. I find there is a difference of opinion in the press, because one class of newspaper publishers print altogether their own matter, while another class, from which that circular has emanated, and by whom small papers are issued, import the whole of the paper printed from the United States; and therefore the publishers of papers which print their own matter are exceedingly jealous of those of the other class of publishers who are able to publish at much greater advantage. So, in speaking of this matter, it must be remembered that there is a difference of opinion founded upon the matters I have just stated. When we are dealing with this question of the National Policy, a duty of 25 per cent. upon paper and printing is a very small one, and the Minister of Finance might have gone a great deal further and have increased the duty to a much higher rate. There is no particular advantage gained by newspaper publishers being dependent on the taste of literary men on the other side of the border, who are not as particular as they might be in preparing news for distribution among the rural population.

Mr. CHARLTON. The House is laboring under a misapprehension as to the duty being 25 per cent. It is said to be 70 per cent. The local press of this country has much difficulty in maintaining a foothold against the inroads of the metropolitan press. It, however, fills a very important position in Canada, and it should be the object of the Government to sustain it as far as possible. The country publishers are only asking what is simply a matter of justice. If it is proper for those country newspapers to obtain stereotyped matter from American concerns, which carry on the business of supplying such newspapers—if it is proper to do so, if they receive a class of matter which it is proper to insert in their papers, a class of matter which affords information on various subjects, it is just as well to insert it in the form of stereotyped plates as to set it up; but to these country newspapers which are struggling for existence it is certainly a hardship to impose a duty, amounting to 70 per cent. upon any matter which they use in the publication of their paper. It may be true that newspapers that set up their own matter may wish to adopt a policy which may freeze out competitors that have been recently established. But the interest of the Government is not in that direction; it is the interest of the Government to afford every opportunity for the dissemination of intelligence, and to afford every reasonable opportunity for these publishers to carry on their business. I hold that the proposition to impose 70 per cent. duty on these stereotype plates, which are simply used and then returned to be broken up and cast again, and are therefore simply borrowed, is a hardship on the country press. Although this matter is not under consideration, it has been brought to the attention of the Finance Minister, on behalf of the publishers of country newspapers, and those who may use these devices to reduce the cost of producing their papers. They are the parties aggrieved and their interests should receive the attention of the Government.

Mr. BOWELL. There are two sides to this question. There is the one side, which is an important one, that if you adopt the principle laid down by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, you would, to a great extent, do away with the necessity for the journeyman printer. This matter is not sent over in the heavy stereotype form in which it was formerly sent. The plates as they are now made are very little thicker than paper. They are mounted on blocks when they arrive here, and of course they relieve the publishers of the newspapers in this country to a very large extent of the trouble and expense of composition for their papers. But if you put the duty on this matter down to a nominal figure, it will do away with a large amount of labor which is now necessary, particularly in the country parts, for I am not aware that the city press or the leading newspapers use these stereotypes to any extent, if at all, as they are mostly made up of original matter, wholly set up in the office of publication. It may be that a portion of the matter, that which is more of a literary character than general news, may be used by the city or daily papers, but I am not aware that first-class newspapers use the stereotypes at all. The five cents per pound was adopted after a good deal of investigation last year, and after interviews with the American stereotype manufacturers. I admit that they thought the five cents was too high a rate, but, after a good deal of consideration, we came to the conclusion that, in the interests of the working printers themselves, the laborers who have learned the art of printing and are earning their living by it, that amount of duty was little enough to protect that labor, while still enabling the publishers to import such matter, if they thought proper to do so. Both the Finance Minister and myself have received a very large number of letters from publishers of newspapers, who take a different view of the question; but I have reason to believe that these were all prepared, and the expenses connected with them defrayed, by the manufacturers of American stereotype plates, so that they cannot be regarded as expressing exclusively the views of the publishers of country newspapers in Canada. No doubt they would like, as I should have liked when I was a publisher myself, to have their matter set up as cheaply as possible; but I do not believe it to be in the interest of this country and of the protection which we desire to give to the labor of this country, that that principle should be adopted. There is another objection to the general introduction of this matter. I do not know whether many hon. members have paid attention to this subject, but I have noticed that the class of literature, the news items which are filtered through American minds, and selected by these people to furnish in this form to the publisher in this country, are a kind which a Canadian publisher, having any regard to the character of the newspaper he is publishing, or the education which he wishes to impart to the rising generation, never would select. Hon. gentlemen can readily understand that the publisher who is in the habit of using these plates does not stop to read the matter which may be contained in every one of them that may be sent to him. They are simply sent to his office and then they are placed on the block and put into the columns of his paper without being read. There is no reading of the proofs of such matter—no corrections; and I repeat that much of the matter which appears in these journals is of a kind which few publishers in this country would ever think of selecting themselves. That is one strong reason, to my mind, why this system of bringing stereotype plates from the United States should rather be prohibited, if it were possible, than to have literature of that character brought into the country at so low a rate. Another fact is that there are stereotype establishments in the Province of Ontario which are entering largely into this work, and they represent to the Government that they are capable of furnishing, and they are prepared to furnish, all the stereotype matter required by the country press of Canada, and that they will do it at as cheap a rate as it can be furnished from the United States.

Mr. CASEY. Why then do they want protection?

Mr. BOWELL. We are not proposing to give them any protection; we are not proposing to interfere with them. This discussion arose incidentally, on account of the extra duty which has been placed on paper which is half printed and then imported into the country. Well, if the stereotype manufacturers of this country can produce a better class of reading matter, and can do it just as cheaply, there is no reason why that industry should not be established in this country. I go further, and I say that if it cannot be done quite as cheaply, it is a protection to the typo, as well as to the people who have to read this class of literature. I may add with reference to the item before the House, that hon. gentlemen will readily see the necessity for the change which has been made. Under the old tariff the duty on news paper was 20 per cent.; on calendered papers it was 22½; and on ruled paper 25. The item under consideration used to come into the country at 20 per cent. ad valorem; being an unenumerated article you could not place a higher duty upon it, although it was half manufactured, the whole of one side of each sheet having been printed in the United States. It was imported into this country at the same rate of duty as ordinary printing paper without any printed matter upon it, and hence we deemed it right that the rates should be raised at least to the duty which was paid on paper partially manufactured. I think the House will readily agree with me that for the reasons I have given, first, in the interest of the typo, and, secondly, in the interest of the reading community, the less of that general class of literature—though some of it is very good—the better.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. CASEY. When the hon. Minister of Customs argues that the importation of stereotype plates will keep the journeyman printer out of work he is using the old-fashioned argument which was used against the introduction of labor-saving machinery in general, that it would cut the workman out of work, and I think it will be found as fallacious as that in the end. It has been found that labor saving machinery has increased the employment of mechanics, and I think it is shown by the circulars which have been sent to the Minister from country newspaper publishers that the use of stereotype plates will increase the employment of journeymen instead of diminishing it. It is shown, I think, conclusively, in those circulars that many country papers would be established, and many in existence would enlarge their business, if the duty on stereotype plates were removed or greatly decreased. Undoubtedly the establishment of more newspapers would give more work to journeymen. In other cases it might enable the proprietor of a weekly paper to turn it into a daily, and in that way give more employment to journeymen. It would also enable a publisher to give better wages to those he does employ, because his general expenses would be reduced. I think such a change would be all in favor of the working printer, and not to his detriment. As to the character of the matter employed, I am sorry the Minister has such a bad opinion of it; but I think on the whole, the matter is pretty fair. The American bureau has a special selection of matter for Canadian papers—clippings from Canadian papers and articles about Canada, its public buildings, its government, and so on. Certainly, I got among the samples one that I did not like very much, but I am sure the hon. gentleman would not speak of it in the terms he used, for it contained a picture of these Parliament buildings and portrait and very flattering notice of the Premier.

Mr. DAVIN. I have no hesitation in supporting this duty of five cents a pound. I understand that we are discussing an item not before the House; but as it has been discussed, and as I know something about the matter, I will say that in my opinion no inconvenience whatever will result to the public from this duty. We have at present, in Toronto, an establishment for manufacturing these stereotype plates, carried on by some of our young Canadians, and not only are they as cheap as those sent from the United States, but they are better, and above all, as the hon. Minister says, they are Canadian. My hon. friend, the member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), was very sparse in his selections. There can be no objection to pictures of my hon. friend or the leader of the Opposition or the leader of the Government; but what the Minister referred to as being in many of those stereotypes are jokes of a character not coming up to the high standard of the Canadian press.

Mr. DAVIES. Give us a sample, so that we can judge?

Mr. DAVIN. When my hon. friend, whom I used to meet some twenty years ago in a debating society in the Temple, London, meets me in the smoking room, I will give him some of those jokes, but we are now discussing matters in a respectable Parliament. Dealing with the question actually before the House, I think it is most important that a protective duty should be placed on those plates and upon those patent insides, as they are called, because we have in Toronto and in Hamilton establishments for supplying them, and what they supply are better, both as regards the quality of the reading and the quality of the paper, and in every other respect, than those sent from the United States.

Mr. CASEY. But the hon. gentleman represents the metropolitan, and not the country press.

Mr. DAVIN. That is true. There is no doubt that I represent a capital, and not the provincial press. But, Sir, in that capital an Opposition paper is published, which is based on printed matter furnished in Toronto. I do not object to that, but I will say this, giving my experience as an editor of newspapers, that I think it is a pity that that system of insides or outsides has been adopted by our publishers at all. I hold that a little newspaper, like the Edmonton Bulletin, which is printed in the place where it is published, and gives the news of the place, is worth a dozen of those fraudulent—because they are to some extent fraudulent—publications that have, printed and published, at a certain place at the bottom of a column, while we know as a fact that most of the printing is done far away from the place where the paper is published and supported. That is, however, by the way. I heard the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) talk the other night about trying to build up a nationality, and he reproached hon. gentlemen on this side for not being alive to the conditions that would encourage the growth of a national spirit. What can so strike at the root of a national spirit as an unnational literature filtered into the country, and insidiously getting into the minds of those whose education principally comes through the newspapers? I remember taking up a Canadian newspaper of this kind some time ago, and reading a column discussing the affairs of the United States, which spoke continually of "our country," and referred to some United States man as though he were the greatest man in "our" country; and this in a newspaper drawing support from citizens of this Canada of ours. In this budget of the hon. gentleman, there is no step taken in accordance with National Policy that will more approvingly find an echo in the hearts of those acquainted with the subject throughout the country than the proposal now under discussion.

Mr. WATSON. I must take some exception to the hon. gentleman's remarks. I have received some circulars from the North-West, among them one from the Regina publisher to whom the hon. gentleman has referred as receiving his stereotype plates from Toronto, and he complains bitterly of the duty on these stereotype plates being so high. Therefore I feel it my duty to rise in my place and enter my protest against this duty. The publishers represent that they are able to print a much better paper by being allowed to bring in these plates at a low rate of duty. The metal is returned to the factories where it is produced. They can print a much better paper at the price they get for it than they could otherwise. In other words, a small country newspaper, a weekly paper, receiving only a dollar or a dollar and a half a year, cannot afford to set up a great deal of material for that amount of money. I do not know whether it makes any difference in the cost of the paper, but the people get much better value for their money, because they get all this printed matter received from the American stereotype plates in addition to the ordinary matter. Mr. Atkinson, the editor of a paper in Regina, and several other editors in small towns, have set forth that they could give much better satisfaction if the duty on stereotype plates was much less than it is. The worthy editor of the Regina Leader does not expound the views and feelings of the newspaper men in all the Territories.

Mr. LISTER. I think almost every newspaper published outside of the cities in the Dominion has applied to the Finance Minister or the Minister of Customs to have the duty entirely taken off these stereotype plates. I regret that I heard only a few words of the speech of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). I have no doubt that if I had heard the whole of it—well, I have some doubt—I might have been converted to his peculiar way of thinking upon this subject, but you can scarcely take up a newspaper from one end of this country to the other, not published in the leading cities—I do not know whether the Regina Leader uses these stereotype plates or not—that does not import these stereotype plates, with which to fill up one side of the paper. Now, those plates are not manufactured in Canada.

Mr. DAVIN. They are manufactured in Toronto; I have used them myself.

Mr. LISTER. At all events, as far as newspaper men are concerned, they have unanimously asked that the duty be taken off these plates. When the Government are yielding to the demands of every other class in the community, I am sure they ought to give some ear to the class which has supported them so strongly in the past, and is ready to justify the putting of an extra duty on purses, portfolios, iron and everything else mentioned in the tariff changes. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) attacked the quality of the literature that appears in these papers. I differ from him altogether. The literature is not at all calculated to offend our sense of propriety.

Mr. DAVIN. Chacun à son goût.

Mr. LISTER. My taste may not be as clean as the hon. gentleman's. The articles that appear in these stereotyped plates are interesting to the farming community, as they all have something on the subject of farming. They are interesting to the ladies of the house throughout the country; they are biographical in their character also, and generally very interesting, and I think that the Minister of Finance would be only conceding to the wishes, not only of the newspaper men of the country, but of the general reading portion of the country, by allowing these plates to come in free of duty, or by, at all events, not increasing the duty.

Photographic dry plates, a specific duty of 15 cents per square foot.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the ad valorem amount of duty?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present duty is 30 per cent. This is estimated to be an increase of 5 per cent.

Mr. CASEY. This must be an increase of 25 per cent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The average cost is 40 cents per foot.

Mr. CASEY. I can buy them much cheaper than that at retail. I am in the habit of buying photographic plates, and know the prices. I can get them for about 30 to 35 cents per square foot, the best articles. This will put a duty of 50 per cent. on the best, and there are cheaper plates.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Are you speaking of the square foot?

Mr. CASEY. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES. If this is going to prevent my hon. friend from pursuing further the study of the interesting science of photography, I will oppose it most strongly. I have watched with no small interest the attempts made by my hon. friend from time to time to improve, and I think he is doing remarkably well.

Mr. CASEY. I do not object to a moderate impost in the interest of the manufacturer; but I do think it is a very high percentage on what is now almost a necessity.

Shirts of cotton or linen, $1 per doz., and 30 per cent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is equal to 35 per cent., an increase of about five per cent. on an estimated cost of $9 a dozen.

Mr. JONES. What increase to the revenue will that bring?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. About $5,000.

Mr. JONES. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken in his ideas. You can buy shirts for about $6 a dozen, and this duty particularly applies to the inferior quality, bearing more heavily on those who use the cheaper quality. I think the hon. gentleman will find this is an increase from 80 to 100 per cent.

Mr. McMULLEN. They can be sold for 75 cents apiece and bought for 50 cents.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Linen shirts?

Mr. McMULLEN. Cotton.

Mr. WELSH. As far as shirts are concerned, I fancy the duty will be heavier on the rich man, and therefore I do not object to it. My hon. friend beside me says it is just the reverse. I think not. I know, if I pay 9 shillings for a shirt, 30 per cent. is three shillings, the specific duty is 8 cents; so that the rich man pays his duty of 70 cents, and the poor man will pay much less.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend forgets the specific duty in addition to the 30 per cent. If he takes into account that the poor man's shirt will not cost over one-third of the rich man's, the cost to the poor man, under the duty, will be a great deal more than to the rich man. I pay $2.50 to $3 for a shirt, while the poor man can buy one for 50 cents.

Mr. CASEY. This question of shirts is not a small matter to be passed over in a hurry. I think my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island has seen his mistake in passing over the word "cotton" in this item, so I will not go back to that. It is very clear that the duty of 8½ cents specific, coupled with the 30 per cent. ad valorem duty on a shirt that costs 50 cents wholesale, is a tremendously heavy percentage on the price of that shirt, and one that will press very severely on the laboring classes throughout. Of course, I speak chiefly for the agricultural community. Our farmers are using a great many of these ready-made cotton shirts. A good many of them still use home-made shirts, but very many use these cheap cotton shirts for rough work in harvest time and at other times when they can be worn, and this will be a very severe and a very unfair impost upon them. I will leave it to my hon. friends from this part of Canada to speak on behalf of the raftsmen, and I will leave it to my hon. friends from the Eastern Provinces to speak for the fisherman, but I must speak on behalf of the farmer and the agricultural laborer and say that this is a most oppressive and unfair and disproportionate tax upon the poor man; or, rather, not simply upon the poor man, for many of them are not poor, but upon the man who wears a cheap cotton shirt while performing his daily duties.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I agree entirely with the views enunciated by my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I.

Mr. CASEY.

(Mr. Welsh). That hon. gentleman has distinctly pointed out that this application of the specific and ad valorem duty will principally touch the rich man, because it will only be a high duty on the expensive article. The ad valorem duty on an article costing 50 cents will be very small, but if anyone chooses to wear a dearer article, such as my hon. friend is accustomed to purchase, the duty will amount to a considerable sum, so that this will have the effect of imposing this impost upon the people who are best able to bear it. My hon. friend who has just sat down appears to be very anxious about the fishermen and about the raftsmen. I do not think he need have any such anxiety on their account. I think I can devise a mode by which the shirts worn by that class will not pay much impost at all. The effect of this will be to give employment to the seamstresses, to give additional protection to a most important class of the community, the females who are engaged as seamstresses, and I am quite sure that, on that ground, if on no other, it will commend itself to the approval of this House. The poor fisherman will buy a cheap piece of cotton, and his household will make it up for him into such a shirt as he will wear, and this will also apply to the other classes mentioned by the hon. gentleman. I do not think a great deal of revenue will be received from that source, but the duty will bear with some effect upon persons who buy a valuable article, who are able to indulge in a description of shirt costing a high price. That is the principal effect it will have. I quite agree with the views propounded by my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Welsh), and I am quite sure that the suggestion I have made as to the class of persons who will be greatly benefited by this impost will meet with general approval, and that every member will appreciate it.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not see that the hon. gentleman has succeeded in the slightest degree in breaking the force of the assertion made by my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey), that this specific duty, levied in addition to the ad valorem duty, will bear more hardly on the poorer man. On shirts costing $24 a dozen, the duty will amount to 4 per cent.; on those costing $12 a dozen, to 8 per cent.; and on those costing $6 a dozen, to 16 per cent., or a duty four times as great—

Mr. BOWELL. Are you speaking of the whole duty?

Mr. CHARLTON. No, of the specific duty—a duty four times as great in the case of the poor man wearing a coarse cotton shirt as in the case of the rich man wearing a shirt costing $2. If you take this specific duty as equal to an ad valorem duty of 16 per cent., and in addition an ad valorem duty of 30 per cent., you find there is an amount equal to 46 per cent. charged in the one case against 34 per cent. in the other—a discrimination of the most glaring character against the poor man. It may be said by the hon. gentleman that this will lead to the production of shirts in the country and will in that case be in the interest of the seamstresses; but I expect that, if any benefit is derived from it, it will go not to the seamstress but to the capitalist who employs her. It is one of the unjust and indefensible features of a specific duty—and I think this was never more glaringly illustrated than in this case—that it bears unjustly on the cheaper article and on the poor man, and I repeat that the poor man's shirt in this case is charged four times as heavily, as regards the specific duty, as the rich man's shirt. This proposal is in the greatest and highest degree unjust to the poor man, and I repeat that the illustration of the unfair manner in which a specific duty operates is shown in this case in a manner sufficient to convince anyone who examines it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it would be far more satisfactory to the House and the country, and would certainly be more convenient to the trade, if the hon. gentlemen were to impose an ad valorem duty, and were to set aside the specific duty altogether. There are articles, it may be, in regard to which being unfairly valued, it may be necessary to put on a specific duty, in order to prevent under-valuation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is one of those very articles.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not admit that, and, if it were admitted, it would be a reason for dispensing with the ad valorem duty altogether. But the hon. gentleman has not acted upon that assumption; he has imposed an ad valorem duty of 30 per cent.; he has assumed that there is no danger of the revenue being defrauded; otherwise there is no justification for his very high ad valorem duty. But, in addition to that, he imposes a specific duty of $1 a dozen. The result of that is that the cheaper the article, the higher the tax, as my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has pointed out.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But that is corrected by the ad valorem duty.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Certainly not. If anyone purchases a shirt at $24 a dozen, the duty is 34 per cent., but if the price is $6 a dozen, the tax amounts to 46½ per cent., so that the hon. gentleman will see that, between the dear article and the cheap article, there is a difference amounting to 12½ per cent. That is what the hon. gentleman has proposed. The fact is that the hon. gentleman has not the courage to disclose to the public generally the amount of burden he proposes to impose upon them. He proposes to impose a tax upon this class of goods amounting to nearly 50 per cent. in the case of the cheaper article, and he undertakes to conceal that fact by making a portion of the duty specific. If there is any justification for the imposition of an ad valorem duty on such a high rate as he has proposed in this item, there should be an ad valorem duty alone and no specific duty at all. It would simplify the collection of the revenue, and it would diffuse the burden equally, because it would impose upon each man taxation according to what he is able to pay. Most men live up to their incomes, or nearly so. Their expenditure, at all events, is in proportion to their incomes, and, if the tax is fair and equal, those who have the largest incomes will pay the most. But the hon. gentleman proposes to impose a proportionally heavier burden upon the poorer class than upon the more wealthy.

Mr. WELSH. I cannot see it yet. The fact of the matter is I am a free trader right through, and would like to see no duty at all on shirts. But I see my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has got an eye to the seamstresses. I am very glad he has. I suppose he always had. Now, that is all right. I like to look after them myself, and if I could do them any good I would. But still, I do not agree with my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), nor my hon. friend for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). No doubt it is all very fine to talk about this matter as if it was only a 50 per cent. ad valorem. My friend has argued from $1 a dozen altogether. Now that is not fair. Let us come right down to the truth. I object to the whole duty, but if you are going to make it 30 per cent. ad valorem, in addition to the specific duty, that comes to nearly one-third of the cost. If they cost 108 shillings a dozen, and you add the two duties, you have to pay about 75 per cent. The poor man pays more of the specific duty, but if you put the two together, you will find that the rich man pays more than the poor man on that basis.

Mr. BROWN. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem on every occasion to pose as the farmer's friend. Now, I claim that if there is anyone thing more than another that can be defended as the right thing for both the farmer and the poor man, it is this item. We have one effect from this item of the tariff, that all these starched up rubbish, and stuff that hon. gentlemen opposite would like to see brought in to cover the back of the poor man, would be left out of the country, and they will have fabrics made in our own country of raw material which is free, and we will be able to give employment to our own people in making these fabrics, to the poor man, the friend of hon. gentlemen opposite who are always posing as his champion. The poor man will get an honest shirt made up from material produced in our own country, and at a low price. That will give work to the seamstresses of Canada, and that is what we are after; and what the people of Canada are determined upon is that the labor shall be kept in their own country, and that articles like this shall be made in Canada. The operation of this tariff will keep out the miserable trash which is brought in here not worth half what it cost, and those who do import shirts will have to pay the specific duty and the ad valorem, and in that case we may depend upon it they will bring in good shirts.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not exactly catch the calculation of my hon. friend from Norfolk when he was talking about 38 and 60 per cent.

Mr. CHARLTON. I said a specific duty at $1 per dozen reduced to an ad valorem duty, would amount, roughly speaking, to 4 per cent. on a shirt; on those costing $24 per dozen, 8 per cent. on a shirt; and costing $30 per dozen, to 16 per cent.

Mr. BOWELL. A person who buys shirts, presuming the duty is paid by him, which I do not admit, costing $1 each, pays 38¼ cents duty; if he pays $2 each, the duty will be 68¼—I am speaking about a single shirt—if you pay $2.50 for a shirt, such as my hon. friend opposite wears, he would then pay 83¼ cents. On a shirt costing $3 he would pay 98 cents. That is the way the tariff will operate.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister has given us the number of cents that the purchaser will pay on a shirt, but the hon. members for Norfolk and Bothwell put it in a much more comprehensible way by stating what this would amount to as an ad valorem duty. They pointed out very correctly that on a shirt costing $34 a dozen, the duty would be only 34 per cent., while on shirts costing $6 per dozen the duty would be over 46 per cent. There will be a difference of over 12 per cent. against the cheap shirts. I do not object to my hon. friend from Queen's, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Welsh) having his joke about this, and stating his opinion that this works in favor of the poor man; but I was not prepared to hear the hon. Minister of Finance, or any Minister of Finance, take up that joke in a serious manner and say from his place in the House that it worked in favor of the poor man; that although the poor man paid a little more in specific duty, the ad valorem corrected that. He said "it was corrected by the ad valorem." Now, I do not object to the Minister of Finance having his joke either, but when he is joking again, he should not do it with such a serious face, or somebody might suppose he meant it. And it would be a calamity to this Parliament, to this country—it would be a calamity to the hon. gentleman himself, if the public believed for five minutes that the Minister of Finance meant that the effect of this specific duty was corrected by the ad valorem. The ad valorem remains the same, no matter what the value of the shirt is, but the specific is undoubtedly higher on the cheaper article, and therefore the duty on the cheaper article is out of all proportion to that on the dearer. The hon. member for Bothwell was correct in his statement that the specific duty has only been introduced to cover up the percentage of the tax, practically imposed by the two duties combined. But it is hard for us to listen without protest to this talk about the poor seamstress, that she will be protected. The Minister said there will be protection to the seamstress by the operation of this tariff, although he and his supporter from Hamilton (Mr.

Brown) admitted it would be a prohibitory duty on cheap shirts, at all events, and very little would be added to the revenue. How is this going to protect the seamstresses? Look at New York, where there is a high duty on imported shirts and imported cottons, and where the seamstresses get very low wages. The hon. gentleman's duty will introduce here the state of things in New York, and you will find that under a high protective tariff the women working in factories will not get as good a rate of wages as they got before. There is no protection for the seamstresses. The manufacturer of shirts here can import seamstresses from New York without paying any duty on them, and set them to work here, and take the work from Canadian seamstresses. The talk about protection to seamstresses is a piece of gush—I cannot find a parliamentary word to express it, but it is really below the dignity of a Minister to talk about protection to the seamstresses in the way he proposes to do it.

Mr. GILLMOR. I would like to know the reason for imposing this specific duty. I have not heard the Minister of Finance state why it was necessary to add a specific duty to this article. The ad valorem duty, of course, would bear equally on all purchasers, both poor and rich, whether the shirt is cheap or dear. I do not know why the Government should impose a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem and add a specific duty, the latter of which operates directly against the workingman who buys the cheap article.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There are two objects in view. One is to prevent under-valuation, and the other is to prevent the market being overborne by prison labor, the products of which are brought in from the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the reasons given by the Minister of Finance are not satisfactory. One reason given for the change is to prevent under-valuation. If the hon. gentleman will tell me how this will prevent under-valuation, I shall be glad. If the hon. gentleman is going to tax the poor man's shirt to the same extent as the rich man's garment for the purpose of preventing under-valuation, he is pursuing a course which is directly prejudicial to the working classes. His next plea is that he is going to prevent the importation of the products of prison labor. There is another method of accomplishing this end. The importation of the products of prison labor is prohibited altogether, and the hon. Minister might allow some of the Customs officers, who are so active and so strict in detecting the transactions of large houses, to exercise a little ingenuity in discovering importations of prison labor, and by that means accomplish the result, without taxing the poor men to the extent now proposed.

Mr. MULOCK. I have made a calculation as to what I think will prove to be the rate of taxation on both classes of goods, if the Government's proposal is adopted. Take a 50-cent shirt and a shirt costing $2.50, the 50-cent shirt will pay 23½ cents, namely, specific duty 8½, ad valorem 15 cents, total 23 cents, or equal to 46½ per cent. on the value of the article. The shirt costing $2.50 will pay: specific duty 8½ cents, the same as on a 50-cent shirt, and also 75 cents ad valorem duty, total 83½ cents, equal to a tax of 33½ cents. That is to say, that the poor man who buys a 50-cent shirt is compelled to pay a duty of 46½ per cent. on that article, whereas the wealthy man who buys his shirt at $2.50 pays only 33½ per cent. In other words, the poor man is called upon to pay 13 per cent. more duty than the rich man on a similar article.

Mr. BOYLE. The fact is that with one exception to which I will allude, only the very best shirts are imported. The exception is to be found in remnants from the English factories, which are made up in large quantities and find their way into the auction rooms of Montreal and Toronto, where they are sold at a cheap rate for a purpose of imposing on poor men. There is no necessity whatever for these goods being imported. They are a fraud, and if they were kept out of the country altogether the working class would be benefited. We are manufacturing fabrics in our Canadian mills for shirt-making, which are fully equal to English and American goods, and they are produced and sold at a very low rate; and I hold that these goods are the best material for our workmen to purchase, and they can be obtained at the lowest paying prices. I contend, therefore, that this plea for justice in the interests of the poor classes of our country is, in this instance, largely out of place.

Mr. CASEY.

Veneers of wood, sawn only, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the tax at present?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Veneers are now admitted free of duty. But we have now in this country establishments for sawing them, and that is the reason why this duty is proposed.

Colored fabrics, woven or dyed, &c., 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the present duty?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. 20 per cent. They are among unenumerated articles.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the estimated increase of revenue?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $10,000.

Artificial fertilisers, $6 per ton.

Mr. WELSH. What was the duty previously?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. 20 per cent. They came under unenumerated articles.

Mr. WELSH. And what is the additional amount of revenue expected?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Nothing. We expect that is about equal on an average to the present rate.

Mr. WELSH. I desire to say that a duty imposed on this article will very injuriously affect the interests of my constituents. I find that the Minister of Finance made a statement to the Home Government that Prince Edward Island has a population of 51 to the square mile, while none of the other Provinces exceed 4.72; that the production of farm produce on the island was equal to 108 bushels, and in no other Province did it exceed 61 bushels; the fisheries of the island produce $17.08 per head, while those of the other Provinces equal $3.55. This change, I say, will press heavily on the people of the island. It is true, that the Finance Minister the other day, brought down his Estimates which contained an item of $20,000 a year for additional subsidy to the island.

Mr. MITCHELL. Are you not satisfied?

Mr. WELSH. I am satisfied so far as it goes. It is like throwing a bone to a dog. The claim of the island is for five millions. There have been many deputations demanding a settlement. By unanimous vote of the joint Legislatures, a memorial was sent to the Queen praying that justice might be done, and a deputation, composed of Hon. Mr. O'Sullivan and Hon. Mr. Ferguson, was sent to England to press the claims of the island. I observe that in a communication Earl Granville says:

"I may add that I had confidence in the kindly spirit in which the matter at issue will be dealt with by both sides, and that gave me the hope that some acceptable arrangement might be come to."

I have not heard yet any word as to what arrangement has been come to under this head. I am very proud to see this item of $20,000 a year in the Estimates, and I only wish it was four times the sum, because this matter has to be settled. My platform before my constituents was that I would support no Government in Canada except one that would settle the outstanding debts, which were a source of disagreement between the Local and General Governments, and these questions must disturb the peace of the Provinces towards the General Government until they are settled. It is the duty of the Government, no matter what party is in power, to have these questions settled by parliamentary procedure, by arbitration, or by reference or in some sort of way. But not a hand has been put forward and no explanation has been made as to how we are to obtain the five millions, which is the island's claim. This annual subsidy of $20,000 additional, we are clearly given to understand, is only on account of the island not having received the same benefit from the Intercolonial and some other railways as has been received by the rest of the Provinces. It does not affect the claim of five millions and that claim stands. I hope before the House rises the Government will come down with a statement as to how they intend to settle the matter, so as to restore peace and quietness. I can assure the Government that this matter will come up again and again until it is finally settled. This giving a sop to Prince Edward Island, a sop to Nova Scotia, and a sop to British Columbia is all very gratifying in the meantime, but those questions will have to come up again and they will have to be settled. If we are going to have a united Canada we must have all these differences removed and have a fair and clear understanding. Take the case of Prince Edward Island. We went into Confederation with a duty of 15 per cent., and you gave us 80 cents per head; now the duty is 30 per cent., and why don't you give us $1.60 per head? Yes, while you are giving us $20,000 with one hand, you are putting the other in our pockets and taking $30,000. The other evening, on the iron duty, the iron entered my soul when I thought that it will take $30,000 a year out of me. You gave us $20,000 and you thought you gulled us over that, but not a bit of it; Prince Edward Island people are not so green as that. My hon. friend the other day gave us a great yarn about England, and how they encouraged their industries by protection. True, they did it; all do it at first; in those old days—not as old as I am or as the Minister of Finance is—all the world went in for protection, but they broke loose from it—all except one—and became free traders. How has England got her prosperity? Under free trade. It is true she was a great country under protection, but what strides she has made under free trade. Look at her shipping. When they established protection in other countries they said they would sweep her off the seas, but she has swept them off the seas with her free trade. America is the very reverse. She commenced her career by fighting against England—against taxation without representation. When the ships came out of Boston harbor they carried on the flag at their mast head the words, "Free Trade and Sailors' Rights." But where are they now? The United States disgraced themselves; they went back on their first principles, the principles upon which they formed themselves into an independent nation. They got up the duty on account of a civil war and because they had a large debt; they had a grudge against us, and having this large debt they went for protection just to pay off the debt. But like many others when they commenced to sin, they sinned, and sinned, and went on sinning, and they have had a policy of protection ever since. Now they have so much money they don't know what to do with it. One fellow says: "Take off the whiskey duty;" another says: "Give us enough to build the canals;" they have more money than they know what to do with. We are in the reverse position. We have got into debt which we have to pay and we have got into it by protection. I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. gentleman's speech the other night, and I was glad that he took such a pleasant view of the prosperity of the country, but I think there is a great deal that is visionary in it. But I know there is one thing that is not visionary, and that is our debt; and our taxation is not visionary. They are both real.

Mr. MITCHELL. Come to the fertilisers.

Mr. WELSH. We will come to the fertilisers by-and-by. Do you want any? Protection was first introduced as a temporary thing; it was very insidious; at first, when it was introduced, it wasn't protection at all. It was just a readjustment of the tariff. But it has been going on and going on, and, as I said before, the United States don't want more protection, but they have got into a bad habit, and, although the treasury is overflowing with money, they won't go back on it. The hon. gentleman spoke the other day, and he spoke beautifully, and I quite agreed with him; but I thought he would have gone further, but he didn't. That was the fisheries question—no it wasn't. I will come to it presently. Reciprocity was one thing, I know, and the Washington Treaty was one. He spoke beautifully on reciprocity, and I compliment him on his views, and I only wish that with the powers he had from Her Majesty's Government to go to Madrid for a treaty, as charity begins at home, if he would only go to the United States and get a treaty nearer home, it would be a great advantage to us. In Prince Edward Island we are laboring under great disadvantages. You have markets here, you can put things in the United States all the year round, but we can only do it for a certain time. The United States is our natural market; we have no chance to come to your markets with our fish and our other produce. The farmer of Prince Edward Island will not be satisfied until we get this matter settled.

An hon. MEMBER. Fertilisers.

Mr. WELSH. No, not yet. There is another thing here I want to touch on. The hon. gentleman went on to touch on the French policy, and if I understood him aright—and I don't know whether I did or not—he said something about England and her sugar refineries. Now, if I understand it right—and if I am wrong I am open to correction—the French policy is to give a bounty to the sugar manufacturers, and when they manufacture sugar they put a duty on it to their own people, and the manufacturers of sugar in France send it over to England to the English market, and sell a first-class sugar at about two cents per pound. Now the English refiners have been suffering much from this bounty system, and they complained to the English Government, but the head of the British Government said: "Yes, it is true that you are suffering, and we consider the bounty system a great injustice, but if we interfere and protect you against the French bounty system, what will be the consequence? About nine hundred and ninety-nine men in England out of a thousand consume sugar, and if we protect you we will be taxing nine hundred and ninety-nine men in every thousand for the benefit of one," and so they refused. My hon. friends will remember, that while they are talking about the protection of home industries, what protection have they given our shipping. We have heard a good deal about subsidies, but I am opposed to every kind of subsidy except those for keeping up communication with Government railways and the conveyance of the mails. Under the bounty system of France they give a bounty for every mile that the ship sails, but there is none for our marine system. We hear about protection to our steamers, but isn't that taking it out of one pocket and robbing me in the other. I have sailing ships, and if the Government goes on giving subsidies to steamers how am I to live? What is to become of our great marine? What has become of the American marine, since they adopted a system of protection? What has become of our marine since the National Policy came in force? It is getting wiped off the seas pretty fast. Let them all sail on a level, and if the steamers are going to win, let them have an equal run. Here they are talking about a line—Egad, yes, a line to Hong Kong and Singapore, but if this keeps on it is going to make us all sing so poor that we will go to Sing Sing or some place else like it. Egad, we will become so poor that we will commit robbery, and we will have to go to Sing Sing then. What is to become of us if a mercantile line is to be subsidised out of our pockets against our interest? I want to see fair play. Last year $7,500 was given to a steamer for calling at Charlottetown. She just called five times in the year. Well, what did she take away? Any passengers? No. She carried deals, Sir, and she cut down freights because she had a Government subsidy.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will admit that we have done right to leave that off then.

Mr. WELSH. Yes.

Mr. WILSON (Argenteuil). I rise to a point of order. I want to know the practice of the House in this debate. I cannot see that the House is going to be informed very much on fertilising by the speech the hon. gentleman is making, and I do not care about staying, nor do some hon. gentlemen about me, and listening to a discussion that might come up later on.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will perhaps allow me to say that we took up the second reading of these resolutions on the distinct understanding that there should be a continuation of the original debate, and the hon. gentleman is now discussing points raised in the Budget speech, and is, therefore, within the rule established in this discussion.

Mr. WELSH. Well, the hon. member for Argenteuil need not have got up to interrupt me, because if he likes to get up a dozen times I will not interrupt him. When the hon. Minister of Finance spoke, I asked the question of the hon. member for South Oxford, if I could speak after that, and he said I could speak at any time. Therefore, I hope my hon. friend from Argenteuil will bow his head and acknowledge his error. I do not wish to speak often, and I thought I would put the whole thing into one box. I do not know that I have a great deal more to say. I object to this protection policy altogether. This duty on fertilisers I would like very much to see struck off. The Government will get an advantage by taking it off, because we use a great deal of fertilisers in Prince Edward Island, and export a great deal of stuff, and the more fertilisers we use the more we will export, and it will be a benefit to the country. And if the hon. Minister of Finance will use his influence to get a reciprocity treaty with the United States, I shall be delighted, and so will every man in Prince Edward Island. I would remark, also, before I sit down, that I hope a Washington Treaty will never be renewed in this country. I say this much, that the fisheries of the Maritime Provinces I consider are of more interest to them than to men in British Columbia. Will any man deny the fact? And if the million and a-quarter of money got from the Halifax fishery award is paid into the Dominion Treasury and spent out in the Rocky Mountains, do you think that is the way we want to do it again? I say no. We want our fisheries for the benefit of the marine Provinces. We have nothing else, and I hope the Government will hold on to those fisheries. I back the Government in every step they have taken in defending those fisheries. I support them in that, and I wish to see them protect them in every way until the United States Government give us reciprocity. And if they like to strike us with retaliation, let them strike. I wish to maintain our rights, and I would like the Minister of Finance to have those powers which he says he has, to go to Madrid and negotiate a treaty. I hope he will use those powers and go to Washington and obtain for Prince Edward Island a reciprocity treaty. My platform is a reciprocity treaty.

Mr. WELSH.

Some gentlemen here have thrown slurs on the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) for having swallowed his principles. I have never seen any of his principles yet—. Now, I do not mind most of the men on that side laughing; but there is one man laughing who has no right to laugh, that is the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), for he is an Irishman. We know an Irishman can speak twice. If you had only waited, you would have heard what I was saying. I was saying that I never saw any of his principles yet swallowed by him. The hon. gentleman was an advocate of the reduction of the duty, but I will give the Government this credit, that they have foisted such a debt on this country that the possibility of reducing the duty is very small, and in my canvass I said this: When we went into Confederation we had a debt of only $70,000,000 odd, but now we have a debt of $270,000,000, and as an honest country we must pay the interest on that debt; therefore, you cannot expect as great reduction in the tariff as you might if our debt was only $70,000,000. If we could do it, I would not go to reduce the duty altogether, because I am an advocate of home industries as well as any other hon. gentleman. But there is a difference between staring and being stark mad. There is a difference between 17 per cent. and 30 or 40 per cent., or a prohibitory duty. I want the Government to think of this now; and if we could get a reciprocity treaty with, say 20 per cent. or thereabouts, it would be a great benefit to the country, and the country would prosper. The hon. Minister of Finance said the other day that these duties were put on so that capitalists might develop the resources of this country. I take the ground that the resources of this country are getting developed, not by capitalists, but out of the earnings of the whole people of this Dominion. If capitalists wish to develop the resources of a country, there is nothing to stop them; and if we put a duty of 20 per cent. on the things they want to develop, I won't object. I do not want to occupy the time of the House, but I certainly move that that duty on fertilisers be struck off.

Mr. MULOCK. I beg to second the motion of the hon. gentleman that the duty be struck off. I think it is to be regretted that the Government deem it necessary to tax that article.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We do not propose to increase the tax at all. We leave it as we find it.

Mr. MULOCK. It is not quite, I think, as the Minister of Finance states. As the Minister of Customs explained to me, the duty at present is 20 per cent. ad valorem, and the object of making it specific is to discriminate against inferior grades.

Mr. BOWELL. That is one reason.

Mr. MULOCK. Well, whatever may be the reason, I think it would be far better to let fertilisers in free. The only object there can be in taxing fertilisers is, of course, to develop our own industries, and we have beds of phosphates, gypsum and other materials from which fertilisers can be manufactured. If it is necessary, then, to develop our own mineral wealth, it should be done at the expense of the whole country, by a bounty if necessary, and not by a tax which is going to fall on a particular class, a class which to-day is handicapped in the race of life. At the risk of offending the senior member for Hamilton, I may say I think we are entitled to speak for the poor men occasionally, and may even pose as the farmer's friends. When election times are on, hon. gentlemen opposite are extremely anxious to pose as the farmer's friends, but when taxes are to be levied they forget all about him. I am not going to assume that hon. gentlemen opposite have forgotten any interest to-day. On the contrary, I will assume, as it is my duty, that they desire to do what they think is best; but in this particular case the farming interest has been suffering quite enough without being compelled to bear an additional burden. Therefore, if it is in order for me to second the motion of the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Welsh), I will do so. Last year we passed a measure which, I think, was in the right direction, namely, a law providing for a proper system of examining the strength of fertilisers. That Act, the hon. Minister says, is not applicable to importations, and therefore he thinks the duty is necessary in order to keep out inferior grades. I think it is quite possible to amend that Act so that it will apply to importations. Under the circumstances, considering the nature of the industry, considering the class of people who would be affected by it, I think the Government would be acting in the best interests of the country in admitting all fertilisers free. It is false economy to exclude from a nation anything that adds to the producing capacity of the land.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if he will have printed the voluminous papers connected with Behring Straits?

Mr. FOSTER. They will be put in the hands of the Printing Committee.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. MITCHELL. As I find a Minister has arrived at last, I would ask him, in relation to the papers in connection with the outrage in Behring Sea, whether he would have them printed in pamphlet form and distributed to the members. They are entirely too voluminous to be read in manuscript.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I would suggest that the hon. gentleman speak to the Chairman of the Printing Committee, who will, no doubt, order the papers to be printed. I will, however, as I perceive he is not here, try and see some member of the committee about it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am quite aware that is the course, but I notice in relation to the correspondence in connection with the fisheries, that on the Atlantic side of this continent the Government had them printed and brought down. I do not think it is the duty of a member of the Opposition to attend to this. I think my hon. friend should see it is done. It would take us two years to get through the manuscript.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The result of the delay in bringing down the other papers, through their being first printed, was that the Minister of Marine had reflections cast upon him every day for his tardiness.

Mr. MITCHELL. In this case he has shown there is no attempt at concealment, but at the same time the printing should be gone on with.

Artificial fertilisers, $6 per ton.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). I was going to say a few words before six o'clock with regard to these fertilisers. The protection given by this resolution is given to the farmers. The protection that is desired, so far as fertilisers are concerned, is to protect the farmers against the imposition practiced upon them for a number of years by the sale, from the American side, of a very inferior quality of fertilisers. So far as the resolution is concerned, it does not go far enough in discriminating against an inferior quality. In a great many States of the Union, these fertilisers, before they are admitted to be put on the market, have to be thoroughly analysed, and the analysis of each fertiliser has to be placed on the packet, but that which is to be sent out of the States is not analysed at all. The result is that inferior qualities, composed only of slack lime and some other inferior articles, perfumed to suit the olfactory nerves of the farmer, are sent into this country and sold for from $30 to $40 a ton, while they are not worth more than $7 or $8 a ton. When I introduced the Bill some two years ago, my object was not only to have the fertilisers which were manufactured in this country thoroughly tested, and labels placed upon all packages put on the market, but also to have all the fertilisers which were imported thoroughly analysed before they left the place of importation or the first place they touched in Canada. That would cause a long delay to the farmer—probably two or three or four weeks—and in many cases the time for using the fertiliser would have expired before the good would have been obtained from it. I think the object is to discriminate largely against the inferior quality of fertilisers. In fact, if there were any way of prohibiting their importation altogether, it would be much better for the farmer, but at any rate they should be discriminated against as much as possible in the duty. The purchase by the farmer of an inferior quality of fertiliser means not only the loss of the money which he pays for the fertiliser, but practically the loss of the land upon which it is placed for one season. If he depends on that fertiliser to enrich his land and to produce a good crop, the money is lost, the labor is lost, and the land is practically lost for that season. So I think this Parliament cannot do enough in the direction of preventing and prohibiting, if possible, not only the importation of a spurious article, but the manufacture of a spurious article in this country. It is impossible for the farmer or for anybody else to detect the spurious article. There is no way, by any manipulation he might give it, by the sense of smell or otherwise, by which he could detect the spurious from the good article. It is therefore the duty of the Government to protect the farmer in that direction. I will only say further that this placing a specific duty on this article is in the right direction. You will observe that it reduces the duty upon the good and valuable article. It was 20 per cent. before. The value of the good article is $35, $40, and $45 a ton, and 20 per cent. on that would be $7, $8, or $9 a ton, so the duty on the good and valuable article has been reduced from $7, $8 or $9 a ton to $6 a ton, and that goes at all events to a small length in the direction of preventing the importation of the spurious article. Hon. gentlemen in discussing this question, should keep in view the fact that the protection the farmer needs is only the protection against the importation, manufacture and sale of a spurious article in this country, and I think this proposal, as far as it goes, is in the right direction.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If I understand the question before the House, there is nothing in the resolution about protecting the farmer against a spurious article at all. There is no discrimination between good, bad and indifferent; it is simply a duty of $6 a ton upon all farm fertilisers. Now, the story that our friend from the county of Welland (Mr. Ferguson) has told us, that it is intended to protect the farmers from spurious articles, is a very old story. It is brought up now without even a new dress to it. It is the old story over again. I remember well, when the high duty was laid on imported cloth, that it was said to be intended to protect the wearers from the shoddy article. It was the same with regard to sugar. The duty was to protect the poor people from the importation of an inferior article of sugar. It has been the same all through the gamut. Now we are told that this duty is to protect the farmers from a spurious article of fertiliser. I want to draw the attention of the House to the fact that seven-tenths of the duties which are imposed are paid by the farming community, and with all that heavy load for them to carry, it is proposed to-day to add to their burden by taxing them for the fertilisers they use in order to increase the productive capacity of their farms. We have been told that it is a protection. I submit that it will not do for this House to assume too much in the direction of protecting the farmer.

It will not do for this House to assume this paternal attitude towards the farmer, and to act on the presumption that the farmers are a lot of simpletons and do not know what is good for them or what is good for their farms. I tell hon. gentlemen that the farmers of this country are just as wide awake as any other class of the community, and that they can tell when an article is spurious and when it is good as well as the rest; and, if they have an inferior article offered to them or a good article offered to them, they do not want to pay $6 a ton for the privilege of trying it. I hope the Finance Minister will see his way to strike this out and to give the farmers a fair chance in this matter.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). I do not want it to go to the country, or for the hon. gentleman to infer, that I intended to say that the farmers were a lot of simpletons. I am a farmer myself, I was raised on a farm, and I think I know just as much about a farm as the hon. gentleman, and perhaps a good deal more. But when he tells me that any man, whether he be a chemist or a farmer, can tell the spurious from the good article without analysing it, he tells me what I know to be incorrect.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. But I contend that there is nothing in this resolution to discriminate between the good and the bad. Whether the article is good or bad the farmer has to pay.

Mr. BOWELL. I think that is where the hon. gentleman from Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) is wrong. The difficulty has been in discriminating between the inferior article and that which really is of value to the agriculturists. If they are compelled to pay $6 a ton upon an article which they will and do import into this country at $25 and even at $22 and $23 a ton, which is a spurious article, they will not be inclined to bring it in, but will bring in an article of a better quality and the farmer will not be cheated.

Mr. CASEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman laughs. No doubt he knows a great deal more about it than anyone else. Our great difficulty has been to prevent the importation into this country of a very low grade, which is comparatively valueless as a fertiliser, and we have been constantly sending that article to the Dominion chemists to ascertain its real qualities. The agents who represent these houses in the United States are selling an article which, I repeat, is comparatively valueless, and are charging a higher price than they ought to charge for it; but, if the importer has to pay $6 a ton on the article, they will bring in a better quality. It is really and in fact a protection to the farmer.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is a protection to the tune of $6 a ton.

Mr. BOWELL. It is not to the tune of $6 a ton. The hon. gentleman forgets that the higher class of these fertilisers, upon which 20 per cent. is paid now, is worth all the way from $36 to $40, $45, and even $50 a ton. Now, if $6 specific is put on that article, it is much less than 20 per cent.

Mr. MITCHELL. I fail to see that.

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot make you see it if you will not. If you take the value at $50, and 20 per cent. on that, I think you will find it is more than $6. If you take $40, you will find that 20 per cent. is more than $6.

Mr. MITCHELL. If it is a protection, why have it on at all? Why not wipe it out?

Mr. BOWELL. That is another point.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is the point.

Mr. ARMSTRONG.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not arguing that point.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is what I want you to meet.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman should confine himself to one point, and not when he is caught in one point run off to another, if the question arises as to making fertilisers free altogether, and thereby shutting up the manufactories of that article in the country, that is another question, and it is a fair one for argument. What I am trying to point out now is that taking the average price paid for fertilisers imported from the United States, $6 per ton is a less rate of duty than is now paid at 20 per cent. and is consequently in the interest of the farmers. If you strike this duty off, and leave it at 20 per cent. where it was before, you do not gain anything for the farmers.

An hon. MEMBER. Put it on the free list.

Mr. BOWELL. To do that you would have to commence de novo. Now, I find from actual test, and from what has come under my observation in working this law, that the prices will range as high as $60—the lowest price is $23. If the hon. gentleman is a farmer, as he told us the other night, if he buys that $23 per ton fertiliser, and uses it, he will find that he would have done better to keep his money in his pocket. It is really from the test we made of it, by the Dominion analyst, that we find it is not of any value. There is very little ammonia in it, and it is comparatively useless. Now, the entries have ranged from $23 to $60 per ton; 20 per cent. on $60 would be $12. You take the better qualities, say $35 and $40, the rate we now propose is really lower than that which farmers have been paying, being based upon a value of $30 a ton.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend chooses to set up a figure and then knock it down. I do not propose that he shall dictate to me as to how I shall direct my argument to this House, nor will I permit him to place me in a false position before the House. My argument was this. The hon. member for Welland contended that this was a boon to the farmers, that it was really a relief to the farmer to charge him $6 a ton for fertilisers. I said I could not see that; the Minister of Customs said he could not help it. I failed quite to catch him at the moment, but I pointed out that if he wanted to befriend the farming interests, the Government, if they were earnest in their desire, ought to wipe out that duty altogether, for I could not see how it was going to help the farmers, if he required fertilisers, to make him pay $6 duty, nor how it was any protection to him. The hon. gentleman says they range from $25 to $60 a ton, and the duty on these fertilisers now is 20 per cent. But I say it was a duty that should never have been put on. It is a heavy increase to the burdens upon the farming community, and if the Government are going to make a revenue tax of it—because it is that, nothing more nor less—why should they attempt to create the impression that it was an act done to protect the interests of the farmer? Sir, it is nothing of the kind. If they want to keep spurious articles out of the country, they can do so. Let their revenue officers exercise the same keen watch that they do in the city of Montreal, where their interests are concerned in dividing the spoils and the plunder; but let them take the duty off fertilisers, and then the farmer will get some relief from the great stress there is now upon farming operations on account of the low prices of farm produce. Sir, I think so far from being a protection to the farmers, it is a positive tax. There is, perhaps, not a greater tax, taken in its average results upon the farming community, than this one. It is something like the protection the Government gave to the people of my county in respect to cornmeal, but I do not wish to touch on that just now. Sir, I take up this tariff, and in almost every item in it I find an average increase of about 5 per cent., and there is scarcely an item that does not bear upon the people of my county, and I defy hon. gentlemen opposite to point out one instance where the people of my county get any benefit from this National Policy which is being run into the ground. I am not going back on my principles. I am a National Policy man. I have been so from the beginning, and helped to fight the battle of the National Policy, and fell largely through it; but I never dreamed when I was advocating the National Policy, as it was considered at the time, that it was going to put a duty of 50 cents a barrel on flour, and 40 cents a barrel on cornmeal. When I find that everything the farmer requires to buy, everything the lumberman requires to use in the prosecution of his business, everything the fisherman want in following his calling, except salt, and, perhaps, one or two trifles in the shape of lines and twine—I say that everything is taxed; and they are adding to that from year to year. There has not been a year since this National Policy was adopted that they have not increased the tax. Now, they are re-adjusting it, as they say—practically, they are increasing it for revenue purposes. Sir, I went into this National Policy honestly, as believing it a measure of necessity, when we could not get interchange of our commodities with the United States, when we could not get our friends on the other side of the line to make a reciprocity treaty, I resolved to adopt the next best thing, but I only adopted it as a necessity under the circumstances, and I earnestly supported it, but I am not going to support the policy of running it into the ground, as they are now doing. I would like to ask my hon. friend when he took the duty off the anthracite coal, to relieve people of the Upper Provinces, why did he not take it off cornmeal and flour to relieve the people of the Lower Provinces? Why did he not take the duty off flour and off soft coal to relieve the people of the Lower Provinces who buy an enormous amount of the former article—three-fourths of what they usually consume? Why should these people be taxed who get no benefit from this National Policy? Sir, I say if the Government want to benefit the people of the Lower Provinces and to keep our young men and our young women from emigrating into the United States, let them reconsider and readjust this tariff with some honest desire of effecting their pretended object, instead of going on Session after Session increasing the taxes under a pretence that they are simply adjusting the tariff. Let them take the duties off from some of the prime necessities to help the people who are suffering from the depression of trade to an extent that they can scarcely live under it.

Mr. CLAYES. Hon. gentlemen supporting the Government claim that this $6 duty per ton is put on for the protection of the farmers, that the farmer may be relieved from the danger of buying an inferior article. Now, if it can be proved that the farmer is liable to fall into the hands of the heathen Chinese, and to suffer in this direction, there is another and very effective way of relieving and protecting him. Let it be required of every importer of fertilisers that there shall be marked upon the bag or package precisely how much ammonia, how much phosphoric acid, or other ingredients the fertiliser contains. Some of the fertilisers manufactured here and in the United States are worth $10 per ton. They have got ammonia enough, they have got phosphoric acid enough to be worked up. Others may be worth $45 a ton, but it does not follow that the low priced article is not as well worth the money as the high priced. A $6 tax upon the farmer is not going to protect him in any degree from danger, but a careful chemical analysis will relieve him and protect him absolutely. It seems to me to be intended as a reflection upon hon. gentlemen on this side of the House that we consider the interest of the farmer, and yet I hope some hon. gentlemen have relatives who are connected with the farming industry, for that forms the true source and basis of the prosperity of the country in which we live. In olden times four-fifths of the people were always regarded as being engaged in the cultivation of the soil and the production of food. To-day the same amount of labor is not required to furnish us with clothing, with our dwellings to protect us from the inclemency of the weather, and all such articles as come from the artisan and manufacturer, and accordingly the farming population is relatively much larger than it was formerly. Representing a country like Canada it seems to me to be germane that we should consider the welfare of this great body of people who produce our food, who produce the raw material which is the source of our industry. I notice in this policy of protection that the farmer every time is the man to be taxed; the farmer is the man whom you forget. This Parliament appears to recognise the man who builds up a tower, out of the chimney of which comes forth flame and smoke. That kind of thing catches the eye; you recognise the importance of the tower, but, as I have said before, not more than one-fifth of the people are engaged in industries other than farming and live in towns. Four out of five live in the country and the welfare of the manufacturers lies in the protection of the labor of this country, and the great body of laborers of this country are farmers. A farmer in this country is not what a farmer is in the old world. There he is a capitalist, a gentleman of leisure, he employs men and pays them little to work upon his farm; but in this country, our farmers are laborers as well as farmers. They own but little land, they work themselves and their wives and their children. Unless we look after the laborers, the manufacturers have not the ghost of a chance in the race for prosperity. I was extremely interested in the speech of the hon. member from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Welsh). We were all amused and all interested, and that speech was not only an exceedingly interesting speech, but it was a very suggestive speech also. The hon. gentleman referred to the time when the people of the United States separated from old England and started out with free trade and sailor's rights in their minds. That continued to be the idea which controlled and determined the policy of the American people up to the time of the great rebellion. Until 1861 the average taxes of the United States amounted to only 20 per cent., it was a revenue tax; that was the period of their prosperity, and that was the time when the masses of the people were in the possession of the comforts of life, when they had leisure which enabled them to cultivate their minds, when they were beyond all question as a body infinitely superior to the American people of to-day. Wealth was generally distributed. I remember the time when we used to speak of the millionaire: there was only one, and he was John Jacob Astor. Wealth was distributed among the great masses of the people, and, as a consequence, there was general prosperity, there was leisure enjoyed by the people, there were no strikes then, there was no room whatever for dangerous demagogues who are now seeking to arouse the people to a revolutionary attitude, dangerous and threatening to the state. But when the war came an enormous debt was incurred; a vast change took place in property through the decline in the value of money, property passed from the hands of the masses into those of a few speculators, and a new order of things came upon the face of the country, an order of things which has resulted beyond all question in carrying the people of the United States back to the condition of things from which the people of Europe have been struggling to escape. It is a great blunder for the Finance Minister of this country, and the gentlemen associated with him, to institute a policy here, the effect of which is to make the rich richer and the poor poorer. It is only a little while ago that one of my neighbors sent me a book asking me to read it and state what I thought of it. It was a work by A. Russell Wallace. I had heard of him as one of the great abstract thinkers of England, one who ranked with Herbert Spencer, the late Charles Darwin, and other eminent men there. This work was on "Bad Times." He had endeavored to consider the cause of the bad times, and he found as the result of his abstract reasoning, the application of his logic, that hard times in Europe and in this country were the consequence very largely of the enormous proportion of the people who were doing no work. He regarded the millionaires, who have multiplied so largely in Europe, as being very largely a source of the hard times. He ranked them with the great bodies of people who are engaged in carrying the musket and consuming and destroying. There is a great deal of force beyond all question in that argument. There is a certain amount of labor in every country which goes to produce its wealth, which being distributed secures the abundance, comfort and welfare of society. If that wealth takes the direction of the production of articles of luxury alone, such as the yachts of a millionaire, that means so much virtually extracted from the sum and substance of that which makes abundance and comfort among the people. It might just as well have floated over the falls here, 'so far as the whole people of a country are concerned. Whenever a man is engaged in the production of that which tends to the comfort of the people, and when under a system of just exchange you place within the reach of every man a market for his own labor, for that is really what he wants, for he wants a day's work for a day's work, and you enable him to make exchange—every man will have half a day's leisure on his hands every day. Not only would they be better fed and better clothed, but they would have plenty of time for the cultivation of their minds in everything which goes to represent the civilised man. And it should be the aim of every man possessed of power to give direction to that which determines the character of society. Another point I should like to make with regard to this question of commerce. The hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Welsh) said he was a free trader. It is not astonishing that he should be a free trader. I am only astonished that the Minister of Finance coming from Nova Scotia, coming from one of the Provinces down by the sea, should be anything else than a free trader. Why, they may talk about manufacturing as much as they like, and I admit manufacturing is essential, but when it becomes a business demoralising all round, as is the case under protection, it is a curse to a country and in nowise a blessing. Commerce, since the story of man's life was first told, has been the instrument of civilisation, of knowledge, of all things in which we rejoice. Look back into olden times—to the times of Phœnicia, of Carthage and of Greece. Look at Greece whose language we are to-day teaching in all our colleges; in our educational institutions the study of Greek is the one thing essential. Her influence is due to the fact that the Greeks were a commercial people. By her position on the Mediterranean and the stimulus of her commerce, her democracy, each little town competing with the others, they became possessed of whatever knowledge there was in the world, and that is the source of the pre-eminence of the Greeks, not only in the time of the old Greeks, but of her knowledge and influence even down to the present day. The other day a friend said to me: "Why, there is something about the atmosphere of England that enables that country to raise better horses, better cattle, better men than any other country in the world." Now, Mr. Speaker, that is all foolishness. England is great simply by virtue of her commerce. It is the one secret which is the source of her eminence. I tell you that commerce is the one thing to be protected; but this kind of protection upon which the Minister of Finance congratulated the country as being the source of its prosperity is a source of death to commerce. At one time the United States were pushing old England in all parts of the world; everywhere where there was trade to be done you found the Stars and Stripes vieing with the Union Jack for that trade. How is it now? Why, Sir, you look in vain for the evidences of commercial enterprise among that people. Take our own country. The commerce of the Lower Provinces made Canada the third great commercial power in the world, and our system of protection has come near wiping them out of existence. The future of the Lower Provinces ought to be a magnificent one, provided you place within her reach those advantages for trading which nature intended her to possess. Her fisheries are a nursery for seamen; she has magnificent harbors; she has everything to put her in the very front of the commercial activity of this continent. But that has all been destroyed. A patriotic Minister of Finance proposes to substitute for the legitimate thing which we might have had in the Lower Provinces—an iron industry. Well, if there is anything that is likely to bring to him, if he lives long enough, the sorrows and discomfort of a sad reflection, it will be the result of his iron industry. If the people of the United States had raised the money, and had furnished all those iron kings with all the money they have made; if they had provided places for the comfort of all the laborers engaged in that industry, and given them no work to do, but had been allowed to buy their iron wherever they could buy it, for what it was worth, they would have been richer than they are to-day. Pennsylvania, beyond any state in the Union, has been in the hands of these iron men who gather round the Legislature at Harrisburg and really control the Legislature there. I know of no industry in the United States, of no industry anywhere, which when examined with reference to its influence on a people, its influence on a country, or upon the wealth of a country, will compare with the iron industry of the United States. This idea that you will make a people rich by preventing them from trading freely with other people, is such an absurdity. What we want to do is to exchange the result of our labor with the results of the labor of other countries. What we do is to take a day's work and try to find some place where we can get two or three, or a dozen day's work for it. That is the source of England's prosperity. She has gone to India and has taken with her the day's work of one of her laborers and exchanged it in India for fifteen or twenty day's work, and brought it back. Now, whatever she has brought from abroad is as much the production of her own labor as though she had produced it at home. It is an exchange of the labor of the men at home, whose industry was perfectly employed, for the labor of other men which can be bought for it. The great objection to this policy of protection is just this, that it tends to multiply the rich, to the accumulation of enormous fortunes, while at the same time it makes the great mass of the people poorer. It is a policy which lays on the labor of the country an enormous burden. We have been going over these resolutions, and in every instance we have been taking out of the pockets of the laborer of the country an enormous amount of money—for what? Not to defray the expenses of Government. No, Sir, in nine cases out of ten we have proposed to tax the country for the benefit of the manufacturers. The money does not really go into the coffers of the state, but it goes into the pockets of men whom you are making rich, and who give the community no return. The Minister of Finance was facetious when he was speaking on this question. He went on to say that on this question the leader of the Opposition had recognised the propriety of protection, that all parties regarded it as the settled policy of the country, and that, therefore, there was no necessity for further discussion upon it. Beyond all doubt this is true. We have so complicated the affairs of this country that we cannot abandon the policy of protection. Whether we will or not, we are bound to continue the policy of protection until we can change it, and change it without injury to the new industries of the country. But it does not follow that we have abandoned principles of truth. Now, I would just ask gentlemen to consider that the welfare of a people of a country depends upon not violating truth in political economy. Gentlemen on the other side must know that protection is a folly, that protection is a falsehood, that protection finds the support of no man who is worthy of being considered as representing the application of the human mind to the consideration of this question. Among all the colleges in the United States their professors on political economy, and there are 300 or 400 of them, there is not one who is not a believer in free trade. All over Europe, all the men who think and who are recognised as having given to the study of this question the best thoughts and the best minds, without an exception, advocate free trade. There is no exception. I defy any man to name anybody who has ever been heard of that is not a free trader. I have no doubt hon. gentlemen will name some one whom nobody knows but themselves. I was in the library this morning, and I saw something written by somebody of whom I never heard, a book on American political economy. Well, Sir, the man who writes on American political economy is a demagogue and a humbug. Political economy is the same in all countries in the world. There is no different truth in America from what there is in Canada or in any part of Europe. Truth, in political economy, in one place, is truth everywhere. Now, with regard to the prosperity of the country, the hon. Minister of Finance, as an evidence of it, referred to the fact that life insurance had enormously increased. Is that an evidence of prosperity? Why, Sir, if a man sends his bark out on a dangerous sea, if he fears disaster, then he will seek for insurance against risk. If that is an evidence of anything under the sun, it is an evidence of fear that trouble is impending. So when a man insures his life, it is because he is not certain of his little accumulated wealth, and it is far from being an evidence of prosperity. Then, look at the strikes. If they indicate anything as to the condition of the labor of the country, they are symptomatic of a condition of things really dangerous to the public welfare. When the wealth of society is justly and fairly distributed among the men who work and produce it, we shall have no strikes. You will never have prosperity when you leave the masses of men suffering, and only the few, the millionaires and their associates, to rejoice. Now, one thing I would say with regard to the taxes. It is generally admitted by all writers on political economy that sooner or later all taxes fall on the labor of the country. Some gentlemen in criticising the financial statement of the hon. the Minister of Finance, said that many people believe that the taxes fall on the farmer. In a certain sense they do. The farmers of this country are really the laborers of the country. Four-fifths of the labor of the country is done by farmers. Put a tax on the merchant, and what does he do? He simply adds it to the price of his goods which pass into the hands of the consumers, and they have to pay the taxes of the merchant. The same is the case with professional men. The doctor in dispensing his pills charges the tax in with the price the farmers around pay him. The same thing is true of all classes in the community. Ultimately all the taxes rest on the men who work, and in this country the men who work are the farmers.

Mr. CLAYES,

Mr. PORTER. Without endeavoring to follow the hon. gentleman who last addressed this House in his essay on commerce and its concomitant political economy, permit me to say, with regard to the doctrine of protection, which he has endeavored to enunciate and attack, that his essay has fallen very flat on this House, and I can commiserate him on the ill-timed birth of his miserable ranting. Even his friends on that side of the House are not with him. This doctrine of free trade is one that was certainly decided long before the gentleman's essay was delivered to this House. However, I would say this, that the subject of fertilisers, which are used in the occupation which I follow, seems not to have much attractiveness for those gentlemen who have touched upon it. The hon. member for Northumberland posed as the friend of the poor farmer and the gentleman who last addressed the House also bewailed their condition. Indeed I was much pleased to hear that they had so much sympathy for us. My heart was touched. The tear in his voice and the wail of his lament over the poor farmers was certainly very touching to those of us who are farmers. This question of fertilisers is one of the things in which I feel an interest, and his endeavor to remove the burden which I and my fellow farmers lie under, was certainly a great pleasure and satisfaction to me. But my sympathies are somewhat spoiled when some one told me that after all the farmers of Ontario import no fertilisers at all. However, let that be as it may, the hon. gentlemen who have so much interest in the farmer, if they know anything about the farmer, except asking him for his vote at elections or his money on mortgages, must know that every farmer must depend on fertilising the soil with the manure he raises on his own farm. So far as my own riding is concerned, none of the farmers in it use artificial manure. I would wish hon. gentlemen opposite, who take such an interest in this question, to name any riding or county in Ontario in which artificial manure is largely employed. I do not refer to men who have small pieces of ground of five or ten acres or so in extent, and who probably use these artificial manures, but I say that every farmer, who is worthy of the name, that is to say, a farmer who holds 50, 100 or 150 acres of land, has to depend on his own resources for the manure that is necessary for the fertilisation of the soil. These hon. gentlemen become very pathetic over the lot of the farmer. Well, the farmers are perfectly well aware that times may be rather hard and a little dull at present, but there is not one of them who understands his business and the trade of the country, who will for a moment place the depression under which he labors at the door of the Government. It is not because farmers, as is alleged, pay more for what they purchase that there is any hardship amongst them. Every effort of the Government has been in the direction of helping the farmers, and those duties which are imposed upon grain and cattle are in his interests and tend to make his condition as far as possible better than it otherwise would be. I say that the sympathies these gentlemen cast upon the farmers are thrown away. We have no desire to throw ourselves into the hands of any particular individual or party in this land; all we wish is fair play, and we do not wish to be known, when we form farmers' clubs, either as Grits or Conservatives. We wish to keep our farming interests altogether free from party political, and to discuss every question affecting us free from political bias. These gentlemen will best help the farmers if they will leave their sympathies out of the question altogether, and discuss our matters purely as business and not as political questions.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down ventures to accuse the hon. member for Missisquoi of lecturing the House and of delivering an essay. I am sure we cannot compliment the hon. gentleman who has just spoken on delivering a systematic essay, but, so far as lecturing is concerned, his remarks were nothing else but a lecture composed of vague generalities. The hon. gentleman wound up by saying we should discuss farmers' interests apart from politics, yet there was not a word in his speech that was not tinged, that was not dyed and saturated with politics. He says the National Policy in every one of its details benefits the farmers. He makes that bold assertion without bringing forward in its support an atom of proof, and he makes it in the face of a proposal to prevent the farmer buying artificial fertilisers where they can be the cheapest. The hon. member for Missisquoi showed clearly that the farmers were the laboring class of this community. It is not the few industries we have in the towns that can call themselves the laboring interests of the country. It is not the manufacturers, with their few chimneys and their manufacture of patent manures, who are seeking favors at the hands of the Government in redemption, no doubt, of election promises, who represent the interests of the laboring community. But it is that class of the community who pay all the bills of the country, who furnish primarily nearly all the wealth of the country, who are the wealth producers, and who are making this country prosperous, if anybody is. I am sorry to have to confess that at present we cannot do a great deal in adding to its prosperity. Everybody knows the farmer does not get the prices he used to get, and that he pays more than he would have to pay were it not for the present tariff.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CASEY. I will not say everybody, because there are some Tories so ignorant that they are not aware even of that. Every farmer must know, from practical experience, that he is not making as much profit now as he did ten years ago. The contention of my hon. friends and myself is this, that, when the Government has to deal with other classes, who are not doing a-tenth, a-twentieth or a-fiftieth as much for the wealth of Canada as the farmers do, the Government give them most peculiar and extraordinary advantages, as the Finance Minister is proposing to do under this amended addition of the tariff. Yet when they come to deal with the farmers, the men who buy what the manufacturer produces and who pay the Ministers their salaries by the consumption of dutiable goods, no consideration at all is extended to them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will drop the fertilisers if the hon. gentlemen will let us go on.

Mr. HESSON. I want to make an observation that I think is very opportune on this subject in which a great deal of feeling has been displayed by many a man who never cut down a tree, or cleared an acre, or put his hand to the plough.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. HESSON. I desire to give the House a little information, and if the hon. gentlemen opposite are not willing to have it put on record, it is their fault. But I will get it into the Hansard. After all the sympathy hon. gentlemen opposite have shown in this matter in behalf of the farmer, it appears that there is not one single ton of phosphate or fertilisers imported into Ontario, the little that has been imported having been brought into Nova Scotia. Fifty-three tons only were imported into the whole Dominion, of which the value was $1,849, and the duty $369. Now I have this good news for the friends of the farmers, that we have a surplus of the very best phosphate, and have exported during the past year no less than 25,974 tons of phosphates, valued at $431,957. When we have a material so valuable as that which we can export, where is your sympathy for the farmer? Cannot he procure it here? I direct the attention of hon. gentlemen to another point that was debated here on Friday last, that salt, which is one of the best fertilisers, can be produced in this country for $1.50 a ton—that is the coarse quality which is suited for the purposes of the farmers. Again, we have plaster of Paris manufactured in the country, upon which there is not a cent of duty. Immense quantities of that are being made in the country, and are being used by the farmers of the west on their clover fields and on their grain and corn fields; and my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey) knows that as well as I do, and if my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson) were here he would be able to give the same information. So I think the sympathy of those hon. gentlemen is lost, seeing that the Government have not collected a cent of duty from the farmers on fertilisers, except in Nova Scotia, where they have collected the great sum of $369. These facts are worth knowing, and I think hon. gentlemen opposite should have patience, and should have patriotism, and love of country and respect for themselves and for us, when we export such large quantities of valuable phosphates from this country, and when those phosphates are free to the farmers here, without a dollar of duty on them. The effect of the proposition of the Minister is that the farmers of Nova Scotia, if no change were made in the present tariff, would be left to pay about $7 a ton duty instead of $6 which he is now proposing. Instead of helping the farmer you are damaging the farmer by demanding that the Minister should change this proposition in order, if possible, to make a little party advantage or to say that you are the only friends of the farmer in this House. We have heard a great deal from the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) and the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Casey), and the hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Claves), who perhaps never ploughed for a whole day in his life.

Mr. CASEY.

Mr. CASEY. I dropped the discussion of this matter because I thought it was going to drop on both sides.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I thought so too.

Mr. CASEY. But the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Hesson) has made some statements that call for a word or two. The fact that we have imported no phosphates shows that the existing duty is a prohibitory duty. My hon. friend's objection to the tariff was that it would be equally prohibitory in regard to certain grades, and would not be fair, but I will not discuss the proposed change, as he has dropped it. The member for Perth has brought up the fact that a large quantity of phosphates are exported. That is a reason why we should not have any protection at all to the phosphate industry, because the article is so abundant, so cheap, and does not need any protection. He says it is overflowing, and running out of the country. Then why should we have a duty to keep foreign phosphates out? I have ground, on what the hon. member for Perth has stated, to ask the Finance Minister another thing, and I do ask him, to abolish the duty on fertilisers altogether; and I say that the farmers' case will not be met until the hon. gentleman does abolish a duty which is absolutely unnecessary in order to protect even the interests of the manufacturers of phosphates.

Maccaroni and vermicelli, 2 cents per lb. specific.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What tax does the Finance Minister expect from this in the shape of ad valorem? Is not 2 cents a pound almost 100 per cent.?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These articles are, at present, among the unenumerated articles paying 20 per cent. The increase will be very slight. The new duty will be about 40 per cent., and, I suppose, may possibly give us $1,000 increase. That is calculated on an average of five cents a pound.

Oranges and lemons, in boxes not exceeding 2½ cubic feet, 25 cents per box; in half boxes not exceeding 1¼ cubic feet, 13 cents per half box; in cases and all other packages, 10 cents per cubic foot; in bulk, $1.60 per 1,000 oranges or lemons; in barrels not exceeding in capacity that of the 196 lb. flour barrel, 55 cents per barrel.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would ask the Minister of Finance whether these duties on oranges and lemons might not be abolished. They are really no protection to any industry in this country. They cannot be imposed for that purpose. They are of no consequence as matters of revenue, and are of very considerable consequence as contributing to the health and comfort of the population. In fact they are coming more and more into use, and are becoming more and more necessities of life to the entire population; and it does seem to me that this is one matter about which we might agree, and the hon. the Minister of Finance might, without any detriment to the revenue, and without in any way impairing the policy upon which he has entered, repeal this tax. The hon. gentleman is himself a physician, and he knows how largely the general consumption of these fruits contributes to the general health of the population, and he might confer upon the people of the country generally an important service here, and do no damage or violence to the policy to which he and the Government are committed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I recognise the force of what my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has said, but I am afraid that I can hardly afford to give up the revenue upon that which is, after all, to a large extent, a luxury. There is no desire to increase the duty on this. This is done for the purpose of simplifying the tariff and making the administration of the Customs more equable and regular than it is under the present tariff. The change is not for the purpose of getting increased revenue, but the revenue derived from that source last year was $70,388. I think, when I mention that to my hon. friend, he will feel that there are other sources of revenue that it would be desirable to strike off before that one which he has proposed. There is no doubt that there is great force in what he has said, but, at the same time, these fruits are largely consumed by persons who are very well able to pay for them. I am afraid I must adhere to this proposal.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I fear the Finance Minister is slightly in error. I think the consumption of oranges is coming more and more into general use among the entire population, and whatever would contribute to cheapen them would be of general advantage to the community; and certainly with regard to lemons, the hon. gentleman knows how very beneficial they are to the health of the people.

Mr. BOWELL. The reason for making this change from the 20 per cent. duty to that which is now proposed—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am not objecting to the form.

Mr. BOWELL. It is to meet the difficulties which present themselves in regard to the consignments, especially from the Mediterranean. A large trade is growing up between Montreal and the Mediterranean ports in these fruits. Only the other day two large cargoes were sold in Montreal at public auction, at which sale, I am informed, were parties from the western States and from a number of the large centres of the United States, to whom were sold the most of them. They are consigned to people in Montreal at $3 and $4 per box; and lemons of what they term the November crop, when purchased by a merchant and perhaps brought in the same vessel, are invoiced at $9. Then the difficulty arises as to the actual value upon which the 20 per cent. should be collected. If you raise the value for duty upon the shipment, then we have to assume the highest price at which they are sold to the party who purchases and not to the consignee, and the result of that is constant difficulty and trouble with the importers. This is based upon what is supposed to be the average price. But I think it will realise a little larger revenue than we collected last year. As the Finance Minister says, we cannot afford to give up that revenue, it being virtually a revenue tax, and will produce about $80,000, I have no doubt, next year, and probably more if this trade, to which I have referred, increases.

Mr. DAVIES. The House will see that the Minister of Customs has not answered the point made by my hon. friend the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), but he has defended, more or less successfully, the change made in the tariff. Formerly it was 20 per cent. ad valorem, now he has made it specific. I suppose he alone is capable of judging properly whether the change is beneficial or not. I have nothing to say against it, and do not understand the question sufficiently well to judge. I will assume the change is all right. The question I put to the Minister is this: Whether, in view of the fact that these kinds of fruit cannot now be properly classed as luxuries at all, but really are almost necessities to our present existence, whether it is not an unwise policy to levy a heavy tax upon them. No one knows better than the Minister himself how largely these fruits are consumed by invalids in hospitals and poor people everywhere, and I cannot conceive anything more calculated in the wrong direction than a tax on an article of this kind which now enters into consumption by almost every family. I do think it would be a great public boon if fruits of this kind could be cheapened, and the $80,000 additional tax proposed to be levied upon these fruits could be shifted and the amount raised from some other articles. I think the Minister might well consider the suggestion, and I believe it would meet with the general approval of both sides of this House. It protects no industry in this country; fruit is not a luxury in the sense in which the word is generally used, and I think it would be a move in the right direction if the tax was taken off altogether.

Paper, tarred, a specific duty of one-half cent per pound.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is not for the purpose of obtaining a revenue. The present duty is 25 per cent., and this is estimated to be the same.

Mr. WATSON. This is another article which is not a luxury at all, but is a necessity. I come from a Province where this material is used in the construction of buildings. Almost every building in the North-West is covered with tar paper, and I expected that the Government would take the duty off this article altogether. If the duty was taken off this article, along with some other materials used in building in the North-West, it would encourage people to go into that country and build more valuable houses at a less cost than they are paying now.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no increase of duty.

Mr. WATSON. I know there is no increase, but there should have been a decrease. If the Government wishes to assist the manufacturers of tar paper, I suggest they take the duty off tar and leave to the manufacturers the natural advantages they now possess in manufacturing this paper, but do not compel the people in the North-West to pay even the first duty.

Axes, chopping axes, a specific duty of $2 per doz., and 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the duty now?

Mr. BOWELL. 30 per cent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to change that so that it will read: "Axes of all kinds, adzes, hatchets and hammers not elsewhere specified, 35 per cent. ad valorem." This is an increase of five per cent. over the present duty. There is no specific duty.

Mr. CASEY. I think the absence of this specific duty takes away a great part of the objection to this, but it is a direct tax upon industry in all respects.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have increased the cost of the iron.

Mr. CASEY. Does the hon. gentleman think he can get this five per cent. on something else?

Mr. DAVIES. Under what acts do axes come in the Customs Act?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is item 406 in the old tariff. Axes of all kinds are there.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Finance Minister bases this upon the assumption that he has increased the tax upon the raw material, that is, on the iron and steel?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Of course, then, we are to understand that the hon. gentleman persists in that increased tax on iron and steel?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to carry the resolutions now before the House if I can.

Broad and ship axes, adzes, and hammers weighing 10 pounds and over, a specific duty of $3 per dozen, and 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to change that item so as to read—

Picks, mattocks, blacksmith's hammers, sledges, track tools, wedges and crowbars of iron or steel, $1 per dozen, and 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why does not the hon. gentleman propose an ad valorem duty alone? What is the reason he makes it a specific as well as an ad valorem duty?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This will be equal to about 35 per cent. on tools worth 10 cents per pound.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why not place the duty at 35 per cent., which will simplify the matter very much.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have had a good deal of difficulty in getting this classification into such a shape as to meet the case all round, and this is the best I can do.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Although the hon. gentleman has become enlightened, we are left in the dark. It is very desirable he should present to our minds the information which satisfies him that this mode is the most convenient one of taxing these particular articles. It would appear at first blush to be a very convenient way to impose a specific as well as an ad valorem duty, where it can possibly be avoided.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The tendency is all the other way. It prevents under-valuation, and affords a better protection to labor.

Mr. MALLORY. I cannot see how it is going to affect under-valuation. The valuation has to take place in order that a duty shall be collected in the first place, and the simple addition of an extra duty of so much per pound cannot affect the valuation of the article. If the hon. gentleman can explain how the addition of one cent per pound can have any effect on the valuation, I should like to hear it. A proper valuation has taken place on an article for the purposes of duty in any case.

Axles and springs, one cent per pound, and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to change resolution 61 to read as follows:

Axles and springs of iron or steel, or steel parts thereof, axle bars, axle blanks or forgings for carriages, other than railway and tramway vehicles, without regard to stage of manufacture, one cent per pound and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

The old duty was 25 per cent.; the new duty is equal to 35 per cent. on the value, at 14 cents per pound. I have incorporated in this section part of 98.

Mr. CHARLTON. The specific duty of one cent per pound will amount to more than the ad valorem duty of five cents. The cost of the article will not be 14 cents, but nearer to 10 cents, making the duty about 40 per cent.

Hoes, garden rakes, &c., five cents each and 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to change No. 62 to read as follows:

Mr. CASEY.

Hoes, garden rakes, two and three prong forks of all kinds, five cents each and 25 per cent. ad valorem.

The old duty was 35 per cent.; the new duty is equal to 35 per cent. on a value of $6 per dozen.

Mr. CHARLTON. Here is another illustration of the unequal manner in which a specific duty works. This specific duty of five cents may amount to 100 per cent. on a low grade of garden rakes—they are imported at about 60 cents per dozen—beside the ad valorem duty.

Mr. CASEY. The duty proposed will be equal to 75 per cent. on the average, as I am informed by a large wholesale dealer in London. I find by my personal experience in the use of the articles, and by the universal testimony of all wholesale hardware men dealing in Canadian and American goods, that the effect of the high duty has been not so much to put up the price as to reduce the quality. Our manufacturers have found themselves compelled to sell at somewhere about the same prices that formerly prevailed. But they have reduced the quality, so that now Canadian spades, shovels, rakes, hoes, or other implements are not nearly so good as the American article of the same class. Any wholesale dealer will express similar opinions, except before elections. The change from ad valorem to specific will increase this tendency, and as the manufacturers are bound to get a profit somewhere, and as they do not want to raise the price, they will reduce the quality still further; and while ten or fifteen years ago Canadian manufactured articles were almost as good as American and in some cases better, now they are very remarkably worse.

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Mr. CASEY. I say that they are worse than American tools of the same sort. That feature of the case will grow worse by the change which the hon. gentleman has made. I protest—though of course it will be an unavailing protest—in the name of my own class, in the name of those who principally use these articles, that is the agricultural class—I protest in their name against such a state of things. They are not permitted to buy good tools for agricultural purposes at former prices. They are compelled for the benefit of a very few establishments—three or four, I think, altogether—to use inferior implements at slightly higher prices than before—not so much higher, because, as I said before, the change is in the quality rather than in the price.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. Competition in the country will always keep these prices down. The hon. gentleman has already said so.

Mr. CASEY. It keeps down the quality.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say that the fact of that competition will raise the quality. The very fact that there is this great competition in relation to an article, will always put the price down and improve the quality, because the maker knows that if he makes an article of a better description than any other maker, at the same price, he will get the sale. Besides, this is one of the articles in which the competition from prison labor comes into this country, and for that reason it is not desirable to place it at too low a rate. I am certain that there will be no difficulty so far as these articles are concerned.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman talks theory, but I talk the facts. I know as a matter of fact that, while the competition has kept down the prices to a considerable extent, it has depreciated the quality, just because it is not free, open, healthy competition, but competition within a ring fence, so to speak. They cannot afford to make as good an article as before the National Policy was introduced, because the price of the raw material has increased. It is to be increased again, and that will still further depreciate the quality of the metal they put into these agricultural tools, in order to get even with the increased cost of the raw material. As for the prison labor argument, it is played out; it will not work any more, because the law prohibits the importation of prison made articles.

Mr. TAYLOR. How are you going to keep out prison made goods?

Mr. CASEY. It is not for me to explain how. That is the duty of the Government. They passed the Act, and it is for them to find out how to enforce the law. I think the Minister of Customs is capable of enforcing it, and that he will see the importance of enforcing it. The mere fact that we have had to increase, even to this extent, the duty on this article, after increasing the duty on the raw material, should show everybody how in every case the payment of the duty ultimately comes down upon the consumer of the manufactured article. You cannot give a protection to the manufacture of pig iron, without increasing the cost of raw material to the manufacturer of every hoe, rake, and shovel that is made in the country, and without, therefore, increasing the cost or depreciating the quality of every one of these articles to the consumer. You cannot tax any single article of raw material imported into the country without filtering that tax down to the final consumer.

Mr. WELSH. I wish to ask the Minister of Finance what he supposes the duty will be on a pitchfork. I have figured it up in a rough way, and I fancy the duty on a fork, or a shovel, will amount to something like from 34 to 40 cents.

Mr. MITCHELL. How many prongs.

Mr. WELSH. Two or three, whichever you like, and a rake at the back of it. I want that point explained.

Mr. CLAYES. I think my hon. friend is mistaken when he says that the effect of the duty is to produce poorer goods, because the quality of the goods has been very materially improved. Though there are nominally three concerns which manufacture these goods, there are really only two, and they have been united and are practically in the hands of the same men. They are protected to the extent of 35 per cent. and yet with all the cunning they can put forth, even with this protection the Americans send these goods into the country, and sell them after paying the duty. They make their profit on the other side, and the wholesale men make theirs here, and yet they compete with us successfully. That is an illustration of the result of attempting to force the production of an article in a country which is not adapted to producing these things at a profit. The reason is this: Take forks, for instance; there is a special skill required to make forks of two, three or six tines; you will find a man devoting himself to two-tined forks alone. After a time he becomes so skilful that he can do the work for half what he could before, and after a time the work becomes automatic and requires the exercise of no mind whatever. Hence the production of these articles at very low prices.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would the hon. gentleman therefore advise us to abandon the manufacture of hoes, forks and articles of that class, and depend entirely for them upon another country?

Mr. CLAYES. The reply to that is, that after encouraging men to put money into these industries, it would be unfair and unjust to ruin them. It is only by degrees that we can get rid of the system, and that really illustrates the position of Mr. Blake upon this question. He recognised the necessity of accepting that which we cannot justly avoid. But at the same time it would have been infinitely better for us if, under a free trade system, we could have allowed the farmers of this country to buy those goods where they can buy them cheapest. We should always remember that, by buying in that way, by exchanging the products of our labor for the products of foreign labor, these articles would be as much the production of the labor of this country as if they were actually produced here, and that it is better to do so, especially if we are cunning enough to make something by the operation. And we intend by the exchange to make something. Hence it is that free trade everywhere has brought prosperity to the people who have adopted it.

Shovels and spades, $1 per doz. specific, and 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to change this item by substituting "shovels and spades, and shovel and spade blanks, $1 per doz. and 20 per cent. ad valorem." The shovel blanks are cut to shape, and these shapes require only to be struck in a die to be completed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Are these shovel blanks found in some other parts of the tariff, or are they an addition?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They are an addition.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the hon. gentleman in this item is retaining a form of specific taxation which he has abandoned elsewhere. He taxes by weight elsewhere, while here he taxes by number.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You could not very well tax shovels by weight.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). As well as hammers and axes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. What would the specific duty of $1 a dozen on shovel and spade blanks cut to shape amount to?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The duty is now 35 per cent., and this will be a small increase.

Mr. CHARLTON. I imagine that steel shovel and spade blanks would not cost over $2.50 or $3 a dozen, so that this duty would probably amount to 70 per cent. on that class of goods. The price of steel is very low, so that the steel cut into shape for shovels would not perhaps be more than one-third of the cost of the finished article with the handle.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This duty amounts to about 35 per cent. on the value of $6.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the hon. gentleman can give us the weight, perhaps we can judge of the amount of the taxation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. From four to eight pounds. They differ pretty much in weight.

Mr. CHARLTON. In the majority of cases I should say the weight would not be more than three pounds.

Mr. MITCHELL. The fact is that with regard to this tariff we are all in a fog. We really do not know what we are doing. This double system of a specific duty by weight and by number, and an ad valorem duty in addition, is just leaving this House at the mercy of the Treasury benches. They can put what taxes they like on the people and I protest against it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I must say my hon. friend is a little unfair. We have endeavored to make the calculation with the greatest care, and we give it to the House; and I say that according to this calculation, based on the best information we can get, we do not consider that in all of these items we are adding materially to the tariff. We have given all the information we can, and I am extremely sorry it is not more appreciated.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman says he is giving all the information he can. Almost every time he has given information, some gentleman conversant with the trade gets up and gives different information. For my part, if the Government are determined to vote whatever taxes they choose, I think their proper course was, in submitting this scheme, to come down with a separate column showing the difference of the two systems, what the duty was under the present tariff, and what it would amount to under this double-barrelled tariff.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We have done that in every case.

Mr. MITCHELL. I cannot see it. You have given us verbal explanations, and we are bound to pass these items in the dark. We are increasing the duties on the people to whom we must hold ourselves responsible, and we are unable to explain them.

Mr. JONES. Is the increase greater than the increase on iron?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, it is not any greater. It is on the same basis, except with regard to agricultural implements, on which we keep the duty below, not above.

Mr. JONES. As a matter of course, having increased the duty on iron, you are now increasing it on articles manufactured from iron in the same proportion.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to point out to the Finance Minister an inequality that exists in this duty. A specific duty of $1 a dozen is placed on shovels and spades that are completed, and the same duty is placed on shovel and spade blanks, which are essentially raw material, which will be imported into the country by manufacturers to be finished. A shovel or spade blank cannot amount to one-half of the value of the shovel or spade, and yet the specific duty is the same in each case. It is a discrimination against the manufacturer who wishes to make shovels.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That will be corrected by the ad valorem duty.

Mr. TAYLOR. I may say that shovels and spades are made largely in the town where I reside, as well as in many other towns in Canada, and I have here specimens of two shovel blanks that have been manufactured in a foreign country and imported into this country. All they require to be completed are the handles. I may say that these goods are selling to-day at five per cent. less than they were six or eight years ago.

Mr. JONES. Iron is cheaper; that is no argument.

Mr. TAYLOR. These are not iron, they are steel. Nevertheless, that is the fact, that the farmers of this country are getting these goods to-day at a less price than they did previously, owing to the National Policy.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, I was surprised to hear the hon. member for West Elgin state that the goods manufactured in Canada were not as good as those manufactured in the United States. The great trouble in the shovel industry in this country is the importation of prison made goods. These goods are made in the prisons of the United States and sold to the hardware trade in the United States. These hardware men, by some way of their own, get a certificate saying no part of the goods were made in the prisons, and our Customs officers are bound to accept those certificates. Notwithstanding such declaration, I believe, from the best information I can get, that these goods are produced in the United States prisons. There is no mark on the goods, so that unless you can get admission into the prisons and follow the goods up to the hardware merchants, you cannot tell that they are penitentiary goods.

Mr. MITCHELL. Better do that than put on a duty.

Mr. TAYLOR. The farmers are not suffering, and the question is whether we are going to allow the labor of Canada to produce these goods or the prisons of the United States. We can only do the former by putting on a duty that will keep the trade to our own manufactures.

Mr. MITCHELL.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman tells us we can get these articles cheaper to-day than we could ten or twelve years ago. He is simply insulting the intelligence of the House in so arguing, because he keeps back the important information that the material from which these articles are manufactured was never so cheap as it is to-day. Why increase the duty, if the price is not to be raised? The Minister of Finance will admit that if the duty, which is to be 35 per cent., be taken off, the goods would be so much cheaper, every five per cent. he puts on makes the goods so much dearer to the people. I can see no use, therefore, in arguing about every article, for we must accept as the principle of the tariff, that it is intended to make the goods dearer to the purchaser.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. JONES. Hon. gentlemen say "no". They must have a very indistinct appreciation of the effects of the tariff on the price of an article, if they maintain that the price is not affected by the duty imposed. If it be not affected, then take the duty off. I say, therefore, that instead of discussing these various items, we might just take the general principle that what the Government are aiming at is to get $500,000 more to waste, as they have wasted the revenues of last year. The Government took $500,000 out of us last year by a change in the sugar duties, and they are now proposing to take another $500,000 from us to-day by changes which will make the articles affected dearer to the extent of those changes. Hon. gentlemen must see that is the principle the Government are aiming at, and therefore all the articles affected are intended to be made dearer to the farmers who have to buy them.

Mr. BOWELL. Has the hon. gentleman made a calculation to show whether the prices to-day are relatively dearer, considering the price of steel in 1879, when the tariff was put on? Unless he can show that, his argument is useless. The hon. gentleman referred also to the sugar duties and to the fact that we collected more revenue this year than we did last year under the system which now prevails. I take it the statement made by the hon. gentleman with reference to sugar is quite correct, but he must bear in mind the tariff was made in the interest of the city he represents, and not only at the instigation but at the earnest solicitations of those interested in that particular industry, and in the West India trade. If you will take the prices of sugar, taking that as an argument, with the other—I have not made the other calculations and consequently do not speak positively on that point, but taking the relative value of raw sugar in 1869 under the old tariff and the value of it to-day, and the prices at which it is sold, the consumer to-day pays less relatively than he did in 1869 under the old tariff. I have made the calculation, and am positive that what I say is correct.

Mr. JONES. I think it rests with the Government to prove that these articles are relatively cheaper as compared with the raw material than they were at the time to which the Minister of Finance refers. That is the proof the Minister of Finance should give the House before asking us to adopt the change which is very important, and will bear heavily on the farmers and people generally. With reference to the sugar tariff, the hon. gentleman said that was made in the interest of the trade of Halifax and the West India Trade. I admit frankly we recommended that change but not on the basis which the Government adopted. We only recommended the principle, and, of course, we did not go to the Government to recommend the basis on which that duty was to be fixed. We pointed out that the mode of collecting duties on sugar was unsatisfactory; we knew there were irregularities going on in certain ports of the Dominion, and I was one of those who urged the importance of changing the principle upon which the duties were levied, but, the hon. gentleman will admit that the principles they adopted in fixing the minimum at which the polariscope test was to be applied, made the duty on sugar 30 cents per 100 pounds more than it was under the old tariff. This duty of 30 cents on our consumption last year of 200,000,000 pounds made $600,000 which the Government took out of the consumers last year more than they would have had the change not been made. If the Government were to reduce the tariff on sugar to-day, the sugar would be that much cheaper. Go to England where there is no duty, and you will buy a very good article at retail for a penny or a penny-halfpenny per pound. The same principle applies to sugar that applies to other things, the more you advance the tariff the more you increase the price. That is the principle we should recognise in discussing the tariff, instead of going into all the details. I am disposed to let them take the whole tariff and deal with it as they like, only I protest against the principle these hon. gentlemen recommend for our adoption. I protest against it in the interests of our consumers. It is intended to foster and protect every little industry throughout the country. I know that in the Maritime Provinces, whenever an article was imported that was found to interfere with some small manufactory in Ontario or in the west, up went the duty, by an Order in Council very generally.

Mr. BOWELL. No, no.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman says "No." I can tell him that tar paper was introduced for some time at five per cent. ad valorem, but it was found to interfere with some paper manufacturers in Ontario, and by Order in Council they put the duty up to 25 per cent.

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Mr. JONES. Well, it amounted to the same thing. It may have been by a different classification. People in Halifax asked what was the duty on tickets which they had printed for steamboats and railroads. They sent to England for them, and brought them out. They were told the duty was 30 per cent., but when they brought them out the duty was 110 per cent. And why? Because, before that, they had come to be printed at the office of the Montreal Gazette, and that had to be protected. So with regard to everyone of these items, the moment they are found to interfere with some vested right or something which is supposed to be a vested right in Ontario, or is in some part here in the west, up comes a new regulation from the Customs Department, either an Order in Council or a new classification, I do not know which, and the whole basis of the duty is changed. I contend that my statement is sound, that these gentlemen, in changing the tariff now, are carrying out a principle which is going to take more money out of the consumers of the country in order to benefit the manufacturers; and the higher they put the duty up, barring all the smuggling that may take place, the more the people will have to pay and the more money will go into the pockets of the manufacturers.

Mr. ELLIS. With reference to the duty on sugar, I may say that in the last week of April the selling price of wheat in Montreal was 92 cents to 94 cents per bushel. On the same date, the price in London was 7s. 2d. per 100 pounds, equal to $1.03 for the bushel of 60 pounds. The actual value in Montreal and in London would be about the same, and you may allow 10 cents for the freight. Suppose the farmer wanted to exchange his wheat for granulated sugar. That article was quoted at 15s. to 16s. per 100 pounds in England, equal to 3½ cents a pound, while the wholesale price in the Montreal market at the same date was, according to the Montreal Trade Review, 6½ cents to 6¾ cents, but I will put it at six cents. The seller could, therefore, exchange his wheat in London for 260 pounds of granulated sugar, while all he could exchange it for in Montreal was 155 pounds. It is urged by hon. gentlemen on the other side that things are as cheap or cheaper now than they were. I believe the real explanation of the fact that goods are cheaper, is that the price of gold is higher. The price of gold has risen all over the world, and where it affects the workingman and the laborer is that he has to give more time to earn the gold than he had before, so that the burden falls upon the workingman in the end. He is no better off than he was, and the addition of the duties makes him so much the worse off. I have said nothing in regard to the duties on axes and these other articles, but certainly the Minister has added to the taxation of almost every tool used in the Province of New Brunswick in the production of our staple articles of trade.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think it is about time we heard the last of the importation of prison labor from the United States being the cause of all these advances, or that we had an admission from the Minister of Customs, when he took the glory to himself amid the applause of his followers, which we can almost hear now, when he took the credit and they gave him the credit for having excluded the result of that labor by Act of Parliament—either he must abandon that as an argument, or he must candidly confess that he has put a clause on the Statute-book, for which he took the greatest amount of credit, which has been a perfect dead letter, which he has not carried out, which he has been unable to carry out. That prohibitory clause is on the Statute-book to-day. They claimed credit for that. They take great credit for that, they claim great credit for that from the workingmen of the country for doing so. To-day we are told by a great many members that it is a dead letter, that it has accomplished nothing of what was expected, but that it has greatly enhanced the tax upon imports. A word or two with reference to the price of sugar. I understood the hon. gentleman stated that it was relatively cheaper than it was under the Cartwright tariff. If he only said that, he did not go the length of his colleagues. Before the last election, the hon. Minister of Justice stated that they had saved to the farmers of this country three and a half millions in the tax on tea, coffee and sugar, and the Minister of the Interior at Hamilton is reported to have said that we are getting our sugar a cent a pound cheaper than under the Cartwright tariff. Sir, we see these statements made by men occupying positions of trust and of honor, gentlemen going through the country with the avowed purpose of enlightening the electors, of stating to them what are the facts. Sometimes we wonder how it is that there are a great many people who believe what the hon. gentlemen tell them, and therefore I say it is the bounden duty of the hon. gentlemen, as honest and honorable men, when they have an audience looking up to them and believing implicitly in their words, that they should tell them the truth when they are discussing this question. Now, let us see what are the facts of the case in reference to this sugar duty. It is not a question of veracity as between myself and the Minister of Customs. It is simply an experiment that every independent member of this House can apply for himself. Go to the New York Herald for quotations of granulated sugar, and from that go to the Montreal Journal of Commerce and take the Montreal quotations. Do not ask the Minister of Customs for it; do not ask the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright); ascertain for yourselves, and what will you find? You will find that what I did, that at the very time these gentlemen were telling that story, the papers declared that granulated sugar was $6 per 100 pounds in Montreal. There is a discount of 2½ per cent. off for cash, net price in Montreal $5.85 per 100 pounds, and at the same time the price in New York was $5.75 per 100 pounds. Take off a drawback of $2.82 and you have the net price $2.93 per 100 pounds. How was it under the Cartwright tariff? That would be 25 per cent. and one cent per pound, or $1.73 for revenue, add that to the net price in New York and your granulated sugar will cost you under the Cartwright tariff $4.66, or $1.19 less per 100 pounds than Montreal sugar. Now, I say the fact that the people believe these hon. gentlemen on the platform, ought to induce them to try at any rate to state something near what the actual facts in the case are. It is the simplest thing in the world to ascertain the price of granulated sugar in New York; it is the simplest thing to ascertain that there is $2.82 of a drawback, and deduct that per 100 pounds from the long price in New York, and having found the net price in New York, it is the simplest thing to add the cent a pound specific duty and the 25 per cent. ad valorem. Any man can do that for himself. I pointed out to you that not only in this, but in many other instances I mentioned, these gentlemen were going through the country, explaining their policy and asking for a renewal of the confidence of the people, and obtaining that renewal of confidence, upon statements that will not bear discussion for a moment. I say here is a position in which they ought not to pride themselves. That is a result of the sugar business. How is it with many of their other duties? As the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has said, you are putting other changes in the tariff that will derange almost the whole current of trade in this country. You are doing that without the proper information that we ought to have. The Minister of Customs himself, with the knowledge he must have of this question, is only able to afford us the most meagre intelligence, and even that some of us have found to be inaccurate. So you are going on, adding to the volume of the taxation. Sir, there is this trouble I find in reference to this matter. I think before we get through with the manufactures of iron, the Finance Minister ought to give us an exhaustive statement upon that point. He did make an inflated balloon and sent it up into illimitable heights, and surveyed charcoal pits, blast furnaces and fields of iron all over the country. It was very pleasant to listen to him, but when he came down to the region of solid sense, I want him to tell us whether he expected that with the increase of duties he has placed upon the raw material, he will be able to supply the hundreds, if not thousands, of factories in this Dominion; and how soon there will be a supply of iron to meet the demand required by these different manufacturers. Then I would like him to give information with reference to the additional cost that will be thrown upon the different manufacturers that are engaged in all the different iron industries in this country, and they are very many. I think this information we ought to have; we ought to have it before we can enter upon a discussion of these iron items, and give them that consideration they ought to have. I think it is only a reasonable proposition. I have been told by those who think they know, that with the excessive duty he is placing upon the iron, it will almost ruin some parties in this country; as violent and sudden tariff changes will. A lack of permanence in the tariff, is one of the most disastrous things that can come upon a country. I have been told by some of these gentlemen that they question if, under this very excess of protection, he will be able to bring into existence what is required of raw material for the needs of this country. What are the benefits we are to get from this, and when are we to get them? What are the burdens to be imposed upon the people? How long are they to last? How long shall we go until we get relief from that home competition which he has promised to give us? At the present time there is only one industry in existence in this country, if I am rightly informed, and I do not know whether that is running or not. But over and above all that is this fact, which is stated to me by gentlemen engaged in the trade, that the ore that has been produced in Canada hitherto cannot be used alone, but it must be mixed with iron brought from other countries. There comes in another phase to the question. Then we come to agricultural implements which he leaves at 35 per cent., a new tax that we put on because these gentlemen urged it was necessary for the protection of men engaged in that industry. Well, if it was necessary before I suppose it is necessary now, but when you increase the duty on their raw material, its effect, so far as the manufacture is concerned, is to take away from him the advantage that he had before, but he makes no more profit than before. He must either cut the price of labor or he must cut his profits in some way, and if he does not do that, if he is only living now, and getting a fair thing, as the Minister of Finance and other gentlemen are bound to believe, it follows the Government are doing an unjust thing when they come and take off the only advantage he has, and the result of the whole is that the consumer must pay more for his goods. It is believed by many that 35 per cent. on agricultural implements is a very heavy tax on the farming community at this time. It is a very complicated question, and I think these radical changes that are being initiated by the Minister, in reference to the iron industry, will bring up the whole subject of this tariff, and lead many men to think upon it in all its phases, who have, perhaps, not given it as much attention as they ought to have done. I think that in order to discuss intelligently these different iron items, we should have the information that I have asked for in reference to the points I have stated.

Mr. PATTERSON (Brant).

Mr. BOWELL. I suppose the hon. gentleman knows that ores are all free.

Mr. BROWN. I may be allowed to occupy the time of the House for a few moments in reply to the hon. gentleman's remark on the question of sugar. I have before me, a prediction which was made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), when the country adopted the National Policy in 1879, which I will read:

"You have excluded the best sugars of every class, whether raw or refined. You have made special provision for refining here inferior yellow sugars. You have specially provided that your people shall have an inferior article at a high rate, and you have provided for dividends of 10 per cent. a month upon capital invested in the business. Redpath's refinery at Montreal will, if put in operation, refine 60,000,000 pounds a year. Its capacity may be easily doubled. With your limited market you provide for a monopoly."

The hon. gentleman then predicted, first and foremost, that the tariff was providing and preparing the way for the refining of inferior sugar and offering to the people an inferior article, that that was to be the result of the tariff then proposed and carried through Parliament; and, further that the result would be a monopoly, and that we would be all at the mercy of this one refinery, giving us a poor sugar and charging a high price for it. I am prepared to stand here and challenge the disputation of the assertion which I make that, not only is the prediction there made unfulfilled, but the very opposite is the case, and we have to-day the best and the purest sugar offered to the people of Canada that is produced in the world; and more than that, there is no monopoly. The tariff passed by Parliament in 1879 produced the effect which we as protectionists claimed would be the effect, always of creating competition. Instead of one refinery, we have now five refineries in the country, and, taking the duty which is paid on the raw material off the price which the consumer gets the sugar for, I assert that there is no country in the world that gets sugar as cheaply as the people of Canada. If hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House had the courage to assert their convictions, they would say so, and, if they are ignorant of it, their wives are not ignorant of it; those who take charge of the household affairs know that they can buy their sugar cheaper than they ever did before and can get better quality. When the hon. member for Bothwell made his wonderful prediction that this country would be flooded with inferior sugar as the result of the tariff, I ask hon. gentlemen what they think of the predictions of some hon. gentlemen to-night, when they are predicting all sorts of calamities, if they are weighed in the same balance as the predictions which were made in 1879. The same statement was made in regard to cotton. It was stated then that the people were to be taxed the 28 per cent. which was placed upon cotton. What is the position of matters to-day? Is it not a fact that, in consequence of the competition created by the tariff, you can get cotton a great deal cheaper than ever before, and yet they said the people were to be taxed 28 per cent. At the time this statement was made, while not a member of the House I read the proceedings of the House. When the statement was made by hon. gentlemen opposite as to the folly of the Government in taking the course they did with regard to sugar, and it was also alleged that, not only would there be this high price to the consumer, but the Government would get no revenue. I think that I am safe in saying that to-day not only are the people supplied with a good wholesome cheap sugar, but, taking the duties which are collected on sugar, notwithstanding the predictions of hon. gentlemen opposite that no revenue would be collected and things would come to a general smash up and collapse, we are collecting more revenue than at the time the tariff was passed, and are employing the labor of our own people. We are giving labor to our own people. What was our position in relation to sugar at the time the tariff was passed; what was the position of Canada in regard to getting the article from the direct market? At the time we passed the National Policy we were receiving only 6 per cent. of our raw sugar from the market of its production, and now we receive 89 per cent. This means saving all the profits of the middlemen. If there is one thing more than any other for which the Government deserve the gratitude of the people, it is for their policy in respect to sugar. Hon. gentlemen opposite know as well as I can tell them that the people who are the best judges of this question, because they are the consumers, and they know the difference in the cost between days gone-by and the present time, hold this opinion, and I think the best evidence of this is that the predictions in which hon. gentlemen opposite indulged in 1879 proved false. If I had time to read those predictions they would show that they declared that the present Conservative party would receive their reward. They went to the polls. The people rewarded them by sending them back here. Hon. gentlemen opposite again declared that this very heavy tariff taxation would seal their doom, that it had signed their death warrant; according to one hon. gentleman opposite they were going, like Nebuchadnezzar, to eat grass like an ox because of their sins and iniquities. But these hon. gentlemen are here still, and they are not eating grass like an ox; but to all appearances, so deep a root have they taken in the hearts of the people, they will remain in power for long years to come.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman says that the party of the Government, after having inaugurated the National Policy with respect to cotton and sugar, went to the country and were triumphantly sustained. They were sustained, undoubtedly, but they were sustained by such misrepresentations as the hon. gentleman made here to-night. When the Minister of Marine and Fisheries came to Halifax and held a meeting there, he, speaking with all the influence and position of a Minister of the Crown, declared the net public debt of Canada the day he spoke was $196,000,000. No later than last week or the week before last, in reply to an enquiry made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), the Government were obliged to admit that on that date the net debt was $225,000,000, just $29,000,000 more than the Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated to the people of Halifax during the elections. The hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat has spoken with reference to sugar. There were never more misrepresentations on any public question than have been made with reference to the position of sugar. That sugar is cheaper to-day no one denies.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. JONES. Why, yes. That cotton is cheaper to-day, no one denies. That, unfortunately, wheat and barley are cheaper to-day no one denies. I do not hear hon. gentlemen cheering that sentiment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. JONES. Yes. But when the hon. gentleman says that sugar is cheaper to-day, he forgets to state to the House, as he should have stated if he wished to be true and honest with it, that the price of raw sugar to-day as compared with the time to which he has referred is just 50 per cent. cheaper. It was £20 per ton at that time and to-day it is about £10, a great deal of it is less, some being as low as £8 and £9. And therefore it would be only natural under any circumstances that sugar should be cheaper. It would have been much cheaper still if the Cartwright tariff were in operation; it would have been much less again if there had been no duty whatever. Hon. gentlemen opposite will admit that if they reduce the duty on sugar we would have it that much proportionately cheaper to-day, and that applies not only to sugar and cotton but to every article in the tariff which is naturally affected by the duties placed upon it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Brown) has said my hon. friend was in error in regard to his statement as to the prices of sugar in New York and Montreal. My hon. friend is quite correct. From what I know, and I am interested in sugar as much and probably more than any hon. gentleman in this House, and I am bound in my position as a representative to state the facts of this case, the facts are these: that during the whole time covered by the remarks of my hon. friend, granulated sugar could have been imported from New York at $4.75 per 100 lbs, while it was selling at Halifax and Montreal at from 5½ cents up to 6½ cents per lb. The hon. gentleman has only to refer to the New York Journal of Commerce, or to the New York Herald, where he will find granulated sugar quoted in bond less duty, and he has only to add the duty under the Mackenzie tariff to ascertain the facts of the case. That is the position in which the sugar question stands to-day. If hon. gentlemen opposite will only start on honest grounds, and admit, as they should admit when addressing an argument to this House, that the raw material is just half that it was at the time to which he referred, the whole force of his argument falls to the ground. With respect to the duty on iron which the Minister of Finance proposes to increase, I would like to ask him just one question: Does he remember that in all this tariff he is placing on the fishermen and the shipping interests of the Maritime Provinces increased burdens? Does he remember that every vessel, that every banker, every fisherman's boat that is fitted out by a fisherman for the pursuit of his industry, uses a large quantity of iron in construction. The hon. gentleman has given as his estimate that 264 pounds of iron is, pro rata, used throughout the Dominion, and he must remember that the use of iron for the construction of ships falls very heavily, indeed all, on all those engaged in that industry.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. So far as that is concerned, the Government has met the question of allowing everything that enters into a ship to be free by arranging for a drawback per ton, estimated on the amount of duties paid on articles going into the ship; and the same principle will be applied here. Whatever increased duty is involved in the construction of ships will be estimated in the same way as duties under the present tariff are.

Mr. JONES. The Minister of Finance will remember that the arrangement to which he refers only applies to large ships; it never applied to any of the smaller ships engaged in the West Indian or the fishing trade. There was never a drawback of one cent allowed for iron entering into the construction of any small vessel in Nova Scotia. If the Postmaster General built a large ship he got his drawback on the iron going into its construction; but if I or any other man interested in the West Indian trade or the shipping business, built a vessel for such trade, we would not get one cent of drawback.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It applies to all registered vessels.

Mr. JONES. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. He will find on reference to it, that he is laboring under an erroneous impression. I am not surprised at this duty on iron being increased. I remember that during the late elections the hon. Postmaster General, in his election campaign, and particularly at the little village of Londonderry, where those mines are situated, told the people—nearly half the houses in this place are closed: if the Government are defeated every house here will be closed, and the mines shut up; but if the Government are sustained, I know a company who will immediately reorganise the Acadia works, and go on and extend them to a greater extent than before. The moment the hon. Finance Minister brought down his tariff, with an increased duty on iron, my colleague from Halifax, in pursuance of an arrangement which of course had been made before, introduced a Bill to reorganise the Londonderry iron works. Now there is a company which began work before Confederation, a company that up to the time of the Mackenzie Government were in power worked successfully, a company that only got into trouble under the National Policy, a company that has been fostered by carrying coal to Londonderry, a distance of sixty miles, for 25 cents per ton, a company which has a bonus of $1.50 on their production, and now they come down and ask for an additional protection of $2 a ton. But, with all this, I am very much afraid that the Londonderry mines will be in the future, what they have been in the past, unsuccessful. I regret it very much; it is no source of gratification to me; on the contrary, I should like to see a large enterprise like that, in which so much money has been invested, succeed. But I have no hopes that, under the arrangement now proposed, they will be successful. And the hon. gentleman will see how unfairly this increased duty on iron will fall on the small vessels and the fishing interests of Nova Scotia; and in addition to that, he is going, by this tariff, to increase every article which enters into their daily use or consumption. I think the hon. gentleman has not kept that properly in view, because he must remember that these fishermen can only follow their natural pursuits by constructing these vessels. These vessels require a large quantity of iron to make them, making them so much more expensive, and they will be made all the more expensive by the tariff which the hon. gentleman proposes to-night. In addition to that, everything they require in the daily pursuit of their calling, is rendered just that much dearer to them. I think the hon. gentleman is doing a great injustice to his native Province, and that he does not fully realise the character of the changes he proposes.

Mr. McKEEN. The iron question has been so ably and exhaustively discussed by the hon. the Finance Minister, in his comprehensive budget scheme, that perhaps any remarks from me, or from any one, on this subject might appear unnecessary. But, Sir, representing as I do a county in which these industries are largely developed, in which we have large coal and iron deposits, when a measure of this nature is brought before the House, I would fail in my duty to my constituents did I not raise my voice in advocacy of any measure having for its object the benefit of their interests. I may say, Sir, that I represent a county that has supported the National Policy from its first inception, a county which has believed in that policy. The electorate of that county have always believed that the principles of the National Policy had for their object the development of all those industries which tend to the advancement of any country, industries such as iron and coal for instance. And, Sir, believing this they have always upheld that policy, and judging from the result of the unequal contest in which we have lately been engaged, when five Conservatives were opposed to two Liberals, and when two Ministerialists were triumphantly returned, you may see that the Conservatives of that county have not lost their belief in the National Policy. I may say, further, that we may justly lay claim to the high distinction of being the banner National Policy county in the Dominion. Our attention was drawn the other night to those countries which have adopted protection, and the rapid advancement that has been made in the iron industries of such countries as France, Belgium and Germany, as well as the United States. We were shown more fully than I have the time or ability to mention to-night, the immense progress that was made in the United States in the development of this trade; but I will venture, without wishing to tire the House, to draw attention to what has been done in that country since the adoption of the duty on iron in 1861. When that tariff was imposed an immense forward impulse was given to the trade. The total pig iron production in that year was 731,444 tons. But in the short space of three years, that is in 1864, the production went up to 1,135,996 tons. In the next four years, that is up to 1868, the production reached 1,603,000 tons; and in 1872 it had attained the enormous output of 2,854,558 tons. In the next four years, up to 1873, and from that to 1876 inclusive, the yearly average production was 2,500,000 tons. Without, however, wearying the House with too long an array of figures, let us come down at once to 1885 and 1886, and we find the same marvellous increase of production going on. In 1881 the product was 4,295,414 tons. In 1885 the pig iron product of the United States reached 4,529,869 tons; and in 1886 the production reached the enormous output of 5,581,246 tons. Now these figures show in one year an increase of 38 per cent. from 1885 to 1886. The value of iron and steel exports of the United States in 1881 was $15,000,000, exclusive of locomotives and engines, against the small amount of $5,366,279 in 1875, six years previously. In 1874 the number of blast furnaces in operation in that country was 735, with a producing capacity of 4,500,000 tons per annum. In 1875 we find that the number of these furnaces had largely increased. These were divided as follows, according to the fuel used:—Using anthracite, 229 furnaces; charcoal, 322; bituminous coal and coke, 184; total, 735. In treating of this subject in his history of the "Industries of the United States," Bowles says:

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

"A fresh development was given to the blast furnace business by the war, and the tariff of 1861."

In looking over this record of the enormous development of the iron industry of the United States, I do not suppose anyone would presume to say that it is not largely, in fact almost entirely, due to the protective tariff that was adopted by the Government of that country. We remember the prophecies and criticisms that were made on this policy at that time. It was contended by many free traders and others that the United States Government were adopting a policy that would prove detrimental and eventually ruinous to the trade and industries of that country. But after an experience of 25 years we find American statesmen just as firmly wedded to the policy of protection as they were when that period began. We find them to-day jealously guarding that policy. The fate of the Morrison Tariff Bill last year is fresh in the minds of us all. Mr. Morrison brought a Bill into Congress for the free admission of coal, and some other staple articles. We all know how that Bill was thrown out, and we also know that when Mr. Morrison went back to the people for re-election he was defeated; and one of the leading statesmen of the United States, who was interviewed as to the cause of his defeat, said that Mr. Morrison was down on the Tariff Bill, that the country was not prepared for any change in the tariff, that they were bound to hold to the policy of protection as they had done in the past. Under these circumstances, I do not see how the people of the United States can be commiserated as they have been by hon. gentlemen opposite on their protective policy, or how it can be said that they want to get rid of that policy. It is one of the things that have bound that country together, and it is holding them firmly together now. There is no country in the world so prosperous as the United States. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) held up the United States the other day as an example of great prosperity, telling us how rapidly they were paying off their debt; and yet some hon. gentlemen opposite to-day try to commiserate that country as being the victim of protection. Now, I will call the attention of the House to the progress that has been made in the development of the rolling mill industries of the United States. Previous to 1861 rolled iron of every description was nearly all imported, railroad bars exclusively so; but from the introduction of the tariff of 1861 onward, rolling mills multiplied in the United States. In 1873, 12 years after the introduction of the protective tariff, the rolling mills of that country numbered 310, with a capacity of 2,833 tons. In 1876 the number of mills was 330, with a capacity of 3,000,000 annual production. The actual production was in round numbers 2,000,000, valued at $190,000,000. Now, Sir, these products consist of sheet iron, boiler plate iron, ship plates, rods, hoops, rails, bridging, &c. One of these mills deserves special mention as showing the extraordinarily rapid development of the rolling iron industries following the introduction of the protective tariff of 1861, and subsequent tariffs, that is, the Cambrian Iron Works, of Johnstown, Pa., which in 1879 employed 7,000 men and spent $10,000,000 annually for wages and material. Of the 310 rolling mills in the United States in 1873, Pennsylvania headed the list with 118 mills. Then followed Ohio and New York in point of numbers. In these states, particularly in the first named, the coal and iron deposits lie in close proximity to each other, the precise condition of matters in relation to these greatest of wealth producing minerals in the Island of Cape Breton, where coal, iron, copper and limestone are found side by side. Had I more time I could go into statistics to show that the iron industry of the United States has so advanced that to-day it is the greatest iron producing country in the world owing to the protection afforded it by the Government of the country. We were told by the hon. Minister of Finance in his speech, and I was pleased to hear it, that America to-day takes the lead of all the iron producing countries in the world—that it regulates the prices of iron not only on this continent, but in Europe and elsewhere; and that is a fact that ought to encourage the Government of Canada in carrying out the policy they propose of protecting our iron industry. Now, let us consider the progress of steel manufactures in the United States. It was not until 1872, some ten years after the imposition of the American tariff that the manufacture of steel rails was begun in the United States. Up to that time whatever steel rails were used in that country were imported. During that year, however, 94,000 tons of Bessemer steel rails were made, and henceforth that branch of the iron industry went forward with wonderful rapidity. Thus, as just said, in the first year of operations, 1872, the production was 94,000 tons; in 1873, 129,000 tons, 1874; 145,000 tons; in 1875, 300,000 tons; in 1876, 400,000 tons; in 1877, 420,000 tons; and in 1878, so rapid and enormous was the increase of this industry that the production reached the enormous amount of 500,000 tons. Up to this last date the United States had been making steel rails for only eight years, whilst England which had for many years previous been engaged in this manufactory, with all her improved appliances of centuries of development in greatest iron works of the world, produced in the year 1878, only 200,000 tons of Bessemer steel rails in excess of that of the United States, that is to say, for Great Britain, a total of 700,000 tons, which is about the present production. But it is further most worthy of note that the United States added to the employment of their population and to the profitable employment of an enormous capital to this extent, but that they moreover saved to the nation and added to its wealth by largely reducing the price that would have been paid to foreign manufacturers in the absence of the home production. In 1872, at the commencement of the industry, the United States paid for their steel rails, all of which were imported, at the rate of $115 per ton. But in 1878, in consequence of the increase of production and the greater facilities provided by an enormous demand, Bessemer steel rails sold at $43 per ton. This is certainly a direct and emphatic contradiction of the theory that protection ruins industry and increases prices to the consumers. I merely state these facts, which I have very hurriedly culled from the trade returns of United States, to show that with proper protection we have every reason to hope that our iron industry may attain to the same great proportions, as far as population is concerned, as that of the United States. There is no reason why it should not. We have all the conditions and all the surroundings for making a success of this great industry. If you will allow me, Sir, I will refer for a few moments to the county which I have the honor to represent. In that county we have, on the authority of such men as Howe, Dawson, Gilpin and others, workable seams of very valuable iron ore. We have it on their authority that there are six or seven districts in our county,—in fact from its centre to its circumference—intersected with iron seams which can be utilised in the manufacture of iron. These seams vary in quantity and quality. We have the clay iron stone, the bog iron ore, magnelice iron ore, and the red hematite, all of which are good in their various qualities, more particularly the hematite, which, from analyses made by reliable persons, is found to be second to no other ore of the like nature in the world. We have these ores varying from 30 to 70 per cent. of pure metallic iron, and the seams vary from five to fifteen feet, lying at such angles that can be economically and profitably worked. Contiguous to those seams are the coal fields of the Sydney district, which have been written about by men whose reputation is beyond doubt. I might quote from the works of the late Mr. R. Brown, also from Dawson's Acadian Geology and from Gilpin's Mineralogy of Nova Scotia, and the reports of the Geological Survey of Canada, all of which go to prove that the coal fields of Sydney are unrivalled in extent, in quality of coal, and facilities for the successful operation of the same. We find this coal field extends along the eastern shore of Cape Breton for about thirty miles, that its average width is six miles, and that it contains six different seams with an aggregate thickness of solid coal of some 45 feet. We find this coal field contains an area of 200 square miles, and that the computation of the coal contained in it, reaches, not millions, but billions. I say this coal field is all in close proximity to the valuable iron ores I have been attempting to describe, and when we find that a radius of some ten miles from a given point in the peerless harbor of Sydney, which has been described by Admiral Bayfield as being second to no other harbor in the world, as being fit to accommodate the merchant marine of the world, embraces the principal portion of this coal field and these valuable iron ores. What conclusion can any sensible man arrive at, but that we have all the accommodation necessary for the building up of one of the most successful iron industries the continent has ever seen? Owing to the light angle at which these coal seams lie, which in no case exceed an inclination of some five degrees, they can be economically worked and the coal delivered at the high waters of Sydney harbor at a price which will compare favorably with that of any coal shipped from any part of the world. There is no part of the world where coal can be more economically or profitably worked than at the harbor of Sydney. I am proud to say we have the resources within our own borders of making our country a great country. All that we want is the protection that our Government, I am happy to say, has, even at this late hour, been pleased to afford us. To show you what confidence the people in our own county have in our iron and coal deposits the municipal council of the county to which I belong, voted some few years ago, in order to encourage any company to embark in the iron enterprise, $5,000 a year for twenty years out of the county's resources, as a bonus to any Company which would undertake to develop our iron industry. That shows our people have confidence in their own resources. We also offered to exempt the company from taxation, but owing to the want of communication, from which we suffered at that time, with the outside world, and owing to the high tariff in the United States and the low tariff in this country, it was difficult to persuade capitalists to embark in this enterprise. Another difficulty with which we had to contend in the development of our coal industry has been that during some three or four months of the year our coast is blocked up by ice, and we are shut out from all intercourse with the outside world; and I contend that in the developing of this iron industry we are going to afford an incomparable boon to the working class by enabling them to secure employment during what we call the close season, that is when navigation is impossible. If we are able to afford employment to our surplus population, if we are able to keep them in our own country and keep them from travelling to all parts of this continent, I say the Government of the country are affording an incalculable boon to the working class, and that in doing so they are going to add to the resources of our country. We are going to increase our population. I do not say that we are going to increase it by foreign immigration, for that I do not quite believe we have any need for; but for a number of years past we have been continually supplying the mines of the United States and British Columbia, and in fact of all the continent, with miners, and I am happy to be able to state that wherever Nova Scotians have gone they have been able to hold their own. We find them occupying positions of responsibilities and trust in every colony—I am safe in saying in every coal or iron work—where they have sought employment. This is one of the points that I maintain is going to be of immense advantage; this is one of the reasons why this protection to our coal industry is going to be of untold advantage to the mining population of our country; it is going to keep them within our borders, it is going to afford them employment in winter, and it is going to build up our industries. Our heritage is a valuable one, and if we only know how to appreciate it, to develop it, and to make the best use of it, there is no reason why we should not be able to occupy as proud a position in regard to the iron trade as our neighbors across the border. I have to express some little astonishment at the remarks which have been made by some of my hon. friends on the other side in regard to the policy of the Government in this matter. They must be sensible of the immense advantages which are likely to accrue to Nova Scotia through this policy. But, perhaps, after all, their opposition may not amount to as much as we might expect. We know that, when the National Policy was first promulgated and brought down, it met with the most strenuous opposition from the gentlemen on the opposite side, and I believe that it is only right to give them credit for sincerity in their opposition. I think they believed it was going to ruin our country; anyway, they held to that opinion; they held to it during the elections of 1882 and subsequently; but I was pleased to see that, during the recent contest in my own county, the Liberal candidate modified his opinion very much in regard to the ruinous effects of the National Policy. He even went so far as to tell the electorate of our county that the hon. the leader of the Opposition had practically endorsed the National Policy. He gave his reasons, it is true, that the country was so involved in debt that it would be necessary to continue the National Policy; but they even went further, they went so far as to say that they upheld the duty on coal. You know that about a year ago when an hon. gentleman in his place in this House moved that the duty be taken off coal and off flour, if I mistake not, that resolution was spoken to by the leader of the Opposition. These hon. gentlemen in their places in this House characterised that duty as a barbarous duty, as a most iniquitous duty, as a duty that should be immediately taken off and that should not be upheld for a single hour; but yet we found, during our election contest, that the leading Liberal candidate stated publicly, when addressing large mining centres in our county, that the leader of the Opposition had publicly said that he did not intend, if returned to power, to take the duty off coal. I am not prepared to make any statement as to the genuineness of this assertion, as far as the leader of the Opposition is concerned, but the party in our county stated that they had letters purporting to have come not only from the leader of the Opposition but also from the hon. the senior member for the county of Halifax (Mr. Jones) the recognised exponent of the Liberal party in Nova Scotia, stating that, under certain conditions, there was no doubt it would be necessary to modify their opinions in regard to the duty on coal, and possibly it might not be taken off. There were telegrams read on the hustings, and I presume they were not without some foundation. I heard them read and I must say, in credit to the senior member for Halifax, that they were rather ambiguous. At the same time they gave the impression that, if the Liberals were returned to power, the iniquitous and barbarous duty would not be removed from coal. In view of these facts, no matter how loud and emphatic may be the denunciations of the duty on iron, of the protection which the Government has seen fit to give to this industry possibly in less than five years we may see such modifications in the opinions of those hon. gentlemen as we have seen in their opinions on the coal duty, and on other leading points in the National Policy. I thank the House for listening to these remarks. I was unprepared to make a speech on this subject, but coming from a county which is largely interested in this industry, I felt it to be my duty to express not simply my opinion, but what I know to be the opinion of the intelligent electorate of my county on this subject.

Mr. McKEN.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not propose to detain the House at any length on this question at present, but I must express my surprise at the remarks which have fallen from the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) to-night. He has stated that it is only large vessels which we have provided shall have a drawback of the amount of duty which may be paid in their construction, and he would leave the House and the country to believe that this Order in Council, or this arrangement for the drawback of the duty, has been only made for the benefit of the large shipbuilder.

He referred specially to myself as a shipbuilder, and said that the smaller vessels had to pay the duty and bear the burden. The hon. gentleman, as a shipbuilder, as a merchant in the city of Halifax, I will not say does know better, but he ought to know better. He ought to know that every vessel built and registered—and the smallest vessel may be registered—is entitled to a drawback under the Order in Council of 1880. I will read it:

“By Order in Council of the 15th May, 1880, it was ordered that a drawback on materials actually used in the construction of any ship or vessel built or registered in Canada, or on any vessel built and exported from Canada under a Governor's pass for sale in a foreign country.”

Mr. JONES. Hear, hear.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes, the hon. gentleman says “hear, hear.” We provided not only that those built and registered in the country, held and owned in the country, and sold to men belonging to the country, but any vessel built and exported under a Governor's pass for sale in a foreign country, should be entitled to the drawback, no matter how small the tonnage might be, provided she were built and registered in the Dominion of Canada, and any vessels down to five or ten tons may be registered; there is no limit to the size for registry. The hon. gentleman should know also that, when it was claimed that the duties had been somewhat increased on the materials for ships in 1883, the amount of drawback per ton was also increased, in order that the shipping interest might have the full benefit of a drawback for all the duties paid. I am surprised to hear the hon. gentleman to-night lamenting that the shipping interest would have the appearance of having some tax imposed upon it. I remember that, when he was elected in 1874 and came to this House, and when the Government which he then supported brought down a tariff imposing larger duties, doubling the duties on shipping and shipping materials used in the country at that time, the hon. gentleman advocated that tariff and said that the shipping interest had as good a right to pay a portion of the taxation of the country as any other interest, and to-night he would lead the House and the country to believe that we have only provided for large vessels and the smaller vessels must pay the taxation. The hon. gentleman referred particularly to vessels that went to the banks fishing. Well, as a merchant living in the city of Halifax, engaged in the shipping and fishing trade, he should know that every vessel that goes to the banks is entitled to that drawback, and he knows that we have encouraged that industry by giving a bounty to every vessel registered and to every boat, even though she may not have been registered, to enable the owners to reap a larger profit. Now, the hon. gentleman has referred to the iron works at Londonderry, and has said that under this National Policy they got into difficulties so great that they were almost closed. I beg to inform the hon. gentleman that the difficulties under which that company labors were created and existed before the National Policy was inaugurated, that large indebtedness was incurred by that company upon these works in 1876-77; and he complains that the Government has carried freight for that company at too low a rate. I tell the hon. gentleman that since the National Policy was inaugurated in 1880, that company has paid to the Government as freight on the Intercolonial Railway, $745,253; that it has paid in wages $1,989,000; and that the total disbursement for mining ore, for coal, limestone, for other expenses, have been $4,873,000. I give these figures as some indication of the outlay for wages that may be expected under this policy which has been propounded by the Minister of Finance and which will give an impetus to the iron industry of the country. My hon. friend from Sydney has referred to the great growth of it in the United States and to the facilities we have for the manufacture in Canada, and I have given these figures as some indication of what we may expect, not only in Nova Scotia, but throughout the Dominion. The Finance Minister the other day referred to the facilities for the manufacture of charcoal iron in every Province of the Dominion. I find on reference to the United States returns that in 23 States they are largely engaged in the manufacture of charcoal pig iron, that wherever they have forests or woods in abundance, there is a large industry in the manufacture of charcoal iron, extending over 23 States. I take this as an indication that not only in Nova Scotia, where they have coal and iron lying in close proximity, will this industry be developed, but in all the other Provinces of the Dominion wherever there are ore and wood, the manufacture of charcoal iron will be developed. The hon. member for Halifax made some reference to the sugar trade, he referred to the position it occupied under the Cartwright tariff and to the position it now occupies. I remember hearing a speech delivered by that hon. gentleman on the floor of this House in 1877 in which he stated that unless the Government—and this was the year before he became a member of that Government—unless the Government changed their policy in respect to the sugar duties, they would destroy the West India trade of the city of Halifax, which was worth from three to four millions a year. He stated that vessels went from Halifax with cargoes of fish, which they exchanged in the West Indies for sugar, which they carried to the United States where it was refined, and in twenty-four hours it was brought into the Dominion of Canada, and our people paid the Americans for refining that sugar. He went further; he warned the Government and the House that whenever the Americans, by giving a bounty and allowing their sugar to come in here, had succeeded in destroying the refining of sugar within the Dominion of Canada, then we would be at their mercy and we would pay whatever price they might exact from us. He warned the Government of that day, led by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) that unless the Government changed their policy, they would destroy the West India trade of the city of Halifax, which was worth three or four millions, and they would destroy the refining industry and put us at the mercy of the American refiners who would exact whatever price they might see fit. The hon. gentleman then wound up his speech by declaring his entire confidence in that Government, notwithstanding it was ruining the constituency he represented, ruining the refining industry of the country, and notwithstanding it was placing us at the mercy of the American refiners, and the next year, when there came a vacancy in the Cabinet, the hon. gentleman went into that Cabinet and said no more about the policy which was so disastrous to the interests of the city of Halifax and to the refining interests of the Dominion at large. But, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman complains to-night that last year we so changed the mode of collecting the duties, of estimating the value of sugar, that we get rather more revenue now than we would if the old system of collecting duties was in operation; and he complains that the poor man is taxed much more for his sugar now than he would be if the old mode of collection was in operation. The hon. gentleman does not go back quite far enough to see the effect upon the poor man of that system which he now so much admires. He does not go back to see that the higher the price of sugar the more the poor man was taxed; that the higher the price of sugar under an ad valorem duty, the more the poor man paid in duties. Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman says that certain members of the Cabinet went down into Nova Scotia and made the statement—and he implied it was a false representation—that we were not collecting so much duty from the article of sugar as was collected in 1877-78 under the Cartwright tariff. That statement was made, and that statement was correct. The hon. gentleman knows, if he has examined the return for 1877-78 under that tariff, that the amount of duty paid upon the number of pounds of sugar imported, gave an average of about $2.27 per 100 lbs. He also knows that in 1885 it was a little more than one-half that amount per 100 lbs. and per lb. The statements of my colleagues in the Province of Nova Scotia were not misrepresentations, but were statements made to this effect: that if you took the importation of 1885 or 1886, and calculated upon it the same rate per pound paid in 1878, it would amount to a large sum, more than we actually paid into the Treasury in 1885 and 1886.

Mr. MILLS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McLELAN. Well, then, the hon. gentleman ought to say that in 1885-86 we collected less from sugar than was paid in 1877-78, and during last year we raised under the polariscopic test a little more than we paid the year before, but an average of two or three years previously. That system has been working satisfactorily, and has given a fair revenue, and I believe it will give entire satisfaction to the people. But hon. gentlemen opposite must not rise in this House and declare that members of the Government went down to Nova Scotia and obtained election, and convinced the people by misrepresentations. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has heard something said here with respect to the state of public opinion in the various Provinces of the Dominion during the election. I will not weary the House to-night by quoting what has been said by hon. members on the other side of the House, in Nova Scotia and other parts of the Dominion; but I repeat this: that I know of no statement made by my colleagues in the Government during their visit to Nova Scotia, no statement made by myself or by any member of the party but what was borne out by the facts, and which can be substantiated by the public records.

Mr. JONES. I have just one word to say with respect to the hon. member for Cape Breton. He referred to a communication, which he said I addressed to a gentleman running in the Liberal interest in Cape Breton during the last election, and he sought to lead the House to the conclusion that I, speaking for myself or for the party in Nova Scotia, had endeavored to lead the gentleman there to believe that we would go for removing the duty on coal. I happen to have by me a copy of the telegram which I addressed to Mr. Murray, the gentleman who ran the election in our interest at that time, and with the permission of the House, I will read it:

"Tories say Blake has accepted the National Policy tariff, which means duty on flour. If such is the case, and the duty on flour is retained, I would undertake to say that duty on coal will be retained also."

I make the hon. gentleman a present of all the capital he can make out of that. He was good enough to say that it was ambiguous. I know he is a very astute politician and he will understand it. With respect to the drawback on shipping, the hon. gentleman has said that all vessels are entitled to a drawback. So far as I am aware, and I have been engaged in building and running ships a great part of my life, I never received one cent of drawback. I never knew it applied to small ships. Nor do I know now it applies to them, because the Act says: "Vessels built and registered in Canada, or vessels built and exported from Canada for sale or registration in another country." It was only intended to apply to large vessels, and in actual practice small vessels have not had the advantage of it. Whatever was the intention, that was the practice. If hereafter small vessels and fishing vessels are to get the benefit of the drawback, I have gained something for them to-night in bringing this information to light. The hon. gentleman has told us that the party to which I belong imposed, in 1874, a duty on ships' material. That is quite true. We did impose a duty of five per cent. at that time, and it was a very modest imposition.

Mr. McLELAN.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What did they propose?

Mr. JONES. They proposed 5 per cent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I beg your pardon. They proposed a very heavy tariff, but they were prevented from carrying it out.

Mr. JONES. We proposed five per cent. The present Postmaster General was in the other building at that time, but the Minister of Finance, who was then in opposition, denounced it as a tax which would bear unfairly on an interest in Nova Scotia which could not afford to pay it. So the hon. gentleman cannot come here with any good grace and propose, as he has on previous occasions, to raise the duty on such articles to 12 and 15 per cent. We merely imposed a duty of five per cent., and the cordage which went into those ships has been put up since to 20 per cent. The hon. gentleman has said that, in 1877, I delivered a speech with regard to sugar. He has forgotten all the circumstances of the case. At that time there was a drawback in the United States of 3.5 per 100 pounds on sugar, and under the operation of that drawback or bounty system they were crushing our refinery in Montreal, and I took the ground that so long as the Americans by a heavy drawback or bounty inflicted that injury on any industry in this country—and I maintain it to-day—it should be met by a countervailing duty. That was all changed. We went so far in this direction that we immediately reduced the duty on raw sugar by Order in Council 25 cents per 100 pounds, which the Montreal refinery acknowledged to be a great boon, and that, with the change which was made in the drawback system of the United States, almost immediately following that, brought it down not quite to where it is at the present moment, but to about $3, and it has since been reduced to $2.75 or $2.82 or about that figure, placing the whole question of sugar on a different footing. So the hon. gentleman will see that if he bears in mind the whole position of the question, all his argument goes for nothing, because the position was entirely affected by the large bounty.

Mr. BOWELL. How long did the Order in Council reducing the duty remain in force?

Mr. JONES. Until the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite came into power and increased it.

Mr. BOWELL. Until it was shown that there was no authority under the law to reduce it by Order in Council, and then you repealed it.

Mr. JONES. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. It was done the last Session, and the whole thing remained in that position.

Mr. BOWELL. You had no authority to do it.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman referred to my remarks with regard to their misrepresentations. I said before, and I repeat it, that their whole canvass was a system of misrepresentation. It was misrepresentation, because the hon. gentleman, in my presence, and in the presence of others, was heard and understood to say that the low price of sugar and cotton and other articles, at the present moment, was owing entirely to the National Policy, and that, I say here, was a deliberate misrepresentation of the facts. It was not owing to the National Policy at all. In the case of sugar it was owing to the large crops which had been produced in other countries and the large decline from £20 to £10 a ton, so that consequently sugar, under any circumstances, would have been just that much cheaper. We always had to meet the argument that cotton and sugar were low. We admitted that they were lower than they were before, but we said, look at England, the United States and other countries; they are so much lower there, and they would be that much lower here were it not for the National Policy which makes them that much dearer. These were the arguments which hon. gentlemen used, and I repeat again that they were misrepresentations and not facts, so that hon. gentlemen can see that this matter stands exactly where I put it in the first place. I was glad to hear my hon. friend from Cape Breton, and I shall sincerely rejoice if the iron industries there can be opened up, though I am not so sanguine as the Minister of Finance. The Postmaster General did not reply to the statements which I made with reference to the inducements he held out to his own people, that unless the Government were sustained the works would be closed up, but if they were sustained a company would be re-organised and the works would go on and flourish. That was the argument which the hon. gentleman made use of, and I say to that extent it was a misrepresentation, although the facts may bear out the position he took. As I said before, I hope that the industry will be successful and that they will do better in the future than they have done in the past, although I am not as sanguine on that subject as some people are.

Mr. KENNY. The senior member for Halifax, in the course of his remarks this evening, referred to the fact that when I introduced a Bill to incorporate the Londonderry Iron Company, it was a matter of arrangement. I do not know what the hon. gentleman meant; but if he meant to convey the impression to this House that the fact that that Bill was introduced the day after the Minister of Finance introduced the tariff, imposing a duty on iron, was a matter of arrangement, he has certainly, to make use of an expression he has freely used this afternoon, made a great misrepresentation of the facts.

Mr. JONES. A remarkable coincidence.

Mr. KENNY. Never mind that. The facts are, that the Bill was placed in my hands to be presented, and it so happened that the second reading of the Bill—for the first reading of the Bill had taken place some days before—took place on the day after the day on which the Finance Minister introduced his tariff, in which changes are made in the duties on iron. I am sorry, indeed, that my hon. friend had not some better argument than that to present to the House. I am sorry, also, to hear my hon. friend, in order to score against the Government of the day, speaking disparagingly of his native Province, and speaking slightly of the great iron industries of that Province. The fact is that my hon. friend's visits to Londonderry have always been political visits, and they have always been eminently unsuccessful.

Mr. JONES. Not always.

Mr. KENNY. And I think that he imagined that the ore was as scarce as votes for his candidate. The House will bear with me a few minutes while I read some remarks which were made recently in the Legislature of Nova Scotia, by a gentleman with whom my hon. friend is in thorough political accord. Let us see what that gentleman said as to the iron industries of Nova Scotia. The Attorney General of Nova Scotia said:

"I rise for the purpose of expressing the opinion that the development of the iron industries of the Province of Nova Scotia is a matter of the greatest importance, and one which this Legislature in the interests of the people of Nova Scotia would be justified in promoting. It is a fact, and a fact of which we often speak with pride when discussing the merits and advantages of this Province over others that it possesses vast mineral deposits."

There is no misgiving there, Sir, as to the value of the iron industries of Nova Scotia.

"We have coal and iron in abundance; but with these resources we have barely commenced making a respectable development of our mining industries. From the report of the commissioner of works and mines we learn that last year we put out one million and a half tons of coal.

That is a matter for great congratulation and jubilation to certain persons in the Province of Nova Scotia, and I have seen this fact alluded to as one of great importance. But, sir, in my opinion the output should not be a million and a half, but ten or twenty million tons per annum. We have, sir, in this Province an iron deposit of such vast extent that it is said that our coal deposits, vast as they are, are not sufficient to adequately work the iron deposit. And yet, with the exception of one attempt at Acadia Mines we have practically no development of our iron industry at all. Now, sir, I maintain that the vast mineral resources of the Province of Nova Scotia, by some means or other, should be developed. I believe, sir, that we are not reaping the advantages which belong to the mineral resources of the Province of Nova Scotia."

That is the opinion of the Attorney General of the Province, and I am reading from the Halifax Morning Chronicle of 19th April, 1887, and I set his words against those of my hon. friend as to the value of the great mineral deposits of Nova Scotia. I think, Sir, you may have no misgivings as to the working of our great iron deposits, and I think the Government has done wisely in inaugurating this policy of protecting that great industry. We all know—the history of other nations shows—that no iron industry has been developed without protection, and we ought to be grateful to the Government instead of blaming them for inaugurating it in this Dominion of ours.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Minister of Finance made a statement some time ago upon which I think it is desirable that we should have further information. He said that in the construction of ships a drawback would be given, equal to the amount of the duty imposed on the iron used in those ships. I did not understand from the hon. gentleman whether that drawback would apply to native iron as well as to iron imported. Will the hon. gentleman say?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I did not. I said any increased duties which were paid.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What I call attention to is that if iron is imported at all, it will be imported because it may be sold at the same price at which the native iron is being sold. Now, if the hon. gentleman proposes to allow a drawback equal to the duty upon the imported iron, then, clearly, native iron will never be used at all. Suppose $200 worth of iron is employed in the building of a ship. If the shipbuilder employs foreign iron he will be entitled to a drawback of $60, but if he employs native iron he will have to pay the full amount. I want to know whether it is the policy of the Government to give a premium for the use of foreign iron.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have answered the question very distinctly. I stated that any increased duties on iron used in shipbuilding would be treated by the Government the same as they had treated the duties on all material used in shipbuilding, and that they would be provided for by the Government by Order in Council.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman has not altogether answered my enquiry. The question is a perfectly simple one. Here is "A" engaged in shipbuilding using imported iron. There can be no doubt, according to the hon. gentleman's statement, that he will be entitled to a drawback equal to the amount of duty imposed on that iron. "B," his neighbor, also engaged in shipbuilding, arranges with some native producer for his iron, and buys it at the same price as the shipbuilder who uses foreign iron. What I ask the hon. gentleman is this: will everyone, irrespective of the origin of the iron, be entitled to the same drawback, or will the man who uses native iron be obliged to pay the full price, while the other receives a drawback? If that is the construction the hon. gentleman puts on the Order in Council, he must see that native iron will never be used in shipbuilding, because the man using the foreign iron would get it 45 or 50 per cent. cheaper.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have answered the hon. gentleman's question. You cannot get a drawback of duties unless the duties have been paid; and I told the hon. gentleman, in answer to the statement that the increased duties would involve a greater cost to the shipbuilder, that it would not be so, because if he paid more duties on iron that went into the ship, it would be returned to him in the drawbacks. The hon. gentleman may make what he pleases of the argument or say it is not just to the native producer, but he must not say that I have not answered the question, for I have answered it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is perfectly clear now that the hon. gentleman's answer is that the drawback will apply to imported iron, but not to iron produced in the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Precisely.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then we know what the Government's position is. If the foreign iron was the amount of the duty dearer than the native iron, it would not come into the country at all. Therefore, the hon. gentleman proposes to adopt the policy which must prevent native iron from being used in shipbuilding. So the hon. gentleman, while professing to adopt this tariff to encourage the production of iron in the country, adopts a policy which will prohibit the use of native iron in a particular industry. Then, there is another thing which I think has been pretty well brought out by the observations of the Minister of Finance, that is, that the duty imposed on the foreign product adds to the price, not only of that article, but of everything produced in the country that comes into competition with it. Although the hon. gentleman two or three years ago argued very stoutly that the imposition of the duty on coal did not add to the price of coal, yet now, when he is taking the duty off coal, he assumes that he is conferring a benefit on the manufacturer in diminishing the price of that article. I am not at this hour of the night going to further discuss this question. I wish simply to enunciate and emphasise this point in the policy of the Government.

Mr. JONES. The duty on iron must have the effect of increasing the price of iron in the market. That I suppose is the object of it. Then, if it increases the price of iron in the market and keeps out the foreign iron, we shall only have domestic iron. Therefore, if a fisherman or shipbuilder uses native iron, he will get no drawback.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that if he were building a ship, and the price of iron were increased by this duty, he would not import iron for the ship and pay the duty and receive it back again? I do not think it would require any astute merchant or financier to come to the conclusion that if he were entitled to get back all he paid in duty, he could, under these circumstances, purchase iron as cheaply as the price he would pay in the country.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Bothwell has established this to his own satisfaction and to the satisfaction of the House. He has answered the senior member for Halifax already. He has proved to a demonstration, and he will tell you so if you ask him, that under this policy as enunciated to-night a complete immunity from increased duty has been secured to the shipbuilders. The senior member for Halifax started out with the claims of the fishermen and the shipbuilders, saying that under this policy those classes would be hardly dealt with by this increased duty on iron. The hon. member for Bothwell proved to the satisfaction of the House that nothing would be taken out of the fisherman or the shipbuilder, for the duties that entered into the construction of the ship would be given back, and therefore, he would be wise enough never to use domestic iron. When the hon. member for Halifax raised his question, he was met by the Order in Council, which as a politician of long standing, he ought to have known was in existence. Under this order, according to the argument of my hon. friend, nothing will be taken from the shipbuilder if he will use the imported iron and get the drawback of all duties. I rose to nail an assertion, which has been made several times, with reference to misrepresentations of which I have been accused, in common with my colleagues. I must say that so far as misrepresentations are concerned, the events of to-night have not shown that the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) is best calculated to deal in accusations against hon. members on this side. That hon. gentleman has been shown over and over again to have stated what is not exactly true.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. JONES. What in? Where?

Mr. FOSTER. I will tell the hon. gentleman. By implication, if not outright, the hon. gentleman laid the charge that my hon. friend the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) had, by an arrangement, introduced a Bill into this House on the heels of the proposition of the hon. the Finance Minister.

Mr. JONES. He did introduce it.

Mr. FOSTER. But the hon. gentleman did not say he merely introduced it. He said that it bore the marks of an arrangement. My hon. friend the junior member for Halifax has given his version. Will the hon. gentleman take that as true, or does he still persist in saying it was an arrangement?

Mr. JONES. It bears the marks of an arrangement.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman then go back a little further? If he will, he will find that for weeks before that Bill was introduced there was a notice in the public press that it would be introduced. In the face of that, is my hon. friend's statement that it bears the marks of an arrangement, a clean, square statement? or is there not in it a little of his machiavellian policy of misrepresentation? My hon. friend started out on his career in this Parliament with misrepresentation. I find here, on page 33 of the debates, in one of the first speeches which the hon. gentleman made—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear; order.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the debate to which the hon. gentleman wishes to refer is not a debate on the same question as the present one, he has no right to refer to it.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a debate virtually on the same question, that of false representation.

Mr. SPEAKER. My hon. friend will see that the discussion to-night is not precisely as to whether any or what misrepresentations have been made in this House. The subject-matter under discussion is the resolution.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish only to say that if I remember aright the hon. gentleman did state within the present year that the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Interior, and the Minister of Marine went down to the Province of Nova Scotia just before the local elections, and tried to canvass that Province with reference to these local elections. When the hon. gentleman was reminded of his statement, he endeavored to cover it up by saying that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice spoke in Nova Scotia just before the local elections.

Mr. JONES. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman stated that my colleagues and myself made misrepresentations in his Province, in speaking of the National Policy, by declaring outright that cotton and woollens and sugar were cheaper to-day, and that entirely because of the National Policy.

Mr. JONES. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend state that? If he does state it, I say it is not the fact, so far as I am concerned, and I say that I was with my colleagues on one of these tours, and that it is not the fact, to my knowledge, as far as they are concerned. My own statement of the case, if I made any, would be this: that it was the contention of hon. gentlemen opposite that the National Policy would perforce advance the prices of articles and, therefore, prove ruinous to the consumers; and I met that charge, as my colleagues did, by stating that the people to-day have these staple articles cheaper than they ever had them before. But I did not, nor did any of my colleagues, say that it was entirely because of the National Policy. I will say here, as I said there, that it was materially owing to the National Policy, but there were other causes as well. I have never tried to conceal that. My hon. friend said that I stated in Halifax, when speaking there in October, that I misrepresented the amount of the public debt. I challenge that statement.

Mr. JONES. You did not deny it the other night.

Mr. FOSTER. Several times the hon. gentleman has said that I did not deny it, but I deny it now. Was the hon. gentleman in Halifax when I spoke there in October? Does he know of his knowledge that I misrepresented the public debt by stating it was $196,000,000 at that time? Did he get that from his own knowledge or by hearsay?

Mr. JONES. Did you not say so?

Mr. FOSTER. I did not.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to know if the hon. gentleman did not make the statement that the national debt was $196,000,000?

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend had as much patience as he has height he would have had the answer to his question without being under the necessity of exhibiting all the vigor he has shown. I want to say to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) that when I spoke there I did not misrepresent the condition of the net debt of the Dominion. There are gentlemen here present who heard me on that night, and they will know whether or not my statement now tallies with my statement then. What I did in discussing the national debt, was to take the last Public Accounts we had, and I stated that by those Public Accounts, on the 1st July, 1885, the net debt of the Dominion was $196,000,000. I said nothing else in Guelph, Halifax or any other place.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If the hon. gentleman did not, then he must blame the organ of his party who sent a special reporter, I believe, along to report the hon. gentleman's utterances. I have his utterances as reported by that organ at Listowell, and as revised, I suppose, by himself. But in discussing the financial question he is reported to have said:

"Several Reform speakers have already spoken on this question and have given widely different estimates as to what the public debt was."

Therefore the natural inference is: I am going to give the exact thing, because these men have confused you. He goes on:

"Mr. Blake put the debt as averaging $300 per family. According to the Public Accounts, the gross debt on the 30th June, 1885."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This is what he said, and he followed it with these words:

"According to the Public Accounts, the gross debt on 30th June, 1885, the last official record."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). "Hear, hear." This statement was made on 26th November, 1886. Those members of Parliament who were a little previous will know that the last official record ended on 30th June, 1886, some four months before, and, if the Minister of Marine did not know, he ought to have known, before he went out to instruct the public, what the last official record was, because it is an official record before it is published, and it is within his cognisance, and, if he did not know, he should have known that the net debt was, what we know from the published report, what he ought to have known and could have known weeks and months before he made the statement that it was $196,400,000, that it was in fact $223,000,000, so that he deceived the people to the extent of $27,000,000, and in order to emphasise that he says: "I am giving you the last official record." He can deny that if he likes. As he did, so did the Minister of the Interior, so did the Minister of Justice give them to understand. These gentlemen were not in the position we were in. They had the official documents within their reach and could have known, and as an evidence that they not only could have known, but that they did know, I find that the Minister of the Interior on one occasion referred to the surplus which had accrued in the four months, not of the year 1886 that they pretended they did not know about, but in the four months of the year 1886-87. They knew about the surplus in 1886-87, but not about the net debt at the end of 1885-86. It will not do for them to say that they did not go through the country misleading the people. It is not too strong an expression to say that they did mislead the people, and that they designed to mislead the people. I put in contrast with the manner in which they mislead the people, the manner in which they were addressed, and the facts put before them by the leader of the Opposition. He had to work this out for himself, and he brought his common sense to bear and took facts which were known outside of the official record, and he found that the net debt, on the 30th June, 1886, four months before those gentlemen said it was $196,000,000, must be $220,000,000 at least. He was $3,000,000 within the mark. These gentlemen were $27,000,000 wrong. He was estimating; they knew, or ought to have known. It is not for the credit of these hon. gentlemen that they should have gone through the country, where as I said there are many who take their word and are disposed to believe them, and should have made such statements. It was their bounden duty to give to the people of the country a true record of how the finances of the country stood, and it will not do for the Minister of Marine to rise here in Parliament, where he is confronted with those who know the subject and endeavor to escape from the charge, when he was informing the people that the public debt was what it appeared sixteen months before and that that was the last official record, when he knew that there was an official document of a date twelve months later which showed the debt to be $27,000,000 more. As he did, so did the others. I have extracts from the speeches delivered by them. I find that the Minister of Justice is reported to have said—and from him I would have perhaps expected better, but as it may be that it is a mistake, I do not wish to judge him harshly—he is reported to have said:

"Opposition speakers claim that the debt of Canada averaged $140 per family. The Public Accounts show that the public debt only averaged $65 per family."

What does that involve? It involves that if the net debt was $223,000,000, as it was, we would have to have an average of 18 to each family. I do not know how many the Minister of Justice has in his family, but if he has 18, I trust every member of the family is in good health and prospering, but I do not think there is an average of 18 to a family. Why, if the debt were $196,000,000, as stated by these hon. gentlemen, it would require 16 to a family. You find the Minister of the Interior quite as definite in reference to this matter, for in one place, speaking of it, he said that the net debt had increased $45,000,000 during the last eight years, and that took in the year 1886, a statement in which there is an amount of $23,000,000 wrong. I put that before the House, and I put as a contrast the facts stated by the Hon. Mr. Blake, facts that he had to estimate, but showing how careful he is in giving facts and figures that may be relied upon, from which he inferred that the national debt was about $220,000,000. In contrast to that, you have Ministers of the Crown, with the opportunity of knowing what statements were correct, endeavoring to make the people believe that at the time they spoke—for that was their evident design—the net debt was $27,000,000 less than it was. I leave the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to state that this report as contained in the Mail newspaper is not correct. I have not the means of knowing. I have spoken of the utterances of these gentlemen as I find them in the Mail.

Mr. FOSTER. In the first place, I think my hon. friend will not set a newspaper report down as being an absolute and correct statement of what a public speaker utters upon a platform.

Mr. CASEY. Why did not you correct it then?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend knows that a newspaper report is given very far from in extenso, and that newspaper reporters are not always infallible in reporting verbatim what a man says when he is talking to an audience. Therefore, I disclaim any newspaper report which I have not revised, and I have not revised any statements made in the Mail newspaper as being an absolutely verbatim report of what I have stated. In the second place, I wish to state that the people in an audience may be taken to be as intelligent, man for man, as the gentlemen who sit around these boards; and in discussing the public debt my colleagues and myself took the last published reports, stating that they came to the 30th June, 1885, and we argued that the debt—

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Did you know what it was in 1886?

Mr. BOWELL. That is not the point.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose we had taken the official statements obtained from the departmental officers down to the date of our discussions, and had gone on the public platform and had taken advantage of these, what would have been the cry hurled against us by gentlemen in the Opposition? That we were unfair, that we had access to information that they had not, and were using that information when they were not placed upon the same ground.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). You did that in reference to the surplus.

Mr. McLELAN. That is published in the Gazette every month.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman would have been one of the first to say we took an unfair advantage in discussing this question. I discussed, and my colleagues discussed the question upon what the people had before them, upon the whole state of facts before the public in the last published record as it was before the people.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be very amusing to hon gentlemen opposite.

Mr. CASEY. It is, very.

Mr. FOSTER. Sometimes the truth, as they come across it so seldom, almost amuses them. Now, with reference to that statement I have made these remarks. They are true. My hon. friend went a little further than he should have done when he stated that we were deliberately misrepresenting the state of the public debt. If it is a misrepresentation of the state of the public debt to take the last published accounts and tell your audience that you take them, those that are of access to the people, to take the conditions as laid down there, and discuss them in full before the people, then you may call it deliberate misrepresentation; if it is not, then I think the hon. gentleman went a little too far in using that term.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to say this in answer to the hon. gentleman, that everywhere he spoke in the Province of New Brunswick, he took up the debt as stated by the speakers upon our side, the debt that he claimed it to be then, and he professed with the greatest moderation, with the greatest fairness, to show that we were wrong, inasmuch as the debt was only $196,000,000. It was true, Mr. Speaker, that he ingeniously referred to the fact that he was quoting the Public Accounts. We were discussing the public debt as we supposed the debt was at the time. Whenever the hon. gentleman came within the reach of my newspaper I published a request to him to state what the debt was, but he did not do it. I will not say here that he sought by, deliberate misrepresentation to deceive, but if I met him outside on the public platform, I would say that he deliberately misrepresented the public debt. He can look at his own organ in St. John, the Sun, and he will find that he is reported in about the same terms as in the speech referred to here from the Mail. The hon. gentleman may get out of it very nicely now, by saying he was very particular in referring to the Public Accounts, but the impression he conveyed to the public mind was an entirely incorrect one, and he must have known that he was doing so.

Mr. BOWELL. The virtuous indignation of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) in accusing my hon. colleague of having stated what he says was only a misrepresentation or an untruth, was based upon the declaration made by him that these accounts had been published some months previous to the speeches made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Now, every man in this House knows that the Public Accounts ending 30th June, 1886, were not published until this House met, and consequently the whole argument based upon that fact falls to the ground. I remember what was said by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries in New Brunswick, and other members of the Cabinet, when I was present, and I remember what I said myself; and in no single instance did the Minister of Marine and Fisheries give the state of the public debt, except as it was based upon the Public Accounts as laid before Parliament, and which had been given to the world on the 30th June, 1885.

Mr. WELDON. You were not present at election time.

Mr. BOWELL. I was there before the election. The hon. gentleman stated that I had not heard him make speeches in New Brunswick. I must necessarily refer to the occasion on which I was present, and I say that in no instance did I hear him state what he has been charged with stating.

Mr. MITCHELL. That was at Newcastle, I suppose.

Mr. BOWELL. That was one place, and at Chatham and three or four other places, and in no single instance did he refer to the public debt, except as based upon the accounts which had been laid before Parliament, so that the charge that he or any other Minister made statements based upon accounts which had been published were not true, and certainly has no foundation. Now, I desire to set the hon. member for Halifax right in one or two remarks he made with reference to my own Department, and that is the principal reason which induced me to rise. He made a statement of the character of those which, I very much fear, he is in the habit of making upon all occasions, when speaking of his opponents; he stated that whenever a small industry in Nova Scotia was being injured by importations from any part of the world, an Order in Council was at once issued raising the duty. Notwithstanding the fact I contradicted this statement at once, it was repeated over and over again. Now, the hon. gentleman has been a Privy Councillor, and he ought to know what the constitution of the country requires of us in that particular; he ought to know that no order can be issued by the Governor in Council imposing any tax, no matter how small it may be. There is power given in the law to take off a tax upon an article which is used in the manufacture of another article which is to be exported, or which may not be exported. That is the only power under the constitution that the Governor in Council has; but I suppose the hon. gentleman having, when he was in power, passed illegal orders in reference to duty upon sugar, thinks that those who succeeded him must have followed in the same practice. But he has forgotten that when the illegal act of his Government had been pointed out they were compelled to retrace their steps. I tell this House that the charge made repeatedly by certain portions of the press through the Dominion, and by politicians represented by the hon. member for Halifax to-night, that an Order in Council had been issued, or that rulings of the Customs Department had been made increasing the duties upon any article, is not correct; in fact, no such ruling has been made in reference to the article to which he referred. In reference to the duty upon tickets, it may be quite true there is a very large percentage, speaking ad valorem. I do not deny that fact, but when he says the duty was placed upon that article because the Montreal Gazette was doing such work, he had forgotten, I charitably believe, that the law imposing a duty upon tickets had been upon the Statute-book two or three years before this question arose in Halifax; and if he had taken the trouble to enquire he would have found that upon these very tickets there is a duty of 10 cents per pound, and 20 per cent. ad valorem—I do not deny that it is a very high ad valorem duty upon the price of the articles imported from Great Britain—but when he said that the Customs Department had raised the duties for the purpose of protecting the Montreal Gazette, he stated that of which he certainly could not by any possibility have any knowledge. Nearly every one of the charges that have been made in reference to the rulings of the Customs Department have just as much foundation as that statement of the hon. member for Halifax. When questions are referred to the Department, those in authority there are obliged to rule in accordance with the provisions of the law as it is placed on the Statute-book. It may possibly be true—I know it is true—that in a great many ports articles have been imported and entered at a lower rate of duty than that which is provided by the statute; but just as soon as the attention of the Department is called to it—we rule strictly in accordance with the law, no matter who it hits or who suffers. I make this statement in justice to the Department over which I preside. When the sugar question comes up, as it will later, and the question as to the statements I made before the election, I shall be happy to attend to the compliments paid me by the hon. member for Brant. I do not propose to deal with that to night, but I challenge the hon. member for Brant, or any other member in this House, to point to a single utterance made by me during the elections that I am not prepared to prove by documentary evidence and by figures. I am speaking in defence of myself exclusively upon this matter. I referred to the public debt in the same manner that my colleagues did. I accepted the statement made by the leader of the Opposition, and I argued from these premises just as I did from those made before. I am quite sure my colleagues and myself who discussed the question—and I know the Minister of the Interior did, because I have read the statements he made and they will be found on record—treated the public debt in that way; we accepted the statement of the leader of the Opposition and argued from it, and by comparison showed that the debt had not been increased so rapidly as when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power.

Mr. THOMPSON. I had not the pleasure of being in the House when the discussion took its present turn, and I would not have said a word on the present occasion, except for a remark that fell from the member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), when the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was speaking. My colleague having challenged one of the statements of that hon. gentleman, the hon. gentleman threw the remark across the floor that the assertion had been made several times during the Session, and had not heretofore been contradicted. I suppose the inference which the hon. member for Halifax sought to draw from that was that inasmuch as prompt contradiction of the statement was not given upon the spot, the House might take as established and as truthful the utterance which he had made.

Mr. JONES. It was made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton.)

Mr. THOMPSON. Lest the hon. gentleman should either be under any misapprehension on this point, or seek to use against me in the future as an argument, a statement which I failed to correct on the spot, I beg to assure him in the most emphatic and parliamentary manner possible that he has not during the Session made any statement respecting myself that I am not capable of disproving in the most distinct and emphatic manner. I have failed on several occasions to correct the hon. gentleman's statements made in regard to myself, because the time was not opportune, and the remark not particularly appropriate to the subject under discussion; but when it is appropriate, and when the hon. gentleman will give me an opportunity, I will satisfy not him, perhaps, but those who heard him, that the statements were not to be taken as reliable because they were not contradicted on the spot. A few words with respect to what the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) has said regarding meetings in Ontario which it was my privilege to address, and regarding which the hon. gentleman thought I made statements different from those he would have expected from me. I beg to call the attention of the hon. gentleman and the House to the position in which this controversy, as regards the public debt, stood when we were making those addresses to the people of Ontario and the people of the Maritime Province. The basis of the whole contention which was put forward on both sides at that time was the question, whether the gross debt was the debt for which this Ministry was to be held responsible, or the net debt on 30th June, 1885? The former contention had been made to the electors whom we addressed, and those were the statements we endeavored to answer; and in taking up the statements of our friends of the Opposition, we found that they contended that the gross debt should be charged against us, amounting to $274,000,000, for the Opposition had put before the country that as the gross debt on 30th June, 1885. My colleagues and myself, taking the figures of the same date, as we must do in order to make a comparison, said that was not a true standard to be taken, that it should not be taken to be $274,000,000 or whatever the gross was, but that we should be held responsible for the net debt, amounting to $196,000,000 at that date. That was the whole basis of the argument and discussion. Then the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), in disputing a calculation I made as to the distribution of the debt over the families of the Dominion, has said that according to the statement I made there were eighteen persons to every family. I do not know where the hon. gentleman got his figures.

Mr. PATERSON. From the Mail.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not responsible for any statement of that kind which has appeared either in the Mail or the Globe, or any other paper. In the course of the tour which I had the pleasure and privilege to make in company with the First Minister, we were sometimes misreported, we had no opportunity of correcting the press, and I did not feel myself bound or responsible for any report that appeared either in the Mail or the Globe. But I beg to assure the hon. gentleman that, wherever he got his figures and whether they bear out his impression of what I said or not, I made no calculation which would give any such result. In contesting the statement put forward by the Opposition as to what the debt amounted to on each family in the Dominion, I was disputing the statement put forward by the Opposition in two particulars: one was in regard to their claim that the gross debt should be distributed over the families of the Dominion, and the other was the contention as to what the population was. My calculation was based, not on eighteen to a family, but on five to a family, and every statement I made with reference to the debt, and every other assertion I made either in Ontario or the Maritime Provinces, I am satisfied to have investigated here, and to take the hon. gentleman's opinion and that of the House as to whether I merited his esteem or not for the accuracy of the statements I made there. On reviewing them I am not able to retract any statement as not being entirely authorised by the facts. It is quite true that in making speeches like that we sometimes, apart from mere questions of fact, undertake to state our views as to what the revenue of the country will be, and I remember on one occasion the leader of the Opposition challenged some calculations I made as to what the future revenue would be, and on recalling that I find that the leader of the Opposition was a good deal farther wrong than I was in the estimate of the revenue for the current year. At a subsequent period of the discussion, the leader of the Opposition came out with an entirely different statement. Leaving out the theory with respect to the gross debt on 30th June, 1885, the leader of the Opposition said: The Ministers have been going to and fro and they have contrasted the calculations we have put before the country based on the gross debt of 30th June, 1885, and they have pared that down to a debt of $196,000,000; but they ought to have told the country that the debt has grown since then. And the leader of the Opposition put forward his calculation of the net debt as something like $220,000,000. In meeting that statement, which was an entirely new one, I endeavored to show that, even taking $220,000,000, we were entitled to credit for various items in connection with public works and for increases in allowances to the Provinces. We were contending, in the first place, that we were not responsible for the gross debt as being the whole debt of the country in 1885; and, subsequently, we accepted the statement of the leader of the Opposition and argued the question according to his basis that the debt was $220,000,000. The press supporting the Opposition thereafter reported me as admitting that Mr. Blake's statement as to the increase of the debt since June, 1885, was correct, which is a proof that I was not denying the subsequent increase.

Mr. CASEY. One remark made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries deserves notice. The hon. gentleman said that if he, as a Minister of the Crown, had presumed to know more than had been already published to the country at large during the campaign, he would have been attacked for taking an unfair advantage of the Opposition.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I made no such statement.

Mr. CASEY. I beg his pardon; I heard him make a statement to that effect, though I do not vouch for the words. He was defending himself from the charge that he should have used his knowledge of what the public debt was at that time, and he stated in effect that, if he had so used that information, he would have been accused of taking an unfair advantage of the Opposition. Now, Sir, before the election came on, though I think after the date of the particular speech to which reference has been made, the Government printed and distributed to all members of Parliament—and this is something which some new members may not know—what they called an abstract of the public statistics, which showed that the net debt of the country, on the 30th June, 1886, the period covered by the Public Accounts, which the Minister of Fisheries says were not published until after the House met—that on the 30th June the net debt was $223,000,000.

Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. FOSTER. Quite wrong.

Mr. CASEY. I say it is right. I have the book in my possession, though I have not got it here. It was sent to every member of Parliament.

Mr. MADILL. Produce the book.

Mr. CASEY. The book was sent to my house, and I used it in the campaign, but I have not got it here.

Mr. MADILL. I have the abstract here, and it shows that the net debt on the 30th June, 1885, was $196,000,000.

Mr. CASEY. I am speaking of the 30th June, 1886, and I tell the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the Government did tell the public, before the House met, through this publication, that the net debt on that date was $223,000,000. Of course, that was not known to the audience and the general public; it was not known even to the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Madill), because he was not then a member of this House, but it was known to all members of the House who had the abstract, so that that excuse is taken away from the hon. the Minister of Fisheries. If it was proper to publish it in January, it was proper to publish it in November, and it was proper to tell the audience before whom he spoke in November, that to his knowledge and according to the last official statement—which are the words attributed to him in a report in a friendly newspaper, a report which I have no doubt he revised, and in fact he did not deny it.

An hon. MEMBER. Yes, he did.

Mr. CASEY. No, he did not; he denied its being a verbatim report, but he will not deny that he revised the figures, for he knows that the figures were revised by him, as every careful speaker revises the figures of a report published by a friendly newspaper. He allowed the $196,000,000 to go to the country, leading the country to believe that those were the correct figures. The Minister says that the great question before the country was, whether the net debt or the gross debt should be taken. That was not the question. The leader of the Opposition constantly took the net debt, as estimated by himself, as the question upon which we should go before the country; and the hon. gentleman knows that the leader of the Opposition joined issue with him, not on the gross debt, but on the estimated net debt, and asked him to prove it. Now, Sir, the Mail at that time and still an independent supporter of the Government—although I admit it is really an independent paper—estimated the public debt, during the campaign, at $225,000,000. The Mail was nearer right than the leader of the Opposition, who kept carefully within the limits in stating it to be $220,000,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not going to tax the time of the House very long at this late hour.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would state that we propose to close in a very few minutes, and the subject will all come up to-morrow, as I am going to ask the House to go on with these resolutions to-morrow. It is nearly one o'clock, and I am extremely anxious to get away.

Mr. MITCHELL. I was very anxious to say something, but I will give way. What I have to say will keep.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to read a short extract bearing on this question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. To-morrow, to-morrow.

Mr. FISHER. I will read an extract from Hansard of 5th May, 1886. On that date the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) asked the Finance Minister the amount of the gross public debt of Canada, on the 1st May, and the amount of the net debt on the same date. The Finance Minister answered that the gross debt was $284,000,000 and odd, and the net debt $205,000,000 and odd. How the Minister of Marine and Fisheries could state the other thing I do not know.

Mowing machines, self-binding harvesters, harvesters without binders, &c., 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the hon. gentleman had better let that item stand and take the others.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no change in that at all.

Mr. MITCHELL. But we want to talk about it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This is a large interest, and I think the fact that there is no change in the duty will warrant the Minister, as I suggested before, in making some explanation, as the proposed increase on the raw material is so large.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will explain at once. I stated that the basis of this proposed tariff was that we adopted two-thirds of the American duty on pig iron, and that we applied that, not with mathematical exactness, but as nearly as we could to the various manufactures of iron in its different stages. But I found that, on applying that rule, the protection now given to agricultural implements gives two-thirds of the American tariff. Our tariff was relatively higher in regard to agricultural implements than upon the general scope of the various products of iron. So we left this as it is—first, because we applied the same principle of giving two-thirds of the duty on the basis of the pig iron; and, in the second place, because the industry is now so thoroughly established that we believe it will be quite sufficient, notwithstanding the slight increase in some of the iron that goes into these implements, to enable them to hold their own.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Have not these men stated differently?

Mr. MITCHELL. If we are going to have this discussion, I claim my right to speak on the other question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will let it stand over then.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think that is the better way.

Grape vines, costing 20 cents and less, 5 cents each.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish to reduce that to three cents on vines costing 10 cents and less.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1 o'clock a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 17th May, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CHINOOK BELT AND PEACE RIVER RAILWAY

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia) moved :

That Bill (No. 34) entitled an Act to incorporate the Chinook Belt and Peace River Railway Company, be referred back to the Committee of Railways and Canals, for further consideration.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understand that the hon. gentleman wants the Bill to be considered on some other point than the two points which were considered this morning, and therefore wishes the Bill referred back to the committee for that purpose. If so, I have no objection to this being done.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 96) to incorporate the Dominion Oil Pipe Line Manufacturing Company.—(Mr. Mara.)

Bill (No. 97) to authorise certain extensions of the Hamilton and North-Western Railway.—(Mr. Brown.)

PRECEDENCE OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that Government business shall have precedence every Thursday, during the present Session, after questions put by members. He said: The House will adjourn to-morrow night early, in all probability, and not meet until the following Wednesday; and I fancy that my hon. friends on both sides, when they get home and see how the season is advanced, and how flourishing their businesses are, will want to get away as soon as possible, and, therefore, I move this motion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it is very early for the hon. gentleman to propose to take a day off private members. The hon. gentleman knows that, by the arrangement which was made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, the Government have already taken time belonging to private members in discussing the tariff; they have taken Monday. We have a series of very important questions which we propose to submit to Parliament for consideration, and most of these questions have been deferred from time to time, at the request of the Government, to suit their convenience. There is the question of the franchise, there is the question of disallowance, there is the question of the constitution of the Senate, and there are other matters.

Mr. MITCHELL. Manhood suffrage.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And manhood suffrage, a question introduced by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). The proposition of the Government is practically a proposition to burk discussion on all these matters. Now, it seems to me there will be quite time enough for the Government to appropriate a day that belongs to private members, when the private members have had an opportunity of making a little more progress with the business in their hands. The hon. gentleman proposes to adjourn for a week. There will be no difficulty in giving notice after we return, and by that arrangement the hon. gentleman would only leave Thursday in the hands of the private members beyond the days which he proposes to take. So far from conceding to us a day which we were entitled to, by the understanding with the Minister of Finance, the hon. gentleman proposes even to take away those remaining to us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I certainly do not desire in any way to limit the powers of hon. members of the House to move in any way whatever, or bring forward any measure. It is far from my wish to do so; on the contrary, I cheerfully admit that the Opposition has acted with great kindness, I may say, with respect to the Government measures, by aiding us as they have done. But, on looking at the Order paper, I find that the number of notices of motions and public bills and orders in the hands of members, not members of the Government, is unusually small for any Session since 1867; and I think there would be no difficulty in getting through with all those measures to which the hon. gentleman has alluded. After the manner in which we have been treated we should be wanting in our duty in every way if we did not give every opportunity to discuss every one of the measures which the hon. gentleman has mentioned. The object of having two Government days consecutively, like Thursday and Friday, is obvious. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is an old Minister himself, and he must know that it is for the purpose of getting on with the various items, when we are in Committee of Supply. If we have only Tuesday and Friday, and we are in Supply, a discussion commences, it goes on upon an important item, we will say, and the debate on that item is adjourned. Then you have Wednesday and Thursday intervening, and on Friday the debate commences over again, just as if it were beginning anew. But if you have two days consecutively, the debate goes on until the time of adjournment, and it may consume that evening and go on the next day to a conclusion. It was with that object that I wished to get Thursday if possible. I would say at once, however, that those measures which the hon. gentleman mentioned will have every opportunity of being fully discussed, even if we have to give up any of our days in return for the manner we have been treated. The reason I move for it now is that we will not meet until Wednesday, but we might move on Wednesday and take it the following week. I am quite satisfied, as I said, that when hon. gentlemen go back to their homes they will be very anxious when they return to go on with Government business; and it was with a view of meeting what I am convinced is the feeling in the breasts of gentlemen on both sides that I ask to move the motion at this stage. However, I leave the matter to the House, and if it is really the desire of hon. gentlemen that I should postpone the motion, I shall do so cheerfully.

Mr. MITCHELL. The course which the right hon. gentleman is now adopting is one which has been pursued for the last two or three Sessions. It has been my duty—and, at times, I may say, it was a painful duty—to find fault with the Government for taking away the rights of private members. I have objected for the last three or four Sessions to this course. The reasons given by the right hon. gentleman are two-fold. First, he says that it is inconvenient to have a debate adjourned over and then resumed after intervening days—say from Friday until Tuesday. Well, he can obviate that difficulty by giving us Tuesday for private business, and taking Thursday and Friday together for Government business. The other reason for the motion, he says, is that, when hon. gentlemen go to their homes and find how late the season is, they will be glad to come back and get through with the business of the House, and get away again. Now, no one will be more pleased than I will to have the business of the Session concluded, but we have a duty to perform, and if there is any difficulty in that state of things, it lies at the door of the right hon. gentleman, who, instead of bringing on the elections in the fall, or in a suitable season, brought them on at a time the most unfavorable, when we were subjected to the dangers and troubles of an election contest, in the month of February, in the depths of one of the worst winters I have ever experienced. So that if there is any blame on that score it lies at the door of the Premier, who controls this Government. I do not think he can fairly put that forward as a reason. I am not going to oppose his taking Thursday, because I think it makes very little difference what we do. The country is a despotism now; it is ruled and controlled by the will of the hon. gentleman. All he has to do is to raise his finger, and he can carry any legislation he chooses in this House. It is true, he defers to this side of the House, but it is the soft tongue that speaks, and the iron hand is felt.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will gladly take all the blame that attaches to me, but the hon. gentleman says I am responsible for our having the worst winter that has been known for many years. The hon. gentleman says I rule this House, but I certainly do not command the power over the elements. He says it was my fault that the elections were brought on so late. The reason they were brought on so late was that until the voters' lists under the new franchise law were completed, it was impossible to carry out the spirit of the Legislature. We could not make up an electorate before having all those returns in.

Mr. MITCHELL. What about Chambly?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is an exceptional case, and the great objection that was made by the Opposition to that premature election so convinced the Government that they had better carry out the full constitutional principle, that they did carry it out.

Motion agreed to.

DISALLOWANCE OF MANITOBA RAILWAY ACTS.

On the order for Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions on which to found an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that he will be graciously pleased to effectuate the altered policy stated to the House of Commons on the 5th February, 1884, and in pursuance thereof to leave to their operation any Acts of the Local Legislature, not otherwise objectionable, which have been or may be passed for the construction of railway lines within the original Province of Manitoba (Mr. Watson), Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman who has that motion in charge has kindly consented to carry out the suggestion of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) that we should go on de die in diem until we had concluded the tariff.

Mr. WATSON. With the arrangement that has been made between the leader of the Opposition and the Government I certainly have no objection, but I would like to have a day set for the discussion of this question. My hope was that it would have been disposed of long before this. I would move that this question be the first Order a week from Thursday, and that it then remain the first Order until disposed of.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is Thursday, the 26th. If the hon. leader of the Opposition has no objection to that we will fix that day either for disallowance or for the franchise, just as he chooses.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Disallowance.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House resumed the further consideration of Resolutions reported from Committee of Ways and Means May 13th.

Agricultural machines and implements, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is the present tariff.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does the hon. Minister know what increased cost will be entailed on the manufacturers of these goods by the increased iron duties?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think it will be very considerable. There is no increase in the tariff on steel, and that, as the hon. gentleman knows, is a very important item in the manufacture of agricultural implements. As I explained to the House last night, the basis on which this tariff is constructed, not with mathematical exactness, but as a general principle, is to impose two-thirds of the American tariff on pig iron, that is, $4 instead of $6, and to apply in a general way the same principle to all the various manufactures of iron up to the highest stage. I find that the application of that principle would not increase this amount, because the protection given to agricultural implements in the United States has not been relatively so great as it is in this country, and considering that the implement makers have practically the command of the market under the present tariff, that they are so thoroughly established, and that the excellence of their manufacture is so completely recognised, that it is impossible for any person from outside to come in and interfere with them, I think this duty may safely be left at its present figure without any person suffering.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the hon. gentleman consider that it is necessary to leave the tariff on agricultural implements at its present high rate in order to protect the manufacturers of agricultural implements in this country? Does he think, in the advanced position of that industry, that 35 per cent. is necessary to protect it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I find myself very much embarrassed between the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, and the hon. gentleman who preceded him. I understood the hon. member for South Brant to be anxious that we should encourage the makers of agricultural implements.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I wanted the information as to what the increased cost on those articles would be?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, I think the tendency of the question was to exhibit a certain amount of interest in the agricultural implement makers. I think on one side it is very desirable that that great industry should be sufficiently protected. I think it is sufficiently protected, and I do not think the protection given it has injured in any way the people who are obliged to purchase and use those implements. It has not, I believe, been found to increase the cost. The country has been furnished with very excellent agricultural implements, and at prices not exceeding those which were paid at the time this increased duty was levied. But I certainly would not like to go back and treat this industry exceptionally by reducing the amount of protection granted at a time when, as the hon. member for South Brant has said, the cost of iron which they used is naturally increased.

Mr. WATSON. I had hoped that this Session the Government would have seen fit, in making these changes in the tariff, to reduce the duty on agricultural implements. In 1883, when the duty on agricultural implements was 25 per cent., the manufacturers came to Ottawa and asked, not for an increase in the duty, but to have the raw material admitted free. This the Government refused. They maintained the duty on coal and iron, and to satisfy the manufacturers gave them 10 per cent. increase in the duty on manufactured goods. Now, the duty has been taken off anthracite coal, which is used largely by the manufacturers, as a set-off to the increased duties on iron. We find now he does admit that the duty imposed on iron is going to make it more expensive to the manufacturer.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman did not understand me, I hope, to say, at any period of the discussion, I did not expect there would be any increase, in the first instance, in the cost of iron under the new arrangement.

Mr. WATSON. Hon. gentlemen opposite have always tried to make the House believe that the duty was not paid by the consumer. Now, we find it is the consumer that pays, and in every instance we bring the duty home to the farmer, who has to pay the extra duty imposed for the purpose of building up a few industries of Canada. I think it would be perfectly in order for the Finance Minister to propose that the farmer should receive a bounty on growing wheat. If this system of protection and giving bounties is going to benefit the country, let it be carried out in its entirety. Let all classes benefit by it. The iron producers are to have a bounty and increased protection, and the farmers, who have to pay the increased duty on their implements, ought to receive a bounty on their growing wheat. In Manitoba we have no manufacturers of farming implements, and we feel there we have not only to pay the duty of 35 per cent. on the manufactured goods, but the duty on the raw material that goes into the manufacture of those goods. We find the duty is increased on iron, and the Minister of Finance admits now that it will increase the cost to the manufacturer. The result will be that, instead of the consumer of those articles having to pay 35 per cent. on the manufactured goods, he will have to pay the increased duty on the raw material as well, or, he will have to pay from 40 to 45, and in some cases, 50 per cent., in order to build up those manufactures. I must say that I regret the Minister of Finance has not taken the farming community into consideration. We were told by the hon. member for Cape Breton, that in Cape Breton there were the most valuable iron mines and coal mines in the world, in close proximity to cheap freight. Yet, with all these advantages, the Minister of Finance finds it necessary to protect iron at the rate of $4 a ton and $1.50 bounty. The production of grain, I hold, is of equal importance to this iron industry, and I contend the farmers should be considered in these tariff changes.

Mr. MADILL. I agree with the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), in congratulating the hon. Minister of Finance on his able Budget speech. With reference to the question of duty on agricultural implements, it is an undoubted fact that, notwithstanding the duty, agricultural implements are cheaper to-day than they were before the introduction of the National Policy. When we had no duty on agricultural implements, the manufacturers of the United States controlled the Canadian market, and we had to pay just what they demanded; but after we imposed a duty, the result was, not only did we get implements cheaper from the United States, but the capitalists of the United States came over to Canada and established industries here, employing our own labor to develop our own country, instead of as formerly, importing our labor to develop the United States. Another matter discussed last night, to which I may refer, was the charge of misrepresentation on the part of the Ministers of the Crown during the last election, with reference to the public debt. Our opponents, during that campaign, declared that the country was being ruined by misgovernment, and that our public debt was more than we could bear. Last night hon. gentlemen opposite made the charge that Ministers of the Crown and their supporters had actually stated before the people the amount of the public debt as it stood on the 30th June, 1885, for that on the 30th June, 1886. I had the pleasure of listening to several Ministers of the Crown during the elections, and I know that, in reference to the public debt, they based their calculations on the last Public Accounts published in 1886, and gave the amount of public debt on the 30th June, 1885, as $196,407,692. I hold in my hand the statement published by the Government, giving the amount of public debt on that occasion, and hon. members on the other side, particularly the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), acknowledged they had this document in their possession during the campaign. This document gives the amount of the public debt on the 30th June, 1885, the net debt of the Dominion of Canada, as $196,000,000, and this was the statement of the debt made by Ministers of the Crown.

Ontario, to my knowledge. In reference to the public debt, I made up my mind that, if there was one member more than another on the Reform side of the House who has studied the exact position of our public debt, it was the ex-Finance Minister of Mr. Mackenzie's Government, the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). He placed the gross amount of public debt at $280,000,000. We quoted the amount of the public debt of Canada on 30th June, 1855, as $284,000,000, giving the hon. gentleman the benefit of $4,000,000. The hon. gentleman forgot the amount of $20,000,000 received by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the amount of the loan which had been granted to them some years ago. Hon. gentlemen claimed this was a gift, that it would never be repaid, and were, therefore, unwilling to tell the people that their prophecies were false; but deducting this $20,000,000 you reduce the amount of our debt to $264,000,000. Then, the Dominion Government had assets bearing interest to the extent of $68,000,000, deducting which you have the net debt of the Dominion on the 30th June, 1855, $196,000,000. Since Confederation, there were paid to the different Provinces $106,000,000. This was not for debt incurred by the present Dominion Government under the present Premier, or under the leadership of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie.) They were amounts raised by the various Provinces since Confederation, and assumed by the Dominion Government, and deducting these from the $196,000,000 you have $90,000,000. Then you will find a published statement of the hon. Mr. Blake that the Reform Government, during the five years they were in power, were responsible for $42,500,000 of that. Take it at $40,000,000 in round numbers, and you find that the Reform Government, in five years, increased the public debt at the rate of $8,000,000 a year. Then, the Government led by the right hon. gentleman is responsible for $50,000,000. That Government has been in power for fourteen years, so that it has increased the public debt by about $4,000,000 a year. Notwithstanding the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite, as to the burdens which have been placed on the people, and as to the increase of the public debt, it is clear that they increased the public debt at double the rate it has been increased by the Government of the right hon. gentleman. Now, taking the gross amount of the debt, as stated by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) the other day, after the delivery of the Budget speech, you find that he agrees that the gross debt now is $225,000,000. According to the same calculation, we find that out of this the Reform Government was responsible for $40,000,000, or $8,000,000 a year during the five years it was in office, and the Government of the present leader of the House is responsible for $79,000,000 during fifteen years, or $5,265,000 a year, against the $8,000,000 of our opponents. So much for the public debt. Then our friends opposite speak in doleful tones about the amount of the taxation, about the increase of the burdens of the people under this National Policy. I thought, after the Malvern speech of the leader of the Opposition, we would not have any longer to defend the principles of the National Policy. We have there the swallowing of the National Policy sword, according to Mr. Grip, and, according to that paper, we have the hon. member for South Oxford standing by and saying "the sword is a real sword, and the swaller is a real swaller." We thought, after that, when our Reform friends, during the last election, had taken back all they had said against the National Policy during the eight years previously, that it would not be necessary for us any more to defend the National Policy. They speak about the question of taxation. We know that the price of all agricultural implements, notwithstanding the taxation, is lower than it was before the introduction of the National Policy. You have heard in this House yesterday, that the duty charged on all the lower grades of sugar is lower under this tariff than it was under the Cartwright policy, so that the sugar which is used by the workingmen of this country is lower in price than it was before the adoption of the National Policy; therefore, if the articles we use, if the necessaries of life are cheaper to-day than before the National Policy was introduced, where does the taxation affect the workingmen of this country? It is true there are higher duties on luxuries, because the people who use them are supposed to be able to pay for them, but the necessaries of life are lower in price to-day than they were before the introduction of the National Policy. There are some articles, of course, on which the duties are much higher. There are some articles in regard to which it is optional with hon. gentlemen opposite whether they contribute to the revenue or not. There is an amount of $3,500,000 raised by duties on spirits, there is an amount of $400,000 raised by the duties upon malt and malt liquors, there is $700,000 raised upon cigars, and $1,610,000 upon tobacco. I tell hon. gentlemen opposite that it is optional with them whether they will contribute one cent towards this large sum of $6,210,000 which goes into the revenue. If they do not desire to contribute to the revenue in this respect, I ask them not to drink whiskey, not to drink malt liquors, and not to smoke; but if they drink whiskey or malt liquors, or if they smoke tobacco or cigars, they are contributing to that amount of revenue by the duties which are levied upon whiskey, malt liquors, cigars and tobacco. They need not contribute one cent of this unless they desire, but, if they do, they cannot blame the Government for raising that amount by the imposition of a duty upon liquors and cigars. I have discussed the amount of the public debt and have shown the amount which is due to hon. gentlemen opposite, as compared with that which is due to the Government supported by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. But the people naturally ask what have we received for the amount of public debt which has been incurred by the respective Governments? What have we got under the Government which preceded the present Premier? What public works have they established in the interests of the people of Canada in return for the amount of money which they added to the public debt? We have, according to the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), as reported in the Globe newspaper, an increase of the public debt during the five years of that régime amounting to $42,500,000. I ask members of the opposite side of the House what public works we have to show for this large addition to the public debt? We have the Kaministiquia works, the St. Francis locks, and the Neebing Hotel, which is standing—at least I do not know whether it is standing or not—but which is there in the wilderness, a monument of Reform extravagance in this country. Then we have $79,000,000 added to the debt during the fifteen years the present Premier has been in power, or $5,260,000 a year. We have, in addition to that, the sums which have been expended in the construction of public works from year to year out of the ordinary revenue of the country, amounting to $34,000,000 over and above what is charged to the public debt. What have we to show for that expenditure? We have the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, binding the Maritime Provinces together, which were isolated before; we have the opening up of the highways of the Dominion; we have the widening and deepening of the canals; we have the light-houses established in order to open up the highways of the country, and we have the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway—a band of iron stretching from ocean to ocean, and binding all the Provinces of this Confederation in one bond of union under the régime of the present leader of the Government. And we must remember that that railway, built by five millions of people, in the short time of its construction has won the admiration of the people of the whole world. If the leader of the present Government had done nothing else during his long régimé than to accomplish the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, he would have earned the eternal gratitude of the people of this country. Our friends on the other side take the ground that that railway has been built too soon. We have to-day, as a result of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Canada, a standing army of 40,000 employes, earning at the rate of $250,000 a month in wages, which would not now accrue to the people of this country had the policy of the Opposition been carried out in respect to the rapid construction of that road. Now, we have every evidence of the prosperity of our country under the National Policy, and I say the House and the country should congratulate the Finance Minister upon the cheerful and hopeful tone of the speech, as regards the future of this country, which he was able to deliver to this House as a result of the National Policy. In reference to the public debt, I know that during the last elections, Grit orators attempted to make the people believe that they would be called upon, the day after the elections, to pay $45 or $50 for every man, woman and child in this Dominion, as their share of the public debt; and they went so far as to calculate how many waggons it would take to carry this sum in gold or silver which represents the public debt. Sir, I think the action of the Government in reference to the public debt may be compared to a prudent man who purchases an unimproved farm for, we will say, $1,000, and not having the money on hand, he borrows that sum at a higher rate of interest than he otherwise would, because he cannot give good security; he spends that sum in addition to his own labor in clearing, draining, fencing and improving the farm, and erecting buildings thereon. When the time comes to repay that $1,000, having spent it on his farm, he is not able to do so, and he borrows that sum, but this time at a lower rate of interest, because he was able to give a better security. The first $1,000 that he spent on the farm, made his security better, and he can now borrow money at a lower rate of interest, and when the time comes for the repayment of the second sum, he has been able to save enough money to pay it all. That is the principle upon which our Government have borrowed money, and it is on the very same principle that the credit of our Government stands so high in the financial market of the world, since the introduction of the National Policy, since they are now able to borrow money cheaper than they could before the introduction of that policy, and we are now able to pay the loans made by our opponents at a higher rate of interest, and thus make a saving to the people of this country in the difference between the rates of interest. Another illustration of the prosperity of the country is the amount of deposits in the savings banks and the chartered banks of this Dominion. In 1868, the amount deposited in the savings banks of the Dominion was $4,363,000; in 1878, the amount had increased to $14,222,000. According to the last financial statement given in the Budget speech the other day, there are now deposited of the hard-earned money of the workmen and mechanics of this country, $45,072,818. But an hon. gentleman opposite complained the other day that the Government allowed four per cent. interest on savings bank deposits, which is a higher rate than is allowed in the banks. Now, let us take the deposits in the banks at three per cent. interest, and see what the increase has been. We find that in 1868, the amount deposited in the chartered banks was $32,808,000; in the last year of the financial administration of the Dominion, by the hon. gentleman opposite, in 1878, the deposits amounted to $66,503,757. What, according to the financial statements of the hon. Minister the other day, is the present amount of deposits in these banks under a three per cent. rate of interest? It is no less a sum than $103,583,260. Now, while we find these evidences of the prosperity of the country, we find at the same time that the necessaries of life are cheaper to-day than they were before the introduction of the National Policy; we find that the taxation is placed upon luxuries, while it rests very lightly on the poor man. Therefore, I say, in face of all these evidences of prosperity in this Dominion, the hon. Minister of Finance is to be congratulated by this House that his hopeful views of the future are so well warranted.

Mr. MADILL.

Mr. CHARLTON. I shall not attempt to follow the hon. gentleman from North Ontario (Mr. Madill) —

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend allow me to make a suggestion before he proceeds? Of course, I did not like to interrupt the hon. gentleman from North Ontario, who was addressing the House with so much ability for the first time; but it appears to me that it would be better to continue to take up the remaining portion of the tariff and deal with it, and postpone the general discussion of the tariff to another stage. It was understood, at the outset, that during the whole discussion upon the Bill, and at every stage of it, there would be the amplest opportunity of discussing the whole question. I would suggest to my hon. friend opposite, whether it would not be desirable to confine the discussion to-day until we have gone through with the tariff, and then at a future stage deal with those questions that are opened up by the debate.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am quite willing to concede that the proposition made by the Minister of Finance is a reasonable one. Some positions were advanced by the hon. member for North Ontario, and I felt called upon upon to reply in respect to one or two points merely. With the hon. Finance Minister's permission, I will refer to two points only, and very briefly. I understood the hon. gentleman to attempt to relieve the Ministry from the charge of having concealed from the country, during the last general elections, the state of the public debt. Now, Sir, I think the Ministry were guilty beyond all question of concealing the actual condition of the finances of this country. They must have been aware of the amount of the net public debt on the 30th June last. Last Session questions were asked in the House of Commons every month as to the condition of the debt, as to the amount of net debt and the gross debt upon the first of each month, and each question was answered in this House, except the question with regard to the net debt on the first day of June. The last answer given to this question was on the 5th of May, when we were informed that the net debt on the first of May was $205,569,000. Now, whatever may be true as to the politicians in the country, whatever may be true as to the majority of the members of this House, I am not willing to believe that the occupants of the Treasury benches were so ignorant as not to be aware that these questions were asked, and as not to be aware, from the answers, what the condition of the public debt was on each occasion. Now, we had published last year the amount of the deficit on the 30th June; that was given in the Toronto Mail. That journal stated that the amount of expenditure chargeable to Consolidated Fund was something over $39,000,000. We had various items of information that are contained in the annual statements made in the Public Accounts, bringing the year down to the 30th June; but we did not have a statement of the amount of the public debt, and I believe that the reason was that the Ministry designed to conceal, and purposely did conceal, the condition of the finances as regards the public debt. They went about the country quoting the public debt, not according to the last official statement made in this House, but giving the amount on 30th June, 1885, $196,000,000, when they knew, by a statement made in this House, it had reached $205,569,000 on 1st May, and when each one must have known that it was $223,000,000 on 30th June. So much for the question as to whether the Ministry concealed from the people the condition of the finances as regards the amount of the public debt. One word more as to the statement made by the hon. gentleman with respect to the increase of the public debt during the various Administrations. He took the position that under the Administration of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) the net public debt of Canada increased as rapidly as during any other term, and that the Reform Administration was equally culpable with other Administrations for the rapid and enormous increase of the public debt. Now, the public debt, it is true, did increase under the Administration of the hon. member for East York. I think the increase during his Administration was in round numbers $32,000,000, between $32,000,000 and $34,000,000—I do not pretend to speak with absolute accuracy, but it did not exceed $34,000,000. The question is with respect to the responsibility of the hon. gentleman; what proportion of that increase was due to his policy, and what proportion was caused by his carrying out obligations entered into by his predecessor, which rested upon him as administrator of public affairs? That is the question, and when we come to examine it in that light we find that not $100,000 of that total increase of debt amounting to nearly $34,000,000 is strictly chargeable to the Administration of my hon. friend. He had to carry out the Government's obligations with respect to the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway, with respect to the enlargement of the canals; he had to carry out contracts made with reference to public buildings in this city, and in carrying out those obligations placed upon the country by his predecessors, and which the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was compelled to discharge, the entire amount of the increase of the public debt was caused.

Mr. MADILL. Why did the hon. gentleman not cancel contracts made by the previous Government?

Mr. CHARLTON. The Intercolonial Railway was half built. Was it to be supposed that the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) would proceed to cancel the contracts and throw away money already expended, when the country had determined on engaging in the construction of that work. Then there were the contracts for enlarging the canals; and was it to be supposed that the works were to be abandoned and the money expended to be wasted in order to cease the accumulation of debt. It is not to be supposed that such a course could be adopted. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) simply proceeded to carry out the obligations entered into by his predecessor a great number of which he had opposed, but which it was his duty, as leader of the Administration, to discharge. He proceeded to do so, and he did so, and in doing so the amount of the public debt accumulated under his Administration. I wished to meet these two points: first, to show that the Ministry designedly concealed the actual condition of the public debt when they went into the election contest in February last, to the extent of over $27,000,000; and second, to show that the increase of the public debt which took place under the Administration of my hon. friend was due to measures for the inception of which he was not responsible, but which were obligations incurred by his predecessor.

Mr. FREEMAN. I desire to ask the hon. gentleman who has just sat down a question or two with respect to the public debt. Hon. gentlemen opposite were in power from 1874 to 1878.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman was present when I made the suggestion that we should adjourn this discussion until we had gone through the tariff resolutions, that we should confine ourselves to the tariff, and at a further stage resume the debate on the general question.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). Some of the speeches made have reminded me very much of speeches made on the motion with respect to Ireland by the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) and others: there was a good deal of electioneering about them. I feel, however, that the country is pretty safe, notwithstanding the lamentations uttered by several hon. gentlemen. The leader of the Opposition is out of his place, having gone home to the bosom of his family, I suppose. The hon. gentleman who acts as his first assistant, the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is also absent, and when a question of such importance to the country is being discussed I think those hon. gentlemen, if there was any great danger, would be at their posts.
Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. MILLS. I would just say that the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is attending his mother's funeral.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I am very sorry to hear of the hon. gentleman's loss. I do not agree with the views advanced by several members with respect to free trade. I am opposed to free trade; I am in favor of the National Policy, and have always been so. I believe the National Policy has done more to advance the material and commercial interests of Canada than any other legislation passed by this Parliament. Believing, as I do, that the National Policy is of great importance, still, I think there should be a limit to its bounds. When this policy was first introduced a duty of 25 per cent. was imposed on agricultural implements. I thought that was quite sufficient to encourage the manufacturers of Ontario and enable them to compete successfully with any rivals. But next year the manufacturers asked for an additional duty, thus showing conclusively that the duty had at least cost the farmers 10 per cent. It is claimed that the duty has been the means of lowering the price of implements, and that they are now made cheaper in Canada than before. No doubt it has had that effect to some extent; but when Parliament was asked to add 10 per cent. additional to the 25 per cent. it is positive proof that such an imposition of duties is against the interests of the farmers. I claim that agriculture is the greatest industry of Canada. The husbandmen of the country are referred to in every speech delivered at the opening of Parliament, and it is a matter of very great importance that every assistance should be given to the agricultural industry, and it should be the duty of the Government to be as lenient as possible in imposing taxation on implements for the use of farmers. This is a matter in which the whole community is interested. Cheap living is one great source of wealth to a nation, and if taxes are high they must to some extent tend to increase the price of living. We in the North-West Territories are entirely, I may say, an agricultural community; we are far off from Ontario, and if it were not for the National Policy we could get our implements from Minneapolis and other places in the United States, a great deal cheaper. I do not ask that the duty shall be taken off, but I know of my own knowledge that the manufacturers of Ontario have formed a combination by which binders and other implements shall not be sold below a certain price. They were not satisfied with the protection of 35 per cent. which was given them, but they combined to prevent a free competition among themselves, by arranging that these implements should not be sold for less than a certain price. I hold that 25 per cent. would be a sufficient duty, as they would then either have to sell them cheaper or get reduced rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway, so I think that 35 per cent. duty on agricultural implements is an injustice to the people of the North-West. I believe that the Government are willing to arrange this tariff to suit the best interests of the country. It has been said to me that Ontario, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and the other older Provinces bought the North-West, and that, therefore, they have a right to the markets of that country. Well, it is true that to a certain extent they did make the negotiations for the purchase of that country many years ago, but they have been well repaid for their investment. We have enabled them to give 25,000,000 acres of land to the Canadian Pacific Railway at the rate of $2.50 per acre. It does not matter if the land is not worth a dollar, or even 2½d. per acre, it has answered its purpose, as part of the terms of payment to the railway, under the contract with the company. This cry about buying the North-West is largely a delusion, because, as I have said, we have contributed all that land, and it is nearly all in the district I represent. Hon. gentlemen may think this is a strong statement, but it is, nevertheless, a true one. Our western country is a large country, so large that in many of our ranches there, some of these eastern Provinces about which they are making so much noise, would hardly make a calf-pasture for us. To make that country prosperous and thriving, nothing would be a greater advantage to us than to encourage agricultural industry, and no better way of doing that can be found than by making the implements which are used to till the soil a little cheaper than they are to-day. There is no doubt that when this matter comes up again the Minister of Finance will see the justice of reducing the duty on these implements from 35 to 25 per cent. I believe the existence of that high duty is a hindrance to immigration, because when people tell their friends about the high duties which they pay, and how they are at the mercy of a few manufacturers, I believe it works greater injury to the country than the railway monopoly.

Mr. DALY. I cannot allow the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia East (Mr. Perley), to pass without saying a few words in reply to him. I was rather startled to hear him making these remarks, in face of the fact that I stood on the same platform with him during his election contest, and heard him make statements directly contrary to those which he has uttered to-day. I totally deny the statement of the hon. gentleman that the increased duty upon these articles affects the price to the farmers. I discussed this question among my constituents very fully during the last election, and they were thoroughly satisfied that the result of this duty has been to reduce the price of these implements to a lower rate than before that duty was imposed. We have also the proud satisfaction of knowing that, to-day, the farmers of Manitoba and the North-West are not using the American implements to which the hon. gentleman referred, but are using implements of Canadian manufacture—implements made out of Canadian material, on Canadian soil, by Canadian workmen. If you take the article of binders, you can to-day buy the steel binder of the Massey Manufacturing Company in Brandon, for $190 in cash. The same article was sold, three or four years ago, for from $240 to $300; the decrease being due to the fact that the increased duty has created competition, which has in turn lowered the price. If you take the implements made by the Massey Company, Harris & Son, Elliott & Co., and others, you will find that they are giving the farmers of Manitoba and the North-West just as good an article as you can get in Dakota or Minnesota. This all-steel binder of the Massey Company is made from the latest American patterns, and not only has the price of these Canadian implements been reduced to the North-West farmers, but the competition has had the effect of reducing the price of the American implements to the same extent to those who choose to buy them, just because the American manufacturers found that they could not meet the competition unless they brought down the price. More than that, we have the satisfaction of knowing that there are very few people in Manitoba who wish to use these American implements; the best evidence that such people are in the minority is the fact that they have sent four representatives to support the right hon. gentleman and his policy. It is not that the people of Manitoba are ignorant of this question; we discussed it on every platform throughout the length and breadth of the country. They knew then, as they know now, that the National Policy was not affecting them in the manner indicated by the last speaker; if they had not thought so they would not have sent four members to support the Government, but would have elected representatives of the same stripe as the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). I heard the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) speak about taking off the duty on flour and lumber.

Mr. MITCHELL. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I never mentioned anything about taking the duty off lumber.

Mr. DALY. I understood him to say flour and lumber.

Mr. MITCHELL. No, coal and cornmeal.

Mr. DALY. The effect of taking the duty off flour would be that the people of Manitoba and the North-West Territories would not have the market for their flour which they have at the present time. I have friends who come from the same part of the country as the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), and they tell me that the price of flour has not increased there since the National Policy was introduced; but that, instead of those people down by the sea using American flour, they are now using Canadian flour ground out of the hard Fyfe wheat which we raise in Manitoba and the North-West Territories. Besides this duty has enabled our millers, such as Ogilvie & Co., McMillan & Co., and others, to send their flour into the British Columbia market and compete with the millers of Oregon, so that, as far as the duty on flour is concerned, the people of the North-West Territories are being benefited, because it has enabled them to increase the market for their produce. With regard to the duty on lumber, instead of our people in Manitoba using American lumber, as they did three or four years ago, they are using Canadian lumber, at a reduction in price of from 35 or 40 per cent. In connection with this, I will give you a few figures showing the difference there is in these prices. First quality American siding is now delivered at Brandon at $48.25 per thousand; Canadian lumber from Rat Portage, of the same quality, sells for $39.30, or a difference in favor of the Canadian lumber of $8.95. In the second grade the difference is $10.20 in favor of the Canadian; and on the third, $8.95; on the fourth, $6.70, and so on down. In every grade of lumber the farmers of Manitoba are using the Canadian article, at prices much lower than those they were obliged to pay before the Canadian Pacific Railway connected them with Rat Portage. Not only so, but we are able to foster those industries which have been established along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, east of Winnipeg. More than that, the gentleman who writes to me states that if railway rates are maintained at their present figure there is a possibility in the near future of the British Columbia market being able to compete with Rat Portage in the supply of lumber for Manitoba. So that, so far as the building of houses and barns and other buildings in Manitoba is concerned, the question of cheap lumber has been solved. Then, we come to the question of canned goods. I heard a great deal during my election of the sufferings of the farmers with regard to canned goods; but we find that almost all the canned goods used in Manitoba to-day are of Canadian manufacture. I mention this, because I have heard gentlemen from Ontario say that the farmers are suffering from the National Policy. I would ask hon. gentlemen, and especially the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), whose county raises fruit, to see how many desiccated and dried apple and fruit canning establishments have been started since the National Policy was inaugurated; and where is the market for these goods? It is in the Province of Manitoba and North-West Territories. But for the National Policy, instead of our dealing exclusively in Canadian canned goods, we would be using American canned goods. Take the article of peaches. You can buy canned peaches—

Mr. McMULLEN. I rise to a point of order. If I understood aright it was arranged across the House that we should confine ourselves strictly to the item of the tariff at the time under discussion, and that afterwards general questions of this kind could be discussed. I appeal to the hon. Minister of Finance if he did not request the hon. member for North Norfolk to cut his remarks short, and confine himself simply to the item in question. If we are going to proceed in this way we had better open up the whole question, but if we are going to confine ourselves to the various questions as they come up, we had better do it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I must say the understanding was, and it is entirely in the judgment of the House to take any course it is disposed to take—that we should confine ourselves to the discussion of the particular subject under consideration. But, of course, both speeches, that of the hon. member for East Assiniboia, and that of the hon. gentleman who has just been speaking, have been entirely on the question of agricultural implements, and there is no desire to limit the discussion on the item before the House. But I should be extremely glad, until these items are disposed of, that the discussion should be confined to them. After that the wider question can be taken up.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman will see that flour and corn meal and canned fruits are not agricultural implements.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am strictly in order, and I want to tell hon. gentlemen opposite that unless they conduct themselves with more courtesy to gentlemen on this side of the House, they will be here a great deal longer than they anticipate. We have tolerated this sort of discourtesy until it has become intolerable. We are anxious, in good faith, in order to promote the public business, to meet the wishes of the Minister of Finance, but I am sorry to say the supporters of the hon. gentleman persist in a line of discussion altogether at variance with the understanding.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Flour and lumber are subjects very close to agricultural implements.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I was just calling the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the discussion on flour and corn meal and peaches and lumber are far away from the subject of agricultural implements.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I rise to a point of order. I should like to ask whether any hon. member of this House can make a threat to a body of gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Mr. CHARLTON. It was not a threat. It was merely a statement of fact.

Mr. DALY. According to the wish of the Minister of Finance, I will confine myself to the subject of agricultural implements. I regret very much that the arguments I was using have fallen so hot on gentlemen on the other side of the House. I can tell the hon. member for Bothwell that he need not throw any threats across the floor, because we can attend to him on the question of fruits when we come to that question. With regard to agricultural implements, I started by saying that all kinds of implements could be bought in Manitoba to-day at lower prices than they could be got for before the duty was raised. More than that, I stated, and facts will bear me out, that the eastern manufacturers, having the market in Manitoba for agricultural implements, have been able to increase their production. I find, looking over the Trade and Navigation Returns, that the total duties paid in Manitoba on agricultural implements last year, was $11,383.63, a most infinitesimal sum when you take into consideration that the total Customs duties in the Province for the last fiscal year amounted to $467,212. More than that, I find, by returns made by the Board of Trade of Brandon, that agricultural implements to the amount of $400,000 were sold in that city alone last year. So that, so far as agricultural implements are concerned, I do not agree with the hon. member for East Assiniboia, or with the hon. member for Marquette, that the duty on them is injuring the farmers of that country. On the contrary, they are getting a better article on better terms of payment, and they know it is of Canadian manufacture, and that to many of them is a greater satisfaction than it would be to get American implements at even half the price.

Mr. DALY.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I am not an opponent of the National Policy, but I contend that 25 per cent. is sufficient duty, and I think the argument of my hon. friend that American implements are imported is an argument in my favor, for if they are imported under a tariff of 35 per cent., it is no more effective in keeping them out than would be a tariff of 25 per cent. I am as strong an advocate of the National Policy as my hon. friend is, but I think there is a bound for it, and when we go beyond that bound we injure the country. I am here to tell how the matter is affecting the constituents I represent, and I tell you there is a strong feeling in the North-West against this duty on agricultural implements. If the manufacturers cannot manufacture under a 25 per cent tariff, I think it shows that we are paying something in consideration of the duty.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not intend to say anything on this subject, but as the North-West has been brought into the discussion I wish to say that I entirely endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly). My hon. friend's arguments are sound, and his facts are undoubted. In western Assiniboia, which I have the honor to represent, and, with the leave of my hon. friend behind me, I will add eastern Assiniboia, which I know well, the general feeling is one, as it is throughout the entire North-West, in support of the National Policy; and there is not a man in Canada, however influential he might be, or whatever local or other influences he might bring to bear, who could be elected for any one of these constituencies if he were not a supporter of the Government and of the National Policy. My hon. friend from eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) is, no doubt, deeply interested in the welfare of his constituents, but I am perfectly certain he misapprehends their sentiments on this head, and misapprehends the meaning of the alternate tariffs which he has discussed. Why, I have here the amount of duty paid in the North-West on agricultural implements during the last year; it amounts to $3,946. If you divide that by the population you get a sum that is entirely insignificant.

Mr. PLATT. What has that to do with it?

Mr. DAVIN. It shows that very few of those implements have been brought in from the United States.

An hon. MEMBER. Because the duties are so high.

Mr. DAVIN. That is one of the objects aimed at by the National Policy. I could give you, Sir, analogous figures—but I will not delay the House—to those brought forward by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), and I could show you that Regina, Medicine Hat, and Calgary use Canadian implements made in London and Toronto, and get them at much cheaper prices than, and of as good a quality as, according to the testimony of farmers, they could the implements it appears my hon. and patriotic friend behind me would like to see brought in wholesale. In 1879 I saw in Winnipeg, ploughs, harrows, binders, agricultural implements of all sorts, made in the United States, costing something like 45 and 50 per cent. more than like agricultural implements cost to-day, and each had the saucy American flag sticking over it, and that saucy little flag indicated what would be the effect on our great country in the west if we had pursued a policy different to that which has been pursued by a wise, far-seeing and patriotic Government.

Mr. WATSON. In conformity with the request of the Minister of Finance, I will not take up much time, but I must say, with reference to the remark made by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), that his speech fell so hot on members on this side that we could not listen to him, that the matters mentioned by him have been discussed here before and in the Province of Manitoba. I am satisfied the people of Manitoba do not agree with the sentiments of the hon. gentleman. I will not follow him in his reference to a large number of articles, such as lumber, canned goods, agricultural implements, fence wire and binding twine, for all these matters have been discussed in this House before. He says the best evidence to show the sentiment of the people of the North-West is the fact that they have sent down four members to support this Government. If I were to enter into the reasons why four members were sent here to support the Government, I would probably excite another such discussion as was opened up by the senior and junior members for Halifax, and that would not be interesting to the House. With reference to the question of binders, the hon. gentleman has stated that he could buy field binders in Brandon for $190. But what can he buy them for south of the international boundary? There he can buy the same steel binder for $140.

Mr. HICKEY. You cannot do that in this country where the chances are greater.

Mr. WATSON. No, you cannot with 35 per cent. protection.

Mr. HICKEY. No, nor with 30 per cent.

Mr. WATSON. The duty has told heavily on the settlement of the North-West. The only difference between the hon. member for West Assiniboia, the hon. member for Selkirk, the hon. member for East Assiniboia and myself is that the two former are lawyers, and do not speak from the standpoint of farmers. The hon. member for East Assiniboia and myself spoke as practical farmers, men who buy the implements and use them. No argument can be used in favor of a high duty on agricultural implements, more especially from the standpoint of a representative from Manitoba or the North-West. The manufacturers of Canada and Ontario may have some excuse for supporting this duty, but no reasonable man from the east can say that a man from the west is acting in the interests of the west when he says 35 per cent. should be charged on implements used by every settler. This, along with other matters which may be discussed at a future day—the high tariff and the monopoly in railways—have been the cause of the statements being placed before us, that only 95,000 people are settled in Manitoba to-day. I would urge, with the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley), that the Government should reduce this duty from 35 to 25 per cent. We are told that practically no American implements are sold to-day in the North-West. That is evidence that the duty of 35 per cent. is prohibitory. We have learned also that the manufacturers of the east charge every cent they possibly can to the consumer in the west, and form combinations to keep up the prices of their goods. This shows clearly that the monopolies encouraged by the present Administration are exacting every cent they can out of the farmer, and I do not speak particularly of the farmer in the North-West, because I know a large number of the farmers in Ontario to-day who buy American implements. I know of men who have left Manitoba, and have given as their reason for going, the high tariff placed on the necessaries used by the settler. If time would permit me, I could show that in 1883, when you offered a free homestead to the settler in Manitoba, he had to pay in the first 12 months, on the necessaries he required to set himself up as a homesteader, $1 a homestead in duty. This question interests the people of Manitoba and the North-West more than any other portions of the Dominion. I am surprised to find the hon. member for Selkirk, (Mr. Daly) said he believed this duty of 35 per cent. and the duty on lumber were all right. The only reason I can give for his making that statement is that he is a lawyer and not a practical farmer, and does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. DALY. I may be a lawyer, I am a lawyer, I do not deny it; but I tell the hon. gentleman that I come more in contact with farmers than he does, even if he is a farmer, and I am inclined to deny that he is.

Mr. WATSON. What am I?

Mr. DALY. Well, that is what I have been trying to find out for a long time. I may say that, upon every platform on which the hon. gentleman's political friends appeared at a meeting during my election, this question was discussed. In fact it was discussed on every platform in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and, if the hon. gentleman cannot rise and say that my argument was not good, that the subject was not discussed, and the people of Manitoba and the people of the North-West Territories had not given their verdict upon this question by sending four members from Manitoba and four members from the North-West Territories to support the right hon. gentleman, then I think the House will see that the question has been fully discussed and acted upon by those people. I assert that the people in Manitoba to-day are not paying a dollar more upon agricultural implements than they were before the introduction of the National Policy. More than that, I deny that you can buy a steel binder south of the line for $150. The price in Fargo, Dakota, is $190, the same price for which he can buy it in Brandon. I obtained that information from Fargo, Dakota, and used it in my election and I repeat that here. I regret that we cannot go further into the discussion of this matter.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. gentleman has been trying, he states, to find out what I was. I have been trying to make my living in Manitoba by farming for the past four years. I must admit that it is a very hard living. I believe lawyers' business is a little better than farming in the North-West.

Mr. LISTER. There is no tariff on it, is there?

Mr. WATSON. I do not know whether there is or not. I heard the hon. gentleman make a statement on a platform in a farming community in which he informed the people that, on account of the high rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway, the people could not complain. He admitted that the rates were high on wheat, but he said: "You do not need to ship your wheat, you can make pork out of your wheat; feed it to your hogs and it will get into a smaller commodity." He said: "Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not know whether you people know it or not, but you can get three cents a pound on green pork in Brandon to-day." That statement did not take very well with the farmers. They did not believe they could get three cents a pound for their pork. But I came to the conclusion then, as I do now, that the hon. gentleman knows little or nothing about farming, and cannot speak as a practical man of the operation of this duty on the farmers.

Mr. DALY. What I said at the meeting the hon. gentleman refers to was—and I got the laugh on the hon. gentleman—that the farmers were only getting 15 cents a bushel for their frozen wheat, and were therefore feeding it to their hogs.

Mr. WATSON. It was last fall.

Mr. DALY. And consequently they were making money out of their frozen wheat. The hon. gentleman discussed this question of the tariff throughout Eastern Assiniboia; and he was asked at one meeting as to the duty on tea; and he said the duty upon tea was grinding the people down.

Mr. WATSON. No; I did not.

Mr. DALY. He was asked what the duty upon tea was; and he said: "I do not know much about tea; I am a farmer; but I think the duty is 17½ cents, or something of that kind." That shows how much the hon. gentleman knows about the National Policy, when the audience were able to tell him that there had not been any duty upon tea for some years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid we are getting away from agricultural implements.

Mr. WATSON. I am afraid we will get into a similar discussion to that which the senior and junior members for Halifax have been in for the last two or three weeks, and I for one do not wish to continue it; but the particular meeting to which the hon. gentleman refers and to which I referred was held last fall during the local campaign, when we had not a bushel of frozen wheat in the country.

Ferro-manganese, ferro-silicon, speigel, steel bloom ends and crop ends of steel rails, for the manufacture of steel, $2 per ton.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think we are now entering upon a very important industry, and I think it is the duty of the Finance Minister to explain in general terms, and in particular terms too, the grounds upon which the Government have made the very important changes they have. This industry affects almost every other industry in the country, and I think that before we pass these items, one after the other, we ought to have an exhaustive statement, to use the term of my hon. friend, in reference to the items we are asked to pass and in which everyone in the country has so deep an interest.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman had been in his place when I concluded my statement the other day, I think he would have considered it an exhaustive statement, and I was in hopes that would have avoided the necessity for inflicting a repetition of it upon the House. I stated to the House that this change in the tariff was intended to establish iron industries throughout Canada, by which we could make available the inexhaustible stores which we have of iron ore and coal, and the necessary fluxes for the production of iron under the most economical and favorable circumstances; that I knew that, in order to bring the necessary capital into this country for the purpose, it would be necessary, in the first instance, to impose much higher duties upon iron in almost all its phases than at present existed; that the result of that would be to build up great industries in Canada, giving employment to a vast number of people, and sustaining a greatly increased population in happiness and comfort; that I proposed to re-construct the iron tariff as it now existed, and as it certainly existed in a most unscientific form, on our Statute-book at present, and to adopt as the foundation of the proposed system to a large extent the American tariff, which had proved to be so eminently successful in the United States, that I had no doubt the same results would follow and that those results were that they were not only enabled to build up great and profitable industries all over the country, but that steadily the increased cost of iron, produced by the necessity of applying capital to that industry, would decrease until at no distant date the same thing would happen which happened in regard to the other industries which we had built up in Canada, the cotton industry, the woollen industry, and various other industries, in which, under the fostering protection of the tariff which was provided, capital was furnished, competition took place, and that competition resulted in bringing into those industries a much greater amount of skill than previously existed, with the effect at the same time of bringing those articles down to as low a price as ever existed in this country.

Mr. DALY.

Mr. JONES. What amount of increased duty does the hon. gentleman expect?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will come to that in a moment. I took as a basis the American tariff, which was $6 a ton upon pig iron. I propose in this tariff to increase the duty upon pig iron from $2, as it is now, to $4 a ton, that is two-thirds of the American duty. The Americans had given great attention to this subject, it had occupied their attention from year to year and they had appointed scientific and most elaborate commissions to go over the country and take testimonies, and investigate as to just how the duty could be so arranged as to weigh most equitably upon all classes of the people and upon the various productions of iron. I propose to take the two-thirds of their tariff as a sufficient increase of the duty upon pig iron especially in connection with the fact that we give a bounty of $1.50 a ton which continues until 1889. I propose to take two-thirds of their tariff, and then to construct the duty, not with mathematical exactness, but on general principles, and carrying out the principles that underlies the tariff, and that is, giving to the labor an equal proportion of protection in regard to all the manufactures of iron. While the Canadian tariff gave the protection it does now, taking the bounty into consideration of $3.50 a ton on pig iron, the puddled bar, which is an infinitely higher product of iron, which involves an enormously increased amount of labor, had only a protection under our present tariff of $1.70 a ton at the outside. It was impossible under these circumstances to hope for the establishment of an iron industry in Canada, notwithstanding the very admirable position we occupy in the possession of raw material to any extent. While, as I say, I have not carried that out with mathematical exactness, still, as a general principle, that is the mode in which this tariff has been placed.

Mr. JONES. Taking the bounty and the duty together, what protection would that give, what percentage?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It gives a protection of $5.50 on pig iron?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is the duty ad valorem of pig iron.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That would depend, of course, upon the value per ton of pig iron, which varies considerably. It would range, I should say from 20 to 30 per cent. according to value of the article itself. But as I said before, that is the principle that underlies this tariff. Then, I am asked by the hon. member for Halifax at what amount I estimate the increased revenue this will give. Well, of course, that is not a very easy question to answer, as the hon. gentleman will see, because a very considerable increase in the duty upon iron will very likely check considerably its importation for the first year, especially. I may say in general terms that the result of the increased duty would give, assuming that the importation continued about the same, and that there was none manufactured in the country, would give in the first year, according to the best calculation I can make, something like $700,000 over the present duty. But, I expect, owing to the circumstances I have mentioned, that this large increase on the tariff will naturally check importation for the first year. I do not rely upon over half a million as the increase in the amount received in the first year, because, as the hon. gentleman knows, it will involve the expenditure of a very large amount of capital, and it will take a considerable period of time to develop the industry. Provided I am right in anticipating, as I do, that capital will at once flow into the country for the purpose of developing this industry, it will still require considerable time, and no great advance could be made in that direction during the first year. I assume that during the first year we shall get an increased revenue from this additional impost upon iron of $500 000 in round numbers, or perhaps a little more than that, but I do not expect more than that the first year. Then as capital comes into the country, as these iron industries are developed, as I have no doubt they will be under this policy, developed as rapidly as it is possible for an industry of that kind, involving so much labor and expense in placing it in a position to do business, of course the revenue will decrease in the second year, and probably we shall not have over a quarter of a million increased revenue from that source. So there will be a steady decrease in the amount received from the first year, until at the end of a few years it will be a comparatively small amount. If the policy be as successful as I expect, we shall steadily dispense with the necessity of importing a considerable quantity of iron. As I mentioned the other evening to the House, the consumption of iron by the people of Canada is now very great, is in a much greater ratio than the average consumption of other countries, and I anticipate that we not only will be able to provide almost all the iron that is demanded by the people of Canada, but that we shall be able steadily to reduce the cost of its production until not only we supply the entire country with an article of our own production, by our own people, developing our own resources, giving employment to a very largely increased population, but we shall also steadily reduce the cost of iron, until it will be produced in this country as cheaply as it can now be imported. These remarks, in general terms, I hope will satisfy my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) as a general outline, without wearying the House too much, of the position in which I regard this question.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Finance Minister tells us that he hopes this duty will produce the same result in this country that the duty on pig iron did in the United States. I certainly hope the hon. gentleman will be mistaken, that his hope will not be realised. The result of the imposition of duty upon pig iron in the United States was to give an undue stimulus to the iron business of that country, and the investments in blast furnaces were made to such an extent that 100 millions of useless capital was invested and is largely lying idle and unprofitable to-day, and has been for years. The profits, of course, were large for a time, so large as to bring an undue embarkation of capital in the business, resulting, as I said, in locking 100 millions in useless blast furnaces that were not wanted in the country and are standing idle. If the duty produces the same result here, as I dare say it will, we will get the same result in over-production. This duty of $4 a ton added to the bounty of $1.50 amounts to an ad valorem duty of almost 50 per cent. The price of pig iron is somewhat less than $13 per ton. Here is a duty of $5.50 upon an article costing $13, which, roughly speaking, is about 45 per cent. protection. We have been adopting this policy, that while we protect the producer of pig iron, we at the same time increase the cost of what is the raw material for at least 30 manufacturers, for pig iron, which is the finished production of the blast furnace, is the raw material of nearly every other iron industry—of the stove founder, of every founder in the country. And thus while we are benefiting one we are injuring thirty people. So it is with respect to all the duties on iron—duties on bar iron, on puddled iron and on steel; a duty on steel, while it benefits one producer of steel, affects disastrously at least forty manufacturers.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We are not increasing the duties on steel.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am dealing with the general features of the hon. gentleman's policy in regard to duties on iron, in advancing the duty on pig iron, on bar iron, on puddled iron; and I think I will show when I reach steel that the hon. gentleman is imposing 45 per cent. on steel, which is an enormous tax, and that while it will benefit very few producers it will act disastrously on the interests of many. While this policy is adopted for the purpose of building up possibly three or four blast furnaces in this country for the benefit of a few producers of iron, it will injuriously affect the great mass of manufacturers, every manufacturer of agricultural implements, every maker of stoves, every founder in the Dominion; in fact this policy will benefit one at the expense of forty, fifty or sixty. Now I ask the hon. gentleman what he has attempted to do to benefit the people who will be most injured by this taxation, namely, the farmers? Is the hon. gentleman proposing to grant any compensatory advantage for the additional burdens which are to be placed upon them, because this additional duty on iron must act as a heavy burthen on the agricultural class. It is true the farmers have had protective duties on grain, butter and products of which this country raises a surplus, but they are duties which have not benefited the farmers in the slightest degree, and have not raised the price of the articles the farmer produces to the extent of one cent; and yet the policy of the Government is to go on piling tax upon tax, burthen upon burthen, impost upon impost, all of which react upon the farmer and must be paid ultimately by him. Every dollar of these duties which it is proposed to levy for the benefit of a few producers of iron will be paid ultimately by the farming community and the producing classes, and yet the hon. gentleman offers them no compensation. He does not surely pretend to offer them compensation by adopting this policy which necessarily increases these duties, not in the interest but contrary to the interests of the masses of the people, a course of action for which he deserves the condemnation of the farmers, and I believe they will slowly awake and are slowly awakening to the actual character of this policy propounded by the hon. gentleman. With respect to the operation of the duties which it was said would benefit the farmers, I defy the hon. gentleman to point out any day since the policy went into operation in 1879 when the farmers derived one cent of advantage from any duty imposed by hon. gentlemen opposite on any article in that list, except the single article of Indian corn. They never received one farthing of benefit.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And even that advantage the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) proposes to take away from them.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am willing he should do it. It has never benefited the farmers at all.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You admitted that Indian corn had.

Mr. CHARLTON. I made an exception in regard to that article, because it might be an open question as to whether it did benefit or not. I am prepared to maintain that it has not benefited the farmer. In those parts of Ontario where it is grown, the price has been lower than before the duty; and generally I would say that the National Policy has conferred on the farmer no advantage in any respect whatever in connection with the duties levied with a view to give him protection. Notwithstanding the fact the agricultural community is to be called upon to submit to additional burthens, in the shape of burthens placed upon all raw materials, which must enhance the cost of manufactures. As a representative of a farming constituency I protest against these advances in duties upon iron, duties that will bear directly upon the agricultural class in this country more than any other proposal which the hon. gentleman has submitted to this House.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. Finance Minister has chosen to refer to an opinion I have expressed, that the duties which it was supposed would benefit the farmers in the shape of duties on cereals and the products of cereals has resulted otherwise than beneficially. Certainly they have not been beneficial. Representing, as I do, a farming, lumbering and fishing community, because the great classes of the population of the country I have the honor to represent, are composed of those three classes, I may say that I have been a National Policy man from the first. I supported hon. gentlemen opposite in introducing that policy in 1878, when I knew it would not specially benefit my county; but I believed that if Canada could not obtain commercial intercourse with the United States on a fair business basis, that at least we should endeavor to keep the market of Canada for the people of Canada. I supported that policy in 1878, and I fell with it, because the people of my county felt that while the general interests of Canada might be promoted, that policy was not in the interest of a county like Northumberland or the counties in the Maritime Provinces, and I suffered by advocating it. I did not however, change my opinion in the least; but when my friends returned to power in 1878 I was not in a place where I could exercise any influence towards controlling and directing the extent to which that National Policy should be carried. I found that the course they pursued in taxing the food and fuel of the people was one that was largely condemned in most of those agricultural districts, and in all the lumbering districts of the eastern Provinces. I want to warn hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to this National Policy. I say that the National Policy was adopted by this country not as a principle but as a necessity against the course pursued by the United States when they refused to longer continue reciprocal commercial relations between the two countries; and when it was adopted by Canada, it was adopted not because we desired to adopt it, for such was not the feeling of the country, but as a necessity, as the only measure of self-protection which Canada and Canadian statesmen could exercise in order to keep the markets of Canada for our own people. What has been done since 1878? Not one Session has elapsed since that date that suffering has not been intensified by the addition year after year of increased duties and increased burthens upon the people. What do we raise in the eastern Provinces? I will illustrate the point best by taking the county I know most about, the county I have the honor to represent, and I take the great industries there and the sources of the means for paying for the imports required to be brought into the county, and I find them to be the fishing and lumbering interests. What are the facts in regard to the fishing interests? Do they benefit by the National Policy? No. They are directly taxed to retain the National Policy, for the United States is the only market they have. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) spoke about the great market which the North-West Territories, with its population of 105,000, offered for canned goods, but even that market is occupied, because British Columbia possesses greater facilities for sending in fish and also obtains lower rates than do the eastern Provinces. Look at the condition of the lumbering interests of the eastern Provinces. I venture to predict that there was never a time in the last twenty years when those interests were so depressed, and there was less hope for the people engaged in them to make a livelihood and pay their debts. I look with dread upon the coming season, upon the people of these eastern Provinces, who depend upon their trade in the export of spruce deals into other markets. They have not there, as they have in the Ottawa lumber districts and the western lumber districts generally, a valuable market for their pine in the United States. We cannot find a market for spruce, and we have no pine that we can export; we cannot send this spruce into the United States because we are met with a prohibitory duty, so we have to send it a long expensive freight voyage, along the coast of Nova Scotia, and the result is that scarcely a cargo is sent from the county which I have the honor to represent, to the American market, in the course of the twelve months. Then, if we send it to Europe what do we find there? I appeal to men who are engaged in the trade, some of whom are listening to me at this moment, if they do not find that in the markets of Europe, which, for years had been the market for the produce of our forests, the pine of the Baltic has driven them from the market, so that they are all either broken down entirely or so paralysed in their business that they are unable to produce the article for export, and therefore the country and its trade have become paralysed. What is the state of things in the city of St. John? Our leading merchants failing with immense liabilities, our banks going to the wall, and when you look at the condition of our country, you find that every branch of trade and business dependent on our two great staple industries of fish and lumber are suffering to an enormous extent. It is true that we have a large fresh fish industry, notwithstanding the heavy duty on that article since the repeal of the Reciprocity Treaty, and considerable business has been done in that branch of fishing during the winter season. But the canning business of our country is entirely closed, scarcely anything is done in it except in the one article of lobster canning, and those who come from that country, and are listening to me at this moment, know that what I say is true. I am a National Policy man, but I believe only in National Policy on fair and just principles, I am like the hon. member for eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Perley), a National Policy man to a certain extent—to a reasonable amount of protection. What I believe in, as I stated in 1878, is a tariff not higher than 25 per cent.; I would make that the maximum. I have been a National Policy man, and when my hon. friends opposite came into power, and when unfortunately—because I believe it was unfortunate—I lost my place in this House, I would have resisted to the utmost of my power hon. gentlemen opposite, whom I had helped to bring into power, when they attempted, to bring their tariff up to a figure so much beyond 25 per cent. From that day to this, at every Session of the Legislature, at every opportunity that offered, these hon. gentlemen have come forward with their tariff, increasing it item after item, and creating heavy burdens on the people they represent until these burdens have become almost unbearable. They put a tax on the food of the people whom I represent, 50 cents a barrel on flour and 40 cents a barrel on corn meal, notwithstanding that, Session after Session, for six years, I have been endeavoring to impress on them the necessity of giving our people some relief. They positively refused time and again to remove what I believe to be a gross outrage upon a people situated as the people in the eastern Provinces are. Was it for the sake of the National Policy that they imposed a duty on corn meal? There are not more than one or two counties in this Dominion where corn can be grown, and even in these it can be grown only to a very limited extent. It cannot be said to be grown in Canada as an article of commerce, and that tax is not one which in principle is any part of a true National Policy; it is a tax for revenue purposes—a sop given to the farmers of Ontario. And what have they ever given to the poor people down in the eastern Provinces? Is there a single manufacturing industry in my own county which is benefited by the National Policy? Down there we are all consumers, hewers of wood and drawers of water, and as consumers we have to pay a tax which has been levied for the benefit of a few manufacturers in the west. I am not opposed to giving a reasonable amount of protection, but I protest as a representative of the people, as one who has come fresh from the people and who, therefore, knows their views and sentiments. I protest in the name of the distressed people of my county where business has been prostrated, where a worse state of things has not existed for the last twenty years than is to be found there to-day, and where there is but little hope that they will improve for the future. I protest against a duty which increases the cost of almost every article that enters into the daily use and consumption of those people, into everything connected with the carrying on of their business—the food they eat and the clothes they wear. I protest against these increased charges as outrages against these people that should not be allowed to continue. And let me warn hon. gentlemen opposite. They talk about the great benefit which will result from their change of policy on the great iron industry. I admit the importance of the iron industry to any country. It is a natural source of wealth without which we cannot exist and enjoy the benefits of civilised society. But, Sir, while it is desirable to protect that great industry, it is an industry in which every farmer in the land is interested that requires his horse to be shod, his plough to be made, his cart to be built, his shovel to be handled. It is an industry in which every lumberman is interested, in the traces he uses, the sled he shoes, and the axe that he handles. Every fisherman requires that article in the outlay for his boats, and every article that enters into his ordinary occupation, and the manner in which this policy has borne upon these classes already will be intensified by the policy which the hon. gentleman is pursuing, of attempting to build up these large establishments for the benefit of a few, irrespective of the interests of the many. Let me warn hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches that, while I have been a National Policy man, a National Policy run into the ground may make me something else. I tell you that the time has arrived when the string has been tightened to the fullest extent, and if these things are to go on, Session after Session; if a powerful Government can come down and dictate the legislation of this country to this Parliament, heaping tax after tax on the shoulders of the people, what will this thing come to, and what will be the effect of it? Why, Sir, only last night I heard for the first time that by one little change in the sugar tariff last year the country gave to the revenues of the Government between five and six hundred thousand dollars. It passed last year. We could not ascertain then what it was going to realise; and though questions were put across the floor of the House, nobody seemed to know anything about it. I am glad to see that this year we will have a little more information, and I hope before we get through we will fully understand it, because that information, dropped by accident last night, showed, as I have said, that this slight change made in the sugar duties had been the means of imposing an increased taxation, and of putting into the revenue between five and six hundred thousand dollars. The hon. gentleman states that under this tariff, on the single item of iron alone, he will get another half million. I believe there have been some five hundred and sixty odd changes in the National Policy since 1878—most of them increases; and if these two articles of sugar and iron give an increase of one million, what will be the total increase of the burdens of the whole people by these five hundred and sixty changes. It would be curious and interesting if we could have, among the other statements which have been laid before us, a table showing how the taxes have been gradually increasing year by year, and how they are still likely to increase, until it is impossible to say where it will all end. I have to caution hon. gentlemen that this state of things will not be permitted to be continued by the people of this country. They are fixing burdens on the people—burdens which I am sorry to say, through a mistaken National Policy, I have helped them to impose—burdens which I am afraid they can scarcely get rid of. While I believe, and still believe, that, with the Americans close to our borders, we should endeavor to keep our own markets for the Canadian people if we cannot participate in theirs, I think it is time, if these charges are to be heaped up when it may be a matter for the consideration of men who are responsible to their constituents, whether this policy shall stop and whether perhaps some other steps may have to be taken. Sir, I warn hon. gentlemen, that while they and their side of the House have been fostering and encouraging what the right hon. Premier is pleased to call the federation of the Empire, the people who are struggling for food to-day, and the men who represent them in this House may perhaps be compelled to look for relief to some commercial relations between this country and the country to the south of us. That, Sir, is what is coming up, and I warn hon. gentlemen again that if this kind of thing is continued, if these charges year after year are to be heaped upon us, it may become necessary for some of us to change our attitude and consider whether we have not gone as far as the people can bear, and whether we cannot promote the prosperity of Canada by looking to a commercial union with the United States, in the hope to equalise the prosperity that exists in some portions of Canada, while poverty exists in other portions. Sir, there is a feeling growing up on the south side of the border that such an arrangement might possibly be made. I have not encouraged this feeling, nor have I considered the matter as fully as I ought perhaps, as a public man, to have considered it; but I can tell hon. gentlemen that my faith in the National Policy has been shaken by the course the Government has pursued in taxing the food of the people to such an extent as they have done, and in inordinately increasing the duties under the pretence of fostering that policy. While the manufacturers are getting bounties and encouragements the laboring classes of my county, as well as other non-manufacturing counties, are paying 50 cents a barrel on flour and 40 cents on corn meal, and the tax on sugar was increased last year by half a million dollars. I felt it my duty to make these remarks, and I tell my hon. friends that while it may a slight thing to them what course the member for Northumberland may take, this running of the National Policy into the ground is sapping what I believe to be the correctness of my course in the past in sustaining them.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. COCKBURN. I did not intend, Sir, to say a word this evening; but I feel so affected by the deep sympathies displayed by the Opposition for the condition into which our unfortunate Dominion has been dragged, that I think it right to say a few words, which I hope may prove to be words of sympathy and comfort to my hon. friend who has just sat down. During the last few days and nights I have sat here patiently hour after hour and listened to a wail from the opposite side of the House, so deep that a tone of lamentation could be perceived in the words of those hon. gentlemen as they proceeded from their mouths. I thought, if the country is in so terrible a plight, that the ex-Minister of Finance, in the absence of the leader of the Opposition, feels himself obliged to consider whether the whole system of Confederation must be abandoned, whether it is worth while to continue under the form of government that exists, and when I hear the hon. gentleman who has just sat down say that he is looking towards Washington, and considering whether he ought not to join hands with his brother reformer and help him to break up our Confederation, it is time for us to consider what are the actual conditions that have brought about this state of mind. I have taken the trouble to look over some of the speeches made in this House during the last few days. We have had this debt of $215,000,000 flaunted before us as something terrible to bear; and their denunciations of it fell from the mouths of our opponents with a kind of unctious or glee, or with a kind of desire to get their hands on it. But when I considered what this debt of $215,000,000 really amounts to, I confess that the fears that at first filled my mind were considerably dissipated. I found that the whole charge for the railroads, the canals, the lighthouses, the Government buildings and the public works amounts to $50,000,000, the interest on which has only increased the individual annual charge since 1878 from $1.58 to $1.63. We have had the United States brought before us as an example, and we have been told what a poor people we are in comparison. I think, when we look to the United States we shall find that the debt of that country is not so very small as it has been represented to us. On the 1st of January, 1887, the United States debt amounted to $1,714,033,636, and it is this debt which has been taken as a contrast with the debt of Canada, while these hon. gentlemen have been careful not to speak of the various States' debts, amounting to no less than $243,708,439 (a sum greater than our whole Dominion debt), making a grand total of $1,957,742,075, or about $40 per head of the population. While I am willing to accord to our neighbors to the south every praise for the manner in which they have developed that country, I want to see what facts we have to justify the terrible wail of hon. gentlemen opposite. I look to the bank deposits of the Dominion, and I find that the deposits in the chartered banks and the savings banks increased from 1878 to 1886 by $67,931,005. This does not look as if the country were on the verge of ruin. The discounts in the banks for the same period have increased by $40,156,056. Our imports during the same period have gone up by $11,342,774, and I am not aware that the merchants in any country are in the habit of trusting people with that extent of value unless they have something to pay for it. At the same time our exports have shown an increase of $5,927,647, which is comparatively small, inasmuch as we have been able by the National Policy to manufacture many articles which we formerly imported. At the same time our shipping and coasting tonnage has been enlarged by 7,235,939 tons, and we have built 5,475 miles of railway, which, at an average cost of say $20,000 per mile, represents an investment of $109,500,000. In the same way I find that the people have been so well off that they have been able to increase their life insurance by $86,557,651, and fire insurance by $201,894,778. I further find that in 1878 there were 56,347 traders, and that the business failures amounted to $23,908,000, while in 1886 there were no less than 72,680 traders, but the liabilities of those who failed reached only $10,387,000, or $13,521,000 less. Our consumption of coal during the same period has risen 2,049,955 tons. Our bank note circulation has gone up $18,400,000, and the securities of Canada to-day stand 13 per cent. higher than they stood in 1878, and for the first time in the history of the country Canadian 3½ per cent. securities are quoted at par. I am not making these statements to annoy the Opposition. I am simply quoting the calm, incontrovertible statements of various business men and the official returns of the Dominion. But it is more particularly with reference to Ontario that I want to speak, inasmuch as I represent a constituency which forms part of the capital of that Province. We have been told that Ontario is being depopulated, that the rural population, if not rapidly decreasing, is in many parts stationary. The ground that has been taken, as one of the proofs of this statement, is that there has been a remarkable decrease in the number of registered children in attendance at the public schools. It seemed to me this was a far-fetched argument, but I determined to test it, and I took the statistics of school attendance in the population of the United States, from the report of the Board of the Commissioners of Education, and I found the following remarkable results given, to which I call the attention of the House, in the years between 1870 and 1880:—

Mr. COCKBURN.

States.	Increase of Population.	Years.	Decrease in School Attendance.
1875-81 Connecticut.....	51,000	6	108
1878-81 Illinois.....	161,400	3	9,238
1881-82 Tennessee.....	56,800	2	25,785
1876-82 Indiana.....	178,800	6	26,106
1878-82 Iowa.....	129,000	3	24,370
1878-82 Louisiana.....	106,509	5	22,630
1870-80 Maine.....	22,000	10	11,581
1879-81 Maryland.....	30,800	2	6,577
1875-79 Michigan.....	181,200	4	1,832
1874-77 Mississippi.....	96,900	3	52,000
1880-82 Nevada.....	4,000	2	887
1870-80 New Hampshire.....	28,700	10	5,781
1870-80 New York.....	700,000	10	6,829
1879-82 North Carolina.....	36,000	3	678
1878-81 Pennsylvania.....	258,000	3	5,041
Increase.....	2,035,100	Decrease.....	199,933

Thus we find that in fifteen states, while there was an increase of population of 2,035,100 there was a decrease in school attendance of 199,933. Yet, will hon. gentlemen opposite tell me that because there has been a decrease in the registered school attendance in these fifteen states, their population has also diminished. I say, therefore, judging by this statement, that the criterion or test applied by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is no test at all; it is a fallacious test. It is not for me to state where the fallacy lies; I simply give the undoubted fact, that with an increasing population in fifteen states, there has been a decrease in the registered school attendance. At the same time we are told that Ontario is being depleted, that the farmers are groaning under the burdens imposed upon them and can scarcely eke out an existence. What do the Ontario statistics prove on this point? According to those statistics, the value of farm property in Ontario in 1886 was $999,547,911, and in 1882 it was $882,624,610, showing an increase in these four years in value of $106,923,301. And this is an increase in the value of property of a people who have been trodden under foot, and are no longer able to bear the burdens imposed upon them. These figures are borne out by the fact that in every year of the last ten years, there has been an increase of $10,000,000 in the value of farm buildings in Ontario. But we are told by the ex-Finance Minister that there are mortgages on the property amounting to probably $120,000,000. When we find, however, that in four years alone there has been an increase in their value of nearly $107,000,000, I do not think, even if he were correct in his statement, it is so very appalling. We know it to be a fact, on the authority of gentlemen connected with loan societies, that it is difficult for these societies to secure what they would call a decent, respectable, solid loan, because when the farmers cannot meet their difficulties from their own accumulated profits and capital, they, to a large extent, borrow from their brother farmers, who lend them the money a half or a quarter per cent. lower than the loan societies' rates. This does not look like as if the farmers were so much indebted, and so much in need of our assistance that their condition should bring tears to the eyes of the hon. gentlemen opposite. While speaking of Ontario, which the ex-Minister of Finance says bears so large a proportion of taxation, $25,000,000 out of $37,000,000, I may point to the fact that in the cities of Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Ottawa, Lindsay, Chatham, Windsor, Victoria and Winnipeg, show an increase since 1880 of assessments of $72,000,000 as shown by the following statements:—

Montreal assessment.....	1880	$64,500,000	1886	$75,000,000
Toronto ".....	1878	49,000,000	1887	83,500,000
Hamilton ".....	1878	15,200,000	1886	20,750,000
Ottawa ".....	1880	10,300,000	1886	12,800,000
London ".....	1876	8,480,000	1886	11,300,000
Chatham ".....	1876	1,270,000	1885	3,150,000
Windsor ".....	1876	1,795,000	1885	3,750,000
Victoria ".....	1882	2,682,000	1886	5,178,000
Winnipeg ".....	1881	9,196,435	1886	19,286,405
Total.....		$162,423,435		$234,714,405
				162,423,435
Increase.....				$72,290,870

In face of these facts, how useless it is to say that in our country the farming interest is weighted down with taxation. My hon. friend has mentioned the duty on corn. That has been made a great plank in the platform in the recent contest. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) in his memorable speech, was so particular in dealing with this subject that he says:

"I speak now, as the leader of the party, expounding, on all questions of principle, not merely my individual views, but the common sense as I understand it, of the great body of the party—the general lines upon which the party, as a whole, would act if entrusted, as they will be soon, with power."

Then again:

"What I have said, and am about to say, on questions of principle, you may then take as authoritative to whatever extent a leader has authority; and so far from there being divergence, I can assure you that there is, in my belief, a general concurrence of sentiment between us, including Sir Richard Cartwright."

It was a very extraordinary thing that these gentlemen; members of a Cabinet which they had already formed at the time, some of them going the length even of passing across their tea tables to their admiring wives and daughters, their names with the hon. prefixes of the Minister of Agriculture and so forth; it is rather odd I say, that in this Cabinet, formed by the hon. member for West Durham, and which included the hon. member for South Oxford, the hon. member for West Durham should be obliged to specially name as agreeing with him a member of his own Cabinet. We were not behind the scenes, and could not know the domestic squabbles that might have occurred; but it is in this grand pompous way that this great leader of the Opposition ushers in the declaration of policy of the new Administration:

"It is no part of the duty of a man in Opposition, to frame the details of a tariff, and if I depart even a little from that line for a moment, and express an opinion on one detail. * * * My personal opinion is that we should, at all risks, dispense with the odious and heavy tax on corn flour."

Here is a man who has been cogitating for eight years what policy he should adopt, who during all that time has been making bitter opposition to the National Policy; but who now, at the eleventh hour, confesses himself so far converted, that while he is not prepared to abolish the tax on flour and coal, there is one tax which, coute qui coute, he is bound to sweep away, and that is the tax on cornmeal. Far be it from me to interrupt the oozing of affection welling out from the nature of this great hearted man. Here is a statesman who has arisen with a policy, who is determined to show the country what he can do to relieve it; so I set to work to find out what this great relief was going to be, and I found that the tax on corn-meal amounted to less than $50,000 a year. $50,000 a year, we are to be saved. Let us divide it among ourselves fairly; it is one cent a piece. Well, Sir, their political offspring was a poor, puny, sick child, and it was soon hurried to an untimely grave; but still it was after twelve years of hard labor that it was brought forth, and in that sickly child you could trace the features, the philosophic features, of the philosopher of Bothwell, the sturdy look of the gallant knight of South Oxford, and the demure regard of the hon. member for West Durham. It was not much to be proud of to be sure, but recollect it was their only child, the only issue of twelve years of labor, ushered into this world by a grand Caesarian operation, an operation necessitated by the rapid approach of the Dominion elections. I can excuse them for the honest and grand way in which their tiny offspring, bearing the images of these three great political benefactors, was introduced to the audience at Malvern, when the confuting assurance was vouchsafed to them, as soon as we get into power, as soon as we are in our places, you shall have this great reduction made, a reduction by which you shall have one Johnny cake apiece a year, and if you continue us in power for a few years longer, I believe we shall be able to provide you with a dab of butter or molasses in addition.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BROWN. The hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) made the statement, as I took it down, that one hundred millions of money was invested in blast furnaces and unproductive in the United States. I have before me the authentic report of the American iron and steel trade. The production of all kinds of pig iron in 1882 was 5,178,122 tons, in 1883 it was 5,146,972 tons, in 1884 it was 4,589,613 tons, in 1885 it 4,529,869 tons and in 1886 it had reached the large weight of 6,365,328 tons. It seems a singular thing that the hon. gentleman should say that a hundred millions of money was lying unproductive in the blast furnaces of the United States, when we have the statement of the iron trade there, showing that the output is enormously increasing. Not only so, but to show that the hon. gentleman must have been misinformed in the statements he made to the House, there are a large number of blast furnaces now being erected all over the United States, in almost every State of the Union, and in almost all parts of each State, showing that the output of iron is gradually increasing. It is right and proper that the House should be put in possession of this authentic information, because this statement in reference to the iron industries of the United States, which the hon. gentleman wished this House to take warning by, will, perhaps, be similar to the warning which the hon. gentleman gave to the House in relation to the National Policy, in years gone by, when he warned the House to beware of the policy they were endeavoring to pass at the time, a policy which he said would rob the farmer, would rob the lumberman, would rob the fisherman, would rob the laborer, would rob the shipowner, would rob every man who earned a salary, and would enable the manufacturers to play into each others' hands, and he threatened the most terrible disasters which were to befall the country in consequence; he said it threatened Imperial connection, it threatened our national prosperity, and it was a policy which the people of this country would repudiate when next they had a chance to express their opinions upon it at the polls. Well, Sir, it has not threatened our national prosperity, it has not threatened our Imperial connection, and the fact has been established at the polls more than once that the hon. gentleman's predictions as to the action of the people in regard to it have not been verified. If his statement in regard to the hundred millions of unproductive capital invested in iron in the United States, is no more correct than his statement in relation to the result of the adoption of the National Policy, I think the House and the country will know what value to place upon the statement he has made while endeavoring to thwart the iron policy now before the House. On the 1st of April, there were 363 iron furnaces in blast in the United States, having a weekly capacity of 137,523 tons, compared with 1st April, 1886, when there were 279 furnaces in blast, with a weekly capacity of 106,802 tons; in other words, there is an increase in the output of iron of 30,721 tons. The capacity of the iron furnaces of the country is larger than at any time in the history of the iron industry, and the output is nearer to the capacity. A continuation of the present rate of output will give a production for 1887 of nearly 1,000,000 tons more than in 1886. So much for the statement of the hon. gentleman from Norfolk in regard to the languishing of the blast furnaces of the United States. The record shows the very opposite to be the case, and I hope hon. members will take due note of it. A word with the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) before I sit down. That hon. gentleman asked what this policy had ever done for the farmers, and what it had ever done for the fishermen. It has done everything for both the farmer and the fisherman. Every statement made in this House to-day, and ever since this policy has been talked of in this House, has shown clearly and conclusively that the man who is most benefited by the National Policy is the farmer. In consequence of the National Policy he is given a market at his own door, and, notwithstanding all that hon. gentlemen on the other side may say, the farmer knows it well, and he is not going to be taken by the sophistry of anyone who undertakes to tell him differently. If you tell the farmer he does not know his own business, you will soon find out that he knows more about it than hon. gentlemen who seek to teach him. What have we done for the fishermen, for whom the hon. member for Northumberland has so much sympathy? Owing to the National Policy, we have surpluses instead of deficits, and in consequence of our policy in that direction, a bounty of $150,000 is given to the fishermen, and that is what the National Policy has done for them. The hon. member for Northumberland asks, what is all this taxation to lead to? I do not call it taxation, but I will tell him what this policy will lead to, not to what he predicted but to national prosperity. I only rose to place before the House the statement in relation to the iron industries of the United States, but I think it well to say that those who are connected with the iron industries of the country are the best judges as to whether the policy propounded by the Finance Minister is likely to be for the good of the country or not. I am one of those who, in appearing before the electors of the country, and in Hamilton, took the stand that the duty of a member of Parliament was to take a broad and comprehensive view of every question that came before the House, and not seek to legislate simply for his own little village or his own town, but for the common good of the common country. He only who will take a broad grasp of the questions of the day, is fit to be in the halls of Parliament, he alone who will take a view beyond that of his own narrow and particular interests is fitted to be a legislator. I am proud to say that I represent a city in which there are large industries in iron, and, while some connected with them have objected to certain features of the tariff, because it interfered, perhaps, with some little arrangements of their own, in the city which I represent, there is one of the largest concerns in the rolling mill business in Canada. I may be permitted to read to you an extract from a letter I have received from the Ontario Rolling Mill Company, and when I mention that name, I may also mention the Hamilton Bridge Company, the Hamilton Pipe Company, and others in that city. This is the letter:

"Your telegram received. We wired you this morning: 'We think changes made in the tariff will be found satisfactory and will, as intended, rapidly develop the iron business.' We are surprised to know the decided stand made by the Government upon the tariff, the same arguments having been offered before and no result came. We had feared that the matter would be left as before, especially as such strong protests are made by prominent parties. The action of the Government in taking this firm and comprehensive stand will, before long, entitle them to the praise of all who take an interest in the development of this country. Increased wealth and population are sure to follow. Every ton of the ore and coal, that now lies worthless in the ground, that is manufactured adds so much to the wealth of this country."

Mr. BROWN.

This bold and courageous policy adopted by the Government, I do not hesitate to say is the cap stone of the National Policy, the policy which goes to the whole root of the matter, which seeks to elevate labor and not degrade it; which seeks to put this duty upon the article itself, and on the articles made out of it, and protects the labor that is employed to produce the articles. If that has been forgotten in the past, we now, at all events, know that what must be done is the protection of the article and the actual labor, and not the individual industry. The policy which has been adopted by the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches is one which commends itself to every man of common sense.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BROWN. Hon. gentlemen opposite say "hear, hear." I hope that they will get some sense knocked into them before long, that they will see this in a proper light. They do see it, Mr. Speaker. The wriggling way in which they have gone through the question to-day shows that they see it. Here and there some of them try the circus trick, riding on the backs of two horses, free trade here and National Policy somewhere else. At the same time they feel that the country is so sound on the question of the National Policy that they dare not come out openly and speak against it. This change in the tariff, I believe, will secure for the National Policy a position which it has never had before, because it strikes at the root of the whole matter. It protects the labor that is required to produce the article. I make these statements, Mr. Speaker, in relation to the iron question, because the statement is boldly made by the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) that everything is going to pot in the United States, that blast furnaces there are being shut up. A few years ago, we must remember, there was a depression in the iron trade in the United States, and many blast furnaces ceased operation, but it is probably right to say that to-day they are in a very different position. The member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) made a great ado about the bounty. Let me say to the hon. gentleman from Halifax that the bounty has nothing to do with the question under discussion. The bounty is a temporary matter, intended to expedite and to help the erection of blast furnaces so that we can get quicker returns from the ore. In making any kind of comparison on the question of duty throughout the whole scheme, the duty alone is to be considered and not the bounty.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the National Policy. If we are to have at some future time a field day to discuss that question on its merits, then I may make some further observations. I rise now for the purpose of reading a quotation from a newspaper in which hon. gentlemen opposite have confidence. I read in the Globe that the prediction of the Finance Minister is about to be verified, and I would suggest to hon. gentlemen that they had better not lose any more time in discussing the iron question, but proceed at once to pass the resolutions. I will read from the Globe of this evening the following:—

"WATERTOWN, N. Y., May 16.—A party of New York capitalists arrived here this morning in a special car. They were on their way to Kingston, Ont., from which place they will make an excursion up the Kingston and Pembroke Railroad, which runs through the richest iron region in Canada. The object of the trip is to organise a mining company with $5,000,000 capital to develop this region. The company will be organised in Kingston to-morrow and the officers likely to be elected are Henry Seibert, of New York."

Going on to name a number of other gentlemen. Then the correspondent of the Globe at Kingston telegraphed their arrival at that place, as follows:—

"KINGSTON, May 16.—At noon to-day a large party of Americans, interested in the development of the iron mines along the Kingston and Pembroke Railway, arrived here and proceeded to Glendower, to inspect the Zanecville mine. The party left New York last night in a special car. To-night they hold a meeting for organisation, and to-morrow inspect all the company's property on the line of the railway. Endeavors will be made for the establishment of iron smelting works here, in view of the present high protection afforded iron men. A citizen, writing to the local press, suggests the granting of a bonus of $100,000 by the city towards the new industry."

Now, the Globe states just what the Finance Minister stated a few days ago, that capital would flow into the country, that this industry would at once be developed. I think that hon. gentlemen opposite should now withdraw their opposition. If they want to meet the National Policy squarely in the face, let some hon. gentleman rise and move to repeal it, and we will see the same state of affairs exhibited that we saw last year when the hon. member for Northumberland moved to take the duty off flour. We saw the coat tails of a number of them going out into the lobbies when this question was put. Gentlemen on the opposite side of the House, representing as I do, an agricultural district, are not prepared to vote to repeal the National Policy. The farmers of this country know that the National Policy is to their interest, consequently hon. gentlemen opposite are not prepared to face the question and repeal it.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. Finance Minister does not seem to have had very good success in controlling his own followers and keeping them to the tacit arrangement that was made a short time since, that we should confine ourselves strictly to the question. I feel called upon to make a few remarks in answer to some criticisms indulged in with regard to my own remarks and my own position. I will first of all congratulate my hon. friend, the member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), that the result of this increase to the iron duties seems to be likely to foster a few American monopolies in this country. We are to tax the farmer, the fisherman and the lumberman, the producing classes of this country, to the extent of one million dollars, more or less, for the benefit of this party who came up in palace cars from New York to establish iron works at Kingston, and others like them. That is to be the outcome of this policy, and it matters very little whether those trade nabobs are Americans, or to whatever nationality they belong, the result of the policy is to tax the many for the benefit of the few, to impose enormous duties for the benefit of a few iron masters, to be paid by the great mass of the manufacturers and by them assessed upon the producing classes. The member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) disputes the statement I made before dinner, that the result of a sudden advance of iron duties in the United States in 1861 was to cause an unnatural development of the iron interests so as to leave them in 1870 with $100,000,000 invested in blast furnaces unemployed and out of blast. Whether he disputes the statement or not, it is true. The result of a policy similar to that introduced by the Finance Minister now was, first, to enable blast furnace owners to realise enormous profits; second, to induce too many men to engage in the business; third, to overdo the business and leave it in stagnation with $100,000,000 of useless capital invested. The hon. member for Hamilton, as a proof that I was incorrect as regards the United States iron industry, says that a large number of blast furnaces are being erected; and he stultifies himself and disproves his position a moment later by saying that he knows a smaller number of furnaces were in operation than previously.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But with a larger output.

Mr. CHARLTON. It does not matter. The hon. gentleman said, first, that a large number were being erected, and, second, that there was a smaller number of furnaces in operation.

Mr. BROWN. I said that last year there were a few furnaces less in operation than the year before and the output was greater; and that now a very great number of furnaces are being erected, and a great many more are contracted for and are to be erected. The hon. gentleman cannot wriggle round the post in that way.

Mr. CHARLTON. The truth with respect to the iron industry of the United States is simply this: lately a new iron region has been developed in northern Alabama, in the vicinity of Birmingham and Chattanooga. Iron ore and limestone and coal lie contiguous, and a ton of pig iron can be produced with less labor than at any other point in the world. The iron deposits are more easily reached than are those of the iron mines of Pennsylvania, and furnaces have been erected at Birmingham and Chattanooga; but the growth of the business is at the expense of the trade in other parts of the United States, and where one blast furnace is being erected at those new points it displaces one in Pennsylvania or elsewhere. It is true the production of iron is increasing with the growth of the country. This will probably be a very favorable year in the United States for the iron industry, because 21,000 miles of railway are to be built. But that does not interfere with my statement, that the result of the high duties in the United States was to force the growth of the business, so that no less than $100,000,000 were invested in blast furnaces that were out of blast in 1870. Then the hon. gentleman says I predicted that one of the results of this policy would be that one class of manufacturers would prey upon another. We see that prediction fulfilled to-day. It is one of the characteristics of protection that what is one manufacturer's finished product is another manufacturer's raw material, and it is impossible to impose protective duties for the purpose of protecting one manufacturer that will not prove detrimental to some other manufacturer. If the hon. Finance Minister imposes a protective duty on pig iron to foster that industry, every manufacturer of agricultural implements, every stove maker and the manufacturer of every article made from pig iron, will be injuriously affected. And so it is with respect to a duty on bar iron and on steel, in fact with respect to any duty imposed to afford protection on iron, which is used in so many industries as the raw material. I repeat that we see the realisation of that prophecy - that under that policy we were to see one class of manufacturers preying upon another class. Then the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) tells us that the farmers know that the National Policy benefits them, and that in consequence of that policy they have a market at home. I presume the hon. member for Hamilton, who says we have not common sense enough on this side to comprehend the bearings of the question, has common sense and knowledge enough to have become aware of the fact that we have gone on increasing our exports of food, and are further and further away from realising that the National Policy gives our farmers a home market. We have not a home market, and our farmers realise it. Of our cheese, wheat, oats, barley, and the crops we grow on the soil, the surplus is sold abroad, and the market price is fixed by the price abroad; and while the National Policy imposes additional burdens, and while these one hundred and twenty changes are calculated to impose still greater burdens, the farmer has not received one iota of advantage. He still goes on exporting his surplus productions, and receiving prices fixed by the quotations in the foreign markets. I do not know but that my hon. friend from Hamilton, who possesses such a large amount of common sense and acquired knowledge, is aware of the fact that the operation of the protective policy in America has led to the placing of agricultural labor upon a footing of equality with the coolie labor of India, in the production of wheat. Our own policy has not had, perhaps, so much influence in that direction as that of the United States, but it has had a tendency in that direction. England purchased her food supply from America until she was shut out by the protective policy from making that country a market for her wares. She could not continue to buy produce and pay gold, for she must exchange her products with a people with whom she could trade. It is true that England purchased her food from the United States and paid an immense amount in gold, the balance against her being $100,000,000 in one year, a condition of things that could not continue without ruin to one of the parties. What did England do? In 1870, there were something like 3,000 miles of railway in India. Now there are about 13,000, with 3,000 miles under course of construction this year. England at once pushed the railway system to the wheat-growing regions of that country in the vicinity of the sources of the Ganges and Indus, and she is now receiving from thirty to forty millions of bushels of wheat from India annually. She is paying for that supply by the productions of her looms, her mills and factories. Her ships go out with full cargoes of goods for Bombay, and they return with food supplies. This is doing a natural trade, in cultivating the agricultural interest of India and receiving a large proportion of food from that country in exchange for her manufactured products. She has been driven to this course by the protective policies of the United States and Canada, and the direct result has been to reduce the agricultural labor of this continent to the level of the coolie labor of India. That is the benefit which the farmer has received from protection—it has been a curse in every respect. It has placed unjust burthens on the farmer and it has diminished the profits of what he raises. He has been like Issachar, a strong ass bound down between two burthens: the burthen of higher prices on all goods he has to buy, and lower prices on all goods he has to sell. That has been the result of the National Policy so far as the farmer is concerned. I can safely defy the Minister of Finance or any other hon. gentleman to take the market quotations and show me any day since 1879, when the National Policy was adopted and put in force, when the price of grain in the markets of the United States and the corresponding markets of Canada would admit of the importation of that grain without a duty being placed in the way. I defy hon. gentlemen opposite to show any date on which the duty has exercised any favorable influence on the price of grain so far as the farmers of Canada are concerned. Now, if we take the quotations of Saturday last—and I have compiled these quotations, I presume a hundred times in addressing public meetings in this country, and they have always told the same story—we find that No. 2 spring wheat was worth on that day, 86 cents in Chicago, 90 cents in Buffalo, and 89 cents in Toronto. Now, there is no margin which will permit of the purchase of wheat in Chicago at 86 cents for sale in Toronto at 89 cents; the difference will not pay the freight. Buffalo is the corresponding market to Toronto, and wheat was worth there one cent more than it was worth in Toronto. Taking oats, 32 pounds of oats were worth in Chicago 26½ cents; in Milwaukee 30½ cents; in Detroit 32½ cents, and in Buffalo 35 cents; while 34 pounds of oats were worth in Toronto 32 cents. 34 pounds cost less in Toronto than 32 pounds cost in Buffalo and Detroit. No. 2 barley was worth 57 cents in Chicago; No. 1 barley, 71 cents in Buffalo; and in Toronto the highest price was 50 cents; 7 cents less than in Chicago and 21 cents less than in Buffalo. Upon that date field peas were worth in Buffalo 70 to 90 cents; in Toronto, 52 to 57 cents. Upon that day rye was worth in Chicago 56½ cents; in Milwaukee, 57½ cents, and in Toronto, 50 cents. Now this range of prices shows conclusively that in not one of these articles can a purchaser make a purchase in the United States and import to Canada without loss; that in all those cases grain was relatively higher in the United States than in Canada, and that consequently in every instance a duty for the purpose of excluding grain from our market for the benefit of Canadian agriculturists was entirely worthless. So much for the assertion made by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Brown) that the farmer of Canada knows that the National Policy is a benefit, as it gives him a home market.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Then he says that those interested in the iron duties know best whether the policy now introduced by the Finance Minister will do good or not. A greater absurdity could not be stated. Men interested in the iron duties are the very men whose advice should not be taken, because they are giving it from interested motives; they are asking the Government to impose duties, governed not by a desire to protect the interests of the country, but by a selfish desire to promote their own interests, and therefore it is their own interests, and their own interests alone, which will be promoted by the imposition of these largely increased duties in iron and steel. The hon. gentleman tells us also that we have attempted to ride two horses. Sir, the position we have taken in this matter is simply this: we recognise that great burdens rest upon the country, that a heavy revenue must be raised, and that, in consequence of that, we cannot construct a tariff on theoretical principles, but we must be governed by practical necessities, and for that reason we have all held that the return to low duties was impossible in consequence of the revenue wants of the country. And whether that is the case or not, we are not committed to the absurdity of perpetually tinkering our tariff to an adjustment of the duties every Session, so that 570 new changes in the tariff have been made since it went into operation. In the United States I think there was not a single tariff change since the tariff went into operation in 1861 down to 1884. They very well understood the deleterious influence which would be exerted by this perpetual tinkering of the tariff. Here we have had 570 changes, every one of them for the worse, and whatever may be our position as to the necessity of raising a large revenue, and to raise a large revenue it is necessary to impose heavy duties, we protest against these absurd changes, and this preying of one class upon another, in the unnecessary manner exhibited by the iron duties which have been submitted to this House.

I wish to say a few words with regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) before dinner. If the ideas which that hon. gentleman brought forth had been in proportion to his physical exertions, they would have been very important ones. I presume that he thinks that Providence has been very kind to my hon. friends the member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) and the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in taking them away from this place, when he demolished them so effectually as probably he imagined he did to-night. While he was wildly waving his hands he evidently seemed to be grasping for something, but I do not think he succeeded in grasping it. He seemed to be wrestling vigorously with some difficulty or other, but I hardly think it was the weight of his own argument; what it was I could hardly say. I suppose that the hon. gentleman is a professor of mathematics, at least he knows something about teaching that science, and he has given us a specimen of his ability in that line, which is somewhat remarkable in some of its features. I must beg my hon. friend's pardon for entering into the debt question; I shall do so briefly, and I should not have touched upon it at all, had it not been that the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn), referred to it. He took the liberty of making a comparison between the per capita charges of this country and the United States, and he informed us that the debt of the United States was one thousand seven hundred and fourteen millions. Now, I have in my hands a statement of the public debt of the United States for the month of March, issued by the Treasury Department, and I find that the Secretary of the Treasury and my hon. friend the member for Centre Toronto differ somewhat in their calculations. I find that the Secretary of the Treasury states that the debt on the first day of May was $1,305,170,000, in round numbers. The population of the United States at the present moment is estimated to be somewhat in excess of sixty millions; based upon the ratio of increase in the last decade, it is sixty millions seven hundred and fifty thousand. We will say sixty millions, and taking the net debt at $1,305,170,000 the per capita charge was $21.70. But they have assets in the United States which we deduct from the gross debt to arrive at the net debt, as we do here. These assets consist of Pacific Railway bonds, amounting to $115,651,000, and deducting these assets from the gross debt it leaves the net debt at $1,190,000,000, in round numbers, or a per capita charge of $19.84. Now, if we take the amount of the state debts, which my hon. friend stated to be $243,000,000, and add them—though it is not proper to do so for the purpose of making a comparison—if we add the state debts to the national debt, we have a combined amount representing a per capita charge of $23.84. According to the statement of my hon. friend our net debt is $225,000,000. I estimate the white population of this country to be at the present time 4,637,000, based on the ratio of increase from 1871 to 1881. In this case we have a per capita charge of $48.25, against a per capita charge in the United States of $23.84, counting in the state debts, or a per capita charge in this country considerably higher than as much again as that of the United States. Now, this comparison, which would not be pertinent to this discussion, I am free to admit, if it had not been called forth by the remarks of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn), shows that our position, relative to that of the United States, is financially not a favorable one. I think the deduction we may draw from this is that the imposition of the burdens contemplated by these tariff resolutions, which bear so heavily on the producing classes of this country, is not advisable, and ought to be condemned. I again protest against this policy, which, as the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) admits, is intended to benefit a few American capitalists, and to build up a few large manufacturing rings, who, in consequence of these duties on iron, are to realise large profits at the expense of the great majority of the manufacturers of this country, and at the expense of the entire producing class of this country. I protest against this policy as being unscientific as a protective policy, as being not in the interest of the country, but in the interest of a few individuals who will reap the whole advantage that is to be derived from the hon. gentleman's resolutions.

Mr. HESSON. Mr. Speaker—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish to say to my hon. friend that I could not take exception to what was said on the opposite side of the House if the same course is to be pursued on this side. It is of the greatest importance to the Government, and especially to myself, that we should get through with these resolutions, and I trust my hon. friend will allow us to proceed.

Mr. HESSON. I desire to answer him on the wheat question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would ask my hon. friend to allow us to proceed, as a special favor to myself.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I cannot allow this opportunity to pass, after so much has been said about the benefits the farmers of Canada are to derive from this National Policy, without saying something on the subject, because I claim to be one of the oldest farmers in this country to-day. I came to this country in 1843, and I have been steadily engaged in farming from that time to the present. I came to the conclusion, when the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) was speaking, that his knowledge of the needs of the farmers was very limited indeed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to say to my hon. friend that the Minister of Finance has stopped gentlemen on that side of the House from discussing anything else than the iron duties that are now before us, and he promised us a full opportunity for a general discussion of the tariff afterwards. That being the case, I would ask my hon. friend not to enter upon a discussion of this question at this moment.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). As a farmer I would just say that it is impossible that the increased duty on iron can have any other but an injurious effect on the agriculturists of the country. All our farming implements are composed of iron, and the duty is very heavy indeed. I find that the duty on pig iron amounts to about 29 per cent., and it is impossible that our manufacturers can pay that duty and turn out their goods without increasing the cost to the farmers. In 1883, when a duty of 35 per cent. was imposed on agricultural implements, we were paying $300 for self-binders. What was the reason? The reason was simply that the manufacturers had entered into a combination, and bound themselves by signing a solemn compact, that any manufacturer or manufacturer's agent who would sell an implement under a certain price was to be fined in a heavy sum of money. They met year after year in Toronto and by adhering to this compact they kept up the price. But after a while they came to the conclusion that they could not keep the price at that figure, and brought it down to $250, and the next year to $220. It was only by such a combination that the large sums we pay for agricultural implements have been extracted from the farmers. And yet we are told that goods are as cheap as they would be if we had not the National Policy. I heard a gentleman say this afternoon that binders were sold in Manitoba to-day at $190, which is cheaper than they were at the time the National Policy was imposed. I have not the least doubt that the same kind of binders, which cost us $180 in 1883 can be bought in Ontario to-day for $150, and I have been informed that if it were not for the protective duty upon those machines, we would be able to get them for $130 or $120. That combination still exists, and it imposes such conditions on the agents that they cannot go to a farmer and sell him a machine and take a horse or an old machine of any kind in part payment without incurring a certain fine at the hands of the combination. That is what the National Policy imposes on the farmers, and I would like to know what benefit the farmers will derive from it. But as I will have another opportunity to speak on this subject, I will attempt to show that the farmers as a class have been more imposed upon by the National Policy and less benefited by it than any other class of the community—that instead of its giving us a home market and a better market, we export more to-day than we did when the National Policy was first put in force, and that, compared with the prices prevailing in the United States, we get lower prices for our produce than we did before.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There are a few points on which I would like the Minister of Finance to give us a little information. I have read his speech and his reply to the hon. member for Halifax, and I am unable to find where he got the figures of 250,000 tons as being our yearly consumption. I have looked through the Trade and Navigation Returns, and I find our imports of pig iron last year amount to 45,648 tons.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I spoke of the whole consumption of iron in the country. I took the average of four years from 1881 to 1884, which amounted to 250,000 tons, and reduced bar iron to the equivalent of pig. The hon. gentleman knows that there is a large loss in making wrought iron from pig.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. Minister's words led me astray a little. His words are:

"Our present consumption is 250,000 tons of pig leaving steel rails out of the question altogether."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is, it would take 250,000 tons of pig iron to furnish us with the supply of iron we consume.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would not be able to make that calculation off hand, and could not tell. I judged by the answer of the hon. Minister of Customs as to the amount of bounty paid, that it was on 6,000 tons, making altogether 51,648 tons of pig iron. The Finance Minister fixed the average at 250,000 tons, made up of iron in other shapes, which he included under the general term of pig iron. There is another point on which I would ask a little information. What are the expectations of the Minister with reference to overtaking the consumptive demand of the country by home production? Is he aware of manufacturing factories that are likely to be established? And how soon they may be expected to come into operation? How soon may relief be expected from the higher prices which will ensue upon the imposition of the duty? Does he hope to give that relief by home production? A gentleman read the statement to-night of some capitalists going to Kingston in order to open up the iron industry there. But we remember that, in 1882, a former Finance Minister told us he was sure that after the general elections, if the Government were sustained, there was in one case $5,000,000 ready to be invested in iron and in another case $2,500,000. These expectations were not realised. Would the hon. Minister inform us whether he has reason to believe that there will be more success attained on this occasion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no reason to doubt that the effects of this policy will be to bring all the capital into the country required to develop this industry as rapidly as it is possible for capital to develop it. My hon. friend did not take any exception to the statement that already a large amount of American capital, and very prominent American capitalists, had come into Canada for the purpose of taking up this industry. My hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), however, took exception to these gentlemen being Americans. I do not sympathise with that objection. I welcome to Canada capital and capitalists from any part of the world, and I hope every American that is induced to come into Canada for the purpose of developing our industries, will be abundantly successful and have no reason to regret that they brought their capital into Canada. I go further. I say that at present in the great lumber industry, we have notable examples of capital being brought from the United States and being used here with eminent success, and we have had further the gratification of finding many of the American gentlemen who thus used their capital becoming exceedingly good Canadians after they had been here a short time. I believe one of the great objects of the National Policy is to draw population and capital into the country, and I welcome both from wherever they may come. Of course it is impossible for me to say more than to judge from the effect that the policy is naturally calculated to produce. We have all the evidence with regard to this iron industry that we had when we propounded, in the National Policy in 1879, with regard to the cotton, woollen and sugar industries which that policy was to develop. The hon. gentleman knows that there has been no lack of capital and no lack of competition in these industries, and he knows that they have been fully developed. We have in this case the same reason to anticipate that capital will be brought into the Dominion to be invested all over the country. I do not know a Province, except Prince Edward Island, that may not anticipate an early influx of capital to develop its great iron industry. We have evidence of this in the fact that already, before the Bill has passed, before Parliament has sanctioned the policy, these American capitalists, these nabobs, as the hon. member for North Norfolk calls them, are taking the palace car for Canada and rushing over the iron districts of Ontario for the purpose of being first in the field to seize the opportunity of developing Canadian industries. I hope that will be considered by my hon. friend sufficient, and as much as he can expect me to give in relation as to what is likely to be the result of this policy.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant.)

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Cast iron scrap is included in this item. The hon. gentleman, I think, has had representations made to him with reference to the effect of that duty, by over 50 very large firms. Could he state what decision he has come to?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have, but that question comes in on the next item.

Iron in pigs, iron kentlage and cast scrap iron, $4 per ton.

Mr. JONES. Will not that be very heavy on the foundries? The hon. gentleman referred to the large foundry at New Glasgow the other night, where, he said, $400,000 had been expended. Will not this duty be very hard on it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will be found that corresponding protection will be given in the articles they produce, which will quite meet that. I regard it, I do not hesitate to say, as a blot on this policy that scrap iron is allowed to come in at $2 a ton. Wrought scrap iron is more valuable, is a higher condition of production than pig iron, and it ought to have in this tariff, as it has in that of the United States, the same protection. In the United States, the duty on scrap iron is $6 a ton, the same as that on pig iron. We have placed it at only $2 a ton, because it was felt in making this sudden change it was necessary not to go beyond that figure, as it would make less difficulty in furnishing some of these enterprises with the material which they use so largely; but so far as cast scrap iron is concerned the hon. gentleman is aware that scrap iron being free, as it has been under the tariff for the last two years—two years ago there was a duty of $2 a ton on scrap iron, the same as that now imposed, but it was removed, and the result was, pig iron having to pay a duty of $2 a ton while scrap iron was free, that instead of running the iron into pig it was run into flat surfaces and shipped out as scrap iron. To avoid this we put cast scrap iron in at the same position as iron in pig. But the wrought scrap iron, which is so valuable and important to many of these industries, is still allowed to come in at $2 a ton, as it is at present.

Mr. JONES. I understood that the hon. gentleman had a meeting with the people who were connected with that industry in Halifax when he was there, and that representatives from New Brunswick and from all parts of Nova Scotia were at that gathering, and that they were all opposed to the view of the hon. gentleman as shown in this tariff, the only people in favor of it being those who represented the Londonderry Iron Works; so I thought it was very hard on industries there which have been already established on the understanding that scrap iron would be duty free.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is quite right. A great objection was taken by the rolling mills to the imposition of a duty on scrap iron, but it was not at all contemplated by those gentlemen that so radical a change in the whole tariff would take place, so the objections which they took this present proposition will practically remove.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I have, under my hand, a representation of some fifty large firms, scattered throughout Ontario, that to obtain satisfactory workmanship on certain classes of their manufactures they find it necessary to use cast scrap iron with the pig iron proper, and they say that the scrap does not to any appreciable extent enter into competition with pig iron of Canadian manufacture, but rather facilitates the use of that pig iron by the necessity of the admixture. Of course, I do not know anything about it, but it is a representation made by about fifty leading firms scattered throughout the cities and towns of Ontario. I have also a statement, referring to the statement of the hon. the Minister of Finance, as to the evading of the duty on pig iron by entering it as scrap iron. These people think that is a mistake altogether, that the labor which would be involved in that would amount to more than the duty. I think the Minister of Finance has had these representations under his own consideration.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, they have been very fully considered.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Has the Minister satisfied the gentlemen who remonstrated with him?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think I have removed to a large extent the objections they had. I would draw the attention of my hon. friend the member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) to page 89 of a very valuable work of Mr. Bartlett's on Iron, Steel and Coal in the Dominion of Canada, and he will there find the authority for the basis of my calculation as to the quantity of pig iron that would be represented by the consumption of iron in Canada. The total consumption in 1884 was less than it was in 1883. The consumption was 328,000 tons in 1883 and 273,000 tons in 1884, and that represents a very much larger amount of pig iron than has been stated.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does the hon. Minister know whether there is more than one blast furnace turning out pig iron during the past year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is but one blast furnace, so far as I am aware, turning out pig iron during the past year—that is, pig iron made from coal; but there has been charcoal pig iron made in addition to that during the past year in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. CHARLTON. To what extent has charcoal iron been manufactured?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The manufacture of charcoal iron was some years ago one of the great industries of Ontario and Quebec, and, although I am not a prophet, I undertake to say that, under the policy which is contained in these resolutions, if they receive the sanction of this House, the manufacture of charcoal iron will become again, and at an early day, a great industry in both those Provinces.

Mr. CHARLTON. But can the Minister state to what extent charcoal iron was turned out last year? I am aware that it was an industry a good many years ago.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was produced only to a comparatively small extent last year. It is quite impossible to maintain an industry of that kind under the circumstances in which we were placed.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman can judge by the amount of bounty paid, and I presume they made claims for all the charcoal iron they manufactured. The amount paid to Donald McGiffin, of Montreal, was $5,359, and to Hall Bros., of Quebec, $217. That is for charcoal iron.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does the Minister know whether the Londonderry works—assuming those to be the works to which he refers—worked all the year—if that was their total capacity? The Minister will understand that I am not asking these questions at all in a captious spirit.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understand that quite well.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I figured out, by the amount of bounty which was paid, dividing it by the $1.50, that they produced 26,900 tons in the year. I wanted to know if the works were running their full capacity, in order to produce that quantity. I desire simply to arrive at some conclusion, as to how many blast furnaces we would require to produce the quantity of which the Minister speaks.

Mr. McDOUGALD. The iron works in Londonderry were not running their full capacity last year. There are two blast furnaces there capable of producing fifty thousand tons a year. The product of last year was only about twenty thousand tons, and there is a capacity not now utilised of thirty thousand tons more. In addition to that, and it is a thing which will prevent some friction in the working of the duties on iron, there is a large rolling mill capacity in the Dominion of Canada at the present time, which could be utilised in the production of bar iron by the erection of puddling furnaces. These puddling furnaces can be erected in a very short time, in two or three months, and, by the importation temporarily of pig iron from abroad, and converting that into puddle bars, a large production of finished iron from our own rolling mills can be obtained pending the erection of blast furnaces in this country. It takes a considerable time to erect blast furnaces, perhaps two years, and I think the present capacity of the rolling mills, if applied to bar iron alone, is sufficient almost to produce the quantity of bar iron imported last year, 28,000 tons. The rolling mills are situated, one at New Glasgow, one at Londonderry, one in Halifax, three in St. John, N.B., four in Montreal, and one in Hamilton.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Londonderry furnace could produce about 60,000 tons if running its full capacity?

Mr. McDOUGALD. Yes.

Bar iron, rolled or hammered, comprising flat not less than one inch wide nor less than three-eighths of one inch thick, $11 per ton.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to change this clause so as to read:

Bar iron, rolled or hammered, comprising flats, rounds, and squares, and bars and shapes of rolled iron not elsewhere specified, $13 per ton.

And I propose to strike out the three following clauses, numbered 76, 77 and 78, as this clause will embrace the whole.

Mr. CHARLTON. You consolidate the four clauses in one and make the duty $13?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, and that change is the result of a discussion I had with a large number of gentlemen yesterday from Montreal and from Hamilton, and especially of the anxiety expressed by Mr. Thomas Workman, who is well known as a former member of this House, who thought it would greatly simplify the tariff by consolidating these clauses and embodying them under an average tariff.

Mr. JONES. That is a very great improvement. I am very glad the hon. gentleman has made that alteration, because, under the original proposal, it would have been very embarrassing in respect to the different sizes and grades. They all cost the same, as the hon. gentleman is aware. The class of iron to which this clause applies costs £4 17s. 6d. to £5 per ton, and the present duty of 17½ per cent. is $3.50 per ton of 2,240 pounds. By the alteration the Minister of Finance proposes to consolidate those three under the one, which will make the duty at $13, 65 per cent. on the present value in England. It seems a very heavy duty, and seems hardly required to develop an iron industry that was started with a protection of 5 per cent. As has been said before, it will bear very hardly on those people engaged in all these industries which are affected by it, and those other industries which may be affected by it hereafter. I feel it my duty to say here that I find I was under a misapprehension last night, with reference to the drawback on iron as applied to small vessels, which mistake arose from the fact that the drawback is paid to the builder of a vessel, and not to the purchaser. I feel it my duty frankly to make that explanation, but that will not apply in the future, if the object of the hon. gentleman's tariff is carried out. I was thinking of foreign iron, but whatever quantity of iron is produced in the country, no duty will be paid on it, but the price is so much enhanced, the shipbuilders and fishermen requiring this iron would have to pay just that much more for it and get no return. The hon. gentleman suggested that in that case they could use imported iron and get the drawback, but he will see that for a man building a small vessel, it would be impossible for him to send to England and get the small quantity of iron he might require. Moreover, the whole system of drawbacks only applied to the vessel's first outfit, and that only lasts three or four or five years, as the case may be; whereas from that time everything a vessel requires has to be purchased under the increased duty and no drawback is allowed. Moreover, a very large share of our shore fisheries is conducted in what are called whalers, or in boats which are not registered, and the fishermen who use that class of boats in the shore fisheries, which are amongst our most valuable fisheries, will have to pay this duty on iron and get no drawback under any circumstances, and everything that enters into the construction of their boats will be enhanced to them in price while no drawback will be allowed. Therefore, the hon. gentleman will see that the increased duty on iron bears exceptionally hard on a class of people that can very ill afford it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sorry to hear the hon. gentleman make this statement, because I have always had a great respect for his opinion as a merchant, but he begins to shake my confidence in him by the statements he has just made to the House. He must know, that under this policy, assuming that it is adopted by the House, it will be years before the iron industry is developed to such an extent as to do away with the importation of iron. I have told him that I expect very little change in the importation of iron during the first and second years. Now, however high the duties are that are paid on iron until it ceases to be imported in consequence of the full development of this policy, the shipbuilders will have the means of getting the full advantage of importations, notwithstanding this tariff, just as he has now for everything that enters into his ships. A boat of five tons may be registered.

Mr. JONES. That is not usually done.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is nothing to prevent the registry of a boat of five tons. In the next place, the hon. gentleman is quite wrong, in my judgment, in his estimate of the effects of this duty. I have not had time to make the calculations upon this clause as it now stands, but I will read to the House a calculation I have made upon the four clauses that are embodied in this one. First, the present duty is $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on a value of \$25 a ton, which was the average value in 1885-86; that would be \$4.37 a ton. Then $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the value of 1879-80, of \$33.50 per ton is equal to \$5.86. Now, in that first item which proposes to put a duty of \$11 a ton on a fair value of, say, \$27.50 per ton, it would be equal to 40 per cent., not 60 per cent. as the hon. gentleman stated. Then take the next item. The \$13 on a fair average value of, say, \$32.50 per ton, would also pay 40 per cent. In item, 77, \$15 per ton on a fair average value of \$37.50 per ton, would be 40 per cent. Consequently that is the highest duty which was imposed under any of these items, and I have combined them together and taken the average as \$13 a ton; so I am quite certain if the hon. gentleman works out that calculation accurately he will find that there is no duty imposed under it over an ad valorem duty of 40 per cent. on an average at a fair valuation.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman seems to think that I was in error with respect to the percentage under the item now before the House. He gave us to understand at the commencement that the change which he had made in the resolutions was made at the suggestion of a gentleman who had been engaged very largely in that business; and I may say that my authority is the same. In previous years that gentleman computed that a specific duty of \$11, \$13 and \$15 for 2,000 lbs. was equal to $57\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. for the first, 65 per cent. for the second, 75 per cent. for the third. I do not pretend to be familiar with the matter, but it is an authority which the hon. gentleman has recognised as good, and I am disposed to think it is a pretty good one still.

Mr. JONES.

Mr. MALLORY. Even if you take the percentage as given by the Finance Minister we now begin to realise to a certain extent what the increase of the duty on the iron used by our blacksmiths, carriage makers and agricultural implement makers really is to be. We have been endeavoring thus far in the discussion to find as nearly as possible what rate of percentage we would have to pay on iron duties, and it is only now that we are beginning to realise the extent to which those duties will bear on the users of this class of metal. Even taking the percentages given by the Minister of Finance, which I believe he will find upon a close examination to be much too low, and that the calculation based upon the figures of the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) to be more nearly the truth, we are now beginning to come to a realisation of the extent of the enormity about to be perpetrated on this country by the imposition of such heavy duties on iron. When we do realise, as we will do, this fact, we will see how very heavy those duties will bear upon the agricultural community, because the hon. gentleman will find that the class of iron, the duties on which we are now discussing, belongs to that particular class which enters into the manufacture of agricultural implements, carriages and iron such as is generally used by blacksmiths. The Finance Minister will find not only that the hardware merchants are complaining against the increased duties placed on those articles for the benefit of comparatively few people, but that the consumers of iron will also complain as soon as they fully realise the extent of the additional duties.

Mr. McDUGALD (Pictou). With respect to the increase of duties referred to by the last speaker, it would simplify his calculation if he reduced the duty from an ad valorem basis to dollars and cents. In short, the duty is this: on pig iron used for castings the increase will be one-tenth of a cent per pound, on wrought iron the increase will be about three-eighths of a cent per pound.

Mr. MILLS. I should like the Minister to state what were the amounts of revenue he expected to derive from resolutions 74, 75, 76 and 77 as originally drawn.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is exceedingly difficult to make a calculation, for the reason that there is no corresponding data to go upon. Bar iron, which in these three resolutions was put at $11, $13, and $15, and which I now group together as $13 on an average, 28,759 tons were imported in 1885-86, of the value of $728,208, on which we collected a duty of $127,413 or thereabouts. The present tariff applied to the same quantity would give $373,867.

Mr. JONES. What is the whole increase of the iron duties?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If applied to the same importation the increase will be about $700,000. I estimate the increased receipts this year at about half a million.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I cannot understand how that conclusion is arrived at, for I think the amount will be more like a million, and perhaps nearer a million and a-half. I would be inside the mark if I took $8 as the advance on a ton, and according to the hon. gentleman's calculations, taking the consumption of iron at 250,000 tons, and deducting the quantity of pig iron, there would still be left 150,000 tons of wrought iron, and if you multiply that by $3 a ton, it will give you $1,400,000 without the pig iron at all, if the others are in proportion to this.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will find that they are almost all included here, when he comes to the subsequent items.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There were 250,000 tons consumed—75,000 of pig iron.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not of the bar iron.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No, altogether. 75,000 tons of pig iron leaves it 175,000 tons for all other kinds. Now, if I have followed the hon. gentleman's statement correctly, we are advancing $8 a ton on this iron, which would make $1,400,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to place the next item—and the hon. gentleman will be greatly relieved to hear it—on the free list.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is it manufactured in the country now?

Mr. CHARLTON. Does it cover the wire used in wire fences?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the object of striking it out?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is imported by wire manufacturers for use in manufacture, and it is not made in the country, or likely to be made.

Iron and steel wire, galvanized or not, smaller than number five gauge and not smaller than number fifteen gauge, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to substitute for the words "fifteen gauge" the words "fourteen gauge." That leaves the tariff on these articles as at present.

Wire of spring steel, coppered or tinned, number nine gauge or smaller, 12½ per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to change that by making it read: "wire of steel spring, coppered or tinned, No. 9 gauge or smaller, not elsewhere specified, 20 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. JONES. What is the reason of the increase?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The article was formerly on the free list, but it is now manufactured, and, therefore, I propose to put it at 20 per cent. Tinned wire was 20 per cent., and coppered was free, and I found on enquiry that there was no reason for placing them on a different footing, as it was really the same thing except for the coating.

Mr. MALLORY. Is it manufactured in the country now?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. MALLORY. At a profit?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not say that, but I hope so.

Mr. MALLORY. So that there has been a profit on the manufacture of it already, and now we are to add 20 per cent. more to those profits?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. I said that the coppered was free and the tinned was not, and consequently I am putting them both on the same footing, at the moderate duty of 20 per cent.

Mr. MALLORY. My argument then remains the same, so far as one article is concerned.

Boiler or other plate iron, sheared or unsheared, skelp iron, sheared or rolled in grooves, and sheet iron, common or black, not thinner than number twenty gauge, not elsewhere specified, $10 per ton.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to make the duty $14 instead of $10.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is that boiler plate?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, that is dealt with in the next item.

Sheet iron, common or black, smoothed or polished, and coated or galvanized, thinner than number twenty gauge Canada plates and boiler plate of iron or steel not less than 30 inches wide and valued at not less than one and a-half cents per pound, 12½ per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to change that also by adding after the word "boiler" in the third line the words "or bridge," and to strike out the words "valued at not less than 1½ cents per pound," and insert "not less than ¼ inch in thickness."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is it now?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no change in that.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is that the plate that is used by steam engine builders?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). And the duty remains the same?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is this used by bridge builders?

Mr. BOWELL. No; that comes in a special class.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What amount of revenue do you expect?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no change whatever.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). With regard to bridge material?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. With regard to the whole of the items in this class as amended.

Hoop or band or scroll or other iron, eight inches or less in width and not thinner than number twenty gauge, $13 per ton.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How was this before?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was 17½ per cent.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What difference will this change make?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will increase it about 40 per cent.

Mr. MILLS. What additional revenue does the hon. gentleman expect from this?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The increase will be about from $8,035 to $18,270.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Are the kinds of sheet iron mentioned in item 83, manufactured in the country?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, and therefore the duty is unchanged.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And will the hon. gentleman say to what extent the hoop or band or scroll iron mentioned in item 84 is manufactured in the country, and what percentage is consumed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Any mill that makes iron can make these classes. They will all be made in the country under this tariff.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What I am anxious to know is what is the total amount consumed which is yet manufactured in Canada.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not able to say that. All I am able to give him is the quantity imported in 1885-86, namely, 1,827 tons.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Because it may be that this tariff is adding a very small percentage to the actual production.

Iron railway bars, steel T rails weighing not over 25 pounds per lineal yard, iron or steel flat rails punched and iron or steel railway fish plates, $9 per ton.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to strike out every thing except railway fish plates, and to make the duty $12 a ton, and I will bring in the other items in another place. All railway fish plates, whether iron or steel, it is proposed shall pay that duty. Railway fish plates are manufactured in the country, and can all be manufactured in the country, and I propose to give compensation to the railways by putting steel tires, which now pay a duty, on the free list.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Perhaps the hon. gentleman can tell us the value of the fish plates produced now, so that we may be in a position to compare their cost with the cost of iron, because there is very little cost in the manufacture of fish plates, and there should be some relation between the ordinary duty on iron and the duty on fish plates.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The quantity of fish plates imported in 1885-86 was 1,808 tons, which includes frogs. The duty on those was $3,696.

Mr. MITCHELL. I may tell my hon. friend that he is wrong in supposing that there is not much manufacture on fish plates. The modern fish plates, which are universally adopted, have a good deal of manufacture on them. They take the bevel of the rail, and are consequently much more expensive than ordinary fish plates.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no means of arriving at how many tons of fish plates were imported, because the frogs were included, and they were brought in at 17½ per cent.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I suppose the hon. Minister found it necessary to make this advance in the duty on account of the manufacturer having found his raw material out of the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no doubt that was a reason.

Rolled channels and angled and T-iron, and rolled eye bar blanks made by the Kloman process, when imported by manufacturers of bridges for use exclusively in their own manufactures, 12½ per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to change that clause to read :

Iron or steel beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, special sections, rolled eye bar blanks made by the Kloman process of all forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, $16 a ton, but when imported by manufacturers of bridges for use exclusively in their manufacture, 12½ per cent. ad valorem

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Can the hon. gentleman state the amount of duty he expects to receive from this, and the rate as far as ascertained.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no change in the duty except on the Kloman bars which were formerly 20 per cent., but are now 12½ per cent. for bridge purposes, so that this is a reduction instead of an increase, and for all other purposes except for bridges, the duty on shapes of iron amounts to 40 per cent. on an average value of $40 per ton, which is an increase; but taking the clause as a whole the increase is not large.

Iron bridges and structural iron work, $25 per ton or not less than 30 per cent.

I propose to change that clause also, and to make the duty 1½ cents per lb., instead of $25 a ton, which leaves the duty the same, but it was thought it would be better understood abroad where there is competition for bridge work in this country, because our ton is 2,000 lbs., while in the United States it is 2,240 lbs.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. CHARLTON. In the present price of iron, what would be the ad valorem duty?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. About 30 per cent.

Mr. SCRIVER. What increase is this on the existing duty?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. About 5 per cent.

Mr. SCRIVER. It is unfortunate, in the existing state of things, that any increase should be imposed on this particular article. A great many iron bridges are being built throughout the country, the constantly recurring freshets we suffer from, in the Province of Quebec at all events, necessitates the building of a great many, and a good many of our municipal corporations have decided to construct them of iron. This is virtually giving the bridge building companies of the Dominion a monopoly. We can have no competition under this tariff, as we had very little under the past tariff from the bridge builders of the United States.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in saying there has been no competition on the part of the Americans, for most of the iron bridges constructed on the Canada Southern and the western section of the Grand Trunk Railway and Western, and also the bridge across the Chaudière, were constructed by Americans from Buffalo. The thing came under my notice, as three or four of the bridges were seized for under valuation, and the parties who made the Chaudière Bridge had to pay an additional duty of $30,000.

Mr. SCRIVER. The ordinary traffic bridges, in the part of the country I live in, have been built by Canadian companies.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There were only 112 tons of iron bridges imported last year.

Mr. SCRIVER. That bears out what I say.

Mr. MILLS. That only confirms the observations of my hon. friend. Throughout Ontario iron bridges are being erected by the municipalities, and of course this duty will add very largely to the taxation. If the hon. gentleman were to impose a moderate tax for bridge construction the Government would get that moderate tax, wherever the material was imported, but when the hon. gentleman imposes a very high tax, of course the Government gets little or nothing, and the municipalities have to pay, while the tax goes into the pockets of the bridge-builder.

Forgings of iron and steel, or forged iron of whatever shape or in whatever stage of manufacture, not elsewhere specified, $30 per ton, provided that the duty shall not be less than 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. CHARLTON. The same objection applies to this that applied before. There may be misinterpretation as to whether it is a long or a short ton, why not make it one and a-half cents per pound.

Mr. MILLS. That would make it uniform.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would be happy to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for North Norfolk and the hon. member for Bothwell, and make it one cent and a-half per pound.

Mr. MILLS. I may inform the hon. gentleman that I will not recommend such a tax, but the Minister having made up his mind to impose this extraordinary amount of taxation, I say it is better it should be enacted so that every body will understand it.

Steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms and slabs, by whatever process made, billets and bars, bands, hoops, strips and sheets of all gauges and widths, all of above classes of steel not elsewhere provided for, valued at four cents or less per pound, 30 per cent. ad valorem, but not less than $10 per ton.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to alter this by substituting for the word "$10" in the last line $12, and add to the item "except clogged ingots, blooms and slabs, upon which the specific duty shall be not less than $ 1 a ton."

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What quantity was imported, and what amount was collected under the old tariff?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The duty on steel ingots was $3 per ton and 10 per cent.; steel sheets, two kinds, 1½ per cent. and $3 per ton, and steel rods $3 per ton and 10 per cent.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I thought, perhaps, you had a statement of the tons of all these combined and the combined amount of duty.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have not that. The total value of steel was $380,539, and the duty collected was $60,883.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How many tons does that represent?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. 8,448.

Provided that on all iron or steel bars, rods, strips or steel sheets, of whatever shape, and on all iron or steel bars of irregular shape or section, cold rolled, cold hammered or polished in any way in addition to the ordinary process of hot rolling or hammering, there shall be paid one-sixth of one cent per pound in addition to the rates imposed on the said materials.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like the hon. gentleman to explain the exact meaning of this. What is the present amount of the tax, and what additions will this make to the taxation?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no estimate of that. It is very small. We have not the material to make an estimate.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It would be more intelligible to the trade if the hon. gentleman had stated absolutely, instead of in this supplementary kind of way, what the taxation really is. It will be very difficult to say what the taxation is.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is difficult.

Provided further, that all metal produced from iron or its ores, which is cast and malleable, of whatever description of form, without regard to the percentage of carbon contained therein, whether produced by cementation, or converted, cast, or made from iron or its ores by the crucible, Bessemer, pneumatic, Thomas Gilchrist, basic, Siemens-Martin or open hearth process, or by the equivalent of either, or by the combination of two or more of the processes, or their equivalents, or by any fusion or other process which produces from iron or its ores, a metal either granulous or fibrous in structure, which is cast and malleable, except what is known as malleable iron castings, shall be classed and denominated as steel.

And provided further that all articles rated as iron or manufacture of iron, shall be chargeable with the same rate of duty if made of steel, or of steel and iron combined, unless otherwise specially provided for.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is merely explanatory.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not properly comprehend the last part of this. Have we not enacted different duties for steel and for iron? Which duty is to apply? Is it the steel rate or the iron rate?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is to provide that all articles rated as iron and manufactures of iron, although they may be made of steel, or of steel and iron combined, shall be charged with the same rate of duty as if made of iron.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But what is the rate of duty there mentioned? Is it the rate of duty on iron or on steel?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The rate of duty on the article, whatever it is, which is specified in this tariff. It is merely explanatory.

Malleable iron castings, and steel castings not elsewhere specified, $25 per ton, provided the duty shall not be less than 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will the hon. gentleman state what the amount of tonnage is which is now imported?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The value of malleable iron castings imported was $20,474, and the duty collected was $5,118.

Mr. CASEY. How many tons?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The statement I have does not give the tons.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What was the old rate of taxation?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. 25 per cent.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the Minister should have given the weight.

Mr. ROWELL. As the duty was ad valorem, and not according to weight, the invoices would not enable us to give the information which the hon. gentleman asks.

Mr. CASEY. In all the other cases, the weight was given as well as the value.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was in most cases.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will see that we cannot tell what is the rate of taxation by the information given. It might be 100 per cent.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does the Minister of Customs know about the value of a ton of malleable castings?

Mr. BOWELL. No, I do not.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That would depend altogether upon the size of the articles. The small size would be much more expensive than the large.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister himself apparently does not know how heavy the tax will be. He provides that it shall not be less than 30 per cent. but he cannot tell how high it will go.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I cannot tell.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has the Minister any information as to the price of malleable castings, either large or small? We are moving here entirely in the dark. The hon. Finance Minister himself has no idea, apparently, what the ad valorem tax will be at $25 per ton.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will make enquiry and furnish that information.

Cast iron vessels, plates, stone plates and irons, sad irons, hatters' irons, tailors' irons, and castings of iron not elsewhere specified, $16 per ton, provided the duty shall not be less than 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MILLS. If the hon. gentleman were to state the amount he expects to realise on each item, that would save a good many questions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am unable to do that. There is no separate return, and I have not the information.

Cast iron pipes, of every description, $12 per ton.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish to add the words: "Provided that the duty shall not be less than 35 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. MILLS. So that if the $12 a ton amounts to 35 per cent., then the duty will be increased to 35 per cent?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the object. This is expected to make the average about 25 per cent.

Iron or steel axles, parts thereof, axle bars, axle blanks or forgings for axles, without reference to the stage of manufacture, $30 per ton, but not less than 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to change that section by saying :

Iron or steel car axles, parts thereof, axle bars, axle blanks or forgings for axles, and car springs of all kinds, and all other springs, not elsewhere specified, without reference to the stage of manufacture, $30 per ton, but not less than 25 per cent. ad valorem

Locomotives and other steam engines, boilers and machinery composed wholly or in part of iron or steel, not elsewhere specified, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to add to that: "Provided that any locomotive which, with its tender, weighs 30 tons or over, shall pay a duty of not less than $2,000." The former duty was 25 per cent., and it is increased about 5 per cent. A 30 ton locomotive is supposed to be worth about $7,000 to $8,000.

Mr. MILLS. Will not that embrace, by far, the greater number of locomotives used in the country?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will embrace the larger ones; but it will enable second-hand locomotives, or small locomotives for a small road, or anything of that kind, to come in at a lower figure.

Mr. MILLS. Do not a great majority of the locomotives weigh over the limit fixed by the hon. gentleman?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. So that by far the greater number of locomotives that come in would pay $2,000?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. At least $2,000; most of them will pay more.

Mr. MILLS. What about locomotives in transit through the country for foreign countries?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It does not touch that question at all.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Suppose you bring engines without the tender?

Mr. CASEY. The object is, practically, to value every locomotive as high as $7,000, no matter how cheaply it may be produced. The Minister evidently thinks, or rather the gentlemen for whom he is arranging this tariff must have advised him, that there is some danger of locomotives of 30 tons and over being made at a cheaper rate than heretofore and imported, and therefore he proposes to avoid any chance of their coming in at less, by saying that they must be valued practically at $7,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; I may say frankly to my hon. friend that the object is to prevent cheap and worthless locomotives, painted up, second-hand things that are really of no practical value, being brought in at a low rate of duty, which are much better kept out. By fixing the weight in this way you provide that the duty shall be only a fair and legitimate one. Of course the object is to protect the manufacturer of locomotives within our own country, and this is the mode of doing it, because by undervaluation, by sending in second-hand locomotives at a cheap rate, and small locomotives—

Mr. CASEY. A small one would not weigh 30 tons.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A small one would not be excluded. The reason the weight is fixed here is to favor the bringing in of locomotives for small roads, but for large railways, a locomotive and tender would require to weigh 30 tons. This leaves the door open for bringing in at a cheaper rate small locomotives.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman's statements are contradictory; he says that the purpose is to exclude small and worthless locomotives. Well, it appears this item will let small locomotives come in. Then, he says, it is to exclude worthless locomotives, second-hand stuff. Now, I think the hon. gentleman, in his paternal care for the people, might leave it for the purchaser to decide whether it pays him better to bring in a cheap or an expensive locomotive. If the object is to exclude a cheap locomotive, and if the hon. gentleman's assumption that everything that is cheap must be poor is correct, he is all right. But if that assumption is all wrong, and if it is a ridiculous impertinence on the part of any Government to say to the people, you shall not import cheap things, because we know those things are poor, and we know you are better without them; better leave them alone and buy something dearer at home, then such a statement is, as I say, a ridiculous impertinence on the part of this Government, and I am afraid my hon. friend is involved in the same condemnation. But he has admitted exactly what I stated with regard to the matter of fact. This clause practically means that every locomotive of 30 tons, no matter how cheaply it may be produced, no matter what improvements may occur in the manufacture of locomotives elsewhere, no matter how cheaply they may be produced abroad, is to be valued at such a price as will make the duty on it amount to $2,000 at 30 per cent. That is practically the meaning of the item, and the object is certainly not the protection of the man who is being injured by buying a cheap article. The object is to create a monopoly in the manufacture of locomotives in Canada. There is no doubt about it. There is only one private corporation that I know of, apart from the railway companies, which makes locomotives in Canada. I am quite aware that that corporation has been in very deep water already under the National Policy, and this is, of course, an attempt to give it a lift upward.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken about there being only one manufactory in the country. Locomotives are manufactured at Moncton, St. John, N.B., Cobourg—

Mr. CASEY. By private companies?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, by private companies.

Mr. CASEY. So there are two or three factories instead of one, and at all events the business is a very close corporation.

Mr. MITCHELL. The real object, I fancy, is what the Finance Minister has explained, and I can quite understand it. The hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Casey) did not appear to quite comprehend what that explanation was. There are certain railway companies in the United States which use their rolling stock for a certain time, and then, under a provision of the State authorities obtain new stock selling that formerly in use. As the Minister has explained this rolling stock is often painted and repaired and sent out of the country, and a considerable quantity of it has come into Canada. Some of the locomotives are very good, but a great many are the reverse.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Are very poor.

Mr. MITCHELL. At all events, are not so good as those made in the country? I quite approve of the manner in which this clause has been drawn, for it will keep this class of rolling stock out of the country, and that is correct if we are to have a National Policy we are to keep our trade for our own manufacturers. Having said this much in favor of the policy of the Finance Minister, I would like to ask the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick), who is a director of one of the leading locomotive factories in the country, whether he is satisfied, whether his company has received sufficient protection for their works, and if he is satisfied, I am.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I am not satisfied. I am not connected with the practical part of the company's operations, but the managing director of the works writes me to say that the increased duty on the raw material will largely take away any increase in the advance of duty on locomotives, and he thinks they should be placed at 35 per cent. in order to keep the works going. The works were closed for two years, and during that time over thirty locomotives were imported into the country, and there is no reason why that large factory should not go on giving employment to 400 men, just in the same way as other establishments of the kind. Of course we have to submit to the changes in the tariff considered desirable by the Government, and I am ready to submit.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I desire to enquire the number of locomotives brought into the country. I am aware there are roads on which locomotives, such as the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has described, are in use. All the rolling stock on the Huron and Erie Railway is old stock from the Michigan Central road. No doubt this accommodates the public very well, and much interference in the way of regulation might tend to seriously conflict with the interests of the people of that district. I give that road as an instance, and no doubt there are other tributary roads in the same position. It cost them very little for the rolling stock, but it suits the public convenience; and if the Finance Minister were to insist on their being equipped in first class style, I am much afraid the public would suffer in consequence.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am unable to give the number of locomotives imported, but the value in 1885-86 was $176,356 and the duty paid was $43,334. I am informed that the number of locomotives was over 30.

Portable steam engines, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no change in this duty.

Mr. CASEY. I observe there is no change. That is what manufacturers will complain of. The manufacturers of these machines and engines are incapable of obtaining increased protection because there is no importation worth speaking of.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Only $20,000.

Mr. CASEY. So an increase of duty would not give them any increased protection. This is an instance of the manner in which the hon. gentleman's tax on raw material bears very heavily, not on the consumer in this instance, but on the manufacturer. The manufacturers are not even offered increased protection, and yet the cost of raw material is very considerably increased.

Mr. MITCHELL. They had enough protection before.

Mr. CASEY. Now the duty on raw materials is increased, and no increased protection is given to the manufacturer. I do not ask the Minister to give them more protection, for I do not think he could do so, but it must be remembered that they are really being charged the increased duty on the raw material without receiving anything in return. This will prove very hard for some of them. There is a large firm manufacturing threshing machines in my county. They have complained, during the period of the National Policy, that they have been losing money owing to the taxes on raw material, and they will now have still more reason to complain. When the last change was made in iron, there was an increase given on the finished article. Now they will be charged this increased duty on the raw material, and yet not receive any additional protection.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I know it is not in the power of the hon. gentleman to increase this duty; but if he is exceedingly anxious that the matter should be considered, I will see if it is not possible to put on 5 per cent. more.

Mr. CASEY. I distinctly stated that I did not ask the hon. gentleman to do that, because I did not think it would help the manufacturers. Competition will keep the prices down to pretty nearly what they are at the present time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to strike out item 102—locomotive tires of Bessemer steel in the rough, 10 per cent. ad valorem—for the purpose of placing it on the free list.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to ask the Minister why this is proposed. These goods are largely consumed in the country, and we do not know whether they might not be manufactured here. I do not understand why this should be made an exception to the usual rule.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These tires are not manufactured in this country so far as I am aware.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why not hold out the encouragement to establish a factory here?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I want to press as slightly as possible on the railway companies. On some items we have been obliged to levy considerable charges upon the railways. For instance, in regard to fish plates, which are manufactured here, we have increased the duty considerably, and I propose to place these tires on the free list, so as to give the companies compensation where we do not manufacture the articles in the country.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not understand that we cannot manufacture this article here. Even as regards pig iron, we have not as yet a very large production. We have certainly been very light on the railways in regard to the duties upon locomotives, on nuts, bolts, iron plates and everything of that kind. Why this single article, which is so largely used in the locomotives of the country, should be exempted I cannot see.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sorry that I am so unable to please hon. gentlemen. If I increase the duty they object, and if I decrease it they object; whatever I propose hon. gentlemen opposite object too. I am in great difficulty; I am extremely anxious to please hon. gentlemen, but I am at a loss to know how to do it. The hon. gentleman who has criticised the previous item, and who has since disappeared from the House, takes exception to our failure to give increased protection to the manufacturers of these portable engines, to compensate them for the increased cost of the iron. I propose to meet this charge of levying heavy duties on important railway corporations that are doing a great service to Canada in carrying on the business of the country, and my hon. friend objects. If I believed that a moderate duty, such as we have been applying to other articles, would have the effect of establishing valuable Bessemer steel works, and if these Bessemer steel tires could be provided in the country, I should be inclined to attempt it. But in this case I am instructed that the plant is of a very costly character, that the thing is really a specialty, and there is no prospect at any very early day of being able to furnish the article by affording increased protection, and consequently I used that as a means of giving some compensation in other matters, in which, for the purpose of stimulating and fostering an industry that does exist and can be carried on, we have been obliged to increase the charge.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman has entirely misrepresented me. I expressed no sympathy whatever for the corporation he speaks of. What I wanted was an explanation of why a distinction was made between certain classes of the requirements of these corporations; why it was that in one case they were taxed 30 or 35 per cent., while in others these articles were allowed to come in free. I am satisfied with the explanation the hon. gentleman has given, but I am not satisfied when the hon. gentleman goes on and misrepresents me—and has his statements go abroad to the country—by saying that hon. gentlemen on one hand want one thing while I want another. Nor am I satisfied at his putting arguments in my mouth that I never used. I have no sympathy for these corporations. Everybody knows that I have no sympathy for the Grand Trunk, and as for the Canadian Pacific Railway it can take care of itself. But I think that in legislating upon so important a matter as the tariff it is important that we should be consistent in our legislation, and as we have established the principle of endeavoring to manufacture everything in the country, and endeavoring to give protection to industries which do not exist, for the purpose of creating them, I thought that a matter so important as these Bessemer works required some explanation, so that we might know why they were made an exception. The hon. gentleman has given an explanation. He states that he is informed that the machinery necessary for the carrying on of that great work will cost a considerable sum, and that, as far as he can learn, it is not probable that at any early day such an undertaking would be established in Canada, and that is a sufficient reason. I venture this full explanation in order to set myself right, and I hope that in future the hon. gentleman, when I call attention to a particular thing, will not endeavor to put me in the wrong, or to represent me before the public as not being sufficiently intelligent to understand an explanation when it is given, or to understand why, from my own point of view, the distinction was made.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The position taken by the Minister of Finance throughout the discussion of the tariff is an extraordinary one. He gives as a reason for not imposing a tax on a particular article that it is one which cannot be produced in the country. Heretofore we have generally gone on the assumption that that was a good reason for imposing a tax, because by the imposition of a tax on an article which is not produced in the country you are not likely to impose a burden incidentally on the population, other than that which you impose directly by the imposition of the tax. Now the hon. gentleman says that if he were to tax this article we cannot destroy it as a subject of taxation. It will continue to be imported, and therefore it is a tax which is not likely to vary; it is a tax on the necessities of the railway corporations, and a tax which will always be paid. But if we put a tax on the locomotives the probability is that the tax will ultimately destroy them as a means of revenue. We will by-and-by produce them in the country, and we will cease to get anything from the imposition of this tax. The hon. gentleman has said that over and over again. He admits, and I admit, that you cannot impose extraordinary burdens on railway corporations in the country, as you certainly would if you tax locomotives, and tax the coal, and the iron, and the steel that is used in the manufacture of the wheels. But it is certainly a remarkable fact that from the beginning of the discussion on these resolutions up to this moment the hon. gentleman has assigned as a reason for the imposition of the tax that by its imposition we will ultimately stop the importation of the article and ultimately cease to get a revenue from it, and because you can put an end to this source of revenue then that is a proper mode of proceeding. The hon. gentleman will see, if his position is a sound one, that after he ceases to get a revenue from the tax upon locomotives altogether, the companies will continue to pay the same amount for these locomotives, and that while you will have ceased to collect revenues from this source, you will not have in the smallest degree, diminished the burdens of the railway corporations.

Mr. MITCHELL.

Boiler tubes or flues or stays of wrought iron or steel, 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Should not these next three items be arranged in such a way as to reduce the burden upon these articles which enter into the construction of these machines? We have not here the same classification as we had before, and I would ask under which of these heads are the boiler tubes used by makers of portable engines, &c.?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They will come under the one you are discussing.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). And what will item 105 include?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Those smaller than two inches in diameter.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Two inches were allowed in the second.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. These are only wrought iron tubes, not wrought iron pipes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I notice that these are not worded as before.

Mr. BOWELL. They are separated to bring wrought iron tubing in the 15 per cent. list.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I was pointing out how you could give relief in item 101, without reduction of the duty in this, which is part of the raw material they have to use. I am not aware that there is any lap-welded tubing made in the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I leave this very low, 15 per cent.

Other wrought iron or steel tubes or pipes, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to change that by making it a duty of 1½ cents per lb. instead of 30 per cent.; that would be equivalent to about 35 per cent. on a value of 4 cents per lb.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why do you make a distinction between this and the other tubes? This is more than double.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The other will be imported, and this will be made in the country.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Will this include all steel tubes that are threaded?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I think so.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does item 103, "boiler tubes or flues, or stays of wrought iron or steel, 15 per cent. ad valorem," mean threaded or plain, or any and every kind?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, any kind, so long as they are for boiler tubes or flues?

Skates, 20 cents per pair and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is a very heavy tax and a very objectionable one.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The manufacture of skates has reached a very high and satisfactory point in Canada; we are celebrated for the manufacture of our skates; yet the cheap German labor threatens to extinguish the industry, and this is for the purpose of preventing that. I am advised that it will not cause the slightest increase in the price.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Well, I think the mode of imposing the tax is very objectionable. The hon. gentleman had better have a specific or an ad valorem duty.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). An ad valorem duty would be better. The hon. Minister must see how hardly that will bear on the poor lad who wants to get a pair of skates. We know that many lads save up their money for that purpose. I think it would be fairer to increase the ad valorem duty. The hon. gentleman ought not to discriminate against the poor lads in the way this will do it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am thinking of the poor lads who make these skates, and I think they are quite as much entitled to consideration as the poor lads who amuse themselves. I should be sorry to do anything that would deprive anybody of the healthful exercise of skating, but the question is whether you are going to allow this cheap German labor to come in and wipe out this industry, or impose such a duty as will enable it to be carried on.

Mr. MALLORY. I think the principal manufactory of skates is situated in Halifax, and from information I have been able to obtain, I understand that some of these skates have been patented, and the patent has secured to the holders of the patent a monopoly to a certain extent in the manufacture of them; but the patents have expired, and now the specific duty which is placed on the skates will possibly be an equivalent for the expiration of the patent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman I think is mistaken in saying that there is only one skate industry in the country.

Mr. MALLORY. I said the principal one.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think there is a manufactory in Montreal, and another in St. John. But the hon. gentleman is quite right in saying that the Star Company, of Halifax, is the principal one, and I am glad to know that such has been the excellence of their manufacture that the skates of that company have been celebrated all over the world. One of the finest exhibits of that kind that we had in the London Exhibition was the exhibit of that company. Under these circumstances I think we would all regret very much if cheap German labor were allowed to come in and wipe out this industry, and I do not think any hardship will arise to any person, or that any great increase in the cost to the public will result from this duty.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that the hon. gentleman's sympathy is illusory. I am inclined to think that when he takes into consideration the cost of transportation, insurance and everything else connected with the shipment of skates from the centre of Germany to Canada, he will see that no matter what the labor is, the German skates cannot come seriously into competition with the skates manufactured in Nova Scotia. The hon. Minister says we must take into consideration the claims of the boy engaged in the manufacture of these skates. Last year, there was something required by a representative from Nova Scotia for the boy, and I do not know whether the hon. gentleman proposes to adopt as a maxim for the Government that there must be something had for the boy even in the manufacture of skates. The hon. gentleman, I do not think has met the objection as to the compound duty. The duty will altogether amount to something like 100 per cent. on the cheaper varieties of skates.

Mr. CASEY. I am informed by a large wholesale hardware dealer in London, who wrote me on the subject, that this duty on skates amounts to exactly 105 per cent. on the steel skates we have been importing. If the Minister thinks the protection of 105 per cent. is required to enable the boy in Halifax to go on manufacturing skates, let him say so at once. Making it 30 per cent. ad valorem and 20 cents per pair is merely to prevent the public from seeing what tremendous protection the boy is getting. The hon. gentleman is, however, doubling the price of skates to the other boys who use them throughout the country, in order to maintain this particular firm in Halifax in great luxury and abundance. I do not know whether this is the cheapest way of fulfilling election promises or not, but it would be more straightforward on the part of the Minister if he would say at once what duty he is imposing.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think on a 50-cent skate it would be an ad valorem duty of 70 per cent., and on a $3 skate, an ad valorem duty of 35 per cent.

Mr. MILLS. The Minister's own argument is against him in regard to the quality of skates, because these skates which are imported from England are celebrated for their quality everywhere and are superior to the German skates, so that there is no danger of the German skate being imported.

Sledges, track tools, wedges and crow bars of iron or steel 1½ cents per lb. and 30 per cent ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to strike out this item and to substitute the following for it:—

Screws, commonly called wood screws, two inches or over in length 6 cents per lb., one inch or less than two inches, 8 cents per lb., less than one inch 11 cents per lb.

Mr. CASEY. If the screws are not in some part of the schedule, they cannot be introduced at this stage. The hon. gentleman cannot propose a new tax on concurrence.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will allow it to stand. I merely wanted to substitute it, because it keeps numbers right.

Hardware, namely, builders, cabinet makers and carriage hardware and locks, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would suggest that this be allowed to stand. It should be amended to include harness and saddlery hardware. That was in the old clause and should appear here.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will allow that to stand for the purpose of looking into it.

Street railway bars or rails weighing not less than twenty-five pounds per lineal yard for purposes other than railway tracks, $8 per ton.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to substitute iron or steel railway bars, and rails for railway tramways of any form, punched or not punched, not elsewhere specified, $6 ton."

Mr. MITCHELL. Does that include street railways?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Manufactures, articles or wares not specially enumerated or provided for, composed wholly or in part of iron or steel, and whether partly or wholly manufactured, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BROWN. I would ask the Minister to allow this to stand or to make it 35 per cent. to cover a number of manufacturers of similar tools not enumerated in the other portions of the tariff. A duty of 35 per cent. would make the manufacture successful.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to make that 35 per cent.

Mr. CASEY. On what ground?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman did not listen to the hon. gentleman from Hamilton or he would have known.

Mr. CASEY. I thought it was the Minister who was making the Government explanations.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. member from Hamilton has as much right as the hon. gentleman to make a suggestion in reference to an item and give his reasons. And he did so in a manner which commended them to my judgment as worthy of consideration.

Mr. CASEY. We did not hear what he said.

Mr. BROWN. I said it loud enough.

Mr. CASEY. You did not. You made some allusion to small tools. We heard just now from the Minister that it was not advisable to make these changes without consideration. He told his hon. friend behind him that he could not make such a change without considering it, but his friend from Hamilton seems to have more influence.

Mr. BROWN. I will speak louder. There are a number of tools, such as carpenters' tools and tinmiths' tools, which are not enumerated in the tariff, that could be covered and sufficiently protected by a duty of 35 per cent., and I am sure the wisdom of such a provision will commend itself to hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. CASEY. I understand now. This is in order to increase the price of tools used by tinmiths and carpenters.

Mr. BROWN. No, it is not.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understood the Minister to agree to make this change. He cannot make it. We have been proceeding a little irregularly, but the Minister cannot make the change without going into committee again.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Of course, if exception is taken, we cannot make the change, so we will let that item stand.

Mr. MALLORY. I read here: "Articles or wares not specially enumerated or provided for, composed wholly or in part of iron or steel." I would ask whether articles made partly of wood and partly of iron or steel, would come under that class.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. MALLORY. That appears to be a very sweeping clause. If one or two nails or spikes were in a wooden article, it would come under this clause.

Mr. BOWELL. Oh, no. This was not at all intended to meet the case to which the hon. gentleman refers. The difficulty was in administering the law where it provided for an iron duty. Take the case of car wheels. They were formerly imported at 25 per cent, if made of iron, but manufactures of steel were at 20 per cent. As soon as they commenced to manufacture car wheels of steel, they claimed to enter them at the 20 per cent. rate, as a manufacture of steel, though car wheels were specified at 25 per cent. The courts, however, in the United States, and, I believe, our own courts have decided that, where articles are specially mentioned, the duty so mentioned should cover them, but, to prevent difficulties, it was provided that articles, whether made of iron or steel, or partly of one or the other, should bear the same rate of duty. It is not a new clause. It has been on the Statute-book for years.

Mr. CASEY. Is there any regulation in the Customs Department to show what amount of iron must be in an article to bring it under this clause? For instance, would my hon. friend's suggestion, that a few nails or spikes being in an article, be sufficient to bring it under this heading, be correct?

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly not.

Mr. CASEY. Is there any regulation to that effect?

Mr. BOWELL. If an article comes in and a man says it is iron or steel, unless it is otherwise provided for it is so classified. In most of these cases it is provided for. A hammer is provided for. It is steel in the head, and part of it is iron. They used to face the heads with steel; but steel is now so cheap that they can make them all of steel. Then part of it is wood, and there may be a rivet through it. I have seen hammers made of brass; but that is provided for.

Mr. BROWN.

Labels for fruit, vegetables, meat, fish, confectionery and other goods; also tickets, posters, advertising bills and folders, 15 cents per lb. and 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose the hon. gentleman will require to alter the phraseology of this clause. "And other goods"—does that mean any kind of goods?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It means labels for any kind of goods.

Printing presses of all kinds, folding machines, and paper cutting machines, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. CASEY. What is the duty now?

Mr. BOWELL. This is a reduction on the folding machines, which were 10 per cent. when imported by bookbinders or by printers, while the others were at 20 per cent. We are putting them all in the 10 per cent. class, no matter by whom they are imported.

On the second resolution (free list).

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to make an alteration in the second item, fire brick, by adding "for smelting or melting furnaces or for coke ovens," limiting the free use of fire brick to these cases.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Why limit it to them? Why not give the potters the benefit of it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Because I find it is not manufactured in the country for these purposes, and there is a manufacture here for ordinary stoves.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But a great deal of it is used in potters' kilns.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That will be a melting furnace.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No, it is not for burning the stoneware.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think that might fairly be added.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What would you suggest for that?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). "Or furnaces or kilns used in potteries."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not want to include stove furnaces.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). They would not come under that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will see that he is imposing a tax upon articles of domestic use.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is putting them on the free list.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But the free list, as it stands, will include all fire bricks, and the hon. gentleman proposes to limit this list to a particular class.

Mr. MITCHELL. While we are on this free list, I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether he could not include the articles of corn meal, flour and bituminous coal?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say to my hon. friend that so far as corn meal is concerned, the subject is under the consideration of the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am very glad at last that, after something like six years of strenuous efforts on my part, this is the first time I have got that far. I have been refused before, I have been laughed at by the Finance Minister, I have been put off with a smile, by saying that probably at some future time the subject would be considered, but now the Government have got it under consideration, and I trust that our worthy and very able Finance Minister will at last do simple justice to the constituents I have the honor to represent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad to be able to inform my hon. friend that not only have we the question of corn meal under consideration, but we have already removed the duty to the extent of half a million dollars per annum on anthracite coal.

Mr. MITCHELL. I may say to my hon. friend that so far as that is concerned it will not benefit my constituents ten cents, for the reason that the position of my county in relation to the source of supply of anthracite coal, is so distant that such a thing is scarcely ever used. It is the exception where it is used in the county. The coal used in my county comes from Nova Scotia, from Pictou, and the mines of Cape Breton and the Cumberland mines. If my hon. friend is under any impression that in removing half a million dollars from anthracite coal to benefit Ontario, that is an argument for me to present my constituents in exchange for allowing these high duties to go on, he is mistaken. I know that when I point that out to him it will be an additional reason why he should think of the corn meal.

Mr. BORDEN. The House will remember that when the National Policy was inaugurated the duty upon corn meal stood very much in the same relationship to the duty upon flour, that the duty upon anthracite coal stood to the duty upon bituminous coal. We do not raise a large quantity of corn in this country, nor was it expected that we should, and we had not anthracite coal here. But the duty upon corn meal was defended on the ground that it would encourage the use of coarse grain. In the same way the duty upon anthracite coal was defended upon the ground that it would encourage the bituminous coal industry, and the Finance Minister in 1877 stated distinctly that the bituminous coal would take the place, to a certain extent, of the anthracite which is being used in this country. Therefore, I do not see how, logically, the Government could refrain from taking the duty off corn meal inasmuch as they are taking it off anthracite coal, showing that the one stands precisely in the same relationship to the wheat which it was proposed to protect in the one case, as the anthracite coal stands to the bituminous coal, which it was proposed to protect in the other case. The corn meal duty is one which bears, as the hon. Minister knows, very heavily on the Province of Nova Scotia. I have been looking over the Trade and Navigation Returns, and I find that about nineteenth-twentieths of the duties which have been paid upon corn meal since this policy was inaugurated, have been paid by the Maritime Provinces, and that four-fifths of that have been paid by the Province of Nova Scotia. Now, the Maritime Provinces have also paid a certain proportion of the duty upon anthracite coal, and the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec have paid a very small proportion of the duty upon corn meal. Consequently, it would only be fair to the Maritime Provinces, in relieving the Province of Ontario of this duty on anthracite coal, that they should also be relieved of the duty upon corn meal. I hope the Minister has not only taken into his consideration that matter, but that it will receive his favorable consideration. I had intended, if we had not received the assurance we have received from him to-night, to have moved an amendment that corn meal should be added to the free list. I did not propose to go further, because I recognised the fact—and I am sorry to have to do it—that this country has deliberately adopted and approved of this National Policy, not, perhaps, to the extent the hon. gentlemen are going, but certainly the question has been before the country during three elections, and they have decided in favor of it. The county which I have the honor to represent, although in 1882 it sent to this House a supporter of the Administration, is not, in my opinion, a National Policy county. It is an agricultural district, and cannot possibly be benefited in any way by the National Policy, nevertheless, as I said, I recognise the fact that the country as a whole has accepted that policy, and I simply press for the taking off of this duty upon corn meal as a logical result and as a simple act of justice to the Maritime Provinces, in view of the fact that the Minister has taken the duty off anthracite coal, which formed a part of the policy, and which was considered an offset to the duty upon corn meal.

Mr. FREEMAN. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) should not take to himself the credit of having this corn meal question brought to the notice of the Finance Minister, because other members interested in the corn meal question had been attending to that matter as well as himself. I do not think it is necessary to argue the point as to whether in consideration of the duty having been taken off anthracite coal, that therefore it should be taken off corn meal. I, who am deeply interested in this question of corn meal, feel perfectly satisfied that when the Finance Minister tells us that he has taken it into his consideration, he will decide favorably, because I am sure that he understands the position of Nova Scotia, and he understands how hardly that duty bears upon that Province. He understands perfectly well where it bears and where it bears hardest, and I feel satisfied that he is prepared to do justice to Nova Scotia. I may add that I am pleased and gratified with the assurance he has given us to-night.

Mr. KENNY. My hon. friend from King's county, Nova Scotia (Mr. Borden) has referred to the fact that the people of Canada in 1878 adopted a protective policy. That was confirmed in 1882 and 1887, and it must be the settled wish of the people of Canada that the policy should be applied to our mining, manufacturing and agricultural interests, and to every branch of those interests. I have looked into this matter, and I find that there is a large amount of corn imported into this country. It is very largely used by the distillers, who contribute a large amount to the revenue of the country from the tax of 7½ cents per bushel on corn. It unfortunately happens that we do not raise in Canada sufficient corn for the requirements of our people, and consequently we have to import it, and a large quantity of corn meal is imported into the Lower Provinces, especially Nova Scotia, for human food. I do not think it is in the interests of Canada to take the duty off corn, and I am afraid when the matter is investigated there will be some difficulty in taking off the duty on corn meal. But I take this stand that the miller who grinds the corn is entitled to some such measure of protection as we accord to people who refine sugar, who manufacture cottons or grind wheat. And this result can be attained in this way: We desire to encourage, within our own borders, every branch of manufacture, and to develop each as much as possible. I say then, if possible, we ought to secure the grinding of that corn to our own people. This might be secured in this way: By giving a rebate to the corn miller for every barrel of corn he grinds into meal for human food, on the corn of which he has paid duty. That will meet the case. When hon. gentlemen take the trouble to investigate this matter carefully, they will find there is great difficulty in taking the duty off corn and also in taking it off corn meal, but we might meet the difficulty by giving a rebate to the miller of the duty he paid on the corn.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Kent). As this corn meal question has come up rather unexpectedly, I would just say that in my opinion it would be wrong to take the duty off corn meal. It is the only duty placed upon the food products of this country which benefits the farmers of the county I have the honor to represent. There is not as much corn raised in the Dominion as is consumed; consequently a duty placed upon corn or corn meal enhances the value of that product, and thus benefits the farmers of the counties where corn is raised. I, therefore, say that while we have been imposing taxes on all varieties of articles which will affect the farmer, it would be improper to remove a duty which alone benefits them. I do not think it should be done. I do not think those millers who have been encouraged to invest money in corn meal mills during the last few years and have been afforded protection, should now have that protection removed. I hold that one of the strongest objections to the tariff as framed is that the Government practically induced people to invest capital in different industries that would not exist except for the protection afforded them, and thus they become hot-house plants; they are fostered and upheld by the Government, and when such protection is withdrawn they cease to exist. We do not want such industries in this country. Of course, it is necessary that we should have a reasonable amount of protection for revenue purposes, and I think the proper course is that if an industry cannot sustain itself with a reasonable amount of protection, then it is not in the public interest that the Government should foster it. I was particularly struck with an argument advanced by some hon. gentlemen opposite during this discussion, and that was in reference to the iron duties. The argument was brought forward that Cape Breton possessed illimitable fields of iron ore and coal, and everything in close proximity, and with the best facilities for shipping, and although there was protection of $3.50 per ton on iron, yet no steps had been taken to develop those mines. Now, the Government proposed a duty of $10, $13 and $15 a ton, and to levy that tax on every industry in order to foster an enterprise for men who had not "snap" enough with the former duty to build up that industry. This remark, of course, is a little outside of the argument, but speaking of the corn meal question I would say that it would not be right, after encouraging the industry, to make a radical change, more especially as it is a real benefit to the farmers, and the only kind of grain that farmers in the Dominion raise which is enhanced in value by the duty imposed. You may take wheat, oats, peas and barley, and place any duty on them, and it would not affect the price. Even a duty of 40 cents a bushel on wheat would not advance the price, because our price is controlled by that ruling in the old country, and in all cases where we have anything to export the price of the exported article is what regulates the price of the whole. But in corn and corn meal we do not raise as much as we require, and therefore any duty is a real benefit to the farmer by enhancing the value of the grain.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We shall have a future opportunity of dealing with this question, and the discussion is not entirely relevant to the item of fire brick which is at present under consideration.

Mr. BORDEN. We were discussing the free list, and the hon. gentleman himself said that he has under consideration the addition of an item. I think the argument into which the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) has entered so elaborately with respect to the iron duties shows that this country is not ready for the iron industry, or it would have taken hold of it under the old protection afforded. And that is an answer to the argument put forth by the hon. gentleman with respect to corn meal. I can show from the Trade and Navigation Returns that there has been no increase in Canada of the manufacture of corn meal, and that we are importing just as much as ever. In 1883-84 we imported $16,400 worth, the year before on $8,000, the year before that $9,000, showing there is no justification on any of the grounds laid down by the hon. member for a continuance of this duty. The industry does not belong here and should not be encouraged. This duty is simply and solely a tax and nothing more.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As regards fire brick I will let the item stand as it is, as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) objects to its being changed.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Kent).

Mr. CASEY. In regard to the item "anthracite coal," the proposal which is supposed to be a benefit to Ontario and a saving to the people of towns and villages, I am afraid I shall have to tell my farming friends that they have been seriously misled by hon. gentlemen opposite. They have been told at every election during the past few years that the tax on anthracite coal had added so much to the price of their cordwood. I have known intelligent farmers who were actually influenced by that argument, and said they would support hon. gentlemen opposite, because the tax on anthracite coal, which is the kind we chiefly import for house use in my part of the country, affected the price of cordwood. I shall have to tell those gentlemen either that the Government were humbugging them before, or else that this great boon to Ontario is a boon to the inhabitants of the towns and cities at the expense of the farmer.

Resolved,—That it is expedient to repeal Item No. 816 in Schedule "E" of tariff of Customs duties, and to substitute the following in lieu thereof, viz. :—

1. Shingle bolts of pine or cedar, and cedar logs capable of being made into shingle bolts, $1.50 per cord of 128 cubic feet.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to call the attention of the Government to the fact that while we are repealing item No. 816, with regard to shingle bolts of pine or cedar, &c., we are neglecting a very important industry, and that is the export of elm and ash logs, oak, birch, black birch and basswood. There is an export duty on spruce and pine logs going to the United States. I have before me the strongest evidence of the deep injury which will be done to a very important industry in Canada, if an export duty is not put on ash and elm logs, and in fact upon all these woods that I have enumerated. The position of the matter is this, that a great industry has been established on Lake Huron and in some of the counties bordering on River St. Clair, and it is being very seriously affected, and will be ultimately crushed out, and a large loss incurred, if an export duty is not put on these timbers, on the principle upon which an export duty has been applied to pine and spruce—a principle which will equally apply to these woods. I wish to say—and I hope the matter will be freely discussed by gentlemen on both sides—that the export duty on elm and ash logs is $1 per thousand; $1 per cord on elm stave bolts and $1.50 per cord on basswood and ash stave bolts. There are about 50,000,000 feet annually exported in the shape of logs and bolts, for which the country is benefited to the extent of $200,000; and this if manufactured at home would leave about $1,000,000 in the country, and there is about the same quantity manufactured at home. There are 35 mills in active operation, nearly 1,500 men are employed, nearly $1,000,000 invested, and there is over $1,000,000 of an output annually. Now there is no export duty on the logs or bolts—the raw material entering the United States. There is a duty of 35 per cent. on hoops and headings, and 10 per cent. on staves entering the United States. The quantity of staves manufactured in Canada and the amount manufactured from Canadian timber, control the United States market. Our manufacturers of the products of these woods when they go to the United States are confronted with their own logs admitted free, in addition to the American duty, and I think it is impossible for that state of things to exist. The American mills along our border can, on account of the facilities of water communication, transport their raw material to these factories at a very little in advance of the cost to local mills; and on account of the American manufacturer being able to get our timber free, the Canadian manufacturer is compelled to compete against our own timber and a 10 per cent. and a 35 per cent. duty against him. The American manufacturer can purchase his machinery on the other side possibly cheaper, and at all events as cheap, as the Canadian manufacturer; but the great burden he has to contend against is that, when he goes to the United States with the manufactured article, he is confronted with the American duty, and it is impossible for him to compete against it. The cost of manufacturing pine logs into timber is about $1.35, and the cost of manufacturing elm logs into staves is about $4 or $5 per thousand. At the present rate of exportation, in five years there will not be sufficient elm left to make this profitable. Now, these men have a very great difficulty to contend against. The Americans must and will have our logs, and they will pay the export duty. They are now paying the export duty on the timber which bears such a duty. My hon. friend the member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) will be able to testify to this House how important the lumber industry is in his constituency, and how greatly the people are suffering for the want of this export duty. It will do good to our people. It will enable them to make their industries successful, and at the same time bring considerable money into the Treasury. I can tell the House that nearly a million dollars in one section of the country is at stake in the manufacture of elm, and claim, in the interest of the country, and in the interest of those industries which are sure to go to the wall if an export duty is not put on, that the Government should take this matter into their serious consideration. It is a matter of such grave consequence that it cannot be allowed to rest. I know that the constituents of all hon. gentlemen are suffering from the condition in which all timber except pine and spruce now stands. I make this statement, and I hope hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House who are cognisant of the facts, will give free expression to their views on this subject.

Mr. DAWSON. What the hon. gentleman has said in reference to the export duty on lumber of certain kinds is quite correct, so far as it applies to the district I have the honor to represent. The export duty on logs has already had a good effect in Algoma. Within the past two years we have had a large number of additional mills put in operation there. Still, I do not think the duty is quite high enough yet, namely, $2 per thousand on saw-logs, because this summer there will be a very large number of logs exported across the line to be sawn in the United States. I received lately a letter from one of my constituents, in which he pointed out that there should also be an export duty on birch, which was being exported from certain sections of the Islands of St. Joseph and Manitoulin in considerable quantities, and that an export duty would lead to the manufacture of that wood in our own country. The same is the case with some other woods. I quite concur in what the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) has said on this subject, on which he seems to have bestowed a good deal of consideration.

Mr. MASSON. I think this subject is one requiring the immediate consideration of the Government, because the supply of elm is very small, and if any benefit is to be gained to the country by placing an export duty on that class of logs, it will require to be done very shortly, otherwise the country will be entirely denuded of that class of timber, the supply being so small. The effect the export duty has had on the lumber trade of Algoma, the hon. member for Algoma has himself explained; but in the riding I represent I found life-long opponents of the Government and of a protective tariff join in supporting the export duty placed on our logs, and the fault they found with the Government in that respect was that the duty was not high enough.

Mr. GUILLET. It happens that this question of the export duty on timber was discussed in my riding during the recent election, and I found a very strong sentiment prevailing among all classes that the Government had not gone far enough in that direction. It was also felt that there should be a movement for the placing of an export duty on stave bolts. There is a strong feeling in Ontario in favor of conserving our forests. The subject of forestry is more and more engaging the attention of the people of that Province. This is very largely due to the interest created in this subject by the Ontario Government. It is coming to be felt that it will not result in injury to the Province if the consumption of these woods is to some extent diminished for the time being, because they will enhance in value as they become more in demand in the United States as well as in our own country. That will be a large offset to the diminished production of stave bolts. But there will also be this advantage that in the meantime our stave makers will obtain better value for their staves on the other side of the line, where there is an enormous market for them. They have depleted their own forests, and are now exhausting ours. I think that should be checked, or our stave producers should be placed on the same footing as the Americans by having the advantage of some protection in the form of an export duty. I know this will be a wise move, and it would be most valuable for the development of the various industries that require these goods. I hope the matter will receive the immediate attention of the Government.

Mr. HESSON. I desire to say a word on the same subject. It fell to my lot to be one of the two gentlemen who waited on the Government on this matter some time ago, and proposed that a duty should be put on cedar. We had elm and other woods included, but for some reason they were struck off. I thought that was an unwise move, because elm timber has become very valuable; the Americans seem to require it, and we may as well have some revenue out of it as not. This is an interest of very great moment to our people, and we ought to preserve our forests as far as possible.

Mr. MILLS. Is there a factory for the manufactory of elm in your provinces?

Mr. HESSON. Yes, there are factories that require elm, and I saw a very considerable quantity of it. The Americans are exporting from our country immense quantities of logs, with which all we have to do is to cut down the trees and then put the logs into the water, the rest of the labor being done in the United States. The Americans have depleted their own forests, and it is time we prevented them from entering ours by putting an export duty upon wood, and thus give to our own people the opportunity of buying it in our own markets at reasonable rates, and giving them also the labor of cutting it up.

Mr. PERLEY (Ottawa.) It is very proper that the attention of the Government should be called to this subject of the exportation to the United States of our timber free of duty. Our forests are the enrichment of this country, and it is the duty of the Government to protect this interest as much as iron, the manufacture of cottons and woollens, or any other interest. In this section of country we are so far from the frontier that complications such as are complained of along the water frontier, represented by my hon. friends who have just spoken, have not arisen. I do not see why we should allow our timber to go across to the United States and be there manufactured, thus depriving our people of the labor to which they are entitled, and which they ought to derive from the growth of our forests. A year ago the Government very properly imposed a duty on pine saw-logs of $2 a thousand, and reserved to themselves the power of increasing that duty to $3, when they deemed it necessary. I contend a corresponding duty should be applied to all the different descriptions of marketable timber of our forests. I believe in the endorsement of this principle, as of vital importance taken in connection with the protective policy the Government have adopted. I hope, therefore, the Minister of Finance will take into consideration the importance of putting an export duty on the various qualities of timber that hon. gentlemen who are familiar with the subject would suggest. I hope no time will be lost, but that it will be done this Session.

Mr. HESSON. There were 111,000 logs of oak, hemlock, pine and spruce got out, not manufactured. The export of this must have caused a great loss to the country, because the work that had to be done on them was all done in the United States. Instead of having those logs manufactured into very valuable articles here, we export them, and all we have in return is simply a certain value of property. When the Government last year brought down their resolutions imposing $2 a thousand feet on pine lumber and $1 on spruce, it met with my hearty approbation, and I am prepared to support a continuance of that policy.

Mr. BRYSON. At the time the Government brought down their resolutions last year changing the tariff by imposing $2 a thousand on all pine lumber and $1 on spruce, that change met with my hearty approbation. I have felt for some time the lumber trade of this country required certain protection, but I was not prepared to go so far in this direction as the hon. member for Ottawa city (Mr. Perley) as to approve of a duty of $3 a thousand. My own views with reference to that are that $2 a thousand on pine lumber is quite sufficient, and that is what we put on saw-logs. I think that our forests should be protected. With reference to all other woods, such as ash, elm, oak and basswood, to a great extent that class of timber in the Ottawa valley has not been tampered with, but I am aware that that class of trade is growing up in this section of the country. I think that those classes of woods which are exported on Lake Huron should be taken into consideration, and, if we give protection to all the industries of this great country, we should give protection to the lumber trade, which has hitherto had little or no protection. I think it is for the Government to consider seriously whether it would not be well to protect ash, elm and basswood in the same way as we have protected spruce. I think this is the time to strike. We may not have an occasion to discuss this matter for some time to come, for another year at any rate, and I think, as large quantities of timber are being exported from Canada now, there should be at least a duty of $1 a thousand on these woods, the same as on spruce.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I notice that the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) and the hon. member for the City of Ottawa (Mr. Perley) are very anxious that there should be a tax on logs which are sent out of the country, and contend that we ought to keep our timber in the country for our own purposes. I should like to know if they are willing to put an export duty on lumber as well as on logs. Do they propose to put the mill-owner and the farmer on the same ground in the matter? It would be interesting for the House to know that.

Mr. HESSON. Our American friends charge us $2 a thousand on sawn lumber, and there is not a great deal of labor that goes into that. Now we are going much closer into the matter, we are referring to what goes into the employment of labor to a large extent by the factories. The Americans charge $2 on our sawn lumber, and they are very wise in their day and generation. Their own timber being pretty well exhausted, they permit our logs to go in free. Did they admit our sawn lumber free, there might be some justification for the course we have been pursuing in permitting them to come and denude our country of the most valuable timber we have, while we have nothing to show for it but the stumps which are left and the paltry amount the Government receive for stump duties. Hon. gentlemen will see that the Americans are very wise. If they permitted our sawn lumber to go in there free, the miller could afford to pay a little more for his timber; he could afford to give a little more to his workmen and the country would receive more advantage. But now we are not getting a fraction of advantage out of that. Besides, in regard to square timber, upon which the commonest labor is used, there are millions of dollars worth exported out of the country, and are we getting all we ought to get in that regard? A man at a dollar a day or at $20 or $25 a month in a camp does that kind of work in the winter, and what have we to show for it? The best of our timber is being taken out of the country, and we have nothing to show for it. I think we should control this matter. I ask the Government to take it into their serious consideration and I hope they will.

Mr. PERLEY (Ottawa).

Mr. PERLEY (Ottawa). In reply to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), I desire to make a little explanation. What I said was that we were entitled to protect the labor, and, as a further illustration of that point, I may state to the House that what is termed the waste from sawing is very important to furnish labor for our people in this country. A few days ago, one of the mills belonging to my firm of Perley & Pattee was burnt to ashes. That mill was used to cut up the slabs and edgings from the main mill, and that gave employment to about one hundred men. The main advantage in working up this waste is in giving the employment. The profit upon it is very little indeed, but the main point is to give employment. I say we are entitled to protect the manufacture of these trees in this country.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What was the export duty on this last year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no data. This subject was not before us, and I have no data dealing with it.

Mr. SPROULE. Coming from a section of the country in which the effect of this policy is felt, I desire to say a word or two upon this question. Anyone who has had occasion to go through the Algoma district a few years ago and to see the number of saw mills which were then in operation cutting lumber, and who would pass through there now and see that some of them are closed altogether, and others have moved to the American side, where they are doing the trade which was done in our own country a few years ago, cannot but understand the importance of putting on some duty to protect our lumber here. Every year thousands of the logs are cut down in the bush, taken to the lake, put in booms, and taken across the lake to the American shore; and along the lake, in the State of Michigan, may be found extensive mills, employing hundreds of our Canadian young men, manufacturing the lumber that ought to be manufactured in our own forests. Besides that, the loss is sustained of the offal connected with the manufacture of lumber, which might be taken into account if it were made here. It seems that this policy gives us the first instalment and the rest is taken by the Americans. I think the first difficulty arose from the duty which was imposed upon lumber by the Americans. As there is no duty on logs, the lumbermen took the logs to the American shore, cut the lumber, and then had the advantage of an extensive market beyond that which they had here; but, since the evil is getting very extensive, and our timber is disappearing, not only pine and oak, but our soft timber such as ash, cherry, birch, and other kinds of timber is fast disappearing, it is of great importance that the question should be taken up early by the Government. Last year, when this export duty was imposed, it was thought to be sufficient, but whether it is necessary to put on a higher duty than is now put on Canadian lumber by the Americans or not I do not say. At all events, the duty should be sufficient to prevent the timber being taken to the United States and sawn, to the detriment of the people of this country and especially of the people in the localities where the mills should be.

